Of the many rifles I have examined the fitting was very bad, and the wood was frequently crossgrained and spongy where it should have been straight and sound especially at the small of the butt, a weak point.

Many people do not stop to consider how important it is that a good arm should be given to the militia for the defence of the country; for let us hope that it will never be used for anything but the defence of this country or of some other part of the empire, never for offence; because we are a peace-loving people, notwithstanding some statements made by the Minister of Militia at a banquet at Montreal; but we must take with a certain amount of consideration remarks made at a banquet, particularly near the conclusion of the banquet. Then, listen to this beautiful piece of irony by Sergeant Hayhurst, who is not only a clever marksman, but has a fine command of English and a fine sense of humour, something which my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton entirely lacks. This is what he says:

In conclusion, I would say that with all of the bad faults and many of the weak features removed and strong durable parts introduced in their place a very fine serviceable rifle would result, but which for a fine accurate target shooting rifle would still be inferior to the present Lee-Enfield barrel with good sights and ammunition.

Take all the bad parts and all the weak features from the rifle, and introduce new, strong and durable parts in their place, and you will have a very fine and serviceable rifle. That is what Sergeant Hayhurst says.

Now, I want to refer to some shooting which took place at Eastman, where a certain accident occurred. I was surprised, absolutely surprised, to hear the Minister of Militia make the remark he did with respect to the tampering which he alleges had been done in connection with that rifle:. I was surprised because the Minister of Militia is usually not that kind of a man, he is generally a very fair man in debate, and therefore I was the more surprised when he went out of his way to make an insinuation against the hon. member for Sherbrooke and practically to accuse the hon. member of tampering with this rifle.

Mr. FOWLER.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. Either by himself or at his instance. Does the hon. member say oh, no ? I am very glad that the statement he made was in the heat of debate, when he warmed up on the subject, and did not quite measure his words. Are we to understand from him that he makes no reflection on the hon. member for Sherbrooke with regard to the tampering ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My words speak for themselves. I said that the file had been tampered with.

Mr. FOWLER. He went much further. He said it had been tampered with by the hon. member for Sherbrooke and his friends.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I think so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I certainly did not intend to say it had been tampered with by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. I may have said it had been tampered with by some of his friends.

Mr. FOWLER. I am very glad to know that my good opinion of the hon. gentleman's fairness is restored. But I think the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) did make that assertion. He made the very strong insinuation that this tampering, as he calls it, was with the knowledge and consent of the hon. member for Sherbrooke.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have no doubt the hon. member for Sherbrooke is quite capable of knowing it.

Mr. FOWLER. That is on a par with the statement the hon. gentleman made before. Having gained by reading, experience and observation some knowledge of human nature, I can understand how one man might be jealous of another man in the same profession, and how that blind unreasoning jealousy—because nothing is more blind and unreasoning than jealousy—should lead him to great lengths in the statements he might make trying to damage the character of the other. Here we have two Canadian soldiers going out to South Africa. We have one coming back with a splendid record, having gained mention in the highest terms in the despatches, having been commended for his gallantry under fire, and the other coming back accelerated by what is known as a kick. In a certain class of minds, you naturally find a certain amount of jealousy, but it is unfortunate that it should lead a man so far as to cause him to make the insinuation which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) now makes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the hon. gentleman refer to me as having come back without having been mentioned in these despatches ? The record shows that I was mentioned in the official reports of Lord Roberts and General Warren. I have had more mention in the despatches than any other Canadian in South Africa. All the hon. gentleman has to do is to go to the library and he will see it for himself. I characterize the conduct of the hon. gentleman as cowardly.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. The expression is unparliamentary.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not want him to withdraw it at all because such a characterization coming from the hon. gentleman is rather an advantage. It is strange how people, who are so free in making insinuations against others, will wince when they get a little hot shot themselves. With what equanimity the same person can make the meanest insinuations against another, but just let him feel a little of the gall himself, and see how he winces. I was speaking about this accident at Eastman, and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam Hughes) said that my hon. friend from Sherbrooke would be quite capable of tampering with a rifle.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have every reason to believe it.

Mr. FOWLER. Meaning what? That this gentleman would tamper with a rifle to be used by a rifleman at the absolute risk of the life of that man. It would mean that if anything serious resulted, if death should result, the hon. member for Sherbrooke would be guilty of murder. That is a pretty serious accusation to make, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Backed by the Minister of Militia.

Mr. FOWLER. That this gentleman, directly or indirectly, by himself or by friends at his instance, so tampered with one of these rifles that it would blow up the first time it was used and endanger the life, not only of the man who pulled the trigger, but of every one near this man at the time he was firing. The rules of parliamentary debate prevent me applying to the gentleman who would be guilty of that conduct the only term it would be proper to apply to him. What are the facts? At the time this accident occurred, the hon. member for Sherbrooke was twenty miles away. He had not been to the place where the rifle shooting was done for months or years before. He knew absolutely nothing of the matter, and the evidence shows as well that there was no opportunity for any one to tamper with that rifle. The man who had possession of it was the man who used it. That man was Captain Seale, a strong Liberal in the county of Brome, a supporter of the Minister of Agriculture. The unfortunate man who was injured was a Mr. Harold Peabody, who happened to be a Conservative. And this man Peabody was lying down and firing alongside the man who was using the Ross rifle. He knew that this rifle was defective. He knew that there was danger. He knew that serious accidents had occurred before, and he gave expression to his fears, but was laughed and jibed at, and told that the reason he was afraid of the Ross rifle was because he was a Tory. Well, the sequel proved there were strong grounds for his fears. Lying down within five feet of where the Ross rifle was fired, while Captain Seale was pulling the trigger it exploded, injuring the hands of Captain Seale and the temple of Mr. Peabody. That is what happened at Eastman, and to say that this rifle was tampered with for the purpose of causing it to explode is the most outrageous statement that any member of this House could be guilty of. I am surprised that even the known recklessness of the gallant and hon. member for Victoria should have led him so far.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). At the request of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennnox), I have agreed to allow this to stand. The hon. gentleman has gone away.

Mr. SPROULE. He could not be here tonight.

Mr. GRAHAM. I move that progress be reported on this Bill.

Progress reported.

BELLEVILLE, PRINCE EDWARD BRIDGE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville, Prince Edward Bridge Company.—Mr. Porter.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). When this Bill was up the other evening the question was raised by me as to the provision about the road arrangement. It struck me that, possibly, that ought not to be legislated on here.

Mr. PORTER. I take it that my hon. friend (Mr. Graham) refers to the last clause of the Bill, providing for an agreement between the city of Belleville and the Bridge Company. For many years an agreement between these two has existed by which the city used for city purposes that part of the bridge between their gravel bed and the street, the city keeping that in repair, that is, putting the gravel upon it, for the use of it. That necessitated the making of a new agreement every year. At the city's request the company agreed to put in this clause to make a permanent agreement between them. It does not affect any other interest than that of these two, and both parties assent to it. Therefore, I cannot see that it can do any harm.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was not objecting to the matter of it, but the question that arose in my mind was whether the province would not take exception to our legislating about an agreement concerning a roadway in a city which is a purely municipal matter.

Mr. PORTER. It is the municipality that makes the agreement, and it is purely for the advantage of the city. I am sure the local legislature would not object. Personally, I would not have any objection to the clause being struck out of the Bill, except that I would like to protect the interest of the city of Belleville in the matter. All parties interested having consented, it seems to me there is no ground for objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. I suppose there is really a question about the whole Bill being within the jurisdiction of this parliament. I think the mistake was in bringing the original Bill here years ago. As all the parties interested seem to be agreeable, I do not wish to raise any objection.

Mr. PORTER. I was absent when the Bill was under discussion before. But I have read the debate which took place on the two occasions, and in answer to the objections made as to this being a purely provincial matter and not within the jurisdiction of this parliament, I would point out that, even if this Bill were withdrawn, we should still have the same legislation as now exists, which is legislation by this parliament. This does not add to what has been done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) leaving the tolls as they are in the printed Bill ?

Mr. PORTER. As they are in the last Bill. These have been agreed upon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems a pity to charge a boy or a bicycle ten cents, the same as an automobile.

Mr. PORTER. The history of the bridge shows that there are very few bicycles passing. This was a compromise. The Bridge Company were asking for an increase of toll on single carriage, horse and driver. But there were so many of these going over the bridge, that it was thought that this would be too large an increase. It was thought that if they were given an increase of five cents on a bicycle, the number of which going over the bridge was small, it would appease them to some extent. Everybody is satisfied, and, so far as the bicycles are concerned, it will not materially affect anybody.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there not an agreement to have this Bill stand ?

Mr. GRAHAM. An amendment was suggested by the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. FIELDING. The amendment was with regard to the clause providing for a hearing by the Governor in Council. I suggested that the hearing might more properly take place before the Minister of Public Works who might report to the Governor in Council, because it is not usual for the Governor in Council to give hearings. I called the attention of the promoter of the Bill to it, but did not present it as an amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood my hon. friend to say that he was communicating with some friends in Saskatoon to ascertain if they were quite satisfied with the Bill in its present form.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not the mover (Mr. McCraney) who said that.

Mr. SPROULE. No, it was the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) who objected to that clause allowing four years to commence operations. And, he is absent tonight. But he could not have received word from Saskatoon in any case. Perhaps the Bill should be allowed to stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The promoter (Mr. McCraney) stated that he had communication from the city of Saskatoon agreeing to the terms of the Bill. They were quite satisfied, with the conditions surrounding it, that the provisions of section 3 would amply safeguard the city of Saskatoon.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. member for Grenville thought that their attention might not have been drawn to the feature of it which practically locks up the enterprise for four years, during which, it may be, nothing will be done towards the development of this power which would be a valuable one to the city if developed.

Mr. KNOWLES. So far as the objections of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) are concerned, I would say that the dam of the river is in my own riding, and I am familiar with that part of it. But I am afraid that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) did not understand on the previous evening that the Bill was going to stand until a reply could be received from the city of Saskatoon.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the understanding I had from his observations, I understood that he would communicate with the city.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Leeds and Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) had some communication, or sent some communication to ascertain whether the city council of Saskatoon thoroughly understood the Bill in the form in which it is now presented. He merely asked that it should stand until he received an answer. I suppose no one would suffer any detriment in doing that.

Mr. FIELDING. My amendment is not on the record but I find it in the 'Hansard,' as an amendment to subsection 2 of section 3. It was proposed that at a certain time a hearing should be had before the Governor in Council. I proposed that it should read :

At which application will be made to the Minister of Public Works for his approval of such plans; and the Minister of Public Works, after hearing such application, at such time or such other time as may be agreed upon by him, shall report to the Governor in Council, whether in his opinion such plans should be approved, and the Governor in Council may approve of such plans, &c.

I wrote the amendment hastily with the view of having the hon. member communicate with the law clerk of the House about it. I did not like to make this amendment in a hurried way at the table. Perhaps we had better let it stand. I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would suggest that we simply strike out the words 'Governor in Council' where they occur in section 3, and substitute therefor 'Minister of Public Works.'

Mr. FIELDING. That would leave it entirely in the hands of the Minister of Public Works with no reference to the Governor in Council. I have no objection to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might stand until Tuesday, and in the meantime the law clerk could prepare the amendment.

Progress reported.

PACIFIC AND ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 138) respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

On section 1,

Mr. DYMENT. This only provides for an extension of time. It passed through the Senate Committee without any discussion at all.

On section 5—Amended to read as follows :

The company may build branch lines of railway so as to connect its line of railway with any railway bridge which may be built across the St. Mary's river at or near Sault Ste Marie in the district of Algoma.

Mr. SPROULE. The usual practice is to name the railways. There is no railway named here.

Mr. GRAHAM. The company may build a branch line so as to connect it with any railway bridge which may be built. It is difficult to say what bridge they want to connect with, but it will be with whatever bridge is built.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Phoenix Insurance Company, Limited.—Mr. Macdonald.

Bill (No. 170) respecting the Nipissing Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCool

SUPPLY—THE ROSS RIFLE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Supply and the amendment of Mr. Worthington thereto.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr Speaker, I will only detain the House for a few minutes to finish the remarks that I was making on the amendment to the motion to go into Supply. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) seemed to think that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) had done a grievous wrong by making any criticism whatever of the Ross rifle and he said that in no other legislature in the world would criticism of this sort be permitted. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that in the mother of parliaments itself a vote upon the question of the character of cordite supplied to the army of Great Britain led to the defeat of the Rosebery government in 1895. That ought to be a good enough precedent for us to follow in this parliament. Of course I know that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has not a great deal of respect for Englishmen and what they do but still I thought that even he would admit that that is a fair precedent for us to follow in the Canadian House of Commons.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. gentleman mind quoting some authority?

Mr. FOWLER. I have just quoted the authority; that ought to be sufficient. The authority is the fact that the Rosebery government was defeated on the vote which I have mentioned——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Nonsense.

Mr. FOWLER—in 1895, which is the best possible authority. If a man who is a representative of the people felt that a rifle was being put into the hands of the militia of this country which would be dangerous for the militia to handle it would be a greater crime for him to keep silent than to speak. What are we here for? Are the Minister of Militia and the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton to be the only judges as to the arm with which the militia of this country shall be armed? If so things have come to a pretty pass. To say that an expenditure mounting into the millions shall be made by this government and that the members of parliament shall not have the right to discuss the subject of that expenditure is to take a position which is most extraordinary. I think that an argument of that kind needs only to be stated to be refuted; it carries its own refutation with it.

Now, Sir, the question of the cost of this rifle is a matter of some moment to the people of this country. It has been conclusively proved by the gentlemen who have preceded me in discussing this question from the opposition standpoint that the cost of the Ross rifle, even according to the data that we at present have, is about $33.25 per gun; whereas, the average cost of the rifle which it is going to displace, unless an indignant militia refuse to accept the arm, the gun which is supplied by the War Office and which is supplied by private individuals, is only $23.50 per gun. When I speak of the cost of the Ross rifle as being $33.25 I include the cost of the rifle, which is $25, the bayonet, which is $5.25, and the inspection which is $3 per gun, which is the amount according to the expenditure, although the Minister of Militia claims that the inspection costs $1.95 per gun. But, for 50,000 rifles they had a vote of $150,000 and almost the whole of that has been expended. Surely they will not deny that these rifles need a very great deal of inspection yet. The cost of the British rifle complete in all its parts, with bayonet and bayonet case, is $23.50, which makes a difference of about $10 on each gun. Some 60,000 of the Ross rifles have been ordered and this makes a matter of $600,000 of loss to this country. For what? For a sentimental idea. For some sentimental ideas $600,000 would not be too much to pay, but what is this sentimental idea? Let us analyze it. That guns may be manufactured in Canada? Are they? It has been conclusively proved, it has been admitted, that many of the component parts of this gun are not manufactured in Canada but are manufactured outside of Canada in a foregn country at that. Therefore, we are not paying out this $600,000 for a sentimental idea, but we are paying the $600,000 on account of a foolish contract that was entered into between the Minister of Militia and Defence and the Ross Rifle Company, or Sir Charles Ross, who, I believe, is the Ross rifle company itself. Is it worth it? That is what the people of Canada will ask. Apart from the question of the danger, which is, after all, the most important question, because you cannot compare a human life with the mere expenditure of money, but, apart from the question of danger to human life from using the gun, because it has been proved to be more dangerous in the hands of the man using it than to the party against whom it is directed, although I believe it did manage to shoot a man the other day in London, is it worth it that we should spend $600,000 for this purpose? That is what the people of the country are asking of this government. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has assailed the officials of the general staff. He insinuated that they have been false to their duty, that they have given out some information that was in the possession of the staff to members of the opposition. I want to say, and I say it on the authority of the hon. member for Sherbrooke that it is absolutely untrue that any member of the staff, that any member of the Militia Department, has given out any information, any secret or private information whatever, to him with reference to this matter. What I say for my hon. friend from Sherbrooke is true also with respect to my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) who spoke on this question last night. It is a very unfair thing for any member of this House to make an attack of that kind on gentlemen who are not here to answer for themselves and on gentlemen who are of the character of those who compose the general staff of the Department of Militia. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has told us that the best men in this country are in favour of the Ross rifle, are standing by it and will stand by it. Well, just let us see who are standing by the Ross rifle up to date. There is the Minister of Militia, one; there is the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, two; the manufacturer himself, three; and I suppose, when the vote is taken, the majority of the members of this House. The Minister of Militia stands by it—why? He has entered into the contract, he has made this contract, he has to stand by it. I think I have intimated fairly well the reasons why the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton is standing by it. It is very apparent why Sir Charles Ross, the manufacturer, is standing by it and the majority of the members of this House are forced by political exigencies to stand by it. The government has entered into the contract.

Those members know in their hearts that it was an unwise contract, that it is an improvident contract, that the rifle is not a good rifle, that the rifle is a worthless rifle ; but they are compelled to stand by the party because the government they are supporting has made the contract and good or bad they must vote in favour of it. Let us see who are the people who condemn this rifle. They are the experts of the Woolwich Arsenal in England ; they are the experts of the musketry school of Hythe, England. These people ought to know something about whether a rifle is good, bad or indifferent, and they have in unmeasured terms condemned this Ross rifle. It has also been condemned by the experts of the Springfield armoury in the United States, who were asked to report on this rifle, and Sir Charles Ross was himself present in 1903 at the Springfield arsenal when the tests were applied to his rifle and when it was found to be wanting and defective. Thus we have the great experts of the United Kingdom and of the republic of the United States condemning this rifle. Then, in Canada, it has been condemned by General Cotton, the master of ordnance and by Adjutant General Lessard, a member of the general staff, both of whom have reported against it. The officers and men of the militia of Canada have reported against it. The expert shots of the Dominion have reported against it and among others Sergeant Hayhurst, one of the best rifle men in Canada. The Royal Northwest Mounted Police are opposed to it. On the one hand we have the Ross rifle condemned by the experts of England, and the experts of the United States, and the master of ordnance in Canada, and the adjutant general of the militia of Canada, and the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and the officers and men of the militia. And who have we in favour of the Ross rifle ? We have the Minister of Militia, the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and the majority vote in this House which for the reason I have given, must sustain the action of the government in connection with the Ross rifle. I do not propose to detain the House any longer. I think the reasons given are amply sufficient why this resolution should be supported. I do not anticipate that those reasons will serve to convince hon. gentlemen opposite that they should vote against the government on this occasion, but when the great verdict of the people of this country is rendered and when the people have a chance to pronounce upon the question, I believe they will condemn the Ross rifle and the government in no uncertain terms.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I desire to say a very few words on this matter. Every one admits the absolute necessity of supplying the militia of Canada with an effective rifle, because our militia force without a proper arm would be absolutely useless. Therefore, the project to provide a proper supply of efficient rifles for the militia of this country ought to meet with the approval of all. The conditions which faced the Minister of Militia when he had to deal with this subject in 1902 were not free from difficulty. But, the very argument used by the Minister of Militia in support of his course and his explanation of the difficulties that have confronted him during the past six years, afford sufficient reason why he should have paused for a long time before he undertook to engage in the manufacture of a rifle and subject himself to the experience through which he says the English authorities have passed. It is asserted by the Minister of Militia that this was the rifle with which the Austrian army had been equipped since 1896, but the hon. gentleman did not make himself very clear on that point. Is the rifle Mark I which was selected by the Minister of Militia—which I understand to be practically the same as the sample rifle—is that rifle precisely the same as that which has been used by the Austrian army since 1896 ? That point has not been explained by the Minister of Militia. Now, the hon. minister took a proper course when he called together a board of the best experts of Canada for the purpose of determining whether or not this was a proper rifle, but before doing that it was most important that he should have considered whether he could procure within reasonable time for the militia of this country a proper supply of the Lee-Enfield rifles which are used by the British army. It has been admitted by the Minister of Militia that if it were possible to secure these rifles from the war department in Great Britain or to establish a manufactory in this country for their production, that would be the best course to pursue.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not think the minister admitted that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I understood.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He stated that was his desire, but I do not think he admits such is his intention now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say so. I said he admitted that if it were possible, there were certain advantages in having the militia of Canada armed with the same rifle as that supplied to the troops of the United Kingdom.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I thought you used the present tense, and said the minister 'admits.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not observe that the minister made any distinction between the present and the past tense. The argument has been made by the Minister of Militia that there was great difficulty in perfecting the Lee-Enfield rifle in Great Britain, and the same argument was very properly put forward by my hon. friend from Victoria, who says that in Great Britain they have Mark I, Mark II, Mark III, and Mark IV for all I know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Up to Mark X.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister therefore had before him the fact that a great deal of experimenting was necessary before any new arm to be adopted for the Canadian militia could be brought to a state of perfection. I should have thought that very circumstance would have caused the Minister of Militia to pause. He was embarking upon the manufacture of a rifle in Canada which his own board on inquiry had declared to be defective in certain respects, and notwithstanding this report the minister approved this rifle in the end without taking any steps, other than the report of Sir Charles Ross himself, to ascertain whether these defects could be remedied. That was a very unusual course for the Minister of Militia to adopt. He has read the report of that Board of Inquiry. It is not signed by all the members of the Board, but so far as I remember there is not a great deal of difference between the report of the main body of the board and that of the other members. They point out this :

> The chief objection or difficulty which was found in connection with the tests to which the Ross rifle was subjected, was brought out in the 'endurance test.' While in firing 1,300 rounds out of each of the rifles, the Lee-Enfield stood the test quite satisfactorily. It was found that after heating, the breech of the Ross rifle closed with more or less difficulty, the action being very stiff with occasional jamming besides which a possibility of 'double loading' exists.
> Were this an inherent objection to this rifle, independent of details of mechanism, the board would regard it as a very serious matter, but Sir Charles Ross states, that any difficulty in this respect can be effectually obviated, and the board submit herewith a memorandum (exhibit 'D') from him in reference to this point which in his opinion, affords an explanation of the unsatisfactory result of this test, and the manner in which the same may be overcome.
> The board do not profess to pronounce upon the question of a complete remedy of this objection, but having called attention to it, assume that due precaution and provision with reference thereto will be taken in the event of the rifle being adopted.

The English language could not be plainer for the purpose of placing upon the minister and the government the responsibility of determining that that defect could be remedied and would be remedied before the rifle was finally adopted. The report continues as follows:

> This is all the more important, inasmuch as in comparison with the Lee-Enfield, there is not the leverage in opening the breech which the mechanism of the latter rifle affords.
> The magazines of both rifles are unsatisfactory, and can be improved upon. The board recommended the adoption of the 'Harris feed system,' in the adoption of which there need be no difficulty.
> Speaking generally, the board believe that the Ross rifle has features which are a positive advantage over the Lee-Enfield, while it is contended by Sir Charles Ross that he can easily remedy any of the drawbacks which have been pointed out.

What reason, after all, was there for the government to abandon the Lee-Enfield ? What were the advantages of abandoning it and adopting the rifle which has been selected ? I do not desire to say one word which would reflect in any possible way upon the merits of the Ross rifle, and I do not think my hon. friend the member for Sherbrooke did anything more in his address than to read from the record page after page detailing certain defects which undoubtedly have been disclosed in this rifle. It is asserted that these for the most part have been remedied. Let it not be suggested for one moment that these reports are not important, because the Minister of Militia himself in the concluding part of his speech, speaking of the standing committee on small arms, said this:

> I believe these men are able, conscientious and determined to do their duty. Some of them are now at Quebec testing carefully an improved, I suppose it might be called, or a modified Ross rifle. As the result of what has happened; as a result of the reports which have been made, and information which has been gained, the contractor, with the assistance of members of the Militia Department, has thought it desirable to make certain changes, and before the manufacture of the new order for 10,000 rifles is begun this modified form of rifle will be thoroughly tested.

Well, it is of no use for us to say that these reports, which have been read in the House and which formed the principal part of the speech of my hon. friend from Sherbrooke, are not of much importance, in view of the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia has declared that owing to these reports a new, or as he terms it a modified, Ross rifle has been adopted and will be tested by the members of this standing committee before it will be served out to the troops of the country. It does seem to me that the reading of these reports to the House ought not to bring to the hon. member for Sherbrooke the condemnation which the Minister of Militia in the early part of his speech saw fit to mete out to that hon. gentleman.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the rifles now in store are not to be served out until the new rifles are ready ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I did not say that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because the rifles now in store are being distributed among the troops and will be used in the present camp.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I made no reference to anything of that kind, because I have no information on the subject. I was merely reading the hon. gentleman's language, and pointing out that in the new or modified form of Ross rifle which is now being tested, those changes have been made as the result of the very reports which have been brought forward in this House by my hon. friend from Sherbrooke. That is the language of the Minister of Militia in dealing with that subject.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In part.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, the hon. gentleman qualifies it by saying that there is other information.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I might point out, if the hon. member will allow me, that the only four important changes that have been necessary in the rifle are a return to four recognized in Mark I as first presented by Sir Charles Ross to the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not of course know about that. I do observe in some of the reports that in the first place there was Mark I. Some defects were found in that, and they were remedied, and Mark II rifle was brought out and supplied to the troops. In Mark II certain defects were found which had not been observed in Mark I; and Mark III, according to the statement just now made by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, is more or less a reversion to Mark I. But what I desire to point out is that the Department of Militia seems to have failed, so far as the evidence before the House shows, to have given much consideration to the defects pointed out by the committee in the first instance.

It would have been worth some further effort on the part of the Department of Militia and of the government to procure the Lee-Enfield rifle before this series of experiments were entered upon. Great Britain, according to the statements of hon. gentlemen who are authorities on this subject, has been experimenting on the Lee-Enfield rifle for a great many years. Why should not we take advantage of the experience of Great Britain in that regard instead of beginning a similar series of experiments ourselves?—because that is exactly the way in which it has turned out. We have been doing with the Ross rifle in the last six years exactly the same work which Great Britain has been doing with the Lee-Enfield in the last ten or twelve years. Was there any need of that? It would not seem so. The Minister of Militia says he was unable to induce the small arms companies of Great Britain to embark in the manufacture of the Lee-Enfield rifle in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Might I point out that the Lee-Enfield rifle, as it was in 1901, when the adoption of the Ross rifle was first considered has changed completely. Practically a new rifle has been adopted in England since then. I think there have been two serious changes in the Lee-Enfield—not simply changes but new types, two marks, since 1900. We would have had to go on changing just the same even if we had adopted the Lee-Enfield.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not prepared to dispute matters respecting which the minister must be better informed than I. But it seems to me that the minister's statement supports most thoroughly the argument I have just presented. Instead of beginning a series of experiments on a new rifle ourselves, it would have been more prudent to avail ourselves of the experience of the past in Great Britain as well as benefit by the experience which Great Britain must continue to gather in the future. Undoubtedly the experience of Great Britain must be very much greater than any we could acquire with our comparatively small military force. Great Britain must naturally have a greater number of great men possessing expert knowledge in the manufacture and improvement of arms, who are applying themselves continually to the devising of changes and improvements. I should think that would have been better than to begin the task of doing all that ourselves upon a relatively small scale, without anything like the same number of experts, or men of the same experience in a matter of a highly technical nature, such as this.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Does my hon. friend mean by that that he would have favoured the establishment of a government factory for the manufacture of rifles ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would require a little more information than is before the House at present before coming to a decision. My hon. friend, for example, says he could not procure any manufacturer in Great Britain to start the industry in this country. But he did not inform the House whether or not he offered to any small arms manufacturer in Great Britain the same terms as those he offered to Ross Rifle Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The negotiations did not proceed that far. I went to the Chamberlains who, I knew, represented the Birmingham Small Arms Company, and endeavoured to induce them to come here with a branch factory. They took time to consider and declined.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They might consider and decline the mere offer that they should come to Canada and establish a small arms factory. But they might consider and might not decline a proposal that they should come and establish a small arms factory on the same terms as those tendered to Sir Charles Ross. I am not passing any criticism on Sir Charles Ross in this connection. As a business man, he was perfectly justified in getting the best possible contract he could. But it seems to me that the terms were pretty favourable and such as would be likely to attract the attention of men in England engaged in manufacturing the Lee-Enfield.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I went so far as to state the probable number of arms we would require per year, and I also said I had no doubt the government would undertake to buy all its requirements from the small arms company if they would establish a branch here—those two points being similar to those in the Ross contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then of course there is the other consideration whether we could not have secured from Great Britain as large a supply of rifles at any time as we can get from the factory we have established.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We could not at that time get any.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be inclined to think, if it were known that the government of Canada required a certain number of rifles per year for a certain period of years, there would not have been great difficulty in arranging with the English government for the supply of those rifles. I would think it would be much easier for the small arms manufacturers in Great Britain to undertake to supply those than for Sir Charles Ross, who had no factory at all, and who had to build a factory.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is what the Birmingham Company said they would do, but they would have to get the consent of the War Office before making a contract. They wanted to remain in England and supply us here. We wished to have the factory here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree that, in the case of this industry, as of any other, it is desirable to have the manufacture carried on in Canada as far as possible. But when you are dealing with a technical matter like this, a matter of so experimental and delicate a character, when your purpose is to obtain a perfect rifle, and when you have the experience of every nation in the world showing the extreme difficulty in obtaining such a weapon, it would seem more prudent to have availed ourselves of the work and experience of Great Britain than to begin the manufacture ourselves under a contract such as this. After all these reports, after all the criticisms and commendations, what do you come down to ? You come down to the one thing which I am capable of understanding, because it is not technical and seems to have been written by a man of good common sense and certainly a good marksman. I refer to the report made only in December last by Sergeant Hayhurst. He certainly does not seem actuated by any unfair motives. His commendation of the rifle in some respects can be placed against his strong criticism of it in other respects. For example, he points out that in using the Ross rifle he got an average of eighty-five at the shorter ranges and ninety-five at the longer ranges compared with ninety-three and one hundred and four respectively, when he shot with the Lee-Enfield. There is perhaps no great difference, but it is not in favour of the Ross rifle. Speaking of the results he says :

> You will notice in all my scores with the Ross some very wide shots, more particularly at the longer ranges. I also used the improved Ross in practice for one week at Bisley in 1906 and had a similar experience.

Then he deals with the question of sights. He condemns them pretty severely. He criticises the barrel. He speaks of the breech mechanism and gives some criticism of that, but he favours some of the elements of the Ross rifle in that regard. As to the magazine he says :

> There is no question but that it would be much improved by the introduction of the clip feed in place of the hand feed. I found after careful practice that more cartridges go on the ground than into the magazine, and this would be much worse under the excitement of even rapid fire, not to speak of action.

Speaking of the stock he said :

> There is much that could be improved in this feature particularly the fitting, selection of material and strength.
> Of the many rifles I have examined the fitting was very bad, and the wood was frequently cross-grained and spongy where it should have been straight and sound especially at the small of the butt, a weak point.
> In conclusion I would say that with all of the bad faults and many of the weak features removed and strong durable parts introduced in their place a very fine serviceable rifle would result, but which for a fine accurate target shooting rifle would still be inferior to the present Lee-Enfield barrel with good sights and ammunition.

Well, that is not a very strong commendation of the rifle, taking the summary of Sergeant Hayhurst as a criterion of the character of the rifle at the present time. And what has impressed me throughout the discussion and from the reading of the various reports which have been made and the tests which have been had with the Ross rifle is that the Ross rifle may be a good rifle in many respects, but there is a great deal of doubt in the minds of those who have used it as to whether, in its present condition, so far as Mark I, and Mark II, are concerned, it is a rifle which will stand the rough usage which it must necessarily encounter in active service. And that would be the strongest criticism which I would have to make of the rifle from the evidence which has been presented, whether the testimony of witness or the documents brought down by the Militia Department. And, after all, that is what you want a rifle for—you want a rifle that will stand active service. If it will not stand active service and the usage it will get in active service, it seems to me that it is the duty of the Militia Department to see that the necessary changes are made, that a pattern rifle is provided such as will make future supplies of this rifle thoroughly serviceable to the troops of this country if they should be called to the field. You could not do a greater injustice to the militiamen of Canada than to ask them to take the field against a foe with a rifle by which they were handicapped. It would be a consequence to which we should all look with the utmost apprehension, with the utmost dread, that our young men, when meeting a foe, should be equipped with an arm which was not the equal of any arm in the world. But we cannot, apparently, feel very sure of that so far as Mark I, and Mark II are concerned. In fact, the action of the Minister of the Militia in accepting and now testing Mark III of this rifle, a modified form of the arm, is evidence enough that we have not been wholly successful up to the present time.

Now, with regard to the contract itself: In the first place, I do not observe—the minister will correct me if I am in error—that there were any specifications or drawings provided for. The quality of the rifle seems to depend altogether upon a certain sample rifle deposited with the minister, which is to be the standard according to which all future rifles must be manufactured. It is true that the sample may be improved from time to time and the contractor may be called upon to come up to the changes and improvements thus made. But there were no specifications and drawings. It may be that these are not necessary or usual, but one would suppose——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The company, of course, had drawings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but they are not referred to in the contract or made part of the contract. Therefore, the contractor is bound only by the agreement to manufacture the rifle up to the standard of the specimen rifle deposited with the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Inspection is provided for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that. But, if the rifle is inspected and found to come up to the standard, it must be accepted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Which can be based only on specifications and plans. Inspection would be absolutely impossible without specifications and drawings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the difficulty about that is that the minister seems inclined to bring into the contract something that is not there. The proper way, if drawings and specifications are required, would have been either to attach them to the contract or to provide that specifications and drawings should be submitted by the minister, and that the contractor should be obliged to comply with them. That would have left a certain remedy in the hands of the minister which is not available to him to-day.

Then, another unusual provision of the contract, and one greatly in the interest of the contractor, is that the expenditure in manufacture up to $18.75 is to be advanced by the govrenment from time to time. I infer from the evidence that the rifle could not cost the manufacturer more than $18.75. The result of the provision of the contract to which I have just referred, which has been read and which I shall not repeat, is that the government pays for the rifle as it is being manufactured, and that, on its delivery, it pays the profit. This means providing a very considerable proportion of the working capital, a very favourable provision for the contractor.

Another provision is that in case of war, the government may serve a notice of thirty days after which the contractor shall say how many rifles he is able to supply. This seems absolutely illusory. I do not see that the country could depend upon that. Suppose war had been declared between Great Britain and some other country five or six years ago, what would have been our position ? In the first place, our troops would have been armed with Mark I or Mark II of the Ross rifle, and these rifles apparently would not have been perfectly serviceable, for defects are admitted and stated in the reports read before this House. But, passing from that, what would have been our position as to obtaining any necessary further supply of rifles ? How would we stand under this contract as compared with our position under some reasonable arrangement with the War Office ? If we had an arrangement with the War Office, we could apply to Great Britain, who would certainly be the mistress of the seas, and who would be able to bring rifles to our shores. And it is beyond question that an arrangement could have been made for a proper supply within a reasonable time. What would be our position under the contract with Sir Charles Ross. I am not saying this by way of criticism upon him but by way of criticism upon the government for venturing to enter upon such a contract. We should require a further supply of rifles. We would give notice that war had been declared and would call upon him to state how many rifles he could supply. Under the terms of the contract, he could reply : I will supply 1,000 rifles within a year, and if he supplied that number in that time he would fulfil his contract.

Mr. FOSTER. He would have thirty days in which to make that reply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But suppose the government said : We want 50,000 rifles, he would have to state how many he could supply. We would at once be able to purchase the balance between the number he was able to supply and the 50,000 we require.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is exactly what I am saying. The minister is only adding point to my argument. You would be obliged to purchase from some other source.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, so far as Sir Charles Ross is concerned, you would have no guarantee of an adequate supply of rifles in an emergency. That is the point. The contract by its terms failed to make any provision whatever for such an emergency as I have pointed out. If we could purchase 49,000 rifles and Sir Charles Ross could supply only 1,000, what advantage would it be to us? Why not purchase the whole 50,000 from the same source as that from which we would obtain the 49,000 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a provision under which he is obliged to work double time, if necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know that. But he is not required by the terms of the contract to supply any particular number of rifles within a specified time.

Now, as I have said, during the course of construction, we are obliged to pay up to $18.75, that is, 75 per cent of the price of the rifle. We are obliged to supply that from time to time. We are obliged to supply that upon investigation of the amount expended by Sir Charles Ross, an investigation which does not seem to me to be a very adequate one. The Minister of Militia corrected me last night when I referred to this investigation as having been made by an inspector ; it appears to have been made by an accountant. I was misled by a provision of the contract. In the contract it is provided that the investigation shall be made by the inspector of small arms. But apparently it has been found impracticable to make any such investigation by a mere examination of the material on hand. Therefore an alternative method has been devised, and a chartered accountant employed by the government goes through the books of the Ross Rifle Company, makes a certain investigation and report, and upon that the money is paid over. The contract was unworkable and the substituted arrangement is unsatisfactory. Then there was another important feature of this contract, and that was the grant of about 19 acres of land upon the Plains of Abraham to this company. I do not know what the land was valued at when it was granted, I do not know whether it had any particular market value or not. But I should imagine that it would become of great value in the not distant future. As this practically amounted to a complete alienation of the land, it would have been much more to the credit of the government to follow the usual and constitutional course, and to come to parliament for power to make that grant. The whole project would then have been open to discussion and perhaps to criticism ; whereas under the course which was pursued, a lease for 99 years at a rental of $1 per year, and perpetually renewable, was granted to Sir Charles Ross; so that by means of a perpetual lease the land has effectually passed from the ownership and control of the people of this country without any opportunity for discusion in parliament.

The question of the price of the rifle has been gone into very fully by the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, and I will not deal with that again. It appears that the rifles purchased from the War Office in 1895 were purchased for about £2 15s.; the rifles purchased from the trade were of course more expensive. But so far as the price is concerned, we are certainly in no better position to-day, it is not pretended that under the contract we are to be in any better position in the future, than if we had procured these rifles in Great Britain.

Therefore, so far as this contract is concerned, it has not in any way improved the position of this country with regard to the armament of our forces. It does not improve the position so far as the character of the rifle is concerned. I would think that is a very moderate statement of the case. It does not improve the position of the country as to the cost of the arm.

The contract itself merely provides that we shall pay at the rate of $25 per rifle, and it is the intention of the contract that we shall pay to Sir Charles Ross exactly the same price as that which we would have been obliged to pay in Great Britain. It does not improve the position of the country in so far as assuring an effective supply of rifles is concerned. The Minister of Militia just now has answered me by saying that if we could not get them from Sir Charles Ross, we could at least purchase them from somewhere else. We could have done that if this factory had not been established. This, taking these three leading aspects of the case, I am not able to see how the position of the country has been improved by this contract.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the action of the government in entering into this contract, in the first place, without proper investigation of the character of the rifle, deserves the censure of this House. The government took a proper step in the first instance by establishing a board to make a certain investigation, but when that board disclosed certain defects in the rifle, the government absolutely failed in its duty in not continuing that investigation so as to become absolutely assured of its position before it entered into a contract which would bind this country for all time to come. Having regard to the fact that six years have since elapsed, and that during that time the defects that were then pointed out by that board do not seem to have been remedied either completely or satisfactorily, censure must certainly be laid at the door of the Department of Militia. It may be, as my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton has said, that this is to be attributed to some officers in the department. I pass no opinion upon that. But my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton himself, in speaking of the inaction of the department or of its officials, said that as a result every one was condemning this rifle from Dan to Beersheba. Well, if every one was condemning the rifle it was surely high time for my hon. friend the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) to bring the matter to the attention of the House, and to invite a discussion of the motion which he has presented. I venture to think that the situation to-day is not very desirable or satisfactory. We are paying as much for this rifle as we would have paid for the Lee-Enfield rifle. We will continue to experiment upon it in the future. We have not the same rifle as that which is employed by the British forces, we have not the benefit of the experience and knowledge gained by the British government in its experiments on the Lee-Enfield rifle, and in time of war we have absolutely no sufficient guarantee that there will be a necessary supply of rifles forthcoming. Under these circumstances, I think the matter has been properly brought to the attention of the House, and that the government, in dealing with the whole subject of the arming of our forces by this rifle, has not displayed the diligence and the knowledge of conditions that might properly have been expected.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). I feel like apologizing to the House for speaking at this late hour on a subject which has been apparently so well threshed out. But I am desirous of saying a few words on the subject of this rifle, with which I am personally cognizant, and also of reading a letter or two from some of the people who are interested in rifle shooting in our country. I do not propose to go into the merits of the contract entered into between the Ross Rifle Manufacturing Company and the government, nor am I going into the many questions that have been brought up by the hon. gentleman who moved this motion, and have been spoken to by the Minister of Militia, the member for Victoria and Haliburton and others. I want to relate a little experience I have had myself with the Ross rifle, and also with the Lee-Enfield. I have had considerable experience in shooting, and have been an active member of the Vancouver Rifle Association for some years, and have associated with riflemen on the coast for the last ten or twelve years. I want to say that there are no body of men who are more severe in their criticism of a fire arm than the riflemen; and when they, the formers speakers, speak of every Lee-Enfield as being a perfect shooting weapon, they speak as men who have not had as much experience in rifle shooting and in handling rifles. The good shots, who have won their position on the provincial teams then on the Dominion team, and from that to the Bisley team, trying and retrying rifles that are stored in the different armouries throughout the country. A good shot will come in and look over the rifles that are stacked, and he will select from the armoury a rifle to take out to the range. I have seen Lee-Enfields taken out of the armoury and tried on the range, guns that nobody would attempt to make any correct shooting with. After trying them I think every man who has used the rifle will bear out that statement. Many Lee-Enfields have been given out in times past and will be given out, as many Ross rifles will be given out. Many Mannlicher, many Krag-Jorgenson and many other rifles, no matter what the manufacture may be, which are not perfect weapons in every respect. So that, to condemn the whole Ross rifle outright on account of the bad shooting of one, or two, or three, or even one hundred or two hundred rifles, will not be justified if a fair comparison be made between that rifle and other rifles. I am of the opinion that the government acted very wisely indeed in establishing a rifle factory in Canada. If it were to carry out the well established principle, laid down many years ago in Canada, that we shall endeavour to manufacture as many kinds of goods as we can for use in Canada, if it were to follow out the protection policy of our friends opposite, then there can be no argument by or on behalf of our hon. friends opposite against the establishing in Canada of a rifle manufactory. We, to-day, protect very highly indeed all kinds of manufactured goods. We are endeavouring to bring in manufactures; so that we are simply carrying out a well established principle of this and other governments in attempting to bring into the country all the manufactures we possibly can. Whether or not it was wise to have given the Ross Rifle Company a site on the Plains of Abraham is a question that I am not going to discuss, but I am of the opinion that the people down in the city of Quebec, who are directly benefiting by the establishment of that factory, were willing to see it established on the Plains of Abraham. So, I do not think that a very good case has been made out on that question. We want manufactures of all kinds in Canada and we want rifles to be manufactured in Canada. If we are ever to be a great nation, as we all hope we will be, we have to undertake all the responsibilities of nationhood and citizenship; so that, when we have established in the country the manufacture of rifles we have made one great step towards our own independence of any other country in supplying us with arms in case we should require them. I must, if I am not too bold, commend the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) for the very fair way in which he has handled this question. He asks: Why did you give up the Lee-Enfield? Why did you go into the manufacture of rifles? There is no more reason in the world why we should have clung to the old Lee-Enfield as there is why Great Britain should have clung to the original Lee-Enfield. I have shot with the old Lee-Enfield and I have seen guns of that make prefectly useless in so far as good shooting is concerned. It may have been a good weapon of offence and defence in the field, but so far as good marksmanship is concerned it was impossible. A great deal of the criticism that has been levelled against the Ross rifle has emanated from the marksmen of Canada. I tried the Ross rifle three years ago. I went to the butts along with some others and we tried the rifle out there. There was nothing wrong with the mechanism, there was nothing wrong with the magazine and there was nothing wrong with the shooting qualities other than this, and it is a point that I immediately brought to the attention of the Minister of Militia, that the percentage of clear cut marks in the target was less than the percentage of those that keyholed. Members of the House who are not used to rifle shooting will not know posssibly what that difference means, but if the rifle ball is the least bit, I might say, wobby, it will make a keyholed shape mark in the target, as the Lee-Enfield never does. It made a keyhole mark in the target and our shots did not take very kindly to the rifle on that account. However this, like everything else that is being tried, is a new departure and a government or an individual is bound to meet with criticism. If the government or the Department of Militia and Defence, on finding these defects, did not eliminate them they would be justly be targets for the most severe criticism. Mark I rifle, not being a perfect weapon, in so far as the experiments showed, Mark II was issued. The defects in Mark I were overcome by Mark II. Then the defects of Mark II were overcome by Mark III and that has been the history of any rifle that has ever been given to troops in any part of the civilized world. I want to read a letter that I have received from one of the best shots we have in British Columbia. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the province of British Columbia, per capita, has the best shots in Canada. The rifle team that comes down here to the butts at Rockliffe has done the best shooting during the last five years of any other rifle team in Canada. I speak of per capita. We have a man in our province who has been upon the Bisley team many times and we have also a King's prizeman. Major Duff-Stuart who was one of the original winners of the Palma trophy down at Seagirt is one of the men who favours the Ross rifle. This letter is from Lieutenant James Sclater, a gentleman who won the Grand Aggregate last year at the butts in the province of British Columbia and was also well up, not in the first twenty, but in the Bisley team for this coming year, although he is not on the Bisley team. Mr. Sclater is a well known gentleman in the city of Vancouver, having lived there for twenty years, he was for many years agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway and is now agent of the Western Fuel Company, the Macdonald Marpole Company, as it is called, and is a man of high standing in British Columbia. He writes me this letter unsolicited:

Vancouver, British Columbia, April 25, 1908.

My Dear Sir,—I wondered when I wired you yesterday asking for the new model Ross if you would understand. The message was suggested by Fred. Richardson, who is at present in the hospital here, who had been in communication with Sir Charles Ross concerning a trial of the new gun which I made here. This new model of the Ross is a crackerjack. You mark my words if in a short time, when a few of them have been handed out and the men know what they are capable of, you do not see a demand for them from the militia from end to end of the country. There will be no more knocks, except from some prejudiced ones. I went out last Wednesday along with Duff Stuart and Mr. Studd, of the V.R.A., did not know how the rifle would shoot, or anything about it except that, from our previous experience of which you know, I had no faith in the gun. I was practically a man prejudiced against the Ross. I came away from the range an enthusiast in its favour. It was agreed that I would take two sighters at each range, and then shoot match conditions, with time limit on shots and all other ordinary restrictions. I made the following scores:

and made a 'magpie' with my second last shot at that. With just a little more care I could have had my 'century,' for after I had finished my score I put on three more bulls-eyes just by way of practice. Show me any rifle that a man can do that with for the first time that is not a true weapon. Its straight shooting powers were a revelation both to Duff Stuart and myself. After I had finished the official scores, Duff lay down and put on 34 at 500 and 32 at 600 just as easy as rolling off a log. You ought to have seen the pleased look of wonderment and delight on his face as he plugged in bull after bull, as much as to say 'Well, isn't this easy.' He was another convert and Duff knows a thing or two about a rifle. Since then I have had the rifle out on the range twice and while I did not make 98 with it on account of the weather conditions which were totally against big scoring, yet I made top score shooting against the whole regiment on both occasions, and with no aids to sighting other than the plain sights used on the Lee-Enfield. With the Sutherland adjustable sights the new model ought to be unbeatable. If I continue to get the same satisfaction out of the Ross as I got out of the one owned by Richardson, I shall take it to Bisley and take my chances with them all. Of course I am not an expert on arms and can only speak of what I find. I am more than delighted to know that I am getting one of the new rifles.

Yours,
(Sgd.) J. SCLATER.

That in my opinion, is as good an argument in favour of the Ross rifle, and a good deal better than any that could be used against it by Sergeant Hayhurst who evidently sat down to write out a thorough criticism. I am not casting any aspersion upon Sergeant Hayhurst but I believe that if Sergeant Hayhurst takes one of these new rifles and lies down at the butts, with his sharp eye and steady hand he will make such scoring as he never made before. I believe from what Mr. Sclater says there is no better weapon made. Let me point out this further: the 'News-Advertiser' of Vancouver is the Conservative organ in that city and it is one of the sanest papers published in British Columbia, and their military writer in his article which appears in the Sunday issue has this to say of the Ross rifle.

On account of the many criticisms of the Ross rifle, it may be of interest to state that a new model of this rifle has been under test here lately. Staff Sergeant Richardson, the well-known rifle shot, of Victoria, who is at present in the general hospital here, convalescing from a severe illness, purchased one of the new Ross's, but owing to his sickness was prevented from trying it at the range. It was entrusted to one of the local shots for trial, and a most satisfactory result was obtained on Wednesday of last week. The test was made under the supervision of Major Duff Stuart, the adjutant of last year's Bisley team, who states that the rifle is one of the best shooting weapons that he has ever had in his hands. In the new model a radical change has been made in the barrel, which has been increased both in length and weight resulting in great accuracy in shooting power. The complicated sights of the original Ross have been abandoned, it being the intention, it is understood, of equipping the new model with the Sutherland sight. In the one under trial here, the ordinary 'H' sight with which the ordinary Lee-Enfield is equipped was attached, so that the results obtained may be fairly compared with those obtainable from a Lee-Enfield. At the 200 yards' range, the score was 33 out of a possible 35. At 500 yards two consecutive scores of 34 were made, and at 600 yards the scores were respectively 31 and 32, all being shot under match conditions. Lieutenant J. Sclater, who assisted in the trial, is so satisfied with the new model that he has ordered one from the Ross factory, which ought to be here in the course of a week. Other improvements than those mentioned above have also been made in the rifle, of which a detailed description will appear later.

I might go on for a considerable time showing the merits of the Ross rifle, but I do not think I could add anything stronger than I have read from the letter of Mr. Sclater and from the pen of the military writer in the 'News-Advertiser.' I say this: no matter what department of a government undertakes a new departure they must expect the severest criticism, and, if after five or six years we have succeeded, as we apparently have, in bringing a weapon to such perfection as the new Ross rifle has attained, then I say the money has been well expended and the government is to be commended for the undertaking.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Worthington).

Amendment of Mr. Worthington negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Post Office—outside service—salaries and allowances, $2,353,139.25.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). There is here an increase of $286,800, which is made up as follows; post office inspector's offices, $12,000; railway mail service, $71,000; post offices generally, $203,000. The increase in the offices of post office inspectors is made up as follows; twenty-six increases of $50 each and one of $30, eleven additional clerkships, and one additional messenger.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What are the duties of inspectors ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The duties of inspectors are defined in the Post Office Act. Generally the inspector visits all the offices of his district, instructs the postmasters in their duties, looks after the accountant's branch in the several offices, and reports upon their condition to the department at Ottawa. He also locates new offices. He takes the place of the Postmaster General in his district, subject always to the decision of the Postmaster General.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Has he any authority over the time the mails go to different places in the country ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The inspector is bound to give attention to all these details. When a demand is made for an increased service, the Postmaster General refers the matter to the inspector, who makes a report to the Postmaster General, and then authority is given to him to open an office or otherwise to increase the service.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General and also to the attention of the Minister of Railways a matter which is of great importance to the constituency which I have the honour to represent. Some time ago a railway was constructed from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour. Previous to that time the mail left Charlottetown at six o'clock in the morning and was distributed by stage all along the route to Murray Harbour the day after it reached Charlottetown. I wish to read for the benefit of the minister an editorial which appeared in the Charlottetown 'Guardian' of the 15th of May, which will perhaps make the matter clearer than I could express :

Murray Harbour Railway.

There are many complaints of the inadequacy of the train service on the Murray Harbour Railway, and they appear to be well founded. The service is slow and not well arranged. Passengers desiring to leave points along this road and cross by steamer to the mainland under the present arrangements must stay over night in the city both going and coming, and on their return trip must spend not only the night but the best part of the following day here. If a Sunday intervenes the case is still worse.

The mail arrangements by train are equally bad, the incoming mails being held over night and till three o'clock the following day before going out on the train and only reach their destination late the following night at best, and for points a little off the railway not till the third day. This cannot be called modern or up-to-date service. Even under these conditions the traffic on the branch is large and has exceeded expectations. The people served by the road are clearly entitled to a better mail service.

A good while ago it was given out that the Railway Department would put on motor cars for service on this road, but nothing has been heard of this recently. If only one of these cars was put on the Port Vernon loop to connect with the train on the main line it would save an hour in the regular through service. Surely something can be done that will give the patrons of this road a chance to come and go and make connection with the outside world with reasonable promptitude.

Never before were so many millions being expended on transportation, and this we are told is an election year. And yet the train and mail service on the government road through this thickly settled and prosperous section of the most thickly settled province of Canada is such as we have described. The interests of business, the convenience of the travelling public, the general welfare and good politics alike demand that this service shall be speedily and permanently improved.

This is a matter which should secure the attention, not only of the Postmaster General, but of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Probably the fault lies with the Minister of Railways. There is no doubt that this is a line of railway which pays the government of Canada perhaps as well as any of the branch lines connected with the government system, still we have the fact that the mails for the southern portion of the province arrive in Charlottetown between 9 and 11 at night and are not distributed until three or four days afterwards. It is up to the Postmaster General to improve the system, and I believe, that if this matter had been brought to his attention before, he would have improved it. He should see that we have an up to date post office system in the province, especially the southern portion, which had a better system before we were given improved communication by railway.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this to my attention. The fault does not lie with my department but with the Railway Department, which has the arranging of the railway system of Prince Edward Island. The Post Office Department pays the Intercolonial Railway for mileage just as it does other railway companies, and we are entitled to just as good a service. I shall make the necessary representations to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals to-morrow and see that the Intercolonial Railway gives us a service on Prince Edward Island to which the Island, and particularly that section of Queens county, is entitled.

Mr. ALEXANDER MARTIN (Queens). I am pleased to hear this statement of the hon. gentleman. I do not think however he can claim that the matter has not been brought to his attention. I placed a question on the Order Paper early in the session.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was away.

Mr. ALEXANDER MARTIN (Queens). I also asked for the correspondence. The question has been brought up year after year, and I trust the minister will take the necessary action now. Heretofore the difficulty was that the Postmaster General laid the blame on the Minister of Railways and Canals, and that minister laid it on somebody else. But if they will both agree, there would be no difficulty in remedying the present condition. That can only be done by giving us a second train ; and if that is done, the hon. minister will be entitled to the gratitude of our people.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the hon. minister any inspectors to look after the literature which comes through the mails ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Every postmaster is by law authorized to inspect such literature. He sends the objectionable literature to the department at Ottawa which passes on it in the last resort.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the department do with it ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Burn it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is there any inspection of literature which comes from Great Britain ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Generally speaking, the literature coming from Great Britain is not objectionable. Still last year my attention was brought to some papers which should not be entitled to the privilege of the mail, and through the good offices of His Excellency we prevented it from coming in. I have here a blue-book published by the Postmaster General in England, giving the list of Canadian magazines posted—that is the magazines coming under the special arrangement we made last year with Great Britain and entitled to what is called the intellectual preference. My hon. friend will see that it is very respectable and high class literature.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been told that there are many publications coming from Great Britain which should not be allowed in.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Many come in by express.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. These are coming in weekly. You can get them in some of the book stores. I went down and picked out half a dozen in one book store. They are the very lowest class of literature, both as regards the printed matter and the illustrations, and should not be allowed into the country. It is the duty of the hon. minister to make some investigation and take some steps to prevent such literature coming in. He knows very well that a great deal of the literature circulated in Great Britain should not be allowed to pass through our mails. You can put your brightest and brainiest in the pulpit and your best young men and women in your Sunday schools, and you may take care of your schools, academies and universities as much as you like, but so long as you have literature of this class filtering into the country, you are going to have the tone of the people dragged down. And when I find the Postmaster General stopping some of the splendid magazines coming here from the United States, the 'Scientific American,' the 'Outlook,' and many papers devoted to industrial education—or, if not stopping them, making them more difficult to obtain by adding to the cost of them in this country—I cannot but note the contrast in this treatment and the treatment of these and the papers of which I complain. So far as the daily newspapers are concerned, the Postmaster was forced to take a different position from that which he assumed at first; and he has paid out tens of thousands of dollars of the public money of this Dominion to daily papers throughout the country because he made the serious blunder in his treatment of daily newspapers in the mails. He made a similar blunder in regard to the weekly newspapers. The weekly newspapers that go from this country to the United States ought not to be saddled with extra postage. It is well enough for the minister to say that he has placed a man at the border to receive these papers and distribute them throughout the United States, but he will not find the weekly papers satisfied with that. They want a removal of the embargo upon them. Not only are these clean papers, but they do a good work in advertising Canada gratuitously in the United States. The minister knows that he is backing down with regard to these newspapers as he did in the case of the dailies. But instead of coming out squarely and placing them on the same footing as the dailies, he is trying to satisfy them with some little advantage. But the weekly papers are not to be satisfied in that way. They will press their rights until they obtain them.

But my main object in rising was to call the attention of the minister to some of the pamphlets coming into our country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They do not come through our mails.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But somebody has charge of the literature that circulates in our country. Which of our ministers has control of the investigation of news stands? The newsdealer from whom I purchased these papers of which I have spoken told me that he had fifty publications coming from Great Britain. I picked out half a dozen which should never be allowed to be exposed in this country and the minister knows it well. No matter how they come here, they will have the effect of lowering the tone of our people, and they should not be allowed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The question to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) has referred is not a new one. I can assure my hon. friend that as regards this periodical, 'Photo Bits'——

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the minister will allow me, I refrained from naming any of these publications, because I do not think we should give them any advertising in this House. I would respectfully ask the minister not to use the names.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very well. As regards this publication which I hold in my hand, it is one of the papers, which, long ago, has been stopped by the department from coming through in the mails. I have myself given instructions with regard to said publications, and every officer in the department with a head on his shoulders, knows that we have a right to stop such literature from passing through the mails. But, when they come in otherwise, for instance, when they come by express direct to the newsdealer, we have not control over them. It is not my duty to watch the news-stands and, when to issue warrants against news dealers. That is the business of the provincial authorities. The duty of the Postmaster General in reference to this class of literature is clearly defined in the Post Office Act. But, for instance, my hon. friend saw these papers on a news stand. If he had felt it his duty to have a warrant issued against the newsdealer, his course was to go the police court and lay an information. The provincial authorities would, I am sure, sustain his course. The Postmaster General has surveillance over matter that goes through His Majesty's mail, but that is all. In many cases, we have gone beyond the strict letter of our duty in this matter. On many occasions complaints were made to me, for instance, by the Lord's Day Alliance, and members of the clergy, who lose no time when they find that unwholesome literature is being circulated in the country, in appealing to the Post Office Department. Under such circumstances we give the most positive instructions to the postmasters, and if the papers do not come through the mail, we take upon ourselves to write to the attorney general of the province. On several occasions I have written to Mr. Foy and to Mr. Gouin, and have called attention to the complaints which were coming to the Post Office Department. My hon. friend may rest assured that we have no intention to allow this class of literature to be circulated in the country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot understand how it is that the Postmaster General can take unto himself the authority of dealing with daily papers or weekly papers coming into the Dominion——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Through the mails.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, these do not come through the mails.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They do not pass through the post office.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When they pass through the post office any thing objectionable would easily be covered by a wrapper. There is no reason to suppose that they are coming in by express. Then why is it that he has no power to deal with weekly papers, the filthy papers from the United States ? He admits to-night that the weekly papers can come in here in bulk by express, and be distributed to the news stands, because he has admitted that he has not any control over these publications that are coming in from Great Britain.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend surely knows that papers can enter in the form of parcels from England. They come over in a separate compartment of the mail steamer, by express, and they are sold to the newsdealers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why not the same over the United States papers ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend knows that, for instance, papers can come from Buffalo to Toronto by express without passing through the post office. With these, we have nothing to do. Perhaps the Minister of Customs would have something to do with them. We have a surveillance only over the papers coming through His Majesty's mail. Now, as regards the filthy literature, I take issue with my hon friend when he says that there is a carnival of obscene literature in the Dominion, any one would infer from his words that this kind of literature is being spread all over the Dominion. From the reports we have it appears that the bulk of periodicals come through the mails, and it is only in exceptional cases that they come by express. But as regards papers coming through the mails, I can assure my hon. friend, from the reports I have from the officers of the department, and from my own experience in dealing with these matters, that since the amended convention came into force last year in the month of May, we have practically purged the mails. If my hon. friend will not take my word for it, I would ask him to inquire for instance from the very zealous association in the province of Ontario known as the Lord's Day Alliance ; let him ask the members of the clergy. We have received many letters from those associations in Ontario and other provinces thanking the department for the course we have followed on that question. This paper surely does not come through the mails, it started throught the mails, but we stopped it. There are four or five obscene papers of the same class and with about the same title coming into Canada. But when those papers are being sold, any citizen can lay a complaint, can have a warrant issued and a fine imposed on the newsdealer who sells them. But that citizen must himself put the judicial machinery into motion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Some minister must be responsible for this literature that is coming in. Perhaps it is the Minister of Customs, who has been looking at one of these papers for a little while.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend may find the evidence in the blue book which I handed to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that as soon as we make representations to the post office authorities in Great Britain as to the objectionable nature of any of the newspapers which have applied to be put on the Canadian post list, they immediately withdraw the privilege which is given those papers, that is to say, the privilege of coming into this country at the reduced rate.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the minister if he did not forbid 'Collier's Weekly,' the 'Scientific American' and some other United States publications from being expressed into this country and distributed here ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The weeklies from the United States were coming in with a mass of other papers, good, bad and indifferent. They were filling our mail cars, they were paralyzing the whole mail service. It was not the desirable papers that were coming in in such large quantities, but mere advertising sheets which under cover of a journal, contained nothing else but advertisements, and sometimes very filthy advertisements; novels and novelettes. As I have explained to the House time and again, we objected to that. We said, the time has come when we must control our own classification, that is to say, the papers that should be admitted into our mails coming from the United States must be of the same character as the paers published in our own country and enjoying the second class rate. The Americans were not averse to that; they were themselves deluged by so-called papers loading down their mails and had been for years. Representations were made, and finally it was agreed that these papers should come from either country at a rate not less than four cents a pound. Now my hon. friend says: You have departed from your cast iron rule, you have backed down, you have not been consistent. Let me tell him that the objection was not against the dailies. The daily papers published in the United States and sold in Canada are not objected to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why is it if the daily papers are not the objectionable papers that are coming into this country the minister has been compelled to pay tens of thousands of dollars of the people's money for the mistake that he made last May?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well what has the minister done?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend must not give himself to the—shall I say virtue—I dare not say vice—of exaggeration. He should not exaggerate. We had first to come to definite terms. We said that papers going out from Canada to the United States, or papers coming from the United States to Canada and enjoying second class mail privileges, would have to pay four cents a pound—dailies and weeklies included. We make no distinction in regard to that certain rule. My hon. friend asks: How is it that you have paid back to the papers thousands of dollars? Here is what happened: Very few American daily papers are read in Canada. On the other hand some of our newspapers are sold in large quantities in the United States, especially in the eastern states, and also in Michigan and Ohio. The Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the Toronto 'Daily Mail,' the Toronto 'Globe,' 'La Presse,' 'La Patrie,' 'Le Canada' considered themselves somewhat mulcted when that new regulation was put into force and as our objection was not against the daily newspapers and as they were bona fide papers falling under our classification, publishing political news and giving the ordinary food which one might expect in a daily newspaper, we relaxed the rule and we stated that our amendment to the convention would not apply to them. When we amended the convention last year the Canadian Press Association met at Toronto, and, whilst we were patriotic enough not to object too strongly to the new convention as amended, yet, it appealed to the Postmaster General and asked that it should not exact the difference between the old rate and the new rate until the first of January. That representation was made to me by all the papers, the 'Daily Mail and Empire,' the Toronto 'Globe,' 'La Presse' of Montreal, the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' having a circulation in the United States. The editors sent a delegation to Ottawa and they said: You should not exact the difference between the old rate and the new rate until the 1st of January next. The change took place in the month of May last. Well, I said to the representatives of the Canadian Press Association: First of all, be good enough to pay according to the new rate and on the 1st of January I will ascertain if really you have been taken by surprise and on the 1st of January, if my colleagues agree to it, I will see that a remittance is made. Was not that fair and was not that good policy? They reported to me that the notice had not been sufficient. According to the postal convention between the United States and Canada a public notice of some months has to be given that an amendment will take place or that the convention will be abrogated. The newspapers said: We did not pay attention to that; we did not see it. We were in ignorance of the amendment and it has taken us by surprise. Under these circumstances I reimbursed them the difference between the old and new rate on the 1st of January next. That is what has been done and there has been no complaint against it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I may be very dense but I cannot quite understand this. On May last the minister places a restriction on daily and weekly papers going into the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And coming from the United States.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And also on papers coming from the United States into Canada. Now he has receded from that position. He takes back all that he has done in regard to daily papers and in taking back what he has placed on the statute-book he allows every daily paper in the United States to come into this country just the same as they did two years ago. The same daily papers are coming as they came two years ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no objection to them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why did not the minister investigate the subject last May and satisfy himself before he put the daily papers to all the inconvenience that they have been put to for a year, the loss of subscriptions and the loss of thousands of dollars that he has paid back. He must admit that he has paid that money out without getting any value for it. I would suggest to the minister that instead of only backing down part of the way in connection with the daily papers he should come out and say, I have made the same kind of blunder in regard to the weekly papers and I will do the same thing ; I will pay them for the mistake made last May.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I cannot be so angelic as to admit that I have made the blunder that my hon. friend suggests I have made. I confess that I am but human, but still under the circumstances I have done the best and events have proven that the policy was on the whole a wise one. As regards daily newspapers, there was no complaint, but we had at that particular moment to apply the rule to all newspapers whether weeklies or dailies. I have outlined briefly to the House the arrangement I have made with the Washington authorities and I think it is a fair arrangement as regards the weeklies. I may now state fully how the whole question stands :

The interchange of second class matter between Canada and the United States is now effected at the rate and regulations herein stated.

Under the postal convention between Canada and the United States, as amended in January last, and effective since February 5 last, legitimate daily newspapers published in either country, and addressed to bona fide subscribers in the other, may be mailed by the publisher in the post office at the place where they are published upon prepayment of postage in cash at the rate of one cent per pound or fraction thereof.

Newspapers and periodicals published less frequently than daily, when posted in either country for despatch to the other, are liable to postage at the rate of one cent for each four ounces, or fraction thereof, calculated on the weight of the package for each post office of destination, and when thus mailed direct prepaid by stamp the country of destination is under obligation to effect distribution of whatever may have been accepted by the country of origin.

United States legitimate newspapers and periodicals, other than dailies, which have been accepted by the Post Office Department of Canada, may, under the mailing-in-Canada privilege upon prepayment of postage at the rate of one cent per pound, be posted by United States publishers at the following Canadian post offices, viz.: St. John, New Brunswick; Montreal, Quebec; Toronto, Ontario; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Calgary, Alberta, and Vancouver, British Columbia. Copies to be so tendered for mailing must be despatched to Canada by express and be restricted to bona fide subscribers. Publications admitted under the mailing-in-Canada privilege must comply with the provisions of the Postal Law of Canada, that is, in their subject matter they must 'consist wholly or in great part of political or other news or of articles relating thereto, or to other current topics.'

Canadian newspapers and periodicals issued less frequently than daily may be posted in the United States upon prepayment of postage at the one cent per pound rate. United States regulations governing the mailing in that country of a newspaper or periodical published in another country expressly stipulates that copies of a publication so mailed, in order to be accepted at the one cent per pound rate of postage, must be posted by the publisher's authorized agent, and in accordance with this regulation it would be necessary that the Canadian publisher have an authorized agent in the place at which he desired that his publication should receive entry into the United States mails as second class matter. Recently, however, this regulation was modified to the extent that eleven United States post offices have been exempted from requiring that the posting should be performed through a publisher's agent. The Canadian publisher may, therefore, assign his mailings by express direct to the postmasters of the following offices:

Boston, Massachusetts.
St. Albans, Vermont.
Ogdensburg, New York.
Buffalo, New York.
Detroit, Michigan.
Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.
St. Paul, Minnesota.
Grand Forks, North Dakota.
Helena, Montana.
Spokane, Washington.
Seattle, Washington.

from which offices they will be distributed through the United States on prepayment of postage at the rate of one cent per pound, provided, of course, that application for second class privileges has been made by the publisher at the United States post office at which he desires to secure entry, and that such application has been accepted.

My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) will note that the weekly rate is now 1 cent per pound and not 4 cents. Each country, therefore, has the power to see that its own classification is followed. Every weekly paper going to the United States will have to apply to the post office authorities at Washington to be entitled to the second-class special rate of 1 cent per pound and I think it is safe to say that every weekly paper in Canada will obtain that privilege.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, yes, the Canadian papers are all respectable papers, and of course we could retaliate if it became necessary, which I do not think is at all likely. After this permission is obtained the weekly newspaper can be sent to one of these points on the border line and instead of compelling these newspapers to have an agent there on the spot, the United States authorities will relax that regulation and the postmasters will be the authorized agents for these weeklies. We do not in Canada exact from the United States periodicals the appointment of an agent to obtain the remailing privilege. We are on an equal footing therefore, and the rate of postage for Canadian weeklies, which conform to this regulation, will be in future 1 cent per pound plus the express charge which is practically nothing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I see the minister is letting himself down as easily as possible.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I should have pointed out that we have secured what I may term our independence in connection with postal matters. I will admit, to please my hon. friend, that I have receded on the dailies and that I have receded to some extent on the weeklies.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But we have gained this very important point that we will only admit to His Majesty's mails in Canada the newspapers that will come within the Canadian classification. Prior to the recent amendment to the convention we were obliged, under the reciprocity as regards postal matters, to accept a huge mass of filthy weeklies, objectionable literature, and patent medicine advertising sheets. Now, we accept only such as come under our own classification and that is a great advantage to Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How are you situated in regard to publications from Great Britain?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Newspapers published in Great Britain can come to Canada at the reduced rate of 2 cents instead of 8 cents per pound. We can stop objectionable literature from Great Britain as well as from any other country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Previous to the convention did we not have the same right with respect to similar periodicals coming from the United States?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The object of the amendment was specially to restrict the objectionable literature coming from the United States which came here in vast quantities, and particularly to restrict these advertising sheets which came under the guise of newspapers and which were to be found in almost every home in the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister would seem to think that these sheets do not come through the mails now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know that some of them have been prevented from the very beginning.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If these objectionable newspapers which are to be seen here do not come through the mails then I presume they must enter through some customs port. I realize that there might be a great deal of difficulty for the Minister of Customs to exercise any very effective control or supervision over the entry of such papers.

Mr. PATERSON. We have the power.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that the Minister of Customs has the power. I do not want to minimize the importance of exercising the power effectively. Whether these papers come in by mail or by express they are equally objectionable and ought not to be exhibited for sale on the public news stands of the country. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether the matter has come under his consideration in any way, what means he has exercised in the past, and what further means he can exercise in the future, to prevent the entry of periodicals of this character, which I am sure he would consider very objectionable indeed.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not censor these publications myself; my officers do that. One of the publications I saw is something that I think should not be allowed to come in. We are continually confiscating literature of this kind. Every little while in Montreal we are not only having literature seized but having the importers of it brought up and fined. I was not aware that such publications were coming from Great Britain, but I will mention the matter to the officer in charge. Under the law we have perfect power to order literature of this kind to be destroyed. Whether we would have power to confiscate anything of this kind after it had passed the customs and gone into the possession of the dealer I do not know. That is a point on which I shall have to consult the commissioner. Perhaps the leader of the opposition will have an idea whether under a tariff that prohibits immoral literature we could follow it after it had passed the customs. I am inclined to think we could.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would depend altogether on the terms of the statute, and I am not sufficiently familiar with these to give any opinion on the subject. It would seem to be a fairly logical consequence that if the goods are prohibited, and through some inadvertence of an officer and the impossibility of detecting their true character, the goods are permitted to enter the country, the customs or some other department should have the power to follow them up and see that they are taken possession of and destroyed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I know that the Minister of Customs and the Postmaster General will do what they can to stop the importation of this kind of literature, which is exposed openly on the news stands. I picked up this paper yesterday at a news stand, the proprietor of which told me that he received fifty publications every week from the old country. These publications are coming in in very large quantities and are being distributed throughout the country. I think some of them come by mail, because an ordinary small newsdealer could not afford to get them by express from the old country. The newsdealer told me that Saturday was the day on which these publications were first exposed for sale, so that when I bought this paper yesterday, the bulk of them have been sold. I may say that I have spent a great deal of time in the United States, travelling and going to school in different cities, and I can defy the Postmaster General to go into any city of the United States and pick up any such literature as this. I do not believe it is allowed to be published. I cannot express too strongly the hope that the ministers who have charge of this matter will stop the importation of this kind of stuff, and they cannot stop it too soon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has spoken of the facilities provided for newsdealers to import this objectionable literature through the mails. It is quite true, it may come in small packages, and be easily passed without being detected ; but the Postmaster General has the right to open the packages and see whether the literature is objectionable or not. If it is, he confiscates it. I remember a case in point in Montreal. A certain newsdealer in St. Catherine street was selling a very objectionable newspaper which he received through the mails from Paris, France. My attention was called, by the Archbishop of Montreal, to these importations. I immediately informed the postmaster at Montreal to stop them. He did so, and to his great surprise two weeks afterwards he saw in the same news stand the very papers which he had stopped coming by mail. Then he found that the newsdealer had changed his mode of procedure and was receiving the papers by express. When objectionable newspapers are offered for sale, any citizen can take action under the Criminal Code and have a wararnt issued, and the law is pretty severe against the circulation of immoral literature. If my hon. friend will allow me to read the regulations of the Post Office Department on this subject, it may serve some good purpose :

According to regulation 191 it is forbidden to post for delivery or transmission through the post any obscene or immoral book, picture, lithograph or other publications, of an indecent, seditious or scurrulous character, or any letter or envelope, or post card or wrapper upon which there are words or things of the character aforesaid or tending to injuriously affect the commercial or social standing of the persons addressed. There is not a day when I do not receive a dozen or so objectionable post cards sent me by clergymen and other gentlemen throughout the country complaining of the circulation through the mails. In each case the decision is prompt, but of course we cannot foresee that people will send indecent post cards through the mail. The regulation 195 provides for the treatment of correspondence by persons engaged in illegal business.

Mr. PATERSON. The prohibitive articles in the tariff cover books, printed papers, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasonable, seditious or indecent character. The difficulty consists sometimes in determining that a certain case comes within that category.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The difficulty lies in the application of the clause. Of course when a publication is clearly immoral there is no difficulty. But there are papers that circulate socialistic ideas and I am hammered from all sides to prevent their circulation. We have of course to be very careful about infringing on the liberty of the subject; that is our great tribulation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice an expenditure in the Yukon of $100,000, and the income only amounts to something over $11,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have to give proper facilities to all sections of the country, and in the Yukon territory our service is much more expensive than in any other section. Even with the sum we pay in mail subsidies and otherwise to the railway and steamship companies, we are obliged during the winter months to forward only a certain weight of mail. I was interviewed the other day by the representative of the White Pass Railway Company, and he told me that in the future they could not renew their mail contract with the department, although we pay them a very high price. Whereas in previous years they would give us three or four trips a week, in the future they will only give two. The reason they give is that business has decreased during the last few years, the cost of living is very high, the roads are much more difficult, and the space available and the numbers of cars and steamers are less.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does that include transportation to Dawson city ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much is spent by the postal department in the Yukon outside of transportation ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Dawson post office, $4,425. The postmaster's salary is $3,750 and $657 allowance for rent. That is not very much.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not want to go into the details.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, the biggest figure is for travelling expenses of inspectors and clerks, $12,440. Then we have the post office at White Horse, $3,150. That is where all the mail matter aggregates during the winter to leave again when navigation opens in the spring.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the hon. minister will look at page A—2 of his report I would like to ask him for an explanation of the $37,000 paid in connection with stamp vendors, compensation to postmasters and special delivery letters.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have, besides the post offices in the cities, special offices that are licensed to sell stamps. There are no boxes to receive the letters and no postal service except the sale of stamps. For instance, my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) asked the other day to have stamps sold——

Mr. SAM HUGHES. At Lindsay station.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, at Lindsay station, a point convenient for the public. These stamp vendors are entitled to receive some small discount, the exact rate of which I have forgotten. The discount on a few stamps is an infinitesimal amount, but these stamp vendors are spread throughout the country, and the system is a convenience to the public. As to the messengers, that is for our special delivery service. If my hon. friend sent a letter to Montreal by the afternoon train, which he desired to have delivered at once, by affixing a special delivery stamp, which costs ten cents, he would secure the services of a messenger at the Montreal post office to deliver the letter at once, up to eleven o'clock in the evening.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the hon. gentleman please explain the transit charges on correspondence with other countries, for which $33,000 is charged ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have a special arrangement with Great Britain, and also a special convention with the United States. But to other countries that are in the Postal Union we have to pay a poundage on letters or papers carried on their steamship or railway trains.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the minister filled the vacancy in the superintendency of the railway mail service in New Brunswick ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Why ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The question in New Brunswick is the same as in other parts of the country. We want for the railway mail service, especially in these days of fast transportation, the best man available. Sometimes people claim to have a title to a position because they have been in the service for a long time. The gentleman who acted as railway mail superintendent in New Brunswick died some time ago.

Mr. FOWLER. Two years ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There has been a difference of opinion among some of our officials as regards his successor. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) that, for my part, I will see to it that the appointment is made from a purely departmental point of view. We must have the best man available. Three or four names have been mentioned. We have been able to give the service, but the position will be filled before long, and we will appoint the best man that can be had.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to an ignorant onlooker that you are taking a great deal of time to make up your mind. It would almost appear that you are waiting until the elections are over. I would not impute anything of that kind to the Postmaster General, of course, for he has always represented to the House that he does not believe in political appointments, but believes in appointments made in the interests of the service. Still as this vacancy has lasted for two years, I would ask the Postmaster General if he does not think it has lasted long enough ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the appointment should be made, and it will be made very shortly. Before the end of the session—and I suppose we may say that the end is in sight—my hon. friend may be able to put another question and learn if the appointment is made.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not the intention to wait until the elections are over ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to have that assurance. I will certainly put the question again.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very well.

Mr. FOSTER. At page S—55 of the Auditor General's Report, we find a charge of expenses in connection with the trial of a railway mail clerk at Edmonton—railway fare of six employees to Edmonton and return $695.10. That seems a very high charge for railway fare.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know the case——

Mr. FOSTER. I am not asking about the case, but about this expenditure.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will explain. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that when a postal clerk is charged with robbery of the mails, to establish our case we must prove that the letter has been posted at such a place and received at such a place.

In the present instance we had to bring clerks from the post office at Montreal through whose hands the letter had passed. It was a registered letter containing between $300 and $400. The clerk was somewhere around Moosejaw or Calgary I think. The trial took place in the fall of the year and was postponed once or twice. Without the presence of these clerks, we could not establish the links in our chain of evidence. We could have shown where the letter was posted, but not through whose hands it had passed, so we could not have reached the guilty party. We had to bring clerks from Montreal to Calgary. If the hon. gentleman will look at the charge he will see that the amount is not excessive.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not take their evidence under commission ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We couldn't ; they had to be brought there.

Mr. FOSTER. Referring to page S—9 of the Auditor General's Report, I see that a great many mail bags were repaired, and all at a uniform price of 42 cents. How is that regulated ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We follow the custom that has been followed in the department from time immemorial. Prior to 1896, we had the following engaged in the work of repairs : S. and H. Borbridge, Ottawa ; R. S. Montgomery, Ottawa ; Tackaberry and Laurie, London ; T. Thompson, Toronto ; Mrs. P. O'Donohoe, Montreal ; H. L. Carson, Ottawa ; E. Brown, St. John, New Brunswick. At present, we have thirteen repairers on the list in different parts of Canada. Each district must look after its own bags and sacks. They are repaired in the several districts and sent to Ottawa. They are examined in the department in the lower portion of the Ottawa post office building, where the boots are examined by Mr. Cooch, and from here they are redistributed.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister, while he has given me a lot of information I did not ask for, has not answered my question. Why is the charge 42 cents for each bag, great, small, little and big ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a contract. Tenders have been asked for for all these different services, and a uniform price has been fixed. The man who repairs the bags takes them all, small and big, at a uniform price of 42 cents. He takes his chances; sometimes he may gain a little and sometimes he may lose. But the price of 42 cents is about the average price.

Mr. FOSTER. There are some repaired for 25 cents.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They belong to a different category, they are very small bags.

Mr. HERRON. Some time ago I drew the attention of the Postmaster General to the condition of the post office at Macleod. I would like to know if he has any report from that office, or if anything is being done to provide better accommodation. I make no complaint with regard to the management of the office, only with regard to the lack of accommodation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend drew my attention some time ago to the state of the post office at Macleod, and I immediately wrote an official letter to our inspector in that district, and I also wrote to the Minister of Public Works calling his attention to the matter. In many of the cities and towns of the province of Alberta, post offices which were quite sufficient three or four years ago, and even two years ago, are to-day altogether inadequate to the increased population. When representations are made to me of the need of better accommodation, I pass the matter over to the Minister of Public Works. The Post Office Department decides if the building is necessary and the Public Works Department erects the building.

Mr. HERRON. The accommodation is entirely inadequate, and I hope there will be no delay.

Mr. FOWLER. Have any post offices been closed during the last year in the province of New Brunswick, and particularly in the county of Kings and Albert ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know that any have been closed in that district. Post offices are closed only in case there are no more patrons, or because a postmaster cannot be found, or because there is no sufficient reason for maintaining the office. Does my hon. friend say that any office has been closed?

Mr. FOWLER. There is the Kerry office in the county of Albert.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If there are twenty or twenty-five people I would open an office at once.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I call attention now to the post office at Kerry, and beg the minister not to close it. If it is closed, these people would have to go a very long distance for their mail, some of them perhaps ten miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister buy the clothing for the uniforms and have it made up afterwards by other parties?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We buy the clothing ourselves, and the contractors here at Ottawa, Noel and Chevrier, make the uniforms under our supervision. We have an officer in the department who supervises the making of uniforms.

Mr. FOSTER. I see you purchased from Caldwell, Boyd and Company, Lanark, a quantity of material; and the Crown Tailoring Company of Toronto make up a large number of trousers, uniforms and so forth.

Do you buy the material from Caldwell, Boyd and Company, and send it to Toronto to be made up?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the Bill of the Crown Tailoring Company is simply for making the goods, not furnishing material. For instance, that $3 for making up trousers, is that for the stuff and the making?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think that is the price of the making, not of the stuff. The blue melton trousers, I think that is for the cloth and the making.

Mr. FOSTER. I presume it would be the same with the tunics. They charge $5.45, that is a pretty round price for making the tunic if they do not find the stuff. Do you put this up to public tender?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On page J—2 of his own report, the hon. Postmaster General has paid $52,000 to the American Note Company for stamps. Does he ask for tenders for these stamps ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, there is a contract with the government passed by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How long does it run ?

Mr. FIELDING. Tenders were asked for originally and this contract was extended.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For how long ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was for a period of five years more.

Mr. FOWLER. Were new tenders asked for ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, not recently. This is a class of work for which you have difficulty in getting tenders. There are but few persons able to compete, and by getting tenders you accomplish nothing. The course adopted was that originally tenders were invited and the contract went to the lowest tenderer. This contract was extended on two occasions. In both instances the proposals were referred to the King's Printer and in one instance to a gentleman associated with or interested in the printing of bank notes, familiar with the value of these goods and upon the certificate of the King's Printer that the prices were fair and reasonable, the contract was extended.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the minister if he has ever taken into consideration the question of printing postage stamps and bank notes at the mint. I think that is worthy of his consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. The facilities there are not at all adapted to it. My hon. friend means that we should have a government printing establishment instead of the present arrangement. The present arrangement of not having this work done in a government establishment but in an office in the capital specially constructed for the purpose and more or less under the supervision of the government was adopted some years ago and it has worked satisfactorily.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The original contract was passed in March, 1897. They print Dominion notes, postage stamps, postal notes, post cards and inland revenue stamps of every description.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an item of $21,000 and over at page S—61 for 'labour at the Montreal post office.' What is the class of labour that you employ there ? It seems a large amount of money. I suppose there is a good deal of work to do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The two largest offices in the country are Toronto and Montreal. We have in Montreal, more than anywhere else, the burden of the foreign mails. The mails are distributed from there to all points in the country. Therefore, we have to employ more transfers and more labourers than at any other office, Many of these labourers are not civil servants in the ordinary sense of the word. They are merely labourers and their wages range from $1.25 to $2.25 per day. Besides that we have in Montreal and Toronto a very brisk Christmas season when we are obliged to employ 100 men or more in order to provide the public with the necessary facilities.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that in Toronto the pay of labourers ranges from $1.25 to $1.75 and in Montreal from $1 to $2.25.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The farther west we go the dearer labour is.

Mr. FOSTER. But in Montreal it is dearer than in Toronto.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Labour in Calgary and other western towns is higher than in Montreal, Halifax and St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. In Vancouver it is from $1.25 to $2.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no section of the country where we have to change our labourer and mail clerks more frequently than in the west. That is our great trouble. They complain that the salary is not high enough. We give them a provisional allowance besides.

Mr. FOSTER. But for these labourers you do not have any provisional allowance. You do not mean to say that you are paying less in Vancouver than in Montreal ?

Mr. FOWLER. That is a guess that the minister has made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Generally speaking, we pay more.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not seem to be a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you not say that it is a better class of labour in Montreal ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I wish I could say that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have received a great many complaints from Montreal. I do not suppose there is another city in which the mail service seems to be as badly managed as in Montreal. The minister is well aware that not only are the daily papers complaining constantly, but business men are complaining and thirty members of the board of trade have signed a statement setting forth their complaint. I cannot understand how it is that from a city like Montreal there should be so many complaints constantly of irregularities, of miss-sent letters and of all kinds and classes of complaints.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will admit that up to a year or so ago there were many complaints from Montreal. I have explained before to the House the reason why. There were some internal difficulties in the Montreal post office, difficulties which have been removed since the appointment of a very efficient officer, Mr. Gaboury, who is the assistant postmaster. There are not so many complaints as my hon. friend thinks. If there is a missent letter I know it because there is a wire or a letter sent stating the fact. It is surprising how few complaints are made. I will give the committee a statement about the complaints that are made. The total number of complaints relating to the carriage of articles through the mails last year was 708. There were 573 complaints of delay and with respect to 251 of these the evidence showed that the delay was due to causes beyond the control of the department. Last year the winter was very severe especially in the west. We had a coal famine and while trains were not running complaints should have been made to the weather bureau and not to the post office. When trains were stopped letters were delayed and the complaints came to the Post Office Department. They should have gone to the weather bureau. There were 48 complaints of misdelivery and in 8 of these the responsibility rested elsewhere than with the department or the misdelivery was not established. There were 84 complaints of nondelivery and in 47 of these the complaints were not substantiated by evidence, or the sender and addressee and not the department was at fault. It should be born in mind that 478,290,967 articles of mail matter were carried by the Post Office Department during the same period. The complaints numbered only an infinitesmal fraction of a percentage of the total number of mail pieces carried so that the statistics would not confirm the statement that the post office is not well managed. Men are not perfect, letter carriers are not perfect, the department may sometimes be at fault, but it is surprising that compared with the vast business the complaints were so few.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman does not hear one half of the complaints.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If they are from my hon. friends district he does not fail to mention them.

Mr. LAKE. I have made complaints many times but there are a great many others I have not made. For instance there was a letter posted to a member of my household from Winnipeg and it went to England and back again.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was an investigation made ?

Mr. LAKE. No. The letter was properly addressed and the mistake evidently occurred in the Winnipeg post office. The practice in England is to bring all these complaints before the Postmaster General, but in Canada there is a feeling that people do not like to complain as they imagine they might get some official into trouble. However that may be, the Postmaster General does not hear a very large proportion of the complaints.

Mr. PATERSON. Will there be a probability of my getting the Customs estimates through when this item is passed ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Mr. PATERSON. I am tired sitting here and I will go home if you do not think my estimates will be passed to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought you were interested in the Postmaster General's estimates.

Mr. PATERSON. If you do not take the Customs estimates up to-night we are out of money and it is a very serious thing.

Mr. FOSTER. I have often felt that way myself.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that the report of the Post Office Department states that in the dead letter branch the value of contents of letters received during the nine months ending March 31, 1907, is estimated at $524,000 while the amount disposed of was estimated in value at $34,000. What is the explanation of that ? Does it mean that the Postmaster General has letters to the value of nearly $524,000 still in his possession.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, less the $34,541 disposed of.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What do you do with them ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are in our possession and we have not been able to dispose of them.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they registered letters ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, it includes parcels and all sorts of things.

Mr. FOSTER. You auction these off, do you not ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How often are these sales held ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not say.

Mr. PERLEY. Has the minister ever taken into consideration the question of issuing a special stamp, part of the postage of which could be used to assist in the fight against tuberculosis ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My attention was called to an article which has been published in the 'Outlook' by a celebrated philanthropist of the United States in regard to a stamp which has been issued every year at Christmas time in Denmark, if I mistake not, and sold for two or three weeks during the year. It has a special value of say five cents, while the value of the ordinary stamp is two or three cents, and the difference goes to the hospital for the suppression of tuberculosis.

Mr. FOWLER. Are people obliged to buy that stamp during that period ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, it is purely voluntary ; but in Denmark it has been a tremendous success. Everybody is anxious to have a stamp.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it purchased as a souvenir ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, yes. People wish to have it on their letters and parcels that are sent abroad.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But if a two-cent stamp is used on a letter, it will go just the same ?

Mr. LEXIEUX. Yes. The use of this special stamp is not compulsory. Of course, I have not studied the question for Canada, but it has been hinted to me that such a stamp might be issued.

Mr. PERLEY. I understood that last year the minister was giving this matter consideration, and had some idea of issuing the stamp for last Christmas. I would like to know if he is seriously considering it now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, yes, the matter is under consideration, and very serious consideration. The reason that this year I ceased considering it was that I decided to issue a series of stamps to commemorate the Quebec tercentenary, and it would not do to multiply these special stamps. In fact, the postal union would, I am sure, protest if a country abused the privilege. But I may assure my hon. friend that after the tercentenary stamp is issued, I shall be pleased to take the earliest oportunity to confer with him and all others interested in regard to that matter, always subject to the approval of my colleagues.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should the postal union object ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The simpler and more uniform the stamp is, the better for the postal relations. Up to the last postal union congress, memorial stamps, such as those that will be issued for the tercentenary next month, could be used from Canada to any other country. By the regulations adopted at the last congress, it has been stipulated that these special stamps shall be used only on the continent ; so that the stamp to be issued for the Quebec tercentenary will be used only on the continent of America, unless I obtain permission from the British authorities to use it between Canada and Great Britain, a permission which I expect to obtain. According to the postal union rules the special stamp cannot be used between one continent and another.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like to ask if the revenues from this special stamp go into the ordinary revenue of the Post Office Department, as we are voting so much money for this celebration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course, parliament has voted $300,000 towards the Quebec tercentenary. The stamps, I hope, will be sold in large quantities ; but we must also provide for the extension of the postal service year by year in Canada. Of course, the extent to which these stamps will be sold is entirely speculative. But I can say that the stamp to be issued next month under the authority of the present Postmaster General will be from an artistic point of view one of the most beautiful ever issued.

Mr. FOWLER. Can the minister give us an idea of what the design will be ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I cannot, because it is contrary to etiquette in such cases to publish the description beforehand. But I intend, as soon as the time is ripe, to lay on the table of the House a whole series of the stamps, so that the members can see for themselves the kind of stamps we issue in celebration of that great occasion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How is it the Canadian Pacific Railway receive about $550,000 for the nine months, the Grand Trunk Railway $289,000 and the Intercolonial Railways $120,000? I notice that the Intercolonial Railway is paid bulk sums in many instances for carrying the mails and the Grand Trunk Railway also for a number of places, while the Canadian Pacific Railway furnishes a definite statement and charges so much per mile, varying from two cents to eight cents. On the Intercolonial Railway there is paid between certain places from four cents to eight cents.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the United States they pay according to space and weight. Here we pay according to mileage. The standard price is four cents per mile for baggage car service and eight cents a mile for postal car service, the postal cars being equipped with racks for boxes and letters and accommodation for mail clerks. The Grand Trunk Railway was the first railway system built in Canada and it received from the government a special rate on certain lines per mile or per weight. That system went on until Sir Oliver Mowat became Postmaster General in the fifties before confederation. Sir Oliver Mowat appointed a commissioner, and that commissioner fixed the mileage system which is still in existence. The Grand Trunk Railway had some vested rights because it was the first company carrying mail, and it has kept those rights until now, but at the period I have mentioned, a four cent per mile for baggage car service and eight cents per mile for postal car service was made uniform on the other railways. Later on, it was made uniform on the new portions of the Grand Trunk Railway. The Canadian Northern, which was built still later on, when it was voted subsidies, was given these subsidies on condition that it should carry the mails free. In the Subsidy Act, there is a clause providing that railway companies receiving subsidies from the government shall carry the mails free. I cannot say in what year that clause was inserted. At all events we have had lately a protest from the different railway companies that the amount paid is not high enough, and I will ask council to appoint a commission to look into the whole question. The principle has been practically adopted that a revision must take place every ten years.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot understand why from one little town to another two cents per mile should be charged and in other cases four cents per mile. Take page S—19 of the Auditor General's Report and you will find that from New Germany to Caledonia two cents per mile is paid the Halifax and Southwestern. On the next page you will find that eight cents is paid from Lunenburg to Middleton. Then the Dominion Atlantic is paid from Truro to Windsor one cent per mile and from Halifax to Annapolis eight cents per mile. There must be some explanation of these differences.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Generally speaking the rates are eight cents and four cents. Sometimes, however, requests are made for more frequent service, and the arrangements is an arbitrary one as the department finds that the revenue does not always warrant the payment of an additional subsidy.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Look at the Intercolonial Railway, page S—20, it is paid $121,000. In some cases bulk sums are paid and in others so much per mile. I can understand that during the summer months more money be paid to the Intercolonial Railway, but it seems strange that that road should get $121,000 when the Grand Trunk Railway only receives $289,000 on all its systems.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Grand Trunk came at a time when a special arrangement was made. They were the only railway, and contracts were based on a lower figure because money was worth more in those days than it is to-day. That is why they ask for a revision of the subsidy.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you ever get registered letters in the dead letter office ? If so, what do you do with them, when you cannot locate the addressee?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We retrace, if possible, the person who sent the letter. If we are unable to find either party, the money goes to the Receiver General.

Mr. FOWLER. In this amount of $524,000, in the mail matter in the dead letter office, are there any registered letters?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I believe so. But most are parcels and articles—an enormous amount, of course.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the minister given any attention to this matter of rural mail delivery?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, yes. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has given it more attention, perhaps, at least in this House, but I have also given some attention to it. I do not suppose that, at this hour, the hon. member (Mr. Fowler) would ask me to repeat the arguments I advanced, not against rural mail delivery, but against the expediency of our adopting it now. I would rather refer my hon. friend to the speech I delivered on the same subject in this House not very long ago. Briefly, the United States have adopted this system; but they have a population of 85,000,000 and an enormous postal revenue, with a territory no larger and a climate more favourable for this purpose than ours.

Mr. FOWLER. How does the minister establish that? We can drive sleighs in the winter time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. but we have the Yukon; we have the Labrador coast.

Mr. FOSTER. They have Alaska.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, but we have many distant districts.

Mr. FOWLER. We have the islands that Captain Bernier has taken possession of.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, where there are splendid deposits of coal which it is important for us to secure. We have a postal revenue that is buoyant and a fair surplus, but we have not the postal resources of the United States. But, I would rather not excite my hon. friend from East Lambton on this subject at this moment. The question is an open question, and later on we will discuss it.

Mr. FOWLER. I was only anxious to know whether the minister was seriously considering it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am seriously considering it and it is a very interesting question.

Mr. PERLEY. In the contracts with the railway companies for carrying the mails, what power is reserved to the department in case the service is not carried out? Last winter there was a railway in the county I have the honour to represent that, for two weeks, had not a train run on it. It became so serious that people there had to go many miles in order to get provisions. I brought the matter before the Railway Commission and it was attended to almost immediately. In the first instance, I thought of going to the Post Office Department about it, to learn whether the Postmaster General had any power in such a case.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. No service, no pay. But, of course, the people prefer to have the service than to have the payment kept back; and in such cases I always advise them to apply to the Railway Commission to have the service carried out.

Mr. PERLEY. Do I understand that the department has no power to inflict a penalty upon a railway company in such a case other than to withhold pay for the exact time during which they have not rendered the service?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is the penalty.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the hon. minister a surplus, and, if so, of what amount?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The surplus will be in the neighbourhood of $1,500.000 and $1,600,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What does the minister propose to do with it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Spend it in the best interests of the postal service—but cautiously.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister seems to be spending it very cautiously. I hope he does not intend to hand it over to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). That hon. gentleman will get rid of it quickly enough. It would be better to spend a portion of it in improving the postal service which certainly needs improvement.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am doing my best. I do not think there is an hon. member of this House who can say that he has come to the Postmaster General with a fair request and been refused. I have multiplied the services wherever it could fairly be said that they were not sufficient to keep up with the increase of population and in accordance with the good times that have prevailed. Where there were tri-weekly services I have established daily services; where there were daily services I have established semi-daily services. I have reduced the distance between post offices. Formerly we did not establish post offices in ordinarily thickly-settled parts of the country at distances of much less than from six to eight miles. Now we have post offices four miles, or three, or even two miles apart. Where there is a mill, a school, a church or an establishment of any consequence, we never say no to the request for a post office.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the minister withdrawn the postal service on the river boats that run between St. John and Fredericton?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood he had.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Last year, there was, I would not like to say a hold-up, but some thing very like a hold-up at the opening of the season. They said they would not carry the mails unless we would double the subsidy to something like that. Then, we had to protect ourselves. This season it is all arranged, and we will carry the mails as before.

Mr. HERRON. I was surprised to hear the Postmaster General state that he had tried to establish post offices at distances of four and five miles.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Two miles.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In thickly-settled sections.

Mr. HERRON. In our country, even in what we call thickly-settled portions—where we have a settler on every section, or, possibly, every quarter-section—there are people who have to drive fifteen miles for their mail. It is quite common to go seven or eight miles. I speak of only one particular section, but I think this is fairly general.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman would point out to me a section of 25 to 30 people I would certainly establish a post office. That is my policy. Of course, we cannot have a post office at every door; but if there is any considerable number of people gathered, we establish a post office. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) will look at the postal map of his section, he will see that the post offices are there. It is not the same in the west as in the east, which is much more densely populated.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister has stated that by reducing the rate in the cities from two cents to one cent, he will increase the revenue to the department. Now there is still a million and a half of money to be spent in the rural districts in a year, that is the department is bringing in a million and a half more money than they are going to make use of.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not say a million and a half more. I say that the reduction of postage from 2 cents to 1 cent for drop letters will increase the revenue. But the hon. gentleman should not lose sight of the fact that the cities are paying for the deficiencies of the rural districts. Toronto, Hamilton, London, Brantford, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, Winnipeg especially, are paying for the service in the rural districts. When my Bill comes up I will establish these facts by figures.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will have to see the figures before I accept that statement. I feel that the minister has not given the subject quite as much attention as he ought to. In the United States they are expending this year $36,000,000 on a rural free delivery service for about 18,000,000 people, that is practically $2 to each person. Now if the minister will investigate the conditions in the province of Ontario, he will find that we have about 40,000 square miles of territory that can be covered with a rural free mail delivery, covered successfully ; and in the province of Quebec about 20,000 square miles. When the minister states that because the United States has 80,000,000 of a population Canada must wait until we have 20,000,000, I am satisfied that he does not understand the question.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman forgets that the United States did not establish that system when they had 60,000,000 people, or even when they had 70,000,000 ; they had nearly 80,000,000 when they started rural mail delivery. The system has been in existence in England for nearly a century, it has been in existence in France, Switzerland and some portions of Germany for years and years. But there is no comparison with the conditions in those thickly settled countries and the conditions prevailing in much the greater portion of Canada. Why, you could put England in Lake Superior and you would not see the shores of England. Of course, I admit that in some portions of Ontario the system might be established. I do not know of any more prosperous section of the British empire than the province of Ontario, there is no more intelligent portion of the British empire than the province of Ontario. But if you give free rural mail delivery to one section of the country why should you not extend it to another? My hon. friend speaks of Lambton, of the Niagara peninsula, of the county of Essex, and that beautiful section of Ontario, and he says that surely they are entitled to free rural mail delivery. But what about Gaspé, what about Kings and Albert, what about Argenteuil, what about Carleton ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister mean to suggest that there is any more prosperous section of Ontario than the county of Carleton ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Surely not from an intellectual point of view.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We could establish free rural delivery in a large portion of Ontario, Quebec, the eastern provinces and some parts of the western provinces. But the minister intimates that all those districts must wait until the rest of the country is filled up. until Gaspé, or Argenteuil, or some of those outlying districts are filled up. If that is the position the minister takes with regard to rural delivery, I see very little hope for it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have a standing invitation from the hon. gentleman to discuss that question before the farmers of Lambton. I would like to explain to the farmers of Lambton that their member in the House has made very nice and very able speeches in favour of rural mail delivery, that he was quite ready to spend in Canada what the United States are spending, and when his electors from Lambton learn that it will cost millions and millions beyond the revenue we have, they will probably give a cold douche to my hon. friend and his proposal will have to wait for a few years.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister is not fairly stating the question when he says that we will have to spend millions in Canada to establish this service in the thickly settled portions of the different provinces.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not want to establish it in any portion but I want to give it to the whole country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister knows that in the United States no route can be established unless there are 100 families on that route. A standard route is 24 miles long and in the outlying districts of the United States they are not being served by a rural free mail delivery at all. The minister talks about it costing millions and millions to serve the people in Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX. $29,000,000 in the United States.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am aware of it. I say that it cost $36,000,000. But, they are serving nearly 20 million people.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are discriminating.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the minister if in the thinly settled portions of the country they say that the farmers in the thickly settled portions are discriminating against them. As far as rural mail delivery is concerned we cannot have it if the present position of the minister is maintained. He may talk about the population of the United States and about their not having adopted it until they had 80 millions people. It is folly to approach the subject in that way. He might as well say that the telephone and telegraphs and all new inventions for the dissemination of knowledge throughout the country should not be made available to the people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You require a city of a certain size, do you not, before you give free mail delivery ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the new regulation requires a population of 12,000 and a revenue of $20,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister consider that cities just a little under that are discriminated against ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, we apply good common sense to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course you do. What is the difference between that principle and the principle of establishing routes wherever there are a certain number of persons? That is exactly the principle the minister carries out with regard to cities and towns.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest that an experiment be made of the rural mail delivery system in Kings and Albert, and if it is satisfactory there and not too expensive the minister might apply it to outlying districts such as Lambton and others like that.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I would like to ask the minister if, in his annual balance sheet, he charges up anything against the postal revenue for the money invested in buildings put up for the purpose of carrying on the post office work. Does he not think there should be a certain proportion charged against this money which is invested purely for the carrying on of the work of the department ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not always, public buildings very frequently include the customs and the public works as well as the post office.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I know, but a good many of these buildings are put up for carrying on the postal work of the country. A portion of the cost of those buildings should be charged against the department so that the people would have an opportunity of seeing just how our postal matters stand. I would like to ask the minister if the Post Office Department is required to approve of the erection of new buildings before the work is begun ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, when the erection of a public building is proposed the Department of Public Works receives, through my department, a statement of the revenue, the population, the postal facilities required and the probable revenue for the future. We generally say if a public building should be erected or not. We are the determining voice, generally speaking.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Why do you put up post office buildings in places with a small population and leave large towns without public buildings ?

Mr. FOWLER. There does not seem to be a quorum present. The committee had better rise under those circumstances.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Do you not think we should carry this item. I have given all the explanations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not have any objection to this passing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will give the explanation with reference to the mail service. There is an increase of $93,500 made up as follows :

Ordinary land service..	$53,500
Mail service by railways..	10,000
Mail service by steamboats..	20,000
Supply and repair of mail bags.. ..	10,000

The vote for land service is for new post offices, increase in the frequency of existing services, increased price of old contracts renewed, and submitted to public tender. The increase for the mail service by railways is chiefly to provide for the extension of the service in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. The miscellaneous is as follows : Travelling charges, $3,000, stationery, printing, advertising, $5,000, postage stamps, post cards envelopes $10,000, other miscellaneous items, $42,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Your postage stamps are by contract ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. This miscellaneous vote includes the payment of labourers ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, we have to employ extra men at busy seasons.

Mr. FOSTER. Who employs the labourers in Montreal, for instance ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The postmaster.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he sole authority ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are appointed under my authority. He writes to the department that he requires 20 men say for such a time and I have a list of names that are sent to me.

Mr. FOSTER. By whom?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may say they are sent by members of parliament on both sides of the House and by others. There are applications coming in all the time by the hundreds. If the postmaster at Montreal or Toronto asks for twenty men I send him a list of 50 or 60 names and the applicants are brought before them and tested. I have given the assistant-postmaster at Montreal complete discretion as to the selection of the men. My hon. friend will understand it would be very risky to take men for post office work simply because they are recommended by politicians, and we must find out if they are reliable and trustworthy.

Mr. FOSTER. What test is made?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He sends for their parents or their friends and asks for certificates and when they are well recommended he appoints them.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he make any test as to their mental qualifications?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When they are merely to do labouring work such as carrying mail bags they do not require much education but sometimes they enter as labourers and they are employed in the sorting of letters and so on. Of course you will not find university graduates or men who have passed the civil service examination who will take $1.25 or up to $2 a day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister of course has followed precedent, but I would suggest that in future these estimates should be given in more detail so that we will not have an appropriation of $504,000 under the head of miscellaneous, and which money could be devoted to any one of numerous subjects. Some of the departments bring down their estimates in the greatest detail and others bring them down in three or four huge items at the tail end of which is a miscellaneous vote which can be utilized for any possible purpose. That is not according to the spirit of parliamentary control over government expenditure.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I admit there is room for improvement there and will try in the future to have more detail.

Some resolutions reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business next sitting.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 175) for the relief of Catherine Ann Cannon.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 177) for the relief of Mary Alexander.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 176) for the relief of Ada Katurah Stewart Paulding.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 174) respecting certain patents of the General Chemical Company.—Mr. Stewart.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Mr. BERGERON.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I beg to rise to a question of privilege. I was away on Friday last, but on reading 'Hansard' I find a statement referring to myself in a speech made by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) which is not correct. That hon. member is reported as saying:

I am just coming to that. It was strange that a gentleman, a member of the great Conservative party, following the same noble leader, would not have come to me and said something to me about it. Now I come to what I have got to do about it. Soon after the notice was put on the paper last year, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) notified me that Dr. Worthington had something terrible against me. He is going to expose you, said Mr. Bergeron, and your grafting in connection with the Ross rifle. And he asked: Is it not possible for you to pay back the money?

This is the first time I have heard anything of the matter. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) has never spoken of it to me and I have never spoken to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in the way he has here indicated. The whole thing is entirely a dream, as far as I know.

THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'CHAMPLAIN.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the government whether they have any information as to the use of the government steamer 'Champlain' on Sunday last. I have a telegram in the following words from a gentleman who professes to be familiar with the facts as stated:

Government steamer 'Champlain' used by Taschereau, Minister of Public Works, Quebec, candidate in Charlevoix, for political purposes. Please have question put by whose order and who is paying for it. Conservatives were turned off steamer yesterday though they offered to pay passage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say I have no knowledge of this matter. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. L. P. Brodeur) is not present, he is not in the city to-day although I expect him. I shall make inquiries and report to my hon. friend at a later date. If any government steamer is being used for election purposes prompt action will be taken to put an end to that practice.

SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY LAND COMPANY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior for information in respect to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. I have here a letter which explains the matter perhaps better than I could explain it. The letter reads :

Would you kindly inform me if the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company have any agreement with the Canadian government to sell homestead lands. I bought the northeast quarter 12-24-1, west third meridian recently. Their contract calls for actual residene on this land for three years and I have five years to pay for it in. It seems hardly right that a company can take money for this land and compel actual residence which makes it a homestead under homestead rules, and a private concern getting the money which should be better applied to the country's welfare. If so, can I obtain full title for this land by paying all the price this fall or any time before the three years? Hoping you will favour me with an early reply and thanking you for your kind consideration, I remain, Sir,

Yours respectfully,
NORMAN WILLERTON,
Craik, Saskatchewan.

As I do not understand very thoroughly the exact scope of this inquiry I thought. that as the minister will know the circumstances, it was best to apply to him in this way.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. member will allow this to stand until to-morrow I will have an opportunity of seeing the letter and will be better able to reply.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT—HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any objection to lay on the table of the House the report of Mr. Robertson who made an investigation in Halifax recently which I understand resulted in dispensing with the services of Mr. Joseph Bernstein ? It is understood that the report would be laid on the table of the House.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). If the hon. member wishes it I would be very glad to place it on the table of the House, is it the wish of the hon. gentleman ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some weeks ago while the investigation was pending I understand the minister to promise that as soon as it was completed the report would be laid on the table of the House. I know of no reason why it should not be laid on the table of the House ; if the minister knows of any, of course that will have to guide him.

Mr. OLIVER. None whatever ; I simply wanted to have an expression of the wish of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the attention of the Minister of the Interior been called to the statement that one of his officials in Halifax is impeding to some extent the free choice as to location of certain immigrants. I have a statutory declaration which charges that one of the officers of the Interior Department is concerned to the extent of $2 per head in inducing immigrants to go to a particular place and that some 15 of them whose names are given in this declaration have been sent to a part of the Dominion where they did not intend or desire to go.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like of course to have the terms of the declaration. I might say in a general way that any such action on the part of any official is absolutely contrary to his instructions, and if he is acting in that way he is acting improperly. When I have been made aware of it I will take such action as seems proper. No such information has come to me until now.

SUPPLY—DISTRIBUTION OF 'HANSARD.'

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I have a complaint to make about the distribution office. Instructions were given two or three years ago by the Debates Committee that the supply of 'Hansard' to members should be increased as it often occurs that members require more than their allotted share of two copies. There is sometimes a great demand for 'Hansard.' especially for the unrevised edition which is supposed to be the more correct. However, the employees in the distribution office seem to assume that they are masters in their own house and seem to care little whether they comply with the wishes of the members of the House. I regret to have to say that members of parliament are not treated in that office as they should be. Instead of being treated as masters they are treated as servants, and an end should be put to that. I may be answered that this is a matter for the Debates Committee but I would point out that the Debates Committee is very badly managed. It has sat two or three times this session and about ten times altogether in the four sessions of this parliament. It meets to appoint a chairman and after that it sits whenever it is forced to, and the reports of that committee are made haphazard as for example the report which was presented the other day. I suppose some of the officials who are under that committee come to think they can do anything they like.

A few minutes ago I sent for a copy of Thursday's 'Hansard' and I was sent one copy and when I wanted to get more I was told there were no more and to understand that there were no more. You, Mr. Speaker, should be the master of all these employees, and if you do not take means to deal with them I shall be compelled to resort to another course. I shall not allow any employee in this House or anywhere else to be impertinent to me as long as I have the honour of a seat here. I think it is in the interest of every member of parliament, whether he sits to the right or to the left of the Speaker, to see that proper treatment is accorded the members by the officials, and if something is not done to correct the condition of things which I have pointed out I shall have to defend myself by other means.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). The observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) should not go unchallenged. I do not think it is fair to the chairman of the Debates Committee who is not here this afternoon, or fair to the members of that committee to say that the committee is badly managed. If that committee is badly run the members of it are to blame, for, as the hon. gentleman knows, the members of the committee receive notices to attend the various meetings and if they do not attend it is their own fault. I happen to be a member of that committee as is my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) and I am equally to blame with him for failure to attend regularly. I acknowledge that I have been dilatory in my attendance upon the committee, and upon inquiry I have discovered that my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is in the same position in that regard as I am. The same remark would apply to many other members of the committee. We had a meeting a few days ago when my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) was not present, and this question of the distribution of 'Hansard' was discussed. At that meeting there were present the hon. gentleman from Leeds, (Mr. Taylor), the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Sam Hughes), the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), and myself, and I suggested that at our next meeting we should revise the present list of those to whom 'Hansard' is sent and make a new list, because in my judgment the existing list is not a proper list. The matter will come up at the next meeting of the Debates Committee. Now, as to the officials of the distribution office, so far as I know, they have always been disposed to grant any reasonable request made by a member of the House, but of course when they have no copy of 'Hansard' to give they cannot give it to my hon. friend from Beauharnois or to anybody else. I can hardly believe that the officials of the distribution office are to blame as my hon. friend would seem to indicate. If there is blame to be attached to any one I feel that it must be placed elsewhere. I agree with my hon. friend that the committee should take steps to inquire into the distribution of 'Hansard.' If it is at all convenient I shall attend when the next meeting is called by the chairman, and I trust my hon. friend from Beauharnois with others will be there so that we may try to settle this question of the distribution of 'Hansard' once and for all.

Mr. BERGERON. Let me tell my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) that I have been present at every meeting of the Debates Committee except the last one, and I will avail of this opportunity to explain why I was then absent. The committee sat at 10 o'clock in the morning ; the House did not adjourn until 3 o'clock the same morning and as the post office was closed when I left the House I was not able to get my correspondence. If the notice of the committee were there I consequently could not receive it. When we leave here at 3 o'clock in the morning and get to bed at 4 o'clock we are not very much disposed to get up to attend the meeting at 10 o'clock. Any way I did not know anything about the meeting and it is the only meeting I missed. About two or three years ago instructions were given by the Debates Committee that when there was an important debate the officer at the head of the distribution office should communicate with the Printing Bureau and order 500 or 600 or 1,000 extra copies of 'Hansard.' When the type is set up and the forms prepared it does not cost a great deal more to print the extra number. There is sometimes a great demand for 'Hansard' and members should be enabled to get a sufficient supply. The press of the country, in spite of all they can do, do not give a very elaborate report of what goes on in the House, and we can only get it from 'Hansard.' The officer of the distribution office should get extra copies printed without being told every time. When the Elections Act was under discussion, nearly every member asked for ten or twelve copies of 'Hansard,' but could only get two copies. The discussion on the Ross rifle was a very important discussion, and a good many members wanted extra copies of 'Hansard' containing that discussion, but could not get them. A good many members have complained to me of this matter, and unless there is a change, something is going to happen, because we cannot be driven in this way by employees of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The clerk of the distributing office is not responsible for ordering more copies of 'Hansard.'

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I doubt that very much.

Mr. BERGERON. Instructions were given to that effect two or three years ago.

Hon. J. BUREAU (Solicitor General). At the time the committee ordered more copies of 'Hansard 'to be distributed, it was at the request of certain members of the committee, who stated that certain members of the House wanted more copies. The chief clerk of the distribution office may think that a debate is unimportant when my hon. friend from Beauharnois may think it very important; so that I think it would be unfair to hold the clerk of the distribution office responsile for deciding whether in the judgment of any member, a debate was important or not. If a member wants more copies of 'Hansard,' I think it only fair that he should inform some member of the committee or the clerk of the committee, instead of throwing the burden on the chief clerk of the distribution office, and expect him practically to guess. for that is what it is, which debate is more important than another. The hon. member for Beauharnois, as I understand, sent to the distribution office by a messenger or a page for copies of 'Hansard,' and the messenger came ack and said there were no more copies. Between that and turning down a member there is a wide difference. I understand my hon. friend to say that he was treated in an impertinant way by the chief clerk of the distribution office.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not say that.

Mr. BUREAU. If my hon. friend did not say that, he led everybody to understand that. That is something I want to correct. I have had a good deal to do with the chief clerk of the distribution office, and I can say that he has always acted politely and done what he could to accommodate members.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). As I understand, each member is entitled to two copies of the unrevised 'Hansard,' but only gets one copy. If the copies he is entitled to were put into his box, he would get them, and no one could feel that he was treated unjustly. I may say that I have not been treated impertinently by the officers of the distribution office, but several times this session I have been unable to get one copy of 'Hansard' except the one put on my file. I think that should be provided against. It seems to me that in the case of the budget debate and other important debates, a much larger number of copies of 'Hansard' should be struck off, so that they would be available to members who want them. It would not cost very much, and would be a great convenience to members who, when written to for copies of 'Hansard,' have frequently to write a long letter giving excuses why they cannot send them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been told that some hon. members opposite sometimes get as many as a hundred copies.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has been told something that only exists in some person's imagination.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems rather invidious to place on the chief clerk of the distribution office the responsibility of deciding whether a debate is sufficiently important to justify him in ordering an extra number of copies to be printed. I would think that a matter of that kind should be left with the chairman of the committee. The chief clerk might of course be instructed, in respect of the budget debate and other important debates that must occur every session, to have an extra number of copies printed. Apart from that, you can hardly expect him to realize the standpoint of members of this House, and decide whether or not an extra number of any particular debate would be required. Perhaps the suggestion might be made by the Prime Minister to the chairman of the Committee on Debates to give this matter attention. It is very annoying sometimes to send for a few extra copies and not be able to procure them; but looking at the matter from the standpoint of the chief clerk of distribution, the very demand for extra copies of a particular debate might suggest to him that other members would be likely to come for further copies, and that therefore he must not exhaust the supply. So far as my own experience is concerned, I am bound to say that he is not only very diligent but invariably courteous in the discharge of his duties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The distribution office is not under the control of this House alone. It is under the control of the Printing Committee, which is a joint committe of the Senate and the House of Commons. Mr. Davidson is an active and painstaking officer, and will do whatever he is told to do, by that committee.

THE CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I rise, Mr. Speaker, to move:

That all the words after that be omitted and the following substituted therefor: The civil service system of Canada should be based on merit and character alone, and all the appointments thereto should be made from candidates whose competency has been established through open competitive examinations conducted unedr a non-partisan civil service commission.

This motion has been a long while in finding its way to discussion in the House.

It is not necessary for me to give the reasons; I think they are patent to all who have at all followed it. Suffice it to say that I bring it to the attention of the House at the present time with a good deal of hope that the resolution may commend itself to both sides of the House and be practically agreed to as the principle upon which the civil service of Canada should be based. I am led to that from a good many indications. I think it is clear to all of us who have studied public opinion that, during the last three or four years, opinion in the country, outside of parliament and in political circles, has been paying considerable attention to the question of the civil service, the principle upon which it should be based, and the rules under which it should be conducted; and there appears to be a growing and widely distributed sentiment in favour of a better system than the present one. Many of our most prominent daily and weekly organs have advocated the merit system with greater or less force; and it is very gratifying to know that a good many of our public men on both sides of politics have given more or less time to the discussion of the question, and that a great many very strong opinions have been expressed by men prominent in both political parties in favour of a change in the basis of the system. It is therefore in the hope that the resolution will receive practical accord on both sides of the House that I venture to make a few remarks in reference to it.

I do not propose to make any apology for bringing the question before the House. It is not by any means an academic question. It is an intensely practical question, and there never has been a time in the history of Canada when it has been more practical and more vital than now. When a country is young and its operations comparatively limited, a civil service system which is not the best and the most carefully thought out, might be fairly effective by reason of a personal supervision given it by heads of departments and the general and every day supervision made by the press and the critical portion of the community. Both these tend to keep it within line and prevent abuse and lead to a fairly good carrying out of the general business of the country. But in proportion as the country widens and its proportions become more important and the amount of business grows, then it becomes necessary for the system to be the very best in principle and very strongest in regulations in order to do the work absolutely necessary. That time has arrived—perhaps it arrived years ago in the Dominion—but there can be no doubt that it has arrived now. So that in view of the public interest concerning the subject and its importance and practical nature, I do not suppose anybody expects to hear an apology from me for discussing it.

It would be interesting to thoroughly deal with the question historically, but that would take one over a great deal of ground; and the history of civil service reform in all countries is an open page to-day which can be easily read and known by any one who takes any interest in the matter. Therefore I do not propose to deal with the subject very largely in its historical aspect. I propose however to discuss two or three systems of civil service and the operations thereunder, to the end that what has been proved in experience and results may be made patent to our minds and we may have the conclusions which result therefrom. Of course one would not attempt any remarks on civil service systems if he did not at once refer to the system of the motherland, which has had a long history, which is full of rich results, and the lesson of which is open and available to all students of civil service reform. Suffice it to say that in the beginning, the service was entirely in the hands of the sovereign. Everything was at his disposal, and he used it for the purposes that best suited him; sometimes for the common good, but oftener, I am afraid, for purposes of the royal family and the royal person and its adherents and favourites. After this power was taken away from the King and translated into parliament the patronage system, without any great alleviation, went into the hands of the ministry of the day and the parliament which supported that ministry. So that from the earliest time of the work of the country as carried on by what we denominate civil servants until 1855, there was a period in which patronage was absolutely supreme, in which the principles of civil service were very little adhered to if they were even acknowledged; and history shows us the results in a demoralized, inefficient and costly civil service. About 1853 or thereabouts, the first great forward step was taken and the directors of the East India Company abolished all patronage with reference to the kingdom, for it really was such which they had under their direction, and instituted an absolute and strict civil service system in which everything was thrown open to merit, and in which that merit was ascertained by means of examination. This radical improvement had its effect in the mother country.

In 1855 a system of civil service was introduced against the will of parliament, absolutely against a majority vote in parliament, and was initiated by the executive itself. By judicious explanation of its motives and methods, and a judicious distribution of that information through the country, the executive worked upon public sentiment so that, within a very short time, the parliament which had been adverse to a civil service system based on examination came to be entirely in its favour and from that time up to the present, that is from 1856 or 1857, the parliament of Great Britain has never wavered in its allegiance to the system of merit and examination as applied to the civil service. It was not until a good deal later, however, about 1870, that the full measure of civil service reform, so far as principle and regulation is concerned, was applied to the service. In 1870, after repeated investigations and commissions, and as a result of the information thereby gathered, the open competitive system was put into force, and the old system of appointment through patronage or nomination, the old ineffectual departmental examination and system of limited competition, were all done away with, and the principle of open competition for every British subject under proper conditions was established by the parliament of Great Britain and embodied in the British civil service. The results have been, I think beyond all doubt, eminently satisfactory. That they have been satisfactory is shown by the adherence of the British parliament and people to the system and the continuous strengthening of that system, so that, at the present time, it is, perhaps, stronger than it ever was before, and, during its history, it has served as the starting point and example for civil service systems in almost all the great progressive countries of the world.

In brief, we find the system to be the establishment of a civil service commission, the granting of freedom to every British subject who complies with necessary conditions, to compete for entrance into the service and for the prizes of the service; the absolute elimination from the great bulk of the service of anything like patronage of any kind, and the utter banishment from the service of anything like political influence, either by way of assessment, intimidation, promise, or anything of that kind unfortunately too well known in other countries, our own not excepted. There are certain limited classes of positions which are excluded from this general system, namely, the classes of technical and political positions. But, even in these, the larger portion are still subject to what we call non-competitive examinations. That is, although these positions are not open for competition on the part of allcomers, yet when the head of the department, or whoever has that duty, nominates to an office, the nominees must be examined and receive their certificates of fitness from the civil service examiner, and do not receive the position unless they pass these competitive examinations; and, of course, the successful applicant, as shown by the result of these examinations, gets the position. So, in that case, merit is again defined by examination; and, although at the entrance to it, the number who may apply to be admitted to the competitive examination is somewhat limited, still there are competitors and they have to pass examinations and the best man wins.

There are two statements that I wish to read on this subject. One was made by Mr. Mundella, who was a member of the British cabinet at one time. He said:

> I stand before you the representative of the largest constituency in England, and yet have not the power to control the appointment of the lowest excise officer.

The other was made by Mr. Gladstone, who was still greater in power and influence. He said :

> As to the clerkships in my office—the office of the Treasury—every one of you has just as much power over their disposal as I have. . . . In order that the public service might be indeed the public service; in order that we might not have among the civil officers of the state that which we had complained of in the army, namely, that the service was not the property of the nation, but of the officers, we have now been enabled to remove the barriers of nomination, patronage, jobbery, favouritism, in whatever form; and every man belonging to the people of England, if he so please to fit his children for competing for places in the public service, may do it entirely irrespective of the question what is his condition in life.

To these two statements I desire to add a fact which I came across and which I will give without mentioning names. A very distinguished member of the British cabinet commenced his career as a clerk in the lowest grade of the civil service. He entered through the system of examination, and made his way up to the highest, or nearly the highest executive position of the British government.

I suppose there are now about 70,000 employees in Great Britain coming under the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Two or three instances might be given to show the difference between the condition of things here and there. Take, for instance, the Inland Revenue. The Inland Revenue service of Great Britain is in charge of a board of commissioners who are appointed by the Crown and hold office during good behaviour. They have over 8,000 officials besides a large number of employees. The entrance is by examination through the lowest grade. There is no removal except for cause, and religion or politics is never a cause of removal. When a removal takes place, the cause has to be written and signified to the Civil Service Commissioners' board, and no interference from politicians, or wardworkers or ministers may interfere with the discipline of this large staff of officials and employees. Not only is there no removal except for cause, but, before removal, there must be a proper hearing. The Customs Department of Great Britain has been managed now for over one hundred years in the manner I am about to describe. A board of four commissioners is appointed, as in the case of the Inland Revenue. They have over 5,000 clerks, besides large numbers of employees who are exactly on the same basis as under the Inland Revenue Board—no politics, no interference. The higher places are filled by promotion, and the board annually inspects each port, which I think is a most excellent feature of the system.

Then there is the treasury, which is run by a board of seven managers. There is the Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and others, and as these are pasing, ephemeral, there is a permanent secretary in whose hands is placed the chief business of directing the treasury so far as its officials are concerned. The Treasury Board, of course, dominates the policy. However parties may differ, the board defines the policy for the Department of Inland Revenue or Customs. But there is no political interference in any way, shape or form, nor removal except for cause, and the reason, in case of removal, is to be given in writing.

The postal division is managed by a permanent non-political secretary. The post offices are divided. There is the very small and unimportant post office, which is allowed to take care of itself and is judged by its results. If the results are good it is undisturbed; if any difficulties arise, troubles or laches take place, then of course it is looked into and a remedy applied. Then there is the class of post offices which have not over £120 of income. There the clerks are nominated by the postmaster and the postmasters are selected by the Treasury Board, and are removable only for cause. The next class are the post offices having over £120 revenue. There the postmasters are selected from the entire service as a recognition of merit. That opens the horizon and gives scope and consequently spirit to the service. They are appointed by the Postmaster General and are removable only for cause, and any application in favour of them by members of parliament or persons in political life is a detriment, and is more likely to militate against the appointment of the candidate than to help him. Then the last are the great city post offices. These great city post offices are under the civil service entirely. All clerks enter by open competition and examination, and the same rule applies with reference to promotions and removals.

Then there is the consular or diplomatic service, which is now almost entirely taken out of patronage, and a system of rigid and thorough examination prevails, combined as well with the record of the person himself, whose experience makes up a large part of that record. In the House of Lords the clerk of Parliament selects those who are to be examined for clerkships, and in the House of Commons the librarian selects them, and they have to make good by competitive examination. Any one, I think, who has the interest of the service at heart would be glad to see a system of that kind applied to both our Houses here, at least I certainly would. So much then with reference to the British service. I will have a little more to say with reference to the results of that service later on in my remarks.

The next country to which I invite the attention of the House is the United States of America. Many of those who have not followed closely the track of progress of the United States in this respect are inclined to think that it is a very poor example of a civil service country to bring before the parliament of Canada, and I have noticed on two or three occasions that when some remark has been made with reference to the civil service in the United States it has provoked a smile. Well, that is not impossible of explanation. No man can keep all subjects within his ken, and until a few years ago when I gave some attention to the civil service in the United States, I myself would have been inclined to put it amongst the more backward of countries, and to conclude, as so many in our country do, that it is delivered over body and soul to the spoils systems, as it was not very long ago delivered over almost absolutely to the spoils system. But to make a long story short, the evils of their system so impressed themselves upon the better thinking public men of the United States, as they had done before in Great Britain, that methods were adopted, a plan of educational work was undertaken throughout the country and carried up into Congress. and it resulted in 1882 in the enactment of the present civil service law of the United States. Now, wonders have been done under that legislation, giving as it does a very large power to the president, by proclamation, to bring under the operation of the Civil Service Act such departments and such parts of departments as it may suit him. This of course he does with a full knowledge of what is needed and of what will be fairly well supported. President Cleveland began that work particularly, and he and President Roosevelt have been especially the two presidents who have done so much to widen the scope of the civil service, and by their repeated proclamations to bring constantly wider and wider areas under its scope. In operation the United States appoints a Civil Service Commission of three. This Civil Service Commission, with the president, is authorized to prepare the rules and regulations for the civil service, and what they prepare, when it is promulgated by the President, has the force of law and becomes equal to an enactment. They have the power of examination, and for that part of the civil service which is under the merit system, a careful system of examinations is carried on by these commissioners, not a pedantic system which takes care simply for the literary parts of the examination, but one which is intensely practical in its end. It is carried out by men who mingle with all parts of the service in every part of the United States, who become thoroughly saturated with its needs and with its capabilities as well. They conduct their examinations on the line of getting at the best that is in the applicant, practically deciding, as far as they can, what is the best the candidate can do for the service into which he wishes to enter in any one of a dozen of different great trends that the service takes. They then carry on their examinations. All who fail to get 70 per cent on an average in these examinations fail to get their names on the register; all who make 70 per cent or over are placed upon the official register in the order of time and in the order of merit, and this is the register of certificated candidates for employment. When the head of a department requires some one to fill a vacancy he applies to the Civil Service Commission and the Civil Service Commission look over their different branches, having regard to the kind of work that this head of a department requires, and hand him the three highest names on the register in that line of work. The appointing power has then a choice between those three. He selects one and the appointee must be placed on probation for at least six months. If he fulfils the requirements he is then permanently appointed. If he does not, then the head of the department must state to the Civil Service Commission the reasons for his failure. The Civil Service Commission then give him the next three highest names out of which a choice must be made.

Mr. PATERSON. How do the commissioners get the list?

Mr. FOSTER. By examination.

Mr. PATERSON. Made by themselves?

Mr. FOSTER. Made by themselves.

Mr. PATERSON. Do they examine from all over the union?

Mr. FOSTER. From all over the union.

Mr. PATERSON. Have they no boards of examiners under them?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, certainly, do you suppose that three men could extend themselves all over the union and cover the work?

Mr. PATERSON. They do not themselves get the list.

Mr. FOSTER. They get the list because they are the body who manage and control the whole system, who appoint all sub-examiners.

Mr. PATERSON. Is there a board of examiners for each state?

Mr. FOSTER. That is according to the necessities of the case; in some states there is more than one body of examiners and when I say that the commission do it, I say it in a sense that the Minister of Customs collects the revenue. He has to do it through those whom he appoints and for whose actions he is responsible. The examination papers are under the control of the commission in every respect.

Mr. PATERSON. They are prescribed by them.

Mr. FOSTER. They are prescribed by them. Of course, as I said before, they are careful to procure information from every source, to know what a department wants, to know what its various services are, the kind of work it does and what kind of talent is best fitted for it. They consult the heads and chief officials of departments; they do not simply sit down, draw their salaries and issue mandates, but are a real, live, governing, actively-working board who try to saturate themselves with the service and making every effort to get the best services for the country from the material within the country. I have now explained the register.

The applicant who gets his name upon the register and is so enrolled is eligible for a year, but not for a longer period unless the Civil Service Commission extends the term of eligibility for another year or some other period which they have the power to do. This is to prevent the list becoming crowded with names whose owners have gone into other employment or grown stale by lapse of time. This keeps the list from becoming old and burdened. There is a possibility of making emergency appointments. Suppose that no one is at hand ready for appointment, then the head of the department can make an emergency appointment, but he must immediately notify the board of that appointment and the appointment cannot be for more than three months, unless the board, under certain circumstances, see fit to allow it to go on for another three months. But it is their duty, the moment they are notified of the emergency, to see that the position is filled by the permanent person just as soon as they can get a suitable applicant.

Two great reforms have been brought about in the United States by the operation of this system, two great sources of corruption in the civil service and in politics, taking the two conjoined, have been eliminated, first, the levying of political assessments which at one time in the political history of the United States might have been described as an open practice universally carried on, and, secondly, the use of the service for political purposes in any way. The Civil Service Commissioners' reports of later years, that of this year particularly, declare that these two evils have been practically rooted out of the civil service. No person is allowed within a department under the civil service to solicit assessments of any kind and no officer in a department who acquiesces in such a practice will be allowed to go unpunished. The law in this matter has been for a good many years coming to the point of perfection. It is very difficult to eliminate the use of political influence in the service, by the head of a department using his influence over employees, and in the thousand and one ways in which political use may be made of the civil servant as a partisan. One of the chief difficulties in eliminating this evil was that if a charge of political partisanship was made, it was left to the head of the department, whoever he was, to deal with the charge and it was found that this system was ineffective. Some heads of departments were loyal and true to the principle of the system and they would carry out the law with rigidity and success. Others were still more politicians than they should be and in their hands the law would become almost a dead letter, so there was still a lamentable lack of effectiveness. This evil has been cured by President Roosevelt handing over the investigation of matters of partisanship to the Civil Service Commission itself. That has been the effective step that has put the quietus upon that form of partisanship and of political use of the civil service. The last report of the American Civil Service Commission, 1907, which I have here chronicles that as the final and decisive act which now puts this matter in the hands of the commission and rings the knell of partisanship or political use of the service of the United States. Here when a charge of political partisanship was made, when it was alleged that a civil servant of the Department of the Interior was fooling with politics the political head let it go in one ear and out of the other, at least it was not taken heed to. Now in the United States instead of its being left any longer with the head of the department, the charge is to be investigated by the Civil Service Commission itself and they, having the good of the service at heart, may be relied on to make it effective and uniform.

Mr. PATERSON. What is the meaning of partisanship there? Does it extend to the vote?

Mr. FOSTER. It even goes this far, by one of the decisions, that if a civil servant carries around the nomination paper of a candidate that is doing political service.

Mr. PATERSON. It does not extend to the vote?

Mr. FOSTER. It allows every man to vote, to express his own opinion, to express it privately. The civil servants have a perfect right to the vote and to the franchise, as I think every civil servant should have, as he is a citizen of the country and he has a right to his vote; he may have his private opinion and is allowed to express it to his friend or his family or in any other private way, but the moment he goes outside that it is political partisanship and may become a charge and subject for discipline. The last civil service report of the United States, page 13, is my authority for the statement I have just made with reference to the trying power. The considerations I have mentioned led to the amendment of rule 1 on June 15, 1907, when the president put the matter under the control of the commissioner. The amendment provided:

That persons who by the provisions of this resolution are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all critical subjects shall take no active part in any political management or any political campaigns.

With reference to the enlargement of the system a most important change affecting excepted positions was made by executive order November 7, 1906, under which 1,100 deputy collectors of internal revenue were transferred to the competitive class. The report says:

This is an important advance as it has been impossible to secure satisfactory results in any part of the service to which any considerable proportion of positions of the important classes are exempted from examination.

This illustrates the power I spoke of, possessed by the President of bringing in portions of the service under the sweep of the Act.

Quoting still from the report:

The United States undertook work in the Philippine Islands a few years ago. Some seven years ago (this report goes on to say), on September 19, 1900, the Philippine commission passed an Act for the establishment and maintenance of an honest and efficient civil service in the Philippine Islands by which provision was made for filling vacancies in most positions in the civil service by examination.

The Filipinos, owing to lack of knowledge of the English language, were not eligible, and this report goes on to say:

It was impossible to get eligible men. It was necessary at first to fill almost all the positions by English-speaking people. But what would happen as the Filipinos at that time had no knowledge of English? They qualified in the Spanish examinations only and got appointed only to those positions in which a knowledge of English was not essential. As the years have passed the Filipinos have steadily acquired English and they now take part in English examinations and during the year ending June 30, 1906, 53 per cent of the Filipinos examined took the examinations in English and it was found possible to appoint Filipinos to 80 per cent of the vacancies filled by local appointees. By amendment to the Philippine Civil Service Act the classified service was greatly extended until it includes almost all positions above the grade of unskilled labourers, except the Philippine constabulary. The Philippine Civil Service Act provides that employees of the Philippine assembly selected by it shall be in the unclassified service. One of the first acts of the first assembly was to waive this exception and provide for the appointment of its employees under the Civil Service Rules and Regulations.

This is an indication that the merit system has the support of the people, and the remark that is made upon it is the great impetus it has given to education in English among the Filipinos; their desire to participate in the service has given them a trend in an educational way in the acquirement of the English language and the knowledge that appertains thereto. Then in Porto Rico they have applied the civil service regulations in the same way and they have now an effective civil service in that island, a thing which of course was unknown before the people of the United States took possession of it:

The federal services were placed under the Federal Civil Service Act by an Act of Congress of April 12, 1900, and examinations and appointments have since been made in accordance with civil service law, and on March 14, 1907, a civil service law was passed by the legislature of Porto Rico and approved by the government to take effect January 1, 1908.

The above quotations from the United States Civil Service Board for 1907, serve as indications to show how widespread is the work which has been done in civil service reform in the United States of Amerlica and its dependencies. There is also another point to be kept in mind with reference to the United States service. The United States service is divided into two classes, one called the classified service and the other the unclassified service. Not all of the service in the United States is under the examination system and the merit by examination system, of which I have been speaking. I wish to briefly give an outline of the service in that regard. First, there is subject to the civil service law the classified civil service. That takes in all persons employed in the executive civil service of the United States, however they are remunerated, whether they are permanent or temporary, by regular salary or otherwise, first those who are merely employed as labourers or workman, and second those whose appointments are subject to consent or ratification by the Senate. These two classes are exempted from the classified service, but all others are included in it and are subject to examination, except those who come under schedule A who are appointed without examination or upon what is called non-competitive examinations. That is to say, the head nominates them and then they are to be examined by the Civil Service Commission to see whether they are qualified or not. Or, if the head wishes it he can have them undergo a competitive examination and conform to the general rule of the service. Under schedule A you get a pretty large list. For instance, it includes: two private secretaries and confidential clerks which are allowed to each head of a department such as the Navy or the Interior; one confidential clerk and private secretary to each inferior department; one to the head of certain bureaus, and such appointments as attorneys, Chinese and Japanese interpreters, persons receiving not more than $3,500 and doing work in connection with their own private work; quasi naval and military officers under enlistment, employees of the government in foreign countries in many cases. It is a special and technical class which is embraced in schedule A and these officers are therefore not subject to examination though they are within the classified service. In the unclassified service is included all appointments by the President which have to be approved by the Senate, and all unskilled manual labourers in Washington and in the field service. But with reference to the unskilled labourers there is this somewhat remarkable feature, and it seems to me to be very praiseworthy: the unskilled labourer in Washington and in the field service does not get in helter-skelter; whoever comes first and may have the pull is not selected. The whole of that unskilled manual labour department is under the head and direction of the Civil Service Commission and certain machinery is provided by which it is all tabulated and registered, and the Civil Service Commission direct and dominate.

In practice it so works out that the whole matter is practically under the Civil Service Commission through its appointment upon the employment board, and the head of the department takes little interest in it. All applicants for employment are examined and inquired into as to their physical and mental qualification—they have to undergo a medical examination; as to their character and habits—their record is thoroughly searched; as to the experience they have had and which is shown by vouchers which they get; and of course the age-limit restriction has to be taken into account. On the information thus got these men are rated, and all who rate over 70 per cent are put upon the labour register; and when labourers are wanted in this field or the other field, application is made to the civil service board, who at once send the men who they think, from that examination, will be best fitted for the work. In that way incompetent people are weeded out from the great unskilled labour department which I have spoken of, and it is put upon a basis where character, good habits, ability and record comes to be a determining factor. To show the progress that has taken place, I take two years. In 1903 there were 271,000 in the executive civil service, and of those 135,485 were appointed after competitive examinations. In 1907 there were 337,000 in the whole service, and of those 197,000 held their position by competitive examinations. Making up the other 140,000 employees are 6,314 postmasters of first, second and third classes, and 53,345 postmasters of the fourth class ; that is, nearly 60,000 postmasters who do not come under the examination system.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How many postmasters altogether ?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the number of postmasters. The postmasters are not under the examination system except those of the great cities, and of course they all are. Then there are 10,000 post office clerks, 22,700 canal employees, 30,000 unskilled labourers, in part under the system, and 8,147 Presidential appointments. We may state generally that the great bulk of the civil service of the United States are under the merit and competitive system. Now, it is not necessary for me to read reports of commissions and messages of presidents to Congress for the last fifteen years in order to show the satisfaction which is felt and the excellent results which have followed the application of this system. It is marching forward to conquer the whole field. Taking in year after year geographical sections and portions of the service, and is rapidly approaching the point when the whole civil service will be practically under that system. How far forward the United States has gone, in the breadth of its system, in the worth of its system, in the morale of its members, and in the spirit of loyalty and good work can be found by any one who will take the trouble to read these reports.

The Commonwealth of Australia passed a Civil Service Act on May 5, 1902. It provides for a public service commissioner and not more than six inspectors to make up the board. These are appointed for a seven years term and are eligible for re-appointment. They can be removed by parliament on statement made to parliament. The inspectors have to inspect each department and report. There are four divisions of the public service—the administrative, the professional, the clerical and the general. Examinations are necessary to all appointments. The examinations are competitive. There is a medical test. There is a probationary system of six months. Temporary appointments may be made, but for no longer than six months, when they are made permanent. Promotions take place on examination. There is a system of life insurance which provides in part for the employees by co-operation with the government in certain ways.

The different states of the United States are passing rapidly into the civil service merit stage. One of the most notable instances is the state of Wisconsin. In that state there was a merit system before 1895, applied to the larger municipalities in the matter of fire and police, under which 18 of the largest cities of the state carried on these two great departments of their work. It was in 1905 that the last Inclusive Civil Service Act was passed in Wisconsin. There were three Civil Service Acts. One applied to the merit system to the National Guard of the state. Another applied it—and that is a lesson which we may take note of—to officials of the legislature itself. I think this is the first instance of the kind in the United States. The third was a general Civil Service Act. The chief points of that Act follow very closely those of the United States system. There is one point in which it is illuminative. The Act went into force in 1905. It required every one of the civil servants then in office to pass an examination before the end of 1906. That examination was made one not of a literary character, although the desire was to test their intelligence and knowledge, but was based largely on record and experience as detailed by the heads and chiefs under whom the officials had worked; but it brought every civil servant up to the point where after 1906 he held his position by virtue of having passed the examination, and having become a part of the system, under its discipline and with all the benefits accruing from it. They were divided into classified and unclassified, and under the sytem of examinations every citizen of Wisconsin had a right to go up and try his mettle. And by excellence of his examination, his character, his record, his adaptability he gets there. Removals are for cause and made by the appointing power itself, but guarded in this way that they must state the reason and hand that reason to the Civil Service Commission and it becomes practically public property, but the commission has no right to review the removal. It is thought that the publicity of the cause and the publicity of the action would prevent wrongful removal. From Wisconsin, as in the federal, absolutely all political assessment and political influence is debarred. Sections 28 and 29 are so important in that respect that I propose to read them and put them on 'Hansard' :

Section 28.—Political assessments—No officer, agent, clerk or employee, under the government of the state shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned, in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription or contribution, or political service, whether voluntary or unvoluntary, for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, agent, clerk or employee of the state. Every said officer, agent, clerk or employee who may have charge or control in any building, office, or room ocupied for any purpose of said government is hereby authorized to prohibit the entry of any person, and he shall not permit any person to enter the same for the purpose of therein making, collecting, receiving or givng notice, of any political assessment, subscription or contribution, and no person shall enter, or remain in any said office, building or room, or send or direct any letter or other notice thereto, for the purpose of giving notice of, demanding, or collecting a political assessment, subscription or contribution, nor shall any person therein give notice of, demand, collect or receive, any such assessment, subscription or contribution. Any person who shall be guilty of violating any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

Section 29—Official influence—Whoever, while holding any public office, or in nomination for, or while seeking a nomination or appointment for, any public office, shall use or promise to use, whether directly or indirectly, any official authority or influence (whether then possessed or merely anticipated) in the way of conferring upon any person, or in order to secure or aid any person in securing any office or public employment or public contract or any nomination, confirmation, promotion, or increase in salary, upon a consideration or condition that the vote or political influence or action of the last named person or any other, shall be given or used in behalf of any candidate, officer or party, or upon any other corrupt condition or consideration, shall be deemed guilty of bribery or an attempt at bribery as the case may be. And whoever, being a public officer or having or claiming to have, authority or influence for or affecting the nomination, public employment, confirmation, promotion, removal, increase or decrease of salary or position of any public officer shall use or promise or threaten to use any such authority or influence, directly or indirectly, in order to coerce or persuade the vote or political action of any citizen or the removal, discharge or promotion of any officer or public employee, or upon any other corrupt consideration shall also be guilty of bribery or of an attempt at bribery, as the case may be. Every person found guilty of such bribery or of an attempt to commit the same as aforesaid, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than three thousand dollars, or to be imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than two years, or to both said fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court. The phrase 'public officer' shall be held to include all public officials in this state, whether paid directly or indirectly from the public treasury of the state, or by fees or otherwise, and the phrase 'public employee' shall be held to include every person not being an officer who is paid from said treasury of the state.

These are two pretty drastic and far reaching provisions, meant to bring about a certain result and it would seem as though they would be effective for that purpose.

When we come to Canada—for I think we have been long enough in this excursion outside—what can we say for the civil service during the last decade or score of years ? I am discussing this subject absolutely free from partisanship of any kind, with the sole desire of putting my view of the case before the House and the country. I try to weigh my words and use my experience and what knowledge I have, and I think I am not to be found fault with if I say that, in so far as Canada is concerned within the last twenty or twenty-five years, we have not made any considerable progress. If we would be fair to ourselves, we would admit that in these later years we have retrograded instead of progressed. We would admit that to-day the foundation of the civil service itself and the structure built upon that foundation, does not occupy as good a position as it has in past years, for in an advancing and growing country not to be making progress is, I think tantamont to retrograding. I do not think there is such a thing as standing still with reference to this matter; there must be progress or there will be retrogression. If I were to say then that the civil service itself is not as strong as it was fifteen years ago, that the morals of the civil service is not as high as it was then, that its efficiency is not so great as it was at that period, I believe I would be saying what my own experience, observation and information absolutely warrant me in saying.

Mr. PATERSON. Have you thought that out fully ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I have bestowed a good deal of thought on the subject and am quite willing to stand by my words. But I will take another authority, the Civil Service Commissioners, who will probably go even further than I in this respect. And remember that the chairman of that commission is a man probably as well versed, not only in the theory but the practice of the civil service in Great Britain and this country, as any one you could find.

Now, what are some of the reasons why the civil service, instead of making progress, has, if anything, retrograded ? I am expressing my own opinion, I am not binding anybody, when I say that one step towards that retrogression was the abolition of the superannuation system by the present government shortly after they came into office. Taken up in some way, whether in an odd moment and for political purposes, or whether by people who had studied it and come to a conclusion which they thought was right and acquiesced in by men who in their hearts knew it was not right but gave way, when the party came into power it found itself pledged to abolish the superannuation system, and it abolished that system. There was another step, and that was the abolition of the yearly increase of all deserving civil servants who had the recommendation of the deputy head of the department. The very moment this latter was abolished, the civil servant had nothing substantial, firm, to hold to. Do his work as faithfully as he might, still he knew that he received no increase as of right. And what else did he know ? He knew that if he were to get anything he must rely upon pull, he must get his member or somebody who had influence to secure advantage for him in some way. That is a blunt way of stating it, but that is really what took place. It is true that this rule was entirely reversed within a year or so; but the lesson had been taught. The civil servant had been told : It is not your right, it is not even a prescriptive right for you to receive this increase ; if you get it, you will get it at the will and pleasure of your minister. Now, that had the inevitable effect of throwing the civil service off its true line, the line of thinking what was due to the country, and of setting it to work at making influence, getting members, candidates and others to use their influence in favour of those who could win their support. And so, very great harm was done to the civil service in that way.

With reference to the superannuation system, I appeal to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)—I do not know whether he has time to give to that or not that the superannuation system is not something extra, not a piling of something else upon that which is already sufficient ; the superannuation system, if it is well considered, is part and parcel of the remuneration of the civil servant. It should be made an addition to the yearly wage for two reasons : one to induce the continuity in the civil service which is the greatest element of its efficiency, and the other, to make the man feel that after hedging himself out from all the live currents of business life come when he has fifty or sixty years of age and is no longer able to breast these currents in a new business, he shall have something at least to look forward to during the time of his old age. Now, that united with the yearly or monthly wage makes what gives you the best possible for the service of your country. To cut away that support, in my opinion, is to cut away one of the foundation pillars of a good service. But, having that or something which would produce the same result, you make a good beginning in the establishment of the best civil service system. Now, I put another point: It is absolute wastefulness to do away with the superannuation system—and I ask the particular attention of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to this. The superannuation system is not to be judged alone by the dollars spent on it. Here is another way to judge it : Suppose you allow your civil servant only the yearly wage—that is, you abolish the superannuation system : Within a very few years you pay more than you would pay if you had not abolished it. And why ? Because in every department of this government and in every corridor of these buildings, you have men whom you cannot turn out on the street, yet who cannot do the work of the department. There they are, and you must put on extra men who would do the work that these older men do not do. We all have a little human nature, and when an old employee who has been in our charge for years has come to the time when he cannot earn the money that is paid to him, we do not, in fact, turn him out in the street. And so, we have a wasteful system, a costly expenditure. And, whatever we do with reference to the civil service, I hope we shall not fail to have as part of our plan a superannuation system or some contrivance for the same purpose. It may be widened a little—as the civil service authorities in Great Britain are this very day discussing—to provide that when a man dies after having paid all his life into the civil service, his family shall not be left with nothing ; or, even when a man goes out of the service, battered and worn, and dies after receiving his superannuation allowance for a year or two, his family may still have some consideration. There ought to be inventiveness enough, ability enough, in this parliament to devise a scheme which will be economical, but in the end fair to these great interests and calculated to put our civil service upon a better basis than it is on to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him as a matter of information : Is there a superannuation system in the civil service of the United States ?

Mr. FOSTER. There is not. But there is a pretty strong agitation for it. Besides, they pay at a much more generous rate of wages than we do in this country.

Now, there is another point : We have got into a habit, it has become like a burden strapped to our backs, of contracting civil servants out of even the Civil Service Act that we have. This was pointed out by the commission. In one year, for one cause or another, there were fifty cases of 'notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act.' In this way the civil servants to whom this was applied were taken out from under the law. So we had discrepancies, we had wide differences, and bitterness was left in the hearts of those who thought they were equally deserving but got nothing. That does not help the civil service. One of the worst things to import into a civil service, perhaps the one thing that saps their loyalty worse than anything else, is the mere idea that they are not being treated fairly, that some get more than they should and that some, equally faithful, get less. As long as it is a matter of exception, under the charge of the minister, these things will occur more or less. Then there has been the re-enforcement of the patronage influence, there is no denying that. The patronage system was never so greedy, grasping, insistent, heartless, conscienceless as it has been during these last years, never in the history of Canada. This is a part, I suppose, of the material growth of the country. It may not be the fault of the present government more than of the past government, but the spirit is different now from what it was, and everything that makes is looked to, and as I said, the result is that this spirit is stronger and more grasping than ever before.

Mr. PATERSON. Have you thought that out fully?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I have. It is not only in the initiatory stages. Patronage today follows the man all the way through. Will the Prime Minister let me give him a supposititious case, which is not a supposititious case—I mention no names. A man enters the service, he passes his examination, goes into the department, does his work for years and years, does his work well and faithfully, and rises by his yearly increases. The time comes when he stands at the head of his class, the time comes when provision is made for promotions. Then he says to himself: I must go to the man I have worked under and I must ask him to give me fair consideration. Here I stand above so and so, there is my work, it shows for itself, and I must go to my chief. He goes to his chief, puts in his plea, and what answer do you suppose he gets? Have you any political influence? Think of it, just think of it—Have you any political influence? There is a man who has done his work for fourteen or sixteen years, done it well, and there is not a black mark against him. And when there are chances for promotion, all that he wants to do is to let his work speak for itself. The work is all chucked aside, and his chief says to him: Have you any political influence? Well, no, Sir, I didn't suppose that was necessary. I supposed you knew my work, and the recommendation is in your hands, I have to depend on you. Can't you get somebody to recommend you? In the end what happened? In the end it filtered down to this, that he had to ask the defeated candidate in the county, and the defeated candidate put it to him just as plain as this: Who is your father? Who is your brother? Where do your people live? How have they voted? They all went against me, I believe. And he was simply told: Let your father and his brothers go to the parish committee and if they can get their recommendation perhaps something can be done. Now, there is no need of any comment on that. I said that I was not treating this subject in a partisan way. But there is the minister's chair, and in that chair, if he were present, would be the minister who absolutely put the patronage in the city of St. John into a committee of wardworkers, called them together, and said: I cannot do this thing, you must do it, I put it into your hands. What malversation of the trust of office! At least, for Heaven's sake, if it has to be done, can't we decently keep it under cover in some way? A man says: You better be open and above board. Yes, except for this, the infernal example of the thing, because from Vancouver to Sydney goes the teaching that the ward committee appoints to office, and every ward committee from one end of this country to the other usurps the place of government. Who is responsible for the work of the departments? The deputy head and the minister whose deputy he is. But you overturn the pyramid absolutely when you take away from them the choice, under proper conditions, and the possibility of having proper conditions, of the very best man, and put it into the hands of a distinct and partisan patronage committee. Now, I have freed my soul as regards the patronage.

Mr. PATERSON. What minister is responsible for that?

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the best the Minister of Customs has to say on that subject?

Mr. PATERSON. I think so. Is not the minister responsible to parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, leave it that way, if the hon. gentleman wishes. Now, we have in this country the semblance of an examination system, but it is only a semblance. You appoint your civil service examiners, you empower them to examine, and they do examine. In the first place, who comes up to the examination? No one can enter unless he belongs to the party in power with any hope that he will get a position. The Prime Minister shakes his head. Will he deny that that is the tendency?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no such information.

Mr. FOSTER. But will he deny that that is the tendency? Is it not well known that all the chances are in favour of the man who belongs to the party which is in power? I think we can go that far—all the chances. Now and then one gets in, there may be the personal influence. I, as a Conservative may have a very strong friend who is a Liberal, and if I pass the examination he may secure my appointment. But that is very seldom done. I am right then in saying that the whole trend is in that way. So our present system is an advertisement of all those who do not belong to the party at present in power, not to offer for examination to the civil service, because they don't have much of a chance to get in. Then what is the next thing? Those who do come, having the party imprimatur, and who pass the qualifying examination, where do they go? Into an absolutely confused limbo of names. They pass the examination, and they are notified that they have passed. But where is the register that is kept, where is the register of the dates when they passed and their standing when they pass? And where is the obligation, when the appointing power comes along, to take a man from the top or to make a choice of men from the top? There is none of that. Consequently there is no merit system at all. All that you gain is that before a man gets in he passes a small qualifying examination or a small preliminary examination, and it is not a very tedious affair to the young man or the young woman fresh from school. It would be a pretty hard thing for the Minister of Customs or myself to pass it, but those who are fresh from school easily pass.

Mr. PATERSON. We could have done it once.

Mr. FOSTER. I have passed different examinations in my time, but I would not like to tackle this examination now. So we have no competitive system for making appointments. You may say we have promotion examinations. True, we have, but here is the thing about promotion examinations. If you have a good head and a good deputy you will have good square promotion examinations; if you do not, you will have a lax system so that you have no uniformity and there is contrast between one department and another, one in which there is some desire to fill the spirit of the Act, the other in which there is no desire, no uniform direction, consequently there is contrast and heartburning.

Out of this state of things comes, in the first place, lack of principle. Of course we all agree that the principle that should animate a young man going into the civil service is the desire to do his country's work and to do it well. Our effort should be to bring out the best that is in him to do that work. This can only be done under certain conditions and the present conditions are not favourable to that, so in too many cases the young man's determination degenerates into this : I will do my regular day's work as well as I can and get out when the hour of closing comes, or : I will try to make myself agreeable to my next chief and maybe I will get on his good side and be helped up. While the civil servant ought always to try to please his chiefs, his first aim should be to do his work, and it is foreign to all proper principles that he should simply do his work so as to please his chief with the idea that the chief will secure promotion for him. Then the loss of spirit comes very rapidly. What do we find, with reference to the British people ? The hold they have on the world, in India and other countries is due to the general opinion that they deal justly and fairly. That is a wonderful thing for a nation, a wonderful thing for a service. Is it or is it not a fact that in this service there is a loosening and a diminution of that idea that people are dealt fairly by and a growing idea that there is partyism, favouritism and pull and that the sharpest fellow will probably get along the best. That is the tendency and of course out of that comes a lack of efficiency. That is my observation and if I should read portions of this report of the Civil Service Commission it would be strengthened and confirmed by the findings of the commissioners. To summarize, the commissioners say that the servce is deteriorating, that more inefficients are entering and fewer efficients are remaining. To that we will all subscribe. I have heard the Minister of Finance and other ministers say in this House how difficult it was to keep the best men. It is equally difficult to get the best men. If inefficients are coming in and the efficients leaving the service, it must be to the great deteriment of the service. Disclipine is affected, the commissioners say. Discipline is inevitably affected unless you have just rules, uniformly applied and carried out with fairness through the different departments. The Act is not enforced. The Civil Service Commission point to the 50 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary' votes and to grading under other names.

Mr. PATERSON. Do the Uuited States never depart from their system ? Suppose that an officer shows exceptional merit, would they not waive the strict provisious of their system ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, every system has a process by which that can be done. In the United States it is done by reference to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. PATERSON. Here we do it by the judgment of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. That is where the great check comes. The Civil Service Commission wants to secure the best results for the service. The head of the department says : That is the very man I want for this position, the commission look up the man's record, examine him, put him through a course of sprouts and if they coincide in the opinion of the head they have power to advance him in practically the same way as the Civil Service Commission in Great Britain have power to advance men. It must be that way because these exceptional circumstances must be provided for.

The commissioners find that the patronage evil is everywhere, and everywhere it is deleterious. The government in their commission said they thought the principle of the Civil Service Act was right. The commission take issue with them, they think that all political patronage should be eliminated, that the Act should be repealed, that the merit system after competitive examination should be brought into force, that there should be a board of civil service commissioners, with rigid probation and careful inspection. I notice that the Australian Act provides for plenty of inspection and for a board of inquiry.

One word as to what the civil service is. The country at large, I think, has probably a very inadequate idea of what an important thing the civil service of a country like Canada is. To my mind the civil service is more important than governments. I do not think a cabinet is as important as the civil service itself. The civil service is really the most important thing we have. What is the civil service ? It exists for the state. The civil service is not a sort of charity place in which to throw people for whom you want to provide. That is foreign to the idea of a civil service. It is not for any particular part or any particular ministry, it is there to do the great, unending constantly pressing business of the country which can be carried on in absolutely no other way and by no other instrument. So we want the best civil service we can get and no state is where it ought to be until it gets the very best possible civil service obtainable. We should have in our civil service the best men that Canada can produce, for carrying on affairs as are carried on by the civil service. What are its functions, its great work of managing the affairs of this country ? Look at it. We come here and are small lords in our way as representatives of constituencies, and then we have a few of these greater lords, the ministry, for the time being. They are important in their own estimation and in reality as well. But these are all evanescent, we come and go, ministers are here to-day and there to-morrow ; but there is one force, one power, one mechanism, which is here always and constantly at work and on the quality of its work depend members and ministers and all the outcome from the best talent in the way of political work that we can bring to bear. Where do we get the money to carry on our work ? It is collected by a tireless, honest, competent civil service and in proportion as they lack these characteristics the revenue does not come to us as it ought to. We vote the money and it has to be expended, and then we go about our various business, political and otherwise.

What becomes of the $100,000,000 that is voted by parliament? It passes through the avenues of the civil service and upon the honesty, capacity and loyalty of the civil servants depends whether that money is well expended or not. The vote for public works goes to the Public Works Department ; your draftsman draws his lines, your engineer makes his plans, your supervisors watch the expenditure of every dollar and the quality of the material and the diligence of your workmen, and the work is done not by the minister or by parliament, but by an efficient or inefficient civil service as the case may be. In the Department of Agriculture maybe the minister knows a little about agriculture and maybe he does not, but whether he does or not, on the civil servants he must rely. The minister has men in the department who have learned in the school of experience, and without that your process of public agriculture would not be worth a snap of the fingers. In the forestry branch, it is the men to whom often we pay small salaries who bring their stores of information, and if the minister is active and wise to avail of these stores a perfect forestry system will be the result. Who is carrying on the great work of forestry and irrigation in the United States? There is Roosevelt at the top, and the secretary of the Interior is at the head of the department, but it is the men of the civil service who furnish the ideas and practical knowledge to put the best projects through. In this Dominion it is the knowledge, honesty, and capacity of the civil service which makes for success in every department. So I say, the civil service of Canada is of the utmost importance to Canada and the people of Canada should think more of it and we as legislators should think more of it. We should appreciate what the civil service is; we should not look to it as a mere machine for party or personal ends ; we should not bedevil the public service, we should be its staunchest defenders and its strongest upbuilders. I have very strong views on this. Look at Britain's great imperial empire. Her warriors by sea and by land did something to acquire it, but the best of Britain's acquirements were her acquirements through here unrivalled civil service. Her armies, her guns, and her swords were good in their way, but the strongest defence of the outlying parts of the empire lies in the sense of justice and fairness that has been inculcated in the subject races by the civil servants of Britain. India is a monument to the civil service of Great Britain, a monument not only in its inception but in its progressive development and in its loyalty. The guns and the soldiers of Great Britain could not keep India for the British Crown had it not been for that permeating influence for good of the civil service, and their work in the Indian empire. In New York, four or five years ago, I had the pleasure of attending a representative meeting and I was glad to be a British subject when I heard one of the brightest and most cultured and most experienced minds in the United States say : If England has a broad empire to-day; if she has vast and loyal colonies she owes it to her civil service more than to anything else; the United States has nothing in comparison with the civil service of England; we have no trained diplomatic service, we have no trained and independent civil service. England owes her unrivalled supremacy in the acquiring and good government of colonies to the capacity of her trained civil servants. That was the remark of a man who was proud of his own country and who would have been glad to be able to say that of his own country, but he was honest and frank enough to give the honour to England.

We should have freedom in our civil service. If it is a civil service for Canada, every boy in Canada has the right to present himself at the open door and to say: I want to do something for my country, I want to engage in the civil service. Every boy who goes through our schools should have inculated in him loyalty to Canada and pride in its progress and development so that there might be stirred within the hearts of all an intense and burning desire to do for Canada what great civil servants have done for Britain. We are not a conquering country but we have a domain of our own to conquer and develop and we need the best of the best of our people to do it. Every boy in Canada—led by no worn politician, led by no member of parliament led by no cabinet minister; every boy in Canada has a perfect right to say: Give me a chance to show my mettle ; I will try your examination and if I succeed let me have a chance as a citizen of Canada to work for my country. And once in the service he should have the same freedom all the way through. He gets in by merit let him go ahead on his merit; let there be nothing between him and the highest positions but his own diligence, his own loyalty, and his own capacity, and if he is able for it let him go to the top. You will never get the civil service Canada ought to have until you make the civil service free for the best man who wants to win the best place. How can you have a thoroughly efficient civil service in Canada unless every ambitious youth shall have an opportunity to work his way to the top without the fear of having somebody else who has never paid the price for it in servitude, being put over his head ? I would have the civil service system of Canada wide open to the best men to fill the best offices clear up to the deputy heads. There is an awful amount of bosh talked about the uecessity of having a deputy head in unison with the political ideas of the minister. As a matter of fact it does not happen. To-day the Liberal government have Conservative deputy heads and to-morrow the Liberal-Conservative government will have Liberal deputy heads. What we want is the capable man, the loyal man, the honest man, and when you have him you have all that is necessary. I would open every place in the civil service clear up to the deputy head to the best man on his merits, his character, his capacity, and his record. There may be and there will be some few confidential positions where this open competition will not come into effect. A minister naturally wants to select his own private secretary. That is conceded everywhere under all civil service systems, and there may be some other positions of a like kind. But as a rule, there is no reason why, in such departments as the Customs and Post Office, the highest prizes should not be open to every one in the service, so that the young man who begins at the bottom may have the feeling that he has a chance to get to the highest position immediately under the minister. What is so great a spur to activity, to the acquirement of knowledge and competency? Every waking hour is given to it, every thought is directed to it. You would not have men worth a groat in the nation if they had not that incentive. The merchant has it, the carpenter has it; but when you come to the civil service, you put up barred gates and say, these shall be opened only to such and such. I would throw down the bars, and give every position to the man fit for it. With freedom, and with this horizon and scope, I believe we could have a very fine civil service in this country. I enter my plea for a civil service based on merit, on freedom, on manliness, so that no man need take off his hat to get a chance to work for his country, but every man can march straight up, a free man, beholden to nobody, and get the opportunity to make good if it is in him to make good. Then you will have a loyalty in the civil service which will take little account of political advantage, or of the passage of parties to and fro, but which will give its whole heart and soul to the great work of administration and development in this country, and through its loyalty and its hopes will have the efficiency that is required, and will be among all these evanescent passages of the men of a day or the men of an hour, the one solid, enduring thing in this country which makes for progress and prosperity.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the words of the motion which my hon. friend has placed in your hand are not in themselves objectionable, and the same may be said of the greater part of his speech. Indeed, if we except a small portion towards the close of his remarks, I will frankly say that he has given us an informing speech. which should be useful to us all, and has handled the question in the non-partisan spirit to which he has referred. Towards the close, however, I am afraid that he strayed away from that firm faith and yielded to the temptation to present to the country the idea that such evils as are alleged to exist in the civil service to-day are evils which have largely arisen under the administration of the present government. To that portion of my hon. friend's speech I must take exception, and I must tell my hon. friend that, with hardly an exception, every one of those defects, so far as they are grave and serious, existed in the civil service in the days when he was a minister of the Crown, every one of them was brought to my notice by a previous Civil Service Commission, and my hon. friend was not moved to find a remedy. My hon. friend may say that is importing the element of partisanship into the discussion, but it is only for the purpose of defence. I find no fault with any argument my hon. friend may advance, whether based on the experience of former years or on the experience of the present time, looking towards improvement in the civil service ; but I do say that he must not found that argument on the assumption that those evils, as far as they exist, are evils which have grown up recently. Take, for instance, the matter of the statutory increases. In the ten or twelve years that this administration has been in power, the law and practice respecting statutory increases has been exactly what it was in the days of the preceding government. The law respecting statutory increases never made it matter of obligation to give a statutory increase to every official, but contemplated giving it only to such officials as were worthy to receive it. My memory is that for two years greater restrictions than were formerly in existence were placed on the payment of the statutory increases ; and this necessarily led to some process of selection. My hon. friend says that that process was political. I am bound to say I hear that accusation to-day for the first time. I know that so far as the matter came under my observation, politics never entered into it at all. What each minister was told was that the policy of indescriminate statutory increases should not be followed, but that he should make a selection of those deemed most worthy to receive it; and in making that selection, I am quite sure that the element of political partisanship was not considered at all. My hon. friend has referred to the fact that we have sometimes introduced into the estimates the words, 'notwithstanding the Civil Service Act,' and contends that we are deliberately contracting men out of the Civil Service Act. That is true, but I want to say to my hon. friend that if he takes all these cases and compares them with the large number of people in the civil service of Canada, he will find that the number of exceptions has been insignificant. Is it possible to adopt a general law in a matter of this kind? Can you lay down hard and fast rules, by which every man shall get a certain salary and no more? Put into a department two men on the same day, under equal conditions and at at the same salary. Five years later look at their record. One will prove to have been a man of routine, doing good and useful service in his way, while the other will have developed a power which is valuable, and which it is necessary to recognize in order to keep him in the service. When he reaches the maximum of his class, it is necessary to make some exceptional arrangement in order to give him the recognition to which he seems to have become entitled. I grant that it is not desirable that this should be done too frequently ; but when a man dispalys exceptional fitness for the public service, the minister should not be tied down by a hard and fast rule which would prevent him paying that man one dollar more salary than the other man, who may be a good and worthy man, but whose place could be filled at any moment if he left it. So that these exceptions to which my hon. friend referred are not very great in proportion to the whole. This claim as to political influence in the service is largely magnified. I do not say such influence is not an evil. I am not contending against civil service reform; I am not objecting to the general rule laid down by my hon. friend, but it is a pity he should have let his imagination run riot and seek to persuade the country that this evil is of such an enormous extent. My own observation is it is not, and I say this from the experience of the years I have been in federal politics, and I say it also from information I had in the earlier period when I had no connection with this parliament. My hon. friend said that down in St. John county they had a patronage committee. That seems something dreadful, the way he puts it. But let us think for a moment and see whether there is any great evil in having a patronage committee. I am not a sufficient admirer of the system to have such a committee in anything I have to do with myself, but if an appointment has to be made in a distant portion of the country, one must get information somewhere, and where is one more likely to get reliable information than from the intelligent men who are the leaders of the party in that district? Undoubtedly they will give the preference to men of their own party, but if I am to make a selection in a distant part of Canada of some man to serve my department, what better course could I pursue than to get the advice of some of the leading men in that locality? Whether you call these gentlemen a patronage committee or a committee of any other kind makes no difference. The name should not alarm people. It was said that the patronage committee nominated the postmaster in Toronto. Well, I am confident that under no system could you have got a better man to fill the office than the one chosen. Reference is made in the report of the commissioners on the civil service to the case of the postmaster at Kingston. Well, I have not the pleasure of knowing the gentleman, but I am informed that he is an eminently well qualified official. I prefer myself in anything I have to do to avoid the forming of a committee in a matter concerning my own constituency, or anything like that, but in dealing with affairs at a distance one has to get advice from somebody, and if a number of gentlemen of good standing and repute associate themselves together, the fact that they are called a patronage committee should not by any means lead to the conclusion that the representations they make are not fair and in the interests of the government service. My hon. friend was not as fair in the latter part of his speech as he was in the beginning or he would not have expressed the opinion that there are evils now which did not exist formerly. If we frankly admit the evils and seek to bring about a remedy, that is what the public expect and appreciate. But what I cannot understand is why my hon. friend should choose the present time for bringing forward his motion. He has given us a very interesting speech, save the small portion to which I take exception, but it does seem strange that he should feel it necessary to follow his excellent sentiments with a motion which takes the form of a motion of non-confidence. There is nothing in this question which should lead him to approach it with the desire of dividing the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Then accept the motion.

Mr. FIELDING. The better way would be not to make it as a non-confidence motion or not make it at all, and having drawn attention to it, I trust my hon. friend will see that there is no occasion to divide the House and will withdraw it. Another reason why the time is not opportune is this: Some time ago my right hon. friend the First Minister announced the intention of the government to deal with this question of civil service reform. Last week the House was informed that a Bill would be brought before parliament dealing with the subject. On Friday last the Minister of Agriculture placed on the order paper the customary notice that a Bill would be introduced to amend the Civil Service Act, and on the order paper to-day I find Bill entitled an Act to amend the Civil Service Act standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. That Bill would be probably on the table to-day but for the fact that my hon. friend is necessarily absent, owing to circumstances both sides of the House deplore. What strikes me is that when a Bill is on the notice paper dealing with the whole matter in a concrete form and likely to come forward in a few days, there can be no reason why my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should challenge discussion and divide the House on the abstract question. Having drawn attention to the matter, I certainly think no good purpose can be served by his dividing the House. Let him wait for the Bill which the government has announced, and then there will be ample time to discuss the whole question. A premature discussion now is neither desirable nor expedient.

Mr. SPROULE. I shall not take up much time as I have given but little attention to this question outside of observations since I have been in the House. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) says the patronage committee is a good thing. He defends political patronage in the selection and maintenance of civil servants. Well, in that respect he is entirely out of accord with the judgment of the Civil Service Commission which he helped to appoint to look into this question and give the House the benefit of their observations.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is not quite accurate. What I did was give instances in which the patronage committee had nominated men to office, and I said that so long as we had no competitive examination the nominations received in that way were deserving of consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman said that if somebody had to be appointed in a distant locality, how are you going to get the information you required? But it is not with regard to remote parts of the country that the patronage committees are appointed. They are at work right here in the capital, and their work is more apparent and effective to-day in Ottawa than it is in any other place in Canada. To show that the patronage committees nominated excellent men the Minister of Finance gave us some examples, and the only conclusion we can draw from his argument and his illustrations is that the patronage committee is the proper system. But that is not the judgment of the Civil Service Commission, because they say that patronage is radically wrong. My hon. friend says that this is a non-confidence motion and asks why it was moved on the motion to go into Supply. But, on similar occasions, motions of this kind have been accepted and then they become no longer motions of want of confidence. There is nothing to prevent the Minister of Finance from admitting that the principle laid down in that motion is a good one and one the government should accept. There would then be no controversy between us. The next point made by the minister was that there is a Civil Service Bill to be laid before the House in a few days, and therefore there is no necessity of dealing with the question now. Could there possibly be a better time to present all the data to the House, that the House might be in possession of all the facts? The government itself could take all this data into consideration, and even if it were necessary for them to delay their Bill for a few days in order that they might bring the measure into accordance with the best and soundest information afforded them, they could make a much better Bill and one more acceptable to parliament. Surely there could be no more opportune time to discuss this question than just before the introduction of a Civil Service Bill.

Certain facts have directed my attention to the need of civil service reform. As I have already said, I speak rather from information than any thing else. I have been in this House for a somewhat lengthened period and have heard of civil service reform over and over again. It is said that the opposition is always in favour of introducing civil service reform and the government is always against it. I do not know whether the government's position on the question is due to the fact that it is a large question and difficult to deal with, or due to the fact that a real reform would wipe out the patronage system on which they depend for keeping in power. Whatever the cause, they do not seem to be in favour of civil service reform.

That the object proposed by this resolution is a good one must be patent to every member of the House ; it would give us a better civil service, one more useful to the country and one more independent of political parties. The establishment of the Civil Service Commission was for the very purpose of setting forth to the country what defects existed in the civil service, and the appointment of such a commission was in effect, a declaration by the government that they desired to remedy these defects. The Civil Service Commission has shown that many reforms are needed, and it is the duty of the government to take advantage of the information furnished by the commission. The commissioners say, among other things :

It was the universal feeling amongst the officials who gave evidence before the commissioners that this patronage evil was the curse of the public service.

Mr. FIELDING. Which report is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) reading from?

Mr. SPROULE. I am reading from the Civil Service Commission's Report, page 13.

Mr. FIELDING. Not the old report ?

Mr. SPROULE. The report of 1908.

Mr. FIELDING. It sounds very like the old one.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Finance rather resents the statements of the commission, judging by the arguments he has used before the House. The report proceeds :

Many of the witnesses were very frank on this subject, and the commissioners earnestly recommend that all persons who are interested in the maintenance at a high state of efficiency of the administration of the affairs of the Dominion should very carefully consider the evidence submitted on this point with this report.

Then they go on to draw attention to the fact that, though we have a civil service law, in many cases it is violated. They say that in 1906, over fifty votes were put through this House containing the old stereotyped clause 'Notwithstanding any thing in the Civil Service Act.' This is an absolute violation of a principle in the Act that should be held sacred. The commissioners go on to point out that while many members of the civil service carry on their work with zeal and with scant remuneration, there are many others who give very imperfect service to the country. It is to be supposed that it is for the purpose of remedying the evils pointed out that the government are introducing the Bill which they are about to present. Why should they object to any one giving such information as will assist them in perfecting this Bill?

One of the great existing evils is that the civil service to-day is not open to the fair competition of all. Why ? Because political pull has destroyed fair competition. The Civil Service Act of 1892 was intended for this purpose, but it has been warped from that purpose in one way and another.

Mr. FIELDING. Under the Act of 1892, was the civil service open to the competition of all ?

Mr. SPROULE. So far as the civil service examination was concerned, it was open to every young man and woman in the country.

Mr. FIELDING. The same is true to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. And that was a great step in the right direction. It made it clear that there must be a certain standard of excellence on the part of those who aspired to positions in the civil service. I frankly admit that politics entered more largely into the section from amongst those who had passed the civil service qualifying examination than ought to have been the case, but at least the Act gave assurance that those from amongst whom the choice was to be made had certain necessary qualifications. And the promotion was to be solely on merit. Is it on merit to-day ? I am told it is not, but that political pull controls the situation.

Mr. FIELDING. There is not a shadow of evidence to support that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. Need I point to any other fact than the fact that the civil service has so many appointments based upon nothing but nepotism ? There are ministers and ex-ministers who have sons in the civil service who never passed the examination. And there are sons-in-law and relatives of leading men in the government party who have been put in regardless of their qualifications. Had I the time to collect them, I could give the names of dozens of such cases. Why, it is a burning scandal the way members of parliament and ministers have been able to get their relatives into the civil service whether they were qualified or not to the exclusion of many who were well qualified but who were without the political pull which was used to such good effect for the benefit of their rivals. It does not need a civil service commission to point this out, it is apparent to every one.

Let me point out just a few of the benefits that would accrue from an improved system if it were adopted. First and greatest would be the improvement in the civil service; the work would be better done and at less cost. There is no doubt that there are many members of the service who give faithful and conscientious service, who do their very best. But there are others who cannot exert their best powers because they have not the necessary stimulus to their ambition. They know that, no matter what their merit, they cannot get permission without political pull. If the civil service were ruled by merit these men would be spurred on to give better service to the country. Another great advantage would be that members of parliament and the government would be relieved from very unpleasant work which now they are compelled to go through. Members waste a large portion of their time giving excuses to those for whom they cannot secure appointments in the civil service, many of whom are not qualified and should not be applicants for positions in the service. Then it would relieve members of parliament from all that, and from what I know of the feeling of the members with regard to it, in my judgment 24 out of 25 of the members of this House would gladly welcome the introduction of such a system. If they were supporters of the government they would be able to give the one answer, that they had lost the power of patronage. It would relieve them from a very onerous and a very disagreeable work. Then it would prevent the government and their supporters from the exercise of patronage in order to keep themselves in power. Why is it that in England the governments do not live as long as they do here? It is because they have no political patronage to exercise. In England as soon as the government begins to live it begins to die. By-elections almost invariably go against the government, because the government has no political patronage by which to influence voters, and they cannot keep themselves in power by that means. What was it that kept Sir Oliver Mowat and G. W. Ross in power for so long a time, over 34 years? It was the most scandalous nepotism, it was the abuse of political patronage, the worst that has taken place in any country in the world. It was not merit, not faithful service, not the administration of the government in the public interest; but it was the power they were able to exercise over the people through political patronage, the power they had of appointing thousands and thousands of persons to office that kept them in control of the government year after year. A reform system would make the governments more useful, and it would do away with the nepotism which is exercised by the Prime Minister, the other ministers of the Crown, and members of parliament in their desire to appoint their own relatives to office.

Then I say that all civil servants should stand on exactly the same basis as other citizens of the country. In my judgment they should be compelled to pay their debts the same, they should be compelled to pay their taxes the same, and they should be allowed to exercise their right of franchise, but not to become political partisans by going on the stump and actively supporting a political party. I think they should certainly have the right to vote. There are several other things that I would like to say, but as it is six o'clock I shall have to forbear saying them now. I agree with every word the motion contains. It would be in the interest of the government that this motion should pass, and in my judgment the government should say: We believe in the principle enunciated in this motion, and we accept it. In that way this motion would cease to be one of want of confidence.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. McCRANEY. Since the House was last in committee on this Bill I have received a wire from the mayor of Saskatoon with respect to it. It will be remembered that the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) took some exception to the powers which were given in the Bill, especially with reference to the length of time within which the company will have to go into operation, and he suggested to me the advisability of sending a copy of the 'Hansard' containing the discussion to the council of the city of Saskatoon. I did that and the reply that I have is as follows:

Saskatoon, May 22, 1908.

G. McCraney, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

Council satisfied with Power Bill as printed.

JAMES R. WILSON,
Mayor.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the hon. gentleman not received any other communication?

Mr. McCRANEY. Prior to this time I received a wire from the mayor saying that a delegation might come to Ottawa with respect to the Bill but this was received by me subsequently.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I may say that I had a communication from Saskatoon in which it was stated that the hon. member was being wired by either the mayor or the council saying they were sending a deputation of two, that they considered the Bill too sweeping in its character and that the people's interests were not sufficiently safeguarded. I understood the hon. gentleman's telegram was subsequent to the telegram he has read.

Mr. McCRANEY. I did receive such a wire as the hon. member mentions, but as this wire which I have read was received subsequently I felt that it revoked anything that the previous telegram contained.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. You received the other telegram since the debate occurred a week ago?

Mr. McCRANEY. Yes. The telegram that I have read is the last telegram I have received on the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend remember the purpose of the amendment of which I gave notice the other night?

Mr. McCRANEY. I have no objection whatever to the amendment which the Finance Minister has proposed, and had the matter laid before the law clerk of the House. If it is still satisfactory to the minister I shall move it.

Mr. FIELDING. I was going to suggest the omission of the words I inserted 'agreed upon,' as the word 'appointed' would be sufficient, that is 'at such time as the board appointed' would be sufficient.

Mr. McCRANEY. I accept that.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill as amended reported.

Mr. McCRANEY moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some inquiries were made by the hon member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) with respect to the interest of the city of Saskatoon.

Mr. LENNOX. An explanation was made in your absence.

Mr. McCRANEY. I have sent over to the hon. member a copy of a telegram which I have received from the mayor of Saskatoon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is perfectly clear then that the city council are satisfied with the Bill in its present form.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 172) to incorporate the Dominion Power Development Company.—Mr Hall.

SUPPLY—THE CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM.

House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fielding for Committee of Supply and the proposed amendment of Mr. Foster thereto.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the resolution I heartily congratulate the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) upon the able manner in which he has placed his facts and figures before the House and the non-partisan way in which he has dealt with the question. We appreciate the work the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did in gathering such valuable information, and I hope that every member of this House agrees with him that civil service appointments should be filled only on account of merit and after proper examination. The words of Gladstone, quoted by the hon. gentleman, ought to be convincing, and ought to teach us that we should no longer continue in our present slipshod and haphazard manner of conducting the affairs of the country. The hon. gentleman referred to the superannuation system and the necessity of making it part of our civil service law. The patronage system has been one of the greatest curses to the civil service, and the sooner it is done away with the better for the country at large. The report of the Civil Service Commission has distinctly laid it down that improvement must be along the lines of securing better examinations and granting greater powers in dealing with the civil service. The report of that commission confirms the view of the member for North Toronto that partisan favouritism and pull are largely the cause of the irregularities which have occurred in the civil service. The money which this Dominion receives from the people of Canada is largely expended through the instrumentality of the civil service and hence the necessity for an honest and competent staff in every public department. I regret that the Minister of Finance was rather inclined to introduce party politics into the discussion. It may be true, as he said that the evils in the civil service are not peculiar to the present administration, but if he compares the report of the Civil Service Commission of 1892 with the report of the last Civil Service Commission, I am sure the comparison will not be satisfactory to him. On the very first page of the last Civil Service Commissioner's report I find :

The commissioners report that in the short and possibly inadequate time at their disposal it has become very evident that in the present state of the development of Canada important changes are required to maintain the civil service as an efficient, contented and useful part of the machinery of administrative government.

On page 11 the commissioners state :

The commissioners also beg to point out that besides a certificate of good health no person should be admitted to examinations unless his character is such as to qualify him for employment in the service. As only one certificate as regards moral character is required by the Board of Civil Service Examiners it is quite within the bounds of possibility that there may be collusion between the candidate and the giver of the certificate.

On page 13 the commissioners make use of this strong language :

From the inquiries made by the commissioners and the evidence submitted to them, they are constrained to declare that they are unable to agree with the expression of opinion contained in the order of reference, and they are of opinion that the repeal of the Act is really the best course to pursue in the public interest. What should be given in its place the commissioners will state when they come to that part of the report in which they make recommendations.

Suffice it to say that the strongest possible condemnation of the present administration of the civil service of Canada can be found within the pages of this report. As representatives of the people we cannot too soon provide a remedy for the evils therein pointed out. We need not only a strict civil service law but we need a civil service commission of independent men who will not only look after the interests of the civil service but the interests of every department of government as well. We need a purchasing board ; a board not composed of party politicians who will purchase supplies for the government under the wretched patronage system that has prevailed for the last number of years, but of men who in purchasing these supplies will always keep in mind the best interests of the people of the whole Dominion who contribute the money. The resolution before the House deserves our enthusiastic support. It is universally admitted that those who were leaders of the country in the earlier years had not to contend with many of the evils of the present day. Corruption now seems to be an element in the daily administration of our affairs. Partisan tyranny and debasement, the outgrowth of contention for patronage, office and power, were almost unknown in years gone by, whereas to-day they run riot throughout the land.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Why do you not read the civil service report ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to read more from that report ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly, and wake up.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I shall be able to accommodate the hon. gentleman in that regard before I have concluded my remarks. The patronage system is now recognized as a great problem in our public affairs, and I believe the Prime Minister recognizes that fact. There is not a minister administering a department who does not recognize that to the patronage system, and to party interests he has to devote a large part of the valuable time which under good government should be devoted to the interests of the country. Few thoughtful men are so blind as not to see that a great reform is essential to prevent a great national calamity. Older nations have found that good methods, clean administration, honest, wise, prudent, faithful, men of worth and capacity in the civil service, demand the serious attention of their legislators. Intrigues, bribery and want of principle hung over the administration of public affairs in Great Britain and the United States before the introduction of radical civil service reform. In a young country such as ours abuses will naturally grow as our wealth accumulates, our population increases and the duties and responsibilities of public men multiply.

Therefore it is our bounden duty as members of parliament to put on the statute-book a civil service reform law that will be of benefit to our people and our public men, who to-day, from the Prime Minister down to the latest addition on the government side, squander much of their time in looking after the political aspirants in their constituencies instead of devoting their efforts to the public good. The people of Canada have little to say in running this country. The Prime Minister has more power than a king. He appoints the men in his cabinet. They in turn appoint civil servants. He appoints members to the bench. He appoints commissioners and representatives in foreign lands. He appoints members of parliament to positions of emolument. He appoints men to the Senate. He appoints lieutenant governors and is credited with appointing premiers in some of the provinces. Members and ministers under him in many instances are afraid to assert their rights for fear of losing patronage in their ridings and their positions as members of parliament. While reforms have been carried on in other lands, we in Canada have continued our careless and almost reckless policy. I firmly believe that the day is not far distant when a radical change must take place. These abuses must be removed. The man who says no is not acquainted with the proper meaning of our constitution or the kind of people who compose our nation. We as a country must realize that peace, prosperity and the general advancement of our interests depend not only on the men in high places, but on the fidelity and ability of those in the public service, down to the very lowest. We must not let prejudice or partisan interests stand in the way of improvements to our civil service. Let us make searching investigation into every department, and obtain information from other countries so that we may have the best system available, and do it now. The surest way to correct abuses is to investigate and expose them. No business man can carry on a successful business with loose methods and careless administration such as has been exposed in the departments of this government. Prussia set an example by investigating her civil service in 1815. France followed in 1830. Great Britain made a thorough investigation of the civil service in 1854. The United States made a thorough investigation in 1879 and since that time, but Canada in 1908 is still following the abandoned principles of the 18th century. During the last three quarters of a century a complete revolution has taken place in the civil service of other countries. Rigorous and impartial tests of qualifications have been applied to civil servants and where formerly incompetency, routine and peculation were uppermost, efficiency and fidelity have taken their place. The prosperity and development of Canada will largely depend on our civil servants, for they materially assist in developing our resources and by public economy and good judgment husband our strength. The civil servants should not be instruments to serve the ends of any political party. It should be our pride and ambition to make the standard of our civil servants so high that each department could be pointed to as conducted and carried on by servants of superior character and capacity. The conduct of the civil service in Great Britain at the time of the war with the United States is largely blamed for the loss of the country to the south of us. If the United States could take out of the quagmire of corrupt poltical influence, the civil service of that country, and place it where it is to-day, surely we with our small population, are not going to say that we are helpless to deal with this question. When you see prominent politicians of both parties in the United States favouring advanced legislation in regard to the civil service, when you see the presidents one after another promoting civil service reform, and vieing with each other to carry it forward, and when you find that under the present civil service system the people of the United States are able to save on the average $10,000,000 a year, we in Canada should at least take into consideration whether it is not possible for us to remedy the defects that exist in our civil service system. Public administration in Great Britain is reduced to a science, having its principles, methods, theories, tests of character and capacity, along with responsibilities, so arranged that the officer dare not depart from these principles. The abuses we have in Canada to-day were endured half a century ago by other nations and the arguments used by this government were used then in defence of similar abuses. The most important lessons a nation can learn from its own history are to be found in the exposure of its own errors. Surely we have had sufficient historical facts dealing with the careless conduct of our civil servants to warrant a progressive step towards reform. No excuse can be offered why the basis of our civil service should not have as high a position as that of any other nation. If we think our methods perfect and allow false pride and conceit to stand between our duty, and self inspection, we shall continue to be blind to the peril of a decline in the moral and intellectual tone of our official life. If partisan leaders, and political majorities are to be the domineering spirit of our national life, then will the voice of truth be silenced and our nation drift on to a day when there will be a national awakening, and our people rise to curse the men who for party gain who were afraid to undertake a reform that would elevate our people and place us in the front rank of the nations of the world on this important subject. Look at our position from an outsider's standpoint and compare our advances in civil service reform with those other nations, and we will feel humiliated.

The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) tried to show this afternoon that the civil service of to-day was fully up to the standard of 1892. But let him take the civil service report of 1892 and compare it with the last report and he cannot help being convinced that the standard of the service, as a whole, is not an enviable one and that instead of the service growing better from year to year it is being undermined by the party system of patronage and is growing worse.

In 1825 public offices in Great Britain were purchasable like merchandise in the markets, also offices in the army, state and church. This practice was stopped in 1871. Read the history of the civil service reforms in Great Britain, it is a history of struggles to gain positions they hold to-day. From 1834 to 1868 both parties seem to think that a strictly partisan system of administration was no longer practical and from that day it was doomed, and any party trying to resurrect it would court defeat.

Why cannot we, as two great political parties, deal with this question on its merits and deal with it quickly? Are our offices public trust for the common good or are they partisan outposts for the special benefit of those who can capture them? I see before me the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) and I well remember when a few years he practically defined his position as minister by stating that in the appointment of any man on the Intercolonial Railway, even down to the very navvies, he would take into consideration the interests of his party and not the welfare of the country. Surely we cannot expect from the civil service the best return if we allow party system to be carried on in the way I have pointed out.

Should parties seek the approval of the people by their strength of a sound policy and principles, or should they seek it through patronage and manipulation of elections? Should members of parliament grasp all the patronage possible and use it to discharge election pledges or partisan spoils and political intrigue? Should members come here free from these incumbrances and devote their energies to promote the welfare of the Dominion or should they come merely to look after the patronage in their riding? These are questions we should deal with. We are not living in the 17th century, neglecting to educate our people and denying them the right to vote. We are in the blaze of public opinion; we are public servants of a reading, writing, thinking people who do not say to their members: Go to Ottawa and devote your time and talents towards planning and scheming to get your friends into office whether they are competent or not. They do say: Devote your time and talents towards improving legislation; see that the money is properly expended, that our people are not over-taxed, and that the civil servants are doing their duty. If appointments were to be increased in Canada one hundred fold, is it not clear that party struggles would be still more bitter and politics more corrupt than they are to-day? Is it not wise, therefore, that we should consider the question at present and deal with it effectively? Should we not make a determined effort to rid the politics of this country of the patronage system and clear the civil service of this dead weight on its efficiency? Were we to do this, not only would members on the government side be greatly benefited, but the ministers would have more time to devote to the public interest. For every person or faction conciliated by an appointment there are generally speaking many offended who sought the appointment. Any party relying on patronage and spoils and not on the basis of principle and good administration is not worthy of the confidence of our people and must suffer defeat. The duty of a member of parliament is plain; he should have a constant regard for the old laws of the land, and also see the need of new ones for the common welfare of the people.

This resolution may appear to the government side a new and radical step towards civil service reform, but I feel satisfied that if we should take that step, the duties of the Public Accounts Committee would be to a considerable extent done away with, because there would no longer be abuses in the departments of this government, the exposures of which have taken up so much of the time of that committee. Instead of the members of the government devoting their independence, dignity, time and talents to their duties as representatives of the people and parliamentarians, we find them in many instances devoting them to party patronage and becoming really patronage brokers. They go from office to office, begging or bullying. To-day it is one thing, to-morrow another. To make a place to-day perhaps for a needy dependent or perhaps an unscrupulous supporter seems to be their chief duty in public life. Departments are beseiged and the time of the officials wasted, while if we had civil service reform that would be largely done away with.

Mr. JOHNSTON. You should stop it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My hon. friend is not one of the men who want to stop things of that kind. He is one of the men who believes in opening the door to the grafters and boodlers and heelers. He is the very man who can stand up in the Public Accounts Committee and defend the civil servants of this country in not furnishing the people with the information they should. There is no man more ready and willing to defend this government in its nefarious transactions than the hon. gentleman. I am not, therefore, surprised to see him averse to taking any part in considering a resolution of this kind which is for the general benefit of our people.

As members of parliament they hold the pistol of their prestige at the heads of departments, and the result in many cases is to force into the public service such of their relations or friends to become a drain on the treasury for the rest of their lives. Were such officials compelled to undergo a preliminary examination, conducted by an independent and competent board of examiners, this could not happen.

Mr. EMMERSON. From whom is my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) quoting?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am quoting from my own knowledge of what is going on in the departments of this government. And, as the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) well knows, a large portion of his own time, when in office, was taken up with men who were begging and bullying him for appointments on the Intercolonial. He knows that the time of members on his side was largely taken up with this patronage system.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is drawing on his imagination.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am not; I am drawing on the actual experience of the ex-Minister of Railways himself. He knows that he felt compelled to defend in this House the system of appointing none but politicians to positions on the Intercolonial. He knows that, never during the time that he was in charge of that railway, did he ever appoint any but partisans to positions in that service. And when we find ministers of the Crown ready to defend the system of party spoil and party pull, we cannot expect from them a Civil Service Bill that will institute reforms of great benefit to the people.

Members having this power make promises for votes and the results are frequently disastrous. Official life is lowered and many of our best men do not offer themselves for parliamentary honours, owing to the results that inevitably follow. Patronage distribution by members tends to bring the public service into disrepute and has a tendency to convert public officers into active politicians.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I draw your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) is reading his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the rule is plain; an hon. member is not permitted to read his speech.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The statements I have made within the last five minutes have been mainly dealing with the ex-Minister of Railways and others on the government side of the House. I have a number of notes to which I wish to refer, and I think it is for the general good that they should be placed before the House. I am surprised that the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) should take such a decided stand in this regard. Perhaps he will allow me to read the words of the Earl of Dufferin on the civil service. In a speech delivered in Toronto, he dealt with the civil service. He said:

But, after all, the chief danger against which you have to guard is that which concerns the civil service of the country. Now, the civil service of the country, though not the animating spirit, is the living mechanism through which the body politic moves, and breathes and has its being. Upon it depends the rapid and economical conduct of every branch of your affairs; and there is nothing about which a nation should be so particular as to secure in such a service, independence, zeal, patriotism and integrity.

Perhaps, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) might take note of these remarks of the Earl of Dufferin.

But, in order that this should be the case, it is necessary that the civil servants should be given a status regulated by their requirements, their personal qualifications, their capacity for rendering the country efficient service, and that neither their original appointment nor their subsequent advance should in any way depend upon their political connections or opinions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. FIELDING. Would the hon. gentleman give us the date of that speech?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The date was September 24, 1878.

Mr. FIELDING. Just the time the Conservatives came into power; and to the day they went out of power they did not introduce any reform Bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is a very broad statement for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to make. He knows that he has before him the Civil Service Bill of 1892. He held it up before us this afternoon.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not produce a Bill of 1892; it was the report of that year. The Civil Service Act had been in force for many years and had been amended from time to time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We will say, then, that the minister held up the Civil Service Report of 1892, and threatened this side that if we tried to show that the civil service at the present time was not up to the high standard he would like to lead the people to believe it to be he would quote from this report. But if the hon. gentleman will allow us to quote extensively from the recent report of the commissioners, we will show that, so far as the civil service is concerned it is degenerating rather than improving, and so far as the Earl of Dufferin was concerned, he was not finding fault with the civil service as it was in 1878. Lord Dufferin went on:

If you take my advice, you will never allow your civil service to be degraded into an instrument to subserve the ends and interests of any political party. The success of a political party ought to depend upon its public policy and the ability of its chief, and not upon the advantage likely to accrue to its individual adherents. In fact, the more the area of personal profit consequent upon a change of government is limited, the better for the country at large. On the other hand, the independence thus conceded to the members of the civil service imposes upon them a special obligation, namely, that they should serve their successive chiefs—no matter to which side they may belong—with a scrupulously impartial zeal and loyalty. There is no offence which should be visited with swifter or more condign punishment than any failure in this respect. A civil servant who allows his political sympathies to damp his ardour, devotion, zeal and loyalty to his departmental chiefs is a disgrace to his profession.

These are strong words from the Earl of Dufferin. When we find men attempting, as some are, to burk inquiry into the civil service, we cannot but feel that the time has come when civil service reform becomes imperative.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention, once more, to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) is reading his speech.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a letter in my possession which will show that the patronage system is carried to its utmost, is carried on in most reckless fashion under the present government. I am sorry the hon. member for Halifax is not in his seat, because I have a letter here, and printed on top of it are the words 'M. Carney & Co., Halifax, N.S., February 19, 1906.'

Gordon Farnell, Esq.,

Dear Sir,—Your letter received. We recommend you to tender $1 below what Stewart has the contract for. We think he will be as high as before, maybe higher. Get the contract. Afterwards it may be in order to get more.

We are, dear sir,
Your obedient servants,
WM. ROCHE,
M. CARNEY.

This goes to show the extent to which the patronage system is carried in Canada. When we see the present system carried to this extent it is high time that we should put forth our best energies to see that a civil service reform Bill is placed before this parliament with the least possible delay. There is not a doubt in my mind that as the Minister of Finance says that the ministers are responsible for what occurs in their departments, he will say that the Postmaster General is responsible for the letter that was printed by these men, possibly down in Halifax.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly I say that the Postmaster General is not responsible for a letter which is not written by him, or by any of his officers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thought I understood the Finance Minister before dinner to say that the Postmaster General was responsible for the party patronage, and that the patronage committee were practically the source from which he gets his information. If this is a sample of the patronage committee that they have in the city of Halifax, and the way they are distributing the patronage in the different departments of this country, it is high time some investigation was made in regard to that system.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no reference there to the patronage committee, as the hon. gentleman quoted the letter. I did not hear anything in it about the patronage committee. I heard that the representatives from Halifax advised a man to tender low. There was nothing wrong in that. He said they might afterwards be able to get some more. I do not say that that was right, but the Postmaster General is not responsible for that. If the hon. gentleman can say that the contractor got anything more improperly, the Postmaster General would be answerable.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is not wrong for a man to say that he would likely get more, and to tender $1 below the other man?

Mr. FIELDING. Not $1 below the other man, but $1 below the existing contract price. That would be a perfectly legitimate advice to give, with the expectation of getting more. I would not write such a letter. Although I do not think any harm came of it, the Postmaster General could only be held responsible if he gave more.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think I should read this letter again so that the Finance Minister may understand it fully.

Gordon Farnell, Esq.

Dear Sir,—We recommend you to tender $1 below what Stewart has the contract for. We think he will be as high as before, maybe higher. Get the contract. Afterwards——

This is the nice point.

—afterwards it may be in order to get more.

We are, dear sir,
Your obedient servants,
WM. ROCHE,
M. CARNEY.

Mr. FOWLER. Who are they ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand they are the members for Halifax.

Mr. EMMERSON. Did they get more?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have not investigated that, perhaps the ex-Minister of Railways will look into the question for us and see if they did get more.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would take your word for it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It seems strange that they would make this promise that he should get more, if they did not see that he did get more. However, I can only say that I strongly support the position taken by the hon. member for North Toronto. I think that members of parliament on both sides of the House are desirous of seeing a civil service reform Bill brought down that will not only be of benefit to the civil servants who are doing their duty in carrying out their contracts in a proper manner, but that will fill the public offices by men who are worthy of the position, and who will faithfully protect the public interest. Every dollar that these men are distributing through Canada belongs to the people of Canada, it does not belong to any government. Therefore I say that we should have the very best civil servants that this country can produce. I hope the resolution which is now before the House will obtain the support of members on both sides of the House.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). If what has been read by my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) who has just taken his seat, is to be considered as orthodox, while the platitudes he has expressed are of a very high altitude, I fear that I cannot be considered entirely orthodox. I think the same evil arises in politics that frequently arises in religions, because hypocrisy pervades every class of politician, as it pervades many of the religious classes in this world. Now, sir, it seems to me that we are dealing with a question of civil service reform. My hon. friend from Lambton closed his speech with a reference to the distribution of patronage. I understand civil service reform and patronage to be two entirely separate questions. It may be true that there are evils in connection with the civil service, it may be true that occasionally men who are not qualified are appointed to public offices. If that is true to-day, it has been true in Canada for the last 25 or 30 years, even before that time. But I think it can be fairly said in respect to the public service of Canada, that in the main it is filled by men of high character, men well qualified to fill the positions to which they are called, whether you refer to the inside or to the outside service. While it may be fashionable in a sense to declaim against this so-called evil, imaginary in the main, and while this criticism may be indulged in in a stereotyped way, yet to look at the question fairly from a practical standpoint, is there a man in this House or out of it who can say that the evil, in so far as it is an evil, would not exist after the institution of competitive examinations? I do not oppose that principle but in my judgment it will not cure the difficulty. There is influence and influence. Political influence is not the only influence that is exercised in connection with the appointment of men to office, and when we talk about competitive examinations, it seems to me that we do not reflect as to what those examinations are. I heard a reflection with respect to the appointment of postmasters, because, forsooth, they had not been called upon to pass an examination. What is the nature of an examination ? The young man from school is fitted perhaps to pass that examination, but I venture to say that if the members of this House were called upon to pass it, to answer the questions asked, nine-tenths of them could not do so, as they are so far removed from their school days. Would it be claimed that because they could not pass those examinations they are not fitted to fill positions such as that of postmaster ? My own experience and observation with respect to the civil service at Ottawa and elsewhere is that the young man who has been forced to work his way, who has been schooled by experience, who has had to battle with the ups and downs of life, and who seeks and secures a position in one of these departments is the man who in nine cases out of ten will fill the position with greater credit to himself and with greater satisfaction to the country than the university student who steps out from his college halls and can pass the examination. Can it be said that the answering of certain examination questions is a thorough test? Does it indicate qualifications of capacity, originality and initiative? The best civil servant is the man who has originality of thought, who can initiate an idea and carry it into execution, not the man whose memory is the best and who can answer questions, geographical, historical, mathematical or otherwise. Any hon. member who reflects will realize that it is not the man who graduates from college at the head of the honour class who makes the successful business man or the successful man in the real conflict of life. Very often the man who does not succeed in those examinations is, from a practical standpoint, the best man and scores the highest successes in the battle of life. So I hold that the competitive examination will not cure these evils.

There are influences apart from political influences. My hon. friend referred to my experience in connection with the Intercolonial and the Department of Railways and Canals. I can say in all honesty and seriousness that men were appointed and are being appointed to-day in connection with that railway because of their qualifications, because of their fitness. I will admit and I have admitted on the floor of this House that under existing conditions of party government in this country I, as a man, if it came to a question of selection between a political friend and a political opponent, other things being equal, would favour the political friend. Why? For the simple reason that I want a man who will work in concert and in sympathy with me. There is political influence in the service but it is not always political influence favourable to the party in power. There is as much political influence in the civil service in the departments at Ottawa to-day in favour of hon. friends opposite as there is against them. It will be admitted that such influence does not prevail on either side to any great extent, but in so far as civil servants indulge in their political convictions, in so far as they may be led to favour this or that side, the evil does not exist against the Conservative party to a greater extent than it does against the Liberal party. If our hon. friends opposite will but admit it, they know that they have as many friends politically in the civil service, not only at Ottawa but throughout the country, as have the Liberals. I am not confining my remarks to the inside civil service. I refer to the outside service as well. As to the Intercolonial, and I know the men of the Intercolonial as well as any man in Canada, there are more men in the service of that railway whose political prejudices are against the Liberal government than there are men politically in favour of it. Hon. friends opposite know it, and any one from

New Brunswick or who has knowledge of those employees will admit that to be the condition in that province and from end to end of the Intercolonial Railway.

My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) assumed a very high altitude and delivered an essay very well in its way but certainly not practical. The essay was pleasant to listen to as he read it, but, Sir, we are dealing with practical things. During my political experience I have often listened to those who have favoured legislation with a view to reforming human nature. My experience has been that this cannot be done by legislative enactment, and I believe that if you base all your hopes upon making human nature different from what it is, from what you find it, by an attempt at legislation, failure will be written in large letters wherever that attempt is made.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How is it that other countries are able to accomplish these things ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Other countries have not accomplished it. My hon. friend has referred to Great Britain and they have had civil service reform in Great Britain, but go to the departments of the public service there and see if you can find the evidence of it. Do the English civil servants who come to this country stand any higher in intellect, in capacity, in common sense, in initiative than our civil servants do ? I appeal to any one who has experience in this respect to say if he thinks the introduction of what is called civil service reform in Canada would bring the benefits which the hon. gentleman has dwelt on. I have some experience of the administration of affairs both federal and state in the United States and I can say that my experience is that the standard of the civil service in the United States is not as high as is the standard of the Canadian civil service. I say that the officials in the outside and inside service of Canada will more than favourably compare with similar officials in Great Britain or in the United States. It is true there has been a real attempt on the part of all governments to live up to our Civil Service Act, but it is also true that there has been failure and I will not agree that such failure has been a disaster to the country. The success of the civil service in my opinion lies more in the common sense that is exercised in the selection of individuals to fill positions than it does in the administration of the Civil Service Act. I see gentlemen sitting on the opposite benches who I believe could not pass the civil service examination, but am I to be told that because of that they are not fitted to be postmasters or officers of the excise, or officers of the customs, or to fill various positions in the public service ? Is it to be said that a man who has had experience in the public affairs of this country, a man who knows the working of our constitutional system and a man who has knowledge of our business life is not fitted to fill a position of trust and responsibility simply because he cannot answer certain questions in mathematics or give the dates of historical happenings ? I fear we are carrying this idea too far. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) told us that time and again during political contests, presidents of the United States have advocated civil service reform. That is a high sounding phrase and we have heard of it in this country as well as in the United States. I hold that men should be qualified for the offices to which they are appointed, but I also hold that the test of qualification is not to be found in an examination on set questions any more than is the capacity of a man who comes out of college to be measured by the examinations which he has successfully passed even if he be in the honour class. The school of experience best fits men for positions of trust and responsibility. When my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) spoke of the want of probity that has been found here and there among the thousands of civil servants, does he think that lack of probity would be removed by an educational test or a competitive examination ? Training and environment may be taken into consideration, but the answers a man may give to set questions on an examination paper will not alone qualify him from the standpoint of integrity and probity to fill a public position. Among the thousands of the employees of the government how few there are who fall in the way of temptation. Take the history of Canada since confederation, go into the postal service, the excise service, the customs service, go into every service of the government and see how few have fallen. The hon. gentleman spoke of the temptation that arises in connection with the distribution of patronage and incidentally he referred to the desire of men to get all they can from the government. That in a measure is true but after all it is human nature, and it is not alone in the political arena that such weakness is to be found. In the management of our charitable organizations, in the management of our church organizations if you like, human nature will be found to be equally weak. It is my opinion that the cant and hypocrisy that is indulged in in connection with this question is calculated to mislead the people of this country as to the practical working of our governmental system. As between the two great parties in Canada it would seem to me that honours are about easy in the sinning in connection with civil service appointments. During the eighteen years that hon. gentlemen opposite were in power I had an opportunity of observing their methods, and I can truly say they ignored all these principles which they now advocate for the civil service. My hon. friend from North Toronto has joined the army of latter day saints but he was a member of a government whose methods were not above reproach. When the Conservatives came to power in 1878 they dismissed nearly 500 employees from the Intercolonial, and they replaced them next day with their own partisans. Even a Civil Service Act would not have prevented these gentlemen from pursuing that course.

Take the men who were high in office in the Intercolonial in 1878. There was Mr. Brydges, one of the most competent railway men who has ever been on this continent, and certainly one of the most efficient who has ever had a home in Canada. I will not say that he had to walk the plank; perhaps that is not a high sounding phrase; but his services were dispensed with. Mr. Luttrel, who came from Ontario and went to the maritime provinces, was a railway man of capacity and efficiency, and he too was told that his services were no longer required. One after another of those in the employ of the Intercolonial at that time were obliged to step down and out, and their places were filled by partisan friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and they continued for eighteen years to hold those positions. And where to-day are the men whom hon. gentleman opposite appointed in 1878? They are holding high positions in the railway service of Canada. The manager who was there when this government came into power in 1896 is there to-day, and almost every head official, every one who could give effect to his political prejudices quietly is allowed to remain. Would it have been any better if these men had been under a Civil Service Act? Does my hon. friend from Lambton propose to work out a system of civil service reform by which every official and employee of the Intercolonial shall be called on to pass a certain educational examination? Are they to be put through their p's and q's? Is it to be determined whether they will properly dot their i's or cross their t's? There is an educational system on the Intercolonial. The men employed in the various branches of the service where technical skill is required have to pass examinations; the men who run the trains, the engineers, the firemen, the brakemen, the conductors, even the switchmen, are all required to submit to certain educational and other tests, physical as well as intellectual. My hon. friend, in the remarks which he chose to address to my humble self in reference to the period when I had the honour of presiding over the Department of Railways and Canals, said there were hundreds of partisans appointed to the Intercolonial Railway service without regard to fitness or qualification.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Oh, no.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend's remarks meant anything, they certainly meant that, because my hon. friend was making an argument in favour of the submission of a civil service that would require these men to pass a civil service examination. I then innocently, and I thought mildly, suggested to my hon. friend that he was speaking without any knowledge of the facts—that he was simply drawing on his imagination; and I want to tell him that if he will better acquaint himself with the conditions that have prevailed on that railway for a number of years past, he will find that qualifications are the first essential when men are appointed to positions on the Intercolonial Railway. In what way would civil service reform affect conditions on the Intercolonial? My hon. friend called attention to the examinations that have been held in the Public Accounts Committee, and there again he drew upon his imagination. Would the hon. gentleman have a civil service reform Act that would include the foreman of dredge scows, or the inspectors and foremen appointed from one end of the Dominion to the other? Many of these men are employed temporarily. Many, it is true, are permanent; but they are continued as permanent in the departments because of their efficiency. If any one will speak from a knowledge of what is transpiring daily in the departments in Ottawa, and will tell the truth and the whole truth, he will be forced to admit this. I can speak with some knowledge in respect of the Department of Railways and Canals, and I want to say that in the main and on the average the employees in that department will compare favourably with those of any department of government in Canada or the United States. And with regard to the men on the Intercolonial Railway—I am referring now to the great army of employees who are entrusted with the management of our trains—our telegraphers, our conductors, our brakesmen, our locomotive engineers, our firemen, even the men who are entrusted with the duty of looking after the track, the section foremen and the section men—they are men who will compare favourably with the same number and the same class of men connected with any railway on this continent; and it seems to me that when hon. gentlemen seek to condemn and criticise in a sweeping manner the employees of the government, no matter under what conditions they are serving the interests of this country, they are creating an impression that is false and should not go abroad. I referred a moment ago to the English civil service. I do not wish to condemn sweepingly the men who fill positions there; but I will say this, that from the opportunities for observation which have been mine, they do not stand higher, either in point of intellect, capacity or integrity, than men to be found among the same classes in Canada. I would illustrate it in this way. It is true that when we sent to South Africa the best of our brawn, we sent men who had not in many instances been trained in the colleges, who had not even been trained in respect to military edication. But when Paardeberg, occurred, who were the men who distinguished themselves? Were they the trained men who had been disciplined under the rules of the British military service or were they Canadians who had originality of thought, who initiated ideas, who could exercise the eye and the brain and the hand? That was the class of men who made the British arms victorious at Paardeberg. You can carry that illustration into this question and compare the civil service of Canada with that of Great Britain in the same way. Many of our civil servants have not been trained in university halls, but they have been trained in a harder and better school. Many of them had to start out from the farm and work very hard, and what schooling they could secure they got at the night school. They worked all day in order to take advantage of that night school. To-day these men are the equals of any to be found in the civil service of the United States or Great Britain.

It seems to me that in uttering these sincere convictions, while I am not orthodox, while I am not indulging in the cant and hypocrisy apparently too prevalent throughout this and other lands—in uttering these sincere convictions I am but doing justice to the practical conditions which prevail in this country. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) read to us a lesson with respect to our duties as representatives of the people. Well, it occurs to me that our highest duty is to study the conditions in the country and provide for those conditions. I am not averse to a Civil Service Act, but if the key note of that Act is to be the passing of certain educational tests, which are simply a test of memory—if that is to be the standard, and that alone, then I shall not favour any such legislation, whether it comes from this or any other government. We should apply common sense to this question, and I think I can say this on behalf of those who have been charged with the responsibility of administering government departments from confederation down that—in so far as I have had personal knowledge of or acquaintance with the gentlemen who have held positions in successive governments—they applied in the main the proper and the best test when making appointments—and that is seeking a knowledge of the capacity and breadth and ability and integrity of the men who were looking for office. My hon. friend very much mistakes the routine of the lives of ministers if he thinks their time is taken up in selecting men for positions.

Some reference was made to the patronage committee. I rather like the term. I want to say in all frankness that I have in every section of the riding I have the honour to represent a patronage committee from whom I ask opinions, and when certain positions are to be filled, I write to these men—who are men of capacity and integrity and I know will not mislead me—and ask them about the capacity, qualifications and character of the applicants and their political proclivities as well. Because wherever responsibility is thrust on me, if I can get the necessary qualifications within the ranks of my own party I shall do it. And there is not an hon. member opposite who, if he is true to himself, will not say the same thing. They did it when they had office, and if this country should ever lie under the misfortune of being misgoverned by them, they will continue to do it. Let us be honest about these things. Let us not endeavour to deceive ourselves. We are certainly not deceiving the people. And in doing that, we are meeting the views of the great masses of the people throughout Canada. Why, it is an outgrowth of party government. The same thing occurs in Great Britain and the United States despite their Civil Service Acts, and in making these remarks I am not in any way reflecting upon these high and moral reflections of the Pecksniffian type or these flights into a higher atmosphere attempted by our hon. friends.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Higher criticism.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, this species of higher criticism indulged in by hon. gentlemen opposite, but never put into practice when they had the opportunity.

There is one thing I want to say before sitting down, and that is with reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) regarding political influence in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I have said before, and I repeat, that there are influences not always political, but which move the great railway system of Canada and the United States. These influences are just as baneful—if political influence is baneful—as the small amount of political influence exercised or attempted to be exercised in connection with the government railway system of Canada. I have said that political influence, in so far as it is exercised, is most insignificant as compared with the community of influence which is exercised through the boards of trade, and the latter will be admitted as not political in its character. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Northern and the other great railway systems of Canada are moved by influences which you may not term political, but which are to be found in all the avenues of our business life, our social life and our church life. All these influences must be recognized. They are to be found in the church synods, in the conferences, in the associations, in the conventions. And they are an incident of human nature. No Civil Service Act will remove them from being exercised, nor will it change the human nature which is necessarily a part of our system.

It seems to me that this amendment might very properly have been dealt with on another occasion, and might better have come up in another form. Certainly, no good can result from it, for, while it speaks of the principle, it does not show in concrete form how that principle is to be applied, the details worked out in practice, or the abuses which are complained of remedied. When the Bill of which the government has given notice is placed before us it will be well for us to discuss its details, for we can see whether it is far-reaching or limited. But, holding the convictions I do, and holding them sincerely as I do, I could not refrain from giving utterance to them. I want the country, if I am wrong, to know that I am wrong. I want the country to know just where I stand in this matter, and I am not ashamed of the position I take in reference to it.

Mr. GEO. W. FOWLER (Kings and Albert). Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the country is intensely interested, I have no doubt it is waiting and watching with bated breath to know just the position the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) takes upon this important question. I am glad the hon. gentleman has at last taken the country into his confidence and told them what his position is. And I must congratulate him upon having proven to his own satisfaction, and, I think I may say, to that of the hon. gentleman beside him —judging from the applause with which his remarks were received—that education is a serious handicap to any gentleman who enters the civil service of this country. The hon. gentleman said in so many words that to be an honor graduate of a university absolutely and utterly unfitted a man for occupying a position in the civil service; that the less he knew the better he was qualified for the position.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend will allow me, I made no such statement, nor did I use any language from which such an opinion could fairly or properly be inferred. I was pointing out that educational qualifications or the examination by which they were proven were not the sole test.

Mr. FOWLER. With the hon. gentleman's usual misfortune, he has been unable to make clear to the members of this House just what he did mean, for, taking his words as they were uttered, and reasoning logically from the statement no other conclusion could be reached than that education was a real handicap to a man——

Mr. PATERSON. No, no.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) does not agree with that. And yet that hon. gentleman pounded his desk when the hon. member for Westmoreland made that statement. I assumed that that statement struck a responsive chord in the heart and intellect of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. PATERSON. He did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. That is exactly what the hon. gentleman did say, and 'Hansard' will prove it to-morrow. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman on that point. I will admit this—that a man may be a graduate of a university, and still be a fool, if you will. The bare fact that he has a diploma from the university does not confer common sense upon him, and without common sense no man can be successful in any walk of life. But, to say that education is not necessary and to say that we should do away with all educational tests, is, to my mind, to utter an absolute absurdity. Why, my hon. friend from Westmoreland would turn back the clock altogether. Why are we in this country spending tremendous sums of money to endow our educational institutions if education is a handicap and if in any walk of life the less education a man has the better he is fitted for almost any position he may fill? The hon. gentleman would have us conclude that the most successful members of our civil service, the gentlemen who render the best return to the country for the salaries given them, are men who have least education. He would do away with educational tests altogether. Why? Because, as he tells us, they are only a test of memory and therefore worthless. Would he have members of the civil service without memory? Is it not an advantage to a man in the service that he should have a good memory? The hon. gentleman does not understand, apparently, the accepted idea of the uses of education. He seems to think that education means simply a jumble of dates, mathematics and that sort of thing. He forgets that the idea of education is the training of the intellect, the development of the mind. And how are you to know whether a man has that training or not unless you subject him to examination? How is it in the case of men appointed to the care of technical matter on the Intercolonial, for instance? They must pass examination, they must show diplomas to prove that they are capable of filling the positions to which they seek appointment. If a man looks for appointment as a mechanical engineer, he must have a certificate that he has had the training of a mechanical engineer, or he will not be employed. I had almost ceased being surprised at any statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) might make, but I must confess that I was surprised when I heard him speak as he has spoken with reference to this matter.

Now, while the civil service of Canada is a very creditable service in the main, I do not agree with my hon. friend, for I think it can be improved. I think there is room for improvement everywhere, in point of fact. My hon. friend would say that we stand still in Canada. He compares the civil service in Great Britain with the civil service in Canada, greatly to the disadvantage of the former. He speaks of some members of the British civil service who have come out here. I do not know to whom he can refer. I have never met any of these dunderheads that he speaks of as belonging to the British civil service. The civil service of Great Britain has given to that country some of the brightest minds the world has ever known. It gave a Milner to South Africa, a Cromer to Egypt and a Hart to China. Why, I could occupy the time from now until morning giving a list of the great men of the civil service of Great Britain, if it were necessary to do so ; but it is not. The hon. gentleman spoke of the Intercolonial. That is a favourite topic of his. And the terms in which he spoke of it, and of the people employed upon it, has given me a contrary opinion to that which I formerly held with regard to one subject. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) is going to be a candidate again. It has been rumoured that he would not be a candidate. I judge that he is making a bid for the vote down there. He states that a majority of the people engaged in the service of the road are of the Tory persuasion. Now, Sir, that is a statement on which I must take issue with the hon. gentleman, and any person who looks over the statistics in connection with the elections in the county of Westmoreland will know very well that that is not the case, and I want to say here now that if it were the case, the hon. gentleman would not be sitting in the seat he occupies to-night. The hon. gentleman is only elected by the votes of people employed in the shops at Moncton ; outside the city of Moncton the hon. gentleman does not and cannot get a majority.

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume that my hon. friend wants to be accurate, therefore I may tell him that my majority outside the city of Moncton at the last election was some 300 or 400. My majority was between 1,000 and 1,100, and I only had a majority of between 600 and 700 in the city of Moncton. Therefore I had some hundreds outside the city.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But I say that at the last local election the majority outside the city of Moncton was very much the other way, and I think the hon. gentleman, when he faces his electors again, will find that to be the case. The Conservative majority outside the city of Moncton was a very large one, and had it not been for the vote of the railway shops, the four Conservative candidates would have been elected in that county. The hon. gentleman would have us think that all the old men who were appointed on the Intercolonial during the Conservative regime, in the city of Moncton, were continued, that no changes were made. He spoke of the changes that were made in 1878, and he cited two cases, I think Mr. Brydges and Mr. Luttrell. The hon. gentleman forgets that the chief engineer of the Intercolonial was dismissed after his party came into power.

Mr. EMMERSON. After investigation, and for cause.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, for cause, because he obeyed the order of his superior. Now the hon. gentleman also denies most strenuously that there were strained relations between himself and the then Minister of Railways, because he would not accede to his attempts to secure the dismissal of the present manager of the railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. That statement is very far from the facts, nothing ever transpired in that direction at all. My relations with Mr. Blair were in no way affected by reason of that.

Mr. FOWLER. I can only say that it was very current at the time and that the statement came from his close friends and relatives, just as close blood relatives as you can get. I suppose the hon. gentleman will also deny that there were strained relations between himself and Mr. Blair.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, our relations were almost of the most friendly character. Mr. Blair and I—if this is pertinent and relative to this discussion—were always the closest personal friends. He thought differently on some political matters, but not in connection with the officials of the Intercolonial.

Mr. FOWLER. So far as that is concerned, we must accept the statement of the hon. gentleman, no matter how much we know to the contrary. Now, Sir, this is not the first time that matter was referred to. Mr. Blair was at that time alive, and was in this House, and I myself had the honour to refer to it, and the hon member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) did not then deny, because Mr. Blair was here, I suppose that was the reason that Mr. Emmerson would not deny it.

Mr. EMMERSON. If he were here and heard my hon. friend's statement he would deny it, because it is not in accord with the truth.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend was here, and the scene that took place between the two gentlemen, the scene of reconciliation, was most pathetic, when the hon. gentleman as I stated then, fell upon the neck of Mr. Blair and admitted that he had sinned —that is, that Mr. Blair had sinned—and Mr. Blair admitted that he had sinned and was willing to be forgiven. That is within the memory of hon. gentlemen in this House; and then my hon. friend did not get up and deny it, as he has denied it tonight.

Now, Sir, so far as civil service reform is concerned, I think this resolution is certainly along the line of improvement. It does not seem to me that it is the correct thing for us to stand in the way of this improvement. What argument has been put forward against this resolution? The sole argument of the Finance Minister to-day was, you were in power for 18 years, you had a civil service reform report made in 1892, and nothing was done under it. That is the sole argument. Is there to be no advance in this country? Is there to be no improvement. Twelve years have elapsed since our hon. friend's opposite came into power, they have had the advantage of that 1892 report, because it was not a report to the Conservative party but to the government of Canada; they are now the government of Canada, and that report has been before them. Therefore if the Conservative government, if the Conservative party, who were in power in 1892 were remiss in their duty in not acting upon that report up to 1896, four years, how much more reprehensible has been the conduct of this government who have been in power 12 years, three times as long, and have still delayed acting upon it. Therefore they are threefold as guilty as the old government. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto, I think his speech was absolutely non-partisan in its tone, and high in its character. How was it met by hon. gentlemen who spoke from the other side? With sneers, that is all. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) spoke of the high character which the civil service should maintain, spoke along the lines of obtaining for the civil service the highest possible character in the men who are appointed, and in the promotion that would be thrown around those men, yet my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) has answered that with a sneer. He drags in the church, as the hon. gentleman always does when he speaks. Surely that is not very high statesmanship on the part of our friends opposite. Surely if they are going to persist in their present line, if they are going to retain the civil service as it is at present, and the civil service system as it is at present, surely they have some better defence for it than sneering against the propositions of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I would think that we have a right to expect from the government that is in charge of the affairs of this country a very different line of argument.

Now what do we desire to do? What does the hon. member for North Toronto, by his resolution, desire to do? He desires to remove as far as possible the civil service of Canada from the influence of politics so that merit should be the only thing to be recognized. What to-day is the only thing recognized? Is it merit? No, it is political pull. That is the way promotions are made, not by merit but by political pull. So much the better for the country if it sometimes happens, as I have no doubt it does happen, that political pull and merit happen to be united in the same person. But there is many a man in the civil service to-day, meritorious, thoroughly equipped, able in every way, yet he gets no advancement by reason of the fact that he is suspected of being sympathetic towards the party that is now, and will be for a week or two yet, in opposition in this country—only for a brief time, however, I may say, for the benefit of my hon. friends opposite. Now what we propose is to remove that political influence with respect to promotions in the civil service of this country; what we propose is to throw a protection around the civil servants of this country so that they may no longer, if they wish to speak on political subjects to a friend, whisper it where no one can hear; so that they may be able to vote as their conscience dictates without having to watch to see if anybody is trying to find out how they vote, if that vote happens to be cast against the party in power. Because I hold that the civil servant in this country has just as much right to exercise his franchise as has the member of this House, he has an absolute right to vote either for or against the party in power. I do not believe that he should go upon the public platform and advocate the principles of either party; if he does that, if he goes that far, he must fall with his party and should resign when his party goes out of power.

Mr. R. SMITH. Does not the right to vote carry with it the right to use legitimate influence for a principle ?

Mr. FOWLER. Logically that may be correct, but it would open the door to a great many difficulties that must be avoided by simply allowing the civil servant the right to vote and to express his opinions, not on the public platform and not taking an active part as a canvasser. There seems to be a distinction there, even although my hon. friend does not seem able to perceive it.

Mr. R. SMITH. I am following this debate. I have heard that statement by different speakers, but I have not heard a good reason why it should not be done. If this government employ men and forbid them to use legitimate influence in favour of principles that they consider good for this country, would it not be just as reasonable for employers of labour to forbid men who happen to work for them to express opinions because those happened to be against their own ?

Mr. FOWLER. No employer of labour would permit his employee to go out and become an active canvasser on behalf of the rival institution over the way.

Mr. R. SMITH. In England it is a common thing to find men on the public platform with their employer advocating opposite political principles.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no objection to their advocating different political principles, but I say if the employee of one manufacturing concern was advocating the advantages of the opposition manufacturing concern over the way, he would not hold his employment very long and that seems to me to be a fair illustration of the position in so far as the civil service is concerned. I have nothing further to add, I have simply to say that I believe the resolution of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is along the right lines and is a resolution which every man should feel himself able to support. I think the government should adopt it. It is not necessarily a vote of want of confidence. The government can consider it not a vote of want of confidence and the whole House can vote for it. Let us try to improve the conditions of the civil service if we can, let us improve the conditions of the civil servants in every way in which it is necessary to make improvements. If we are not paying enough let us pay more ; let us be sure, however, before we increase the salaries of the civil servants, that the salaries are not large enough now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). As no hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House seems disposed to continue the debate, I would like to say a very few words before it closes. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) treated the House to a very frank declaration of the stand which he takes on this subject, but let me say that if he did touch and I do not think he very closely touched the real question, everything that he said and fifty times more, was answered in Great Britain more than half a century ago by men like Mr. Gladstone and Lord Macaulay, whose utterances on this subject would most completely dispose of every possible argument that has been advanced to-night by the hon. member for Westmoreland and would dispose also of a great many more formidable arguments which he did not advance.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has dealt in the first place with the time at which my hon. friend for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has brought this subject forward. He did not allude to the fact that this motion was placed on the order paper on the very first day of this session, that its consideration was postponed from time to time for the purpose of having before the House the report of the Civil Service Commission, and finally when that report did not come down until the government had taken practically every day for their own business the hon. member for North Toronto dropped his motion from the order paper with a distinct statement that he would renew it after the report of that Commission was available to members of this House. Therefore, so far as the question of time is concerned, there is nothing with which to reproach the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

The Minister of Finance also relied upon the claim that this was a motion of want of confidence in the government, being a motion in amendment of that proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the House should resolve itself into Committee of Supply. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) did not put this forward as a motion of want of confidence in the government ; he deliberately abstained from introducing matters of a controversial nature except in reply to some observations made during his speech by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and even then he touched the matter with a very light hand and his speech, on the whole, might he said to be of an absolutely uncontroversial nature. Over and over again this government, since it came into power in 1896, has accepted amendments proposed in a very much more controversial spirit and they have passed, in some cases by a majority and in most cases by the unanimous consent of this House. In 1899 Sir Charles Tupper proposed a resolution as an amendment to the motion for Committee of Supply, touching the responsibility of political heads of departments. The government accepted the motion and it passed the House unanimously. In 1900, Mr. Russell, then member for the City and County of Halifax, proposed a resolution with regard to preferential trade with Great Britain. The motion was accepted by the government and passed by a majority. In 1901, Mr. T. O. Davis, then a member of this House, proposed a motion with regard to the test case touching the taxation of Canadian Pacific lands in the west. The government accepted the motion and it passed unanimously. In 1902, Mr. Bourassa proposed an amendment with regard to the embargo imposed by Great Britain on Canadian cattle. It was accepted by the government and passed this House unanimously. In 1903, Mr. Costigan, then a member of this House, proposed an amendment with regard to the question of Home Rule for Ireland. The government accepted the amendment and it passed by a majority. In 1905, Mr. Armstrong, the member for East Lambton, proposed a resolution in amendment for an efficient system of cold storage. The government accepted the amendment and it passed unanimously. In 1905 the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) proposed a resolution with respect to the interference of civil servants in Dominion and provincial elections. The government accepted the amendment and it passed unanimously. All these were amendments to the motion for Committee of Supply. During this very session, I myself proposed a resolution in this House in amendment to supply touching the rights of parliament to original documents in possession of departments of the government. I did not take the course which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has taken to-day ; I proposed that resolution in a very controversial spirit indeed and challenged the government to vote it down if they dared. They accepted the motion and it passed this House unanimously. It is idle then for the government to pretend that they must reject this motion to-day on the ground that it is an amendment to the motion for Committee of Supply.

The Minister of Finance dwelt very lightly on the subject of civil service reform and he and the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) justified appointments to the civil service of Canada by means of patronage committees in the different constituencies. They qualified the real object of patronage committees by suggesting that it is to afford to the government or to the head of a particular department information as to who may be the best man available. But every one who knows the real object of the patronage committee knows that such is not the purpose for which it is formed, nor the motive which actuates its work. Nine times out of ten what influences the patronage committees is not whether a particular man is the best man for the public service, but whether the amount of party service he has performed entitles him to the position. The question debated above all others in the patronage committee is whether or not a particular appointment will do the party the most good in the particular district from which the man is appointed. My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) spoke a great deal about hyprocrisy in religion and politics and I shall not follow him in that, but I do say that if he has the slightest knowledge of these patronage committees, he will understand that I have correctly described their purpose and motive. Is it advisable in Canada to continue the system of making appointments to the public service through the instrumentality of the political organizations of one party or the other ? If it is a good system, as the Minister of Finance and the member for Westmoreland seem to think, then why not allow the patronage committees to recommend promotions in the service, why not refer the question of promotion to the patronage committee of the particular district from which the appointee in the first instance came. If you analyze the suggestion in that way you will see how utterly absurd and misleading it is to say that any such system can be in the interest of this country or any other country possessing self-governing institutions.

My hon. friend from North Toronto has made a very able and exhaustive speech in support of his motion and so I shall not deal with the question at any great length. Let me quote the words of a well known writer in the United States which expressed very distinctly and very forcibly the maxim that public office is a public trust. I take this citation from a pamphlet written by Wm. Dudley Foulke, a member of the National Civil Service Reform League of the United States:

> Public office being a trust, the man or party who administers it has no more right to bestow it for personal gratification or political advantage than a judge would have to take away the property of a litigant on personal or party grounds. If it is asked then, why we want appointments controlled by rules and examinations, why we are not willing to trust the discretion of the executive or that of the legislators by whom the executive functions are now so largely assisted, we answer: For the same reason that we insist that the judge who passes on our lives, liberty or property, shall be governed by fixed rules of law.

My hon. friend from Westmoreland was very strong in his contention that we should apply common sense; let me quote from the present Attorney General of the United States, who has made a careful study of this subject :

> I want to tell you then, in a very few words, what civil service reform is. It is nothing in the world, ladies and gentlemen, but the application of sound sense and sound morals to the choice and retention of your public servants. You place in the hands of a president, or a mayor, or a governor great powers of patronage. He holds those powers, he is entitled to fill the offices in his gift, solely in the public interest. He received those offices, or the right to fill them, from the people; he did not create them. The salaries of those officers are paid by the people's money; they are not paid out of his pocket. The duties of those officers are fixed by the people's laws; he has no more power than any other citizen to fix their duties, although he himself is bound, by the same laws, to see that those duties are properly performed. In short, the offices in his gift belong to the people, and he holds them as the people's steward and trustee.

And as to the history and objects of civil service reform perhaps I cannot do better than to quote the Hon. Carl Shurz, a man of international reputation :

> The reform of the civil service as we advocate it, aims at two objects: to secure to the people an honest and efficient public service, and to eliminate as much as possible the demoralizing element of patronage and political and personal favouritism from out political life. The first is accomplished by subjecting candidates for public employment to examinations and probations testing their fitness for such employment; and the second by making such examinations competitive, so as to give the fittest man the best chance for appointment and to exclude appointment by favouritism, personal or political, and thus the use of the office concerned as party spoil. This is not a matter of abstract theory, but of simply practical common sense.

I do not know that I can add much to the arguments in favour of civil service reform which are contained in these three citations. Let me ask what will be accomplished by civil service reform ? In the first place we will accomplish better service to the state. No one pretends, as my hon. friend from Westmoreland, seemed to think we pretend that appointment by competitive examination will in every case bring the best man into the proper place. I do not believe competitive examination will accomplish that, but I do believe that by that system you will get an infinitely better class of officials than you will get by the exercise of mere party patronage and mere political pull. In the next place you will bring about a more assured status for the civil servant, and it is important that the civil servant should have an assured status. The man who understands that the exercise of political influence can put over his head in the government service another man who upon a fair test of merit would never get the position, will surely not feel himself inspired with the same interest in the public service as if he knew that faithful and intelligent work done by him would in time bring about its fitting reward. In the next place it will remove the power and therefore the temptation to appoint to public office for personal or party ends. I do not know any distinction between bribing a man by money and bribing a man by the promise of public office, and when you have a system under which any man engaging in political work feels himself assured at some time in the future of obtaining a public office because of the mere fact that he has done that political work, you do not get very far away from bribery. In the third place, the reform which my hon. friend from North Toronto is advocating will strike down that political corruption which does more or less arise from the use of party patronage.

The present system causes many and various abuses to flourish. In the first place, the heads of departments do not appoint their subordinates. In some cases at least subordinates in the different departments are appointed when they are not required. The head of the department would not select the man whom he is bound to receive if he were left to exercise his own good judgment. Inefficient appointments are made. There are useless men in the departments in Ottawa to-day ; every minister of the Crown knows that. I do not mean to say that the men now on the treasury benches are responsible for all of them. I am not making this statement with any idea of casting discredit on the government. The same system as has flourished under this government, perhaps in the more intense degree, has also flourished under the previous administration. Under both, I believe, not only have inefficient appointments been made but places have been created in order that political supporters of one party or the other might be satisfied in their demands. The political influence of appointees is exercised. That more or less destroys discipline. My hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson)—who has left the chamber, I regret to say—spoke of the Intercolonial railway and the marvellous condition of affairs under his administration. I have been told, on authority which I respect as highly as I do that of the hon. member for Westmoreland, that there are men on the Intercolonial to-day who cannot and dare not keep their subordinates under them in a proper system of discipline simply because they know the effect which the political influence of these subordinates, appointed by political pull, can exercise upon them. Does that tend to good service or good discipline ? Political support is bartered for promise of office, and the time of ministers and members is needlessly and absurdly taken up with patronage. My hon. friend from Westmoreland was rather inclined to deny that. I have discussed this subject with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are sincerely desirous of seeing reform in this connection brought about. I have not discussed it with ministers, and do not know what their experience may be ; but members of parliament on the other side of the House have told me, in some cases that half their time, in other cases that three-fourths of their time, was taken up in dealing with matters of appointment to public office, and in that way they were prevented from giving that attention to public affairs that they would like to give and that they would be able to give if this system were abolished and a system of competitive examinations were substituted for it. In the United States, according to the pamphlets to which I have just referred, the abuse previous to the inauguration of their present system, existed to an enormous extent. One of the writers whom I have quoted describes a visit which he made to one of the departments at Washington, where he found a regular book like a ledger kept in which every member of Congress and every senator was charged not only with every appointment which had been made upon his recommendation, but with the salary and position described, so that it might be known exactly by a glance at this book from time to time, to what extent his power of recommendation to office had been exercised. It reached a ridiculous extent in the United States, such an extent as influenced public opinion, and brought about the establishment of the National Civil Service Reform League, and created such a public agitation that civil service reform has made enormous progress in that country. While they may not yet have attained the standard that has been attained in Great Britain, no one can deny, notwithstanding the vain remarks of my hon. friend from Westmoreland, that their system is many years in advance of that which we have in Canada. It is idle to pretend that the civil service of Canada, under a system of party patronage, is equal or can be equal to that of Great Britain. The civil service system of Great Britain is the admiration of the world, and when any hon. gentleman arises in this House and declares that our system is equal to or at all approaching it, he merely shows that he has made no study whatever of the subject, and does not in the least know that which he professes to discuss. I do not deny that we have splendid civil servants in Canada ; but their value is great, not by reason of our system, but in spite of it. It may sometimes happen, it does very often happen, that an appointment made for political reasons is a very good appointment, and the man so appointed may render excellent service to the state. But we must not on that account shut our eyes to the abuses that have arisen, and to the general demoralization in the public life of the country when the reward of office is regarded as a fair exercise of the party power. If a party continues in power, as it very often does, for eight or ten or twelve years, even for eighteen years, as in the case of one administration, the result is that the appointments, made almost altogether from one political party, leave a large minority in the country absolutely unrepresented in the public service. In other words, you exclude from the civil service of the country the ability, the capacity, the good character, of nearly one-half the population, who, by reason of this system of party patronage, are not considered as eligible for appointment to the public service. Is it not time that we in Canada should do away with that system ? Suppose any great banking institution in Canada, any great railway corporation, any great commercial corporation, made appointments to their service from political considerations or the equivalent of political considerations, do you imagine that it would have the splendid service which many of these great organizations possess ? And is there any reason why the government of this country, which ought to be the greatest and most efficient organization in Canada, should not have the very best and most efficient service that is to be found in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific ? Surely there is no reason why it should not be so. The public service presents certain attractions, and men are ready to enter it. If it were put on a reasonable, business, common sense basis, I cannot bring myself to think that it would not attain the same standard as has been attained in Great Britain, and that we should not have vastly improved results to the people of the country as a whole. I am glad to know, if I am properly advised, that the province of British Columbia in the present year is leading the way in establishing a system of open competitive examinations by a non-partisan board, and that in connection with the system which they are so establishing, they are making efficient provision for the old age of public servants of that province by proper superannuation allowances. We have this example. We have the example of all our business institutions throughout the country so far as superannuation is concerned. I agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Hon. Mr. Foster) that the two should go hand in hand. We want in Canada a system of appointment by competitive examinations, to be under the control of a board which shall give to that subject the whole of its time and energies, and endeavour to bring about in Canada the same conditions which have prevailed so many years in the mother country. That alone will not be sufficient. We have to put our civil service on a proper basis of remuneration and in the possession of the assurance that when old age comes, after reasonable service to their country, they shall not be turned out with the fear of poverty and distress before their eyes, and that they and those dependent upon them shall be provided for by that same country which they have served for years.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has proposed this resolution in no controversial spirit. He has proposed it as a motion which he thinks might reasonably be accepted by the government and which ought to be embodied in the measure they propose to submit to the House before many days. I sincerely trust the government will reconsider the attitude of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and thus take a great step forward in the progress towards civil service reform. We can all unite in the declaration of this principle—a principle which is not a new one, which is not an experimental one, which has been tried and tried successfully, in the mother country for half a century at least and which, during the past ten or fifteen years, has met with the same success in the great republic to the south.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Under ordinary circumstances, I would have no fault to find whatever with the motion moved by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I may say to him at once that, in the principle laid down, I am disposed to very largely agree, if not absolutely. But in my humble judgment, the time is singularly ill chosen to present such a motion. My hon. friend had many opportunities in the earlier part of the session to move this resolution. You, Mr. Speaker, had hardly taken your seat, when the hon. gentleman put on the notice paper the motion now in your hand. It was called again and again, he had every opportunity to move it, he did not do so for reasons better known to himself, he withdrew it at last in order to bring it on now as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply. But I would call attention to the fact that this very day, were it not for an unfortunate event which we all deplore, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) would in all probability have introduced a measure of civil service reform. It is not for me to say at the moment what will be the character of that measure; but when such a Bill was on the order paper, and when the cause why it was not brought before the House is known to my hon. friend, I would have expected that he would have waited until the Minister of Agriculture introduced his Bill. Then if the Bill were not to his taste, he could move his present motion by way of amendment or move it as an amendment on going into Supply. This is the only reason why we cannot accept the motion of my hon. friend. I am not discussing the merits of the Bill. If the rules of the House had permitted an amendment, I would have moved one which would have explained our position, but since we cannot explain our position by a motion, it is open for us to explain it by giving our reasons against the motion. We do not want to enter into a controversy on the merit of my hon. friend's motion. We shall have every opportunity to do this when the government Bill comes up, as it certainly will in a few days, if not to-morrow.

This would be a sufficient answer at present, but in courtesy to my hon. friend perhaps I may notice some of the arguments he has offered to the House. Let me say, first of all, that I do not want in this matter that we should appear better than our fellows. We have, in the twelve years we have been in office, accepted the system, which has been in existence since confederation, of making appointments on party lines. In this we followed the example set by all our predecessors. In the eighteen years the party opposite held office, appointments to the service were made on party lines also. It is said by my hon. friend that this system is not the best. I agree altogether with him, but even if the service has been recruited on party lines, I think it only fair to say that the present service is a very efficient body of men. For eighteen years it was recruited from the ranks of the Conservative party, yet on the whole I am satisfied that the great majority of the members, whether appointed through Conservative or Liberal influence, have ceased to be partisans, and while retaining their own convictions, they are, in the discharge of their duties, nothing but public servants. That recalls to me a conversation I had, shortly after taking office, with an eminent member of the service. He said to me: Of course I would not deny my convictions to you. I was appointed by the late government, but is it unnatural that I should act towards the government as honestly as I can ? Lawyers are all party men, but when a lawyer gives his services to a client, he does not know the politics of his client. In the same manner a public servant does not know the politics of the government which employs him. But allowing this to be the case, I am not blind to the inconvenience and the condition of the service as it is to-day. There is a great deal in favour of a system of having appointments made simply on merits and not from other considerations. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has given the history of the service in other countries. He has stated truly that whilst in the beginning the civil service was recruited by every government from the ranks of the party in power, abuses crept in which induced first one government and then another to adopt the system advocated by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). The British government led the way, the American government accepted the same principle, but I would observe to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto that it is a task of some difficulty to establish that system in a country like the United States. The first law adopted by congress goes back twenty-five years, if not more and then, after twenty-five years, it is not as much in force as it is in Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That indicates we should lose no time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It indicates that we should lose no time. I quite agree with that. But we are ready. We have a notice of a Bill on the Order Paper, certainly we cannot go faster than that. And if we are to lose no time, my hon. friend should have told the hon. member (Mr. Foster), who sits next to him, because he has taken a good deal of time. He had his motion prepared six months ago, but it is only to-day that he has presented it to the House. We shall have, I hope, more diligence. But there is one thing we should do for the civil service. My hon. friend from North Toronto has spoken lengthily and well upon the great benefit the civil service has rendered to the public. He has stated—in words not too strong for me —the great advantage that a country like Canada derives from a good civil service. But perhaps he will agree that there is one duty that we owe to the civil service, a primary duty above all others that we should never forget. And it is very pressing—we should pay them promptly the money that is due for their diligent service.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I am a little disappointed that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did not see fit to deal with this question at an earlier period in the debate. However, he is an old parliamentarian and he perhaps knows best the time to take the matter up. We have had complaint and excuse by both the First Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the time is inopportune for dealing with this question. I have listened carefully to their arguments, but I have not been convinced; I have not been able to see that the time is inopportune. It would seem to me, with all deference to their opinion, that no more opportune time could possibly have been selected than now when we are about to discuss a Bill and before that Bill has been actually introduced. We know how difficult it is for the government to preserve its face after it has actually introduced a Bill, how difficult it is for them to come down from a position they have taken on the formal introduction of a Bill, and, therefore, how desirable it is that before they commit themselves to any scheme we should have a full discussion of the subject in parliament. Especially is this true with regard to this matter.

Now, the Prime Minister complains of the delay of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). He says that, almost before the Speaker has taken the Chair at the opening of the session, the hon. gentleman had given notice of a motion along these lines. So he did. Does the Prime Minister complain that he has had too timely a notice of this discussion? Let me say that, whilst I appreciate as a member of the House the fact that we have had ample notice so that we could take this matter into our careful consideration, I want to call attention also to the fact that he is hardly fair when, in dealing with the matter, he omits to mention that the hon. member for North Toronto was prevented from early and timely discussion of this question by the fact that the Civil Service Commission's report had not been brought down. And when the report was brought down the opportunity had gone by for dealing with this as a formal notice of motion. What does it propose ?

That the civil service system of Canada should be based on merit and character alone——

Does the Prime Minister object to that? Does he think the civil service system of Canada should not be based on merit or character, but should be, as it has been in the past, a subject of patronage, a subject regulated and controlled by politics as in the past, as admitted by every honest member of the House? This existed to some degree under former administrations, but it exists to a most dangerous and humiliating degree under the present administration. The discussion of this question, so far, has been very moderate—too moderate, I think, taking the attitude of hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side into consideration. I think it is no harm, probably to remind the Prime Minister that the country has become aroused to the position, particularly since the report of the Civil Service Commission which is studded with statements of the evils of the patronage system, and is aroused to the determination that the element of patronage and political interference shall be eliminated from the public service. The resolution goes on :

—and the appointments thereto should be made only from candidates whose competency has been established through open competitive examinations conducted under a non-partisan civil service commission.

Do hon. members object to that? Would they say that candidates should not be appointed by reason of competency? Do they claim that it is improper that competency be established by open competitive examination conducted under a non-partisan Civil Service Commission? Now, it seems to me that the only controversial point in this is the Civil Service Commission. There is not an hon. member on the other side who will join with the government in voting down this resolution who would dare to go to his constituents and say that he is opposed to any principle enunciated in that resolution unless it be by possibility the provision for a Civil Service Commission. That may or may not be a desirable solution of the question. But we have the example of other countries, notably Great Britain and the United States, in support of the principle of a Civil Service Commission of a non-partisan character conducting these examinations. While the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance oppose this amendment they show no reason except—and I say it advisedly because the right hon. Prime Minister has used this language—the quibbling reason, that the motion is brought at an inopportune time and even that reason is opposed by every fact connected with this matter. I say that hon. members who support the government are called upon to vote down this resolution upon reasons which will not commend themselves to the public. Let me examine some of the statements made in this connection by the Minister of Finance. And, I must say, in passing, that I never saw that hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) more embarrassed, more agitated, I might almost say more confounded, than he was this afternoon. And what is the reason? The right hon. gentleman who leads the House could give the answer, perhaps, if he saw fit. But the fact remains that the minister spoke for fifteen minutes without giving one substantial reason why this amendment should not be concurred in. The leader of the opposition has put it beyond question that the government is not bound to take the attitude that they have to vote against this amendment as a motion of want of confidence. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has shown that not only in cases where a motion was brought forward that was not controversial in a party sense, but even where it was put forward in a controversial sense, and the government were challenged to vote it down, as in the case of the production of documents, they accepted the motion. What is their position to-night ? They ask their followers from one end of Canada to the other to vote down this proposition, and if they do so, perhaps nine-tenths of their followers will find it very embarrassing to them when they come to seek election within probably a very short period.

Now the Minister of Finance said that almost every one of the evils referred to by the hon. member for North Toronto existed under previous governments, and were mentioned by the previous commission. It may be so, but I have never found it in the report of the commission of 1892. It is noticeable that the hon. gentlemen who say so do not venture to give quotations from that report. But did not these hon. gentlemen say they were going to do better than the Conservatives ? Have they fulfilled their promises yet? The people do not think so. It was their duty to take up the report of that commission when they came into office and deal with it, but although eleven years have passed since then, they have done nothing towards reforming the abuses pointed out in the civil service system. Now the Minister of Finance says that the hon. member for North Toronto complained of the increases that were made from time to time as having been made on a political basis. I did not so understand my hon. friend from North Toronto. I rather think that the Minister of Finance felt guilty in that regard, and that he imagined something had been said that was not said. If the hon. member for North Toronto did not say it he could have said it. Any one who has watched the discussions in this House, as I have for eight years, knows perfectly well that when we have asked in reference to these increases the conclusion was irresistible, from the specious explanations given, that many of these increases had been made for political reasons alone, and a good many were denied their statutory increases where there could be no substantial reason given. The Minister of Finance attempted to answer the complaint of the Royal Commission regarding the virtual amendment of the Civil Service Act by the introduction of the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' That has been an abuse during all the time I have been in the House, and it is growing yet. It is almost always inexcusable. An extraordinary attitude was taken by the Minister of Finance, I might almost say a damnable attitude, when he said that the evil of political influence was magnified. Mr. Speaker, it is scarcely possible to magnify the evil of this pernicious system of political influence, and political patronage. You cannot confine it, as the Minister of Finance suggested, to mere patronage committee alone, it is the patronage of the politician from one end of the country to the other, in regard both to the inside and the outside service, and the employees of the government who are not in the civil service. as well. Take up the report of the commissioners. Almost on every page of their report they speak about the influence of politics. On page 23 they say :

> Owing to the good times which have recently been prevalent and the large revenues received from customs, the old-fashioned notions of frugality and living within one's means have to some extent been departed from, and instances have been found of departments giving orders for stores and other services to be delivered within a year in excess of the vote granted by parliament. Large amounts have been spent at several places in the Dominion for supplies bought from those enjoying political patronage at what may be called retail rates.

I said a moment ago that it is not patronage committees only that we complain of but it is patronage lists that exist wherever stores or supplies of any kind are bought. Almost every official that was examined before the Royal Commission spoke of these lists as a matter of course, that of course everything was bought with a view to politics, that no service was performed, no person was employed, no goods were purchased, as a rule, except in view of some political advantage to the party.

> As a rule your commissioners found in the outside service that politics enter into every appointment, and politicians on the spot interest themselves not only in the appointments but in subsequent promotions of officers.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition said, to follow out the argument of the hon. the Minister of Finance, that not only would you dictate the appointment but you would regulate the promotion afterwards. The commissioners have found that not only is the appointment controlled by the politician in the first instance, but the promotion, the status the man shall occupy from time to time, his progress, is guided by the hand of the politician.

In the outside service those who have the 'political pull' use it for all it is worth; they pass by their superior officers and bring pressure to procure anything that may prove to their advantage.

Again—and this is in the Customs Department, I am sorry the Minister of Customs is not here:

The chief positions in the outside service of this department are political appointments. Every collector of customs has been appointed from the ranks of the party in power at the moment.

Again in the Inland Revenue Department:

Of course in the Inland Revenue Department political appointments to the public service prevail, and as a rule the officers in one district are confined to that one district.

A great deal has been said about that district business, particularly on the Intercolonial Railway and services of that kind.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is my hon. friend reading from the report about the Intercolonial Railway or is that just put in by my hon. friend himself?

Mr. LENNOX. That is a remark of my own, but in order to be altogether within the book I shall give some references to the Intercolonial Railway. I read now from the evidence of Mr. Butler on page 1185. He is asked:

Q. Most of the copyists are women?—A. Yes.
Q. Did politics have anything to do with their entering the service, do you know?—A. I imagine that influence was exerted in their favour; I imagine that political influence insured their appointment.
Q. But except in the case of one man you had nothing to do with it?—A. No.
Q. Nine-tenths of the copyists are women?—A. Yes.
Q. And the greater part of the extra clerks are women—A. Yes.
Q. Is that because they are content to enter the service at a lower rate than $500?—A. I think that is the case. Of course, there is a great deal of pressure to get women into the service.
Q. From whom?—A. From political friends.

Again:

Q. There is a Treasury Board minute of 1879 about the use of political influence by government employees. Did you ever hear of it?

And the deputy minister, Mr. Butler, one of the most efficient officers we have in the service in Canada answers:

No.

Mr. GRAHAM. In 1879?

Mr. LENNOX. It was passed in 1879 but it is in force. The minister apparently thinks that it should not be enforced because it was passed in 1879, just as although time was spent by a royal commission in 1892 and valuable information collected, and it was shown that some evils were capable of being remedied, he still thinks after eleven years in office that they ought not do anything but fold their hands. The chairman says:

I think you had better get a copy of the minute. It lays down the principle that no officer should use political influence. By the mere use of political influence, pro tanto, he renders himself subject to dismissal.

And the deputy answered:

I was inclined to issue such a circular to the men in the outside service.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is concerning promotion, it is for increase of salary, not appointment.

Mr. LENNOX. He was pointing out the fact, as I understand it, that not only was political influence used to get these men into positions, but when they are in positions they use influence to get promotion and defy the head of the department to some extent. For that reason Sir John Macdonald had that minute passed so that every civil servant should know that if he dared to use political influence he was for that reason liable to dismissal forthwith. I hope the minister will take it into his consideration very seriously, because the department referred to is one of the most vulnerable except perhaps the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Political influence is used on that railway in another way.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will note that he did not answer my question. He has not read an item or an extract concerning the Intercolonial Railway or its employees as yet.

Mr. LENNOX. Why not?

Mr. GRAHAM. Because it is a fact.

Mr. LENNOX. I am dealing with the evidence of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not concerning the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. LENNOX. We will come to the Intercolonial Railway all right. This will refer to the Intercolonial Railway.

We have heard a discussion as to whether the road was used for political purposes, whether the rates were controlled by political considerations. There has always been a continual wrangle about the rates on the Intercolonial Railway?—A. People down there may not appreciate the fact that they are getting the lowest freight rates on any railway in the world.

Mr. GRAHAM. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. Why? For political purposes and for political purposes alone, there is no getting over that fact.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was not political influence, that originated at the time of confederation, for the purpose of giving to the Canadian manufacturers access to the maritime markets.

Mr. LENNOX. We have not finished with this question, but I understood the matter in a different way. I understood we constructed the railway for the purposes of giving communication from the maritime provinces to these provinces and back again, but I did not understand that we ever advertised that we were going to give them anything more than a fair, square deal having reference to the rights of all the people of Canada.

Mr. EMMERSON. The only communication between Ontario and the maritime provinces previous to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, was by way of American seaports and American transportation lines, and in order to divert the traffic through Canadian territory the Intercolonial Railway was constructed and for the same purpose the rates were made inviting.

Mr. LENNOX. I have heard that discussed in this House repeatedly and have heard hon. gentlemen from the maritime provinces as familiar with this matter as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and with just the same facility in expressing themselves as he has, and they have said that there was no discrimination in rates, that they got nothing better than the ordinary rates prevailing on other railways, and no advantage more than they would get from any company railway. We have on the other hand the evidence of the deputy minister that the people in the maritime provinces are getting such rates as no other people get in any portion of the world. That is according to the evidence of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Butler.

I wish to give another quotation in that connection.

Q. I mean to say it should be run for the least possible money and made an efficient machine all round?—A. We have got the most efficient railway in Canada, the best roadbed and the best passenger service you can find in Canada to-day, and we are doing the work for practically 50 per cent less than it costs the other railways, that is to say we are taking out of the customers of the railway not much more than one-half what the other railways are taking.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. We are not charging the customers of the railway much more than one-half what the other railways are. Our freight rates are much lower, our passenger rates are much the same for the short haul but for the long haul they are lower and we are paying our men as good wages as the other railways and keeping our standard up to the highest pitch.

I venture to say that evidence will be construed by the majority of thinking people as showing that the railway is used to serve local and political purposes rather than the interests of Canada, and we know that to a large extent the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway are attributable to that fact.

Mr. GRAHAM. Pardon me. That is a very trite question just now, and I know the leader of the opposition will appreciate the question I am going to ask the hon. gentleman—In view of the remarks of my hon. friend is he in favour of increasing the rate for freight and passengers on the Intercolonial ?

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to assist my hon. friend in that regard.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the rates are wrong the hon. gentleman ought be able to say so.

Mr. LENNOX. We may have to consider that question at an early date.

Mr. EMMERSON. Who gets the benefit?

Mr. LENNOX. Let me answer one question at a time. We may have to take the matter out of the hands of the Minister of Railways at a very early date and when we do we will deal with it in a way that is fair to all classes interested. Let me refer to another quotation which will deal with the Intercolonial but in another way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the question before us for discussion is the civil service not freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. SPEAKER. A discussion of the rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway is not relevant to the question before the House.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sorry the right hon. gentleman did not mention the matter sooner because I have finished my reference to it. The witness was speaking about the employment of men on the Intercolonial and the following evidence was given :

Q. Who has the appointment of trackmen?—A. The roadmasters would have the general supervision of the force, say from Rivière du Loup to Chaudière Junction and then another roadmaster from there to Montreal. The roadmaster holds the foreman of the track responsible for the carrying on of the work. The men are appointed generally on the recommendation of members of parliament in the case of vacancies. That is to say, a man must be a good man; he must be able to make good or he is dropped from the service, but when a vacancy comes the member in whose county the vacancy occurs has the say as to who shall succeed.

I think the patronage system here is more serious than in the aspect in which the Minister of Finance dealt with it this afternoon, because here we are dealing with the lives of people who travel upon the Intercolonial railway and we are making appointments not with regard to who are the best or fittest men but upon the recommendation of the member for the county, continuing he is asked :

Q. Do you not consider that objectionable?—A. Well it has worked out fairly satisfactorily.
Q. What about the appointment of engineers and firemen?

That is a more serious matter still because the engineer has the lives of the passengers in his charge and the answer is :

A. In the first instance the fireman or the trackman is liable to be appointed upon the nomination of some political friend, but once he is appointed he has to make good. He joins the brotherhood immediately and works up step by step.
Q. And the majority of the employees, are appointed politically or do they come under the brotherhood?—A. They belong to the brotherhood but they all enter the service in the first instance, I fancy, on the nomination of some member of parliament.

Again Mr. Giroux is examined with regard to the service on the canals and he says :

Q. How did all you people get employment in the beginning?—A. I have been employed two years through Mr. Rivet, my deputy.
Q. Then the member for the district sends your name to the department and you get employment?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That applies generally throughout the canals?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. There is no passing examination or anything of that kind?—A. No.

Let me now quote from the evidence of Mr. Pottinger :

Q. Then, in all the shops in the month of August you had 2,467 employees?—A. Yes, all over the line.
Q. Are all these 2,467 men employed in the shops appointed primarily by political nomination?—A. Primarily they are recommended by some supporter of the government. Of course there are exceptions to that sometimes. For instance, mechanics of the machinist class have been very scarce and we have been compelled to employ any one who came along in that capacity.

And only when they are compelled do they neglect politics in the matter.

Q. If you found a good class of mechanics coming out as immigrants would the chief superintendent or master mechanic have power to secure their services if he needed them?—A. If he needed them.
Q. Apart from political pressure?—A. Yes.
Q. The appointment of one thousand and odd people in the shops at Moncton gives a good deal of political patronage to the member in that district?—A. I may explain that the Moncton shops have been considered to belong to the whole line and not merely to the county in which they are situated although in practice the county gets the majority.

They belong to the whole line for what purpose ? For political pull and nothing else. These men tell all this without a blush :

Q. It has nothing to do with the by-elections?—A. Nothing whatever.
Q. The trackmen are exclusively appointed from the district?

They are dealing with the question of men being confined to a particular district and that they dare not be appointed out of their district or else there would be an insurrection amongst the politicians.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Who said that ?

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Pottinger I think. Any how it was sworn to.

Q. It has nothing to do with the by-elections?—A. Nothing whatever.
Q. The trackmen are exclusively appointed from the districts in which the tracks are laid I suppose; you don't get your trackmen from the county of Rimouski to go into the adjoining county?—A. Well, the track district runs from Ste. Flavie to Campbellton and goes through the counties of Rimouski and Bonaventure and a small part of Restigouche. These trackmen are local people. They are on a certain definite piece of line about six miles long, so that they will naturally fall into the county in which they are employed.
Q. I have heard that trackmen in Rimouski are stopped at the border and replaced by other trackmen in Bonaventure, and that these again are stopped at the border and replaced by trackmen from the next county?—A. I have not heard that in regard to Rimouski, and it would not be the case with respect to trackmen. But there is a class of men that we employ going about on trains cleaning ditches and so on, and it may have occurred in regard to that class of work. It has occurred in Cape Breton.
Q. I have heard the story that at Cape Breton you went through four or five counties, and at the county line one carload of men was dropped and another carload was taken on?—A. That has been the case sometimes, but they were extra men.

And they were engaged at a time when an election was coming on, for extra political purposes.

Mr. EMMERSON. That statement is not in the evidence, is it ?

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is a remark of your own ?

Mr. LENNOX. That is a remark of my own.

Mr. EMMERSON. You are drawing on your imagination ?

Mr. LENNOX. No, I am not drawing on my imagination. It is borne out by the evidence I have read and the statements of the Royal Commission appointed by the government; it is borne out by facts that we have had established before this House from time to time; and it is true to the knowledge of my hon. friend who has just spoken. Here is another passage:

Q. Now we come to the working expenses. Do you purchase all your stores by lowest tender after advertising?—A. The general storekeeper sends out circulars to the different persons in the trade who are recommended by the members.

Q. But in the case of big purchases?—A. In regard to ties and lumber we send out posters which are put up at all the stations along the railway, and everybody can tender that wishes to do so. In regard to the large works, they are advertised in the newspapers, and every one who wishes can tender.

Q. Take coal, for instance, do you call for tenders for the coal supply for the line?—A. We call for tenders from all the companies in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are no others.

Mr. LENNOX. There are no others in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, but you need not be confined to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, I suppose.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Where else?

Mr. LENNOX. The United States, I suppose, for one place, and in British Columbia there is lots of coal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would you run the Intercolonial in that practical manner?

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman's experience will be enlarged after a while, if he is patient. The evidence goes on:

Q. A great part of your expenditure, covering several pages, is for castings and all that sort of thing?—A. The castings are got by tender. We do not make our own castings; they are made at River du Loup for the province of Quebec, at St. John for the Moncton shops, and at Halifax for the eastern part of the system. Tenders for castings are asked by circular——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will see that he is again drifting away from the subject.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. If I am obliged to rule, I shall have to rule.

Mr. LENNOX. If you rule, I will stop that branch of the inquiry; but if you had not ruled, I would have imagined that the question of how the administration is being carried on in regard to the civil service is very pertinent to the question whether the system proposed in the motion is a better system than the one that has been pursued in the past. However, I have given enough for illustration, and I have referred only to one department. The Department of Marine and Fisheries is full of very much more startling evidence than that which I have read in reference to the Department of Railways.

Now, the Minister of Finance says that the civil service is open to all. The civil service examinations are open to all, but that is as far as it goes as a matter of actual fact. All can pass the examinations if they think fit, but a very large percentage of the young men and young women of this country who would pass the civil service examinations are deterred by the fact that they know that it would be a mere farce to do so because their chance of getting an appointment is so exceedingly remote. The Minister of Finance knows as well as anybody else that the civil service is not open to all in any other sense than the mere passing of the examinations. To give authority for that statement, let me quote what the Civil Service Commissioners say. At page 15 of their report you will find this statement:

The commissioners also beg to point out that in the list of passed candidates published in the 'Canada Gazette' no attention is given to merit.

A matter that was particularly dwelt on by the hon. member for North Toronto, and that merit should be one of the means of securing employment in the civil service, it is essential that a record should be kept of those who have passed the examinations and the order in which they have passed; but no such record is kept. The one who merely scrapes through is just as likely to get an appointment if he satisfies the political pull, as the candidate who has passed exceedingly high, and the minister knows that as well and even better than I do, if he would only say so. The commissioners go on to say:

The candidates are gazetted alphabetically. No doubt it has happened that the candidates who have just fluked through the examination by means of greater political influence have receivd appointments over the heads of more worthy and better qualified candidates.

In the matter of promotions the same patronage fear is apparent. Your commissioners found in their rounds that a collector of customs, a city postmaster, a post office inspector and others were appointed politically. The recent appointment of a postmaster at Kingston was on the recommendation of the patronage committee; the last appointment to the postmastership at Montreal, the most important in the Dominion, was given to an aged member of parliament, 67 years old.

I will not say more upon this question now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. If it were not effective I do not think the hon. gentleman would be anxious for me to sit down; but as it is not suiting their purpose and is not advancing their interests, they are anxious that I should give it up. Well, I am not going to try my case in their court. I am going to a higher and more responsible tribunal. When I find that hon. gentlemen opposite are restless, it rather inspires me with the belief that I am doing good service to the country by proceeding a little further.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will you stop if we cry 'go on'?

Mr. LENNOX. I will stop when I think I have fully discharged my duty. I want to refer to a few extracts from the report of the royal commissioners. Speaking of the Militia Department, they say:

There are officers enough in the department, both inside and outside, to do all the work efficiently, if they were properly trained and organized; but there is no efficient organization. The only attempt at it is the appointment of men whose titles would seem to indicate what their duties are; but those duties have never been specifically defined. There is no record of anything of the kind, and there are no written or printed rules and regulations known in the service, which your commissioners think is lamentable.

It is practically impossible to fix responsibility on anybody. The deputy is supposed to shoulder responsibility for everything as his signature shows; but that means that he speaks for 'the department,' and 'the department,' like the King, can do no wrong. There seems to be a huge redundancy of work which proceeds in a lumbering, haphazard way, giving rise to constant blundering and confusion. There is no sign visible of a single directing head, or an intelligent purpose, unless it be that of spending as much money as possible. Zeal for economy and good management, or pride in the work, is not visible. Perfunctory and mechanical discharge of duties is the rule, with apparently no perception of any need for improvement.

Then the commissioners go on to deal with the question of bookkeeping by the Faulkner Company. They point out:

After months of work by the highly paid experts the result has been at least greatly improved books as far as mechanical reform is concerned, but probably little else; and this achievement has been accomplished at an almost fabulous expense.

There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed that there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for, everywhere else he has to give discount. In other words, some of the government's officers are serving two masters, and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

It is certain that under such a state of things it must be impossible to develop high character in the service, or rather to prevent the deterioration of what character there is.

As some evidence that the heads of the department have been quite aware of it, we find on one of the files a memorandum by one of the officers dated May 31, 1905, regarding expenditures in connection with lighthouses. 'I am of opinion that in the Quebec agency alone a saving of at least $25,000 per annum can be made by compelling the agent to obtain authority for his expenditures over ordinary supplies and maintenance. If this is not carried out, the department can look for an overdraft for the next fiscal year of from $50,000 to $100,000.'

The cure suggested is too ludicrous to be taken seriously, but, as evidence of the condition of things, and the department's knowledge of it, this memorandum is significant. It was marked approved and initialled by the minister at that time.

Coming to the question of the lighthouse board—this scheme which was adopted for purposes which I do not think the government would like very fully to explain—the commissioners say:

Between June, 1905, and June, 1907, this board approved of and passed applications for new and improved aids to navigation amounting to $1,691,813. With the voting away of this vast amount of money the responsible minister had nothing to do. He was simply asked to initial the minutes of the different meetings of this most powerful but irresponsible board. The effect of this state of things is disastrous. It means practically the removing of all responsibility from those to whom extensive powers of administration and expenditure are granted.

When one realizes the enormous pressure being constantly brought to bear on the government of the day in favour of grants and bounties of all kinds from one end of the country to the other, it would surely seem to be a most unwise thing to create a board with extensive powers, which can be and are used in sympathy with this universal outside pressure, and without being accountable to anybody.

The two outside members of this board simply represent the shipping interest, which is their own. They cannot serve the country and themselves equally well in the same matter. The other members of the board are government officials, who, whatever their standing may be, personally or officially, are not independent of political influence or departmental pressure. They are in no proper sense qualified to fill such a position of trust as a seat on this lighthouse board should mean—where the most absolute sense of justice, with complete independence, is called for; with a keen desire to administer the people's money with the utmost economy and good judgment, and with all prsonal considerations sunk.

There can be very little question that the lighthouse board has been the means of greatly increasing the expenditure of the department, and that much of the increase has been wasted.

It is pretty clearly urged, so that I need not stop to emphasize it, that that board is an utterly irresponsible body, utterly unconstitutional and one which never should have been created. And when the opportunity now presents itself, we should avail ourselves of it to have a better system than we now have. Again :

Your commissioners have to confess that the general conclusions which they have formed regarding the administration of the department are most unfavourable. It seems to have few redeeming features; although there are some, one of which is the presence in the department of some good men, chiefly, but not wholly, in the lower ranks. . . Organization, discipline, zeal for the public service, and regard for economy are all conspicuous by their absence.

A word or two about the Department of Militia may not be out of place. The commissioners say :

The expenditure in this department is going up by leaps and bounds. In 1903-4 the total expenditure, both in capital and consolidated fund, was in the neighbourhood of three and a half million dollars. In the estimates lately submitted to parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1909, appropriations are asked for aggregating $6,500,000. That is to say, in four years and three-quarters the expenditures will have increased, if the supply asked for is granted, to the extent of $3,000,000.

About the Militia Council also they have something to say :

In addition to the council an officer has been appointed, called the inspector general, at a salary of $6,000 per annum. In Great Britain the appointment of inspector general was made for reasons which do not exist in Canada; but as the inspector general in Canada has only to report, your commissioners are very doubtful, however valuable the reports may be, that the retention of an officer at such a large salary is beneficial and altogether in the public interests. From past experience, it would seem as if this office were being made a stepping stone to the retirement of high military officers in Canada on large allowances.

Then summing up they say :

In conclusion your commissioners have to point out that the expenditure has grown in a little over four years from three and a half millions to six and a half millions; that the permanent and headquarters staff have increased to the number of about 220; that in addition to the general system of high pay the favoured men of the militia service in Canada draw pensions ont only for themselves but for their wives and children; that the staff is sufficient for a corps of one hundred thousand men according to the evidence submitted; that the desertions have been one in three; that the number of militia trained in the annual camps is about 40,000 men; that according to the evidence of Major General Lake the men attached to the rural battalions have no drill except at the annual camps, and it is arguable whether the city corps are as efficient as they were some years ago; that while only 40,000 men came out for drill of ages from 18 to 50, yet compared with the population of over a million men in Canada between the ages of 20 and 40, the proportion seems small. Whether with all the large expenditure of public moneys the result as detailed shows efficiency, your commissioners leave to the consideration of Your Excellency.

I had intended to read the account submitted through the commissioners of the difference in expenditure in the Militia Department now and in 1904, but I will not now take the time necessary for that purpose. I think the instances given prove with abundant clearness that the time has come when we should have a thorough revision of our civil service along the lines marked out by the resolution of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). And, whatever the right hon. Prime Minister may say as to this being an inopportune time, I am sure the country believes that the time is most opportune for bringing in a measure along these lines. We shall await with interest the bringing in of the government measure to see if it carries out the main recommendations of the Civil Service Commission which the right hon. gentleman appointed and whether it is framed along lines which will leave these appointments and promotions free from political influences. In the meantime I shall have great pleasure in supporting the amendment.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Foster).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LENNOX.

House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the intention of the government to keep us longer here to-night ?

Mr. PATERSON. I would like to pass one or two items.

Mr. FOSTER. We came here at 3 o'clock this afternoon, and it is now after 12. We have debated a very important resolution this afternoon. We are, we will suppose, Christians and men, and I do not think we have any right, either on one side or the other, to strain our endurance to an unnecessary point. It does seem to me that if we are called upon to sit much later than 12 o'clock at night it is straining to a point of endurance which is unreasonable, at this time of the year and in this kind of weather. The plea is made that it is necessary to get through business. So it is; but there is other business than the estimates that are before the House, and this House cannot prorogue until the other business as well as the estimates are carried through. We might as well be frank with each other, and say that there are some points of legislation about which there is a difference, that difference has existed for some time, and although it has existed for some time, we seem to be no nearer getting a decision from the government as to whether they propose to press that legislation or not. I think the government ought to treat us fairly and frankly, and they will find the opposition anxious with them in putting through the other necessary business of the session.

Mr. PATERSON. I have no desire to keep the House late, but I will tell you how the thing stands. I want to get $2,074,500. It is all in one item, it generally passes like that. We are only asking for what is necessary. To-day we should have drawn our cheques to pay our outside officers. I suppose there are 2,000 men who, if you do not give them this money, will have to go without their pay. The hon. gentleman speaks about it being un-Christian to sit late. Would it not be more un-Christian to put us in the position of being unable to pay men who, we have been told to-night, have been faithful men and who have well earned their wages ? At any rate, so far as I am concerned, and I think I have my colleagues and the Prime Minister with me, I will make an effort to get the money, so that these men who are under my charge cannot at any rate lay the blame upon me if they go without the wages which they have fairly earned. I will give what explanations members may desire. I suppose there are a hundred men in this city alone who will have to go without the pay they have earned if I do not get this money, and others are scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific; too many of them, as hon. gentlemen opposite know, do not get salaries that enable them to do without their money when it is due. Therefore

I desire to stay long enough at any rate to let those gentlemen know that the head of the department is not to blame if they do not get their money.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another way in which the situation can be stated. I do not propose to be put in the wrong by the specious reasoning of the Minister of Customs. It is perfectly right that these men who do the work should have their pay and these men would have had their pay many days before this if the government had not obtruded between them and their pay obnoxious legislation, obnoxious to a large portion of this House and the country. The government have it within their power in a very short time to allow these men to get their pay by withdrawing, or by putting aside, a portion of the legislation which is not necessary to the well being of this country, either to the Department of Customs or to any other department of the service. It is a party interest purely and simply which is involved in that legislation, and it is obtruded, not in the interest of the service of the country but of the party.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a large batch of legislation proposed, which stands on the Order Paper, but because the hon. gentleman differs from us as respects some portion of that legislation, therefore the customs officers shall not get their money. We are not discussing the legislation to which my hon. friend refers; he is welcome to his view upon that, and at the proper time and in the proper manner he may discuss that legislation as much as he pleases. We are proposing now to ask this House to grant supplies to carry on the public service of the country. We decline to mix up any other question with that. We now ask the House to grant the necessary supply, and no excuse that the hon. gentleman may urge with regard to some other item will be accepted by the country as a sufficient reason for withholding the necessary supplies.

Mr. A. A. MACLEAN. We have been here now for six months, I cannot get home every Friday night like some members of Quebec and Ontario. Four months are sufficient to pass all the public business, I think the government are to blame for the length of this session. During the last four months the supply could have been taken up at almost any time.

Mr. FIELDING. The charge of the hon. gentleman, I am bound to say, is entirely unwarranted. Again and again during the greater period of that six months we have brought forward some part of these estimates and again and again we have been blocked—I will not say obstructed—we have been blocked by hon. gentlemen opposite, who in the exercise of their rights have brought forward motions, many of which, in our judgment, were entirely unnecessary, useless motions such as the one which has engaged the attention of the House this afternoon, an utterly uselss motion which could only have for its purpose to anticipate the action of the government in a matter which stands on the Order Paper, and we have had hon. gentlemen spend the whole day in tactics of that character and now when we reach the hour when we want to do business, they say : Oh, we are tired and want to go home.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has failed to represent properly my position with reference to the motion I brought on to-day. He may have his opinion as to what the motion is worth, I am wiling to leave that to the country, I am willing to put the principle involved in the motion I moved this afternoon and the result that would flow from its adoption with reference to the best interests of this country alongside of his section No. 1 of a Bill with reference to the electoral law of Canada, a Bill which the government promised two years ago, which they referred to in their speech from the Throne at one time, an election Bill which at long last they have placed on the Order Paper at what time ? Nearly five months after the session opened. And they have imported into that Bill a section of a highly contentious nature, a section which carries out what in 1904 some hon. gentleman on that side of the House wished to carry out but which they were prevented from carrying, which they had printed at the Government Bureau and would have put through until they were baulked by a Minister of Justice who had some energy and force.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, I would like to know what item we are on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. Now they have placed that on their programme and have let five months of the session pass before taking it up.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. Now will not the Finance Minister——

Mr. DEPUTY MINISTER. I think I will have to call an item so that we will be in order.

Resolution No. 266, page 82, Customs,

Mr. FOSTER. If the Finance Minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know in what I am out of order.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. gentleman require an answer?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not asking you.

Mr. TALBOT. The resolution was not read.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (reading):

Seven-eighths of $2,074,500 and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (reading):

Including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,705,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not carried and if hon. gentlemen will not keep quiet it will not be carried in a good while.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance characterized the resolution of this afternoon as a silly and unnecessary resolution

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say silly.

Mr. FOSTER. It is about tantamount to that.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not object to that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. But that resolution was given notice of by me and was on the order paper the first day of the session.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order. Is the speech that the hon. member is now making pertinent to the resolution before the chair?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that these are merely preliminary explanations.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance knows very well that those resolutions were, as I have stated, placed on the Order Paper at the very opening of the session. He knows also that it was expected that we would have the report of the Civil Service Commission by January 1, but that it was delayed, owing to the length of the excursion they took and the interesting objects they met in the course of that excursion, beyond the first of January. He knows that I gave as a reason; and it was a perfectly valid reason, that I was waiting for the report to be brought down before I discussed the resolution. He knows that the report was not brought down until probably two months after he had expected it and when that report was printed and placed before the House, we had reached a stage of the session where it was impossible for me to get at my resolution and he knows that I stated in the House that as it was impossible for me to reach it on that order I proposed to drop the order and would bring it up again at the first convenient opportunity when we were going into Supply. That I have done and I think that explanation is quite sufficient to make it impossible for a fair-minded man to taunt me with keeping that resolution back in order to bring it up at this late day for the purpose of obstructing the work of the government. If the Finance Minister will look back over the history of this session he will find that the government has been the chief obstructor. This opposition has a duty to perform in this House, it is its duty to examine into the way in which the finances are managed, it is its duty to examine into grievances and it has been doing that duty very effectively. There is not a single motion that the opposition has preferred before this House and has carried out in debate that has not been of great importance with reference to the well being of this country and to the way in which its affairs have been managed. It has been our duty to do this as well as our right. What did the Finance Minister and the First Minister do? They have put forward their obstructive power to prevent us from getting the information we needed. Have hon. gentlemen opposite forgotten how long they withstood the demand for the production of the original documents, a demand which was as fair and reasonable as any demand ever put before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. order.

Mr. FOSTER. They obstructed that and debated it for days and days.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. order.

Mr. FOSTER. Until at last they had to give way and we saw the original documents as we wished. So with reference to other parts of their legislation, especially with reference to this legislation; their Election Bill should have ben brought down in the early part of the session.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, I rise again——

Mr. FOSTER. At the very opening of this House and then this House——

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, if I understood your decision a minute ago the hon. gentleman was supposed to make preliminary remarks, and he has been going on, wandering all over the country——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood that certain explanations were being given on both sides of the House preliminary to the work going on. Of course the hon. gentleman will understand that these explanations must be limited.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to limit them, I am pretty close up to the limit now.

Mr. GALLIHER. I ask if the discussion since you have taken the chair has not all been out of order? You have read a resolution with regard to certain items and any controversy pertinent to those items is in order, but I submit that this discussion since you have taken the chair is not in order and I ask your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that we are in committee at present and such latitude has always been allowed with the consent of both sides that it is difficult to apply the rule. Strictly speaking, the vote before the House is this matter of Customs and of course anything else is irrelevant.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite true and I submit that at this late hour we should not be called upon to pass this large item, $2,000,000 for the customs service all over the country. The plea I have been trying to make is that as the government has delayed its legislation we should not be made to bear the brunt of their fault by their attempting to carry their estimates at an unreasonable hour. There is other legislation equally as important as the estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Customs and the First Minister and the Minister of Finance have it within their power to expedite matters.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. How ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell my hon. friend frankly: By letting us know what the government proposes to do with reference to their Election Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then we are to understand that unless we take up the Election Bill and make it to suit my hon. friend there will be no estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, we have discussed that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No this is the time to discuss it. The attitude of the hon. gentleman now is a very apposite commentary upon his whole conduct to-day and upon the attitude taken by the opposition. We have had speeches and resolutions to affirm that positions in no branch of the public service ought to be in the appointment of the government, but that all these appointments should be made by an independent body, and now that we have brought a Bill in which we offered as a compromise, that certain appointments made by the government should not be made by the government in future but should be made by judges ; in the face of that the hon. gentleman says: We will not give you supply unless you do what we want you to do. That is the object of the hon. gentleman; that is the attitude of the opposition, and the country will understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I be permitted to say that the statement just uttered by the Prime Minister is a complete misrepresentation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what respect ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In this respect, that the men who make the revision at the present time are the same judges that the Prime Minister says he proposes to appoint, and yet in the face of that he has stated to the House that the opposition are inconsistent in that they object to the appointment of men selected by judges. Either the Prime Minister must have forgotten his own proposal—his memory must be even shorter than usual—or else he was not frank with the House in his statement. I confess I don't understand him.

Mr. PATERSON. What you want about your Bill, or what you don't want about your Bill does not interest me just now; I want this money. The explanation is that there is an increase of $80,000 to provide increases of salaries for the officers and to appoint any new officers that may be found necessary. Hitherto the House has had a good deal of confidence—I must thank hon. gentlemen for it—in passing the Customs estimates. They have generally gone through in five or ten minutes and I do not think longer than that will be necessary to-night for the reason that they are based on what has been fully understood. The increase as hon. gentlemen see is very moderate. Last year we went into a general increase and I have a list of all to whom increases were given, but it is very long and I suppose I need not read it. There will be some deserving cases this year and we would like to have the money if it is decided we should grant them. There are continual demands on the Customs Department for new ports and officers are required at these ports. This is not all for the collection of revenue because we have had during the past year 15 or 20 men who do nothing in the way of collecting revenue but who are safeguarding the revenue. We have adopted a more stringent system of inspection and put on an additional staff at several points near the frontier. The only question to be considered is: Is $80,000 too much to grant for deserving additions to salaries and for providing for the extra work that will come upon the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the reason of the provision:

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. PATERSON. Office hours are from 8 to 6 and we have officers who meet trains coming in at night and have to be paid for their overtime. In old times the transportation companies paid this charge, but some years ago parliament decided to pay it out of the public funds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a matter which is very strongly criticised in the civil service report and that criticism I entirely concur in. If your Civil Service Act at present does not permit you to carry on the business of the country as it should be carried on why not amend it ? It is not advisable to have a provision in item after item declaring that it is in contravention of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. PATERSON. This has been going on for years and years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And unless it is stopped it will go on for ever.

Mr. BERGERON. It has been going on more than ever for the last ten years.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the Minister of Customs explain what is meant by this statement in the report of the Civil Service Commission:

> The chief positions in the outside service of this department are political appointments. Every collector of customs has been appointed from the ranks of the party in power at the moment.

Mr. PATERSON. When vacancies occur you have to fill them. My desire always is to fill them with competent men, men of character and men of ability. That I try my best to do.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What examinations?

Mr. PATERSON. Collectors of customs have not to pass the civil service examination.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The position of the Minister of Customs is that there is no use in Conservatives passing the examination because they would not get the appointment.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not say that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, the commissioners say as much.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know what the commissioners may say. I have the recommendations, but I do not know the parties personally, and I have to avail myself of the knowledge of those who do know them to assure myself that they are competent ; and if a man is competent for the position, the fact that he is a Liberal is not a barrier to his appointment.

Mr. BARR. Has there been a Conservative appointed since my hon. friend has been Minister of Customs ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think the officers have been largely drawn from the Liberal party.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that the commissioners distinctly state that almost all the appraisers in the outside service of this department, have been appointed without undergoing the civil service examination ; and yet the minister gave us to understand that they have undergone this examination.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not say that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the hon. minister then not think it would be wise for them to undergo some examination and be properly fitted to fill these positions ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I think it would.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The report distinctly says they do not.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, I do not agree with all that the report says. An appraiser does not undergo the civil service examination, but he has to undergo, under the authority of the Civil Service Act, a practical examination in the duties of his office. I do not care how literary a character a man may be, if he has not handled any dry goods, groceries, crockery, boots and shoes and other articles of merchandise, his knowledge, valuable as it would be in certain spheres, is not sufficient for an appraiser of goods. We have men of education and intelligence and also with a practical knowledge which enables them to know what line of goods come under a certain rate of duty, what item applies to them, and the character and value of the goods. That kind of an examination they undergo.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help reading a few more lines of this report and asking the Minister of Customs what he intends to do regarding these statements made by the Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. Write him a letter.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am afraid the minister would not read it. I wish to impress this upon him :

> The only suggestion the commissioners can make in regard to the outside service is to have the service absolutely divorced from political influence and have all the appointments put on a basis of merit.

These are strong assertions. I do not see how the Minister of Customs can get over them. He frankly admits that he only appoints Liberals.

Mr. EMMERSON. They were mostly all Conservatives.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My hon. friend would almost as lief appoint a Doukhobor on the railway as a Conservative, and perhaps rather. I think we are justified in asking the minister whether he intends to carry out the policy, in spite of the commissioners' report, that no men shall be appointed in the Customs Department, unless they are political partisans of his, and the commissioners distinctly state that the men are not fitted for the positions they are filling.

Mr. PATERSON. As I said before, I do not hold myself bound by all that the commissioners have said. They formed their opinions, and I think they did right to express them ; but I have my opinions too, and I think perhaps I know as much about the service, having been connected with it for ten years, as a gentleman who called up one or two of my officers and examined them. If my hon. friend reads that report, I think he will find that the testimony given to the commissioners was that on the whole the customs staff was a valuable body of men discharging their duties well.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the payment for overtime in addition to the ordinary pay of these officials, or is it deducted from their salaries ?

Mr. PATERSON. It supplements their regular statutory salary. Up to last year the rate was 25 cents an hour, but last year parliament gave me permission to raise it to 30 cents an hour. Where we require men to work overtime on Sundays, we pay them, and the amount is recouped to us by the transportation companies. Otherwise we pay them the extra amount.

Mr. DANIEL. Are many men affected by this regulation ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, a large number—in Montreal, in Halifax and in St. John.

Mr. BERGERON. These men must work many hours overtime, judging by the amounts they receive. A great many have advanced from $200 to $300. There is overtime like that to the extent of over $18,000. I cannot understand what overtime they do except on Sundays. Are the temporary employees, those who work on the wharfs in the summer—about $11,000 ? When are they employed and how long ?

Mr. PATERSON. There is overtime at the stations in winter but the most is in the summer.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand why a man under salary, when there is work to do, should not come back and do it. In commercial offices, if there is need for the clerks to go back after eight o'clock, they do so and are not paid overtime. This sort of expenditure used to be very much criticised by my hon. friend when in opposition but we have more of it now than ever.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total amount which goes for overtime ?

Mr. PATERSON. About $90,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that distributed?

Mr. PATERSON. It is distributed at Montreal, Quebec and the various other ports according as the work is done

Mr. FOSTER. How does the minister arrive at that $90,000 ?

Mr. PATERSON. The accountant makes up his estimates and he knows what was paid last year. He estimates whether the amount is likely to be increased. He cannot tell the exact amount. We may have occasion to appoint an extra officer during the year, which appointment could not be foreseen, and that might reduce a little the overtime at that particular port, but the estimate is fairly accurate.

Mr. FOSTER. What number of hours do these men work in their regular service?

Mr. PATERSON. Ten hours per day.

Mr. FOSTER. Who selects the men to do the overtime ?

Mr. PATERSON. The collectors at the different ports. Mr. White, collector at Montreal, apportions the men there. There is great desire among the men, who have small salaries, to share in the overtime, and Mr. White endeavours to divide it as fairly as he can. We have to trust to our collectors.

Mr. FOSTER. What supervision has the department over this matter of overtime ? Mr. White may be a very trustworthy collector but all collectors may not be the same. Here you have $90,000 voted by parliament, and that can be practically expended exactly as the collectors wish. In the first place is the overtime work necessary ? What check has the minister ? If necessary, what is the method on which the men are assigned to the work ? How does the minister satisfy himself that this $90,000 has to be expended ? If due diligence were used and if proper work were done within the hours, it would not be necessary.

Mr. PATERSON. The collector has to certify to the extra time.

Mr. FOSTER. But is the extra time necessary ? Is there any system of inspection or check ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it ?

Mr. PATERSON. We have a tide surveyor on the wharf at all hours of the night, and we have the surveyor of the port who will be up at night at all hours very often, and these have to certify, before the money is paid, that the work has been done. And the men get two hours and not more, as a rule, because we think that if a man works twelve hours that is enough. So, we do not allow him to work more than two hours overtime.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand the collectors make a demand for a certain amount for their ports, which amount is placed in their hands. They have to choose the persons who should do the overtime. But that is limited by the two hours maximum. I suppose it is possible that favour-itism may be shown. I am not saying that it is shown, but such a thing is possible. But what check has the minister to prove that the men have actually performed two hours overtime and have done their work faithfully ?

Mr. PATERSON. The only check we can possibly have—the certificates of the men who employ them.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the collector, but he is not there at all hours.

Mr. PATERSON. He has his subordinate officers.

Mr. FOSTER. But who certifies ?

Mr. PATERSON. The tide surveyor on the wharf, or the landing waiter at the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. What work do the overtime men do ?

Mr. PATERSON. For instance, wait at the station until a train comes in to examine the baggage of people who want to go through that night instead of putting the baggage in bond. This is a convenience to the railways, so much so that in days gone by they paid for it themselves. Ships coming in also want facilities for quick unloading. And goods have to be watched at night. Of course, there are night watchmen, and I suppose that the man who is up at night is not up in the day time. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will think it over, he will see that it is difficult to suggest any other plan than the one we have. We cannot send a man from here to look after it. If we have officers upon whom we cannot rely, we might be lost, but we have confidence in them. Nothing of that kind could go wrong in the port without our hearing it.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that John Jones and John Smith are detailed for overtime work at a railway station. Their regular hours end at what time ?

Mr. PATERSON. Six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. If a train is due at eleven o'clock, are these men detailed to go at that time and do two hours' work up to one o'clock ? Or do you arrange that every train and ship should come in at six o'clock.

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then how is it arranged ? Is a man detailed to go down at eleven o'clock and put in his two hours' work ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, if he did not start the two hours before.

Mr. FOSTER. That is pretty hard on the service, is it not ? A man must be roused from his rest at eleven o'clock to go down to do two hours' work. Or it may be that the train does not come in until one o'clock.

Mr. PATERSON. It is hard on them.

Mr. FOSTER. But is it not hard on the service ? When a man is engaged in extra work in this way, you can hardly expect him to be fresh for his regular ten hours' work next day. How does it work out in practice ?

Mr. PATERSON. It works out satisfactorily. The only other way would be to engage enough men to have a day staff and a night staff. Many of these men, if they had not overtime, would want their salaries increased, because they could not get on with the wages they have. So, not only would you have to pay the salaries of the larger staff, but you would have to pay these men more as well. Therefore, this is the most economical method. These men are not engaged in hard physical labour. They have to wait for an hour or two, perhaps, in order to do a half hour's work.

Mr. FOSTER. If the man waits there and is not called upon to do any work, does he get his time just the same ?

Mr. PATERSON. He does the work by being there. This to help trade and commerce. That it is a help is shown by the fact that the railways were willing to pay for it, but, instead of letting them pay, we pay it ourselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose a man goes down at eight o'clock and the train does not come in until ten, and after it comes in he does two hours' work. Is he paid for four hours?

Mr. PATERSON. No. He would be relieved by another man or the goods would go into bond.

Mr. FOSTER. But if he were not relieved he would get his pay?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, but the goods would probably go into bond after 12 o'clock at night.

Mr. FOSTER. From the minister's explanation it seems to be a very haphazard arrangement.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not see how it is more so than any other part of the system by which our $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 is collected.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as attending the trains is concerned, I should think you might embrace that in the daily duty of some officer, letting him begin his work in the day at a later hour. Of course, I can understand how he should have overtime if the train is late. But when you expect a train every day in the year at a stated hour, it is a matter almost of necessity to have some one there in order to transact the business of the customs. Now, why should we call that overtime?

Mr. PATERSON. We are working overtime now. They put in their ten hours and if they put in two hours more we pay them for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose a train comes in at 8 o'clock at night or 6 o'clock in the morning, and you know it is expected at that hour every day in the year, why is it necessary to deal with it as something unusual when you know that in the ordinary course it will come in at those hours?

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman would not advocate an officer having two hours of his time taken up without paying him?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not suggest anything of the kind.

Mr. PATERSON. A train arrives at 8 o'clock, we will suppose, in the morning at Winnipeg or Montreal. The cartage company start working at 7 o'clock in the morning; they want to get their goods, and we must have certain officers there. It is a piece of economy to pay certain officers overtime instead of having a regular staff for the purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you require the service of a man at 6 o'clock in the morning let him leave at a corresponding earlier hour in the afternoon, or if there is another train at 8 o'clock or 10 o'clock in the evening, let the man who has to deal with that begin his work at a later hour in the day.

Mr. PATERSON. What the hon. gentleman suggests can be done, but it can only be done by adding to the staff.

Mr. FOSTER. As the minister has shown us where $90,000 of this vote is to be found, what is the gross amount that is estimated for salaries?

Mr. PATERSON. It would be the balance of that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. No, there are other items. This brings out again the concealed nature of these votes and the impossibility of having any parliamentary control over them. You have here $1,750,000, and for anything that is contained in the direction of this vote you can spend a million of that on overtime, or half a million of it on contingent expenses, and you can call anything you like a contingent expense. Now, that kind of vote is the blindest, and that is the least responsible way of making up estimates. It gives the minister power that he ought not to have, because it puts the whole amount of money into his hands and he can appropriate just as much as he pleases to each of the three divisions. I would like to know what is the amount that the minister asks us to vote for salaries.

Mr. PATERSON. About $1,450,000.

Mr. FOSTER. And about how much for contingent expenses?

Mr. PATERSON. About $150,000. As a matter of fact, the expenditure for nine months for salaries to the 31st of October amounted to $940,895.

Mr. FOSTER. What was expended last year for salaries ?

Mr. PATERSON. Last year the expenditure was $1,601,000 for those three items.

Mr. FOSTER. That is exactly the demerit of this vote. It is a concealed vote, and I would like to have it definitely on 'Hansard' so that we may have something on which to bring the minister up.

Mr. PATERSON. For the nine months the salaries were $869,885.50 ; overtime, $60,636.35 ; and contingencies, $78,938.70.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the anticipated increase in overtime ?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot state definitely what portion of the $80,000 will be used but approximately it is estimated that we will require $50,000 for increased salaries and $30,000 for additional officers and increased expenditure on contingencies.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you divide that ?

Mr. PATERSON. We do not divide them, we cannot tell that until it is expended.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister should have his estimate.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think it is at all necessary. I am asking for the vote and it will be paid as it has been in the past.

Mr. FOSTER. The lack of definite estimate in these votes does not lead to economy of expenditure or to the clearness the House wants before giving money to the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. If I should give a definite estimate, say $10,000, it may not be correct. New lines of steamers may run to this country or new lines of railway enter and in that way the information given now might be misleading.

Mr. FOSTER. You have estimated for over time, salaries, and contingencies on the general run of your business in the past. All we want is that the minister should cut up his $80,000 into what would be required for each of these three divisions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is done in the estimates of other departments.

Mr. PATERSON. In the old times it used to be done for each province but if you ran short of your estimate for one province and had more than sufficient for another province you would not be allowed to take the overplus and a supplementary estimate had to be brought down for the province with respect to which there was a deficiency. We are one Dominion and it is the same service, and it is a far better plan to take the vote for the whole Dominion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not advocate any division by provinces. Why should not this huge item of nearly $3,000,000 be divided so that we might see how much goes for each service? I am opposed to supplementary estimates and for my part I would be prepared to give the minister a liberal allowance so that he would not be obliged at the end of the year to resort to a supplementary estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Customs must not go away with the idea that I want the old division by provinces. We are one Dominion and the vote is for the service of the Dominion, but there is no reason why it should not be divided so that we may see what goes for each service. Under the English system the estimates are submitted to the House with great minuteness of detail and explanations are even given in the estimates, which is much better than trying to get it by question and answer from an unwilling minister as appears to be at present the case. We have got so far that we are told that there is $50,000 for increases in salaries; is that a guess of the minister?

Mr. PATERSON. It is an estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not founded on making up your mind as to who ought have increases of salary.

Mr. PATERSON. That has not been considered yet. I have applications for, increases from various officers and I told them I had not money to pay their salaries to say nothing of giving them increases.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the minister asks $50,000 to increase the salaries of officers should he not lay before the House the grounds upon which he considers these officers are entitled to increases? Is parliament or is the minister to be the judge of that? If increases are asked for under the civil government appropriation we are told what officers are to get increases.

Mr. PATERSON. The Act provides for that.

Mr. FOSTER. The proper time to consider what officers you should increase is before you ask parliament for a vote for that purpose. It must be assumed that parliament will ask what officers are going to get increases of salaries and the minister should have that information. Will the minister tell us what collectors are to get increases?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister does not know he had better not ask for this appropriation.

Mr. PATERSON. If you don't give it to me all right.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all very well for the minister to say that, but we should have the information before we vote the money. The time for the minister to make up his mind as to what officers shall get an increase in salary is before he asks parliament for the money. The hon. minister had better take the trouble of getting the information for the committee before he asks it to vote. Why does he want this $50,000? Whose salaries is he going to increase? He does not know, but he wants to be the beneficent father and get the lump sum from parliament without giving the information as to what he wants it for, and then scatter it around as he pleases. It is parliament that should decide whether a man should have an increase or not.

Mr. PATERSON. How do you know whether a man should have an increase or not?

Mr. FOSTER. The government might as well come down at once and in a single line ask for $100,000,000 for the expenses of the government; that is the reductio ad absurdum of the hon. gentleman's position. The minister knows that that is not the proper way to put estimates before a committee. So I want to ask the minister again what he proposes to spend in extra overtime, what he proposes to expend in extra contingent expenses and what salaries he proposes to increase for this $25 increase with this $50,000, and what reasons he has giving any increases.

Mr. PATERSON. There was $150,000 odd voted last year for increases of salaries, and that was given without a word. The proper criticism would be, what did you do with the money voted last year? I have the list of payments here. The hon. gentleman asks me how much I propose to spend in overtime next year. I am asking for $10,000 more, but I do not propose to spend a cent of it if I can help it; but I may be compelled under our rule of paying thirty cents an hour to spend the whole of it, or perhaps only $6,000 or perhaps only $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister knows that he has to tell this committee what money he wants and the purpose for which he wants it. After having been entrusted last year with money on these conditions, it is his duty to answer our questions as to what he did with the moneys entrusted to him last year, and then we will compare the results with his promises. But before he gets this vote, I want him to tell us what he proposes to do with the increase we are giving him this year. If he is going to increase salaries, let us know whose salaries he intends to increase.

Mr. PATERSON. Ask that next year.

Mr. FOSTER. I want it this year, before he has expended the money. The minister is clearly up against it. Before he gets this vote, he has to tell this committee what he proposes to do with this money. Is the minister ready to tell us that?

Mr. PATERSON. I have told you what I have to say.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have not told us what we want to know. The minister has no more information?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I will let that simmer for a while. What are the different grades of officers and how much money is devoted to the salaries of each grade ?

Mr. PATERSON. You will find the officers in the Civil Service List.

Mr. FOSTER. What are your principal officers?

Mr. PATERSON. The principal officer in Montreal is Robert White. Under the Civil Service Act we have collectors, inspectors, surveyors, assistant surveyors, tide surveyors, chief landing waiters. Then there are technical officers. Then there are clerks in the customs office.

Mr. FOSTER. You have collectors first ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of this money goes to pay the collectors ?

Mr. PATERSON. The amount they are paid now.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is that ?

Mr. PATERSON. At the ports of Toronto, Montreal and I think Winnipeg they are paid $4,000 ; at Quebec and Halifax I think $3,200.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Is the minister going to take into consideration the services of the collector of customs at Charlottetown in a matter respecting the infringement of the Inland Revenue Act ? The charge was laid before him that a certain firm of tobacco manufacturers in Charlottetown had committed during 1907 infringements of the law with respect to the placing of stamps on the tobacco manufactured by them. The matter was represented to the officers of the Inland Revenue Department but they did not see fit to discharge their duty. Probably they did not know what it was or they may have believed that no infringement had taken place. The complainants consequently were compelled to go to to the collector of customs at Charlottetown, Mr. W. B. Robinson, a very worthy gentleman and a good officer. Mr. Robinson informed the commissioner of customs of the complaint made. Previous to Mr. Robinson's information to the department, some communications took place between the officers of the Inland Revenue Department at Charlottetown and the deputy head in Ottawa. At the request of the parties who were aggrieved, I moved for the papers and an order was voted on March 16, in consequence of which the papers were laid on the table. The case may be one the minister may not have heard of, although I know it was before his deputy commissioner and he referred it to the Inland Revenue Department. It is now I consider, my duty to lay it before the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue in order that they may see that justice is done the parties aggrieved and the public. The first communication is as follows :

Inland Revenue Division No. 1, Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island,

August 5, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that rumours of tobacco being sold 'out of packages' have reached this office. Kings county seems to be the habitat. I have requested Inspector Burke to come over sooner than usual, although he is due some time this month when we might make some arrangements to make seizures. In the meantime I have sent officer Moore to one or two places to investigate and have also instructed him on his collecting tours to visit shops where tobacco is sold and seize in every case illicitly exposed tobacco. I have made requisition to-day for forms.

Question—Is it necessary to remove tobacco seized. I mean to take possession.

I am your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) SAMUEL C. NASH,
Collector Inland Revenue.

This is the answer :

Ottawa, August 8, 1907.

S. C. Nash, Esq.,
Collector of Inland Revenue, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your communication of the 5th instant respecting the rumoured sale of unstamped tobacco within your division and requesting to be advised as to the necessity for taking possession of such tobacco in case of seizure.

In reply thereto I beg to state that if tobacco is so seized it becomes the property of the Crown and if the facts warrant its seizure they certainly necessitate taking possession of the goods seized.

In connection of the matter of seizure of tobacco, out of stamped packages, great care should be used by our officials to endeavour to ascertain if it is a case of fraud or of simple ignorance of the law. While it is true that the latter is no justification for the wrong-doing it is a factor that should have some weight with our officials.

In any case whether tobacco is so found or not our officer should explain to dealers visited the provisions of the law respecting the sale of tobacco and, if these dealers have not been supplied with circular G.—155, a copy thereof should be delivered to each person visited and should be mailed to persons who are not so personally called upon.

I remain, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Deputy Minister.

The next communication came from the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Charlottetown. It seems that although these reports were made to the officers of the Inland Revenue Department, no notice was taken of them with the exception of the letter I have just read. The parties aggrieved are the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, who were doing business in Charlottetown as manufacturers of tobacco. They were informed by their selling agent that tobacco was being sold throughout Prince Edward Island with only one-half stamp upon the packages.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Surely this discussion is not in order in connection with the salaries of customs officers.

Mr. FOSTER. Absolutely in order.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. These tobaccos were sold at lower prices than the ordinary manufacturer could sell them. The Hickey & Nicholson Manufacturing Company believed a fraud was committed, not only upon the public, but upon the government of Canada, and by reason of the fact that the company could not obtain the services of the Inland Revenue officials in order to ferret out the guilty parties they went to the collector of customs in Charlottetown.

But Mr. Nicholson thought he would not get justice at their hands and wrote this letter to Mr. Robertson.

Charlottetown, P.E.I.,
August 9, 1907.

W. B. Robertson, Esq.,
Collector of Customs.

Sir,—Our Mr. Harnett has drawn my attention to gross violations of the Excise and Customs Act and I have reported the same to other officers some time ago but up to the present no action has been taken or likely to. I therefore report same to you now and demand that you take immediate action and our Mr. Harnett will accompany you to the identical goods.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) HICKEY & NICHOLSON,
Tobacco Company, Ltd.
D. NICHOLSON.

Mr. Robertson, in pursuance of the information which he had received, went to Lower Montague and discovered irregularities with respect to some tobacco sold by the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley, and that fraud had been committed against the people and government of this country. He reported it to the Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I renew the point of order that I have already raised. All this has nothing to do with the customs and therefore is irrelevant. My hon friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) is reading from a return which he moved for with respect to certain violations of the excise law in Prince Edward Island. It has no connection with the customs, except that complaint was made to the collector of customs at Charlottetown.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there was a connection between the Inland Revenue and the Customs officer.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Complaint was made to the customs officer—but he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, he had.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He wrote two letters. But that has no connection with the item under discussion. It has to do with the Inland Revenue Department. And if, when my items are under discussion, the hon. gentleman desires explanations and cares to read the entire return in order to get it on 'Hansard' there will be no objection. In this case, action was taken and a fine was imposed.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. No fine was imposed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I submit that this has nothing to do with the item under discussion.

Mr. FOWLER. Speaking on the point of order—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. A point of order is not debatable in committee.

Mr. FOWLER. I regret to see these evidences of jealousy between the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Inland Revenue seems jealous of the fact that the officer of his department had nothing to do with it, but it was strange that he should manifest that feeling so openly in the House. This, however, is merely preliminary, and I believe that preliminary remarks have been held by the chairman to be in order. As to the point of order, I think that the Minister of Inland Revenue has answered himself, for he stated that action was taken by an official of the Customs department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I did not admit anything of the kind.

Mr. FOWLER. But the officer did act. Does the minister pretend to contradict a statement made in a report by this official? Surely he will not have—to use an expression of one of these hon. gentlemen this afternoon—the audacity to question the statement of the Mr. Robertson, the collector of customs, who is a reputable man, a man of irreproachable character.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My point is that it is not relevant.

Mr. FOWLER. But why not. The collector of customs was appealed to and acted.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. A point of order cannot be discussed in committee.

Mr. FOWLER. It must be discussed. How otherwise is the chairman going to know how to rule?

Mr. FOSTER. The salary of this same officer is included in this item.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes. And surely we have a right to discuss his salary. I appeal to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) on this point. I would not appeal to either the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) or the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) because they are interested and could hardly be expected to give a fair opinion. But I would like the Postmaster General to say whether, when the salary of this officer is under discussion, we have not the right to discuss what this officer did?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. There are two reasons why I asked for this to be discussed and why I consider I have the right to discuss it. The first reason is that Mr. Robertson, collector of customs, has done a great public service in exposing fraud in the Inland Revenue. In the second place, the commissioner of customs authorized Mr. Robertson to undertake this investigation, and I will read his letter:

August 7.

To the Collector of Customs,
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, respecting the irregular stamping of tobacco at your port. You may inquire into and report such irregularities as you find in the tobacco sent out by T. B. and D. J. Riley.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Commissioner of Customs.

Now here is the direct authority of the commissioner to Mr. Robertson, and surely I am within my rights in discussing this matter. I think that the minister should consider the smallness of his salary, and increase it. Here is the answer which Mr. Robertson returned after he had made his investigation:

Department of Customs, port of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

August 10, 1907.

Sir,—I beg to report that acting on the inclosed letter from the Hickey & Nicholson Company, Limited, I drove to Lower Montague, and called on the firm of W. A. Poole & Company, and while they have no tobacco on hand at the present moment irregularly stamped, I gleaned enough evidence from Mr. George Poole, a member of the firm, to satisfy me that things are not straight so far as the stamping of the tobacco sent out by the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley, of this city, are concerned, and I am confident that the circumstances are such as would justify a searching investigation and trust that all may meet with your honourable approval.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,

John McDougald, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Ontario.

Now Mr. Robertson went to the trouble of investigating this matter, and in order to impress upon the officials at Ottawa that his course was a proper one, he obtained declarations from the men who had knowledge of the irregularities complained of. The first declaration is marked 'A' and is as follows:

I, Donald Nicholson, of Charlottetown, a member of the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, do hereby declare that during the early spring I called Officer Theop. Moore's attention to the fact that insufficiently stamped tobacco was sold throughout the country, and he promised me to keep a sharp lookout for it.

About the last of July, on his return from Souris, I inquired if he had discovered any such tobacco, and he replied that 'he saw more than he wanted to see.' Viz., 3 caddies of Riley tobacco at Messrs. Mathew & McLeans' and had ordered the clerk to lay them aside as he might require them. He then accompanied me to Mr. Nash and we fully discussed the matter and Mr. Nash agreed to send for the inspector.

Mr. EMMERSON. I rise to a point of order. I do not think it is within the rules of this House that you can take up a return that has been laid upon the table of the House and have it transcribed in the 'Hansard.' The hon. member is doing that now.

Mr. FOSTER. What rule of the House forbids it?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is a rule of procedure.

Mr. LENNOX. We will discuss the rule of order for a day or two.

Mr. EMMERSON. For several weeks, if you like. I want the point of order determined, and I ask the chairman's ruling.

Mr. FOWLER. I suggest that there is no such rule as the hon. gentleman refers to, this is a figment of the hon. gentleman's imagination.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a well understood rule of parliament.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a rule of the New Brunswick legislature. The hon. gentleman forgets that he is in the House of Commons and not in the New Brunswick legislature.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (reading):

On August 7 our salesman, Mr. Harnett, telephoned me from Georgetown that Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company, Lower Montague, had such tobacco on hand and suggested that I see the Inland Revenue officer at once, and I informed Mr. Moore of it on that date. Mr. Harnett returned home on the 8th, and on the 9th he and I called on Mr. Nash urging that they take immediate action and offering to drive the officer to where it was sold, but Mr. Moore being out of town and Mr. Nash, who treated the matter somewhat lightly, was too busy, so we called on the collector of customs and demanded that he take immediate action. On Mr. Harnett's agreeing to accompany him they left on the morning of the 10th for Lower Montague.

Inspector Burke arrived here on the 12th, and on the 14th sent for me, after a short interview we parted and he, I am told, left for home on the 15th, and so far we have not heard if anything has been done.

(Sgd.) DONALD NICHOLSON,
President of Company.

Signed and declared before me at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, this 22nd day of August, A.D. 1907.

(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

Mr. Burke who is referred to in this declaration is the inspector of Inland Revenue for the maritime provinces, I am told, and has jurisdiction over the officers in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EMMERSON. Has he jurisdiction over customs?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. No, inland revenue. I want to show that if the Inland Revenue Department neglects their duty we have a good man in Mr. Robertson who did not fail in his duty and did this because he thought it was his duty as collector of customs, and he was instructed to do it by the customs inspector.

Mr. TALBOT. I press the point of order which has been raised in connection with this item. It is somewhat mixed up between the Customs Department and the Inland Revenue Department, and so far we have heard nothing that would make us believe that the Customs Department is interested in the question.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Robertson, the collector of customs at Charlottetown, P.E.I., was acting under instructions from the commissioner of customs.

Mr. TALBOT. He has nothing to do with the Customs Department.

Mr. FOWLER. He was acting under written instructions from the commissioner at Ottawa.

Mr. D. ROSS. As I understand the member for Prince Edward Island moved for a return in connection with some matters relating to the Department of Inland Revenue. He is spreading that return on 'Hansard.' There are really two points of order, first, whether the reading of this return is relevant to the discussion, and, second, whether the return can be put on 'Hansard' in that surreptitious way.

Mr. FOSTER. Returns are asked and brought down in order to give an opportunity to a member of discussing the subject matter of the return. I do not think that point of order can be seriously raised.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The collector of customs was notified that there was a violation of the excise law and the customs law, but it was found there was no violation of the customs law whatever. The Collector of Customs at Charlottetown communicated with the Commissioner of Customs and some correspondence between them ensued. However, the question referred absolutely to the Inland Revenue and the Commissioner of Customs could not and did not give any instructions in respect to the Inland Revenue Department. When the matter got into the hands of the inland revenue officers Inspector Burke went to the island and investigated and one of the manufacturers of tobacco was fined I think $200 for a violation of the excise law and then the matter ended. It is entirely an inland revenue matter and I submit it is out of order to discuss it on a vote for the Customs Department. Apparently the discussion is going on now only for the purpose of killing time.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister omitted to state the most important feature and that is that the Collector of Customs issued instructions in writing which I submit makes it relevant to this discussion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would like to deal with the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I want to discuss the point of order. The Minister of Inland Revenue will find that the officers of the customs have something to do with the inland revenue.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not in this case.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. It was the duty of the Collector of Customs to collect the duty on imported leaf and not to allow any infringement of the law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. gentleman is in error. The 10 cents a pound on the imported leaf is paid to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Any child knows that that imported leaf has to be entered in the customs. Here is a declaration which was sent by the Collector of Customs at Charlottetown to the Commissioner of Customs and I have a right to read it.

Mr. PATERSON. Did the Collector of Customs ask you to bring this matter up ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. He did not.

Mr. PATERSON. How is the hon. gentleman concerned in this matter?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. As a representative of the people the same as you are when you do your duty.

Mr. PATERSON. You brought this up on the pretense that you are trying to right a wrong that is being done to an officer when the fact is that the real object is to attempt to prevent the customs officers of his country getting their wages paid, and that attempt is made under the leadership of the member for North Toronto seconded by the member for Beauharnois and advocated by the member for Kings and Albert and the member for Queens, P.E.I. It is well to know just who is determined to keep these men from getting their wages paid.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The minister is altogether astray. I came here in November last and from that day to this the government have never brought the customs estimates before the House. They have delayed the business of the country for some reason which nobody on this side of the House knows.

Mr. TAYLOR. We are bringing it up now and now is the accepted time.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. And I am bringing this matter up now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I ask the ruling of the chair on the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that extracts may be read from any public document or newspapers or books but the reading of the whole document is not permitted. Of course it must be relevant.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I shall not read the whole of the documents. I wish to read this affidavit which shows the number of places where the goods were found which had been irregularly and illegally stocked :

I, Evelyn B. Harnett, a member of the firm of Hickey and Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, acting as travelling salesman for the Lower provinces do hereby solemnly affirm that I examined tobacco sent out by the firm of Mrssrs. T. B. and D. J. Riley, of Charlottetown on the dates and at the places mentioned below, and found it insufficiently stamped and noted same in my memorandum book viz.:

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Now, Mr. chairman, I think we have heard enough of this affidavit to clearly convince the House that it is not relevant to the question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What the hon. gentleman is reading, I think, relates to inland revenue and not to customs.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. This is in a letter which was addressed to the Commissioner of Customs at Ottawa, by the collector of customs at Charlottetown, and it relates to duties which he performed at the request of the Minister of Customs.

July 24, Stern, Son & Co., Souris, 2 caddies with ½ stamps on.

July 24, J. J. Hughes, Souris, 2 caddies with ½ stamps on.

About May 15, last I met Mr. Moore of the Inland Revenue Department at our factory and in the presence of Mr. D. Nicholson informed him that I had seen insufficiently stamped tobacco and urged them to look into the matter.

On August 7, I visited Lower Montague, and found at the store of Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company, 5 caddies of Riley's tobacco, 1 full stamped, 3 half stamped and one without stamps and I reported this to Mr. Nicholson by telephone from Georgetown and suggested that he see the inland revenue officer at once. I returned to Charlottetown on the evening of the 8th instant, and on the 9th I called on Mr. Nash to discuss the matter, and as he treated it so lightly, I in company with Mr. Nicholson called on the collector of customs and I demanded that he give it immediate attention, and I volunteered to where it was exposed for sale. On the 10th the collector and I drove to Lower Montague and called on Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company and was told that George Riley, of Charlottetown, a brother to T. W. Riley and father to D. J. Riley, drove to their store on the 8th of August and of his own free will and without being requested by W. A. Poole took possession and carried away two caddies without stamps, promising to return fresh stock instead, and left one caddie with half stamps on partly used on the shelf.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is this in order Mr. Chairmaan ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not hear the reading of the letter from the collector. I have some doubts whether this is relevant or not and I suppose the hon. gentleman should have the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. R. R. McLEAN (reading) :

On the 9th Mr. Moore who was out collecting samples of food called at Messrs. Poole's store and inquired if Mr. Riley had been there lately, and when told he was there on the 8th he looked over the stock of tobacco on hand. One caddie with stamps and one with half stamps partly used on the shelf, which was opened in the end, he, Mr. Moore, took the hatchet and opened it on the side remarking that was the proper way to open it, and after the collector held a conversation with Mr. Poole, one of the firm, we returned to town.

On the evening of the 13th I, in company with Robert W. D. M. Rattery, foreman of one factory, called on Inspector Burke at the Queen's Hotel, and after discussing the matter Mr. Burke informed us that he had no idea of the seriousness of the offence and promised to see Mr. Nicholson in the morning. Mr. Burke returned home on the morning of the 15th and so far as I am aware nothing has been done.

(Sgd.) EVELYN B. HARNETT.

Signed and declared before me at Charlottetown, in Prince Edward Island, this the 22nd day of August, A.D. 1907.

(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

September 18, 1907.

R. R. Farrow, Esq.,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 16th instant transmitting for the perusal of this department, customs file No. 69548 respecting the alleged improper manner of stamping of packages of tobacco by a manufacturer in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. I thank you for bringing this matter under the notice of this department.

Copies have been made of the correspondence and the case will be referred to the proper officer for investigation. Your file is returned herewith.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Deputy Minister.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. You have already heard Mr. Chairman all the correspondence from the collector of customs at Charlottetown, the commissioner and assistant commissioner up to the time that correspondence was transferred to the Inland Revenue Department. The letter last read my hon. friend said was written by the Deputy Minister of Customs. He meant to say the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, written to the assistant commissioner of Customs. He is now proceeding to real a letter written by the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue to Mr. Lawlor, of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. This is part of the whole case.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The papers have been transferred to the Inland Revenue Department, where they should always have been. This is not a matter which effects the Customs estimates. It will come up properly on the Inland Revenue estimates.

Mr. A. A. MACLEAN. The Minister of Inland Revenue is altogether astray. He has forgotten what is on this file. There are not only letters there from his own department but letters from Customs officials which I will read :

September 23, 1907.

H. Lawlor, Esq.,
Inspector of Tobacco Factories, Inland Revenue, Montreal, Quebec.

Sir,—I beg to forward herewith copies of correspondence transmitted to this department by the Customs, representing irregularities in connection with the stamping of packages of tobacco.

This question should receive immediate attention and if you are, at the present time, unable to go east, would it not be well to place the papers in the hands of Deputy Collector Caven, who is thoroughly conversant with tobacco factory work, and allow him to investigate the report.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Deputy Minister.

Department of Customs,

Ottawa, September 16, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa.

Sir,—I send you the above noted file for perusal re stamping of tobacco sent out by T. B. & D. J. Riley, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. R. FARROW,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs.

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
September 23, 1907.

T. Burke, Esq.,
St. John, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—I am forwarding you my contingent, incluing Officer Moore's account for the past year, in all $49.80.

I think your motion in sending Officer Fitzpatrick (a gentleman, officially and civilly) an exceedingly wise one; and I am quite positive that the educative work he has executed, in all the places of business, in town and country, and they are many that he has visited, will be of real and lasting benefit to the department and result in making matters go with less friction even than heretofore. There is no doubt that a strange officer whose official knowledge like Mr. Fitzpatrick's is thorough, added to his pleasant manner, has greater effect on dealers than the duties of a home officer, however well meant.

Hoping you are well,

I am yours truly,
(Sgd.) SAMUEL C. NASH.

Inland Revenue Inspection, Canada.
District A, N.B., N.S., and P.E.I.,
St. John, N.B., October 2, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—In view of rumours I heard when in Charlottetown in August last with reference to tobacco stamping, &c., I decided to send Officer Fitzpatrick over to make a thorough investigation I beg to inclose herewith his report, also Collector Nash's letter to me re his visit.

Preventive Officer Kelly went over the ground years ago at the request of the late Inspector Borradaille and the local officer Mr. Moore has been frequently over the territory.

Mr. Fitzpatrick being thoroughly up in the business and absolutely unknown on the island was my reason for entrusting him with the case.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) T. BURKE, D.J.

The next letter is from Mr. Fitzpatrick to Mr. Blake, the report he made after leaving St. John :

Inland Revenue, Canada, Division No. 6,
St. John.
St. John, N.B., October 2, 1907.

T. Burke, Esq.,
District Inspector of Inland Revenue,
St. John, N.B.

Sir,—In compliance with your instructions to proceed to Prince Edward Island and see how the requirements of the law and of G—155 were being observed as to the stamping and opening of packages of tobacco and cigars, &c.'

I beg leave to report that I left St. John, N.B., at noon on Thursday, September 12, and proceeded to Charlottetown. Next day I called on Collector Nash and Deputy Collector Moore who advised me how best to carry out your orders. I travelled over the whole island from Charlottetown east to Souris and Georgetown, and west to Summerside and Tignish. In all I visited 19 towns as follows: Charlottetown, Mount Stewart, Morrell's, St. Peter's Bay, Souris, Souris West, Cardigan, Georgetown, Montague, Lower Montague, Hunter river, Bradalbane, Emerald Junction, Kensington, Malpeque, Summerside, O'Leary, Alberton, Tignish.

I called on 129 dealers, wholesale and retail, and did not find a single instance where I felt that I would be justified in making a seizure. I found several cases of tobacco out of boxes and of boxes improperly opened but in all cases satisfactory explanations were made. I explained the law, also the provisions of G—715, to the dealers and endeavoured to make clear what was required of them.

At the store of P. McNutt & Sons, Malpeque, I found a box of Empire Company's Tobacco (unopened) from which the corner bearing the stamp was missing and reported same to Mr. Collector Nash. Deputy Collector Moore stated that he had found the same package and was satisfied that the damage was done in opening the crate in which the tobacco was shipped and I fully agree with Mr. Moore in his finding. This was the only case where I found the stamp missing and I examined wherever possible the wholesale as well as the retail stocks of dealers.

At Souris I felt suspicious of a Frenchman named Chiasson whose place of business is a rendezvous for fishermen. Chiasson had considerable twist and other tobaccos out of boxes and claimed not to know the law. I reported the matter of the collector at Charlottetown. In the evening I drove over to Souris West to the store of Thomas Kickham who I am told has considerable dealings with St. Pierre and Miquelon. I found that he had tobacco out of boxes and used this as an excuse to get up stairs in the warehouse to show the clerk how to open packages and incidentally see if there was anything irregular. I did not find anything wrong and left a copy of the regulations. Mr. Moore will give both these people particular attention on his next visit.

After making a very thorough and careful survey of the island I can only report that outside of these little irregularities to be found in every place in Canada, the law is well observed particularly in Charlottetown, and in the places visited by Mr. Moore on his food inspection trips.

Collector Nash and Deputy Moore were very kind in giving information as to routes and best places to visit. Trusting that my work has been satisfactorily performed and that a better compliance with the law and regulations will result therefrom.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. J. FITZPATRICK,
Excise officer.

Now, section 136 of the Inland Revenue Act requires——

Mr. TALBOT. I appeal to you again, Mr. Chairman, is this in order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion of an infraction of the Inland Revenue law could not be allowed, as it would not be relevant. But any thing connected with the customs would probably be on a different footing.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. But the papers were sent to the Customs.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That would not make a discussion of an infraction of the Inland Revenue Act relevant in this discussion.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. But they sent Mr. Fitzpatrick over at the request of the Commissioner of Customs. Mr. Robertson was not enough, so the Inland Revenue Department sent over Mr. Caven. who went into the matter carefully, and he found out the report sent by Mr. Robertson to the Department of Customs was strictly correct. He did his duty.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This question has been gone over with sufficient latitude surely.

Mr. TAYLOR. This man was sent by the customs officer and he was paid by the Customs.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This can be discussed under an Inland Revenue vote but not under a Customs vote.

Mr. A. A. McCLEAN. The next proceeding was a voluntary payment by D. J. Riley to the Department of Inland Revenue of the sum of $200, which this department evidently accepted in full satisfaction. The document signed by Mr. D. J. Riley reads as follows :

I hereby abandon the sum of $200 deposited with Mr. S. C. Nash, Collector of Inland Revenue, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. This abandonment is made under Section 136 of the Inland Revenue Act.

(Sgd.) D. J. RILEY.

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
October 10, 1907.

Then Mr. Farrow, the Assistant Commissioner of Customs. writes to Mr. Robertson on the 10th of January, 1908 :

Sir,—On September 18 last, we transmitted to the Deputy Minister of the Department of Inland Revenue here your letter of August 22 last with declarations referred to therein, respecting the irregular stamping of tobacco by a manufacturer in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

The Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue sent to this department on the 7th instant the inclosed cheque No. 1859 for the sum of $50 being share in distribution of penalties imposed for violation of the Inland Revenue Act under the information contained in your reference to this department.

He requests this department to be good enough to procure receipts for this payment and forward the same to him.

Will you therefore be good enough to send us a receipt for this payment at your early convenience in order that the same may be transmitted to the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. R. FARROW,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs.

Inclosed cheque.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is persistently refusing to obey the ruling of the chair, and he is deliberately putting everything in that return on the 'Hansard,' and if you permit him to go on he will have the remaining pages on the 'Hansard.'

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I do not think the chairman ever made such a ruling. When I read letters from the Assistant Commissioner of Customs to the collector of customs surely I am within my rights. Then on the 16th of January, Mr. Robertson answered that letter in this way :

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
January 16, 1908.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge yours of the 10th instant, under file 69548, with stated inclosure, which I return herewith for endorsement.

As it is not clear to me who is entitled to participate, and as you have the correspondence, kindly say what receipts are necessary.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient sevant,
(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

R. R. Farrow, Esq.,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Ontario.

On the 21st of January, Mr. Robertson received this answer from the Assistant Commissioner of Customs :

Ottawa, January 21, 1908.

W. B. Robertson, Esq.,
Collector of Customs, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant returning cheque No. 1859 of the Department of Inland Revenue for the sum of $50, as you state it is not clear to you to whom this money should be paid. It appears to me from the correspondence in this case that the original information upon which the investigation was based respecting the irregular stamping of tobacco was given by Mr. Harnett, a traveller for the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited. Such being the case I am of the opinion that the amount should be paid to Mr. Harnett, and if you concur in this you will be good enough to so dispose of the money and forward Mr. Harnett's receipt for the same to this department for transmission to the Department of Inland Revenue.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. R. FARROW,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. Harnett was offered the sum of $50 mentioned in the correspondence and promptly refused to accept the same, as he believed the aceptance of the sum of $200 by the department was wrong and an inadequate punishment for the offence committed.

I bring this before the minister to show him that there is an officer in Charlottetown who knew how to do his duty and who taught the officers in the Inland Revenue Department how they should do their duty.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Just to have it on record, let it be known that the hon. member (Mr. A. A. McLean) has wasted two hours in an effort to prevent the salary of this man being voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want an explanation of this payment of $18,647 for overtime at Montreal. For the year that would be $24,000 for overtime. Would it not be better to hire more men and not have this overtime ? For instance, Mr. V. Balthazard received $299 for overtime.

Mr. PATERSON. He must have put in the time.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister misled the House for if this man had worked 365 days at 30 cents an hour for two hours a day, it would only be $219.

Mr. PATERSON. I am informed that in summer time they are allowed to work five hours if necessary during the rush.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister's statement is not correct.

Mr. PATERSON. It is, two hours is the rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then E. Bernard drew $235, J. B. Birks $253, L. Bryan $338 and there are a score of others.

Mr. PATERSON. We satisfied the Auditor General, it has passed him with the vouchers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The people's money is being simply spilled out in payment of this overtime.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a poor show for them this year.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not the fault of the opposition, why did you not bring down your estimates six months ago ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Why don't you vote them now ?

Mr. TAYLOR. They will not go through now. Let the government withdraw clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill and they will get their estimates in a very few minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Finance said the opposition had no rights in this House except such as the majority choose to give them. They have the right to remedy grievances on going into Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. They get that from the majority under the rules of the House which are made by the majority.

Mr. TAYLOR. We showed them what we could do by holding them here from Thursday night until Saturday night.

Mr. FIELDING. You can hold us here but that does not alter the facts.

Mr. TAYLOR. After the negotiations and promises made in reference to the Election Bill, I am surprised at the government trying to force their estimates through when every one thought the difficulty was settled. If the government is going to go back on it then we will stay here, as our leader said, until we are thinner than a pipe stem before we let the Election Bill through.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman says the estimates will go through in two minutes if we do something else, which indicates that the estimates are all right in themselves and so any questions that are asked wehther they are pertinent or impertinent are asked to cause obstruction and to waste the time of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The opposition have a right to withhold Supply until their grievance is remedied. The opposition are not going to let this government inflict an unsecret ballot on the people so that they can buy up the whole country. They will not be allowed to put that nefarious Bill through parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. What has that got to do with starving the civil servants?

Mr. TAYLOR. Tell us you will withdraw that Bill and the civil servants will get their pay immediately.

Mr. PATERSON. But you say these estimates are all right.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are all wrong. We will vote enough to pay the civil servants. We will give them a month's salary or two months' salary.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend probably knows that we made an application some days ago, not in a public way but in a way that was well understood, for a grant of money to pay the civil servants and an intimation was given to us that hon. gentleman opposite would not facilitate that grant. When my hon. friend now says that the opposition will pay a month's salary I say they had a chance to do it some few days ago and they refused.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not correct; you don't know what took place or you would not make that statement.

Mr. FIELDING I know very well.

Mr. TAYLOR. We were quite prepared to do that and we understood the bargain was practically closed.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Talk about the election Bill when you come to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have come to it several times. Bring on the Bill now and we will discuss it.

Mr. PATERSON. In the meantime we want to pay the civil servants.

Mr. TAYLOR. The opposition have rights and they will maintain them.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Have you a right to keep these people out of their money?

Mr. FOSTER. The government is doing that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Say you will drop clauses 1 and 17 and you will get your vote, or, dissolve the House and go to the country whichever you like. We are prepared to meet you any place.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has many times talked about dissolving the House and going to the country, and when we did go to the country and came back we found the hon. gentleman still doing business at the same old stand on the opposition side of the House. We have no reason to doubt that will be the result when the time comes again. Meantime let there be no misunderstanding. We are not discussing the election Bill; we are discussing the question of giving these customs officers their money. The hon. gentleman says the opposition have rights; yes, they have the right to obstruct and they are exercising that right but we want the country to know that. They are not content with criticising the government, they are not content with punishing the government if they like to call it that; they want to punish the men throughout the length and breadth of Canada who need this money and hon. gentlemen opposite refuse to give it to them. The opposition are not punishing the government; they are punishing the custom officers who want their money and cannot get it because of the opposition, and we would like the country to understand that.

Mr. TAYLOR. If my hon. friend were out in the country he would understand that the feeling is that clauses 1 and 17 of that Bill should not be allowed to pass. That is the feeling of both the Liberals and Conservatives in the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Vote against the Bill when the time comes.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Prime Minister said his only recourse would be dissolution and we welcome dissolution.

Mr. FIELDING. We may have to come to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we are ready for you.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend does not act as if he were ready.

Mr. TAYLOR. In what way?

Mr. FIELDING. Because for six months of this session hon. gentlemen opposite have been obstructing public business so that they might prevent an election during the current year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Don't you think we are right in not letting you go to the country with loaded dice?

Mr. FIELDING. Now you don't want us to go to the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. We won't let you go to the country with an unsecret ballot and power to enfranchise Doukhobors and Galicians.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is good stuff in the Northwest.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, the Northwest was here a few days ago.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Mr. Bob Rogers.

Mr. TAYLOR. Ask the Prime Minister what he heard from the Northwest and the arrangement he made with the Northwest, and in view of that why are we here at 4 o'clock in the morning kept by the government with their large majority trying to force estimates through?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. We will just have as big a majority after the dissolution and a bigger majority.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is nothing so uncertain as a horse race and an election, and when the election is over my hon. friend will find he has come out second best.

Mr. EMMERSON. Don't boast.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not boasting. I said we are ready for dissolution and so we are. I want an explanation of what these individual men did for this money.

Mr. PATERSON. That you will not get, because I cannot give it to you.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have no right to give the minister the money he wants for next year unless we get an explanation of what he did last year.

Mr. PATERSON. You said the estimates were all right. Then pass them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Withdraw clauses 1 and 17 and we will give you a Supply immediately.

Mr. FIELDING. Still harping on my daughter. We are not discussing that.

Mr. PATERSON. The money is due now. These men have rendered the service and I am not going to be a party to keep them out of their money.

Mr. TAYLOR. If there is any one to blame it is the government who have not provided the money for them two or three months ago. You have trotted out other estimates and held back the estimates of the Minister of Customs. If the hon. gentleman had asked for pay for his staff he could have got it. The government held back the estimates of the Minister of Customs and are now raising the cry that the opposition are to blame.

Mr. FIELDING. You can take that cry away from us by voting them right away.

Mr. LENNOX. I am a little surprised at the Minister of Finance announcing to the House a few minutes ago something not before stated in parliament, namely that there were some negotiations for a certain amount to be voted. I do not understand how he can justify that statement. I understood that any negotiations that took place between leaders were a matter of confidence.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no confidence in that.

Mr. LENNOX. We had better understand where we are in that matter. I understand that there have been negotiations. Is the Minister of Finance going to take the position that part of these negotiations are to be confidential and part of them not confidential ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Chairman, is the discussion of negotiations of this kind pertinent to the question?

Mr. LENNOX. Perfectly, because the Minister of Finance raised the question a few minutes ago.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I raise the point of order whether this discussion is pertinent to the subject-matter before the House.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Finance raised the question a few minutes ago and I propose to reply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member knows what is before the Chair. It is the salaries of customs officers.

Mr. LENNOX. But the Minister of Finance said that negotiations were going on for the purpose of getting a portion of the supplies, and that that was refused, and I am saying that no negotiations of a confidential character could possibly be carried on between the leaders of the parties, or between the Minister of Finance and the leader of the opposition, if the Minister of Finance is to be the judge of how much of that is to be divulged and how much kept back. I know as a matter of fact that negotiations have taken place between the leaders, and when some hon. gentlemen called out a few minutes ago that Mr. Robert Rogers was down here, I happened to know that Mr. Roblin was also down here, and that—and there is no secret about that part of it—negotiations took place between the leader of the government and Mr. Roblin, and I know too——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LENNOX. I know too that a week ago Mr. Roblin went home on the understanding, as was announced in the public press, and not denied——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is wandering away from the question of the salaries of customs officers.

Mr. LENNOX—that this objectionable Bill would be withdrawn. Now, if this objectionable Bill had been withdrawn——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the point of order is insisted on, I shall have to rule that the only question before the Chair is the salaries of customs officers.

Mr. LENNOX. Very good. I was dealing a moment ago with the question of Supply. I propose now to deal still further with that question. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was calling attention to this question of overtime. I have very great respect for the Minister of Customs, and I am very sorry that the circumstances do not permit us, without more explanation, to grant him this Supply. I notice that he stated very definitely, and I have great faith in him when he makes a statement—that as a matter of policy the department thought it advisable to employ men and give them extra time rather than employ an additional staff; and the point was raised on this side of the House whether or not that was detrimental to the service, because it entailed more work on these men than they could adequately perform, thus leaving them less efficient for the services they have to perform during the regular hours. The Minister of Customs, answering that, said yes, but we do not employ these people to that extent. We limit the extra service to two hours a day, so that that evil does not arise. What are we to understand if we go on the basis of the assurance of the minister that only two hours of extra service are permitted, and we find after hours of discussion that that statement is absolutely erroneous, that instead of the service being confined to two hours it is actually unlimited, and instead of their performing a total of twelve hours at the most in the heat of summer, in the most exhausting time, fifteen hours of service is exacted from these men? The minister says these men may have worked all Sunday and every Sunday in the year besides two hours extra on every working day of ten hours.

Mr. PATERSON. What does the Auditor General give as the largest amount paid any one man?

Mr. LENNOX. What I am concerned with is the minister just now. He allowed two hours per day and added ten hours per Sunday which would give twelve hours to each man.

Mr. PATERSON. That would come to $399. Have we paid any one that?

Mr. LENNOX. We will see that presently. I find a number of men in the Montreal item who were paid very close to that. A man named Cooney was paid $398. Other men are paid $300 and $385. T. J. Cooney was paid $389.75 or within 25 cents of the amount the minister gave as an impossible amount.

Mr. PATERSON. He must have worked more than the two hours. All these parties have vouchers. There is no man works every Sunday and holiday but in the summer when at the docks the men are allowed to exceed two hours at a time.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister shifts his ground. He started off with the proposition that these men were allowed to work two hours daily overtime. Then he said they were allowed to work as much as five hours extra time. Then when he found he could not sustain that view, he shifted again and said they worked two extra hours for every working day and all day Sunday. Am I right in saying that these are extra payments? But a large amount paid to these men for extra work is what is paid them for ordinary work. If the minister is right, the rule is that a man is allowed to work two hours extra but two only. Then, we should not expect, when we look at the items of pay for overwork to find that, as a rule, the payments are much more than one-fifth the ordinary wages. But, as a matter of fact, many of these men are earning in overtime one-half what they earn in ordinary wages. For instance, take Mr. Jackson, of Rainy River. Now, Rainy River is not a seaport, is it?

Mr. PATERSON. I have not heard that the Atlantic has got that far yet.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Jackson makes $244 overtime. If he were working the two hours extra every day, as explained by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) he would make $219. As a matter of fact he earns $224 for extra time, almost half as much for extra time as he earns for salary, his salary being $525. Then we have Mr. McGregor, at Rainy River, with a salary of $438.35 and overtime of $208.50. We have Mr. Clark, of Point Edward,—which is not a seaport—with a salary of $525 and overtime of $249. At Abercorn, there is Mr. O'Brien with a salary of $375 and overtime of $224. Does not the minister think it rather remarkable that a man will go idle on ordinary time and then work nights and Sundays to make up the extra $224.

Mr. FOWLER. At two hours a day overtime, and receive $224? That looks like a fraud.

Mr. LENNOX. If it were any department but that of the Minister of Customs, I would think it might be a fraud, but, as it is the department of the Minister of Customs, it looks like a blunder.

Mr. PATERSON. But you won't let me have the money to pay the men even their regular wages.

Mr. LENNOX. You shall have the money if you wait long enough. You should have begun sooner.

Mr. FIELDING. We did; we got money on account.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, but you did not acknowledge our reasonable rights. You did not ask us to give you more.

Mr. FIELDING. We ask you now.

Mr. LENNOX. But the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not here.

Mr. FIELDING. He is well represented.

Mr. LENNOX. I really think we must go on with the discussion of this important matter until we finish it or reach some conclusion. I come to the case of Mr Sanders, of Athelstane. That is not a seaport?

Mr. PATERSON. No, but it is a manifesting port where an American railway comes in.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope the minister will not revise his argument. He said that this was confined to seaports.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood the minister to say, definitely, positively, absolutely and for the last time that only at the seaports did men work for more than two hours extra.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No, no, tut, tut!

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Duncan Ross) may have been sleeping—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. There are dozens of international ports where railways cross every Sunday and the customs officers have to work overtime. Everybody except the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) knows that.

Mr. LENNOX. But if there were one hundred thousand such points that would not affect the question. The minister said that this was confined to the seaports.

Mr. PATERSON. I said that at the seaports they were allowed to get five hours in the summer time.

Mr. LENNOX. I am ready to take the minister's explanation, if he will make it clear. I asked the minister as to this two hours overtime running into five hours. And he mentioned that that was confined to the seaports.

Mr. PATERSON. I understand that.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, the member for Yale-Cariboo being answered, I will proceed with the case of Mr. Sanders, of Athelstane. This gentleman has a salary of $525 and overtime of $360. There is no possibility at two hours a day, even if he worked every day in the year, of his earning $360.

Mr. PATERSON. Why not? This is an international border point where railroads are crossing that run on Sundays as well as other days and an officer has to be there.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister say that he believes that any man can work such hours as to give him $360 overtime out of a possible $399 ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Yes, lots of them.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not asking the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not know any rule of the House which prevents me giving the hon. gentleman much needed information.

Mr. LENNOX. The supporters of the government ought to have that confidence in the ministers of the Crown that they will asume they are capable of answering for themselves. I want to refer to another item. A landing waiter at Island Pond receives a salary of $450, and he is paid for overtime $269. That overtime seems to be suspiciously large item in proportion to the salary. Mr. Gendron receives a salary of $450, and $250 for overtime. Mr. Cauchon, preventive officer, receives a salary of $750 and $370 for overtime. These items appear to me to be very doubtful. I hope the minister will be able to give us more satisfactory explanations than he has done.

Mr. PATERSON. This overtime comes to us certified by our responsible officers, who send the vouchers to the Auditor General. They pass the Auditor General and appear in his books. To my mind the fact that they are in the Auditor General's books is proof positive that the services have been rendered. Whether the time may have exceeded two hours in some cases does not concern me much, because I know and am persuaded that the Auditor General and my officer would not pass accounts unless they were right. When you talk about these men not being able to work 12 hours or 14 hours a day, it is to be remembered that they are not engaged in manual labour. A man who is waiting for a train may be lying down on the bench, he may be dozing.

Mr. LENNOX. Surely the minister does not expect us to take it for granted that merely because an account appears in the Auditor General's Report it is therefore correct. If we adopted that system we might as well abandon our functions as an opposition.

Mr. BERGERON. I find that the department are employing a great many ladies as detectives.

Mr. PATERSON. We have two I think.

Mr. BERGERON. There are more than two.

Mr. FIELDING. At an early hour in the evening when the Minister of Customs was going into his estimates I said that I doubted if he would be able to get many through, but he thought he could convince the opposition of the error of their ways. I think he has had a fair opportunity to do so, and I would suggest that he consider whether it is worth while sitting any longer.

Mr. PATERSON. I did want to get this amount. We have been told by an hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Taylor) that there is nothing to criticise in them and that if we would drop the election Bill they would pass them in two minutes. I view the whole process to-night and this afternoon as an organized effort to stop our getting the money. To-day is the day on which we issue cheques for the outside service so that they may reach the distant ports in time. Over 2,000 men who have earned their salaries, many of them receiving small wages, scattered all over the Dominion, about 100 in this city, will not be paid and I am anxious to get them their pay. There is nothing to be gained by the opposition in refusing this amount because there are many items not yet passed if they are determined they should not pass them. I do not think they themselves will feel very well satisfied with what they have done. I would not feel satisfied with myself if I had not made every reasonable effort to pay these men. It is now after four o'clock in the morning and I do not believe in these tests of physical strength, but I did want to make an honest effort to get it, in order that the men might know it was not my fault if they are not paid. I think perhaps I have satisfied them and that they would be unreasonable to ask me to do more than I have. I would like, however, to get it at this afternoon's session.

Mr. BERGERON. I want my hon. friend to understand that this is not a personal attack on him or on his department. We are not choosing our time, as he understands, and we all regret that it happens in this way.

Mr. PATERSON. You need not have attacked me.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sorry for my hon. friend and I think I am speaking for the whole opposition in saying that it is very unfortunate this should fall on him, but we are not choosing which one we will attack or delay.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will we take up when the session opens this afternoon ?

Mr. FIELDING. Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to give notice that when we go into Supply I will take up the matter of cold storage.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been lying there for some time, it affects particularly the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend thinks that cold storage is more important than the payment of the public service, that is his right.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 4.25 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

VACANCY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from Armand Lavergne, Esq., his resignation as member for the electoral district of Montmagny, and that I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

QUESTIONS.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. From what companies is the commission purchasing rails for the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway?

2. How many rails have been so far purchased, and at what rates?

3. What orders for the eastern division, if any, in addition to completed purchases, have been placed, and with whom?

4. What is the total quantity of rails estimated necessary for the main line?

5. What quantity of rails have been purchased by the Grand Trunk Pacific for use west of Winnipeg, and on the branch from the lakes to the main line, and from what companies or firms have these been bought?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

Referring to the return, sessional paper No. 39f, touching the estimated cost of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, which shows the total length, less the Quebec bridge, to be 1,803.55 miles, the average cost per mile to be $63,427, and the total estimated cost, not including the Quebec bridge, to be $114,393,765.85, does this estimate include the cost of station houses, terminals, engine houses, round houses turn tables water tanks and all other buildings and structures necessary or usual for the effective operation of the road? If not, what will be the additional cost for all such purposes?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The estimate referred to in this question, of the average cost per mile of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, of $63,427, includes the cost of terminal yards, station houses, engine houses, turntables, water tanks and all buildings and structures, necessary or usual for the effective operation of the road ; but does not include terminals at Winnipeg (in regard to which, an agreement between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway and the commission was ratified, by Act of parliament during the session of 1907-8) or shops east of Winnipeg, or terminals at Quebec or connection therewith, plans of which have not yet been made and of which accordingly, no estimate of cost can yet be furnished.

Mr. BARKER asked :

1. Has the eastern limit of the Mountain section and the western limit of the Prairie section of the National Transcontinental Railway been established pursuant to section 4 of the agreement of 29th of July, 1903, scheduled in the Act 3 Edward VII., chapter 71?
2. When, and by whom, was such limit established, and at what point on the said railway?
3. At what distance along the line of the railway is such point easterly of the foot of the mountains?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes.
2. November 21, 1907. By Collingwood Schreiber, government chief engineer of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway, and B. B. Kelliher, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. The east bank of Wolfe creek.
3. One hundred and twenty-nine miles east of the summit of the Yellowhead Pass and 119 miles west of Edmonton. Wolfe creek has an elevation of 665 feet greater than Edmonton, while the summit of Yellowhead Pass is 840 feet higher than Wolfe creek.

Mr. CROCKET asked :

1. What portions of the line of the Transcontinental Railway between Grand Falls and Moncton are now under contract?
2. Who are the contractors, what is the mileage, estimated money value, and date of completion under each contract?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. All.
2. Moncton to near Chipman, 50 miles, the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, $989,895.90. September 1, 1908.

Near Chipman easterly, 8·55 miles, J. W. McManus & Co., Ltd., 289,190.62. August 1, 1908.

Near Chipman westerly, to Intercolonial Railway crossing, 39·05 miles, Grand Trunk Pacific Company, $767,434.95. September 1, 1910.

Intercolonial Railway crossing to Mile 164, 66·40 miles, Grand Trunk Pacific Company, $1,898,124.21. September 1, 1910.

Mile 164 to near Grand Falls, 31·80 miles, Willard Kitchen Company, $1,646,253.65. September 1, 1910.

MESSRS. CHILVERS.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Is one Alonzo Chilvers, Louis Chilvers and Charles L. Chilvers, recently from Essex county, in the employ of the government?
2. If so, in what capacity, what is the date of each appointment, and the amount of salary received by each?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Alonzo Chilvers last year had charge of a survey party. He is not now employed. Louis Chilvers was employed in the topographical survey. He is not now employed. Both are sons of Charles L. Chilvers, of Walkerville, in North Essex. The father never was employed by the government.

SIGNALLING APPARATUS AT BRIER ISLAND.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What method of marine signalling was used at Brier Island, Nova Scotia, previous to the installation of the new plant a year or so ago?
2. By what system was it replaced then, and at what total cost?
3. By whom was this plant supplied, and what portions thereof and at what cost, were made outside of Canada ?
4. Is it now proposed to replace this system by another? If so, by what, at what cost, and for what reasons ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Steam whistle.

2. Changed in 1905 to compressed air diaphone, cost of machinery $13,040. Changes in building and cost of installation, $3,800.

3. The Canadian Fog Signal Company plant was purchased as a whole and the department has no knowledge what portion (if any) was manufactured outside of Canada.

4. The diaphone was placed at this station to meet the requirements of large navigation which passes at a considerable distance from the island and for which the instrument is well adapted. Complaints have, however, been received from the smaller navigation passing close in and behind the island to the effect that the sound is thrown too much in one direction, and that local requirements were better served by the old whistle.

The department intends making a practical test in this direction, utilizing stock material, and the cost will only be that of the small amount of labour for connecting a whistle for this purpose.

No decision as to the best course to pursue can be arrived at until the test has been made.

WHARF AT POINTE AUX TREMBLES.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What was the date fixed, in 1904, by the Department of Public Works for the reception of tenders for the construction of a wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, county of Portneuf ?

2. What is the date of the contract of Dusseault & Pageau for the construction of that wharf ?

3. In virtue of their contract what length of time was given them to construct that wharf?

4. As Dusseault & Pageau were not able to construct the whart at Pointe-aux-Trembles on the date specified in the contract, what was the date fixed by the Department of Public Works for the completion of the construction of that wharf?

5. On what date was the notice to that effect given to Dusseault & Pageau ?

6. Were there any complaints against the contractors, Dusseault & Pageau, in regard to the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles? If so, by whom, what was the nature of such complaints, and were they written or verbal ?

7. At what date did Dusseault & Pageau suspend their work ?

8. What are the names, christian names and residences of the engineer and inspector who had the superintendence of the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles ?

9. Did the engineer make any report against the work done by Dusseault & Pageau?

10. What is the estimated amount of the material that Dusseault & Pageau had upon the ground when they suspended work ?

11. What is the amount estimated by the engineer for the work done by Dusseault & Pageau when they suspended work?

12. What amount was paid on account of their contract to Dusseault & Pageau, and what is the date of each such payment ?

13. Was anything paid to Dusseault & Pageau, or to any other persons, in connection with the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, since the suspending of the work? If so, to whom, at what dates and what amounts ?

14. Was anything done in connection with the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles since Dusseault & Pageau suspended work ?

15. Before receiving the contract for the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, had Dusseault & Pageau performed any other contracts for the Department of Public Works? If so, what were those contracts ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. May 10, 1904.

PURCHASE OF RAILS FROM ALGOMA STEEL COMPANY.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Are there any contracts between the Intercolonial Railway company or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission with the Algoma Steel Company for the manufacture and delivery of steel rails, uncompleted? If so, what are they?

2. Is it the intention of the Minister of Railways and Canals, or of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, to place immediately any further orders for steel rails with the Algoma Steel Company, in order to insure the continuance of the operation of the steel rail plant at Sault Ste. Marie, which recently temporarily suspended its operations on account of reported want of orders for rails for immediate delivery?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The only uncompleted contract for steel rails, which the commissioners have with the Algoma Steel Company, is one, dated 25th November, 1907, for 21,371 tons of 80-pound steel rails, viz.: 10,686 gross tons to be delivered by November 1st, 1908, and 10,685 tons to be delivered April 1st, 1909.

2. Strong representations have been made to the government concerning additional orders for steel rails, but until money is placed at the disposal of the government, or the commission by parliamentary appropriations, it is impossible to practically consider the matter.

PURCHASES OF RAILS FROM RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. How many tons of rails have been purchased from the railway department by either the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company or the government of New Brunswick in the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907, respectively and what was the total amount of purchases in each of the several years?

2. What amount is still due the railway department on account of said purchase or purchases of rails, including interest, if interest will be charged?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. For the years 1900-01—Nil.

1903	1729 150-2240	36,310.36
1903	10 frogs.	150.00
		$44,384.11
1903—Dec. 31, by cash....		4,925.00
2. Balance due Intercolonial Railway at March 31, 1908, for rails		$39,459.11
Interest at 4 per cent, March, 1908		8,037.23
		$47,496.34

BALANCE OF SUBSIDY, NEW BRUNSWICK COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Is there any balance due the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company on account of subsidy? If so, what amount is still due?

2. Has any claim been presented by the said company for extra subsidy? If so, at what date and for what amount?

3. Is it the intention of the government to grant any further subsidy than the first granted to that company? If so, what additional amount per mile?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. It is so claimed on behalf of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, but no amount has been determined.

2. Yes. On January 20th, 1904. Subsequently on June 18th, 1904, on behalf of the province of New Brunswick, by Mr. James Barnes, and Mr. George W. Allen, secretary of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company; and again, on the 26th June, 1906, by Hon. L. J. Tweedie, then premier.

3. The matter is receiving the consideration of the government.

SOUTH HURON BY-ELECTION.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What was the amount of the returning officer's account rendered to the government for the expenses in connection with the by-election held in South Huron on the 22nd day of January, 1908?

2. What is the date or dates when these accounts were paid to said officer?

3. If there are still any unsettled accounts, what do they consist of?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. Amount of returning officer's accounts, $1,052.31.

2. Payments to returning officer: February 26, 1908, $842.05; March 28, 1908, $176.89 —$1,018.94. Amount disallowed on audit of accounts, $33.37.

3. There are no unsettled accounts.

TUBERCULIN TESTS.

Mr. R. N. WALSH asked:

1. How many cattle have been tested by the Department of Agriculture from March 31, 1906, up to the present date, with tuberculin?

2. What number have reacted?

3. How many have been tested by private practitioners?

4. What number have reacted?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. 2,509.
2. 89.
3. 2,964 ; that is with tuberculin supplied by this department.
4. 455.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of having reacted ?

Mr. FISHER. The reaction indicates the presence of the disease.

PORT SOUTH BAR, CAPE BRETON.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. How many vessels entered and cleared at the Port South Bar Sydney river, Cape Breton, during the years 1905-6-7?
2. Who is the officer in charge of this service of the department and what is his salary?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. South Bar Sydney river is only a customs preventive station (by the name of Victoria pier) under the port of Sydney. No vessels have been cleared there during 1905, 1906, 1907.
2. James Ratchford is the customs preventive officer on duty at that place. His salary is $300 a year.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

To what companies were land granted by way of railway subsidy during the year 1894, and what was the quantity of each such grant?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

	Acres.
Rocky Mountain Railway and Coal Company..	384,000
Canadian Pacific Railway Company..	204,800
Brandon & South Western Railway Company..	108,800
Saskatchewan & Western Railway Company..	96,000

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Since July, 1896, what railway charters, carrying land grants, have been renewed or extended by the government?
2. In each such case what amount of land was affected?
3. What are the several statutes giving effect to these extensions?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

The following charters have been extended by parliament :

1. The Red Deer Valley Railway & Coal Company ; The Manitoba & South Western Railway Company ; The Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, now the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

2. The Red Deer Valley Railway & Coal Company, 384,000 acres ; The Manitoba South Eastern Railway Company, 680,320 acres ; The Winnipeg Great Northern Railday Company, now the Canadian Northern Railway Company, south of Saskatchewan river, 2,523,008 acres ; north of Saskatchewan river, 6,016,000 acres.

3. The Red Deer Valley Railway Company, 60 and 61 Victoria, chapter 60, assented to June 29, 1897. Act extending time for construction and for other purposes. 62 and 63 Victoria chapter 86, assented to July 10, 1899, Act again extending time for construction. 63 and 64 Victoria, chapter 77, assented to July 18, 1900, Act again extending time for construction and for other purposes. Charter expired through failure to construct within time limit. The Manitoba & South Eastern Railway Company, now the Canadian Northern Railway Company, 60 and 61 Victoria, chapter 53, assented to June 29, 1897, Act extending time for construction and for other purposes. The Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, now The Canadian Northern Railway Company, 61 Victoria, chapter 10, assented to June 13, 1898, extending time for construction and for other purposes, 62 and 63 Victoria, chapter 57, assented to July 10, 1899, extending time for construction and for other purposes. 3 Edward VII, chapter 97 assented to June 25, 1903, extending time for construction and for other purposes.

NEW BRUNSWICK COLD STORAGE PLANTS.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the government assisted by bonus, or in any form, any cold storage plants in the province of New Brunswick? If so, what plants, in what amounts, and to whom paid?
2. Were such plants, if any, built or established before or after the passing of the Act respecting the granting of assistance by this government?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. Yes. The government has undertaken to grant a bonus of $37,500 to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, under the Cold Storage Act. $15,000 of this sum has been paid to the company.
2. After.

THE INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked :

Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the Insurance Bill this session? If so, when? If not, why not?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It is the expectation of the government to proceed with the Insurance Bill so soon as satisfactory progress shall have been made in the more urgent work of obtaining the appropriations for the carrying on of the public service.

EASTERN TOWNSHIPS CAVALRY BRIGADE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Will the Eastern Townships Cavalry Brigade go to the Quebec celebration in July?
2. If not, will it go into camp for annual training?
3. At what point will this camp be held?
4. Will any regiments from the Eastern Townships attend the Quebec celebration? If so, which regiments?
5. Will a camp be held at Laprairie, Quebec, for the annual training of troops this summer?
6. Is there a rifle range at this point?
7. Has any rifle practice been held at Laprairie during the last two or three camps held there?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Under consideration.
2. Yes.
3. Laprairie.
4. Under consideration.
5. Yes.
6. The old range was washed away by a flood several years ago.
7. Yes, miniature practice one year since old range was destroyed by floods. A new rifle range will be constructed in time for this year's camp.

SHERBROOKE MILITIA CORPS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

Is it the intention of the Department of Militia and Defence to establish another regiment of infantry or other branch of the service in Sherbrooke? If so, what will be the branch of the service and strength?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). In General Orders of May 1, just issued, the transfer of the headquarters of No. 6 Cavalry Field Ambulance from Quebec to Sherbrooke is authorized. There is no present intention of establishing any additional unit at Sherbrooke.

MILITIA ALLOWANCES.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Is the government in arrears for allowances to any militia regiments? If so, to what regiments, to what amounts, and for what periods?
2. What is the reason some regiments have not received allowances?
3. Is the government aware that officers of some regiments, including one Ottawa regiment, have been obliged to borrow money to meet requirements?
4. If so, will the government repay such officers the interest paid by them on such loans?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. No, all such claims are paid or are being paid as fast as they are submitted.
2. Deficiencies of arms, clothing, &c., discovered on inspection.
3. The government is not aware of the fact.
4. No.

WHARFS AT PORT MULGRAVE, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Are the wharfs at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, government property? If so, who is the officer in charge of said wharfs?
2. Has said officer ordered boats away from these wharfs, thereby preventing them from discharging their cargoes?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The railway owns wharfs at Mulgrave, the terminus of the railway on the Strait of Canso, but not at Port Mulgrave. Captain J. W. Reynolds is in charge of the railway wharfs at Mulgrave.
2. There have been no vessels, steamers or other crafts ordered away from these wharfs thereby preventing them from discharging their cargoes.

WESTPORT ALARM STATION, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. When was a steam whistle installed at Westport, Nova Scotia, for alarm station, and what was the total cost of same?
2. When was the new diaphones alarm installed at the same place, by whom, and what was the total cost of same?
3. Are the steam engines, foreign make? If so, who were the builders, and what was the cost of such engines?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. 1873. Cost $7,500.
2. In 1905 by department's erectors. $18,040.
3. The diaphone plant, including engines, was purchased complete from the Canadian Fog Signal Company. The department does not know the manufacturers of the component parts nor the cost.

MONTREAL POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. What action, if any, has the government taken to remedy the reported irregularities in the postal service of Montreal, as complained of by thirty members of the board of trade of the city of Montreal?
2. Is the government aware that many firms and citizens of the city of Montreal are said to be greatly inconvenienced, and business materially interfered with, owing to careless handling of mails, delay in delivery of letters, irregular delivery, carelessness in delivering and handling of papers and packages, and general irregularities said to exist in the postal service of that city? If so, what means have been employed to remedy said grievances?

3 What action, if any, has been taken against the postmaster at Heaslip, Ontario, for reported irregularities and carelessness?

4. Has there been a new assistant appointed in the Shawville, Quebec, post office? If so, what is his name and salary?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. The complaints to which reference is made were not received from individual members of the board of trade, Montreal, but Mr. Geo. Hadrill, secretary of the board of trade, submitted in December, 1906, 28 cases of alleged delay in transmission of mail matter. In 19 of these cases the complaints were not substantiated by evidence or the sender was at fault or the delay was due to causes beyond the control of the department. In dealing with the balance the department pursued its well defined policy of following up the searching inquiry made in each case with prompt measures to make the Montreal postal service in every respect satisfactory. The complaints dealt entirely with the routine of work performed by postal employees and the usual steps were promptly taken to effect the desired improvements for which the machinery of the department was ample and sufficient.

2. No. Not only is the department not aware that such is the state of affairs, but is positively aware that no such condition exists. The department has had most gratifying evidence from the business men of Montreal in regard to the efficiency of the postal service of that city. It goes without saying that clerical errors will occur and mistakes will be made in a service as large as that of Montreal, but the department ventures to say that there is no city post office on the continent that is giving a better and more faithful service than the post office in the city of Montreal.

As a tribute to the present efficiency of the Montreal postal service the following letter addressed by Mr. Geo. Hadrill, secretary of the board of Trade, Montreal, to the assistant postmaster, Montreal, under date of the 23rd instant, may be quoted:

Montreal Board of Trade, Montreal, May 23, 1908, to L. J. Gaboury, Esq., assistant postmaster, Montreal.

Sir,—In reply to your inquiry as to whether any complaints have recently been made to this office by members of the board regarding the postal service, I beg to say that with the exception of a letter of recent date pointing out the need of an outside letter box in the post office, no complaints regarding the postal service have been addressed to this office since 1906.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) GEO. HADRILL,
Secretary.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

3. A complaint was made by Mr. J. H. Field that a registered letter addressed to him at Heaslip was unduly detained at that office. On investigation it was found that the letter in question had been accidentally mislaid by the postmaster of Heaslip, having fallen down behind some pigeon holes in the office, and the postmaster was admonished severely as to his carelessness in the matter. It being the only offence the postmaster was not fined. No other complaints concerning this office have reached the department.

4. The Post Office Department has nothing to do with the appointment of assistants in post offices like Shawville. The department holds the postmaster responsible for the office being properly carried on and all persons employed in the office are employees, not of the Post Office Department, but of the postmaster at Shawville, who is entirely responsible. When trouble arose a short time ago the postmaster at Shawville was written to that he must provide suitable assistance and he replied that he would employ a suitable assistant at once. Since then no complaints have been made by the public and the department is of the opinion that there is no further ground for complaint.

DREDGING IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. Were tenders called for by the Public Works Department for dredging in Ontario and Quebec? If so, were tenders received?

2. What were the prices at the different places?

3. What were the names of the dredges mentioned in tenders?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). My hon. friend has not mentioned the year and I do not know to what year he refers. If he will state the year, I shall be happy to furnsh the information.

Mr. BERGERON. I mean this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad to furnish the information.

Question allowed to stand.

WHARFAGE DUES—SOULANGES COUNTY.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Why are wharfage dues exacted at each of the wharfs of St. Zotique, Coteau Landing, Coteau du Lac and Les Cedres, in the county of Soulanges?

2. What amount has been received from that source from 1906 to the present time?

3. How much for each one of the wharfs?

4. Are the government wharfs constructed in other places subject to a like impost?

5. Is there a tariff in force?

6. Has anybody asked for the suppression of those dues?

7. Does the government purpose continuing that system in the county of Soulanges?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. These wharfs are under the provisions of chapter 112 of Revised Statutes of Canada, and the regulations made under this chapter and the dues are exacted because it is required by the law.

2. $67.17.

3. For the fiscal years 1906-7 and 1907-8, the receipts have been as follows:—St. Zotique, $21.78; Coteau Landing, $24.62; Coteau du Lac, $20.77; Les Cedres, nil.

4. Yes. All wharfs under the control of by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. are subject to the collection of wharfage dues.

5. Yes.

6. Occasional requests have been received by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

7. Yes.

MAIL SERVICE—COTEAU LANDING.

Mr. Monk—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Why do not the steamboats carrying the mails from Montreal to Kingston stop at Coteau Landing to land mails and passengers there?

2. Has anybody asked the government to re-establish the former service?

3. If so, who?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Mails are not carried by steamer between Montreal and Kingston and have not been for very many years.

2. No request has been made in so far as the Post Office Department is aware to establish or re-establish such a service.

3. Answered by No. 2.

COTEAU LANDING WHARF.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Have repairs to the wharf at Côteau Landing and the construction of a shelter for the passengers been asked for? If so, by whom and when?

2. Will the government make them? If so, what amount will be appropriated?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. and 2. No. If such request should be made, it would have careful consideration.

MAIL SERVICE, SOULANGES COUNTY.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Is there any reason why all the letters and mail packages between the different parishes of the county of Soulanges should pass through Montreal in order to reach their destination?

2. How long is it since the carrying of the mails in vehicles has been abolished?

3. Has the government received any complaints in that regard, either from the member for the county or otherwise?

4. Is it the government's intention to remedy that state of things? If so, when? If not, why not?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Letters and mail packages between the different post offices in the county of Soulanges have not to pass through Montreal in order to reach their destination. Out of 17 post offices in this county, 14 are served direct from the railways and the other three offices by stage.

2. Conveyance of mails by vehicles has not been abolished where such mode is necessary.

3. No complaints have been received in this regard either through the member for the county or otherwise.

4. Answered by previous question.

CHARGES AGAINST ALFRED SAUVE.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Is the report of the investigation, held by Louis Boyer, advocate, into the accusations brought against Alfred Sauvé, the superintendent of the Soulanges canal, filed in the department?

2. Has the government come to any decision in regard thereto?

3. Was the man Alfred Sauvé suspended during the investigation, and is he still under suspension?

4. Does he still draw his salary?

5. How much has he received on that account, and for other reasons, during the three months last past?

6. How much has the Commissioner Boyer received up to date?

7. What amount per day was allowed or agreed to be allowed to Commissioner Boyer as salary and for expenses, respectively?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. Relieved of duty, pending investigation.

4. Yes.

5. $350.38.

6. Nothing paid to date.

7. $25 per day and reasonable travelling and living expenses.

COAL LANDS, ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What total area of coal lands have been sold in Alberta and in Saskatchewan, respectively, since July 1, 1896?

2. What total area has been leased?

3. In respect of what area has the government returns shown that coal has been or is being mined?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. In Alberta, 250,812·24 acres, of which area 56,640·49 acres include the surface as well as the coal mining rights.

In Saskatchewan, 5,636·83 acres, of which area 60 acres include the surface as well as the coal mining rights.

2. In Alberta 53,281·58 acres.
In Saskatchewan, 2,040·53 acres.
3. 9,640·96 acres.

COMMISSION ON POSTAL BUSINESS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What did the compensation on money order and postal note business, and commission on box and drawer rents amount to in the calendar year 1907?
2. Is the contract for the making and repairing of mail bags let by tender? If not, why not, and what firm has the contract at present?
3. What was the total expense for maintenance of postal service in the Yukon and Atlin districts for the calendar year 1907?
4. What was the total net revenue to the Post Office Department from the Yukon and Atlin districts for the calendar year 1907?
5. How many accounting officers are there in the Yukon and Atlin districts, and how many non-accounting post offices?
6. What is the total amount paid in salaries to postmasters in the Yukon and Atlin districts?
7. What is the total number of registered letters containing money or valuables reported to the Post Office Department, and the total alleged contents in the calendar year 1907?
8. What is the total number of unregistered letters containing money or valuables reported to the Post Office Department, and the total alleged contents in the calendar year 1907?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Commission on money orders, $109,166.32.
Commission on postal notes, $19,619.05.
Box and drawer rents, $29,135.
2. All ordinary letter bags for the domestic service are supplied under contract, the present contractors being Messrs. S. & H. Borbridge, Rideau Street, Ottawa.
The manufacture of registered sacks and British mail sacks is in the hands of S. S. Stratton, Sparks street, Ottawa, who formerly had a contract with this department, and the work was continued with him after the expiry of his contract (at a slight increase in the cost of the last mentioned sacks only) on account of the very favourable rates thus obtained.
Newspaper sacks are no longer manufactured under contract, experience having shown that no single contractor was in a position to manufacture these sacks with sufficient rapidity upon demand to meet the needs of the service at periods such as Christmas, etc., when there is an enormous increase in the amount of mail matter requiring to be handled. The department adopted the system of purchasing the material under contract and supplying it to different persons employed in the repairing of mail bags, who mannfactured new sacks for the department at a uniform price of eleven cents per sack.

Mr. OLIVER.

The repairing of mail bags and sacks has never been performed under contract, such method being considered impracticable owing to the varying nature of the repairs required, the different prices paid, and the uncertainty as to numbers.
3. $125,021.28.
4. $15,406.41.
5. Nine accounting offices; 13 non-accounting.
6. $30,145.84.
7 and 8. From the wording of the questions 7 and 8 it is not understood what information is desired. If the inquiry has reference to the returns of undelivered ordinary and registered mail matter regularly made by postmasters to the Dead Letter Branch, statistics for the calendar year of 1907 will be compiled and submitted at an early date.

HOG CHOLERA IN ESSEX

Mr. CLEMENT—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. How many hogs have been ordered destroyed in the county of Essex in the calendar years ending January, 1, 1906 and 1907, respectively?
2. Were these hogs destroyed owing to cholera, or what was the reason for such order?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. 1906.. .. .. 183 hogs
1907.. .. .. 37 "
2. They were all affected with, or had been in contact with animals affected with hog cholera.

SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY LAND COMPANY.

Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) for information on the subject which I mentioned yesterday—the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. He said he would look up 'Hansard' and give me an answer to-day. But perhaps the hon. gentleman has overlooked it.

Mr. OLIVER. I regret to say that I have overlooked it. I will promise faithfully to attend to it by Friday.

THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'CHAMPLAIN.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Would the Prime Minister be good enough to give an answer to the matter concerning which I asked him yesterday—the steamer 'Champlain'?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The 'Champlain' is running between Rivière Ouelle and Murray bay. On the north side she generally goes also to two other places, St. Irenée and Cap à l'Aigle. I was asked if she could be sent from Murray bay also to Baie St. Paul. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows, there is no railway connection between these two places. It is decided that the 'Champlain' could go there. We required that those who asked it should put up a deposit, as is generally required by the railway and steamship companies. Also, instructions were given to the agent that so much per mile should be charged those who took passage by the boat. I see it stated that some persons were refused admission to the boat. I telephoned to the agent at Quebec and the information we have is that the statement is not correct. The agent says he never heard of it, and that the boat has been open to the public.

PURCHASE OF FIRE EXTINGUISHERS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if he has yet decided to lay on the table the file with reference to the celebrated fire extinguishers?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I certainly have no objection, as I have already done, to lay on the table the documents or the file bearing on the questions that I discussed here.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman have it here this afternoon? To-morrow is a holiday, and we could take advantage of it to get business ready for the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have a copy of it in my room.

Mr. FOSTER. That will do in the meantime.

REPORTED LOSS OF MAILS.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) if he has had information with regard to a reported loss of mail by accident on the Canadian Pacific Railway on this side of Kenora?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When was that?

Mr. LAKE. Within a few days—on Monday last, I think.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. member (Mr. Lake) will remember his question a little later, I may be able to give him information. There may be a report in the department. I will inquire about the matter.

SUPPLY—AMENDMENTS TO THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to again bring to the notice of the government some Bills which I have had before the House for some months and in reference to which I have been in consultation with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and to present reasons why these Bills should be taken over by the government and embodied in the measure which, I understand, the government is about to bring down in amendment to the Criminal Code. The first Bill has reference to the subject of immigration. It authorizes the officers of the Emigration Branch of the Department of the Interior to search immigrants and take from them knives, revolvers and other offensive weapons and directing them to inform such immigrants that weapons of this kind must not be carried in Canada. To show that there is great need for such a law, to show that this is a vital and pressing question, I wish to bring to your attention articles in the daily press written since this Bill was placed before the House. The first item is from the Toronto 'Globe.' It is headed 'Fool and Revolver form dangerous combination.'

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). I rise to a point of order. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lewis) a right to discuss on motion for Supply a matter already on the order paper?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is that matter on the Order Paper cannot be anticipated by discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lewis) is suggesting to the House that the Bill should be placed upon government orders. It is perfectly proper to do that.

Mr. LEWIS. This is from the Toronto 'Globe'; and by arrangement with the Solicitor General——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman—

Mr. LEWIS. This is by arrangement.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is discussing whether this matter should be taken up, that may be permitted, but discussion of the merits of a question upon the order paper would not be in order.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not desire to discuss the merits, but only to place before the House and the government, reasons, vital reasons which have arisen since this Bill was laid before the House, why the government should take action and should take over this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. That would be practically discussing the question, and I think would be out of order.

Mr. LEWIS. May I refer the government to the pages in which these articles are to be found?

Mr. SPEAKER. Any discussion which would anticipate the merits of the Bill would be out of order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that for the purpose of showing the necessity of placing the Bill upon government orders, it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to refer in some measure to the subject matter. To that extent—but to that extent only—I think the hon. gentleman would be within his rights.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Lewis) has not put it that way to the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would suggest to the hon. member (Mr. Lewis) that it would be useless to place these Bills on the Order Paper for action by the government, if the government cannot get Supply even.

Mr. LEWIS. I would suggest to make it a government measure and introduce it as an amendment to the Criminal Code, and an Immigration Act be prepared by the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order. The hon. gentleman cannot discuss the general principle of the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. That would be out of order.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely wanted to read the title. Bill (No. 63) to amend the Immigration Act; Bill (No. 78) to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting offensive weapons; Bill (No. 79) to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting assaults on women and children; Bill (No. 93) to amend the Criminal Code to punish homicide while hunting; Bill (No. 140) to amend the Criminal Code respecting injuries to persons due to motor vehicles. I had no desire to infringe the rules of the House; I merely desired to say that since these Bills were brought before this House occurrences have taken place within Canada which would make it more necessary for such legislation to be passed.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

COLD STORAGE FOR BAIT.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before you proceed to Supply, I wish to call the attention of the House to a matter of some interest. I do not propose at this time to found a motion upon the information at hand, but simply to place before the House, in as brief and comprehensive a way as possible, the information that has been brought down by return. The first remark I wish to make is that the Department of Marine and Fisheries developed some years ago two plans for the assistance of the fisheries, on the Atlantic coast particularly, with reference more especially to giving greater facilities for obtaining bait. The objects were sought to be accomplished by, in the case of the shore fishermen, having the fishermen form themselves into an association to which, if they erected a bait freezer under proper conditions, the government would pay one-half of the cost and would give a bonus I think of $5 per ton on bait frozen for a period of years, I think five years. This was for the shore fishermen. Then for the bank fishermen a more ambitious project was undertaken by the department, it was to have bait freezers and bait cold storage plants erected. A few of them, in fact two, were established, one at Canso and the other at Halifax, and the measure of aid given by the government to these was one-half of the cost of construction and equipment, and I think $2,000 a year for a period of three years. In the city of St. John a firm by the name of F. E. Williams, a practical-going firm of that city, knowing that these aids were held out, made an application to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for aid to a project for the city of St. John, that portion of the Bay of Fundy which opens out to the city of St. John, and preferred a request to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on that line. What he really proposed was to have a project a little more ambitious than merely a bait freezing establishment. He proposed an amalgamation of the bait business with a cold storage for commercial purposes for fish. This gentleman preferred his request in October, 1905, and proceeded in the orthodox way to back up his proposition by all the proper influences which he could find. He brought to his aid the party influence in the city of St. John. Amongst others who backed his project were the William Thomson Company, influential shippers and business men of that city; H. P. Robertson, who very strongly recommended Mr. Williams and endorsed his project; Mr. McKeown, I think at that time member of the local legislature, at any rate, a prominent politician in the city of St. John who also very strongly endorsed Mr. Williams as a business man, and endorsed the project which he was endeavouring to carry out; the O'Connors, operators in the Bay of Fundy, also lent their influence to the project. On March 2, 1906, Mr. Truman of the city of St. John, who seems to have been very strongly allied with Williams, whether as legal adviser and solicitor or otherwise, I do not know, visited Ottawa, and interviewed the minister with reference to the matter, having first obtained the hearty adhesion of the then Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Emmerson. Well, the reply of the then minister was that Mr. Williams' project hardly came within the purpose of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and they so informed Mr. Williams, and informed as well those who were backing Mr. Williams. I forgot to state that Mr. McAvity, of the city of St. John, who is a very strong party man, and makes copious and long continued drafts upon the party patronage, and has ever since these gentlemen got into power, also promised, that the party influence in the city of St.

John should be behind Mr. Williams' application and his project. As I stated, in the end the Minister of Marine and Fisheries rather set aside the project on the ground that he proposed to stick to the operations for the shore fishermen and the bank fishermen in the way of bait facilities and cold storage for bait, to the extent to which it had already been developed, and did not propose to go any further; and to the plea that the Bay of Fundy on this side, with the city of St. John as the centre, ought to have an establishment as good as that at Canso and at Halifax, he turned a deaf ear. In the end he cited Mr. Williams to the Minister of Agriculture, as did the Minister of Railways and Canals, telling Mr. Williams that there was legislation in prospect for the very purpose for which he was pushing his claim and that the minister to be applied to for help in that respect was the Minister of Agriculture. Just here then it is pertinent to say that in the fall of 1906 and the beginning of 1907 the Minister of Agriculture conceived, brought forth and ultimately enacted a law the purpose of which was to give government subsidies to commercial cold storage establishments under certain conditions. Then, at that period, that is late in December, 1906, or early in 1907, the application of Mr. Williams came to be made to the minister. I think it would be well probably to read the letter in reference to that. I find in the file an application dated 7th December, 1906, from F. E. Williams Company, Limited, to the Minister of Agriculture, as follows:

St. John, December 7, 1906.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I beg to make application for assistance to a cold storage warehouse which I and associates desire to establish at the port of St. John. The application is made by me under the terms of the proposed Act in accordance with resolution of yourself before the House of Commons. I will make a more formal application when the matter can be dealt with in exact terms, but I desire to lodge the present application with you. I have already had correspondence with yourself on the subject of cold storage, and am very glad to find that you are disposed to place the government's assistance on a more liberal basis. St. John is well situated for a cold storage depot, and I feel that a pretty strong case can be made out for a grant of assistance by you for a warehouse here. If it is necessary to make for the present any more formal application will you kindly advise me of its necessity.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

I read these letters because later, in the course of developments, it will appear that the Prime Minister and some others denied that any application was ever made, or if made, was properly made by F. E. Williams on behalf of himself or his company. Mr. Williams also asks the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), with whom he had been in correspondence for over a year and with whom he has had frequent conferences, to use his influence and do what he could for him in the advancement of his application when it came before the Minister of Agriculture. In response to a telegram from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) about that time, Mr. Williams comes to Ottawa with his solicitor and has various interviews. That is probably as well told as anywhere in a letetr writtten on the 1st April, 1907, by Mr. Williams as follows:

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago I made an application to your department for a grant for a cold storage plant to be established in St. John. Previous to this I had put in an application to Hon. Mr. Brodeur for a grant from the Marine and Fisheries Department. The last time I was in Ottawa, Hon. Mr. Brodeur informed me that they were going to merge the whole grant for cold storage in the Government Cold Storage Act. I had the pleasure of meeting and talking the matter over with your good self in the presence of H. R. Emmerson, Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. Mr. Brodeur. At that time Sir Frederick Borden had a proposition which he was trying to carry out and wanted my friends and myself to go in with him, he and his son-in-law being the prime movers in this scheme. Mr. Emmerson all along assured me that my proposition was first in the hands of the government and he and Mr. Brodeur had promised to give me a bonus from the Fishery Department and now that is merged into your department I should have first consideration, and I would like to know by return mail if my application is to be granted for a cold storage warehouse in East St. John, or is the application of Sir Frederick Borden to be accepted instead. Hon. H. R. Emmerson now being out of the government I have to turn to you direct. Kindly give me a direct reply as soon as possible and you will very much oblige me, as I have other plans which I want to carry out if I am not to receive the government aid.

I am inclosing copies of some of my letters to Mr. Emmerson on this cold storage subject, which will convey to you my ideas and feelings regarding the matter. I trust it will not take too much of your valuable time to peruse the same and become a little acquainted with the cold storage proposition in St. John.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

I read that letter because it gives in brief the substance of a good deal of the correspondence which passed and states Mr. Williams' position from his standpoint very succinctly. After numerous interviews, as stated in that letter, a letter is written on the 11th April, 1907, by the Minister of Agriculture, as follows:

Mr. F. E. Williams,
92 to 96 Princess street, St. John, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th. I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. Sir Frederick Borden has made application, on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably. None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely.

I cannot make any promises without definite plans and specifications and full information as to what the people applying for may be prepared to do.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

Then, the next correspondence that takes place is dated June 2, as detailed here. Mr. Williams writes from St. John on the 3rd of June as follows :

The Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I received blanks for application for cold storage warehouses. In your letter of April 11 you gave me to understand that nothing could be done unless plans and specifications were submitted and you also stated that you looked favourably upon giving this grant in St. John to Sir Frederick Borden. I have already spent considerable of my money in going to Ottawa and endeavouring to obtain a grant for the cold storage warehouse in St. John and do not feel like spending any more money in getting up plans and specifiations if the preference is to be given to Sir Frederick Borden. I have written very strongly against your government giving a grant to a cabinet minister, and leaving out the business men who should be the proper parties to take up this proposition.

I would again kindly request that you inform me plainly if it would be worth while my proceeding to get plans and specifications ready to submit to you.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

In answer to that, the minister being absent, the deputy minister says :

Dear Sir,—In the absence of the minister, I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant in reference to cold storage warehouses.

If you will submit your application it will receive due consideration.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) GEO. F. O'HALLORAN,
Deputy Minister.

F. E. Williams Company,
St. John, New Brunswick.

Now, it is incontestable that Mr. Williams made his application, backed by his friends in the city of St. John—and they were numerous—for government aid in the year 1905, and that as long as there was only that kind of legislation on the statute-book he directed his efforts to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries refused his application on that basis, and turned him over to the minister who was taking up the matter on a larger basis. Mr. Williams had gone to the only minister to whom he could apply, he spent a year and more of his time and effort trying to advance his scheme with the minister, and at the end of that time he was told that he would have to go to the Minister of Agriculture, who had a more ambitious form of legislation which he was just putting on the statute-book. He then transferred his claim for aid for his project to the Minister of Agriculture, and put in a formal application. He not only did that, but he came in person and with his friends, and through the Minister of Railways and Canals, and interviewed the ministers here; and in the course of that interview he found that there was another applicant besides himself, that applicant being Sir Frederick Borden, the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never was an applicant.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply giving the information which I have, and which will all come out in the letters before I get through with what I have to say. He found out that Sir Frederick Borden was an applicant on behalf of a company in which he was interested. He found it out, both from his interviews with the ministers and later from a letter written to him by the Minister of Agriculture. If I am wrong in that, surely it is not my fault, because I find in a letter of April 11, 1907, which was written by the Minister of Agriculture, and the colleague of the Minister of Militia and Defence, these words:

April 11, 1907.

Mr. F. E. Williams,
St. John, New Brunswick.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 8. I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. Sir Frederick Borden has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably. None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely.

If Mr. Williams needs any further reference or support in his contention that he had to meet the opposition of a cabinet minister making an application, and an interested application, for the very subsidy which he was after, he gets that support from the letter, positive and distinct, of the Minister of Agriculture himself. Having found out from his interviews and from the letter which he had received from the minister, in which he said explicitly that he had received an application from Sir Frederick Borden on behalf of a company with which he was connected, and that he viewed this application very favourably, what was the conclusion to which Mr. Williams came ? After having for a year and a half spent his time and money and the energy and influence of his friends, he finds out that a cabinet minister is ahead of him and has forestalled him in the favourable opinion of the Minister of Agriculture in whose department the matter is ; and he comes naturally and properly to the conclusion that there is no use of his going to the further expenditure of preparing his plans and putting them in unless the minister tells him that he has a chance and that his claim will receive fair and just consideration. With this preference and this great influence against him, he did not file his plans, although he had put in his application at a very early period. On the 3rd of June he writes from St. John to the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Ottawa, Ont.:

Dear Sir, I received blanks for application for cold storage warehouse. In your letter of April 11 you gave me to understand that nothing could be done unless plans and specifications were submitted, and you also stated that you looked favourably upon giving this grant in St. John to Sir Frederick Borden. I have already spent considerable of my money going to Ottawa and endeavouring to obtain a grant for the cold storage warehouse in St. John, and I do not feel like spending any more money in getting up plans and specifications if the preference is to be given to Sir Frederick Borden. I have written very strongly on this matter. I would again kindly request that you inform me plainly if it would be worth while proceeding to get plans and specifications ready to submit to you.

The answer he got to that, which was his final appeal, was from the deputy minister, saying that if he would submit his application it would receive due consideration. Consequently, although his application was in, he did not file his plans and specifications, which would cost quite a large amount of money, and he had already spent, as he thought, sufficient in the matter.

Now, Sir, this correspondence has divulged the name of Sir Frederick Borden and the company with which he was connected as an applicant for the government subsidy. I propose to trace what had been going on. What had been going on ? Sir Frederick Borden was a member of the cabinet ; Hon. Sydney Fisher was a member of the cabinet. Hon. Sydney Fisher and Hon. Sir Frederick Borden and other members of the cabinet sat around the council board and hatched a scheme for government subsidies for cold storage. The very moment they were hatching and bringing out that scheme, Sir Frederick Borden, according to his own letters, was busy getting up a million dollar company in which he had an interest for the very purpose of applying for these government subsidies, which he as a member of the government around the council board was endeavouring to bring in and having intimate and first knowledge that they would be brought in. I think I shall be able to show that in the meantime the minister was working to get in his application. The first intimation we have of this matter comes from the following letter :

L. S. Macoun, General Broker
Ottawa, December 5, 1906.

To be fair and frank in the matter I think L. S. Macoun is a son-in-law of the Minister of Militia and Defence. If that is not denied I will take it for granted and go on with the reading of the letter. It reads:

The Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Understanding that it is the intention,

He knew, he had the knowledge,— —of the Dominion government through the Department of Agriculture, to encourage by financial assistance, the establishment of cold storage warehouses for the preservation of perishable food products, I beg leave on behalf of the ' Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage, Limited,' to apply for, when available, the fullest information on the subject, and covering the conditions to be complied with to obtain what financial assistance or aid the government may decide to grant.

This company, which has received a charter from the Dominion government, was recently incorporated by letters patent, and has a capital stock of $1,000,000. It has secured under option, a suitable site on the deep water front at Halifax, Nova Scotia, which property is intersected by the tracks of the Intercolonial Railway. A site has been secured in St. John, New Brunswick, also on the harbour front and situated at the Canadian Pacific Railway's terminal, whose tracks also intersect the property. On each of the sites it is the intention of the company to erect next spring, a cold storage of adequate capacity and up to date in every particular. They have also in view the possibility of erecting one in Prince Edward Island and in several other locations not now equipped with cold storage.

Trusting that this application will receive your kind consideration.

I have the honour to be sir,
Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) L. S. MACOUN,
Secretary.

That is secretary of the same company I presume. That is all perfectly right. Let us go on to the reply. On December 13, 1906, the following letter is written :

L. S. Macoun, Esq., General Broker,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Macoun,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 5, with reference to the Bill I am introducing to provide better cold storage facilities for perishable products.

I note your application on behalf of 'Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage, Limited,' and shall be glad to furnish you with all the information available when our departmental arrangements are completed. In the meantime I have obtained and beg to send you herewith 'Hansard' report of the debates in the House on the subject up to the present time.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

All of which is open and above board. Later we find a letter of April 11, which I have read, in which Mr. Fisher makes the announcement that Sir Frederick Borden has made an application on behalf of a company with which he is connected and that the minister viewed his application very favourably. I find no record of any application outside of Williams with the exceptions of Macoun's and Macoun's is on behalf of the Canadian Land Produce and Cold Storage, Limited, and I can find no other explanation of this than that the company in behalf of which Mr. Macoun, general broker, made application for information and the like, is the company to which the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture in an incautious moment referred.

Then another name comes in. I find the following letter:

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Sir Frederick Borden requested me to interview you in reference to aid for our cold storage propositions at St. John and Halifax. It is our intention to complete the one in St. John this season.

Taking up the very descriptions given by Mr. Macoun in a previous letter:

When I reached Ottawa Thursday night——

Mind you at the request of Sir Frederick Borden.

—when I reached Ottawa Thursday night I learned from Mr. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to bother you any further in reference to the matter in question. This will explain why I did not interview you in regard to the matter and if any further application or information is required please advise.

That letter is dated April 13. These dates you will remember are the very dates along which Mr. Williams is having his struggle to get an application in, and any chance for a fair consideration of that application:

When I reached Ottawa Thursday night, I learned from Mr. L. S. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to bother you any further in reference to the matter in question. This will explain why I did not interview you in regard to the matter and if any further application or information is required please advise

Yours truly,
R. J. GRAHAM.

We have three names thus far of men busying themselves about the very same proposition, Mr. Macoun, general broker, a son-in-law of the Hon. Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence, Sir Frederick Borden who applied on behalf of the company with which he is connected and Mr. Graham who is requested by Sir Frederick Borden to go up to Ottawa and interview the minister of the department and make things right. He finds when he gets here after his hurried passage, that Mr. Macoun has been ahead of him and that everything is arranged so that he does not need to bother the minister. Then we have this letter of April 16, 1907:

Mr. R. J. Graham,
Belleville, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 13, and note what you state in regard to your visit to Ottawa last Thursday. This is quite satisfactory.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

And there the matter rests for the present. The next occurrence is on June 11, 1907, when this letter is written:

Professor J. A. Ruddick,
Dairy Commissioner,
Department of Agriculture.

Dear Sir,—Herewith I inclose application for cold storage subsidy at St. John, New Brunswick. Attached are all the papers required by the Cold Storage Act, including schedule 'A' filled out as required by the Act, exhibit I showing the insulation contracted for with the Armstrong Cork Company, exhibit II showing plans and specifications for the foundation and superstructure, the former by F. W. Holt, C.E., the latter by Neil Brodie, architect, exhibit III, schedule of rates to be charged, exhibit IV, plan of site showing Intercolonial Railway siding, main building, annex and engine, boiler and machinery room.

Trusting you will find everything in order and awaiting your favourable consideration of my application, believe me,

Yours faithfully,
R. J GRAHAM.

With this are certain plans that are spoken of in the letter. On June 13, 1907, this is acknowledged by Mr. J. A. Ruddick. Then on August 7, 1907, the following letter is written:

L. S. Macoun, General Broker,
Central Chambers, Ottawa, August 7, 1907.
G. F. O'Halloran, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.
Re cold storage warehouse, St. John, N.B.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave on behalf of Mr. R. J. Graham, of Belleville, Ont., to return herewith the original set you loaned me, and of which I have made a duplicate set which is also inclosed.

A few days before Mr. O'Halloran had, in answer to a request from Mr. Macoun, lent him apparently three sets of papers which Mr. Macoun now restores to him :

Should everything not be entirely clear, you would please take up the matter with Mr. Graham, at Belleville, as I may be absent from Ottawa until August.

Believe me,
Yours faithfully,
L. S. MACOUN.

The connection is not at all broken between Mr. Graham and Mr. Macoun. If Mr. Macoun had remained in Ottawa, these communications would go to him, but while he is absent they are to go to Mr. Graham :

August 17, 1907.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, Ottawa,

Dear Sir,—As I have arranged with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company to amalgamate my interests with theirs, re cold storage at the city of St. John, you will be good enough to substitute the name of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company in the agreement instead of my own name, which I trust will be satisfactory to your department.

Yours truly,
R. J. GRAHAM.

The substitution was accepted at once, and so the said R. J. Graham and presumably the said two other gentlemen who are connected with him in these applications became amalgamated with the Cold Storage Company in the city of St. John.

I might state that R. J. Graham, under instructions, went to St. John and Halifax and procured the sites that were spoken of in the first letter by Mr. Macoun and afterwards referred to by Mr. Graham. The site he got in the city of St. John was on the west side of the harbour, but the Intercolonial Railway objected that that would not inure to its benefit. A certain amount of work took place and what happened ? The Intercolonial Railway, having acquired a piece of land in St. John for which it paid $8,415, leased that land for a period from 1907 to 1970 to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company—no, to Mr. Graham —for $250 per year with exemption from taxation during that time, and put an amount of extra work on it to the sum of some $4,000 or $5,000 in addition. That lease was given—carrying with it exemption from taxation from 1907 to 1970—at the small rental of $250 per year, giving the company possibly the most eligible site in the city of St. John for its establishment. In the end an amalgamation took place. The New Brunswick Cold Storage Company amalgamated its interests with these others, and that property went through various transformation until at last Mr. Graham, who first became possessed of the lease, assigned it to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, and that amalgamated company made it over to the government of New Brunswick. And then the government of New Brunswick leased it to the Cold Storage Company. There was some significance, I suppose, in that. Possibly it was to give the New Brunswick government some lien for the financial aid which they had given. And so, the assignment having been properly made, we go a little further :

New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, Ltd.,

Now full fledged.

Office of the secretary treasurer, Central Chambers, Ottawa, September 16, 1907.

G. F. O'Halloran, Esq.,
Deputy Minister Dept. of Agriculture,

Dear Sir, We beg to return herewith the rough copy of agreement which we have submitted to our directors, and which met with their acceptance, as you will note from copy of the resolution herewith inclosed.

Believe us yours faithfully,
The New Brunswick Cold Storage Coy., Ltd.,
L. S. MACOUN,
Secretary Treasurer.

On the next page we have the resolution of the directors in the city of St. John on the 12th September :

Moved by Mr. Geo. McAvity, seconded by Judge Trueman, that the president and secretary treasurer, shall execute on behalf of this company an agreement with His Majesty's Minister of Agriculture for Canada, whereby to the fulfilment thereof, this company shall receive the subsidy provided in the Cold Storage Act.

R. J. GRAHAM, President,
GEO. McAVITY, Vice. Pres.
L. S. MACOUN, Secy. Treas.
ARTHUR J, TRUEMAN, Director.
H. R. ROSS, Director.

So the matter stood, in its completed form, in that position. Now trouble began. Mr. Williams was not satisfied with the way he had been treated and he determined if possible to ascertain whether that sort of thing should go on. The order in council was passed on a memo. dated the 2nd August, 1907, from the Minister of Agriculture submitting :

That an application has been received from the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, Limited, of St. John, for a subsidy under the Cold Storage Act for having agreed to build a cold storage warehouse in the province of New Brunswick.

The minister goes on to state that the plans, specifications, &c., are all satisfactory, and the order in council authorizes a contract to be entered into between this company and the government, by which the government, when certain conditions are fulfilled, agree to give a subsidy of $30,000. Section 8 of the agreement provides :

That the minister shall be a director and a subsidy not exceeding in the whole 30 per cent of the amount expended and approved of in the construction and equipment of the said warehouse, payable in installments as follows.

It is not necessary to follow out the installments. The main point I wish to bring out is this—that a contract is authorized by order in council and that by section 8, the minister is to pay a subsidy, not exceeding in the whole 30 per cent of the amount expended and approved of in the construction and equipment of the said warehouse.

Now, this was to cost a certain amount. But since that the plea has been put forward—and, I believe, substantiated—that it is to cost a great deal more. In that case, a subsidy of 30 per cent would mean a subsidy of a much larger amount. I have seen it stated that the cost will be at least $150,000. Of course, I am saying nothing against the plant; I believe it is a very complete and excellent one and starts with fine business prospects. But, if it cost $150,000, a subsidy of 30 per cent would represent $45,000. And, of course, that is only part of the aid given. The New Brunswick government, I understand, has had legislation passed to guarantee the principal and interest of a certain proportion of the bonds, running up, I understand, to $60,000. I am not sure that that is the exact figure. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will——

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is secured by first mortgage.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. What I am pointing out is that, on the basis of cost I have given, the subsidy would be $45,000, and they have also the guarantee of the provincial government of both principal and interest to the amount of $60,000 more, making $105,000 in all. Of course the local government protects itself by a first lien upon the whole property.

Now, as I have said, Mr. Williams took the ground that he, a business man, ought not to have met with the competition of a cabinet minister in seeking a subsidy which was the benefaction, so to speak, of the government of which the cabinet minister was a member. He, therefore, commenced to make the pen warm. He wrote, as he had promised he would, to the Prime Minister. And I think I cannot do better than read that letter:

St. John, N.B., August 15, 1907.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—The writer, F. E. Williams, made application to your government early in 1906 for a bonus for a bait freezer in St. John, similar to those erected in Canso and Halifax. The bonus given to Canso and Halifax bait freezers was 50 per cent of the first cost, the game not to exceed $60,000, and $2,000 a year for three years, making a totaal bonus of $36,000 on a cost of $60,00. The proprietors of these freezers agreed to keep frozen bait on hand to supply the fishermen during the warm weather when fresh bait was not obtainable. All the conditions that apply to the Canso and Halifax would apply to St. John for the benefit of the fisheries in the Bay of Fundy, St. John being the headquarters for bait supply.

After discussing the matter with Hon. Mr. Emmerson and Hon. Mr. Brodeur both by personal interviews and letters during 1906, I received the inclosed letter (No. 1) from Hon. Mr. Emmerson. Mr. Trueman mentioned in this letter is my solicitor who accompanied me to Ottawa interviewing the ministers. The last of December, 1906, Hon. Mr. Emmerson, being in St. John assured me that there would be sufficient money in the estimate to cover the bait freezer in St. John, and that he would soon send me a telegram to go to Ottawa for the purpose of closing the contract with the government. I received the telegram about the 9th of January, 1907, and at once proceeded to Ottawa. I was met by Sir Frederick Borden and his son-in-law, Mr. Macoun. They informed me that they had a scheme of building a cold storage and that Hon. Mr. Fisher promised them a grant, which would be forthcoming when the Cold Storage Act was passed, and wanted me to abandon my scheme and come in with them. Sir Frederick Borden made a proposition to me, which I thought was very unfair coming from a minister of the Crown. He also said to me in the parliament buildings that he would have influence enough to have my proposition sidetracked and that Hon. Mr. Fisher would give him the grant for his cold storage scheme. While in Ottawa I urged Hon. Mr. Emmerson to endeavour to close a contract, but I could see that matters were being delayed, and he advised me to return to St. John, promising that he would not allow this scheme of Sir Frederick Borden to interfere with my proposition.

Sir Frederick Borden formed a company about October, 1906, called 'The Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company.' It looks very much as if he formed this company about the time Hon. Mr. Fisher's Cold Storage Act was talked over in council and that this company was formed for the purpose of getting these grants, which the government would make.

Sir Frederick Borden visited St. John the last of December, 1906, and I inclose you a newspaper clipping——

Which, by the way, is not brought down.

—which shows that he was looking after cold storage business in St. John. He induced Mr. George McAvity to back him up in this city. Mr. McAvity was to use his influence with the local New Brunswick government to have the bonds of Sir Frederick Borden's company guaranteed to the extent of $60,000 and Sir Frederick Borden was to get a $30,000 grant through Hon. Mr. Fisher's department at Ottawa. Sir Frederick Borden told me while in Ottawa that he did not expect this cold storage to cost over $75,000 or $80,000 and they would get $90,000——

That is $60,000 and $30,000, you see.

—out of the government and make a construction profit besides owning the freezer. I wrote Hon. Mr. Emmerson and Hon. Mr. Fisher very strongly, and I inclose you copies of the letters I sent them. They are now erecting this cold storage warehouse in this city. I cannot think that you are aware of the facts in connection with this transaction, or that you can approve of a minister of the Crown deriving aid from the government for the furtherance of the interests of a company in which he is so largely interested. I appeal to you to frustrate the scheme and to put me in a position to make application for a grant for a frigerator that cannot be criticised in the way Sir Frederick Borden's can be.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

And here is the letter he incloses.

Ottawa, November 19, 1906.

Dear Mr. Williams,—Your letter of October 17, was acknowledged merely. Since then I have been working on the matter. I gather from your present letter that you have doubts as to my giving you support in this matter. In this you do me an injustice. There are ways and ways of doing things and it is not desirable to have to secure concessions from my colleagues at the point of the bayonet. Failure is likely to accompany such procedure. My methods have been more successful than those you suggest. It does not do to be too impatient as to bringing about results. Let me say that there is likely to be placed in the estimates a provision for bait freezers to cover your proposals. Mr. Brodeur has given me great encouragement, and I hope before session closes to be able to invite you to Ottawa to enter into a contract which I trust will be mutually satisfactory. There is no present necessity for either you or Mr. Trueman coming to Ottawa.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) H. R. EMMERSON.

P. E. Williams, Esq.,
St. John, N.B.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that the Trueman who figured after as Judge Trueman?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether this is the judge or the solicitor. Judge Trueman has since died.

Mr. DANIEL. This is the judge, and a member of the firm of Pugsley & Trueman. He was in the cold storage company.

Mr. FOWLER. His name appears there for another man.

Mr. FOSTER. And here is another letter:

Ottawa, January 7, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 5th instant. I had received some information which is set forth in the clipping you inclose. I have been in communication, and am now, with Mr. Brodeur on the subject. I consider the two propositions quite distinct.

Yours faithfully
(Sgd.) H. R. EMMERSON.

F. E. Williams, Esq.,
St. John, N.B.

Now, when that letter to the premier came the fat was in the fire and there began to be some little stir. Two letters were written, which I think must be put on the pages of 'Hansard,' one of which I find at page 74 of this return.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there any answer to that letter of Mr. Williams to the Prime Minister?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and I will read it now. That letter was written to Sir Wilfrid on the 15th of August, 1907, when he was in the old country, and it was answered when he came back, on the 5th of October, 1907.

Dear Sir,—Adverting to your letter of the 15th of August last in reference to the grant of a subsidy to aid the establishment of a cold storage warehouse at St John, New Brunswick, I have gone fully into the matter, and find that on the 8th of April last you were advised to the Minister of Agriculture in reply to your inquiry as to whether your application for this purpose would be granted, that he could not make any promises without definite plans and specifications, and full information as to what the people applying were prepared to do, none of which had you furnished.

Yet at that very time the letter of Mr. Fisher, very pronounced with reference to Sir Frederick Borden's application, and his very favourable view of it, is on record.

Mr. FOWLER. And he refused to tell this man when he asked the question if the thing was still open?

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly.

On the 7th of June last, during the absence of the minister you were advised by his deputy in reply to your inquiry of the 3rd of the same month, that if you would submit your application it would receive due consideration.

That was the letter that contained the answer, the final request and appeal of Mr. Williams, who wanted to know, if he went to the expense of putting in plans and specifications, would his application get fair consideration.

It appears that in the meantime you had been supplied with forms for making the aplication in accordance with the regulations made under the Cold Storage Act.

Which was true.

It was the intention of the Minister of Agriculture, should your application be filed, to consider it in connection with that of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, the one on whose behalf Sir Frederick Borden had interested himself——

There again the Prime Minister declares that Sir Frederick Borden was interested in this company.

—and recommend the granting of the subsidy to the applicant whose scheme seemed the more in the public interest.

But the Minister of Agriculture had already indicated his preference, he was very favourably disposed to Sir Frederick Borden. The minister, Sir Frederick Borden, was here. In fact, if we are to believe the letter which was written and which I have read, when Mr. Graham came up from Brockville and interviewed the minister, he had been preceded by Mr. Macoun who had been told that everything had been made all right, that there was no need of bothering himself any more about it. The scant comfort which would come from this reply of the minister would be quite apparent.

In order that you might have ample opportunity to file your application no action was taken on that of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company until late in August, on the favourable report of the expert officer of the Department of Agriculture, made after careful consideration and examination of the plans, specifications and proposed operation of the establishment, and there being no other application before the department from St. John, it was decided to give a subsidy to that company.

Making it absolutely impossible for a man to compete, and therefore to put in his plans and the like of that, and then telling him that there was no other, and that therefore it was given to the one that was there.

I need hardly add that the application was dealt with by the Department of Agriculture without regard to the personal of the applicants or those associated with them, nor that your application would have received the same consideration as was given to that of the successful applicants if you had seen fit to file it.

Yours very sincerely,

WILFRID LAURIER.

Now on page 74 and following pages, I find two distinct apologies. 74 is the apology of Mr. Macoun. This matter had come before the minister, it was growing a little warm, it was known that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was on his way back and would soon be here; and so Mr. L. S. Macoun, general broker, Central Chambers, Ottawa, on September 16, 1907, wrote Mr. Fisher:

Dear Mr. Fisher,—I inclose herewith a clipping from the St. John 'Globe' of August 26, signed by 'An Onlooker.' I have no doubt in my mind, judging from the letter, that it was written or inspired by Mr. Frank Williams, of that city.

All I know about Mr. Williams is that he came to Ottawa to interview the Marine Department in the hopes of securing aid towards erecting a bait freezer along the lines of the aid granted the Halifax Cold Storage Company by the above department. Whether the fact leaked out that he was more interested in a pork packing establishment which he owns, than in bait for fishermen, I cannot say. All I know is that he was not successful in his quest. It was on this occasion that I met him for the first and last time. I must confess that I was not in any way prepossessed in his favour, in fact quite the reverse.

What a set back for Mr. Williams.

I told him on this occasion that I was interested in a company which had applied to your department for aid in erecting a cold storage warehouse which would be a public utility, and that to some extent our interests were the same. At first he was inclined to entirely ignore our right to intrude upon what he considered was his own territory. However, later on, he decided to make a proposition that he should be the president and managing director of our company and have full control of the building operations, and have full say in its future management. To this, of course, we could not agree, as Mr. Williams knows nothing whatever about the management of cold storage warehouses, and in addition we had already engaged the services of a very practical man, viz., Mr. R. J. Graham, of Belleville, Ontario.

So Mr. Macoun now reduced the active promoters down to two, himself and the Minister of Militia, and they hired Mr. Graham as a practical man to come in and do the business.

Since then I have had no further correspondence with Mr. Williams. I understand, however, that this man took serious umbrage on learing we could not entertain his proposition, and has done his best to thwart us on all occasions. Our first unpleasantness with him was when we applied to the city council of St. John, New Brunswick, for certain privileges which they had already granted others who once, some years ago, had like objects in view. He went to the council meeting and there used the most offensive and abusive language conceivable, stating that it was a most questionable and undesirable undertaking, and that those interested, including Sir Frederick Borden and others——

Admitting again that Sir Frederick Borden is one of those that were interested.

—were only interested in promoting the company and securing promotion expenses, government grants, and contractors' profits. In fact, he behaved in such an abominable manner as to warrant an action to libel. His statements, needless to say, are of course, without any foundation, but they had for the moment the effect of prejudicing the St. John city council against the undertaking. They, however, informed Mr. Williams that if he had any proposition to make they would be pleased to receive it in writing. He had stated at the meeting that he neither required or expected any exemption from taxation, or a free site, that he was prepared with his own money to build and operate a cold storage building, and did not seek civic, government or other aid. The council, however, waited in vain for any written proposition from Mr. Williams——

What written proposition could they get from Mr. Williams when he had no look in for the government subsidy, and therefore could not be expected to carry it on at his own costs and charges. Bear in mind that the company had got the subsidy from this government, they had got also a guarantee from the New Brunswick government, and they had got also a valuable site upon which to establish cold storage plant. Therefore, they had everything; Mr. Williams was simply out in the cold.

The council, however, waited in vain for any written proposition from Mr. Williams, so granted us ten years exemption from taxation, and offered us a very valuable site at $250 a year. We heard nothing further of Mr. Williams until August 28th, when I received a letter from Mr. Geo. McAvity, who is the vice-president of our company, forwarding me the inclosed clipping with the remark that he was 'not aware that any cabinet minister or any ex-premier was financially interested in our undertaking.' The minister referred to is Sir Frederick Borden, and the ex-premier, the Hon. Dr. Pugsley, neither of whom have purchased or been given or even subscribed for stock in our company.

I can, to some extent, understand Mr. Williams' annoyance in the matter, knowing how he has failed to provide for his own private pork packing establishment, a cold storage plant largely at the expense of the Dominion government, but I cannot understand why he should seek by every unfair means in his power, to cast slurs upon our undertaking, and make the base insinuations he has in private and in public from time to time made.

I trust you will forgive the liberty I am taking in bringing this matter to your attention. I think in doing so, it is only fair to your department and to ourselves.

Believe me,
Yours faithfully,
L. S. MACOUN.

The Hon. Sydney A. Fisher, M.P.,
Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Then follows, with reference to the cold storage episode, a clipping from the St. John 'Globe' which carries out the matter just about as I have stated it. On September 26, there is the following letter :

L. S. Macoun, Esq., General Broker,
Central Chambers, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Macoun,—I have yours of September 16th, informing me about Mr. Williams. I have seen some letters of his, addressed to my department, and others through which he has been trying to balk your company's contract with the department. There is nothing in anything he has said which in any way justify refusing to enter into a contract with your company.

Mr. Williams was told by Mr. O'Halloran himself, that if he had any proposition to make it would be fairly and properly considered. He has made none. We, therefore, cannot recognize him at all. I think I understand the situation fully.

Your sincerely,
SYDNEY FISHER.

Ottawa, January 22, 1908.

Dear Fisher,—My attention has just been called for the first time to certain letters of one F. E. Williams of St. John, N.B., addressed to the Prime Minister, yourself and Mr. Emmerson, respectively, with reference to cold storage construction at St. John, N.B. I am glad you have given me the opportunity of seeing these letters so that I may prepare a brief answer.

First let me say that the letters are full of untruths and misrepresentations. I saw Mr. Williams here some time last winter and he was introduced to me by Mr. Emmerson. I had then, as you know, been engaged for four or five months in endeavouring to establish a company with a million dollars capital, to take up cold storage and other important matters connected therewith.

It is the minister himself who says that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why, certainly.

Mr. FOSTER (reading) :

I understood Mr. Williams was in pursuit of a grant for a bait freezer similar to the one already established at Halifax. In company with Mr. Brodeur, Mr. Emmerson and yourself, I heard Mr. Williams present his case in that behalf. I never understood that he intended to take up the question of cold storage in a general way.

Than which nothing could have been more patent from the letters of Mr. Williams himself which I have just read and which are on file.

His doing so must have been an afterthought.

The very first letter that he wrote, in October, 1905, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shows that his scheme was to do a commercial cold storage business and a bait freezing cold storage business and he never wavered in that plan from that time.

His doing so much have been an afterthought. I never made a proposal to him of any kind or description and never had the slightest intention of becoming associated with him in any respect whatever. In the summer of 1906, Mr. R. J. Graham, of Belleville, Ont., and others, including myself, procurred a Dominion charter with authorized capital of a million dollars for a company called the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage, Limited, above referred to.

There is a complete vindication of the statement made by Mr. Macoun, of the statement made by Mr. Graham, and of the statements made by Mr. Williams.

This charter was taken by some people in England who expected to be able to float it and advance certain sums of money to be paid over during the spring and summer of 1907.

On several occasions in 1906 I discussed the question of cold storage establishments at Halifax and St. John with you as well as with the provincial authorities both at Halifax and St. John. Mr. R. J. Graham, with whom you are acquainted, was here on most of those occasions and discussed the question fully with you after having visited both Halifax and St. John during 1906. Mr. Graham, as you know, is an expert in cold storage and has been familiar with the business for the last ten or fifteen years. He was appointed manager of the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Ltd., and the initial steps taken at St. John and Halifax in respect of cold storage were in the interest of that company.

Now, I think nothing could be plainer than that.

I left for England to attend the Colonial Conference about the 5th of April, and had nothing to do with the cold storage matter until after my return in June, when I found that Mr. Graham—

Who had been hired by this company, according to Mr. Macoun.

—had begun operations in St. John in the expectation that funds would be forthcoming from England in connection with the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Ltd.

That, I may say, is a complete sustainment of the position which has been taken by Mr. Williams and which was disclosed in the first part of this correspondence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps you had better read the rest of the letter.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I will read the rest of the letter.

About this time Mr. Graham concluded an arrangement with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, a company which had been chartered many years before by the New Brunswick legislature. I need not trouble you with any further details as you are quite familiar with all that has taken place since that time. I am not a member of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and have no connection with it whatever except that I have done all I could to assist the company in carrying on its work largely because I am greatly interested in the business of fruit growing in the Annapolis and Cornwallis valley and because I feel sure that a cold storage establishment at St. John will be of immense advantage in exporting fruit from that valley.

I will be glad to have this letter included in the return which you are bringing down.

F. W. BORDEN,

As far as reading from the documents is concerned that ends the presentation of it.

Mr. HAGGART. Whose letter is that?

Mr. FOSTER. That letter is signed by F. W. Borden and is addressed to the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, and is acknowledged on the 24th January, 1908, by Mr. Sydney Fisher himself, Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not present during the reading of the correspondence, but as I came in I heard my name mentioned in some way in connection with the company. Is there any statement to the effect that I was interested in the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, in any way?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I do not think there is any statement connecting the hon. gentleman's name in the whole correspondence, except the letter written by Mr. Macoun who refers both to Sir Frederick Borden and the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As being interested in the incorporation as it is stated?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He refers to Williams' letters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rather inferred from Mr. Macoun's letter that somebody had written to the effect that I was interested. that while I, as a member of the provincial government, for a great many years took a deep interest in endeavouring to have a cold storage warehouse erected at New Brunswick and also at other points in New Brunswick, I never had any interest, direct or indirect, in the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, or in any other.

Mr. FOSTER. In so far as the correspondence goes I do not think it says so. The strongest interpretation that could be put on Macoun's letter is that it had been stated that the hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) was interested.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He was quoting a statement published in a paper in St. John, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. I set myself to find out when this company was incorporated and who incorporated it. As I had the statement of the Minister of Militia that he and Graham and others were interested in getting up this one million dollar company, I searched the files of the 'Canada Gazette' faithfully, but I could not find it. The only thing I did find was that on October 13, 1906, that is, in the fall of 1906, about the time that this legislation was being perfected ready for the House and about the time the minister says he was for four or five months trying to get up a company, a company called the Canada Lands and Farm Produce Company was incorporated, the incorporators being L. J. Miller, Hezekiah McKeown Mosher, John Hainy Hearn, Willard Hill Fulton, Joseph Burke Kenny. That is the nearest approach I could make to the facts and I do not find the name of one of these gentlemen. It may be that these were the names of clerks used for the purpose of getting incorporation and that when the incorporation had been secured the company was made over to the gentlemen themselves. I suppose that was probably it. Any way it shows about the only modest step in the whole proceedings taken by the Minister of Militia and Defence, that he did not want to put his own name outright as being the incorporator of a company which was asking a subsidy for himself and a company of which he was a member.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not the reason. I cannot for the moment think of the name of lawyers in Halifax who procured the charter, but this firm, as usual, took the names of their own clerks in the office.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very often done, and then the company was organized.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Organized after that.

Mr. FOSTER. Now what seems to be the dominant features in this transaction? I shall summarize very briefly. We find that in 1906 a minister of the Crown interests himself in the formation of a million dollar company for the purpose of carrying on cold storage on a commercial basis, that he gets that company formed, that on October 13, a charter is taken out and it is incorporated. During the very same time he is sitting at the council board maturing a scheme for government subsidies to cold storage plants, and he himself states, and it is also stated with reference to him, that his company is an applicant from the very first time that an application could be put in for that subsidy. The minister at the end says: There is nothing left now but the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and I own no stock in that. But what was the intention and purpose of the minister? That million dollar company was formed, it was proposed to float it in England. What circumstance would help to float it in England? Do you mean to tell me that anybody would attempt to float that in England unless he made all use possible of the elements that would secure confidence? And what would be the prime elements? The promoter would say the government of the Dominion have passed an Act or they have settled upon an Act and are going to pass it, by which they will give 30 per cent of the total cost of construction and equipment as a subsidy to a cold storage company. This is the cold storage company that I am promoting in London, and I want to tell you further that one of the prime persons interested in that company is Sir Frederick Borden, a member of this very government which is responsible for this subsidy and which will therefore carry out this legislation. Put those two elements together and you have the elements which, under favourable conditions, would have floated that company. Take this into account and Mr. Macoun for this company, Mr. Graham an employee of this company, Sir Frederick Borden himself as testified to by the Minister of Agriculture as one prominently interested in that company, have all made application to the government for a subsidy for their cold storage plant. Sir, it is a thing which would be unheard of in the annals of the British government for any cabinet minister to engage in anything like that. Why, Sir, I remember a few years ago when Mr. Mundella, a man against whose honour there was not a single stain of any kind, being indirectly connected with a company which had made some sales to the British government, felt that he could not excuse himself and he immediately resigned from the government rather than place the government in a wrong position by that indirect connection. But here is a minister who openly, in the light of day, works to bring about a scheme, helps to carry the scheme in parliament and all the time that he is doing that is working up a million dollar company in order that he may get a subsidy from the government of which he is a member, and under whose auspices this is brought forth, and it was only by the accident that the money was not raised in Great Britain to float that company that when he came back and found Mr. Graham busily at work all summer buying lots, getting ready to build, getting material under the assumption that the money would be got in Great Britain that he joined with Mr. McAvity and they amalgamated their interests in the cold storage company. But the animus, if I may so speak, the intent certainly is shown in the open, full, unqualified way in which the minister went to work first to make legislation and secondly to incorporate a company in which he himself was largely interested in order to get a subsidy and therefore to partake of the benefit. I say that is not the thing for a cabinet minister to do. I care not whether the cabinet minister is as innocent as the babe unborn, or whether there are other charges against him with reference to other transactions in the public domain which are debatable to say the least. But that is the state of things with reference to this minister, and I think it would be a graceful act in the minister himself, even at this late day, to cease to compromise his colleagues any longer, and to resign from the government on account of that transaction.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, so the hon. gentleman demands my resignation.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I suggest it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is himself qualified to pose or act as censor of public morals in this House or in this country. The hon. gentleman has spent three hours, or two hours and a half, this afternoon, in endeavouring to bring forward correspondence, to draw inferences, and to make statements prejudical to my character and reputation. The hon. gentleman is very fertile in seeing wrong-doing in others. The hon. gentleman seems to live in a sort of hallucination that there is nothing but evil in the people surrounding him. He has doubts even about some of the people in his own party. He certainly had a few years ago, when his former leader designated him as the chief of a nest of traitors.

Mr. BENNETT. But they resigned.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman seems to be very suspicious. But, Mr. Speaker, assuming that every word that he has said to-day is true—and scarcely a word of it is true in its application—I would like this House to consider whether at its worst it is to be compared for one moment with the position of a man who succeeds in placing himself in a position of trust in a company and then succeeds in placing himself in another position connected with another company, and then engages in the delightful occupation of buying for the company of which he is manager, and taking a commission which comes out of the hard savings and earnings of the people of this country, in connection with one of the large insurance companies, and putting that commission into his own pocket.

Mr. FOSTER. All of which is——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. All of which is absolutely true.

Mr. FOSTER—is absolutely untrue.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And was proved by the record of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. It was never proved and never can be proved from any record.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Prove it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The book is open. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the Minister of Justice in his place in this House proved it absolutely, and he knows that he failed to answer it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, he says what I know. I think I know what I know myself. I know nothing of the kind that he says I do. The Minister of Justice never proved the assertion the Minister of Militia and Defence has now made, and what is more, he cannot prove it. I challenged him to meet me before my own people in the city of Toronto and assert what he asserted in this House. I make the same challenge to my hon. friend now, if he will take it up.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He does not need to take it up, because it is done. It is an accomplished fact, and everybody in this House and out of it knows that it is an accomplished fact. The hon. gentleman is very bold. The hon. gentleman has two peculiarities at least. One is that he cannot see any good in anybody but himself, and he is incapable of seeing any harm in himself. He is mentally crooked, as well as morally crooked.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. Not that I care, Mr. Speaker,——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I withdraw that word.

Mr. FOSTER—what this gentleman says of me, but I am bound to respect my position as a member, and I ask that that be retracted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say that the hon. gentleman is neither mentally nor morally crooked, in a parliamentary sense—how is that? But possibly in a Pickwickian sense he might be.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, there is not a great deal of point in that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, however true the statement made by the Minister of Justice in this House a year ago may be—and I believe it is absolutely true—that the hon. gentleman abused his position—or utilized his position, perhaps would be more parliamentary—in order to act in two or three different capacities to his own pecuniary advantage, it has nothing to do with the case before the House. I grant that, and the fact that he may not be all that he professes to be, and all that we would wish he might be, the case having been brought here, it is necessary for me to make a few observations with reference to it, and I propose to do so.

Now, I think the hon. gentleman has gone very much out of his way to endeavour to bring a charge against a fellow member of this House. I would think that he ought rather to assume that the thing which he professes to believe here to-day is not true rather than to have rushed——

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. gentleman did in the case of Colonel Worthington.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What is that? I do not remember.

Mr. FOSTER. If you had taken that advice, you would not have made the vitrolic personal attack that you made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what I might expect from an eighteenth century knight.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose the hon. gentleman makes some reference to the Nineteenth Century, does he? If he does, I do not suppose he can take any particular credit for that. The Nineteenth Century saw fit to make a charge against me and has withdrawn it and apologized. If that is what the hon. gentleman refers to, if he sees fit to do the same, I will endeavour to treat him in the same way. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says in effect that I have, in my position as a minister of the Crown and a member of the cabinet, procured the passing of a law by which a special grant or subsidy was to be given for cold storage to the extent of 30 per cent of the cost of the cold storage building, to be spread over a considerable number of years. Well, the hon. gentleman does me an injustice on the one hand, and does me altogether too great credit on the other hand. I am not so all-powerful even from selffish motives, as the hon. gentleman would think.

Mr. FOSTER. I take it back.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not believe that in his heart, badly as he may think of me, he believes that I would set myself at work in the cabinet to do a thing of that kind. But if he did have that opinion of me, I can assure him with absolute truth that I do not possess over my honourable and honoured leader and over my colleagues of the cabinet any such extraordinary power. The cabinet of this country, as far as I have had experience—and I have been in it for twelve years—conducts its business from broad public motives, and in this particular matter of cold storage, everybody knows that in this House for years and years, hon. gentlemen on the opposition side of the House and hon. gentlemen sitting on this side have advocated a greater encouragement to cold storage in Canada. Everybody knows how important it is to the best interests of Canada—to the butter, the cheese, the fish, the meat and the fruit industries—that cold storage should be developed as rapidly as possible. And so my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), having been besieged and argued with in this House and out of it to do more than was being done in order to aid cold storage generally, felt that it was time some stand should be taken, and altogether independent of me, except in so far as I may be a humble member of that cabinet, this policy was brought down after most careful consideration. But I had no more to do with it than any other member of the cabinet, and the cabinet acted solely in deference to public opinion throughout the country. So much for that.

As to this particular cold storage establishment, we have been told a great deal about a man named Williams who applied some years ago for a subsidy for a bait freezer. He said he was engaged in the fish business in St. John, though it turned out he was engaged in the pork business. He wished to get from the Department of Marine and Fisheries a grant—not of thirty—but of fifty per cent in order to enable him to freeze bait and carry on his own line of business. In other words, he wished to be given a system of cold storage which would subsidize directly his own line of business and not a cold storage on a large scale which would be a great advantage to the foreign export as well as the local business, but be of far less importance to the local than to the export trade. Mr. Williams wanted something which would particularly benefit his own line of business and he made certain applications and had certain negotiations with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). But owing to a change of policy in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Williams failed to get what he wanted; and not being pleased, he endeavoured to solace himself by abusing me. Seeing that even he could not get something for nothing, he published in the newspapers some very abusive articles against me, and he sent to the First Minister the letter which was read by the hon. gentleman and in which I am abused very severely. Let me say, as I have said in a letter which I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture and which the hon. gentleman read, that Mr. Williams' statements, from beginning to end, are absolutely and utterly without foundation, and I shall not waste further time upon him beyond saying that he is an unworthy disappointed man, and being unworthy and disappointed, indulged in these letters and articles against me, which have so delighted the hon. gentleman.

The hon. gentleman was in Nova Scotia last summer. He did me the honour, in the beginning of this session, to point out that he saw my family riding somewhere in an official car. That was about the time this man Williams was concocting his letters. Mr. Williams puts forth the same idea in his letters that the hon. gentleman has expressed to-day, namely, that I had procured from this government the adoption of this policy of aiding cold storage simply and solely to benefit myself and put this 30 per cent subsidy in my own pocket. Well, the hon. gentleman is welcome to all the satisfaction he can get out of those letters. I can easily understand that that kind of man and that kind of letter will delight the hon. gentleman, but I doubt if he will find many others who will be particularly pleased with the unfair, dishonest and dishonourable statements this man has made. I dismiss his statements with an absolute denial, and I shall be prepared, if it should be thought worth while by the hon. gentleman to submit this case to any other tribunal, to go on oath and make my answer to any charges brought by Williams or anybody else in his behalf. So much for the first charge, that I procured the passing of this legislation for my own benefit. Where is the proof? Where are the benefits? Has the hon. gentleman been able to show that I have in any way participated in anything that could by any possibility be a benefit to me? The hon. gentleman has rung the changes upon the fact that my son-in-law, Mr. L. S. Macoun, happens to be connected with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and with another company which was incorporated and in which I had an interest, although I had no interest, and never expect to have any, in the Cold Storage Company. Is my son-in-law to be prevented from engaging in legitimate business because he happens to be my son-in-law? He was in similar business before he came to my house, and I know of no reason why he should be punished and deprived of the means of getting a livelihood because he happens to be connected with my family. I have observed questions on the paper and notices in the Public Accounts Committee this session which would indicate that certain gentlemen think that because Mr. Macoun is my son-in-law and happens to get an occasional contract from the public service —if he has got one—there must be something improper in it. I am quite willing that the fullest investigation should be made. But surely I am not to be asked to deprive my son-in-law of the means of earning an honest livelihood because he happens to have married into my family. So much for the son-in-law argument.

I observe that the hon. gentleman made some reference to a company for which, he says, I procured a charter in 1906, and with great diligence he has hunted up the names. And he saw something very mysterious and terrible in the fact that the names were not very well known. I tell him that the names were those of the clerks in the law firm which procured this incorporation. The firm was that of Drysdale and McGinnis. Mr. McGinnis is one of the most prominent Conservatives in Nova Scotia, a man of the highest honour and one to whose business capacity and business methods the hon. member (Mr. Foster) will not take exception. While I was in England in 1906 application was made under instructions given by me and Mr. Graham jointly for the incorporation of a company. It was intended, I may say at once and frankly, that my properties in Kings county, orchards and farms should be made a part of this company, and Mr. Graham, of Belleville, I believe, a prominent Conservative, a great fruit dealer and well up in cold storage and all matters pertaining to agriculture, was to have taken an interest and to put his properties into the company in the same way as mine were to be put in, and we were to accept bonds and a certain amount of stock for these properties. It was expected that money would be raised in England to carry on the business, and it was expected also that a portion of the money would undoubtedly be invested in the establishment of cold storage plants in different parts of Canada. Was there anything wrong in that? Was there anything highly improper in that? This was all arranged before it was expected that any policy such as that afterwards decided upon would be brought down by the government. When the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to adopt the policy of aiding, somewhat largely, cold storage. I felt that, so far as I was concerned, it would be undesirable for me to own stock in any company which was receiving from the government a subsidy, although, under the law, I do not know that it would have been. I would not have been going beyond my right in doing so. Then it was that I told Mr. Graham that some other means must be taken to carry on the cold storage project in the city of St. John and elsewhere. Mr. Graham made arrangements with a company already established, or, if not established, at least incorporated, known as the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. He made arrangements with the government to secure for that company the necessary bonus which any cold storage company complying with the requirements of the law would be entitled to. Mr. Williams thinks he did not receive fair treatment. Mr. Williams never made a serious application. He never filed plans in accordance with the requirements of the Department of Agriculture. My own opinion—without wishing to reflect upon Mr. Williams—is that he never intended seriously to construct anything like the kind of cold storage establishment which is now in existence to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself is not able to take exception, and with which he finds no fault. My own opinion is that Mr. Williams never intended seriously to do more than provide something which he could put up under his own roof and control in connection with his business. What is this cold storage plant established at St. John? I am told that it is one of the most creditable, if not absolutely the most up-to-date establishment of its kind on this continent; that it has cost $160,000 or $170,000; that it is already doing a considerable business, and that it is being utilized for the business of transatlantic export. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that I am interested. Well, Sir, I am interested; and I want to appeal to you and to this House as to whether there was anything underhand in the matter. The hon. gentleman says that this is done openly. Certainly, it is done openly; there has been no desire or intention to conceal anything—there has been nothing to conceal. I have said I am interested. What was my interest? My interest was to endeavour to provide the means at St. John—as I hope may be provided also at Halifax later on—by which the fruit that is yearly grown in the valley of which I am a citizen the great Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys, can be cared for and held in cold storage safely, so that the people who grow that fruit may get the benefit of the best prices in the English market. Consider what happened last year. Thousands and tens of thousands—yes, hundreds of thousands—of barrels of the best fruit were sacrificed because of arrival in England at a moment when the market was unfavourable. The fruit had to be shipped early; it could not be held, there being no means of keeping it. I have reason to know now that scores of people who were compelled last year to ship their fruit in this way—not only from my own province but from the west—will take advantage of this means of keeping the fruit and so tempering the market and shipping as the demand may exist for the goods in England. Mr. Speaker, the shipment of fruit from Ontario is a most important industry. In the winter months. the great port of Montreal, to which a great deal of the fruit is shipped up to December is closed. The fruit must go to the United States in order to be shipped, and, in transit from Ontario to Portland or Boston the fruit is frequently frozen. Two years ago this involved an enormous loss to the growers and dealers of Ontario. Under the present arrangement, I am told, tens of thousands of barrels will be taken to St. John in November or the early part of December, before the frosts become serious, and there stored to be shipped during the winter months. This is the interest and the only interest that I have in this cold storage establishment. I do not own one dollar of stock; I have never received one dollar of benefit. I never expect or intend to hold one dollar of stock; I never expect to receive one single dollar of benefit. I have done this in my position as a public man and a minister because I thought I was doing right, and I do not fear the closest examination into what I have done. It remained for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) with his suspicious mind trained—trained, Mr. Speaker—as there has been ample proof, in directions not always the most open and frank; it remained for this gentleman to see this spectre of malfeasance and of failure to perform my duty in connection with my position. I can do no more, I suppose, than contradict the statement and deny it. I do not expect to satisfy the hon. member—he is not built upon those lines. I do expect, however, to be able to satisfy a large part of those who sit with him, and I do not doubt that my statement here in this House will be accepted with far more credence than any statement the hon. gentleman could make.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). I am sure we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden). I congratulate him at all events on the plucky manner in which he made his defence. Not satisfied with assuming a defensive attitude he, as becomes the soldier, and head of the war department that he is, carried the war into the enemy's country, and made an attack on the opposition party. Unfortunately the line of defence which he seems to have adopted reminds us of the rule which seems to prevail among the legal fraternity, that when you have a bad case you are expected to abuse your opponent. That I think is the great weakness of the defence which the Minister of Militia has made this afternoon. He started out to abuse the hon. member for North Toronto who had brought this subject before the House. In my opinion if there is any subject which, more than another, ought to be ventilated before this House and this country, it is acts which reflect on the character of our public men, acts which contradict the high ideals which we all desire, I hope, to see set before the young men of this country and carried out by them. The people of this country naturally look up to their public men for examples, and especially do they look to members of the cabinet for examples of high character which can be safely followed by the public at large. The hon. minister made some personal reference to the hon. member for North Toronto, and rather accused him of taking commissions and things of that kind when he was manager of the Union Trust Company. These statements were absolutely denied by the hon. member for North Toronto himself, and I challenge the Minister of Militia to place his finger on anything in the printed evidence which will bear out any statement or insinuation of that kind, namely, that, the hon. member for North Toronto, while he was being paid as manager of the Union Trust Company, accepted commissions for business which he obtained for that company and out of which that company made a profit. If the Minister of Militia is able to do that, he has an opportunity. The minister even went further, and he pointed, so to speak, the finger of scorn at the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. JOHNSON. The hon. member referred to the evidence relating to the action of the hon. member for North Toronto. If he wants information——

Mr. DANIEL. I have the floor. If the Minister of Militia has anything to say, I will permit him to say it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely wish to direct the hon. gentleman's attention to page 6334 of the 'Hansard' of 1906-7.

Mr. DANIEL. Having directed my attention to that, I hope the hon. member is satisfied. But the Minister of Militia, not content with making these references to my hon. friend for North Toronto, also passed a sneer on the morality of that gentleman, and the futility of a gentleman like my hon. friend preaching morality and high ideals. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you and I would ask any member of this House if the Minister of Militia and Defence is a gentleman whom we could look to as a preacher of morality. I will say nothing more in regard to that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You had better not.

Mr. DANIEL. I would ask the hon. members of this House if they think the Minister of Militia is a gentleman whom we would call upon to preach morality in this country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps you are not either.

Mr. DANIEL. Well it is one of those cases where you pay your money and you take your choice. Now to come down to the matter which is before the House it was initiated by an application from a Mr. Williams, a merchant in the city of St. John N.B., for aid to a bait freezer. When the Minister of Militia referred to this, he said that Mr. Williams not only made application for a cold storage plant on which he would get a subsidy of thirty per cent, but he also asked for such a bait freezer as would carry with it a subsidy of fifty per cent. Now the application he made was for a bait freezer on exactly the same terms as had been granted to the bait freezers at Canso and Halifax. His letter to Mr. Emmerson reads as follows:

We have been giving a cold storage plant some attention of late, and having been in communication with the Marine and Fisheries Department, who will grant a bonus for a cold storage plant for freezing fish in order that fishermen will be supplied with bait at the time they require it. We are prepared to go ahead and build one such as they are building in Canso and Halifax, providing we get the assistance of the government, such as has been given in the above places.

Just the same subsidy and the same assistance as were given to these other places.

In the meantime we thought it would be better to let you know that we are in the field, and just as soon as we get a little further along with our negotiations and plans, we will send our representative to Ottawa and interview you and the Marine and Fisheries Department personally.

Another statement that the minister made was that this application was for a cold storage plant for fish alone, and not for any other purpose, or any commercial purpose. Here is a letter signed by the F. E. Williams Company, Limited, and addressed to the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, and although it has been read once this afternoon, I will take the trouble to read it again on account of the minister's statement that the application of the Williams Company was only for a storage plant, and none other.

Mr. DANIEL.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not say that it was for no other purpose. I said that it was to carry on his own private business in addition to the freezing of bait.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the minister to say that it was not for commercial purposes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. DANIEL. I will read it and it will speak for itself:

St. John, New Brunswick, October 4, 1905.
Hon. R. Préfontaine, Ottawa.

We take the liberty of addressing you with reference to a cold storage plant for the purpose of freezing fish for bait, also other kinds of fish at St John, New Brunswick. We understand the government is willing to give a bonus for a plant put up for this purpose, with space or rooms to hire to dealers or farmers who may require cold storage space. We would also agree to freeze and keep in stock sufficient quantity of bait for the needs of fishermen. We are anxious to put up a large plant that will give service to both the fish and farming industries and would be pleased to hear from you giving us some particulars of what you require and what bonus the government are willing to give. The Hon. Mr. McKeown will probably write you on this same subject.

An early reply is particularly requested.

Yours truly,
F. E WILLIAMS COMPANY,
Limited,
F. E. Williams, President.

That was the original application and there is no doubt that in his mind he had largely the idea of dealing with the bait freezing question. Mr. Williams is a man who is in the provision business. He has a very large business. He is an able, experienced and successful merchant, and he is in a position to carry on any undertaking, such as he proposed to carry on, to the extent of $100,000 or more. The minister rather insinuated that Mr. Williams, in writing these letters to Mr. Emmerson, to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to the Minister of Agriculture and to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was seeking to convey the impression that the Minister of Militia only supported the cold storage scheme of the government for the purpose of obtaining the cold storage subsidy for this plant down in the maritime provinces. The minister had no reason for making any such statement because there is nothing in the whole correspondence that has been given to us this afternoon which justifies it. What I understood Mr. Williams did say was that the minister, naturally being in the secrets of the government and knowing what was going on, aware of the legislation that was proposed, was willing to take advantage of that knowledge and put himself in a position, through the influence which he would naturally have as a minister of the Crown, to obtain for himself, or any company in which he was interested, the subsidies which would be offered by the government. There is only one important point to bring before this House and that is as to whether the Minister of Militia, in his position as a cabinet minister, did take advantage of his position to obtain for himself a subsidy, which, perhaps, might otherwise have gone elsewhere. Then again there is the question as to the propriety of a member of the cabinet putting himself in competition with the ordinary business men of the country. Mr. Williams had put in his application as far back as October, 1905. He put in the application which I have just read and he had quite a correspondence with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. After a good deal of correspondence, and with the assistance of Hon. Mr. Emmerson, he had obtained a certain promise that a sum of money would be placed in the estimates by the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the assistance of a cold storage company. But, after awhile, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries went back on that largely and told Mr. Williams that the Minister of Agriculture was bringing in a cold storage Bill and that this Bill would include fish cold storage as well as other kinds of cold storage. On the 7th December, 1906, Mr. F. E. Williams makes a formal application to the Minister of Agriculture for a subsidy under the proposed Act. On the 5th of that month, two days before, Mr. L. S. Macoun had applied, not in a formal way for a subsidy, but for the fullest information that the minister or the department could give him, and in the correspondence that has been brought down I can find no record of any actual formal application put in by Mr. L. S. Macoun at any time for a cold storage subsidy. After a good deal of correspondence between the then Minister of Railways and Canals and Mr. Williams, also, on behalf of Mr. Williams, by Mr. W. H. Trueman, his solicitor, and also, I believe, after a letter from the Hon. Mr. McKeown in connection with the matter, about the 20th February, Mr. George McAvity appears on the scene. This is his first connection with the matter. The fact of Mr. George McAvity appearing on the scene brings in the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, for at that time Mr. George McAvity was the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. What did that mean? That meant the bringing in of a company with a $60,000 guarantee with interest at 3 or 3½ per cent which was afterwards raised to 4 per cent. It was a great advantage to have Mr. McAvity taken into this company. There is then still further correspondence and Mr. Williams writes to Mr. Emmerson a letter in which he says that he is afraid he is out of it, and he complains in that letter of members of the cabinet getting contracts in competition with business men. That letter is dated the 9th March, 1907, and addressed to the Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Ottawa:

Dear Sir,—You will see from the inclosed clipping from the 'Globe' newspaper that Sir Frederick Borden is getting along very nicely It certainly looks, unless you can assure me to the contrary, as though I was out of it and that my application to Hon. Mr. Fisher has been turned down. I cannot understand Hon. Mr. Fisher making a grant to a company in which Sir Frederick Borden has been the promoting and is the moving spirit, and which he puts forward merely as a blind to screen his own name. It is most unfair to the public to have to compete with ministers in matters of this kind. In the present case it was hopeless to do so. It seems to me it is contrary to law, and I do not feel like standing for it. I believe if the matter were called to the attention of Sir Wilfrid Laurier he would see that Sir Frederick was overruled in this matter, and that the matter was put upon a defensible basis. Where Sir Frederick Borden is acting with such a supreme disregard of my rights and the rights of my Liberal friends in St. John I am inclined to strike back, and I will be justified in doing so. I am willing to deal fairly with the government, but I expect a like treatment in return. If I am to be turned down, please let me know it, when I will at once place Sir Frederick Borden's conduct before Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DANIEL. That was afterwards done in the letter which was read this afternoon. Similar correspondence went on which has been read. Now we come to what, in my opinion, is certainly a most important letter, one of the most important in the whole correspondence. I refer to the letter from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, in which he states that:

Sir Frederick Borden has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected and I have viewed his application very favourably.

There is absolutely a statement of fact made by the Minister of Agriculture, that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) had applied on behalf of a company with which he is connected and that his colleague viewed the application very favourably. As I understood the Minister of Militia this afternoon, he said he made no application to this government for a subsidy. But there is the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, and I set the one against the other.

Then there is another statement, the statement made by Mr. R. J. Graham when he wrote to the Minister of Agriculture on the 13th April:

Belleville, Ontario, April 13, 1907.

The Hon. Sydney Fisher, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Sir Frederick Borden requested me to interview you in reference to aid for our cold storage propositions at St. John and Halifax.

To whom does the expression 'our,' refer to? Does it refer to any one else than Sir Frederick Borden and Mr. Graham who have already been connected together in advancing schemes of this kind.

It is our intention to complete the one in St. John this season. When I reached Ottawa Thursday night I learned from Mr. L. S. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to bother you any further in reference to the matter in question. This will explain why I did not interview you in regard to the matter, and if any further application of information is required, please advise.

Yours truly,

R. J. GRAHAM.

There are the two statements. One from the Minister of Agriculture and the other from Mr. Graham. The one is a positive statement and the other is a statement by implication. The latter is one which might fairly be taken to convey the idea that the Minister of Militia was interested in this application made by Mr. Graham to the Minister of Agriculture.

Without going into all the details, for they have been pretty thoroughly gone into already, I may say that the scheme, as it eventually turned out, certainly was very favourable indeed for the contractors. They have, in the first place, a mortgage of $60,000 from the New Brunswick government, and only a week before the prorogation of the New Brunswick legislature, there was an order in council passed providing that an additional guarantee of $30,000 should be given to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company when the House reassembles. In other words, the New Brunswick government of that day pledged itself to introduce and carry such legislation. That means an amount of $90,000 which was guaranteed, principal and interest, in favour of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. In addition there was an application to the Minister of Agriculture for a Dominion subsidy of 30 per cent on the proved cost. The application in that case was for 30 per cent on an expenditure of $125,000, making an amount equal to $37,500. So that if this plant cost, as stated in the application to the Minister of Agriculture, $125,000, this company actually obtained in guarantees of principal and interest on its bonds and in subsidy an amount equal to $127,500, or $2,500 more than was spent in obtaining the plant and putting it where it is. There is a letter in connection with that matter. That agreement between the government and the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company was made on the 30th October, 1907, and the amount of subsidy granted was $37,500, being 30 per cent on the stated expenditure of $125,000. But on the 13th November, or barely a fortnight afterwards, Mr. Macoun writes the secretary of the Minister of Agriculture saying that their plant would cost more than the $125,000 and that it would cost completed $150,000. In that case I presume there was another application for an additional subsidy; and perhaps the Minister of Agriculture will say whether there was another application for an additional subsidy based on a cost of $150,000 or $160,000.

Mr. FISHER. I shall speak of that in a few minutes.

Mr. DANIEL. You have not the information handy just now?

Mr. FOWLER. He is keeping it in cold storage.

Mr. DANIEL. We have to take the figures as they are put in the official correspondence, and the claim for the 30 per cent subsidy was on an expenditure of $125,000. If that statement is correct this fortunate company obtains in guarantees and subsidies from the Nova Scotia and Dominion governments $127,500 for building a plant which cost $125,000 or $2,500 more than it cost. Now, Sir, as I have said, the important thing in this matter is not so much the subsidies that are granted to a company for providing cold storage facilities, even if the assistance was considered to be more generous than it ought to have been. I put that on one side entirely, and I say that the point here is simply and almost wholly the fact of a cabinet minister acting in competition with an ordinary private citizen, and in that sense using his influence to obtain assistance of that kind more easily than an ordinary citizen would be able to do; and I think the connection with these cold storage plants, which has been acknowledged to some extent by Sir Frederick Borden himself, in the letter which was read by the hon. member for North Toronto, the letter of the Minister of Agriculture, and the letter of Mr. R. J. Graham to the Minister of Agriculture, leave it very difficult for any one to form any other conclusion than that the minister had made use of his position, or at all events while a cabinet minister had acquired subsidies for an enterprise with which he was closely connected. The people generally are disposed to look to public men in prominent positions to set a good example in matters of that kind, and I think it would be a great misfortune for the people of this country if any laxity which is found to arise in that connection were not brought before the public in order that it should be frowned down upon and not encouraged in any way. The Independence of Parliament Act has been referred to, and if the minister has been guilty of what the ordinary reader going over this correspondence would naturally think he was guilty of, section 10 of that Act reads as follows:

No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, with or for the government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons or shall sit or vote in the said House.

So that this is a matter of very serious moment, and I think no apology need be offered for bringing it up in this House, and I would certainly be very glad indeed if the Minister of Agriculture could explain away the letter which he wrote, in which he stated that the Minister of Militia had made personal application for a subsidy for a concern in which he was interested. If he can put any other face on that letter than the words would naturally bear, I for one will be very glad indeed. I think it is a misfortune for a minister of the Crown to be even suspected of making use of his cabinet position to assist any enterprise in which he may be interested. It is just the same as if a member of the cabinet, on an occasion when the government were contemplating changes in the tariff, should make use of the knowledge which his position in the cabinet would give him of such proposed changes for his own advantage in a commercial sense in the open market. What sort of opinion would the people of this country have of such a minister? I am sure that the mere mention of such a thing shows how impossible it is for this country for a moment to allow anything of that kind to be done, or to be suspected of being done, without its being frowned down upon, so that a certain and immediate stop shall be put to it for all time to come.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture.) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just sat down has expressed the hope that I can explain matters a little in connection with this transaction. I think, Sir, if my hon. friend and those who seem to agree with him would exercise a little common sense in their interpretation of things, and not allow themselves to be carried away by the desire to cause political injury to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, they would be able to find an explanation for themselves. My hon. friend has spoken of the honour and integrity of members of the government and of members of parliament. He must be well aware that even supposing the Minister of Militia were a shareholder in a company doing business with the government of Canada, he would be legally entitled to be so. My hon. friend does not remember, perhaps, but I do well, when the Hon. Thos. White, who was a minister of the Crown in Sir John Macdonald's government, was a shareholder of the Gazette Printing Company in Montreal for years and years while he sat in this House, and yet he did not violate the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is dead: let him alone.

Mr. FISHER. He is dead, and he was an honourable man who would not have done anything contrary to the Independence of Parliament Act; and yet he was a shareholder in the Gazette Company at the time he was Minister of the Interior, and when the Gazette Company had a contract with the government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let his ashes rest in peace.

Mr. FISHER. Let his ashes rest in peace. He did perfectly right, and my hon. friend from Leeds and the hon. gentlemen around him are the men who are casting aspersions on the memory of Mr. Thos. White. Hon. gentlemen opposite think a great deal of the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, who was a member of the imperial government; and yet it is well known that at the time he was a member of the government he was a shareholder in a company in Birmingham which constantly had contracts with the government of which he was a member. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) has just alluded to the position of a member advocating changes in the tariff. The Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was a member of a company which was interested in the manufacture of screws and other things at the very time he was carrying on a propaganda for the purpose of giving protection to the industries in which he was engaged.

Mr. LENNOX. He was not a member of the cabinet.

Mr. FISHER. I am making no accusation against Mr. Chamberlain, or questioning the perfect integrity of what he was doing; but I am pointing out that it does not lie on the lips of hon. gentlemen opposite, who approve of the actions of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, to come here and endeavour to cast aspersions on the Minister of Militia, who was not and has never been a member of a company carrying on business with or receiving subventions from the government of which he is a member.

Sir, a great deal of stress has been laid by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on a letter which I wrote to Mr. Williams. I did that perhaps in rather loose language, since my hon. friend's ingenuity has been able to draw from it practically the basis of his whole accusation against the Minister of Militia. The Minister of Militia had been talking with me and probably a great many other people, of the importance of developing the fruit industry and other agricultural operations in the province of Nova Scotia. The Minister of Militia is a land owner in the province of Nova Scotia and has properties there which he thought were not giving that great return which they ought to be giving and might be made to give if properly managed from an agricultural point of view. He discussed these things with me on many an occasion. He talked to me about the proposition he has here described of establishing a company which I think was called the 'Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company, Limited,' a large undertaking intended to be capitalized at a million dollars with which to develop large fruit growing and other agricultural industries in the county he has the honour to represent. I cannot see for a moment that in this my hon. friend was doing anything improper. On the contrary, he was doing what was in the very best interests of the people whom he represented, the people of the province of Nova Scotia at large and the people of the Dominion of Canada at large. When that question of cold storage came up my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, like myself and the other members of the government, believe that the Act which was being placed upon the statute-book for the encouragement of cold storage would be a good one. Supposing even for a moment that he was interested in a company which might get a bonus under that Act, supposing even for a moment that that was the case—he has denied that this is the case and as far as I am personally aware of the matters, I know that it is not the case and that he was not interested in any company that got the bonus or was expecting to get it—but supposing that he was, would it be proper and right for him as a minister of the Crown to block a proposition of the government to be laid before parliament which was in the interests of the people of Canada at large? If a cold storage proposition——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend smiles.

Mr. FOSTER. I am smiling at the trend of the argument.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I suppose my hon. friend can hardly realize it.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I suppose not.

Mr. FISHER. I hardly expected he would. I would like to know whether he would go so far as to say——

Mr. FOSTER. Dear knows whether he would or not.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know how far he would go because it would be far beyond my ken.

Mr. FISHER

Mr. FOSTER. I dare say; your ken does not go very far.

Mr. FISHER. We will let that drop.

Mr. FOSTER. Now go on with your argument.

Mr. FISHER. It would not be proper that my hon. friend who is a member of the government should block either in council or in parliament a proposition to enact a law which is in the interest of the people of Canada. The law in regard to cold storage companies was discussed in this House, it was adopted without opposition and with perfect unanimity in this House. I supposed therefore that hon. gentlemen opposite were in full concurrence with the spirit and scope of that fact. That Act was to encourage people of Canada to enter into the enterprise of establishing cold storage, a thing which my hon. friend the Minister of Militia was desirous to encourage just like the rest of us. He was himself advocating that a company should be formed for that purpose. I contend that he was perfectly justified and called upon as the representative of the county which he represents in Nova Scotia, as a representative of the province of Nova Scotia, to aid and help on any such scheme which would be in the interests of the fruit growers and other agriculturists of Nova Scotia as well as the rest of Canada.

Now to come down more particularly to the details of this transaction. As far as Mr. Williams' application to the Department of Marine and Fisheries are concerned, I know nothing, I knew nothing at the time. I am reminded that Mr. Williams came to me and spoke about the cold storage question and that he was told that the cold storage question was going to assume a new phase because the government were preparing a new law in regard to bonuses for cold storage. I remember meeting Mr. Williams and having a talk of that kind. Mr. Williams thereafter made no personal or straight application to me whatever until the letter which has been quoted by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I received that letter asking for information. I gave him the information and I wrote identically the same letter to Mr. Williams and to Mr. Macoun on the very same date, each of them having written to me asking for information. I sent each of them exactly the same information, being copies of the 'Hansard' containing the debates in this House on the Cold Storage Bill. They were therefore in exactly the same position as far as I was concerned, treated exactly as I would treat anybody else who would make application to me for information in regard to a matter in my department or with which I was concerned. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) read the letter addressed to Mr. Williams but did not read identically the same letter written the same day by my secretary and signed by me and addressed to Mr. Macoun. I treated them both in exactly the same way. Mr. Williams some time afterwards wrote me a letter on the 8th of April. The first letter was on the 13th December, 1906. On April 8, 1907, Mr. Williams wrote me a letter in which he gave me a lot of information which I confess I did not value very much because it seemed to me to be tinged with the imputation that he was being badly treated and I confess that I did not know of anything to justify any such implication and I did not feel prepared to treat him any way differently from anybody else. That letter was replied to on April 11. In my reply I acknowledged his letter and said :

We have not yet made any grant for cold storage warehouses in St. John. Sir Frederick has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably. None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely. I cannot make any promises without definite plans and specifications, and full information as to what the people applying for may be prepared to do.

In other words, I gave Mr. Williams the full statement and information on that occasion that no consideration could be given to him unless he gave full plans and specifications. He got just the same information as anybody else. In the meantime I referred to the conversations I had had with Sir Frederick Borden, my colleague, in which he had been talking about the larger scheme and had said that he hoped a company would be formed for the purpose of taking up his cold storage scheme in St. John, Halifax and other places. I confess I used the words rather loosely in saying that he was connected with the company. I meant by that a company in which he was interested as a public man and ought to be interested. I say it without hesitation and I say it absolutely sincerely and with truth. At the same time I was prepared to treat Williams fairly and squarely just like anybody else.

As the correspondence has been quoted I need not go over it completely. Mr. Graham wrote and spoke about an interview with Williams on the 3rd of June. Mr. Williams wrote me a letter complaining of his treatment and casting aspersions and imputations on me and the government for our treatment of him in comparison with our treatment of Sir Frederick Borden. In that letter he wanted to know whether it would be worth his while to get plans and specifications ready to submit to me. I was away in England when that letter was received and my deputy answered him :

In the absence of the minister, I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant in reference to cold storage warehouses. If you will submit your application it will receive due consideration.

That letter was dated 7th June, 1907. An application was received with full specifications and in full and proper form from Mr. Graham, dated 11th June, 1907. That application was held in my department until September. The contract with him was not signed until November and when I came back from England I asked my deputy minister whether he had received any further communication from Mr. Williams. I waited from June until November—five months —for Mr. Williams to take further steps in accordance with the information I had given him of what would be necessary for him to do exactly the same information that I had given to Mr. Macoun and Mr. Graham as to what was necessary for them to do. It was not until after five months, when, having no further communication of any kind from Mr. Williams, I eventually signed a contract with Mr. Graham for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. I knew Mr. Graham as a man thoroughly well informed on cold storage questions and as one likely to make a cold storage plant and building and business a success. I learned that he had transferred his interest to a company called the New Brunswick Cold Storage Limited, and that he was president of that company. I also learned that Mr. George McAvity, of St. John, the well known and enterprising merchant, was vice-president, that Mr. Macoun was secretary-treasurer, that Mr. Richard Trueman was a director and so was Mr. H. R. Ross, a gentleman well known in business circles in St. John, men upon whom I could depend, if I made a contract with them, to carry out that contract. The directors sent forward a resolution stating that they took over and accepted the responsibilities Mr. Graham had assumed in making his application. When the Bill was passed in this House to encourage cold storage equipment. it was well understood that a cold storage plant was dependent on business to be obtained from those producing what we call perishable food products, and that it was very important that these plants should be placed so as to get the business in fruit, meat, eggs, butter, cheese or fish, and that there would be no use in a cold storage equipment unless it had connections or surroundings that would give it business. That is one great reason why St. John was looked upon as a place particularly suitable for a cold storage plant, and it was one reason why I had no hesitation in giving the bonus to a company undertaking to put a cold storage plant there. St. John is situated very favourably not only for the business of the Nova Scotia fruit exporters but also for the business of the Ontario and Quebec fruit exporters who send a large quantity of their fruit down to the seaboard in the fall so as to allow it to be exported in the winter when the prices are better and they can gain greater profits than they would if they were compelled to place their fruit on the market in the fall of the year. The people who undertook to provide the cold storage equipment at St. John were in a position to carry on the work, having the necessary connections and being men of substantial means and the highest character. Therefore, I had no hesitation in granting them the subsidy.

The contract was signed and the building was put up. My cold storage commissioner examined the plant carefully and reported to me favourably on the construction and equipment. Over and above his official report, he stated to me that those who own the building got good value for their money and that he was surprised that they were able to put up such a building and equip it so well for the amount of the contract on which they were getting the bonus. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) asked if the company got an additional bonus or made an additional contract. They did not; the original contract was the only one. I have been told by Mr. Macoun that they were going to make application for an additional amount because the building and equipment had cost more than the sum on which the bonus was given, but I received no official communication concerning it and no additional contract has been made. If an application comes in, it will be dealt with in the ordinary way of business; if the company shows cause for the additional demand I shall feel justified in conceding it; if they cannot show cause, if they cannot show that they have expended the money and that the expenditure was necessary for the equipment and the building in order to carry on the business in St. John, there will not be an additional contract or additional subvention. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that a greater contract was given than had been usual in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know in what sense he meant that. Under the old system of the Department of Marine and Fisheries the contractors get half the cost of their building and a bonus of $2,000 a year for three years. Under the present contract and under the present Act, the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company receive only thirty per cent of the cost of their building and no yearly bonus. I think it is a very much better contract for the country therefore, and I am glad of it and proud of it. I want to add just one word. I do not know, nor does it matter from my point of view as administrator of the Cold Storage Act, whether this company is getting a bonus from the city of St. John or the provincial government of New Brunswick or not. The Act does not say who shall supply the money or contemplate any investigation into how the people who build and equip these cold storage buildings and make the contract with this government get their capital. It only contemplates the provision, in the interest of the commerce of Canada in perishable food products, that a cold storage building shall be supplied, properly equipped and that properly revised rates of charges shall be made and proper chambers at proper temperatures provided. These arranged for, it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to sign a contract where he considers that the company is providing a building that is in the interest of the trade; and, if the company can get anybody to make it a gift of all the money put into the plant, that matters not a whit to me as Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion. I do not care where the money comes from or who supplies it, so long as the trade of Canada gets the accommodation under the terms of the Cold Storage Act.

I think, perhaps, Sir, if others are going to speak on this question as it is near six o'clock, it is better that I should move the adjournment of this debate to allow further discussion if desired. Therefore, I move the adjournment of this debate to allow a motion for Supply to be presented, that we may get into Supply before six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it necessary to move the adjournment of the debate ? He could simply talk on until six o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. It is only a question under the new rule for the proper standing of the motion at six o'clock. I think it would serve all purposes better if a motion to adjourn the debate were carried, and then it will stand in its proper order for the next sitting of the House.

Mr. FOWLER. I propose to address a few remarks to the House.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman could talk until six o'clock, and then move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that the only way in which the Minister of Militia and Defence was interested in this matter was from his public position, he was interested as a public man in anything that would make for the general welfare of the trade of the country. Is that correct ?

Mr. FISHER. I said that so far as the Minister of Militia had undertaken to start a large company, the name of which I mentioned, in Nova Scotia, a company that was in the public interest, and that would incidentally require cold storage accommodation, the Minister of Militia was in that way interested in the cold storage accommodation.

Mr. FOWLER. I propose to call the attention of the minister to the particular letter which he wrote, the contents of which he must have forgotten, or he would not have said what he did with respect to the interest of the Minister of Militia. This letter of his is dated the 11th of April, 1907, and is addressed to Mr. Williams, who was a rival applicant with the Minister of Militia for the subsidy to the cold storage plant in St. John. He says :

I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. Sir Frederick Borden has made an application on behalf of a company which he is connected——

Mr. FISHER. I read that—not in which he is interested.

Mr. FOWLER. 'With which he is connected.' Surely that would imply something more than a mere interest which a public man takes in anything that is going to advance the trade of the country. If the construction of the Minister of Agriculture be correct, that it was merely the interest which he as a public man was taking in all matters relating to trade, then it would apply to every member of this House, because we are all supposed to take an interest, I think most of us do take an interest in anything which pertains to the welfare of the country.

—and I have viewed his application very favourably.

So I think that even on the correspondence and on the statement of the Minister of Militia himself, we must conclude that the interest which he had in this particular transaction was much more intimate and much more individual than the interest which he took as a public man in that which pertained to the well being of the country. Now it may be said that there was no particular objection to that, it may be said that no particular advantage was obtained by the Minister of Militia on account of his position in relation to the Minister of Agriculture as a colleague, the Minister of Agriculture having the granting of this subsidy. We had two rival applicants. We had an application by a man named Williams, of St. John, a man who was in the meat and produce business, a man of high standing in St. John, doing a large business, an influential Liberal, too, a man of the same political stripe as the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture. He had therefore, from a business standpoint, quite as good a standing as had the Minister of Militia and the friends by whom he was surrounded. From a party standpoint, one would think that he would have pretty nearly as good standing. He would have not quite so good opportunities of getting the ear of the Minister of Agriculture, perhaps, as the Minister of Militia would have. Naturally there would be things that the Minister of Agriculture would want in the Department of Militia, and the Minister of Militia could very well say to the Minister of Agriculture, If you want certain things done—we will say with reference to that regiment down in the eastern townships for which the Minister of Agriculture stands as godfather, the 13th Dragoons, I think it is, the Dundonald regiment—it might very well be that certain privileges, certain advantages that this particular regiment belonging to the Minister of Agriculture would require, might be more easily got provided the Minister of Agriculture was willing to make concessions to the Minister of Militia for things which he required. So from the necessities of the Minister of Agriculture, and remembering the opportunity that the Minister of Militia had for taking advantage of these necessities, poor Mr. Williams, of St. John, deserving Liberal though he might be, is naturally turned down, and the concession is granted to the company in which the Minister of Militia, and a very close relative of his, are the moving spirits.

I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 29, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 179) to incorporate the Synod of the Diocese of Keewatin.—Mr. Johnston.

Bill (No. 180) respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Northrup—by Mr. W. J. Roche.

Bill (No. 178) relating to the water carriage of goods.—Mr. Johnston.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I find in the 'Hansard' of Tuesday, May 26, the following :

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. BERGERON.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I beg to rise to a question of privilege. I was away on Friday last, but on reading 'Hansard' I find a statement referring to myself in a speech made by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) which is not correct. That hon. member is reported as saying:

I am just coming to that. It was strange that a gentleman, a member of the great Conservative party, following the same noble leader, would not have come to me and said something to me about it. Now I come to what I have got to do about it. Soon after the notice was put on the paper last year, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) notified me that Dr. Worthington had something terrible against me. He is going to expose you, said Mr. Bergeron, and your grafting in connection with the Ross rifle. And he asked: Is it not possible for you to pay back the money?

Mr. Bergeron then said :

This is the first time I have heard anything of the matter. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) has never spoken of it to me and I have never spoken to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in the way he has here indicated. The whole thing is entirely a dream, as far as I know.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair to the hon. member for Beauharnois—at the time he spoke to me we were sitting as we are today. He spoke, as I felt, as a friend, a gentleman talking over the motion on the Order Paper standing in the name of the hon. member for Sherbrooke Mr. Worthington. He stated to me that he (Mr. Worthington) had any amount of data, I think the expression was any God's amount of data against me, and the Minister of Militia ; and he went on further—I do not remember the exact words—but he begged me for God's sake to try and get out of it, and pay the money back, was there any way to pay the money back that had been grafted in order that I might get out of it ? These were the statements. Not only that but it was referred to on other occasions. I assured him there was nothing in it. He said 'everybody believes it.' Not only that but I spoke to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) about it. He said it is a common rumour, current opinion in Montreal that 'you are in it up to the neck.' I spoke to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) about it and to twenty other members of the Conservative party and this is the first time I ever heard it contradicted. More than that, I happened to receive——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman does not suggest that I said I had heard anything about it ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, what I mean is I had informed my fellow members of the statement made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and I mentioned his name last session and told it to a dozen members last session that my friend Bergeron had spoken to me and I said it was a slander, I gave that to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) as the reason why I would not drop the agitation before the Public Accounts Committee at the time the First Minister wanted to go to England ; I was going to fight it to a finish, they were going to either prove their case or be exposed before the country to be as they have been shown to be. Mind you, I have other data upon it. I can show you just how these gentlemen would go around —not the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), because as I say he spoke in all kindness, and wanted me to try and save the party, and save my own reputation by getting out of it—but the agitation was engineered by other gentlemen who went around with that pained expression on their countenances and would say : It is too bad that Hughes and the Minister of Militia are tied up in these things, it is a terrible thing that they should be tied up in this way. And oh, my the agony of soul these gentlemen would display in passing around the town and the country, circulating this slander on fellow members and some others who were not fellow members. The data is all available. Here is a letter from another gentleman to show how they are working it, how even within the last two weeks some of them have been trying to work it. The letter is from Colonel Greville Harston, of the city of Toronto, and in it he says :

Some of your good friends have industriously sent it about among some of our best men like John T. Small and Colonel J. I. Davidson and others that you have large pecuniary interests in the Ross Rifle company and that you are a director of that company. I of course denied it flatly.

Then follow other matters to show that the insidious falsehood started by this organization has been passing around. I do not know what the hon. member for Beauharnois means, if the words have not a double meaning, by saying: 'In the way he has heard indicated; the whole thing is entirely a dream.' The regrettable thing is that the gentlemen who started the agitation did not find out that it was a dream before they started it. It would have been much more to their credit and to the advantage of the country. I have nothing further to say than to repeat, in words as strong as the English or the French language will allow, that the words the hon. member for Beauharnois used expressed the sentiment I have stated in this House on a former occasion and on the present occasion.

Mr. BERGERON. As my name has been mentioned, I suppose I may be allowed to answer in one word. I have nothing to take back of what I said the other day, and so far as I am concerned, my hon. friend is entirely mistaken. I never heard that he had any interest in any shape or form in these so-called scandals, and nobody ever said anything to me about it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I again insist that the words were uttered not once only, but two or three times.

Mr. BERGERON. I call on the Chair. When the hon. gentleman puts words into my mouth, and I deny having used them, he is bound, according to the rules of the House, to withdraw what he said.

Mr. SPEAKER. In a matter of personal dispute it is very difficult for the Chair to decide. It will have to be left to the judgment of the House.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As my name has also been drawn into this discussion, I wish to add my absolute denial to that of the hon. member for Beauharnois. I never at any time nor in any place made such a statement to him or to any other member of the House. I also think, as the hon. member for Beauharnois does, that it is nothing but a silly dream.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It has turned out to be quite silly.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 181) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the public lands of the Dominion.

Mr. LENNOX. In reference to this matter I have just a word to say before the hon. member introduces his Bill. I wish to call the attention of the House to the time this measure is introduced. We have now been sitting six months. This is an important Bill. The minister and the government gave consideration to this matter last year. This is I suppose to a great extent the same measure that was introduced last year, and I think the introduction of such an important Bill at this stage, when I suppose the session is pretty nearly drawing to a close, is very much to be deplored and to be condemned. I think the hon. gentleman ought to give some satisfactory explanation to the House as to how it is that an important measure of this kind has been delayed until this stage of the proceedings. If it were an isolated case it would be somewhat different; but more and more, not only during this session, but during preceding sessions, the practice is prevailing with the government of leaving the introduction of important measures to the late days of the session. This is not fair either to the members of the House or to the country. It leads to injudicious legislation and results in the measures not being properly considered, and it is a practice that I think ought to be condemned and discontinued.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill is in very much the same terms as the Bill of last year. The consideration given by the House to the Bill of last year resulted in the acceptance of certain amendments which have been adopted in the re-drafting of the Bill. The opportunity has been taken to make a very thorough revision of the Bill in the light of the subsequent operations of the Lands Act. In regard to the provision which was particularly contentious, while the principle of pre-emption and of purchased homesteads remains in the Bill, the area to which this principle applies has been restricted to the territory, speaking roughly, between Moosejaw and Calgary on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and between the international boundary and the latitude of Battleford. It is hoped that, with this restriction, the Bill will be acceptable to all parties in the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS — HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to say to the Minister of the Interior that I have had a letter from the commissioner of immigration, Mr. Scott, asking for particulars with respect to one of the officials in Halifax to whom I referred in the House not long ago. The information which I have is in the form of a statutory declaration having the force of an affidavit. As it is from a man who has been dismissed in consequence of an investigation recently held, and as it contains charges against one of the officials of the government, I think for the present it is not best for me to read it in the House until the government shall have an opportunity of making an investigation. Instead of doing so, I shall hand the original to the Minister of the Interior, in order that he may make a copy of it, and return the original to me. I have also a declaration respecting another official, but as to that, I think I shall speak privately to the minister, as there are some circumstances which seem to make that the wiser course.

THE EXERCISE OF CLEMENCY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the government whether or not their attention has been called to a resolution of the town council of Sydney, which is in the following words :

Whereas one Agnes Ballum Kun was on the 28th day of December, A.D. 1907, convicted by D. A. Cameron, Esq., stipendiary magistrate in and for the city of Sydney, for that she at Sydney did, on or about the 15th day of December, A.D., 1907, conduct a disorderly house to wit a house of prostitution and was sentenced for said offence to six months in the common jail.

And whereas the said Agnes Ballum Kun was on or about the 3rd day of May, A.D., 1908, released from said common jail at Sydney by order of the Department of Justice at Ottawa.

And whereas the crime for which said Agnes Ballum Kun was convicted is in the opinion of this honourable council, one that deserved the severest punishment, as it affects the moral welfare of the community;

And whereas the police department of Sydney, has within the last few years put forth every effort to rid Sydney of such disreputable houses.

Therefore be it resolved that this council view with regret the release of said Agnes Ballum Kun and hereby voices its protest against any persons sentenced for such offences being released on tickets of leave or otherwise, until their full sentence is served.

And further be it resolved that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa.

I would like to inquire whether the attention of the government has been directed to this resolution and also to ask what were the considerations which led the government to release this offender before the full term of her imprisonment had expired?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). So far as I know, no member of the government has received communication of this resolution unless it be the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). The resolution. I apprehend, should have been sent to the Minister of Justice, and I do not think he has communicated with any of his colleagues about it.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). The resolution referred to as having been passed by the city council some time ago was forwarded to the Minister of Justice, and I noticed in the press a reply published, as coming from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The resolution came to me in a letter dated 21st May. Obviously the writer of it was not aware of any reply having been given up to that time, so far as I can gather from the context of the letter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. All I know is that the Minister of Justice replied.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the reply ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have not the papers before me, but a reference to newspapers published some considerable time ago will show what the reply was.

THE BANQUE DE ST. JEAN.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a statement which appeared in one of the Montreal newspapers in sequence of other statements of a similar character which have appeared from time to time with reference to the failure of the Banque De St. Jean, Quebec. According to this statement——

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose this is for the purpose of founding a question ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. Probably the better way would be to read what is stated.

After calling attention to the fact that in the case of the Banque Ville Marie an investigation was held by the Finance Department and punishment meted out to the guilty parties, it goes on :

In the case of the Banque de St. Jean there are the same kind of harrowing experiences attending the depositors as beset the depositors of the Banque Ville Marie and the Banque du Peuple. Among the depositors of the ill-fated Banque de St. Jean are to be numbered priests, nuns, guardians, widows, orphans, farmers, merchants, artisans, peddlers of farm and other produce and the usual clientele of the modest country bank. The deposits as a rule run from ten and fifteen dollars to a hundred and five hundred, and temporary deposits have sometimes run into the thousands.

Many special cases are detailed, and then it goes on :

We have shown that in January in the report furnished to the government, the Banque de St. Jean credited itself with $751,859 of current discounts and $17,574 of overdue debts. But in the statement just issued by Mr. Tancrede Bienvenu, these current discounts or promissory notes are reduced to $191,396 or by $560,463 or nearly three-quarters. How has this huge proportion of the bank's loans been wiped out with, as it were, a stroke of the pen?

Several questions follow, and then the query is put whether the Finance Department has as yet undertaken to do its duty in the matter as it did in the case of the Banque Ville Marie ? And that is the question I ask.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I think that the machinery of the Bank Act is not the same to-day as at the time when the case of the Banque Ville Marie arose. The present Bank Act provides that the moment a bank gets into trouble, an officer shall be appointed by the Bankers' Association to take possession temporarily until a liquidator is appointed. These two steps have just been taken, as I see by the press of the last day or two that a liquidator has been appointed. What further proceedings shall be taken is a matter for consideration. The machinery of the Bank Act is in motion. If there is a difference of procedure as between the time of the Banque Ville Marie case and the present day, it is because, under the amended Act the Bankers' Association have a duty to perform. That duty they have performed and we have now reached the next stage. I am afraid the situation is a very grave one for all concerned, but the moment has not arrived for the government to take further action. I expect that we shall receive further communication on the subject at an early day.

Mr. FOSTER. No change has been made with reference to penalties for misconduct?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; but we have no information that will enable us to proceed as respects penalties. Of course, the hon. gentleman will agree that in such a matter newspaper reports are not sufficient. I have no doubt that there will be a fuller investigation. The machinery provided by the law remains the same, and action will have to be taken on the facts coming before us.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. MR. FOSTER.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On Wednesday last, a statement was made in this House by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) in the course of debate. It is always difficult to tell exactly what a man says across the floor of the House. Still, I ventured to characterize the statement at that time as absolutely untrue. It now appears in cold print as reported on page 9585 of 'Hansard' :

> The hon. gentleman seems to be very suspicious. But, Mr. Speaker, assuming that every word that he has said to-day is true—and scarcely a word of it is true in its application—I would like this House to consider whether at its worst it is to be compared for one moment with the position of a man who succeeds in placing himself in a position of trust in a company and then succeeds in placing himself in another position connected with another company, and then engages in the delightful occupation of selling out the company of which he is a director to himself in another company, and taking a commission which comes out of the hard savings and earnings of the people of this country, in connection with one of the large insurance companies, and putting that commission into his own pocket——
> Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. All of which is absolutely true.

He then goes on to say he does not need to take it up because it has been taken up and proved : 'it is an accomplished fact and everybody in this House and out of it knows it is an accomplished fact.'

Mr. Speaker, I desire again to-day to say that, so far as the language of that declaration and its charges are concerned, and the meaning that seems to be intended by them, they are absolutely and wholly untrue. I give the Minister of Militia and Defence—as this is the first time these insinuations have come to be put in direct language by a responsible member of this House—the opportunity to prove that statement ; or, if he cannot prove it, to retract it, again stating that it is absolutely and wholly untrue.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). The language reported as just quoted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is not precisely the language I used, or, at any rate, is not what I intended to use, for there is very little meaning in the words as reported. The following is what is reported :

> I would like this House to consider whether at its worst it is to be compared for one moment with the position of a man who succeeds in placing himself in a position of trust in a company and then succeeds in placing himself in another position connected with another company, and then engages in the delightful occupation of selling out the company of which he is a director to himself in another company, and taking a commission——

And so on. I did not say that, or I certainly did not intend to say it. What I intended to say was :

> A man who succeeds in placing himself in a position of trust in a company and then succeeds in placing himself in another position connected with another company, and then engages in the delightful occupation of buying lands for the company of which he was manager, and accepting a commission and putting it in his pocket in that connection——

And so on. That is what I intended to say, and the revised 'Hansard' will show the words so corrected. And my authority, if the hon. gentleman wants it, are the proceedings of the Royal Commission which investigated this particular case which was discussed thoroughly in this House during the last session, and I quoted particularly, and I mentioned it, from the speech of the Minister of Justice which I happen to have before me at this moment. I had not the pleasure of hearing the speech which was delivered by the Minister of Justice, as I was away, but I read it after my return from England, and in that speech I find the following :

> The other transaction of a similar character perhaps deserves one word of additional notice, and for the simple reason that in regard to the $5,000 transaction, the verbal evidence which witnesses gave before the commission is contradictory. One witness gives in his testimony—which I need not say is equally sworn evidence—a statement of the transaction directly at variance upon this crucial point with the statement of the hon gentleman. It is not for me to judge between the two, it has not been the part of the commission to judge between the two. They have stated simply and frankly upon the face of the report what was the evidence of one and what was the evidence of the other, and leaving that evidence for comparison and for perusal, and leaving those who read to form their own judgment upon it. The commission left it at that and discussed the transaction from either of the different points of view, according to the different evidence which any reader may choose to accept.
> But with regard to the subsequent transaction——
> The one to which I referred.
> —in respect to which a commission of small amount was paid, there is not, because there cannot be, variation in the testimony of witnesses, it resting upon written documents. This is a transaction, in essence of precisely the same character. The syndicate is purchasing lands with the money of either the Foresters or of the Trust Company, with money which is furnished to it, borrowed by it, if you please, upon the security of the lands that are being bought, and the syndicate so making its purchase and so making its payment, we are again treated to the proposition that there is to be paid a commission out of it. And in this instance, it is upon the letters which are in evidence. Exhibit No. 665 is a letter dated December 23, 1903, from Mr. George E. Foster to Mr. Pritchard, at Winnipeg. He says:

I have talked the matter of these lands over with some parties. The price is too high as it was asked, and I can get no one to take any interest at any such price. My clients are filled with lands, and the offerings of men who have got lots and have to make payments and have not the money, are numerous. This flattens the price. Now, if the following is of any use to you I will, on receipt of answer, go into it further, and give you an early decision, to wit, $5.25 per acre for the land with twenty-five cents per acre as commission, thus netting you $5 per acre. This will depend upon the amount of cash down required—$1.25 certainly, and $1 say in four months, and the remainder in four yearly instalments with note, and option to pay the whole amount at any time without bonus. One trouble is the inability to inspect lands at this time. This, I am aware, is not as good as you expect, but you have no idea of the amount of land offered here and parties here are filled up. Kindly let me know if this will be acceptable. I see no way of doing anything better at present, but I think I can get the above through.

The answer on December 28, in Winnipeg, from Mr. Pritchard, is as follows:

Dear Mr. Foster,—I am in receipt of yours of the 23rd, and have read your offer with some little regret, as I had hoped that you would be able to handle these lands at a better price in view of their choice location. As I pointed out when I saw you in Toronto, the Canadian Northern are putting their branch through from at or near Swan river to the Thunder Hills, which will make these lands convenient to railway facilities. However, as you cannot do any better, I accept your proposition with the following slight modifications. There is $2.48 due the Canadian Northern on these lands which runs for eight years at thirty-one cents an acre per year, with interest at six per cent. The whole of it can be paid off at any time without bonus, which I expect you to assume. As regards the cash payment, $1.25 down, seventy-five cents in three months and seventy-five cents in six months. The cash payment in that way will secure the equity, all being met within six months. I trust you will be able to meet me in this slight change.

Yours very sincerely,

The answer is a telegram of December 31, 1903, to A. W. Pritchard, Winnipeg, Manitoba:

Send contract terms your letter for part due Canadian Northern and amounts due vendors. The Union Trust Company, Limited, in trust is purchaser. Cash payment will be made on signing contracts.

On January 2, 1904, Messrs, Macdonald, Haggart and Whitla, of Winnipeg, solicitors for the vendors, wrote to the Hon. George E. Foster, as manager of the Union Trust Company, as follows:

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

Mr. A. W. Pritchard, who has been carrying on correspondence with you regarding the lands in the Swan river district, has handed us all the correspondence therein, together with your telegram of the 31st ultimo, accepting the offer of sale of these lands The lands in question stand in the name of our Mr. Whitla, under contracts from the Canadian Northern Railway Company. We are preparing agreements of sale in accordance with the terms of the agreement already arrived at, and will forward the same to you as soon as completed. There are 9,920 acres all told. If you have any suggestions to make as to the methods of closing the sale we will be glad to hear from you. We presume that since we act as solicitors for your company we can have Mr. Whitla sign the agreements and forward them to you for the signature by the company, and you can forward the cash payment and return one copy of agreement duly signed. We can at the same time forward you for inspection the contracts covering the various parcels which our Mr. Whitla holds. We trust this will be satisfactory.

The answer was as follows:

Toronto, January 5, 1904.

Yours of January 2, duly received re Pritchard's sale of Swan river district lands. The contracts will be with the Union Trust Company in trust and cash. Cash payment will be made to credit of vendors in Standard Bank of Toronto on receipt and signing of satisfactory documents of agreement. Twenty-five cents per acre is to be paid as commission on sale. This can either be deducted from the cash payment or better. You can send a cheque therefore signed by the vendors in favour of myself. I will then deposit to credit of vendors the whole cash payment and present cheque which will be paid therefrom. Kindly see that purchasers are allowed to pay up whole amount due on lands at any time without notice or bonus.

Yours truly,

GEORGE E. FOSTER.

And accordingly, as is asked by that letter, a cheque to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) issues for that amount of commission at the rate of 25 cents per acre on the 9,920 acres, or $2,480. That is asked for in the letter I have read in distinct and unmistakable terms as a commission on the sale of these lands to the company of which the writer was then the paid manager. That is asked for as a deduction from the cash payment his company was to make, or better, a cheque for the amount signed by the vendors in favour of 'myself,' the manager. And that amount so received has not been shared with anybody.

That is the ground upon which I made the statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me for a moment, I have not altogether caught the exact statement made by the Minister of Militia and Defence. This much is certain that he does not stand by the statement he made the day before yesterday. Do I understand that he retracts it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not stand by the report; I stand by the statement I made.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the minister declares that this is not the statement that he did make ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have already said what took place. 'Hansard' will show that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the statement that he did make ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister does not say that ? What does the Minister say ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I gave the hon. gentleman the statement I made.

Mr. FOSTER. I see no difference between the minister's statement now and that which appears in the unrevised 'Hansard.' We find it very difficult to go upon anything else than that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If there is no difference it is quite satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the Minister of Militia and Defence substitutes another statement for this one and I do not altogether understand his statement. We will see what it is in 'Hansard' to-morrow, but if his statement is intended to convey the meaning that his statement of the day before yesterday was intended to convey, all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, is that in the verbiage and in the intent it is absolutely untrue and unfounded. I do not care how many speeches the Minister of Militia and Defence may read to buttress it up ; even if he has to take the campaign literature of the Liberal party and read it as he does at this moment, Mr. Speaker, although I have nothing to say against the extract as not being a fair extract.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman deny the authenticity of the letters I have read ?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all ; I never did. I absolutely deny the charge that the Minister of Militia and Defence bases upon these letters and that evidence, and I challenge the Minister of Militia and Defence to prove his statements to be true. He can take his own means, his own method and I state, as a member of this House, that the charge that he has made is an absolutely unfounded charge, and if that is his charge I think he ought to retract it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I simply read a statement made in this House over a year ago. I based the statement I made the day before yesterday on that. That statement, made by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), has never been contradicted or disproved. That is all I have to say.

Mr. FOSTER. There is every difference between a statement and an inference. I am dealing with the statements of the Minister of Militia and Defence. I brand them as absolutely untrue. He may draw any inference he likes, but I will not be bound by them. All I have to say is that they are not true and the minister as a member of this House is bound to take my statement and withdraw his statements.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes ; hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Then if he will not withdraw them I challenge him to prove them and I shall repeat that statement as long as he and I are members of this House.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot see very well how I can withdraw a statement made by a member of this government a year ago based upon the evidence which he gave at that time. I have simply quoted that statement and repeated it. I cannot withdraw a statement made by the Minister of Justice. It is impossible.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody asks the minister to withdraw a statement made by the Minister of Justice. All I ask the minister to do was to withdraw his own statement which is absolutely unfounded.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statement is taken from your letter.

USE OF THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'CHAMPLAIN.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to refer again to the question as to the use which is being made of the government steamer 'Champlain.' On Tuesday I brought to the attention of the government the statement that the government steamer 'Champlain' was being used by Mr. Taschereau, Minister of Public Works in the province of Quebec, candidate in Charlevoix, for political purposes. I stated to the House that I had been credibly informed that persons supposed to be Conservatives were turned off that steamer although they offered to pay their passage. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) stated in reply that the route of the steamer had been somewhat extended. He did not say for what purpose, or at whose instance, although my question involved that. I have now another telegram from Mr. Rodolphe Forget, a member of this House, bearing date the 27th day of May, which says that :

> Steamer 'Champlain' refused to call at St. Irene for me and Conservative friends this morning although scheduled for this place.

On looking at the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries I observe that the place named is one of the points at which that steamer is supposed to call. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether the government has any information upon this and whether it is true or not that this steamer is being used as a political transport in the interests of the Liberal party in the provincial election now going on in the province of Quebec ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) called this matter to the attention of the House the other day my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was not in his seat. I wired at once to Mr. Beland, the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, as to this matter and he sent me a telegram which, I think, was communicated to the House by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I also received this morning from Mr. Beland a letter on the same subject. If I had known that the matter would again be brought up I would have brought it to the attention of the House and read it. I shall do so on Monday. With regard to the later charge that the steamer 'Champlain' did not call at St. Irene, although scheduled to do so, that is a new charge of which I have not heard, but as to which I will make inquiry. The steamer 'Champlain' is doing ferry work between River Ouelle and Murray Bay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And St. Irene.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. St. Irene is one of the points. Of course, I cannot give any information to my hon. friend on this matter, but I shall inquire of Mr. Beland. Mr. Beland is stationed at Quebec and gets his information by wiring River Ouelle or Murray Bay.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. MR. PUGSLEY.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege also. In the discussion on the subject of cold storage, as I find the report on page 9575 of 'Hansard,' Mr. Trueman was referred to and I see that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is reported to have asked this question:

Mr. LENNOX. Is that the Trueman who figured after as Judge Trueman?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether this is the judge or the solicitor. Judge Trueman has since died.

Mr. DANIEL. This is the judge, and a member of the firm of Pugsley & Trueman. He was in the cold storage company.

My hon. friend who represents the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) must know that Judge Trueman, who, in his lifetime was a practising barrister in St. John and afterwards became a judge, was a partner of mine some fifteen or twenty years ago ; that at least fifteen years ago he ceased to be my partner and afterwards practised upon his own account. So far from Judge Trueman being the gentleman referred to as 'Mr. Trueman' that gentleman was Mr. Walter H. Trueman, an entirely different person.

Mr. FOSTER. Was he a judge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; Walter H. Trueman was not a judge. He was the solicitor and he is the gentleman who is referred to in this correspondence and who is mentioned by Mr. Williams. My hon. friend from St. John is therefore wrong, first, in his statement that the Mr. Trueman referred to was Judge Trueman, and secondly he was in error in informing the House that Judge Trueman was a partner of mine.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John). The Minister of Public Works is quite correct in his statement. When the member for North Toronto was speaking I was under the impression he was referring to those who were the charter members of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. The charter member by the name of Trueman of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company is A. I. Trueman, Judge Trueman, and when alive the partner of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But, at what period?

Mr. DANIEL. I was mistaken in understanding the member for North Toronto as referring to the charter members of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, and so I spoke of the Mr. Trueman that was mentioned in that case as, he was, Judge Trueman, partner of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I do not understand that. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Judge Trueman was my partner. I have already informed the House that some fifteen years ago Judge Trueman and I dissolved partnership and were never afterwards in partnership.

Mr. DANIEL. All I can say is that the firm name down in St. John has always been Pugsley and Trueman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. DANIEL. I have never seen any notice of the dissolution of partnership.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It occurred at least fifteen years ago.

Mr. DANIEL. I know the two gentlemen had their office in the same room all along.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we rented an office in the same building.

SUPPLY—COLD STORAGE FOR BAIT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEORGE W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.) When the House adjourned at six o'clock on Wednesday I was referring to the reciprocal compliments that had passed between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia, and to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture desiring to take a part in military affairs, the Minister of Militia was desirous to join to his more warlike accomplishments something of the arts of peace, and so took an interest in agricultural matters. Unfortunately, as I pointed out, between the warlike desires of the peaceful minister and the peaceful desires of the warlike minister, poor Mr. Williams got into serious difficulty and was unable to handle a scheme he had devised for establishing cold storage facilities in St. John, N.B. It is to be regretted that the Minister of Militia in discussing this matter should have lost his temper. There was nothing in the well-reasoned speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) which ought to have aroused to such a degree the ire and the wrath of the minister of war. There were no insinuations made in that speech.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend did not hear the concluding part of that speech. If it were said of him he would not have stood it half so well as I did.

Mr. FOSTER. The concluding part was a suggestion.

Mr. FOWLER. Sometimes the sting is in the tail, and perhaps the minister thought so in this case. Anyway it is just as well not to be too thin skinned. This is a matter of great public interest and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) had a perfect right to bring it to the attention of parliament, and because he did so was no reason why the Minister of Militia should have fallen upon him in such a savage, fierce and vindictive manner. Well, I do not intend to follow that line of debate ; I dont believe in it. I dont think we should make these personal attacks on members of the House, and I shall therefore discuss this question from the information before us, and from the knowledge we have of the circumstances of the case leaving personalities aside as they should be left aside in discussing public matters. The facts of this case are: Some time in the latter part of the year 1905 Mr. F. E. Williams of St. John, who is a merchant of considerable prominence and not the kind of person the Minister of Militia would lead us to believe, took an interest in cold storage matters in his city. By the way I was surprised to hear the Minister of Militia speak of Mr. Williams as he did; I was more surprised at that than I was at his references to the member for North Toronto. The member for North Toronto was in the House able and willing to defend himself, but Mr. Williams was absent, and so it is the more regrettable that the minister should have made disparaging statements about him. I quote from the speech of the Minister of Militia:

As to this particular cold storage establishment, we have been told a great deal about a man named Williams.

Now, Mr. Williams is a prominent merchant of the city of St. John and a prominent Liberal as well, and it was quite unnecessary for the Minister of Militia to refer to him as 'a man named Williams.' True, he is a man, and true he is named Williams, but we all understand the idea the minister wished to convey; we all know he wished to underrate Mr. Williams and to minimize his importance, and so he spoke of him not as Mr. F. E. Williams, a prominent merchant of St. John, but he designated him in a curt and disparaging way as 'a man named Williams.' I quote further from the Minister of Militia in referring to Mr. Williams:

He says he was engaged in the fish business though it turned out he was engaged in the pork business.

I defy the minister to point, in the letters of Mr. Williams to the department, to any statement of his that he was in the fish business. The Minister of Militia has gone out of his way to attack the veracity of Mr. Williams, and that attack was unwarranted and unsupported by facts. The minister further says:

He wished to get from the Department of Marine and Fisheries a grant not of 30 per cent but of 50 per cent in order to enable him to freeze bait and carry on his own line of business.

Now, if he was not in the fish business he would not be carrying on his own line of business in freezing bait. The minister seems to have attributed some evil motive to Mr. Williams in trying to get 50 per cent, but Mr. Williams in his letters points out that in every case the bait freezing establishments in Nova Scotia receive 50 per cent of the cost of their plant, and so when Mr. Williams was asking 50 per cent for a bait freezing plant to serve the fishermen of the Bay of Fundy, he was asking exactly for the same terms they were getting in Nova Scotia. Is there anything unfair or improper in that. Is there any reason in it why the Minister of Militia should sneer at this gentleman and insinuate that he was grasping enough to try and get something he was not entitled to ? I think this is very unfair on the part of the Minister of Militia. It says in other words, he wished to be given a system of cold storage which would subsidize directly his own line of business and not a system of cold storage on a large scale which would be of great advantage to the foreign export as well as the local business. As a matter of fact Mr. Williams was not engaged in the fish business. He wished to establish a bait freezing plant in the city of St. John, and asked for assistance to that freezing plant on exactly the same terms as had been given by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to similar establishments in Nova Scotia. Supposing that he had advanced his own business by getting cold storage in St. John. The Minister of Militia states that he started into this because he was largely interested in fruit culture in his own district, therefore he would be equally blamable in desiring to get some special benefit for himself on account of the business in which he was engaged. The minister said:

Mr. Williams wanted something which would particularly benefit his own line of business and he made certain applications and had certain negotiations with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). But owing to a change of policy in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Williams failed to get what he wanted; and not being pleased, he endeavoured to solace himself by abusing me. Seeing that even he could not get something for nothing.

He could not get something for nothing. Did he ask for something for nothing? Did the industry with which the Minister of Militia was connected get something for nothing? Is that the inference we are to draw? It seems to me that is the only inference we can draw if we are to take for granted the statement of the Minister of Militia that Mr. Williams, in asking for this subsidy which the Department of Agriculture had already been authorized to give, was trying to get something for nothing and therefore guilty of reprehensible conduct. What are we to say of a cabinet minister who is asking for exactly the same thing? Is his conduct to be all right while that of Williams, who does not have the advantage of a seat in this House, is to be all wrong? Yet that is the only fault the minister can find with Williams, that he was trying to get something for nothing, and because he could not get it was abusing the minister. Surely the minister, having been successful in obtaining what he was after and Mr. Williams having been turned down in trying to get what he was after, should have just a little of the milk of human kindness in him and should have said that Williams was a little sore and so should not be blamed so much. I think that Mr. Williams' conduct has been reasonable and proper. I do not think he can be blamed much for having lost his temper under the circumstances. He had all his life been an active Liberal worker in St. John, he was prominent in the councils of the Liberal party there, he was only asking what every one had the right to receive if they came within the conditions laid down in the grant and be found himself up against an influence he did not expect to have to butt against, he found, even although he had engaged the services of the Minister of Railways and Canals and supposed that minister was going to be powerful enough to gain what he wanted, that that minister was powerless in the fact of another minister who had greater influence over the Minister of Agriculture, and it was perhaps natural that Mr. Williams should feel a little sore on the subject. It would not be necessary to speak of the history of this case had not the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) denied that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) has any direct or indirect interest in this business. It does seem to me that the Minister of Militia stated in so many words in his speech that he was interested in this business.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Did I misunderstand?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not intend to. I stated that I had an interest and then I introduced two or three sentences between that statement and the discussion of what that interest was. Then I resumed and said: I said I had an interest—and then I explained what the interest was.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I take it that the hon. gentleman denies that he has any interest in this business except his interest as a public man——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Precisely.

Mr. FOWLER—in something that he believes to be for the benefit of the country. All I can say to that for the moment before I analyse the evidence is that the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence has manifested a greater and deeper personal interest in this particular line of business for the improvement of the country than he has in any other line in which only his general interest as a public man is concerned.

I was speaking of the history of this case. It began, as I say, with the application that was made to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries by F. E. Williams. The negotiations between Mr. Williams and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries continued for some time. Finally the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shunted Mr. Williams and his application off on the Minister of Agriculture. We find that on October 13, 1906. about a year after the Williams application was first made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries—and it seems to me that that application having been made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and passed on by that department to the Department of Agriculture it should date from the time it was made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries which beyond all question would make Mr. Williams the first applicant for the subsidy for the city of St. John—a company was incorporated called the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company, Limited.

As I understand it, the moving spirit in the incorporation and formation of that company was the Minister of Militia and Defence. I understand that the Minister of Militia and Defence will not deny that and in fact although the minister is not included among the incorporators, nor is Mr. Macoun his son-in-law and another of the active spirits in the promotion of this company, although the names of the incorporators are simply men of straw used for the purpose of the incorporation of the company, clerks and the like of that——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Clerks in the law firm that got out the charter.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, that is the common way of incorporating these companies; afterwards the true people come in and take up the stock.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a matter of fact the company was never organized.

Mr. FOWLER. It was incorporated but not organized.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. It is only fair to say that Mr. R. J. Graham, the other gentleman to whom my hon. friend referred as having been interested——

Mr. FOWLER. Will refer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN—agreed, in case the company were finally organized, to become the managing director of the company but that point was never reached.

Mr. FOWLER. We find then that the Minister of Militia and Defence and his son-in-law, Mr. Macoun, and Mr. Graham were the moving spirits in connection with the incorporation of this particular company. That was on October 13, and on December 4 the Minister of Agriculture announced in the House his intention to give a subsidy of 30 per cent on the cost of cold storage plants. That 30 per cent was to include not only the cost of the building, but the cost of the site as well. That is a matter of some importance and I remember that when this matter was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture in the House I opposed the inclusion of the cost of the site in reckoning the amount of subsidy to which the builders were entitled, because in many instances free sites would be given —and just that same case arose here.

I have no doubt that when the cost of this building was made up, for which the amount of subsidy was asked, the value of the site was included.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it was, and in addition to the value of the site being included, I think there was included the amount of stock given to the gentlemen promoting the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company; because any one who has seen those buildings must come to the conclusion that no amount of $150,000 could possibly have been expended upon them, not even on a government contract. On the 4th of December, 1906, as I have stated, the Minister of Agriculture announced his policy of paying 30 per cent to those who established cold storage plants throughout Canada. On the 5th of December, 1906, the very next day, an application was made by L. S. Macoun for aid for a cold storage plant in the city of St. John. He did not lose much time in getting in the application. It would almost look as if the application were waiting to be put in—waiting for the announcement to be made, with the knowledge that it was to be made. That may not have been the case; I am only saying what it looks like. Mr. Williams did not lose much time, although he had no means of knowing beforehand the policy of the Minister of Agriculture; for we find that on the 7th of December, 1906, three days after the announcement to the House, in which there was time for the announcement to be telegraphed to St. John, Mr. Williams put in his application to the Minister of Agriculture. Negotiations then proceeded between the parties. There was a considerable volume of correspondence between them, but nothing of very great moment until we come to the 11th of June, 1907, when Mr. R. J. Graham applies for the bonus, the same gentleman who was interested with the Minister of Militia in the Canadian Lands and Produce Company, the abortive company that died stillborn Up to this time Mr. Graham, Mr. McAvity, Mr. A. I. Trueman and others, who were interested in what was known as the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, were at arms-length with each other. One party had the ear of the provincial government, through a former partner of Mr. Trueman, who was at that time at the head of the provincial government of New Brunswick. There are people who are suspicious enough to say that the name of A. I. Trueman, though it appears there, was really only used for the name of somebody else.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Who?

Mr. FOWLER. Ask him and you will find out. I am not referring to anybody; I am simply saying that there are those who say that the name of Mr. Trueman was used for somebody else, they do not say for whom. They leave that to the imagination of other people, and my hon. friend has a very vivid imagination when it suits him, and he can perhaps supply the name of the other person. I say that at that time the two parties, the one having the ear of the provincial government, and the other, composed of the Minister of Militia, Mr. Macoun and Mr. Graham, having the ear of the federal government. They were not working in harmony. That was on the 11th of June, 1907. But between the 11th of June, 1907, and the 17th of August, 1907, a change took place. They felt that it would not be well to fight, because if they united together, they could better divide the spoil among them. They were getting 30 per cent from the federal government and those who took the provincial subsidy were to get $60,000 towards their plant.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no; a guarantee of bonds.

Mr. FOWLER. Bonds and interest guaranteed—practically the same thing. If they made money, all right; if they lost, the promoters would not lose anything. Well, they thought it best to join forces and put up a plant. With the $60,000 that they were to get from the provincial government by way of guarantee of bonds and guarantee of interest, and with the $30,000 of subsidy from the Dominion, supposing the plant would cost $100,000, they would get $90,000. This would mean that they would only have to put up $10,000. But we know how these things are worked. They are worked in a variety of ways. By the padding of accounts, by the putting in that for which no money has been paid, such as good will, and that sort of thing, it would be possible to bring the cost of the property up so much that the $60,000 and the 30 per cent would more than cover the cost of the building, leaving a decent margin to the gentlemen who were engaged in the promotion of the company. That something like this did occur we have evidence in the letter of Mr. F. E. Williams to the Prime Minister. Opposed to that we have the absolute denial of the Minister of Militia as to any conversation having taken place between them. Now, I do not propose to judge between these two men—the one a prominent Liberal and merchant of good standing and character in the city of St. John, the other the Minister of Militia, a gentleman enjoying the confidence of his constituents in the province of Nova Scotia, enjoying the confidence of his colleagues in the government, and it is presumed enjoying the confidence of a majority of the members of this House. We have the two statements diametrically opposed, Mr. Williams asserting that the Minister of Militia said to him that by the uniting of forces, by getting an amalgamation of the St. John party, who had the ear of the provincial government, with the Ottawa party, who had the ear of the federal government, they would be able not only to build this plant with the subsidies and subventions, but divide a decent profit as well.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Is that statement attributed to me?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, it is absolutely false.

Mr. FOWLER. I have already stated that the minister absolutely denies this, and I say that I do not propose to judge between him and Mr. Williams. I merely say this. Let us look at the question of interest. On the one hand, Mr. Williams' evidence perhaps should be taken with a grain of salt, from the fact that he is a disappointed applicant for these very subventions and subsidies, while on the other hand should not a certain amount of doubt gather about the statement of the Minister of Militia from the fact that he is as intensely interested in denying that any such conversation ever took place? So that when we come to take the statements of these two gentlemen, equally worthy of credence from the positions they occupy, they are equally clouded with suspicion, and it is difficult to judge between them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) does not wish to take an unfair advantage. I think his statement is altogether out of order. Mr. Williams is not a member of this House. But, whether my hon. friend believes me or not, or whether he believes Mr. Williams or not, I think he is bound to accept my statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). It was not the rule in the other case.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Martin) should not say that. The other was the case of a dispute between two members of the House about a matter of common knowledge, which was an entirely different proposition.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Militia has entirely misunderstood me, and I was trying hard to make myself plain. I do not refuse to accept the word of the Minister of Militia, but I was pointing out how difficult it was to decide between these two gentlemen, they being equally respectable and each having an interest.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am afraid my hon. friend wanted an inference to be drawn.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not draw any inference. But the Minister of Militia is so accustomed to drawing inferences in order to make charges against the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that he cannot cease even in his own case. Now, the peace-pipe was smoked, and on August 17 there had been an amalgamation of the interests of these conflicting parties. On that date Mr. R. J. Graham notified the department of the amalgamation of interests of the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company and the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and asked that all the interests should be transferred—that is correct, I think—to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I understand it, Mr. Graham had applied in his own name and had actually made a contract with the Department of Agriculture, but later he asked to have his own contract transferred to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the Minister of Militia is misinformed with respect to that. He must admit that up to the time of the amalgamation, Mr. Graham was acting for himself and the other promoters of the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company, and that when he made his application on June 11, it was not for himself, although it might be in his own name. Surely the minister will not say that it was for himself solely, absolutely and independent of the other gentlemen, Mr. Macoun and the minister himself? There never was an intimation that Mr. Graham was acting for himself, although the application was made by him. Mr. Graham himself does not claim that he was acting for himself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The contract with the government will show.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not show anything. It might be made in Mr. Graham's name, and yet he might be acting as trustee for other parties.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If he were trustee, it would be so stated, would it not?

Mr. FOWLER. Not necessarily. Why should it be stated?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should think it would be.

Mr. FOWLER. Take the case of a man who holds timber licenses, for instances. Why, I myself hold timber licenses that do not belong to me individually; I hold them for others. My name does not appear as trustee, but appears as if I were the individual owner. But I am not the owner. That is the way it is always done.

Now, on August 17 Mr. Graham gives notice that the interests are amalgamated. On September 1 the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company is organized, with R. J. Graham as president, L. S. Macoun as secretary-treasurer. What stronger evidence could you require that the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company had been absorbed? Because it was not a case of amalgamation, but of absorption. This company had absorbed the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company which is the fact—

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have told my hon. friend that the company was never organized. How could it absorb anything if it was never organized?

Mr. FOWLER. It was incorporated.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But it was never organized.

Mr. FOWLER. What had that to do with it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman said the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company absorbed the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. How could it if it was never even organized?

Mr. FOWLER. The minister is something like the man who sent for a lawyer to get him out of jail. When the lawyer heard the man's case he said: 'They could not put you in jail for that; it would be impossible.' But the man's answer was: 'It may be impossible, but I am in jail just the same.' The minister may say that this absorption could not take place; all I say is that it did. In this Canada Lands Produce Company how many people have we been able to trace? (I do not refer to the names of the incorporators, because, as the minister himself admits, they were simply clerks). We find that the men connected with it were the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), L. S. Macoun and Mr. R. J. Graham. I care not whether the company was organized or not—it consisted of these individuals—just as the Ross Rifle Company, the Minister of Militia tells us, consists of Sir Charles Ross solely, so this company consisted of the three individuals. Now, we find two of these individuals in the amalgamated concern, one as president and the other as secretary-treasurer, occupying the important positions in connection with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. So when I say that it was not a case of amalgamation, but of absorption, I think I was not far from the mark. On 1st September, 1907, we find this company incorporated, Mr. R. J. Graham president, Mr. L. S. Macoun secretary-treasurer, Mr. A. J. McAvity, Mr. A. I. Trueman and Mr. Henry R. Ross. Now, Mr. McAvity was a man very close to the government then holding power in the province of New Brunswick, a very close friend of the then premier of the province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who was the premier at that time?

Mr. FOWLER. I think that September 1, was just after the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) had been translated; I think he had not changed his form on August 17, certainly not on June 11. But although the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) may have retired as the nominal premier of the province of New Brunswick, he continued as the actual premier up to March 3, 1908, when the people took a hand in the matter and made a change themselves. While not the nominal, he was the actual leader during that time, the actual premier, and the other gentlemen were simply puppets to be moved as he pulled the strings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You flatter me too much.

Mr. FOWLER. Though I am bound to say that his pulling of the strings was not done in a very masterly manner. Perhaps the string broke. Mr. A. I. Trueman was a very worthy gentleman. He has since died. He was at one time a partner of the present Minister of Public Works and ex-premier of the province of New Brunswick. While nominally he had for some time ceased to be a partner, in fact the offices were the same, and were never changed. They occupied the same offices, particularly about the time I think that the hon. minister came up here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me to correct him? He is entirely in error. When Mr. Trueman and I dissolved partnership, we actually dissolved, and never from the time we dissolved was I interested in his business, nor was he interested in my business. It is true, he had his own office and I had my office; but there was a general office which was occupied by the respective clerks for both of us. But so far as our business was concerned, it was absoluetly separate; and as I say, neither one of us had the slightest interest of any kind or description, direct or indirect, in the business of the other.

Mr. FOWLER. Now my hon. friend has proved just what I said. What different position would the minister have us think was occupied by these two gentlemen than any other parties. Is there not in every case, where they are able to afford it, a general office, and a private office for each member of the firm? That is the way it was here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman, notwithstanding my statement that we were not in partnership, and had not been in partnership for fifteen years, persists in saying we were. The hon. gentleman made the statement that we only nominally ceased to be partners. Now I think my hon. friend will accept my statement, and I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, whether he should not do so.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I never made any such statement. Let me repeat what I did say. I said that at one time these gentlemen were in partnership, and that at a certain time they, nominally, so far as I knew, ceased to be partners. At the time, and up to the time of the removal of the hon. gentleman to this scene, they occuped the same offices. That is what I said, and I say that any inference can be drawn from that state of facts. I never made any statement different from what the hon. gentleman has made. When he got up and said that they occupied each their own private office and had a general office in common, I said that the same practice existed among other partners. I did not say that proved a partnership between these two gentlemen, I did not say anything of the kind. Therefore it is not necessary for me to accept the statement of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood that is what he said, that while we nominally ceased to be partners—the fair inference I drew from his remarks was that, while we nominally ceased to be partners, we were still real partners. If my hon. friend did not mean that, I cheerfully accept his denial.

Mr. FOWLER. There my hon. friend goes again, just like the Minister of Militia and Defence drawing inferences. I am not responsible to this House for any inferences he may entertain, nor any meaning he may take. I am responsible to this House for what I state. I stated the matter as it was, and I am going to restate it. I am going to state that at one time the hon. gentleman and Mr. A. I. Trueman were partners; at a certain other time they nominally ceased to be partners. Perhaps they actually ceased; I do not know, but I do know that they nominally ceased to be partners. I am going to state further than that, that from the time——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. gentleman should not accept my statement, that for fifteen years or thereabouts we had not been in partnership, and had no interest directly or indirectly in each other's business.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not understand that the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) refused to accept the statement of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FOWLER. I certainly did not refuse to accept the statement of the hon. gentleman. It would be almost high treason for any one of us to refuse to accept any statement of the Minister of Public Works. I would be looked upon as a man almost crazy if I refused to accept his statement. Now that is with respect to Mr. A. I. Trueman. The other director is Henry R. Ross, a young man whom I know thoroughly, a very bright young man, who has no financial interest in this company, but who is its manager at St. John—because this company extends its operations beyond St. John, it has another plant in the province of Nova Scotia, I think two.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None, so far I know.

Mr. FOWLER. No, the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. They run it under another name over there. What is it there ? the Nova Scotia Cold Storage Company? It is run under another name over there.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not wish to misrepresent me. There is no cold storage company in Halifax, so far as I know, except the bait freezing establishment to which his friend Mr. Williams refers in his letter. That is the only one I know of.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not Mr. Graham connected with another cold storage company in Nova Scotia ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is none whatever.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought there was one in Nova Scotia. I accept the statement of the Minister of Militia, because I know that the Minister of Militia knows.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I certainly do.

Mr. FOSTER. He knows all about it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know several things, more than you wish I did.

Mr. FOWLER. Now I want to refer to an editorial which appears in the St. John 'Telegraph.' It shows that the suspicion that the Minister of Militia is interested in this company, is not confined to the wicked opposition members of this House, but it is a suspicion that is widespread, as widespread as the knowledge that a cold storage company exists in the city of St. John. This editorial appears in the 'Daily Telegraph' of Thursday, May 28, which arrived here to-day. It is a very clever, bright, readable editorial, and I am sure all the members on both sides of the House will enjoy hearing it. It is headed 'Very cold storage':

In an evil moment the Hon. Sydney Fisher ——

I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here.

—wrote a letter. He says a careless phrase slipped into it. Unfortunately the phrase he now describes as 'loose' referred to his friend and colleague, Sir Frederick Borden, and the latter's interest in a cold storage promotion, or company, of which New Brunswick has heard much, and to which it has contributed more money than it likes to think about. Mr. F. E. Williams, of this city, wrote to Hon. Mr. Fisher to make application for a cold storage subsidy, and the Minister of Agriculture replied, intimating that the subsidy would go to a company in which the Minister of Militia was interested.

That certainly is borne out by the facts as disclosed in the correspondence.

The virtuous rage of Sir Frederick at being thus officially associated with a subsidy hunt must be imagined.

There, of course, the editor is drawing upon his imagination.

Hon. Mr. Fisher, in discussing the matter yesterday, when Mr. Foster brought up the chill but seasonable subject of cold storage, explained that when he said Sir Frederick was 'interested' he did not employ the word in the narrow and commercial sense, but meant to convey the intelligence that Sir Frederick's benign interest in all matters of public welfare and progress embraced cold storage also.

That, I think, is a fair inference from the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture.

It is a pretty story, and no doubt Mr. Fisher told it with becoming gravity. Sir Frederick, too, may be disposed to applaud his colleague's interpretation of a phrase which the public might be inclined to view as, let us say, awkward.

But one cold storage chapter leads inevitably to another. Keeping Hon. Mr. Fisher's loosely worded, or carelessly phrased, letter in mind, let us come down to the time of the recent change of government in New Brunswick.

The Robinson government, by an order in council of which the mere taxpayers heard no whisper, agreed to give the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company an additional mark of esteem by guaranteeing an additional $30,000 worth of its bonds.

In addition to the $60,000 to which they were already entitled, in its dying moments, the Robinson government, under the tutelage of its preceptor, I have no doubt, passed an order in council giving an additional $30,000, making $90,000 altogether towards this cold storage construction in the city of St. John. The fact of the passing of that order in council was most carefully concealed from the people of New Brunswick during the elections that were held there. Although the financial condition of the country was gone into, although there was a joint meeting held at St. John at which the leaders of both parties spoke, although they discussed the financial affairs of the country, although the premier—I was just going to say the acting premier—himself spoke on that occasion, and although he professed to disclose all the financial obligations of the country, he carefully concealed from his audience on that occasion and from the general public the knowledge that he had passed an order in council granting $30,000 more of a subsidy in this cold storage construction :

At that time the Robinson government designed to succeed itself in the esteem of the people whose credit it was pledging. The people had other plans, and these matured on March 3, when the government was routed at the polls. The cold storage company's relations with the old government had been cordial in the extreme, but a new king had arisen, and it was quite possible that he might not know Joseph. Also, he might be inquisitive as to orders in council and have constitutional scruples.

While things were at this pass——

Here is where the connection of the Minister of Militia and Defence comes in :

While things were at this pass Sir Frederick Borden came to St. John and called upon Hon. Mr. Hazen. He casually referred to the $30,000 guarantee, of which Mr. Hazen up to that time had never heard, and it is reported that he suggested the desirability of the government's 'seeing' the old government's thirty and 'raising it' ten thousand.

I am afraid that the editor has been in the habit of playing poker judging by the terms he uses :

Sir Frederick's son-in-law is one of the officers of the company. How is Sir Frederick's presence here on that occasion to be interpreted? Does it square with Hon. Mr. Fisher's theory that the Minister of Militia's interest in cold storage was general and patriotic and not confined to a particular project whose success was personally desired by him for the ordinary reasons?

The theory of subventions is that all applicants shall have equal opportunity to share the public money thus given to promote enterprises of public benefit. How does that theory work out in this case? Was the opportunity of Mr. F. E. Williams equal to that of the men who had the energetic support of a cabinet minister? Possibly so, but the average citizen would as soon fire off a Ross rifle as believe it.

That, Sir, is how this matter is viewed by one of the leading newspapers of the maritime provinces, the leading paper in New Brunswick, published in the very city where the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company has its building and offices. It seems to me that we must come to the conclusion that the parties who were interested in the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company, Limited, that company which was incorporated but never organized, are, with the exception of the Minister of Militia, who claims that he is not interested, the same parties who are interested in the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, because the same idea obtains all the way through. There was a time when the Minister of Militia admits that he was interested, but the Minister of Militia has not yet told us when his interest ceased. If he were interested in the first instance and if he is not interested now, there must have been a period when his interest ceased. I fail to see it. I have not found it. The minister has not told us when that was, but we have the facts before us that the minister has maintained the same apparent interest in this matter up to the present moment and that he has worked for the welfare of this enterprise as he did at the outset when he admits himself that he had more than an apparent interest in the matter, that he had more than the ordinary interest of a public man. Of course, in this House, when a minister states that he has no actual interest in the matter we are bound, by the rules of parliamentary practice, to accept his statement, although the minister himself is more ready to ask for the application of that rule than he is to submit to it when asked by others. I think it is unfortunate that the minister should have imparted into this discussion a degree of bitterness that was unnecessary and which I, at any rate, have sought most strenuously to avoid.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) made some statements with respect to the conduct of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain which were absolutely incorrect in so far as the facts are concerned. If the minister had taken the trouble to look up the authorities he certainly never would have made the statements he did make. He stated that Mr. Chamberlain, while still a member of the government, was largely concerned in companies which were doing business with the government. What are the facts ? I have the authority here. You will find it stated in the Parliamentary Debates, fourth series, from 5th December to 15th December, 1900, page 442. This matter came up in the House of Commons and it was discussed in a motion brought in by Mr. Lloyd George, one of the Welsh members, at present, I think, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and it really amounted to a motion of censure upon the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. This is what Mr. Chamberlain says :

When I went into public life I gave up private business altogether. I have done what I could, I defy anyone to do more to keep out of investments that seemed likely to bring me into relationship with the government or public works. I will take one case. I was a considerable shareholder in the Small Arms company and in another company, Kynochs.

That is the company which the Minister of Agriculture referred to.

Now, what did I do? I sold out of both companies, and I sold out of them at a loss.

That is what the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain said and when my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture cites the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain's case as a justification for a minister of the Crown being mixed up in a matter of this kind he certainly cites a case that is against him rather than for him. Then, there is another case which the hon. gentleman might have cited and that is a discussion in this House. The motion upon which it was based appears in the Journals of August 13, 1891. The discussion will be found in Volume II. of 'Hansard,' 1891, page 3827. This amendment to the motion to go into supply was moved by Sir Richard Cartwright, and seconded by Mr. Laurier, now the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada. This is the amendment :

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved: That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

I would ask the Minister of Public Works to pay particular attention to this because he has accepted a banquet gotten up for him by a contractor in the city of Montreal and presided over by that contractor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A very good banquet it was.

Mr. FOWLER. I should judge so from some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman when that banquet was pretty well along. I should judge there was something at that banquet which loosens the tongue, gives rein to fancy, takes away from judgment and reason, and sometimes from veracity. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it was a good banquet and I should think he enjoyed to the full every thing that was at the banquet. Now, this resolution was seconded by the leader of the Minister of Public Works. We all know that the opinion which the Minister of Public Works entertains for his present leader has greatly changed in the past few years, and for that matter the opinion his leader held of him away back in 1896 appears to have changed also. However the opinion which the Minister of Public Works had of the present Prime Minister has changed very much for the better so far as the Prime Minister is concerned. This amendment to Supply was accepted by the government and the House was unanimous on it, and Sir Richard Cartwright made a speech and he was very vehement as he often was, and he said :

But I lay down, with all the emphasis in my power, I call upon this House and I call upon every honest man in this House and out of it, to stand by me in declaring that ministers of the Crown have no right whatever under any conceivable circumstances, to accept gifts from contractors or public servants. or persons having direct relations with the government. I have always held that ministers of the Crown were in a two-fold sense trustees. They are trustees of the people by right of the fact that they are the representatives of the people, but they are more than that. They are the sworn and paid servants of the public; they are, therefore, doubly bound to see to it, that no act of theirs should bring their high office into contempt or should be likely in any way to interfere with the proper administration of constitutional government as we have it and understand it.

It does seem to me that this is very apposite to the present case. Here is the Minister of Militia making application for a subsidy for his own private purpose as it was in the first instance—I am not speaking of the latter part now, but as it was up to the time the Minister of Agriculture wrote this letter—and it does seem to me in that respect the Minister of Militia was blamable.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never make an application for my own private purpose and the Minister of Agriculture has said so.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Agriculture does not say so; the Minister of Agriculture says exactly the opposite. I will read his letter again:

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Read his speech.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, his speech; that is a different thing entirely.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is more recent.

Mr. FOWLER. Here is the letter written by the Minister of Agriculture when he had no idea this matter was to be discussed in parliament. Here is the letter not couched in language for the purpose of concealing facts but for the purpose of disclosing facts. Of course the Minister of Agriculture says he used a loose expression and now he comes to parliament and tries to fix it. I do not say that he wilfully prevaricates. I would not say that for two reasons: One is that it would be unparliamentary, the other is that I am frank enough to say I don't think it would be in accordance with the facts. But here is the letter written to Mr. Williams in which the Minister of Agriculture says :

Mr. F. E. Williams,
92 and 96 Princess street, St. John, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th. I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. Sir Frederick Borden has made application, on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably.

There is what the Minister of Agriculture writes in plain English. He says the Minister of Militia made application on behalf of a company with which he was connected and in that statement the Minister of Agriculture was disclosing the absolute fact as it was up to that time. Either the Minister of Militia had made that application for a company with which he was connected and the Minister of Agriculture was stating the fact, or else the Minister of Militia had made no application and the Minister of Agriculture was not stating a fact. I do not see how the Minister of Agriculture could have misunderstood the Minister of Militia in respect to his connection with the company. It would be impossible for such a misunderstanding to arise between two ministers who fight like blazes, as Mr. Tarte told us, I could understand it; but here are two ministers who don't fight at all, and the one of whom is always trying to help the other. When the Minister of Agriculture got into difficulty with Lord Dundonald the Minister of Militia out of the friendship he had for the Minister of Agriculture was willing to sacrifice the officer that he knew to be eminently qualified for his position. The Minister of Militia out of the great friendship he entertained for the Minister of Agriculture was willing to accept the odium for dismissing the hero Dundonald, and the Minister of Militia and the ministry as well did incur a great deal of odium for that act. So I say if this letter had been written by a minister concerning another minister between whom and himself there were no feelings of accord, I could quite understand how there might be a misunderstanding, but in this case it was utterly impossible, and the Minister of Militia must have given the Minister of Agriculture to understand that he was connected with this company. So, Sir, I think, in view of all these circumstances to which I have alluded, in view of the evidence disclosed in the letters, that the Minister of Militia is not without blame in this matter.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy the attention of the House for just a few moments. After listening to the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on Wednesday last, which occupied more than two hours and consisted of numerous quotations from papers, upon the public records, from which he read at unnecessary length, the fact came back to me that the motion before this House was that you do leave the chair so that the House might resolve itself into Committee of Supply, and I was impressed during the time the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was addressing the House and after reading his speech subsequently, that the time of this House might be better occupied in proposing or carrying out some amendment to the rules of this House which would prevent such unreasonable consumption of time as has occurred during the last few weeks in this House and the great delay in the transaction of public business which is much to the detriment of the public service. I presume that of all countries in the world in which there is any form of parliamentary government, Canada is the sole country which would permit such an abuse of privilege as prevails in this parliament; no other parliament would tolerate for one moment such unwarranted consumption of time and neglect of public business. And, Mr. Speaker, I submit that where the political head of an organized political party, under a statute of the parliament of this country, is in the receipt of an indemnity almost equal to that of the Prime Minister, he is in honour and all morals bound to exercise some control over the party which follows him. It is not fair, it is not intelligent or reasonable that the leader of a political party who is in the receipt of an indemnity, or whatever you may call it, can free himself from the obligation to pay some little respect to what is the real business of parliament.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is what hurts you.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am not one of those who would object to reasonable opposition even if it was opposed to my own opinion; I have sufficient knowledge of what political warfare is to recognize that. But surely there is some limit. We have members of parliament standing up here openly announcing that if the provisions of a certain Bill were eliminated the estimates would go through at once, intimating that they have no objection to the estimates.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) ended his long speech the other day by suggesting that the Minister of Militia and Defence should resign his seat in the cabinet and not further compromise the government. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is too free, as he was reminded the other night by his own friend and political ally the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes), to suggest wrong-doing by his political opponents. During his whole speech the hon. member for North Toronto was unfair to the Minister of Militia and Defence. His whole speech was but a repetition of innuendoes which could not be supported by the evidence which was before the House, or by the papers which were upon the table of the House, and yet my hon. friend took great umbrage when he received a slight reprimand from the Minister of Militia and Defence. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should remember that anybody who has skated on such thin ice as he has and who has sometimes fallen through that his provoking style of discussion of public affairs must provoke recrimination.

I could not but smile this afternoon when I heard the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) deprecating any excesses in parliamentary speech, particularly of a personal nature, and then saying that he would not condescend to such a mean manner of speech and never had done so. I am in the judgment of the House when I say I am telling the simple truth in stating that the hon. gentleman's speech from beginning to end was unfair and unwarranted. He would accept no statement of correction from any hon. gentleman opposite. He did not, I think, candidly accept the explanation of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) that a certain gentleman was not his partner, and he made the statement that in St. John it was generally understood that Mr. Trueman was but nominally interested in this company and that his name stood for the name of somebody else.

In this discussion two ideas have been developed by hon. gentlemen opposite. One is that the Minister of Militia and Defence was interested in this corporation which received a subsidy under the Cold Storage Act passed some two or three years ago by this parliament. The second is that this corporation was assisted too largely by the government of Canada. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other day repeatedly made the insinuation that the Minister of Militia and Defence was a shareholder, was financially interested in this corporation, and he quoted from many letters to sustain this contention of his. Now there were upon the record two letters, one addressed to the Minister of Agriculture by Mr. Macoun stating that the Minister of Militia was not financially interested in this corporation and that he was not then a shareholder or the owner of a share of stock therein, and the other from the Minister of Militia and Defence stating that he never was interested in that corporation and did not now hold stock in it. Then later we had in the address of the Minister of Militia and Defence his own explanation of what interest he did have in the corporation and this I desire to place before the House. I think it was a fair and reasonable statement for him to make and it furnishes to the House very clear information as to the interest of the minister in this promotion. He said in part:

> While I was in England in 1906 application was made under instructions given by me and Mr. Graham jointly for the incorporation of a company. It was intended, I may say at once and frankly, that my properties in Kings county, orchards and farms should be made a part of this company, and Mr. Graham, of Belleville, I believe, a prominent Conservative, a great fruit dealer and well up in cold storage and all matters pertaining to agriculture, was to have taken an interest and to put his properties into the company in the same way as mine were to be put in, and we were to accept bonds and a certain amount of stock for these properties. It was expected that money would be raised in England to carry on the business, and it was expected also that a portion of the money would undoubtedly be invested in the establishment of cold storage plants in different parts of Canada

That was a clear, clean, business proposition, in which Mr. Graham and the Minister of Militia agreed to pool their interests and place them in the hands of one corporation, and they were to receive, as part of the consideration for the sale, bonds and stock of the company. The establishment of cold storage was to be an incident in that promotion. If after that organization was completed, it became entitled under an Act of the parliament of Canada to a subsidy for cold storage purposes, I submit that there could be no objection to that, even if the Minister of Militia was in it. But the Minister of Militia saw that it might be open to criticism, so far as he was concerned, and he decided to withdraw. He says:

> This was all arranged before it was expected that any policy such as that afterwards decided upon would be brought down by the government.

At the time the organization was proposed, the Cold Storage Act had not been placed on the statute-book.

The minister goes on to say:

> When the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to adopt the policy of aiding, somewhat largely, cold storage, I felt that, so far as I was concerned, it would be undesirable for me to own stock in any company which was receiving from the government a subsidy, although, under the law, I do not know that it would have been. I would have been going beyond my right in doing so. Then it was that I told Mr. Graham that some other means must be taken to carry on the cold storage project in the city of St. John and elsewhere.

Now, I submit that the course pursued by the Minister of Militia and Defence was highly commendable, and that he did everything to destroy the criticism that might have been made had he remained interested in the original project. That project was abandoned. Then the Minister of Militia admits frankly that he was interested in the conclusion of the project which he and Mr. Graham had in mind, and I suppose he lent his sympathy to it. Why should he not do so? Was it not his duty, as a member of parliament, as a minister of the Crown, as one interested in the export of agricultural produce and its preservation prior thereto, to lend to that project his active sympathy and support? The question is this: Was that support of a nature which might possibly be construed as a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act? There were apparently two applicants for this subsidy, Mr. Williams and the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. I might preface that by saying that the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company was never organized; it never became a live organization, and it was eventually abandoned. Mr. Graham and Mr Macoun became identified in interest with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, and there the connection of the Minister of Militia with the project positively ceased. Now, I deny that there was more than one applicant for cold storage aid after the Cold Storage Act passed. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) denied the statement made by the Minister of Militia that Mr. Williams had stated that he was in the fish business. Well, I have in my hand a letter of March 1, 1906, addressed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries by Mr. Williams, in which he says :

The undersigned is engaged in the city of St. John, N.B., in carrying on a fish business, and is about to enter more largely in the business.

That statement the hon. member for Kings and Albert denied most vehemently. He denied that Mr. Williams was engaged in the fish business, or that he ever said he was.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a matter of fact, he said he was when he was not.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister said he was not engaged in the fish business, and that is what the hon. member for Kings and Albert said.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The hon. member for Kings and Albert had before him the records before parliament. That is all I have, and in those records Mr. Williams states, in a letter to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that he is engaged in the fish business and that he proposed to enlarge it.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman seems more interested in correcting the statement of the hon. member for Kings and Albert than he does in getting at the fact.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am interested in correcting a statement made by the hon. member for Kings and Albert ; I am not very much interested in whether that statement is correct or not. Mr. Williams goes on to say:

The object of establishing a refrigerator plant at St. John will be to ensure a regular supply of bait to our fishermen when fresh bait cannot be had. This will prove a great boom to the fishing industry.

He enlarges on that idea ; and on the files will be found a great many letters from Mr. Williams, all indicating fully and conclusively that the only cold storage plant he had in mind was a bait refrigerator plant ; he never suggested anything else. Even in his last letter, addressed to the Prime Minister, he makes mention of that fact again. This letter of March 1, 1906, was replied to by Mr. Gourdeau, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as follows :

I have to acknowledge your letter of the 8th instant, further on the subject of the establishment of a cold storage establishment at St. John, and I beg to refer you to my letter of the 12th October last, in which the object of the department in assisting in the establishment of fishermen's bait freezers is fully explained. Your letter seems to imply that you are still under the impression that this department is prepared to aid general cold storage establishments of a commercial character; but the information contained in the pamphlets forwarded to you in my previous letter must have made it plain that the sole object of these fishermen's bait freezers is to supply bait to the actual fishermen at times when it could not otherwise be procured. The localities you mention—Halifax and Canso where freezers of a larger kind are being tested are essentially ports of call for fishing vessels, and the sole object of the freezers established there is to enable visiting fishermen on the way to the banks to secure bait to carry on their fishing operations. No such conditions appear to exist in the neighbourhood of St. John.

In all his correspondence with the department there was never the slightest intimation from Mr. Williams that he ever thought of engaging in a cold storage plan such as was contemplated under the Cold Storage Act passed two or three years ago. In his application he makes no mention whatever of the character of the enterprise which he had in mind ; he designates it merely as a cold storage warehouse ; whereas the application of Mr. Macoun, which was made the day before, I think, states that they were to engage in the establishment of cold storage warehouses for the preservation of food products ; and that was the object of the Cold Storage Act. In the application of Mr. Macoun it was stated that they had secured land at St. John and had under option lands at Halifax, where they contemplated establishing another branch. The New Brunswick Storage Company had exemption from taxation by the city of St. John ; and after Mr. Graham and Mr. Macoun became interested in it, they made a further application to the city of St. John for exemption from taxation. I believe this was unnecessary, for later they secured lands from the Crown, which were not taxable. Mr. Williams never made application to the city of St. John for exemption from taxation. In fact, I am told that on the occasion that the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company asked for exemption from taxation, he appeared before the city council and publicly stated that he did not want any lands, did not require any government aid, did not require exemption from taxation. I submit that the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company went about this enterprise in a business-like way. I submit that Mr. Graham and Mr. Macoun took the proper business course in allying their interests with those of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company.

The other point about which I wish to make a few observations is the contention that the corporation known as the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company was over subsidized, unnecessarily assisted, by both governments, and that the cost of the construction of the whole plant was paid for out of the subsidy and that there was a profit left. Any fair-minded man reading the letters to Mr. Williams as they appear upon the files to-day must necessarily come to the conclusion, first that Mr. Williams never intended entering upon a project such as was contemplated to be subsidized by the Cold Storage Act, and that he exhibited no business acumen whatever. His letters to the Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture in almost every case were not couched in terms likely to emanate from a man of good business standing. He insinuates in one letter that the Minister of Militia stated that the enterprise could be floated out of the subsidies they were about to receive from the Dominion and provincial governments and leave a construction profit besides. The Minister of Militia denies that. He could well deny it; and it would not be necessary to have his denial to know that the statement of Mr. Williams was absolutely false and financially impossible.

Now, let me say a few words on the financial aspect of this matter. The hon. senior member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) discussing this matter the other day, said:

> We have to take the figures as they are put in the official correspondence, and the claim for the 30 per cent subsidy was on an expenditure of $125,000. If that statement is correct this fortunate company obtains in guarantees and subsidies from the Nova Scotia and Dominion governments $127,500 for building a plant which cost $125,000.

That statement was absolutely unfounded. No person reading the record, even carelessly, could reach such a conclusion. Any hon. gentleman who would give the matter even casual consideration should be unwilling to make such a statement in this House upon his responsibility as a member. In the first place, the company has received from the New Brunswick government only a guarantee of $60,000 principal and interest. They have received from the government of Canada $15,000. So, at the most, this is only $75,000. And the statement is made that they have already expended over $169,000. It is evident from this statement of facts that those interested had not failed to put into the enterprise some of their own capital or the capital of somebody else. But the statement is not as good as that for the company. The Minister of Militia has stated, I believe, that the company has spent $165,000. I am advised privately that it has spent $169,500. Let us take it at $165,000. Now as against this, they have received the guarantee of the Province of New Brunswick upon $60,000 worth of 4 per cent bonds. I do not know whether these bonds have been sold. I should be very much surprised indeed if this enterprise has been able, during the last twelve or eighteen months, to sell these bonds. But if they have pledged them as collateral with any banking intitution in this country, I venture the statement they would not get more than 90 for them. This would give them $54,000. Add the $15,000 received from the Dominion government, and you find a total of $69,000 of subvention from both governments against an expenditure of $169,000. Yet hon. gentlemen talk glibly about the construction of the whole enterprise out of subventions with a construction profit besides. The purpose of aiding these cold storage plants was a very proper one, and I believe the policy will do a great deal for Canada. This plant should do a great deal particularly for St. John. It does not necessarily benefit the province of New Brunswick alone, for Ontario and Quebec will, perhaps, derive greater advantage, as they are large exporters of perishable food stuffs through the port of St. John in the fall and winter seasons. This subsidy of 30 per cent payable by the Department of Agriculture is not, it must be remembered, handed over to the corporation at once. They receive 15 per cent of the cost upon completion of the plant. Assuming the cost in this case at $165,000, they would receive $24,750 upon completion of the plant. They have received only $15,000. In December, 1908, they would receive 7 per cent more or $11,550; in December, 1909, they would receive $3,300; in December, 1910, $3,300; in December, 1911, $3,300; in December, 1912 $3,300, or a total of $49,500. Yet hon. gentlemen speak as if this full subvention of 30 per cent is taken from the public treasury and handed over immediately to the corporation. Such is not the fact. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) knew that. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) knew it. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) knew it. Yet these gentlemen deliberately make their statement in a form which shows that their desire is to make the country believe that this company has received $49,000 or $50,000 from the government of Canada, and $60,000 from the New Brunswick government, neither of which is correct. The purpose of distributing this subvention of 30 per cent paid by the Dominion of Canada over a period of seven years was a good one. It was anticipated that any cold storage project in St. John, Halifax or elsewhere would not be a profitable enterprise for some few years at least. I take it that the purpose of the subvention was to aid the operation of the plant after its completion rather than to aid the construction. I think that was a very wise provision. Were this subvention paid immediately after construction, there would be a great opportunity for persons to make a profit on construction, and then, in the event of the enterprise proving financially disastrous, they could well afford to permit it to end there.

Now, these are the only two features of the question that I arose to discuss. I submit that the declaration made by the Minister of Militia on Wednesday last was a fair and frank one. He, being largely interested in lands in the Annapolis valley, on which are grown fruits and other perishable food products, naturally became interested in a large cold storage project. He interested another gentleman who had similar interests. They decided to unite their interests and to dispose of them to a corporation, receiving in consideration bonds and stock of the company. He endeavoured to make a flotation of this proposition in England, but failed. Later finding an Act of parliament is passed which might possibly entitle this corporation of which he is the promoter to a subsidy, he decides to withdraw. The matter was taken up in another form and the Minister of Militia declares that he did lend his interest to the successful carrying out of the project, and did whatever he could to make it a success, but had no financial interest in it. The government of New Brunswick evidently had faith in the enterprise, because they gave a subvention—it should hardly be called a subvention, however—a guarantee of principal and interest of $60,000 of bonds for a period of forty years. These bonds, of course, must be retired by the company. Upon the board of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company two members of the executive of the New Brunswick government are entitled to sit; and I think, though I am not sure, that the Minister of Agriculture is also entitled to representation on that board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit it was a fair proposition for the government to grant this subvention to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. The location was an ideal one for such a plant. It could not possibly be hoped that such an enterprise would be financially successful for the first few years, and it was necessary for the successful inauguration of that enterprise that the Department of Agriculture should assist it. We have nothing to do with the assistance given by the government of New Brunswick, as I said before. I cannot regard Mr. Williams as ever having been a serious application for this aid from the government. He never intimated to the government that the enterprise he had in mind was of the character contemplated by the Act passed two or three years ago under which cold storage projects were to be assisted. I do not believe that the gentleman, judging from the correspondence upon the public files, was a man capable of carrying that out to a successful conclusion. He gave no bona fides of his intention to engage in it, never bought any land, never applied for exemption from taxation, and never made proper application here, such as required by the Act, and he never filed his plan. I submit, therefore, that there is nothing in connection with this whole transaction which warrants the time that has been occupied in parliament in discussing it. There was nothing in it that would justify the action of the hon. member for North Toronto who, instead of moving a resolution referring the whole matter to the Committee on Privilege and Elections, makes the insinuation that the action of the Minister of Militia in relation thereto was of such a character as to require him to tender his resignation.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I think perhaps if the people of this country had some knowledge of the manner in which the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) deals with what he is pleased to term the important business interests of the country, if they had the same acquaintance with his conduct in dealing with these matters as members of this House have, I think his speech on this question would at least provoke a smile. He has found fault with my hon. friend from North Toronto for having introduced this subject and brought on this discussion. His principal objection to the discussion has been that it is not of sufficient importance to warrant us in devoting so much time to it. Well, Sir, it is really refreshing, to me at least, having some knowledge of the manner in which the hon. gentleman conducts himself in the Public Accounts Committee, to learn that he has experienced a change of mind, and I hope a change of intention for the future, and that he will no longer follow a course in the Public Accounts Committee which has won for him the reputation of being one of the chief obstructionists. I am sorry that this discussion has caused him such a shock at seeing public business obstructed, as he says, and now that he has experienced a change, I hope he will make an attempt in the Public Accounts Committee to deal with the public business henceforth to come before that committee in a proper manner and will endeavour to promote the investigation.

The excuse offered by the hon. member for Lunenburg for the conduct of the Minister of Militia in this matter was that it was a perfectly legitimate thing for him to pool his interest with the interest of Mr. Graham in an endeavour to advance their material interests in fruit growing and agriculture. Well, if I had not such an intimate knowledge of the condition of the affairs of Mr. Graham, the associate of the Minister of Militia, I would not marvel as I do at the partnership between these two gentlemen, as stated by the minister himself. I did not know, I take the word of the minister for it, that he is very largely interested in the cultivation of fruit and agricultural produce in the Annapolis and Cornwallis valley, but I would like to know where the corresponding interest of Mr. Graham comes in. It is intimated that Mr.

Graham had a corresponding interest in some other portion of the country, and that these two interests were going to be pooled for the advantage of somebody or something. Well, I happen to know that Mr. Graham has no such interests as would enable him to pool anything with the Minister of Militia and Defence. Then the hon. member for Lunenburg suggests a reason why this Canada Land and Produce Company was abandoned. From the discussion that has taken place, I would suggest this answer to his query: It became apparent to those who were promoting the Canada Land and Produce Company that the object sought to be obtained by them might be obtained in some less public manner than by their becoming members of that corporation, and that by some such means as have been exposed, or attempted to be exposed, by the discussion of this matter, the same ends might be attained without publicity being given to the position occupied by the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. Graham possesses no interests in Belleville and Ontario generally in fruit and cold storage business?

Mr. PORTER. Yes, you understand me in a sense to say that; he is not a producer himself, as the Minister of Militia asserted that he was. Mr. Graham has been carrying on for a number of years what might be called a broker's business in the city of Belleville, or a commission business, that is, he has been receiving for transportation to the old country fruit, hay, cheese and different farm products.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Has he not a large cold storage establishment in Belleville?

Mr. PORTER. He has a cold storage establishment, not a large one.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Does he not manufacture dried fruit and vegetables? Has he not eight or ten different places in Ontario where he manufactures evaporated fruit?

Mr. PORTER. There was a time, I may say, when Mr. Graham was interested in a number of industries of that kind in the province of Ontario, and, in fact, outside of Ontario in some of the states of the Union. But, that day passed away a long time ago, or some considerable time ago, these businesses are now all in the hands of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Graham does not own or pretend to own one cent of interest in them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is only fair to Mr. Graham to say that Mr. Graham does own these properties, but that the Bank of Montreal has large security upon them from him. The hon. gentleman surely does not wish to drag Mr. Graham's private affairs in here to his injury. It is only fair to Mr. Graham to make that statement.

Mr. PORTER. I certainly would not have done so had not the minister asked me the question that he did and which provoked an answer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. On the contrary, the hon. gentleman stated here that Mr. Graham had no property or interest at all in Ontario.

Mr. PORTER. I said that he had no such property or interest as was mentioned by the minister to be pooled with the property of the minister. I repeat that statement.

Sir FRERERICK BORDEN. The Bank of Montreal, at the time, was cognizant of what was going on. Mr. Graham produced valuations by competent valuators showing property to the value of $100,000 and the Bank of Montreal was prepared to indorse the scheme and to accept the bonds which would have been issued by Mr. Graham in lieu of its lien upon the property. That is the statement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Bank of Montreal taking that position with Mr. Graham. The Bank of Montreal has got into such a position with Mr. Graham that it is really forced to carry Mr. Graham to some extent to save itself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is a very unfair reflection to make upon a worthy man.

Mr. PORTER. I have no objection to offer to the scheme of assisting cold storage in the Dominion if it is done in a proper, open and legitimate way. I think that cold storage has been and will be proved to be an important factor in advancing the interests of the country. But, when a minister of the Crown having means of knowledge, not possessed by the ordinary individual, is at least seen to be mixed up with a matter of this kind in some way—I will not go so far as to say in what way—that alone is sufficient to warrant a discussion of the matter in this House. I do not agree with the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) when he raises the question as to whether or not the opinion exists in the country that the minister is connected with this business. I know that to some extent the opinion does exist in the country that the Minister of Militia is connected with this thing and not only the Minister of Militia, but it is common talk that the Minister of Agriculture himself has also some interest in this matter. I have heard it stated outside of this House and I have seen it stated in the newspapers?

Mr. FISHER. What kind of an interest?

Mr. PORTER. I will not say what kind of an interest, but I say that it is most important that the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture, if you will, should be afforded at least the opportunity of denying that they have any such interest in it.

Mr. FISHER. I will not take the trouble to deny such nonsense.

Mr. PORTER. The discussion which has been brought on by my hon. friend from North Toronto has afforded an opportunity to the Minister of Militia of denying any connection with this matter, which he has done in his own way, and I think that instead of criticising my hon. friend from North Toronto he should thank him for the privilege that he has had at least of attempting to clear himself of any imputation. There are certain points in connection with this question that are beyond dispute. There are certain things that are admitted that, to my mind, at least, require something more than a mere denial on the part of the minister to free himself of the impression that does exist that he has some connection with this business. It is certain that it has not been denied that the government, through the Department of Marine and Fisheries, have established the practice or policy of assisting bait freezing institutions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It still exists.

Mr. PORTER. Well, it did exist at one time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It does yet.

Mr. PORTER. Very well, I will take the minister's word for it. What I say is that it did exist and, at that time, as far as this discussion has shown and as far as I know, that was the only department of the government that was assisting enterprises of this kind.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all; the hon. gentleman is not familiar with the statute. The Department of Agriculture was giving a bonus to the extent of five per cent upon $40,000 invested in cold storage, if I remember rightly.

Mr. PORTER. Not for bait freezing institutions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. PORTER. That was established by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. PORTER. It is also admitted that Mr. Williams made application to the department for assistance to enable him to establish a bait freezing institution in St. John. His application was the first that was properly made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and it was the first that was made for the establishment of a cold storage system in the city of St. John.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was the only one made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PORTER. Yes. Well, then, it was the first one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can say to my hon. friend that he must be in error as to that, for I happened to know as a member of the provincial government that some seven or eight years ago the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company was incorporated, that it was proposed to give them the aid of the New Brunswick government, that they acquired a lease of land from the Intercolonial Railway for the purpose of establishing cold storage, and I understand that they had made an application to the Dominion government for the aid which was provided under the original Cold Storage Act. That must have been four or five years before Mr. Williams made any application.

Mr. FOSTER. We are supposed to have all the papers down and that does not appear in them.

Mr. PORTER. That does not appear at all and that does not alter the position that I take that at the time Mr. Williams applied his was the only application before the Department of Marine and Fisheries for assistance in establishing cold storage for bait freezing purposes in the city of St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For bait freezing. I was referring to general cold storage, for fruit and farm produce.

Mr. PORTER. The question arises here: Was Williams treated fairly and squarely in connection with his application for cold storage, and was the Minister of Militia a party to an application for assistance for establishing cold storage in St. John? The next question is: Was the fact that the Minister of Militia was an applicant or was interested in a company which was an applicant, the cause of Williams not receiving the treatment he otherwise would have received? Let me examine the conditions as I understand them. Williams made his application in October, 1905, and he followed the matter up during a whole year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To the Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. PORTER. Yes, to the Marine and Fisheries.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But at that very moment there existed in the Department of Agriculture a law under which assistance was given to general cold storage.

Mr. PORTER. That does not affect the issue at all.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But it is true.

Mr. PORTER. It does not affect the argument I am making.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It does very much.

Mr. PORTER. He made his application in 1905, and he followed up that application, and as an evidence of his intention and ability to carry out a scheme of that kind he forwarded recommendations of various persons and corporations who were in a position to judge of his qualifications and of the honesty of his purpose. That continued for nearly a year before anybody else appeared upon the scene.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Always for fish, however.

Mr. PORTER. At that time it came about that the whole matter of aiding cold storage projects was to be handed over to the Department of Agriculture, and when that became known Mr. Williams made an application to the Department of Agriculture for assistance in the same manner as he had made his application to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Williams' application was made to the Department of Agriculture on the 7th of December, 1906, and the application of the company represented by Mr. Macoun was made on the 5th of December, only two days prior.

Mr. FOSTER. But with this difference, that the application of Mr. Macoun was an application for information only. The application of Mr. Williams was an application for subsidy as well as for information.

Mr. PORTER. That is quite right, but I am treating them both as being applications, which is the most favourable construction that can be placed upon the position of Mr. Macoun.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. LENNOX. When we were last dealing with this Bill the Minister of Railways proposed an amendment to my amendment, but as the hour for private Bills was exhausted I had not an opportunity of expressing my objections to it. The minister pointed out that the wording of his amendment was the same as the wording of section 11 of the agreement, being the schedule to the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill of 1904. I regard the position under the minister's amendment as worse than the Bill without qualification, while my amendment is an important security for the people. One of my principal reasons for objecting to the minister's amendment is that it casts a new burden upon the people. Under the Act of 1904 the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, if they should build the branch lines, could saddle upon the country such branch lines as they did not desire to retain, and if the government of Canada determined to operate the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway they would be compelled to take over those comparatively unremunerative branch lines. This is extending the difficulty and making us not only subject to take over such comparatively useless branch lines as the main company may see fit to build, but also binds us to take over the branch lines built by the subsidiary company, the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company. Therefore, I am very anxious to defeat this amendment by any legitimate means that I can adopt. I am glad that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is in the House, because I think for once I shall have his valuable assistance in defeating this amendment to the amendment. If I have his assistance, with his well known ability, I have no doubt I shall be eminently successful, and as he is an astute lawyer, logical of course to the last degree, I am sure I shall have his strong support. I assume that this proposed amendment has not been recommended by the Governor General in Council, because that has not been mentioned—of course if it has been recommended in that way my argument does not apply, namely—that it is out of order. I have three very eminent authorities in support of that proposition, first the dictum of the Minister of Public Works, second the opinion of the deputy Speaker of this House and, third, the ruling of the Speaker of this House. It will be remembered that when I introduced the amendment some few weeks ago and it came up in the House on the 8th of this month the Minister of Public Works argued that the amendment was out of order because it was a proposal to impose a burden upon the revenue of the country and that the consent of the Governor General in Council had not been obtained, and of course could not be obtained by a private member. He argued that it certainly would be out of order but for the proviso at the end of it that the work should not be taken over without the consent of parliament, but the hon. gentleman further showed by his argument that even with that proviso at the end of my amendment it was still out of order under the British North America Act. I propose to call your attention to the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). The amendment to the amendment, as proposed by the Minister of Railways, is substantially the same in wording as my amendment except that my amendment aims at taking over all lines we see fit to take over, and the amendment of the minister proposes to take over only such lines as the railway company do not see fit to retain. But my amendment has the proviso that that shall not be done except with the consent and sanction of parliament, which proviso saved my amendment, as was decided the other night and which proviso is not in the amendment as proposed by the minister.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). My amendment has that proviso in it. As typewritten it had not, but within five minutes after handing in the amendment I added that proviso.

Mr. LENNOX. As it appears in 'Hansard' it has not, and as read by the minister it had not.

Mr. GRAHAM. Five minutes after it was read by the chairman that proviso was in.

Mr. LENNOX. It was not read by the chairman. The chairman did not read it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I had it put in inside of five minutes after I gave the amendment.

Mr. LENNOX. As I always want to be eminently consistent I shall not pursue that branch of the argument, but as suggested by my friend (Mr. Lancaster) I shall pursue some of the other branch lines. These three companies are substantially one and the same company, the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company. The government is building the eastern division, and from day to day as time goes on we are more and more realizing the amount of money we are putting into that enterprise. The advantages are all in favour of the railway companies as contrasted with the position of the country. The Grand Trunk Pacific Company get all the good end and we get all the bad end; they get all the easy part and we get all the difficult part, and therefore the government should safeguard the people to the extent of seeing that if we put our money into the building of this eastern division, and we are compelled to take it over at the end of fifty years, or if after it is built—and this is not a remote contingency—the Grand Trunk Pacific Company do not take it at all, but it is left on our hands, we should be able to obtain such branch lines as are feeders to it or as connect the cities of the south with it, upon reasonable terms. Now, in the Act of 1904 we have the provision which, as the Minister of Railways says, is copied in the amendment which he proposed the other day, 'that the government shall, if at the expiration of the said lease if it shall determine to undertake the operation of the said eastern division, take over such branch line or lines as the company may elect not to retain.' The position is this, that if in any event we operate the line at the end of the fifty-year period, we have not the right to take over the paying branches, but we are compelled, whether we want to do so or not, to take over the branches which the railway company do not want to retain, which will be the branches which are not paying. We have not an option, as under the amendment I propose, of taking them over. If we have an option, it is beneficial to this country, but if we are saddled with the necessity of taking them over, whether we want them or not, and are compelled to take over such branch lines as the company do not desire to retain our position is not only not improved in over what it was when this Bill came into the House some weeks ago, but we are in a vastly worse position. I protest against that condition of things. Let me call the minister's attention to something else. I was inclined to think that the minister had paid very little attention to the drafting of this amendment, not only because I did not find the proviso in 'Hansard' or anywhere else or get any track of it until the minister mentioned it now, but because this section, as now worded, is practically senseless. Let me call the minister's attention to how it works out. It says:

> At such value as may be agreed upon, or as may, in case of failure so to agree, be determined in the manner provided by paragraph 24 (2) of the said contract.

There is no contract in this Act that we are amending. Before that it says:

> The government shall, if at the expiration of the said lease—

There is no lease mentioned in the statute we are dealing with. This is simply very slovenly—if the minister will allow me to say so—and unsuitable wording to accomplish any purpose. This is brought in without consideration from a statute which deals with a lease and with an agreement, but the statute we are dealing with refers to neither lease nor agreement, and, therefore, the amendment in that respect is not appropriately drawn. I will not take much time over that, because it can be easily amended. But, more than that, this provision is meaningless. If we turn to the statute that it is taken from—that is paragraph 24 of section 2 of the agreement—we find that that provides:

> If, in any question arising under the provisions of sub-paragraphs (a), (c) and (e) of this paragraph, the parties shall fail to agree, the matter in difference shall be determined by arbitrators, to be appointed in the manner provided by paragraph forty-seven of this agreement: provided, however, that, if a board of railway commissioners shall be hereafter appointed under the authority of an Act of the Parliament of Canada, having powers substantially as proposed by Bill No. 21 of the present session of parliament, then such dispute shall be determined by such board, from whose decision herein either party shall have the right, without leave, to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, when we turn to paragraphs (a), (c) and (e) we find that paragraph (a) is 'reserving to the government, in respect of its ownership, present and future, of the Intercolonial and any other line or lines of railway, running powers and haulage rights over the eastern division of the railway; paragraph (c) is 'securing to the government in respect of its ownership, running powers and haulage rights over the western division,' and paragraph (e) is 'securing to the company running powers and haulage rights over the Intercolonial Railway or any portion thereof.' How can that have any application to the matter we are dealing with now? Evidently the minister or whoever drafted this did not turn to the sections and see how they would work out, and the result is that when we do trace them up we find that they become absolutely senseless. If the minister does not want to adopt the full measure of relief that I propose I regret it very much, but in any event, if he sincerely wants to have this workable, and I have no doubt he does, he should frame a provision somewhat on the lines on which I framed it, making it complete in its wording.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will detain the committee but a moment. I will not attempt as a layman to reply to my hon. friend's legal argument. The question of this amendment is one that was not considered by me until after an objection was raised by the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in the first discussion of this Bill, that this Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company, although representing the same interests as the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, had been organized to get away from the provisions which we had in the old agreement as to taking over branch lines.

If that were so, I think it was very reasonable that it should not be allowed to be done. We wanted not to put them in a better position than the Grand Trunk Pacific. I have had a clause drafted the same as in the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, but I say frankly to my hon. friend that I am not anxious to press this amendment to the amendment. I cannot consent to his amendment, but, if it will meet him half way, I propose that both his amendment and my amendment to the amendment should be dropped and that the Bill should be passed as it came from the Senate. The effect of the amendment to the amendment is, ostensibly, to necessitate the taking over by the country of certain branch lines. It is debatable whether that would be best or not. Personally, I am inclined to think that no injury would be done the country if we were compelled to do that. I gave my reasons in support of that view and will not go into the subject again. But, as I have said, I am willing, if it will meet the hon. gentleman, that the Bill should be accepted as it has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. LANCASTER. I listened to this discussion on two or three previous occasions as well as to-night, and whether the amendment of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is absolutely the best possible or not, yet, as the best thing proposed, I would adopt it. I certainly think that some such amendment should be made covering the point that the hon. member has in mind. The amendment, as I find it in 'Hansard'—and I trust that on this occasion 'Hansard' is correct—reads as follows:

2. In case the government as defined in the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903, in pursuance of the terms of the said schedule shall at any time determine to undertake the operation of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, the government shall thereupon and thereafter have the right to take over all or any of such of the lines of railway authorized by chapter 99 of the Acts of this parliament of 1906 as are connected with or running from a point or points in the said eastern division——

And here I pause to emphasize the fact that that means the lines of the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company and not the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

—at such value as may be agreed upon between the government and the company; and in case they cannot agree the amount to be paid by the government to the company the amount shall be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, from whose decision either party shall have the right, without leave, to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, so far, I have not heard one word advanced by anybody to show that this is not a proper provision.

Mr. KNOWLES. May I ask a question? I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) has given a great deal of attention to railway charters. Why should a provision such as this be put in this charter more than any other that happens to cross the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid I shall have to make my remarks longer than I had intended. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) and every other member of this House understood the peculiarity of this charter. Here was a very vexed question beginning in 1903. The two political parties disagreed as to the wisdom of the bargain made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. We made a certain arrangement with the company wherein we were almost sure to lose—much more sure to lose if they did not make money than if they did. The probabilities of the company earning money and paying dividends had everything to do with whether the guarantees of this government as endorsed would fall upon them, that is whether we should be called upon to make good the money that the Grand Trunk Pacific would borrow on the strength of the guarantee. In 1906, when the Branch Lines Company was to be incorporated, I took the position in the Railway Committee and in this House that we ought not to create another entity with power to build branch lines, but that the building of the branch lines should be part and parcel of the Grand Trunk Pacific. My argument was—and, if I do say it myself, it was never answered—that, in case of a dispute as to division of freight between a company originating traffic and the trunk line which takes over that traffic and carries to its destination as to the division of the freight, the railway commissioners would probably, and very properly, give the lion's share to the originating company; therefore, if we guaranteed the liabilities of 'A' and then permitted him to carry on in the name of 'B' a business more profitable than that which he carried on in his own name——

Mr. KNOWLES. Did the Grand Trunk Pacific represent 'B' in that case?

Mr. LANCASTER. The Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company is not the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. The case is as if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) were to ask me to endorse his note and then he were to carry on the profitable part of his business in his wife's name and yet, while allowing her to make the profits, would refuse to make her responsible for the obligation on which I had endorsed. It would be as though a man went to a bank for money and the bank were to say: If you get So and So to guarantee you, we will give you the money; then, having got the money, he divides his business into profitable and unprofitable parts, makes it impossible for the endorser to gain any of the profits and yet leaves him liable for an obligation which could not be redeemed because relating to the unprofitable part. In plain English, that is what we did when we incorporated the Branch Lines Company. Of course, we cannot go back on that. I am not suggesting that; but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) asked me why it made a difference, and I am trying to tell him. I understand that my hon. friend from South Simcoe wants to try to stop this from going any further.

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) does not understand me. There is no evidence that the capital to be put into the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines is in the slightest way identical or associated with the Grand Trunk Pacific. If he will show me any reason for believing that it is, one great doubt in my mind will be removed.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think it makes any difference how they raise the money. These two are the same concern, the same people. Nobody believes anything else. The hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Knowles) will not say that they are different.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think so.

Mr. LANCASTER. A different crowd?

Mr. KNOWLES. Before the lines are built and in operation, there may be different capitals invested altogether.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well let us see who the men are in this Branch Lines Company. Here for instance, is Mr. Charles M. Hays. Everybody knows who Mr. Hays is—he is president of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and second vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk. Then there is Mr. Frank W. Morse, who is vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Then there is Mr. William Wainwright. Does not everybody know that he is one of the principal officers of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific? Another is Mr. W. H. Biggar, who, as we all know, was assistant solicitor of the Grand Trunk and who now occupies the position formerly held by Mr. John Bell as general solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway system. And then there is Mr. D'Arcy Tate, assistant solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway. Now those are the people who are incorporated in the name of the Branch Lines Company.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the gentlemen who take out a charter are not necessarily those who will finance the charter. There is absolutely no reason to believe that because Mr. Wainwright, Mr. Biggar and their associates have taken out a charter, that therefore some of the investors' money is going to be in that railroad.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not say that the same people are going to lend the money to build the road, but these are the principal debtors whose liabilities the government of this country are going to guarantee, these are the people who can make us liable on these bonds that we guarantee, according to how they manage their affairs. The Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company are one and the same concern so far as relates to the running of that railway and the making or losing of money, and therefore the sticking the people of this country so to speak, on their bonds. Now some such amendment as proposed by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is necessary at this juncture. No one has said yet that there is anything wrong with it, every one has said that there is no objection to it. Then it goes on to say :

If any such line of railway, so to be taken over, shall have received any grant or grants under the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, the amount of such grant or grants, without interest, shall be deducted from such value, and the difference only shall be payable by the government upon the taking over of the line.

Now why is not that only fair but necessary, in the interest of the country ? But now the minister proposes to withdraw his amendment on condition that the hon. member for South Simcoe withdraws his ; in that case we will have neither. The proposition of the Minister of Railways that brought me to my feet, was that if he succeeded in getting my hon. friend from South Simcoe to drop his amendment, he, the minister, would drop the amendment to the amendment, and in that case we would have neither the one nor the other. I appeal to the Minister of Railways if that provision should not be either in this amendment to the amendment, or in the original amendment of my hon. friend from South Simcoe. I say again that it is absolutely necessary if we are not going to let the Grand Trunk, and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Grand Trunk Branch Lines, and any other concern that the Grand Trunk chooses to put before this country as a company that is going to be affiliated with it—I say if we are not going to let them do anything they please, if we are not going to hand over to them the sole control of everything in sight, and the right to tax the people to this extent, then we must put some such amendment as this in the Bill. Then it says :

Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained, to the exercise of such right of taking over as aforesaid.

Now surely we have got to have some such provision. If the Minister of Railways will draw a section that protects the people, though it uses different language from this, I will support it. But we must have something of that kind somewhere in this Bill. When we passed this charter in 1906, I, over and over again, to the extent of making myself an annoyance perhaps to some gentlemen in the Railway Commission, insisted on a clause that nothing we did for that Branch Lines Company should interfere with any of the rights of the people in regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific. That did not carry. Why ? Because the Grand Trunk Pacific would not have it, and the government would not force the Grand Trunk Pacific to take it. It was argued that we were incorporating a different company, under a different name, which would be capitalized perhaps by different people, and therefore, although they were going to become affiliated with the Grand Trunk Pacific, we should not force them to relieve us from liability on the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I proposed in the Railway Commission, and I think again in the House, that there should be a clause in the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company charter that nothing therein contained should impair or take away the right of the people in regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, or should put them in the same position as if the Grand Trunk Pacific itself had built these branch lines under the original charter, and that was voted down by this House. Everybody in this country knows that the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company are one and the same concern, and are working for the benefit of the Grand Trunk Railway. Therefore when we proposed in 1906 that nothing in this Act which is now being amended should take away any of the rights that we had already, and that everything we did for that company should have the same effect, as regards these branch lines when they were built, as if they had been built by the Grand Trunk Pacific themselves, when we could not get that, when the government voted that down, the present Minister of Justice who took charge of the measure instead of the then Minister of Railways, put in that qualified section which is now being amended, that it should not affect our rights in some regards only. Now the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) must recognize that his own side of this question was represented in this House in 1906 by the present Minister of Justice, who drafted and put in a clause dealing with the principle of the matter, but not to the full extent it ought to be dealt with, that is to say, that the Branch Lines Company was connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and you will find in the original Act of the Branch Lines Company a clause saying that it should not affect the right of the country as against the Grand Trunk Pacific Company in some respects, and in those respects only. But my point is that this government did undertake to say that the one had something to do with the other, that they should be dealt with in some respects as if they were one and the same concern.

If my hon. friend wants to tell us that the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company are entirely different matters and should not be mixed up the best answer I can give him is the section of the Act of 1906 which was drawn by the Minister of Justice and which says to the contrary. I and another hon. gentleman made the contention in the Railway Committee that there should be full protection to the people but we succeeded in getting only a compromise and not the full measure of protection that I thought ought to be enunciated in the Act. I want to say to my hon. friend that the Minister of Justice declared in this section the very opposite to what my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals tells us should be adopted when he put this clause into the Act in lieu of the one which I was moving which was more general in its terms and which was designed to protect the people entirely and not in the limited way that this does. Section 32 of the Act to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company, passed in 1906, provides that :

The provisions of paragraphs 39, 42, 43 and 44 of the agreement which forms the schedule to chapter 71 of the statutes of 1903, and so much of paragraph 45 of the said agreement as provides that traffic shall not be diverted to ports outside of Canada, shall apply to the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if the lines of railway hereby authorized had been constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Surely, in view of that, my hon. friend will not say that there is nothing at all in the contention that one company is affiliated with the other and that we should not mix them up in legislation. Surely, in view of the section passed by this parliament, drawn by the Minister of Justice and offered to parliament in lieu of the full protection that I was contending for in the interests of the people in every respect, my hon. friend will apologize to the House and recognize that he was entirely wrong in saying that they were two companies and that they were not connected one with the other. The Minister of Justice knew that in these matters that are mentioned here there must be some protection in regard to the people's rights, in regard to the guarantees which they gave and the benefits they expected to receive from the incorporation and development of this company or scheme known as the National Transcontinental Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, this ocean to ocean line. The Minister of Justice recognized, although he was, as I thought and still think, not doing what he ought to have done to protect the people in regard to the guarantees and the great liabilities which they were assuming in assisting the Grand Trunk Pacific to construct this line, that in that matter the statute should be amended and he put in the clause which I have just quoted and which distinctly says that these paragraphs shall apply in the same manner and to the same extent as if the lines of railway hereby authorized had been constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. I am afraid that the Minister of Railways and Canals sometimes forgets that all we are doing by this Branch Lines Railway Company could have been done by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company itself. I always was opposed to giving the Branch Lines Company these rights as it looked to me like an attempt to give another company, under an entirely different name, but with the same people behind it, the right to acquire all the benefits that the branch lines will give them because this will be the paying part of the railway and at the same time not make provision to assist the parent company which is our debtor and which is the debtor of the capitalists who have taken the bonds guaranteed by the country. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) proposes here an amendment that if any of these branch lines are taken over by the government the government shall be able to select the lines they want. As it is now the government have to take the lines that the Grand Trunk do not want, only such lines as the Grand Trunk choose, to use an ordinary expression, to dump upon the people of the country. Such lines as they have found do not pay them very well they can force the people to take. Surely we can get over that. Let us have a little judgment. Let us once in a while try and protect the people of the country a little. Let us have one day in the month when we can unanimously in this House remember that we represent the people and not the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Grand Trunk. Let us break the ice a little this hot weather, let us say : We have some rights in this country that we must keep our eye upon. Here we are saying deliberately : We will help you all we can to build these lines of railway ; we have given the whole credit of Canada to assist you to get money to build them in one way or another and while we think that there are one or two things that ought to be attended to, we will leave them aside and we will say that we will help you to do all these things. We will give you lines in every direction ; we do not know how many will pay, so that you need not worry whether they will pay or not. We say, go on and build them, we will get the money and those that you find do not pay you can throw upon us and we will buy them from you.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is there anything in this proivsion to compel the government of Canada to buy these lines, or is it only an option ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The amendment to the amendment says just what my hon. friend (Mr. Knowles) asks me. I will read it to him :

In case, during the currency of the lease of the eastern division, the company shall have constructed a branch line or lines running from a point or points in the said eastern division, the government shall, if at the expiration of the said lease, it shall determine to undertake the operation of the said eastern division, take over such branch line or lines as the company may elect not to retain.

Did any one ever hear of such a bargain being made from the people's standpoint ?

Mr. KNOWLES. Is it compulsory—may take over ?

Mr. LANCASTER. It is compulsory. My hon. friend wants an option on a piece of property or a business ; will he make a contract that he undertakes to take just that part that the other man chooses to sell to him and no other part at all ? Would my hon. friend, if he wanted to buy out of a departmental store, make a bargain that he would take only such departments as the other man chose to sell him and go without the rest of them ? That is practically what the people are doing here.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will gladly make a bargain that I at any time ' may ' buy.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose that we arrive at the stage where the people declare that under the provisions of this Act they determine to undertake the operation of the eastern section. It has always been argued that one of the advantages that the people have in regard to this railway is that they can, if they choose, undertake the operation of the eastern section. Suppose they undertake to operate what they own, what they have paid for, what belongs to them and if they want to do that they have to take such branch lines, connecting with that railway as they want ?—no, not as the people want but such as the Grand Trunk say they must take.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend does not want to hear it. He perhaps wants to vote it through deafly as well as blindly. But, I want to give my hon. friend an idea of what he is voting for if he votes for this charter the way it is. We some day perhaps are going to operate the eastern section. If we undertake the operation of the eastern section, of course, we will want the branch lines which connect with the eastern section. Will we have the privilege of taking such branch lines as we desire ? No, we must take such lines as the Grand Trunk Pacific want to sell, such lines as the Grand Trunk Pacific has no use for. We will be meeting our antagonists and business associates operating branch lines that were worth something while we were operating branch lines that are useless, that produce no freight and while we will have to pay a big price for them these lines will be of no use to us.

I do think that the Minister of Railways who has charge of this legislation in the interests of the public ought to sit down with the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) and draw up a section that will protect the people of this country. The Minister of Railways must see that there is no way of protecting the people of Canada unless some such amendment as that proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is adopted.

SUPPLY—COLD STORAGE FOR BAIT.

The hour for private Bills having expired, House resumed on the motion of Mr. Fielding that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). When the House rose at six o'clock I was pointing out some of the undisputed facts which to my mind lead to the irresistible conclusion that Mr. Williams who had made application for assistance to his cold storage project, was not treated in a fair and proper manner by this government and was not treated in the same manner as was the company with which the Minister of Militia was connected. I had arrived at the stage where there was an application made for assistance by Mr. Williams on the one hand and by Mr. Macoun on the other. These two applications were received within two days of each other and there seems to be good reason why the application of Mr. Macoun who lives in Ottawa should antedate the application of Mr. Williams. Mr. Williams had no means of ascertaining when the announcement would be made by the Minister of Agriculture as to the assistance that would be afforded these concerns, as to what form it would take, or as to what would be required from the applicants. On the other hand Mr. Macoun had ample means of knowing all that. The Minister of Militia was connected with his company and the circumstances in connection with the announcement to be made by the Minister of Agriculture had no doubt been discussed in the presence of the Minister of Militia, and so, as appears to have been the case, there was an opportunity of getting in ahead of Mr. Williams. Both of these applications were answered on the same day by the Minister of Agriculture, but the answers were not identical. The answers given to Mr. Macoun's application did not cast any doubt upon the scheme, but left the impression that it was a certainty, whereas the reply sent to Mr. Williams referred to the contingency of the Bill, which the Minister of Agriculture was about to present, receiving or not receiving the assent of the House and thus casting a doubt upon it. That alone was enough to throw cold water upon the application of Mr. Williams, to put him in doubt, and to cause him to hesitate and delay about going to further expense in connection with the matter. From that time in December no action was taken until about the 1st of April, when Mr. Williams—no doubt having ascertained that the Minister of Militia was interested in the application opposed to his —wrote pointing out that fact and asking in a very polite way the very direct question whether his application was going to be considered or whether it was the intention to give the preference to the company with which the Minister of Militia was connected. It is singular that all through this transaction from the beginning to the end, whenever Mr. Williams got busy and wrote to the department, the cold storage company with which the Minister of Militia was connected got busy also. And so, after Mr. Williams wrote on the 1st of April, we at once see the company with which the Minister of Militia was connected getting busy again and taking action before the Minister of Agriculture. The correspondence leads pretty irresistibly to the conclusion that the company with which the Minister of Militia was connected was being favoured by the government, while the proposition of Mr. Williams was being discouraged as much as it could be. Matters drifted along from the date of Mr. Williams' letter in April until some time in June, nothing being done by either party. Following the letter of the first, a letter was written by the minister to Mr. Williams on April 11, 1907. This is the way Mr. Williams is treated. In that letter the minister says :

Sir Frederick Borden has made application, on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably.

Following that we find the company itself getting busy again and Mr. Graham writes to the Minister of Agriculture under date April 13. Very little time was lost. In that he says :

Sir Frederick Borden requested me——

Mark you, he is the hired man of this company, the employee of this company and he is requested by a gentleman who is connected with the company :

—to interview you in reference to aid for our cold storage propositions.

Not the cold storage proposition, as the minister would have the House believe from his remarks this afternoon, for which an application was made by Graham on his own behalf, but here is an inquiry by Graham, 'on behalf of our cold storage proposition at St. John. Then he says :

I learned from Mr. L. S. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter, and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to bother you any further in reference to the matter in question.

Mr. PORTER.

That is most important in this connection, it seems to me. Mr. Macoun advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with the matter. That left nothing to be done if the statement made in that letter is true, as I believe it to be. The Minister of Agriculture assumed the same position as did Mr. Macoun in the matter and as Mr. Graham had been advised to assume. The Minister of Agriculture writes a letter on the 16th of April :

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 13, and note what you state in regard to your visit to Ottawa last Thursday.

What he stated in regard to his visit last Thursday was that he had consulted Mr. Macoun and found that all arrangements had been completed. The minister finishes his letter with :

This is quite satisfactory.

Assenting to what had been said by Macoun and reasserting the position that everything in connection with the application of the Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company had been completed. That is important in this view of the matter. The reason urged by the ministers during this discussion for not treating further with Mr. Williams was that he had filed no plans and specifications at the time when these two letters were written, when everything was said to have been arranged with the company with which the minister was connected, there had not yet been a plan or a specification filed on behalf of that company, and I conclude and I think it is the only conclusion one can draw from it, that so far as the Produce and Cold Storage Company was concerned the Minister of Agriculture could complete an arrangement without any plans or specifications being filed. With Mr. Williams they did not even call upon him to file plans and specifications, but because he had not filed plans and specifications they ignored his claim altogether, and granted this subsidy to the Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Which they never did.

Mr. PORTER. Now let us see what sort of encouragement they further gave to Mr. Williams. On June 3—and mark you, the plans and specifications of the Canada Cold Storage Company were not filed until the 11th of June—Mr. Williams wrote to the Minister of Agriculture and after having received the information that the application of Sir Frederick Borden had been made and had been considered favourably, and the fact being as is proven here, that everything had been arranged in connection with it, although that was not known to Williams, he writes and says :

I have already spent considerable of my money going to Ottawa and endeavouring to obtain a grant for the cold storage warehouse in St. John, and do not feel like spending any more money in getting up plans and specifications if the preference is to be given to Sir Frederick Borden.

He does not receive a reply to that letter denying that a preference is given to Sir Frederick Borden, or what action is being taken with Sir Frederick Borden, but he receives a reply from the deputy minister during the absence of the minister saying :

If you will submit your application it will receive due consideration.

His application was in months and months before. He is not asked to file plans, &c., and they will be considered. He was not told : We have not only considered the application of Sir Frederick Borden favourably but have taken action to arrange all matters in connection with it and therefore the thing is closed so far as you are concerned and you may as well quit. That would have been a correct statement of the position and a frank statement to make to Williams. But the matter is allowed to drift on. At that stage the application was in the name of the Canada Produce and Cold Storage Company, but everything had been arranged with that company and an effort had been made to make financial arrangements to float it. If what has been stated in this debate is correct, then it occurs that something must be done, some reason occurs to the parties interested to make a change. Having made certain of getting the assistance from the government it seems to have occurred to some one——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that Williams was never asked to send plans of any kind.

Mr. PORTER. He was sent forms for making application.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has before him Williams' letter of June 3, saying to the Minister of Agriculture

I received blanks for application for cold storage warehouses. In your letter of April 11, you gave me to understand that nothing could be done unless plans and specifications were submitted, and you also stated that you looked favourably, etc.

He was then asked for plans and was told to——

Mr. PORTER. What was the use of asking him at that late stage ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is another thing. The hon. gentleman was giving the House the impression that Williams was not asked to submit plans.

Mr. PORTER. He was not asked to submit plans at any time when it would have been of any service to him to submit plans, and then he got this letter, because at that time, when the blanks for making his application and sending in his plans and specifications were given to Mr. Williams, the matter had already been closed up, as the minister himself said in the correspondence which I have read.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never said any such thing.

Mr. PORTER. Then I do not understand the English language. When he says everything has been arranged, that certainly means that nothing has been left, and the Minister of Agriculture assents to that, as I have already read.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all. He said nothing of the kind.

Mr. PORTER. I will read it. Mr. Graham says to the minister :

I learned from Mr. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter.

Then the Minister of Agriculture, referring to that letter and to what he said, uses the expression : 'This is quite satisfactory.' I do not know you could put it in more precise and definite language.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is somewhat different from the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. PORTER. It makes a great deal of difference, because here was Mr. Williams making an honest application, and he was entitled to fair and honest treatment on the part of the minister, without any partiality being shown to one applicant over another ; while an arrangement with the Canadian Produce and Cold Storage Company was made secretly. It was not done publicly apparently, but in some hole-and-corner or underhand way, while Mr. Williams was led to believe that the matter was still open, and was encouraged to go on and incur further expense to have plans and specifications prepared and to send those plans and specifications into the department, when he had received no answer to his communication as to whether or not the minister was to have the preference ; and what would have been the result ? The very same result that we have to-day ; the subsidy would have been granted, as it was granted, to the Canadian Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It never was granted. There never was such a company organized.

Mr. PORTER. I have heard the minister say that several times. There was a company of that kind chartered, and according to this correspondence the application was made in the name of the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And never was granted. It was absolutely abandoned.

Mr. PORTER. Let us see whether it was or not. Mr. Macoun was the secretary, and here is what he says when he made application on the 5th of December, and this is the application that was acted on :

I beg leave on behalf of the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company, Limited——

In the reply to that, the Minister of Agriculture says :

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 5 and note your application on behalf of the Canadian Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Go on. There was no agreement made whatever—absolutely none.

Mr. PORTER. What I have said I stick by—I say that an application was made on behalf of the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of which nothing whatever came.

Mr. PORTER. Well, Mr. Graham and those who were associated with him got the advantage of that application—

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all.

Mr. PORTER—because there is no further application made by them. They simply file their plans and specifications on the 11th of June.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Graham made application in his own name.

Mr. PORTER. Up to that time they were all acting in concert—Graham, Macoun and the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company; and when affairs were in the condition that I have pointed out, it became apparently advisable to the persons who were interested, that the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company should be dropped or hidden from view in some way ; and so Mr. Graham, who is an employee of the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is not an employee ; it does not exist.

Mr. PORTER. It is stated in the address of the hon. Minister himself that Mr. Graham had been employed on behalf of the company, and he gave the reasons why —because he was a man of large experience in cold storage, would carry out his undertakings, and so on. At that time, for some reason which is not disclosed here—and perhaps we may not be able to get at the bottom of it—it occurred to the parties who were interested in this matter that it would be better for future proceedings to be carried on in some other way ; and so we find that Mr. Graham, who had been engaged for some months in St. John in making arrangements for the erection of this plant or the perfecting of this plant, has made some arrangement with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, and he writes to the minister asking that the name of that company be substituted for that of the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company. And so the agreement is prepared, executed and carried out. Now, it does seem to me, without treating the matter further, that the written evidence and the facts that are beyond any question or dispute, show as clearly as the noonday sun that Mr. Williams and the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company were not treated in the same way—that the latter was treated most favourably and with every consideration by the Department of Agriculture, while Mr. Williams was discouraged, if not in every possible way, in a sufficient way to prevent him from putting in any plans and specifications, thus affording some peg on which the hon. Minister could hang his hat if the matter ever came under discussion in this House.

Another feature of the matter is connected with the absorption of the Canadian Produce & Cold Storage Company. Failure had followed the effort to raise funds in the old country, and who was here in this company who had the financial backing to carry on this enterprise ? Mr. R. J. Graham, from what has already been said in the House, was not in a financial position to do it. Mr. McAvity who was a man in good circumstances had contributed his part by handing over the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and its charter, but that did not provide any funds with which to erect the plant.

Then there were Mr. Macoun, secretary-treasurer, Mr. A. I. Trueman and Mr. Ross, who had the management of the business. In that list of names I do not see any reasonable prospect—if that is all that is behind it—of carrying out this enterprise. Another reason given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and concurred in by the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), was that Mr. Williams did not make a bona fide application and did not intend to—that is, they insinuated that he would not—carry out the proposition of a sufficient and effective cold storage plant. I think that, if remarks of that kind are to be made at all, they would apply just as well, if not better to the board of directors, as I see the names here, of this New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. But the fact is they went on. The money came from somewhere. It did not come from England. I doubt if it came from the board of directors; they have not disposed of their stock? Where did the money come from? It came in part from this government and the local government of New Brunswick; $15,000 has been paid by this government and $60,000 has been guaranteed by the government of New Brunswick. But where did the rest of the money come from? Now, it is interesting just at this stage to note the statement made in the newspaper published in St. John which was read by the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) this afternoon, stating that after the change of the local government in New Brunswick, the Minister of Militia himself had an interview with the premier of the province of New Brunswick in reference to the additional $30,000 grant that was to be made by the local government for the purpose of assisting this company. Now, that is only a few months ago. If there has not been time since June, 1907, for the Minister of Militia to free himself entirely from the financial interests of this concern I would like to know how long a time it is going to take. We find the minister only a short time ago so interested on behalf of the public of Canada that he is inquiring of the local administration of the province of New Brunswick about the $30,000 that is to carry on this enterprise. I think it is only fair to conclude from the written evidence and testimony given here in the letters that passed between the various applicants and the department, that the company with which the Minister of Militia was connected did receive more favourable treatment than did Mr. Williams who applied on behalf of himself or a company that he was going to organize. I ask the question, why was that done? Could there be any other answer than the fact that he was Minister of Militia and Defence? And if that was the reason, if the fact of the hon. minister being a member of this government influenced the conduct of his colleague to grant favours to him that would not be granted to the ordinary individual, I do not hesitate to say that that act is one to be condemned by parliament and by the country. The Minister of Agriculture suggested—in fact, made the bald statement—that he had waited five long months from June until September for Mr. Williams to perfect his application. Now, while we are bound to take the statement of the minister in this House, is there not a fair and cogent reason for the lapse of five months' time at that particular stage? Where was the Minister of Agriculture and where was the Minister of Militia and Defence during that time? I think the Minister of Militia said himself that he was attending the imperial conference. So instead of waiting five months for Mr. Williams I think the fact will be found to be that the Department of Agriculture was waiting for the return of the Minister of Militia before taking action in this matter. For we find that, very shortly after his return, the matter was consummated. I think that something more is desirable than the mere statement, the solemn statement, of the minister to allay—to put it in a mild form—the suspicion that all these circumstances create. If it is true that the minister has nothing whatever to do with this matter, that the action of the Minister of Agriculture was not influenced by the fact of his colleague's position in the matter, then it is to the advantage of the hon. gentleman himself that the subject should be fully and properly investigated and that he be afforded every opportunity, by some means to be taken by this House, of showing that he was not connected with the enterprise in a way unsuited to his public position, or in such a way that private interests or the interests of his country have suffered at his hands.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I do not feel after what has been advanced that I should go very fully into this question. There are some points that have been very conspicuously brought out that I do not regard as very pertinent to the inquiry. For instance, the hon. member for Lunenburg (A. K. Maclean) and the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) have been at great pains to show that probably some blame attached to Mr. Williams, that he did not pursue his application as vigorously as he might have done. I venture to say that is not an important question in the discussion now before us. It is a comparatively unimportant question whether Mr. Williams did or did not pursue the matter on which he was engaged as vigorously as he might have done, and it is not a matter of vital importance whether Mr. Williams was right or wrong. The point seems clear that the Minister of Agriculture advised Mr. Williams that the Minister of Militia had made an application which was favourably entertained by the Minister of Agriculture, and that Mr. Williams, rightly or wrongly, took this as a pretty clear intimation that he was not in the running. In other words, it seems clear that by the action of the Minister of Agriculture and the position the Minister of Militia had assumed in connection with this matter, the incorporation of the company and the promotion of his scheme, an outside and independent party was frightened out of the field. The important, crucial point in this case is—whether a minister of the Crown has so connected himself with the distribution of public funds which should go without trammel to those entitled to them, that a person who would otherwise have been induced to apply and would have got the benefit of that subsidy was driven away; and that a minister of the Crown occupied an exceptionally favourable position in the matter.

Now, going back a little, what is the situation? This is one point we should keep track of, that before the time when the Minister of Agriculture introduced this resolution of December, 1906, we had already two—I believe three—laws providing for subsidies. We had provisions which enabled them to establish bait freezing stations on a small scale, and we had provisions which enabled the government to subsidize bait freezing stations on a large scale, giving them fifty per cent on the original outlay, and I think $2,000 a year afterwards. We had also the general provisions for cold storage, and the fact that we had a cold storage law in force at the time that the Minister of Militia determined to incorporate his company and float this scheme, is a most important fact that must not be lost track of in considering the question whether the minister put himself in a position which was not consistent with the public interest, or with the high position he occupied as a minister of the Crown. We had a statute which provided that wherever a cold storage station was established whenever a commercial cold storage plant was constructed, according to the regulations of the government, the parties would be entitled to five per cent upon their outlay up to $40,000. So the minister does not get rid of the difficulty by saying that he went into this transaction and floated this company to go into the cold storage business, and was frightened off as soon as he discovered the enlarged subsidy policy of the Minister of Agriculture, because the fact was that before he conceived this scheme there was a subsidy law upon the statute-book. Does any one believe for a moment that the Minister of Militia did not intend to avail himself of that Act in the scheme which he inaugurated in the fall of 1906? It is only a question of degree. The minister must admit that when he conceived the scheme of forming a company, and applied for incorporation, and associated with himself Mr. Graham and his son-in-law, he knew there was a law on the statute-book giving a subsidy to cold storage companies, and that he intended at the time to avail himself of the provisions of the law which then existed. It is no excuse, he does not get rid of the difficulty by saying that when he found what the matured plan of the Minister of Agriculture was, he determined not to go into the scheme, or in other words, to disassociate himself from that scheme. Now, to be perfectly fair with the minister, I will read what he said:

While I was in England in 1906, application was made under instructions given by me and Mr. Graham jointly for the incorporation of a company. It was intended, I may say at once and frankly, that my properties in Kings county, orchards and farms, should be made a part of this company, and Mr. Graham, of Belleville, I believe a prominent Conservative, a great fruit dealer and well up in cold storage and all matters pertaining to agriculture, was to have taken an interest and to put his properties into the company in the same way as mine were to be put in, and we were to accept bonds and a certain amount of stock for these properties. It was expected that money would be raised in England to carry on the business, and it was expected also that a portion of the money would undoubtedly be invested in the establishment of cold storage plants in different parts of Canada. Was there anything wrong in that? Was there anything highly improper in that?

Well, I call attention to the fact that the minister, in almost the next sentence, says that there would have been something wrong if he had proceeded with that scheme after he knew what the policy of the Minister of Agriculture was.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I am misreported there, the word 'not' was left out in the next sentence after what the hon. gentleman has read.

Mr. LENNOX. I will read the next sentence.

This was all arranged before it was expected that any policy such as that afterwards decided upon would be brought down by the government. When the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to adopt the policy of aiding, somewhat largely, cold storage, I felt that, so far as I was concerned, it would be undesirable for me to own stock in any company which was receiving from the government a subsidy, although under the law I do not know that it would have been.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The first part of that sentence is all right, but the word 'not' should be in.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the minister to say that when he found a matured scheme by the Minister of Agriculture to grant subsidies, he thought it would be improper for him as a minister of the Crown to go on and organize a company, and to receive a subsidy from the government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I said 'undesirable.'

Mr. LENNOX. Well, if it was undesirable in the case of a large subsidy, it was also undesirable in the case of a small subsidy. The minister knew at the time he was incorporating this company as well as any one can know to-day, that there was a provision of existence, of which he would avail himself, for subsidizing a company such as he was floating. Therefore it is hard to understand how the minister can draw the distinction. It is just as wrong, I suppose to be guilty—well, I won't give the illustration that occurred to my mind, but you cannot draw the distinction. Now let me show how the matter stands. It is a peculiar fact that just the old policy is pursued in this matter that we find in so many cases. The old plan is that whenever there is going to be—I won't say a raid upon the government—but whenever there is going to be something to be taken out of the public treasury for the benefit of individuals who are dealing with this government, almost invariably it is done by incorporating a company. So we find that in this case, in the month of October, 1906, the hon. gentleman, according to his own statement, sets about incorporating a company. We have the same thing in the case of the Ross Rifle Company, although Sir Charles Ross is the only gentleman who is a member of the company; we have the same thing in the North Atlantic Trading Company, and we could not find out who they were; we had the same thing in that famous Sub-Target Gun Company, we had Mr. Hartley Dewart and others forming themselves into a company; we had the same thing in connection with the raid upon the government in the case of the Carbide Companies, and more recently we had the Falconer deal and the Falconer Company as its sequence. So that for many years it had been the practice to form companies for the purpose of dealing with the government, companies composed of clerks and unknown persons. Now the minister incorporates a company, the Canadian Produce and Cold Storage Company, and in order to meet objections of this afternoon, there is an attempt to separate the action of Mr. Graham from the action of Mr. Macoun and from the action of the minister. I want to say, as the minister himself states here, that this application was made on behalf of himself and Mr. Graham, and that the connection of Mr. Macoun with the matter as secretary of the original company, and as associated with the subsequent company with which this is amalgamated, is distinctly admitted. So that every step, whether by the minister, or by Mr. Macoun, or by Mr. Graham, shows that they are identical, they are all representing the company. Now what is the next step in the matter? I might next refer to the peculiar attitude of the Minister of Agriculture. He tells us, when this letter is read to him, that we cannot depend upon him, that his language is not exact, that it is a little loose. Well, the minister can take that position if he likes, but when his attention is called to the fact, not only by his own letter, in which he admits that the Minister of Militia has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected, but when the matter is referred to on several occasions and his attention is practically challenged by the letters of reply that Mr. Williams sends from time to time, it is pretty hard to realize that the Minister of Agriculture is quite correct in saying that he did not appreciate the position at the time. I think we ought to be prepared for something of the kind on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture for, if I remember rightly, speaking in the city of Montreal on a most important question a year or so ago, he said that we wanted no preferential treatment, that we wanted nothing in return for the preference that we gave to Great Britain, and when taxed with it in the House he said that he was not speaking as minister but in his private capacity only. Then, when later on, the hon. gentleman assured us that he had, on a most important question, a valuable letter, upon which our rights in reference to Japan hinged, the hon. gentleman found that again he was not to be depended upon, that he had not such a letter and never had had it as a matter of fact. It took him two years to find that out. And in this matter, although from time to time, his attention is directed by the correspondence, which I shall not read, to the point that a minister of the Crown is occupying a position in regard to this matter which must have inevitably challenged the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, it takes him until the day before yesterday to realize and to know that the language which he used on June 13, 1907, was perhaps not actually correct. I will refer just to a few of the letters in connection with this matter. It has been so fully and ably discussed on this side of the House that I only require to quote a few letters and add a few references to the position which has been taken by prominent men in Canada and Great Britain on matters similar to this. There is a most important letter directed to the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on August 15, 1907. I am not going to read that, but I am going to say that there are in it a great many important statements, statements which are in conflict, I regret to say, with statements made by the Minister of Militia and Defence. It is one of the unfortunate circumstances in connection with this matter that when you find a minister of the Crown in the race with outside individuals for personal gain you are apt to get these unhappy conflicts, and although we in this House are prepared to take the statements of the Minister of Militia we must bear in mind that the position does not add to the dignity of parliament or to the dignity of the minister, and we must also bear in mind that we are not the court of last resort and that although we may be prepared to take the statements of the Minister of Militia in contradiction of the statements of Mr. Williams, a warm supporter of the government and, I assume, a respectable man, the public may not be quite so anxious to take them without a grain of salt. We have to bear in mind too that statements are contained throughout this correspondence in which the testimony of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) is invoked from time to time, and it is a significant fact, that, so far in the progress of this debate, although that hon. gentleman has not been absent from the precincts of this House, he has not seen fit to come to the rescue of the Minister of Militia and corroborate his statements by adding his testimony in contradiction of those of Mr. Williams. Although we have a number of statements introducing the name of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals showing us that by his knowledge a great many of these matters could be established, we have not the testimony of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals in any way in contradiction of them. There are ways and ways as the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals says, of doing things and if it is true of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, who departed from the government some years ago, how much more true do we realize it to be now with our knowledge of the devious ways which have been laid bare by our investigations within more recent times ? There are ways and ways of doing things and that is what we are complaining of. On December 5, 1906, the day that the resolution was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. L. S. Macoun writes a letter which is put forward now as an application made by that gentleman for this subsidy. You cannot read an application into the wording of it, but you can read this in it, that he was very promptly acquainted in some way with what was going on. We must recollect this point too that when we come to deal with this question of the letter of Mr. Fisher, which he wants to qualify, as I understand it, this is the only application that was ever made, and it is made, not by the Minister of Militia, but by the secretary of the company and it is the company that was applying at that time. When the Minister of Agriculture speaks of the application of the Minister of Militia he speaks of the application made by the secretary of the company, Mr. Macoun, on behalf of Sir Frederick Borden, who was admittedly the chief promotor of the scheme at the time. I do not think I need read that letter. The next letter I will read, it is as follows :

St. John, December 7, 1906.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I beg to make application for assistance to a cold storage warehouse which I and associates desire to establish at the port of St. John. The application is made by me under the terms of the proposed Act in accordance with resolution of yourself before the House of Commons. I will make a more formal application when the matter can be dealt with in exact terms, but I desire to lodge the present application with you. I have already had correspondence with yourself on the subject of cold storage, and am very glad to find that you are disposed to place the government's assistance on a more liberal basis. St. John is well situated for a cold storage depot, and I feel that a pretty strong case can be made out for a grant of assistance by you for a warehouse here. If it is necessary to make for the present any more formal application will you kindly advise me of its necessity.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

That is a pretty definite application and it is a more definite application as I understand it than the application I have referred to on page 23 of this return and which has already been read to the House.

On December 13, 1906, the following letter was written by the Minister of Agriculture to Mr. Macoun :

L. S. Macoun, Esq., General Broker,
Ottawa, Ontario,

Dear Mr. Macoun,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 5, with reference to the Bill I am introducing to provide better cold storage facilities for perishable products.

I note your application on behalf of 'Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage, Limited,' and shall be glad to furnish you with all the information available when our departmental arrangements are completed. In the meantime I have obtained and beg to send you herewith 'Hansard' report of the debates in the House on the subject up to the present time.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

On the same date December 13, 1906, the following letter is written by the Minister of Agriculture to F. E. Williams and Company :

Messrs F. E. Williams & Co., Ltd.,
St. John, N.B.

Gentlemen,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 7th with reference to the Bill I am introducing to provide better cold storage facilities for perishable products. I note your proposal in that connection. If the Bill receives the assent of parliament, when our departmental arrangements are completed I will be glad to furnish you with all the information in regard to the details. In the meantime I obtained and beg to send you herewith 'Hansard' reports of the debates in the House up to the present time.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

There is a difference between these two letters which I have not noticed before and I think it worth while to call attention to it. In answering the vague letter of Mr. Macoun which merely asked to be informed of the proceedings from time to time Mr. Fisher says :

I note your application on behalf of Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage, Limited.

But in the corresponding place in the other letter he says :

I note your proposal in that connection.

Is there any significance in that distinction ? Is the Minister of Agriculture then—I don't know—forming the idea vaguely in his mind that he will not give Mr. Williams too good a chance and that he will put him off with vague phrases in the meantime. He also uses the phrase in the letter to Mr. Williams :

If the Bill receives the assent of parliament.

Which casts a certain doubt upon it and which may have some significance having regard to the fact that the phrase is not used in the other letter and having regard to the other matters which subsequently arose. On the 8th of April Mr. Williams writes again :

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago I made an application to your department for a grant for a cold storage plant to be established in St. John. Previous to this I had put in an application to Hon. Mr. Brodeur for a grant from the Marine and Fisheries department. The last time I was in Ottawa Hon. Mr. Brodeur informed me that they were going to merge the whole grant for cold storage in the Government Cold Storage Act. I had the pleasure of meeting and talking the matter over with your good self in the presence of H. R. Emmerson, Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. Mr. Brodeur.

That part of the transaction is not denied as fully as it might have been :

At that time Sir Frederick Borden had a proposition which he was trying to carry out and wanted my friends and myself to go in with him, he and his son-in-law being the prime movers in this scheme.

That is denied as I understand it by the Minister of Militia but I can only say——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is utterly false.

Mr. LENNOX. I accept the proposition of the Minister of Militia but I must again express regret that in the race for this private gain between a minister of the Crown and an outsider, the public may well reserve doubts upon the question.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. How sorry you are for that.

Mr. LENNOX. I regret it very much.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sure.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope the minister who is so prompt to-day in asking people to accept his statement will accept mine with the same candour.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am willing to take my chance.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he deny there was any proposition made for a compromise ?

Mr. LENNOX. He says now it is utterly false.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say the statement contained in that letter is false.

Mr. FOSTER. That there was any compromise proposed ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, not with me. I never had any talk with the man on business lines.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Macoun seems to put it exactly the reverse.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I don't know anything about that.

Mr. LENNOX (reading) :

Mr. Emmerson all along assured me that my proposition was first in the hands of the government and he and Mr. Brodeur had promised to give me a bonus from the fishery department and now that is merged into your department I should have first consideration, and I would like to know by return mail if my application is to be granted for a cold storage warehouse in East St. John, or is the application of Sir Frederick Borden to be accepted instead.

Mark the language there. That statement that Sir Frederick Borden is making an application is not denied but is rather corroborated in the correspondence :

Hon. H. R. Emmerson now being out of the government I have to turn to you direct. Kindly give me a direct reply as soon as possible and you will very much oblige me, as I have other plans which I want to carry out if I am not to receive the government aid.

I am inclosing copies of some of my letters to Mr. Emmerson on this cold storage subject, which will convey to you my ideas and feelings regarding the matter.

As I understand it these are letters complaining very distinctly of the position the Minister of Militia occupies in reference to this matter, and Mr. Williams brings it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture in the most direct possible way, and this would be calculated to prevent the Minister of Agriculture making any unconscious slip with regard to the position of Sir Frederick Borden in the matter. It is hard to realize how the Minister of Agriculture could have made any slip when he came to write the letter of the 11th of April. This letter concludes :

I trust it will not take too much of your valuable time to peruse the same and become a little acquainted with the cold storage proposition in St. John.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. E. WILLIAMS.

On the 11th of April, 1907, with the definite statement before him that Sir Frederick Borden was connected with this other company the Minister of Agriculture makes this reply :

April 11, 1907.

Mr. F. E. Williams,
St. John, New Brunswick.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 8. I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John. Sir Frederick Borden has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected, and I have viewed his application very favourably.

Not a question of being interested in the valley of Annapolis, not a question of being interested on behalf of constituents, not 'has recommending or interesting himself in a scheme,' but 'has made an application on behalf of a company with which he is connected :'

And I have viewed his application very favourably.

We are bound to take the statement of the Minister of Agriculture. It always affords me great pleasure to do so, but it does violence to my judgment. I find it is only my extreme confidence in the hon. gentleman and a parliamentary rule that enables me to do so, because if it were some one with whom I was less acquainted, in whom I had less faith, I would say that was about as conclusive and as damning as it could possibly be upon this question.

None of the applications——

Again applications.

None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely.

I cannot make any promises without definite plans and specifications and full information as to what the people applying for may be prepared to do.

Yours truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

Then we have this letter which is most important, and which nullifies many of the interjections of the Minister of Militia this afternoon. Mr. Graham wrote this letter on April 13:

Belleville, Ontario, April 13, 1907.

Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Sir Frederick Borden requested me to interview you in reference to aid for our cold storage propositions at St. John and Halifax. It is our intention to complete the one in St. John this season.

Mark you, he receives the request or the instruction from the gentleman who is the chief promoter of this scheme. This brings it down as late as April 13th, long after the time when the Minister of Militia points out to us he had taken fright from the fact that the Minister of Agriculture was increasing the grant to cold storage plants—willing to take a little out of the public treasury as a minister of the Crown, to benefit in competition with outsiders but when a large proposition was made he took fright. Down to the 13th of April, at all events, we have the most cogent evidence that he was the prime mover in this concern and suggested to his chief subordinate, Mr. Graham, to interview the Minister of Agriculture 'in reference to our cold storage propositions.' The letter continues:

—when I reached Ottawa Thursday night I learned from Mr. Macoun that you had advised him that everything had been arranged in connection with this matter and therefore it would be unnecessary for me to bother you any further in reference to the matter in question. This will explain why I did not interview you in regard to the matter and if any further application or information is required please advise.

Yours truly,
R. J. GRAHAM.

That was only two days after the Minister of Agriculture told Mr. Williams that no plans had been completed and

None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely.

And led Williams to understand that he was not then at all events definitely committed to the adoption of Sir Frederick Borden's scheme.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I might say to the hon. gentleman that on April 1st I left Ottawa for England and was at that time on the sea.

Mr. LENNOX. Of course I take the minister's statement for that, I did not know it. I do not think that matters at all, because this man is speaking on behalf of the company. I did not understand the minister to deny that Mr. Graham was correct in saying 'Sir Frederick Borden requested me to interview you.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Since I am appealed to I have no objection to saying that I saw Mr. Graham a great many times prior to my leaving for England, and it is quite possible I may have advised him to see Mr. Fisher with reference to carrying out the idea of constructing this cold storage at St. John, but I have no recollection of any particular occasion, and I am quite sure I did not advise him to consult Mr. Fisher with reference to any particular plans or schemes.

Mr. LENNOX. It is only another of those unfortunate contradictions. I am bound, on account of the parliamentary rule, to take it that Mr. Graham is not correct in what he says.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I did not say that.

Mr. LENNOX. He says: 'Requested me to interview you' which is an entirely different thing.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is putting an improper and unfair construction on the letter.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think so. When this gentleman says 'I am requested by Sir Frederick Borden,' I understand that he means that Sir Frederick Borden is the moving spirit in it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Macoun says that this gentleman is their hired man.

Mr. LENNOX. If it were only that Sir Frederick Borden was advising him he would say so. However, I am quite willing to have the minister's explanation as he gives it. My attention has been called to this that both the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) and the Minister of Militia have made statements in the House impugning the standing of Mr. Williams.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I made none.

Mr. LENNOX. I am advised on reliable authority that I should contradict this and say he is one of the most prominent, reliable and successful merchants in St. John, thoroughly able financially to carry out the whole cold storage enterprise without assistance, that he is a very large importer of fruits from the West Indies, does a large provision business in all lines and understands the ins and outs of the cold storage business while not one of the members of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company knows anything like as much.

Mr. FOSTER. And at his first application had the endorsation of the most prominent Liberals in St. John.

Mr. LENNOX. And had the recommendation, if that is worth anything—it used to be worth a great deal—of the ex-Minister of Railways, and had the promise and the assurance of the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The next letter is dated April 16th, 1907:

Mr. R. J. Graham,
Belleville, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 13, and note what you state in regard to your visit to Ottawa last Thursday. This is quite satisfactory.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

What do these words 'this is quite satisfactory' mean? They mean that everything contained in that letter is substantially correct, that there is nothing to qualify or contradict, and therefore that everything has been arranged in connection with the matter as he says. That letter is signed by the Hon. Sydney Fisher.

Then we have a letter of the 3rd June, 1907:

The Hon. Sydney Fisher,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I received blanks for application for cold storage warehouses. In your letter of April 11 you gave me to understand that nothing could be done unless plans and specifications were submitted and you also stated that you looked favourably upon giving this grant in St. John to Sir Frederick Borden

I have already spent considerable of my money going to Ottawa and endeavouring to obtain a grant for the cold storage warehouse in St. John, and I do not feel like spending any more money in getting up plans and specifications if the preference is to be given to Sir Frederick Borden. I have written very strongly on this matter. I would again kindly request that you inform me plainly if it would be worth while proceeding to get plans and specifications ready to submit to you.

Was that ever put right in regard to that matter? Was he ever told that Sir Frederick Borden was not making an application? Was he ever told that Sir Frederick Borden was not the favoured applicant or that he was wrong in assuming that he was shut out? I do not understand that he was. I understand that that letter remained unanswered and is unanswered to-day. Was this man led to understand that he was not in the running, that he might as well give it up? He puts it plainly when he says he wants to know if there is any use of spending more money to prepare plans and specifications, because if not he wants to give the matter up. He calls attention to the fact that he has written protesting against the government giving a grant to a cabinet minister in preference to an independent outsider, and he finally appeals to the Minister of Agriculture asking him to inform him plainly if it would be worth while for him to proceed to get plans and specifications to submit to him, and he gets no answer. When the First Minister writes to him calling his attention to the fact that he has put in no plans, what does it amount to? It amounts to the refinement of cruelty to make such a statement in the face of the fact that that letter remained unanswered. I have nothing more to say about the letters. If ever a complete case was established of a minister of the Crown having taken a position inconsistent with his high office by putting himself in rivalry with an outsider for a grant of public money, I venture to say that that was the position occupied by the Minister of Militia, not upon controverted testimony, but upon his own admitted statements in the House. What does that lead to? I want to call attention very briefly to what follows. I do not want to take any position that I cannot adequately sustain. An hon. gentleman said yesterday that probably this was an infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act. I am not setting myself up as an authority, but speaking from my own view of things I cannot see it in that light. But there is some thing far more important than the mere question of the Independence of Parliament Act. There is the unwritten law that guides the conduct of ministers in the great parliament which we copy and try to emulate, which ought to be and generally is far more effective than any Independence of Parliament Act. I am not going to say whether the minister should take the position that was suggested to him, I think in the kindliest spirit, by the hon. gentleman who commenced this discussion the day before yesterday. To a great extent he relied upon reading the correspondence which had been brought down by the government in this matter. He made no hostile criticism of it, but rather appealed to the hon. gentleman's own sense of the fitness of things, and I am prepared as a younger member of the House to leave it just in that way to the hon. gentleman whose position is assailed, necessarily assailed by the circumstances that have been detailed, and to call to his attention a few examples in the hope that in this parliament—which has had great traditions in the past and which I hope will maintain those high traditions in the future—these examples may illustrate the position that a minister of the Crown should occupy in a case of this kind. The right hon. gentleman who leads the House knows the absolute freedom from entangling and suspicious connections which that great parliamentarian, Mr. Gladstone, always insisted upon. It was one of the very bright spots in his brilliant career that he insisted upon all the members of his government keeping free not only from business connections which would in any way embarrass the actions of the government, but all connections which would at all bring suspicion upon the high position which he was determined should be occupied by himself and his ministers. Then I call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the case of the Rt. Hon. W. H. Smith—to one circumstance in his life which is related in a letter he wrote to the president or other high official of the Bank of England at a time when it was in an embarrassed position. The bank had applied to Mr. Smith for assistance, and had suggested that he take a directorship in the bank or shares by way of recognition of the assistance he gave. What did Mr. Smith do? He said no. He wrote back: 'I will advance to the bank £100,000 for its temporary assistance, but I will not take a scratch of a pen in return; I will take neither a directorship nor a share in the bank, because I want not only to be free from any entangling alliances of that kind, but I am determined to preserve myself free from the possibility of suspicion.' I draw attention also to the case of Sir Richard Webster. The right hon. gentleman who leads the House will remember that in the Parnell case Sir Richard Webster, occupying the position of Solicitor General, not a member of the cabinet, acted on behalf of the 'Times' newspaper, and in connection with the Parnell incident dealt with political questions, and the right hon. gentleman will remember the position taken by many of the prominent men in the House of Commons in discussing that question, as to the evil effect of people associated with the government of the country taking sides on questions with which they would afterwards have to deal in the House. If that is true of questions which may be discussed in the House of Commons, how much more injurious is it for a minister of the Crown to sit in Council, assisting in determining whether it shall or shall not be the policy of the government to grant the public funds in aid of any public enterprise, joining in trying his own case, and then to go as an outside individual and put himself in the position of getting the benefit of that which he voted secretly in the cabinet council. Then take the other minister of the Crown, the hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution on December 4, 1906, the Minister of Agriculture, and what position does he occupy? Did he take the country into his confidence? When he explained that he had been incubating this matter for months and years, did he tell us, that already not only had he formed an opinion that it was a desirable thing to do, but that he was in negotiation with certain parties, and to whom he had practically committed himself.

Then, we had the instance of Mr. Chamberlain referred to, but the fact was not referred to that, as I understand it, Mr. Chamberlain, on going into the government dissociated himself from the business interests with which he had been so long financially concerned and of which he had been the guiding spirit in the early years of his life on the ground that he was going into an office whose duties might be antagonistic in those interests. He severed completely his connection with business concerns that might, at some future time, have dealings with the government.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite different from the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. But it is probably like the hon. gentleman's other statement; he will be likely to revise it as he has revised many other statements he has made on previous occasions. And not to be beggared for authority, let me give a high one, cited here to-day. Would it not be well to adopt the principle advocated by Sir

Richard Cartwright? If the Minister of Militia or the Minister of Agriculture had taken to heart the language of their associate, Sir Richard Cartwright, this thing could never have arisen. Let me refer to two other notable instances which will be well known to the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). One was the case in 1876 of Lord Henry Lennox, a notable case. All that could be said was that at the instance of prominent and distinguished men, Lord Henry Lennox had taken some shares in a continental railway. He was to have been paid £100 sterling per year as a director of the company. He did not inquire into the circumstances. It was established beyond doubt that he was not familiar with the circumstances, that every thing unstable in connection with the actions of the company was wholly unknown to him. All this had happened two years before he became a cabinet minister. And because a judge of the High Court of England commented on the case to the extent of saying that the action of these hon. gentlemen was a matter which would require explanation—that is as far as Lord Coleridge went in the matter—this hon. gentleman, who was a member of the board of trade—(he may have been president)—as soon as the matter came to his attention, tendered his resignation. The resignation was not accepted immediately, but, on further consideration, at a later date it was accepted and he retired from his position, expressing his great regret at severing his relations with a position to whose duties he was sincerely attached and of which he was, I understand, an able administrator. Then there was the case of Mr. Mundella, which was referred to the other day. The language employed by Mr. Mundella may be properly read:

> I felt that the public had a right to be assured that the administration of the duties attached to my office should be free from the slightest suspicion that any conflict might arise between personal and public considerations.

That is the rule that must obtain if we are to have the high character of public life conserved. Further on he says:

> Few know how much attraction the discharge of the duties of my office had for me.

The office of the hon. Minister may have the same attraction for him. A minister devoted to his duties must have special regret in giving up his position.

> I was able to deal with subjects with which throughout my life I had been associated, and to attain results for which I had worked long and hard. To leave unfinished the task a man has set himself to accomplish is a sacrifice I can scarcely exaggerate, and certainly I was reluctant to make it.

And he sums it up:

> One word more. Conscious of right, my mind is fully assured that when all I have done in connection with my personal affairs shall be fully and fairly ascertained, my friends and the public will know, as I know now, that I am entitled to declare that throughout my life, which has been dependent upon my own exertions, I have preserved my character free from stain or dishonour.

There is one other authority to which I would like to refer. I had not it at hand at the time when I reached the point at which I would like to have introduced it. It was in connection with Mr. Gladstone and the position which has been occupied by Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Smith, Mr. Childers and others maintaining the high position of ministers of the Crown unsullied from the slightest suspicion. The 'Law Times,' of February, 1906, contained an article from which I will read a few lines:

> The government have certainly done well to impose upon themselves as self-denying ordinance in regard to the public directorships held by their members. It will be within the recollection of most members of the profession that one or two unfortunate incidents have, during the last few years, drawn attention to the undesirability of holding concurrently government and directoral office. No responsible person would impute dishonourable motives to the persons most chiefly concerned in these instances, but it is, none the less, a safer and simpler course to adopt for a minister of the Crown to free himself from duties which might conceivably clash with the great office he holds. In these strenuous days it is moreover only fair to the shareholders that their directors should not be absorbed in work which, if honestly fulfilled, must demand the minister's undivided time and attention. So complex are the workings of modern business that a conflict between duty and interest might conceivably arise at any moment, and this is not a state of affairs which, on public grounds, should be allowed to perplex those responsible for the conduct of the nation's affairs. We trust that the example now set may commend itself to all future occupants of ministerial offices without regard to party.

I need have little further to say about this resolution. I am glad that it was introduced by my hon. friend from North Toronto in a non-partisan manner, without the exhibition of any feeling. I would have been glad if that tone had been preserved. An hon. gentleman on this side of the House complimented the Minister of Militia upon the spirited way in which he repelled the attack. I wish I could compliment him upon his able generalship as well. I think that probably if he had eliminated from the opening of his remarks those bitter and acrimonious references to my hon. friend from North Toronto, he would in the end have been able to deal just as successfully with the subject of justifying himself.

In reference to the Insurance Commission, I want to say in closing, and with as distinct a challenge as I can, that notwithstanding what the Minister of Militia has repeated here to-day, I have gone through that inquiry pretty fully; I acquainted myself thoroughly with it at the time it was discussed in this House, I followed the arguments of the Minister of Justice, I know the references that were made, I am acquainted with the letters that were read here to-day and were read then, I know their significance; and I say again that, in the sense in which the Minister of Militia spoke the day before yesterday in attacking my hon. friend from North Toronto as having done wrong, not only did the Minister of Justice fail to prove it; not only did that court of inquiry, that court of inquisition, the Royal Commission on Insurance nominally so-called, but in reality an inquisition to try and blacken and slander the character of two of our strongest men on this side of the House, utterly fail to do so; but neither the Minister of Justice, with all his great ability, nor any member of the House, can prove the charges or insinuations made against my hon. friend. I have pointed out both the admissions of the Minister of Militia in regard to this matter, and the evidence from other quarters. Numerous other authorities can be cited of men in public life who have refused to be embarrassed by outside associations. For instance, take the case of Sir John Abbott in our own parliament. I am informed that when he became Prime Minister he was the owner of a large number of shares in the Canadian Pacific Railway. He thought that possibly, by reason of that company coming to parliament from time to time for legislation, it might be regarded as inconsistent that he should occupy the position of leader of the government and at the same time hold those shares, and he sold them at a sacrifice of sixty-five cents on the dollar, rather than be subject to the imputation of occupying a doubtful position in that regard. I have pointed out the attitude of other distinguished men in both Great Britain and Canada. Therefore I move this resolution:

That all the words after the word 'that' be omitted, and the following be substituted therefor:

This House is of opinion that ministers of the Crown should not be connected with associations or companies seeking contracts, aid or subsidies from the government of which they are members.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have followed this discussion from the first word to the last with a good deal of interest, and some curiosity also, because the subject was not altogether new to me. Shortly after my return from England last year, I was called upon by a letter received from the gentleman whose name has been often mentioned during this debate, to give some attention to it. Before I go any further, I must say to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and to those who have spoken on the same side of the House in regard to this matter, that in my humble estimation they have been extremely unfair, both towards my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, and still more towards my colleague the Minister of Militia. The hon. member for North Toronto, as has been said, introduced this motion in a speech which, in some respects, was moderate and fair enough, but which in some particulars, I think he will agree with me on reflection, was the reverse of fair and moderate.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Prime Minister kindly point out those particulars?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will certainly. As I said, shortly after my return from Europe, I received a letter from Mr. Williams, which was read by the hon. member for North Toronto, and which therefore I will not read again, calling my attention to what he deemed to be an injustice committed towards himself by the Minister of Agriculture, in this, that he had been an applicant for a subsidy voted by parliament for the establishment of a cold storage, that his application had been denied, and that the same subsidy had been given to a company in which the Minister of Militia had interested himself. He did not put the latter fact to me in the words I have indicated, on the contrary, he stated in so many words that the subsidy had been given to a company in which the Minister of Militia had a prominent interest—I forget the exact words at the present time; but I know my hon. friend will agree with me that that was the sense of the letter which was addressed to me. It was my duty therefore under the circumstances to give some attention to the matter, and I did it all the more readily because I understood that Mr. Williams was a very respectable citizen of the city of St. John, and also a prominent Liberal. It is of no particular interest to the House to remind it that the policy which had been introduced by the Minister of Agriculture of bonusing plants for cold storage in different parts of the country, had been received with great favour by both sides of this House. The Minister of Agriculture had also come to the conclusion that it would be in the public interest that such a plant should be established in the city of St. John, and I think we can all agree with that when we consider the important shipping facilities which are afforded by the city and harbour at St. John. After looking into the matter I found that two applications had been put into the hands of the Minister of Agriculture. One was by Mr. Williams himself, one was by Mr. Macoun, who is the son-in-law of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and who acted in behalf of the company of which it is no use to speak at any length at this moment. Both these applications had the support of friends. Mr. Macoun's application was supported by the Minister of Militia, who was a colleague of the Minister of Agriculture. The application of Mr. Williams was supported by my then colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals of that day, the present member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). As is natural under such circumstances the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Railways of that day favoured, as best they could, the interests of their respective applicants. Under such circumstances I put it to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I put it to any man in this House: What should be the attitude of the Minister of Agriculture? Here were two parties, both respectable, both represented to be able to carry out this contract, both represented to be able to perform the duties attached to it and both having the support behind them of their respective friends. What was the Minister of Agriculture to do? If my hon. friend from North Toronto had been Minister of Agriculture, what would he have done? What could he have done? In what manner could he have disposed of the question? Would he have given the subsidy to the one or the other? Would he have given the subsidy to Mr. Macoun in behalf of the company which he represented, or would he have given it to Mr. Williams? If he had given it either to one or to the other, simply upon the ground of showing favour to one or other of the parties, either to the party represented by the Minister of Militia, or to the party represented by the then Minister of Railways and Canals, such a conclusion would have been most unsatisfactory. The Minister of Agriculture thought, and thought very properly, that under such circumstances he would give the subsidy to the party who, in his opinion, could show that he was the more deserving, the better equipped and the more likely to carry out the intent of the Act; that is to say, to promote the commercial policy which was involved in the voting of the subsidy by parliament. Mr. Macoun, in behalf of the company which he represented, filed his plan and specification, showed to the ministers, in black and white by an actual document deposited in his hands, how he was prepared to earn the subsidy voted by parliament, what he proposed to do, the buildings, the equipment and the plant which he proposed to erect. The Minister of Agriculture very properly asked the same thing of Mr. Williams. Mr. Williams made his application. It is of no use to refer to the fact that Mr. Williams had, long before the matter came into the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, made also to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a similar application. It is of no use to look into that. It is not a case of first come, first served, because the subsidy should go to the one most deserving of it. At the time that Mr. Williams applied to the Minister of Agriculture he was given the same answer: File your plans and specifications and then I will be in a position to judge. But, I call the attention of the hon. member for North Toronto, of every hon. gentleman who spoke on that side of the House and of every hon. gentleman who sits on that side of the House also, to the fact that with every one of these requests of the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Williams, very much, it seems to me, to his own injury, and very illogically, refused to comply or to give a direct answer. It is evident from the correspondence that Mr. Williams would not file his plans and specifications unless he had an assurance in advance that his plans and specifications would be adopted. Let me here, to emphasize this point, quote the letter of Mr. Williams in which that is made very clear. It was written to the Minister of Agriculture on the 3rd June, 1907. This letter has been quoted more than once but I quote it again to clinch the point which I have just been making

Dear Sir,—I received blanks for application for cold storage warehouse. In your letter of April 11, you gave me to understand that nothing could be done unless plans and specifications were submitted, and you also stated that you looked favourably upon giving this grant in St. John to Sir Frederick Borden. I have already spent considerable of my money going to Ottawa and endeavouring to obtain a grant for the cold storage warehouse in St. John, and I do not feel like spending any more money in getting up plans and specifications if the preference is to be given to Sir Frederick Borden. I have written very strongly on this matter. I would again kindly request that you inform me plainly if it would be worth while proceeding to get plans and specifications ready to submit to you.

If this means anything it means that Mr. Williams, the writer of this letter, would not file plans and specifications unless he was told in advance: Yes, you may go to the expense, you may prepare your plans and specifications, you will get the contract. Could such an answer be given by the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Prime Minister think that is a fair interpretation?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I do think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Of these words ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do think so. What else could it be ? Could any other answer be given than the answer which was given ? I ask my hon. friend that question now.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I would have to take into consideration the immediately preceding announcement which had been made by Mr. Williams. Mr. Williams had been an applicant for more than a year, first under one and then under another and he had been shunted off, properly enough, from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries under his systems to the new system under the Minister of Agriculture. He transferred his long pending claim or application to the proper minister and made it on the 7th day of December, 1900. It was not long after that until,in a communication, he was told by the Minister of Agriculture : Sir, Frederick Borden has made application and I look favourably upon his application. Now, you have a defenceless private individual pitted against a powerful minister and the minister who is to decide upon these applications telling him to his face that he has an application in from a minister and 'I look very favourably on it.' From that day to this Mr. Williams could get no statement from the Minister of Agriculture that if he went to the expense of getting plans and the like of that he would even get fair consideration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When my hon. friend rose I did not expect that he would interject a speech into my speech. I should have known better because I have known my hon. friend for a long time. I blame myself and I do not blame him. He is true to his nature and therefore let us now go on with the argument.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to give all the information I could.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture spoke very frankly and I think the very frankness of the Minister of Agriculture is something which my hon. friend from North Toronto cannot understand.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps so ; I am so used to the frankness of the First Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Agriculture said frankly and fairly : I have an application also from Sir Frederick Borden which I view very favourably. He did not tell him that he need not apply any more. He did not put him off, but he told him that : Although I look upon this application favourably and even very favourably I am bound to give you satisfaction, I am bound to hear you, I am bound to consider your applications ; file your plans and specifications and I shall decide accordingly between the application supported by Sir Frederick Borden and the application supported by Mr. Emmerson, because there was on the one side Mr. Emmerson and on the other side Sir Frederick Borden.

The Minister of Agriculture could not have done otherwise than to ask Mr. Williams to file his plans and specifications so that he might judge between the two applications which had the better equipment and to which the subsidy should go in order best to accomplish the object parliament had in view in voting it. I believe that no other decision could have been arrived at by the Minister of Agriculture. But, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is prejudiced upon the question and he has started with the object of finding the Minister of Militia at fault, and the whole of his speech, although very dulcet in tones except the latter part of it. tended to endeavour to place responsibility upon the Minister of Militia. If Mr. Williams had followed the advice given him by the Minister of Agriculture and filed his plans then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) would have been in a position to determine whether the Minister of Agriculture had done right or wrong in granting Mr. Macoun's application, but since Mr. Williams would not put his plans and specifications before the Minister of Agriculture what other conclusion could the minister arrive at than to give the subsidy to the party who had complied with the rules and regulations and filed his plans and specifications ? I do not think anything else could have been done than what the Minister of Agriculture did. Mr. Williams is a political friend of mine though not a personal friend, and when I looked into the papers I wrote him my opinion very plainly. I told him that since he had refused to comply with the request to place his plans and specifications before the department, the Minister of Agriculture could have taken no other course. I rely on the spirit of fair play of every man in this House to say if such is not the case, although of course my hon. friend from North Toronto will not be convinced by anything we can say to him. Since there were two applicants before the minister and one of them refused to comply with the very reasonable request made him, it seems to me there can be no cause for complaint. If my memory serves me right the Department of Agriculture asked Mr. Williams not once but on two or three occasions to file his plans and specifications. Last fall when I was appealed to I looked into the matter with some care and consideration—I do not say I looked into it minutely so as to become acquainted with all the details, but I looked into it sufficiently to satisfy myself as to the salient points and these salient points I have stated to the House and upon them the Minister of Agriculture gave his decision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At what date were the plans and specifications furnished to the Minister of Agriculture ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say.

Mr. FOSTER. June 11.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it all depended upon an examination of these, why should the Minister of Agriculture look so favourably upon either one application or the other on the 11th of April ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no doubt he looked favourably upon the application because he saw in it elements of certainty and elements of progress, and I understand the result has been that the company has exhibited great diligence and great enterprise in the undertaking. At all events the Minister of Agriculture stated frankly to Mr. Williams that he looked favourably on the application of Mr. Macoun, and Mr. Williams knew he had a strong competitor and it was open to him to make the best case he could before the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture came to the conclusion, and I believe rightly, that he would give the subsidy to Mr. Macoun's company, and in view of the circumstances before him I do not see how it would be possible for him to come to any other conclusion. I have said that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster) had been very unfair in some of his statements, and in reply to his request I will give him an example of that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) quoted from the letter which I wrote Mr. Williams the following sentence :

It was the intention of the Minister of Agriculture, should your application be filed, to consider it in connection with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, the one on whose behalf Sir Frederick had interested himself.

and this is how the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Foster) commented on that :

There again the Prime Minister declares that Sir Frederick Borden was interested in this company.

Nothing could be more ingenious and unfair than that comment. I said that Sir Frederick Borden had interested himself on behalf of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and my hon. friend has twisted that into a statement that I said that Sir Frederick Borden had an interest in that company. Of course, the distinction between the two is very obvious. Interesting one's self on behalf of a company and having an interest in that company are two things absolutely dissimilar.

Mr. FOSTER. What did the Prime Minister say ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Prime Minister said that Sir Frederick Borden had interested himself on behalf of that company and therefore I think the hon. gentleman should admit, now that I call his attention to it, that it was an absolutely unfair comment for him to state that I said Sir Frederick Borden had an interest in that company. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) need not look at me in that fashion ; the hon. gentleman deserves the compliment I pay him when I say that I do not know any man in this House who has so loose a tongue in making insinuations, nor do I know any one who has so thin a skin when he is retaliated on. If it were a fact that the Minister of Militia had had an interest in the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company which got the contract, there would be something to be said as to the motion of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of which company is the Minister of Agriculture speaking in the letter to which I have already referred ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The company for which Mr. Macoun first applied was the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, yes, it is mentioned there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But this company did not get the contract, the contract was awarded to another company known as the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company.

Mr. PORTER. After an amalgamation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Where does my hon. friend see that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no amalgamation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend see anything to show that there is an amalgamation between the two parties ? The statement is made and not contradicted that the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company, though incorporated, never was organized.

Mr. PORTER. If the right hon. gentleman will permit me, since he has asked the question, he might refer to the letter at page 9571 from Mr. Graham to the Hon. Sydney Fisher, in which he says:

As I have arranged with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company to amalgamate my interests with theirs.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. His interest.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall read the whole letter:

As I have arranged with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company to amalgamate my interests with theirs, re cold storage at the city of St. John, you will be good enough to substitute the name of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company in the agreement——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (reading):

—instead of my own.

The point we were discussing was whether or not the Canada Lands Produce and Cold Storage Company had been amalgamated with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and the evidence given of this amalgamation is the letter of Mr. Graham that he has amalgamated his interest, not the interest of the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. PORTER. He had no interest except in that company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then you accept everything? There is no connection that I can see between Mr. Graham and the Canada Lands, Produce and Cold Storage Company.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Graham's letter said it was on behalf of the other company when he made the application.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Where do you find any evidence of amalgamation between the two parties? And moreover what has that to do with it in view of the statement made against the Minister of Militia that the contract awarded was a contract to a company in which he had an interest. It matters not what happened before, but the contract was awarded to the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company and we have the word of the Minister of Militia, which has not been contradicted, that he has no interest whatever either directly or indirectly in that company. He made that statement as full, as complete, as deliberate as it could be made. No one has questioned it or can question it, unless it may be for the purpose of contradicting it by direct evidence. The minister has stated more than once to the conviction of everybody that he has absolutely nothing to do with this company. If the Minister of Militia had been connected with the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, then I would understand the lecture which has been given us by the member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) as to the character which ought to prevail in public life in this country. I have no exception to take to the statements of the hon. member on this point, I agree with him entirely. But whilst it is very true that the code of ethics in Great Britain is what he has stated it to be, that no public man should be interested at all in any company or association which may have anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the government, is he prepared to say that that has been the code of ethics in this country? Is he prepared to say that the same code of ethics which has prevailed in England and which I agree with him ought to prevail in this country, has been the code here? Surely he knows the history of this country too well not to know that this has not been the code in this country. I do not care to quote examples and would not quote them, but for the fact that one has been quoted to-day, the case of Hon. Thomas White, who was owner of the Montreal 'Gazette.' Mr. White was one of the most honourable men who ever sat in this House, but he was connected with the Montreal 'Gazette' which had a large printing contract with the government of that day. Some exception was taken to this, and the answer was that the law of the country allowed it, and that the seat of the member could not be imperilled, that a member of the government or of parliament could be associated in a company which had dealings with the government. That was the code of ethics twenty years ago. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) says that we should have another code of ethics, that we should not be satisfied and that we should make it the rule that no member of parliament and especially of the government should be connected with any association or company that may have any dealings with the government. I subscribe altogether to this doctrine. It is new in the political life in this country, but it is not too late to accept it. I am prepared to accept it in its entirety. My hon. friend has quoted Sir Henry Lennox, Mr. Chamberlain and other men in Great Britain who, in order to be absolutely above reproach, have taken some action on which the hon. member has commented favourably. Mr. Chamberlain stated in the House on a charge brought against him that he had severed his connection with all the companies with which he had been associated, and which had contracts with the government. How is it that my hon. friend did not give the credit to the Minister of Militia of having done exactly the same thing in this matter. The Minister of Militia followed the example of Mr. Chamberlain. The minister stated so himself in the speech he delivered yesterday, saying that when he found the Minister of Agriculture had introduced a Bill which was to provide for large subsidies he severed his connection absolutely with this organization.

Mr. LENNOX. My reason is that the Minister of Militia retained his connection with the company until he accomplished all that he set out to accomplish, and as his son-in-law remained the beneficiary of that contract the severing of his connection was too late to prevent the driving off of other independent applicants.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has no right to speak in that way. He has no figures and no data to substantiate what he said. I will quote to him the assertion of the man interested. The Minister of Militia himself at page 9590 said:

When the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to adopt the policy of aiding, somewhat largely, cold storage, I felt that, so far as I was concerned, it would be undesirable for me to own stock in any company which was receiving from the government a subsidy, although under the law, I do not know that it would have been. I would have been going beyond my right in doing so.

Though he would not be going beyond his right in doing so, though he would not have violated the positive law of the land which allows a member of this House and of the administration to be a shareholder in any such company, yet he knew the force of that unwritten law to which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) alluded a moment ago, that a member of the government should not be connected with a company of this kind even although he could do so under the law of the land, and he gave up all his interest in this company. He has told us further that he has not a dollar of stock in the company which received the subsidy, that is the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company. He has received no benefit from it and expects none either directly or indirectly. Therefore, my hon. friend has complied with the very reasoning which has been put before the House this afternoon by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). He has followed the example of Mr. Chamberlain, he has severed what connection he had, if he ever had any, with this association, and therefore he stands to-day before the House in the position of being absolutely free from the criticism which has been hurled at him from the other side of the House. As to the motion which has been made, the government is quite prepared to accept it, and to say in reference to the future and the recent past, 'this House is of opinion that ministers of the Crown should not be connected with associations or companies seeking contracts, aid or subsidies from the government of which they are members,' and we shall not offer any opposition to this motion, but accept it readily.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the motion which has been preferred by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has received better favour at the hands of the government than the civil service resolution which was offered to the House a few days ago and summarily rejected. On that occasion the Prime Minister himself declared that he was entirely in sympathy with the resolution, and the Minister of Finance came very close to making the same statement. Yet although all the members of the government were presumably in favour of the resolution, they could not accept it because it was tantamount to a vote of want of confidence, while here is a resolution which supervenes upon a discussion which, according to the right hon. gentleman, has not been at all a non-partisan discussion as the other most assuredly was, according to his own admission; here is what he has declared to be an unfair, severe, unwarranted and unbased attack on the Minister of Militia and Defence, upon the Minister of Agriculture and upon the government, confined not to the member for North Toronto, but, as the Prime Minister has just said, participated in, and in much the same spirit, by every member who has spoken on this side of the House; and yet he accepts the resolution as one that is not a want of confidence at all.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What connection is there between the resolution and the speeches?

Mr. FOSTER. I am talking now to the Prime Minister, who is listening very attentively, and I do not want to be drawn off from the effect that I think I am producing upon him. Why does the Prime Minister adopt such different courses in the lapse of less than two days? What is the consistency in it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I told my hon. friend the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the Prime Minister could show as much. He denominated my speech as a very unfair one, and I asked him to point out the clauses in which I had been severe or unfair. After due cogitation he pointed out one little clause in which it is very much the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee as to what the Prime Minister said and as to what I said; and he quotes that as an example of my unfair and biased and unbased attack on the Minister of Militia and Defence. The Prime Minister in his letter speaks of 'the one on whose behalf Sir Frederick Borden had interested himself.' I made a running and quick comment on that as follows: 'There again the Prime Minister declares that Sir Frederick Borden was interested in this company.' If I had said that he had 'interested himself' in this company, there would have been no criticism on the part of my right hon. friend, because then I would have been absolutely quoting his words; but as I did not absolutely quote his words, but declared that Sir Frederick Borden was interested in this company, he cites that as an example of very unfair attack. Well, if I never get any more rasping criticism than that, I think I shall pass through this House and this world quite lightly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will my hon. friend allow me a question? Did not that sentence and the whole speech of my hon. friend mean that Sir Frederick Borden had a substantial interest in that company?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell my right hon. friend exactly what I meant and what I concluded, and my conclusion would have been absolutely absurd if I had not been convinced, after a thorough study of the documents, of the course I was pursuing, and of the trend of the whole matter under discussion. My opinion and my belief is—and I cannot find that it is shaken in the least by what the Prime Minister has said—the documents all point that way, that Sir Frederick Borden, one of the Prime Minister's own ministers, sat with him at the round table of the government, was privy to, took part in the preparation and bringing to the point of passage in this House, of legislation which provided subsidies out of the revenues of the country for a cold storage establishment, that Sir Frederick Borden upon his own admission during that very autumn, when this was being discussed and prepared, busied himself in incorporating a million dollar company for the double purpose of taking over property belonging to himself and going into the commercial cold storage business for the subvention for which the government's policy as aided in by himself was carefully thought out and brought up to the point of enactment. Am I wrong in that?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Militia and Defence put words into my mouth that I did not use in my speech. He said that I charged him with procuring legislation of this kind in order that he might himself take advantage of it. He may search my whole speech through and he will find no statement of that kind. What I did say was this, that Sir Frederick Borden helped to prepare, was privy to, and as one member of the cabinet was responsible for, that very legislation of which he proposed at the same time by the formation of this million-dollar company to take advantage.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not true, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it true or not that Sir Frederick Borden, during the autumn of 1906, procured the incorporation of a million-dollar company with the express purposes of taking over his own properties in part and of going into commercial cold storage business in part?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Go on.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Militia deny that? Will the Prime Minister deny that? Well, I have as good authority as can be obtained on that side of the House, the authority of the minister himself, who stated it in this House. That company was called the Canada Lands and Produce Company, and application was made by Mr. Macoun. As to Mr. Macoun, I asked frankly, and I found out—and it is nothing against Mr. Macoun, nor is it the least argument why he should not be engaged in that or any other business——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You had a good deal to say about the son-in-law business the other day. You thought it was a reason then.

Mr. FOSTER. I neither thought so, nor said so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. No. But there is the statement of fact: Mr. Macoun, the son-in-law of the Minister of Militia and Defence, makes application the second day after the legislation is announced by the Minister of Agriculture, for a subsidy. For whose company, I ask the Prime Minister? For Mr. Macoun's company? For Mr. Graham's company? He made application, as he himself states for 'our' company, the Canadian Lands and Produce Company, for which the Minister of Militia and Defence himself declared he procured the incorporation and told the House the reason why he procured it.

Mr. LENNOX. He and Mr. Graham?

Mr. FOSTER. He and Mr. Graham and Mr. Macoun. Mr. Macoun makes application to the Minister of Agriculture, not for himself, but for the company which he calls 'our' company—because he is interested in it, I suppose. Now, we believe what Mr. Macoun says, and in his letter to the Minister of Agriculture he states that Mr. Graham was hired, his services were procured, because he was a practical man and they proposed to have Mr. Graham to manage their cold storage operations. Search the whole records through, and what other men do you find connected with the company than Mr. Macoun, the Minister of Militia and Defence and Mr. Graham? Mr. Graham is the manager, the practical man; Mr. Macoun is the secretary—so he denominates himself—and Sir Frederick Borden is the chief incorporator, according to his own statement made before the House on Wednesday. This is the first application and it was put in on December 5, one or two days after the legislation was announced by the Minister of Agriculture. Now, on the other hand, we find Mr. Williams, a private individual, who, from October, 1905, up to that time had been pushing an application for cold storage before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and who, at last, was told that he must now make his application to the Minister of Agriculture who was bringing in wider legislation. So, Mr. Williams puts in his application to the Minister of Agriculture on December 7, 1906. Strictly speaking, Mr. Macoun's application is for information and not for a subsidy, but it was evidently taken by the Minister of Agriculture as a general application, and he so replies to it in his letter to Mr. Macoun. Mr. Williams' application was absolutely an application for a subsidy according to the terms of the legislation—it is a bona fide straight application; he states what he wants and asks for the subsidy. Now, I think the Prime Minister left out some very important things. He said: What was the Minister of Agriculture to do? Here were two applications, one supported by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) and the other supported by the Minister of Railways and Canals. It does not seem to me that that is the way in which it ought to be put. Is the Minister of Agriculture there simply to balance between two of his own colleagues as to which of them he shall select as the recipient of a favour? The Prime Minister was nearer right when he said it was the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to choose the application which, in the end, he thought to be the best and the company that would probably best carry out the enterprise. But I ask the Prime Minister to take this into consideration—Mr. Williams did not come without recommendation. The Minister of Militia and Defence, in that rather cross and heated manner in which he commenced his discussion of the matter, declared that Mr. Williams was a very unworthy man and a disappointed man, and that his statements were untruths and misrepresentations. The Prime Minister came nearer the truth, I think, when he stated that Mr. Williams, so far as he knew was a very estimable man. So others thought. Mr. Williams came here with Mr. McAvity's recommendation behind him with the statement that he would receive all the support that could be given him in his application. He came with the recommendation of Mr. McKeown behind him, one of the lights of the Liberal party in the city of St. John. He came with the recommendation of Mr. Robertson behind him, with the recommendation of Mr. Trueman behind him and the hard steady work of Mr. Trueman for months and months in his favour, besides recommendation from citizens not so partisan as these I have mentioned. They vouched for his character, and they vouched for his ability. Now, here is what the Prime Minister overlooked: After Mr. Williams had put in his application on December 7, he attended in Ottawa himself with Mr. Trueman, his worker, and probably his solicitor. He attended here in company with Mr. Emmerson, and conference after conference was held. And it was during these conferences that Mr. Williams came to the conclusion that there were forces against him in the shape of the Minister of Militia and Defence that he found it would be difficult for him to overcome. The Minister of Militia has the advantage of being on the floor of parliament. He stands up and faces you, Mr. Speaker, and says: Mr. Williams' statements are untruths and misrepresentations, and I content myself with a general denial of them. And his word must be accepted. Mr. Williams has not a seat in this House; he is a private party, a business man. He may have all character, means, reputation and position, but his word does not go in this House against the statement of the Minister of Militia for the word of the minister must here be taken. So, we must have a little sympathy for Mr. Williams. Mr. Williams states that when he came and pressed his application he found the Minister of Militia and Defence entrenched. And he found the Minister of Militia and Defence ready, and able, and willing, to say to him: Mr. Williams, I have an application in, and my application is favourably received by the Minister of Agriculture. And Mr. Williams' statement is that the Minister of Militia and Defence gave him to know, squarely and plainly, that he had not much chance in competition with him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is false—Mr. Williams' statement is false.

Mr. FOSTER. I am giving Mr. Williams' statement of it. Now, a man who is vouched for by the names I have given, a man who has passed all his life in the city of St. John, a reputable man, a successful business man—his statements are worth something outside of this House, and you cannot ignore them inside this House. Mr. Williams stated that the Minister of Militia and Defence told him that he could get a subsidy and that he had influence to make it impossible for Mr. Williams to get it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never said that.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) says that he never said that. But Mr. Williams says he did. Mr. Williams goes further, and he states that the Minister of Militia either suggested or it was suggested to him, I think he says he suggested, that they pool their issues, both of them having interests. Let us see if we cannot agree to pool our issues. Williams says that was done in the presence of Mr. Trueman, that Mr. Trueman was to prepare the agreement, that Mr. Trueman did prepare the agreement, and that the agreement was placed before the minister, and then the minister refused an arrangement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not true.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Macoun, the son-in-law of the minister, states that Mr. Williams did make a proposition, that it was considered, and that it was not agreed to by our company, that is by himself, and the Minister of Militia, and possibly Mr. Graham, because Mr. Williams wanted too much. If Mr. Macoun is to be believed, there was something then in that. But Mr. Williams wrote to the Minister of Railways and Canals a letter on February 20, in which he detailed to the minister the circumstances of the case, and I think I had better read that letter and the reply of the minister thereto. I have not the letter that was written to the Minister of Railways and Canals, that is on the other file, and is with the 'Hansard' but I will read Mr. Emmerson's reply. Mr. Emmerson, writing on February 28, 1907, says :

Dear Mr. Williams,—I am duly in receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, inclosing a memorandum of agreement between your self and Mr. L. S. Macoun.

Why was it with Mr. L. S. Macoun ? Mr. Williams says it was with Mr. Macoun because the Minister of Militia suggested that it be made with Mr. Macoun so that his own name should not be brought into it. Now here is the memorandum of Mr. Williams to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Minister of Railways and Canals acknowledges the receipt of that memorandum and goes on :

I may say that I am now taking up this matter with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I will advise you later as to the outcome.

Yours truly,
H. R. EMMERSON.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. With the Department of Militia and Defence, according to that ; it was not in connection with the Department of Agriculture at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, and why ? In that letter Mr. Williams details exactly what he says took place, and he says that he has Mr. Brodeur's influence, and he has of course Mr. Emmerson's influence ; Mr. Emmerson and Mr. Brodeur had been working together in order to get the subsidy. Mr. Williams invites and asks for the influence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as well.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. According to the reasoning that has been applied to me, the Minister of Railways and Canals on the one hand, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the other, would be interested in Mr. Williams' company ; that would be the inference.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not make that inference.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If you treated them in the same way as you treat the Minister of Militia.

Mr. FOSTER. I take issue with the Minister of Public Works, because of the statement of the Minister of Militia that he got up a million dollar company that he was the chief promoter in it, along with the two others, Mr. Macoun and Mr. Graham. We have not any such statement from the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that they are interested in the Williams company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What was the date of the letter you just read from Mr. Emmerson?

Mr. FOSTER. February 28, 1907, and the letter that was writen to Mr. Emmerson was on February 20.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And Mr. Williams' application to the Department of Agriculture was on the 7th day of December prior to that. This was evidently to the Marine and Fisheries Department. He seems to have been wobbling a little from one side to the other.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all, the statement I made is absolutely true, the application of December 7 was to the Minister of Agriculture, and you will find it if you care to go through the papers. Mr. Emmerson takes it up with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in order if possible to influence the Minister of Agriculture to do the right thing by Mr. Williams. Now I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister to another thing. These things that I have been speaking of must be taken into account with Mr. Williams. Having gone through that rough experience personally, he comes to the conclusion that he has fought a pretty hard fight with the Minister of Militia. Then shortly afterwards when he asks for something a little more final, he receives that letter from the Minister of Agriculture, who tells him that he has received an application from Sir Frederick Borden on behalf of a company with which he is connected, not in which he is interested, but with which he is connected—the Prime Minister knows that is the verbiage of the letter,—and he tells Mr. Williams right on the top of that that he is very favourably inclined to the proposition of the Minister of Militia and Defence. You must take that in connection with all these personal conferences that Mr. Williams went through with here, from December 7 until that date in which he personally and by Mr. Trueman's aid, did all that he possibly could in order to forward his application. Now the next thing that I think the Prime Minister does not take into account is this: Mr. Macoun had made an application on December 5. Mr. Graham is specially instructed by the Minister of Militia to go and see the Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Graham starts from Belleville and comes to Ottawa. When he gets to Ottawa he confers with Mr. Macoun, and Mr. Macoun, who made the application for the minister's company, informs Mr. Graham, who is in the service of the minister's company, that he himself has seen the Minister of Agriculture and that everything has been settled between them.

The Prime Minister remembers that letter and he remembers the letter of the Minister of Agriculture just three days afterwards written to Mr. Graham telling him he has received his letter, that is all satisfactory, or words to that effect. Now, the Prime Minister must give some force and some weight to transactions, letters and words of that kind. Is it reasonable that Mr. Graham came upon that date, the 11th day of April, and made application for a company other than the minister's company? Is it reasonable that when he came here Mr. Macoun, who was the secretary of the company and who had made application for information on the 5th December, met him and said to him: It is all right, Mr. Graham; you do not need to go and see the minister; he and I have had a conference and we have settled this matter satisfactorily, and then, on the top of that, for Mr. Graham to get a letter from the Minister of Agriculture telling him that he had received his letter giving this information to the minister and that it was satisfactory? From that very day, it seems to me, that Mr. Graham, Mr. Macoun and the Minister of Militia and Defence had that subsidy in their pockets for their interest, whatever it might be. That is, I think, a reasonable conclusion to come to from these circumstances plainly as they are placed upon the records and plainly as they appear.

Now, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture was very positive day before yesterday about two things. He taxed me with unfairness because I had not read his reply to Mr. Macoun's application as well as his reply to Mr. Williams' application. If he had been listening to me he would have known that I had read both of them and that they are expanded in 'Hansard.' He was equally certain that Joseph Chamberlain made screws and all other kinds of goods and sold them to the British government while he was a member of the government, but it turns out that it was absolutely foundationless and it has been read twice over to-day that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain dissevered himself from all connections of that kind before he went into the government. Now, I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture to revise another statement, or rather to give us some information. He states in a letter that he has received an application. I will read it so as to be sure:

April 11, 1907.

Mr. F. E. Williams,
St. John, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 8th. I may say that we have not yet made any grant for a cold storage warehouse in St. John.

The minister's mind was running upon a grant.

Sir Frederick Borden has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected.

What for? The context shows that it means the grant.

—and I have viewed his application very favourably.

What application? The application for the grant.

None of the applications, however, are in a position to be passed upon absolutely.

Now, will the Minister of Agriculture tell us what he means or what Mr. Macoun meant, Mr. Macoun, in the first place, by telling Mr. Graham that he had had a conference with the Minister of Agriculture and that it had all been settled satisfactorily, and he, himself, in replying to Mr. Graham's intimation of this by saying in his letter that it was satisfactory. What does he mean by that? Will he tell the public what took place at that secret conference between him and Mr. Macoun where this was settled? Mr. Williams could not have any windfall like that. Mr. Williams was not in it at all, but Mr. Macoun goes to the minister and has his conference. Here are the instructions of the Minister of Militia and Defence to Mr. Graham to come up and interview the Minister of Agriculture and see about these things carried out by Mr. Macoun who had had his conference, and as he says to Mr. Graham had settled it satisfactorily and as the minister afterwards said it was satisfactory. That is one question I would like the Minister of Agriculture to answer. The other is this. He writes to Williams:

Sir Frederick Borden has made application on behalf of a company with which he is connected.

When did Sir Frederick Borden make application and will the minister bring down the application that he made? We have a right to either the answer as to the fact or a right to the papers upon the fact.

Mr. LENNOX. Or both.

Mr. FOSTER. Or both. Will the minister say that the application of Sir Frederick Borden that he refers to for a company with which he is connected was the application put in by Mr. Macoun on December 5 ? If he does what becomes of the Prime Minister's contention that the Minister of Militia and Defence never made an application? Or will he say that he refers in that letter to another application, to an application made personally by the Minister of Militia and Defence? If so, I think that would elucidate it and be equally destructive of the supposition that has been put forward by the Prime Minister in regard to this matter. Those are certain points that I think this House will require some information upon and if I insist upon it being given as strongly as I possibly can, and as calmly as I possibly can, I hope that nobody will declare that I am crooked mentally and morally and that sort of thing.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is all settled.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all settled. I will not refer to it again, because the minister took it back as soon as he said it. These are some things that will have to be elucidated. The Prime Minister seemed to see nothing in all this other than what was proper for a cabinet minister to do. I know there are men in my right hon. friend's cabinet who, if they were on the deciding bench, as the Minister of Agriculture was in a case like that, and if it were patent as it seems to be in this case that a minister had a direct interest in a company, would have counselled their brother minister not to pursue it any further, that it would be an improper thing for a minister to form a million dollar company or to be the chief man in it and to apply either through Mr. Macoun or himself or both for a grant under the legislation which had been passed by this House and to press his claim before one of his colleagues and against the outside public for this subvention. I think there are men in Sir Wilfrid's cabinet who, under these circumstances, would have taken some sort of a position like that. If they are not there now there have been such men there. Could the Prime Minister think of such a thing as Mr. Gladstone or Lord Salisbury sitting as Prime Ministers in Great Britain and having a sordid thing like that carried out, they privy to it, and allowing it to go on? The Prime Minister says, as a sort of apology : Our tone has not been so high. Yet he has been cited to-night the instance of Sir John Abbott, a man of great honour and of much the same ideals in reference to public life as those which are held in England, and which the Prime Minister declares he holds in common with the English nation ; Sir John Abbott resolutely and promptly divested himself of everything that could possibly militate against his being unprejudiced, fair and without the shadow of an accusation when he took the premiership and entered into the cabinet of this country.

That shows as high a spirit as was shown by these illustrious examples that have been quoted to-night. But, the Prime Minister says that the Minister of Militia divested himself the moment he saw himself coming to the point where there would be a reception of subsidies from the government. But for how many long months did he proceed first in incorporating his company, then in attempts to float his company in England and maybe elsewhere according to his own statement and then making his application for a grant to his own company the Canada Lands Produce Company? All that was done and done while the Minister of Militia was the company or a prominent man in the company, and down to a few weeks or months ago the Minister of Militia had not ceased to interest himself in that same company, or if not in that same company in a company with which was amalgamated the interests of his old company, at least in so far as they referred to Mr. Macoun and Mr. Graham. The question has been raised, and it is of some moment : Who were the men interested in the old company, what money did they put into it, what interest did they have, where do these interests lie to-day. I put this to the Prime Minister: What show had Mr. Williams in the competition against the forces that we have described. Look at the situation in the city of St. John. There were men who years ago had obtained a most valuable franchise but did not put it into force ; they had an issue of $60,000 of bonds guaranteed principal and interest by the local government for cold storage plant of a certain kind. They did not seem to be much in the line of carrying out that project, but when Sir Frederick Borden went to the city of St. John, or when Mr. Graham his manager went to the city of St. John and when they made the statement to Mr. McAvity and others : See here, we have practically got a subsidy from the Dominion government—read that letter from the Minister of Agriculture that Sir Frederick Borden has made an application for a grant for a company with which he is connected, and that the Minister of Agriculture views it very favourably, and add to that the statement which they are so apt to make: We are sure of the subsidy. Now Mr. McAvity and the rest of you, will you kindly tell us whether you will pool with us or not, can you get along with yourselves; you can't get this subsidy because we have a cinch on it; in view of that what chance had these gentlemen except to pool with these newcomers and amalgamate their interests ? Mr. McAvity was the very man who wrote on behalf of Mr. Williams and said that the influence of himself and others of the party would be behind him in his application for the cold storage subvention. But Mr. McAvity fell away, and Mr. Trueman fell away, and every one of them fell away and Mr. Williams was left high and dry. And yet under all these circumstances the Prime Minister thinks Mr. Williams was in fault because, having these multiplied instances before him, he did not go to the expense of preparing plans and specifications and putting them in, when on the 11th of April from this correspondence it appears as if the whole thing was settled between Mr. Macoun, Mr. Graham, and the Minister of Agriculture. Let me show the Prime Minister how positive these men were. When in the end Mr. Graham put in his application and filed it with Mr. Ruddick on the 11th of June, the Minister of Agriculture says: I did not sign the contract I kept it open until November to let Mr. Williams have a chance. But watch the confidence of Mr. Graham and these gentlemen. After having been told by Mr. Macoun, it is all settled; after having the letter of the minister saying it is all right; after having all these things they go ahead and make their plans and get their sites, and go on with their operations and on the 11th June Mr. Graham makes his application, and listen:

Professor J. A. Ruddick,
Dairy Commissioner, Department of Agriculture.

Dear Sir,—Herewith I inclose application for cold storage subsidy at St. John, New Brunswick. Attached are all the papers required by the Cold Storage Act including schedule 'A' filled out as required by the Act; exhibit 'I' showing the installation contracted for with the Armstrong Company.

They were so certain of it that they went out and made a contract for a most important part of the plant with the Armstrong Company. That is an indication which has some weight and it all goes to show that Williams seems to have been well advised when he came to the conclusion: It is not worth while for me going on any further and putting in plans and specifications for I am as certain as can be that unless the Minister of Agriculture will give me some assurance that it has not passed beyond the ken of decision there is no use of my going to any more trouble or expense; the only thing left for me is to put my grievance before the Prime Minister and maybe some one coming after me will reap benefit from my misfortunes in that it may make it impossible for a minister of the Crown to take such a position in the future.

I do not want to carry on this discussion further. Now Sir, I have looked over my speech—I make a good many speeches in this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. That is one statement of mine which always draws a hear, hear from the government benches. Sometimes I make pretty strong speeches but I call the Minister of Militia and Defence to witness that this speech of mine, considering the material I had at hand, was a mild-mannered treatment of the whole subject from top to bottom. Suppose I cry peccavi and say I did not quite rightly quote the first Minister with reference to that 'interest' business, what else has the Prime Minister to find fault with in that speech? Was it because I suggested at the last, in an earnest manner for I felt earnest, that the Minister of Militia would do well to hand in his resignation as any English Minister certainly would have done and no longer embarrass the government which he loved in his heart and which he supported in his practice Was that it? Why, when I treated it in such a mild and broad and non-partisan way, why did the Minister of Militia get up and call me crooked mentally and crooked morally?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was in a moment of weakness.

Mr. FOSTER. It was, and will he make another confession, and in answer to the question as to why he should go out of the range of this discussion entirely and import another and old—and maybe some time or another—recurring discussion of an entirely different thing connected with my private business, now was that also in a moment of weakness?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Strong then? He had the good sense after he had done it, to say it had nothing at all to do with this subject. That is down in 'Hansard' and you cannot get it out. It is in the revised 'Hansard' and there it stands. Was that in a moment of weakness? it ought to have been. If I had wanted to have provoked the Minister of Militia I could have done it. Is it to be part of the warfare that every time I bring up a subject before this House I am to be slugged, as the Prime Minister invited the member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) to do only two sessions ago? When we were discussing a question and a certain part of the question was reached, he nodded to the member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) to get up and attack me on my private record. I saw him do it, and I saw the accordant action by the hon. member. The Prime Minister says I am thin-skinned. My skin is inches thick now.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Then there cannot be anything but skin.

Mr. FOSTER. Well that is one of the bright remarks that will come from that wide western area under the hat of my hon.

friend. He is generally good natured about it and I do not get cross with him. I did not get cross yet with the Minister of Militia although he was not justified in pitching to me in that way on that subject.

Amendment (Mr. Lennox) agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move that the House do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole forthwith.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, $1,705,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. The other evening as reported at page 9502 of 'Hansard,' the Minister of Customs said that we generally passed his estimates in five or ten minutes, and he did not think a longer time was necessary that night. Of course he was mistaken in that, but if he was anxious to get through I do not understand why he did not give the information as to how the contingencies were to be expended, and particularly the information in regard to the remark of the leader of the opposition as to the repealing of the Civil Service Act in this general and very rough way in this item. This has been going on for years in this country, the evil is increasing. I wish to quote from 'Hansard', at page 9502, just what was said on this point:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a matter which is very strongly criticised in the civil service report and that criticism I entirely concur in. If your Civil Service Act at present does not permit you to carry on the business of the country as it should be carried on, why not amend it? It is not advisable to have a provision in item after item declaring that it is in contravention of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. PATERSON. This has been going on for years and years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And unless it is stopped it will go on for ever.

That is all I can find on that point and I must protest against the minister's action on not furnishing the information. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) drew the attention of the minister to the commissioner's remarks on the subject, at page 29 of the report under the title of 'Customs.' The commissioners there say:

This is one of the three departments whose outside service is recognized by the Civil Service Act. The salaries of officers in the outside service are duly scheduled, but unlike the other two departments (Inland Revenue and Post Office), no annual increments have been given. The chief positions in the outside service of this department are political appointments. Every collector of customs has been appointed from the ranks of the party in power at the moment. Many of the inspectors are in a similar position, and, under a clause in the Civil Service Act waiving the examination of persons appointed to positions requiring special and technical qualifications, almost all the appraisers in the outside service of this department have been appointed without undergoing the Civil Service examination. By no chance can an officer of the Customs Department (outside service) be removed from one point to another. If a vacancy occurs in a collectorship at any one point no capable officer can be sent to fill the position from any other point. In the service of this department there are many anomalies and incongruities. In order to avoid the necessity of examinations a new class has been created under the name of 'examining officers,' a class not found in the schedule to the Civil Service Act. In Montreal no officer is graded as 'cashier'; in Toronto there is a cashier. At the last session of parliament the Minister of Customs obtained a grant of $100,000 which has been distributed in amounts of $100 or $150 to officers within the limits of salaries laid down by the Civil Service Act. No officer at the apparent maximum of his class participated in the bounty. The salaries in the outside service seem to have been graded by the amount of revenue received. A first-class collector, say of Montreal or Toronto, receives $4,000 per annum. It would appear that if the revenue was quadrupled no increase of salary could be given. The salaries of the other employees in the Customs seem to have been graded proportionately to the salary of a collectorship.

Stopping there for a minute, I would like to know from the Minister of Customs what he is going to do about it. Is he going to pay any attention to the criticism of his own appointed commission in regard to this matter? The item before the chair calls for an increase of $100,000 for the very matters criticised by that commission, and the Minister of Customs seems to think that because these things have been going on for years and years no further justification for them is needed. That is all the answer that he gave to the leader of the opposition. I understand that he complains that we were unfair the other night in not giving him supplies. I put it to him as a reasonable man and an old politician would he expect to get much Supply after an answer of that kind to an important question put by the leader of the opposition, or by any other reputable member of this House? The people on both sides expect us to criticise the expenditures of the government. If there is any fault found with us it is that we do not get enough information from the government before we pass the supplies, so that we could distinguish between what is proper and what is improper expenditure. In answer to the leader of the opposition, the head of the critics of the government, the Minister of Customs did not say one word to justify this constant repealing of the Civil Service Act, except that the practice has been going on for years and years. That was not only no answer, but it multiplied the grievance the hon. leader of the opposition mentioned. The Civil Service Act does not contemplate any such thing as we are being asked to do, and the Minister of Customs must expect that we shall require some full and reasonable statement of what the policy of this government is going to amount to, so that we shall understand what we are committing ourselves to when we are asked to vote an increase of $66, for salaries and contingent expenses and the like of that 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' For my part, representing the people that I do, the time has come when I must insist as far as I am able on the government announcing some defined policy as to how far we are expected to repeal the Civil Service Act in this crude, rough, slipshod and improper way. I pause for a minute to allow the Minister of Customs, before I proceed further, to give us an idea of the policy of the government with regard to this, I trust he will not ask me to enlarge upon it further.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Carried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg the minister's pardon; it is not carried.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No one is speaking.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had better not begin any little performance of that kind. I have seen it tried here before, but I never saw it work. I was astonished, the other evening, that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) treated this subject in so very casual a manner. We pointed out many cases in his department and others in which the Civil Service Act is wiped out for the time being—apparently, whenever it is found convenient to wipe it out. The Minister of Customs said he did not care very much about it—he did not seem to be very much concerned. What is the use of a Civil Service Act? What does it mean? Has the minister any idea why it should be kept there if it is to be dispensed with whenever it is found convenient to dispense with it? Is it beyond the bounds of human ingenuity to devise such amendments—these hon. gentlemen have had the opportunity for twelve years—as to make this step unnecessary? There will be cases, no doubt where considerable inconvenience would result from very strictly adhering to these terms——

Mr. PATERSON. In that sentence the hon. gentleman answers himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister think so? Then, his idea is that the proper course for a judge would be to dispense with a statute whenever he found it inconvenient to follow it. That is the idea of one of our chief lawmakers as to the binding character of the statute.

Mr. PATERSON. You say it is to be dispensed with sometimes.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Duncan Ross). Shall the item carry?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Customs decides to treat with contempt a matter which has been made the subject of recommendation by three men appointed by this government, presumably for their ability and character, and if he decides to treat the committee with contempt as well, I suppose we cannot very well prevent it. But I would like to take up another matter and ask him what he has to say about the defalcation of the Collector of Customs at Huntingdon? The matter has already been brought to the attention of the House and I will give him the circumstances. In 1905, according to the minister's own answer in this House, given on the 18th of last March, upon inspection of the outport at Huntingdon, B.C., by Inspector Clute, irregularities were discovered and Mr. Donald Fraser, sub-collector, was thereupon placed under suspension by the inspector. A thorough investigation of the outport was then made and deficiencies to the amount of $4,241.46 were found to exist, which amount was paid by Mr. Fraser to the inspector of customs at that time. When the report of the inspector was received by the department, an order in council was passed dispensing with Mr. Fraser's services. The first information I want is, on what date was the report of the inspector received by the Department of Customs?

Mr. PATERSON. First, I may say, with reference to the point brought up by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), it is not my custom to treat my fellow members with any disrespect whatsoever. The course I have taken has been taken because I will not lend myself to helping to place an obstruction in the way of getting votes for the pay of men who have discharged their duty. Therefore, I intend to confine myself to the item. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) may have had his own reasons for being away; I find no fault with him; but this matter was fully explained the other night when the subject was under discussion. I think the leader of the opposition should not find fault. He had a full explanation given, and he must have been satisfied with that explanation, for he went home, I trust, and to his couch and slept peacefully, notwithstanding this clause 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.' Therefore, I ask the hon. member for Lincoln not to ask me to repeat what satisfied—if anything would satisfy—the leader of the opposition on this point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. PATERSON. I said that this clause was put in for one sole purpose—that, in many of the ports the business of the country required that we must either appoint a larger staff of additional officers or we must continue to pursue the course which has been pursued year after year and put in this clause in the estimate to enable us to pay men who work over-time, which is contrary to the Civil Service Act. And my remark that this has been passed year after year was for the purpose of showing that, if this had been improper, it would have been criticised before, but had never been criticised before.

Mr. LANCASTER. It has been criticised every year.

Mr. PATERSON. Never before. And the Civil Service Act is not designed to apply to such cases as these. What was in mind when this provision of the Civil Service Act was adopted was that a clerk may have shown special aptitude and the government desires to give him an allowance of over $50 as provided by the Act. But, so far as the matter before us is concerned, this has never been criticised.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I myself criticised it for six years.

Mr. PATERSON. Not on this item.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But I have referred to the general practice, so it is no use for the minister to say that.

Mr. PATERSON. We are not discussing other items now. I want to keep the leader of the opposition and other hon. members to the item; and I say that this item has not been criticised before. If you ask whether we are going to continue it or not, I say we are going to continue it. It would be my idea to carry it on even if the new Civil Service Act comes into force, if necessary. I said that the leader of the opposition had answered himself, because he said that it would be impossible to have a Civil Service Act in which you will not have occasion, time and time again —he did not use these words—to do exactly what is done now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not express myself in that sense. The minister thoroughly misunderstood me. I have stated my view many times, and I should think that every man on the treasury benches would understand it. I say: Amend your Civil Service Act so that, in cases of emergency, such as the minister has mentioned, the service could be performed for the country without violation of the law; do not violate the law in fifty or a hundred items of your estimates every year. I am sure I have said that ten times during the last five years in this House.

Mr. PATERSON. That is, we should introduce a Civil Service Act providing that, where the minister considers it necessary, it may be dispensed with.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be your amendment.

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly, and what other could the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) suggest ? I think we had better leave it as it is in the Civil Service Act, so that we can make the exception whenever it is necessary and defensible. In reference to the matter at Huntingdon, that is in the hands of the Department of Justice and is being dealt with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know at what date the report of that inspector was received. I will tell the minister candidly why I am asking. I understand that no action was taken against the collector for certain reasons, which will be detailed later, but that since the 18th of March, when the matter was brought up, some further steps have been taken. I want to know at what time the report of that inspector was received.

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot give the date.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it will have to be given before this item passes, because I have some comments to make upon the action of the department in that connection.

Mr. PATERSON. I would like to hear them now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I cannot make them unless I know at what date that report was received. I want to know how long the department has been guilty of negligence in dealing with this matter.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you assume there was negligence ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say if the facts which have been submitted to me are correct, there cannot be the slightest doubt that the department has been guilty of negligence.

Mr. FOWLER. It argues a strange state of mind on the part of the Minister of Customs to ask if there has been negligence in dealing with a matter that occurred in 1905. The minister perhaps does not realize that we are now in 1908.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, and this year is getting on, too.

Mr. FOWLER. Which adds considerably to the negligence which already exists. Now surely the minister, realizing that the opposition is in an inquisitive mood, ought to be prepared to answer these questions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have read the reply of the minister, but it does not give the information I have asked for. In addition to the information already given, I could refresh his memory by informing him that so far as I understand, it was Mr. Inspector Clute who made the inspection in the first instance, and reported a deficiency of $4,241.46. But I am asking for the date when Inspector Clute made that report.

Mr. PATERSON. It would not be long prior to the 18th of March when I gave my answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the answer which the Minister gave on the 18th of March, the inspection was made by Mr. Clute in September, 1905. Am I correct in understanding that the report of Inspector Clute had been received by the department, say, in October, 1905, or thereabouts?

Mr. PATERSON. I fancy it would be a little later than that, it takes a little while to make a report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it true that since the 18th of March a further investigation has been made by Mr. Inspector Busby ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why was that further investigation so long delayed ?

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) said he understood that this collector had stated that he had secured more, or had not given it all up. At any rate, he intimated there were further defalcations of which this man had been guilty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Brantford spoke also on the 19th of March.

Mr. PATERSON. It would be close to that time that the second investigation took place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Brantford on the 19th March, debating some other question, made this statement :

I gave him (the Minister of Customs) one instance in his own department yesterday, and if we discovered that much by asking a single question, is it not likely that there are others to be discovered ? The minister told us that he had investigated this matter, but if my information is correct he did not get at the bottom of it.

My information is that this particular party who had to make $4,200 of a refund and who has not been prosecuted, has made a public boast that he is ahead of the game.

Mr. PATERSON. Are you accusing me of taking the money ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am not accusing you of taking the money but I am accusing one of your servants, and I am pointing out that you have not administered any punishment to him, and although you have asked him to disgorge $4,200, I do not think you got all the money back. Do you hear that ?

Mr. PATERSON. I did not hear that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Well, listen to it again. I am told that this man who refunded the $4,200 has made public boast that he is $10,000 ahead.

That is what the minister no doubt alludes to ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was afterwards an investigation made by Inspector Busby. What was the result of that investigation ?

Mr. PATERSON. Within a day or two after the statement of the hon. member for Brantford I wired for Inspector Busby to go and make a thorough examination or a further examination into the facts of this case. He went. Inspector Clute, only a few months before he discovered the defalcation, went there, inspected the office and reported everything as being proper. Then we got some outside information that led us to think that there were things that were not right and so I ordered him to go back and make another examination. He went back and discovered what is alluded to there and he secured a large amount of money from this officer. We supposed that we had got at the bottom of the defalcation. It was Inspector Clute's duty to do so. He has since been superannuated. He was a very old officer, he had been in the service for a great many years, but I felt rather annoyed that he should have made an examination of that port only a few months before and that the defalcations were not discovered at that time. I wrote him a very plain letter on the matter. Then he made his report and I had supposed that he had covered the ground thoroughly. The hon. member for Brantford said what he did the other day and I instructed Inspector Busby to go and make another thorough examination and report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Speaking on the question of negligence, at the idea of which the minister was so much shocked when I mentioned it a moment ago, does not he think it a fairly good evidence of negligence on the part of the department that a matter of this kind should be allowed to go for two and a half years without proper investigation? The minister takes no action until he receives information from a member of the opposition.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not see that there was negligence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would not one have supposed that a department so well organized as the Department of Customs would be able to obtain as much information on this subject as my hon. friend from Brantford?

Mr. PATERSON. We should have been if our inspector had done his duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minster has not told us yet what the report of Inspector Busby amounted to. How many more thousands has he reported?

Mr. PATERSON. He reports $5,800 more paid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which is exactly in line with the information I have, and the minister will admit that up to the present time this information which came to myself in the first place and which was handed over by me to the hon. member for Brantford, as chairman of the committee which looks after the Department of Customs on this side of the House, has been fairly correct up to date. I would like to give him another piece of information and he can tell me whether or not it is correct, At the time of Fraser's dismissal, I am informed, that Mr. J. B. Kennedy, a member of this House, insisted on full restitution and also that Fraser be prosecuted but that Mr. Kennedy was overruled by the Liberal machine which arranged a compromise by which Fraser was allowed to retain a large amount of public funds and go free. That information comes to me also.

Mr. PATERSON. We know nothing of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That comes from the same source as the other information which has proved to be accurate, as the minister admits. Why was it that Fraser, after he admittedly had become a defaulter and had embezzled moneys to the extent of more than $4,000, was not prosecuted? Why was he not prosecuted before the matter was brought up in the House?

Mr. PATERSON. The fact is that every defaulter has not been prosecuted in the past.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the only reason?

Mr. PATERSON. That is not the only reason. We find that men, under circumstances of this kind, make all kinds of pleas, that it is a breach of trust, that although they have taken the money they intend to return it and they have not in every case been prosecuted. Many cases happened long before I came into the department in which restitution had been demanded and made. As to the degree of guilt, that, of course would depend on the view that the judge might take with reference to the matter. Before I came into office private sureties were taken to provide for defalcations of that kind and in cases of defalcation the sureties were called upon. In some cases they paid part of the defalcations and in some cases they did not. In many cases the department took such money as they could get from the bondsmen and that was the end of it. I thought that system was not satisfactory, and we organized a system by which we put all these men under guarantee company bonds and we have an arrangement with them that whenever we put a new officer on, his name is sent to the company, he is on then and if the company give three months notice that they will not carry him, of course, we tell the man that he will have to provide other security or leave the service. If a defalcation takes place we notify the company of it and the amount of the surety is paid. Since I have had charge of the department the revenue has suffered no loss whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know how far Mr. Clute may be in fault. I have no information upon that. I wish to be understood as not casting any reflection on any officers of the department in the criticisms I have made. I have no reason to believe, apart from Mr. Clute, that there has been any negligence on the part of the officials. The information at my disposal would not permit me to say that. My information is that this was part of a political arrangement; that the failure to prosecute this man was due to political influence and not due to any negligence on the part of the officers. Here is a man with a defalcation of over $4,000; he is not prosecuted until information comes from a private member of the House. After three years it is found that he has $6,000 of the public money in his hands, and now at last proceedings have been taken. What is the principle which guides the minister in determining whether or not such a man should be prosecuted?

Mr. PATERSON. Prosecutions have not followed on any case in the Customs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not?

Mr. PATERSON. Restitution has been made in every case I know of since I took office. I am a little surprised that the leader of the opposition should place credence in the report that my action in this matter was because of political motives. I thought the hon. gentleman would not harbour that thought in reference to me. I see I have not quite as good a position in his eyes as I thought I had.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have had too long a legal training to pronounce judgment before I know all the facts and I am only now asking for the facts. Did I understand the minister to suggest that prosecution or no prosecution depends on restitution? I think the Postmaster General will tell him that to act on such a principle would be compounding a felony.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not compound any felony.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would seem like it from the explanation given by the minister. If they do not make restitution do you prosecute them?

Mr. PATERSON. Under the old government there were cases in which restitution was not fully made and in which no prosecution followed, but I do not think there has been a case in my time in which restitution has not been made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The principle seems to be that a man may go ahead and steal; if it is not discovered he keeps the money and if it is discovered he makes restitution and there is no punishment.

Mr. PATERSON. When irregularities occur the inspector suspends the officer and the commissioner approves of his suspension and the inspector then makes a thorough examination of the books and sends in a final report. If the defalcation is made good the inspector reports that also and an order in council is passed dispensing with the services of the defaulting officer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can understand that a case may arise where an officer had been careless and the defalcation small and where there never had been any criminal intent; I can understand that in such a case no proceedings should be taken when restitution is made. But here is a case where a man was several thousand dollars behind at a small outport and one hardly believe there was not criminal intent. Did the Minister conclude there was no criminal intent in this case?

Mr. PATERSON. I think it was a bad case, and when the information came to me, as it only came through the remarks of the member for Brantford, we at once instructed Inspector Busby to go thoroughly into it, and the case was handed over to the Department of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the man under arrest?

Mr. PATERSON. Inspector Busby telegraphed the other day that the man was arrested and pleaded guilty and will be sentenced on June 8.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any security for the $5,800?

Mr PATERSON. That has been paid.

Mr. FOWLER. Tell us about the Gardiner case at Fort McLeod.

Mr. PATERSON. That was for a small amount and restitution was made. That was dealt with by the guarantee company.

Mr. FOWLER. And there was no prosecution?

Mr. PATERSON. No, they did not prosecute.

Mr. LANCASTER. If that is not compounding a felony it comes perilously near it. According to the minister's statement, if the man makes restitution, which of course is no punishment, he is not prosecuted for his dishonesty and crime against the country. The people will believe that the government are encouraging crime by not punishing these men.

Mr. PATERSON. I understood the leader of the opposition to say that there might be exceptional cases.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said where there was no criminal intent.

Mr. PATERSON. It is very hard to tell about the criminal intent. The rule of the department has been that where there has been tampering with the money we have not been able to overlook it. If a man is overcome with liquor once or twice we stand that, or we stand carelessness, but where there is direct tampering with the funds, we have never hesitated to dismiss the person.

Mr. FOWLER. But you do not prosecute.

Mr. PATERSON. Is it to be understood that in every case there should be a criminal prosecution?

Mr. LANCASTER. Where there is criminal intent.

Mr. PATERSON. But where there is doubt about it and they say they have a very small salary and intend to pay it back—

Mr. BARR. It seems to me we have arrived at a most dangerous period in the history of our political life. A man may be caught stealing a loaf of bread to keep his family from starving and he is sent to jail, but a man can steal public money in connection with the civil service and we say: That is all right, pay it back at your leisure. It seems to me it is no excuse to say this has been going on for some time. We know it has been going on in the department of Customs to a very large extent. In the case brought up by the hon. member for Brantford, complaints had been made, an investigation was held and the man was censured. I understand he has not made restitution.

Yet all that was done in that case was the removal of the man for the time being from office. The information we have been able to drag from the Minister of Customs on these matters is very meagre. We need a new Civil Service Act, one that will place civil servants in this respect in the same position as all other classes of the community. Other institutions require their trusted officers to give security, either through a guarantee company or through friends; but in some cases, in the civil service, a man guilty of defalcation is not even dismissed. We have had the promise of a new Civil Service Act; but I do not know what advantage we can expect from it so long as there is only one class of the community who can take advantage of it. If a young man has not a pull, no matter what his ability is, there is no object in his passing the civil service examination. The time has come for removing the civil service from the political arena and awarding positions in it according to merit. So long as we permit the machine to recommend those appointed to positions in the service, we shall have the state of affairs that now exists. We have this year the enormous increase of $80,000 for extra work in the Customs Department. Last year the increase was $50,000 and the minister gave a long explanation of why that was required; but this evening he has chosen to take a different course, and he seems to think we should vote it off-hand without any explanation whatever. Now that it is half-past one, it seems to me that it is unwise to prolong this discussion, to hold up this House any longer. The opposition are not responsible for obstruction ; we would not be doing our duty to our constituencies and the country under existing circumstances if we did not do as we are doing. We have said to the government, bring down your important measures first ; bring down your Election Bill, which we have been alarmed about since this House met, which was promised in the Speech from the Throne, and which, if the government had not been afraid, would have been brought down in the first two or three weeks of the session, but which they are trying to force through in the dying hours of the session.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Duncan Ross). The hon. gentleman cannot discuss the Election Bill under this item.

Mr. BARR. The chairman has no right to complain unless some member raises an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I think I am quite within my duties as chairman in calling his attention to the fact that he is discussing the election law instead of the item before the committee.

Mr. BARR. I must say that it is unusual for any chairman to call a member to order unless an objection is raised by some other member.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

Mr. BARR. The Minister of Agriculture does not know everything yet ; there are several things that he might learn. We have an excellent chairman, and I have no doubt that he means well. But to return to the subject. I think we have reached a very serious crisis in this country. It has been contended by many that the Minister of Customs has not been criticised by the opposition as much as would be for the good of the country. Everybody believes he could not be anything but honest. I have no doubt if his officers were as honest as they should be the work would go on all right. But when you see $80,000 instead of $50,000 last year, for over-work, we know it is utterly impossible for the Minister of Customs, or any other minister, to supervise it and see that it is properly managed. And where there should be the protection of the Civil Service Act, we find that in many cases it is simply set aside. This looseness of administration is intended to allow the appointment of men unfit to fill these positions but who are recommended by the partisan supporters of the government. It is no wonder that we have so many defects in the Customs administration. There is no reason for this large amount spent in over-time——

Mr. LANCASTER. They do not allow us overtime when we work extra hours.

Mr. BARR. We are servants of the people and are expected to do any kind of work at all hours. Many of us who have seen the customs offiers at work know that it is impossible for the minister to know whether they are earning their money or not.

Now, it is not in the interest of the country that we should discuss these items at this hour of the night. I think one of the shortcomings of this House is we do not have regular hours in which to work. It should be understood altogether that we do not go on after 11 o'clock. If we did so we should make more progress. We have not accomplished much to-night and the minister knows we are not likely to accomplish much. I think this discussion should close and we should take it up again in more reasonable hours at a future day.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the committee understands the position with regard to the Civil Service Act, and I ask the committee not to discuss that question any more. But the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has brought up a question which is important and in bringing which before the committee he is discharging his duty. The subject is one with regard to which he ought to have all particulars, and it is a matter upon which I would like to know the opinion of the House—it is a very serious matter in my estimation. I refer to the defalcation at Huntingdon. I say it is a very serious matter that such a defalcation should take place just a few months after our inspector had made this examination and reported all correct. When the information came to us from outside—I do not know whether from Mr. Kennedy or not—the officer was immediately told to go back to Huntingdon to investigate the report that there had been a defalcation.

Mr. FOSTER. That had happened after his previous visit or before?

Mr. PATERSON. I think it happened before.

Mr. FOSTER. He ought to have found it the first time.

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly he should. It is impossible for myself or the commissioner or the deputy commissioner to know what is going on in such places as Huntingdon if our inspectors cannot be trusted to make correct reports. The inspector was an officer of thirty years' standing and had given faithful service. It may have been that the length of his service had detracted from his efficiency. He might have been superannuated before, and on the discovery of his error I thought I would not have him dismissed, but recommended that he should be superannuated. I had not the slightest idea, nor had our officers, that when the man went the second time, and especially after the rebuke that was given him, he would have failed to do the work thoroughly. I can only suppose he was incompetent for it. But when the information was given us by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) we made another investigation. There was the further amount of defalcation which he had not discovered and which the man admitted and for which he made restitution on being arrested, and my officers tell me that he is to be sentenced soon. Now I am glad this has come up. We have odd cases like this.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have given the minister all the statements that have come to me about this. It is asserted by this same correspondent, whose information seems to be very reliable, that it was perfectly well known at the time when this defalcation took place, that this man had really embezzled, if that is the proper term, a great deal more money than the amount reported, and that this was perfectly well known long before Mr. Busby made his examination. There is another peculiar circumstance about it, but for which I cannot vouch. It is asserted by the person who gave this information to me that the amount for which this man settled in the first instance was in excess of $4,241.46, although that was the amount reported by Mr. Inspector Clute. If that is correct, it gives a great deal of support to the statement that in that neighbourhood it was perfectly well known that the man had embezzled more than the amount reported. The amount, I am informed, which was returned to the department was in the vicinity of $5,500. I do not know whether that is true.

Mr. PATERSON. I am at a loss to know what became of the excess of the $4,200. Would that involve the presumption that Mr. Clute kept part of the money?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not at all.

Mr. PATERSON. Then where did it go?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It went to the department, as I am informed. The information given to me is that, although Mr. Clute reported a defalcation of $4,200, this man made restitution of $5,500, and I would like to know if that is true.

Mr. PATERSON. I am informed that it came in two amounts. The first amount was $3,800, and after a further examination another $400 was discovered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then my information as to the $5,500 is not accurate?

Mr. PATERSON. We didn't get it, and that would involve that Mr. Clute kept the money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no suggestion against Mr. Clute at all.

Mr. PATERSON. It must be either with him or with us, and I certainly have not got it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not accuse the minister of having any of it. But it is apparent that there were $4,200 taken and restored nearly three years ago, and a further defalcation of $5,800 which has been discovered since the hon. member for Brantford brought the subject up in the House, the minister thinks has been restored since. The suggestion made to me in the letter was that the settlement was for $5,500, although but little over $4,200 had been reported, giving credence to the idea that the officers, or some of the persons in the department knew at the time that the report was not an exhaustive report. But it is not worth while discussing if the information is inaccurate.

Mr. PATERSON. The report came to me that the defalcation amounted to so much and restitution had been made of the money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This information comes from an ordinary every day citizen of British Columbia, a man who has no special means of knowledge. The statements contained in the letters I have read have been matters of common notoriety out there for months, even years.

Mr. PATERSON. I am anxious to learn all I can about this matter, because I would like to know if the leader of the opposition now would give me any information as to what charges are made with reference to political action in this matter.

M. R. L. BORDEN. I may read again exactly what is said about it:

At the time of Fraser's dismissal, Mr. J. D. Kennedy, M.P., insisted on full restitution, and also that Fraser be prosecuted. Mr. Kennedy however was overruled by the Liberal machine, and arranged a compromise by which Fraser was allowed to retain a large amount of the public funds and go free.

That is the statement. It is a matter of common rumour and belief in that part of the country, and certainly that part of the rumor which charged that man with having a large amount of public money in his possession, notwithstanding this settlement, has proved to be absolutely correct. During these two years and a half he has had nearly $6,000 of the money of this country in his pocket. That was a matter of common notoriety all round that country, as I am instructed, because the man who sends me this information is not in a position to know anything more about it than any other citizen residing in that vicinity.

Mr. PATERSON. If it is only a rumour, it is an unjust rumour. If he restored more than the $4,200, what became of the excess? Such monies are paid into the credit of the Receiver General, in the bank.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister asked Mr. Kennedy about it?

Mr. PATERSON. I saw Mr. Kennedy some time ago and I said to him, We have found a further defalcation on the part of the collector at Huntingdon, and we are prosecuting him in reference to it. But he did not intimate any such thing as the hon. gentleman has now stated. I have given the hon. gentleman every scrap of information I have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will send out the report of this debate to my informant and ask him if he has anything further to report upon it. He is a very intelligent man and may afford some further clue.

Mr. PATERSON. I will be very glad to know it. I want to understand what the sense of the House is in reference to prosecutions in every case in which irregularities take place.

Mr. FOSTER. In a case in which your guarantee company makes an arrangement do you wash your hands of all liability or responsibility and leave it entirely to the guarantee company to do as they please? If that is so it strikes me that that is where a great wrong is done. I do not think that the department responsible for the administration of Customs has any right to allow any set of men outside of itself to decide the question as to whether an officer who is a defaulter should be prosecuted or not. I do not think that any department should denude itself of the right to follow and punish a defaulter. It is responsible and the country will hold it accountable.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think we should be too hard upon the Minister of Customs. I think the Minister of Customs is commendable because he has pursued a different policy from that pursued by at least one other department of this government. The Minister of Customs has in all cases dismissed the party who defaulted. In some other departments in place of dismissing the defaulter they have promoted him and increased his salary. In the Department of the Interior there is the striking case of Wagner who was employed as an interpreter for certain foreigners and who was proved to have been guilty of defrauding the persons whom he was appointed to protect. He was confined in the penitentiary.

Mr. PATERSON. He was punished.

Mr. FOWLER. Briefly but as soon as he emerged from the penitentiary he was promoted. Then, take the case of Joseph Nixon who was also guilty of defalcation in office. He was connected with the lands branch. Joseph was dismissed for a little. He was not punished. He has recently been appointed to a new office of some responsibility and, if my information is correct, an office in which he can pursue the same methods that he pursued in the office he held before. He has been appointed superintendent of stores at Nepigon on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. FOSTER. He will be able to make classifications.

Mr. FOWLER. He will soon qualify for that, I have no doubt.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not profess to manage my department any better than other ministers manage theirs. I am just as human as they are and I make mistakes just as well as they do. We try to discharge our duties properly. Is it my duty to prosecute in every case? I have dismissed men from the service in whose behalf there have been pleas made by wives and sisters because I felt that as the administrator of a public department these things get out and have a bad influence upon the service. When this question came up it looked to me to be a very serious thing and I wanted to ascertain what the course of the department had been in the past. I made inquiries and my officers told me that they were not aware that there had been any prosecutions entered, although they were aware that there had been defalcations which had not been made good. I said: You surely never held out any inducement that if restitution were made that would end it. I will read a list of defalcations that have taken place in the past.

Mr. FOWLER. These have all taken place before 1896.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There have been defalcations since 1896.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, yes, but I think this is the first prosecution. I did not intend to read that list of names and I am very sorry I have done so but with the consent of hon. gentlemen I think the names might be omitted from 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the names should be published in 'Hansard.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You might allow them to be withdrawn.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I am very much pleased that the names are not to be published. It is really too bad I mentioned the names.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister will agree that it will be very unwise to lay it down as a principle that there should be no prosecutions.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not lay it down as a principle. I should like to know if it should be laid down as a principle that in every case there will be prosecutions. Of course these cases are all open and can be put into court at any time. I may say to the House that many of the men I had to dismiss had my sympathy and it takes all there is in me to be impelled by a sense of duty to dismiss some of them. Every one knows the man has lost his position because of the defalcations and he goes out on the world branded, and there are pleadings from relatives and friends showing how the poor fellow's life is ruined. Nevertheless I have laid it down as a rule that in every case where there was a defalcation we could not retain that person in the service. Now I will give you my word honestly that I have followed that rule out in cases where if the man had been in my own employ I would have kept him on and I will warrant you that having had his lesson he would have turned out honest and trusted from that time forward. You may not believe it but that is a fact. I am glad this matter came up, because I wanted to say what I have said. I daresay you will find a great many weaknesses in the Customs Department but if you know anything that is wrong there let me know it. If there is any one who is interested in having the department right it is the minister. Why, bless me, what is it after all. There is a salary attached to the portfolio, but what is that to a man who has a proper public spirit. Is not the best of all that when a man is administering an office, that after he leaves it the people can say : Well, he did not know everything but he tried to do what was right. That is about all the compensation there is for a public man.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know it would be possible to advise the minister as to any rule to prosecute or not to prosecute in every case. It must be left to the head of the department who is responsible to parliament for his action. The method of inspection however might be discussed. I do not know what your method of inspection is, but Mr. Fyshe who had a great deal of banking experience seems to think that the method of inspection is not very perfect He commented upon the fact that you do not take precautions to keep secret the time at which your inspector would visit a particular collector. In the case of a bank inspector, he comes like a thief in the night and the first thing he does is to count the cash. Has the minister anything to suggest to the committee in regard to the improvement of the system of inspecting. What is the system of inspection?

Mr. PATERSON. In the case we have been discussing the officer kept no records in the office and the information had to be got in the United States which would probably be the inspector's excuse for not detecting it at first. It is a point where a railway crosses the boundary and there were no records to aid the officers in their inspection. When we came in I found only one officer for the whole province of Ontario, namely, Mr. Alexander M. Mackay, who had been a member of the House and was appointed inspector. We found ports that had been three or four years without any inspection at all and in many cases where defalcations were found, it was pleaded that there had been no inspection for two or three years and that they did not know how to handle the business. There is nothing to prevent the inspectors going to any port when they see fit. Had you not better let me have this money now ? The men need their pay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you referring to the first item here ?

Mr. PATERSON. It will be of no use to give us that, as it is only part of the item. The cheques can perhaps be issued if the items are passed, even before the Supply Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we will compromise by letting you have the first one, amounting to $1,815,000.

Mr. PATERSON. I will take that, of course, if I cannot get more ; but I do not know whether the Auditor General will care to give a credit so that we can issue the cheques, unless the whole item passes. Besides, I want to go away next Tuesday, and it would oblige me if the item were passed.

Mr. FOSTER. There are lots of things you can do or have done before you go away.

Mr. PATERSON. I am afraid that if we have two days discussion in order to get into Supply I will have to go without it. Will you give me the next item, which is for the salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors, as well as the salaries and expenses of the statistical branch here in Ottawa?

Mr. FOSTER. There is a very easy way for you to get them their salaries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will see about the others on Monday.

Mr. PATERSON. Will you let us get into Supply on Monday ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did you ever know us to fail ? A man who is not satisfied with a million and a half a day is very hard to please.

Mr. PATERSON. It is really making a discrimination between the officers. Those at the outside ports will be able to get their money while those in Ottawa will not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They will get their salaries as quickly as the outside officers if you get the other item on Monday.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 2.18 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 1, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. KENNEDY.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). As a question of privilege I wish to correct a statement made in the House by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) on Friday last with respect to the case at Huntingdon in the Customs Department. The hon. the leader of the opposition, in quoting from a letter which he had in his possession, said :

I am informed, that Mr. J. B. Kennedy, a member of this House, insisted on full restitution and also that Fraser be prosecuted but that Mr. Kennedy was overruled by the Liberal machine which arranged a compromise by which Fraser was allowed to retain a large amount of public funds and go free. That information comes to me also.

I wish to give a most unqualified denial to that statement that I was overruled by the Liberal machine, because this matter never was referred to the Liberal committee in any shape or form that I know of. Later on in the debate the leader of the opposition said :

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may read again exactly what is said about it:

At the time of Fraser's dismissal, Mr. J. B. Kennedy, M.P., insisted on full restitution, and also that Fraser be prosecuted. Mr. Kennedy however was overruled by the Liberal machine, and arranged a compromise by which Fraser was allowed to retain a large amount of the public funds and go free.

There is quite a difference between these two statements, and I would like to know which was the correct quotation from the letter which the leader of the opposition had in his possession.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not observe that it was quoted in that way. The first one was correct. There was no suggestion that the hon. gentleman had arranged a compromise, nor did I say that. It is a mistake in 'Hansard.'

Mr. KENNEDY. We had no discussion of the matter whatever. It was left entirely with the government.

THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'CHAMPLAIN.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the government whether there is any further information as to the use of the government steamer 'Champlain' as to which I inquired on two or three previous occasions ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I informed my hon. friend some time ago that the government steamer 'Champlain' acts as a ferry between River Ouelle and Murray Bay. On May 22, I think it was, the following instructions were sent by Mr. Desbarats, the Acting Deputy Minister of the Department of Marine and Fisheries :

Instruct captain 'Champlain' to take people from River Ouelle to Malbaie and Baie St. Paul, next Sunday, making call at intermediate ports and to bring back party the same day, the rate of passage to be five cents per mile and Mr. L. A. Taschereau to deposit $40 with the department.

There was no complaint, as I understand, on that day but Mr. Forget complained that on a certain day he could not get admission to the 'Champlain.' I have received from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the following statement of the reason for this :

Our agent informed me that an excursion trip which was made on twenty-fourth May steamer 'Champlain' stopped at all stations between Murray bay and Baie St. Paul and no Conservative was refused admission; during last week boat did not stop at St. Irénée account of gale raging. The wharf at that place is almost impossible to make in rough weather, and our time-table provides that in such bad weather the boat would not stop.

There was no intention direct or remote to prevent Mr. Forget or anybody else to board the boat.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. FOSTER.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. On May 29 the Minister of Militia revised a statement made previously and published upon the 'Hansard.' His final statement, which I hope is correct as it appears, reads in this way :

I would like this House to consider whether at its worst it is to be compared for one moment with the position of a man who succeeds in placing himself in a position of trust in a company and then succeeds in placing himself in another position connected with another company, and then engages in the delightful occupation of buying lands for the company of which he was manager, and accepting a commission and putting it in his pocket in that connection——

I desire to say that the lands in question were not bought for the Union Trust Company, of which I was manager, they were not paid for by the moneys of the Union Trust Company ; not one dollar of commission was ever taken by me for lands purchased by me or by any one else for the Union Trust Company. The statement made by the hon. gentleman is entirely and absolutely untrue, and I ask him to retract it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not name any particular company. I gave my authority the other day for the statement I made but, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) states that the statement I made was not correct and that he did not do what I thought he had done and said he had done, I am the last man in the world to wish to misrepresent an hon. member, I am not in the habit of doing that, and I cheerfully withdraw the statement on the affirmation made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that what I stated was not true.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

On section 1, (on the amendment to the amendment being read),

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that proposed amendment makes it very much worse than it was, because it absolutely compels the government to take over such lines as the company desire to part with. The government without any such legislation, have the right to expropriate and to take over what lines they require, but that amendment absolutely compels the government to take over any lines the company desires to give up, no matter how unprofitable they may be or whether it would be unwise to operate them or not.

Mr. HAGGART. I certainly must object to this provision. It is in effect that parties coming here for a private Bill are granted a condition by this parliament compelling the government to take over the line of railway. I never heard of anything of the kind in a private Bill before. It is true that this is in reference to branch lines connected with the Transcontinental Railway, but here we have a private charter applied for by a company for the purpose of constructing a line and by this Bill we say to the company : You shall have the option at the end of a certain period, when the government take possession of the Grand Trunk Pacific section of the National Transcontinental Railway, of taking over these lines. It is compulsory on the government to take over these lines.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So far as the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company is concerned, I think they will be only too glad if all the amendments are dropped. I think it was a great mistake to introduce amendments to the Bill at this time. This whole thing was fought out two years ago; it was fought out in committee and in this House. For months the Bill was held up and again in committee this year, and I do not see why amendments should be introduced at this time. It seems to me that the whole thing is a matter of obstruction and hold up. We have been renewing charters to railway companies right along here, session after session ; and, this session, I suppose some fifty charters have been renewed and the time extended, and not one company in the whole lot has been held up for a minute except the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. SPROULE. Much better to have both withdrawn than to pass this one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only reason why the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) moved the amendment to the amendment, was that he thought the amendment was so unjust to the company, and that the amendment to the amendment would be an improvement. But as hon. members will recollect, he thought it better to have both amendments withdrawn. It seems to be that objection can be taken to both on the ground of justice. According to the amendment the government could take over just what branches they liked, picking out the paying lines and leaving the others ; and, according to the amendment to the amendment, the company would have the choice of lines to be taken over by the government. It seems to me that, in the interest of justice, both should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that the object of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was to make it possible for the government, in case it should operate the eastern division as a national enterprise, to control not only the main line but the feeders for that line. It does not require a great knowledge of railway operation to understand that that is an essential thing. The hon. member for South Simcoe was not inspired with any desire to hold up or obstruct this Bill; his wish, as I understand it, was to preserve what may be very important interests of the country in the future. It would be rather an anomalous condition to have the government operating the main line of the eastern division while all the feeders which bring business to that line were under the ownership and control of a private company. Of course an Act might be passed in the future to expropriate these branch lines, but it might not be very just to bring about that condition in future without notice in advance that it is, or might be the policy of the country. Whatever might be the merits or demerits of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe, it seems to have a great deal to commend it—although it might properly be amended in the respect referred to by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). So far as the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Minister of Railways is concerned, there cannot be two opinions in the House as to that. To have the government operate the main line of the eastern division subject to having imposed upon it such feeders as had proved unprofitable, and were not desired to be retained by the Branch Lines Company, would be an entirely unheard of proposition, if the interests of the country are to be considered at all in the matter. The contract itself—the contract between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific—looks to the possibility of the eastern division being operated, at some time or other, as a national enterprise. It is quite within the order of things that this should take place at the expiration of fifty years if I recollect the time correctly. We must look forward to that as a possibility, but must look forward also to the providing of feeders for that line, branch lines which the country will have the right to acquire. And, while it is not an immediate consideration, it is none the less a serious consideration as to what the rights of the country in that regard shall be. One would suppose that the interests of this Branch Lines Company might be properly preserved and full justice done to them consistently with the proposition that the country should at some future time operate not only the main line but the branches as well. It certainly would be a very incongruous condition, so far as that railway is concerned, if any other result should obtain in future.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) any information as to the intention of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company with regard to the branch line from Chipman to St. John ? During the recent election, in New Brunswick, Mr. Hays and Mr. Morse, of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, went over the property of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and the Minister of Public Works, if I remember correctly, intimated in more than one public speech that he expected to be able to announce in a short time the completion of arrangements for the purchase by the Grand Trunk Pacific of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company for the use of the transcontinental line. I may say also that the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), in the course of the campaign, went so far as to state that announcement would be made of the close of the deal within a week from the date of his speech. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works what position this matter is in. I observe a despatch in the Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day stating that the Grand Trunk Pacific had no intention whatever of using the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company in connection with the transcontinental line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can only say that I have been informed upon several occasions by the principal officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific that they thought that the railway from Chipman to Norton, and thence either by a separate line, or by the Intercolonial, to St. John, would afford a very satisfactory means of reaching the harbour of St. John. They have stated to me more than once that they recognized the importance of getting a direct connection from the main line to St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it run near Chipman ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It passes through Chipman, and from the main line through St. John by way of Chipman is only 78 miles, and I think probably it is the shortest route they could take to St. John. They have suggested that they might branch off from the Chipman line a short distance from Norton and have a separate line to St. John, instead of using the Intercolonial. I know also that they have been very much interested in the question of terminal facilities at the port of St. John and have considered the question of utilizing Courtenay Bay for their terminals. I think I was quite justified in making the statements I did in the past, because I had very positive assurance from the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific that they were favourable to making this connection with St. John. I was also given the assurance that their determination would largely rest with the Minister of Railways, and not only had statements been made to myself, but there was the positive statement made in a public way by the then Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson), that he would favour the making of that connection with St. John. As to whether or not the Grand Trunk Pacific has changed its views with regard to the matter, I am not in a position to say. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) must not take too seriously statements which he sees in the newspapers, particularly if they appear in telegraphic despatches from the province of New Brunswick. I understand my hon. friend to say that he saw this statement in a despatch published in the Montreal 'Gazette'. I am inclined to think that the sources of inspiration of the Montreal 'Gazette' in the province of New Brunswick would be of a very partisan nature, and that, perhaps, statements might be made without most careful examination to see whether they rested upon a good foundation.

Mr. CROCKET. I understand that the minister (Mr. Pugsley) is yet quite hopeful that the Grand Trunk Pacific will take over the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company for the purpose of connecting that line with the city of St. John ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that, since the change of government in the province of New Brunswick, I do not know that the provincial government would desire to part with the road. I have no intimation to that effect, and, of course, there must be a seller as well as a buyer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Miller). Shall the amendment to the amendment be adopted ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Railways has given the policy of the government in this matter, and has said that he will not press the amendment to the amendment. He stated also, however, that he could not agree to the amendment of the hon. member for Simcoe either. I move, therefore, that the amendment to the amendment be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to and amendment to the amendment withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Miller). The question is now upon the amendment of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does not the Prime Minister think that some provision should be made with reference to these branch lines having regard to the possibility of operation by the country ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say to my hon. friend that I do not agree with him. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) has given his best attention to this subject and I find that he is of opinion that there is no necessity for such an amendment. The matter has been debated again and again and it seems to me that the amendment is rather meaningless because the power of the government to expropriate is always there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government has no power to expropriate without legislation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is provided that nothing can be done except with the consent of parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. But this amendment sets out the conditions under which they may take these lines over. For instance, it is provided that any subsidy may be deducted and then the value is ascertained by arbitration. If the government decided to take them over without any provision except that of expropriation I assume that the company would be likely to set up the claim that on account of the enhanced value of the railway by virtue of the government subsidies which it had got they would be entitled to receive an additional compensation, whereas if this amendment passed they could not receive the amount of the subsidies, but they, on the contrary would be deducted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.—No. The Bill reads that :

> Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament previously obtained, to the exercise of such right of taking over as aforesaid.

If that right is to be exercised with the consent of parliament, which goes without saying, it is difficult to see what the object of this amendment is. However, it has been debated a great many times.

Mr. SPROULE. What is meant by 'aforesaid' ? The aforesaid portion of the clause says that the amount of the subsidy the government has given to this company shall be deducted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do you think that fifty years from to-day parliament will not be at liberty to make any provision they see fit ? At any rate, my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals has come to the conclusion that there is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think there is a very great deal in that consideration. It would be necessary to obtain the consent of parliament whether that provision is inserted or not because parliament must make the necessary appropriation for the payment of the amount of the award. Mr. Gladstone, in 1849, I think it was, passed a statute in Great Britain which provided for the taking over of all the English railways and which still remains upon the statute-book as notice to every railway in the country that the government may take it over upon making the necessary parliamentary appropriation. The determination of the value was provided for in the statute, everything was done that was necessary except the parliamentary appropriation for the purpose and every railway in Great Britain to-day is under notice of that kind. The object of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was to have a provision in the charter of the company giving them notice that this might be done in a certain event and at a future period. It was, of course, necessary for him to provide, so that his amendment should be in order, that the right should not be exercised except with the consent of parliament. Parliament would require to make the necessary appropriation.

Amendment (Mr. Lennox) negatived.

On section 1. Extension of time for construction, commencement within two years after the passing of this Act and completion within five years.

Mr. SPROULE. How will this operate in connection with the original Bill ? The original Bill provided that the Transcontinental Railway was to be completed by 1911. Now we extend the time two years to commence these branch lines and then we give five years to finish them. That would make it 1913 at any rate, if not longer. We are giving power to extend the time for completing the branch lines two years beyond the time in which the Act provides the whole railway should be completed. I fancy that the government cannot expect that the railway will be completed within the time limit, or otherwise they would not be overriding their own Act in giving an extension of time to the subsidiary company for the commencement and completion of these branch lines after the time has expired for the completion of the whole line.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. There can be no connection between the extension of time given in this charter and the provision which is contained in the original agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. The fact that the branch lines company's time is extended cannot in any way affect and has no relation whatever to the provision as to the time of construction contained in the original agreement.

Mr. SPROULE. That is rather a strange kind of logic in view of the addresses which have been made in regard to this question. Hon. gentlemen opposite have always spoken of the system as a whole, of a completed line, and they have contended as well that it was necessary that not only the main line should be completed but that the branch lines should be built at the same time so that they might handle the produce of the west as well as goods being shipped from the east to the west and so that the system might be placed in connection with the great cities of the country, such as Montreal and Toronto. When it answers the purpose of these hon. gentlemen to speak of this system as a whole and of the advantage that would accrue to the country for having this great and important system finish in a few years they include the branch lines with the Grand Trunk Pacific, but when it answers their purpose and when there appears to be an incongruity between the powers which are given to this branch lines company and those which are contained in the original Bill, then it is contended that there is no connection between them. That is not the kind of argument that they addressed to this House before, and it does seem to me that it would be important to have certain of these branch lines at least finished at the time that the main line is put in operation. If it is to be in operation by 1911 and if these branch lines are necessary to connect the system with such cities as Montreal and Toronto and places like these it would seem to me to be desirable that the branch lines should be completed at the same time that the main line is put in operation, whereas, under this Bill it is not likely to be done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the two branches that are named in the Act of 1906?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. There is a great number of them named.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought there were just two.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. No, there are ten or twelve.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As far as the branch lines are concerned the company are just as anxious as they can be to build them. They intend to go on with the construction of them as soon as the material and men can be got. Some of them are finally located now and are awaiting the approval of the department. Some of them will probably be started this season. There is no question as to the anxiety of the company to build new branch lines.

Mr. LAKE. In reference to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) has just said, there has been some considerable feeling throughout many parts of the Northwest owing to the failure of this branch lines company to commence the building of any of the branch lines which are included in this charter. The feeling is so great on this matter that petitions have been sent to the government asking them to refuse an extension of the charter. It is true this is a separate company from the Grand Trunk Pacific but, the two are undoubtedly very closely connected and the government in turn is very closely connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. There is therefore reason in the request made from the Northwest that the government shall bring pressure to bear upon this company to commence the construction of these lines at the earliest possible moment. Early in the session I brought to the attention of the government the fact that the directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company had promised that they would soon commence the construction of the Regina Yorkton branch and have it in operation at an early date. Representatives of the settlers living along the route of this branch went to Montreal and were promised by the railway directors that the line would be in operation in time to carry out the crop of the present year, and in return concessions were made by the settlers in the granting of the right of way. But that branch has not even been commenced at the present time. When the Bill was in the Railway Committee the representative of the company gave a very definite assurance that the Regina Yorkton branch would be the first branch to be constructed, that the plans were then before the commission and that he expected the work would be commenced in the early part of this summer. That is satisfactory but it would be still more satisfactory if we had a similar promise with regard to other branches. I again suggest to the government that they should bring pressure to bear on this company to commence work on these branches at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When the hon. gentleman from Pictou says this Bill has no relation to the construction and operation of the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, his language is rather extreme. By the statute of 1906 there are 18 branch lines provided for: One a line from Montreal to a junction with the National Transcontinental Railway; another a branch line from Montreal, north westerly to a junction with the National Transcontinental Railway; another branch from Ottawa, another from Regina, another from Prince Albert, another from Calgary, all to junctions with the National Transcontinental Railway, and there is also a branch provided for from a point on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental to St. John or such other port on the Bay of Fundy as may be considered by the company more accessible and better adapted to the purpose of the company. If you look at these branches as being for the purpose of attracting business to and from important centres in the east and west to the National Transcontinental Railway, you will see at once the importance of these branch lines and the close relation between their construction and the construction and operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific itself.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend misapprehended my point. Every one knows these lines which are mentioned in the charter of 1906 are very important propositions involving connection between the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific and business centres in the Dominion. What I intended to say was that under the original charter of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the agreement made with the government certain lines were to be constructed on certain conditions and the company constructing them was to receive certain assistance from the government. The time limit within which these lines were to be completed is fixed in the contract. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) was, that the time limit fixed by this extension would mean that the undertakings in this Bill, which are entirely separate from the others, would not be completed until a time subsequent to that fixed by the original Act. I think I am correct in saying that the proposition to extend the time for completing the undertakings of the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company has very little relation to the completion of the undertakings mentioned in the original charter to which government assistance is to be given. I believe the country will regard the extensions proposed in this Bill as eminently reasonable. If the main line and the branches in the original charter are completed in 1910 the large and important branches contemplated in this Act, are completed in 1913, I think the country will be satisfied.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The extension of time asked for here is what is usually granted in ordinary cases and I am not arguing that it is unreasonable. It may be that there will be no detriment to the country if the important branches from Montreal, Ottawa, Regina, Calgary and Prince Albert, have no direct communication immediately with the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, for the reason that the main line may not be finished before 1913. It is desirable we should have some information on that point. At what date does the government anticipate that the whole line from Moncton to Prince Rupert will be completed and in operation? Has the government any information on the subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps the Minister of Railways may have information on this point but I have no recent information in regard to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the Minister of Railways be in soon ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think he will be here to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. Better let the Bill stand until he comes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, I think not.

Mr. SPROULE. Originally when we incorporated this company to build the branch lines, it is apparent from the wording of their Act that we had in view the fact that these branches were to be completed simultaneously with the completion of the main line. Now we extend the time for the building of these branch lines, but do not extend the time for the building of the main line. Surely this House ought to be informed by the government whether they anticipate that the main line will be finished within the time specified, and if so, what justification is there for extending the time for the building of the branch lines beyond the time when the main line will be completed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does not my hon. friend think that this is a matter that can safely be left to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company themselves, who are the most interested? For instance, it is of the greatest possible interest to the company to have immediate communication with the city of Montreal. In the same way it is of the greatest possible interest to the company that they should have immediate communication with the various towns in the prairie provinces. It seems to me that we can rest assured that the men in charge of that great enterprise will leave no stone unturned to secure communication with all these places in order to obtain traffic for the railway at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SPROULE. By the same reasoning you might say that we need not force the company to build branch lines at all, because it is to their interest to have communication with the great cities of the country; but, notwithstanding that, parliament steps in and says you must do so and so. Every company will hold off until it suits its own time and purpose to build, but that may not be for the best interest of the people, and we frequently compel these companies to go beyond what is their own judgment and desire. If the argument of the First Minister is correct, it would relieve this parliament of a great deal of the work we are in the habit of doing from year to year in the way of binding down these companies to do certain things in the interest of the people.

Bill reported without amendment, and read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 176) for the relief of Ada Keturah Stewart Paulding.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 177) for the relief of Mary Alexander.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 174) respecting certain patents of the General Chemical Company.— Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 175) for the relief of Catherine Ann Cannon.—Mr. Stewart.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Was an action brought against the Intercolonial Railway by A. W. Belyea, of Moncton, in the Supreme court of New Brunswick, in May, 1907?
2. Was a verdict of $100 and costs rendered by the court against the Intercolonial Railway?
3. Has the amount been paid? If not, why not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. No, but action was brought against Wm. Perry, one of the Intercolonial constables.
2. No.
3. No.

LOGGIEVILLE PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. Has the government employed a dredge belonging to A. & R. Loggie? If so, when, where and at what price?
2. What extensions have been added to the government wharf at Loggieville?
3. Have any private persons, firms or corporations been allowed to build extensions to the public wharf at Loggieville?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. No.
2. Cribwork face along the southwestern side of wharf, 150 feet long and consisting of four tiers of round timber, with stringers and cap. Work was performed by day's labour during August and September, 1907.
3. The department has no information to that effect.

LOBSTER FISHING LICENSES.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. Have any persons or firms been refused licenses for lobster fishing during the seasons of 1907 and 1908 in the counties of Restigouche, Gloucester and Northumberland, New Brunswick? If so, for what reasons?

2. Who are present holders of lobster fishing licenses for the county of Northumberland for 1908?

3. What precautions are taken to enforce the regulations as to size of lobsters taken by fishermen?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1 and 2. No. The department does not issue licenses for lobster fishing.

3. The policy of the department in this connection was explained in an answer given to a question in the House on the 10th February last as follows:

The difficulty which usually exists in the administration of the lobster regulations has recently been increased by a change in the United States law, which permits the importation of lobsters of smaller size than formerly, thus diminishing the supply available for the canneries. It is feared that the rigid enforcement of the size limit would prevent the canners receiving sufficient quantity of fish to carry on their business. The matter is now engaging the attention of the department and it is hoped that means may be found to harmonize the conflicting interests.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—MEDICAL FEES.

Mr. STAPLES—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Was an order in council passed authorizing the contractors and subcontractors on the government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to deduct a certain amount from the wages of each and all the workmen engaged upon such construction for medical fees?

2. If so, what was the date of such order and the amount each month to be deducted from the wages or salary of each man engaged upon such construction work?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. There has been no order in council passed with special reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The matter is governed by a general order in council made under the Public Works Health Act, chapter 135 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

2. The third of March, 1906, 50 cents per month.

BRIER ISLAND FOG ALARM.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens) asked:

1. What system of fog alarm has recently been installed at Brier island, Westport, Nova Scotia, and what system did it displace?

2. Who was the contractor for construction of the works?

3. What is the total cost to date for the installation of said new system?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Compressed air diaphone replacing steam whistle.

2. The plant was purchased from the Canadian Fog Signal Company, Limited, of Toronto, and the work of installation was carried out by the department.

3. The price of the plant f.o.b. Toronto, was $13,040. To make the necessary changes in the building and instal machinery cost $5,000 including a new boiler at $1,200 which would have been required for the original plant if no change had been made.

PINETTE HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens) asked:

1. Did the government receive petitions from the inhabitants of Pinette, Prince Edward Island, asking for the dredging of the harbour at that place?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to comply with the request of the people to dredge this important harbour this season?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. The matter is under consideration.

ST. MICHEL DES SAINTS POSTMASTER.

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Is Mr. Gaspard Denis postmaster at St. Michel des Saints, in the county of Berthier?

2. Is it true, as reported, that he neglects his official duties to work in elections?

3. Should not postmasters attend to their duty and serve the public irrespective of politics?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. No report to that effect and no complaint of any nature since the postmaster's appointment has reached the department.

3. Yes.

WESTVILLE PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. What is the total amount of contract for public building in course of construction at Westville, Nova Scotia?

2. Who were the tenderers for the work, and what was the amount of tender of each person tendering?

3. Is there any provision in contract for extras? If so, is there a specification for same, and what are the schedule of prices?

4. When is the work to be completed?

5. Who is the inspector of the work, and what was his usual occupation or business?

6. When was the inspector appointed, what is his rate of pay, how much has he been paid, and for what number of days has he been paid?

7. When was the work of construction commenced, and was it stopped or closed down during the winter? If so, for what length of time was it stopped or closed down?

8. Was the inspector paid for the time the work was stopped or closed down?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $12,997.

2. E. F. Munro, New Glasgow, $12,997; Falconer and McDonald, Kentville, $17,300.

3. No.

4. Main contract for building, October 15, 1908.

5. (a) W. R. McKean. (b) carpenter and builder, and is engaged in that occupation at present.

6. (a) October 5, 1907. (b) $3.50 per day. (c) $721. (d) 206 days up to 30th of April last.

7. and 8. (a) Contract signed September 14. 1907. (b) and (c) No.

PATENTS FOR SECTIONS 10, 17, 17, WEST OF FOURTH MERIDIAN.

Mr. SCHAFFNER—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. When and to whom was patent granted for section 10, 17, 17 west of the fourth meridian?

2. How many applicants were there, what were the names of the applicants, and what was the date of each application?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Homestead entry has been granted for the four quarters of this section, but no patent has yet been given for the surface rights to any of the four homesteaders.

2. No patent has yet been granted for the mineral rights under the section in question, but there have been five applicants for these mineral rights as follows:

Sir A. T. Galt, February 24, 1902.
Frances Eyres, October 22, 1906, W. ½.
Maud M. Moore, October 22, 1906, E ½.
J. W. Knittel, January 18, 1907, E. ½.
W. J. Kennedy, January 18, 1907 W. ½.

SALE OF SECTIONS 22, 28 AND 32 WEST HALF 14, TOWNSHIP 13, RANGE 13, WEST SECOND MERIDIAN.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1 What were the reasons for the sale of sections 22, 28 and 32, west half 14, in township 13, range 13, west second meridian to Wm. G. Livingstone?

2. What were the considerations, conditions and prices obtained?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. In compensation for his claim for homestead and pre-emption entries for the S.W. ¼ of section 30 and the N.W. ¼ of section 19, township 6, range 4, west 1st meridan upon which he had made valuable improvements and which land was otherwise disposed of, as set forth in the order in council of the 4th June, 1902, copy of which is submitted

2. The lands in question were selected and sold under the order in council above referred to at the rate of $1 per acre on the usual terms of payment, namely, the whole of the purchase money at the time of the purchase, or one-quarter down and the balance in three equal annual instalments, with interest at 5 per cent per annum.

USE OF TRAP BAG NETS IN POKEMOUCHE RIVER.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. Is the government aware whether or not trap bag-nets are permitted on the Pokemouche river, Gloucester county, New Brunswick, in close season, contrary to the fishing regulations?

2. Is the government aware that those nets are said to catch smelts, bass, trout and other fish coming into the river?

3. How many bridges are there on the river and how many of them, if any, are blocked in this way with bag-nets in close season?

4. Is the government aware that it is asserted there are four such bridges, and that they are all blocked in this manner?

5. Is the government aware whether or not the overseer is cognizant of such reported infractions of the fishery law and regulations and whether or not he sanctions shipping fish so caught?

6. Is the government aware that complaints are said to have been made several times to the inspector of fisheries with regard to this matter, but without avail?

7. Who is the inspector of fisheries in charge of this district?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. No.
2. No.
3. The department is not aware.
4. No.
5. Answered by No. 1.
6. No.
7. R. A. Chapman, Moncton, New Brunswick.

LIGHTING BUOYS ON RIDEAU CANAL.

Mr. J. D. REID—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Has a contract been given to any person or persons for lighting buoys on Rideau canal between Merrickville and Edmond Rapids for season 1908? If so, to whom?

2. If contract is given, were tenders called for by public advertisement? If so, how many tenders were received, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender?

3. If no contract has been given, on what terms are buoys being lighted for season of 1908?

4. If no tenders were called for by public advertisement, why not?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. Yes, to Byron McCaw of Smith's Falls, Ont.

2 and 3. Tenders were not invited this season. Tenders were publicly called for in 1907, and the tender of Byron McCaw being the lowest was accepted and a contract was entered into with him. The contract was renewed this season as the department had the option of continuing the contract for three years and the service given last year was satisfactory.

4. As the service was satisfactorily performed by Mr. McCaw last season and the department had the option of continuing contract, it was not considered necessary to invite new tenders this season.

MORNING SITTINGS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That from and after this date to the end of the session the rule of the House concerning the closing of the sitting on Wednesday at six o'clock, p.m., shall not apply; that from and after this date to the end of the session the House shall meet on every sitting day at eleven o'clock in the morning; that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock, p.m., there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock, p.m.; that government orders shall have precedence at all such sittings, members having still the right to ask questions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

Mr. SPROULE. It sems to me that this is a little early for this motion, especially in view of the circumstances at present existing. We have been trying to go through the Order Paper to-day but how many answers have we had to these questions, how many ministers are in their seats? I presume the other ministers are away in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to run the provincial elections, and there will necessarily be a large number of members out in the country during the present week, or until after the election, in both Ontario and Quebec. In view of that fact I think such a motion would have come very much better after this week because otherwise there will be a great deal of work under consideration of this House and perhaps much of it will be put through which many members who are absent would desire to discuss. It may facilitate the work a little, but there will be the disadvantage of having that work considered by very few members. Much of the work remaining to be done has not yet been placed before the House. The Civil Service Bill and some other Bills have not come down and if they are to be forced through the House in the absence of many members it is not doing justice to the members or to the people.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to observe that we are in the seventh month of the session. It is true that the House is not as full as it might be, but I have not observed of late that the House has taken advantage of the absence of members to rush the work, or to take any precipitate action and therefore I do not see that the complaints of my hon. friend come with any acceptance. If there are any matters that would be likely to suffer from the absence of members, of course they can be postponed until their return. I admit that there are more members absent than I would like but the circumstances are such that gentlemen on neither side of the House can quarrel with them or expect an early return. I hope that next week they will all be in their seats.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The motion is rather unusual in several respects; it proposes to practically abolish one of the rules of the House, that with regard to sittings on Wednesdays, for the remainder of this session. It does not seem to me that this is within the purview of a motion of this kind. We have a Committee on Standing Orders constituted early in the session. It is not proposed by this resolution to submit the change to the Committee on Standing Orders or any committee, it is simply proposed to abolish more than one of the rules of the House for the rest of the session. So far as morning sessions are concerned, that change has been made before and usually without objection. It is to be observed that the second rule of those which were adopted in 1907, provides as follows:

The time for the ordinary meeting of the House is at [illegible] o'clock in the afternoon of each sitting day, except Wednesday, when the time of meeting shall be 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and if at the time of meeting there be not a quorum, Mr. Speaker may take the Chair and adjourn.

There is express reference there to ordinary meetings of the House, leaving it open to inference at least that we may have an extraordinary sitting of the House at an earlier hour. But the remainder of that second rule is also significant.

When the House rises on Friday it stands adjourned, unless otherwise ordered, until the following Monday.

An express provision which enables it to be ordered that the House shall sit on Saturday and that Saturday shall be classed as one of the ordinary sitting days of the House.

But the rule in regard to Wednesday evening is couched in very different language. It is as follows:

If at the hour of six o'clock p.m., except on Wednesday, the business of the House be not concluded, Mr. Speaker leaves the Chair until eight o'clock.

At the hour of six o'clock on Wednesday, Mr. Speaker adjourns the House without question put. The House then stands adjourned until Thursday.

It does not seem to me to be a usual course and I doubt very much whether it is the proper constitutional course to undertake to repeal that rule simply on notice and by an ordinary resolution of the House. If that can be done, then almost anything in the way of variation of the rules can be done by such a motion. Take for example rule 21 :

(a) No member may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, but then he is not to introduce any new matter, and no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

It would be improper to provide by resolution of the House that this rule should not be applied or acted on for the remainder of any session, yet this would not be going any further than the Prime Minister goes in the motion now pending.

Subsection 2 of section 21 provides :

A reply shall be allowed to a member who has moved a substantive motion on the second reading of a Bill, but not to any member who has moved an order of the day, not being the second reading of a Bill, an amendment, the previous question, an adjournment during a debate, or an instruction to a committee.

Subsection 3 provides :

A reply shall be allowed to a mover of a substantive motion although the debate thereon, by being adjourned, becomes an order of the day

It would be a most unusual and, I should think, an impossible course to pass a resolution of the House that rules of that character should not apply during the remainder of any session, and looking at the remainder of these rules and the wording of rule 3, to which I have alluded it does not seem that this would be going further than is now proposed. Take rule 50 as another illustration :

Every Bill shall receive three several readings on different days, previously to being passed. On urgent or extraordinary occasions, a Bill may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in one day.

There is special provision for urgency for an extraordinary occasion and we, therefore, have the express provision for proceeding out of the usual course of the House which is not to be found in the rule which touches sitting on Wednesday evening. Rule 25 provides :

Every public Bill shall be read twice in the House before committal or amendment.

Would it be a proper, or even possible course to provide by motion that public Bills should be committed at once without a first or second reading? And yet, it would be going no further to do that than is now proposed by the Prime Minister.

Rule 54 provides that where a Bill is reported with amendments it is open to debate and amendment before it is ordered for third reading, but that if a Bill is ordered to be reported without amendments, it is forthwith ordered to be read the third time at such time as may be appointed by the House.

Then there is another consideration; there are several important committees of this House now dealing with questions which are of great interest to the public. There is the committee which is investigating the statements made by Major Hodgins with respect to the work of construction upon the Grand Trunk Pacific. There is the committee which is investigating the affairs of the Quebec Bridge Company. There are the ordinary committees of the House. For instance, there is the Public Accounts Committee—the Railway Committee, possibly, is about clear of its work—I do not know about that—but certainly the Public Accounts Committee, which is an important body, is engaged in work at the present time that is not likely to be completed before the end of the session. Hon. members of this House who are members of these committees or any of them will be obliged to attend to the work of these committees during the forenoon. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) reminds me that the Committee on Privileges and Elections also has some important matters before it, and it also meets in the forenoon. All of these committees must meet in the forenoon or on Wednesday evenings. The attendance in this House will be lessened by the number of gentlemen who are called upon to attend to their work in that connection or will have to abandon their work on the committee to come to this House. Then as the Prime Minister has pointed out, the attendance is not likely to be very large during the present week. Under these circumstances to ask the House to sit not only in the forenoon, but also on Wednesday evening as well, at a time like the present when there is so much work to be done outside the House, and when the attendance of members is likely to be small, seems to me very unreasonable and ought not to be persevered in at the present time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The objection raised by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that this is a motion to alter a rule seems to me, if I may say so, not absolutely serious. My hon. friend knows that this motion is not new; that it has been the practice of the House ever since the House began. The proceedings are set forth in the standing rules of the House, and these rules are made by authority of the House and can be repealed by the same authority. And some of them are repealed once or twice every session. Always the motion is made at this stage of the session to alter the rules so far as the sittings of the House are concerned. Take the rules mentioned by the hon. member—rules 50 and 52. Rule 50 provides :

Every Bill shall receive three several readings on different days previously to being passed. On urgent or extraordinary occasions, a Bill may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in one day.

That can be done without alteration of the rules.

Mr. FOSTER. It is provided for in the rule.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Therefore, a Bill can be advanced more than one stage in one day on urgent or extraordinary occasions. But if the occasion is not urgent or extraordinary a Bill cannot be advanced more than one stage in one day without a change of the rule. Rule 52 provides :

Every public Bill shall be read twice in the House before committal or amendment.

This is a standing rule of the House and can be amended the same as others, the same as the rule that the House shall sit at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you amend this rule?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By resolution of this House. That has been done ever since the hon. gentleman came to this parliament, and before.

Mr. FOSTER. The rule as to the three readings?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The rule that provides that the House shall meet at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking particularly with reference to the rule providing for three separate readings of a Bill and the variation of the same. He says that that can be amended by the House. In what way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By motion made in this House. Here is the rule :

The time for the ordinary meeting of the House is at three o'clock in the afternoon of each sitting day except Wednesday, when the time of meeting shall be at 2 o'clock in the afternoon——

This rule has neither more or less force than rule 52, for instance. Both are passed by the same authority. Yet ever since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) came to this House, and before either of us came here, this rule which provides for sitting at three o'clock has been amended by resolution of this House to provide that the meeting shall take place at eleven o'clock in the morning. Another rule provides that Saturday shall not be a sitting day. And yet, as my hon. friend knows, a resolution has been passed every session providing that the House shall sit on Saturday. These are all rules of the House for its guidance, and not one has more solemnity or force than any other. If one can be amended by resolution of this House any other can be amended in the same way. I need not quote precedents, for they are to be found in the records of every session since confederation, as we all know. And, with regard to the motion that I have now made, the same motion was moved by me last year in practically the same words, including a reference to Wednesday evening sittings. On April 2 last year I moved this motion as follows :

That commencing on Wednesday, the 3rd of April, to the end of the session, the rule of the House concerning the closing of the sitting on Wednesday at six o'clock, p.m., shall not apply, and that commencing with the same day, and until the end of the session, the House shall meet on that day and on each subsequent sitting day at eleven o'clock in the morning; that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock, p.m., there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock, p.m.; that government orders shall have precedence at all such sittings, members having still the right to ask questions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

I do not know if my hon. friend has refreshed his memory by reference to the text-book. I have not done so for some time, but I am sure as I can be of anything that the text-books say that the rules of the House are made by the House and can be amended after ordinary notice. As to the propriety of making the motion at the present time, this is a motion to which the House has agreed every session when the business has reached a certain stage. We are now in the seventh month of the session, and I think that the time has come when we may reasonably ask the House to meet in the morning. The only point to be considered is whether it is convenient for the House to do so. The only inconvenience that I can see is in the fact that there is work yet to be done by the committees of the House. All the standing committees with the exception of the Public Accounts Committee have completed their business.

Mr. SPROULE. Three Bills were sent to the Private Bills Committee to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that they were Bills requiring much attention on the part of the members of this House. They are of a kind, I think, in which we are generally disposed to trust to the judgment of the House from which they come. The Public Accounts Committee has about completed its business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, so I have been told, but I speak under correction; it may be that there is more business than I had thought. But let us say that the Public Accounts Committee may still require to sit. The Privileges and Elections Committee which is investigating the matter of the disappearance of the Stanstead ballots cannot be called upon to do very heavy work in that connection; it cannot take up much time upon this question. The Quebec bridge investigation and the Hodgins investigation are matters on which I cannot give much information—these are special committees. We must do, as we have done in former sessions, give the committees the privilege of meeting during the sittings of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The point raised by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with reference to Wednesday night seems to me to be a new point, and the rule with reference to the recess on Wednesday night sees to be a special rule introduced in the regular manner after consideration by a committee of this House appointed to revise the rules. It seems to be rather an absolute rule. The purpose of it was to give an opportunity for members to have a break in the middle of the week's work which they could use for rest and recreation, or, if they chose—as I think most of the members have chosen—to get up work for the House.

The point is a fairly good one as to whether, if you propose to keep us here night and day to do that work there is not greater need for a break in the middle of the week than there is when you are doing the work in a more leisurely manner. After all the human machine can only do as much as it can do without suffering loss and hardship. The human machine can be tired out as well as any other. When we consider that when the committee which revised the rules thought that it would help the work of parliament to have a break on Wednesday night, so that members might have a chance to recuperate, or at any rate, be relieved from the driving work of the session, it seems to me that there is all the more necessity for a break when you attempt to apply more steam and to work for a greater number of hours per day. I make this plea simply because I am as anxious to get through the work of the House as any one else in the House, but I do not think we will help along the work and certainly not help the workers if we drive the machine unreasonably. I think the Prime Minister will find that he will get just as much work, when the added pressure is put on, by still allowing a break on Wednesday evening as he would if he attempted to keep the members here every day, day and night, two sessions in the day time and one in the evening with the attendant tiring and wearying. My right hon. friend knows what always happens when a deliberative, controversial assembly, besides having the objects of controversy before it, comes to them with tired brains, tired minds and tired tempers. I put that point before the Prime Minister and I would like to see him leave the Wednesday night out of the motion and still allow, for the present at least, that break. I believe that better business would be done in the House and that the motion would be more effective.

In reference to putting on the pressure at this time of the session, Mr. Speaker, if you take the government business alone, some of which we have before us and some of which we have not before us, the government business alone, if it is to be fairly met and fairly canvassed and if legislators are to do their duty, cannot be done in a week, or two weeks, or three weeks. See what there is. Take your Election Bill and, after June 8, when the Prime Minister comes to the conclusion that it is no longer necessary to push those obnoxious clauses and we go into the Bill as a whole, does not the Prime Minister see that if we are going to perform the promises that have been held out for five years with reference to a pure election Bill, there will be clauses to be enacted and certainly clauses to be discussed which will take time? It is impossible to put the Bill through with even the provisions that are anticipated in the Bill and the provisions in the Bill which were proposed by my hon. friend from Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn) and which are to be debated, without a great deal of discussion and a great deal of talk. Going to the country, as we are supposed to do under this new election Bill, we want the very best kind of a Bill and we want one which will promote the purity of elections and do away with the old abuses.

Then, you have not yet explained to the House probably a still more important Bill in its way than the Election Bill; that is the Civil Service Bill, I do not know what other members think of it, but for myself it seems to me that when we approach the making of a Civil Service Bill under the present conditions in Canada we are undertaking a great deal of labour which will not be well done if there is great haste, and if there is an inordinate pressure put upon the House. Yet here we are, as the Prime Minister says, in the seventh month of the session and we have not yet had the provisions of the Civil Service Bill explained to us. The Bill has not even been presented to the House. Some intimations have been received by members of the press as to what its provisions may be expected to be, but the House does not know and the country does not know. That is not the fault of the opposition at all and the Prime Minister must not put on his double and treble pressure with the idea of making the opposition foot up because of the long and inexcusable delay of the ministry in bringing down one of the most important Bills that has not yet been introduced in this the seventh month of the session. There is the Hudson's Bay railway; we have had an intimation in reference to it but we have no statement as to when this measure will be brought down. It is not yet before the House. That will be an important Bill and the important question of ways and means, involving a great obligation on this country, has to be discussed. Then there is the Land Bill of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) which has just been introduced and which also is a fertile question of discussion. But, there is no use of mentioning others. Nearly all of the government legislation is as yet barely explained or unexplained in the seventh month of the session, and there is work to be done which requires better consideration than that which can be be given to it by jaded members working from 11 o'clock in the morning until midnight, as the right hon. Prime Minister proposes. Then, go to the work of the committees, which is just as important in its way as the work in the House. The Public Accounts Committee has business now before it to keep the members of the committee at work for a month or a month and a half, and it is almost impossible to do satisfactory work with committees and the House going on at the same time. There is the Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee has had one wrestle with the Insurance Bill but that was only a preliminary wrestle. That committee does not yet know what the Bill is to be. It has simply heard the objections and heard the pleas, but it has not dealt with the Bill itself and everybody knows that the Insurance Bill is one of a controversial nature, and you cannot put it through in a day. The government saw fit to send it to the committee, but not a single clause of that Bill has as yet been put before that committee for discussion. We have simply had the hearings from the different societies and individuals who are interested in one or other of the phases of that Bill But, the Banking and Commerce Committee has not yet commenced the discussion of that Bill. It has to go through it clause by clause, the Bill has to be reported to the House and then it becomes government legislation coming before the House in the seventh or eight month of the session. That is an important committee and it is an important Bill which has to be threshed out. Taking all these things into consideration, taking into consideration the fact which was well put forth by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that, not of our own fault, we are in the throes of two provincial elections—one would have been enough, but the friends of the Prime Minister thought it would be better to have two going on at the same time and so they brought on the elections in the province of Quebec on the same date as those upon which the elections in Ontario are being held—I very much question the wisdom of the right hon. gentleman's motion. These elections take out the very strongest members from each side of the House. Do you propose this week to rush legislation of that important nature through the House when many hon. members are out of the House and when these contests are going on ? These are considerations which I thought would appeal to the Prime Minister and my suggestion would be that the Prime Minister do not put this into force for this week at any rate, and that if he does put it in force next week he should not cut out the Wednesday night recess. I am not objecting to trying to get through the work of the House just as quickly as possible; I want to do it. I would like to have a good long holiday before the elections come on and we cannot get that unless we can get through some time before the first of August.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that there is a very considerable volume of legislation before the House, but I draw from that condition quite the opposite conclusion that my hon. friend has drawn. In a well organized factory, when the orders accumulate, the general rule is to work extra time and do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a well organized factory.

Mr. FIELDING. It is fairly well organized, except that it has always been assumed that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House would recognize their responsibilities and that the machinery would go on, but, it seems that there has been an erroneous impression in that respect. We cannot help that. But the rule in a well organized factory, when business increases, is to put on the hands for extra hours. They pay them extra. I do not suppose that we would expect an extra indemnity by reason of working extra hours, but I think the country will expect that if the factory at Ottawa is to do the business which is before it it should work extra hours.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The factory usually puts on extra hands.

Mr. FIELDING. It seems to me that if the number of hands were not sufficient that would be a good reason for working extra hours. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has alluded to the Wednesday evening meeting. I must say that the Wednesday evening adjournment is rather dear to my heart. I had the honour of proposing that to the committee ; I was the author of it. Early in the session we work along in a moderately easy way, but after we have passed the six months I think the public opinion of the country will say it is time that parliament may reasonably be called upon to work longer hours and finish its work. While I am a strong advocate of the Wednesday evening recess, still I would think that at this advanced stage of the session we should relinquish it, and that we might work on Saturdays also close up to the hour when the Sabbath commences. It is true important Bills are yet to be brought forward, but that does not imply neglect on the part of the government, because there could be no object in bringing forward other legislation when no progress is being made with the volume of business already before the House. Important as these measures are to which reference has been made, the most important work of this House at present is the work of voting supplies for carrying on the King's government. In our judgment that is the most important work which this House requires to do now, and it is with the object of expediting this, and to prevent the embarrassment which will arise if there be delay in voting supplies, that we ask the House to put its utmost energy into the work before it. There has never been a moment from the first day of the session down to the present hour when there has not been an abundant programme of government business before the House, and if that programme has not been advanced more rapidly than some of us desired, we certainly believe it is not the fault of the government.

Mr. KEMP. There is yet a great deal of important work to be done in the Public Accounts Committee and the members of that committee cannot attend to it and to their duties in the House at the same time. To-day is nomination day for the provincial elections and there are a great many members absent who were they present would strongly protest against this proposal of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said that we were near the end of this session.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that.

Mr. KEMP. The Prime Minister said that such a motion as this was customary when we came towards the end of the session, but there is an impression in my part of the country that we are not half through the session yet, and certainly if we do not make better progress than we have in the past that idea is perfectly correct. The Minister of Finance says it is important that the estimates be passed, but I am inclined to think it fortunate that these estimates have not been rushed through in view of the financial conditions which face the country. The revenue last month showed a decrease of one and three quarter million dollars as compared with the corresponding month of last year, and in my judgment that condition will continue for some time. I regret that the business of the country is bad and I hope it will improve, but my opinion is that there will not be very much improvement this year. I have great confidence in the future of the country, but still we must look forward to a decreasing revenue, and it is therefore necessary to carefully criticise these estimates. Indeed it may be advisable for the government to cut the expenditures down. Then there is the Insurance Bill and the Banking and Commerce Committee have not finished its work and cannot finish its work properly if there are to be morning sittings. I thought this session was to be a sort of Insurance Bill session, but we have treated it very lightly so far and justice cannot be done to it now. There is the Civil Service Bill and there is the Election Bill, and there are twenty-two other government measures on the Order Paper. All these matters must receive careful consideration. While it may be necessary to pass such a motion as this in the closing weeks of the session, this is not the proper time to present it. In view of the fact that so many members are absent to-day and will be absent during the coming week, the time is inopportune for the Prime Minister to propose this motion, and I would urge on him that he should leave it over for at least a week.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think the Prime Minister is unfair to the members of this House and especially to the members of the opposition in trying to press this motion at this stage. Such a motion is usually made during the last two or three weeks of the session, but even if one or two of the most contentious measures proposed by the government were dropped entirely, there is sufficient on the Order Paper and sufficient work promised by the govment to take up the time of the House for at least six weeks longer. Suppose the Election Act were entirely withdrawn I do not see how it would be possible to finish the work of the session in less than six weeks from this date. Last year the Prime Minister made a similar motion on the 3rd of April and parliament prorogued on the 28th but I am quite sure there will be no prorogation this year within the next month. The Finance Minister has said that the most important thing for the House to do at present is to pass the estimates, which looks as if we would have supply every day this week. It is the members on this side of the House who most largely discuss the estimates.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Hear, hear.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman says 'hear, hear,' but are not the members supporting the government interested in seeing the expenditures of this country properly criticised? They ought to be interested but in practice they would vote $90,000,000 in two hours if they had their way, so long as it went to their own constituencies. It is rarely we hear adverse criticism of the estimates from members on the other side and as many hon. gentlemen will be absent during the coming week, any proposal to rush through legislation and estimates without proper criticism cannot be defended. It is not the fault of the opposition that the session has been long. The government promised several Bills in the speech from the Throne and these Bills have not yet seen the light of day. The Boundary Bill for the province of Manitoba was promised but it has not been submitted to the House yet. I do not know what the character of the Bill may be, but I do say that if it does not meet with the wishes of the people of the west it will prove to be a most contentious measure. Then there is the voluminous and contentious Land Bill of the Minister of the Interior which was left over last session and which was brought down only last week. That Bill will require a great deal of discussion. If we are to have morning sessions and if there is no guarantee that we will not have to sit until long after midnight as was the case during the last two weeks, then I say the proposal is unfair to the members of the opposition. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House are engaged in the Ontario and Quebec provincial elections this week; they no doubt believe they are fighting the battle of their country in their respective constituencies, and I do not think we should be compelled to recall our forces from these provinces in order to properly criticise legislation. The Prime Minister is very unfair in bringing this resolution forward when so many members of the House are absent. I was not a very enthusiastic supporter of the Wednesday night holiday, but, after having had some experience of it, and knowing how beneficial it is to members who do not spend the time in social functions, as many of us do not, to have this opportunity to prepare their work for the balance of the week, I for one, think that if this motion passes, the Wednesday night sittings should be omitted. Personally I enter my earnest protest against this motion passing at the present time. I think we shall do as much work if the Prime Minister postpones it for another week, when all the members will be here, and supply and the various matters of legislation that are to come forward, will receive a fair amount of criticism.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. It is almost impossible to understand the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite; for they dwell on the large quantity of work that is to be done before this session's conclusion. and from that premiss they argue that we should stop working or do as little as we possibly can. They tell us that we should not sit in the mornings or on Wednesdays, or indeed at any time unless we cannot help it. We are informed that our constituents all over the country are getting up earlier in the morning and working later at night at this season of the year in their ordinary avocations, and they naturally believe that their representatives in parliament ought to be at least as assiduous in attending to the public business of this country. But when we are told by hon. gentlemen opposite that there is a great deal of work to be done and that therefore we should stop working, one is rather at a loss to understand them. I am surprised that my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who very rarely honours this House with his presence, and whose attendance on the committees is even more rare——

Mr. KEMP. Entirely mistaken.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD—should take that position. As one who comes from a distant province, and who has some business interests at home—and there are, I am sure, a great many members in the same position —I feel that the time has come in this session when every member of the House should apply himself with the greatest possible assiduity to the public business in order that the session should be brought to an end. After six or seven months absence from home, I think we have reached a stage when we should give up our Wednesday evenings, and get up earlier in the morning in order to get the public business attended to. Hon. gentlemen who can go home for a day or two at any period of the session, and whose business interests are not suffering by their attendance at parliament, can very easily talk about taking things easily; but members from distant provinces are not in that position, and it is by the greatest possible sacrifice of our business interests that we are kept here so long. The hon. member for East Toronto, in expressing his desire to scrutinize the estimates more closely, is at variance with the whip of the party, who said the other night that they would pass these estimates in a few minutes if certain things were done.

Mr. KEMP. What did he say?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. He was perfectly willing to pass all the estimates in a few minutes if something was done that suited him.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No, he was not.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. This is what the whip of the party said, as you will find if you look at 'Hansard' on page 9529:

Mr. TAYLOR. They will not go through now. Let the government withdraw clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill, and they will get their estimates in a very few minutes.

Mr. BARR. Is not the hon. gentleman aware that it was only the estimates then before the House, not the whole of the estimates, that he referred to?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Dufferin has developed a great deal of wisdom and inscrutable knowledge since he has been in this House, and he seems to be able to tell us what the hon.

member for Leeds was thinking about. As a rule, we are accustomed to take words spoken in the House as meaning exactly what they say, and the words of the hon. member for Leeds indicated the most delightful willingness on the part of himself and his hon. friend to pass all the estimates of this government in a few minutes if something were done that suited him. I am surprised, therefore, that the hon. member for East Toronto, who does not honour the House with his genial presence very often, and who has manifested such a strong desire to scrutinize the estimates, should be at variance with the gentleman who whips him and the other hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. In regard to the work still to be done, our hon. friends have somewhat exaggerated the work still before the committees. Hon. gentlemen who attend the Public Accounts Committee will agree with me, I think, that the work of that committee has been very long and laboured, and that to-day only the fag-end of it remains. Indeed, it has sat for two or three days dealing with matters that ought not to be before that committee at all. From the order paper and from the expressions of opinion given informally by hon. gentlemen opposite in the committee, there cannot be much work left for it to do. At any rate, there is no reason why hon. gentlemen should not apply themselves more assiduously at this season of the year and at this stage of the session to the public business of this country in order that it should be closed up as speedily as possible. The country expects it of us. The busy people of this country expect their representatives to attend to their business. It seems to me that the motion of the right hon. leader of the House is not made a moment too soon, and that the House should in its own interest and in the interest of the country adopt it.

Mr. BARR. My hon. friend says that he cannot understand the arguments of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. All I can say is that they are very clear and lucid, and if he cannot understand them, we cannot undertake to supply him with brains for that purpose. With reference to the statement of our whip, he distinctly stated that if hon. gentlemen opposite would do away with the obnoxious Election Bill, which I venture to say has shocked not only the members of this House, on both sides, but the country at large, we would pass these estimates. that is, the estimates then before the House.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Oh, no; read the words.

Mr. BARR. I have read them, and the hon. gentleman can read them at his leisure. As the discussion of the estimates is the only power we have in our hands, we are quite justified if we take longer time than is necessary under these circumstances; and I venture to say that nine-tenths of the free and independent electors of Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, will say that the opposition are only doing their duty in fighting that obnoxious Bill by any power within their reach. With regard to the motion before the House, I venture to say that if you look over the history of the Dominion of Canada, you will not find any parallel case, either in the Dominion parliament or in any provincial parliament, in which the members are asked to double up their work, and work night and day at this stage of the business. It does not matter how long we have been here. If we have been six months, we cannot help that. The country demands that we as its representatives scrutinize not only the estimates, but every Bill that comes before the House, whether it takes six months or eight months or the rest of the year; and while we are all desirous of shortening the session as much as possible, we feel that we have a duty to our country and our constituents. Medical men at any rate know that we cannot scrutinize the estimates or the legislation that comes before this House as well if we spend twenty hours of the day at work, as we could if we took a reasonable rest; and in my opinion more progress would be made if we went on in the even tenor of our way, at least for the present, working reasonable hours. When we look at the amount of work still before us, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the session has just commenced, because the work to be done is much more than the work we have accomplished during the past six months; and if we have to spend the rest of the year here, it is only our duty to do so, however anxious we may be to return to our homes. It is an utter impossibility to shorten the work by compelling the members to work under greater pressure for three or four months. In my opinion the present is not an opportune time for bringing in a motion of this kind, as the members from Ontario and Quebec are necessarily absent.

Many members from Ontario and Quebec are necessarily away, and so far as Quebec is concerned, the hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for their absence as we know that if the mandate had not gone down from here the elections in Quebec would not be on to-day. But, the government, knowing the defeat that stares them in the face in Ontario, the sweep that will be made there a week from to-day, felt that Quebec might and as we believe will follow suit, although probably not to the same extent. But still the government said: Let us have the downfall all together, and then the country will not have two opportunities of passing judgment upon us. Under these circumstances, the government may well move carefully until they see the result of the elections and probably they may change their minds as far as that obnoxious Bill is concerned and become more reasonable in many things. I believe they are heartily ashamed of sections 1 and 17 of the Election Bill and are anxious to get out of it in some way. They could do this very easily if they waited until after the provincial elections. Then probably if they desire it we will work longer hours. Under these circumstances I think it would be in the interest of the House if at least the Wednesday night should not be taken away and also if one week respite should be given before starting the morning sessions.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the speech of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald). He never rises without indulging in personalities and usually manages to place a very false construction on statements made. I shall not follow him in his personalities but I wish to correct his construction of statements of hon. gentlemen on this side. We have never suggested that there should be a stoppage of work altogether or additional holidays. All we have done is to protest against the proposal of the government being adopted at this moment, when there is such an enormous amount of work yet to be done. The hon. gentleman spoke of our constituents who are putting in very much longer hours of work than are members of this House. The hon. member could not have been quite serious in that suggestion or else he must have forgotten that there are committees of this House which meet practically every morning in the week, and that in addition there is a great deal of correspondence to which every member has to attend. The hours of work of members of parliament are far in excess of those of almost any other class of the population of Canada.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) puts some blame on the opposition for the delays which have taken place in connection with some legislation which has been brought before the House. But we must remember that the insurance legislation, which will require the very serious consideration of this House and previous to that the serious consideration of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, has not yet come before that committee for their consideration and report, and this surely is not the fault of the opposition but of the government. The Prime Minister has said that we are in the seventh month of the session. That carries with it the further thought that after we have been in session for six months the government has not yet brought down an important measure which was promised in the speech from the Throne, the Manitoba Boundaries Bill which is likely to cause a very large amount of discussion. Then again only within the last few days has that important and very contentious Bill the Dominion Lands Act been brought down. These and the Civil Service and other Bills which the government have promised, have not yet been brought down and they will have to be gone into very thoroughly by every member if we are to get the best legislation possible under the circumstances. I do not see how this will be possible if we are to attend to committee meetings in the mornings and also to our correspondence. If the Prime Minister had included a provision that the House should rise at midnight each night there might have been a better disposition on the part of members towards his proposal, but we know that members will be kept busy from 9.30 in the morning until perhaps 3 or 4 the next morning with the usual short intermissions for luncheon and dinner. It seems to me to be not quite fair to the members. I would point out that from the wording of the motion, taken in connection with the rules of the House, there would appear to be no intermission for dinner on Wednesday evening.

I hope that the Prime Minister will agree to an amendment which I propose to move as follows:

> That the said motion be amended by striking out the words "from and after this date" wherever they occur therein, and by substituting therefor in each case the words 'from and after Monday next.'

That, at any rate will give an additional week for the members of the House to come in from the various districts in Ontario and Quebec where so many of them are to-day performing what are after all very important duties.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to endorse what has been said by members on this side, certainly with regard to the evening recess on Wednesday. If it is intended to force the work of the House morning, afternoon and evening, certainly the Wednesday evening recess is more important at this time in relation to the health of members alone than in the earlier part of the session when members are not so pressed and so much driven with work. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has given a clear statement of the number of government Bills that have not yet been presented. There are several Bills not yet introduced, government measures, which it is to be presumed, the government intend to press. It looks a good deal like coercion, like tyranny, for the Prime Minister and members on the government side, at such a time as this, especially, with so many members of the House absent, to force such a proposal as this upon members affecting their attendance in the House. Members will be expected to assemble at eleven o'clock in the morning and to remain here all day,—and at what time late at night or early in the morning the House will adjourn nobody can tell; if the practice is continued which has held for some time in the past, it will be two, or three, or four o'clock in the morning before members leave this House. How can it be expected that we can give that attention to measures coming before the House, whether estimates or Bills, that we should give if we are kept at such high pressure of work as the Prime Minister proposes ? I think it ought only be necessary to bring these points to the attention of the leader of the House to have him forego his intention of pressing this motion at this time. The amendment to postpone this proposal for a week's time, I think, is asking little enough. At least, we may expect that, after this week more members will be in harness here and the work can be divided, thus relieving the pressure upon each member. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who is always interesting in his remarks though somewhat imaginative as to facts, referred to a remark made the other night by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). That hon. member is now in his place and will be able to explain what he really meant when he said that if certain action was taken with regard to the Elections Bill the estimates would be put through in two minutes. I am sure that he referred only to the item then before the committee. But, as he is here, he will be able to explain. I once more appeal to the Prime Minister and his supporters to allow this motion to be postponed for a week. If at that time it is considered necessary to bring it in again, the members on both sides will be in a better position to share the irksome work which long hours of attendance in this House will involve.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Whenever this motion is made, the intention of the government is to try to meet the wishes of members on both sides, and I do not approach the consideration of the matter in any other spirit to-day. I was impressed with the statements made by several hon. members, particularly by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to the value of the recess on Wednesday evening. Therefore, if it be agreeable to my hon. friend on the other side, I will move an amendment to the amendment that the first words of the motion, relating to Wednesday evening, shall not apply. I do not say but that later on, if the work presses, we may be obliged to propose Wednesday evening sittings, but, for the present, we will give hon. gentlemen the advantage of the rest on Wednesday evenings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that is a fair proposition.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps, I misunderstood the Prime Minister. Does he propose to abandon the idea of Wednesday night sittings ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To leave the rule as to Wednesday as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. And to apply the rest of the motion ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I frankly confess that I do not feel like agreeing with that. So far as it goes, it is right enough, but I wish to make one or two observations on the proposition. The motion for morning sittings is generally made when practically all the committee work of the session is ended. So long as the commttees have work in hand, the forenoon is needed by hon. members to attend to that work and to correspondence. The First Minister says he made this motion last year at a certain time. But when he made it, practically all the committee work was over. Is that the position to-day ? I think there is scarcely a committee of this House which has finished its work. A number of important committees are engaged in their work as vigourously now as at any time during the session. The Public Accounts Committee has enough to do for three months, should the session last that long ; and the committee will have to work with greater expedition than hitherto if they are to get through by the time the session may be expected to close. As to the Private Bills Committe, we sent to-day four Bills to that committee to consider. The Prime Minister intimated that these are divorce Bills on which not much time is spent by the committee. But I can remember divorce Bills coming before that committee on which witnesses were called and a great deal of time spent.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Invading the privileges of the Senate.

Mr. SPROULE. We have the same right to call witnesses as the Senate have. I remember that, in the case of one Bill that was before us some years ago we called witnesses some of whom had not been called before the Senate Committee. And the Private Bills Committee may decide to do the same in the case of some of these Bills which are now sent for their consideration. Then we have business before the Privileges and Elections Committee. I assume that it will not take them very long to dispose of that work. Still, it takes a week or ten days to deal with almost any cases that may come before the committee. There are still some Bills to go before the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, Then, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said, if the Banking and Commerce Committee is to deal with the Insurance Bill at all every clause of that important measure must come under the consideration of the committee. The Banking and Commerce Committee has a large membership, and those who are members of it will desire to carefully consider the insurance Bill clause by clause. And we have had no intimation that that Bill is not to go on; the assumption is that it will go on. We have the committee on Agriculture and Colonization—that committee also has not finished its work. As to the Hodgins inquiry, I was told by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) the other day that it is likely to continue for a week or ten days, or two weeks, as far as he can judge, although the committee are hurrying the business on. The Quebec Bridge inquiry will take a considerable length of time if any thing like a proper investigation is made. With all these committees engaged in important work, it must be that a large number of members will be occupied in the forenoon. How is it possible for the House to go on with its regular work at eleven o'clock when so many members who ought to be here are engaged in committees? Sometimes the rule is suspended and committees are allowed to go on with their work while this House is sitting. That is an injustice to members of the House and to the country, as all members ought to be present when business is before us. Besides that, during the present week—during which it is proposed that this motion be left in abeyance—more than half the members are likely to be absent. I counted the attendance here a short time ago and, all told, only forty members were present. Is it reasonable that the business of this House should be carried on with less than one-fifth of the membership of the House in attendance? I contend that it would be much more reasonable to carry out the suggestion I made some time ago and have this House adjourn for a week until the pending elections are over.

A large number of members will be absent and the important work that ought to be considered by all the members cannot be considered when three-fourths of them are absent as they are during the present week. In addition to that, and in addition to the committee work, to force this on during this week when there will not be one-fifth of the members present, is an injustice to the country and it is performing the functions of parliament in a very improper way. The motion is a very improper one. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) intimated that the business of the House is not going on very actively, that it is rather retarded. I would like to ask him if there is any member of this House who has contributed more to retarding the proper and legitimate business of the House than the hon. gentleman himself? I have sat in the Public Accounts Committee day after day when we did not do as much work in a week as we ought to have done in a day. About three members obstruct the work of that committee, and he was one of the most active in doing it. Had the members of that committee been able to do their work as they ought to have been without any improper interference or obstruction, the work would not be, as it is to-day—only partially done. It would have been comparatively all done and we would have been in a position to abandon it and apply ourselves to the work of this House. Owing to the special situation to-day this motion should not be pushed. It is a fact that these committees have not their work done, they have a large amount of important work to be done and until that work is done the House cannot properly sit in the forenoon, or otherwise the committees cannot do their work. You are taking men away from the House who ought to be here for the consideration of important Bills and estimates. We ought to have a delay for at least one week. Then the Prime Minister ought to consider whether we would not be just as far on with the business in two or three weeks hence if we adjourned the House for one week until these elections are over. I do not believe it would be doing justice to the country to push this work through when so many members are away, and I do not think it would retard the progress of the session much if we were to adjourn. Members would then be present and be able to attend to their work. In view of these features of it I would respectfully urge upon the First Minister that it is not enough to abandon the proposal to take Wednesday night, but that it is eminently proper and desirable that this motion should be delayed for one week until the members have returned.

Mr. ALCORN. One point which is very material to be considered seems to me to have been almost lost sight of. It was possibly referred to in general terms at the beginning of the debate, but it has not been mentioned since, and that is whether the House has the right to pass a motion of this kind if it be objected to by a substantial number of members, if not by one member. Let me draw attention to the fact that the rules of the House contain no provision for the abrogation or even suspension of any of its rules, and if one rule may be suspended or abrogated the whole of them may be by the same motion. They contain no provision for the abrogation or suspension of any one rule except under certain circumstances with regard to private Bills. Clearly if, on a motion not unanimously assented to, any one standing order of the House may be suspended or abrogated, we might wipe out the whole body of them by a bare majority. I think the Prime Minister will probably do well to carefully consider that point and withhold his motion until he is satisfied that upon a motion which is not unanimously agreed to, but which is seriously objected to, he can suspend a rule of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was not present, but I have been informed since I came in that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) made the statement that I said a few nights ago that if the government would withdraw clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Act they would get their whole estimates through in two minutes. I certainly did not say that in the light in which the hon. gentleman puts it. We were then discussing the estimates of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and I made the suggestion that if these clauses were withdrawn he could have the pay for the men for whom he was making his appeal in a couple of minutes. I believe that the opposition have allowed since I have been absent from the House this amount to pass through. But I made no reference to the general estimates that are yet to come down. It was simply because of the appeals that have been made to us by the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), during the debate, threw the taunt across the floor of the House that the opposition had been obstructing business for the last six months. That cannot possibly be the fact, because if you take up 'Hansard' and measure it you will find that hon. members supporting the government have occupied more than half of the 'Hansard' from the commencement of the session up to the present time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What will you bet?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not a betting man, but I will make the statement that if my hon. friend takes the 'Hansard' and measures it he will find that the government and their supporters have occupied a greater number of pages than the opposition have done during the entire session. Therefore, we are not to be taunted with having obstructed because there have been many valuable speeches made from this side of the House to enlighten the country. Read these speeches made by members of the opposition and compare them with the balderdash we have heard from the other side of the House—nothing but trash, save and except a few speeches made by members of the government. But those speeches made by the back benchers bear no comparison with the brilliant speeches made upon this side of the House. Yet the hon. Minister of Finance gets up and taunts us with obstructing the House. All the speeches from this side have been made to educate the people of the country and the people of the country have been educated, but the speeches made from the opposite side of the House were simply to obstruct or kill time and to show that the Conservative government was as bad as the present government twelve or fifteen years ago. But we are not to be charged with having obstructed this House for six months or even one month. We have an objection and we are going to maintain our objection. I went back to my constituents and they told me to stay here until Christmas if it were necessary to have eliminated the inquity of clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill. My constituents are willing to raise a subscription to pay my board if necessary to keep me here until Christmas in order to see that the ballot shall not be tampered with and that the province of Manitoba shall not be singled out. Manitoba is peopled mostly by the sons of Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, the men who opened up and developed that country, and now, because this government, through the North Atlantic Trading Company, have transported into that country a lot of Doukhobors and—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is wandering a little too far from the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. I saw in the newspapers that the right hon. gentleman had given notice that he was going to take Wednesday night. I have no objection to take Wednesday night commencing at a reasonable hour in the day. I do not think that any one objects, if the rule can be broken. In order to expedite the business I would be willing that the government should take Wednesday with the condition that we commence at eleven o'clock in the day, as soon as the committee work is through, and continue until twelve o'clock at night and not be forced to sit until five o'clock in the morning as we were last week. I do not think our constituents expect us to remain here until five o'clock in the morning as it must be injurious to the health of every hon. member who is confined to this box of a chamber—it is nothing else—from three o'clock in the afternoon until five the next morning. I think it is dangerous to the health of every hon. member, but I would be willing, if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agree to it, to give up Wednesday night provided we sit until twelve or one o'clock.

Mr. PATERSON. How do you feel on the customs estimates now?

Mr. TAYLOR. Just as I felt the other night.

Mr. PATERSON. In two minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, well, the Minister of Customs got a portion of his estimates without dropping clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill, as I wanted him to do. He made such a strong appeal to our leader that I understand he consented to pay the boys in the outside service. But we have lots of more estimates to pass yet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Lots of them.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not get all mine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just whenever the Prime Minister carries out the bargain there will be no obstruction of the estimates so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to correct the statement made by the hon. member for Leeds when he said that the greater part of the time of this House has been taken up by members supporting the government. I had the curiosity to figure up the number of columns of 'Hansard' which were occupied by the debate on the Election Bill and I find that the members of the opposition are eighty-two columns ahead. If they don't believe me they can count it up for themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend cannot contradict me because I referred to the whole session and not to the debate on one Bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. And if you count it up you will get the same result for the entire session.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, do not contradict me until you do count.

Mr. KENNEDY. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) took sixty-three columns of 'Hansard' in that debate.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And he did it in about half the time that some of your men took, so that no time was lost there.

Mr. KENNEDY. If some of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House were in the position that I and other members from the far west are in they would be glad to adopt any means to bring the session to a close. We have been six months away from our homes and our business; we cannot run home every week and attend to our private affairs as can the hon. member for Leeds and others who live near Ottawa. We have to leave our business aside for months to attend to the business of the country and we would like to see the country's business disposed of in a businesslike way. I cannot for the life of me understand how it is that this House can be held up by a minority. That puzzles me. I always understood that one of the fundamental rules of our constitution was that we should have government by majority, government by the people and for the people. Each one of us here is returned by a majority of the votes in our constituencies and why the majority in this House cannot rule is something that I don't understand. So far as the Election Bill is concerned there is supposed to be a deadlock in connection with it——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be well to confine the discussion to the question before the House.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, I was a little afraid I would be out of order, but so many others have offended in that respect that I thought I would be quite safe in doing so too. However, I will give my views on that question at another time.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When the hon. member for Pictou complained about the long hours he is devoting to the interests of the country and the hardship of his being away from his home it reminded me of a statement made by the sitting member who was seeking re-election in a constituency in Prince Edward Island, and when he made the same complaint about long hours in parliament and the misfortune of his being absent from his private business, an elector at the back of the hall called out: You have done so much in that line that you had better stay at home altogether next time. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are a great many important measures before the House and there is a great deal of important business to be transacted by the committees, and in view of this the motion of the Prime Minister is inopportune and unreasonable especially as only about one-fifth of the members of the House are present to-day. These gentlemen are in their constituencies in Ontario and Quebec attending to the interests of the country in the provincial elections and I believe the people of Canada will look upon it that the Prime Minister is unfair in taking advantage of the existing conditions, especially in view of the fact that there is to some extent a deadlock between the parties on account of the injustice which the government is trying to force on the province of Manitoba. I think the Prime Minister might very well accept the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister has been very reasonable with reference to the Wednesday night recess, and I have no doubt his decision in that respect will be helpful to the convenience of the House. If the right hon. gentleman would consent to allow this motion only to come into effect on Monday next I think it would contribute to the good nature and the good work of the whole House. It would also tend to facilitate the work of the committees and I think it would be a reasonable concession for the right hon. gentleman to make.

Mr. BRISTOL. The motion of the Prime Minister is inopportune and it is especially inopportune if it is to come into effect before next week. There is a great deal of work to be done in the Public Accounts Committee and it is inexpedient that that committee should sit during the morning sittings of the House. I believe the right hon. gentleman would better serve the end he desires to achieve by not pressing this resolution at present. Am I right in assuming that the original motion is amended by striking out the words from the first word 'that' in the first line down to and including the word 'apply' in the third line ?

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the amendment is still before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the amendment was to be dropped and the original motion amended.

Mr. SPROULE. The amendment to the amendment was that the original motion be amended in that direction.

Mr. SPEAKER. No amendment in amendment has been moved as yet, and I have been trying to get the sense of the House in regard to the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will move the amendment as an amendment to the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it would be possible for the right hon. gentleman to move an amendment to a motion originally made by him. I thought the sense of the House was that the amendment be dropped, and the original motion altered by striking out all the words from and including the first word down to and including the word 'apply' in the third line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The motion says that the House shall sit on every sitting day at 11 o'clock and that there shall be an intermission from 1 to 3 o'clock. Does that include Wednesdays ?

Mr. FIELDING. There will be no reference to Wednesday if the words are stricken out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but if the motion is left in that form we would rise at 1 o'clock on Wednesdays and then meet at 2 o'clock. If the motion is intended to include Wednesday, it should provide for an intermission every day, including Wednesday. We meet on Wednesday at 2 o'clock, and you are not abrogatng that rule.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me the amendment is not necessary, but I have no objection to add the words 'including Wednesday.'

Mr. SPROULE. The amendment to the motion is still before the House—to suspend this for a week.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, it is withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER. By consent I understand the amendment is withdrawn and the original motion is altered by striking out the words from 'that' to 'apply,' inclusive, and by inserting the words 'inclusive of Wednesday.'

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended, agreed to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

On government orders being called :

MEETING OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

On government orders being called.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the government orders are called, I would draw the attention of the government to the fact that the Public Accounts Committee has been called for 11 o'clock to-morrow morning and will be unable to sit under the resolution which was passed to-day unless another resolution is adopted empowering them to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. The suggestion is one in which I quite concur, but I would prefer to have it come from the chairman of the committee who is not present. An hon. member suggests that a shorter way would be to have the notices sent out for ten o'clock, then the committee could have an hour and could apply to the House for permission to sit during the sittings of the House, which would be the regular mode of procedure. Perhaps in a later stage of the evening we could arrange the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good, with that understanding ; but the motion will have to be made at some time or another.

Mr. FIELDING. It would have to be made before the House adjourns, with the Speaker in the chair.

SUPPLY—DUTY ON LUMBER.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). I wish to bring before the attention of the House the question of the duty on lumber coming from the United States into Canada. It is not my intention to-night to propose a motion on the matter or to bring on a general discussion ; my object in bringing it up is to direct the attention of the government to the existing condition of affairs in the hope that they will see their way clear to remedy the existing grievance. If this is not done then we might feel in duty bound to take the matter up at a later stage of the session and to press it more closely upon the attention of the government. At the present time lumber from the United States or any foreign country enters Canada free of duty. On rough lumber from Canada to the United States there is a duty of $2 a thousand feet which is a practical handicap upon the Canadian lumber entering that country. The industry in Canada to-day employs between 65,000 and 75,000 men, according to the season. represents a population of about 300,000 to 400,000 souls, depending upon the lumber industry in Canada for a livelihood. Not only are these directly concerned in the lumber industry, but indirectly the financial institutions of the country, the railways, the mercantile, manufacturing and farming communities all doing business with the lumbermen, are all very deeply interested in the success of that industry. In addition to those I have named as persons employed in the industry exclusively there are a great many farmers' sons and labouring men in all parts of the country who, when the winter approaches, having no work at home on the farms during the long period of winter, find employment in the lumber camps at the nearest point where there are lumbering operations, travelling sometimes hundreds of miles to obtain work. So these are employed indirectly for a period of six months or so every year in the lumber woods.

In order to show the growth of the import of lumber, I would point out that in 1908, the year just closed, there were imported into the Dominion of Canada lumber and lumber materials of the value of $12,730,000. The total product of the Dominion of Canada is estimated this year to be considerably less than $100,000,000. Therefore about one dollar's worth was imported to each eight dollars manufactured in Canada. The value of the imports of lumber from the United States increased from $2,904,000 in 1896 to the enormous sum of $12,730,000 in the present year. Of that $12,730,000, $2,800,000 was dutiable and $9,930,000 free.

The wages paid to lumbermen in the district which I have the honour to represent a year ago were $35 a month. They have now fallen to between $20 and $25 a month, and there is every reason to believe that in the very near future the wages will fall still lower. Therefore we have an army of about 70,000 able bodied men with their families who are entitled to live in decency in Canada on the verge of being reduced upwards of fifty per cent in their wages. More than that, very many of these men are being turned out of employment. It is a very serious matter in many parts of the country.

To show you the extent to which the lumber industry is affected by legislation I would remind the House that in Ontario until recent years there was nothing in the license granted to the lumberman requiring him to manufacture his lumber in the Dominion of Canada. He could put it into the rivers, float it down to the navigable waters and then tow it across to United States centres. That was done in the Midland and Lake districts and the logs were towed to Bay City, Saginaw and Tonawanda, there to be cut up into lumber, and Canada lost the benefit of the employment of that labour. This was the case all through the Georgian Bay and Midland districts of Ontario. Home after home was closed up, families had to move to the United States in order to obtain the wherewithal to live. The Hon. Mr. Whitney took the matter up and raised a very serious agitation, which forced the government of the day to place a clause in the contract requiring the lumberman to cut the lumber in the province of Ontario. Immediately, as if by magic, prosperity returned to the old towns along the Georgian Bay shores and through the Midland district of Ontario, wherever there was a lumbering centre, and our merchants, bankers, farmers, railways, every one in Canada has been more or less beneficially affected by that action in requiring these logs to be cut in Canada. I am satisfied that if a duty were placed upon lumber and timber coming from the United States into Canada it would have a similar effect throughout Canada. At the present time there is a great cry for Georgia pine in Canada. I know that a bridge was erected between Lindsay and Peterborough a few years ago by the Grand Trunk Railway of this imported pine. That bridge is to be replaced this year. Until recently our contractors and the constructors of bridges and those large works requiring heavy timber, thought that nothing could equal southern pine and it was brought in in immense quantities. The returns show that in some years $2,000,000 worth of this pine was brought in, but now they find that the British Columbia fir is superior in every respect and may be laid down more cheaply, other things being equal, than the southern pine is, that is if the southern pine is not sacrificed as it is to-day.

We are told that the imposition of the duty on lumber would be very detrimental to the interests of Manitoba and the Northwest. Sir, I cannot see it. Every part of Manitoba is convenient to some lumber camp. Hundreds of the boys from Manitoba farms go in the winter along the Rainy river, the Lake of the Woods district and all down that way and work in the camps. They are found all along the shores of Lake Winnipeg, Lake Winnipegosis and the lower Red Deer river. I know one gentleman alone who this winter employed 2,500 of these young men in the lumber camps in the northern part of Manitoba, and the eastern district of Saskatchewan. So, near the mountains, an enormous number of young men go to the mountain regions to work in the lumber camps during the winter months when they have nothing to do on the farms at home.

In that way it is a source of revenue, but this last winter the usual number of men have not found employment, and in the coming year, I am informed on the best of authority by those engaged in the lumber business, that not only will wages be down but the employment of men will be very much reduced, almost entirely owing to the fact that we have no duty upon lumber coming from the United States or other lands into the Dominion of Canada. The trouble which has existed in Manitoba and the Northwest has not been due to the fact of a duty being on lumber because there has been free trade in lumber. The trouble has been owing to a combine existing among the retailers which controls the prices and controls those engaged in the business. The argument that a duty on lumber would raise the price materially in these regions, I would think, if it is examined into, will be found not to hold good. But, even supposing that the duty were paid by the consumer—which is not in this case—it would not be a dollar a head for the farmers of Manitoba and the Northwest a year and they would, in the splendid home markets they would thereby have for their farm products in British Columbia, the Lake of the Woods and Rainy river country, lake Winnipeg and lake Winnipegosis and along the Red Derr river, make much more than any loss they would sustain by reason of the duty on lumber. I shall not weary the House with figures as it is not my intention at the present time to do more than point out in general terms the enormous quantity of wood material that is being imported into Canada. At the present time there is a great depression in the lumber business in the United States. People engaged in that industry, as in all businesses, require to pay interest on their bonds and investments and they are prepared to sacrifice their lumber for cost, land it here as cheaply as they may and get what they can for it rather than keep it and store it. I shall take the liberty of reading a little extract from Frank Leslie's Weekly which illustrates the possibility of selling a certain portion of one's product at cost and still making considerable money, over what you might make by selling a smaller output at a higher figure. This article is taken from 'Leslie's Weekly.' It states:

A business man's plain talk on the tariff.

It is a well known economic principle that it pays to keep mills and men fully employed to the limit of capacity and time, even if part of the product has to be disposed of in foreign markets without profit or with slight sacrifice, rather than to curtail the facilities for production, and therefore reduce the earning capacity of the wage-workers. For, if every dollar so realized from foreign countries for surplus products, goes into the pockets of the wage-earners it increases the wealth of the country maintaining such policy. The following illustration taken from Josiah Strong's 'Expansion' will serve to substantiate this statement: 'In a certain industry the profits are well established, according to the tonnage put through. If the run is 600 tons per day, the profits are $5,000 dollars per month. If the run is 900 tons per day, the profits are $20,000 per month. That is, by increasing the output fifty per cent, the profits are, in this instance, increased 300 per cent. If the extra 300 tons are sold at cost, it would leave the profits for the month $13,000; so that the extra 300 tons per day could actually be sold for $3,000 less than cost and then the profits for the month would be twice as large as if only 600 tons had been run.

'This will sound to many very like the familiar old story of the peanut woman who, "always sold a little below cost and made her money by selling a great many." This statement, however, is capable of demonstration; 600 tons per day equals 18,000 tons per month; 900 tons per day equals 27,000 tons per month; market price of the product, $4.96 per ton, leaving a profit of 28 cents per ton. At 900 tons per day the cost is reduced to $4.22, leaving a profit of 74 cents per ton. Now, 18,000 x 28 equals $5,040, the profits per month when only 600 tons are run per day; and 27,000 x 74 equals $19,980, the profits per month when 900 tons are run per day. If the entire increase of 9,000 tons is sold at cost, the 18,000 tons remaining would, at 74 cents per ton, make $13,320 instead of $5,040. So that these 9,000 tons might be sold for $3,000 less than cost and leave profits of $10,320 instead of $5,040. Our laying hold of this principle was one of the reasons why we were able to enter European home markets, and it accounts for the fact that many articles of American manufacture can be bought cheaper in Europe than here.'

But, Sir, one of the worst features of the whole case is found in the fact that in the Southern States the pitch pine, which is exported to Canada in considerable quantity to-day, is all cut either by convict labour or coloured labour. Under the policy pursued by the government of Canada at the present time we are asking our men to live in this northern latitude to keep warm houses, purchase large quantities of fuel, dress warmly, educate their children —and the children of the Canadian lumbermen have just as good a right to an education as the children of any other class of people in the land—in competition with people living in a southern climate where a yard of calico is their usual uniform both summer and winter. They have to compete with coloured and with convict labour. I notice in 'Everybody's Magazine' for this month an article, not written along these lines, but intended to reform the abuses of the convict labour system in the southern and other States of the Union where convict labour is hired out or sold for whatever they can get per year for it, and that is the labour that is employed in the lumber mills and manufacturing establishments. That is the class of labour that our men in this northern latitude have to compete with under free trade in lumber. This article describes the brutality in connection with the treatment of these convicts, not alone by the jail authorities, but by the men to whom they are sold, and gives an account of the way in which a negro is flogged. Then it continues :

But the man has done wrong; he has committed a fault.

Yes, from sunrise to noon he has wheeled fifty-seven loads of fresh brick; the regulations of this hell on earth require that in such a time he shall wheel sixty loads. So, having thus transgressed, power and law and justice as administered in the state of Georgia exact from him this penalty until he screams and cries and sobs—and bleeds.

Further on the writer describes the meals.

For dinner they have each a piece of boiled salt pork, a piece of greasy corn bread. Although he is nearly famished, having worked all morning in the open air, the convict looks upon the food before him, and at the recollection of his breakfast his stomach revolts upon him and he turns sick and faints. But he gulps down the corn bread and, at last, turning the salt pork to the light and shredding it with his fingers, he manages for sheer hunger's sake to swallow a little of it. The rest is begged by the hungry man next to him. For supper he has boiled salt pork and a piece of corn bread. He learns that the state of Georgia does not furnish these viands; they are provided at the sole charge and cost of the company to which his slave labour has been sold.

That is in the issue of 'Everybody's Magazine' for the present month of June, and it goes on to describe how the State government has been taking action to improve the condition of these people. The free men in the Dominion of Canada, the 70,000 heads of families who are engaged in the lumber industry, have to compete, under free trade in lumber, with the coloured and convict labour of the United States of America.

Mr. FIELDING. Not at all; my hon. friend is entirely mistaken.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am telling my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that it is a fact that they have to compete with negro labour.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not talking about negro labour; I am talking about convict labour.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They have to compete with convict labour.

Mr. FIELDING. No. You cannot bring into Canada any lumber that is produced by convict labour.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How is it known? Is there a brand of the blood of the slave placed on every board ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not talking about slave labour. I am not aware that there is any slavery in the United States now. I had the impression that slavery was abolished.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not care whether you call it slave or convict labour; they have the worst system of slavery that they ever had at the present time. It is absolutely impossible to tell what lumber comes from a slave or convict mill and what comes from a free mill. At any rate wages are reduced by the competition of these convicts. Why are the prisons in Ontario going out of the convict labour business ? Simply because it brings convict labour into competition with free labour, it reduces the price of the commodity and in that way reduces wages just as it has done in the lumber business. Therefore, in the interest of the 70,000 odd free men, heads of families, men who want to bring their children up in respectability, in the interest of the men who have millions and millions of dollars invested in these mills up and down this country I would most respectfully impress upon the government the necessity of taking hold of this lumber question. At the present time there is scarcely a wheel turning in the lumber business in the province of Ontario. Banks are carrying these loads almost to their utmost limit. There is no market for lumber; prices are down; wages are down; there is stagnation throughout the length and breadth of the province in the lumber business which calls for action by an up-to-date government. I trust that it will not be necessary that this matter should be brought to the attention of the House again, as it certainly will be if something is not done. I respectfully lay this information before the House and ask for it the attention of the government.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) said he did not wish to provoke any discussion. I have no doubt that would be the universal desire on the part of every gentleman who brings matters up ex parte before the Chair. But, even at the risk of transgressing the hon. gentleman's wishes, I would say a word or two to present, in a humble way, the views of those who do not agree with my hon. friend. There are those who would profit if any such duty were placed on lumber as my hon. friend has spoken of. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that this matter has been brought before you by a private member and by one on the other side of the House; for I think I shall do no injury to these hon. gentlemen, I think I shall not be unjust to my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames) if I say that if any hon. member on this side were to propose this increase in duty it would be said by the opposition that he acted at the instance of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) and others in order to increase the value of their limits. Therefore, even at the risk of not increasing the value of these limits, I will go further than that and ask if it be as hon. gentlemen opposite say that there is a vast fortune in the timber limits of the Northwest Territories and that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), for example, and others have been made millionaires by the assets of the country being handed over to them, what is this proposed increase of duty for but to enhance the value of the assets which they are supposed to have received?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) a question? Are the limits to which he has referred worked? Are there thousands of men employed on these limits?

Mr. KNOWLES. My answer, given without hesitation, is in the affirmative. I have no doubt that my hon. friend from St. Antoine will be able to explain why these limits of my hon. friend from Dauphin and other hon. gentlemen engaged in the lumber business are so valuable as the hon. gentleman says and yet require this protection to make it worth while to operate them at all. The fact is that the hon. member for Dauphin and these other persons who are charged with being favourites of the government are operating largely the limits that they received and that is a fact that cannot be gainsaid.

My hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has informed us as to the kinds of labour employed in the production of this lumber that is imported from the United States. He finds fault because negroes find employment in this work and because their product, the lumber from the south, is brought into Canada. I am sorry that the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) is not present, for I have no doubt that he would rise to defend the rights of the people of that race and that class, that they might not in this House have themselves classed with convicts or persons of that kind. And I cannot help——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I must rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) is putting words into my mouth that I did not utter. I was careful to point out the distinction between coloured labour and convict labour. 'Convict' labour might include both coloured and white, but 'coloured' refers to the negro.

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend's explanation is quite in harmony with what I was saying. The hon. gentleman in his remarks classed them together. Not once, but half a dozen times, he said that he objected to this lumber coming in as having been produced by convicts and negroes —or negroes and convicts, I do not know to which he gave second place. His making a bugbear of the fact that these imports are the product of the labour of negroes and convicts which he objects to, reminds me of the attitude of the hon. gentleman when the labour interests were being heard and those who were familiar with the facts were setting forth the views of organized labour. On that occasion the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was careful to say that he would have the Asiatics, such as the Hindus, come into this country rather than the galvanized Americans—not coloured Americans or convict Americans, but what he called 'galvanized' Americans, but still the industrious, hard-working, law-abiding, Anglo-Saxon Americans who, as they come among us, make just as good citizens as any we have in this country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I must again correct the hon. gentleman. I referred to the anarchists from the United States. I hope he does not associate with that class.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am not sure that I understood the hon. gentleman's question. Did he ask me if I associated him with anarchists?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No. I asked the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) if he himself associated with anarchists; he seems ready to defend them.

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not associate with anarchists. I am only saying that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) made the statement that he would rather have the Hindu come into this country than the 'galvanized' Americans—that is the statement he made. There are several remarks which might be made, speaking especially from the standpoint of the consumer of lumber in the Northwest in regard to the views of my hon. friend. He has said that those engaged in the lumber industry must have warm houses, for instance, which is something that those engaged in lumbering in Georgia do not need. But for one person engaged in cutting timber who must have a warm house we have five hundred or a thousand people who take up homesteads in the Northwest, who must first build houses and who must have those houses warm. On their behalf I protest against an agitation to increase the price to them of what is a prime necessity when they make their home in the Northwest. The very first requirement of homestead regulations is that a man shall have a house built. He must have a habitable house built; and it is well known that for a habitable house in that country you need a large quantity of lumber. I remember that on one occasion the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was careful to spread on the records of this House that he had a house on his large holding that he had built for $80. I think he will admit it would have cost him much more if $2 a thousand had been added to the price of the lumber used. And I think he will not say that he could build a house of a warm kind for any such sum.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. gentleman point out how putting a duty on American lumber is going to increase the cost of lumber to the consumer? If he will break up the monopoly that he has in the west under free trade, he may be able to get the price of lumber reduced and this he can do by putting on a duty.

Mr. KNOWLES. This is not to be a long discussion, so the hon. gentleman will not expect me to go into a consideration of the great economic question of how protection increases prices. I will not go into that question further than to give my own statement that protection does increase prices. I can only say that I will give my vote and voice on this basis. I believe that the people in my part of the country are convinced as I am that protection does enhance prices. I may venture into the discussion so far as to ask the hon. member a question: If protection is not going to make a better market for his friends in the lumber business on whose behalf he speaks, what good will it do to them? There will not be more lumber consumed; there will not be a larger market; on the contrary there will be less consumed by reason of the increased price which I conted will be the result of the duty. One reason why we are always afraid of the men engaged in lumbering is that there is such danger that they will become combinsters, and I deliberately state that protection is the mother of trusts and combines. Tariffs breed trusts, and if there is one thing in which there should be no trust, that thing is lumber. For my part, I am against protection from start to finish, protection is to me an abomination. I support the Liberal party because of the two parties it is the one that favours the lower duties. But if a strong party decidedly devoted to free trade were to arise, I would be a supporter of that party, regarding its tariff policy. In this House, as representing my constituents, I believe I serve them best by supporting the party that goes the furthest in granting a low tariff. There can, therefore, in my humble opinion, be no reason for this increase of duty from the standpoint of the lumber industry, which is prosperous, whose men as a rule are wealthy men—you will find that in this city, where we are detained day after day and month after month, the wealthy men are those engaged in lumbering; the prosperous people of the Northwest, those spoken of as millionaires by hon. members opposite are lumbermen; the British Columbia lumbermen have been very prosperous for some years past. I think the time is very ill-advised in asking for this increase. Our friends opposite deliberately placed themselves on record some years ago as being in favour of a duty of $2 a thousand on lumber which the lumbermen and their associations agitated for so strongly, but I am glad to say so unsuccessfully when they approached the present government which has maintained the low tariff.

INFRACTIONS OF INLAND REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). I desire to bring to the attention of the House a matter which has already been partially discussed—the manner in which the Inland Revenue Department has conducted the business of inspecting tobacco factories. A few days ago, I brought to the attention of the House certain infractions of the regulations concerning the manufacture of tobacco. I wish to-night to take this matter up where I left off before. I was prevented from proceeding on that occasion because it was contended by members on the government side of the House that I was not in order in the discussion, as this is a matter relating to the inland revenue while the item then before us is related to the customs.

As this is a matter of some importance I think it my duty to bring the whole correspondence to the attention of the House. There is a duty on imported tobacco of 10 cents per pound; the excise duty is 25 cents per pound on imported; on combination tobacco manufactured 5 cents per pound, and on Canadian tobacco 5 cents per pound. The case I refer to was the alleged infraction of the Inland Revenue Act and of the regulations thereunder, by the firm of T. B. and D. J. Riley, of the city of Charlottetown. It was alleged that this firm had during the course of four years or longer—although they had two licenses, one for an imported leaf factory and one for a combination leaf factory—been in the habit of buying stamps for imported tobacco leaf alone and that they had been during all these four years committing frauds against the revenue of Canada by cutting stamps in two and putting half stamps upon the caddies of tobacco which they sold. It is clear that if a person commits this offence he is guilty of a criminal act, and if such an infraction of the law be drawn to the attention of the officers of the Crown it is the duty of the inland revenue officers to take such proceedings as the law provides to punish the guilty parties. It is laid down in the Criminal Code, section 479:

479. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to 14 years' imprisonment who—

(e) fraudulently mutilates any such stamp with intent that any use should be made of any part of such stamp; or

(f) fraudulently fixes or places upon any material, or upon any stamp aforesaid, any stamp or part of a stamp which, whether fraudulently or not, has been cut, torn or in any other way removed from any other material or out of or from any other stamp; or

(g) fraudulently erases, or otherwise, either really or apparently, removes, from any stamped material any name, sum, date, or other matter or thing thereon written, with the intent that any use should be made of the stamp upon such material; or

(h) knowingly and without lawful excuse, the proof whereof shall lie upon him, has in his possession any stamp or part of a stamp which has been fraudulently cut, torn, or otherwise removed from any material, or any stamp which has been fraudulently mutilated, or any stamped material out of which any name, sum, date, or other matter or thing has been fraudulently erased or otherwise, either really or apparently, removed.

Now, the charge made against this firm is that the stamps they purchased from the Inland Revenue Department were by them cut in two, that they were consequently mutilated by these manufacturers of tobacco, and that one half stamp was placed upon one caddy and one half stamp placed upon another. The evidence produced to the officers of the department showed clearly and distinctly that such an infraction of the law as would come within section 479 of the Criminal Code was committed, and yet the inland revenue authorities condoned the offence. They condoned it by allowing the junior member of this firm to pay $200 as a condonation of the offence which they had committed against the Inland Revenue Act and also against the Criminal Code, and the Department of Inland Revenue, accepted that $200 in full requital of the offence which these men committed. In order to make this matter more clear I will read the regulations governing the manner in which officers of the Inland Revenue Department are required to conduct themselves in regard to the manufacture of tobacco and the inspection of the manufactories. Section 11 provides:

The officer in charge of each tobacco or cigar manufactory shall keep a record of the weight of all packages of raw leaf or other raw material received by the manufacturers. The entry shall be made in a book provided by the department for that purpose.

Not only is the officer in charge of the manufactory bound to keep a record of every brand of tobacco which goes into such manufactory, but the man who conducts the factory must keep a record also; and section 44 of the Inland Revenue Act provides:

Every distiller, compounder, malster, brewer, tobacco manufacturer, cigar manufacturer, bonded manufacturer or other manufacturer, who is required to take out a license under this Act, or who carries on any business subject to excise, shall, in addition to the books, accounts and papers hereinafter specially mentioned, keep on and within the premises covered by the license issued to such manufacturer or other person, such stock books and other books, in such form and manner as are prescribed and supplied by the department, in which books there shall be clearly recorded, day by day, and on the same day on which the circumstance, thing or act to be recorded is done or occurs, in the prescribed columns—

(a) a full and particular account of all grain, malt, spirits, raw and manufactured tobacco, cigars and other stock, material or commodity brought into the distillery, malt-house, brewery, tobacco manufactory, cigar manufactory, bonded manufactory, or other licensed premises, to which such stock books relate; and

(b) a full and particular account of all grain, spirits, malt, raw or manufactured tobacco, cigars or other stock, material or commodity, sold, removed or transferred from such distillery, malt-house, brewery, tobacco manufactory, cigar manufactory, bonded manufactory or other licensed premises; and

(c) such further particulars as are required by any departmental regulation in that behalf.

The departmental regulation goes on to say, in section 15:

All leaf and other materials are as soon as received and account taken of them to be placed in a warehouse provided for that purpose——

That is, that the officer of the department shall take an account of them and that account shall also be recorded as provided by section 44 of the Inland Revenue Act, in the books of the manufactory:

To be placed in a warehouse provided for that purpose and secured by Crown lock, the key thereof being in the possession of the officer in charge.

Then it goes on to show in section 36 of the regulations what the duties of the officers are. It is provided that every tobacco manufactory in this country must have an officer in charge who shall look after it and see that all the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act and the regulations made under it by the Governor in Council have been complied with. Section 36 of the regulations provide:

It is the duty of every officer in charge of any tobacco or cigar manufactory to see that no greater quantity of tobacco or cigars is contained in the packages to which the stamps are attached than the stamp is intended to cover and all the packages must in all cases be full, i.e., a ten pound stamp must not be placed on a package capable of holding from fifteen to twenty pounds even if the package only contains ten pounds of tobacco. Should any package containing tobacco or cigars at any time be discovered with stamps thereon for less than the package contains, it is the duty of every officer to detain such packages as forfeited and report the circumstances to this department through the collector of the division.

Now, the meaning of these regulations and of the law is that the officers shall see that the packages contain the proper quantity of tobacco and shall also see that the proper stamps shall be placed on those packages. In this case a complaint was made to the collector of inland revenue in the city of Charlottetown. As was stated here on the 26th of May, in the discussion which then took place, and in the letters which were then read, the collector of inland revenue in the city of Charlottetown did not give the matter any consideration, or did not give it sufficient consideration, and the parties who are aggrieved in this matter, namely, the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, who are tobacco manufacturers in the city of Charlottetown, complain that they are not receiving justice at the hands of the officers of the Inland Revenue Department. After they had informed them that to their own knowledge many breaches of these regulations had been committed, they were compelled to go to the collector of customs of Charlottetown, Mr. W. B. Robertson. Mr. Robertson found that an infraction of the law had been committed by the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley. He found the evidence of the breach of the law at the store of Mr. W. A. Poole, Lower Montague, in King's County. Mr. Robertson reported the fact to the commissioner of customs in the city of Ottawa, and asked him if he would have his permission to investigate the matter. The commissioner gave his permission, and Mr. Robertson then investigated the matter and reported to the commissioner of customs in Ottawa. He also sent the declarations of Mr. Donald Nicholson and of Mr. Harnett, which set out a large number of infractions of the law which had been committed, or which had been alleged to have been committed by this firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley—something like fifteen or sixteen. Notwithstanding this fact and the fact that Mr. Harnett had reported the matter to the officers of the Inland Revenue Department, he received no satisfaction from them, and he was compelled to go to the collector of customs, who was not the proper officer to report the matter to; but when the collector of customs received the sanction of the commissioner of customs to investigate, and did investigate, and found that these allegations were worthy of investigation, and so reported to his department, the commissioner of customs, after the declarations of Mr. Nicholson and Mr. Harnett had come to Ottawa, reported to Mr. Gerald, the deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, and Mr. Gerald sent one of his officers, Mr. Burke, who has supervision of the factories in the maritime provinces, to Charlottetown. He went there and found no infraction of the law. The next man sent there was Mr. Fitzgerald, who did not report that any infraction of the law had been committed. Still, these gentlemen, who knew that an infraction of the law had been committed, persisted in their efforts to obtain justice at the hands of the government, particularly the Inland Revenue Department, and they requested through the collector of customs at Charlottetown that another investigation be made. The Inland Revenue Department then sent Mr. Caven, of Montreal, an officer of the Inland Revenue Department, to the city of Charlottetown to see if there was any truth in the reports which had been declared by Mr. Nicholson and Mr. Harnett with reference to these alleged infractions of the law. Before Mr. Caven went down, I presume that Messrs. Riley found out that an investigation was to take place, one perhaps more severe than the two previous ones, and they saw fit to send up to the department the sum of $200. This is the letter which Mr. D. J. Riley, the junior member of that firm, sent to the department at Ottawa with the $200:

> I hereby abandon the sum of $200, deposited with Mr. S. C. Nash, collector of inland revenue, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. This abandonment is made under section 136 of the Inland Revenue Act.

That letter is dated Charlottetown, October 10, 1907. Before this document was signed by D. J. Riley, and before the money was paid to Mr. Nash, it was positively declared, under the Act relating to extra judicial oaths, before Mr. Robertson, the collector of customs in Charlottetown, that these men had committed not only an infraction of the Inland Revenue Act in not having placed stamps upon some of the tobacco they sold, but also an infraction of the Criminal Code, in having mutilated the stamp, that offence coming under section 479 for which they were liable to imprisonment for 14 years in the penitentiary. Nothwithstanding that fact, the Inland Revenue Department accepted this $200 in full condonation of the offence of these gentlemen. After this money had been paid and had been accepted by the department, Mr. Caven sent in his report. The money was paid on the 10th of October, and Mr. Caven made his report on the 17th of October. His letter containing that report is as follows:

> Sir,—I beg to report that in accordance with instructions I visited Charlottetown and inquired into the irregularities complained of in stamping tobacco in factory of D. J. Riley. Mr. Nash the collector informed me that Mr. Burke, the inspector, had been on the island, but was unable to find any goods improperly stamped and later he sent one of his officers from St. John who went over to the island and examined the tobacco in stores. He, I was told, found the stamping had all been done in a regular manner.

Here is a misstatement on the face of this letter, because there is no factory of D. J. Riley. The factory was the factory of T. B. & D. J. Riley. Why he put in the name of D. J Riley alone I do not know. The Inland Revenue Department knew that the two men were partners in this business, that a license had been issued to them both, that stamps had been issued to them both. Mr. Caven goes on to say :

I saw Mr. D. Nicholson, who complained of the irregularities and he told me his attention was drawn to it by the fact that Mr. D. J. Riley was selling at a very low rate. Mr. Moore the officer in charge of Riley's factory was in Souris on July 30, and visited the store of Messrs. Mathew & McLean. There he found fifteen caddies of Riley's tobacco nailed up in crates of five caddies each which he had opened and found five caddies with half stamp on each. He asked the store man to place them aside and keep them but the storeman shipped them and ten others back to Riley on Aug. 5. Those caddies were not brought into the factory but to a store kept by Riley's father, and when I visited the store no trace of them could be found.

Here is a direct notice to Mr. Caven, here is a direct notice to the officers who had previously visited the establishments where tobacco was found, and still the department and the officials give no credence to the first report, the department received D. Nicholson and Harnett and the statement of Mr. Caven is partially incorrect in this that he does not mention the full name of the firm but only the name of the junior partner.

I visited Riley's factory and asked him if he would take his ledger and check off the items with stock book No. 2. He said he kept no ledger——

He said he kept no ledger.

—day book or order.

He kept no ledger, day book or order book, and here is the law laid down distinctly, not only in the Act but in the regulations as well, that every manufacturer of tobacco must keep a full and particular account of all tobacco that he uses and all stock which he has in his factory. Notwithstanding this fact the Department of Inland Revenue lets the matter rest at that point and accept $200 in condonation of all the offences which these men have committed.

I visited Riley's factory and asked him if he would take his ledger and check off the items with stock book No. 2. He said he kept no ledger, day book or letter book. All his sales were cash or draft and he relied solely on stock book No. 2. I then asked him to show me entries for one or two items which were in stock book No. 2, but no trace of them appeared in either of his books. On the afternoon of the day this took place I visited Souris and called upon Messrs. Mathew & McLean and Stern Brothers. They gave me a memo. of the dates, packages and pounds of tobacco bought from Riley. Messrs. Stern Brothers told me that they bought from Riley on open account and that Riley would draw upon them at various times. On returning to Charlottetown I with Mr. Moore, checked over stock book No. 2 with memo. of invoices and found that a shipment to Mathew & McLean on May 11, 1907, of ten caddies, 200 pounds, did not appear in the stock book.

Ten caddies, 200 pounds did not appear in the stock book.

Also, a shipment of June 5, 1907, to Stern Brothers, 5 packages, 100 pounds, did not appear in factory books. These shipments might have been made from store kept by Riley's father. Before leaving the factory, Mr. D. J. Riley said he would like to speak to me privately. He asked if I thought the department would be willing to let matters go if he gave up his license, that for some time they had been losing money in bad debts and as all this trouble would come on his uncle, Mr. T. B. Riley, he, D. J. Riley, would be willing to go away from the business. He asked me if I would call and see Mr. T. B. Riley who was sick and unable to come out. I called and saw him. He showed me two drafts for leaf which he had not accepted, for, if the department were going to seize his factory and sell him out he would countermand the leaf order. I told him that the department could impose a fine for any offences D. J. Riley had been guilty of. I have no doubt that D. J. Riley has been guilty of infractions of the Act, but so long had elapsed between the time of the tobacco being placed upon the market and my visit that Riley was able to go around the country and get any stock that remained upon the merchants' hands.

Here is a statement made to the Department of Inland Revenue in Ottawa, but still no action was taken upon it. Notwithstanding the fact that it was reported to the department that these men had committed these infractions of the law and had had time through the blundering of their own officers to go around and take back the tobacco no action had been taken by the department.

The three caddies referred to by Mr. Moore in store of Mathew & McLean were likely covered by half stamps and Mr. Moore now sees he was in error in not taking the tobacco to the excise office in Charlottetown.

I am of the opinion that no further trouble will be caused by Riley as, acting upon instructions from Inspector Burke, Mr. Nash or Mr. Moore see that all the stamps are properly affixed to caddies.

Was it not the duty of some officer to to see that these stamps were affixed to the caddies? How is the public to be guarded against infractions of the law if the officials appointed to see that the law is enforced do not perform that duty?

On my return to Montreal I consulted with Mr. Lawlor, who advised me that in the absence of any proof other than Riley's admission it would be well to write Collector Nash and ask that Riley deposit the sum of $200 as a penalty under section 36 of the Inland Revenue Act. This I did and attach hereto abandonment for amount stated. Mr. Lawlor is absent on a trip of inspection and for this reason I am sending my report direct to you.

I remain, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) W. CAVEN,

Deputy Collector.

To the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa.

I have no doubt that Mr. Caven did his duty to the best of his ability, that he is a man who knows how to do his duty, but that he was duped by these men in this way, that he agreed to accept, or to report to the department that they should accept, $200 in condonation of these previous offences against the law.

They refer in this abandonment to section 136 of the law, and they say, in effect: This department says that if a manufacturer of tobacco buys $1,000 or $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 or $10,000 worth of stamps, cuts them in two and cheats and defrauds the public in this way, he can abandon $200 and cheat the revenue out of $60,000 or $70,000 or $80,000 or $100,000. Is that the law? It is not the law, it is not the meaning of the law. Under the section referred to the government had no right to accept it at all. What is the meaning of this section? It reads:

If any article or thing is voluntarily given up or abandoned by the owner to any collector or superior officer as forfeited under this Act, or if any sum of money is voluntarily paid to any such collector or officer as the amount of a penalty under this Act, such article or thing may be dealt with as if lawfully condemned and such sum of money as if lawfully recovered.

Supposing the government did their duty strictly according to the letter of the law, they could have confiscated his factory. Suppose it had been shown that Riley had committed one infraction of the law, suppose that he had not (under the provision of the law), used the proper die to cancel the stamp, which he had bought from the government, perhaps he could in the case of one infraction abandon the sum of $200. But where there were many infractions, where it was known to the government that for a period of at least three or four years these infractions of the law had been committed by these men, that seventeen or eighteen infractions had been brought home to them, was it then the duty of the government to accept $200 as full satisfaction for all these offences? I do not think it was. I do not think the government were justified, or that the public will say that the government did right in accepting this sum of $200. I think that when men commit many infractions of the law as these men had done, proceedings should have been taken by the Department of Inland Revenue to punish them. They were just as guilty under the law as if they had forged my name or that of the Minister of Inland Revenue, the same penalty would apply to a forgery as to the mutilation of a stamp. Why then, were these men not punished? I think I can tell you, because the senior member of this firm was the vice-president of the Liberal association of the county of Queens, that is why the name of T. B. Riley was left out of the proceedings which were taken by the officers of the Inland Revenue Department. That is the reason why, notwithstanding the fact that the government had issued a license to T. B. Riley, they accepted the abandonment of $200 from his partner D. J. Riley. That is the reason, there is no other reason. Politics entered into all these proceedings, even into matters which concerned the condonation of offences which are punishable by imprisonment for fourteen years in the penitentiary.

Notwithstanding that these men were guilty of these infractions of the law, notwithstanding the fact that the deputy Minister of Inland Revenue was acquainted with the circumstances of the case, he allows the matter to go, not a word said, but accepting this paltry sum of $200 in satisfaction. That is not the way it would have been if Hickey, Nicholson Co., Limited, had committed an infraction of the law, for they happen to be on the other side of politics. These men had been greatly handicapped by the way the government had allowed the Rileys to do their business for years, paying only half the amount of duty, or, in many cases, no duties at all, on the tobacco they manufactured. This is one of the most glaring cases that has ever been known. I do not think the time has elapsed in which action can be taken against these men who committed this offence against the government.

The government took this cheque. The cheque was sent to the assistant commissioner of customs, and, in a letter dated January 10, 1908, addressed to Mr. Gerald by Mr. Farrow, he said:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant inclosing departmental cheque No. 1859 in favour of the commissioner for the sum of $50 covering an award made for information furnished by our collector of customs at Charlottetown respecting the irregular stamping of packages of tobacco by a manufacturer in Charlottetown.

The cheque has this day been forwarded to the collector of customs at Charlottetown and he has been requested to send proper receipts to this department for transmission to you.

Why did the Minister of Inland Revenue accept this cheque? There were many infractions of the law, besides the criminal one to which I referred, the highest penalty for which would be $500 and the lowest $100? Eighteen cases were presented to him which would amount to something like $9,000, and still he allows these men off for $200. When I am through, I hope the minister will answer me and state why he allowed these infractions of the law of which he is the especial administrator, and also this offence against the criminal law to go unpunished except for this paltry $200. A good deal of correspondence took place with regard to payment. It seems that the sum of $50 was due to somebody for giving information against these people. It was offered to Mr. Robertson, but he did not think he was entitled to it. Evidently it was thought that Mr. Harnett, of the Hickey-Nicholson Co., Ltd., who had given the information, was entitled to it. Mr. Gerald wrote to Mr. Robertson requesting that the $50 be paid over to Mr. Harnett, but Mr. Harnett informed Mr. Robertson that he would not accept any sum of money from the government of Canada for giving the information. And he informs me that he does not consider the punishment accorded to these men was sufficient for the serious offences they had committed. He informed the department through Mr. Robertson, the collector of customs in Charlottetown, that he would have nothing to do with the $50 and also informed him that he thought that, in giving this information against these men, he was only doing his duty to himself and to the public as a citizen of Canada, that he desired his action to be gratis and not for remuneration, and also that the punishment meted out to these men was not sufficient. The letter that Mr. Robertson wrote on this subject is set out in the return laid on the table. It is not necessary for me to read it. In my opinion, this case from first to last is a most glaring injustice committed against the firm of Hickey-Nicholson, of Charlottetown, tobacco manufacturers, who were competing with the Rileys and that the punishment meted out to these offenders was not at all commensurate with the crimes they had committed.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister Inland Revenue). It is much to be regretted that my hon. friend (A. A. McLean) did not send me an intimation that he proposed bringing up this matter this evening. While this pertains to the Inland Revenue Department, the matter is one which arose some six months ago, it is one concerning which there was a considerable correspondence, and all the facts are not at this moment very clear in my recollection. My hon. friend read most of the correspondence the other evening when the House was in Supply. I assume that he was more concerned then—and is more concerned now—in placing the facts before the public of Prince Edward Island for political purposes than in any other phase of the question. For there is politics in this, as the two manufactures of tobacco in Charlottetown are politicians, one on one side and the other on the other side. I believe that this man

Riley, guilty of contravention of the Inland Revenue Act, is not of the same political persuasion as my hon. friend.

Now, this is not a matter to take up very much time. Mr. Riley is a tobacco manufacturer. It was discovered—I think the information first came from a rival manufacturer—by an inland revenue officer that the tobacco manufactured by Riley Bros. was not sufficiently stamped. The officer of the Inland Revenue Department named Moore, made an investigation, and found in some of the country stores caddies of tobacco that were insufficiently stamped—half the quantity of stamps being placed on these caddies. This officer of the Inland Revenue Department, Moore, certainly failed in the discharge of his duty right at that point. When he found the tobacco insufficiently stamped, he went away leaving the tobacco in the possession of the parties who owned it, requesting the parties, I believe, to keep it in a safe place or not to dispose of it, and he would return. Now, that tobacco was never seen again. It had been returned to another Riley who was a retail dealer—there are two firms of Riley, one manufacturers and the other storekeepers. Mr. Burke, the inspector from St. John, N. B., went there to investigate the case under instructions from the deputy Minister of Inland Revenue. Mr. Caven also was sent and his report has been read by my hon. friend. Mr. Caven found that three, or four, or probably, half a dozen caddies of tobacco had been sent out with insufficient inland revenue stamps upon them. These caddies having disappeared, it was absolutely impossible to prove anything against Riley the manufacturer. Mr. Caven, the deputy collector from Montreal who was sent down by Mr. Lawlor, our inspector, reports as follows :

I have no doubt but that D. J. Riley has been guilty of infractions of the Act, but so long had elapsed between the time of the tobacco being placed upon the market and my visit that Riley was able to go round the country and get any stock that remained upon the merchants' hands.

That is precisely what happened.

The three caddies referred to by Mr. Moore in store of Matthew & McLean were likely covered by half stamp and Mr. Moore now sees that he was in error in not taking the tobacco to the excise office in Charlottetown.

The evidence of the guilt of Riley the manufacturer had disappeared. Mr. Caven said :

On my return to Montreal I consulted with Mr. Lawlor——

Our head inspector and a very excellent official.

—who advised me that in the absence of any proof other than Riley's admission it would be well to write Collector Nash and ask that Riley deposit the sum of $200 as a penalty under section 136 of Inland Revenue Act.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Could the hon. gentleman not get evidence from Mr Harnett and also from Mr. Moore? They had the evidence of Mr. Harnett, Mr. Moore, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Burke and Matthew and McLean.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Their evidence would not have been sufficient.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You had the evidence of Mr. Harnett before this letter was written and signed by Mr. Robertson, the collector of customs at Charlottetown.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. There was the evidence of eighteen men that you could have got.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. These are the facts of the case. The goods had disappeared and if we had undertaken a prosecution against Riley it would have failed as we were advised. He was asked to deposit $200 and that amount he forfeited.

Mr. BERGERON. Did you not want that advice ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot say. The whole matter transpired before I had any knowledge of the events at all ; so that I cannot say that I wanted advice one way or the other. The $200 were accepted and further proceedings were dropped. These are the whole facts of the case. I admit frankly that the officers of the Inland Revenue Department at Charlottetown did not do their duty. When they found that there was a contravention of the law, or an infringement of the Inland Revenue Act, or a fraud on the part of Mr. Riley, they ought to have taken possession of the goods and obtained the evidence that would have convicted him of fraud. They did not do so. In several other cases of the same kind where there have been infractions of the Inland Revenue law and where it has been impossible to convict the party guilty of these infractions, deposits have been received and they have been forfeited to the department under the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act. There is a lot of correspondence between the customs officials and the Inland Revenue officials, but, boiled down, the simple explanation is as I have stated. There was no violation, whatever, of the Customs Act. There was no fraud upon the customs. The fraud was upon the Inland Revenue. We have no reason to know to what extent, but we have been assured that these frauds were very limited indeed. We have no positive information that they involved more than three or four caddies. There may have been more but it would have been impossible to have continued frauds of that kind for any length of time. My officers advised me that they do not think the frauds were very extensive. In so far as I am advised, I think the ends of justice have been served by fining this manufacturer $200. My hon. friend who raised this question cannot say that the frauds were long continued or that they amounted to very much. If we had had sufficient evidence of course, we might have seized or confiscated the manufacturer's factory, but we did not think, with the very poor evidence we had, that it would be wise to do so. We pursued this course and we think we pursued the right one.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). I will not attempt to take up very much of the time of the House on this question as I have not gone into it so fully as my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean), but after looking over the evidence that my hon. friend brought before the House the other evening and his statement of the case to-day I think that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) treats the matter in a very light and easy fashion. As in many other cases which have been brought before the House and the country, they are trying to cover up the abuses in the different departments of the government which have occurred possibly through the fault of their own officials. They are not, in going after a situation of this kind, getting down to the root of the matter, but they are approaching it from the point of view of protecting their own political friends as my hon. friend from Queens has pointed out. To my mind this case shows an obvious abuse, an evasion of the law and the Department of Inland Revenue have not gone after it in a proper manner to discover these people and find out how many infringements of the Act have taken place. The Minister of Inland Revenue says to my hon. friend : You did not say there were a great many infractions of the law. I find in the evidence of Mr. Harnett, taken by the collector of customs, that these cases ran from May, 1906, to August, 1907. I do not think that the department used the means at their disposal to find out how many infractions of the law there were. I believe that while the minister treats it in a very light manner there were thousands upon thousands of dollars taken out of the revenue of this country and put into the pockets of these manufacturers of Charlottetown, and that not only were they stealing the money of the country, but they were robbing other people of the trade to which they were fairly entitled by selling their tobacco at a cheaper rate than the manufacturers who were complying with the law could sell it at and compete against them at a profit. I have heard it stated by parties who have figured it up that these transactions extended over four years and ran into from $40,00 to $60,000, of which amount the revenue of the country was defrauded. You can easily understand that when it amounts to $5 a caddy it will not take long to run up to $60,000. The minister acknowledges that he is not very familiar with the situation. I can very readily understand from his remarks that he was not familiar with it I have only had an opportunity of reading over the papers during the last hour and I can see that there is some conclusive evidence in the documents that there was an absolute case of wrong-doing. From the evidence produced it seems clear that there was at least collusion with those in high places, and that the government of the country has condoned this wrong-doing and shielded the perpetrators. Under section 479 of the Criminal Code it is the duty of the officials of the Inland Revenue Department to take criminal proceedings against those who mutilate or fraudulently use Inland Revenue stamps. It was shown that, in a number of instances, these parties, T. B. and D. J. Riley, did mutilate these stamps that they cut them in two and put half of one on a caddy instead of the regulation stamp. The evidence showed this fraud to have been committed and the government condoned this wrong by the acceptance of a $200 fine when they had the evidence in their hands that fraud had been committed. The minister has tried to make this House believe that there was no evidence to prove these parties guilty. There were affidavits before this letter from Mr. Caven came to hand of a number of reputable merchants of Prince Edward Island and there were fifteen or eighteen cases sworn to by Mr. Harnett before the commissioner of customs. Surely this was sufficient evidence to prove that these people had been guilty of a fraudulent act under the Criminal Code. Yet the minister thinks there was nothing proved. It seems to me that the business of the Inland Revenue Department, in the different parts of the Dominion, must be carried on very carelessly. Section 11 of the regulations regarding the manufacture of tobacco requires the officials to keep records, ledgers and other accounts of the amount of leaf received and of the amount that is used in the manufacture of tobacco. Section 44 of these regulations requires that the manufacturer shall also keep books and it is provided that the books of the officers of the department and the manufacturer shall correspond. There must have been an obvious neglect of duty on the part of the minister's officers to enable these people to get up and testify that they kept no books and could show no record. The regulations require that an officer of the Inland Revenue Department shall take account of all the leaf that is in the possession of the manufacturer and that he shall keep it under lock and key.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no doubt at all that the manufacturing firm of Rileys kept books according to the requirements of the department. It is the other firm of Rileys, local traders, the father or brother of the manufacturer, who it is said kept no books.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is not correct. It is the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley who kept no books. As we understand——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know what is understood, but I say that the manufacturing firm of Rileys kept all the books and made all the entries required by the department.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Mr. Caven writes :

I visited Riley's factory and asked him if he would take his ledger and check off the items with his stock book No. 2. He said he kept no ledger, day book or order book, all his sales were cash or draft and he relied wholly on stock book No. 2.

He was asked to produce his books and he said he kept no books and, therefore, according to the evidence of Mr. Caven he did not comply with the law. The Department of Inland Revenue should not have dealt with one of the Rileys individually and accepted a fine of $200 from him, but they should have punished the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley who were the offenders. The statement of the minister that there was no evidence to prosecute these men under the criminal code is not borne out by the facts which he had before him, but which he acknowledges he did not consider very carefully. On August 5, 1907, Mr. Nash, collector of inland revenue, wrote to the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue as follows :

Inland Revenue Division No. 1, Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island,
August 5, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that rumours of tobacco being sold 'out of packages' have reached this office. Kings county seems to be the habitat. I have requested Inspector Burke to come over sooner than usual, although he is due some time this month when we might make some arrangements to make seizures. In the meantime I have sent Officer Moore to one or two places to investigate and have also instructed him on his collecting tours to visit shops where tobacco is sold and seize in every case illictly exposed tobacco. I have made requisition to-day for forms.

Question—Is it necessary to remove tobacco seized? I mean to take possession.

I am your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) SAMUEL C. NASH,
Collector Inland Revenue.

This is the answer :

Ottawa, August 8, 1907.

S. C. Nash, Esq.,
Collector of Inland Revenue, Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your communication of the 5th instant respecting the rumoured sale of unstamped tobacco within your division and requesting to be advised as to the necessity for taking possession of such tobacco in case of seizure

In reply thereto I beg to state that if tobacco is so seized it becomes the property of the Crown and if the facts warrant its seizure they certainly necessitate taking possession of the goods seized.

In connection of the matter of seizure of tobacco, out of stamped packages, great care should be used by our officials to endeavour to ascertain if it is a case of fraud or of simple ignorance of the law. While it is true that the latter is no justification for the wrong-doing it is a factor that should have some weight with our officials.

In any case whether tobacco is so found or not our officer should explain to dealers visited the provisions of the law respecting the sale of tobacco and, if these dealers have not been supplied with circular G—155, a copy thereof should be delivered to each person visited and should be mailed to persons who are not so personally called upon.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant
Deputy Minister.

The firm of Hickey & Nicholson were of course subject to unfair competition on account of this defrauding of the revenue by a rival firm and they suspected the officers of the department were not moving fast enough, and so on August 9 this letter was written :

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
August 9, 1907.

W. B. Robertson, Esq.,
Collector of Customs.

Sir,—Our Mr. Harnett has drawn my attention to gross violations of the Excise and Customs Act and I have reported the same to other officers some time ago, but up to the present no action has been taken or likely to. I therefore report same to you now and demand that you take immediate action and our Mr. Harnett will accompany you to the identical goods.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) HENRY NICHOLSON TOBACCO COMPANY, Limited.
D. NICHOLSON.

Mr. Robertson, in pursuance of the information which he had received, went to Lower Montague and discovered that irregularities in some of the tobacco of T. B. & D. J. Riley had been perpetrated, and fraud committed against the people and government of this country. He reported it to the Commissioner of Customs. Would not that be proof enough to the Minister of Inland Revenue that fraud was being perpetrated when he had it on his own officer's report? The next letter is written on the 10th of August and it is as follows:

Department of Customs, port of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
August 10, 1907.

Sir,—I beg to report that acting on the inclosed letter from the Hickey & Nicholson Company, Limited, I drove to Lower Montague, and called on the firm of W. A. Poole & Company, and while they have no tobacco on hand at the present moment irregularly stamped, I gleaned enough evidence from Mr. George Poole, a member of the firm, to satisfy me that things are not straight so far as the stamping of the tobacco sent out by the firm of T. B. & D. J. Riley, of this city, are concerned, and I am confident that the circumstances are such as would justify a searching investigation and trust that all may meet with your honourable approval.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON.

The Commissioner of Customs on August 7 wrote to the collector of customs at Charlottetown, P.E.I., as follows :

August 7.

To the Collector of Customs,
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, respecting the irregular stamping of tobacco at your port. You may inquire into and report such irregularities as you find in the tobacco sent out by T. B. and D. J. Riley.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. Robertson took the trouble to investigate and the result is contained in a report marked schedule A, and declaration A and declaration B ; and I want the minister, who apparently is not familiar with the correspondence, to listen to the declarations signed by the commissioner of Customs, who was authorized by the deputy minister of Customs to make the investigation. The first is as follows :

I, Donald Nicholson, of Charlottetown, a member of the Hickey & Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, do hereby declare that during the early spring I called officer Theop. Moore's attention to the fact that insufficiently stamped tobacco was sold throughout the country, and he promised me to keep a sharp lookout for it.

About the last of July, on his return from Souris, I inquired if he had discovered any such tobacco, and he replied that 'he saw more than he wanted to see.' Viz., 3 caddies of Riley tobacco at Messrs. Mathew & McLeans' and had ordered the clerk to lay them aside as he might require them. He then accompanied me to Mr. Nash and we fully discussed the matter and Mr. Nash agreed to send for the inspector.

On August 7 our salesman, Mr. Harnett, telephoned me from Georgetown that Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company, Lower Montague, had such tobacco on hand and suggested that I see the Inland Revenue officer at once, and I informed Mr. Moore of it on that date. Mr. Harnett returned home on the 8th, and on the 9th he and I called on Mr. Nash urging that they take immediate action and offering to drive the officer to where it was sold, but Mr. Moore being out of town and Mr Nash, who treated the matter somewhat lightly, was too busy, so we called on the collector of customs and demanded that he take immediate action. On Mr. Harnett's agreeing to accompany him they left on the morning of the 10th for Lower Montague.

Inspector Burke arrived here on the 12th and on the 14th sent for me, after a short interview we parted, and he, I am told, left for home on the 15th, and so far we have not heard if anything has been done.

(Sgd.) DONALD NICHOLSON,
President of Company.

Signed and declared before me at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, this 22nd day of August, A.D. 1907.

(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

I would like to know why this man Moore was not called to give evidence. He saw more than he wanted to see, and I presume that the department knew more than they wanted to make public. The Mr. Burke who is referred to in this declaration was the inspector for the maritime provinces. The next declaration that I would call to the attention of the hon. Minister is declaration B which is made by Mr. Harnett:

I, Evelyn B. Harnett, a member of the firm of Hickey and Nicholson Tobacco Company, Limited, acting as travelling salesman for the Lower provinces do hereby solemnly affirm that I examined tobacco sent out by the firm of Messrs. T. B. and D. J. Riley of Charlottetown on the dates and at the places memtioned below and found it insufficiently stamped and noted same in my memorandum book, viz.:

There are cases here running from August, 1906, to August, 1907, during which this abuse was going on. In the early spring of 1907 Mr. Nicholson, of the firm of Hickey & Nicholson, drew this to the attention of the officers of the department; but no action was taken upon it until August, 1907. There are here some twenty or twenty-five cases of conclusive evidence that the Department of Inland Revenue was being defrauded. Mr. Harnett, after going over a number of these cases, says:

About May 15, last I met Mr. Moore, of the Inland Revenue Department at our factory and in the presence of Mr. D. Nicholson informed him that I had seen insufficiently stamped tobacco and urged them to look into the matter.

On August 7 I visited Lower Montague and found at the store of Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company, 5 caddies of Riley's tobacco, 1 full stamped, 3 half stamped and one without stamps and I reported this to Mr. Nicholson by telephone from Georgetown and suggested that he see the inland revenue officer at once, I returned to Charlottetown on the evening of the 8th instant, and on the 9th I called on Mr. Nash to discuss the matter, and as he treated it so lightly, I in company with Mr. Nicholson called on the collector of customs and I demanded that he give it immediate attention, and I volunteered to show where it was exposed for sale. On the 10th the collector and I drove to Lower Montague and called on Messrs. W. A. Poole & Company and was told that George Riley, of Charlottetown, a brother to T. W. Riley and father to D. J. Riley, drove to their store on the 8th of August and of his own free will and without being requested by W. A. Poole took possession and carried away two caddies without stamps, promising to return fresh stock instead, and left one caddie with half stamps on partly used on the shelf.

On the 9th Mr. Moore who was out collecting samples of food called at Messrs. Poole's store and inquired if Mr. Riley had been there lately, and when told he was there on the 8th he looked over the stock of tobacco on hand. One caddie with stamps and one with half stamps partly used on the shelf, which was opened in the end, he, Mr. Moore, took the hatchet and opened it on the side, remarking that was the proper way to open it, and after the collector held a conversation with Mr. Poole, one of the firm, we returned to town.

On the evening of the 13th I, in company with Robert W. D. M. Rattery, foreman of our factory, called on Inspector Burke at the Queen's Hotel, and after discussing the matter Mr. Burke informed us that he had no idea of the seriousness of the offence and promised to see Mr. Nicholson in the morning. Mr. Burke returned home on the morning of the 15th and so far as I am aware nothing has been done.

(Sgd.) EVELYN B. HARNETT.

Signed and declared before me at Charlottetown, in Prince Edward Island, this the 22nd day of August, A.D. 1907.

(Sgd.) W. B. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

The next letter is as follows:

September 18, 1907.

R. R. Farrow, Esq.,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 16th instant transmitting for the perusal of this department, customs file No. 69548 respecting the alleged improper manner of stamping of packages of tobacco by a manufacturer in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. I thank you for bringing this matter under the notice of this department.

Copies have been made of the correspondence and the case will be referred to the proper officer for investigation. Your file is returned herewith.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Deputy Minister.

The next letter is as follows:

Ottawa, September 16, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa.

Sir,—I send you the above noted file for perusal re stamping of tobacco sent out by T. B. & D. J. Riley, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. R. FARROW,
Assistant Commissioner of Customs.

The next letter is as follows:

September 23, 1907.

H. Lawlor, Esq.,
Inspector of Tobacco Factories, Inland Revenue, Montreal, Quebec.

Sir,—I beg to forward herewith copies of correspondence transmitted to this department by the customs, representing irregularities in connection with the stamping of packages of tobacco.

This question should receive immediate attention and if you are, at the present time, unable to go east, would it not be well to place the papers in the hands of Deputy Collector Caven, who is thoroughly conversant with tobacco factory work, and allow him to investigate the report.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant,
Deputy Minister,
Department of Customs.

The next letter is from Mr. Nash of the Inland Revenue Department to Mr. Burke, the officer at St. John, N.B. :

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
September 23, 1907.

T. Burke, Esq.,
St. John, New Brunswick.

Dear Sir,—I am forwarding you my contingent, including Officer Moore's account for the past year, in all $49.80.

I think your motion in sending Officer Fitzpatrick (a gentleman, officially and civilly) an exceedingly wise one; and I am quite positive that the educative work he has executed, in all the places of business, in town and country, and they are many that he has visited, will be of real and lasting benefit to the department and result in making matters go with less friction even than heretofore. There is no doubt that a strange officer whose official knowledge like Mr. Fitzpatrick's is thorough, added to his pleasant manner, has greater effect on dealers than the duties of a home officer, however well needed.

Hoping you are well,
I am yours truly,
(Sgd.) SAMUEL C. NASH.

The next letter is from Mr. T. Burke to the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue :

Inland Revenue Inspection, Canada,
District A. N.B., N.S. and P.E.I.,
St. John, New Brunswick, October 2, 1907.

W. J. Gerald, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—In view of rumours I heard when in Charlottetown in August last with reference to tobacco stamping, &c., I decided to send Officer Fitzpatrick over to make a thorough investigation. I beg to inclose herewith his report, also Collector Nash's letter to me re his visit.

Preventive Officer Kelly went over the ground years ago at the request of the late Inspector Borradaile and the local officer Mr. Moore has been frequently over the territory.

Mr. Fitzpatrick being thoroughly up in the business and absolutely unknown on the island was my reason for entrusting him with the case.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) T. BURKE, D.J.

Mr. Fitzpatrick now writes to Mr. Burke as follows :

Inland Revenue, Canada, Division No. 6, St. John.

St. John, New Brunswick, October 2, 1907.

T. Burke, Esq.,
District inspector of Inland Revenue, St. John, New Brunswick.

Sir,—In compliance with your instructions 'to proceed to Prince Edward Island and see how the requirements of the law and of G—155 were being observed as to the stamping and opening of packages of tobacco and cigars, &c.'

I beg leave to report that I left St. John, New Brunswick, at noon on Thursday, September 12, and proceeded to Charlottetown. Next day I called on Collector Nash and Deputy Collector Moore who advised me how best to carry out your orders. I travelled over the whole island from Charlottetown east to Souris and Georgetown, and west to Summerside and Tignish. In all I visited nineteen towns as follows: Charlottetown, Mount Stewart, Morrell's, St. Peter's Bay, Souris, Souris West, Cardigan, Georgetown, Montague, Lower Montague, Hunter river, Bredalbane, Emerald Junction, Kensington, Malpeque, Summerside, O'Leary, Alberton, Tignish.

I called on 129 dealers, wholesale and retail, and did not find a single instance where I felt that I would be justified in making a seizure. I found several cases of tobacco out of boxes and of boxes improperly opened, but in all cases satisfactory explanations were made.

This officer goes around about six months after a case has been brought before the department in which they have conclusive evidence, collecting additional evidence. Of course this man Fitzpatrick, while he might be an excellent officer, writes a letter that can easily be understood, he visits these places six months afterwards and finds that the tobacco had been either used up or taken out of the caddies.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Order.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What is the point of order ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The point must have occurred to my hon. friend some time ago, as it did to everybody else, that he is referring to a past debate and the very best evidence of that is that for the last half hour he has been quoting from 'Hansard' of a few days ago.

Mr. LEFURGEY. No, I have not. I am reading this because it is more convenient to read from, but I have the documents here.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I was about to ask my hon. friend what good purpose could be served by again reading this long list of correspondence ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. The minister said he was not familiar with the subject.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The correspondence was placed in 'Hansard' a few nights ago.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Some of it was and some was not.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. 'Hansard' will have page after page of duplication.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is not 'Hansard' that we are discussing now ; we are trying to impress on the minister that a wrong has been committed and that he and his department are responsible for not punishing the wrong-doers. Mr. Fitzpatrick goes on :

Mr. JOHNSTON. Order, order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Miller). If the hon. gentleman is reading from a past debate, I suppose he is out of order.

Mr. LEFURGEY. If the hon. gentleman is so particular about reading from a past debate, I shall continue the present debate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If my hon. friend had been here a few evenings ago and had heard the long and dreary reading of these documents by the member for Queens' he would not inflict a second reading of them in order to waste the money of the people.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Such interruptions as this are certainly wasting the time of the country, but we all know my hon. friend and do not mind them.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I stay here, unfortunately for myself, but you do not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I shall continue the reading of the letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick :

At the store of P. McNutt & Sons, Malpeque, I found a box of Empire Company's tobacco (unopened) from which the corner bearing the stamp was missing and reported same to Mr. Collector Nash. Deputy Collector Moore stated that he had found the same package and was satisfied that the damage was done in opening the crate in which the tobacco was shipped, and I fully agree with Mr. Moore in his finding. This was the only case where I found the stamp missing and I examined wherever possible the wholesale as well as the retail stock of dealers.

At Souris I felt suspicious of a Frenchman named Chiasson whose place of business is a rendezvous for fishermen. Chiasson had considerable twist and other tobaccos out of boxes and claimed not to know the law. I reported the matter to the collector at Charlottetown. In the evening I drove over to Souris West to the store of Thomas Kickham who I am told has considerable dealings with St. Pierre and Miquelon. I found that he had tobacco out of boxes and used this as an excuse to get up stairs in the warehouse to show the clerk how to open packages and incidentally see if there was anything irregular. I did not find anything wrong and left a copy of the regulations. Mr. Moore will give both these people particular attention on his next visit.

After making a very thorough and careful survey of the island I can only report that outside of these little irregularities to be found in every place in Canada, the law is well observed, particularly in Charlottetown and in the places visited by Mr. Moore on his food inspection trips.

Collector Nash and Deputy Moore were very kind in giving information as to routes and best places to visit. Trusting that my work has been satisfactorily performed and that a better compliance with the law and regulations will result therefrom,

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. J. FITZPATRICK,
Excise officer.

At the very time that this inspector was going around, the officers of this government, both Nash and Moore, had been around and had sent a report of these irregularities and they had the affidavits of these men in the department. They had sufficient evidence to secure convictions. Instead of going on with that evidence in his department, the minister sent this man around with these same officers who knew all about it and whose evidence the minister had in his hand. The letter, of course, contains nothing and looks to be an inspired article to fit the situation.

As stated by my hon. colleague (Mr. A. A. McLean), it is clear that the officers of the department had in their hands evidence of irregularities to justify them in taking very stringent measures to suppress the wrong, which was not only a wrong against the country in depriving it of its revenues, but a wrong against people who were manufacturing tobacco in the same city, and who were compelled to sell at reduced rates and make no profit, while these people were profiting at the expense of the country. Mr. Harnett, who gave the information, was certainly justified in refusing what might almost be said to have been a bribe to hush up the matter. In fact, there were rumours going about Charlottetown that not only Mr. Harnett, but the members of the Nicholson firm were approached by people who were mixed up with the situation, and who wished to have the case go further. I have no doubt at all which should have been pressed, and that political influence had a great deal to do with the matter, he was very near the mark. I think a case had been made out which should have been pressed, and that the officers of the Department of Inland Revenue were not justified in letting the guilty parties go unpunished.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Customs—salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and preventive service, including salaries and expenditure in connection with the Board of Customs and for the compiling of statistical returns of imports and exports, $239,500.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Was all said that hon. gentlemen opposite wished to say on this section ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think any thing was said about it. Did the hon. gentleman explain the increase of $10,000 in this item ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, I think not. This vote covers a variety of services. There is the statistical staff, the special staff, and the preventive staff. On the staff of inspectors of ports there are 17 officers. In the Board of Customs there are 40 officers. In the special branch under Chief Inspector McMichael there are fifteen. There are five officers in the United States inspecting the value of goods for duty purposes. In the complain of statistics there are sixty-eight officers; of preventive officers there are thirteen, and in the laboratory there are three, a total of 161 officers under this item.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These are all officers having headquarters at Ottawa?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, except the chief inspector, who, for convenience, is located at the Customs in Toronto. Now, as to the increase of $10,000: of this $6,700 is on account of a staff of inspectors of ports. There is one chief inspector, 14 inspectors and 2 assistant inspectors. The salaries of these officers amount to $39,400, and their estimated travelling expenses to $13,000. Some changes have taken place that will increase the expenditure by $6,750 on account of this staff.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that on account of increases in the salaries of inspectors and assistant inspectors, or is it in travelling expenses or both?

Mr. PATERSON. Increases in salaries and the appointment of one or two new officers. The following changes have been made in the inspection staff: Mr. John Kenny, formerly collector of Customs at Lethbridge, has been appointed inspector for Alberta and Saskatchewan at a salary of $2,400. Mr. Young was formerly inspector for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, but the work has increased to such an extent that it has been found necessary for him to devote his time to the inspection of ports in Manitoba and for a new inspector to be appointed for Saskatchewan and Alberta. I think that, possibly, during the coming year, we may have to subdivide again and appoint an inspector for each of these provinces, but that has not yet been determined upon. As I said the other night, we aim, if possible, to have an inspection of every port once a year. Mr. Kenny, who was found to be a very capable officer, was created inspector for Alberta and Saskatchewan. Mr. Wyatt S. Wood, formerly Dominion appraiser in the department at Ottawa, has been added to the inspector's staff in central Ontario at a salary of $2,200 per annum. Counting Mr. McMichael, inspector, we had five in Ontario; now we shall have six. Mr. Marchant, formerly appraiser in Victoria, has been made inspector for part of British Columbia at a salary of $2,500, taking the place of Mr. Clute who was placed on the retired list in July last on account of age and to promote efficiency. Ten inspectors and one assistant receive increases of $150 each. Mr. Wood, transferred from the Board of Customs, is increased $200. The increased salaries under inspection amount to $1,850. With $2,400 salary for Mr. Kenny and $2,500 increases in travelling expenses, we have a total of $6,750.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under the reorganization, how many will there be in the inspection staff altogether?

Mr. PATERSON. Seventeen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is, a chief inspector, and— ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, first a chief inspector. Then in Ontario we have five; also there are Inspectors O'Meara and Lemieux in Quebec; inspectors Macdonnell and Bremner in Nova Scotia, and Inspector McLaren in New Brunswick. Then there is Mr. Kenny in Alberta and Saskatchewan, Mr. Young in Manitoba, and Messrs. Marchant and Busby in British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are there only two inspectors for the whole province of Quebec?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have you not a good many ports in that province?

Mr. PATERSON. We have very important ports there—Montreal and Quebec, of course. Then there are some other frontier ports—outports of Sherbrooke. But we have been able to cover all these ports with the two officers. Inspector O'Meara spends most of his time at Montreal.

Mr. AMES. What ports are there in Brome, Stanstead and Missisquoi?

Mr. PATERSON. At Stanstead there are four and under that port there is a sub-collector at Georgeville, one at Magog and one at Stanstead Junction. At Sherbrooke we have a collector and six officers. We have a sub-collector at Richmond, another at Thetford Mines and another at Windsor Mills.

Mr. AMES. Have you one at Rock Island and one at Stanhope?

Mr. PATERSON. We have one at Stanhope under the port of Coaticook?

Mr. AMES. How many at Rock Island?

Mr. PATERSON. We call Rock Island Stanstead Junction.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand there are four officers at Stanstead Junction and vicinity?

Mr. PATERSON. At Stanstead there are four, one at Georgeville, one at Magog and one at Stanstead Junction.

Mr. AMES. What is the revenue of Stanstead?

Mr. PATERSON. The revenue is $6,229.72, Magog $24,657 and Stanstead Junction $13,123. The reason why there are so many officers at Stanstead is that it is a railway transfer point.

Mr. AMES. What are the salaries of the four officers at Stanstead?

Mr. PATERSON. There is the collector at $1,400, one at $500, one at $550 and one at $500, and then they get over time that we discussed the other night.

Mr. AMES. In other words, the salaries of these officers are half the entire revenue of the ports?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. We have to do a great deal of work with the Customs staff from which we get no revenue at all.

Mr. AMES. If the customs officers in Stanstead, Brome and Missisquoi would take less time in working at elections for the government perhaps they would find that a less number of officers could do the work.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. AMES. I know it; I have been there.

Mr. PATERSON. These are very busy men.

Mr. AMES. Very busy men at election times.

Mr. PATERSON. We do not allow that.

Mr. AMES. But they do it all the same. I suppose they have to make themselves useful in some way, but it does seem strange that four officers are employed and that their salaries are equal to half the revenue of the port.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the actual fact, and if the hon. gentleman were cognizant of the work that they do he would know the reason of it. We do not keep them there to engage in elections once in four years. I am not aware that they take part in elections.

Mr. AMES. I think that if the ministers will make inquiries as to the customs officers along the border of the eastern townships we will probably learn something of their special activity at election time.

Mr. PATERSON. Does it come out about even? Are there some on one side and some on the other? We do not want them to engage in elections at all, but I suppose if one is doing it another is. I do not know.

Mr. AMES. How many are there at Mansonville in the county of the Minister of Agriculture? How many are there in Brome?

Mr. PATERSON. At Mansonville we have three and at Mansonville station we have two. They are all at Mansonville station, I am told.

Mr. AMES. What is the income of Mansonville station?

Mr. PATERSON. The receipts at Mansonville are $236.73 and at Mansonville station $306.18.

Mr. AMES. What are the salaries of these five officers?

Mr. PATERSON. At Mansonville there is a collector at $800 and two others at $500 each and they get over time. Two at Mansonville station get $700 each and they get the same overtime.

Mr. AMES. It costs $3,000 to collect $500 of revenue.

Mr. PATERSON. As far as the collection goes that is right, but they are not engaged in collecting that $236.

Mr. AMES. To give you a little personal experience. I remember one morning standing at the Mansonville station when a deer came down from the hillside and three of your officers immediately took after it and that is the last they were seen.

Mr. PATERSON. You know about that being a manifesting point?

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the work that takes so many officers to do—manifesting?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. They have a great deal of that to do. There is no revenue from it, but it must be done.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many were there there in 1896?

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose the same number.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let us know and we will find out.

Mr. PATERSON. The commissioner tells me that we have not increased the number. We have a preventive service as well as a collection of revenue.

Mr. AMES. What is the staff at Abercorn?

Mr. PATERSON. A collector and two preventive officers. The revenue is $3,500.58.

Mr. AMES. I think that if the minister would issue most imperative instructions to his officers not to take any part in elections he would find that they would be able to overtake all the work with probably a smaller number than he has at present.

Mr. PATERSON. There was the same number there years ago. It is well known it is against the rules of the department to take part in elections.

Mr. AMES. The information has not yet reached that section of the country.

Mr. PATERSON. I think it has.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that the department requires that a customs official in one of these border towns shall give his entire time to the service of the government?

Mr. PATERSON. If the salary is under $1,000, the officer is allowed to engage in other things which must not conflict with his customs duties. These particular officers are engaged in nothing else so far as we know.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister regard owning or operating a general store at Mansonville as interfering with the duties of his official.

Mr. PATERSON. I would be disposed to. Who is the officer?

Mr. AMES. I understand complaints were sent in to the department to that effect.

Mr. PATERSON. The commissioner informs me it has been charged against him, but he denies it.

Mr. AMES. Does the officer deny that he is in reality the owner of the store, although it is carried on in another name.

Mr. PATERSON. I am told he denies.

Mr. DANIEL. What are the duties of officers employed to detect smuggling across the border? How are they remunerated? Are there female detectives in the service? I understand that these special customs detectives get some kind of a percentage on the value of seizures.

Mr. PATERSON. When information is given to them they institute inquiries and if irregularities are discovered, seizures are made. A portion of the penalty may be paid to the informers and a portion to the seizing officers, who in some cases receive more than their salaries in this way. I have tried the experiment of more than doubling the regular salaries of some of these men, and in future while the informers will participate in the seizures the seizing officers will not. I am told by my predecessors in the department and by others that this experiment will not be a success as the stimulus of receiving part of the seizures will be removed, and the officers will not be so diligent, but I think an officer should do his duty any way and I am in hope that the experiment will be a success. I will be able to tell at the end of the year whether or not as many seizures have been made as before. These are very good officers, and while I have full confidence that an officer has truthfully reported to me what he has discovered, yet when I come to adjudicate I cannot get it out of my mind that he is pecuniary interested in the seizure. A merchant may have gone on for some years, perhaps in ignorance of the law, importing an article on which duty is properly chargeable, and these things are traced back, and the special officers often discover a large amount due to the revenue. That is the work that the special officers are engaged in.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the plan which the minister says he intends to pursue will commend itself to a good many people. It does seem a little harsh that a man should be paid for what he can get out of people who may have been innocent in the methods by which goods were brought in undervalued, and I hope that under the new system the officials will be just as urgent in carrying on their business as they were before. I notice that in the allowances made to these various inspectors an amount is put down in all cases for board and lodging. I suppose that is not for ordinary board and lodging in the cities in which they live, but for travelling around?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, that is it.

Mr. DANIEL. Because I notice a great difference. For instance, a Windsor, Ontario, man gets for board and lodging, $257.50. The next is Mr. Bremner, of Halifax, who gets for board and lodging, feed and stabling, $271.53; also. for cabs, $20.15, and for livery stable, $115.90.

Mr. PATERSON. That would be for driving to the smaller ports where there is no railway connection, I suppose.

Mr. DANIEL. The next item is: Mr. Busby of Vancouver, board and lodging, $422.25.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Busby's district takes in Whitehorse and Dawson.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Clute of New Westminster is down for $381. I notice that the British Columbia men are paid larger amounts. I presume that is because their distances are longer.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, and the hotel bills are higher, I suppose.

Mr. DANIEL. Here is an inspector of Quebec who gets a larger salary than the others and charges $482 for board and lodging. In addition to that he has another amount for cabs.

Mr. PATERSON. These are actual expenses, and they produce vouchers for them all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Might I ask the minister what would be a fair average salary for any of the officers who do this seizing and share in the penalty imposed?

Mr. PATERSON. Three of them were getting $1,000, and their salaries were increased to $1,800; but they were making more than that by the seizures.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who are the men who make the seizures? Would the collector of customs, say at Niagara Falls or at St. Catharines, make a seizure and share in the penalty?

Mr. PATERSON. If his salary is less than $2,000, he would. I do not think there are many seizures made at the ports. They are generally made by a separate officer.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose there were at St. Catharines any goods which the collector of customs thought were smuggled in. Would he make the seizure or would he have to report to the Inspector?

Mr. PATERSON. He would do it himself, or one of his officers would do it. If an error were discovered at a city office, the seizure would probably be made by the appraiser of the goods, who has that power; but it must be reported.

Mr. LANCASTER. If he did seize and report, it would be his statement, I suppose, upon which the minister would rely in adjudicating?

Mr. PATERSON. That is one side.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister said that as a rule he had faith in the statements of these men being true. Does he not think that the fact that a man has a financial interest in the decision going one way. would have the effect of tainting his evidence, and that in that respect it is a bad policy?

Mr. PATERSON. I can only say that if I thought for a moment that an officer would make a seizure for the sole purpose of getting the money, I would not keep him in the service a minute. But while I have confidence in the officers, a feeling against the system has been growing in my mind. We had a special officer, Mr. McLean, before whom seizures came. Mr. McLean died very suddenly the other day. He was a lawyer and would go carefully through each case. The officer did not act judicially at all, he simply reported to Ottawa and when the case came here the party from whom the seizure was made would be notified that he had thirty days in which to put in his defence. At the end of the thirty days the seizures officer would examine the whole case and in his report recite the facts so that the commissioner could get a grasp of the subject without going minutely into the papers.

Mr. LANCASTER. What would the penalty be?

Mr. PATERSON. That would depend on the circumstances of the case. If we thought there were mitigating circumstances a recommendation would be made for a minimum penalty. It will be a relief to my mind to have the suggested change made, as men against whom seizures are made have the feeling that they are penalized on the evidence of men who benefit by the seizure. Of course it must be remembered that if a man thinks the action of the department is not just our decisions are not final. Many think we have extraordinary powers, we have in some respects, but we have not power to levy fines on a man without appeal. After he had been notified of the decision of the department as to the penalty imposed upon him, the man has thirty days in which he can appeal to the Exchequer Court. I would like to send every blessed case to the Exchequer Court without dealing with it, but that could not be done on account of the expense to the parties interested.

Mr. LANCASTER. In an ordinary case what would the penalty be? Is it fixed by statute? That is the penalty in which the officer shares.

Mr. PATERSON. We go the length of one-half the penalty divided between the seizing officer and the informant. If it were undervaluation, it would depend on the amount of undervaluation. Under the Customs Act, after the report has gone through the process I have described, the minister may either confirm or modify the decision. It has been found necessary for many years to discriminate in some cases owing to special circumstances. In very bad cases we send the matter direct to the courts. The penalties that may be imposed are terrific; we can fine a man the value of the goods and double the duty and $200 for every offence.

Mr. LANCASTER. In ordinary cases what is the penalty imposed?

Mr. PATERSON. What I might term the minimum penalty would be double duty. Then in some cases we know that is not sufficient. Where there has been undervaluation we take the undervaluation and the duty added. The officer seizing would get one-quarter of the amount and the informer one-quarter, the seizing officer making a declaration that he has paid it to the informant.

Mr. LANCASTER. What remedy has the informant against the seizing officer in case of non-payment?

Mr. PATERSON. He can appeal to the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have known a case where an informant brought an action against an officer to recover his share.

Mr. PATERSON. Then he gives the name, but gives it voluntarily. He would do the same thing if he appealed to the department. It is well known that every officer of customs is sworn to secrecy and if the informant was kept out of his money he would write to the commissioner. I should correct my statement by saying that in the case of a seizure at a port the informant is paid by the collector.

Mr. LANCASTER. In the Niagara district there is an impression among the merchants that the seizing officers make a lot of money. Some people think they make two or three times their salaries by penalties in cases which they work up. It is not well that this impression should prevail if it is not well founded. Another reason why the system should be changed is that the people have the idea that the seizing officer has the ear of the government—I am not saying that this opinion as held by these people is justified—and that, other things equal, the government will decide with the seizing officer and to secure the revenue for the country. They consider this a heavier imposition than should be made. If the minister could give the facts——

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. If the hon. member will consult page F—53 of the Auditor General's Report for 1907, he will find the figures. For instance, at Bridgeburg, where there are a good many seizures, one officer got $74.67 and others different amounts, as $110.30, $2.92, $28.44, $29.03, $18.55, $18.54. Then, take the hon. gentleman's own town, St. Catharines——

Mr. LANCASTER. Not much smuggling there.

Mr. PATERSON——one officer got $4.50, another $17.25, another $11.56, another $4.66, and so on.

Mr. LANCASTER. You will not find much in St. Catharines. They are very law-abiding.

Mr. PATERSON. I see that at Niagara Falls, the collector got $167.50, and other officers $1.08, $2.50, $10.50, $4.23. The amounts for the informers are found here too. In one case the officer appears to have received nothing and the informer $167.50.

Mr. DANIEL. At page F—55 it is shown that the sum of $562.50 went to the informer and there was nothing for the seizing officer.

Mr. PATERSON. That was in St. John ?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes. In other cases there are amounts of $143.13, $57.10, $12.50, $12.69, $140.63 going to the seizing officer when nothing goes to the informer. I notice that another column is headed 'Collector's Commission.' Do the collectors get commission on these seizures ?

Mr. PATERSON. Under an old rule, 5 per cent of the seizure amount goes to the collector where the salary is not more than $2,000. In these port seizures, the fines were not so much. The cases where the fines were large, and in which I am now making a change, were those covered by the officers of this special branch, the transactions of large firms, running back two or three years would call for investigation by one of the special officers, who are clever men, and who would sometimes work for months unravelling accounts. The result would be a fine and maybe a very heavy one. It was in these cases that the officers would make more than double—sometimes treble—their salary. As I have said, I am doubling their salary and am going to try and get along with giving a share to the informer and nothing to the seizing officer.

Mr. McLENNAN. Do I understand the minister to say that the increases of salaries to these special customs officials are uniform ?

Mr. PATERSON. I know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) refers to. There is one officer whose salary has not yet been increased. He is a little differently placed from the others. His duty was more particularly to prevent smuggling on the coast. He was a very active officer and has taken part in some of these seizures for undervaluation. We have not increased his salary as yet, but when I get this money, as I expect to do in a few minutes, I am going to try to give him an advance too.

Mr. McLENNAN. Will not the minister consent to put him on the same plane as his colleagues in the service ? Will he not acknowledge that he is as clever a man as they are ?

Mr. PATERSON. He is a clever man.

Mr. McLENNAN. I know he is. I have that from the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. There is a distinction; his duties are on the coast——

Mr. McLENNAN. And therefore he is not to get an increase ?

Mr. PATERSON. Where there is direct smuggling, the officer who makes the seizure will share.

Mr. LANCASTER. In every case?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, except in the case of these three or four officers whose salaries are increased. And, if the salary of this other officer is increased, he will have to come under the same rule.

Mr. McLENNAN. That is exactly what Mr. Bourinot wants—to be placed on the same footing as his colleagues. For years past, he has been engaged in the same service and has had the same instructions as others to go all over Canada in this service. He feels very much humiliated that his four colleagues are increased from $1,000 to $1,800 while his salary is not increased. I may say that Mr. Bourinot is such a terror to smugglers along our coast that there is scarcely any smuggling done, and, if he is confined to what he can collect from seizures on account of smuggling, what he receives will amount to very little. But what he feels most keenly is not being kept on the same plane as his colleagues of this service.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) said that he expected to get this money in a few minutes and to be able to distribute it. Am I to understand that as soon as the item is passed he can use the money ? He must wait for a Supply Bill, must he not ? He said the other day that as soon as he got the vote passed he would issue the cheques.

Mr. PATERSON. No, I said we would consider the increases.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, when the minister was begging for this vote, he said that tomorrow the cheques would go out—that was his argument as I can prove by 'Hansard.' But I understand that he agrees with me now that he cannot do that, that he must wait for the Supply Bill to be passed. He said that there were vouchers for all these expenditures. Does he still say that that is correct—that for the expenditures in connection with this preventive service he has vouchers ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not say that concerning the secret service fund, which is expended under the direction of the Department of Justice.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Lemieux, inspector at Montreal, receives for nine months a salary of $1,687.50 and for board and lodging $222.50. There are vouchers supplied for the latter payment, I presume? The minister says there are vouchers for all the items of expenditure.

Mr. PATERSON. I understand so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Cabs, busses and ferries, $45.75 ; fares, $67.83 ; leather bag, $20. What kind of a bag would that be and why was it supplied to this officer?

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose it was a travelling bag for his books and papers.

Mr. TAYLOR. There will be a voucher for that?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes; the accountant tells me there is a voucher for everything.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an item, pullmans and porters, $34.25. Does he get a voucher from a porter when he tips him?

Mr. McLENNAN.

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister must withdraw a portion of the statement that he made that there is a voucher for everything. We find these officers throwing out the people's money in pullmans and tips to porters. Hundreds of dollars are expended in this way. The minister says there are vouchers and now he admits there are no vouchers for these expenditures.

Mr. PATERSON. You must take things in the broad and not get down to quibbles.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find that Mr. Jones, inspector, received a salary of $1,500 for nine months; that would, I presume, be $2,000 for the year. He received for board and lodging, $600; cabs and cartage, $83.80; livery, $25.50; pullman and porters, $53.45; telephone rent, $27.40; petty expenses, $16.85, making $2,351. There were paid $851 for expenses, made up of board and lodging and tips to porters. So it is with every one of these officers. There is a large amount going out for travelling expenses, pullmans, tips to porters. The minister said that there was a voucher for every item and now he admits there are no vouchers for a portion of these expenses. I would like to see the vouchers for the petty expenditures.

Mr. PATERSON. We do not get vouchers for tips. When you ask the question I can quite understand that there are vouchers for these items and that the Auditor General is satisfied when he sees that there are some charges for tips and pullmans. Inspector McMichael has to come down here and in order to save time we ask him to come down by night. We pay his pullman berth.

Mr. TAYLOR. If his account is certified by one of the officers of the department the Auditor will pay it without vouchers?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. All the Auditor asks for is that the account shall be certified by some officer in the department.

Mr. PATERSON. The vouchers go to the auditor when there are vouchers. But there is not a voucher for a tip. When they give a pullman porter a tip they do not take a voucher for it?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, but an officer of the department certifies that it is correct and the Auditor accepts that without knowing whether it is correct or not.

Mr. PATERSON. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister says that there is a voucher for every expenditure. Now he has to admit that there are no vouchers for a great many expenditures.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member said that if we withdrew one clause of a certain Bill he would allow the estimates to go through in two minutes. Now he will not stand by that and he tries to make out that I made a statement that I will not stand by.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has attributed to me a statement that I never made. I did not say that the hon. gentleman should withdraw one clause of the Bill, but I said two clauses.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the minister if he has taken into consideration the report of the Civil Service Commission with respect to the blue-books emanating from his department and from the Department of Trade and Commerce? The remarks to which I allude are as follows:

In the preparation of the blue-books presented to parliament there seems to be a certain amount of overlapping and duplication. It is difficult, for instance, to know in what respect the blue-books emanating from the Customs and Trade and Commerce Departments differ. The gist of the blue-books is finally put together by the director of Census and Statistics in the Statistical Year-book of Canada, and it would seem to the commissioners desirable to ascertain whether the blue-books issued by the several departments could not be reviewed by some authoritative body with a view to their simplification and co-ordination, thereby increasing their value without increasing their cost. Your commissioners believe that this might be done by, possibly, a joint committee of the two houses of parliament entrusted with the printing of parliamentary documents.

I would be inclined to suggest to the commissioners that while the reports of two departments cover the same ground they are not always precisely alike. I have had the good or bad fortune sometimes to examine the returns of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the corresponding returns of the Department of Customs, and I have found that they do not exactly correspond.

Mr. PATERSON. When in doubt take the customs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I might say to the hon. minister that I have been advised by the Department of Trade and Commerce, whenever in doubt, to take their returns.

Mr. LANCASTER. Sir Richard Cartwright when he was in this House and when he was in doubt quoted from the Year Book, which was different from the report of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could we not have one system of returns upon which we could absolutely rely instead of having two systems of returns upon practically the same matters which returns are not exactly the same?

Mr. PATERSON. They are all based upon the customs. The others are compiled from the customs reports. The basis of the whole is the entries of the Department of Customs and we are in a position to have them correct. The Department of Trade and Commerce, I think, arrange the figures in a different way, perhaps using a different table, but their figures are taken from our reports. As to the Year Book, I think it deals with more than mere statistics, but whatever statistics it has appertaining to the trade and commerce of the country must come from us. We are in a position to get the actual facts, no other department is, and we have the statistical staff here in order to compile the statistics and get out a monthly report. At the end of August we can give you the trade for July. We have, I think, the most accurate and up to date statistics of any nation in the world.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reports of the Trade and Commerce Department are not of much use as far as I can gather from the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. I would not say that, but we must be right.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the sub-collectors in Manitoba paid by salary or commission or both?

Mr. PATERSON. By salary in most of the cases, but in some cases where we have postmasters with power to collect on postal packages they are paid by commission.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the minister received any complaints as to the methods pursued by these sub-collectors in Manitoba in dealing with the public?

Mr. PATERSON. Occasionally there are complaints, but they are not due to the fault of the officers. In some cases we attend to them. Some of our friends from other countries, especially from the old country where they are not accustomed to customs troubles, do not know how to make the entry for articles which come out to them, a broker does it for them and then there is a broker's fee charged on the bill and they want to know how it is that the duty is so much and the fee is so much more. We have to write and find out the facts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is it absolutely necessary to have a broker?

Mr. PATERSON. With the view of doing away with this annoyance we have instructed our collectors to make out entries if the parties themselves do not know how to make them out for settlers' effects. We do not allow the officers to make entries out for the public. That is our rule, and we think it is a safe one. In the case of settlers' effects we allow the officers to make out the entries when the settlers do not know how to make them out themselves.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I have been informed that a sub-collector has asked a citizen to allow his name to be used as an agent and then the fee would be retained if not directly by the sub-collector, through another member of his family. I do not say this occurs now, but I am informed by a gentleman who allowed his name to be utilized for that purpose that it has occurred. I wish to state to the minister that with regard to the sub-collector at Neepawa there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction not only among the old country people, but among our own Canadian citizens. I do not know whether the Minister of Customs agrees with the ex-Minister of Railways that education is a disadvantage in the Civil Service, but the education of some of these officials, in civility, will stand a good deal of improvement. This particular sub-collector has been to my own knowledge very arrogant in his dealings with the public ; if not to the people in his own town, certainly with the outside public. There has been a great deal of delay in customs mail coming through the post office, and I am told people have received invoices three or four weeks before the material would get to the post office. The postmaster has told me that the reason is that the sub-collector will retain in his office the dutiable mail until he has sufficient gathered to fill a mail bag. This is a great hardship to many people who want their goods immediately. Ladies and gentlemen have made complaints to me with regard to this. In some instances the correspondence has been replied to in anything but a civil manner by the sub-collector, and in many instances he has not replied to the correspondence at all. When I was home at Easter I was particularly asked to bring this matter to the attention of the minister. The complaint does not come from one or two sore heads but is universal. I do not know that I have ever heard an officer so complained of as this officer at Neepawa is in regard to his dealings with the public. The complainants cannot be all wrong and the officer right. I will give one illustration : A Canadian boy graduated in medicine, went to New York, took with him an overcoat of splendid material and in good repair, which was an heirloom in the family ; he put in a year or two in the New York hospitals and he returned to enter into partnership with me in Manitoba. When he was leaving New York he left his overcoat behind and sent for it afterwards. It came to Neepawa through the customs and he was informed that a certain amount of duty would be levied on it. He explained it was Canadian made, that it had been in the family for years, that he had not room in his trunk for it when he was leaving New York, but the sub-collector at Neepawa said he would have to pay so much duty. Again the sub-collector was written to but he insisted in holding up the article for quite a large amount of duty. I brought the matter to the attention of the minister and he overruled the sub-collector, as he has in several instances which I have brought to his notice. I do not think any officer who is intelligent would make such a mistake as this sub-collector made, and it is only one of many instances of that sort. If the minister reads a curtain lecture to this gentleman it will, I believe, make him more civil in his dealings with the public. The complaints against him are loud and numerous.

Mr. PATERSON. We are all servants of the public and the department strives in every way to impress on the officers the necessity for civility and courtesy even though sometimes their temper may be pretty well tried by some peculiar people they occasionally have to deal with. Let me tell my hon. friend that under the circumstances he has mentioned the sub-collector at Neepawa was not at liberty to do anything else than he did. When the hon. gentleman says we overruled the sub-collector, I wish to point out that we have the power to do so, but we do not give the power to the officer to act on his own discretion. If we allowed officers to take this discretion the door would be left open to serious abuses, as the hon. gentleman will see on reflection. These cases have been reported to us, and if we satisfy ourselves as to the correctness of the representations made we act accordingly. We don't want any delay in the customs service or any want of courtesy on the part of the officers, and we will have this matter looked into.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). A declaration was ready to be submitted to the sub-collector, that the overcoat was Canadian made and he should not have held it up to duty.

Mr. PATERSON. I would like to have some of these rules relaxed, but if my hon. friend were administering the customs he would see the danger of any relaxation. When the first tariff was introduced, I persuaded the Minister of Finance to put in a provision that any article less than 50 cents in value should come in free of duty and this would save us a great deal of trouble, but my predecessor in the office, Mr. Clarke Wallace, denounced that provision and pointed out that a man in Ottawa could simply write to Ogdensburg and order 50 cents worth of cigarettes every morning and thus evade the payment of duty. We saw the danger of opening the door in that way, because we saw abuses would follow. Some of these regulations may appear absurd and vexatious, but they are necessary and cannot be relaxed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to ask something further about the system of inspection. In the report of the Civil Service Commission one of the commissioners referred to the tendency in the English outside service to give smaller salaries and higher travelling expenses so as to induce the inspectors to keep out constantly on the road and I quote from the evidence on that point:

Q. In the English outside service the tendency rather is to give smaller salaries and higher travelling expenses so as to induce the inspectors to go out constantly on the road?—A. The inspectors are expected to make an examination once a year of each port in their district. That you see it requires them to make an inspection and to be around a good deal.

Q. Take Mr. Bremner, for instance, he would not have any inducement to go to Barrington, or an outside outport, in Nova Scotia in the middle of the winter?—A. Not in the middle of the winter. He would select his seasons for the difficult points.

Q. And the consequence is that by selecting his seasons for the difficult points the collectors would know almost to a certainty when the inspectors would come around?—A. I think so.

Q. If the collectors knew when the inspector is coming around they can always, if there is anything suspicious, cover up their tracks?—A. It would give them a better opportunity but it is difficult for them to cover up their tracks under the system we have in operation.

Q. What are the inspectors' duties. When Mr. Bremner goes to Weymouth, for example, what does he do?—A. The first thing is to count the cash. He then looks over the work of the port, and compares the entries with the manifest. The manifests are not filed in the department, they remain at the port as a record of the goods coming in.

By Mr. Fyshe:

Q. The manifests are kept at the port?—A. Kept at the port. That is the manifest of goods received.

Q. What check has the department at Ottawa that the full duties are being received?—A. We have the entries. The entries are sent to Ottawa when they are passed by the importer.

Q. And these correspond with the manifest?—A. They are supposed to, and the inspector checks them to see that they do.

Q. Would the inspector go over all the manifests that have accumulated since the last inspection?—A. At small ports he would, but not at large ports, it would be impracticable.

Q. You say that in most cases the collector would know that the inspector was coming around?—A. I think he would.

Q. The inspector would surely not notify him?—A. No.

Q. Why should he know then?—A. He may know that he is at a neighbouring port, and that he will likely take the ports in their turn.

Q. Under the system of bank inspection the inspector drops down when he is utterly unexpected, and when there are two or three branches together he does not take them all at once, but goes away and returns again?—A. At the large ports there is a system of check that tends to prevent any fraud by the officers. The danger is at the small ports where there is only one officer. At the other ports one officer is a check upon the other.

Then there are some illustrations given of the results at small ports. For example, there is some evidence given with regard to the defalcation at Drummondville:

Q. How long did that defalcation go on?—A. I suppose some months.

Q. That office was inspected, I presume?—A. Yes.

Q. Did the inspector discover the defalcation?—A. Not at first, for the reason that the manifest was destroyed. It was a manifest from Montreal and he took the last number for the year.

Further on:

Q. It is strange that one of the questions asked by the commission in 1892 was what was to hinder a collector at a small port from suppressing an invoice and putting it into the fire? That is really what happened at Drummondville?—A. He suppressed the last manifest of the series for the year. I think that can be checked, but our work of late has been so hard that it is difficult to keep pace with it.

Then there is a large amount of evidence, which I will not quote, with respect to some frauds practised in Montreal by a man of the name of Hobbs. It seems that he was enabled, by a certain system which he invented, to entirely circumvent the inspector, Mr. Meunier, who was suspended, and the collector at Montreal says he has been under suspension ever since. It would seem to me, from these and a number of other quotations which I might make from the evidence, but with which I will not weary the committee, that something might be done to increase the efficiency of the system of inspection. So far as I am concerned, I would be glad to support the minister even in increasing the staff if it were necessary to make a thorough and effective inspection of every port at least once a year. It does strike me, from what the minister himself has stated, that two inspectors for the entire province of Quebec would be regarded by any large institution of the country as entirely inadequate for the purpose which they are supposed to serve. There must be a very large number of ports in the province of Quebec, and I suppose a much larger business is done at Montreal than at any other port in Canada. I would think that the attention of the department might be very well directed not only to the system of inspection, but possibly to the putting into practice of some better system of check than seems to be in vogue at the present time. The inspection to which we had reference the other evening at the port of Huntington in British Columbia seems to have been singularly inefficient on two occasions. On the first occasion, shortly before the defalcation was discovered an inspection took place, which did not result in ascertaining that the public moneys were being misappropriated. Then, the inspection which did result in discovering the defalcation was not a very effective one, as the minister very candidly acknowledged, because it was not discovered at that time that some $6,000 additional had been misappropriated, and that remained undiscovered for three or four years. Has the minister taken the suggestions in the evidence in this regard into consideration?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot say that I have in the sense of utilizing them. The report of the commissioners, so far as the customs is concerned, helps us very little. I do not say that in disparagement of the commissioners, but in commendation of my officers, who have introduced such checks and safeguards as to leave very little that is valuable to us in the suggestions of the commission. There is that difficulty of one officer alone at a port. At a large port like Montreal, if we made as thorough an inspection there through our inspectors as we make at the smaller ports, it would never be finished, if he worked at it all the time. With 178,000 entries in nine months, and with all the way-bills and transfers and manifests and the checking of the cash, it would be impossible. We have to depend largely upon the checks which the officers have upon one another in the office. In Montreal, while the inspector is there a good deal, and watches how things go on from day to day, we have a very thorough collector there besides. With reference to the defalcation mentioned by the commissioners our officer neglected his plain instructions. or it could not have happened. That is not settled yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr White, in dealing with that, says: 'If the cashier had obeyed orders, a portion at least of the defalcation would not have happened.'

Mr. PATERSON. The instruction was that when a cheque was handed in for a larger amount than the duty came to, the refund was to be made by cheque. The officer in question knew that, and it was his duty to have returned the money by cheque; but he returned it in cash. We have now instituted a check which will make it perfectly safe so that this could not happen again. But, as Mr. White says, even the banks, with much smaller staffs than we have, and with managers and directors sharp business men, are defeated from time to time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think he says something more to the point than that—that you cannot by any possible system guard against flagrant dishonesty.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. leader of the opposition alluded to the fact that he had information that instead of $4,200 that we got as the result of the first examination, it was $5,800. Inspector Busby is here now, and I inquired about that. It appears that when Mr. Clute made the first examination, he found entries that had not been made, the duties of which amounted to $800. He had the collector have those entries made, and the duties paid by the parties for whom they were made. The goods had gone out of his possession but the entries were there and he made him get the entries from the merchants and get the duty from them. The $800 collected went to the credit of the Receiver General in the usual way, being sent to New Westminster, but Mr. Clute in his report to us did not mention that the $800 was here in that way and so that would be $800 more than the amount mentioned.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What was the customs revenue for the last month and how does it compare with the same month of last year ?

Mr. PATERSON. It has fallen off. In round numbers, for the two months of the present financial year, the customs revenue is two millions and nearly three-quarters less than for the corresponding two months of last year.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. A falling off in any particular line ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, it seems to be general and at all the ports. Winnipeg and perhaps Vancouver are keeping up, but in Montreal, Toronto and all the others there is a falling off.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. gentleman decreased his staff ? When the revenue increases he increases his staff ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think we can do that, we have been working the men too hard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What particular experience had Mr. Charles McNellen, assistant appraiser at Halifax, which resulted in his appointment.

Mr. PATERSON. He passed the requir-ed examination.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was he engaged in any particular line of buisness which qualified him for that particular line of business?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not remember, he has been in the customs for some years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There has been some criticism of the fact that he was appointed over the heads of a great many capable officers receiving only $700 or $800 after many years' service, and has now a salary of $1,000. The information which comes to me is that he had no particular qualification except that he had some pretty strong political backing.

Mr. PATERSON. He has qualifications we believe or he would not be there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know what they are.

Mr. PATERSON. We try to make these appointments by merit. But, as I said, if a man is recommended to me as being capable and worthy for a position, I have never considered the fact of his being a Liberal a barrier to his appointment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not suggesting that it should be, but I am suggesting that it should not be the sole consideration.

Mr. PATERSON. He has been on since 1901.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I took the Civil Service List of 1907.

Mr. PATERSON. He has been permanent since 1904, but he was in the service before that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am afraid he has no qualification beyond what I mention.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you know him ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have heard a good deal about him but I do not know him personally.

Mr. PATERSON. As not being able to discharge his duties or what ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I cannot say I have heard anything more about it than what I have stated. I have a memorandum on the subject from a responsible person in which reference is made to other officers in the department who have been there a long time, some of them for ten, or fifteen years or twenty years and who would be fully as capable, if not more capable, than the gentleman who has received the appointment. The statement is also made that he is pretty closely connected to a prominent gentleman in public life, and that circumstance is supposed to account for the passing over of officers of long service in favour of this gentleman. One would hardly imagine the Minister of Customs would be influenced by any considerations of that kind, and thus it is only fair to give him an opportunity of explaining the matter.

Mr. PATERSON. The Minister of Customs is human. From what I understand he discharges his duty well. As to the passing over of those older in the service, it is difficult in handling a large body of men to avoid matters of this kind. You cannot get any man to think that his services are not as valuable as those of another man. In a mercantile house the head of the firm has to determine such matters. You cannot follow the rule but promotions must go by length of service. In public life the same conditions must prevail. Other things being equal, I like to see promotion of the men longest in the service. The hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) I think perhaps knows as much as I do about this man and with the general confidence he has in me he will recognize that there must be reasons why this is right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it would perhaps be a fair statement to say that I know more about him than the hon. gentleman is disposed to admit. The minister has not given us many proofs as to this gentleman's special aptitude. There are many officers at Halifax who were worthy of promotion. I do not think that the circumstances of this case as detailed to me are such as to increase the discipline or the honesty of the men in the service.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you not think he has special aptitude for his duties now ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am informed that there are many officers in the service who have displayed more aptitude than this gentleman has displayed.

Mr. PATERSON. My impression is that he discharges his duties very well.

Mr. AMES. As the minister is probably aware there has been and still is great dissatisfaction in Montreal, especially among importers in the dry goods trade, dissatisfaction which has been expressed on more than one occasion, regarding the settlement of customs frauds by compromise. There has been even more of that in the last two or three months than previously. It is a matter that while doubtless familiar to the minister is well well worth the attention of the House for a few minutes, and I think we should have from the minister a statement of the policy of the department in cases where fraud has actually occurred in connection with the importation of goods. Where a man or a firm is caught in the act of committing a fraud, I understand the regular method is to charge double duty and a fine. If the law was enforced when cases of this kind were discovered, the importing public would know where they stood in connection with the custom service of the country. The ordinary importer who tries to do his duty by his fellow men, who is careful about his importations and invoicing and costs, who may once in a long time happen to have a bale of goods inadvertently placed in another bale of goods and so falsely or incorrectly entered, such a merchant is generally fined the whole penalty that attaches to the offence. But where, as in this case, there is a deliberate falsification that goes on for a period of years and involves a very large sum, it almost always results in a private settlement in which the full penalty of the law is not inflicted and in which the punishment is not sufficient to act as a deterrent or as a sufficient protection to the men who are really trying to do their duty by the Customs. Now, the minister knows that this has been complained of frequently. He knows also that, in his kind manner, he receives and hears, and dismisses the deputations that wait upon him, but the deputations do not find any change in the policy of the department as a result of their visits. In the kindness of his heart he finds it hard to inflict the maximum penalty, even when grievous cases are brought to the attention of the department. So, I risk the bringing to his attention of something with which he is quite familiar, and am going to lay before the House some of the resolutions that have been passed in this connection by the wholesale dry goods people of Montreal and some of the articles that have appeared in responsible journals in Montreal protesting against this particular abuse. I wish first to read, and again bring to the attention of the minister, this resolution passed by the Wholesale Dry Goods Association of Montreal, on June 25, 1906 :

Resolved, that the Wholesale Dry Goods Association of the Montreal Board of Trade hereby places itself on record as opposing in the strongest possible manner the system of secret settlement of customs irregularities as now carried on by the customs, such a method of settlement being a gross injustice to the importer who faithfully complies with the requirements of the Customs Act, and at the same time a strong inducement to those dishonestly inclined to violate the law ;

That this association therefore calls upon the customs authorities to give the fullest possible publicity to the results of all investigations as honest importers are entitled to protection and such publicity is a right which should not be withheld.

This resolution was presented to the minister by a deputation on June 28, 1906. That was followed up, if I am rightly informed—as the representations contained in the resolution did not seem to have all the effect expected by the gentlemen who presented them—in February, 1907, when a deputation of the Dry Goods Association of Montreal visited Ottawa and called on the Minister of Customs. Their grievance was practically the same as had been expressed a year and a half before—that where there were small errors, a bale of goods improperly invoiced, the importer was compelled to pay the full extent of the fine, but where large amounts were involved the matter was compromised by the government. About that time, in further endorsement of the deputation, several articles were published in the 'Shareholder' of Montreal, a journal which is not generally regarded as being unfriendly to this government, but which certainly speaks out independently when the trade interests of the great city of Montreal are affected. I think it is worth while to read these two editorials in order that they may be reported in full, and in order that we may have from the minister a more definite statement regarding the allegations contained therein than has yet been given. Here is an article from the 'Shareholder' of Friday, March 13, 1908 :

Customs fraud.

From time to time we have urged upon the Dominion government, when frauds upon the revenue of the country are detected and brought home to the offenders, that publicity should be given to the fact, in order that honest importers may be encouraged to respect the law. Reference was made not long since, in these columns, to the importation through a resident agent by a number of Zurich silk manufacturers. The charge was pooh-poohed at the time as being wholly unfounded——

Probably, the minister will remember that when the case was first presented it was pooh-poohed by the department—— —the truth of which contention is seen in the fact that the matter has since been compromised by the payment of a sum of $32,000.

The contention of these manufacturers at the time was that they thought they had a right to invoice goods at cost price. This, of course, is the usual excuse set up by parties charged with infringement of the Customs Act. Had such a contention any foundation in law, and were those setting it up honest men, they would defend themselves before a court of justice rather than be branded as smugglers or attempted smugglers. These compromises are a gross injustice to wholesale importers who respect the law, for the latter are thereby compelled to compete at a disadvantage with those who, by defrauding the revenue, can undersell them. But the worst feature is that the government is virtually supporting and encouraging the violators of the law to continue their operations, inasmuch as the fines collected are considerably less in amount than would be the full duty imposed. At the time that the charges against the Zurich silk manufacturers were being investigated, an influential delegation of merchants from Montreal and Toronto waited upon Hon. Mr. Paterson, Minister of Customs, to protest against any compromise being made in the event of the charges being sustained. The promise was given them, at the time, that these representations and protests should have the fullest consideration. Now the charges have been fully proved and a compromise entered into which showed the amount of consideration given by the minister to the representations and protests referred to. This can only be characterized as intolerable injustice, and as such cannot be too strongly denounced. The government should not overlook the fact, as they have hitherto done, that the honest, law-abiding merchants of the Dominion are entitled to more consideration than those who treat it with contempt. Thes fines are not contributions to the revenue. They do not replace the duties of which the government has been defrauded, but are disposed of in some other manner. Now, we ask, how are they disposed of, and who gets the benefit of them?—for, unless some one gets the benefit, directly or indirectly, it seems to us that there would be less disposition to entertain or make proposals for a compromise of any kind. We may mention in this connection that the customs authorities are now engaged in conducting investigations in two important charges of undervaluation, in other words, of customs infraction. In the event of the charges being sustained, are we to expect the continued adherence to the disgraceful system of compromise which has become so frequent and so odious? The fullest penalty provided by the law should be imposed, and with it a wide publication of the fact. The new council of the Montreal Board of Trade have an excellent opportunity to benefit the mercantile community by taking up the question with a determination to put themselves on record and to impress upon the government that what the merchants ask for is not by any means a favour, but in every respect one of right and simple justice.

That was followed, a week later, by another editorial, still more explicit. The following is from the 'Shareholder' of Montreal, March 20, 1908:

Customs frauds.

In last week's issue of the 'Shareholder' reference was made to the settlement, by the Customs Department, of charges of defrauding the revenue made against a number of Zurich silk manufacturers. The settlement refered to consisted of releasing the seized imports on the manufacturers paying to the government a sum of $36,000——

Evidently the figures were a little higher than at first stated.

—which were far from being equal to the amount which the customs law calls for under such conditions. The law distinctly lays down the penalties to be enforced against those infringing it, and when condemnation takes place there should be no hesitation in punishing the guilty parties. Compromises have been entered into again and again, and offenders have been dealt leniently with, on the ground that to enforce the full penalty would drive them out of business. This is misplaced sympathy, for such men should never have been in business. Any sympathy should be extended to the honest importers who comply with the law and have to compete with their dishonest competitors. The merchants deprecate in the strongest possible manner any compromise under such circumstances, contending that such is a gross injustice to them. They have again and again sent deputations to Ottawa to protest against them, but this without avail. What course they should now adopt is under consideration, and we would suggest that the matter should be brought up in the House of Commons, under the guise of a motion for the production of all documents relating to every violation of the Customs Act.

Were this done, the public would be greatly surprised at the information they would receive. At the present time the Customs Department has under consideration two very serious charges. One of these is against John B. Ellison & Sons, wholesale woollen importers of this city, with headquarters at Philadelphia. The other is against Jacob Rohner, of Rebstein, Switzerland, manufacturer of Swiss embroideries. The commercial standing of these two houses, which have been doing a large business in this country for a number of years, is such that it is highly essential that the public should know whether the charges are true. If they are untrue they should be relieved from the stigma which the charges involve, and that release should be publicly proclaimed. In these two cases, as is frequently done, the goods were seized and were only released when the deposit called for by the customs authorities was put up. This being done, it becomes the duty of the customs authorities to file an information before our courts, and thus afford the accused an opportunity to defend themselves and establish their innocence. In that case, should failure on the part of the incriminated to set aside the grounds of complaint result, the commercial community would be put in possession of the actual facts. In giving, as we have done, the names of those who are charged, as above stated, we are actuated solely by the desire to avert from others the suspicions that might attach to them, and also to afford the accused occasion to take the community into their confidence and relieve them of the stigma which a seizure for infraction of the revenue involves. In conclusion, we may say that we will gladly open our columns to any who desire to enter into explanations relating to the action of the customs authorities.

These editorials make it apparent that there has existed a feeling of dissatisfaction on the part of the importing trade of the city of Montreal. The dry goods association, especially, through their president and secretary, have repeatedly put themselves on record with the department protesting against these compromises which are made in secret, and which hang firms up, as it were, between heaven and earth, where they are not guilty or innocent, but whose cases are, in the language of the Scotch verdict, not proven. It is felt that a firm which gets into trouble with the customs officials have a right to vindication or they should be punished. When a seizure has been made without proper evidence and the firm is not guilty of what it is charged with, that firm is entitled to the fullest vindication and it is entitled to have every business man know that the charge was not sustained. If, on the other hand, it has been found guilty of a serious infraction of the customs law which has been going on year after year and by which it had profited to the disadvantage of its competitors it ought to be punished and punished severely, and these facts ought all to be absolutely apparent. But, to have it compromised, nobody knowing whether the firm was guilty or innocent, is neither fair to the firm nor to the community as a whole. Honest importers, men who are careful not to engage in anything of this kind, are fully entitled to protection. When a business firm is most scrupulous in all its dealings with the customs, it is a very serious thing for that firm to be undersold by other firms which are less scrupulous, and nineteen-twentieths or our trade being strictly honest, the competition of the twentieth-twentieth which reduces the price is unfair and unjust. I would like to ask the minister to give us a statement of the policy of the government in this respect, to tell us whether there has been a reform and an improvement in this system or whether the system of compromise is going on just the same. We would like also to know what are the actual facts with respect to these Zurich silk manufacturers, John B. Ellison & Sons and Jacob Rohner, of Rebstein, Switzerland. What has been done, what was the offence, have they been convicted or acquitted ? If they have been convicted, what has been the extent of the punishment ? What were the extenuating circumstances, if any ? I think there can be no doubt that the sentiment is pretty generally spread abroad that there is a lack of severity in the punishments inflicted which will simply lead to a repetition of these offences on the part of the less scrupulous portion of the business community. I can assure the minister that the matter has been, to the merchants of Montreal, a source of very great dissatisfaction, and they would, I think, read with considerable interest what the minister might say in reply to what has been said to-night.

Mr. PATERSON. You have opened up rather a large question, and one which I have already dealt with. The seizing officer would make an investigation. We do not want to do any injury to any one, and if a sufficient amount is deposited to the credit of the receiver general, the party against whom a seizure has been made is allowed to conduct his business. The case is reported to Ottawa and then it goes through the process I have already described. The party is allowed thirty days to put in his defence. The evidence is then gone into by an examining officer who is generally, although not always, a lawyer. Mr. McLean, who died the other day, discharged this duty. The evidence is gone over and set forth in as plain and concise a manner as may be for the commissioner to peruse. He looks over the report and if he approves of the report which has been made by the officer he sends his recommendation based upon that report to myself where it is finally dealt with. Under a clause of the Act the head of the department may confirm or vary the recommendations or he may refer it to the courts. You will have to trust in a large measure to the department in administering this matter, to have confidence in them or have no confidence in them. The disclosure of the names of the parties from whom seizures had been made might result in injustice to a great many men. Some parties have called for stringent measures in dealing with these cases, but when I have had interviews with them and when I have asked them if they thought it desirable that we should make public every seizure and the name of the firm from whom the seizure was made and the decision given, I understood them to say that they did not propose that. I agreed with them because a grievous wrong might be done. A merchant in Montreal or Toronto, or some other place, in whose integrity I would have as much confidence as I have in my own, might perhaps have a shipment of goods and in that shipment, coming from a packer, perhaps there might be a small parcel purchased at another place and sent forward to the packer to pack it in the case. It has come out to this country without it being noted on the invoice that there is a package included in the case. The person sending the case does not mention that that parcel has been sent. It comes to the custom house, one package in ten is selected at random and goes to the examining warehouse. The other nine do not. It happens that the very case in which the inclosure is goes to the examinining warehouse. The examiner opens it, there is the parcel of goods, not appearing on the entry, no invoice filed, no entry made, the goods having come into the country illegally.

Mr. AMES. In that case you put on the maximum penalty.

Mr. PATERSON. No. These gentlemen bring letters from the exporters explaining it was their error. My predecessor in office told me that enclosures ought to be forfeited every time because it was only one case in ten that went to the examining warehouse. But where we are satisfied there is no fraud we impose double duty. Now, as to publicity, it might be very unjust and very unfair to a concern to give publicity, and the member for Brantford recognized, when in asking for the seizures and the penalties he forebore to ask for the names. The best houses in this country have been seized and fined for customs infraction, and if that bare fact were to go out without the explanation it would be very injurious to the firm. In many cases the exporters admitted it was their fault and that the importer knew nothing about it. If the House took the responsibility of asking that the name should be divulged, in fairness to these firms it would be necessary to bring down all the facts of each case. To state the bare fact that a firm was fined without giving the explanation would be very unjust and would involve its reputation and standing or perhaps its fortune. I do not see how the 'Shareholder' gets hold of these things. Our officers are sworn to secrecy. The hon. gentleman says the party was fined $32,000 with reference to these silks, and if that be so it is a pretty heavy penalty.

Mr. AMES. The undervaluation had been going on for a number of years and large quantities had been brought in.

Mr. PATERSON. It extended over three years. It is a pretty heavy penalty but there was no compromise in that case.

Mr. AMES. They were not fined the maximum penalty.

Mr. PATERSON. No. But we did not compromise. We had three times that amount of cash in hand deposited by that house and we could have forfeited it if we had wanted to.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it not a compromise when you had the money in your hand and could take it ?

Mr. PATERSON. No. We adjudicated on the case and came to the conclusion that the penalty exacted was sufficient and there is no compromise about it. We did what we considered to be just.

Mr. AMES. How did you arrive at the amount of the penalty ?

Mr. PATERSON. It is a very difficult matter to determine what these silk goods are worth. I believe one of our appraisers estimated that some of these goods were as much as 30 per cent under value but we have to ascertain the cost of these goods in the country whence they are exported and that is a very difficult matter to determine. We had deputations from Montreal and Toronto about this and one gentleman from Toronto was very severe and wanted the last pound of flesh. Now, we sent samples to this gentleman who had first class knowledge of the business and we asked him to put a valuation on these different lines of silk. The fact is that in some of the lines we sent up he put a value lower than the man entered the silk for. and on which the seizure was made. That will show you the difficulty of valuation in such a case. I understand that the undervaluation ran from 6 per cent to 25 per cent.

Mr. AMES. What is the total for the three years ?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot say. The case is not settled yet. This firm wants its deposit back and they are going to the courts to try and get it back.

Mr. AMES. Would it not be better to allow all these cases to go to the courts and have a judicial decision between the government and the merchant. Then there would be no charge of favoritism.

Mr. PATERSON. Every case can go to the court on appeal from our judgment.

Mr. AMES. The fact that few go shows that they are let off lightly.

Mr. PATERSON. Not at all. Very severe penalties are provided by the law and the Customs Act is very severe and often people will not go to the courts even though they feel they are wronged. They practically have to bring their whole business into court and great delay and loss would be entailed by that procedure. We had a Montreal case which I did not want to deal with and we sent it to the courts and it took weeks to dispose of it. I would be glad if we could send every one of these cases to the courts, but I suppose it would take twenty years in the courts to do the work we do in the department in one year. It may be said that we do it in a rough and ready way, but I believe equity and justice are served. In one case which went to the courts where there was undervaluation charged, the judge heard the whole case and he hesitated greatly at my putting on the full penalty. This might occur by parties making consignments to themselves at the wholesale price ; but a year or two ago we made the law very explicit. We said that where parties consign to themselves, not having made a sale prior to receiving the goods, they may come in, not at the cost price, but at the wholesale price; but if through an agent they have sold these goods to different customers throughout the country, and then bring the goods in at the wholesale price, that is a violation of the law, because where the goods have been sold prior to their being received on consignment, we require the value for duty to be the value at which the goods were sold.

Mr. AMES. Is it not a fact that this species of crime is on the increase owing to the leniency of the department in dealing with it ?

Mr. PATERSON. No. If the hon. gentlemen were administering the law, he would think that we were anything but lenient. We have very few repetitions by the same house.

Mr. AMES. I quite agree with the minister in making a distinction between an involuntary infraction of the law through ignorance and a deliberate attempt year after year to defraud the customs. In the first case, it would be in order for the minimum penalty to be imposed; but in the second case, I do not think the government are justified in compromising. It seems to me that it would be better to allow the matter to go to the courts and have such a penalty imposed as would deter others from doing the same thing.

Mr. PATERSON. If we thought there was a deliberate attempt to defraud the revenue, especially if it were repeated after a warning, we would not hesitate to take that course. But in many cases the goods have passed our appraisers and have been accepted by us, and the parties plead that fact. They say: Your officers saw the goods; they opened and examined them; if the valuation was wrong, why didn't you tell us at the time? If commissions are dutiable, we did not know it; why didn't you tell us? Why did you let us go on year after year? and now your officers come and seize our goods and the man who seizes them gets part of the fine.' I wish I could throw the cases into court; but ten courts could not carry through all the cases and hear all the pros and cons.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Could the hon. minister give us any information regarding the importation of uniforms from England by officers of the militia force? I understand that practically a prohibitive duty is put on uniforms, but that if a claim is made to the department the duty will be refunded. Has that been settled yet?

Mr. PATERSON. That rests wholly with the Minister of Militia. Whatever he does in the matter I have no objection to; but if the goods come in, they have to pay the duty.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What is the duty on uniforms?

Mr. PATERSON. Thirty per cent for British since last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have had some representations on this subject from officers of the militia, who thought it was a little hard and unjust, when they spend a good deal of time and money in qualifying themselves to serve their country, to be obliged to pay a heavy duty on their uniforms. What was the object of the change in the law in that respect?

Mr. PATERSON. Up to last year all articles imported by every branch of the government came in free; but all along I have contended that the better plan was to let each department look after iself. I did not think it right that a department of the government should buy goods outside, where there was no duty against them, when the same goods could be got in this country. In other words, the clothing could be bought in England and brought in free of duty when it might be got from our own manufacturers. Uniforms come in under that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In what position would an officer be who had ordered his uniform before the passage of this rule?

Mr. PATERSON. He will have to pay the duty and get it out of the Militia Department.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What form has the application to take? Has he to get a certificate from the Customs Department that the duty has been paid, and then make an application to the Department of Militia for a refund?

Mr. PATERSON. The Militia Department will either take an extra vote out of which to pay the duty on the uniform and give it back to the officer; otherwise the officer will have to bear the expense himself.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In spite of this practically prohibitive duty, many officers are in the habit of buying uniforms in England and paying excessive duties upon them, for the reason that they cannot get them here.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Yes, they can.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Can an officer get an artillery or hussar uniform here and have the lace and braid put on it as well as in England?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Quite as well.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I very much doubt it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If an officer pays the duty on his uniform and gets it back from the Militia Department, how can there be any protection to the Canadian manufacturer?

Mr. FIELDING. He cannot get it back.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Customs suggests that he does.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the only way it could be done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the minister said there was to be a fund established.

Mr. PATERSON. I said that was the only way it could be done.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Has not a refund been made by the Militia Department?

Mr. PATERSON. I could not say. I would rather the minister answered for himself. Possibly for goods ordered before he may have done something, but he must answer for that. I cannot say.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Was it not looked upon as a custom that he paid the duty and got a refund from the Militia Department?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In regard to officers' uniforms is not all the cloth that enters into the officers' clothing imported from the old country?

Mr. PATERSON. No, I think not.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The scarlet and blue cloth for the tunics?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There is considerable cloth made in Canada at the present time for the tunics. The cloth for the men's tunics is made here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am talking about the officers' uniforms.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. If the officers look around they can get as well made military clothing in this country as in Great Britain, it can be trimmed as well and made as well. This I think is one of the wisest provisions in the new tariff, doing away with the granting of government work to outside tailors and manufacturers of all kinds. Formerly all classes of machinery and everything required by the government came in competition with our own manufacturers. This item in regard to military uniforms was put in the tariff with all the other departments, they are all placed on the same footing. Our manufacturers are delighted that the government have taken that stand, which is only a reasonable one. You cannot sell a dollar's worth of goods to the United States government that is made outside of their own country, and I would like our government to go further and take that same stand. One of the great troubles we have had in Canada in the past in certain manufacturing industries has been the large purchases made by the government from the United States, England and other places that came in competition with our own products. In regard to uniforms I can tell the officers that they can get as good uniforms and just as cheaply here as anywhere in the world.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I must congratulate my hon. friend on his protectionist principles. I agree that it is an excellent thing to patronize home industries and to have the uniforms made in Canada as much as possible. But I am right in saying that a refund was given from the Militia Department for duty paid to the Customs Department. The minister may recollect my going to him on one occasion with a question that came up in connection with the Lennoxville grammar school. A number of uniforms had been ordered by the cadet corps there previous to the passing of this regulation. The duty was levied and I think they were instructed to apply to the Militia Department for a refund. So I cannot see how this regulation is helping the manufacturer of uniforms at home.

Mr. FIELDING. There certainly is no general policy of refund. There may have been some circumstances arising out of the change which led the minister to make an exception, but there certainly is no general refund. The argument for imposing duty on government importations generally, in addition to what the Minister of Customs has mentioned, is this: It is convenient for comparison in the cases of tenders; for example one party would tender for goods knowing it was the practice to import goods for the government free and would make a lower tender, placing the Canadian manufacturer at a disadvantage. Then there would be disputes. A man would say: I always assumed we would have the goods free. The whole thing was left in an uncertain condition. Difficulties would arise. I do not think the system was abused as much as some gentlemen thought, but it led to abuse, misunderstanding and sometimes inequalities in the matter of competition, so we thought it better to say that any one competing for the sale of goods to the government must quote a duty-paid price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do the government import the uniforms?

Mr. FIELDING. I am speaking of the importation of goods generally. The old Act read: Articles imported for the use of the several departments. We found that people who imported goods which they intended to sell to the government claimed that they always expected to get them in free. That led to misunderstanding.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The militia uniforms could not come under that.

Mr. FIELDING. They could under a general importation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are an individual importation not for the government at all.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I understand that in some cases where parties expected to sell to the government they claimed that they expected to get them in free, although not specially mentioned.

Mr. DANIEL. I was present at the State Ball given at Government House. I saw a great variety of uniforms there but among the most striking there were two. One of these was worn by the hon. Minister of Finance and the other by the hon. Minister of Public Works. They were both very fine, there was a very large amount of gold lace on them and they both looked very new.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They could not touch that uniform you used to wear as Mayor of St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. Since this matter came up to-night, I was wondering whether or not those uniforms paid duty, whether they ranked as militia uniforms or under what heading in the tariff they would be placed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we tell you, you will let the item go through ?

Mr. DANIEL. The item is bound to go through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Upon the suit which I wore, I paid the full duty.

Mr. DANIEL. What was the amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 35 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. I am going to make a confession. I did not pay any. I bought my suit in England, I used it for official functions in England. It was a part of my not too extensive wardrobe.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did you wear it across the Atlantic ?

Mr. FIELDING. I brought it back across the Atlantic. I had it made there for use officially there, some years ago, and I brought it back to Canada as part of my wardrobe.

Mr. PATERSON. Did you notice mine that night ? I was not there.

Mr. DANIEL. Who had it on ?

Mr. PATERSON. But it is a nicer looking uniform than either of these. Whether it is a better shape inside or not, than the others, I do not know, but it was made in accordance with my patriotic desire that what can be bought in Canada ought to be bought in Canada and it was made here. If I can get a coat made here with all that gilding on surely a militia officer can.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we should let the item pass now and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works will please retire.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the policy of the government in regard to the establishment of the various customs officers especially throughout the western country ? Is it done at the request of some particular member of parliament representing a constituency or have they any definite policy or system ? Take for instance Manitoba.

Mr. PATERSON. There are a great many requests and I am sorry to say we cannot meet them all. We have them from all parts of the country, from members, from boards of trade and it is simply impossible to meet them all. We write them as nice letters as we can pointing out the difficulties in the way. Sometimes it strikes us that owing to the position of a certain town it is desirable that we should make it a customs port. But we write to the ports of which the parties in that town enter their goods to ascertain the duty paid, and if the revenue amounts to over $5,000 we have felt ourselves sometimes able to grant the request. And prior to that, where there are so many applications, the question would arise how the point is situated. It may be 200 mles from the nearest port, but if it is on the direct line from the port, power of attorney can be sent to some one in that port to pass the goods and send them on. It is a fact that the people of Canada are better served in this matter than the people of any other country. We have more customs ports in Canada than they have in the United States—not proportionately merely, but more in number than they have for the eighty millions of the United States.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose the minister, in locating a customs office, considers whether the port is a railroad centre and its distance from the international boundary. I have urged in this House, and have called the minister's attention personally, to the town of Carman, in the constituency I have the honour to represent. It is one of the largest constituencies in Manitoba, and yet there is not a single customs office within its boundaries. Carman is a large town, the centre of three lines of railway—the Canadian Northern, the Jim Hill system, and the Canadian Pacific Railway. The minister knows that the board of trade have repeatedly made requests for the establishment of a port of entry. They have written nice letters—I have read some of them. If he will look at the files, he will see that great difficulty has been experienced through want of a customs officer there. Goods have been delayed for months, going away around by Winnipeg and even as far as Neepawa, I believe. I think he should make a statement that Carman is entitled to a custom port.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is its population ?

Mr. STAPLES. It is 2,000—a much larger population than that of other towns in Manitoba that are ports of entry. It is a town that has spent a great deal in its local development. Recently it has spent $125,000 in installing a modern water system and electric light. Everybody who has travelled in Manitoba says that Carman is one of the best towns in the province.

Mr. PATERSON. Where is the nearest customs port ?

Mr. STAPLES. I should think it would be Winnipeg of Emerson.

Mr. PATERSON. At what distance ?

Mr. STAPLES. By rail, I should think about seventy miles from Emerson and about fifty miles from Winnipeg.

Mr. PATERSON. Imports would largely come in that way, would they not ?

Mr. STAPLES. I do not know that they do. I suppose that now the Great Northern Railway is there the imports would come in that way.

Mr. PATERSON. Where does it cross ?

Mr. STAPLES. Cross the boundary ? I believe at Gretna.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not wish to say that the port cannot be granted, but I will point out some of the difficulties we have. Here is a thriving town, but it is on the direct line, we will say, from Emerson——

Mr. STAPLES. Not on the direct line, except on one road, that runs to Portage la Prairie. It is not on the direct line of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian Northern.

Mr. PATERSON. I was going to say that goods would likely come in on one of these roads, and if the merchants would give some one power of attorney at Emerson, Gretna or Winnipeg, to pass any goods for them, they could be passed and sent right on. I am not arguing now against establishing the port, but this is what we have to ask people to do sometimes because I cannot grant all the ports that are asked for. There are towns that have been at me for years, and I know I am in bad favour with many members because I am not able to concede what they ask in these matters.

Mr. STAPLES. But the minister should give it to towns that have merit in preference to other towns that have not equal claims on public grounds.

Mr. PATERSON. We do. Minnedosa is larger than Carman ?

Mr. STAPLES. No.

Mr. PATERSON. How about Neepawa ?

Mr. STAPLES. It is not as large. It is not as old a town nor as good or enterprising a town.

Mr. PATERSON. Portage la Prairie is larger ?

Mr. STAPLES. Yes. The request of this town has been before the minister—

Mr. PATERSON. It is only one of the twenty or thirty.

Mr. STAPLES. I am going to speak plainly here. I think the minister ought to give the citizens of Carman more attention than he has given them. I consider that before this item passes he should make a definite statement that he will grant the request of the petition long ago presented to his department. I would be quite willing, if the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is willing, to let this item pass providing he will state that he will grant this request.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When I suggested that the item should pass I did not know of the scandalous default of the minister in respect to Carman.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think the plea of the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) is quite justified. What we complain of is unjust discrimination. In the neighbouring constituency of Portage la Prairie there are three ports, two on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Carberry has a much smaller population than Carman or Minnedosa, and it is about midway between Brandon and Portage la Prairie, yet they have a sub-collectorship there. Portage la Prairie has two sub-ports, Neepawa and Carberry. But there is no customs port at all in either Marquette or Macdonald. Minnedosa is the centre of a new judicial district and is a divisional point on the Yorkton branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And there is no port between Yorkton and Neepawa. The minister is aware that the board of trade has recently petitioned for a port. We feel that it is the same in the case of these customs ports as it is in the case of public buildings—we claim that there is unjust discrimination; some constituencies have three or four and others equally deserving have none at all.

Mr. PATERSON. I will look it up on the map.

Mr. STAPLES. Let us figure this out and see what towns have got customs offices.

Mr. PATERSON. Carberry, I am told, was a port of entry before I came into office. Neepawa also was established and so was Portage la Prairie. Then there is Virden.

Mr. STAPLES. And Crystal City and Selkirk.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And Morden.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, these are border towns.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Selkirk is not.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the revenue from the customs office in Selkirk?

Mr. PATERSON. I am told that it is $1,000 for the nine months fiscal period. That is not enough. Selkirk should not have an office if it is going to keep down to $1,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What is Portage la Prairie?

Mr. PATERSON. Portage la Prairie is $450,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What is Carberry?

Mr. PATERSON. $1,547.

Mr. STAPLES. What is Neepawa?

Mr. PATERSON. $4,500 for nine months.

Mr. STAPLES. What officer is appointed at Selkirk?

Mr. PATERSON. Geo. Wood.

Mr. STAPLES. What salary is he paid?

Mr. PATERSON. $550.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the revenue at Crystal city?

Mr. PATERSON. That is a border port. The revenue is $1,800 for nine months.

Mr. STAPLES. Who is the officer there?

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Kerr.

Mr. STAPLES. Who is the officer at Portage la Prairie?

Mr. PATERSON. We have three or four.

Mr. STAPLES. What are the salaries?

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Marshall, the collector, gets $1,200. One gets $800 and another, $600.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the duty on a threshing machine costing $3,000 under the new tariff?

Mr. PATERSON. It is 20 per cent; it was 25 per cent under the old tariff.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the difference in dollars and cents on a $3,000 outfit?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot tell that.

Mr. STAPLES. You should be able to give me that information.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. gentleman will come around to the department tomorrow we will get it for him.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to get a definite promise from the minister as to what he is going to do about establishing a customs office at Carman.

Mr. PATERSON. I will take the matter up with the commissioner.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister has made me that promise every session during this parliament.

Mr. PATERSON. We must make inquiries before we can do it.

Mr. STAPLES. I think it would be well for the minister to state distinctly what he is prepared to do.

Mr. PATERSON. We will have to make inquiry to find out the conditions and then look at the position of Carman on the map.

Mr. STAPLES. Provided you make these inquiries and discover that the amount of duty that is paid at Carman is as great as that at Selkirk will you promise to establish a customs house there?

Mr. PATERSON. If you do not pay more than they do at Selkirk I will not do it.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose, when you make your inquiries and find that it is as deserving, from the consideration of revenue, as the town of Neepawa is, you will establish an office at Carman.

Mr. PATERSON. You are asking me to do something that no other member has asked. I am going to do the best I can.

Mr. STAPLES. This is a case that has been hanging for a long while.

Mr. PATERSON. I have applications from towns in Ontario that are almost twice as large as Carman.

Mr. STAPLES. I have listened in this House to discussions about places that do not do anything like the business that the town of Carman would do. I did not hear the minister say what the revenue of Virden is?

Mr. PATERSON. $22,900 for nine months. If Carman is paying that much, you look out.

Mr. STAPLES. I have been looking out for four years and I have not seen the horizon yet. If the Minister of Customs made inquiries he would find that the town of Carman is well entitled to a public building.

Mr. PATERSON. Selkirk will be a growing place.

Mr. STAPLES. I don't think it will grow as much as Carman will.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When St. Andrews rapids are constructed what will become of Selkirk?

Mr. PATERSON. You know the country better than I do.

Mr. STAPLES. I wish to know what lumber was imported and what duty was collected on it during the last five years.

Mr. PATERSON. Better put a question on the paper.

Mr. STAPLES. Can you not answer it to-night ?

Mr. PATERSON. I regret I cannot.

Mr. STAPLES. The member who lives in Selkirk goes around taking credit for getting new post offices and customs offices and lines of railway for his constituency and I think this is the proper time to discuss whether his claims are correct or not.

Mr. PATERSON. That will be out of order now.

Mr. STANFIELD. When was S. Macdonell, inspector, Port Hood, N. S., appointed, what are his qualifications and what is his age ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Macdonell was appointed in 1903. He was a barrister by profession and unquestionably a capable man.

Mr. STANFIELD. What is his age ?

Mr. FIELDING. He was not a young man, but by no means an old man. He was in the prime of advanced life. His age will be found in the civil list.

Miscellaneous—printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, &c., for various ports of entry, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds and uniforms for customs officers, $85,000.

Mr. STAPLES. It is now nearly two o'clock and the last item having been passed we should adjourn as we have to meet at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Mr. PATERSON. There are plenty of other items and you don't want to bother me. I am going away to-morrow and I want to get the items through.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I hope you are not going to take part in the provincial election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You will have to tell us what you are going for.

Mr. DANIEL. How many officers are guaranteed out of this vote ?

Mr. PATERSON. 1,600 or 1,800 all over Canada.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is there any particular guarantee company that the government deals with?

Mr. PATERSON. We deal with one company in the maritime provinces, one in Quebec, two in Ontario, which is the largest, and another company in Manitoba and the Northwest.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What are the two in Ontario ?

Mr. PATERSON. The Dominion Guarantee and Accident and the Imperial, I think. They are all Canadian or British companies, we refused to go into American companies.

Mr. LANCASTER. How much was paid in legal expenses last year by the customs department ?

Mr. PATERSON. $851.94.

Mr. LANCASTER. How was that incurred ?

Mr. PATERSON. For the extradition and prosecution of the defaulting broker Hobbs.

Mr. LANCASTER. There are uniforms for customs officers, but I notice that all do not wear uniforms.

Mr. PATERSON. Those who meet the public at steamboats or on trains are supposed to wear uniforms.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have seen some customs officers in civilian clothes, come on trains to examine baggage.

Mr. PATERSON. They should have uniforms.

Expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and preventive service, $40,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) desired to have some item reserved. Perhaps you will let the last item stand.

Mr. PATERSON. That would stop the whole item.

Mr. FIELDING. The several items constitute one resolution, so that there would be nothing to report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will you have any supplementaries ?

Mr. PATERSON. We may have, but I do not like to pledge myself that we shall have. Let the hon. member have the discussion on concurrence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When does the minister expect to be back ?

Mr. PATERSON. On Monday next.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose the hon. member for Brantford wishes to discuss this on concurrence, I suppose you will not have any objection to his speaking three or four times if it is necessary to answer you?

Mr. PATERSON. If it is necessary to explain himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As long as there will be some freedom of discussion.

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot promise about the rules of the House, but I do not think there will be any trouble about that. The fact is, he should be here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister should not go away.

Some resolutions reported.

SITTINGS OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FINLAYSON moved :

That the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts have leave to sit during the sittings of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no objection to the motion except perhaps that it does not go quite far enough. There are some other committees.

Mr. FIELDING. Banking and Commerce meets at 10, but we will probably get through by 11.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then there is the committee on the Quebec bridge.

Mr. FINLAYSON. They have asked leave.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the Minister of Finance bear in mind that the select committee on the Hodgins charges sits next day.

Mr. FINLAYSON. They have leave and have been sitting during the sittings of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will continue with Supply on the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 2, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called I beg to ask the Minister of Justice when I may expect a return respecting paroled prisoners which I moved for some time ago.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I may say to my hon. friend that extra efforts were made to prepare this return in order that it might be brought down as soon as possble. It was found that if only one man was kept at work on it, it would occupy him eight hours a day for about fifteen months. There are some 10,000 files and each file occupies ten minutes to a quarter of an hour in the preparation of the return, so it is a very laborious matter. I have pressed it forward, however, with all the urgency possible and inquired about it no later than yesterday when I was told that special exertions are being made, that more than one person have been at work on it for some time past and I was informed that possibly it might be ready in the course of a few weeks. I cannot speak more definitely than that, but I am very hopeful it will be possible to present the return before the end of the present session.

RELEASE OF AGNES B. KUN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When may I expect a reply as to my inquiry concerning the liberation of Agnes B. Kun, of Sydney. The Prime Minister will remember that I directed his attention to the resolution of the council passed about three weeks ago, on the 7th of May.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I saw what was said in 'Hansard' in regard to the matter and I have really nothing to add to what my hon. friend the member for the riding (Mr. Johnston) stated on that occasion. The resolution which was then read to the House by the hon. gentleman was forwarded to me shortly after it was passed by the municipal council and I replied pointing out to the council some considerations which it seemed to me had been overlooked in the preparation of the resolution. I have not since Friday last referred to the papers to ascertain exactly the date upon which I wrote, but I am quite sure it was a few days prior to the date mentioned by the hon. gentleman as that upon which he had been communicated with. The circumstances, however, are fully set out in the resolution and in the letter which I sent in reply to it, which letter, according to my hon. friend from the county (Mr. Johnston) has been published in the newspapers there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would there be any objection to laying on the table of the House a copy of the communication of the Minister of Justice in reply to the resolution ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, certainly not ; it has been made public already, although it was not written for publication.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I propose this morning to lay before the House as briefly as possible, but yet somewhat in extenso, certain matters in relation to the administration of the Yukon, particularly as developed in correspondence which has taken place between the Rev. John Pringle, of the Yukon and various ministers of the Crown. It is a question of some difficulty sometimes to know just what a man is thoroughly justified in bringing before a parliament and in the mass of correspondence which has been laid before the House and which I have gone over very carefully, it is somewhat difficult to make a presentation of the question without going very extensively into the subject matter treated of. This, from its very nature in this case, touches individuals; it does not in any case touch individuals personally as individuals, but touches individuals as officials of the government in the Yukon, and officials appointed by and paid by this country. So that in placing this matter before parliament and the country I am to be taken as doing it in the public interest and from a public point of view. If it touches the individual in that way I cannot help it and I suppose the House cannot help it. The individual, if he is a member of the government or a member of the council of the Yukon or engaged in public office, has to take these disadvantages.

The Yukon for a long time has been a land of mystery, lying away off thousands of miles from the seat of government, with communications which in some seasons of the year are very spasmodic, always difficult and at the best seasons of the year not very rapid or frequent. It lies so far from the seat of government and the centre of interest that it is only by fits and starts that what occurs there catches the attention of the larger part of Canada and, in fact, is discussed in this House. It lies there chiefly in the charge of officials who are resident there. It is extremely difficult for a member of this House to find out what goes on, mixed up as the administration is between the Yukon council, which has certain powers of its own, keeps its accounts and does its own business and the department here whose action is under the immediate direction of this government and with whose accounts our own accountants have first and chiefly to do. We find it difficult to get any connected idea or any connected run of what goes on. Inquiries for information which is asked for and which one thinks he ought to get quickly have to be referred to the Yukon and it sometimes takes many many months to get it. The interest dies in the meantime and the sequence of events is lost. From the time that this government took hold of the Yukon to the present time it has been subject to rumour, subject to suspicions and subject, as well, to actual information in the way of facts that have gradually come to be established. It was first the happy hunting ground of the whisky permitter and extravagant tales, I daresay, are told of the fortunes that were made and the peculiar manner in which they were made by the army of pioneers in that branch of the development of that country. Suffice it to say that there has been for years a very general impression that the whisky permits were scandalously managed and that they resulted in ill-begotten wealth and wealth too, in no small degree, to various parties implicated in connection therewith.

But, it is not my purpose at this present time to go particularly into that branch. It has been the happy hunting ground of the royalty on mining inspection and it was with very great difficulty that here, at the seat of government, any connected idea could be got as to what was going on under the loose and far distant supervision of the particular persons or person who, for the time being, held that office. Out of that, as well, there have been strange tales and stories more or less founded which have come down to the present day. These things also I do not purpose to go into detail on at the present time. Then, there succeeded from the time that the early miners began to go in, the long, grinding, tortuous, mysterious dealings with mining claims, the history of which will, I suppose, never be written, the history of which, if written, would be a tale both of wonder and not unfilled with humiliating instances, I dare say, if they were ever properly known. I, myself, have known men of the greatest probity, men of the highest conduct, men of undoubted honesty, who have gone to the Yukon, have remained there and have come back and the tales that they have told in reference to the actions and doings in those early days are certainly wonderful and are not at all creditable, not a thousandth part of which has been placed upon the record and I suppose never will be. But, we know enough to know that if the history of that long series of years in which the mining areas and claims of the Northwest were being thrown about like battledore and shuttlecock between the inspectors and the officials were written it would furnish a history that would be intensely interesting, and, as I remarked, with reference to something else, not very creditable to the administration of affairs in that distant part of the country. That, I do not propose to go into in detail at the present time. I suppose it will never be gone into in detail according to its merits, but along with that there has been another and a more lurid illumination, so to speak, of the affairs of that far distant part of the country. It has had relation to the administration and the administrators and the results of the administration in a social and moral point of view. Not until 1902 was any individual found who appeared to be strong enough, bold enough, courageous enough to make it a part of his duty to lay before the government and, failing the action of the government, before the public opinion of the east something of that not very creditable and somewhat dark history. In 1902 the Rev. John Pringle, clergyman in good standing in his denominational body and who had gone to that far off country, began to be stirred in his mind in reference to what he saw and heard and began to give evidence of that to the ministry of the day. It is also well to say that the Rev. John Pringle was a Liberal in heart and in practice and went into that country as a supporter and friend of the Liberal party, and, of course, of this Liberal government. But things came to him in such a way and they made such an impression upon his mind that he started out, in the first instance, for the good of his party and the salvation of the government to make them informed of what was going on in the Yukon. So, in 1902, or thereabouts, he commences his correspondence with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and certain members of the government and I do not think I can do better than to give his letter of 1902 which will be found in the papers that have been brought down. It is dated Bonanza, Yukon Territory, May 27. 1902, and addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., Premier of Canada :

Dear Sir,—I am the Presbyterian minister at Bonanza. I am a citizen of Canada by birth, a Liberal by conviction, believing that the triumph of Liberal principles is the triumph of right.

That was in 1902.

My object in addressing you is to inform you about the conditions here, which are unworthy of us as Canadians, are bringing our country into contempt, and are alienating from the Liberal party many who have hitherto been its unwavering and conscientious supporters.

We have here a very large alien population, the most of whom are clean and law-abiding, but we have also the scum of the United States coast cities. Some of these have the power which money gives, some the power which belongs to those who cater to lust. These seem to have acquired an influence over some Canadian officials, which amounts almost to control. Men are not only known, but also made by the company they keep, and we have here officials in high places who are known to be the companions of those who are the avowed defenders of lawlessness and blackguardism. One of these latter, evidently the friend of representative Canadians (one's eyes cannot always be deceived, and the street has a voice) told me in his own office, that a gift bestowed upon one of our Christian churches was given by him with the understanding that it was to close the minister's mouth; that the church should not disturb the gambling den and the dance hall. It makes me 'hot' to hear the stories retailed of public places—retailed mostly as if they were a good old joke—of the lust and 'graft' which one is almost compelled to believe are the outstanding characteristics of our public life here. I am quite well aware that human society, even where at its best, is not utopian, but the officials in a frontier mining camp, the men who represent, or are supposed to represent, the Canadian government, should be above suspicion—pure and upright—because the law, which is the expression of the moral sense of the Canadian people.

The poison has permeated every department of our life; affects business, personal and public; so that the prevalent impression is that one has to be 'on the inside' or must 'fix' some one before he can get even what is his right under the law. We may differ in our opinion as to the wisdom or unwisdom, the expediency or inexpediency of a government's policy in given conditions.

But there can be no question about this: That under the policy adopted, righteousness, not influence, 'graft' or 'pull' should prevail. You may ask me for specific examples, showing that the conditions of which I speak exist. That is not my business. I am not a detective; nor have I gone out of the way of my ordinary life to look for this condition. The people know it, act as if they knew it, talk as if they knew. I have heard the names of police and departmental officials used in connection with matters which belong only to the gutter. I would a hundred times have been angry, only that my anger was overwhelmed by sorrow at the truth of what was said.

You will permit me to speak in detail of certain things which are of vital interest to our people, and ought therefore to be of some interest to our government.

1. Hydraulic concessions.

He goes on to give his own opinion of hydraulic concessions and his opinion inclines to this at that particular time, that hydraulic concessions. concessions to people in large, should not be the policy of the government; that the individual miner and prospector ought to have the ground and that it ought not to be cut out from him by large quantities of this country being given over to the large holder, the speculator and, some time or other, the great hydraulic worker. He develops that and, in the course of it he says :

My blood boiled, when, standing on the Arkansaw Creek divide, I saw the great and beautiful river issue from the foothills, and remembered that it was in the grasp of capital, that the people had been disinherited; and that everything in this great rich district was to be food for the maw of a greedy government favoured corporation.

He was referring to the notorious Treadgold concession.

I own no claims in this district directly or indirectly, and am therefore not personally interested. But I feel for the plain men who have to compete in locating ground with a corporation which has unlimited money and no conscience; which, even when the miner has located, has a cinch on him through the iniquitous Klondike water privilege.

In more than one public meeting in the city of Dawson, it was stated in my hearing, and was not denied, that concessions such as the 'Bronson & Ray,' 'Philip,' &c.—

Said 'Philip,' I believe, having been the law partner of a Minister of the Interior.

—were granted on representations which were suggestive of perjury. This, at least, is I believe true, that perhaps with one exception no proper knowledge of the ground was had before the concessions, none of the conditions on which it was granted have been fulfilled. I am convinced that men could stake and work, on any concession granted in the Yukon and that an appeal to the law would secure them in their claims; that all of them have been so loosely granted that they are void.

Last winter I went to the headwaters of the Stewart river on a missionary trip. On that great river a number had staked, and others were intending to stake in a district south of the McQuesten and Stewart rivers. Men who has prospected spoke again and again to me of the richness of the higher bars and the wooded bottoms of the Stewart. Three miles and a half below the police post at McQuesten, I found two of my old friends (Partridge and Nelson) of the Teslin trail. They had the easiest mining proposition in the Yukon pan open cut from the river about ten feet deep, with drifts on either side. The dirt averaged a dollar a bucket, in a paystreak 280 feet wide. When I returned, the first item of news I got from one of our daily papers, was that five miles of the Stewart banks, south of McQuesten, had been granted to one Wilson. I verified the report in the Gold Commissioner's office. It is an iniquity, whether granted in ignorance of the possibilities of the district, or because some one had a 'pull.'

This policy will depopulate the territory ere long. Let us keep hydraulic companies out and give the common people a chance, under the now more favourable conditions of living, to work the low grade ground.

Concessions have been granted, I am convinced, not only carelessly but iniquitously; the heritage of our people given to satisfy the greed of capital, without due consideration of the rights of the people in the ground, or of the character of the statement made to secure these concessions.

2. The laws against gambling, dance halls, and other immorality, are either not enforced at all, or enforced so spasmodically that people know that there is a 'nigger on the fence.' Of course, we all know about the order from a deputy minister a year or so ago which was practically an order to the police to keep their hands off. But where the gamblers and their friends of the dance halls and whisky trust got their promised assurance, we do not know. As to the gambling: it was closed all winter, partly because there was nothing in it for the gamblers, partly because the police said it had to be closed. But when the clean-up began this spring, i. e., when the men who had 'gophered' in hills and creek beds all winter, were about to reap their harvest, the vultures, evidently assured of immunity by some one, began their work. It was left to ministers and a few other cranks to see that the law was enforced. Our attempts to do so have taught us that we must choose between the alternatives of thinking that our lawmakers are incapable, or that our law enforcers are without conscience or moral courage adequate for the discharge of their duty.

The dance halls in which more men, some of them government officials, have been ruined than in any other of our protected dens, are run wide open. I wish the government would, for its own good name, either suppress these 'hells,' or at least take means to verify reports, current all over this camp, about officials who are their habitues. Prostitution flaunts itself everywhere; the abandoned woman (to say nothing of the abandoned man) is everywhere; beside respectable homes; across the street from them; beside our grocery and dry goods stores; on first and second and third, and every avenue and road. Unless some one is robbed or injured in her house she is undisturbed.

We have 210 licensed bars for a population of about 20,000. On twelve miles of the Bonanza road—60 above to 60 below—there are three for every mile.

That is a pretty large allowance even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will agree.

Mr. FIELDING. The reverend gentleman seems to have known the locations very well.

Mr. FOSTER. He does. And he writes from knowledge. Does the Minister of Finance mean to impute anything to the Rev. John Pringle?

Mr. FIELDING. No, but I think that the reverend gentleman, having this knowledge, might certainly have exercised his power in another way. He could have found local authorities to deal with the matter rather than bring it to Ottawa. And, perhaps I may be permitted to remark that it seems a rather strange thing that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Thompson), who knows all about the conditions there, sat here for many months and never alluded to this matter, and also that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) only brings the matter up after the hon. member for Yukon has gone away.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad the hon. minister has put in these words. It is the same poor, old, wretched excuse. When such things as these are being brought to light, when the attention of ministers is demanded, the only answer is to make not very nice insinuations against Rev. John Pringle, and they throw the blame on others —on any others—in order to shelter their own government.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will permit me: I do not desire to make the slightest imputation against the character of Rev. Mr. Pringle. If the hon. gentleman drew that inference, let me say that I had no intention of saying anything that would justify it; and, if what I said was capable of conveying that impression. I withdraw it at once.

Mr. FOSTER. It would have been better if it had not been made. It is exactly the same insinuation that one F. Tennyson Congdon made in reference to Mr. Pringle in a memo. that I shall have the pleasure of reading a little later.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 'Pleasure.'

Mr. JOHNSTON. Don't miss any of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not, because I have no doubt that my hon. friend who is making the interruption is probably listening with both ears wide open.

Mr. JOHNSTON. We have lots of time.

Mr. FOSTER (reading):

There seems to be no limit to the number of licenses. The saloon men in Bonanza village, six in number I think, asked the license commissioners to grant no more licenses. The acting commissioner and the person known as Ikey Rosenthal—

Mr. JOHNSTON. What's the matter with Ikey?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a gentleman that I will introduce to the hon. member for Sydney. He will probably be quite familiar with such——drove to our village with the result that at least four additional licenses are to be granted. I make the foregoing statements advisedly, for I have the very best reason for believing that Mr. Hinton the license commissioner was forced against his judgment to grant the additional license.

But the worst feature of the licensed houses here is that a very large percentage of them are houses of prostitution. Many of them run it is true, by people of good character. But a large number of bawdy houses with a government license to prey upon the public.

I have wondered since coming north why the permit system was adopted. Was it to restrict the sale of liquor? Or to make it respectable? Or to make money for government exigencies? Or to make money for men with a pull?

Pardon this plainness, it is the way the people talk about it here. If either of the first two ends was sought, the permit system is a failure. If the last two, it has been an unqualified success. Of all the debauching influences which touch our private and our public life, the whisky permit and its possessor are the worst. Of it, almost all other evils are begotten.

What the officers of the Northwest Mounted Police think about all this, I do not know. But the rank and file do not hesitate to say that when they do their duty, they are praised as the finest force on earth, and then to use their own expressions, are 'buffaloed,' 'thrown down.' Again and again have they raided places running in defiance of the criminal law of Canada, only to be told by some official friend of gamblers, that they have exceeded their duty. The law is systematically manipulated not to protect the public, but to protect and nurse the gambler and shame honest men. It is enough to degrade any force, however fine, to know that where immorality is concerned, it is useless to do their duty that the law itself will be used to thwart them, and defeat the ends of justice.

I have written in plain terms. If I am asked what right I have so to address the government of Canada, I answer: That I am a Canadian and love my native land. I hold that we have a right to expect that the men who represent our government, the officers of the law and of departments, should not only do justly, but live rightly. I have said publicly here, and I repeat it, that there is a conscience in the east, and I shall do my best to arouse and invoke it for the overthrow of wrong. That I shall refuse to be silent, when I know that men who are public servants, are renegades from righteous and purity; and that I shall protest against the outrage put upon us, of having to look upon men as our superiors, who are hand-in-glove with crooks and gamblers and apologists for immorality, men who are not so much concerned about the enforcement of the law, as they are about finding excuses for the evasion of it.

Two years ago I refused to believe stories I heard about the scandalous lives of Yukon officials. These stories were used for party purposes, those using them not so much concerned about the interests of the country, as about the interests of their party. For this reason they were willing to exhibit their country's shame exaggerated greatly, I then believed before the world. I refused to believe these stories, and my statements concerning them were made use of on the public platform from Halifax to Victoria to rebut statements made by our opponents. I was largely in error I fear. If things then were worse than they have been during Mr. Ross' abcense this spring. I was certainly in error, I should at least have been silent.

I write this not as a minister, but as a citizen. I wrote it as one who has the greatest confidence in Mr. Ross' ability and integrity, and my strictures do not touch him personally.

But I have been so overwhelmed with the stories of lewdness and injustice, especially since his departure for Ottawa, that though I have never heretofore taken a public part in politics, I shall certainly use my influence in every legitimate way, to cast out of our public life the principles which are a menace to our life as a people and the men who are their exponents and apologists and the illustrations of their power.

I am, sir,
Yours in sincerity,
(Sgd.) JOHN PRINGLE.

P.S.—I have sent this only to members of the cabinet and to Mr. Ross.

You, Mr. Speaker, and the House, will remember that this was written by a friend to friends, by one of the Liberal party to the chiefs of that party and written, as he expressly states, that the facts might be brought before the Prime Minister and his government in order that by that knowledge of the facts efficient measures might be taken to redress the grievances and to do away with the evils as far as they could be done away with. Well, Sir, to that communication of 1902, the Rev. John

Pringle received no answers from some of the ministers at least, at least I do not find on these files an answer from any of them. The government went on with that astonishing statement before the face and eyes of the First Minister who is the representative of the government of this country. That state of things went on; not only was no heed given to it personally by the First Minister, as it would appear from these papers, but it does not appear that any step was taken at Ottawa to inquire into it or remedy it. It would seem to me that the first thing that the Prime Minister should have done on such an explicit statement being put into his hands and from the source from which it came, was to have instituted a searching and full inquiry; for two reasons, first for the reason of justice to his own officials and representatives if these stories were unfounded and, secondly, for the reputation of his own government and the people of Canada part of whose territory the Yukon, with its quite large population, was. But, neither of these things was done. Those conditions continued and the Rev. John Pringle remained in the Yukon, travelling from one place to another, going ultimately to Dawson City and, at last, seeing that nothing was done, he again adressed himself to the Prime Minister, on the 3rd of January, 1905. I shall ask the House to listen to the second letter written three years after the first as nothing had resulted from his first attempt at redressing the matters complained of:

Bonanza, Yukon Territory, January 3, 1905.

The Right Honourable
Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—A little more than four years ago I was asked by Mr. E. M. Macdonald, of Pictou, Nova Scotia, to write him my opinion of the Liberal administration of the Yukon Territory. Not suspecting the purpose of the request, ignorant, indeed, of the political faith of Mr. Macdonald, I replied to the effect that the charges had been largely trumped up by the enemy; that the administration of the Yukon was, on the whole, good. My letter was used in campaign literature all over Canada, especially in the maritime provinces. I had not then been in the northern mining district or at the administrative centre, Dawson, In October, 1901, I was transferred to Bonanza, 13 miles from Dawson. On May 27, 1902, I sent a statement of the situation here, as it then appeared to me, to each member of the federal cabinet and to Mr. Ross. Referring to my letter to Mr. Macdonald, I said I feared that I was mistaken when I wrote my letter to him; that I should at least have kept silence. For I found that the administration had been a disgrace to the Canadian name—such as no self-respecting Canadian would excuse. There was marked improvement during Mr. Ross' tenure of office. But things have gone from bad to worse under Mr. Congdon's administration. He has shown such a lack of moral strength in his relation to the public service and the public interests while commissioner, and in his relation to the political interests of our people, before his appointment, and since his resignation to run for parliament, that there has been a general uprising against him. It has resulted in the election of an independent Conservative. His election is significant not as a condemnation of the Liberal government or of its general policy. The real significance of Mr. Congdon's defeat may be read in the fact that it was made possible by the efforts and votes of loyal Liberals, who refused to recognize as true Liberals the man and the gang he had gathered around him, who had trampled upon the principles and traditions of the Liberal party, and made your administration of Yukon interests a stench in the nostrils of our people.

I need not speak of the character and loyalty of the dissentient Liberals in Dawson who refused to swallow the dose Mr. Congdon offered. I prefer to speak of the Liberals of the mining districts whom I know as no other man does, and to assert that the votes which elected Dr. Thompson were Liberal votes; that the men whose organization and utterances made the victory possible were Liberals—Laurier Liberals. The gang which Mr. Congdon gathered about him for the campaign—men who were the creatures of his administration and his political methods—were such as would damn any cause. All that the speakers in opposition had to do was to name them in connection with Mr. Congdon's candidature, and the work of getting votes for Thompson was done.

The fight was won by men who had their hearts in it, against men who had their pockets only in it—patriots against mercenaries. The issue was not, from the firing of the first shot, doubtful. Permit me, even at the risk of being thought tiresome, to refer to the course of affairs since my letter of May, 1902. It may be assumed to start with, that officials called to serve their country on the frontier, especially in a frontier mining camp, should represent in the highest degree the moral sense of the Canadian people. No lustful, drunken, grafting misfits should be found, or if found, retained in office here. In July, 1902, Mr. Ross practically compelled the passage of an ordinance suppressing the dance halls, the women in which were 'the most dangerous class of prostitutes,' and absolutely excluding lewd women from licensed liquor houses. In September of the same year, Mr. Ross lying unconscious at Whitehorse, the ordinance was amended at the instance of the legal adviser, now Judge Newlands, so as to render the ordinance abortive. But under Mr. Congdon's lead we have legalized the dance halls. Some government officials are their habitués, and an official here, Mr. Pepin, in the gold commissioner's office, plays nightly in the Dominion dance hall, getting $60 per week for the exalted service.

He goes on to mention others, but I will not read their names.

The inclosed affidavits concerning Mr. Girouard, the registrar, are sufficient, it seems to me, to ensure his permanent removal from office in this territory, at least.

Then follow certain remarks with reference to Mr. Girouard which for the time being I will not read.

Did the government know of these and similar doings by others? If it did, what words of condemnation are too severe for such neglect of the moral welfare of our people? If it did not, then I think such ignorance is almost criminal. The names of the controller of this territory and others whom the government can locate without difficulty, are coupled publicly with not very desirable persons.

The dance halls of Klondike City, the home of the abandoned women boldy advertise their dances in Dawson before the eyes of our wives and children by poster, and in their ears by megaphone. All this seems to accord with the moral sense of many whom the government has sent to guard our interests. We are bringing our wives and children into this territory, making homes here, and it is an outrage that we should have an executive who permits these things, that he should practically pander to vice. Here is one point at which the government must work a radical reformation before it can accomplish the contentment of the great mass of our people, or gain their confidence in the administration.

Then he goes on to state that without set purpose he was the means of bringing to the notice of the executive the steal and the postal service, and claims that the investigation was not a real investigation, and that the utmost leniency, amounting even to wrong, was shown in the matter.

The campaign for Mr. Ross' election began in the autumn of 1902. The representative of Mr. Ross in the territory, chairman of his executive committee, was F. T. Congdon. I am a Liberal and with other Liberals and Conservatives had the greatest confidence in Mr. Ross. We had the best grounds for our confidence. But was there ever such a dirty campaign in the interest of a good man? Mr. Ross would have had a larger majority if a man of unblunted political moral sense had been the leader in his interest. Scores of good Liberals refused to vote because of immoral methods adopted by the Ross executive. Bribes were given, money was paid out of the road fund—hundreds of dollars on one creek—to men who had not done a day's work on the roads. The Baldwin affidavits prove this, and the controller now knows it to be true, though he was not responsible for it. Lewd women were promised money to dope Clark men over election day. One hundred and twenty-seven votes were cast at Caribou crossing—one hundred and eight of them for Mr. Ross—where the legitimate vote numbered not more than ten.

That sounds familiar ; it has been heard of in other places.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear : that is what they want this Bill for.

Mr. FOSTER. (Reading) :

One hundred and seventy-two at Glacier and Miller where there were not half that number. It was a carnival of corruption which perhaps the people might have forgotten but for two things.

First, that thousands of dollars, promised road house people for board, and others for money lent for the fight, are yet unpaid. The Gold Hill road built for votes cost $7,800. It ought not to have cost more than $1,500. It is a perpetual reminder of the election of 1902, and of the man who engineered it. The original bluff road near Dawson, which I am told cost to build about $3,000, cost to widen, on the eve of the election, about $26,000, another reminder. Scores of men hired ostensibly to work on the roads were fed at points on the creeks, never worked on the roads at all, and were fed at the expense of confiding citizens. The Minister of Public Works had better, I would respectfully suggest, look into the road expenditure, wood expenditure, &c., with a degree of thoroughness which has surely been lacking in the past.

Second, I prophesied at the beginning of the Thompson-Congdon campaign that the man who was responsible for such dirty work would not let the people forget it, that it would be worse than duplicated when his own political life was at stake. We have had a reminder which has amounted to a 'jolt' all around.

He then goes on to describe what he calls the McAulay deal with reference to some tenders and others things in connection with that election, which I do not propose to read at the present time, except to state that one Pierre Leduc, a returning officer, refused to give the people cognizance of the lists, and Judge Dugas refused to advise Leduc to yield to the people's demands for their rights. As a matter of fact, there was a charge of conspiracy which was brought up later in an action, but I shall take another opportunity to bring that before the House.

The attempt to disfranchise the people succeeded, for not less than 500 of our best people found on election day, that Mr. Congdon and his band of political thieves, had robbed them of their franchise. It was such an apparent iniquity, that scores of men who had never voted for a Conservative were driven to vote for Thompson. I need not enlarge further, Majors Wood and Cuthbert can tell the story of the refusal of, and the struggle for, the admitted and most sacred rights of British subjects. We want a commissioner who will give us a clean, businesslike administration. Our party here must have it, or it will be dead. Surely the kind of thing we have had during the last two years must come to an end. We want a commissioner who will commend officials who act in accordance with the regulations of the civil service, and censure those who make themselves offensively partisan. The man of whom—and may I not say, of whose retinue also—this territory has purged itself, bullied the first, and took to his heart the second. A large part of our officials here are the right kind of men, and took the right attitude in the campaign, however they voted. Telegraph, customs, post office, police, refrained from any expression of partisanship. A large number of officials, in and connected with, the departments in the Administration building also refrained. But there were many in the building and in the outside service who were an offence, and will never be anything but an offence to the people of this territory.

I have, we all have, our ideals; but life in the west teaches us, that all we can do is to move towards our moral ideals. I am not extreme. But I represent thousands when I say that I will not keep quiet, about officials, who are whore-mongers, when officials spend the people's money for party or private purposes. Give us an official body clean in public and private life, and the government will find the people of the Yukon not less intelligent, or moderate or less easily contented, than the people in older Canada. The alien people here, other than the moral scum which always gravitates to a frontier mining camp, or moderate or less easily contented, than the subjects of Britain whose home is here. Give us your best men, and you will find that we are not far from ranking with your best people.

I took a public part in this campaign because of its appeal to the moral sense in me. I never took part in a political fight before, never spoke on a political platform in my life until now. The unusual course has been justified. I began with some doubts as to the wisdom of my course, I ended it with none. I have written, as I have written, because I am a Canadian and also because I am a Liberal. Mr. Congdon and his party deny me the name. To me Liberalism is a synonym for progress and purity, and when I stand for these, I am a Liberal if I stand alone. Investigate. Investigate. It can be done quietly and yet thoroughly. Purge the public service of unclean and incapable men; get rid of the parasitic class; give us, as our executive, a Liberal, who is also a sane and upright man, and at the end of the five years, the appeal of the government to the electorate of the Yukon will not be in vain.

It is evident that Mr. Pringle has not yet forgotten his party allegiance because it breathes out in every line. What he is particularly anxious to do is quietly, by investigation and action, to purge the life of the Yukon of its evil elements and replace them by decent conditions. Mr. Pringle sends with that letter a list of affidavits. The affidavits I shall not read just at present. There is a series of them referring to J. D. Girouard, the registrar of land titles for the Yukon Territory. The facts set forth are sworn to by R. H. S. Creswell, T. D. Patullo, Robert McKay, Dan Currie, Frank E. McNeil, H. W. Sillars, Emil Poyza, Ben Johnson, Wm. J. Kendle, David T. Evan, Richard Rossmossur, Gus Lindbam, Chas. Stevenson, John Cameron, George J. Locke, Henry C. McLeod, William A. Munroe, Andrew E. Greenman, T. G. Wilson, T. James, E. Gordon, all of Dawson. The affidavits affect very vitally Mr. Girouard the registrar, both as an official and as a man. The occurrence took place at the time these elections were going on. When the parties wanted the lists of certain polls and were told that Girouard had them, they went to his office. There they were told that Girouard was not in but they routed him out from where he was concealed, chased and collared him, and brought him to his own office and made him deliver up the lists.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He had a run for it.

Mr. FOSTER. He had a hard run for it but could not run with sufficient rapidity to outrun the men who were after him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He was pretty well winded.

Mr. FOSTER. Maybe he was somewhat winded before he began to run. That letter and the accompanying affidavit was acknowledged by the Prime Minister in these words :

Ottawa, February 6, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of January 3, last. I have to inform you that all the charges which you bring to the attention of the government relating to the administration of public affairs in the Yukon territory, will receive immediate attention from the different departments interested.

Yours respectfully,
WILFRID LAURIER.

Thus three years ago the right hon. gentleman received that appeal from a friend of his own, and yet up to this time no action has been taken and no remedy applied. Again in 1905 the same information, with other information added, was brought to his attention. Then he acknowledged the letter and promised that matters would be attended to. Matters, however, were not attended to, so that later on, in 1905, the Rev. John Pringle addressed a letter to the Governor General of Canada, inclosing a copy of the one he had sent to the First Minister, thus bringing the attention of the head of the administration in this country, to what he considered intolerable abuses in a portion of the Dominion. He received an acknowledgement to the effect that the matter would be brought to the attention of the ministers of the Crown. That letter of 1905, which I have just read, was, it appears, handed by one of the ministers to Mr. Frederick Tennyson Congdon who appears at that time to have been in the city of Ottawa, and Mr. Frederick Tennyson Congdon wrote a memo. for the ministry, I suppose, on the letter and allegations of Mr. Pringle of the 3rd day of January, 1905. I am not going to read the whole of that memorandum of Mr. Congdon. It is a heated and I should say a partisan reply to the Rev John Pringle. But there are certain parts of it which it probably would be well to read. He commenced by saying :

Mr. Pringle commenced writing letters containing positive statements in regard to Yukon matters before he had entered the territory or knew anything in regard to its affairs. The first of his letters was written about four years ago to M. E. M. Macdonald, of Pictou, Nova Scotia.

Now if that was his first letter written to Mr. Macdonald, of Pictou, as Mr. Congdon says, what does Mr. Congdon mean by the statement that he had begun to write letters on Yukon matters before he had entered the territory or knew anything in regard to its affairs ? because when he wrote to Mr. Macdonald four years ago he was in the territory.

With respect to this, Mr. Pringle since has claimed that in spite of the positive terms of the letter he was ignorant and ill-informed. His ignorance and lack of information in regard to any matter have never in the slightest degree affected the assurance with which he spoke. In 1902 it became in the interest of Mr. Pringle to write once more. In this letter he expressed the opinion that he was mistaken when he wrote formerly and that he should have kept silence. This was during the term of office of Mr. Ross. No doubt later he will come to the same opinion with regard to the present letter. If it comes to his advantage to withdraw every statement he now makes he will have no hesitation in doing so.

I read that to show the nature of the purported answer of Mr. Congdon to the allegations of Mr. Pringle. He goes on :

In the winter of 1902-3, Mr. Pringle became a candidate for the Yukon council and was elected. During his candidature nothing was too severe to say against the administration of the Dominion government, of the Minister of the Interior and of Mr. Ross as commissioner.

Here is Mr. Congdon replying to charges of evils which had occurred under his administration. The first thing he attempts to do is to raise a spirit of prejudice against Mr. Pringle, alleging that he had spoken against the Minister of the Interior and against the government at a previous time. What on earth would it have to do with the facts of the case whether he had or had not so spoken ? But Mr. Pringle's letter and his assurances are to the contrary, that he was an ardent believer in the Liberal party and a defender and supporter of the government. He goes on and states whom Mr. Pringle opposed, how he spoke of them, and the like of that. Then he states that :

He had been elected to the council as an opponent of the government. He for a time supported the territorial government. He worked for the Liberal nomination. He failed to get it. In once more condemning the government, he was venting the spleen engendered by his disappointment and pursuing the only course by which he hoped to rehabilitate himself with his former supporters. His new policy was adopted as the only feasible mode of escaping from the intolerable position of being disliked and despised alike by friends and opponents of the government.

While Mr. Ross was labouring to reform and improve administration, Mr. Pringle was busy scandalizing and condemning him. He continued to condemn until in order to strengthen his criticism of my administration it became necessary to praise that of Mr. Ross. Undoubtedly there was a marked improvement in every way and in the social life particularly, in the Yukon territory, under the administration of Mr. Ross, but there is no one in the least fairminded who will not say that there has not been a continued improvement in later times. I claim no credit for this, although I have endeavoured in every way to aid it. As far as I am aware, Dawson is socially as free from vice as Ottawa. A lady is as safe from insult and from witnessing anything offensive on the streets or in public places of Dawson, as in any part of Canada. The men in the public service there will compare favourably in efficiency and character with similar officials elsewhere.

I do not propose to say anything in regard to Mr. Pringle's comments on my lack of moral strength. I do not acknowledge him to be a competent judge of moral strength or any other moral qualities. It is one of these sanctimonious expressions with which he endeavours to lend colour to the slanders he delights to spread. If he were possessed of common honesty he would have coupled with his condemnation of me the statement which I compelled him to make upon the public platform that while I lived in a country in which according to himself the besetting sin is that of alcoholism, I have continued to be a total abstainer, that while as he claims lust has prevailed, I have lived a quite, clean and decent life and while grafting in his estimation is the most common practice I have never made a cent by improper means and am as poor today as when I became commissioner of the Yukon Territory. It is not pleasant for me to mention these matters, and probably Mr. Pringle failed to do so, because they do not entirely support his theory of lack of moral strength. The reverend gentleman thinks it is sufficient condemnation for him to speak of my supporters as a 'gang,' as ' creatures of mine ' and as ' boosters ' to ensure their condemnation. Most of the men whose names he enumerated are as intelligent, as upright, as pure in life and as respectable in every way as the Rev. John Pringle. If the reverend gentleman wishes to make a comparison between his life and my own, I am quite ready to undergo the test. If it is condemnation of a public man that some of his supporters are not perfect in virtue, I am quite ready to compare my supporters with the men with whom Mr. Pringle delights to associate and who are supported by him.

With regard to the matter of the dance hall ordinance, it is somewhat surprising that neither in the council of which Mr. Pringle was a member, nor upon the public platform has he ventured publicly to condemn that which he now desires secretly to criticise. The Yukon ordinance, to which he refers, was passed unaminously by the council and was assented to by myself as a matter of course. It has never been criticised by any one publicly in the territory. It is a matter within the authority of the Yukon council and may safely be left to the decision of that body.

He then accuses Pringle of stumping with dance hall associates and says that he therefore found it difficult to condemn them. With regard to Mr. Pepin he says that Pepin had a perfect right to play where he pleases. He says that Pepin was playing in the dance hall because his salary was not large and he had to make money and whilst playing there he simply was the player and nothing else. That is a statement which may very well have its weight. The employment in that respect did not in the least interfere with the discharge of his official duties.

It has been the delight of Mr. Pringle to circulate private slanders with regard to every man from whom he differs. It is in this spirit that he speaks of Mr. Girouard. I have not deemed it my duty as commissioner of the Yukon territory to act as a spy upon the private life of the officials of the territory. With respect to Mr. Girouard, I know him to be an efficient registrar and useful member of of the council. The statements made by Mr. Pringle in regard to him and the facts set out in the affidavits accompanying the letter deal with matters of which I know nothing . . .

The notices of the deponents to the affidavits accompanying Mr. Pringle's letter will appear clearly to any one who makes inquiries into their modes of life.

He says their modes of life are not correct, and therefore their affidavits cannot be trusted.

The controller of the territory is one of the best officials in my humble judgment to be found in Canada.

The controller at the time, I think, was Mr. Lithgow.

His integrity and his efficiency in the discharge of his public duties are well known and recognized by everybody. It is in the discharge of these duties that I have had to do with the controller, and I have this to say in regard to him that his word would be accepted where Mr. Pringle's would be despised. Mr Pringle does not like the controller, and he therefore, according to his wont, indulges in low slanders against him.

I repeat once more that the social conditions of Dawson are as good as in most parts of Canada and that Mr. Pringle only pretends to be shocked at them in order to make a point against an opponent. Undoubtedly there is vice in Dawson, but I have yet to discover the community that is free from it.

He goes on to take up the question of the post office and alleges that Mr. Pringle did not discover the defalcations, and states also that everything was done by the Postmaster General that could possibly be done; that the trouble was that the clerk was insane and committed this theft during the period of his insanity, and, instead of being incarcerated and punished, he was put in charge of his brother and taken out of the territory as an insane person.

With respect to the charges affecting the election of Mr. Ross they are the usual ones made by irresponsible persons. He pretends to be a Liberal but did not work for Mr. Ross and he is ready to make a finding with regard to the election against myself without the slightest evidence either of the misdeeds or of my connection with them. I had no more to do with any corruption in that campaign than had Mr. Pringle. And Mr. Pringle knows this.

The evidence of Mr. Pringle with regard to election promises is not very trustworthy unless he himself were a party to the promises or were present when they were made.

With reference to the enumerators he claims that most of them were honest and did their work well, though there may have been some of whom this could not be said. And he goes on to say:

I may also mention the fact that I was not commissioner of the Yukon territory nor a member of the Yukon council during that election and was not in any way responsible for the expenditure of public money. . . .

The spoils system was never put in operation by me. I never dismissed an official on account of his politics, although there were many Conservatives in the government employ in the territory. I did endeavour in all proper cases to see that public patronage went to supporters of the government.

He says their modes of life are not corcharges made by Mr. Pringle, but as I have not read those charges in the House I will not read Mr. Cougdon's answer.

With regard to Mr. Pringle's statements as to enumerating the lists, the polling divisions, &c., I have only to say that I had no more to do with it than had Mr. Pringle. I did not appoint the enumerators and I did not nominate a single one of them. There were half as many enumerators in number as at the previous election, or even a less proportion. This was necessary on account of the enormous expense. The smaller number necessitated giving each a larger territory and as far as possible each enumerator fixed his location for the purposes of enumeration in the most central point within his district. This of course enabled Mr. Pringle and others to appeal to prejudices in certain localities necessarily ignored.

It is easy for an irresponsible individual like Mr. Pringle to say that five hundred of the best people were disfranchised but it is a different thing for him to prove anything so absurd. Most of the enumerators I believe did their work fairly and well. The other to appeal to prejudices in certain localities necessarily ignored.

Now, I have read the chief parts of the reply of Mr. Congdon, because I had read the charges made by Mr. Pringle, and thought it but fair to place on record also Mr. Congdon's reply. Now, a peculiar thing took place. Mr. Congdon had Mr. Pringle's letter placed in his hands as soon as it came here. Concerning his former letter, that of 1902, Mr. Pringle says that, though it was written to the ministers and marked 'private,' it got into the hands of the Yukon officials and he had to meet it on every occasion. The letter of 1905 was at once given to Mr. Congdon, who made this long memorandum upon it; but the Congdon memorandum in reply to Mr. Pringle was not given to Mr. Pringle. He wrote for it again and again, and complained bitterly that the courtesy of seeing the memorandum was not given to him. On November 30, 1906, Mr. Pringle wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier as follows:

On the 18th August last, I wrote the Hon. Frank Oliver to ask him for a copy of Mr. Congdon's answer to my letter of January 3, 1905. That letter was, in part, a criticism of Mr. Congdon and his policy as the government's commissioner here; in part, a statement of the iniquities perpetrated upon the electorate of the Yukon in the elections of 1902 and 1904. In the first he was chief of the campaign executive, in the last the government Liberal candidate, in both the champion debaucher of constituencies.

Mr. Oliver informs me in effect that no such answer is in the government's possession.

Now, mind you, this last letter of Mr. Pringle's was handed to Mr. Congdon here in Ottawa, and, about January, 1905, Mr. Congdon made this elaborate reply. On August, 18, 1906, Mr. Pringle writes to Hon. Frank Oliver asking him for a copy of this memorandum, and Mr. Oliver informs him, in effect, that no such answer is in the government's possession. Mr. Pringle says:

No one in Canada received a copy of my letter save Rev. Dr. Warden, then chief of our home mission work, the ministers of the Crown and the Governor General. This letter was placed in Mr. Congdon's hands by a minister, and was answered by Mr. Congdon. I have not received a copy of his vindication of himself. I do not know how such a discourtesy can be justified.

This was November 30, 1906, and refers to a document of January, 1905. So, nearly two years had elapsed and Mr. Pringle had not received a copy of the memorandum, although it was in the hands of the government. The astonishing statement is made to him that there is no such document in the possession of the government. He goes on:

I wrote as a friend of the Liberal party, not as an enemy. I was desirous of having you, Sir, and your cabinet, purge the administration here of the impure, scheming, grafting gang who were in control, who have done irreparable moral and material injury to this distant territory, have made Canadians blush for their country, and have brought the Liberal party and government into contempt.

I have been treated with courtesy more scant than would have been extended to an enemy. For an enemy would not have scrupled to advertise the condition of which I complained.

Mr. McInnes and others have seen Mr. Congdon's answer. The only copies of my letter accessible to him are in the hands of ministers of the Crown. The conclusion is obvious. Nor is it less obvious that Mr. Congdon must have satisfied the government of the falsity of my statements and of the wisdom and purity of his administration, for the government sent Mr. Congdon back to high and lucrative official position when this territory had him out of its mouth.

Kindly send me a copy of Mr. Congdon's answer to my letter of February 3, 1905.

I am, yours respectfully,

(Sgd.) JOHN PRINGLE.

Mr. Pringle again writes from Dawson on the 31st of July, 1907, to the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier as follows:

Sir,—I would again, and for the last time, call your attention to the drunkenness and lust in official circles here, which are the open scandal of this city and territory.

It then goes on to make certain charges in reference to Mr. Girouard which I shall not put upon the 'Hansard.'

I have no personal motive in bringing these disgraceful conditions and doings to your notice. But I have taken these matters up before the public and the government because they are an outrage upon the moral sense of our people, a disgrace to us as Canadians, and because of the influence which the presence of drunkards and whore-mongers in high public office, has upon the moral tone of our people. Dance halls and bawdy houses are the natural concomitants of the presence in our administrative life of unshamed male prostitutes.

I have resolved, if this continues as at present, to state the case in the plainest terms in the eastern press, without regard to the notoriety and discomfort which such disclosures may bring to myself. The disgraceful scenes of the last ten days, in which prominent public men and government officials of more than one department have been the chief actors, have more than justified everything I have written to members of the cabinet or to the press in regard to the immorality which prevails in our community and official life.

I am yours in sincerity,

(Sgd.) JOHN PRINGLE.

After all that had taken place and all this time had elapsed the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), in answer to a letter of January 9, 1907 and particularly in connection with the struggle of Mr. Lithgow, the controller, to be appointed as governor or commissioner of the Yukon, had brought a flood of strong testimonials from party workers, from Liberal organizations and some equally strong and lurid ones from the Young Men's Liberal Association against the appointment, the Minister of the Interior at last begins to think that something will have to be done and he writes as follows:

Ottawa, February 2, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 9th instant——

It should be ult.

—with reference to the appointment of a new commissioner for the Yukon. I note what you say regarding Mr. Lithgow, and shall give all your views careful consideration.

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

In reply to a letter of the 31st of July, 1907, addressed to the Hon. Frank Oliver and which I have just read, the minister writes on the 28th of August a letter in which he says :

Since my return I have received a letter from the Governor General's secretary informing me that His Excellency had received a copy of the same letter. The premier has also informed me that on receipt of the copy of the letter sent to him he communicated with Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow the allegations made by yourself against them.

By letter of this date to Commissioner Henderson I am instructing him to investigate fully the charges which you have made against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow and to receive from you any specific charges which you may desire to make against any other officials in the employ of the government and especially of the Interior Department in the Yukon Territory.

I have instructed Mr. Henderson that you are to have every opportunity to establish the facts which you have stated in your letter of July 31.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

That is on the 28th of August, 1907, five years and more after the first full and specific information sent by the Reverend John Pringle, the Minister of the Interior plucks up sufficient force to ask Mr. Henderson to make an investigation. It is rather a remarkable thing to find that one of the chief reasons why he seems to have done it is because he has received a letter from the Governor General's secretary informing him that His Excellency had received a copy of the same letter. So, he writes to the Hon. Alexander Henderson as follows :

Ottawa, August 28, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from the Governor General's office. As you will note from the address and contents, the original of this letter was addressed to the premier and myself.

You will be good enough to investigate fully the specific charges made by Mr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow, and you will, of course, call upon Mr. Pringle to substantiate those charges. You are to investigate fully and report.

Should the Rev. Mr. Pringle desire to lay charges against any other persons in the employ of the government, or of the Interior Department especially, you are to investigate them as well.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

That is received and is acknowledged by the commissioner at Dawson on the 23rd of September, 1907. Mr. Pringle, to make a long story short, is notified and a time is set when he is to be present with his evidence. But, Mr. Pringle begins to find out the authority that Mr. Henderson had and he comes up against this fact that it is simply to be an examination, that Mr. Henderson is not a royal commissioner and that he has no power to summon witnesses and to examine them on oath. Immediately when this comes out the Rev. John Pringle says that he cannot undertake to carry on an investigation in the Yukon, bring his witnesses and face all the opposition that he will have there unless these witnesses are to be examined under oath and he can be protected as a royal commission or a commission appointed to examine under oath alone could protect him. On the 2nd of October, 1907, he says, writing to Alex. Henderson, commissioner, Yukon :

Dear Sir,—I am prepared for the investigation which you have been instructed to hold into the charges which I have made of scandalous living on the part of J. T. Lithgow and J. E. Girouard, prominent public servants in the Yukon.

He specifies his charge against both of these gentlemen and continues :

I have to complain that similar charges have been made by myself and others during the past four or five years, and that the government has until now ignored the charges and palliated the evils.

I shall give the names of my witnesses as soon as the date and place of investigation are fixed.

(Sgd.) JOHN PRINGLE.

Then the date and place were fixed. Then comes the refusal of Mr. Pringle. I think I can best show that by reading a letter which he writes to Hon. Frank Oliver, as follows :

Dawson, Yukon Territory, October 18, 1907.

Hon. Frank Oliver,
Minister of the Interior.

Sir,—Inclosed is a copy of a letter sent by me to Commissioner Henderson with reference to the investigation into the scandals connected with the names of Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard, controller and registrar of this territory, respectively.

I think that the position which I take therein is reasonable.

When the government appoints an investigator with the power to subpœna, commit and protect witnesses, I shall be ready with overwhelming proof of the truth of the charges I have made.

To us, who have lived here for years, whose moral sense these officials have habitually outraged, it seems almost ridiculous that the government should require any formal investigation. The kind of thing against which we protest, in the public service has had a very impressive illustration here in the last few days.

More than two months ago nearly $40,000 in gold in transit from the American side was stolen from the post office in Dawson. The principal in the robbery and who died it is believed by his own hand, while under arrest, had been for years a frequenter of saloons and dance halls and the slave of the women who swarm in them; and at the same time an employee of the Public Works Department, with keys in his possession which gave him entrance to every public building in Dawson.

His pay $10 a day—did not suffice for the demands of his life and therefore he stole to make up the deficiency. A dance hall employee decoyed a post office employee from his place and the Public Works Department employee used the department key to gain entrance to the post office, and abstracted the gold.

It is useless to expect morality in the public service when immoral men are nursed and protected therein.

I am, yours in sincerity,

(Sgd.) JOHN PRINGLE.

Mr. Henderson writes to Mr. Oliver:

Dawson, November 8, 1907.

Dear Mr. Oliver,—I am inclosing herewith a copy of the correspondence relating to the charges of the Rev. Dr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow. You will see from Dr. Pringle's letter to me of the 23rd ultimo, he declines to appear as a party in what he calls an informal investigation. I would suggest, if agreeable to you, that I be appointed a commissioner to investigate the charges under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

Commissioner.

Hon. Frank Oliver,
Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

I have here the minister's reply to Mr. Pringle:

Ottawa, November 14, 1907.

Dear Sir,—Yours of October 18 to hand inclosing copy of your letter to Commissioner Henderson in which you decline to offer evidence as to the correctness of the statements made in your former letter regarding Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard. I note that you say 'when the government appoints an investigator with the power to subpœna, commit and protect witnesses, I shall be ready with overwhelming proof of the charges that I have made.'

I take it from this that you are not ready to offer evidence of those charges to Commissioner Henderson in the investigation which he is instructed to hold. This is a matter for your own consideration. For my own part, I see no necessity for an appointment with the powers you suggest.

On the strength of your statement I have as already said instructed the commissioner to investigate with a view to arriving at the facts. He has communicated with you in order to fix the investigation, to suit your convenience. As you do not intend to appear the investigation will have to proceed without your assistance, and the commissioner has been so instructed. If for lack of the evidence which you say you are able to furnish, the investigation should not establish the facts which you desire, I beg to point out to you that the fault is your own, and not mine.

Mr. FOSTER.

The minister seemed to forget entirely that there is any public side to this question and seems to be making an attempt to throw the whole onus upon Dr. Pringle if he does not come to time before the insufficient tribunal.

I note in your letter of the 18th you say 'it seems almost ridiculous that the government should require any formal investigation.'

And here the native justice of the minister bursts into a flame:

I can only say in regard to that, that it is an inherent right of every British subject that he should not be condemned without evidence; that he has a right to hear the evidence against him, and has a right to be heard in his own defence. I might remind you that Canada is not Russia of the present day, not Spain of the time of the Inquisition.

Having delivered that splendid burst, which he might have thought of when he shortly before this told Rev. John Pringle that he had not a copy of Mr. Congdon's criticism of Mr. Pringle's letter, although the government had had it in their possession for six or eight months—and by the way Mr. Pringle did not secure a copy of it until more than a year and a half afterwards, when he had to beg for it. It was very like being in Spain or Russia for a man to be unable to get a criticism of his own statement. The minister concludes:

I will take the liberty of saying that while the Canadian government cannot do the impossible, it is admitted by all unprejudiced people who have had the opportunity of observing that so far as the support of law, order and morality is concerned, the Canadian Yukon, under the administration of the Canadian government, compares most favourably with any other gold mining camp in the world.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

That about ends the letters which I shall read except that I shall note that Commissioner Henderson on December 17, 1907, sends out a report and in it he includes a telegram he had sent a little before, as follows:

I can unhesitatingly affirm that the Yukon including Dawson is as moral in all respects as any other part of Canada. The report follows by mail.

The report is found on page 29 of these papers. He accompanies this also with reports from Major X. T. Wood, assistant commissioner and from Capt. Wroughton, commanding 'B' Division, Northwest Mounted Police. His own report and the testimony of these two men is directed to establish the statement that at the present time the moral conditions of the Yukon as regards dance halls and the sale of liquor and the like of that are tolerable at least and as the commissioner says probably as good as anywhere else in the Dominion of Canada. They are very long and I make that statement as to their purports in order that it may appear without putting them upon 'Hansard.' If it is thought best however we can have them read so that they shall go on 'Hansard.' If the minister thinks I had better read them I shall do so. Very well I shall do so.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You did not want much encouragement.

Mr. FOSTER. No. I read these simply because the House might think it unfair that I should publish other statements and not publish these statements of the commissioner and I might be criticised for so doing. I gave what I considered a fair summary of them but I am not going to submit myself to criticism on the ground that I did not give the statements of the commissioners and of these other officials. The first which I shall read is as follows, this is Mr. Henderson's report to the government:

Dawson, December 7, 1907.

Sir,—I have the honour to report that I have received your letter of the 4th ultimo, in which you state that some time ago you asked me to let you have a general report with respect to the allegation of immorality in the Yukon. I also received in due course your letter of the 6th September on the same subject, in which you state that you are in receipt of certain papers concerning the licensing of two music halls in Dawson, which papers are set out fully in your letter and which it is perhaps necessary for me to again enumerate. On receipt of your letter of 4th ultimo, I wired you as follows:

'I unhesitatingly affirm that the Yukon including Dawson is as moral in all respects as any other part of Canada, report follows by mail.'

My reason for sending you the telegram was that I thought perhaps a telegram giving the purport of my report might be of use to you. Before my arrival in the territory I had heard that the question of dance halls had been brought prominently before the public through a letter addressed to a Winnipeg newspaper by the Reverend Dr. Pringle, and I felt that one of the first questions which would demand my attention would be the devising of some solution to remove the conditions complained of should I find the complaint was well founded. After my arrival in Dawson on July 14, I ascertained that two dance halls respectively called the 'M & N' and the 'Floradora,' were in active operation, and that there was some diversity of opinion as to whether these institutions were a menace to public morals or otherwise. My own opinion was that they should be suppressed, and before the session of the Yukon council, which opened on the 9th of August last, I had thoroughly canvassed the situation with every member of the Yukon council. I made no secret of the position I proposed to take in the matter. An amendment to the liquor ordinance was introduced by the Honourable Mr. Justice Dugas, providing in effect that no music hall should be kept in connection with premises licensed to sell liquors (sec. 3, chap. 9, ordinance, 1907.) There was some opposition to this Bill in the council, and various amendments proposing the postponement of the operation of the Bill to a later date received some support, but eventually the section passed as proposed, the effect being to immediately make the sale of liquors in dance halls illegal. The two dance halls I have mentioned continued to run for some time without selling liquor until the largest, the 'M. & N.', went out of business, and the other still continues to run as a dance hall, but I am credibly informed by the police that there is very little business being done and that no liquors are sold in the dance hall.

The most vicious feature of the dance hall was undeniably the sale of liquors to frequenters with the result that it is has been stated that on many occasions men, who were induced to drink excessively, lost large sums of money, but since my appointment as commissioner I have never had any complaints of this kind. I might add that I have given instructions to the police that they are to watch carefully for any infraction of the law and immediately prosecute those who are guilty of any violations thereof.

I have also informed Dr. Pringle that I feel it my duty to investigate any complaint he may make respecting any infraction of the liquor laws or any laws enacted for the suppression of vice or immorality.

I might add that I delayed making a full report, as I understood that the effect of the amendments I have spoken of, would be brought to the attention of the government by a perusal of the ordinances passed at the session, copies of which were duly forwarded to the government in accordance with the order in council governing the same.

Generally, I am of opinion that the standard of morality is as high in Dawson as in any other town in the Dominion. From my own observations I am quite at a loss to understand the necessity for comments such as have recently been made to the effect that there is greater immorality in the Yukon than elsewhere in Canada.

I might call attention in this connection to section 4, chapter 9, of the amendment to the Liquor Ordinance, 1907, which repeals section 61 of chapter 76, of the Consolidated Ordinances, and substitutes therefor a new section consisting of subsection 1 and 2. I have every reason to believe that public sentiment is overwhelmingly in favour of the legislation enacted at the recent session of the council, and I feel that I have the support of the community in my efforts to see that these laws are strictly lived up to. However, I have learned since my arrival in Dawson, and I am convinced, that the conditions now are better than at any time in the history of the city; and I am greatly surprised to learn that this fact is not recognized by those who give publicity to statements regarding morality in the territory.

I am inclosing you herewith reports of Major Wood and Captain Wrighton, respectively the assistant commissioner of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and the officer commanding 'B' division of the same force. As both these gentlemen are familiar with the past and present conditions of Dawson, I felt that reports from them would be exceedingly useful in giving desired information upon the subject.

I have the honour to be, Sir
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) ALEXANDER HENDERSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. Frank Oliver,
Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

He appends the report of the assistant commissioner at Dawson and Captain Wrighton, which are largely in the tenor and to the purport of the report of the Commissioner of the Yukon. They all of them say that there has been an improvement in the last few months. It is of course to be understood that these reports, those of the commissioner and of the police officers, are written in the dead of winter, the latter part of December and the first part of June, and the statement is made somewhere that there are not over 1,500 people in Dawson at that time, and it is of course much easier at such a period to keep fair conditions than it would be during the press of the season or in the summer. Now I will read the Commissioner's report on the investigation :

Commissioner's Office,
Yukon Territory, Canada.
Dawson, December 7, 1907.

Sir,—I have the honour to report in respect to the charges made by the Reverend Dr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow that after receiving your instructions to investigate fully these charges and report, I immediately communicated with Dr. Pringle, and on the 1st of October last informed him of my instructions. I stated to him that both officials named had made emphatic denials to me with respect to the truth of the charges and that it was in the interest of all parties concerned that these charges should be investigated without undue delay, and I suggested that a day be fixed so that the investigation might be proceeded with as speedily as possible. Dr. Pringle replied by letter to me of the 2nd of October, stating that he was prepared for the investigation, which I had been instructed to hold, and informed me that he would give me the names of his witnesses as soon as the date and place of investigation were fixed. On the 8th October, I, by letter, asked him whether he would be ready to proceed with the charges against Mr. Girouard on the 8th October at 4 p.m., if this date was convenient; if not, I requested him to advise me. I pointed out that I thought there would be no objection to have the charges against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow heard separately as there was no necessary connection between them. On the 14th of October, Dr. Pringle advised me that as I had not the authority to summon and swear witnesses, he declined to appear in the investigation ordered into the charges, but he submitted two alternatives for my consideration. (1) 'As the agent of the Minister of the Interior to inquire into the scandals, at least six years continued, connected with the names of these two officials,'; (2) To get from the authorities at Ottawa the powers of a royal commission to investigate the charges made. Dr. Pringle informed me that if I adopted the first course he, having made specific charges, would do all he could to aid me in investigating them and getting at the truth, and that if I adopted the second course, he would also be ready to proceed. Having been advised by Mr. Girouard that he desired the charges against him to be investigated, and asking that a day be fixed for the hearing of the charges, adopting the first course suggested by Dr. Pringle, I communicated with him on the 19th of October requesting to hear from him as to whether he was prepared to proceed with the investigation as far as Mr. Girouard was concerned, the latter having pomised to lend assistance in obtaining witnesses. On the 23rd October, 1907, Dr. Pringle advised me by letter, stating that he had decided not to take any part in the investigation which I was instructed to make into the charges against Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard. As I concluded that Dr. Pringle had abandoned his suggestion that I should inquire into these charges in the manner suggested by him in his first alternatives, and as he had not submitted to me the name of any witness, in support of the charges as he had promised, and as no other person in the territory had made any charge to me with respect to either of the officials named, I was unable to proceed further and advised you that Dr. Pringle declined to proceed unless a commission was issued to me to take the evidence.

That appears to me to be peculiar ground taken by Mr. Henderson. He was instructed by the Minister of the Interior to investigate into the circumstances, as commissioner, and report. When Mr. Pringle, on the ground that there was not a proper commission issued, refused, unless protected by that commission, to bring his witnesses, then Mr. Henderson thought that his whole duty was done. And because no one appeared to prosecute he said he could do nothing more. That was an extraordinary idea to take of a duty. As an investigator he was bound, in the carrying out of the instructions of the Minister of the Interior, to make a thorough examination, hunt up his own witnesses, take evidence wherever he could find it and thus be in a position to determine whether or not the charges were true. He had been ordered by the minister to make a general investigation and report. Instead of doing this, he washed his hands of the whole thing when Mr. Pringle refused to take part on the grounds I have mentioned. The following is the letter from the commissioner:

I have the honour to add that since my appointment as commissioner, I have seen nothing in the conduct of either of the officials mentioned which would warrant the conclusion that the charges made by Dr. Pringle, against them, or either of them, could be substantiated.

That is an odd statement.

They are both competent and capable officials and their performance of their duties eminently satisfactory to me.

Just look at it. A man is charged with a theft committed at a certain time. An investigation is ordered, the witnesses do not appear, the prosecutor does not act, and the judge, relying upon the absence of prosecutor and witnesses and because he did not see the theft committed himself, decides that there is nothing against the accused and that there is nothing to investigate. That is an odd position for a commissioner to take.

Since Dr. Pringle's refusal to proceed with the investigation, as hereinbefore mentioned, Mr. Girouard has commenced an action against him for damages for libel and the action is now pending.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

ALEXANDER HENDERSON,

Commissioner.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER (reading) :

Ottawa, January 2, 1908.

Dear sir,—I have before me the papers in connection with the inquiry ordered in respect to Dr. Pringle's charges with your covering letter of December 7. I note that in your letter of November 8, you suggest your appointment as a commissioner to investigate the charges under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

In reply to this suggestion I beg to say that it appears to me that it would be a very strained construction to put upon section 2 of that Act to say that an inquiry into charges of the nature of those made by Dr. Pringle was an inquiry 'into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.'

Inasmuch as Dr. Pringle has been requested to make a specific statement of his knowledge of the facts regarding which he complains and has failed to do so, I do not think I would be warranted in applying the terms of the Inquiries Act. If Dr. Pringle had availed himself of the opportunity which you gave him under my instructions it would then be a matter for consideration whether we might or might not invoke the terms of the Act, but without something more definite than has yet been brought to your attention, I do not think we have sufficient warrant for doing so.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

To the Hon. Alexander Henderson,
Commissioner Yukon Territory,
Dawson.

There are just two points in that letter on which I wish to comment. The first is that Dr. Pringle having been requested to make a specific statement of facts and he failed to do so. It is well to give just at this point Dr. Pringle's statement again.

Dawson, Yukon Territory,
October 2, 1907

Alexander Henderson, Esq.,
Commissioner of the Yukon.

Sir,—I am prepared for the investigation, which you have been instructed to hold into the charges which I have made of scandalous living on the part of J. T. Lithgow and J. E. Girouard, prominent public servants in the Yukon.

Then follow explicitely (a), 1, 2 and 3; (b) and (c), the charges that he makes and which he declares himself ready to substantiate. So it is not because there were not charges made by Dr. Pringle and it is not because he was not ready to substantiate them. But he knew the crowd against whom he had to go up and he did not propose to put himself in the position of having no sworn testimony and no protected witnesses, in fact no protection at all before the examination and no punishment for perjured witnesses. He had too large an experience with those whom he calls 'the gang' in the Yukon, to put himself in that false position and in that I think he was absolutely correct. The other comment is that the Minister of the Interior says that he will not grant a commission to examine under oath because he does not consider that an investigation of the charges made by Dr. Pringle was :

An inquiry into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.

I think that simple comment upon that is quite sufficient. I have always supposed that it was a part of good government in Canada to see that men in office conducted themselves with credit and honour to the country. Of course if we are to revise that and subscribe to the doctrine that it does not matter a tinker's fiddle as to what a man representing the Dominion of Canada does when he is in office, then the position of the minister may be a fair position. But I would ask the Minister of the Interior if he did not grant a commission on oath but a few months or weeks ago to investigate a case simply with reference to property. I forgot the name of the person but the minister, I think, will know. When that person made a complaint, the investigation into the business under review was made without oath and without the power to swear witnesses. He made an application for a commission to examine under oath in a mere matter of private property and it was granted to him by the Minister of the Interior. But in a case of this kind, the Minister of the Interior could not see that it was pertinent or came under the law.

The Toronto 'Globe' sometimes has a spasm of virtue and in one of those it wrote a criticism:

The paper containing that criticism says :

Dr. John Pringle's charges of scandalous immorality against two prominent officials of the Dominion government are not at present to be investigated. Commissioner Henderson required the names of Dr. Pringle's witnesses and Dr. Pringle declined to give them to the commissioner until the latter should receive authority to compel witnesses to appear and testify on oath, he not having been vested with such power. The minister refused to delegate such authority to the commissioner, and there the matter rests.

The Toronto 'Globe' discussing the question says :

The issue thus raised is one that may be considered entirely apart from the question of the truth or falsity of the accusations. It is incredible that a clergyman of Dr. Pringle's standing should make grave charges against public officials in a community such as the city of Dawson without having good ground for believing them to be not only well-founded but capable of being proved. He was desirous of having them investigated, but he knew he would have little chance of establishing them unless witnesses could be compelled to testify on oath and thus become indictable for perjury if they swore falsely. The request for an inquiry conducted under this commonly used and easily afforded safeguard, was, under the circumstances a perfectly reasonable one, and it is not easy to understand why it was refused. Public opinion will not throw responsibility for failure on Dr. Pringle until some adequate reason is forthcoming.

I think that represents the sane and proper view of the case under the circumstances.

I notice that, as usual, some of the papers have not been brought down. For instance there was a joint telegram of protest from the Protestant minister of Dawson somewhere about the 14th or 15th of December, 1904, at the time when riots were fairly within the horizon on account of the outrageous proceedings at the election. Nor are there the telegrams of the police officials notably that of assistant Commissioner Wood at about the same date. He also made very strong telegraphic representations to the government with regard to the seriousness and urgency of the situation. There is also a telegram sent by Rev. John Pringle himself which has not come down with the papers but, fortunately, I have a copy of it.

Dawson, December 15, 1904.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Conditions here intolerable. Names illegally removed from lists. Enumerators refuse lists, polling divisions on order returning officer. Some enumerators missing—others in barracks under police protection. People incensed and assembling. If people's rights further invaded forbearance will cease. Congdon and outfit desperate adopting desperate methods. People will not stand for it: Judge Dugas refuses even to advise in matter. Girouard public scandal. Outrage on common decency. Must not retain position nor get other, humiliates self-respecting people to do business with him. Statement and affidavit by mail. Government dare not countenance these things. Take some measures that will produce lists, polling divisions immediately.

JOHN PRINGLE.

And so the case ends, so far as the papers are concerned. But Rev. John Pringle still stands to his guns, and as late as February, 1908, I find a letter from him published in the Toronto 'News' and dated Dawson, January 28. In this letter he says :

Has the law been enforced in the Yukon? Has it been enforced in precisely the same way as the law in every other part of Canada has been enforced? Let us see.

1. There is, or it is generally believed that there is, a law forbiding the immigration into Canada of prostitutes and criminals.

Has this law been enforced?

We have a customs house at Summit, and a strong police force at Whitehorse—the door to the Yukon. What has been done to throw back the steady stream of prostitutes with the collateral stream of male undesirables which have poured into this territory for years? Absolutely nothing.

The police who are always ready to do their duty have not been instructed or permitted to prevent this shameful immigration.

It is sufficient for my purpose to quote the words of the assistant commissioner of police, spoken in the Yukon Council, last August, during the debate on dance halls: 'If the dance halls are closed hundreds of these women will not flock to the city, as they have been doing, for the past two years.' If there is any such law or regulation governing immigration and its enforcement elsewhere, has been on Yukon lines, it is a dead letter, dead as a coffin nail.

2. There is a federal Sunday law, passed after sore travail. I shall not argue whether it is good or bad, broad or narrow. It is a law for the enforcement of which in the unorganized districts and territories the Minister of Justice is responsible.

Has this law been enforced in the Yukon?

Last April the assistant commissioner of police was advised that the law was in force, and instructed to report to the Minister of Justice infractions of the law. He did so. Was the law enforced?

Was there any pretense made of enforcing it?

Absolutely none. The assistant commissioner was told that the police would do their duty if they attended to complaints made by private citizens, and the constables on duty on the streets of Dawson and on the creeks, saw the law broken—book stores, cigar stores, general stores, teams, wood-sawing machines going on Sunday as on other days—and under order, did nothing to enforce the law. The Department of Justice had forbidden action, and had thrust the onus and the odium of prosecution on the private citizens.

3. The Criminal Code forbids the business of prostitution. Has this law been enforced as in any other part of Canada.

He goes on to give very explicit reasons to show that this law is a dead letter. He says that it is impossible to convict. The Minister of Justice, he says, instructed the authorities in a particular case which was reported to him to take no action. He goes on to speak of gambling :

4. The Criminal Code forbids gambling. Has the law been enforced precisely in the same way as in any other part of Canada?

To say, here, that it has, is to raise an incredulous laugh. I have seen in the police court, right under the eyes of the police magistrate, all the furniture of the common gambling houses raided by the police, money taken from the faro tables, cards and chips from the poker tables, the best men in the police court swore to the facts. The case was dismissed. How do police magistrates in the east calculate the preponderance of evidence? By counting the witnesses solely or by considering their character and weighing their testimony also? . . . Have the laws for the protection of life and property been enforced?

I believe they have, thanks to the police, unthwarted and unhindered in this sphere of their duties, and also to the impossibility of escape except north or south by the river into the arms of the police, and east or west into an untrodden and unhospitable wilderness.

Has the liquor ordinance——

6. Has the liquor ordinance been enforced as such laws are enforced in any other part of Canada?

Emphatically no.

He then goes on to give his proof, and proceeds :

My mind is, of course, unlegal, and I shall be pardoned if, in a measure, I fail to see and appreciate the nice distinctions which laws and lawyers make. But the foregoing seems to me to be a pretty fair case against the contention that law has been, or is now, enforced in the Yukon, in the same way as in any other part of Canada. If way means procedure, I admit it; if it means the measure of the law's enforcement by the procedure provided, I unhesitatingly deny it.

He then goes on to mention the postal frauds and to show how much or how little has been done in reference thereto. He continues :

What about the criminal conspiracy cases after the election of 1904? The franchise stolen from one in eight of our voters, and no redress found. Why were the cases dropped? A gentleman now on the Supreme Court bench could, I think, give the reason. Was there what I learned from the eastern press is called a 'saw-off,' or some other new scheme as yet without a name? The cases were dropped. The public never knew why. They would like to know even now. Administrative and judicial abortion where a great public wrong is under investigation arouses the suspicion of free men. I think a very interesting and informing series of papers might be written on: 'curiosities of representative government, with illustrations from the Yukon.' Perhaps 'Immoralities' might be substituted for 'curiosities.'

JOHN PRINGLE.
Presbyterian Minister.

Dawson, January 28, 1908.

I clipped from the Vancouver 'News' a letter signed with a nom de plume, which letter bears out in much the same, or even stronger, language the statements made by the Rev. John Pringle in the letter the reading of which I have just concluded.

I do not propose at this stage to make any extended comments on the papers I have read. My object has been to lay this matter before the House and through the House before the country. I think that comments that might be made and sustained would be something of this nature: In the first place that the government is certainly at fault for not having given such attention as it should to the high standing and character of the men whom it placed in commanding positions in official authority in the Yukon. In the second place, that the government must have found it absolutely impossible not to know during the last five or six years what was going on in this connection in the Yukon. They must have had information both from official and unofficial sources. I believe they did know. In addition to the other information that came to them, there were in 1902 the explicit and fully detailed information of Rev. John Pringle. From 1902 up to 1905 the government did absolutely nothing by way of investigation for adequate redress. Then when Rev. John Pringle sent an additional letter in 1905, with fresh information added to that already given in 1902, that letter also resulted in no action on the part of the government. After waiting for months, Rev. John Pringle wrote to the Governor General in 1906 and sent to the Governor General with his covering letter the letters that he had sent before to His Excellency's ministers. Even then the government did nothing adequate, made no investigation or examination and procured no redress. But the Governor General's letter seems to have got later into the hands of the minister (Mr. Oliver).

Then, in 1907, on a fresh impulse given by the extraordinary canvass made both for and against Mr. Lithgow, as governor of the Yukon, the whole matter was brought to a head and the minister took tardy action. But for all these five years the Prime Minister, knowing absolutely just what was going on, paid the salaries of the men who were involved and implicated, raised their salaries from time to time, gave them the official mantle of this country and of this government and kept them in their places despite everything that had been said. Then, when at last they made a show of investigating, they did not grant, in a case like this, the formal and effective investigation which they would and did grant to a man whose small claim was in question and who called for an investigation under oath and got it. The Rev. John Pringle, with his information and his witnesses ready had to declare that he could not put himself in the position of attempting to give his evidence unless he had the protection of the oath for the witnesses and all that proceeds from that. Then the investigation is entirely dropped and the commissioner has nothing better to say than that as the Rev. John Pringle did not go on with his charges and as no other prosecutor appeared he did not consider it of use to carry it on any further and he ends it with, in his report, giving a certificate of good character, in so far as he himself goes and in so far as he himself knew, to the very parties who were accused and whose conduct ought to have been inquired into under the accusations of the Rev. John Pringle. I think that in the administration of any part of Canada, and more particularly of that distant part of Canada where people from every clime come, and where they judge of the character of this country and the character of its people and government by what they meet with there, a special care ought to have been taken to have kept common decency, at least, side by side with official life and to have redressed the monstrous and almost incredible grievances which all good and moral people in that country had to complain of.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I did not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) in the course of his remarks, but it appeared to me that the gravamen of his charge was that certain officials of this government were in the habit of playing music in dance halls. I think he gave the names of them—the Floradora and the M. and N. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he knows the instrument upon which these gentlemen played because if this is a question of comparative ethics between a mining centre like Dawson and other centres we ought to know the character of the instrumental music which they rendered. We all know that a gentleman who could play well on the banjo or the concertina, or the violin would be very popular with the heterogeneous population which floats into these music halls. These music halls are not recognized as being hopelessly immoral in a great many centres. In London, in New York and in a great many other centres there are music and dance halls. It would not be a question of immorality if an official were endeavouring to while away a long evening in Dawson by playing well upon any of the instruments indicated or engaging in the festive dance provided he did not disturb the peace by attemptng to perform upon the trombone or any instrument of that kind. I think the hon. gentleman ought to give us that information now.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me I will take just a moment to, in the first place, commend the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. W. Roche) to the government and the Prime Minister as also the defence which he proposes to put up to a case such as has been presented to this House. If the government have as high an appreciation of the issues involved as the hon. member for Halifax has, it will be for them to say. But, as to the hon. gentleman himself and the query he has made, I will leave him and the peculiar position he has just taken now to the people of the city of Halifax who will understand the issue and understand the position that he takes in reference to an issue of this kind. As to the peculiar type of instrument upon which this gentleman was playing I have no special or detailed information such as my hon. friend evidently desires to have. It may probably have been an instrument of many strings ; I am not sure.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, while my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who has spoken at such length, has not seen fit to offer the House any conclusion to his remarks, we can at least give him credit for having made good his suggestion of yesterday that although the government might take the mornings it would not necessarily get more business done on that account. However, we will not begrudge our friend the double pleasure that he has had during the last two hours and a half, pleasures in which he revels so much : one, the sound of his own voice, the other, the pleasure of putting discredit upon other people at a distance from here, not only individually but collectively, not only by reason of his own ingenuity and imagination, but by the ingenuity and imagination of another man. I think it is not going too far to say that my hon. friend has traded perhaps too much on the fact that that gentleman whom he quoted so much was a member of the clergy of a great church in this country. I would not suggest such a thing in regard to the Rev. Dr. Pringle, but my hon. friend will have to admit that as there are members of parliament who have their imperfections, so there may be ministers of the gospel who are not entirely perfect, and it is not sufficient to say that because a statement is made by the minister of the gospel it is absolute evidence that it is in all parts and points absolutely correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might perhaps be regarded as a fair ground for investigation.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely; so it was considered to be a fair ground for investigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was the investigation held ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was a matter of regret on my part that it was not found to be sufficient ground for investigation when the opportunity was given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the minister mean by that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry to say that it was not found to be sufficient ground for investigation when the opportunity was given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way ?

Mr. OLIVER. The opportunity for investigation was given and it was not taken advantage of on a paltry lawyer's quibble. Our hon. friend has traversed a great deal of ground during his harangue of to-day, from the question of the general administration of the Yukon to the private conduct of certain individuals connected with it. The character and propriety of the comment that has been made may be brought out by one or two instances in the quotations that he has given. The letter of the Rev. Mr. Pringle, dated May 27, 1902, contains the views of the reverend gentleman in regard to the administration of the mining business in that country. He says :

In one notorious case, Treadgold, the most important water privilege in the Yukon has been handed over to a corporation. I do not hesitate a moment to say that this concession is an iniquity and the people will some day reap the bitter fruits of its government's wrongdoing. The Klondike water should be used directly by the government of Canada in the interests of the people.

My blood boiled, when, standing on the Arkansaw creek divide, I saw the great and beautiful river issue from the foothills, and remembered that it was in the grasp of capital, that the people had been disinherited; and that everything in this great rich district was to be food for the maw of a greedy and government favoured corporation.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) could not have improved on that language, and I am sure he read it to-day with a great deal of gusto. This letter was written six years ago and necessarily we know more to-day than we did then. The Klondike river still flows out of the foothills ; it is not in the grasp of government favoured corporations and to this date its water has not been utilized for the purposes that the Rev. Dr. Pringle desired it to be utilized for, and declared it would have been utilized for if it had not been for the action of this government. The reverend gentleman says the water at that time was in the grasp of the notorious Treadgold concession. There is no Treadgold concession to-day, there is no Treadgold water privilege ; whatever water privilege Treadgold got upon the Klondike river he never exercised it, for the good and sufficient reason that it was not any good. But Mr. Treadgold has utilized another water privilege on another river and as a result of Treadgold's personal efforts capital has been induced to come into the Yukon so that there is to-day in process of construction, a scheme for the purpose of mining completely the remaining gold bearing gravels of that country on a scale that does not exist in any other country in the world. An expenditure is being made there for this purpose under the supervision of this man Treadgold in the way of building flumes and in the purchase of claims to the extent, I am credibly informed, of $10,000,000. And it has not utilized in any way, shape or manner the water of the Klondike river which the Rev. Dr. Pringle has announced to the world was tied up from beneficial use in the development of that country. Now, the Rev. Dr. Pringle was mistaken at that time ; he was absolutely and utterly mistaken in that.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister deny that Treadgold did not have possession of it then ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not denying that Treadgold had possession of it then.

Mr. SPROULE. Then Dr. Pringle was not mistaken when he said that Treadgold had it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am denying that the possession of it by Treadgold had then or has now or ever had any deleterious effect upon the development of the gold mining of the Yukon.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister himself admits that Treadgold had it but did not use it.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. SPROULE. If he did not use it, it would not enure to the advantage of the mining interests there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What became of it?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been free for the use of any body for years and years since then.

Mr. SPROULE. It was not free then ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was not at that time.

Mr. SPROULE. Then Mr. Pringle could not have been mistaken in the statement he made.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Pringle was not mistaken as to the ownership by Treadgold of the concession but he was mistaken in the statement that the ownership by Treadgold of that concession was any injury to the development of the Yukon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What became of the concession ?

Mr. OLIVER. The concession was forfeited because it was no use.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Forfeited because is was no use ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is very remarkable.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be remarkable but there are many things that my hon. friend does not know and that is one of them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Treadgold forfeited it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is the first time I ever knew he could do so. He might surrender it but the government alone could forfeit it.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is a lawyer and I am not able to quibble with him on legal points. The fact is that Treadgold had that concession and he has not it now. The essential point of the statement of the Rev. Dr. Pringle was that Treadgold's ownership of that concession was an injury to the Yukon and I say Dr. Pringle was mistaken as the facts to-day prove. I say that the concession was of no value to Treadgold, that the Yukon is being developed to-day, not by the concession but by the investment of money made by the same Treadgold at another point and in another direction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the concession were of no value to Treadgold so that the property could not be used, would not that of itself be an injury to the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not. If it was no good to Treadgold and no good to any body else what difference who owned it. If my hon. friend owned it to-day and if it could not be utilized by anybody, is the ownership of it hurting anybody.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did it not tie up the property in the meantime ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, but so long as the property was of no value to anybody what difference did it make ? That is elementary and my hon. friend though a lawyer ought to know it.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the property tested?

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman know what property is in question ? It was not land, it was a water right. It was a question of investing money to bring that water into beneficial operation on the mining claims, and the engineering conditions were such that it could not be brought economically into beneficial operation on these claims.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what remained to be tested.

Mr. OLIVER. The evidence of that is that to-day Treadgold is bringing water from another source altogether at a total expenditure of some $10,000,000. I am not finding any fault with Dr. Pringle for the view he took. I am merely suggesting he was mistaken in that view ; that he was absolutely and entirely mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. As also was Treadgold.

Mr. OLIVER. As also was Treadgold ; as anybody is liable to be mistaken in a gold mining country.

Mr. FOSTER. They never know what is going to happen.

Mr. OLIVER. They never know what is going to happen until they get the gold in their pockets. Giving Dr. Pringle credit for good intentions, I say that Dr. Pringle is liable to be mistaken ; and here is one very clear instance in which he was absolutely mistaken. If my hon. friend was aware of the conditions of that country he has not the same excuse for offering this quotation from Dr. Pringle's letter to the House to-day as a condemnation of the government, as Dr. Pringle had in writing it, because the events have proven that Dr. Pringle was wrong although my hon. friend did not inform the House on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. I had to give the whole document. My hon. friend would not have me read one part and omit another part.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not finding fault with what my hon. friend said. He was making a partisan presentation of the case and he took advantage of this statement which Dr. Pringle made years ago before the knowledge had come, and he was using that statement to create the impression that that condition existed to-day. If he was aware of the facts—I do not say he was—he must have known that it did not exist and that Dr. Pringle was mistaken when he made that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend does not want to be unfair to Dr. Pringle, and would not like it to go out that Dr. Pringle was mistaken in that statement. Dr. Pringle, as the minister agrees, was right in his statement of the facts at that time, but was not right in his appreciation of what might happen from them.

Mr. OLIVER. He was right in a part of his facts, but not in the whole of them.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine that he was right in the whole of his facts, but not in his anticipations.

Mr. OLIVER. He stated his anticipations as facts, in the most emphatic language. The Yukon is a very important territory, and it is not necessarily surrounded with that air of mystery which my hon. friend suggested, and which seemed to be such a source of enjoyment to him. The Yukon is a business proposition, and it is desirable in the interests of every part of Canada that it should be fully and properly developed. The value of the Yukon is in its gold production. When gold was discovered there the means whereby that gold production could be made most effective, most economically, was under the consideration of the government of the day. In a vast country like the Yukon no government could expect, and this government did not expect, that there was abundance of gold everywhere. While there was abundance of gold in one or two or three locations, a great balance of the area contained either no gold or a limited quantity of gold. Therefore in their mining regulations they made provision not only for the mining of the limited area where gold was abundant, but also for other areas where gold was less abundant; that is to say, they provided for miners' claims and for hydraulic concessions. Rev. Dr. Pringle, in this letter written in 1902, declares most strongly against hydraulic concessions, declaring them to be iniquitous, and holds the government responsible for the iniquity of the policy, as he was perfectly right in doing if it was iniquitous. The principle underlying that policy was an absolutely sound principle, a principle which it is necessary to recognize in the securing of the gold production of that country. Any policy that does not recognize the necessity of providing for the development of the vast areas of low-grade values in that country is not an effective or sound policy. It is possible that, owing to lack of knowledge of the conditions at the time, the administration with regard to the hydraulic concessions was not all that could be desired; but the idea that is attempted to be conveyed by Dr. Pringle, that the principle of hydraulic concessions was a principle of corrupt dealings, intended to bar out the individual and to advance the interests of corrupt friends of the government, had absolutely no foundation in fact; and my hon. friend, in using Dr. Pringle's letter to place that same idea before the House, is in exactly the same position as Dr. Pringle.

There is just one other allusion I want to make to these long letters of Dr. Pringle's. In the letter of January 3, 1905, he deals with conditions as he considers he finds them at that time, particularly with the circumstances surrounding the election of Dr. Thompson, the sitting member for the Yukon, and he gives his opinion, in good free terms, of the gentleman who was or claimed to be, the government candidate, and of the methods by which he attempted to secure election. I want to read one line of this letter, because I think it is desirable that the House should have its attention drawn to it in view of further or future letters written by Dr. Pringle. He is dealing with the expenditure of money, asserting that the money of the country was being administered under the Yukon government with a view to advancing the interests of those who were likely to support Mr. Congdon. This he particularly charges was the case in regard to road works, and he says:

> It is an open secret that Mr. Bertrand would have started a road around the cliff to Moosehide, to cost about $15,000 had not Mr. Lithgow refused to be responsible for the expenditure.

Mr. Lithgow was the controller of the territory, what might be called the Finance Minister of the government as it then was, and Dr. Pringle declares that Mr. Lithgow, in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty in his official position on that occasion, saved the government of the country $15,000 which he charges it was desired to expend corruptly in the interests of the election of the government candidate. That is the same Mr. Lithgow whom in his letters of last year, he charged with divers and sundry crimes and misdemeanours, which I think was very little to the credit of the gentleman making the charges.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister allow me one remark there? That seems to me to show a spirit of eminent fairness in Dr. Pringle. He gave to Mr. Lithgow the full credit of stopping the illegal expenditure. When it comes to other sides of Mr. Lithgow's character, he prefers his charges.

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Pringle at that time did not make any charges against Mr. Lithgow. His charges in 1905 were against Mr. Congdon and his supporters. Mr. Lithgow apparently was not one of Mr. Congdon's supporters, and therefore he has no charges against him, and the simple statement was made that Mr. Lithgow had prevented an improper expenditure of $15,000. Either the statement that Mr. Bertrand wanted to expend $15,000 improperly is untrue, or the statement that Mr. Lithgow prevented that is untrue. He can have it either way.

Mr. FOSTER. Which way is it?

Mr. OLIVER. I say he can have it either way. I do not think it is either way. I am not entitled to accept his statement.

Mr. FOSTER. You are not in a position to deny it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position to deny it, but I do not accept it. There is nothing in these letters to warrant an acceptance of their general allegations. I have pointed out one or two cases in which they are very wide of the mark, and where a gentleman uses such strong language as Dr. Pringle does, the chances are that he has gone wide of the mark in more cases than one.

Dr. Pringle wrote in 1905 and received a reply, but he finds fault because he is not given a copy of the reply which Mr. Congdon sent to the department. I want to point out in this connection that when the government received Mr. Pringle's letter in the beginning of 1905, the government at once asked Mr. Congdon what reply he had to make to it. It was not therefore a case in which the government was letting the matter rest. The demand for a reply from Mr. Congdon was immediate and so was his reply, and in my humble judgment his reply was conclusive. It seems to me that the case was then closed. The government had inquired into it and the allegations had not only been denied but disproved. And there was nothing further to be done. And I am not aware that Dr. Pringle had any particular or inherent right to be given a copy of the letter sent by Mr. Congdon. He had seen fit to make a statement, the government had made inquiry, and it was for the government to decide whether it was satisfied or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What inquiry did the government make ?

Mr. OLIVER. It inquired from Mr. Congdon, who was the man charged by Dr. Pringle with impropriety in the conduct of the election. Mr. Congdon's reply was, in my judgment, conclusive.

Mr. FOSTER. Why then was Mr. Henderson appointed to investigate ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is mixing up his dates. That was subsequent. Mr. Henderson was not appointed until the summer of 1907 and Mr. Pringle's charge and Mr. Congdon's reply were in 1905. The matter rested there until the necessity came to appoint a commissioner to the Yukon in succession to Mr. McInnis. In the interval between the beginning of 1905 and 1907, Mr. McInnis had been appointed commissioner, and after having served a certain time he resigned and we had to appoint a successor. Mr. Lithgow's name was mentioned favourably for the vacancy by some of his friends in the Yukon. His name was forwarded in nomination for the position, and Dr. Pringle, having heard I presume of this recommendation, came out with another letter in which he gave his opinion of Mr. Lithgow and matters and things generally in the Yukon. His letter was written to myself and replied to. Dr. Pringle's letter was dated 19th January, and is as follows :

I am ashamed to think that the impression will go abroad that the people of the Yukon are willing to have such a man as Lithgow as commissioner, much less to request the government to appoint him. His life here has been a public scandal, and while if he were a private citizen, I should have nothing to say except to himself, as a public official and one evidently seeking the highest position in this territory in the people's gift, he is open to the judgment of any citizen.

He says that Mr. Lithgow's life was a public scandal, and after a long statement to that effect, concludes :

Last night a meeting for the purpose of promoting Mr. Lithgow's interests was called by his friends who are for the most part those who surrounded Congdon. The meeting was overwhelmingly anti-Lithgow. Many did not vote, but it showed 97 to 73 against Lithgow.

J.P.

In that letter there is no suggestion of an attack on Mr. Lithgow because of any act in his position as controller. The attack is based wholly on the possibility of his appointment as commissioner. That letter was promptly replied to and did not call for further action ; but on the 31st July, 1907, the Rev. Mr. Pringle comes forward with his charges against Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard in their positions as government officials.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister correct in that ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is as I understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will look, he will find that the charge against Girouard, substantiated by affidavits, was made in 1905 by Mr. Pringle.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly, I am speaking of the correspondence addressed to myself and of which I have personal knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Pringle's letters of 1905 were also addressed to the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not minister at the time ; but if this letter was addressed to the then Minister of the Interior in the early part of 1905, I myself visited the Yukon during that period. I visited that country for the purpose of looking into the conditions for myself, and I am bound to say that neither Mr. Pringle nor any one else in or about the Yukon gave me any hint or indication of any such charges such as have been made in the letter. It appears to me that if the conditions were so bad and urgent as represented, it would have been only reasonable and fair that I should have been informed of them at the time and in the place where I was for the express purpose of seeing and hearing all I could with regard to the administration in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. They might have been a little frightened.

Mr. OLIVER. If they were, they were the only people in the Yukon who were, because I think I saw nearly all except them. On the 31st July, 1907, Dr. Pringle made certain specific charges against Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard. These were the first intimations to me that there was anything to be said against these gentlemen. To that letter I did reply at once and gave authority to the commissioner to investigate the charges. I replied on the 28th August to Dr. Pringle's letter of the 31st July. I was not in Ottawa when the letter arrived :

By letter of this date to Commissioner Henderson I am instructing him to investigate fully the charges which you have made against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow, and to receive from you any specific charges which you may desire to make against any other official in the employ of the government and especially of the Interior Department in the Yukon Territory.

In regard to this investigation it seems to me the case is very simple. Dr. Pringle made certain general statements against two specific officials in the Yukon. They are statements which if substantiated would certainly lead to a question as to the usefulness of these officials and the desirability of retaining them in the public service. Forthwith the commissioner of the territory is authorized and instructed to hold an investigation into these charges. The gentleman who has seen fit to make these charges —general charges remember—against these two specific officials is asked to come forward and in the first place to make his charges specific, and in the next place to substantiate them.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister read the charges as shown on page 14 ? I think that he and the House will find they are tolerably specific.

Mr. OLIVER. They are tolerably specific.

Mr. FOSTER. I think they are very specific.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the point I want the House to come to. Well, I do not wish to discredit ' Hansard ' by reading the wording of this statement unless my hon. friend insists.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not insist if you only admit they are specific.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not admit they are specific, and if the hon. gentleman insists they are I will have to read them to show they are not specific, and that they are not in a form which will enable any man to come forward and disprove them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He would not come forward to disprove the charges ; he would come forward to disprove the evidence that was brought in support of them.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend forgets he is in parliament and not in a court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows where he is.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the party who makes the charges produces credible evidence to prove them.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not learned in the law, but I think we all know enough about the law to know that when I bring a complaint against you I have to state the time and place and occasion, and the reason for that is so that you may have an opportunity of disproving that charge in particular and in general. Unless time and place and occasion are given you have not a fair opportunity to disprove my charge. In this case Dr. Pringle does not give time and place and location. He says that certain things occurred but he does not put that assertion in such shape that Mr. Lithgow or Mr. Girouard could come forward and say : That is false, I was not there at that time or place. Under this statement of Dr. Pringle, Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard would have to prove a negative covering an indeterminate period of it might be one week, or one month, or six months, or five years as the case might be, and I submit that is not a fair or reasonable proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the minister read the particulars of the affidavits with reference to Girouard ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not going to read them.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me he would find them very particular as to date, as to place, as to circumstance.

Mr. OLIVER. But these are not the statements of Dr. Pringle and it is Dr. Pringle I am dealing with now.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it was Dr. Pringle's evidence.

Mr. OLIVER. I am dealing with Dr. Pringle and the statement he made, and I am arguing in defence of the position I took in dealing with this question, and I want to show the House and the country that the position I took was fair. I want to point out that the statements made by Dr. Pringle were not in specific form such as would be fair and reasonable to enable the men who are charged with these offences to absolutely disprove them. I say that the man who makes a general charge such as that is not acting fairly towards the person against whom he makes it. And I say that charged with my responsibility I would not be warranted in doing otherwise than offering Dr. Pringle an opportunity to come forward and make specific statements as to these charges before I would have further proceedings in the matter. Fair play is bonnie play, and while Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard may be people living away in the Yukon, they may be discreditable or creditable. In the position which I occupy it is not for me to consider where they are or who they are or what they are, but to give them just the same square deal that any white man is entitled to in this country. I don't think I was entitled to do otherwise than to require, before taking further proceedings, that Dr. Pringle should say when, where and how these transactions took place so as to give these men a fair and reasonable opportunity to disprove the charges if they could.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister pretend to say that under a royal commission issued by parliament to inquire into the conduct of officials charged with wrong-doing, it is necessary to state specific dates and specific instances? Does he think that you should lay a complaint in such a case as you would lay a complaint before a magistrate? Does he think that was done in the case of McGreevy and Connolly, who were charged with certain offences in connection with public works?

Mr. OLIVER. I take issue with that position here and now and I do it on my responsibility as a member and as a minister. As I understand it the very foundation principle of British justice is that there shall be no trial unless there is an accusation. Whatever may be the view of parliament on any special occasion, or of the Governor in Council on any special occasion, for myself in the administration of my office I have not taken any other view, and I may inform the House and the country that I do not propose to take any other view than that there shall be a charge before there shall be an investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Why then did the minister appoint Mr. Henderson to make an investigation?

Mr. OLIVER. To give Dr. Pringle an opportunity to make his statements specific so that there could be an investigation. I further gave Mr. Henderson authority to make inquiries as to the general or specific conduct of any official in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. Which he did not do.

Mr. OLIVER. Which he has reported to me in his letter, that he did, and that he has nothing to report as to misconduct on their part.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister regard it as necessary that a charge must be made specifically against an official with regard to date, time, and incident? Does he think he is doing the proper thing to go on with an inquiry and not allow the witnesses to be either subpœnaed or sworn, but take their ipse dixit; and is he willing to accept that as evidence but not allow the commission he has appointed to put these witnesses on oath?

Mr. OLIVER. When the charge is made specific, when a statement is made which is capable of being proven or disproven as a question of fact—then is the time we will take to put witnesses on oath, and until that specific statement is made, I say I am not warranted, as a matter of fair play, in putting it in the power of a man who is unwilling to make such a specific charge to compel this or that citizen to come forward and make a statement under oath concerning matters on which, perhaps, he has no information or, perhaps, concerning which he does not wish to speak.

Mr. SPROULE. But he says: Give such a commission and I will make a charge, but until you do that I will not make a charge. He probably has a reason for that.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that, until he makes a specific charge, I will not give him an inquiry under oath, but if he does make his charge specific the question of an inquiry under oath will be one for consideration. That is a point I want to make absolutely and positively clear.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the policy of the government?

Mr. OLIVER. That is my policy in administering this department in this connection. I want that distinctly understood. While I want to see honest officials and clean administration, I will not be a party to a system of simple slander which will discredit honourable men—or dishonourable or any other kind of men—without anybody being responsible for the circulation of the slander.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) think that he ought to be higher or greater authority than parliament? Take the example of what this House has done in the Hodgins case. A committee has been appointed to inquire into certain allegations that have appeared in the press, and we give the committee charged with that duty power to swear every witness who comes before it and bring out all the information under oath, though the charges are only of a general character and though neither dates nor specific instances are alleged. Parliament is supposed to be a model in what it does with regard to inquiries or anything else. Does the minister think he is a higher authority than parliament or what parliament does it is not proper for him to do?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that parliament has a higher authority than I have, and that what may be perfectly justifiable for parliament may not be justifiable for me, that what may be justifiable action on the part of parliament in the prosecution of the public business would not necessarily be justifiable in me in the investigation of the private character of an individual. Parliament is supreme; parliament can do what it pleases; parliament can be unjust if it likes; parliament can make any inquiry it wishes to make, but I say that even parliament has no right to set up an inquisition into the private character of individuals. Still, even if parliament had such a right, it would not follow that I have that right. I do not pretend to such a right, and I do not propose to exercise it. I say distinctly that I do not propose to make myself a party to any general scheme of slander, let it be put forward by any person, minister of the gospel or any other. If a slander is uttered, the best I can do is to afford the man who utters it an opportunity to prove what he has stated, to substantiate it by any evidence he may bring forward, to choose his own time, his own place, his own occasion, and if he will not do that, if he will not choose time, place and occasion so that the party accused can disprove the accusation, if it be a thing that can be disproved, I think I have discharged my duty, as I have said in my letter to the Rev. Dr. Pringle, and I believe that the country will sustain me in that position.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the country will reach a different conclusion.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that, because men live in the Yukon they are less entitled to the rights of Canadian citizenship than are those who live in Toronto, or Ottawa or elsewhere. I deal with all Canadian citizens in the same way. I want to say that it seems to me it has been the habit in discussing this question of the Yukon to discuss it with the idea that the man who has taken his life in his hand, who has risked his all and his life every day in the reclaiming of the wilderness and the building up of the country—this man, merely because he is a pioneer, is to be regarded as less than the ordinary kind of man and that he is not entitled to the same consideration as other people. I want to say to this House, and I will say it to the country, that so far as I am concerned the pioneer is the man whose interests require first attention at the hands of this government, of this country, of this people ; and that, because a man is a pioneer in the Yukon, because a man is a gold miner, he is none the less a citizen of Canada and none the less entitled to every consideration that every other citizen of Canada is entitled to. Because Dawson is in the Yukon the citizens of that city are not less entitled to fair play, honest treatment, fair consideration, they are not less entitled to being spoken of fairly and decently, than are the citizens of Toronto or Ottawa. Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how would such a proposition as this which has been suggested by Rev. Dr. Pringle be received if applied to the city of Toronto or the city of Ottawa? That a slander should be uttered against a citizen of Toronto or Ottawa, that it should be declared that his private conduct was not such as it ought to be, and because he held an office from the city or from the province or from the Dominion, therefore there must be an inquiry by royal commission into whether it is true or false. It would be absurd. No man would justify such a proposition applied to Toronto or Ottawa. Why then apply it to the Yukon?

That is the case as it has struck me—we must give to people who are living in the Yukon the same consideration as we are giving to people anywhere else, and that to trespass upon the rights of a citizen of the Yukon, whether a government official or a private citizen, is just the same as to trepass on the rights of a citizen of Toronto or Ottawa. And Rev. Dr. Pringle has no more right to circulate throughout this country allegations that this man or that man is not correct in his private life than any reverend gentleman in Ottawa would have to circulate such statements regarding the members of this House or regarding any other citizen.

It is said that there is vice in the Yukon. It is said that there is crime in the Yukon. The evidence is that there is less crime in the Yukon, man for man, than there is possibly right here in Ottawa. As to vice, I am not able to answer. But it is certainly a notorious fact that the city of Ottawa is not free from vice—that the city of Toronto is not free from vice—that the city of Montreal is not free from vice. Why should not parliament concern itself with the morals of the city of Montreal as well as with the morals of the city of Dawson? It seems to me that there is a wrong point of view in regard to this question of the conditions in the Yukon and in regard to the observance of law and morality there. It is unquestionable that, from the establishment of the authority of the Canadian government in the Yukon, there has been a most phenomenal maintenance of law and order, of enforcement of the rights of life and property. No one can gainsay that. When you consider the facts in the Yukon along with those in Alaska immediately across the line, the comparison is simply startling.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the minister a question? If that be so, how does he account for the fact that we have paid for a number of years $500,000 for a police force to look after the people up there—$500,000 for a police force for 8,000 people?

Mr. OLIVER. I say that the maintenance of law and order in the Yukon——

Mr. SPROULE. That is what the police are for.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, they are there, and they maintain law and order.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any portion of Canada where the condition of things is anything like that ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. gentleman say? I do not think the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) ought to be so needlessly offensive.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Somebody ought to; it is time. You had better sit down now.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. OLIVER. The Mounted Police are maintained in the Yukon by the country for the purpose of keeping law and order. They have kept law and order. So, that, I say, the contrast between the conditions in the Yukon and in the immediately adjoining territory of Alaska, in so far as law and order are concerned, and in so far as protection to life and property are concerned, is simply startling. There is no consideration given to that fact. Conditions are painted in the Yukon with regard to vice and immorality, which conditions exist, I say, in every city of the Dominion and in every city of the world. It is a matter of regret that these conditions do exist. It is to be regretted that they exist in Dawson, but they do not exist any more in Dawson than can be helped. The authorities are as energetic in suppressing this condition in Dawson as they are anywhere else, but because they are not successful in Dawson, as they are not successful anywhere else in the world, is no reason why the people of the Yukon should be slandered in general or in particular.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it a fact that you will have an equally good condition of affairs in a country where you have one hotel selling liquor for every ninety-four of the people as you will in a country where there is only one hotel for every thousand people. The former was the condition that they had in Dawson a few years ago.

Mr. OLIVER. On the other hand it must be remembered that there is a good deal of difference between the conditions in Dawson and the conditions in other places. The conditions in Dawson were at that time that there was an immense aggregation of men engaged in active, energetic, outdoor employment with plenty of money to spend and limited opportunities for spending it. I do not know that there were more opportunities for getting liquor in Dawson in proportion to the class of men who took liquor than there were in any part of Ontario; because, it must be remembered that in Ontario the proportion of men who are of the class which I have described is very limited as compared with the whole population whereas in Dawson they are the whole population. There is no use of comparing conditions unless you compare like conditions, unless you compare the conditions that existed in Dawson with similar conditions elsewhere. However, I am not apologizing or saying anything with regard to the conditions as to the sale of liquor. That is a matter within the regulation of the Yukon Council itself. It is in accordance with the public opinion of the people of the Yukon. Perhaps they are wrong. If I had to answer the question I would say that they were absolutely wrong and that is their business and they must transact that business as best they may and according to their own judgment. I will not repeat the slanders which have been uttered by the Rev. Dr. Pringle with regard to Mr. Lithgow's private character and I will only revert to the certificate that he gave in these very letters to Mr. Lithgow with reference to his character as a public official. A man who, as he says, saved the country $15,000, even though there was pressure upon him to allow the expenditure to be made in the heat of an election when a supporter of the government was concerned, is the man that he asks us to condemn, that he asks us to put out of his position where he has served a useful purpose during all these years and he asks us to do so because he chooses to repeat a slander that he heard against him. When he was given an opportunity to give us the proof he was not able to get the people who had given him the story to come forward and say it was true. Under these circumstances we could not do other than we have done. If we are to listen to every attack that might be made upon every officer of the government in his private capacity we are not giving that credit to good service that good service is entitled to. Let me allude to the suggestion that the hon. member for North Toronto made as to the difference between the treatment given the demand for an investigation by Dr. Pringle and the demand for an investigation by a Mr. Perron who complained of some mishandling of his affairs in the Gold Commissioner's office. The difference between the conditions was this: The complaint of Mr. Perron was in regard to public business and Mr. Perron was entitled to a commission under the terms of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister mind stating what was the business?

Mr. OLIVER. It was something in connection with priority in the filing of a certain document. I have just forgotten the actual facts. It was a matter of the transaction of public business. The Act expressly says:

> The minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada, may appoint at any time, under the authority of the Governor in Council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business, or any part of the business, of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties.

The charge made by Mr. Perron related to the official duty of a certain member of the service and under that section an investigation was held. I submit that the charges made by Mr. Pringle against Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard are not charges in regard to their official duties and that therefore this section does not give authority to hold a commission upon these charges.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is wrong with reference to the charge made against Mr. Girouard. I think that absolutely and definitely refers to his official duties. He should have been somewhere and he was somewhere else.

Mr. OLIVER. No, I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I am afraid we will have to read these charges in order to satisfy him.

Mr. FOSTER. If you read the affidavits you will find it.

Mr. OLIVER. But there were no affidavits.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, there were six of them.

Mr. OLIVER. Given by Dr. Pringle ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sent by Dr. Pringle to the Prime Minister.

Mr. OLIVER. I am speaking of the charges amde by Mr. Pringle, in 1907.

Mr. FOSTER. What's the odds as between 1907 and 1905 ?

Mr. OLIVER. The odds is this that I ordered an investigation into the charges made in 1907, and if Dr. Pringle had these affidavits in his possession all he had to do was to put them before the commission. I do not know why he did not do so. He did not do so although we gave him the opportunity to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. He told you why.

Mr. OLIVER. But he did not do so at any rate. He refused to do it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why would the affidavits be any better in the possession of the commissioner than in the possession of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. The government appointed a commissioner to hold an investigation and when a commissioner is appointed to hold an investigation it is through his hands formally that everything has to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. The commissioner asked the minister for a commission ?

Mr. OLIVER. I know he did and that is a point in regard to which the commissioner and I differed. As he was the commissioner, my view, for the time being, prevailed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Only for a short time.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot read the section in any other way. It is provided that there shall be a commission of inquiry into the conduct of any person only so far as the same relates to his official duties. We have granted commissions to inquire into matters affecting the official duties of officials in the Yukon. We have not granted a royal commission to inquire into the private conduct of any official in the Yukon, but when allegations against the private conduct of any official were made, although they were not specific and although they were not substantiated by evidence, an opportunity was given both to make them specific and to substantiate them by evidence. While I do not wish to load up 'Hansard' it might be just as well to read the conclusion of the correspondence between the commissioner and myself so that it may be available to the public. On the 2nd of January, 1908, I wrote the commissioner :

Ottawa, January 2, 1908.

Dear Sir,—I have before me the papers in connection with the inquiry ordered in respect of Dr. Pringle's charges with your covering letter of December 7.

I note that in your letter of November 8 you suggest your appointment as a commissioner to investigate the charges under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

In reply to this suggestion I beg to say that it appears to me that it would be a very strained construction to put upon section 2 of that Act to say that an inquiry into charges of the nature of those made by Dr. Pringle was an inquiry 'into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.' Inasmuch as Dr. Pringle has been requested to make a specific statement of his knowledge of the facts regarding which he complains, and has failed to do so, I do not think I would be warranted in applying the terms of the Inquiries Act.

If Dr. Pringle had availed himself of the opportunity which you gave him under my instructions, it would then be a matter for consideration whether we might or might not invoke the terms of the Act, but without something more definite than has yet been brought to your attention, I do not think we have sufficient warrant for doing so.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

Hon. Alexander Henderson,
Commisisoner Yukon Territory, Dawson.

I followed that with another letter on the 9th of January, as follows :

Ottawa, January 9, 1908.

Dear Sir,—Your report of December 7 on charges made by Dr. Pringle against Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard has been duly received.

I note your statement that both Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard have emphatically denied to you the truth of the charges. I also note the refusal of Dr. Pringle, when offered the opportunity, to make such further statements in connection with his charges as would be necessary to enable you to reach a conclusion; also your statement that no other person in the territory had made any charges to you with respect to either of the officials named; that you had seen nothing in the conduct of either of them which would warrant the conclusion that the charges made by Dr. Pringle against them, or either of them, could be substantiatel; and also that Mr. Girouard has commenced an action against Dr. Pringle for damages for libel, and that the action is now pending.

In view of these facts, and as you have no authority to hold an inquiry under oath, such as Dr. Pringle desires, it does not seem to me that the case at present calls for further action on your part.

At the same time I desire it to be distinctly understood that in case of there coming to your knowledge such personal actions of any official of this government in the Yukon Territory as would or might constitute a public scandal, or as to reflect unfavourably upon this government you are expected to report the case to me fully and without delay so that the government may be in a position to deal with such official as the circumstances seem to warrant.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

Hon. Alexander Henderson,
Commissioner Yukon District, Dawson, Yukon Territory.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister know what was the result of the action for slander; was it prosecuted?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say. I presume the courts will deal with it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Girouard now an officer of the government?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Girouard is not an officer of the government at the present time. Mr. Girouard applied to leave the government service and the office he held has been consolidated with another office in the interests of economy.

Mr. FOSTER. Who holds the consolidated office?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Laliberté was librarian of the Justice Department and he now holds the dual position of librarian and registrar at the former salary of the registrar. In conclusion I want to say that I think there should be a very wide distinction drawn—at any rate I want to draw a very wide distinction—between allegations made against the public and against the private conduct of any official. I am quite aware that a man is the same man in public as in private, and I am quite aware that it is to the credit of the government and to the credit of the country that its officials should conduct themselves so that there should not be any scandal attaching to their names while they are in the public service. I do not think there is any person in this House who is more thoroughly imbued with that idea than I am. But, as was stated in the quotation from the 'Globe', this is not a question of the conduct of Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow; this is a question of whether a royal commission should be appointed by a responsible minister to find out whether an official of his department had conducted himself properly in his private capacity. In regard to that I want to say that I hold myself responsible to the House and to the country for the private conduct of the officials of the department which I have the honour to administer so far as that private conduct can be considered to come in collision with public interest or public duty, and for my part I do not need any royal commission to tell me what to do in the case of an official in the employ of the Interior Department, whose private conduct is such as to reflect discredit upon the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). The Minister of the Interior has treated us to one of his old time extraordinary speeches which fortunately are becoming less and less frequent the longer he continues in office. When he seeks to cast discredit on Dr. Pringle, naturally he does not allude to the circumstances that four years ago he and his party were perfectly ready to exploit that reverend gentleman's name for the purpose of clearing themselves from odium in connection with the Yukon. But now that this gentleman has made certain statements, first in 1902, again in 1905 and afterwards in 1907, the minister while preserving a certain appearance of fairness has endeavoured before the House and the country to cast that discredit upon Dr. Pringle which is hardly consistent with the fair play for which he himself cried out so vehemently in his address. The minister asks for fair play. Does he think it is fair play to the people of Canada or to the people of the Yukon or to his own officials, that he should make a mockery of the investigation he pretended to carry on in regard to the charges made by Dr. Pringle? I endeavoured during the course of his remarks to find a single line of intelligible thought in the mind of the minister with regard to the course that ought to be pursued, and I say in all candour that I was absolutely unable to find it. I do not think any hon. gentleman in this House will be able to extract from the remarkable address of the minister any comprehensible line of thought as to the duty of a public man in regard to officials under such circumstances. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) came under the censure of the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend exercised a remarkable control in dealing with this matter. He over and over again as I know—because having a copy of the return before me I followed him—left out passages that he might very well have read had he desired only to cast discredit upon the administration of this government. There was no attempt by the hon. member, except to put forward a few of the least, but not any of the worst of the abominations and deviltries that have been carried on in the Yukon under the administration of this government and by certain officials of this government during the past six or seven years.

I do not desire at the present moment to speak of the allegations of Dr. Pringle so far as they concern the remarkable concessions granted in the Yukon or the policy of the government in regard to the development of that country. I will not even refer to his charges in respect of the manner in which the election in 1904 was carried on, although it is perfectly well known to any one who has come in contact with men from the Yukon, that not only in that election, but in the first election in the Yukon, exactly that kind of work was carried on. In the first election there were two polling places established near the American boundary, and eight or ten men were brought over from the other side of the line. They went up and voted. Five minutes afterwards they went up and voted again under other names ; and so they continued, with the result that in places where there were not more than five or six people living, the then member for the Yukon had a majority of between 300 and 400, if I am correctly informed, a majority greater than the total majority by which he was returned.

But these are not the important parts of the statement of Dr. Pringle. His statements concern, in the first place, the administration of the Yukon by this government. I will take for the purpose of my argument simply one challenge by Dr. Pringle with respect to the administration of that country by this government. Let us look at what he says in his letter of the 3rd of January, 1905, with respect to the carrying on under the sanction of this government of what are known as dance halls in the Yukon—licensed dance halls :

I found that the administration had been a disgrace to the Canadian name, such as no self-respecting Canadian could excuse.

I may say that throughout Dr. Pringle's letters he seems to have noting but good words for the endeavours of Mr. Ross, now Senator Ross, to bring about decency and public order in that country. He says further :

In July, 1902, Mr. Ross practically compelled the passage of an ordinance suppressing the dance halls, the women in which were the most dangerous class of prostitutes, and absolutely excluding lewd women from licensed liquor houses.

That was the work of Mr. Ross, the condition of whose health, I understand, compelled him afterwards to leave that country, so that he was not responsible for the condition that supervened after his departure.

In September of the same year, Mr. Ross lying unconscious at Whitehorse, the ordinance was amended at the instance of the legal adviser, now Judge Newlands, so as to render the ordinance abortive, but under Mr. Congdon's lead we have legalized the dance halls. Some government officials are their habitues.

And further on :

The sergeant of the town station tells me that fifty per cent of the licensed houses are houses of prostitution.

There is a distinct charge by Dr. Pringle —in the first place, that these dance houses were carried on as houses of prostitution; in the second place, that Mr. Ross, then Commissioner of the Yukon, had put them down ; in the third place, that Mr. Newlands, afterwards elevated to the bench by the government of this country, had introduced an amendment into the ordinances of the Yukon which practically rendered nugatory Mr. Ross's efforts ; and, in the fourth place, that afterwards Mr. Congdon gave full swing to these dance houses by permitting them to be carried on under the sanction of the government. Has the Minister of the Interior any denial of the truth of what Dr. Pringle stated as to the character of these houses ? Though he has not a word of denial, I will answer him out of the mouth of his own officials in the Yukon to-day. Instead of endeavouring to cast aspersions upon Dr. Pringle, as he has done, he and every other member of that government ought to be grateful to this man for raising the agitation which has resulted in the abolition of dance halls in the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman inform the House by whose legislation the dance halls have been abolished ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will show that as a result of the agitation brought about by Dr. Pringle they have been abolished by Mr. Henderson, since he has been there as commissioner. That is my answer to the minister ; does he regard it as satisfactory ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is satisfactory as far as it goes, but it is hardly correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For his information I will read the evidence of one of the hon. gentleman's officials, in order that he may be convinced that he does not know everything about his own department or even about the Yukon which he pretends to govern.

Mr. OLIVER. To save the hon. gentleman trouble, I will say that the dance halls were abolished, not by Mr. Henderson, but by ordinance of the Yukon council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which Mr. Henderson brought about The minister may talk about lawyers' quibbles, but I know no man more given to them than the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the Speaker control the legislation of this parliament ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, but the government having the majority of the members of the Yukon council, control them, and the commissioner, I suppose, can exercise a certain influence on the men appointed by this government to bring about legislation, and therefore, did it in this case.

Mr. OLIVER. The commissioner is the speaker of the council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister persists in his quibbling. I will not pursue the matter further.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that members of the council appointed by the government, such as Judge Dugas, are open to political influences ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Beyond question they are under the control of this government, and they have carried out the policy of this government ever since they have been in the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman explain for the information of the House just how Judge Dugas is under the control of this government in his action ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not make the slightest difference to me whether his action was under the control of the government or not. The point I make is that the abolition of the dance halls was brought about as a result of the agitation carried on by Dr. Pringle. I have read the evidence of an official of this government, and I will proceed to read the evidence of an official of the Northwest Mounted Police, bearing date the 7th December, 1907.

Mr. OLIVER. Before we get away from the point as to the right of this government to control the legislation of the Yukon council. I think it would be interesting to the House and the country to have that point settled. The hon. gentleman has suggested that the appointed members of the council are subject to the authority of this government in their legislation. I may ask him, since Judge Dugas' name has been mentioned, to what extent is Judge Dugas' action in the council of the Yukon subject to the control of this government ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is subject in this way, that this government, so long as it keeps that council under its control, is supposed to have its policy carried out by that council. If any member of that council does not see fit to carry out the policy of this government in that connection, he is in the same position as would be a member of the cabinet who did not find himself in accord with the policy of the government as a whole. He would find it necessary to leave that council just as a dissenting minister would have to leave the cabinet. If my hon. friend does not agree with me, I am sorry that we differ, but the point is a very subsidiary one. Instead of cavilling at Mr. Pringle, this government ought to be grateful to him for having started and carried out an agitation which has brought about the dissolution of these dance halls in the Yukon. The government should have expressed their gratitude to Dr. Pringle, rather than endeavour to cast aspersions on the gentleman who has brought about that very good reform.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to have the credit placed where it belongs. The dance halls were abolished by the legislation of the Yukon council and not by the authority of this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad to have the minister make practically the admission that if the policy of this government had been carried out, the dance halls would not have been abolished.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not make that admission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know what else the hon. gentleman's words mean. I would have supposed that the government were in accord with the policy of the Yukon council in that regard, but the minister makes it clear that, for some reason or other not apparent, he desired to have these dance halls continued.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot allow my hon. friend to suggest that anything I have said is open to any such construction. I say that the Yukon council, on its own responsibility and by its own authority, abolished the dance halls and that it was not this parliament or government that abolished them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am reading from a letter of the 7th December, 1907, from Mr. T. A. Wroughton, commanding 'B' division of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, to the assistant commissioner of that corps, and dated from Dawson, Yukon Territory :

Royal Northwest Mounted Police.
'B' Division.
Dawson, Y.T., December 7, 1907.

The Assistant Commissioner,
R. N. W. M. Police, Yukon Territory,
Dawson, Yukon Territory.

Sir—I have the honour to report, pursuant to your instructions, as follows, with regard to the alleged social evils in Dawson.

Formerly, while dance halls were permitted to exist under a licensed system, they were undoubtedly hot beds of evil; women were encouraged to frequent these places by the glare and glitter and a life of comparative luxury as compared with the lives of their hardworking and honest sisters. These women were ostensibly under salary, whereas as a matter of fact the salary they received was a mere subterfuge, their real pay being derived from the monetary percentage they derived from the price of drinks, &c., which they were enabled to persuade the customers to buy. Time and again cases have been prosecuted in the courts, but we were unable to get convictions; we were confronted with the cleverest legal talent that money could procure (these people always appeared to have unlimited capital at their backs.) Time and again we spent money and energy in working up cases, employing special men (stool pigeons) but always with the same result.

The last attempt we made in the percentage cases was as strong a case as we could possibly hope to get (this was the opinion of the Crown prosecutor) but what with perjured evidence and advantage taken of every technicality we failed. Naturally the class of men we have to employ (our regular men being too well known to conduct this species of work) was not of the highest order, and this the defence never failed to bring forward.

The last assembly of the Yukon council, however, repealed the objectionable ordinance with the result that conditions are much improved. The principal dance hall has gone out of business, and the only one remaining is trying to keep up its end on the sale of temperance beverages, and is, I am informed, tottering to its fall. It was said that intoxicants were sold on this side; I have employed detectives on the matter who report that such is not the case.

That is the report of this officer of the police regarding the character of these dance halls. Let us look at what Mr. Henderson says about his action in the matter. The minister, as I understand, denies that this reform was brought about through the action of Dr. Pringle. I am reading from a letter of Mr. Henderson, being his report, under date of the 7th December, 1907, to the Minister of the Interior :

Before my arrival in the territory I had heard that the question of dance halls had been brought prominently before the public through a letter addressed to a Winnipeg newspaper by the Reverend Dr. Pringle, and I felt that one of the first questions which would demand my attention would be the devising of some solution to remove the conditions complained of should I find the complaint was well founded. After my arrival in Dawson on the 14th July, I ascertained that two dance halls respectively called the M & N and the Florodora were in active operation, and that there was some diversity of opinion as to whether these institutions were a menace to public morals or otherwise. My own opinion was that they should be suppressed, and before the session of the Yukon council, which opened on the 9th August last, I had thoroughly canvassed the situation with every member of the Yukon council. I made no secret of the position I proposed to take in the matter. An amendment to the liquor ordinance was introduced by the Hon. Mr. Justice Dugas, providing in effect that no music hall should be kept in connection with premises licensed to sell liquors (section 3, chapter 9 ordinance, 1907). There was some opposition to this Bill in the council, and various amendments proposing the postponement of the operation of the Bill to a later date received some support, but eventually the section passed as proposed, the effect being to immediately make the sale of liquors in dance halls illegal. The two dance halls I have mentioned continued to run for some time without selling liquors until the largest, the M & N, went out of business, and the other still continued to run as a dance hall, but I am credibly informed by the police that there is very little business being done and that no liquors are sold in the dance hall.

The matter then is perfectly plain. Here is the statement of Mr. Pringle that these dance halls, licensed and sanctioned by this government, were no better than dens of iniquity. Here is the report of their own officer, a prominent officer in the Northwest Mounted Police, who makes practically the same statement. Here is the report of Mr. Commissioner Henderson who says that his attention was drawn to this matter by the letter of Mr. Pringle published in a newspaper at Winnipeg, that he looked into the matter and satisfied himself that Mr. Pringle was right, and that he thereupon canvassed every member of the Yukon council and had the necessary legislation introduced, which was accordingly passed by the council, and which put an end to these public nuisances. That is exactly what I said in the first place and what the Minister of the Interior controverted, and I leave it to the House whether he or I was right.

The next question debated by the minister was whether or not this government were right in practically refusing an investigation into the charges made by Mr. Pringle. I confess myself unable to follow the devious journeyings of the minister in his argument on this subject. In the first place he said that it was not proper to enter into any investigation of the private conduct or character of public officials. Why then did he propose to grant any investigation at all ? Why did he authorize Mr. Henderson to make any such investigation ? If the private character of public officials, even when it amounts to a public scandal, flaunted in the face of the whole community, is not a matter of no public interest, why did the Minister of the Interior empower Mr. Henderson to make any investigation into these charges ? Then later on he took the ground that although it was proper to make an inquiry, it was not proper to make one on oath. That does seem to me a most remarkable position for the government to take even through my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior.

You proposed for some reason—the minister did not make it at all clear—to grant an inquiry into certain charges made against the conduct of certain government officials and you proposed to refuse the very thing which alone could make that inquiry effective, namely, the power of examining witnesses on oath. What a perfect farce it would be, assuming that an investigation was to be granted and the minister took that position, to ask Dr. Pringle to bring men before that commission and not have the power to have them sworn to tell the truth before the commission! What would be the use of it? Did the government in the many investigations which it has carried on during the past eight or ten years at any time refuse the power to examine witnesses on oath? With respect to every department of this government, from 1896 to 1908, power has been given over and over again, in respect of matters of infinitely less importance than those to be investigated on this occasion, to examine witnesses on oath, because only in this way can an investigation worthy of the name be carried on. What would be the value of any investigation without power to summon witnesses and examine them on oath? What power had Mr. Henderson, apart from that of a royal commission, to enforce the attendance of witnesses? Was Dr. Pringle to go through the Yukon and drag them in by force, hire a gang of armed men and bring those not willing to come? When you got them before the commissioners, what power would there be to compel them to say a word? The minister should know, as every hon. member does, that an investigation without the power to compel witnesses to attend or to administer the oath or compel them to speak would be an absolute and perfect farce, and that Dr. Pringle would have been an absolute fool if he had embarked on any such investigation carried on under such a condition.

The next point was that the charges were not specific. Let us see. On August 20, 1907, five years after the first letter of Dr. Pringle, and two years after his letter forwarding affidavits containing the gravest charges with regard to a permanent official of the Yukon, two years after Dr. Pringle's letter of 1905, containing still graver charges, and some months after the communication from Dr. Pringle in that year and after Dr. Pringle's letter had been communicated to His Excellency the Governor General, at this late date, after all these delays, which have been absolutely unexplained by the minister to-day, the Minister of the Interior on August 28, 1907, wrote to the Commissioner of the Yukon:

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from the Governor General's office.

Why was that letter of any more importance when it came from the Governor General's office than when it came from the Rev. John Pringle? Perhaps the minister on some future occasion will explain that to the House and to the country?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps my hon. friend would take this opportunity to explain on what he bases the supposition that it was of any more importance when it came from the Governor General's office than when it came from the Rev. John Pringle?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because when it came from Dr. Pringle no action was taken and when it came from the Governor General some action was taken.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, he is quite in error. Rev. John Pringle wrote to several parties at once. The letter was received in my absence and while I was absent letters were forwarded to my office from the premier and His Excellency. When I arrived I found the letters and I notified Dr. Pringle that I had received his letter and had received the letters from the other parties whom he had notified. They came to me at the same time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will accept the minister's explanation.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from the Governor General's office.

Was that letter also addressed to the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. I imagine that there was a letter addressed to myself and to the Governor General, that is my remembrance of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The letter to the minister and the communications forwarded to the Prime Minister and the Governor General reached the minister all at the same time?

Mr. OLIVER. The minister reached them all at the same time as I remember.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister reached them all at the same time. It is another illustration of my hon. friend's capacity for what he calls the lawyer's quibble. However, I shall read the letter:

Ottawa, August 28, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from the Governor General's office. As you will note from the address and contents, the original of this letter was addressed to the premier and to myself. You will be good enough to investigate fully the specific charges made by Mr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow, and you will, of course, call upon Mr. Pringle to substantiate those charges. You are to investigate fully and report. Should the Rev. Mr. Pringle desire to lay charges against any other persons in the employ of the government or of the Interior Department especially, you are to investigate them as well.

The minister tells us to-day that he would not issue a Royal commission because the charges were not specific. In his letter of August 28, 1907, he referred to them as specific charges and they were made much more specific by Dr. Pringle during the negotiations for an investigation which took place between him and Mr. Henderson. So I think that will fairly dispose of the minister's contention that the charges were not specific.

But let us take another authority, if the minister's authority is not sufficient for himself. In a letter from Alexander Henderson, Commissioner, to the Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, bearing date 23rd September, 1907, I find the following statement :

The charge against Mr. Girouard seems to me to be reasonably specific, but I informed Dr. Pringle that before I could hear and investigate charges against Mr. Lithgow, these charges in fairness to Mr. Lithgow should be made definite and specific.

Mr. OLIVER. That is exactly what I have been saying.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is exactly what you have been saying, and on October 23, 1907, as will appear on reference to that page, Dr. Pringle, in compliance with the request of the commissioner in that behalf, made his charges against Mr. Lithgow a great deal more specific than those against Mr. Girouard, which already had been declared by the Commissioner to be reasonably specific. So that I think will dispose of the contention of the minister that he did not issue this Royal Commission because the charges were not sufficiently specific.

Why then did the minister refuse to issue a Royal Commission? He had embarked on this investigation after receiving a certain communication from the Governor General's office in connection with the private conduct of certain public officials which was declared to be a public scandal. Let us see how the minister comes out of the investigation in that respect. The Rev. John Pringle on October 18, 1907, in a letter addressed to the Minister of the Interior, used this language :

When the government appoints an investigator with the power to subpœna, commit and protect witnesses, I shall be ready with overwhelming proof of the truth of the charges I have made.

On the 14th day of October, 1907, in a letter addressed by him to Alexander Henderson, the Commissioner of the Yukon, he said this :

I think, Sir, that the alternatives before you are the following :

1. As the agent of the Minister of the Interior to inquire into the scandals, at least six years continued, connected with the names of these two officials.

2. To get from the authorities at Ottawa the powers of a royal commission to investigate the charge I have made.

If you adopt the first course I shall, having made specific charges, do all I can tc aid you in investigating them and getting at the truth.

If you adopt the second course, I shall be ready with adequate proof of the truth of the statements I have repeatedly made about these two public servants.

On November 8, 1907, following that letter from Dr. Pringle, Commissioner Henderson wrote to the Minister of the Interior as follows :

Dear Mr. Oliver,—I am inclosing herewith copy of the correspondence relating to the charges of the Rev. Dr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow. You will see from Dr. Pringle's letter to me of the 23rd ultimo, he declines to appear as a party in what he calls an informal investigation. I would suggest, if agreeable to you, that I be appointed a commissioner to investigate the charges under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) Alexander Henderson,
Commissioner.

That was the situation. The minister had declared the charges sufficiently specific. Commissioner Henderson had held those against Mr. Girouard to be sufficiently specific, but required further particulars regarding Mr. Lithgow; these particulars were given. Then, Mr. Henderson found himself in a position to proceed, because specific charges against both these men had been filed with him and brought to his attention. Dr. Pringle held, and properly held, that the investigation would be only farcical if there was no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, to examine those witnesses on oath and to force them to speak. So, in the letter I have read, the commissioner, Mr. Henderson, suggested that he should be given power to make the investigation an effective one. And the only answer of the minister is that he saw fit to differ from Mr. Henderson in that opinion, and, for that reason, he refused any effective investigation; that is the best I can make out of it. The minister is in this dilemma : charges had been made of a character which were a public scandal, so that a public servant of this country, if the charges were true, should no longer hold his office. In that case there should be an investigation—an effective, and not a farcical investigation. If, on the other hand, the charges were not of a character to affect the status of a public servant, there should not have been any investigation at all, either informal or effective. The minister started the informal investigation, not only acknowledging that the charges were of a character to affect the status of a public servant, but that those charges were sufficiently specific, and they were made more specific afterwards—but, when the true situation was placed beore him, for some reason not made known to this House, he declined absolutely to allow witnesses to be examined on oath and rendered abortive any attempt on the part of Dr. Pringle to prove that the charges were true. In the result, that is unfair to the public servants themselves—there can be no question about that. Because, Dr. Pringle, having the courage of his convictions, has not been silent during the last four or five years : on the public platform and in the press he has made known to the people of the Yukon and of Canada generally the charges that he has asked the minister to investigate. When this government, acting through its Minister of the Interior, declined to investigate these charges in any effective way, they did a grievous injustice not only to the people of this country but to those two men as well. More than that, they did an injury to the public service of the country, and they have shaken public confidence in the intention of the government to carry on as it ought to be carried on the government of the Yukon. So far as Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard are concerned, I pass no opinion as to the truth of the charges against them; no member of this House is called upon to do that. What we insist upon is that, charges having been made and investigation ordered, and these charges touching the value of the service of these gentlemen as public servants, there should be a proper investigation. So far as integrity as a public servant is concerned, and so far as capacity is concerned, all I knew of Mr. Lithgow when he was in Halifax many years ago, in the public service there, led me to believe that he would be a valuable public servant in the Yukon. I have no knowledge of his conduct in the Yukon, and no knowledge concerning Mr. Girouard ; but I do believe that these charges ought to have been investigated, and ought to have been investigated in an effectual way. In the result the minister has seen fit to leave upon the records of this country, in the shape of the affidavits forwarded by Dr. Pringle in regard to Mr. Girouard in 1905, and upon the records of parliament sworn testimony which Mr. Girouard, as well as the government, ought to have desired to have investigated and investigated to the utmost. If the charges against Mr. Giourard are false, then the men who made these affidavits and the men who put forward these charges ought not to be walking the streets of this country in perfect immunity. On the other hand, if the statements in these affidavits are correct as to the conduct of Mr. Girouard on a certain occasion, then the government of this country is sadly in default in having permitted him, for the past four years, to exercise the functions of a public servant in the Yukon. There is the dilemma ; you can take either one horn or the other, as you see fit. It is the result of the inaction of this government ; for, the very moment that these affidavits were placed on the files of the Department of the Interior, it was the duty of the government, without regard to Dr. Pringle or anybody else, to have the mattter probed to the bottom. The minister (Mr. Oliver) seems to think this is purely a matter between Mr. Pringle and the government, and that if he (Mr. Oliver) can discredit Dr. Pringle in some way, if he can cast some aspersion upon his character or conduct or motive, he has disposed of the question. But it is a much larger question than that; it is a question of public morals in the Yukon; it is a question of the administration of public affairs in a distant portion of the country. The issue, to my mind, is scarcely such as the Minister of the Interior would suggest. I regret that the government have seen fit to adopt the course they have adopted. It will not be commended by any intelligent citizen in this country, Liberal or Conservative, who really understands the facts and the situation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). As the letters of Dr. Pringle, which have been made the subject of this debate, were addressed not only to the Department of the Interior, but also to myself—and, indeed, for that matter, to the whole of the cabinet—perhaps it would not be out of place for me to give my views on this question as it arose from time to time from 1902 up to the present year. Addressing myself at this moment to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who has taken charge of this matter and who has read the correspondence out and out, I may say to him that, as I saw that correspondence as it arose from time to time, beginning in 1902, added to in 1905 and added to still further in 1907, it seemed to me that these letters came from a gentleman who certainly was zealous for the public weal, but one whose discretion and language, perhaps, were not such as to strike one very favourably. I cannot help having for Dr. Pringle great respect, for certainly, he has shown that he is very much in earnest in prosecuting what he considered to be the public good. At the same time, for my part, I might have wished that his language was a little more moderate than it always was in his communications. My hon. friend has read numerous letters which have been addressed to the government by Dr. Pringle, but he read only one part of the letter of 1902.

Mr. FOSTER. I read the whole of the 1905 letters.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend did not read the whole, but only part.

Mr. FOSTER. I read probably nine-tenths. There is here and there a little passage that I did not read.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly, my hon. friend left out several passages which

I think he did very well to leave out. But, in that letter of 1902 there was nothing that he could not place upon the pages of 'Hansard' and allow it to go to the country. I have to observe to my hon. friend that in this letter of 1902 there is nothing definite, there is nothing positive, but it is full of general assertions, assertions of immorality in certain quarters, assertions of malfeasance in other quarters, assertions of peculations and other offences in still other quarters. My hon. friend expressed some doubt as to the propriety of the course which was followed on that occasion by the government. He expressed surprise that no action had been taken. The reason, Mr. Speaker, seems to be very obvious. I ask my hon. friend what action could have been taken by the government upon a letter of the character of the one that we are now discussing ; that is the letter of 1902 ? I repeat, no name is mentioned, officials are aspersed with some vehemence but no names given, charges are made of a very indefinite character which could not be investigated. But at that moment, when Mr. Pringle was addressing the government and making complaints as to what was going on in the Yukon, or at a later date, if not at that moment, the Yukon was presided over by Mr. Ross and to the efforts of Mr Ross he gave the most ample credit. Not only does he give credit to his efforts but he also gives credit to Mr. Ross for the success of his efforts and he says, in so many words, in the correspondence, that Mr. Ross, during his administration, had succeeded in uprooting many of the evils of which he had been complaining. Unfortunately, the administration of Mr. Ross was not very long, not as long as perhaps it should have been for the good of the Yukon. The difficulty which the government has always had in the Yukon has been to get such officials as would discharge their duties in a manner that would be satisfactory to all concerned. As my hon. friend has said, the Yukon is a land of mystery. It is so far off that I think my hon. friend will agree that it is difficult, with the numerous officials that the government has to employ there to make sure that every one of these persons shall be of the character which we would all desire. Mr. Ross was an exceptional man, he was a most successful administrator and everybody bears testimony to that fact, not only his friends but his opponents, every man who has had any thing to do with the Yukon bears testimony that under Mr. Ross, as also under the administration of Mr. Henderson, his successor, the Yukon was and is well administered. But, with Mr. Ross' departure the complaints commenced again. The character of the administration established by Mr. Ross is well justified by the correspondence of Mr. Pringle himself because, Mr. Pringle who, as I said a moment ago, I think, was actuated by a desire for the public weal, allowed three years to elapse before addressing any further complaint to the government. He addressed his first complaint to the government during the administration of Mr. Ross in the year 1902. In the month of January, 1905, Mr. Pringle sent another complaint. Communication is reasonably speedy when navigation is open, but as soon as navigation is closed communication is very slow. I do not remember the exact time at which the letter reached me but I am quite sure that when the letter reached me the hon. gentleman who had been Minister of the Interior was no more in office. That hon. gentleman resigned about the commencement of March and it was about that time I received the letter from Mr. Pringle. In that letter of Mr. Pringle there were two charges ; charges were made against two different parties, Mr. Congdon and Mr. Girouard especially. The charge against Mr. Girouard was a very positive, specific character. It was not so much a charge of a direct offence committed by him but it was leading to a very direct charge against him. The matter dropped at that time because there was an interregnum in the Department of the Interior, but in the summer of that year the new Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who wanted to know exactly what the condition was in the Yukon, took the very wise precaution of proceeding to the Yukon himself so as to investiagte all matters and see what was to be done. We know that the result of his trip has been very far reaching and that it has corrected many abuses of which the people complained and has introduced a new era into the administration of that country. As I understood from my hon. friend on his return, he heard no complaints whatever from anybody of the character which have been mentioned in Mr. Pringle's letter of January, 1905. But, more than that, the letter of Mr. Pringle was referred, by the Minister of Justice, who had received also similar complaints from Mr. Pringle, to Mr. Congdon for his observations upon it and Mr. Congdon denied absolutely all the allegations of fact contained in Mr. Pringle's letter. This disposes of the charges made by Mr. Pringle in 1905.

But the latter charge which was brought by Mr. Pringle in 1907 was perhaps the most important of all and it was one to which immediate attention had to be given. Mr. Pringle, in his letter of 1907, made positive accusations against two officials of the government in the Yukon. I think Mr. Girouard and Mr. Lithgow, who were the parties charged by Mr. Pringle, are acknowledged to have been very good officers discharging the duties of their offices remarkably well. Of Mr. Lithgow, especially, I am bound to say, in justice to him, that there is not in the Yukon a more painstaking officer or one who commands more generally the respect of the community than he does. Everybody acknowledges that. I do not know Mr. Lithgow personally, I do not remember of ever having seen him, but in all of the correspondence I have had about him testimony is rendered universally to the fact that he is a most competent officer and discharges his duty fairly well. But, he is of the human race and he is not free from faults. He has his faults, I am bound to say, but with the faults he has. everybody in the Yukon, while acknowledging his faults, will say at the same time that he is a good, competent officer. This is the testimony which I have to bear of him and which I think is only his due. The charges that were made by Mr. Pringle against Mr. Girouard were very formal. They could not be ignored. What was to be done under such circumstances ? I appeal again to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster): What would he have done under such circumstances ? He was a minister at one time, and he had numerous officers under him. Let us take a hypothetical case. If the hon. member for North Toronto had been in office and if some one had made the charge against any of his officers that he had been guilty of intoxication, not only privately but openly in the streets of the city, what would he have done ? Would the hon. gentleman have appointed a royal commission to investigate the charge and pronounce upon it ? The offence is a private one but it may be such that a minister may have to take notice of it, and sometimes a minister does. In my humble opinion this was a case for departmental investigation by the minister to ascertain whether the official was guilty, and if guilty whether he was excusable or whether he should be expelled from the service. I am glad to say these things do not occur very often, but they do happen almost every year in the public service and the minister in charge of the department concerned does not appoint a royal commission under the great seal of His Majesty to investigate such cases. It is a departmental affair.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a provision for a departmental investigation under oath.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think that the investigation of such an offence would come under chapter 104 respecting public and departmental inquiries, which says :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER

The minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada may appoint at any time under authority of the Governor in Council a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business or any part of the business of such department, either the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service so far as the same relates to his official duties.

My hon. friend is a good lawyer and I think he will agree with me that the charge made by Mr. Pringle did not come under the scope of that Act. However, I will not examine this case in the light of the technicalities of the law but rather under the broader law of common sense, common fair play, and common justice to the accuser and to the accused. Under such circumstances I say that the action taken by the minister was very proper. Had these officials resided in Ottawa the minister himself might have decided what should be done, but in this case he had to delegate his power and he gave instructions to Mr. Henderson to look into the matter and to ask Mr. Pringle to attend and investigate the charges. Mr. Pringle was notified, but he said he would not come to the investigation unless he had a royal commission to compel the attendance of witnesses and to have the protection of the law for them. Now, the charge made by Mr. Pringle was that these officials had been guilty of public scandal in their private conduct, and he said it was notorious and that the whole community of Yukon had been aware of it. Was it not the duty of Mr. Pringle when the commissioner was authorized to receive his complaint, to come before the commissioner and to say that he made these charges for such and such a reason seeing that he had alleged they were notorious and a public scandal? Then, when Mr. Pringle would not come forward Mr. Henderson investigated for his own satisfaction the life of these officials.

Mr. FOSTER. In what manner did Mr. Henderson make any investigation as reported by him ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I don't mean to say that Mr. Henderson pried into the private life of these gentlemen or that he examined any witnesses to burrow into their lives to see whether they had misbehaved themselves or not. But the commissioner dealt with the charge of Mr. Pringle as couched in this letter, that these men had behaved in their private life in a public and scandalous manner. The commissioner was able to say to the minister : I live in Dawson ; I have been here for some time ; I know these men ; I know they are good officials and discharge their duties properly, I have not heard of any such public scandals as are mentioned by Mr. Pringle.

Mr. FOSTER. He says : Since I came here.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the substance of the report he made to the minister. Mr. Henderson has been in the Yukon since May, 1907 and Mr. Pringle's letter was written in July, 1907, and here is part of the letter which I can read.

The disgraceful scenes of the last ten days in which prominent public men and government officials of more than one department have been the chief actors, have more than justified everything I have written to members of the cabinet or to the press in regard to the immorality which prevails in our community and official life.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the very last charge made by Mr. Pringle on the 27th of July, 1907. With this language of Mr. Pringle before him the commissioner reports to the minister : I am not aware that anything has taken place in the life of these men which I can report on ; I know them to be good and honourable men. That is the comment of the commissioner. Mr. Pringle would not come before the commissioner and I think he was not fair to himself in that. I repeat the minister was perfectly right in refusing at that time to issue a commission under the King's great seal to investigate the private conduct of these two officials. The minister was told he had two men in his service who had misbehaved in a public and scandalous manner in the community. If they were guilty of such scandal he would probably come to the conclusion they were not fit to remain in the service, or at all events he would call upon them to give their explanation of their excuse as to whether or not they should be retained in the service. Therefore it was open to Mr. Pringle to come forward with his evidence, his own and that of other witnesses before the commissioner. If the other witnesses had refused to come forward, the commissioner could have reported the fact to the minister, and have advised a further investigation. But in the circumstances of the case, I say that the conduct of the Minister of the Interior was absolutely right. Certainly it was not his duty to order such a solemn proceeding as an investigation by a royal commission into matters which were departmental, affecting the private conduct of officials.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the charges had been proved would they have justified dismissal ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the charges had been proved with regard to one of the officers I would say yes, they would. But let us take a supposititious case. Suppose it were true that Mr. Lithgow had misbehaved on a certain occasion; suppose he had been intoxicated, I would say for my part to the minister : Give that man a further chance; do not dismiss him; he is a good officer ; I would not be thet first one to cast a stone at him ; he may have misbehaved, but he is doing better and will do better, and I would not dismiss him. That would be my advice to the minister. But it is a very different thing for a man to be accused of having continuously lived in open shame to the scandal of the community. I have no hesitation in saying that such a man would have to make a very strong case before I would retain him in the service. But if such a good officer as Mr. Lithgow has the misfortune to make a break, as the saying is, I would ask him to give his promise that he would not fall again, and on that condition I would not dismiss him from the service. I repeat, I do not know Mr. Lithgow, I never saw him, but all the reports that I have had from the Yukon agree that his public conduct has been remarkably good and in the public interest. That is my own view of the matter. I may say further that I know —and perhaps my hon. friend from North Toronto knows also—that there are men of the same persuasion and I think of the same cloth as Mr. Pringle who do not take the view he does with regard to Mr. Lithgow. After all, in a country like the Yukon, if a man has the misfortune, as we say in common parlance, to make a break, I think it would not be wise on the part of the government to exact from him the pound of flesh and be absolutely merciless towards him.

With regard to Mr. Girouard, who has been accused of the most grievous offence. he could not remain in the service with that cloud over his head. He had to do one of two things, and he has done both. First of all, he had to clear his character, and to do that he brought an action for libel against Mr. Pringle, which action I understand is pending. I was asked by an hon. member if the action had been tried. As I understand, the courts in the Yukon take their recess during the winter and sit during the summer, so that the case has not yet been tried. At all events, Mr. Girouard has left the service, and, therefore, these matters are not perhaps of much interest at the present time except so far as they show whether or not the government have done their duty. I have only to repeat that, in my humble judgment, the minister in this matter behaved as he should have behaved ; he gave Mr. Pringle the opportunity to bring his charges and have them investigated, and Mr. Pringle was not fair to himself when he refused that opportunity. If he had taken it, and if the witnesses on whom he relied had not come forward, then it would have been open to the minister to decide whether or not he would prosecute any further. The House will agree with me that the minister did his full duty, not only to Mr. Pringle, but to himself and to the government of which he is a member.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 180) respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Sproule.

SUPPLY—THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

House resumed discussion on motion that House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to deal somewhat briefly with the subject at present engaging our attention. That subject is the alleged misconduct of officials in the Yukon Territory extending over a period of six years. From time to time charges of misconduct on the part of these officials were made to the government—charges of misconduct, of immorality, of dishonesty, of graft—and in various ways it was brought to the attention of the government that the officials in that remote territory were not conducting themselves in a manner creditable to the administration or the country. These charges date from the year 1882, and two of the officials especially implicated were Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard. The charges were first made by the Rev. John Pringle in 1902. Mr. Pringle speaking of the conditions prevalent in the Yukon among government officials, stated that the characteristic of these officials were 'lust and graft,' and claimed that no one was able to secure what rightly belonged to him unless he were 'on the inside' and 'had a pull.' In other words, it was impossible for those who were prosecuting the industry of mining to either secure or maintain their rights without influence at court, and that influence was presumably an improper one. In a public meeting in Dawson City, it was stated publicly, before an audience of hundreds of people, that such concessions as the 'Bronson and Ray,' and the 'Philp' concessions, granted on representations which were, to say the least, suggestive of perjury. Mr. Pringle says that he heard it said that two cabinet ministers were in these. In case I might be charged with misquoting, let me give the exact words used :

> I heard it stated before an audience of hundreds by a lawyer named Woodworth that two cabinet ministers, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) were interested in one or more of these loosely granted concessions.

Now, if Mr. Woodworth was making a statement which was libellous, you would naturally expect that he would be prosecuted, because the statement was of too important a character to be allowed to pass unnoticed. If he were not making a libellous statement, then the government were remiss in their duty in not calling them to account for it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. I should like to know what it is that so much amuses the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). Is it laughable that any minister of the gospel should make such a charge ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. He is amused at the word 'lie-bellious'.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. gentleman know about it ? Nothing more than to sit and laugh. We know the saying that laughter at times denotes the vacant mind, and that is evidently the case in this instance, because the hon. gentleman appears neither willing to take the trouble to inquire into the facts nor desirous of knowing them. Instead he treats the whole thing with levity, though it is the solemn statement of a minister of the gospel who, in his desire to improve the morals of the people, brought the matter to the attention of the ministers of the Crown so that they might have it inquired into and punish those guilty of corrupt acts if the charges were established. If the charges were libellous, the party who made them could be punished, and surely no minister of the Crown—especially those implicated—could afford to let them pass unheeded. Mr. Pringle specially stated that the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries were specially interested in one or more of those loosely granted concessions. I draw more particularly attention to this because of the statement made by the right hon. first minister to-night that he saw nothing in these charges which ought to engage his attention. There was nothing in them, he said, to warrant an inquiry. They were all of a general character and there was not a single specific allegation. But was not the public declaration made before a large audience that two of the right hon. gentleman's colleagues are improperly interested in certain concessions sufficiently specific. Yet the first minister himself said : I see nothing in these charges upon which to hinge an inquiry. They are of such a vague and general character that there is nothing to inquire into. Yet this man says that two cabinet ministers, the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Marine, were interested in one or more of these loosely granted concessions.

Then he says :

> Concessions have been granted, I am convinced, not only carelessly but iniquitously ; the heritage of our people given to satisfy the greed of capital, without due consideration of the rights of the people in the ground or of the character of the statements made to secure these concessions.

He charges general immorality, but yet the First Minister says these charges are vague and general and there is nothing to inquire into. What does he say?

The dance halls in which more men, some of them government officials, have been ruined than in any other of our protected dens, are run wide open. I wish the government would, for its own good name, either suppress these 'hells,' or at least take means to verify reports——

But there is nothing there to inquire into—— —current all over this camp, about officials who are their habitués. Prostitution flaunts itself everywhere, the abandoned woman, (to say nothing of the abandoned man) is everywhere ; beside respectable homes ; across the street from then; beside our grocery and dry goods stores; on first and second and third, and every avenue and road. Unless some one is robbed or injured in her house she is undisturbed.

He goes on to say :

But the worst feature of the licensed houses here is, that a very large percentage of them are houses of prostitution.

He tells us that there were 210 houses licensed to sell liquor there at that time and yet there was a population of, at the most, 20,000 people, That is about one licensed house for every 95 of the population in that district.

But the worst feature of the licensed houses here is, that a very large percentage of them are houses of prostitution. Many of them run, it is true, by people of good character but a large number are bawdy houses with a government license to prey upon the public.

And yet the government are not concerned about it and see nothing to inquire into.

I have wondered since coming north, why the permit system was adopted. Was it to restrict the sale of liquor?

At the time it was adopted we were told it was in the interest of temperance. I remember the ex-minister saying that this was one of the means we kept in our own hands for the purpose of promoting temperance in these camps in the west.

I have wondered since coming north, why the permit system was adopted. Was it to restrict the sale of liquor or to make it respectable or to make money for government exigencies, or to make money for men with a pull?

I think the experience of times since has proven one thing, that it made money for men with a pull. We remember when J. D. McGregor, the license inspector there who had authority to give permits, refused permits to a number of people who desired them to take liquor into that country, but gave it to be understood to one of his friends that a permit would be granted to him. That man rushed in all his liquor in the fall of the year when navigation was expected shortly to close and then the permit was granted when it was too late for others to bring liquor in. McGregor then resigned his position as inspector and became a member of the firm that got the permit. I believe he was one of three who shared in the profits and I am told they made a large amount of money. With these facts before us, can we say that the permit system was intended to restrict the sale of liquor? No, it was rather to make money for government exigencies or to make money for men with a pull. He was one of the men with a pull.

Rev. Mr. Pringle says:

The law is systematically manipulated not to protect the public, but to protect and nurse the gambler and shame honest men.

This man speaks with knowledge and has been very reasonable and fair in the statements he has made. Speaking of the Northwest Mounted Police he says that they are a splendid body of men, the finest on the earth but:

It is enough to degrade any force, however fine, to know that where immorality is concerned it is useless to do their duty, that the law itself will be made to thwart them and defeat the ends of justice when they endeavour to carry it out.

I have written in plain terms because if I am asked what right I have to so address the government of Canada I answer that I am a Canadian and love my native land. I hold that we have a right to expect that the men who represent our government, the officers of the law and the departments of the country should not only do justly but live rightly. I have said publicly here and I repeat it that there is a conscience in the west and I shall do my best to arouse and invoke that conscience and I shall refuse to be silenced as long as this continues.

Mr. Pringle follows this up by affidavits which are here from different parties setting forth the crookedness of the officials there with regard to their conduct in political life, and speaks of one of the commissioners who is absolutely keeping the list from the people while he is known to be in a house of prostitution. I have affidavits here presumably from respectable people.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read them?

Mr. SPROULE. I may read one of them as they are practically all the same. This one reads as follows:

Canada, Yukon Territory, to wit:

I, Robert Howard Stanley Creswell, merchant, of Dawson, Yukon Territory, do solemnly declare as follows:

1. That I am a member of Dr. Thompson's campaign committee.

He is the man who attended to the list.

2. That E. Barbeau, enumerator for South Dawson, had stated on the 8th day of December that he could not allow the said committee to see a copy of the voters' list for South Dawson, as the same was in the safe at the office of J. E. Girouard, registrar of land titles for Yukon Territory.

This is the same Girouard against whom the charges of immorality are made.

3. That the said Barbeau further stated that he could not find the said Girouard and did not know his whereabouts.

4. That search was made for said Girouard, both at his office and at his home but he could not be found.

5. That I had good reason to believe that the said Girouard was located in a cabin at the north end of town occupied by one Marie Lambert, known as 'Montreal Marie,' of Klondike City.

6. That at about four o'clock in the afternoon, in company with T. D. Pattullo and T. G. Wilson and a large number of supporters of Dr. Thompson, I repaired to the house in question, and upon making inquiry at the said house was informed by the girl inmate 'Marie' that Girouard was not there.

7. That a minute or two later the said Girouard rushed out the back door of said house and ran towards the hill, followed by a large number of men who were crying lustily in the chase to head off the said Girouard.

8. That a few moments later the said Girouard was overtaken and captured by the crowd and conducted to the administration building without any violence being done to him.

9. That thereupon I went to the telephone and telephoned to George Black who had remained at the administration building with Enumerator Barbeau and Returning Officer Pierre Ledieu, telling him that Girouard was being brought to the building.

10. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and knowing it to be of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) R. H. S. CRESWELL.

Declared before me at Dawson this 9th day of December, 1904.

(Sgd.) FRED. G. CRISP,
A commissioner for taking affidavits in and for the Yukon Territory.

This is one of four affidavits which I have here, all of a similar character and relating to the same events, one of these affidavits being signed by four or five persons. They disclose the fact that the man who is charged with the responsibility of providing lists for the election was either purposely keeping out of the way or indifferently disregarding his oath of office and allowing the electors to be deprived of this list without which they could not discharge their duties. And this is handed in to the premier with these other charges, and he tells the House and the country that the charges were of a general character and not to be paid attention to. Here we have charges of political crimes, and moral crimes, and implied charges of dishonesty in several instances, the individuals being named in some cases, and yet, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, all these are not worthy of consideration. That is what the Prime Minister said to-day. But what does he say in answer to the Rev. Dr. Pringle? Here is his letter:

Prime Minister's Office,
Ottawa, February 6, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 3rd of January last. I have to inform you that all the charges which you bring to the attention of the government, relating to the administration of public affairs in the Yukon Territory, will receive immediate attention from different departments interested.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

Did they receive that immediate attention? We have nothing before this House to show that they did. And now, three years after, the Prime Minister tells us that the charges were of a vague and general character, that they could not be inquired into, and so they must be allowed to pass. The Prime Minister, speaking of Mr. Lithgow, one of the parties against whom these serious charges and specific charges are made, says: 'Mr. Lithgow's conduct was good, so far as I know, except for one break.' Now, here is a resolution that was passed by men who ought, I assume, to command the respect even of the Prime Minister himself:

Dawson, Yukon Territory, November 13, 1907.
Resolution.

At a regular meeting of the Young Men's Liberal Club on Wednesday evening, November 13, 1907, held in the Liberal hall, Dawson, Mr. John Grant, president, in the chair, the following resolution was passed unanimously:

That, whereas the conduct of Mr. John T. Lithgow, controller of the Yukon Territory, has been of a publicly flagrant and immoral character, he having repeatedly, in an unseemly and grossly improper manner, been seen in a condition of indecent exposure in broad daylight in the open streets, and in a state of disgusting drunkenness, in company of lewd and dissolute women who are well known and notorious prostitutes.

And whereas, said controller's conduct in this community has been a public scandal, and cannot but have a very serious effect on the morals of the people, thereby greatly endangering the foundations of society, and bringing obloquy and disrepute upon the Liberal party.

The First Minister says there is nothing to inquire into, even though the conduct of this official should bring obloquy upon the Liberal party.

And whereas, in open violation of the established and well-understood custom and principle, that no federal employee can or should be paid, two, or more salaries, at one and the same time, and as the said controller is drawing three distinct salaries, viz.: one federal of $5,000, one territorial of $1,000, and one salary from the city of Dawson (which city ceased to exist as a corporation over two years ago) of $1,000, making a total of $7,000 per year salary, and this abuse of 'power or pull' being constantly referred to as a 'graft' does great and incalculable injury to the Liberal party in Yukon.

And whereas the further continuance in office of the said J. T. Lithgow will not only make it utterly impossible to uphold the government responsible for his retention in office, and will completely overthrow the said Liberal party in the Yukon, but is subversive of the high standard of morality which is the pride and boast of Canadianism

Therefore, be it resolved that 'The Young Men's Liberal Club' of Dawson, Yukon territory, in regular meeting assembled most respectfully and emphatically urge the immediate steps be taken by the proper authorities of the government for the removal of the said J. T. Lithgow from office.

And, be it further resolved that copies of this resolution signed by the secretary be forwarded to the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier premier, to Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and the Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior at Ottawa.

It was correspondingly done. Yet, in the face of that the Prime Minister says: We see nothing to inquire into; all these are vague charges of a general character; I acknowledge that this man made one break and that is all and he asks: Are we prepared to condemn him for that? We do not think that we should. The conduct of the Minister of the Interior was interesting as well. What was it? He said: We have nothing but charges of immorality against these parties. What have we to do with their immorality, drunkenness, lewdness and graft? Nothing at all. It is not our duty to inquire into all this. Yet, they are government officials. Is that likely to keep up the morale of the civil service ? Is it likely to secure for the civil service the type of man whose acquisition would be for the good of the country? Is it not calculated to bring about that respect which every civil servant in this country should have for his position? Is that the example that is to be put before the world? Shall we say that we shall allow this to go on? Shall we condone drunkenness? Shall we condone every vice to which human nature seems to be addicted? The minister says: It does not concern us one iota. Why? Because we could not lay a charge and inquire into the official conduct of these officers. We have to deal only with their official conduct. An official may be the biggest thief, rogue, blackguard or drunkard in the country; we have nothing to do with that, says the Minister of the Interior, so long as he does his official work. What an example to set before the world! He seems to care nothing for that whatever. These charges are made against three officials—Congdon, who was the commissioner, Girouard, who is the registrar, and Lithgow, who is the controller. They are made against these officials in various forms, they are specifically set out and yet the government refuse to take any notice of them whatever. The Minister of the Interior commenced the defence by saying that the charges of the Rev. John Pringle are political. He said that ministers of the Gospel are not all equally good, that there is an occasional one that you cannot rely on, thereby insinuating that Rev. John Pringle was a gentleman of that character. He has made his charges very specifically. With respect to many of them he has given specific instances and others have backed up their charges by sworn evidence; yet the insinuation is made that this is all done for a political purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) must have taken down my words incorrectly. I do not recall having alleged that the Rev. John Pringle, in making his charges, had a political purpose. If I did I certainly did not intend to.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the inference I drew. If I misunderstood the hon. gentleman I wish to withdraw my statement because I do not desire to misrepresent him in any particular. But, if he did not do it I find that some others have. I have here a copy of the 'Daily News-Advertiser' of Vancouver, B.C., and I notice that a writer in that draws attention to it. It reads as follows:

To the editor 'News-Advertiser.'

Sir,—I noticed in a recent issue of the Vancouver 'Province,' an interview given by Mr. Alexander Henderson, commissioner of the Yukon——

He says that Rev. John Pringle is doing it for some other purpose rather than for the purpose of elevating the moral standard of the people.

—lately from Dawson, headed 'Pringle campaign a political one.' 'It is a political move'——

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend is not quoting the commissioner's interview. My hon. friend is quoting a letter.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quoting a letter stating what the commissioner said.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, my hon. friend is not.

Mr. SPROULE. I am.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The interview was not given to the 'News-Advertiser.' The interview was given to the 'Province.'

Mr. SPROULE. I am quoting a letter written to the 'News-Advertiser.'

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes, but I want my hon. friend to make the distinction fairly.

Mr. SPROULE. Have I not made it fairly? Have I not said that it was a letter written to this paper? Is that not fair enough? How much fairer could it be? It is impossible to make it any fairer.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend purports to give a statement made by Governor Henderson that Rev. John Pringle was conducting a political campaign. If my hon. friend will be fair he will quote Governor Henderson's interview, not a letter written by some one else referring to that interview.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I not reading this letter? If the hon. gentleman will listen a little more attentively he will find out that he was mistaken in his observations. What does this say?

I noticed in a recent issue of the Vancouver 'Province' an interview given by Mr. Alexander Henderson.

Am I stating other than facts?

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is all right.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, then, why get up and interrupt?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I have a reason for interrupting. The reason I interrupted was that my hon. friend purports to use a statement of Governor Henderson when, as a matter of fact, he has not the interview before him.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not purport to use any statement at all. I purport to read a letter, let it carry whatever weight it will in the House, and that letter sets forth that this is an interview given by Governor Henderson. The letter says:

I noticed in a recent issue of the Vancouver 'Province' an interview given by Mr. Alex. Henderson, commissioner of the Yukon lately from Dawson, headed 'Pringle Campaign a political one.' 'It is a political move,' started off the commissioner, in discussing the recent allegation of Rev. John Pringle, concerning the immorality of Dawson.

'He intends taking the stump.' 'He has fallen out with the government and will take the field in the Conservative interest, that is the explanation, I think'; 'the dance halls have been closed, and will not be re-opened.

Knowing what I am writing, for, I may say, I have lived several years in Dawson, and have fairly well kept tabs on matters there, going back half a dozen years, I will begin with the dance halls, which were authorized and made legal institutions during the Congdon regime, largely through the instrumentality of the appointed members of the Yukon Council, including Mr. J. E. Girouard, who also stood firmly by the dance hall element at the time they were put out of business, and during the present commissioner's time. As to the immorality of Dawson, to any one who knows and has kept the run of the matters, when any of the government advocates, from the commissioner down to Pinkert, assail Mr. Pringle as having said that Dawson is immoral, they are trying the old dodge of the herring across the trail. Mr. Pringle has in public print denied this charge, and has said that the opposite is the case. He has stated that certain of the government office holders have been leading such lives as to disgrace them and their offices. He has communicated this to the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior on several occasions, mostly without any effect.

Recently these matters have caused some folks to 'sit up and take notice,' and the outcome is that an action for damages has been instituted against Mr. Pringle (not by the city of Dawson, but by the friend of the dance halls). We see in the Dawson 'Daily News' of April 10, 1908, in extenso statements of claim and defence in the libel suit of J. E. Girouard vs. Rev. John Pringle. As most of the subject matter would be almost considered ancient and true history to Dawsonites, it would not likely be any surprise to them but to one so new to the territory as Commissioner Henderson, one would expect it would give him some concern, especially as it involved one whose services in the Yukon council he had 'found invaluable and had learned to lean on him.'

One is more than surprised to see in the April 14th issue of the same 'Daily News' that a farewell banquet is given to this same J. E. Girouard, at which Commissioner Henderson in his speech 'predicted from what he had learned that Mr. Girouard would be given an opportunity of a seat in parliament.' 'Mr. Henderson rose to enthusiastic and dramatic fervour during his talk,' says the 'News.' In the Dawson 'Daily News' of April 15, 1908, is a list of the 'guests,' beginning with Commissioner Henderson and former Commissioner F. T. Congdon and a long list of others, a few of whom would hardly be expected to be found at a banquet given to a party accused of sheep stealing which would be a very trivial offence against society compared with the matters mentioned in the Dawson 'Daily News' of April 10 last. But every one to their taste. When Commissioner Henderson says of Mr. Pringle's action. 'It is a political move,' he would seem to be measuring other people's corn by his own half bushel.'

Now as to this J. Girouard we were told by the Minister of the Interior to-day that he is no longer in the employ of the government and that he has gone God knows where. I imagine his suit against the Rev. John Pringle will not be prosecuted further. It would seem from this letter I have read that some one accuses the Rev. John Pringle of having nothing but a political aim in view, and Henderson the present commissioner goes to a complimentary banquet given to this man who is practically an outlaw of society, to try and make him somewhat respectable. And yet the Minister of the Interior sees nothing wrong in it. It is a nice position for the commissioner of the Yukon. What will the world think of it when they know this.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Know what?

Mr. SPROULE. Know that the present commissioner to the Yukon attended a banquet to such a man and made use of the remarks he did and vilified the Rev. John Pringle because he was honest and independent and truthful enough to say what he believed to be true.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Who vilified the Rev. John Pringle ?

Mr. SPROULE. I say that as far as I know Mr. Henderson did so when he said that the Rev. Mr. Pringle took this action for political purposes. If that is not vilification, what is it ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman takes a letter written by a man in Vancouver and a letter from Dawson and compounds the two and reads that.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. What is contained in that letter is what is stated by Mr. Henderson.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) will get the Dawson 'News' of April 14, he will find in it a three-column report of the banquet with Mr. Henderson's statement, and the extracts my hon. friend has read have been evidently taken from that paper.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend from North Toronto does not bear out then what the hon. member for East Grey states.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, because one part of Mr. Henderson's speech is the allegation that Mr. Pringle's motive was a political motive.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The interview is given in the 'Progress' and the letter my hon. friend reads is from the 'Progress.'

Mr. FOSTER. What my hon. friend is reading from is a letter written to the 'News-Advertiser' by 'Bona Fide,' and dated Vancouver, May 12, 1908, and he gives a quotation from the Dawson 'Daily News' of April 14.

Mr. SPROULE. And the interview with Commissioner Henderson.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend gives Commissioner Henderson's words as contained in that interview. Therefore, it is direct enough, and it ought to be correct.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Why does not the hon. gentleman read the interview?

Mr. SPROULE. I read the interview, which was in that letter between inverted commas, and so far as I know it has never been contradicted.

Mr. OLIVER. If there is a clash of evidence between the Rev. Dr. Pringle and Commissioner Henderson, why is not the word of Commissioner Henderson as good as that of Rev. Dr. Pringle?

Mr. SPROULE. Because the one is an interested party and the other is not.

An hon. MEMBER. Which one?

Mr. SPROULE. The Commissioner is the interested party, because he is defending himself. The First Minister says that Mr. Girouard has denied it ; should we not take his word as readily as the word of the Rev. John Pringle? Did you ever yet see a prisoner at the bar who did not plead not guilty? Mr. Congdon's denial is a plea of not guilty, but these affidavits which I have read from seven or eight individuals swear to something different. Will you give as much credence to the denial of interested parties, who are charged before the bar of public opinion, as you will to the statements of a disinterested party who swears to what he knows to be facts?

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend suggest that the Rev. Dr. Pringle has sworn to any facts? He had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. I have said that the Rev. John Pringle and others have made certain charges and these charges are backed up by affidavits. The First Minister says that we should accept the denial of Mr. Girouard and be perfectly satisfied with that against the sworn statements of seven or eight people as to what they saw with their own eyes. The First Minister and the Minister of the Interior desire to go no further, but turn round and practically insinuate untruthfulness on the part of the Rev. John Pringle without giving him the proper opportunity to prove his charges. I say that the country will not be satisfied with that. The First Minister says they gave him an opportunity, but they wanted to have his charges as specific as a charge made against a man charged with crime before a magistrate. They refused to allow Dr. Pringle to subpœna the witnesses and bring them before the court to prove his charges. They tell him to go and ask the witnesses to come, and in the meantime in all human probability the government officials would buy them off or spirit them away. There are strong grounds for believing that would be done, because the Rev. John Pringle says the administration of justice in that country is practically a farce—that instead of the Mounted Police being permitted to enforce the law, the law is invoked to prevent them enforcing it. In the province of Ontario we have found time and again, both during the Ross administration and the Mowat administration preceding it, that people could not be convicted of political crimes, because the moment the charges were made against them the witnesses were bought off or spirited away and kept in the United States. So it is in the Yukon. The administration is in the hands of men who do not desire to administer justice, but desire to prevent the administration of justice, and the same thing would most likely have happened if the Rev. John Pringle had attempted to prove his charges in the way proposed by the First Minister. But the Rev. Dr. Pringle said: Do as you do before any committee of the House of Commons ; subpœna these people in the regular way, and then if they refuse or neglect to come, they can be dealt with for contempt of court, and when you bring them to the bar, put them under oath, so that they will tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

But the Minister of the Interior said : I shall not give you the advantage of subpœnaing them. You can ask them to come; and if they do not, it is not my fault. I have given you the opportunity to prove your charges, and it is for you to prove them without any aid from me. Is that how a man should be treated who made these charges for the sole purpose of letting his party know what was bringing them into contempt and purging the political life of his country of what was bound, if unchecked, to demoralize it ? Will the country be satisfied with this failure to prosecute ? I very much misjudge the character of our people if they will. We have been told over and over again that the administration of justice in that country was vicious. We have been told that by parties who live out there and in whose integrity I have every confidence, and judging by the shuffling and evasive conduct of the government I have no doubt that every word they said is true. Mr. Pringle was perfectly justified in refusing to go on with the inquiry unless it was conducted on proper lines and unless he were given a fair opportunity to prove his charges. Was he given that ? Not at all. Yet the Minister of the Interior says there was nothing to inquire into. He takes the ground that the moral character of the government officials was not a subject for inquiry at all, that it was a matter in which the government had no interest. No doubt my hon. friend is sincere on that contention judging by the fact that although Wagner had been twice prosecuted and had been sentenced by the court and compelled to suffer the penalty due his offences, he was afterwards taken up by the minister and put into a responsible position. That evidently is the minister's idea of the right kind of a man to act as government official. Wherever the hon. gentleman got his training, he is evidently sincere, but I wonder what the great honest public, what the moral and church going element of our community, what the ministers of the Gospel will think when they find that doctrine propagated by a minister of the Crown? In my judgment, they will form a very low estimate of the morale of the Minister of the Interior. That however is the position he takes, and the responsibility for that position is with the government. Sooner or later their misdeeds will recoil upon them. When they appeal to the country, I have no doubt that thousands of honest, good meaning reformers will refuse to declare by their ballots that the government did their duty when they did not carry out this investigation. They will refuse to endorse the conduct of the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister and will show by their vote that they consider them anything but men of the highest type of character and animated by the best intentions.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). I shal endeavour to be as brief as possible as I do not wish to assist my hon. friends opposite in their obstruction or play into their hands any longer than the necessity of the case requires. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition was careful, in replying to the Minister of the Interior to indulge in his usual introduction by saying that the speech he had just listened to from that hon. Minister was one of the most 'extraordinary' he had ever heard.

Mr. FOSTER. He only uses that when the Minister of the Interior speaks.

Mr. KNOWLES. I notice that when he answers the right hon. the First Minister, whose speech has taken the wind out of the leader of the opposition, my hon. friend was wont to say that the speech he has just heard is the most 'remarkable' one he ever listened to.

Mr. FOSTER. That seldom happens.

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend will find it frequently happens. It is a most convenient form of reply when one has no effective argument to make, and I have no doubt we will find it frequently resorted to before this session is through. Our hon. friends opposite have not had much success in their attack on the administration of this government in the Yukon. Their main attack was on the proposition of the government to build a railway to the Yukon. On that question, although they presented something of a united front, when we have had some light thrown on the inside facts, as we have had by one of the principal members of the opposition sitting very close to the leader of that party, learn that they were not so united as they led the country to believe they were. We have had the statement from Sir Charles Tupper, who is a true Canadian, that two great mistakes were committed by the Conservative party. One was a trivial mistake and the other was a serious one, namely, their opposition to the proposition of the government to build a railway to the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend had read the papers, he would have seen an explicit denial by Sir Charles Tupper of that statement.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have not seen it. I have been away for several days and possibly missed the paper which gave publicity to it.

Mr. FOSTER. It was in the 'Vancouver News Advertiser'

Mr. KNOWLES. I have not seen it; and since we have not heard from the hon. member from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes), I do not think that he could have seen it either or we would have had him on his feet on another question of privilege. However, we will let that rest. I desire to say nothing but what is fair, but the country will have its own idea of the policy of the opposition when it attacked the Yukon railway proposition and will have its own idea as to whether or not there may not after all be a grain of truth in the statement of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). With all due respect to the great ability of Sir Charles Tupper, it is just possible that his memory may be at fault and that, without any reflection on his desire to be accurate, he may not have fully recollected the facts, and that there was consequently some truth in the straight statement which we had from the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). Coming more particularly to the proposition before us, we find that the only sources for the attacks of hon. gentlemen opposite regarding the administration of the Yukon are a certain young men's club in Dawson city and the Revd. Mr. Pringle. Mr. Pringle has been in public life many years, and it is no injustice to say of him that he has been almost always a man with a grievance. Whether federal matters or territorial matters were in question, he has always had an eye for a grievance. The statement was made this afternoon, and we find it in the letter of Mr. Pringle himself, that he is not in politics. Well, while I do not wish to impugn the honesty of the reverend gentleman, I must say that I do not see how that can be, because in the whole history of the Yukon territory there has been no man out there who has been more intensely and constantly active in political life. To such an extent has that been the case that I know of no one who has had so many intense friends and so many bitter enemies as he had while in the Yukon council. The result was that he ceased to be a member of that council, and had he run again, he would have had no show of being re-elected. I wish it to be understood that I have no reflection to make on Mr. Pringle personally. I do not desire to express any opinion concerning him, but we have his own statements, all made in a spirit of the greatest bitterness, against Mr. Congdon who won the nomination at the last election. Although in many respects Mr. Pringle is eminently fitted for public life yet the Liberal convention did not think so and in their wisdom they selected Mr. Congdon. And from that day to this, although previously he and Mr. Congdon were good friends, he became Mr. Congdon's determined enemy. It was stated by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that Mr. Henderson compromised himself by attending a banquet given to Mr. Congdon. Why, Mr. Pringle himself attended a banquet given to Mr. Congdon before Mr. Congdon secured the nomination to this House. When Mr. Congdon was appointed commissioner, the citizens of Dawson gave him a banquet and one of those who raised their voices most favourably in praise of Mr. Congdon was Mr. Pringle himself. But afterwards they became estranged, there occurred this cleavage between them and we find the condition which exists to-day where there seems to be a spirit of the utmost revenge, not to use a stronger word, in the heart of Dr. Pringle against Mr. Congdon and his friends.

In addition to that we have the resolution read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) which embodies the views of the Young Men's Liberal Club of Dawson. I have no doubt that every one here knows what that club was. The Liberals of the Yukon Territory, of Dawson City, lived for many years in harmony and then there occurred this cleavage. In the one hand were the Liberals whose head might be recognized as Mr. Congdon. On the other hand there were the Liberals of whom as prominent a man as any was Dr. Pringle. They drifted apart until there was a cleavage and a new organization was formed early in the year 1904, about six months before the general elections. They formed a new organization absolutely different from the other and called themselves a Liberal club. They were men who were opposed to Mr. Congdon and his party, who would not recognize the convention that selected Mr. Congdon, but men who, one and all, supported Dr. Thompson, who always was and still is at heart an honest and consistent Conservative. They practically supported Dr. Thompson, the present member for the Yukon, in his election, and were most active, even taking the platform in that election opposing Mr. Congdon and supporting Dr. Thompson. It is true that Dr. Thompson came here as an Independent, it is true that until that last night when he made his dramatic departure from here that he followed that course as an Independent. It is true also that he was always a Conservative, but out of consideration for his constituents he left the councils of the Conservative party. But, during the time he was in this House he never voted on want of confidence motions, he consistently adhered to the position of an Independent and apart from the vote on the Autonomy Bill he always absented himself from votes, taking his course manifestly and openly and saying that that was what he was doing. When he was about to catch the midnight train for Vancouver, expecting a dissolution of this House, he said that from that night on he would be no longer an Independent. Thinking that he would not again appear in this parliament, he took occasion to say that he would return to his first love and his constant love, the Conservative party. It was that gentleman whom Dr. Pringle supported and at the same time he was very bold and very constant in his assertion that the only thing he had at heart was the good name of the Liberal party and the good name of Canada. I do not think we need read very much between the lines of his letters to conclude that Dr. Pringle was inspired by motives other than those which he wrote on the pages of those letters. We know the characters of the men who have been administrators of the Yukon. We know that they cannot for one moment be accused of a desire to shield immorality, graft, corruption or anything of that character. Let us start first with Commissioner Ogilvie. Then we have the Hon. James Hamilton Ross. These are two men whose honour I think nobody will question. They have neither loose views nor loose conduct with regard to morality or drunkenness or political corruption. Then take the next man, Mr. F. T. Congdon. Mr. Congdon may not be a brilliant success as a politician, he may not be an arch schemer, he may not be a good man to make devices and plans. I believe that in this respect Dr. Pringle can cut circles around him, but he is a man who no one will ever dare to say has loose views or conduct with regard to morality. I do not think that even the most careless speaker will ever say that he is loose in his views on even a moderate use of intoxicants or that he is a man with an inordinate desire to graft or be corrupt. I have never heard such a charge made against him and I am familiar with all of these charges. The charge that has been made is that he had associates and employees under him in his position as Commisioner who have been open to suspicion, but I am confident I am stating the truth when I say that no responsible person will venture to assert that he is crooked or that he is a person who would in any way recognize, protect, encourage or tolerate corruption.

Then we have had the representatives of the Yukon in this House. The first was the Hon. James Hamilton Ross. I spoke of him a moment ago. Then we have the present member, Dr. Thompson. Those are the only two representatives we have had in this House from the Yukon. There again we have two men who represent public opinion a thousand times more than Dr. Pringle. They have sat here since 1900 but did they raise any voice of denunciation against this government ? Surely it was for them to say : The government is not endeavouring to enforce the laws in that land. It seems to me that it would have been their duty to do this had there been ground of complaint. Dr. Thompson's first duty was to represent the people of the Yukon, his one plank was that he would first and foremost represent the good opinion of the Yukon Territory in this House and apart from that he left party questions alone. Dr. Thompson is a man just as responsible as the reverend gentleman of whom I spoke, a man careful in his life, well advised in his views, a person who would not be a party to corruption or immorality in any form. Messrs. Ross and Thompson have been here, they have come and gone and it has remained to this late date, when the public servants are crying out for their salaries, it remains for the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) after all these years to conclude that this question is so urgent and such a disgrace to the country that he cannot let the public servants have their salaries but he must discuss the affairs of the Yukon Territory. I take the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) at his word and I too will be pleased to see the effect this will have on the country. Here on the evening of the 2nd of June, when the cheques are already in arrears and the government desires to have money voted to pay the civil servants that they may not only not fall into debt but into the unprofitable habit of going into debt, the hon. member for North Toronto prevents the granting of supplies in order to discuss this question. It is a most serious thing and the country will appreciate its seriousness, that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) rises day after day to bring up such questions. The duty of bringing up this matter would have fallen on Senator Ross and Dr. Thompson and not particularly or properly on the hon. member for North Toronto.

But there is another conclusion I wish to draw from the silence of these gentlemen on the subject and it is that in view of this silence the presumption is altogether in favour of the accused. I do not for a moment say that it necessarily proves the innocence of these parties but I do take the stand that it makes a great presumption of innocence and that if this outrageous scandal had existed in the Yukon for all these years we would have heard of it from the representatives of the Yukon. If the charges of the hon. member for North Toronto are true it surely lays a most grave and serious reflection upon Dr. Thompson and Senator Ross, his predecessor.

Mr. FOSTER. May I say that the papers upon which the whole information has been based were not brought down to this House until a few weeks ago ?

Mr. FIELDING. Three months ago, the main return.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so, I had to ask for a supplementary return.

Mr. FIELDING. On the 3rd of March, just three months ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose it was three months ago.

Mr. KNOWLES. Suppose they had not been brought down at all, would not Dr. Thompson and Senator Ross know enough to bring it to our attention if it had been such a public scandal as has been suggested? The truth is they did know the facts but knowing them they have not spoken about this matter. Surely, if there had been the open, public, outrageous scandal of which we have heard this afternoon, there would have been no trouble in Dr. Pringle finding many citizens well disposed towards decency and good government and desirous of maintaining decency in the conduct of public officials, to come and give their evidence before Commissioner Henderson. There are plenty of citizens in the Yukon who have just as strict and just as wholesome views with regard to public morality—and with regard to private morality too if you like—as Rev. Dr. Pringle has, or any of our friends opposite who have spoken on this subject, and who would be as strongly animated by a desire to keep clean the public life of their community. The Rev. Dr. Pringle is not so much holier or better than all the other citizens of the Yukon that, if there had been this glaring outrage, he would be the only man who would like to see a reform effected. The House will agree with me, I am sure, that, in such a case, there would have been plenty of people desirous of maintaining public morality who would come forward and give their testimony to support Dr. Pringle in bringing about a reform.

I am glad that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is now in his place as there is one remark which I wish respectfully to make with regard to what he said concerning the putting down of dance halls. He seemed to be determined that he would not admit that the Yukon government was primarily responsible in this matter or was really responsible at all. He seemed to say, in the first place, that Dr. Pringle was the initiator of the movement and afterwards seemed to say—and I am sure, did say—that it was really an act that this government was responsible for, in effect an act of this government and not of the Yukon Council. The hon. gentleman laid it down, I think, that everything done by the Yukon Council this government must get credit or blame for. I cannot understand the hon. gentleman taking that position. The Yukon Council surely exercises jurisdiction within the limits of the powers conferred upon it by the Yukon Act and amendments thereto, just as the provincial legislatures act within their jurisdiction by virtue of the British North America Act and the amendments thereto. The passing of such legislation, I submit, is wholly within the power of the Yukon Council; and I cannot for a moment understand my hon. friend making the statement that it is something for which this government must assume responsibility. And I was certainly very much surprised that the hon. gentleman should go so far as to say that Mr. Justice Dugas, who is Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Yukon, in the discharge of his duties would be subject to political influence. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that; if I am wrong, I hope he will correct me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to be governed by what I said, and not by the construction which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) puts upon what I said. I may add, if the hon. gentleman will allow me, that what I stated in the first instance was that (Commissioner Henderson) procured the change in the law when he went there. That was disputed by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. KNOWLES. With that statement I find no fault. I am corrected by the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) if he said that I am incorrect in believing that he implied or stated that Mr. Justice Dugas, in his opinion, would be influenced by political considerations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I used no such language.

Mr. KNOWLES. I asked the hon. gentleman a question, and I understood him to say, 'Yes.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; I made no direct allusion to Mr. Justice Dugas.

Mr. KNOWLES. I asked the hon. gentleman directly and distinctly if he made that statement. I do not see how he can say he made no reference to Mr. Justice Dugas, for he answered my question. I made the reference in the first place, but the hon. gentleman answered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error. I gave no answer of that kind. I said that the government, by virtue of the fact that it appointed a majority of the members, could, at any time, control the council. The point on which issue was taken by the Minister of the Interior was that which I have mentioned just now. I said that Mr. Commissioner Henderson was responsible for having brought about the change, and I said that he had done it because Dr. Pringle had brought the subject to his attention. I afterwards read Commissioner Henderson's own report in which he declared that, having had his attention directed to the subject by Dr. Pringle's letter, he had canvassed every member of the council and procured the necessary change in the legislation to be introduced by Mr. Justice Dugas, and it was passed upon his initiative.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, which, I have no doubt, is correct. I understood him differently, and I believe that other hon. members on this side understood him as I did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They misunderstood me.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am sure of it. However, the hon. gentleman did say that the Yukon Council was subject to the control of this government——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLES——in its legislation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLES. And I understood that control was not only in the way of the veto, but control in the ordinary sense.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In other words, it is in the power of this government to enforce its policy in the Yukon by reason of the control it has over the membership of that council.

Mr. KNOWLES. That would be possible only by way of removal of members of the council and the appointment of people who are nothing but tools in the hands of the government, and——

Mr. BRISTOL. You would not call them tools if they carried out the policy of the government?

Mr. KNOWLES. Certainly, if they were not true to their own opinions and to their oaths, I would call them tools. That is what I said, and that is what I shall be ready to say to-morrow. I was about to say that I understood the leader of the opposition to say that the law which was passed with regard to gambling houses and dance halls was a law which was made by reason of the fact that it was desired by this government. If so, I am confident that he does not do justice to the gentlemen who are members of the council, especially to the learned judge who is a member of that council, in thinking that that learned gentleman would fail to use his own good judgment and be true to his oath of office. I am sure the leader of the opposition could not, on reflection, renew that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Apparently, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) has not understood me yet. What I intended to suggest, and what I desire to adhere to is that if the government of this country found the men appointed to the Yukon Council persisted in maintaining a policy and a system under which the most notorious houses of prostitution in the shape of dance halls were run in that country, it would be possible for this government, if it found remonstrances with these gentlemen unavailing, to dismiss them from their office and appoint men who would not allow that condition to continue.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. gentleman will correct me if I am wrong. He will agree that that could have no influence upon the present action of the council in Dawson?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking of the supposed control of the government of the Yukon Council.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think the hon. gentleman cannot understand the point to which I am referring—his contention, as I understand it, that the legislation under which the dance halls were driven out was the result of the desire of the government at Ottawa and not the result of the judgment of the Council of the Yukon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On the contrary, I stated that it was the result of Mr. Commissioner Henderson's initiative—that he went to the Yukon and, having had his attention called to the matter by the Rev. Dr. Pringle, took steps which resulted in this change.

Mr. KNOWLES. Very well, let it go. The charge is so flat that I felt disposed not to speak at all. I was willing, however, to say a few words; but really, the attack is dead, and it seems almost like abusing the dead to go on with this discussion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Even the father of it has run away.

Mr. KNOWLES. It is further to be observed, as you will see by reference to the file, that Dr. Pringle has stated that he has charges only against two men. Mr. Pringle informed the commission to this effect, as you will see in the commissioner's letter, addressed to Hon. Frank Oliver, dated September 23, 1907.

He says:

He informed me that he had no charges to make against any person in the employ of the government other than Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow.

In regard to these two gentlemen, and these are all that a royal commission could deal with, one of them is out of the service of the government and I do not see anything so very urgent about his case that the public supply should be stopped to deal with it. With regard to Mr. Lithgow, he is a gentleman who was brought into the public service by hon. gentlemen opposite, he has been kept in the public service by this government because he is a good official and I do not think that any one in the Yukon or out of it will say that he has ever been guilty of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. He is a very superior man, a good official and the public service has not suffered by the fact that this gentleman has been kept in the employ of the government. The fact that he has been kept in the public service is no reason why the supplies should be held up and the public servants should lose their monthly pay. Mr. Lithgow, Mr. Girouard and Mr. Pringle sat for years together in the Yukon council, and Mr. Pringle never raised any objection when they stood as equals upon the floor of the local legislature. It is very strange that it took him all these years to find these things out about Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard.

The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) spoke with regard to the Governor General's letter. He seemed to say that the Governor General's letter was instrumental in bringing the government to a condition of action. It is very clear that the Minister of the Interior received a communication from the secretary of the Governor General and from Mr. Pringle at the same time, that is the first communication he ever had from Mr. Pringle, so that it is impossible that he or the government should only have been stirred to action by the receipt of a communication from the secretary of the Governor General. It is not fair or worthy of the hon. leader of the opposition to advance the argument that it was the letter of the private secretary of the Governor General that stirred the minister up. If that were so it would be very easy to get anything done because any man, upon writing to the government, could also drop a note to the Governor General and the Governor General's secretary could say that such and such a letter had been received. I want to read the opening part of the letter of the 28th August, written by the Minister of the Interior to the Rev. John Pringle:

> Your letter of July 31, was brought to my attention on my return from an extended trip to the west, which began on July 19th and ended on Monday, August 26.

Only two days before this letter was written.

> I was, therefore, not in Ottawa when your letter arrived, and was consequently unable to reply to it before. Since my return I have received a letter from the Governor General's secretary informing me that His Excellency had received a copy of the same letter. The premier had also informed me that on receipt of the copy of the letter sent to him he communicated with Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow the allegations made by yourself against them.

Showing that the point that was made by the hon. leader of the opposition, that the Minister of the Interior was moved to action by the fact that Mr. Pringle saw fit to write to the Governor General was not quite fair.

There has been a good deal said this afternoon about the lax way in which justice is administered in the Yukon and these statements have been made upon a very feeble foundation, such as the letter which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) read, signed by 'Bona fide.'

Mr. FOSTER. That is a good name.

Mr. KNOWLES. It is a good name, and it is a name that any rascal can make use of.

Mr. FOSTER. That is rather an imputation on 'Bona fide.' You should not do that.

Mr. KNOWLES. If 'Bona Fide' would write in a little wiser mood there would be no occasion to make a remark of that kind about him. I wish to give a quotation from a lecture given by Mr. Justice Craig, who is one of the judges in the Yukon, a report of which appears in the weekly issue of January 17 of the 'Dawson Daily News,' the organ of the Conservative party in Dawson. Mr. Justice Craig, to whom no person will take any exception, delivered a lecture which occupies three pages of this paper. I will read only his closing words:

> Before I close I just want to mention a matter—a matter of some delicacy—which I should mention. Judges are not generally allowed to defend themselves and I have never done that and never will, although I have had occasion to perhaps sometimes.
> I see lately by the outside press that it is stated broadly—and without qualification, mind you, without qualification, don't forget that—that law is not enforced in the Yukon territory. Besides being a judge of this territory I hold the position of police magistrate and have been acting in that capacity for the past four months.

I should explain that the position of police magistrate in the city of Dawson is always held by the junior judge. It is usually held by Mr. Justice MacAulay, the junior judge, but he was absent and the next junior judge is Mr. Justice Craig. Judge Craig continues:

> There has never been a case submitted to me in all those four months which has been refused prosecution but one—and it may be that which the committee were thinking about when they made their report. That is a case where a man wanted a warrant to arrest his co-partner in a cabin, to get his latch key back. I refused the warrant.
> I may say that in all the eight years I have been here the law in the Yukon has been enforced in precisely the same way as the law in every other part of Canada has been enforced. There is no distinction, the same laws prevail, the same rules for enforcing them prevail, and citizens have the same right to complain and complaints, so far as I know, are listened to.

There has been no specific charge in the papers. I don't know what the complaint is. But I say that, speaking broadly and generally, it is unfair to the Yukon territory—I do not care about myself—and unfair to the officials that statements should go abroad that law generally is not generally enforced in the Yukon territory. I know of no mining camp where law is so well observed, where men and women are so safe in going about the streets as they are in this camp.

I regret to have to make these remarks, but I feel it to be my duty—not personally, mind you, but as an official charged with the prosecution of the law in this country—to say that I know of no case where the law has not been enforced, and I know of no case where the law has been asked to be enforced and refusal made.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I remind the hon. gentleman that I brought to the notice of this House, some few years ago, a specific case where two men were fined, and, I think, imprisoned for taking timber without a permit when the timber dues had been paid and when they desired to appeal and when they attempted to get the evidence which they had a right to get it was denied them over and over again, they could not get it and they have not got it to this day.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think I am familiar with the case that the hon. gentleman refers to, but if I understand that case, it was simply that the machinery of the criminal law was called in when it should never have been called in; it was such a trivial matter. I understand that the charge of hon. gentlemen opposite is that in important matters the criminal law is not called in. The hon. gentleman has gone back year after year; I do not know how many years he has gone back to bring these cases up. He told us this afternoon about a whisky contract twelve years old. That is getting pretty old and probably if whisky is that old it will be better than when they took it in. Our hon. friends opposite are fond of bringing up these matters of great age, and so we hear session after session of the 'Arctic,' the North Atlantic Trading Company, the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, the Yukon liquor permits, always the same old accusations. We have wasted this whole day upon a matter that is many years old, that has been before the public as an outstanding scandal during all these years, and it is only at this late date that they again repeat the story for the purpose of delaying the business of the House.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). Considering the eagerness of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) not to waste the time of the House he has delivered rather a long and pointless defence of what he calls a dead attack made by the opposition. Had he the courage of his convictions he would have said nothing, or else he would have said something to the point. The matter is in a nutshell. The first question is : Who makes this attack, and the answer is : The Rev. John Pringle. And Mr. Pringle is, as he says in his letter of the 27th of May, 1902 :

> I am the Presbyterian minister at Bonanza. I am a citizen of Canada by birth, a Liberal by conviction, believing that the triumph of Liberal principles is the triumph of might.

Is Dr. Pringle alone in his attack? Not at all. On the 13th November, 1907, at the regular meeting of the Young Men's Liberal Club, composed of what may be called the decent young Liberals of the Yukon Territory, a resolution was passed which unanimously confirmed the statements of the Rev. Dr. Pringle. Now, I have the honour of knowing the Rev. Dr. Pringle. I have been in the Yukon and I can say that I did not find there a man who was more highly respected and more generally revered by the people of the Territory than was the Rev. Dr. Pringle. When you find such a man simply committing the sin of being a Liberal of the old school attached to true Liberal principles, and when you find him supported by the decent young Liberals of the country, one would think that a good tactician and able statesman like the Prime Minister would be able to discern that the Rev. Dr. Pringle was telling the truth and not the man who wanted to retain office at all hazard. What interest had the Rev. John Pringle, a Liberal by birth, a man highly respected, one of the leading divines of the Presbyterian Church, what interest had he to tell lies? There can be no suggestion that he had the slightest possible interest in doing so. But the other men who contradicted him, the men who wish to retain office, the men whose living depended on their retaining office, they had an interest in refuting the statements of Dr. Pringle, and it is the statement of such men that the Prime Minister takes as against the statement of Dr. Pringle, supported as it is by the young Liberals of the Yukon. The right hon. gentleman says that in 1902 there was no charges of a specific character. It is a peculiarity of the Prime Minister and those associated with him that they never are able to find a specific charge when they don't want to investigate. But if the right hon. gentleman will peruse the letter of the 27th November, 1902, he will find there a charge sufficiently specific to warrant investigation. This document came to the Prime Minister from a Liberal by conviction, and it came from a reverend gentleman entitled to the highest respect, although it has suited hon. gentlemen opposite to-day to cast aspersions on the Rev.

Dr. Pringle. In 1902 Dr. Pringle brought to the attention of the Prime Minister the subject of hydraulic concessions, then a question of live interest in the Yukon, and because of which considerable ill-feeling was engendered against the government of the day, it being stated, and I believe truely, that a great many valuable concessions that could have been worked successfully by the miners themselves had been given to certain favourites of the Liberal party. It is true that the present Minister of the Interior has properly seen fit to cancel certain of these concessions, but the fact remains that as far back as 1902 this question was brought to the attention of the First Minister and this business administration went asleep until 1906 over a matter of such vital importance to the people of the Yukon Territory. The reverend gentleman goes on to say :

Concessions have been granted, I am convinced, not only carelessly, but iniquitously; the heritage of our people given to satisfy the greed of capital, without due consideration of the rights of the people in the ground, or of the character of the statements made to secure these concessions.

The government said this was not specific enough, and so they did not take the trouble to investigate it and to see whether the statement was true. The reverend gentleman complained of the dance halls in which some of the government officials were frequenters, and he says :

But the worst feature of the licensed houses here is that a very large percentage of them are houses of prostitution. Many of them run, it is true, by people of good character. But a large number of bawdy houses, with a government license to prey upon the public.

He says further :

The law is systematically manipulated, not to protect the public but to protect and nurse the gambler and shame honest men.

The government saw fit to take no action with regard to these charges. On the 3rd of January, 1905, another letter came to the First Minister, and the specific charges in that letter were such as to demand investigation at the hands of any well meaning government. Mr. Pringle's fairness is shown by the fact that he is glad to concede the part that Mr. Ross, as Yukon Commissioner, took in putting down the abuses referred to, and he points out that these abuses have again arisen and are in fuller swing than they were before Mr. Ross took means to mitigate the evil. But instead of investigating the matter the Prime Minister simply takes the word of the men charged against the statements of the Rev. Dr. Pringle, who could have no personal interest in the matter. And so it was allowed to rest until 1907, when charges were again made, and the Minister of the Interior on the 28th of August, 1907, wrote to the Hon. Alexander Henderson a letter which, although it has been already read, it is proper to read again, because in my judgment it is the key to the whole situation. The letter says :

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from the Governor General's office. As you will note from the address and contents, the original of this letter was adressed to the premier and to myself.

You will be good enough to investigate fully the specific charges made by Mr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow, and will, of course, call upon Mr. Pringle to substantiate those charges. You are to investigate fully and report.

Should the Rev. Mr. Pringle desire to lay charges against any other persons in the employ of the government, or of the Interior Department especially, you are to investigate them as well.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

The point of that letter is simply this. If the Minister of the Interior is to be taken at his word, if he is to be bound by that letter, he is of opinion that there were charges to be investigated, and if so, there was, as he knows only one proper method of investigating a charge of a public character. If those charges were charges against those gentlemen in their private capacity—and I am passing no opinion on the truth or falsity of the charges themselves—it was not the business of the Minister of the Interior to investigate them. He had a right to investigate the charges only if they came under part 1 or part 2 of chapter 104 of the Act respecting Public and Departmental inquiries. I agree with the First Minister that they do not come under part 2, and that if they come under any part of that Act they come under part 1, which provides :

Th Govenor in Council may, whenever he deems it expedient, cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.

Under that section the government could have investigated the concessions referred to, the abuse of the license system, the character of any of the officials of the government so far as it affected the good government of Canada. If there was any right to investigate at all, there was only one proper form of investigation, for an obvious reason. Does any sensible man in this House think, with the character of the material on which these charges are based, that any one would voluntarily come forward and give testimony before the commissioner ? They would not do so, for two reasons : they would have no protection at the hands of the court, and they would lay themselves open, whether they were telling the truth or not, to a charge of slander; and that is what has happened, for an action for libel has been brought against the Rev. John Pringle. Furthermore, you could not compel witnesses to come forward and give evidence. It is years ago that some of the events charged took place. Witnesses to these events might not be in the Yukon at the time of the investigation; their conduct money would have to be paid, wherever they might be, and they would certainly have to be subpœnaed and if they gave their evidence under compulsion, it would have to be before a tribunal that could give them ample protection. If the Minister of the Interior really desired an investigation, he was in duty bound to have a proper investigation under the Act, as Mr. Pringle demanded. Well, what happened? Mr. Henderson, on the 8th of November, 1907, wrote to Mr. Oliver as follows:

Dear Mr. Oliver,—I am inclosing herewith a copy of the correspondence relating to the charges of the Rev. Dr. Pringle against Messrs. Girouard and Lithgow. You will see from Dr. Pringle's letter to me of the 23rd ultimo, he declines to appear as a party in what he calls an informal investigation. I would suggest, if agreeable to you, that I be appointed a commissioner to investigate the charges under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) ALEXANDER HENDERSON,
Commissioner.

In that connection, I want to call attention to a further letter written by Mr. Henderson to the Rev. John Pringle, as follows:

Dawson, Yukon Territory, October 30, 1907.
Sir,—In reply to your communication of the 23rd instant, in which you inform me that you must adhere to your decision contained in your letter of the 14th instant, not to take any part in the informal investigation into the charges against Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard, I beg to say that I am requesting from the government that authority be given to me to investigate the charges on the lines of a commission, which will enable me to issue summonses and to take the evidence of witnesses under oath. I trust this course will be deemed satisfactory.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) ALEXANDER HENDERSON,
Commission, Yukon Territory.

That was a letter from the commissioner of the Yukon and a lawyer to the Rev. Mr. Pringle, conceding his position that an informal investigation could not be satisfactory, but that the proper course was that Mr. Henderson should be appointed a commissioner under the Act. He writes to the minister suggesting such an investigation, and the minister says, no, I will not have it. And so, as the Minister of the Interior and the government did not desire any real investigation, but wanted to bury these charges in oblivion, the minister goes back on his original promise to have an investigation, and they do nothing at all but endeavour to cover up and conceal one of the worst scandals that disgraces the administration of this government.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) desired to avail himself of this matter as a convenient opportunity to occupy another day and thus prevent the progress of the very urgent and proper business of the House, the passage of the supplies which are necessary for the carrying on of the King's government, I must admit at once that he has quite achieved his purpose. But if he had any other object in view, I confess that I am utterly unable to discover it. Why the hon. gentleman should bring this matter up at all at this moment, if he had any other purpose in view, is difficult to understand. The matter is not new. This story of Yukon difficulties has been before the country a considerable time. My hon. friend has suggested that the Rev. Mr. Pringle is the first man who has had the courage to refer to these dreadful things that occurred in the Yukon. That was hardly just to a very distinguished member of this parliament who a few years ago made a speech of seven hours in making accusations of a general character with reference to Yukon affairs, and, finding that he had omitted one or two things, made another speech of eight or nine hours to make up the deficiency. Perhaps the fact that that gentleman, though a very able man, failed to accomplish very much by his attack, may have been the reason that from time to time we heard less and less about these Yukon scandals.

Nor do we forget that, in connection with a discussion of that kind, the distinguished leader of the opposition of that day, making charges of a general character, such as those made to-day—in which my hon. friend wandered over the whole history of the Yukon—went so far as to mention the name of one of the citizens of Canada and accused him of graft. But when that citizen took action in the courts of the country to vindicate himself and bring his accuser to account, Sir Charles Tupper, promptly climbed down and made a humble apology to the person aggrieved. And I am inclined to think that if we were to pass from generalities and come down to particulars, the same experience would follow to-day as did then. In this matter one or two gentlemen, whose names are freely mentioned, are personally known to me. I refer particularly to Messrs. Congdon and Lithgow.

There is really little against Mr. Congdon although his name figures in Mr. Pringle's correspondence pretty extensively. When we come down however to specific statements, we do not find any accusation against him. What we find are statements of a personal character against Messrs. Lithgow and Girouard. If I heard the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) rightly a moment ago, he considered that there was nothing to investigate. I understood him to say that the Minister of the Interior could only have the right to investigate matters affecting the official conduct of persons in his employ, and that it would be no part of his duty to have an investigation into their private character. Unless, therefore, there is a charge made against them in their official capacity, the Minister of the Interior had no right to order an investigation at all.

Mr. BRISTOL. I was not expressing an opinion on the charges but was simply commenting on the fact that the minister had ordered an investigation, and I was pointing out that the investigation would not be into charges merely of a personal character but into charges with respect to conduct in the performance of a public duty.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite right. If the charges were of a personal character and had no relation to public duties, the Minister of the Interior had no right to order an investigation at all.

Mr. BRISTOL. But he did order one.

Mr. FIELDING. I am giving the view which the hon. member for Centre Toronto expressed. The public records show that although there were general charges and statements covering the whole administration of the Yukon, when we read the correspondence and sift the whole matter down, it resolves itself into mere personal charges against the private character of these gentlemen and nothing more. And according to my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), those are not proper subjects for an official inquiry. I have here the letter of the 2nd October, 1907, written by Mr. Pringle to Mr. Henderson, in which he specifies his charges against Mr. Lithgow and Mr. Girouard. Mr. Pringle says :

> I am prepared for the investigation which you have been instructed to hold into the charges which I have made of scandalous living on the part of J. T. Lithgow and J. E. Girouard, prominent public servants in the Yukon.
> I am prepared to prove——

And then he goes on to state his charges in clauses 1, 2 and 3. These clauses I do not wish to quote because I am not anxious to needlessly advertise the very improper charges made. But every one of these paragraphs has reference to the personal and private life of the two gentlemen named.

Mr. BRISTOL. But if the personal character of an official of the government was such as to create the conviction that he was unfit for the position, would not that be a matter for investigation ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not discussing the purely legal question as to whether these accusations would come under the term of any particular Act. But what right would the Minister of the Interior have to appoint a royal commission to investigate unless the matter to be investigated were one affecting official conduct ?

Mr. tBRISTOL. But he did.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think he would have any right to appoint a royal commission and in my opinion the demand for such a commission was most absurd.

Mr. BRISTOL. The commissioner of the Yukon and an ex-judge thought it very proper.

Mr. FIELDING. I have known eminent judges to differ in these matters. I would not set my own opinion as a layman against that of a judge, but judges like doctors often differ. I take my hon. friend's opinion that the Minister of the Interior had no right, as a matter of common sense and reason, to investigate a mere charge against the private character of any man. Suppose that in Montreal or Ottawa some good citiezn—even a christian minister of the high rank of Mr. Pringle—should write a letter to the Minister of Customs in which he expressed his belief that a certain collector of customs or other customs official in some district was leading an immoral life, would it be reasonable to demand that a royal commission should be appointed to investigate into such a charge? It may be a question whether the minister would be justified in taking any notice of such a letter. If he thought the matter sufficiently serious, he might send some official down to call on the man accused and give him an opportunity to explain and then make a report, but no one would seriously contend that it was a proper matter for an investigation by a Royal Commission. Suppose some Toronto officer—especially a good Conservative appointed many years ago—were accused of improper conduct in his private capacity, and the government were to appoint a royal commission, on the strength of such an accusation, to investigate into this man's private life, my hon. friend from Centre Toronto would be the first to complain that the investigation was a case of political persecution. Putting aside for a moment this idea that there is something extraordinary about this Yukon affair, and treating it as we would any other case that might arise any time in the public service, it will be at once seen how unreasonable was the demand for a royal commission. The curious part of it all is that what Mr. Pringle tells us was so notorious does not appear to have been notorious in the mind of anybody else. He says that the conduct of these men was for years a matter of public notoriety. Well, the commissioners of the Yukon have been men of undoubted high character, honesty and repute, and they have not reported any such terrible condition of affairs. The Minister of the Interior himself went out to the Yukon to ascertain the facts and find out for himself what were the conditions existing there. Surely if this matter were of the great notoriety described by Mr. Pringle, when the minister arrived at the government office or his hotel in Dawson city, he would have been met by men in that city who would have told him the true condition of things. But while he receievd complaints concerning a good many other matters, not one word did he hear against the reputation or the conduct of these men, whose conduct Mr. Pringle says was a matter of public notoriety and great scandal to the community. Do not imagine for a moment that I am questioning the zeal or the good motives of Mr. Pringle. But we know that often well meaning men, animated by the best intentions, allow their zeal to outrun their discretion. Any one who reads Mr. Pringle's letters will find that, whether he was influenced by personal motives or not, he has made remarkable statements and used very strong language. For instance, in one of his letters he takes the trouble to repeat the story that one of the Christian ministers of the city of Dawson accepted contributions from the dance halls and other places of ill repute upon the condition that he would keep his mouth closed.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like my hon. friend to give the quotation. I have read that letter carefully and I do not think it bears that interpretation.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Pringle states: I have not the report but I made the extract —that one of these disreputable people told him that

A gift bestowed upon one of our Christian churches was given by him with the understanding that it was to close the minister's mouth; that the church should not disturb the gambling den and the dance hall.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just the reverse of the way the Minister of Finance put it at first.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. FOSTER. He said that a Christian minister of one of the churches had accepted the gift on the understanding that he was to say nothing about the dance hall.

Mr. FIELDING. An understanding requires two parties.

Mr. FOSTER. I merely wish to call attention to the difference in the statements.

Mr. FIELDING. It does make a difference. I quote again from Dr. Pringle. He repeats the statement that one of these infamous people to whom he refers told him that

A gift bestowed upon one of our Christian churches was given by him with the understanding that it was to close the minister's mouth; that the church should not disturb the gambling den and the dance hall.

An understanding implies agreement between two parties. I cannot have an understanding in a matter of that kind alone. If my hon. friend and I engage in a certain transaction on an understanding that is an understanding between us and therefore the Christian minister must have accepted the gift on the understanding, otherwise this has no meaning.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister says the two had an understanding and that a Christian minister received the gift on that basis.

Mr. FIELDING. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. And that Dr. Pringle quoted the statement of one of these people that it had been so.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not quote it as Dr. Pringle's statement.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend said the Christian minister received the donation on the understanding that he was to say nothing about the gambling den.

Mr. FIELDING. I say that is the only inference. I did not quote Dr. Pringle as the author of the statement; I said he repeated a story which had reached him and to which he attaches sufficient importance to include it in his letter to the Prime Minister. In that letter he repeats that story that he was informed, and evidently believed it and thought it so important as to put it in his letter, for if it was a mere passing report and he did not believe it, what shall we say of his discretion in inserting it in a letter to the Prime Minister?

Mr. FOSTER. There was enough in it to show what an interested party thought he had done and thought he could do.

Mr. FIELDING. There can be no understanding except between two parties and when he says that

A gift bestowed upon one of our Christan churches was given by him with the understanding that it was to close the minister's mouth; that the church should not disturb the gambling den and the dance hall.

I say that was an accusation that the Christian minister accepted it on that condition.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for East Grey inquired eloquently : What will the ministers of the gospel think of these things. I would like to ask what the ministers of the gospel in Dawson and throughout the Yukon will think of the wisdom of Dr. Pringle in sending that accusation against them, for it is against them, in a letter to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Dr. Pringle in that letter had a good deal to say about concessions and mentioned particularly what is known as the Bronson and Ray concession. He said that in the Bronson and Ray concession none of the conditions upon which it was granted have been fulfilled. He said it was easy to cancel it. I do not know whether Dr. Pringle's information was what influenced my hon. friend but when the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) came into office his attention was drawn to some of these concessions in the Yukon, he thought the conditions had not been fulfilled and he cancelled the very concession to which Dr. Pringle here refers. I regret to say that the Minister of the Interior has not been sustained in that. Dr. Pringle says the conditions were not fulfilled and it was a great scandal that these concessions were not cancelled. That consession was cancelled but the Supreme Court of Canada decided yesterday that the cancellation was improper and that there was not sufficient ground for it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, I think he had better give a little of his advice to the Minister of the Interior. He had exactly the same information and he expressed the same view with a great deal more force because he absolutely cancelled the concession. You must not find fault with Dr. Pringle for having no better information about the legality of the cancellation than the minister himself who was familiar with all the circumstances.

Mr. FIELDING. There is this difference that Dr. Pringle brings it into his letters and makes a great scandal of it ; he says that every one knew in the Yukon that the conditions were not fulfilled and the Minister of the Interior, acting I am sure with the best of his judgment, decided to cancel the concession.

Mr. FOSTER. He must have been led away by Dr. Pringle.

Mr. FIELDING. And the Supreme Court of Canada according to the report in the newspapers, yesterday, has decided that the Rev. John Pringle was wrong and that the Minister of the Interior was wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Minister of the Interior have the legal advice of the government before he cancelled this ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know. For my present purpose it is not very important. I simply want to mention it as another illustration that my friend Dr. Pringle is zealous in making rash statements about matters as to which he has no better information than the rest of mankind.

I repeat that the interest I feel in the matter is largely a personal interest as respects the gentlemen concerned. I have already said that there is no accusation against Mr. Congdon, although his name is frequently mentioned. He was a very eminent barrister among the younger bar of the province of Nova Scotia, a man of undoubted ability and the highest character, and whatever may be said about his conduct in political matters in the Yukon, I must say that no man who ever knew him in Nova Scotia would have the slightest doubt that in everything that makes for a clean life and for a high moral standard and integrity of character he sustained his reputation in the west.

With regard to Mr. Lithgow I feel an interest because I had something to do with his appointment. In the early days of the Yukon, the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) came to me to discuss financial arrangements for the Yukon and we agreed that it was necessary to have a very capable and strong man in there to deal with that branch of the public business. Mr. Sifton suggested that I should recommend a man who would be satisfactory to the Finance department. I took time to consider it and selected Mr. Lithgow. In view of the suggestions that there is some political end to serve, that there was some favour to be done for our political friends, it is worth mentioning, although it is not important, that Mr. Lithgow was no political friend of mine. I have known him from boyhood and he has always been a Conservative. His father, a very eminent citizen of Halifax, who has recently passed away, was not only a Conservative, known to be warmly in sympathy with the Conservative party, but in one of the political campaigns of which I have a very lively recollection, he was one of the leading writers in the public press in the support of the Conservative party. The Lithgows, father and son, and every member of the family, so far as I have ever known, have belonged to the Conservative party. John T. Lithgow came into the service of the government when the Conservatives were in power. He was appointed to the Halifax branch of the Finance Department by Sir Leonard Tilley. He has been twenty-eight years in the public service. He had served there under several ministers and when I came into office I knew enough of him to value his character, capacity and service. When I had an opportunity of either promoting a man, for it was a promotion, or bringing a man from the outside, I selected him, notwithstanding his known Conservative proclivities and recommended him to the Minister of the Interior, and he was sent to the Yukon. So I felt an interest in the matter. I am bound to say that notwithstanding all that has happened, I have never found a shadow of reason for regretting that I recommended the Minister of the Interior to appoint Jack Lithgow, as everyone knew him in Halifax. He is a man well known throughout the maritime provinces and I believe wherever he was known he was respected, irrespective of all consideration of politics or anything else. He went out to that country at a time when there were very great difficulties. He passed through that period when officials on all sides were being accused of wrongdoing—most frequently I hope without just cause—and Mr. Lithgow passed unscathed through all the stormy times of the Yukon administration. I never met a man, until this letter of Dr. Pringle's was presented, who knew anything about the Yukon who did not bear testimony to the value and faithful services of John T. Lithgow. I want to say that for him now. I believe that Mr. Lithgow has had his faults; I believe that, so far as I have been able to make inquiries, on one occasion he permitted himself to stray from the path of sobriety. I believe that on one occasion he did himself discredit. But it is but fair to say that there are but few men who can submit to have applied to them the severe standard that never on any occasion shall they have allowed themselves to depart from the line of propriety. Notwithstanding the fact that, on that occasion, the man was at fault, I say he has been a most faithful, useful and valuable servant of Canada, and it would be a scandal and a shame if he were dismissed for that one fault. And I want to emphasize the fact that this is purely a matter affecting Mr. Lithgow's personal character. Even Dr. Pringle does not allege that Mr. Lithgow has failed in his duty. True, he did, in one passage, make a reference to Mr. Lithgow, which, I am sure, he could not sustain and which, I am equally sure, will not be accepted by any friend who has known Mr. Lithgow. He spoke not only of Mr. Lithgow's personal character, but in a passage which I thought I had at hand, he stated that Mr. Lithgow had been working in the interest of the gang of thieves who had been having both hands in the public treasury. Mr. Pringle is the only man I have ever heard who would make any such accusation against Mr. Lithgow. The universal testimony of friend and foe is that, through all these troublous times, this man proved himself exceptionally qualified for his duties and performed his duties with great ability and fidelity.

Reference is made in the papers to a resolution said to have been passed by the Young Men's Liberal Club of Dawson, opposing a movement said to be on foot for the appointment of Mr. Lithgow as commissioner. If that Young Men's Liberal Club did pass such a resolution, it was pretty good evidence of the fact that the government were not dealing with the matter in a partisan way, for, whatever favour and consideration they gave to Mr. Lithgow, they did not give through the influence of the young Liberals of that territory. But there is this further communication:

Dawson, November 15, 1907.

Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa.

Sir,—A resolution was passed last evening at a meeting of the Young Men's Liberal Club, at which seven members were present, and of which I am president, strongly condemning Mr. John T. Lithgow, controller, as being unfit to occupy the position that he now holds. I beg to state that I am not in accord with said resolution and have refused to sign it.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN GRANT.

So, the meeting to which reference has been made appears to have been a very small meeting, and the very chairman who presided over this deliberations took the trouble to write this letter to the Prime Minister explaining that he did not approve of the resolution and had refused to sign it.

Now, I want to press an argument referred to by others and to which in a word by the way this afternoon, I alluded. Hon. gentlemen have quoted from Dr. Pringle the statement that the election of Dr. Thompson in the Yukon was brought about as a vindication of the rights of the decent people of the Yukon and as a protest against dance halls, gambling hells and that sort of thing. If we accept that as true, then Dr. Thompson, when he came to this House was to be recognized as the interpreter of that sentiment. That hon. gentleman sat here year after year; he was personally familiar with this matter and was chosen especially to represent it; and yet not on one occasion did he venture to rise in his place and make any such accusations concerning any official as have been made in his absence by the hon. member for North Toronto. I think the public mind will regard that fact as important. It is only reasonable to suppose that, if the public conscience in Dawson had been so shocked, if these matters were of such public notoriety, if a great wrong had been done and the public service had scandalized the community, and if no remedy had been afforded for these things, surely the man elected by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, elected and sent to the House to remedy such abuses, would have stood up in this House, explained and denounced the abuses and demanded a remedy. Yet that hon. gentleman sat in his place here year after year, even long after these papers had been brought before the House, and never raised his voice in condemnation. I venture to draw the conclusion that that hon. gentleman, who knew Mr. Lithgow and knew the facts, was satisfied that the public interest was best served, and would continue to be best served, by keeping Mr. John T. Lithgow in the office which he has filled so ably and so successfully.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Civil government—Department of the Interior, $190,012.50.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of the Interior give us a statement of the increases and changes that have been made in the officers of this department?

Mr. OLIVER. The vote asked for civil government, salaries, is $190,012.50. The vote last year was $182,050, there being an increase of $7,962.50. This is made up by statutory increases, $4,925; promotions, $5,000; difference in estimating for the salaries of three third-class clerks, $137.50; then there is deducted $2,100, decrease in salaries occasioned by promotions and changes, and the $7,962.50 is accounted for.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has fourteen chief clerks whereas last year he had twelve. Have two been promoted to chief clerkships?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. J. M. Roberts and Mr. P. Marchand have been promoted from the position of first-class clerks to be chief clerks. Mr. Roberts is in charge of the registration branch and Mr. Marchand is deputy or assistant to the chief accountant.

Mr. FOSTER. Have these chief clerkships been created yet?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, these offices have been created by order in council and we are now asking for money to meet the salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. What is Mr. Roberts' salary at present?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,500, and we desire to make it $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Mr. Roberts been in that branch?

Mr. OLIVER. Since 1900.

Mr. FOSTER. In what position and at what salary?

Mr. OLIVER. He came in as a temporary clerk at $900. He was employed at first in the timber and mines branch, afterwards removed to the registration branch and finally promoted to the chiefship of the registration branch.

Mr. FOSTER. When was he made a permanent clerk?

Mr. OLIVER. In 1903.

Mr. FOSTER. At what salary?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be a second-class clerk?

Mr. OLIVER. A senior second.

Mr. FOSTER. When was he promoted after that?

Mr. OLIVER. He was made a first-class clerk in 1906 at $1,500. I was in error in saying that his present salary is $1,500; it is $1,550.

Mr. FOSTER. What does he get as chief clerk?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister not think that has been pretty rapid progress?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it is rapid.

Mr. FOSTER. What have been the influences which have been at work to make this rapid progress?

Mr. OLIVER. The influence is the ability of Mr. Roberts. I am not aware of any other influence.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did Mr. Roberts come from?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will see that this is a very rapid stride forward. Here is a young man who, seven years ago, was not in the service at all; he comes in as a temporary clerk in 1900 and gets $900; in 1903 he is made permanent as a second-class clerk at $1,100, not at the minimum of the second class; in 1906 he is up to $1,500, and now, in 1908, he is to go in as a chief clerk at a minimum of $1,900. He increases from $900 to $1,900. There must be some very pressing reason why Mr. Roberts has such rapid promotion as that over a great many clerks who have been in that department for a much longer period and who must have a great deal more experience without doubt. As to whether they have more ability will be for the minister to say.

Mr. OLIVER. We are not removing Mr. Roberts to any other position but we want to make him of higher rank in proportion to his work and responsibility.

Mr. FOSTER. His work will be just the same and this is a way the minister has of adding $400 to his salary and giving him a chance to get $500 or $600 more.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the idea.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is bound to tell the House what are the superior abilities of Mr. Roberts which entitle him to this galloping speed upwards. There is no superhuman ability required to do that work. Can the minister say that the clerks in the department who have experience added to their abilities are not able to do that work and that Mr. Roberts must be jumped up ? His rapid promotion must be for some other reason that the minister has given.

Mr. OLIVER. I know of no other reason. Any one who is familiar with the operation of such a department knows that upon careful and reliable registration depends the proper transaction of the business. While the registration seems to be a matter of mere detail, in practice it has not been found so. Mr. J. J. Henry had been in charge of the branch for twenty years when his health failed, not because of his age but because of the onerous character of the work which broke him down, and it became necessary to give him some other employment. There are some forty clerks in the branch and there has to be most careful management and the work of the department depends on the work of these men being properly done. After Mr. Henry we tried one or two of the staff and found they were not able to cope with the work and at last we selected Mr. Roberts. Since his appointment we find the work is well and promptly done, that there is order and promptitude where formerly such was not the case. Mr. Roberts is in the full vigour of life and he seems to have special aptitude for organization and management. We recognize that it is due in a very considerable degree to the proper management of this branch that we have been able to carry on so well as we have the stupendously increased business of the department. It has already been brought to the attention of the House that men of higher abilities and higher responsibilities are not as a rule paid wages equal to what they could earn outside and we have lost several men from the department because of that. It is a fair business proposition that when we have a man who is able to take a responsible position and is in the full vigour of life we should pay him according to the work he does. It is on that principle I have asked parliament to increase Mr. Roberts' salary.

Mr. FOSTER. Did Mr. Roberts become a civil servant through the regular door or was he made a civil servant by Act of parliament ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Roberts came in as a temporary at first; he afterwards passed his civil service examination and entered the permanent service in the usual way.

Mr. FOSTER. But not at the minimum of the second class.

Mr. OLIVER. He was made permanent at the minimum of the second class.

Mr. MONK. In what year did he pass the civil service examination ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer that.

Mr. FOSTER. You say you want to keep this official and give him a good salary but you must recollect there are at least thirty men in the department who are ahead of him and you may be doing a great injustice to some of these. Will the minister say that not one of these thirty men has the method and habits which would enable him to do the work of the registration branch ? Has there been any examination to test the ability of the others ?

Mr. OLIVER. When Mr. Henry unfortunately had to give up his position. I think attempts were made to fill it with one or two other gentlemen, but they were not able to meet the requirements. We did not go through the whole list, because when Mr. Roberts got the opportunity he filled the bill, and I admit that it was of more interest to us to get the work well done than to go through the whole list of employees to find out if more than one of them could do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the opportunity was given to the newcomer and the old hands were not given the opportunity. Then, what reason has the minister for making Mr. Roberts, who has been only a short time in the service, a chief clerk, where he is doing no more efficiently the same work that he has been doing since 1906, and adding $400 to his salary? Could he not have done the business just as well on the lower salary? Have his few years of service in the department earned him that promotion and that high salary, while others have been twenty years in the department, and have been doing faithful and honest and efficient work during that time, and do not yet receive as much? Is it not a fact that Mr. Roberts has been the nominee of the chief whip of the Liberal party, and that he owes his rapid promotion to that influence?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say what connection there may be between Mr. Roberts and the chief whip of the Liberal party; but I can say certainly that I have no knowledge of any such connection—that the chief whip never spoke to me about Mr. Roberts, and certainly Mr. Roberts never spoke to me about the chief whip. In fact, he has never spoken to me about his position. What has been done has been done upon the representations of the deputy in the ordinary way and upon my own knowledge of Mr. Roberts' efficiency in the transaction of business. I might say that Mr. Henry, the previous occupant of the position, was receiving $2,300 a year, and I do not think it is unreasonable that Mr. Roberts, who is doing the same work —in fact, a great deal more work, because the business has increased very much— should be put in the position to ultimately get the same salary as Mr. Henry got. I do not wish to disparage Mr. Henry's work, but I am bound to say that the work is being better done now than it was under Mr. Henry.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been Mr. Marchand's course?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Marchand entered the service in 1899 as a second-class clerk at $1,100 a year.

Mr. MONK. Did he pass the civil service examination?

Mr. OLIVER. He informs me that he passed the civil service examination in 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. And when did his first promotion take place?

Mr. OLIVER. He was made a first-class clerk in 1904 at $1,500.

Mr. FOSTER. And he is now receiving $1,650?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. These are two examples of extremely rapid promotions, one of the men having been brought into the service in 1899 and the other in 1900, and in the short space of seven or eight years they have risen to be chief clerks. I am not in a position to rate the merits of either of these men, but it seems to me somewhat peculiar and somewhat unfair that employees of that department who entered the service at the minimum rate find after a service of twenty or twenty-five years that men are brought in and put right over them, commencing at high salaries, and being now chief clerks. It does not seem to me to be right or fair. Surely the minister is not going to make the confession that amongst all the horde of clerks that he has in the Interior Department, good and capable servants I believe, he could not find any two fit to be made chief clerks. There does not seem to be much incentive to a spirit of work and enterprise amongst the body of the civil servants if the prizes are to be bestowed in this way.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer for the reasons for the previous promotions of these two gentlemen; but for the present promotion, for which, of course, I am responsible, directly and indirectly, I may say that it is simply due to the recognition of efficiency, and a desire to retain that efficiency in the service by paying such wages as are in accordance with the service rendered. It is to be regretted that all cannot be at the top, and I am not prepared to say that there may not be other men in the department just as competent as the two mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister ought to be able to say that before he makes the rapid promotion of these two men.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the House will realize that in dealing with a department having 585 employees in the city of Ottawa, if the minister or his chief officers were to occupy the time that would be necessary to see that no injustice was done by promotions amongst all that staff of officials, they would hardly be giving that attention to the public business for which they are paid and which the country expects from them. It is an unfortunate situation, but I do not see how it can be avoided. When we are able to say that we have secured the men who can do the work, and do it well, I think we are fairly entitled to ask parliament to pay those men according to the work they do and the responsibility they have assumed. As to the other men who may have equal qualifications, it is to be hoped that in due time their turn will come.

Mr. FOSTER. That is small consolation.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be; but we think that the recognition of merit by rapid promotion does not tend to inefficiency in the service. I would think quite the contrary, and it is efficiency in the service which the country is particularly desirous of securing.

Mr. MONK. I think it tends to great inefficiency. Within the past few years we have had in this House frequent inquiries, in passing the estimates, why certain appointees have had their salaries increased in abnormal proportions and have been promoted over the heads of those much older in the service, and we have never had any other reason given than that advanced to-night, namely, that the men are efficient and that the object is to secure the services of efficient men by promotions of that kind. And we will never have any other reason until our civil service is reorganized on a proper basis, and the public are awaiting with much interest the Bill which is to provide for a reform. They are waiting to find out whether that Bill will incorporate the valuable suggestions and proposals of reform contained in the report of the Civil Service Commissioners, which has been so universally condemned by the friends of the government and the Liberal press. In the city of Montreal there are efficient civil servants, but examples are frequent beyond number of appointees of the present government being promoted over old employees, not appointed by the preceding government particularly, but whose nominations frequently date back to the time of the Mackenzie administration. As a consequence our postal service in Montreal, which gives the second largest revenue of any city in the Dominion, is very largely disorganized. It is not because the men are not as a rule good men. They are of course very insufficiently paid, but the disorganization is due to the system of promotions, for which no satisfactory reasons can be given. Within the past few months a system has been inaugurated of putting comparatively recent postal employees—friends no doubt of the Postmaster General—thtrough a sham examination, and then promoting them over men who have given faithful service during a much greater number of years. That is one of the reasons why the postal service in Montreal is not at all satisfactory, and it never will be until we have the system established which has been in force in England since 1857 and is also in force in the Post Office Department in the United States. Appointments are there only made by a commission after an examination, and the question of patronage is eliminated altogether, and promotions are only made after examination and under certain conditions. I do not mean to say that the two men, to whom reference has been made, are not efficient, but they have been promoted over the heads of men who have been far longer in the service, whose salaries remain comparatively stationary and who get no chance to compete for the higher grades. The Minister of the Interior thinks that that system promotes efficiency, but the experience of the civil servants themselves and the public is absolutely in the contrary direction.

Mr. KEMP. What are the duties of Mr. E. H. Wright and what is his salary?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Wright is the chief assistant commissioner of Dominion lands and his salary is $1,550.

Mr. FOSTER. When did he get that? $1,250 is what is down here for the last year and that with the annual increase would mean $1,300 now.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that he was made a first-class clerk in 1906.

Mr. KEMP. What was his salary in 1901?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say. He entered the service in June, 1893, and was made permanent in 1894.

Mr. KEMP. He advanced very rapidly. I think his salary was $600 in 1901. Has he special aptitude for the work?

Mr. OLIVER. The Commissioner of Dominion Lands is of course the most responsible official in the department and Mr. Wright is his chief assistant. Mr. Greenway, the commissioner, handles a large number of land matters and requires some four or five men to assist him. Mr. Wright is the chief of those assistants.

Mr. KEMP. He went ahead very rapidly.

Mr. OLIVER. I need not say to the House how very important is the work he does. It is not routine work in any sense, but work that requires the exercise of the very best judgment and decision, as well as thorough familiarity not only with the Land Act, but also with the actual operation of homesteading upon the land. It seem that in the stress of work Mr. Wright has been able to show that of Mr. Greenway's assistants he was the better man.

Mr. FOSTER. How does he show it?

Mr. OLIVER. By reason of his ability in arriving at correct decisions promptly, I presume.

Mr. FOSTER. You presume?

Mr. OLIVER. I say by reason of his arriving promptly at correct decisions to the satisfaction of the commissioner and the minister. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. Wright had been appointed in 1903.

Mr. KNOWLES. As a member who perhaps has as much to do with that branch as any other member, if not more, I wish to take exception to what the member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) says. I think that the salary should be more. In the first place after fifteen years' service $1,500 is not out of the way when expenses have increased so.

Mr. KEMP. I was not taking exception to the amount of the salary, I was inquiring to the reason for the rapid advance.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have a great deal of correspondence with that department as well as personal intercourse, and I find that Mr. Wright has a wonderful grasp of its affairs, he has an ability for doing his work with great accuracy and I would consider that the government secured his services very cheaply at $1,550.

Mr. MONK. The difficulty is that there appears to be no principle upon which these rapid advances are made, which does not tend to the efficiency of the service. It is absurd to suppose that men who have been long in the service are inefficient, as they must have been efficient when they entered, for they passed the examinations, and they have since added experience. The explanation is that those who have recently entered the service through political influence have their friends still alive and influential and able to secure their advancement.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend's suggestion is absolutely gratuitous. The explanations that have been given are absolutely correct. These men were promoted because of their efficiency in the service and that was the only reason, not because they had any political pull. Length of service in a department does not necessarily tend to efficiency any more than in a private business. It must be apparent to any one that the man who has had to fight the battle of life in the world at large, has to take his chance with competitors in all lines on entering the department, other things being equal, is more likely to be efficient than the man who knows nothing except what he has learned within the four walls of a department. The suggestion that a commission should regulate the advancement of these men is another means of arriving at the same result. Working in the interests of the public and for the efficiency of the service they would take the responsibility of picking out the efficient men and passing them to the head of the list. The only difference is that now the minister takes that responsibility and so far as these men are concerned I accept the fullest responsibility.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very pretty theory of the minister, but it does not hold in this case. I watched the whole process, how it resolved itself——

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman say that what I said is not true?

Mr. FOSTER. I am going to say what I think is true and we can compare the two. He says take a man in the vortex of life, thrown hither and thither, his muscles toughened mentally and otherwise and when you get such a man you must promote him quickly. Let us take these two paragons. Here is Mr. Wright. How much of a vortex had he been in before he entered the department and became old and moss-covered? He entered the department as messenger in 1893, he was a third-class clerk in 1901, a second class clerk in 1905, a first-class clerk in 1907 and is still going upward. The fine theory does not fit in with this particular case. Mr. Wright was the nominee and favourite of a minister, the late Hon. Mr. Sutherland had him made a messenger and during his life carefully shoved him upwards.

In the case of Mr. Roberts, Mr. Calvert carefully shoves him upwards. Who is the good genius behind Mr. Marchand?

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to have this question settled first. I did not suggest that there was no way of getting good service except by taking men from the outside. I said that, other things being equal, you were more likely to get capable and efficient men from the outside. I did not suggest that you could not get good men within the service. Mr. Wright is one who has acquired his experience within the department but yet has proven himself efficient. I do not understand the suggestion that Mr. Wright entered the service as a protégé of Mr. Sutherland, the minister. Mr. Sutherland was not a minister in 1893.

Mr. FOSTER. But he became a minister afterwards, he was a member of parliament. He had a great deal of influence.

Mr. OLIVER. Then he must have had a great deal of judgment in the selection of a messenger in this case at any rate. I think the argument of my hon. friend falls to the ground in the case of Mr. Wright.

Mr. FOSTER. And is entitled to promotion ?

Mr. OLIVER. That may be. The House has the evidence that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) that in the position which he occupies to-day—and I wish to say the same emphatically and from my own knowledge of the case—he is a thoroughly efficient employee.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not saying he is not.

Mr. OLIVER. The proposal placed before the House is thoroughly warranted in his case. Mr. Marchand is assistant accountant of the department. The accountancy is held by Mr. Beddoe. The branch, of course, is a large one. I need not say to the House that the question of accounting is a very important question. There are nineteen officials in the accounting branch. The Department of the Interior has business scattered all the way from Ottawa to Dawson city, and, in the proper conduct of that business, it has been found necessary, ever since I have been minister, to employ the services of the chief accountant, Mr. Beddoe, at distant points on several occasions. At the present time he is in Winnipeg, attending to the accounting in connection with the seed grain. It seems to me necessary to the service that there should be not only a chief accountant, but, when that chief accountant is necessarily absent, there should be some one to take his place—there should be an assistant or deputy——

Mr. FOSTER. And he should be a chief clerk ?

Mr. OLIVER. —and he should have rank and pay according to his abilities and responsibilities. I have stated that point before; it does no harm to emphasize it; if we are to have efficient service and to retain men who have proven themselves efficient, we must pay those men fair and reasonable salaries. It is on that principle that I ask for the promotion of Mr. Mar-chand to the rank and position and salary which I have asked.

Mr. MONK. For my part, I think that the observations of the minister about the 'vortex' and about the results of this 'vortex' and its qualifying effects upon the new appointees, is not taken seriously by anybody. For, the presumption is that those who have served faithfully for many years, are entitled to promotion and advancement rather than to have men taken out of the 'vortex' who have not had equal experience. Until we get a reform of the civil service, such as many people of this country have been looking for for many years—and we seem to be on the eve of it, if the government——

Mr. FIELDING. How long have the people been looking for that reform ?

Mr. MONK. For my part, I have combatted in favour of that reform since I have been a member of this House, and I have been a member as long as the Minister of Finance has.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I have not heard my hon. friend (Mr. Monk).

Mr. MONK. Not a single session has passed in which I have not pointed out the enormous difference between what is going on in this country and what goes on in every other civilized country of the world. As far back as ten years ago, I pointed out the improvements wrought in England and have named the books in which these improvements are clearly shown. I have shown the immense work, which, since 1882, has been going on in the same direction in the United States, while we have been steadily retrograding since twelve years. And a few days before the report of the commission was brought in, I used strong expressions in this House. I stated that our civil service at the present moment was rotten, worthless, and I hoped that the report which was then being worked out—and which, I fancy, was then a subject of some anxiety to the Minister of Finance—would give us relief. But this government, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, resemble the Pharaohs of Ancient Egypt. Under those kings, messengers who brought bad news were condemned to death, while those who brought good news were covered with flowers. Take this very instance ; when cases of this kind come up the minister blames those who criticise the estimates as though they were trying to prevent the promotion and advancement of the particular civil servant whose case was being considered. Nothing has been said by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that would imply that. I do not know that these particular men whose salaries are up for consideration are unfitted for promotion. But I say it is strange that, in every case, in the last twelve years, where anomalies of this kind have been pointed out, the answer of the minister has always been that the officer was promoted for efficiency—'How is that efficiency as compared with that of other men in the service ?'—'I am the judge of it ; I take the fullest responsibility for what it is proposed to do.' And that is all the satisfaction we get. I think that the only way to bring about this urgent and absolutely essential reform is to point out the conditions in every case until the government finds itself obliged to promote instead of retarding that very essential reform. This Mr. Pierre Marchand was appointed on 12th of December, 1899. He came in at $1,100. At the present moment, he is first-class clerk and assistant accountant at $1,600. I find in the civil service list two other first-class clerks appointed before Mr. Marchand. There are Mr. Peter Robertson, appointed on February 27, 1877; and Mr. Geo. Dalrymple Pope, appointed March 31, 1884. There are also second-class clerks: Mr. James Dunnet, appointed April 1, 1878 ; Mr. Samuel J. Willoughby, appointed January 12, 1886 ; and Mr. Henry Hamish Turner, appointed June 20, 1883. These are old civil servants. Are they inefficient as compared with the more recent appointees ? Does it not seem to the members of this committee that these men, if equally efficient, on account of priority of appointment ought to receive promotion, or ought to be given the chance which any properly organized civil service should give of obtaining promotion, rather than promote more recent appointees ? My hon. friend would lead the committee to believe that, taking a new man and advancing him rapidly over the heads of old employees—whom we must presume to be efficient and capable men—is a valuable method of insuring the efficiency of the service. I think we are approaching a period of reform. I regret very much to see the spirit in which the government has received the most valuable suggestions made under the most favourable circumstances for the government by the commissioners. I await with anxiety the measure which has been promised and in which I hope to find the valuable suggestions referred to carried out. But, until that point is reached I will take every opportunity of pointing out to the committee and of making known to the public what I consider to be the cause of the insufficiency, as I find it, in the civil service in the province of Quebec in order to hurry up that reform.

Mr. WARD. The minister is not altogether consistent in this matter for at one moment he pleads that the large number of employees in his department is some excuse why justice should not be done in all matters appertaining to these promotions. The next moment he pleads that it is owing to the efficiency of these particular clerks that they are promoted. I do not see what the enormous number of employees has to do with this question at all because the minister only has to consider seventeen men in attending to the promotion of these two clerks. You will find there are two of these first-class clerks who are already in receipt of a salary of $1,900, and there are two already in receipt of a salary of $1,850. It does seem rather hard that gentlemen receiving the lowest salary of first-class clerks should be promoted over those who have been so much longer in the service as to be entitled to larger salaries. Mr. Marchand is receiving $1,600 and Mr. Roberts is receiving $1,500. They are selected and placed above other clerks who are in receipt of larger salaries. These men of large experience are at the top of the tree, in so far as first-class clerks are concerned and can receive no more salary, while Mr. Roberts is given an immediate advance of $400 with the probability of next year receiving $2,300. It does seem to me that there is ground for the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto, and there must be some reason why this rapid advancement is taking place in the matter of these two promotions.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any other promotions? I see there are 26 second-class clerks, while last year there were 25. Who is the 26th?

Mr. OLIVER. This is to give promotion to the second class of Mr. A. R. Morrisset of the accountant's branch.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is he now?

Mr. OLIVER. He is a junior second-class clerk at $1,050.

Mr. FOSTER. When was he appointed, and at what salary?

Mr. OLIVER. He was appointed a temporary clerk in 1898 at $400.

Mr. MONK. Has he undergone the civil service examination?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. When was his first promotion?

Mr. OLIVER. He was appointed on the 1st of July, 1898, and he was appointed to the permanent staff on the 1st July, 1901. He is attached to the accountant's branch as a junior second-class clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. What was his salary in 1901?

Mr. OLIVER. $600.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary will he get as a second-class clerk?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,200. He was appointed on the 1st July, 1901, at $600 as a junior second-class clerk and in 1903 the salary of juniors was raised from $600 to $800.

Mr. FOSTER. We find in this case an exact parallel if not a little more than a parallel. In 1898 Mr. Morrisett was appointed a temporary clerk at $400; in 1901 he was appointed a permanent clerk at $600, and in 1903 there was an increase in his salary. He then got $1,050 and under this vote he will get $1,200. In less than ten years he has gone from $400 to $1,200. Here are four samples that we have unearthed by a little process of questioning, every one of these have been placed in office by the government at low salaries and have been rushed forward, two of them to be chief clerks and one to be a second-class clerk. The remarks made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) are altogether to the point in this respect.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister if Peter Robertson, George Dalrymple Pope, James Dunnet, Samuel J. Willoughby, Henry Hamish Turner, who are older employees than Mr. Marchand or Mr. Roberts are good and efficient employees? I do not know these men, but I would like to get that information from the minister. They have quite considerable salaries ranging from $1,300 to $1,600, and they occupy positions in the service as first and second-class clerks. Are they good and efficient men?

Mr. OLIVER. I will have to ask the deputy in regard to the qualifications of these men. It is impossible for me to have knowledge of the qualifications of all the members of the service. But while these men may be perfectly competent, trustworthy and reliable in every way in the positions which they occupy they still may not be competent to take part of the supervision of the transactions of the accountant's branch as we expect the assistant accountant to do. These gentlemen are being paid for work which they are able to do and do well, but that is no evidence that they are fit for a position of supervision.

Mr. MONK. It all goes to show that these promotions ought not to be in the hands of the minister but in the hands of a commission who would make promotions under certain changeable rules.

Mr. GEOFFRION. As it was before 1896.

Mr. MONK. That is a very small idea. There is no doubt this system has existed since confederation and like all rotten systems it has become aggravated year after year. I do not care what was done previously, this is a question of essential reform that ought to be carried out. The Minister of the Interior is not able to tell us whether older and efficient employees are fit for the position, and yet he says this is an excellent mode of carrying on the civil service.

Mr. OLIVER. I said I thought this was an efficient way of getting an efficient service, but I did not say there could not be a better mode. Even if we had a most conscientious Civil Service Commission there would sometimes be occasion for such appointments where men would get rapid promotion because of special efficiency and there would be the same grievance on the part of men who were longer in the service, who were doing the work they were at efficiently, but who were not specially qualified for the more important duties. I am aware of the propriety of the appointments we are asking the House to sanction, I admit I am not aware of how good other appointments might be.

Mr. MONK. That is frank but it shows this is the worst possible system that could prevail. The effect of that system is to keep out of the public service good men and to chase out of it some of the very best men in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the civil servants in the Interior Department been paid for the past month?

Mr. OLIVER. Sixty per cent of their salary was paid on the 16th.

Mr. MONK. What appears to be a little strange is that when the difficulty supervened which I regret had been caused by the government in regard to the voting of supplies, some method should not have been made to place in a distinct column separate from the rest of Supply, the necessary vote for the payment of civil servants. It is a great pity that is not done every year and it is a great pity it was not done this year when these grave difficulties at first appeared. For my part I think the civil servants should all be paid regularly and I would have raised no objection to that. The estimates have been made up in this form for years and I will admit for the benefit of my friend from Vercheres (Mr. Geoffrion) they were made up in that way before his party came to power, if he thinks that is any reason why we should check all progress. I regret very much that we are not in a position to vote the salaries of the civil servants as they should be voted, without difficulty, and I attribute that to the careless way in which the estimates are made up. When these difficulties first arose a division of the estimates should have been made so that the salaries of the civil servants would have been voted.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman is so zealous for these civil servants why has he been opposing this vote for the last half hour?

Mr. FOSTER. That remark is childish.

Mr. MONK. I am surprised at the Minister of Finance making such a statement.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Monk) professes zeal for the passage of the civil service estimates, but on the other hand he has been delaying them.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Finance in this age think he can induce people to believe that we are to pass estimates without the fair and reasonable questioning on them that we have had to-night?

Mr. FIELDING. The estimates have been held up all day.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is $190,000 being voted and we have spent 25 minutes asking proper questions, and the Minister of Finance rises in a temper to lecture us because we have dared in the face of his high mightiness to ask for information with reference to these inordinate galloping promotions. If the Minister of Finance takes that line he is most foolish.

Mr. FIELDING. I am responsible for what I said and not for what the hon. gentleman attributes to me. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier was indulging in sympathy for the civil servants who did not get their money, and I pointed out that the reason for that was because hon. gentleman opposite had been delaying these estimates, not for to-night, but for weeks and months.

Mr. FOSTER. And I have to state to the Minister of Finance that I pleaded with him and with his chief to take up these civil government estimates three weeks ago but he stuck up the Minister of Public Works before the civil servants and the opposition and voted hundreds of thousands of dollars for public works which are not necessary at the present time. That is what was done and that is what is on record on 'Hansard.' The minister has been playing to the gallery long enough. He is played out, perfectly played out. Small boys in debating societies play that sort of game ; the Minister of Finance ought to have wisdom enough not to play it.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall not undertake to speak of what took place between the leaders; I only speak of that which I know, and when the hon. gentleman says he offered to give the civil government estimates, I venture to say that the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. I venture to say that he is right, and 'Hansard' will prove it.

Mr. FIELDING. 'Hansard' will prove nothing except constant obstruction. If the hon. gentleman wants to give the civil service estimates, why does he not give them, instead of spending all day on a matter that has no bearing on the business of the House? The hon. gentleman must remember that the civil service is not confined to civil government at Ottawa but is scattered all over Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. And if the Prime Minister and his first lieutenant had shown ordinary political diligence, they would have had their large measures down before the sixth or seventh month of the session, and they would have had the estimates which they do not have now, from that very speeding of the business which they might well have done. The Minister of the Interior has all his civil government, now, including the Indian Department?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the business for to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Supply, with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. When are we going to have the Civil Service Bill explained?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give my hon. friend any definite statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it on account of the necessary absence of the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. FIELDING. The absence of the Minister of Agriculture is as necessary as that of many other hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. But he is a minister?

Mr. FIELDING. We are all members here, and we speak as members more than as ministers, and the absence of one member is not to be censured more than the absence of another.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 3, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I wish to present a motion calling for the cancellation of the resolution adopted the 20th of May last, by which the House adopted the fourth report of the committee appointed to supervise the official debates of the House. I beg to move:

That the resolution adopted by this House on the 20th of May last adopting the fourth report of the committee appointed to supervise the official debates of the House, be reconsidered and rescinded; that the said fourth report of the said committee be referred back to said committee with instructions to inquire into the necessity of and demand for said additional translator and the qualifications of said E. Charlier to act as such translator and to be appointed to such new position and to inquire also as to such additional measures as may be necessary to ensure the prompt and efficient translation of the official documents of this House.

I would have given notice to my hon. friend, the member of St. James division (Mr. Gervais) who is chairman of that committee, but he has not been in the House lately. In fact, I do not think he has been here since the adoption of the fourth report in question. Nevertheless, with the unanimous consent of the House, the motion may be disposed of now. I do not think there is any doubt, from what has transpired since that fourth report was adopted, that the report must be reconsidered. It was adopted under the erroneous impression that it involved no additional expense. I shall present the motion, if my right hon. friend consents, or leave it as a notice of motion.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I would prefer that it should stand as a notice. I can talk with my hon. friend during the day and perhaps fix a day for moving it.

Mr. MONK. As the matter has been some time in abeyance, it is urgent that the motion should be presented to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps. I shall see my hon. friend during the day.

RELEASE OF 'AGNES B. KUN.'

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). At the request of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I beg to lay on the table a copy of letter written by me to the city clerk of Sydney, N.S., with reference to the release of Agnes B. Kun.

QUESTIONS.

DREDGING CONTRACTS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD asked:

1. Does the Department of Railways and Canals let dredging contracts or pay for dredging on the basis of scow measurements?
2. Does the Department of Public Works let dredging contracts or pay for dredging on the basis of scow measurements?
3. If there is a difference in the policy of these two departments of the government in this respect, what is the reason for such difference?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The Department of Railways and Canals, cross section all dredging work; and do not let contracts on scow measurement.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). For the Department of Public Works, I have a statement from the chief engineer. He says:

There are two ways of measuring the quantity of material dredged, one being measurement in situ and the other, scow measurement.

It has always been the custom of the department to adopt the latter, as it is considered that with faithful inspectors in charge of the different works, the quantities returned are as near as practicable absolutely correct and therefore fair and just both to the department and to the contractor. Moreover, the insitu mode of measurement necessitates extensive and most accurate surveys before the beginning of the work, monthly during its execution and after its final completion, which accurate surveys of course, would entail such a large expenditure in the way of additional staff, as to be, in my opinion, prohibitive. In fact, the expenditure for surveying would, in some cases, be as great as the cost of the dredging itself.

Moreover, I am of opinion, that it is practically impossible to return accurately, by this way of measurement, the actual quantity of dredging performed, as the surface dredged would have to be entirely covered with soundings, say every five feet apart, in order to arrive, even then, at only an approximation.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the method adopted by the department is certainly the best, providing of course, that the inspectors be competent and thoroughly reliable.

Respectfully submitted,
EUGENE D. LAFLEUR,
Chief Engineer.

I should add that the dredging work in the two departments is entirely different. In the Railway Department it usually extends over but a narrow area, being mostly confined to canal work, while in the Public Works Department the area is very much larger, in connection with the dredging of harbours and rivers and the like.

BOAT HARBOUR AT TONEY RIVER, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. What was the amount of contract for the boat harbour at Toney River, Nova Scotia, who were the tenderers, what is the amount of each tender, and to whom was the contract awarded?
2. When was the work commenced, when was it completed, and what was the total amount paid under contract?
3. What extras, if any, did the contractor receive, for what were extras paid, and what were the several amounts paid as extras?
4. Since completion of work has any expenditure been made on the work? If so, when were the expenditures made, and what were the reasons for making each expenditure since completion of work under the contract?
5. What is the total amount to date paid since completion under contract?
6. Is any further repair or addition to be made to work in the current year? If so, what is the reason for such repair or addition, and what is the estimated cost of same?
7. Was any land purchased in connection with this work? If so, from whom and for what purposes?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. No contract; work was carried out by day's labour.
2. Commenced 12th March, 1906; completed 23rd October, 1907.
3. No contract, therefore no extras.
4. No expenditure made since completion of work.
5. Total cost of work, including purchase of land, $7,588.71.
6. Resident engineer has submitted a report regarding extension of channel protection works at mouth of river, estimated to cost $2,000. Matter under consideration.
7. Land purchased from Duncan Johnston for $474.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—MR. JAMES A. STEWART.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Is James A. Stewart still in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway? If so, in what capacity, what is his pay, and what his hours of labour?
2. Why was he employed, on whose recommendation, and what were his special qualifications for the work?
3. What so far has been the net result of his labours, and how long has he been employed?
4. Is it still considered necessary that Stewart be retained in his present employment?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. There is a James A. Stewart employed on the Intercolonial Railway as brakesman, at $1.75 per day.
2. As brakeman.
3. His services have been satisfactory to the railway. Employed since March, 1899.
4. Yes; as long as his services are satisfactory to the railway.

MILITARY CAMP AT GODERICH.

Mr. BRISTOL asked:

1. Is it the case that the camp for military district No. 1 is to be held at Goderich this summer? If so, what superiority does this camp possess over London?
2. Was the change made on the recommendation of the military authorities? If not, by whom?
3. Will the accommodation for target practice be sufficient to enable the troops assembled to complete their practice during the continuation of the camp? If not, what arrangements will be made to remedy this?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Yes. It has a much larger area and better facilities for manœuvring.

2. Yes.

3. There are four targets for long distance firing, and a sufficient number of minature targets will be installed.

BIC WHARF.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. How many pounds of iron bolts were purchased for the wharf at Bic, province of Quebec, from the month of August to the month of December, 1906?

2. How much was paid for that iron; and to whom were such amounts paid?

3. During the same time, from the month of August to the month of December, 1906, what quantity of lumber and of timber was used for the same wharf?

4. Who supplied that wood, what price was paid for it, and in what amounts?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1 and 2. From E. Lavoie :

24,980 lbs. at $2.50	$624 00
7,900 lbs. at $2.65.	209 35
	$833 35

From J. Santerre : 12 bolts, 24 inches long, the cost of these cannot be given separately, having been included with account for repairing tools, &c., the whole charged at $12.10.

3 and 4. From :

O. Ouellette, 15½ planks, 3 by 9 by 12, at 38 cents. .	$	5 89
L. Leveque, 100 planks, 3 by 9 by 12, at 38 cents.		38 00
A. Parent, 187 planks, at 36 cents.		67 32

J. Blais, 45 ft. birch logs at 14c.	6.30
		37 98
N. Durette, 2,380 ft. spruce fenders at 12 cents.	$285.60
N. Durette, 2,250 shingles at $1.50	3.38
		288 98
		$438 17

THE ROSS RIFLE—REPORT OF LIEUT. COL. GAUDET.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Did Major Gaudet, of Quebec, either as inspector of small arms or in any other capacity, ever make a report on the Ross rifle, which was not included in the returns laid on the table of the House of Commons in response to a motion for return of all reports, correspondence, &c., relating to the Ross rifle? If so, on what date was the report made, and what was the nature of the same?

2. If this report was not brought down, why was it not included in the returns?

3. Where is this report at present?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia) :

1. Yes ; the report is dated January 2, 1907, and is on tests on the Ross rifle.

2. The report was laid before the Militia Council by the Master-General of the ordnance, and subsequently it was referred to the Ross Rifle Company, who complained that they had not been notified that the tests were to be made, nor given an opportunity of being represented thereat. The company felt that this was unfair, and disputed the accuracy of the tests. It was considered that their view was sound. The report was, therefore, held in abeyance in order to give time for further tests which the company proposed to make, at which, it was stipulated, the department should be represented by Lieutenant-Colonel Gaudet or some other competent officer. The tests now being made at Quebec will probably determine the question at issue.

3. The report is on record in the Department of Militia and Defence as a confidential document.

CLAIM AGAINST NEW BRUNSWICK COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CROCKET asked :

Has the Railway Department any claim against the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company or against the government of New Brunswick on account of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, other than that specified by the Minister of Railways in his answer to Mr. Ganong's question on May 27? If so, what?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes. There is an unadjusted balance for car service, freight balances, ticket sale balances, car repairs, &c., amounting to $9,459.94.

SEMAPHORES AT INTERLOCKING PLANT NEAR LONDON.

Mr. ELSON asked :

1. Is the construction of the semaphores lately erected at the interlocking plant on the railways near the London asylum such as to compel the employees to climb up a high, narrow and dangerous ladder to light and care for lamps?

2. If not so constructed, can the lamps be lighted on the ground and pulled up to their places by a chain, the same as the Pipe semaphores?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1 and 2. The chief engineer of the Board of Railway Commissioners, states that the semaphores lately erected at the interlocking plant near the London asylum are equipped with iron ladders the full height of the semaphores, and the employees climb them to light the lamps. These ladders are high and narrow, but not dangerous. They are in common use in many places, and have received the approval of the board's chief engineer, he having tested them personally.

PURCHASERS OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. ELSON asked :

What are the names and post office addresses of the persons to whom $39,574.64 worth of twine, including $14.40 for a rope yarn, was shipped, as set out in first column of page M—33 of the Auditor General's Report for 1907?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The names of these persons, together with the names of persons to whom $10,855.78 worth of twine was shipped in 1905-6, which was paid for in 1906-7, appear on pages M—33, 34 and 35 of the Auditor General's Report. I should be happy to send to my hon. friend (Mr. Elson) a list of these names as appearing in the report, but I hope that my hon. friend will not desire the post office addresses of these purchasers. There are something over two hundred of them and the post office address of each appears on the files at the penitentiary in Kingston, also in the Auditor General's office here, but it is not published (as was the case formerly), because it was found that publishing the post office addresses of these individual purchasers prejudiced the interests of the penitentiary by reason of the access it gave to competitors of the industry to the purchasers of these consignments of binder twine.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATIES.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether or not all the correspondence with respect to the treaties between Great Britain and the United States has been brought down and is now being printed, or whether there are some additional documents to be brought down ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). No correspondence has been brought down, but it is ready. I should have had it to-day. It is an omission of mine, it will be ready to-morrow.

GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'MONTCALM.'

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) is not here, but the right hon. Prime Minister will take the request that the report of the investigation with regard to the accident to the 'Montcalm' should be laid on the table of the House. I notice that the report has been given and we have seen just the bare results of it in the paper.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—COMMISSION ISSUED TO INSPECTORS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would also like to know if the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has yet laid on the table of the House the commission issued to the inspectors that he is appointing along the Transcontinental Railway. I asked that one of the commissions be brought down so that we could see the general nature of the instructions.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I laid a copy of the commission to Mr. Pacaud, commissioner for Quebec, upon the table on the day following the inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the commissions are all the same?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes.

SUPPLY—WHARF AT PETIT ROCHER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) if he has yet completed the return that I asked for some time ago with reference to the wharf down at Petit Rocher. I moved for an order of the House which was passed asking for all the papers. A return was brought down up to 1905 and we had quite a discussion on it the other day. I asked the minister to complete the return, telling him that I had in my possession correspondence that took place since then and that I knew that there was more correspondence. I would like to ask the minister if he has yet complied with the order of the House. That was on 24th April, over a month ago and I have heard nothing further yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order of the House was completely and thoroughly complied with. The return was brought down just as it was called for. I stated to my hon. friend at the time that if he desired any further information he had only to make motion and ask a question and the information would be cheerfully given if there were any further information in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I stated at that time that when a minister makes a statement in his place in the House it ought to be in accordance with the facts, it ought to be as true as gospel, because the people of the country expect statements made by ministers to be absolutely correct. The statement made by the Minister of Public Works is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask if the hon. gentleman is in order in discussing the matter. I think not.

Mr. SPEAKER. No; the rule is that when a question has been answered the answer must be accepted without further discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will accept the hon. gentleman's statement and I will read the order of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. We are going into Supply and if the hon. gentleman desires to discuss the matter he may do so now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I propose to do it now.

An hon. MEMBER. Move the adjournment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will not move the adjournment; I have the right to discuss the proposition that the moon is made of green cheese if I see fit.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have ruled that the hon. gentleman is at liberty to go on if he desires to discuss the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker. This order was made on the 5th March last, and it is as follows :

Return to an address of the House of Commons, dated the 15th January, 1908, for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, contracts and tenders, with the names and amount of each, in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the construction of a breakwater at Petit Rocher, on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, as detailed on page 74 of the report of the Minister of Public Works, for the year ended March 31, 1907.

That was the motion and it was carried by the House. The return that has been brought down does not go beyond the year 1905. There is no correspondence given since 1905. The discussion that took place on the 24th April is as follows :

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he has yet completed the return in reference to Petit Rocher?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On making inquiry of my deputy, I find that the answer given contained exactly the information which was asked for, that is, matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That should be the report of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. TAYLOR (reading):

If my hon. friend desires further information and will be good enough to put another question, I shall be glad to give him the further information.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not a question at all but a motion for a return.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was for a return as to matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's Report, and that return has been made and is complete.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is the minister's reply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. And he puts the onus on his deputy. I am acquainted with his deputy, and I am satisfied that his deputy would not put in anybody's mouth a statement not in accord with the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. That statement must have come directly from the minister. Now what are the facts? Here is the motion I made for that return, and in that motion there is not a word making any reference at all to the Auditor General's Report. Yet the minister says that my motion had reference to matter contained in that report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read it?

Mr. TAYLOR. I read it before and the minister went away and came back and tried to bluff me the second time. I shall read it now and ask the hon. gentleman to make an apology:

Return to an address of the House of Commons, dated the 15th January, 1908, for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, contracts and tenders, with the names and amount of each, in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the construction of a breakwater at Petit Rocher, on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, as detailed on page 74 of the report of the Minister of Public Works, for the year ended 31st March, 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there anything in that about the Auditor General's Report? That refers to page 74 of the minister's own report. Yet he comes here and will not give me the answer but tells me something that is possibly untrue. Here is the report. What does it say?

"Petit Rocher is a farming, fishing and lumbering settlement on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, twelve miles north of Bathurst.

To afford protection to the fishing boats and vessels trading in Baie des Chaleurs, for which there is no natural shelter in the vicinity, and to facilitate the shipment of lumber, a contract was entered into May 31, 1904, with Simon McGregor, for the construction of a breakwater, consisting of a main work, 209 feet long on the outer face, and a wing or 'L,' placed at an angle of 74 degrees 30 minutes with the main part, 160 feet long on the outer face. The width on top will be 30 feet. At its inner end the breakwater will be 480 feet from the shore. The depth along the inner face varies from 11 to 18½ feet at low water.

In 1904-5, a right of way, 860 feet long, from the public road to the shore was opened up, graded and fenced.

The contract work was begun on March 18, 1905, and by the end of 1904-5 two cribs, 96½ and 41 feet long respectively, had been built and sunk in place.

A crib to form the remainder of the work was started on February 19, 1906, but on March 11, when it had reached a height of about six tiers, it was carried away by the ice. It was, however, recovered on May 14. The outer section, which was intended to complete the main part of the breakwater was found to be intact and work on it was resumed. By the end of the fiscal year this crib had been built to a height of nineteen tiers and the two cribs sunk in 1905 had been filled with ballast and built up to half tide level, and the upper ballast floors were laid.

During the fiscal year 1906-7, the crib forming the remainder of the main work was sunk in place and a crib to complete the 'L' was begun and placed in position. The building of the superstructure was continued on the main part up to about high water level, when two storms, on November 12 and 16 carried away nearly the whole top, the break being about 9 feet in extreme depth.

Work was resumed on March 7, and by the close of the fiscal year the remains of three damaged tiers of face timbers had been removed, and a part of the wrecked superstructure near the southern end rebuilt, the interior being filled with ballast.

The expenditure for the fiscal year 1906-7 was $5,029.60."

Here in his own report he shows that work was going on up to 1907, and the last correspondence brought down in the return moved for was in 1905; and the minister tells me again to-day that he has complied with the order of the House asking for correspondence up to 1907, including contracts, tenders and everything else. Now I have from the department a notice that they issued calling for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the date of the notice?

Mr. TAYLOR. June 14, 1907, I will read the whole document for the minister:

Sealed tenders addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed 'Tenders for Petit Rocher Breakwater Extension,' will be received at this office until Monday, July 15, 1907, inclusively, for the construction of an extension from the Breakwater to the shore at Petit Rocher, Gloucester County, N.B., according to a plan and specification to be seen at the offices of E. T. P. Shewen, Esq., Resident Engineer, St. John, N.B., Geoffrey Stead, Esq., Resident Engineer, Chatham, N.B., on application to the Postmaster at Petit Rocher, N.B., and at the Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed form supplied, and signed with the actual signatures of tenderers.

An accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500.00) must accompany each tender. The cheque will be forfeited if the party tendering decline the contract or fail to complete the work contracted for, and will be returned in case of non-acceptance of tender.

The department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
FRED. GELINAS,
Secretary.

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, June 14, 1907.

Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the department will not be paid for it.

Now that will prove to the minister that there has been correspondence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will you allow me to see the notice?

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no notice. Several tenders were received, and I have in my hand other correspondence from the department, which I will not read at present until I see whether the minister will comply with the order of this House. But I have here a letter from the department, proving completely that there was correspondence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To whom was the letter addressed?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will not tell the minister. I want him to obey the order of the House. When he gets up and tells the House that there is no further correspondence, I tell him that there is, and I know whereof I am speaking, because I have the correspondence in my hand. I have given the minister enough to convince him now that there has been correspondence, because there was an advertisement for tenders and tenders came in. I know of tenders coming in, and I know of correspondence going on in the department. Now surely the minister will make an apology for all he has said. I have read his report showing that there was an accident, that the wharf was carried away, that the work was going on, and an expenditure was made of $5,029 for the fiscal year of 1906-7. Surely this work has not been going on without some correspondence, and the correspondence is brought down up to the crucial point; July 12, 1905, is the date of the last document brought down, although the order of the House asks for everything up to the 31st of March last. Now I want the file completed, I think it is high time. I have given him lots of time from the 24th of April, I have brought the facts all before him, I have made my statement, and I ask the Prime Minister to see that his Minister of Public Works obeys the order of the House. I have always understood, when an order of the House was passed, it had to be complied with, no matter what department or what minister is affected. I have proved conclusively now to the Prime Minister that an order of the House was passed calling for all the papers, and the papers come down up to the time when it is discovered that there is a nigger in the fence, and then they are cut off.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You mean a nigger in the wharf, this is not a fence.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend is acquainted with the nigger in the fence, he knows what it means, he knows there is a job behind this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have correspondence in my pocket which proves it. Now I want the minister to obey the order of the House and complete this file up to the 31st of March, so that I may see what has taken place. I know there was a second tender called for, for I have given the minister the notice, and I want him to say when I may expect the order of the House to be obeyed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not fully persuaded by the remarks of my hon. friend that the order of the House has not been obeyed, in fact my deputy informs me that it has been completely obeyed. I am rather inclined to think my hon. friend is more anxious to find fault with me than he is to get information, because a month or so ago I told the hon. gentleman if he would be good enough to tell me what further information he desired I would be only too happy to bring it down. I want to say further, that coming here new to the House and new to the department I am only too anxious to receive any information in regard to any departmental matters which might require attention. If there has been any job in connection with this breakwater I have no knowledge of it, and if the hon. gentleman has any information to give I shall only be too happy to look into it with the utmost care. I repeat that if my hon. friend will tell me what further he desires I shall bring all that information down without a formal order.

Mr. TAYLOR. The order of the House calls for it, and I want the minister to comply with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order of the House has been complied with. The order of the House asked for papers connected with matters which were detailed upon page 74 of the report of the Public Works Department. I saw my deputy and told him what the hon. member had said on a former occasion, and my deputy assured me that everything which was called for by the order had been furnished. There is no doubt tenders were called for in 1907, but that would be for additional work which is not referred to, so I am told, on page 74 of the report. There is no necessity for introducing any technicalities about it; without questioning whether my hon. friend is right or whether I am right, I say I will have any further information in the department brought down so as to carry the matter forward to the latest possible date.

Mr. SPROULE. When a member of this House asks for certain correspondence or for tenders, that member is not supposed to know what the correspondence is or what tenders there may be, and so he asks for all that is in possession of a department of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This motion was limited to a certain date and to what was detailed on page 74 of the Public Works report.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister is not justified in saying that because a member does not specify exactly what he wants the order is complied with when only certain correspondence is brought down. How can a member know what is in the possession of the department; he expects the minister and the deputy to attend to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the order of the House were to bring down all papers connected with a certain work to the 30th June, 1906, would the hon. member expect the papers to be brought down to the 30th June, 1907?

Mr. SPROULE. This order calls for everything in connection with the construction of a breakwater at Petit Rocher as detailed in page 74 of the report of the Minister of Public Works for the year ending the 31st March, 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would not take in the work done up to June, 1907.

Mr. TAYLOR. It would; the report refers to it.

Mr. SPROULE. It asks for everything in connection with the breakwater.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As detailed on page 74 of the report, and that would not take in the new work.

Mr. SPROULE. The work was under construction and correspondence must have been going on all the time. A substantial compliance with that order would be the bringing down of all correspondence up to the date of the order. I will read what is said at page 74 of the report of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him to say that upon the intimation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) that he desires further information I will cheerfully bring down everything right up to the date of the order. That ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. But the minister has said that he brought everything down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said I had brought down everything in reference to what was detailed upon page 74 of the Public Works report which the order of the House was limited to. Now, I say that at the desire of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) I will give direction to place on the table of the House everything right down to the date of the order.

Mr. SPROULE. Less than that would not be a substantial compliance with the order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will do it.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister should not shield himself behind his deputy and say that he has literally complied with the order when it has not been complied with in fact.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is nothing to keep back I can assure you.

LETTERS DELAYED IN TRANSMISSION.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). On Sunday night or Monday morning of last week an accident occurred by the derailing and immersion in a lake of a mail car near Kenora, and on the Wednesday following I asked the Postmaster General if he had any information about it and he replied that he had not. Since then the Postmaster General has been good enough to inform me that the information had reached the department on the 1st of June, that a portion of the mails had been rescued and had been spread out and dried and forwarded to their destination with a note stating what happened to them. The fact remains that a portion of those mails may not yet have been delivered, and I was expecting letters myself about that date. I have since received two letters. One of them was inclosed in a wrapper from the Ottawa post office stating that it had been received in a damaged condition, at Ottawa, Ontario. That is all the information I got to account for the damaged condition in which this letter, which was posted on the 23rd of May at the town of Moosomin, reached me. The other letter had a note across it stating that it was damaged by water owing to a railway accident near Kenora, Ontario. Of course, I realize that that is practically all that the Post Office Department could do at the moment; but it would be much more satisfactory to me if I had known at the time the accident happened that the mails coming from the Northwest had been delayed in consequence of an accident. It would have been still more satisfactory if I were aware that the persons in the Northwest who had addressed letters to me knew that an accident had happened to the mail car on which their letters had been conveyed. Last year I saw a very brief item in a paper stating that a mail car had been destroyed by fire in the Northwest several days before, and I had no idea whether some important letter of mine might not have been in that mail car and had not reached its destination. It seems to me that when accidents of this kind happen, the proper course would be for notices to be sent to all the post offices from which bags had been sent by the destroyed mail car, so that people sending important communications would have the earliest possible notice if their communications had been destroyed or damaged or delayed in transit. It must be evident to everybody that accidents of this kind may be fraught with very serious consequences to private individuals using the mails. A good many years ago I suffered a great deal of inconvenience from the fact that a letter disappeared, and I could only guess that it must have been destroyed with a mail car that had been burned, as some time later I heard had been the case. When such a thing happens I think the Postmaster General should give notice to the post office from which letters conveyed on the mail car were despatched, stating that it had been burned.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I am glad that my hon. friend has called my attention once again to this accident which occurred on the Canadian Pacific Railway a few days ago. Since I wrote to my hon. friend giving him the particulars which had reached me after the accident, I think further details have reached the department, which I shall be glad to communicate to him. I quite understand that it is very annoying to have letters lost or damaged; but after all an accident is an accident. I take note, however, of the advice which the hon. gentleman gives as to what should be done. As a matter of fact, I think that it is done—that as soon as an accident takes place, notice is sent to the different offices affected; but my hon. friend will understand that when a fire destroys a mail car, with the mail bags, the result is a considerable state of confusion in the department. However, the advice given by the hon. gentleman is very reasonable, and I will see what is being done in these cases.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the notices which are sent to the post offices posted up, or are they merely sent for the information of the postmaster?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The duty of the postmaster is to post the notice in his office.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any instruction to postmasters to that effect?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the postmaster instructed to notify all parties sending registered letters for instance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the case of registered letters it is easier to reach the parties sending them, because their names have been entered in a book ; but in the case of ordinary letters it is very difficult to reach the correspondents, but immediately after the accident the department notifies each postmaster affected, and it is his duty to post the notice up in the post office.

Mr. LAKE. I have never seen such a notice.

Mr. SPROULE. When a postmaster is notified that a mail from his office has been destroyed, is there any instruction to him to notify all parties who sent registered letters by that mail ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Those who have sent registered letters have the receipts in thier hands and they will know whether the parties to whom the letters were addressed received them or not, and they can themselves make complaint to the post office if they have a complaint to make. I am not aware whether or not instructions are given to the postmasters to notify the parties who sent registered letters ; but I will inquire as to that.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—INVESTIGATION BY MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the motion passes I would like to bring to the attention of the government two matters that are more or less connected with the report of the Civil Service Commission. The first thing that I desire to do is to ask information from the government as to when it is likely that Mr. Justice Cassels will resume his inquiry. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will recollect that the report of the Civil Service Commission was placed in the hands of the government on the 17th March last, nearly three months ago, and that it was presented to the House on the 26th March, after inquiry had first been made of the commission for certain memoranda which were referred to in the report, but which did not accompany it in the first instance. On the 26th March the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) announced the determination of the government that a searching inquiry should be prosecuted with respect to the allegations of the commissioners in regard to his department. Later, on the 6th day of April, Mr. Justice Cassels announced to the Prime Minister in a letter that if he undertook the work of this commission he could only do so upon the understanding that his judicial duties should occupy his attention in the first instance and that he should give only such time to the work of the commission as would remain after he had properly discharged his judicial functions. Mr. Justice Cassels, in the same letter, made suggestions as to the appointment of some person as his deputy to perform his duties as judge during the time in which he was engaged in the work of this commission. No action however was taken by the government, although a Bill had been placed on the Order Paper early in March and upon that Bill being presented to this House on the 14th May it was passed immediately with very little discussion and with some slight amendments and has gone from this House to the Senate. I do not know what its fortune has been in the Senate, nor do I know whether it is in a position to receive the assent of the Governor General. At all events it left this House on the same day that its second reading was brought on ; that is to say, on the 14th day of May last. Now, the allegations of the commissioners with respect to the Department of Marine and Fisheries were of a sufficiently serious character to evoke from the government, on the 26th day of March last, the statement that an immediate and effective inquiry would be made. Nearly three months have elapsed and nothing has been done except the examination of two of the commissioners before Mr. Justice Cassels, and possibly the examination of one or two other persons. It seems to me that this is a matter of some urgency. The opposition in parliament would be justified, without taking a very extreme position at all, in insisting that the work of that commission should be prosecuted to a conclusion and its report presented to parliament before the conclusion of this session and before any further supplies should be granted to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I think that would be a perfectly proper and constitutional position for the opposition to take. We have not announced any such determination up to the present time, but I think it is only fair and right for me to say to the Prime Minister that this is a matter of urgency, that the government themselves have recognized it as a matter of great urgency and that the very slight progress which has been made in the prosecution of the inquiry does not reflect credit upon the administration of the government, nor does it indicate any great desire on the part of the government to facilitate these proceedings. That is all I have to say as to that particular subject. It might be elaborated at much greater length, but I think the Prime Minister will understand thoroughly, from the few words I have spoken, my view with regard to the matter.

There is one other subject in connection with the report of the commission to which I also desire to call attention. Two of the commissioners were examined—Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin—and I believe that very little was elicited from them beyond the statement that they stood by the report and that they did not consider themselves subject to cross-examination with respect to the grounds upon which they had made that report. They took, in effect, the position that all the information which they had obtained was available to the commissioner himself, that it could be procured by him and that it was not very consonant with the position which they had occupied as members of a royal commission that they should be cross-examined before another commissioner as to the grounds upon which they had reached their conclusions. But there was one officer, not a member of that commission, but an officer of parliament, who might very well have been called and called at the earliest possible stage before Mr. Justice Cassels, and I am at a loss to know why it was that the counsel acting for the government in this inquiry failed to have their attention directed to the necessity of calling Mr. Fraser, the Auditor General. As an example of the service that he might have been able to give in the prosecution of the inquiry, let me call the attention of the government to the evidence which Mr. Fraser has already given before the royal commission upon the subject of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The evidence which I shall quote is at page 1309 of the evidence reported to parliament and printed :

Q. The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries was here last Friday and he told us, among other things, that he had arranged with you about the system of certificates in use by the department. Is the system of certificates now satisfactory?—A. Not any more so than it was before.

Q. The certificates are either 'according to contract' or 'according to agreement,' or 'prices fair and just'?—A. Yes.

Q. And in regard to the Marine and Fisheries Department how far are they still satisfactory?—A. Well, they are just about as unsatisfactory as they were last year, or two years ago. I mean we have to be continually taking up accounts and going back of the certificate. The certificates they are giving us are not reliable—I mean they may be good, and they may not. There is a case now down on the ship channel where they have a lot of men employed by the day, and they also board these men on the vessels.

If there are any officers in the service of the government, whether in the Department of Marine and Fisheries or in any other department, whose certificate is not regarded as reliable by the Auditor General, I think it is very important that the circumstances should be inquired into. We have an inquiry proceeding with regard to one department, and one department only, in respect to which the Auditor General has stated upon his oath that the certificates which are given are not reliable. Then the witness is taken in hand by Mr. Fyshe and the evidence is resumed at page 1310:

Q. You told us about that before?—A. Well, we find it very difficult to check that and see whether the men that are employed by the day are the men whose board is paid for in the boarding house. The captain, or the man in charge of the work there, gets 75 cents per day for boarding them.

We asked them, for instance, to make out the two lists, that is the pay-list and the board list in the same order so that we could see that the names would correspond, because there are a great many men, particularly down in that section of the country, who bear the same name. There is a recurrence of the same name frequently; it may be all right.

Q. But you cannot tell?—A. We cannot tell.

Q. Do they not sign for it or give a receipt?—A. The men give receipts for their own pay, but the man who has boarded them gives a general receipt for the board of the whole list. We are trying to get the original books from him, to see whether he kept some record, a daily record, but we cannot get that. He says: 'Well, I did not keep it.' Of course you get the certificate from the man that these men were boarded there.

Q. But that is all you get?—A. Yes, but I want something back of that. That is why I say the certificates are unsatisfactory. I say a man ought to be able to back up his certificate with some other evidence.

Q. Instead of having proper vouchers you have only a bulk certificate?—A. Yes, the man receiving the money is practically certifying that his own account is correct.

Q. In fact that is not a proper receipt at all?—A. No, it is not.

By the Chairman:

Q. Are there any other cases in which the certificates are unsatisfactory?—A. Well, I put it generally this way, that when you find a man makes a certificate in one instance that turns out to be wrong I have no confidence in his certificate afterwards.

By Mr. Fyshe:

Q. If he does the wrong thing once you cannot take his certificate again?—A. I have these certificates presented to me time after time. I mean certificates that are no guarantee the account is correct. It is unsatisfactory in that way.

Q. Have you had any correspondence with the Deputy Minister pointing out what you want?—A. Yes, I haven't any doubt that in the last year's accounts we had correspondence asking for further corroboration of the accounts. Take, for instance, the matter of travelling expenses—take an officer of the department, where I thought his travelling expenses account was too heavy and where he had to admit it and make a refund.

Q. He made a refund?—A. Yes, of course he said that his accounts got mixed up, that was the only excuse he gave, but the man's certificate is of no value to me ever since.

Q. Of course not?—A. And he is travelling still, and furnishing accounts, they may be right or they may be wrong.

I do not wish to add anything to what Mr. Fraser has said in his evidence, except that it is exactly the point that we had raised in respect of the investigation concerning the 'Arctic' expedition. In that case there were certificates as to quantities and as to prices. It was urged by the Conservative members of that committee that we should go behind and investigate the correctness of these certificates and that the committee should hear evidence of persons who had made an examination of the stock remaining in the vessel after the expedition. The certificates were, so far as I recollect, considered to be prima facie evidence at least of the amount on board and there was not much investigation of the actual accuracy of the certificate. It is true that some persons were called who testified that certificates were given and they were all right so far as they knew, but I am making the same point that the Auditor General makes in his evidence that there as well as in the every day business of the government, the certificate is not good unless the officer certifying actually knows that the goods were supplied, that the prices are fair and that the expenditure is therefore a reasonable one.

There is another matter which concerns, but not so closely, the report of this royal commission. I shall not again refer to the parts of the report in which the commissioners point out that some better system should be devised with respect to the statistics of the country. It is pointed out in this report that the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Customs both prepare blue-books containing reports of the trade and commerce of the country, and other important statistics. It is suggested by the commission that this work should be done in a more thorough and uniform way and they make several suggestions. Among other things they suggest that the publication might be supervised by the joint committee of parliament entrusted with the printing of parliamentary documents.

Certain correspondence has been forwarded to me by the government of British Columbia. I shall not quote it in full but shall merely state its purport. On April 2, 1908, the assistant secretary of the Bureau of Provincial Information of British Columbia asked the Department of Customs for a statement of the total exports and imports of British Columbia for the last fiscal year. The details were asked for if it was possible to give them, but the totals were asked for in the meantime. No answer having being received, on April 27, more than three weeks afterwards, a telegram was sent to the Department of Customs to which, on the same day, a reply was received from the Department of Customs stating that the letter of April 2 could not be found and asking that a duplicate should be sent. A reply to that telegram was forwarded on the same day from the office of the secretary of the Bureau of Provincial Information of British Columbia repeating the request for the total of the imports and exports of British Columbia for the last fiscal year. On April 28, the Department of Customs telegraphed to the provincial secretary of British Columbia that the report had been mailed on the 21st of April and the letter of the 21st of April, which arrived shortly afterwards, contained the information as to the exports and imports of that province during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908. That letter was acknowledged on April 28, and a further request was made for the details of these statements, it being alleged by the secretary of the Bureau of Provincial Information of British Columbia that people were constantly asking for the quantities and values of imports and exports of different classes of goods. On May 7, that letter was acknowledged by the Department of Customs and it was stated that some time must elapse before the figures would be available, but that a note had been made of the matter and the department would endeavour to comply with the request at the earliest possible date. On May 14, a letter was written by the Commissioner of Customs to the assistant secretary of the Bureau of Information. The letter is as follows :

Ottawa, May 14, 1908.

Frank I. Clarke, Esq.,
Assistant Secretary Bureau of Provincial Information, Victoria, British Columbia.

Sir,—On the 7th instant I wrote you in reply to yours of the 28th ultimo, in which you ask for a detailed statement of the imports and exports of British Columbia for the fiscal year 1908, as follows:

'I beg to inform you that some time must elapse before these figures will be available, but a note has been made of the matter and I will endeavour to comply with your request at the earliest possible date.'

Upon looking further into the matter and consulting the chief clerk in charge of statistics, I am advised that the preparation of such a statement would entail a great amount of labour and consume considerable time in its preparation, necessitating the withdrawal of clerks from their regular duties while so engaged, and as the staff is fully engaged in the preparation of the annual report and other parliamentary papers, it is impossible to prepare such a statement unless by assigning the work to special officers to be done after regular office hours, for which they would expect to be compensated.

In the circumstances, I am writing to state that if you are willing to compensate these men while so engaged in overtime work, the statement will be got ready as soon as possible. I estimate the cost will be about seventy-five dollars.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

To this on May 21, 1908, the following reply was transmitted :

John McDougald, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 14th instant, and I am authorized by the hon. Minister of Finance to request you to furnish a detailed statement of the imports and exports of British Columbia for the fiscal year of 1908, on the terms which you name, that is an expenditure of $75.

It is regrettable that the statistics are not so compiled as to permit of the exports and imports of the various provinces to be got at without a large amount of extra work.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

FRANK I. CLARKE,

Assistant Secretary.

I am not disposed to minimize the difficulties in the preparation of these statistics directly after the close of the fiscal year, but it does seem a matter of regret if information of that kind cannot be furnished to the government of a province who asked for this reasonable public information, without imposing upon them a certain charge for furnishing it. I dare say the same system has been carried out in the past, indeed I am disposed to believe the Minister of Customs has made some improvements in the preparation of statistics, but it is an unfortunate condition of affairs that figures of that kind should not be available at the very earliest possible moment; and without desiring in any way to unduly criticise the record of the government in this respect I would submit to the Prime Minister that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce should undertake a reorganization of this statistical branch at the very earliest possible moment so that not only for the provincial governments but for all the citizens of the country who may desire reasonable information of that kind such reasonable information would be forthcoming without the necessity of imposing a tax or charge upon either the provincial government or any person or corporation who may desire information of that character with regard to an important public subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With regard to the latter part of the information sought by my hon. friend, I have only to say that it is a purely departmental matter as to which I am sure the Minister of Customs, as soon as he is in his seat, will be able to give some answer to my hon. friend. I am sorry to say that personally I could not say anything at present upon this point.

With regard to the other matter, that is to say the inquiry of my hon. friend as to the investigation of the Civil Service, my hon. friend is aware that Mr. Justice Cassels has adjourned his inquest, I think to a certain date in the present month.

Mr. FOSTER. To a certain date?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, without any date. At all events he is coming back to Ottawa during the present month, and I daresay will be prepared to resume the investigation directly on his return, provided, as he has stated, that some one else is appointed by the government to take charge of his general judicial work. A Bill has been passed to that effect some time ago. That Bill is now before the Senate, and I do not know in what condition it is at the present time, but it will be ready for the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General as soon as we call upon His Excellency to sanction a Bill of Supply which we hope to be ready to present to His Excellency early in the coming week. At that time if the Bill which has passed this House receives the sanction of His Excellency, as it will, I have no doubt, the government will be prepared to make the appointment provided for in that Bill.

PRINTING OF TRADE RETURNS.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). There seems to me to be an expensive and unnecessary reduplication of publications with reference to the trade and other statistics. There is also a lack of agreement between the publications as they are issued by the different departments. The Trade and Navigation reports are issued by the Minister of Customs and the Trade and Commerce reports by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Any person taking these up and arranging a series of comparative statements or reports from one of them finds when he refers to the other that for the very same year and the very same period there is a disagreement in the total figures, and in order to be accurate and save himself he has to state from which of these returns he takes the figures so that he may not be confronted with a statement for the same year which he cannot substantiate from the report he has used. Besides that there is a complete reduplication of matter in the Trade and Navigation report and the Trade and Commerce report in certain particulars. Both of these are very bulky and costly volumes, and I do not see why it is necessary to have a reduplication of the very same information in these two large volumes issued by different departments of the same government and simply issued by different departments. The Trade and Commerce Department issues a series of monthly reports. They call them bulletins. They are large reports, they are costly, but the trouble about them is that when you receive them they are two, three or four months late. To whom are they distributed? They may come to the members of parliament but they are practically of no use to them, the member of parliament may occasionally use some figures from them if he is preparing speeches, but a member of parliament depends upon the yearly reports. It is with yearly statements that he is particularly engaged. Then where do these go? It is supposed they are distributed to boards of trade and merchants, &c., but there again the trouble is they are two or three or four months behind the time, and the information they give is, I think, of very little practical benefit, at least I have talked with people who get them who say that. Now, these cost a lot of money. Again you have the abstract which is now issued. Your census report is made up and is distributed in complete form and also in bulletin form. These figures come to the members of parliament, to the men who make a study of statistics and to all those who propose to use them. Then again there is the statistical abstract, the Year-book of Canada as it is called. The statistical abstract for the last two years has been very largely an extension of the figures that have been published in the census report. It is, I was going to say, absolutely useless for the purpose for which a Year-book is compiled. Any man who wishes to study these figures gets them in the reports of the Census Department and then he takes up the Year-book thinking he is going to get fresh information but finds that a large portion of it is available in other forms. A very large proportion is taken up with a reduplication of the census returns. Another very large part is taken up with holus bolus transfers from the Trade and Navigation Report or from the Trade and Commerce Report and the figures of Trade and Commerce in their different forms. You get absolutely nothing that you do not get in the Trade and Commerce Report, and you get it not in its full form but in a necessarily imperfect form. Then you get certain statistics with reference to some of the other departments which are culled from their reports. A condensation of some of these may be useful but my contention is that in the first place there is a large amount of statistical work done by different departments, each doing it separately, and that there is a useless and expensive duplication. It seems to me to be perfectly useless to publish a Year-book which is merely a duplication of parliamentary reports which have already appeared. Your Year-book does not give anything fresh because it is a year or a year and a half behind the times. The Year-book ought to be fresh and up to date, which I am sorry to say the present Year-book is not. The kind of statistics we want we don't get, and the kind we do not want we get measured up in two or three different forms. It would be a good thing for the government to appoint a commission of three or four competent people who are in the departments and let them look up the whole question of statistical reports so as to provide that there shall be no duplication, and if possible that they shall be brought up to date. When we compare our statistics with those issued in the United States the disparity in usefulness and efficiency is very apparent.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). Sometimes I send these monthly reports of the Department of Customs back to the distribution office as I find them of no practical value. The last report for March, the end of the fiscal year, was placed in my desk yesterday and as that report gives a return for the full twelve months of the year I found it quite useful and a moment ago I forwarded it to a manufacturer in my county who I knew would be interested in it. But I would not trouble him by sending him the reports of the previous months because they would not give him an opportunity of ascertaining how the trade of the country was. I have often been confused myself with the superabundance of statistics we have. The report of the Trade and Commerce Department and the Trade and Navigation returns vary very greatly and are very confusing. I understand that the report of the Trade and Commerce Department gives the entire imports regardless of whether they are for home consumption or not, while the Trade and Navigation returns classify the imports. I do not think the members of this House would be one whit worse off if the entire reports of the Trade and Commerce Department were ignored for it is only a useless expense to print and duplicate the information they contain. I rarely find any good use for the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce although I am very fond of studying the Trade and Navigation returns in which I generally get all the information I want. I regret that the Minister of Customs is not in his place to-day—I am not finding any fault with that because I was absent myself last week, and I presume he is absent to-day for the same reason—but had he been here I would point out to him that the monthly reports of his department would be very much more useful if they included another column giving the amount of duties paid under the general tariff, the preferential tariff, and the surtax. I do not think it would add to the trouble or expense if that information were supplied, and I would ask the minister were he here to direct his officers to set out in these reports what duties had been collected. More especially would I like to see that information in the last monthly report for the fiscal year, for then it would answer all the purposes of the complete volume of the Trade and Navigation returns which will not be published for perhaps six months after the end of the fiscal year. This would enable the members of the House during recess to study these matters so as to be able to intelligently discuss them when parliament meets again. With regard to the Year-book.

Mr. TAYLOR. It's no good.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be useful to some, but when I get it, it is too old to be of any use to me, and hence I probably do not refer to it once a year. Frequently it may be used to compare one year with another, but generally speaking I have found it very useless.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Trade and Commerce might repudiate it as he did two or three years ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has practically nothing or very little to do, and if we were to deprive him of the publication of that volume, his department might be rendered almost useless, and there would then be no justification for paying him a salary of $7,000 a year and keeping a highly paid deputy minister.

Mr. KEMP. The question of the duplication of statistical reports is one which I have referred to on a previous occasion, and like the hon. member for Halton, I am sorry that the Minister of Customs is not here to-day. If the reports of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Trade and Navigation returns were intelligently consolidated, they would be very much more useful to the members of the House and to the public than they are at present. I cannot understand why it is necessary to go to the expense of issuing two reports so nearly alike. Besides these reports, there is the Statistical Year-book. This book, in its present form, is less useful than it formerly was. There has been omitted from it seventy-two important subjects which appeared in the former Year-book, and in order to get this information one has to go over the reports of various departments of the government and to search the books, periodicals and governmental reports published in foreign countries. I suppose that the object in reducing the size of the Year-book of Canada was to have members and the public refer to the reports of the various departments of the government; but as a matter of fact that is not practicable. People will not look through such voluminous reports. Most people want information in more convenient form. It seems to me that we have gone a little further than is necessary in the way of governmental publications. The whole question should be reviewed, by a commission or otherwise, and the reports made of more practical service than they are at present. In the Statistical Abstract of the United States there are very many subjects which are not to be found in the Year-book of Canada, but which were previously contained in it. I had a return brought down showing the various matters which are omitted from the present Year-book. Some of these are very important, such as imports and exports and duties per head of the population, imports and exports of foreign goods via Canada, imports and exports of foreign goods via the United States, imports and exports of foreign countries, drawbacks allowed, aggregate trade of the Dominion, average value of imports in three year periods, public debts of foreign countries, provincial debts, &c. I think it would be well for the government to consider whether these subjects should not again be included in the Year-book, and whether the statistics of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Trade and Navigation Returns cannot be consolidated.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been in the habit for many years of sending copies of the Dominion Year-book to Public school teachers and to men in commercial life, who found that it contained valuable information. But since the change has taken place I have been reminded by several that the book has become practically worthless. This book was originally compiled by Mr. George Johnston, who was the best statistician we ever had here; but objection was taken that the book was too large, that it dealt with too many subjects, and some gentlemen were of opinion that Mr. Johnston should be supplanted, and that the book should be compiled by some one else on narrower lines. The government heeded these representations and made a change, and with what result? That the book has become almost useless. I agree entirely with what the hon. member for East Toronto has said. The book was formerly a valuable compilation of statistics, and it might be so again if it were properly compiled.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It was my intention to have taken up a matter relating to the Customs Department, but the Minister of Customs is not in his place. I sent him notice yesterday of my intention to take that matter up. Apparently, from what his colleagues say, he has left the city. I find that in my absence the other evening, he took the opportunity of criticising me for being absent. Well, I know of no argument he could apply to myself which would not apply with equal force to the minister. If he has gone to my constituency, as reported, I do not think he was justified in his criticism of me with regard to that same matter. I came down early in the week purposely to take up matters in connection with customs. I had made a personal request to the minister that he would reserve one item in his estimates on which we might have a general discussion of the affairs of his department. This he did not do and I judge from what I see in 'Hansard' that it is not the intention of the minister to give me the opportunity I asked for when going away. I shall take the earliest opportunity when he is here to criticise certain acts done in the department and certain parts of its administration. I shall therefore defer the remarks I was going to make until such time as the minister is here attending to his duties. I thought it was well to explain the situation to the House because I sent him a letter yesterday saying that I was going to make some remarks.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Dominion Astronomical Survey—salaries of technical officers and clerks, $17,192.50.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The explanation of the increase is as follows: Mr. J. H. Labbe gets an increase of $300 from the 1st July next. Mr. Labbe has proved a competent assistant secretary to the chief astronomer and has besides charge of the library.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is the library?

Mr. OLIVER. At the experimental farm. Then there are the annual increases of $50 each.

Mr. FOSTER. What force have they there?

Mr. OLIVER. Eleven men. Mr. Plaskett is the astronomer. This is a special vote for these officials of the astronomical survey who are not included in the vote for civil government which went through last night.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Dr. King the only one under civil government?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there are besides Otto Klotz, J. J. McArthur and C. A. Biggar. These come under the civil government vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there are eleven besides these?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the work in which these fifteen high class men are engaged.

Mr. OLIVER. As this is strictly a scientific branch, it would be better to let the matter stand until I can have Dr. King here. I intended having him here but was not sure when this item would be reached.

Mr. FOSTER. If Dr. King would prepare a succinct memo. showing what this branch is designed to do, what it has done and what it proposes to do, that would be very useful to parliament and the country as well. I understand that we must have such a branch and, so far as I know, we have an efficient one, but it might be popularized a little by a statement of that kind.

Mr. OLIVER. I will have such a statement prepared, so that in case he should not be here I will be able to present it. Or I can have Mr. King here at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be more satisfactory.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). The purely scientific facts that are gathered at this observatory are not understood by a large number of people, and I think that the expenditure would be more popular if the people at large were informed as to the work which is done at the observatory. For instance, the nearer nebulae and the fixed stars——

Mr. FOSTER. They are first cousins, like, are they not?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Wait a moment, my hon. friend has not studied astronomy as I have for forty years. I may say that popular information is now given in the newspapers by means of diagrams and there are also articles written by eminent astronomers at the Lick observatory and the Yerkes observatory which are familiarizing the popular mind with that species of information which deals with the movements and phenomena of the celestial bodies. Now, the professors at our observatory could write say monthly a popular article on the approximate distances and magnitudes, &c., of the nearer nebular and largest fixed stars and could obtain additional information concerning the most remarkable objects which are to be seen in the heavens, and this information could be published in a popular form and thus become useful to the schools and to all the people who are interested in that magnificent study. It could be done without much expense, and it would be copied in the newspaper periodicals all over Canada. Of course allowance would have to be made for the difference in latitude between the Lick observatory in California, for instance, and the latitude of Ottawa in Canada. But the objects which are most visible could be described, and this popular information could be communicated in that way. I know that I would have the support of my hon. friends opposite in advocating any expenditure for improving the instruments at the observatory, because I am satisfied that this expenditure if made more useful to the public would meet the approval of the Canadian people.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. KEMP. Does the item we are now considering cover the boundary survey?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the second item.

Mr. KEMP. What boundary surveys are now being carried on?

Mr. OLIVER. There is the survey of the 141st meridian between Alaska and the Yukon Territory, the coastal survey between Alaska and British Columbia, the 49th parallel between the United States and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the boundary between the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. KEMP. The boundary between Canada and the United States, from the St. Lawrence east, has been completed as far as the state of Maine, I understand.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as the state of New Hampshire.

Mr. KEMP. And is being continued east and north at the state of Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. They are working from the other end now.

Mr. KEMP. In the survey between the Yukon Territory and Alaska how many weeks in the year can they work and how many miles are they able to do in the season? How many men are there on the survey?

Mr. OLIVER. They are able to work about five months in the season. Last year they did 130 miles of the line.

Mr. KEMP. How many parties are there?

Mr. OLIVER. There are three parties at work, one actually running the line and the second taking the topography of the country adjoining the line and the third cutting a way through the woods along the line.

Mr. KEMP. How many men are employed altogether?

Mr. OLIVER. Our party works in conjunction with the party of the United States. I am informed there are probably about sixty men in the party.

Mr. KEMP. Is that line being surveyed right through to the Arctic ocean?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the ultimate intention.

Mr. KEMP. Is there necessity for this work going on up in the Arctic circle?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the question of boundaries may at any time become important and it is generally considered better to have such questions settled at a time when they are not attracting attention rather than to await the time when they may be attracting attention. A dispute is much more easily settled if it is not allowed to arise. That is the principle we are going on in the case of the 141st meridian. As my hon. friend is probably aware there is a part of that meridian which must be very accurately defined because of the gold mining operations which are going on on both sides of the line. That is a highly mineralized country and we have hopes that gold discoveries may be made in other places, we do not know where. but we think we should be preparing at a reasonable rate of speed and with a reasonable expenditure so that should it at any time be necessary to absolutely know where the boundary is we will know it. It is one of the responsibilities attaching to the ownership of vast territories, and having assumed the responsibility it must be discharged.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. KEMP. As I understand, part of the territory is allotted to the United States survey parties and part to the Canadian, they do not work jointly but in alternate positions.

Mr. OLIVER. They work jointly so that their work is checked. Each checks the work of the other as it proceeds.

Mr. KEMP. I understood they had separate camps and came together at certain points, that we accepted their line for nine or ten miles and they accepted ours for nine or ten miles, that they did not work together.

Mr. OLIVER. The system of which my hon. friend speaks is that which prevails on the Alaska coast boundary, an irregular boundary line which divides the strip of Alaska along the Pacific coast from the interior of British Columbia and the Yukon. In that case each country accepts the work done by the party of the other country; they work in alternate sections, but in that case it is a question of delimitation according to physical features. In the case of the 141st meridian it is a case of accuracy of scientific establishment and in such a case it is considered that the only correct way is that the work of each party should be checked by the other as it is being done.

Mr. KEMP. Is the minister sure the parties can survey as much as 130 miles in a season?

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that the work done last season was about 130 miles south from the point where the 141st meridian crosses the Yukon river.

Mr. KEMP. The reason I asked was that in going to the experimental farm the other day I met a man who had been working on that Yukon survey who told me that they were able to do about nine miles a year. I do not know his name but he was one of the men going out there.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid my hon. friend has derived his information from an unreliable source.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this item for surveys cover the delimiting of the boundary under the treaty recently signed with reference to which we have not yet received the correspondence?

Mr. OLIVER. We will have to ask for a supplementary vote for the work of delimiting the boundary under the new treaty. This vote will cover part of that work but it is not sufficient to cover the expenditure caused by the treaty recently signed.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the House is treated with scant courtesy in being asked for votes to delimit a boundary under treaties when we have not the treaties or the correspondence referring to them in our possession. Surely parliament ought to know under what conditions they are going to delimit this boundary. Parliament ought to be informed as to what has taken place between the imperial government and the government of the United States in regard to these treaties before it is asked to vote money for delimiting the boundaries. It is going it blind to a great extent and I think somebody ought to make a statement to explain to the House what has been done so that we could know the exact provisions of these treaties. We are voting money and allowing men to go and delimit the boundary without knowing upon what authority beyond the statement that there has been a treaty passed which is binding on Canada but which has not yet been laid upon the table of the House.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The boundary line between Canada and the United States was fixed at the 141st meridian six years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. We are talking about the whole boundary between Canada and the United States. As I understand they are going on to delimit the boundary westward from the St. Lawrence river under a treaty that we have not even read in this House and as to which we have no information. I think it is a very unbusinesslike way for parliament to do especially with respect to a matter that concerns the country so much.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has possibly not been paying as close attention to his duties as he might have. Otherwise, he would have found that the treaty has been laid before parliament. I got it in my desk. I sent several copies out to people in British Columbia who were anxious to see it.

Mr. SPROULE. When ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The day before yesterday.

Mr. SPROULE. All I can say is that the minister said that it would have to be printed. He laid it on the table of the House, but it was not printed or distributed and in so far as I know it is not printed or distributed yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not received a copy of it yet.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I got mine from the distribution office in the regular way.

Mr. WARD. You got some advance copies.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. You must be the white headed boy.

Mr. MACPHERSON. May be I am. Perhaps I am like the man who was born blind and who was cured; he could not say how it happened but he was cured just the same. I have been informed and I have also read in the coast papers that the Canadian and American Alaska boundary survey parties are held up on the coast due to the fact that there is no money voted to cover the cost of the delimitation of this boundary line. I would like to know if that is correct.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend's information is only partially correct. The Canadian parties in question have not yet left Ottawa. We have not felt justified in sending them out without an assurance of the funds necessary to pay them. Of course the United States survey party cannot proceed under the agreement that has been made without our survey party being on the ground.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that they have had one meeting in Buffalo and that they intend to have another at Toronto. We are providing for the delimitation of the boundary without seeing the treaty under which this is to be done. Parliament ought to be informed of its details before being asked to vote money.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to know what the facts are, Statements are made in the coast papers and it is common talk there apparently that the United States survey parties are at Juneau awaiting the arrival of the Canadian parties both of which were to have met some time in the early part of May to begin the work, but they cannot proceed because of the non-arrival of the Canadian party. When the Alaskan boundary award was made five or six years ago, was it not accepted by both governments that the 141st meridian would be the boundary line between the two countries ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is absolutely correct. The parties should be on the ground, but the United States party, of course, cannot proceed with the work without our party being there. We cannot send them until we get the sanction of parliament. The delimitation of the boundary on the 141st meridian which is the subject of their work is not the subject of the treaty recently signed. The treaty of 1906 provides for a survey of the 141st meridian as the boundary between Alaska and Canada. The exact point at which the meridian crosses the Yukon was determined by astronomical observation in 1906; therefore, the vote which we are asking for now in that particular part has nothing to do with the treaty that is under consideration. The whole of this vote which is now before the House in these main estimates is apportioned amongst the boundary surveys which have been already arranged for.

Mr. FOSTER. Between what points?

Mr. OLIVER. The 141st meridian between the Yukon and Alaska; the boundary between the coast strip of Alaska and Canadian territory : the 49th parallel between the Northern States and the Canadian west, and the boundary between New Brunswick and the State of Maine, coming westerly. The work in these four sections of the boundary is now being done under an agreement and under treaties entered into.

Mr. FOSTER. Taking the New Brunswosk portion, how many miles are to be delimited there and how many miles have been delimited ?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been delimited about 65 miles between New York and Quebec and 100 miles between Vermont and Quebec. That part of the line is completed. We are proposing to begin now at the other end of the line between the State of Maine and New Brunswick and it is for that work, commencing at the other end and coming easterly, that we are asking for the money.

Mr. FOSTER. How many miles will that be ?

Mr. OLIVER. Between 350 and 400 miles remain to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. Of the New Brunswick portion ?

Mr. OLIVER. Between New Brunswick and Maine and the remainder between Quebec and Maine and Quebec and New Hampshire.

Mr. FOSTER. How many miles altogether have to be delimited ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 550 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Of which how much will be done ?

Mr. OLIVER. 165 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. And of the New Brunswick portion none has been done ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, they are commencing that now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems a pity that the treaties between Great Britain and the United States were not laid on the table of the House and printed earlier. As I understand it this vote is for the delimitation of the boundary provided for by the Alaskan treaty.

Mr. OLIVER. The only concern this vote would have with the recent treaty is that if there were a surplus from this vote it would of course go to the delimitation under the new treaty. It could be used for that but we are not asking the vote for that purpose. We will have to ask a supplementary estimate for the purpose of carrying out the terms of the treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not had a copy of this treaty and I should think the distribution of public documents should be a little more uniform than it appears to have been in this case.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I sent and got it in the distribution office.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know why it should remain in the distribution office when there have been so many inquiries in the House for it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Is the survey going on at present ?

Mr. OLIVER. The parties for the coast boundary have left but the parties for the 141st meridian have not because we did not feel justified in sending them to extreme points where expenses would be great unless we had the sanction of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And this is the first time this vote has been asked for.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The United States survey parties are cooling their heels in Juneau, Alaska, and our survey parties are doing the same thing around Vancouver and other coast cities. The United States have their men financed and we have no money for our men and so this parliament has placed itself in a ridiculous position.

Mr. FOSTER. This parliament which is in that position has never been asked for a dollar of this money until half past 12 o'clock on this the 3rd day of June, 1908.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I appreciate that.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman has any fault to find let him pitch into his minister.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I make no captious criticism, but if parliament has not before been asked for this money it is because day after day this parliament tried to get into Supply and Supply has been blocked. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto knows it, everybody knows it. It is particularly annoying in an international matter of this kind that such should be the case. For weeks our newspapers in British Columbia have been discussing it and the people on the coast understand the reason for it.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an important matter ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is an important matter.

Mr. FOSTER. More important than anything else ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not say it is more important than anything else, but it is more important in the delimitation of the boundary between Canada and the United States in Alaska it should be gone on with because there are gold discoveries taking place all the time, and if Canadian governments for the last 50 years had been alive to their duty Canada would to-day own Skagway and Lynn canal.

Mr. FOSTER. If your Prime Minister had not made the assertion he did in parliament we might have had a great deal more.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am endeavouring to treat of this question above party politics and I say we should have the international boundary line delimited because there is a rich country to the north and gold is being found and will be found for years to come and we want to have our flag floating over our own land so that marauders cannot come as they have in the past and take a considerable portion of our country, backed up by men like Lord Alvestone. I think it is time the House got this vote through.

Mr. FOSTER. So do I.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It should be put through at once.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with you.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is time also that our good friends opposite should realize the condition they have placed the country in by blocking the supplies.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You placed it in that position.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Day after day Supply has been blocked and this is only one instance of the result.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) has not looked up the record or he would not have made his speech. If this is an international matter and of so much importance why did not the government bring the vote to the attention of parliament on the 15th day of May when they asked us to vote $600,000 for Public Works in Manitoba and the west? More than double the amount asked for in this vote to-day was voted by this House on the 15th of May. The timber discussion took place on the 19th. On the 20th $1,104,895 was voted for the Mounted Police, the Militia and the post office. Two days afterwards the post office estimates came up again and they were passed, amounting to $5,479,110, with the usual discussion. If this vote was so important a matter, why was it not asked for at that time? On the 29th of May a considerable portion, nearly a million and a quarter, of the estimates for the Customs Department were passed, and on the 1st of June the balance was passed, making a total of $1,815,187 for that department. When the hon. gentleman talks about obstruction, why does he not make plain to the House the reasons which induced the Minister of the Interior to refrain from asking us for this vote on the 15th of May last, when we passed double the amount for public works in Manitoba which were not so urgent?

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend has taken that line of argument——

Mr. FOSTER. Meet it fairly.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It can be met fairly in this way. This House has been in session close on seven months, and its work could have been got through a month ago. There is no necessity for my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, for whom I have every regard, attempting to draw a red herring across the trail. There is no deliberative assembly, made up of business men, not even a county council, that would not have got through the business a month ago if it laid aside party politics.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is your Civil Service Bill, where is your Hudson Bay Railway Bill, where is your Land Bill, where is your Manitoba Boundary Bill?

Mr. MACPHERSON. If every member of the House of Commons took up the amount of time taken up by the hon. member for North Toronto, who seems to be obsessed for talking——

Mr. FOSTER. I object, Mr. Chairman, to any such language as that being applied to a member of this House. I do not exactly know what the meaning of that word is: but from the fire in the eye of my hon. friend and the way it tripped off his tongue, it is a bad word, and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My good friend is like the fishwife whom Daniel O'Connell called a parallelogram.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am not like the fishwife, and if the hon. gentleman wants to have a committee of investigation he can have it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There are some things I would rather not have a committee of investigation on, because some horrible details might be spread on the records of this country. If all the members of the House of Commons took up as much time as the hon. member for North Toronto, we would require to be here twelve months. If our hon. friends would simply come to the conclusion to put party politics aside—and I am not saying that all the fault is on one side—we could finish up the business in a very short time. Here is a case in which the United States government have their men in the field waiting for our people to come alongside and do the work. This House met in November last and got into Committee of Supply a week after, and the Supplies have been blocked by our hon. friends opposite from that day to this, and they know it.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked my hon. friend to meet fairly the circumstances detailed by the leader of the opposition. Does he think he has done it ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Of course I have.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose there has been a large amount of talk ; suppose the member who is at present speaking has done a great deal of it ; he did no more and no less up to the 15th of May, and on the 15th of May the government, which was supposed to know what was most pressing, got the House into Supply, and instead of taking up this international business of great importance, took up a number of dispersed public works in cities represented by Grit members in Manitoba and the Northwest, and we passed, with all the obstruction, as it is alleged, votes amounting to $533,000. Does my hon. friend think that if the Minister of the Interior had foreseen the circumstances and put his vote before the House, he could not have carried it when we voted more than double the amount for these public works ? On the 20th of May we voted $1,104,895, about five times as much as the Minister of the Interior is asking for to-day. Is it reasonable to say that if the minister had taken this international question up on that date he could not have got his $330,000 as well as the other departments got their $1,104,000 ? On the 22nd of May we voted $5,479,110 for the Post Office and on the 1st of June we voted $1,815,000 for the Customs ; and yet we were not asked for this vote. There is nothing but wind in what my hon. friend said. He declares that it is because the opposition obstruct—because a righteous, far-seeing government are not allowed to work their will in any particular —that they are cooling their heels in particular places, and British Columbia knows the reason why. British Columbia is inhabited by intelligent people, and I am not bound to maintain that the most intelligent of its population have found their way into this House ; and the people of British Columbia, when that state of facts is placed before them, will ask the question : If these gentleman had any foresight as to what was more important, why did they not bring this vote on one of these dates ? Besides, the Minister of the Interior has had one-eighth of that amount for nearly two months.

Mr. MACPHERSON. After this excellent lecture from the hon. gentleman I will trust that he will apply a little of his own sophistry to his own case.

Mr. FOSTER. Why does my hon. friend use the word 'sophistry ?' Is it a fact or is it not what I have quoted? Does he deny the statement? If he does not, it is not sophistry, but plain, hard facts.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I have not been in the House so long as my hon. friend, and he has more liberty to interrupt than I have and he has more skill in suiting the rules of debate to his own purposes. But I want to tell him in reply to his satire, that nobody in the province of British Columbia has made use of his intelligence on the floor of this House to abuse his opportunities as my hon. friend has. I do not think that anybody from that province has ever attempted, for my part I have never attempted, to belittle any member of this House. I always try to play the game fair. I am a new member compared with the hon. gentleman. He is an old timer, he has sat around the council board of His Majesty and is a Privy Councillor, and I think he should be above making a statement like that.

Mr. FOSTER. Like what?

Mr. MACPHERSON. A statement reflecting upon the intelligence of any member from the province of British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not do that. I could not do it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I want to tell my hon. friend that although in his opinion those coming from the province of British Columbia may not be very intelligent, we know how to hold our own, and we have never had to leave that province to find a seat in another one.

Mr. FOSTER. Your experience has not been so long.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, and my planks are not very thin and I have not had to run so far as the hon. gentleman. I have not been obliged to run about looking for a seat, and consequently have not had the same experience, but I tell my hon. friend that he should be above that kind of thing. Let me tell him, in all fairness, that we should come down to business and forget party politics for a while and get through with it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I came in a few moments ago and have been since wondering what the item before the committee is. Judging by the speech of the hon. gentleman, the subject before us must be a very varied one because he has adverted to many things. What surprises me is that when he complains of our not getting the work, he should waste so much valuable time in talking of something not at all pertinent to the question. He has no right to make any complaint when he himself is using up the valuable time of the House by obstructing its business. I hardly think he can find fault with my applying that word to his own conduct, because, so far as I could understand, he did not appear to be addressing himself to any particular question before the committee at all, and I was surprised that you, Mr. Chairman, did not call him to order and refuse to allow him to air his eloquence in telling us about the fine people who come from British Columbia. We know that there are lots of fine people in that province and that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) is one of the finest. No doubt he represents his constituency very well, but this is not the time for him to raise his voice on behalf of Vancouver. That surely cannot be an item in the estimates, and I trust that when he again rises in his place to delay the committee and call its attention away from the practical question before us you will draw his attention to that fact. Self laudation is not what we are here for. I am anxious that we should go on and I hope we shall do some business this afternoon. We are anxious to give the Department of the Interior and some of the other departments some money. Some of the ministers are complaining that they have not got money, but they have not asked for it. Here is the Minister of Militia complaining when he has not asked for a dollar. It is time for ministers to find fault with the opposition when they bring down their estimates. We cannot vote their estimates through until they are placed before the committee. I fail to see the point of the hon. gentleman's criticism, and I trust, Mr. Chairman, that you will watch him this afternoon in case he should rise again and take such another stand as he has done. In such an event I hope that you will keep him down to the point and force him to confine his discussion to the question before the committee. I may be called to order because I have not been discussing the question, but, as a matter of fact, I do not know what the question is and consequently I am not able to discuss it. May I ask what is the item before us?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. S. J. Jackson). It is the salaries of the technical officers of the Dominion Astronomical Observatory.

Mr. FOSTER. Now that the hon. member for British Columbia (Mr. Macpherson) has ceased his obstruction, I hope to get some information. I have now traced the boundary lines—New Brunswick and the United States, Quebec and New York, Quebec and Vermont. What other boundary line is it that we are delimiting?

Mr. OLIVER. The forty-ninth parallel. At present the party is working on the international boundary between Montana and Alberta, eastward from the summit of the Rockies. The work was completed in previous years from the summit of the Rockies westward to the Pacific coast.

Mr. FOSTER. About how many miles?

Mr. OLIVER. About 410 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. And the two sections now being worked are Montana and Alberta?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the line between Montana and Alberta now being run will be continued eastward between Saskatchewan and Montana, Saskatchewan and Dakota, Manitoba and Dakota, and Manitoba and Minnesota to the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods. That is the forty-ninth parallel. From there the line follows a certain described boundary.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the length of the line of the forty-ninth parallel which has to be delimited altogether?

Mr. OLIVER. Between 750 and 800 miles?

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been done?

Mr. OLIVER. Four hundred and ten miles in British Columbia, and they have just started this way.

Mr. FOSTER. As we have it, there are 390 miles between New Brunswick and the United States, 60 miles between Quebec and New York, 100 miles between Quebec and Vermont, and 750 miles on the forty-ninth parallel. Then we come to the northern trend. What is the delimitation in British Columbia and north?

Mr. OLIVER. The Alaska coast survey is about 500 miles altogether, of which about one-half has been done. It has been done in sections rather than continually from end to end.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the whole?

Mr. OLIVER. Of the 141st meridian between Alaska and the Yukon, which is about 500 miles in length, of which 130 miles has been completed. There is water delimitation beyond the 49th parallel. The 49th parallel commences the water delimitation at the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. FOSTER. Take all of these first lines which seem to have been sufficient in time past to prevent troubles, what has arisen to make it necessary that there should now be undertaken a new delimitation?

Mr. OLIVER. The line between New Brunswick and Maine, in fact the line generally from the Ste. Croix river to the St. Lawrence, was surveyed many years ago. Since then many of the survey marks have become obliterated through age; besides, the boundary at the time the survey was made was not very well defined. During more recent years, owing to the lack of definite boundaries, there have been facilities for smuggling and defrauding the revenue on both sides of the line, chiefly by means of building houses on the boundary line itself, and where that line is not well defined, this leads to a good deal of difficulty in suppressing the practice. This accumulation of circumstances necessitated a new survey of the boundary from one end to the other and that has been agreed upon.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the United States bearing its share of the cost of this delimitation?

Mr. OLIVER. Each country has to make its own survey. We make our survey and their survey checks ours; they make their survey and our survey checks theirs. They would not accept our survey, nor would we accept theirs. So the two parties work together, checking each other as the work progresses. That is the reason why, as the hon. gentleman said, that the United States party was held up until our party could get in the field. That was the case with regard to the survey of the 141st meridian, and is also the case with regard to this survey between New Brunswick and Maine. The survey has to be made jointly by parties of the two countries, and unless and until our party is in the field, the United States party cannot go on with their work.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it in the end cost twice as much for the two countries as it would cost for a single survey?

Mr. OLIVER. Approximately it does cost twice as much, but not actually; because, even if Canada were making a survey alone by our party, its work would have to be checked by another party, which would mean a certain amount of expense.

Mr. FOSTER. But that is not equal to the first survey?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I say the fact that the two countries do not absolutely trust each other does practically double the cost of the survey, but not altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me this could be done: Supposing Canada undertook to delimit 100 miles. Its men and methods are known, and it is understood that approximately they are going to make a true and honest survey. Is it not possible for the checking to be done by the United States in the case of that 100 miles that the Canadian survey is doing; by the appointment of one or two of their men to accompany our party and act as a check over the work of the Canadian survey? And would it not be possible for Canada to do the same with reference to a hundred miles that the United States survey was carrying out? I should think they could act as an almost positive check on each other, and thereby the cost would be almost one-half of what it is going to be under the present system. Is that impossible?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that is not at all impossible.

Mr. FOSTER. Why can't that be done?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman would have to address at least one-half of his inquiry to the government of the United States. In the case of the Alaska coast survey, the system the hon. gentleman suggests is followed, as I have already stated; that is, one country makes a survey of a certain portion of the boundary and the other country checks that survey. But in that case the boundary is absolutely irregular, being fixed by the summit of the mountain ranges; in these other cases the boundary is scientifically accurate.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not that make it more easy?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer that question. I may say that many years ago the Canadian government did provide for the delimitation of the boundaries of the 141st meridian where it follows the Yukon river between Alaska and the Yukon. Many years afterwards it was found that there was a small error in the survey, and owing to the fact that gold mining was going on in that locality, that error led to what might have been serious complications. It is considered that where the question is one of accuracy, it is important that there should be absolute confidence on the part of both countries that the survey shall adequately protect the interest of each country, and for that purpose each country is willing to pay the cost of its own survey parties.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course neither country wants to spend money uselessly and it would seem to me as a layman that the most difficult part would be that of the Alaskan boundary where you have to keep the contour of the mountains in view and place your line in accordance with it. That would be much more difficult than where it is a straight line, say on the 49th parallel of latitude, where there is nothing of that kind to be taken into account. If the two countries can come to an agreement to save expense and do the checking by superior officers in the more difficult case, why is it not possible for them to do it on what appears to be the easier sections? This work has only been commenced and the minister will see that it is going to cost a vast amount of money. There are 2,700 to 3,000 miles altogether to be delimited and at the present rate this will run away up into the millions. It should not be too late yet to see whether the two countries cannot agree to adopt that system of checking by superior officers so that the gangs would do the work separately. In that way half the time would be saved, the work would be completed at a much earlier date and nearly one-half the expense would be saved.

Mr. OLIVER. I was in error in stating that the system of having two parties prevailed along the whole line. That is the system on the 141st meridian where an absolutely new survey is being made in a new country, but my information is that in the New Brunswick-Maine survey a single party made up from the two countries carries on the survey and in the case of the 49th parallel in the prairie section which is now being surveyed the system suggested by my hon. friend is in force. It is divided into 100 mile sections and one section is done by each country with the checking of each such section by surveyors of the other country.

Mr. FOSTER. The checking is not nearly so expensive as the first survey.

Mr. OLIVER. No, it involves some expense but not so much. The reason for the difference in expense is the difference in the conditions in the different sections. On the 141st meridian it is an absolutely new survey in a new country where the ownership of gold mines is in issue so it has been thought advisable that there should be two parties although it is a very expensive country to keep parties in. In other sections the system varies according to the conditions and the difficulties of the situation.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the minister from the experience they have had and the present cost of this work, give an approximate estimate of the total cost of this work ?

Mr. OLIVER. Just at the moment my information is that it is expected to, if not altogether, at least nearly, complete the work in three years at a cost of about $400,000. That would be in addition to the $125,000 here asked for, making $525,000, including this year.

Mr. LANCASTER. A dispatch appeared in last night's newspapers stating that the International Waterways Commission is meeting in Buffalo in regard to the international boundary between Canada and the United States through the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence river. This is a very serious matter and I would like to know if the dispatch is at all correct.

Mr. OLIVER. The information might be correct. The new treaty provides that the delimitation of the boundary through the St. Lawrence river and the Great Lakes to the mouth of the Pigeon river on the north shore of Lake Superior shall be made by the International Waterways Commission. In that connection the dispatch may be correct.

Mr. LANCASTER. That part of the boundary which passes through the Niagara river, connecting Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, is of very vital importance. Every foot of it is of very great value to either country and a determined effort has been made by the United States people to make out that the boundary should be in the middle of the river. There may be, I am afraid, a disposition on the part of the Canadian members of the Waterways Commission to concede a sort of compromise. In these deals between the United States and Canada the American people generally manage to ask something extreme and get a compromise which in itself is more than they are entitled to. They are very good bluffers in that respect and the people in the Niagara district are very much worked up on account of this disposition of the Americans. They apparently feel they have an easy crowd to deal with and they are attempting to get the boundary line there, where it is of great value, over into the river much nearer the Canadian side than it should be. The report of Dr. Spencer, lately published, gives a great deal of information and these people are more or less attacking it. I am afraid that if the government is not very careful a report will be made by the Waterways Commission agreed to by the Canadian section—I do not suggest that they would intentionally sacrifice Canada's rights—without having gone into all the facts as they ought to go into them before making a recommendation to this House. The boundary line between Niagara Falls and Niagara on the Lake and Buffalo, particularly along the part known as the Falls section in which the falls occur, is of the greatest importance, every foot is valuable and the question is one that will produce a great deal of difficulty hereafter if it is not very carefully dealt with. I would really think that at this moment, until they get more complete information, it would not be wise for the International Waterways Commission to undertake to say where the boundary should be.

I do not believe that they have proper data from our side of the case, and I do know that the Americans have been assiduously, for two or three years, working up evidence in the most careful way, surveying our side of the river, and I am afraid they will put professional men in the witness box who will, of course, give evidence on the side they are called upon. These American surveyors would not tell anything in favour of Canada. They have been allowed to survey the river on both sides, a free hand has been given them and they will be able to fortify their theories by what they will call corroborative evidence, and they will go into the witness box and give evidence in a way that I do not think is quite fair to Canada. I am afraid the Waterways Commission has not the evidence or information that it should have to deal with this question. I thought it was wise, as the question of boundaries is before the House, to draw the minister's attention to it, to sound a note of warning as to the matter and to indicate that the Waterways Commission ought not to be allowed to go very fast in deciding that question on the evidence it has at the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that anybody could take any other view than that which my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has taken, that the question of the boundary, particularly at that point, is one of the very highest importance, and that it is necessary that the interests of Canada should be properly protected. However, this is not a matter under the administration of the Department of the Interior. The Waterways Commission is appurtenant to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. LANCASTER. It was under your department, was it not ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought this was the proper place to mention it.

Mr. OLIVER. The director of the geological survey was a member of the Waterways Commission. However, I am indebted to the hon. gentleman for mentioning this point, and I have no doubt that attention will be paid to it.

Mr. SPROULE. This treaty that we have before us specifically provides that the Waterways Commission shall do part of this work. Article 4 reads :

The high contracting parties agree that the existing International Waterways Commission, constituted by concurrent action of the Dominion of Canada and the United States, and composed of three commissioners on the part of the Dominion of Canada and three commissioners on the part of the United States, is hereby authorized and empowered to ascertain and re-establish accurately the location of the international boundary line, beginning at the point of its intersection with the St. Lawrence river near the forty-fifth parallel of north latitude, as determined under Articles I. and VI. of the treaty of August 9, 1842, between Great Britain and the United States, and thence through the great lakes and communicating waterways to the mouth of Pigeon river, at the western shore of Lake Superior, in accordance with the description of such line in Article II. of the treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, dated September 3, 1783, and of a portion of such line in Article II. of the treaty of August 9, 1842, aforesaid, and as described in the joint report, dated June 18, 1822, of the commissioners appointed under Article VI. of the treaty of December 24, between Great Britain and the United States, with respect to a portion of said line, and as marked on charts prepared by them and filed with said report, and with respect to the remaining portion of said line as marked on the charts adopted as treaty charts of the boundary under the provisions of Article II. of the treaty of 1842 above mentioned, with such deviation from said line, however, as may be required on account of the cession by Great Britain to the United States of the portion of Horse Shoe Reef, in the Niagara river, necessary for the lighthouse erected there by the United States in accordance with the terms of the protocol of a conference held at the British foreign office, December 9, 1850, between the representatives of the two governments and signed by them, agreeing upon such cession; and it is agreed that wherever the boundary is shown on said charts by a curved line along the water, the commissioners are authorized in their discretion to adopt, in place of such curved line, a series of connecting straight lines defined by distances and courses, and following generally the course of such curved line, but conforming strictly to the description of the boundary in the existing treaty provisions, and the geographical co-ordinates of the turning points of such line shall be stated by said commissioners so as to conform to the system of latitudes and longitudes of the charts mentioned below, and the said commissioners shall, so far as practicable, mark the course of the entire boundary line.

The commission, which is appointed under the present treaty, is laying down the line of demarcation. It is all to go on at the same time. There is first the portion starting at the mouth of the Ste. Croix river down at the Atlantic ocean and crossing Passamaquoddy bay. Then the work proceeds westward from the mouth to the source of the Ste. Croix river, then to where the 49th parallel crosses the River St. Lawrence, westward through the great lakes to Pigeon river, from Pigeon river to the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods, thence to the Pacific ocean and finally to the boundary between Alaska and the territory of Yukon. I take it that it is all mixed up together. The commissioners already appointed must jointly do this work and it does seem to me that this House is scarcely as well informed as it ought to be with regard to these provisions where it interests us above all other things to know what provision is made for delimiting this boundary and what precautions have been taken by the government to see that it is carried out in accordance with the provisions of these treaties, and that we have eminent men appointed to look after Canada's interests. I still think that the House ought to have from some minister of the Crown a comprehensive statement as to what is contemplated to be done and what we commit ourselves to before we commence the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there any map presented with this treaty or is there any map which shows the general outline of what the old boundary was and what the new boundary is as it has been laid down ?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no map that I am aware of accompanying the copies of the treaty which have been prepared for distribution. The treaty is not a matter appertaining to my own department and therefore I am not in a position to give the information in regard to it that I otherwise would. We are only dealing with the parts of the boundary which have been provided for by previous treaties and which are confirmed by this treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, this includes all the previous treaties and makes a final definite agreement ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will this money be used in regard to what I spoke of ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the money we are asking for is simply the delimitation of the land boundary. Our department has nothing to do with the water boundary. This money is required to carry out the work under agreements entered into and treaties made on a previous occasion. We will have to ask for money to enable us to do our part of the delimitation under the new treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the general purpose of this astronomical branch which has 16 high class officials? What have they done so far and what do they propose doing in the future?

Mr. OLIVER. The modern science of astronomy represents the accumulated learning of all the ages since the world began, and, therefore, it would be impossible for me—not being acquainted with that science—to give the House any very full account of the operations of the observatory. It is possible to locate definitely any certain point on the earth's surface by knowing the location of certain points in the heavens. The stars are studied partly because of interest in the stars, partly from a purely scientific or speculative point of view, and chiefly in the practical application of their study to defining the location of any point in our country. The work of the branch is divided into several classes. One is purely scientific and speculative; the other is for the purpose of applying the knowledge acquired to the location of fixed points in the geography of our country so that delimitations which have been or may be made upon the ground may be accurately fixed upon the maps. From this feature of the work comes the delimitation of the boundaries of our country which is specially the work of the officers of the astronomical branch who have the scientific knowledge which enables them to absolutely fix any point on the earth's surface. They are the officials upon whom depend the delimitation of our boundaries when a treaty is made which states that a certain line of latitude or longitude is to be followed. We depend upon the practical application of the scientific knowledge of these gentlemen to be sure that the boundary is correctly given. The fixing of geographical points within the country is in the hands of the geodetic survey and the purely scientific work is entirely in the observatory.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that we are equipping an observatory and employing a staff of astronomers whose sole idea is to carry on the study of the heavens with the idea of original research so as to advance the science of astronomy purely as a science? What number of officials have we set apart for that work? The thought that comes to one's mind is that this is chiefly the work of great universities and scientific institutions endowed by private benevolence, as is the case in other countries. What is our equipment for this work which requires such very accurate and costly instruments?

Mr. OLIVER. The question my hon. friend asks is difficult to answer in accuracy and detail; but, speaking generally, the answer must be to a certain degree, yes. We are carrying on that original study of the heavens of which he speaks, and which he thinks should be relegated to educational institutions.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not so sure that the government should not have something to do with it.

Mr. OLIVER. It is incidental to the necessary practical work of the branch. There are very few countries in the world which have a longer boundary line or greater area requiring geographical expression than Canada. It is therefore necessary that Canada's equipment for dealing with questions of boundary or geographical location should be large and efficient, in proportion to the wealth and population of the country. Being under the necessity of maintaining an establishment with an equipment on a comparatively large and expensive scale in order to do the practical work, we do in addition and in conjunction with it some part of the educative work—not merely with the idea of adding to the sum of human knowledge of astronomy, but in view of securing greater efficiency in the handling of the practical work. We believe in having what may be called the educative and speculative side of the science in hand in our observatory, because this will enable us to assure the people of Canada better work in the actual delimitation of boundary lines and in the establishment of geographical points, than would otherwise be the case. In this, I am informed, we are following, I suppose at a very great distance, the example of the British Government in the case of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich. There is room for argument that in Canada, where the needs of this special scientific knowledge in its practical application are so great, and where our educational institutions of the higher class are not so amply provided with resources as those of more populous and vastly richer countries, we cannot expect to rely on these educational institutions to the same extent that these other countries do; and therefore, Canada situated as it is, may fairly do rather more in a national way for the purely scientific side of this science, in which the country has such large practical interests, than is done by the United States, whose circumstances are vastly different.

Mr. FOSTER. It strikes me that, when it comes to the practical use you are going to make of your astronomical knowledge and your astronomical equipment, it is not necessary to carry on original researches. For instance, the question whether or not an additional ring can be discovered in some far-off planet, does not have any relation to your fixing a point geographically on the boundary line. I suppose you fix these points from known data, about which there is no variation. I suppose it is over and above the question of practical utility that you make original researches with your instruments to discover new conjunctions of planets, or new nebulae, or anything of that kind. What you want are the instruments and the men to make fair use of the knowledge you have at your command at present. It is a matter for argument whether we ought to use our staff or our instruments to advance astronomical knowledge in competition with other countries, or how far in that direction we ought to go. I am in favour of Canada taking a leading part in all such matters. I suppose it is well to have different points of view of the heavens, and you probably do not get all the knowledge you should have by taking all your observations from one country, but get better results by having different points of observation; and that is a fair part of the work for Canada to take part in. But I would think that the practical side of the work would simply require good instruments and good men and accuracy in your calculations. We have extensive boundaries, of course, but we are settling these now, and when they are once settled we are not apt to have them disturbed. In four years time we shall have this whole round finished, and then we shall be pretty clear, so far as international boundaries are concerned.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite appreciate the view that my hon. friend takes. I have no doubt that it will appeal to a large number of people, and I am bound to say that it appeals to myself in some degree, that we have not any money to throw away on purely scientific enterprises; and I would not like to encourage going beyond a very reasonable limit in regard to purely scientific research in connection with our astronomical branch.

Mr. FOSTER. How would your instruments compare in power and intensity with those of large observatories?

Mr. OLIVER. They do not compare at all with those of the extraordinary class, but very favourably with those of the ordinary class of observatories. We do not go in for original research in the same degree as those entirely scientific and educational institutions in the United States and some other countries, but we are doing a fair share in the collection of data and the increase of accurate knowledge with regard to the heavenly bodies. No doubt we should be careful not to expend a very large amount, but for the educative value to our own institutions for our own purposes we are warranted in incurring a reasonable measure of expenditure in order to keep up the work of original research in the observatory.

Mr. FOSTER. How far is the astronomical branch utilized in meteorological research?

Mr. OLIVER. It has no connection with the meteorological survey. The only purely industrial service it accomplishes is the regulation of the time within the range of its operation.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) suggested before recess that it would be well for the government to popularize the knowledge gained by its astronomical staff. Does the minister think that we are getting sufficient new information from this staff to popularize it?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) is a good one, but we have not taken any steps in that direction yet. The measure of research carried on might very well be given publicity. At present during the winter months a lecture is given every second week by one of the officers of the observatory to which the public are invited, and these lectures excite a great deal of interest.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very local.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but it shows that there is some appreciation of the propriety of the suggestion to publish the work of the observatory. There is quite an active appreciation of that work by the local public.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of the observatory?

Mr. OLIVER. The observatory cost about $110,000. The buildings are very substantial and complete. The equipment cost about $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the yearly cost of keeping it up?

Mr. OLIVER. Salaries, contingencies, books and other matters, about $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the librarian give the whole of his duty to that work?

Mr. OLIVER. He attends to the library and assists in the correspondence.

Mr. SPROULE. This may be an admirable institution, and ought to be from its cost. We are asked to vote $230,000 in connection with it, a large portion of which will probably be taken to help in delimiting the boundary between Canada and the United States. How is the information obtained to be turned to practical account? The minister's explanations remind me of an old professor's demonstration of chemistry. He said: Take an effervescent, add a deliquescent, there will be a precipitation, that is a conglomeration, and that is a demonstration, and is therefore chemistry. The only definite purpose in view seems to be to fix some accurate point on the earth by means of some observations in the heavens. And for that we are spending $130,000 on a building and $30,000 a year to keep it up.

Mr. OLIVER. The delimitation of a boundary must start from a point on the earth fixed by observation of the heavens. The work you do on the survey is useless unless there is accuracy in the delimitation.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit you have to fix your post to start from. But I wish to know the return that the country is going to get from this expenditure in a practical way. We wish to know what work is being done for which this large expenditure is asked. Is it a school for educating people in astronomy, or astrology, or experimentation in any scientific direction? I think some person ought to write out an intelligent account of the work that is being done, and how it is likely to benefit Canada, so that it could be read to the House by the minister. We are much like what the minister says of the survey, we want some point to start from.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman does not know where to start from, why does he not stop?

Mr. SPROULE. I am depending on the minister to give us the information, because he is supposed to be the source of knowledge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am sure we appreciate the necessity of having men of scientific knowledge and with the necessary scientific equipment to enable us to meet the experts of the United States in the delimitation of these boundaries. I presume that is absolutely essential, and I have no doubt the gentlemen who are connected with that survey are doing good work for the country.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the ultimate practical purpose of the survey.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is another matter that might be mentioned just now, although it is more by way of suggestion. I observe on page 44 of the report of the Civil Service Commission, this paragraph:

> Another important matter which is worthy of consideration is the preparation of maps required by the several departments of the Dominion government. Under the system at present in vogue, maps are prepared by the Departments of Railways and Canals, Marine and Fisheries, Public Works, Militia and Defence, Post Office, Geological Survey and the Department of the Interior. Much praise has been given to an atlas of the Dominion lately prepared by the geographer of the Department of the Interior. Your commissioners would suggest whether it is not possible to group the several officials engaged in this one object under one department and one responsible minister.

It seems to me that is a suggestion which ought to be taken into consideration by the government, more especially by the Department of the Interior, because one would suppose that the gentlemen connected with this particular branch of the Department of the Interior would be those to whom some work of that kind might fittingly be conducted. Then there is another subject I might mention, that is the desirability of having the surveys which are made by the several departments brought under some uniform system, and carried on upon a scientific basis. I believe that every civilized country in the world has a system of what are called geodetic surveys, which are carried out according to very precise and scientific methods, and which are of great value, not only to the government, but to the people who are engaged in various ways in developing the country. I understand this subject has been under the consideration of scientists throughout the country, and I presume it has been under the consideration of the gentlemen who are occupied with this subject in the Department of the Interior; and I have reason to believe that its desirability has also impressed itself upon the gentlemen who are connected with some of our great educational institutions. I would like to know whether the subject, not only of a uniform system of maps, but of a uniform system of precise and scientific surveys, is engaging the attention of the government, and whether anything is likely to be done along that line in the near future.

Mr. OLIVER. The two questions of surveys and map making are not, of course, intimately connected, although they are cognate. The question of combining the map making of all the departments under one department has been under consideration, but so far no conclusion resulting in the combination of the work has been arrived at. I am not altogether clear that there is all the advantage in such a proposal that the civil service commissioners seem to think. A railway map is compiled for a specific purpose, it has in view a certain object and with that object the employees of the Department of Railways are thoroughly and especially familiar. A map of the same area of country for the Geological Survey would be very different; that department would be interested in different details and it would be only the general scheme map that would be the same. So in any case, as the greater part of the work upon the map is in the details and as the detail work would necessarily have to be done in the department interested in the particular map, there is not a possibility of combining the work of the departments to the extent the commissioners seemed to think. It is possible to combine it to a greater extent than at present, it is possible that a certain part of the general work on the maps common to all maps covering the same area of country might be done in one branch instead of in several branches, but that would be only a small part of the total work, and would not be the very great advantage that the Civil Service Commissioners seem to think.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may be, and I have no doubt there is, a great deal in what the hon. gentleman observes with regard to the necessary difference of details in maps intended for different purposes. But nevertheless if you had a uniform scientific survey for the whole country in connection with that proposed map-making department, so that the results of the surveys could be made available for the purpose of all the different departments, you would have a system of maps, whether issued by one department or the other, which would be based upon scientific accuracy. It seems to me that this is of very great importance in Canada. The system to which I allude has, I understand, been carried out in most European countries and has been carried out to some extent at least in the United States. It would seem to me that the services of this particular department ought to be utilized as far as possible towards bringing about that very desirable result.

Mr. OLIVER. The astronomical survey is under way. A section of its work is called the geodetic survey. A part of its employment is as my hon. friend has suggested. We have made a small start in establishing fixed points in different parts of the country by which the surveys already made can be checked up and so more accurate maps can be made than has been possible up to the present time. To make such a geodetic survey for a country of such vast area as Canada within any comparatively short period would cost a stupendous amount of money. In discussing this matter, comparison has been made with England or Belgium or some small European country where there is a large tax-paying power and a small area ; but to attempt to apply to the vast area of the Dominion of Canada the same geodetic survey that has been carried to completion in Belgium, would involve a cost possibly much greater than the advantage to be derived, although everybody must admit that it would be an advantage if we could have it We have started a geodetic survey which is at work in the settled parts of the country and which, as I said, will have the effect of making possible a more accurate system of maps and having more accurate knowledge of the surveys that have been made than we have at present. We are asking parliament of course from year to year for supplies with which to carry on this work, but we are not going into it to the extent of undertaking to cover the country within any moderate time The work is so limited in its scope because of the large requirements of money to carry it on that we are subject, I suppose, to criticism from those who think we should have a geodetic survey of the whole country. This is essentially a part of the work of this scientific branch. It is another application of the scientific knowledge which particularly belongs to that branch, which is improved by the scientific research I have mentioned. We expect to have the boundary surveys completed within three of four years, but we will still have need of the same scientific knowledge in carrying forward the work of the geodetic survey, in which all parts of the country are interested and which sometime, no doubt, will be extended over the whole country and the whole country will get the benefit of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose the geodetic survey will be able to go on more rapidly after these boundaries have been delimited ?

Mr. OLIVER. We would then feel justified in asking more money for that purpose, but at the present time, when we are asking so much for the boundary survey, we do not feel justified in doing so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the nature of the survey which has been conducted in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories ?

Mr. OLIVER. The land survey in the west is called a linear survey ; it is merely for the establishment of roads and the setting apart of the country in blocks suitable for settlement. It is approximately astronomically correct but not absolutely. Astronomical correctness is, I might almost say, a secondary consideration, the main thing is to get the country laid out so that people can settle it and use the roads. The geodetic survey will come later and absolutely establish the fixed points in that survey.

Mr. LAKE. I cannot agree with the minister that there is no necessity for an accurate topographical survey of Canada. I think the very example which he has quoted of the two departments having to work over the same ground is in itself an argument in favour of having some organized survey made and the Dominion topographically surveyed. He has merely spoken from the standpoint of the public departments but outside of that of course there are a great many others, the public who want to build railroads or canals who want to get their water supplies or to find out where the timber areas lie, or what parts of the country are capable of irrigation, have now to undertake independent surveys. All those have at the present time to start out on their own account and undertake individual surveys. They have to examine large tracts of country in preliminary surveys and when they find that their first attempts are of no use they have to cast them aside and in this way they sustain a great deal of unnecessary loss. They have to undertake experimental surveys until they find a country that is suitable for their undertaking. The whole of that would be obviated if a topographical survey were instituted and carried on methodically. There appear to be six different departments which are carrying on systems of survey. Those systems of survey must overlap in many particulars. A great deal of the work which the department itself is doing must be lost and there must be a considerable duplication of work. I understand that some of the important bodies which occasionally meet, such as the Royal Society and the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, have strongly recommended to the government that there should be a topographical survey. It would mean an immense saving to the people as well as to the government. I would like to ask the minister if he could give any idea of the amount of money which is spent on surveys by the different departments of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the faintest idea.

Mr. LAKE. I presume that the surveys approximate very nearly $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. OLIVER. The surveys of the Interior Department alone amount to more than $1,000,000.

Mr. LAKE. The surveys of the Interior Department alone ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. We asked for $800,000 last year for land surveys and something over $200,000 for astronomical surveys.

Mr. LAKE. What is the approximate cost per mile of making a topographical survey of country such as we find in Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. A geodetic survey has been in operation for two years and this has cost the country over $50,000. We have run a belted triangulation from Quebec to London, Ont. This triangulation would be the basis of a topographical survey. It will take another year to cover the ground between Quebec and London in order to perfect the triangulation and then the work of the topographical survey will go on. The triangulation fixes the points and the geographical survey fills in the details.

Mr. LAKE. I imagine that a topogragraphical survey cannot be exceedingly expensive. We have had maps supplied to us which were drawn up by the Department of Militia and Defence, very excellent maps, which gave all the natural features of the country and I imagine that such a topographical survey as that would be all that would be needed for this country. I cannot imagine that that could be so very expensive because I do not think that the estimates for that survey in the Department of Militia and Defence are very great. It seems to me that a great deal of the money which we spend on the duplication of surveys is being wasted. How much have these surveys in the Northwest, for which we are paying $800.000 a year, cost per square mile?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that question at the moment. If my hon. friend wants to know what is the total number of acres surveyed in the Northwest by this linear survey I will tell him that it is 120,000,000 acres.

Mr. LAKE. All that country will have to be gone over again some day with a topographical survey. Of course, I agree that it is necessary to get the work done at once by this rough and ready survey which probably will have to be very frequently corrected and which may lead to a good deal litigation. I think that under the present system we are liable to have a great deal of litigation in many parts of Canada from not having a very accurate survey. I cannot help thinking that the minister is making a mistake in not using his influence with the rest of the members of the government to have one general survey department established which would carry on a complete topographical and geodetic survey of the Dominion. It would be a great saving to the government and to the public generally.

Mr. OLIVER. The question my hon. friend raises has been under consideration. The difficulty in the way is the immense area of country the immediate requirements of which in regard to surveys have to be immediately provided for. It is desirable to build a railway in a certain locality and we cannot wait for a geodetic survey in order to build that railway. We have to make a linear survey to provide for the settlement of the country. Although we asked parliament last year for $800,000 and we are asking this year for an equal, or possibly a larger amount, we still owing to the enormous territory and the rapidity of settlement, are unable to provide, in all cases, for the requirements of the people who desire to push out into the farther and farther country. I would be afraid to ask parliament for the money that would be necessary to cover that country within a reasonable time with a triangulated survey such as we have been carrying on in eastern Canada. We could not keep settlers waiting until such a survey could be made to accommodate them. Our area is so great and our needs are such that we must meet these needs as they arise without waiting for a survey which in itself is entirely desirable, but which our circumstances do not admit of our having.

Mr. LAKE. I frankly admit there is necessity for going ahead with the linear survey in the Northwest and that if you want to build a railway into a remote district you cannot wait to have a topographical survey made. But if a topographical survey had been going on for some years past the probability is that the location of the Grand Trunk Pacific in the maritime provinces, for instance, would have been already surveyed and the general route of the railway derived from it so that the necessity would have been obviated of striking out several different experimental lines before you could locate the exact line on which you are to run your railway. In that way the duplication of work would be avoided.

Mr. SPROULE. Article 1 of this treaty provides that an expert geographer or surveyor shall be appointed by each country without delay to more correctly define the international boundary between the Dominion and the United States in the waters of Passamaquoddy bay, and Articles 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 provide for a similar commission. Is it intended to appoint separate commissions for the different sections or will the same commissioners do all the work ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is outside the work of my department, but should think that under the treaty the appointments should be made forthwith. The second last paragraph of article 9 provides :

It is understood that under the foregoing articles the same persons will be appointed to carry out the delimitation of the boundaries in the several sections aforesaid.

Therefore it would appear that one man from each country shall constitute the commission for the whole boundary line, with the exception mentioned in section 4.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister give any idea of how long it will take two men to fix that boundary which is, I suppose, 4,000 miles long?

Mr. OLIVER. I presume that commission would direct the workings of different parties in the different places.

Mr. SPROULE. Would they have subordinate surveyors to do the actual surveying ?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought we were told that one of the most eminent surveyors in the country was actually engaged with his assistants in the work of surveying through the mountains.

Mr. OLIVER. Was that said to-day ?

Mr. SPROULE. No, some years ago.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand it the intention is that the whole of the boundary line, except that part which has been assigned to the Waterways Commission, shall be adjusted by the two commissioners who shall direct the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they remain at headquarters ?

Mr. OLIVER. If in case their personal presence was required at any point I suppose they would go there, but otherwise I presume they would be at headquarters.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not the information that was given us some years ago. The member for Vancouver told us the Americans had their surveying parties out there already, but I saw it stated some time ago that the American parties remained there all winter as it was too expensive to bring them out and that the Canadian parties would join them in the spring.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is perfectly correct in regard to the work of making the surveys ; but under this treaty the commissioners are to see that the work is done and the boundary properly located.

Mr. SPROULE. What surveyors are being sent out to do this work ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are not sending any surveyors out on the surveys that will be necessary under the terms of this treaty. We have not yet asked parliament for the money to enable us to send them out, and we are not of course prepared to send them until parliament votes us the necessary money.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by the demarcation of the boundaries ? Is not that surveying ?

Mr. OLIVER. The surveys for which we are now asking parliament for money are not the surveys to be decided upon by the commission. The surveys now going on are not because of this treaty, but because of a treaty made in former years.

Mr. SPROULE. Who are making those surveys ?

Mr. OLIVER. The names of the surveyors whom we propose to employ under the vote we are now asking the House for are: On the 141st meridian boundary, A. J. Brabazon, D. H. Nelles, F. Lambart ; on the Alaska coast boundary, J. D. Craig, W. F. Ratz, George White-Fraser, F. H. Mackie ; on the 49th parallel, J. J. McArthur, N. J. Ogilvy ; on the New Brunswick and Maine boundary, G. C. Rainboth.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the supervising commissioner ?

Mr. OLIVER. The commissioner to be appointed under the treaty has not been appointed yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Under whose supervision is the work being done that has been going on for some time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. King is directing that survey on behalf of Canada. If a dispute arises, that dispute is to be settled under the terms of the treaty by two commissioners to be appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. They have been working for years, and surely there have been differences of opinion.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what the treaty is for—to adjust those differences of opinion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the minister for an explanation of the decrease of $14,000 in this vote.

Mr. OLIVER. It is due to slackening up the work a little on the 49th parallel.

Salaries of agents and employees, in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $200,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Militia, whether or not it is intended to hold militia camps in the month of June ?

Mr. FIELDING. In the absence of the Minister of Militia I regret I cannot give an answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister available ?

Mr. FIELDING. He is in the city and was present to-day. I do not know where he is at the moment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Who is the government immigration agent in St. Paul ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Holmes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is the government aware that charges have been made in the public press to the effect that certain Dominion lands agents and immigration agents were acting as selling agents of lands for certain lands companies. I have heard that some of the agents in the United States were acting for the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and directing homesteaders to the lands particularly owned by that or some other companies, in whose behalf they were acting. Has the hon. minister any information on that subject ? I brought this matter to his attention some time ago.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I remember my hon. friend bringing that matter to my attention and I made inquiries, but so far have not been able to substantiate the charges made.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Since I brought the question up last, I have received a clipping from the Minneapolis 'Journal' of April 26 containing this advertisement :

Fifty thousand acres of Southern Alberta land for sale in blocks of 5,000 acres up. Canadian office, St. Paul.

That would look as if the immigration agent in St. Paul were acting as selling agent for this Southern Alberta Land Company. At any rate the party who sent me this is fully convinced that he is, and he thinks it would be entirely unwise for immigration agents of the Canadian government to be acting for land companies and throwing the weight of their official position in behalf of any particular land company, a position I heartily concur in.

Mr. OLIVER. Would my hon. friend kindly send me over that clipping ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Has the government as many agents in Great Britain and Europe this year as last and is it the intention to continue having as many ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the same number as last year.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. How many are there?

Mr. OLIVER. Twenty-seven employees of all classes in Great Britain and Ireland and four on the continent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are there not in addition agents specially sent on temporary engagements for three or six months and how many are there ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, something over twenty such agents went last year and we expect to send a similar number this coming fall.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are they subject to the agents already there ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are subject to the orders of the resident agent. Their business is to give personal experience of the desirability of Canada as a field for settlement. So far we have selected successful farmers who came originally from some part of the old country, as we think that the appearance of such and their statements are the best argument we can offer in favour of Canada as a field for settlement.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. On what basis are they paid?

Mr. OLIVER. They are expected to account for their actual expenses in addition to the salary we pay them. We pay them $100 a month for the time they are absent and their actual travelling expenses.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Prince Edward Island). I note that Mr. McLaughlin, who was sent to secure immigrants to the maritime provinces, has only sent one so far to that section, although he has been on the other side two years. The probability is that he is working to promote emigration to western Canada. Have the government changed their idea of having him represent the maritime provinces? What instructions were given Mr. McLaughlin regarding the territory he has to represent when sending immigrants to Canada? The maritime provinces should receive some consideration. I do not think that immigrants should be exclusively sent to western Canada. The government should take some steps to promote settlement in the maritime provinces and Quebec. The agent in the old country is likely to exaggerate the advantages of the western country and to neglect eastern Canada. If the government send these maps to the different schools and other places in the old country to be exhibited, they ought to give due importance to the maritime provinces on those maps, and instruct their agents to send immigrants to eastern Canada as well as to western Canada. I think there should be a more equal distribution of the immigration to this country, and that the immigrants should be told that they will receive just as good treatment and will find just as great advantages in eastern Canada as in western Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to Mr. McLaughlin, he was employed two years ago especially to represent Prince Edward Island in the old country. It was believed that there was in the island a field for immigrants by reason of the rush of the native inhabitants to the west, and that there might be people in the old country who would wish either to become purchasers of farms in the island or tenants. Mr. McLaughlin did work in the old country for about two years, and I regret to say that his efforts have not been successful. At the present time I think he is no longer connected with the Immigration Department. We are considering the subject of dealing further with the question of immigration to Prince Edward Island, as well as to the other maritime provinces. I would like to say that so far as my knowledge goes, the maps we send to the old country or anywhere else give an equal share of prominence and publicity to the island, and give its area according to the best knowledge we have of geography. Recently we have published a further edition of our map of Canada for the use of schools in which we give special prominence to the maritime provinces.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I do not think it would be fair to Mr. McLaughlin to allow the statements of the Minister of the Interior to pass without remark. I do not think it would be fair to any representative of the maritime provinces to say that he did not do his duty.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say Mr. McLaughlin did not do his duty; I said he was not successful.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply, in the same department.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 4, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

TRENT CANAL—WATER LEVEL OF CAMERON LAXE.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. J. D. Reid—asked:

1. Is the government, or any member thereof, aware that the lockmaster at Fenelon Falls is keeping the waters of Cameron lake considerably higher than the legal datum point?
2. Is this action of the lockmaster done by authority of the Department of Railways and Canals?
3. Is it the intention of the government to reduce the waters to datum level?
4. Will the government compensate land owners along the shores of Cameron lake for damages already done?
5. Is it the purpose of the government to further purchase lands on that lake so as to raise the water still higher?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Owing to the unprecedented rainfall during the month of May the water is at present six feet ten inches on the lock-sill at Fenelon Falls; two inches higher than it was at this time last year.
2. The lockmaster's instructions are to the effect that as soon as the flow of water is normal the water is to be held at six feet on the lock-sill at Fenelon Falls.
3. The government proposes to hold the water at the usual level, viz.: six feet on the lock-sill.
4. The government is not responsible for damage done by spring freshets and abnormal rainfall.
5. At the present time the government does not intend to raise the water level at Fenelon Falls; therefore the government does not require any additional lands adjacent to Cameron lake.

IMMIGRATION REGULATION AS APPLIED TO BRITISH SUBJECTS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES asked:

1. Would a British subject, born in Great Britain, but having resided in South Africa since 1900, where he served in the war, be liable with his family for deportation from Canada in case he should ticket first from South Africa to Great Britain and then second, to Canada?
2. Are residents of South Africa, being British subjects, but born in South Africa, liable to deportation from Canada; in case they came first to Great Britain and thence to Canada and on through ticket?
3. Is the government aware that many such are desirous of coming to Canada via Great Britain, the usual steamer route, and after remaining some weeks in Great Britain, come to this country?

4. Is such permissible under the Canadian regulations?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. and 2. No, not if otherwise admissible as an immigrant.

3. No.

4. Yes.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked :

To whom were homestead entries granted for each of the four quarters of 10—17—17, west of the fourth meridian, and on what dates?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

N.E. ¼ of section 10, township 17, range 17, west 4th meridian, Andrew T. Albertson, 18th June, 1907.

N.W. ¼ 10-17-17, west 4th, Oscar F. Herrick, 18th June, 1907.

S.E. ¼ 10-17-17, west 4th meridian, Ronald R. J. Whittaker, 18th June, 1907.

S.W. ¼ 10-17-17, west 4th meridian, Alfred R. Herrick, 18th June, 1907.

LEAD BOUNTIES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to enact that the provision of chapter 31 of the Acts of 1903, 'An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada,' shall, subject to the modifications herein set forth, be extended until the 30th day of June, 1913; that the standard price of pig lead in London, England, referred to in the said Act be hereafter fixed at £14 10s.; and that the provision of the said Act limiting the payment of such bounty to $500,000 in any fiscal year be removed: provided, however, that the total sum to be paid by way of such bounties under the said Act of 1903 and under any Act to be founded on this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $2,500,000.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

DREDGING CONTRACTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Before the orders of the day are called I ask the Minister of Public Works whether tenders have been accepted for dredging contracts and if so what are the contracts ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Tenders have been accepted for certain dredging in Ontario and Quebec. There are some works in Quebec in respect of which tenders were invited and the tenders for which have not been accepted but are under consideration. The tenders for dredging in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are still under consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister lay on the table of the House to-morrow a statement of such tenders as have been accepted ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could do it to-day if the hon. gentleman wishes but he had better leave it until tomorrow.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. J. D. REID.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). I rise to a question of privilege. On my arrival here this morning I noticed in last night's issue of the 'Ottawa Free Press' the following headings on an article :

A Conservative member of parliament got yacht repaired at country's expense.

Dr. Reid of Grenville has received favours from the Marine Department at Prescott—Merwin paid on the repairs to his tug 'Victor' but Conservative member has not made good.

I want to say that this is absolutely untrue. So far as I am concerned the government works at Prescott never did any work on my yacht so far as I know that I have not paid for. I never used their men in any shape or form. But with the characteristic sense of honour of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. J. D. REID. I withdraw it if it is out of order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is an insinuation.

Mr. J. D. REID. If it is an insinuation I withdraw it. I want to say that with the characteristic sense of honour of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries——

Mr. SPEAKER. Am I to understand that the hon. member rises to a question of privilege to explain something personal to himself ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Exactly. This matter has been before the Public Accounts Committee for the last six weeks and I have urged the hon. member for Lunenburg who has charge of it——

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is referring to proceedings before the committee which have not been reported to the House.

Mr. J. D. REID. I asked that this matter be brought up and the Minister of Marine staved it off until I was not present.

Mr. BRODEUR. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker I have no objection to the hon. gentleman making a statement, but as he wishes to be offensive in his remarks I take the point that this matter is under investigation before the Public Accounts Committee and has been postponed until next week.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Grenville is referring to a statement in the public press.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am denying a statement in the public press. This matter will come up in the committee on Wednesday next when I shall be present and I hope the Minister of Marine will be there too so that the question can be gone into thoroughly. In the meantime I state that I deny the whole matter absolutely.

SUPPLY—CALGARY TOWN SITE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). I desire to bring briefly to the attention of the House a question as to the disposition of certain government town sites in the new provinces of the west. The history of these government town sites so far as I can gather is that about the year 1882 the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway entered into a partnership and had joint town sites. Some years after the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway in these town sites was relinquished to the government and the government have gone on transferring from time to time their interests in these town sites to the respective town and city corporations. For example, in the city of Regina the government town site consisted of four sections. A very small portion of this land was used by the city for city purposes and some years ago the government handed over to the city of Regina the balance of the town sites which were not then occupied. The same thing was done in the case of the city of Macleod. So far as I can understand this property was transferred to these corporations as a free gift and without requiring any money to be paid by the municipal corporation in each case The same applies to Moosejaw, to Qu'Appelle, and to Battleford. In the case of Regina this appears to have been a very handsome gift from the government. Some few years ago I saw it stated in the Manitoba 'Free Press' that up to that date the city of Regina had realized over $1,000,000 by the sale of this property. Now, I am not objecting that the government should transfer the interest they have in these town sites to the respective cities, but I would like to know from the government whether the transfer was a sale or a gift. My information is that the respective cities received this property as a gift from the government. I desire to point out to the Minister of the Interior especially that in the city of Calgary in section 14 there still remain in the hands of the government some sixty acres of these old town sites, and if similar property has been transferred to these other cities, then I urge upon the government and upon the Minister of the Interior that the sixty acres in section 14, township 24, range 1, west of 5th meridian, be handed over to the city of Calgary. I make that request on behalf of the city of Calgary. The government some years ago had a special survey made of this property and it was divided into villa lots. In 1902 another survey was made and it was divided into city lots. There are about 243 of these lots and the valuation placed upon them by a government official was from $50 to $250 each. I desire therefore to be informed by the government if they have surrendered their interest in the town sites to Regina, Macleod, Moosejaw, Qu'Appelle and Battleford, and on what terms ? If the land was given as a gift to these cities, I ask the government to grant my request to transfer to the city of Calgary the undisposed of government property in section 14. If the Minister of the Interior desires any further information from the view point I have of the matter I will be very glad to send it to him so as not to take up the time of the House now.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). If the hon. gentleman wants the question properly considered it would be only fair that he should have given me notice that he was to bring it to the attention of the House and to ask a question. As he has not done so he will have to be content with such answer as I can make.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I thought this matter was before the minister for some years, and that applications had been made to the department with respect to it. On the 21st of January, 1907, I asked what property was still undisposed of and the minister answered as reported in 'Hansard': that the villa lots in section 14 remained with the government. Deputations from the city of Calgary have waited on the Minister of the Interior and a great deal of correspondence in reference to this question has passed between him and residents of Calgary.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not dispute that my hon. friend asked a question in January, nor shall I dispute the answer he got, nor am I going to dispute that possibly there is a large amount of correspondence in the department in regard to it. But I humbly submit that if the hon. gentleman wanted his question fairly considered today he would have given me reasonable notice of his intention just as he had to give notice in January of the question he then asked. While this particular question is certainly of importance and requires attention, it is a recognized rule of the House that if an hon. member desires information, or to precipitate a discussion in regard to any matter he shall give notice of his intention so to do. I take it that my hon. friend is not anxious to get an answer to this particular question at this particular time. I can only say that so far as my memory goes the city of Calgary has not communicated with the department asking that these lots be handed over to the city. When the city does make such a request, it will receive every consideration at the hands of the department.

FEDERAL INTERFERENCE IN PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to bring to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals a communication which has been made to me this morning by a reputable person to the effect that the Intercolonial Railway employees in the county of Temiscouata are being coerced and intimidated to vote for the Liberal candidate in the provincial elections there against their will. This is not the first intimation we have had of federal activity in this election. I have already brought to the attention of the Prime Minister the use that has been made of the government steamer 'Champlain'; and while very plausible excuses have been made for the courses taken on two different occasions in the use of that steamer, it can nevertheless be proved that on one occasion Conservatives were refused admission to the steamer for the purpose of attending a political meeting, and that on another occasion it passed a point where there were a number of Conservatives, without calling and where a call would have been made in the usual course. The Minister of Railways and Canals gave me a very frank and satisfactory answer in regard to pressure which had been brought upon the Intercolonial Railway employees in the city of Halifax, and I would like him to take such steps as may be necessary to inform the employees of the Intercolonial in the county of Temiscouata or in any other county, whether in Quebec or anywhere else, that there is no authority for putting or attempting to put any pressure or coercion upon them, that every one of them is entitled to exercise his franchise according to his conscience and his opinion, and that in doing so he has no reason to apprehend any unpleasant results to himself.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Of course, the information given to the House is vague. I can assure my hon. friend that so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, there is no foundation whatever even for the thought that there is any intervention in the provincial election, from a federal source. This is the first I have heard of it. I do not know who is using the influence or upon whom it is being used. The only suggestion that is ever made from the department in regard to any election is that the management want to inform the employees that they are at perfect liberty to vote for whomsoever they like and to take part in an election as voters and enjoy their citizenship as any other citizens.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). With regard to the statement concerning the 'Champlain,' I may be permitted to explain that some days ago we were asked to have the steamer make a trip from Murray bay to Baie St. Paul. We decided that there was no objection to that, provided that a certain deposit were made, in accordance with the rules of the department, and that a charge of I think 5 cents per mile was made to each passenger. I was surprised to hear that somebody was refused admission, because the trip was to be for every person who wished to take it. I may say that after the statement was made in the House some days ago, I made inquiries as to whether or not any persons were refused admission, and the report made to me was to the effect that no person was refused admission. In view of the statement made by my hon. friend to-day, I would ask him to be kind enough to give me the names of those who have complained in order that I may investigate the matter more fully.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not the names. The name of my informant, however, I may give to the minister. It is Mr. Rodolphe Forget, the member for Charlevoix.

Mr. BRODEUR. The statement made by the agents at Quebec is that no person was refused admission. As to the other statement, that the 'Champlain' refused one morning to call at Ste. Irenée, I may say that the wharf there is very hard to make in bad weather, and on that day the steamer was unable to go to the wharf, which is the reason it did not call. I do not know whether there was a meeting or not, but it is mentioned in the timetable that if that wharf cannot be made on any day on account of bad weather, it will not be made. There was no intention on the part of the officers of the boat to prevent any person from going on board.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I give the facts exactly as they were given to me by the gentleman mentioned, who is my informant as to what took place on both occasions.

THE MILITIA CAMPS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether it is the intention to hold militia camps in June this year.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I observed in 'Hansard' the report of my hon. friend's question yesterday, and I asked the adjutant general to send me a memorandum this morning as to the present situation with regard to the camps. I am sorry to say I have not yet received that memorandum. However, I may say that it is our intention to hold the camps as usual. In one case, I forget which, the local militia desired to have a postponement, which of course was agreed to, because it is the rule to consult the convenience of the different regiments in the matter of holding the camps. In another case, that of Kingston, it was discovered that the water supply was doubtful, and therefore a postponement of that camp was ordered until we are thoroughly satisfied as to the condition of the water supply. With regard to another camp, that of Laprairie, a report has been received from the officer commanding in the province of Quebec that the ground at that place is largely covered with water owing to the fact that the St. Lawrence river is unusually high, and that it would be impossible to hold a camp there in the very near future ; so that there is a postponement there. Otherwise, so far as I know, there has been no postponement.

Mr. MacLAREN. Can the minster say whether the Goderich camp on the 16th of June is likely to go on?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So far as I know, it is. I know nothing to the contrary.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the large camp at Niagara likely to go on?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have given all the information I have at present. I hope to have the report of the adjutant general later in the day, and will give it to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister will be good enough then to give fuller information. Can he inform the House what the definite arrangements are as to the assembling of any considerable body of the militia at Quebec in July?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot give that information to-day; but arrangements are being made by General Otter with a view to having a very considerable number, a sufficient number of troops attend at Quebec and take part in the proceedings of the tercentenary celebration. I think I can make a definite announcement on Monday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

REPRESENTATION OF THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John city). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, to go into Committee of Supply, I wish to bring up the subject which I think of importance, more especially to the people of the maritime provinces. I refer to the subject of representation in the House of Commons. In speaking on this matter, I wish to refer more especially to the position in which the maritime provinces are to-day with regard to their representation in this House. This is a matter which has been up before this parliament on two or three occasions already. On each of these occasions it was very ably debated, but so far these debates have not been productive of a decision. The more I have looked into the matter, the more convinced I have become that grave injustice has been done the maritime provinces by the amendments which have been made to the original British North America Act, by reason of which the plan on which confederation was arranged was changed without the people of those provinces having been consulted or having had any opportunity to object. I might remind the House that before confederation this matter was up before the four provinces for a long time. It was discussed on all the public platforms of the country and was the basis on which those, both in favour of and opposed to the proposed plan of confederation, presented their views to the public. That controversy resulted in a certain charter or bond of union being adopted, but that bond has since been changed on two or three occasions without any opportunity having been given the maritime provinces either to object or assent to those changes. As a consequence the time has arrived when the people of those provinces are beginning to realize the position in which they now find themselves. They begin to realize that they are no longer under the bond of union under which they originally entered confederation. The terms of that bond having been changed, the maritime provinces are now liable to a decrease in their representation to which they would not have been liable had those changes not been made. Consequently they feel that they have been deceived and that they are suffering, through no fault or their own, from a grievance which this parliament should remove by seeing that the wrong is no longer permitted to exist. The matter is a serious one. There is no doubt that the feeling of unrest now prevailing will increase rather than diminish and finally develop into an agitation, the end of which no one can possibly foresee.

As regards the campaign which resulted in our adoption of the British North America Act, I have taken some pains to look up that part of it relating to the province of New Brunswick, and I find that at that time the question concerning which the greatest fighting took place was the question of representation in the House of Commons. It was on that question that the anti-confederates founded their strongest arguments and it was concerning it that the fiercest debating took place. In that connection I may say that the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in a speech last session on this matter, rather took too much for granted when he said that the Quebec scheme had been adopted by the people of the maritime provinces. I think he hardly put that matter in an exactly fair position, and in order to be exact, I shall quote the words he used :

If we are, the moment the balance of representation, as determined by population shifts—if we are, the moment the representation of any particular province is consequently reduced, to have from that particular province a claim for the readjustment of the original terms of union, the principle of representation by population, which was solemnly adopted by the Quebec conference, is at once set aside. It is impossible that the terms of the union can be in that respect retained when upon such special and altogether unusual and unique circumstance, such as I have sought to describe, in the distant future with regard to Prince Edward Island, you are to have the whole terms of the Confederation Act set at nought and have everything left to further negotiation and determination between the parties.

I have two objections to make to that statement. The first is that the Quebec scheme was not adopted by our people as stated. The second is that in making our appeal for a readjustment of the original terms of the union, we say that these terms have not been acted up to and that on that ground we have the right to claim just treatment. No doubt the speech of the hon. minister was a very able one, but in my opinion he argued the case rather as a lawyer than a legislator ; and of course, with the law as it stands, we would have to go out of court. Both the Supreme Court and the Privy Council have given adverse decisions, but they gave them based on those amendments which were made to the original charter or bond of agreement and therefore did not adjuciate the case on its merits. With regard to the Quebec scheme, so far as the people of New Brunswick are concerned, the scheme was laid before the electors of that province in 1865 and was voted down by a very large majority. Afterwards in 1866, as I see by the 'Morning Telegraph' of the 20th of March of that year, Mr. Smith, the Auditor General of the day—subsequently I believe the Hon. Albert J. Smith, Minister of Marine and Fisheries—said he would not vote for any scheme which involved the possibility of the interests of New Brunswick being swamped by the rest of Canada. On the 22nd of that month the same hon. gentleman said :

I will go down in the ship rather than consent to representation by population as contained in the Quebec scheme, but I have no objection to supporting it, provided there is a check furnished in the upper House or otherwise which will serve to protect the interests of New Brunswick.

Subsequently in its report of a public meeting held in the city of St. John, when there was a general election pending and when this subject was of course the principal one under discussion, the 'Morning Telegraph,' in its issue of the 21st of April, said :

The Hon. Peter Mitchell at last night's public meeting said the government would not insist on the Quebec scheme of confederation, they would accept such improvements as could be had, and would be willing to allow delegates chosen from both political parties, to go as delegates to the British government to urge such changes and alterations as might meet with the views of the maritime provinces.

All these statements, taken in connection with the fact that the Quebec scheme, as such, was absolutely defeated at the polls, go to show that the people of New Brunswick, at all events, did not accept the Quebec scheme as a basis under which they would join the confederation. The legislature of New Brunswick, on June 26, following, had the suggestion which Hon. Peter Mitchell had made, and which I have just read and passed the following resolution :

Resolved, that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor praying that His Excellency will be pleased to appoint delegates to unite with delegates from the other provinces in arranging with the Imperial government for the union of British North America——

Not on the Quebec scheme, but —upon such terms as will secure the just rights and interests of New Brunswick accompanied with provision for the immediate construction of the Intercolonial Railway. Each province to have an equal voice in such delegation. Upper and Lower Canada to be considered as separate provinces.

I believe that an almost identical resolution was passed by the province of Nova Scotia, with the exception that the Nova Scotia resolution made no reference to the immediate construction of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, the result of all this was the meeting of delegates at London in the conference which is known as the London conference. At that conference certain terms of union were drafted which were afterwards crystallized into law in the form of the British North America Act of 1867.

I do not wish to endeavour to make anything of a legal argument, but it will be necessary for me to refer to one or two sections of the British North America Act in order to show this House and the country the reasons we have for objecting to the present status of the representation of the maritime provinces. The first section I wish to refer to is section 3 of the British North America Act, which is as follows :

3. It should be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's honourable Privy Council, to declare by proclamation that on and after a day therein appointed, not being more than six months after the passing of this Act, the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should form and be one dominion under the name of Canada, and on and after that day those three provinces should form and be one dominion under that name accordingly.

I draw particular attention to the wording of this section, as it proves that the original confederation was formed of four provinces and of four provinces only. Now, section 5 provides :

5. Canada should be divided into four provinces, named Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Section 6 relates to the province of Canada and is as follows :

6. The part of the province of Canada (as it exists at the passing of this Act) which formerly constituted respectively the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada should be deemed to be severed and should form two separate provinces. The part which formerly constituted the province of Upper Canada shall constitute the province of Ontario, and the part which formerly constituted the province of Lower Canada shall constitute the province of Quebec.

Now, in addition to these sections, which, I think, show plainly that the Act of Confederation was to bind in one union four provinces and four provinces only, I will read a portion of section 51, for, one subsection of that section is the string, as you may say, attached to the representation by population scheme. In other words, this section shows that the scheme which was adopted at confederation for the representation of the provinces was not an out-and-out scheme of representation by population pure and simple, but a scheme of representation which had a string attached to it. This is the first part of the section :

On the completion of the census of the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the reprensentation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rule.

Then it goes on to give the number of members that Quebec shall have, and the fourth subsection reads as follows :

4. On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

That means that there shall be no loss of representation unless the proportion which the population of the province bore to the population of the four provinces forming the union should be diminished by more than 5 per cent. Now, I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of hon. members and of the people of this country to the fact that by passing certain amendments to the British North America Act, bringing in the added population of British Columbia, Manitoba and later the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the benefit of that clause was entirely done away with, it became of no effect whatever ; whereas, if this Act had been carried out to its full and proper extent, the province of New Brunswick would not have lost the representative which it did lose. According to our claim, the population of these other provinces should not be added in the interpretation of this British North America Act of 1867, which is the bond and charter under which we entered the union. By adding these in, we lose a representative, and the bond under which we entered the union is discarded and made of no effect. I think that is an important statement; I think it is something that the people of this country should take into consideration; I think it is something that the members of this House should consider very carefully. I believe that ours is a grievance that ought to be redressed. This matter is not a matter of party politics in any shape or form. It is a matter of growing interest to all the people of the maritime provinces, irrespective of party. The appeal we make to this House is for equity and justice, we do not make it to one party more than the other, but to the assembled parliament of Canada.

Now, at the time of this London conference this matter occupied a great deal of attention, and statements were made by leading members of that conference which show that under the saving clause I have just read in this opinion there was no current possibility of the maritime provinces losing their representation. In order to make that plain, I will trouble the House with one or two short extracts from speeches of members of that conference. They have been read before, I have read them myself in this House, but I think under the circumstances it will do no harm to read them again. I would refer to the opinion which Mr. Galt expressed at that London conference :

Having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio.

That was the desire of the conference. They had the idea that the maritime provinces would not increase in the same ratio as the upper provinces, and as a matter of fact they could not do so naturally.

Therefore the lower provinces would have the same they have now unless in the very improbable case of one falling off by five per cent or more. That is a decrease relatively to the whole federation.

Meaning then the four provinces which were attempting to form a union. Mr. Geo. Brown expressed the same views :

The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less, and the lower provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of their representatives.

With regard to these two expressions of opinion it is to be noted that they may possibly have been uttered as arguments to the delegates from the lower provinces to induce them to embrace the scheme which was then offered to them. But we have also the statement made afterwards in 1870 by one of the fathers of confederation, a statement not made as an argument to induce delegates from the lower provinces to join the union, but a statement showing what was the true inwardness and meaning of the British North America Act, 1867 ; I refer to a statement of Sir John A. Macdonald, who said :

Th general purview of the British North America Act, 1867, seems to be confined to the four provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, originally forming the Dominion.

Now, that statement of one of the fathers of confederation contains the full force of the argument which we who come from the maritime provinces have to make in support of our request for relief in this matter. Considering the great interest that was taken by the people of the lower provinces in this matter when it was up for discussion, if they had any idea that it was possible for the basis of union to be changed without their being consulted, can we conceive for a moment that they would ever have consented to unite with the other proinces of Canada to form a union ? I think the question only needs to be asked to be answered in the negative. And yet changes have been made, the British North America Act has been altered, and without consulting these people down by the sea. Now, the Minister of Justice last session did not refer to this aspect of the case at all. He was like the judges of the Supreme Court who gave their verdict on the law as it stood, that is, on all the different parts of the British North America Act from 1867 to 1886 ; they could do no less than give their award on the basis of the whole Act, the different parts being treated as one. But we complain of that very thing, we complain that the Act under which we entered this union was not the Act of 1867 as modified to 1886, but it was the Act of 1867 alone, and that is really the most incontrovertible fact on which we base our claim.

In addition, there took place in 1898, a very important change in the constitution of this country. The province of Quebec had been made, under our scheme of union, the pivotal province of this confederation, because the unit of representation in Canada is the 65th part of the population of the province of Quebec. Now, it must be plain that after such a solemn agreement whereby the representation of the various portions of Canada had been made to conform to one 65th part of the population of Quebec, anything which would enlarge the area, anything which might increase the population of this pivotal province is a matter of very serious importance, and such enlargement ought not to be made without the consent of every other part of the Dominion of Canada which would be affected thereby, and of course there is no part which would not be affected. That Bill was introduced in 1898 by the then Minister of the Interior, the present member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) ; it was introduced in blank, and there was not a word said with this exception. Mr. Sifton said :

The Bill for the purpose of ratifying a conventional boundary on the north and northeast of the province of Quebec, which was agreed upon between the government of the province of Quebec and the government of the Dominion, and ratified by order in council of this government, under date of July 8, 1896. The Bill is not yet drafted, and I ask the indulgence of the House to introduce it in blank.

So this very important Bill was introduced in blank and passed this House without the slightest debate of any kind. It would almost seem, Mr. Speaker, as if on that occasion the spirit Ariel had silently flitted through this House and touched with his wand the eyelids of the members, because they allowed this great and important change to take place in their presence without any protest, even from those who ought to have been the very first to protest, namely, the representatives from the maritime provinces. But that is the way that that Bill was introduced and passed. I know that certain claims are made in regard to the boundaries of the province of Quebec, but the Minister of Justice himself, in his speech last year, stated that, as far as his opinion went, he believed that the northern boundary of Quebec, which the delegates at the London conference of the framers of the British North America Act had in their minds, was the height of land dividing the waters that flow into the St. Lawrence from those that flow into Hudson bay. He had no doubt about that last year and more than that the publications of our own parliament gave that as the delimitation of the province of Quebec in the year 1871. Our own publications showed that the area of the province of Quebec, as understood and printed on the maps, authorized and acknowledged as being correct, was bounded on the north by the height of land to which I have alluded. The result of this added territory must certainly, without the shadow of a doubt, have a very serious effect upon the representation of this country. It must necessarily enlarge the unit of representation. What is the country that has been added to the province of Quebec? It is this large country about which we heard a great deal at the time the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill was before this House. We were told that we had mountains of information with regard to that country. I do not know how much information there really was, but I do understand that the information that is gradually coming to the front, as explorers and surveyors are making their way through there, leads us to believe that a large part of it will be capable of supporting a large population and that there is a large quantity of good agricultural land in it. We also know that from the Abitibi region we have had reports of large mineral wealth, and it is also right that we should take into consideration the fact that in the near future the addition of this enormous area, will have a very decided effect upon the unit of representation. I think that the area of Quebec, by the census of 1871, was 193,555 square miles, and that by the addition to the area which was made by the Act passed in 1898 it became a region of over 351,000 square miles. If, as some state, this country is sterile, what justification have this government and this parliament to go through that enormous area and spend millions and millions of money to build a railway? I take it that was not the idea of those who devised and carried out the building of this railway, that it was not thought that it was a sterile country but that it was a country worth opening up, developing and making the home of a large population. What will be the result if that expectation is realized? All we can look forward to is that the unit of representation which is now about 25,000 will in the comparatively near future increase to as much as 50,000 or 60,000 or even more. What will be the result of that? The result will be that Prince Edward Island would have one representative and perhaps none at all, and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick might have one, two or three; practically we would be reduced to the condition of taxation without representation, and I think I need hardly remind you that the people of this country will not submit to such a position; that is to be free to subscribe to all the expenditure that is necessary to build the public works of the Dominion and support the government of the country, but not to be free to have a word to say as to how these public works are to be built or as to how this expenditure is to be met. The Minister of Justice, in his speech last year, argued that because New Brunswick and Nova Scotia did not formally protest when their representation was reduced, therefore, they considered that they were being treated according to the bond. At page 2168 of 'Hansard' he stated:

> During these years, if there had been foundation for it in the understanding of those who entered the union, there is little doubt that protest and objection would then have been taken, but there was none.

I submit that the inference that the Minister of Justice drew in that statement is not fair or correct, and that the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had no reason whatever to suppose that if they had made such a protest it would have been heeded. As a proof of that statement I might remind the House that in 1905, New Brunswick did protest against the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan being put into the British North America Act so that the Act would apply to them in the same way as if they had been part of the original confederation. Was that protest heeded? No, Sir, no result followed from that protest at all, no heed was given to it and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were placed under the British North America Act as though they had been part of the original confederation.

Now, Sir, the matter of this New Brunswick protest is a somewhat important matter and I am going to bring it to the notice of the House. The matter was considered so important that it was referred to in the speech from the Throne and I am going to read the resolution which was brought in by the then premier, Mr. Tweedie, who is now the governor of the province, and I am going to read a few of the remarks which were made by those who spoke on that occasion. I will first give the resolution as it appears in the New Brunswick assembly debates of 1905. The resolution is as follows:

> Whereas the Judicial Committee of the Provincial Council in its recent decision on the appeal in the representation case, left undecided the question whether in computing the population of Canada, under subsection 4 of section 51 of the British North America Act the population of the territories should be included, and
> Whereas, in the Imperial order in council providing for the admission of British Columbia as a province of Canada, and by the statute which created the province of Manitoba it was provided that the British North America Act, 1867, should apply to them, as if they had formed part of the confederacy as originally constituted, whereby the contention of the government of this province that in construing subsection 4 of section 51 of said Act the words 'population of Canada' mean the population of the four original provinces was greatly and justly prejudiced, and

Whereas, the northern boundary of the province of Quebec at confederation was shown on the authorized maps, and was understood, and recognized to be the height of land between the waters flowing into the River St. Lawrence, and those flowing into Hudson bay, and

Whereas, the parliament of Canada did by the Act 61 Vic., chapter 3, enlarge the limits of the said province of Quebec by the addition to it of a large area to the northward (the area at that time being 193,355 square miles), thereby increasing the territory of said province to 351,873 square miles, an increase of 158,518 square miles, and

Whereas such Act was passed under the authority of the imperial statute, being the British North America Act, 1871, which declares that the parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby, therefore it is resolved,

1st. That in the opinion of this House, the earnest attention of the government of Canada should be drawn to the effect of said order in council, and statute respectively, relating to the admission to the union of British Columbia and Manitoba, and it should be requested to take such action as may be necessary in order to restore the four original provinces to the position in which they would have been, but for order in council and legislation passed subsequently to the British North America Act, 1867, in respect to which such provinces were not consulted, and to which they were not parties.

2nd. That in the Act for the creation of the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan it should not be provided that the British North America Act shall supply to them as if they were in the union originally and the rights of the original provinces as to representation should not be affected by the creation of such new provinces.

3rd. That in justice to the other provinces, particularly New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which have no opportunity for enlargement of their areas, it should have been provided, and should now be provided that for the purposes of representation the boundaries of the province of Quebec, the population of which is the basis of representation, should be deemed to be as they were at the time of confederation, or that some just and equitable provision should be made to save the other original provinces, and also Prince Edward Island, from loss of representation; and further.

Resolved, that a copy of the foregoing resolution signed by the Clerk of this House, be forwarded to the Secretary of State, with the request that the same be laid before His Excellency the Governor General, and that a copy be also forwarded to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

There was a protest entered by a province of this Dominion against the continuance of this injustice to the maritime provinces and yet notwithstanding the opinion of the Minister of Justice that protest was unheeded and the grievance unredressed. I may say that the Hon. Mr. Tweedie on that occasion made a very strong speech in support of the motion and he referred among other things to the lack of interest in provincial matters which is sometimes taken by former members of the local legislatures who happen to be transferred to the higher sphere of the Dominion parliament. He said :

I feel that this is a question which should be discussed by the members on both sides of the House, in the fullest manner and with the single eye to the interests of the province. It is worthy of note that sometimes gentlemen who are very heartily in favour of provincial rights when members of the provincial legislature, become strangely indifferent to them, when they go to Ottawa. I remember that Messrs. Fielding and Blair were very prominent in urging the rights of the maritime provinces at Quebec conference, in 1887, but when they got to the larger field they apparently forgot that they were pledged to support these interests.

Further he said :

At the time of confederation Quebec had certain well defined boundaries. According to the census of 1871 it had an area of 193,555 square miles. Quebec is the province by which the representation of the other provinces is regulated. In 1898 an Act was passed which extended the boundaries of Quebec so that it contained 351,000 square miles in addition of 158,000 square miles to its territory. This territory thus added to Quebec is that through which the Grand Trunk Pacific will pass and which we may expect to become populous in the future. The result will be to diminish our representation in a way never contemplated by the British North America Act.

During the debate the then Attorney General of New Brunswick, now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), who represented the province before the Supreme Court and also before the Privy Council in the matter, supported the resolution strongly and used this language :

I have never entertained the slightest doubt that the fathers of confederation in framing their scheme of representation intended that it should be confined to the four original provinces of Canada, and that if other provinces were admitted it should be on terms. In that view I was fortified by the statement of one of the greatest statesmen of Canada, who was himself one of the fathers of confederation, and who took a leading part in bringing it about. I refer to the late Sir John A. Macdonald who in his report of the 29th December, 1870, on the admission of the Northwest Territory, said :

'The general purview of the British North America Act of 1867 seems to be sufficient to the four provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, originally forming the Dominion.

Again he said :

When British Columbia was admitted into the union it was stipulated that her representation should be increased under the terms of the British North America Act, and that this Act should apply as if she had been one of the original provinces of confederation, the same thing was done with respect to Manitoba. Now what has been the effect of this? It is that you must construe the British North America Act as if these provinces had been in the union in 1867.

I call the attention of the House to these words of the Minister of Public Works :

If that is so. the compact of confederation has been violated by legislation and by order in council without our being consulted. Surely the authorities at Ottawa should see that this wrong is remedied.

If the population of the territories and of British Columbia had been excluded, New Brunswick would not have lost a representative.

Later during the debate Mr. Pugsley said:

Some may say it will be difficult to have the wrong done us righted, but I think that it can be. I have faith in sense of justice of those administering the affairs of the Dominion.

Later on, in concluding his speech, he said :

I can only repeat what I said yesterday that the province of New Brunswick entered into confederation with a Quebec with certain defined boundaries, and that it was never contemplated that a Quebec should be created double the size of the original province. Yet Quebec is the pivotal province upon which the representation of this province depends. I feel that they have done us a great wrong, yet I do not despair but that when the matter is brought to the notice of government and the parliament, some steps will be taken to see that this injustice is not continued.

These are the words of the Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick at that time, and now the hon. gentleman sits in this House as Minister of Public Works, and has an opportunity, which I hope he will put into effect, of urging these views for adoption by the government of which he is a member. He has the whole matter thoroughly well grounded in his mind, and he is now in a position, I think, to force these views on this government with some hope of ultimate success. He knows as well as I do that this matter is growing in intensity of interest in the maritime provinces, and that unless it is satisfactorily adjudicated upon at an early day there will come a time when it will probably be more difficult of satisfactory adjustment. In the assembly of New Brunswick there were no two opinions on either side of the House in regard to this matter. The leader of the opposition at that time, Mr. Hazen, supported the stand taken by the government. Among other things he said :

I do not expect to be able to add anything to the arguments that have been advanced, but I think that it is extremely desirable in a matter of this importance that we should not give more perfunctory assent to the resolution, but should show our sympathy with it. I say this on behalf of myself and the other gentlemen on this side of the House of whom I am the leader.

Further on he said :

I sympathize entirely with the position taken by the members of the government with respect to this resolution, and I desire to say this emphatically so that it will not be possible for any one to say that there was a dissenting voice in this legislature.

So that it was not a party question at all. Mr. Hazen said further :

It cannot be successfully contended that we have not been affected by the increase of Quebec. If the attention of parliament is now called to the matter and to their right to legislate, it seems to me that any government should be willing to apply a remedy as it can be done under the provisions of the Imperial Act of 1871.

In conclusion he said :

In conclusion I may say that I sincerely trust that some practical good will come out of this discussion, and it will give myself and my colleagues on this side of the House great pleasure to strengthen the hands of the government in this matter.

Several other members spoke on the subject, but I will refer to only one more. The Hon. Mr. Hill, after going into the history of the confederation campaign, said :

What will be our condition if the reduction in our representation continues as we fear it may? It will mean taxation without representation. We, as Anglo-Saxons, and as the descendants of those who fought for responsible government, will never submit to that. If it should ever come to pass that we have to contribute to the vast expenditure to build up the west, and we with little or no influence in the councils of the country, if we find our importance buried under a swarm of Doukhobors, Galicians and Russian Jews, all of whom count in the census we may have to turn to the big brother to the south of us.

Later on he said :

It is not safe to conclude because the sky is cloudless to-day, that we will have no more storms. The United States were lost to Great Britain because the people of these colonies were denied representation in the parliaments of the country. So may it be if our people find our representation gone, and our influence nil in this confederation and our people may find it necessary to look to the great nation to the south.

The short extracts which I have made from the speeches delivered in that debate make it abundantly clear that the whole legislature of New Brunswick, and we might naturally consider that that would mean the whole people of the province, were extremely interested in this question and considered it a really vital question, and such it is, as is becoming more evident as the days go on. It is said that there is a remedy for every wrong. If that is true in this case, how can that remedy be obtained? There is no use of our going to the courts. The courts have already decided against us, not on what we consider our claim, but on an amended Act to which we never gave our consent and on which we were never consulted. So that it is not to the courts of law that we must go, but to the parliament of Canada, where not only Acts of parliament, but the equity and justice of the case as well may be considered, and it is on the equity of the case, on the fact that the people of the maritime provinces have not had fair play, in so far as the legislation of the imperial parliament is concerned, but that these British North America Acts have been altered and changed to our disadvantage and without our being consulted that we base our claim. Therefore, it is that we come to this parliament asking for relief, and I feel satisfied in my own mind that that relief must come at some time in the near future from this or some other parliament. On the 13th of February last, I placed on the Order Paper the following resolution :

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient to amend the terms of the British North America Act, 1867, relating to the representation of the several provinces of Canada in the House of Commons, so as to provide that the number of representatives of any province shall not at any time be reduced below that which was assigned to it when it entered the union.

It is not my intention to move this resolution to-day, as the House is small, a great many of the members, especially from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec being absent. But I would offer the idea contained in this resolution as an equitable means of settling this trouble—a means which would take away the grievance which the lower provinces have at present, due to the fact that the bond of union has been broken without their consent. The carrying out of such an idea could not, I think, meet with any objection, from the provinces of British Columbia or the prairie provinces, or Ontario, and I cannot see any reason why any objection should come from them. In any event, I offer the suggestion as one way by which the wrong from which we claim we are suffering will be righted. The idea is not a new one. When British Columbia entered confederation, she entered it on the condition that although her representation might be increased, it could not be decreased. That provision of the law which was made in favour of British Columbia we ask should be applied also to the other provinces. I understand that it applies also to the Commonwealth of Australia, so that in applying it to the other provinces of confederation, we would be doing no violence whatever to historic precedent.

There is one more point I wish to make. The Act of 1871 authorizes the parliament of Canada to increase the boundaries of the various provinces under mutually agreeable circumstances, on condition that when that is done any of the provinces which might be affected thereby—and that is a very important provision—should be given redress. That is a provision which this parliament did not act up to when it enlarged the boundaries of Quebec; and there can be no doubt that it would be utterly impossible to make any objection to the statement that when the boundaries of Quebec were enlarged, every other province was affected thereby. That section read as follows :

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

So that the parliament of Canada is given authority, under the Act of 1871, to make such arrangements in connection with the other provinces as would do away with any injustice will be more vividly brought to the minds and knowledge of the people in the near future than it is at the present.

I shall say no more on this subject at present. I think it is one which this parliament should take into its most serious consideration. The people of the maritime provinces are becoming awake more and more every year to the seriousness of the condition in which they are as regards their representation. These provinces have no possible means of expanding or extending their boundaries. The province of Prince Edward Island is entirely surrounded by water. The provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are surrounded by water on three sides, namely, by the Atlantic and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and on the other side by the province of Quebec and the State of Maine. There is therefore no possible chance for us to enlarge our boundaries, so that we are in the position of having to fight for what we believe to be our own; and I have not the slightest doubt that that aspect of the case will appeal to the people of the lower provinces, and that they will become more and more united on this subject, with the result that some day, unless this great grievance be rectified, it will be the rallying point around which the people of these provinces will act together and so present a united and strong front to this parliament, which appears to be at present necessary in order to cause this parliament to make that change for which we are appealing and which it is only just and right we should obtain.

Mr. O. TURGEON (Gloucester). Although the remarks made by my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) bear on a question which is undoubtedly of great interest to the people of the province from which I come, I regret that he has chosen a time to bring that question forward when public opinion is concentrated on matters of more practical and immediate usefulness. The question is an academic one to-day and may not appeal to the people as urgently perhaps as the hon. gentleman desires. In the meantime, although my hon. friend has cited elaborate documents in support of his contention, I deem it my duty to declare that, although I come from the same province, I am not in accord with the request made by him. It is possible that I may have to meet the censure of many of my colleagues from the province of New Brunswick as well as the other maritime provinces for the stand I take; but as I am well known, in my own province at least, for having always had the courage of my convictions, I consider that on this occasion I am bound to give publicity to the convictions I have entertained for a lifetime and which I have lost no occasion to make known to the people of the constituency I have the honour to represent and its immediate surroundings.

In opposing any change in our constitution to-day, if I am wrong it is due to an excessive administration of the constitution of the British North America Act. I do not see why any one Canadian to-day should entertain other than an unmeasured admiration for the constitution we have enjoyed for the past forty years. The stand I take is due to the great confidence I have in the resources, wealth, capabilities and possibilities of the maritime provinces which, I am confident, will one day experience an industrial revival and take a leading place in the Dominion. When that day comes, and it is not far distant, I am convinced that the maritime provinces will acquire all the representaton we have lost during the first years of confederation. That we have lost any measure of representation is not due to any defect in the constitution but rather, let us frankly admit, to the lack of energy which the maritime provinces have shown in their own development. The time has come when we should stand together, not so much to look to the precise interpretation to be given to the statute, but to work together as one man for the development of our resources and the improvement of our means of transportation, which will give us the wealth and population that we lack to-day. I may, however, claim also that I am not altogether alone in the maritime provinces, and especially in New Brunswick, in entertaining the idea that we should stand by the Act of Confederation. I know a good many old statesmen and old journalists in New Brunswick, men who have given to their country the best years of their lives, who to-day share my views; and I am sure I have their sympathy when I voice their patriotic warning to the people of the smaller provinces, of the smaller bodies in the confederation to be careful how they depart from the terms of the British North America Act.

Confederation was reached only through great mutual concessions. The hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Daniel) has stated, with due appreciation of their importance, the aspirations that were entertained by the leaders of the people at that time. But every province made its share of concessions, moderating its own claims and merging its local aspirations in those of the whole of British America ; and each province received in return privileges which should fairly and equitably balance her rights and interests when weighed in the great national scale of the Dominion. The happiness and permanency of the new-born nation was the common desire which led to the concessions of local interests and made the union possible, and towards which every constructive element was set in motion. Our representation is not only the representation in this House, though it was upon this subject that such strong contentions were put forward at the Quebec conference and at the Charlottetown conference, as well as at the London conference, their proposal of representation by population as a condition sine qua non of union. The people of the maritime provinces, on the other hand, brought under consideration the Intercolonial Railway as a condition sine qua non of union. While it was arrived at that there should be representation by population in this House, and that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway should be carried through, the fathers of confederation looked to further protection for the people of the smaller provinces and provided for that protection by permanent and equal representation in the upper chamber of this parliament of Canada. I claim that to-day the representation of the Canadian people is not merely the representation in the House of Commons, or the representation in the Senate, but the aggregate representation in these two chambers, which together form the parliament of Canada. Our representation in these two Houses are so closely allied that you cannot change one without changing the other ; you cannot destroy one without destroying the other. The texture of our parliamentary representation is so closely interwoven, so intimately united, that if you break even one of its filaments the whole fabric falls in shreds. The representation in this House was a question well understood and well discussed in the maritime provinces, not less in New Brunswick than in either of the others. It was because of the expected future development of the west and increase of its population that the people of the province of New Brunswick, as well as those of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, hesitated to enter into confederation. The only means by which that hesitation was overcome was the provision of permanent equal representation in the Senate. I do not mean to say that the Senate was established for the purpose of giving the smaller portion of the Dominion that representation; but it was found that the only means of counterbalancing, as we may say, the position of the weaker provinces in this parliament would be by giving them further security in the upper chamber, which security was granted at that time. My hon. friend from the city of St. John has claimed that the people were taken by surprise, that they were not aware of what was to take place, that they did not know the position in which the maritime provinces would find themselves after confederation. He has cited as authorities men like the late Sir Albert Smith, who had been an opponent of confederation, to show that the people of New Brunswick were not in accord with the system of representation by population in this House, I might claim that this same Sir Albert Smith became one of the most ardent champions of the constitution from the moment that constitution was adopted by the people of Canada, and that he is on record as having held as sacred the very principle of representation by population in this House, even though the representation of his own province was put on a small minority. I might also show that no greater advocate of the present constitution ever arose in New Brunswick than another who had also opposed that constitution before it was proclaimed, Hon. Timothy Warren Anglin, who was first representative in this House of the constituency which I have the honour to represent to-day. It is true that British Columbia was admitted to confederation under a statute by which it was provided that she should not suffer from change in the proportion of population. It may also be placed in contradiction to the position of Prince Edward Island, which came in the next year, but under a statute by which her representation was to be subject to the spirit of the clause of the British North America Act in every point. The introduction of British Columbia into the confederation under a statute by which her representation was not to be decreased, was precisely the fact which awakened Canadian opinion, I might say, to the necessity of holding firm to the principle of representation by population.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. TURGEON. Mr. Speaker, before recess I was endeavouring to show the consensus of opinion which existed at the time of confederation in the maritime provinces as well as in the older provinces when it was proposed that the principle of representation by population should be accepted by the people of New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces provided that equal representation should be given to the maritime provinces in the upper chamber of the parliament of Canada. I have only to refer to the discussion which took place at the time, and which is concisely reported in Pope's confederation documents to find that it was always the aim of the 'fathers of confederation' to give all due protection to the people of New Brunswick and the maritime provinces. While the people of New Brunswick, of the maritime provinces and the other provinces, as well as the fathers of confederation, were anxious to reach a completion of the negotiations leading up to confederation, while they were even anxious to consummate the idea of securing the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, which would bind the maritime provinces to the provinces of the west, Sir Leonard Tilley himself would have gone back to his province without the Intercolonial Railway if he had not had the assurance that the people would get fair representation under the system of representation by population, if not by equal representation in the House of Commons, at least by the permanency of the representation which would be given them in the upper chamber of this parliament. You will find that Sir John Macdonald, in addressing the delegates from the provinces who were met together at Quebec, said:

> In order to have no local jealousies and all things conciliatory, there should be a different system in the two chambers. With the Queen as our sovereign, we should have an upper and a lower House. In the former the principle of equality should obtain. In the lower House the basis of representation should be population, not by universal suffrage, but according to the principles of the British constitution. In the upper House there should be equality in number. The population of Upper Canada is 1,400,000, Lower Canada, 1,200,000, Lower provinces, 750,000. The rate of increase of population in Canada must be greater in future than in the maritime provinces. We considered at Charlottetown that Upper Canada should have twenty members, Lower Canada twenty and the maritime provinces twenty. If not politically united they should still have the same aggregate representation.

You see by that statement that in order to counterbalance the representation of other provinces in the confederation it was proposed that equal privileges should be granted to the people of the maritime provinces in the Upper House. We find that Sir Charles Tupper, the most influential representative of the people of his province at the time, said in the discussion which took place in London :

In the maritime provinces we felt that the great preponderance of Canada could only be guarded against by equal representation in the legislative council.

There was no doubt that the people of the maritime provinces at that time were aware, as we are to-day, that there would be a great preponderance of influence in the west in the future by reason of the immense increase in the population which was bound to take place. It is owing to such an apprehension that the people of the maritime provinces were reluctant for a while to accept the terms offered them by the people of the western provinces. But from the moment that confederation was un fait accompli the very same men who had taken objection to the system of representation by population, who had objected to the terms of confederation, immediately lent their patriotic assistance to the movement in order that every thing might proceed smoothly towards a recognition of the status in which the people have been placed. Our people who are moving for a change in the constitution have always been pleased to quote what has taken place in British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. British Columbia, it is true, was admitted into confederation later on with a fixed representation of six members but that representation was increased under the provisions of the British North America Act. At the same time while we might say that the introduction of British Columbia was against the terms and spirit of the constitution at the time, we see a good deal of difference between the terms upon which British Columbia, with its large territory and immense resources, was admitted and the terms upon which the small province of Prince Edward Island, with a confined area and with less possibilities for the further, was admitted. The fathers of the confederation had determined that the maritime provinces together would have the same permanent representation in the Senate as the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

The provinces of Quebec and Ontario were given a representation of twenty-four members in the Senate while the maritime provinces with a much smaller population were also allotted twenty-four senators and it was agreed that out of these twenty-four senators when Prince Edward Island entered confederation she should have four of the number. In 1872 British Columbia came into confederation and that province with her great territory and immense resources was only given three senators, which shows conclusively that the fathers of confederation always maintained proportionate representation in the Senate as protection for the smaller provinces. British Columbia with a large territory and great resources was bound to increase in population, and the terms of her union provided that her representation in the Commons was not to be diminished. When the British Columbia Act of union was submitted to the House the representatives from New Brunswick and others who had been urging before the people their apprehension as to the representation of the smaller provinces when other members entered the confederation, pointed out this danger in parliament. The Hon. T. W. Anglin, the first representative in this House of the constituency which I now have the honour to represent, and who through his position in the legislature as representing St. John, and who through his great newspaper the St. John 'Freeman' wielded immense influence throughout the maritime provinces and in New Brunswick especially : he was the first to protest against the admission of British Columbia on the basis of a representation of members already existing. He said as reported in the debates of 1871 :

He would not object to the admission of British Columbia to confederation were not the fundamental principle of the constitution trampled upon in the matter of representation.

In the opinion of Mr. Anglin the representation of British Columbia should have been made subject to the constitution as found in the British North America Act. Sir Albert Smith who then represented Westmoreland in this House took exception on the same point and he said :

There were two very important considerations and one of them was that there was a great departure from the principle of the constitution in the matter of representation.

Sir A. T. Galt, who had been one of the leading fathers of confederation said :

He depreciated interference with one of the principles of our constitution, namely, representation by population, by this resolution. He indicated the evils of admitting colonies or territories on the footing of present members of the confederation.

While the statute admitted British Columbia with a representation which was not to be decreased, that conclusion was arrived at by the members of the government no doubt owing to the great possibilities of that province and the certainty that its population would continue to increase. However, the representatives of the maritime provinces and of New Brunswick declared themselves against the introduction of British Columbia under such conditions. When in the following year the smaller province of Prince Edward Island was admitted to confederation we find that she was submitted to the conditions of the British North America Act even in her representation in this House of Commons. A few years before Prince Edward Island had refused to come into confederation under that system of representation, but time had wrought a change in public opinion and at the time of the union they were willing to enter under such terms, a condition which was no doubt rendered necessary by the opposition of the leading representatives of New Brunswick and the maritime provinces when the year before British Columbia had been admitted on the basis of representation of present members. If we are now to endeavour to change the representation of the smaller provinces in the House of Commons, would we not put ourselves in a position to lose that permanency and that equality and that protection which we enjoy to-day in our representation in the Senate. If to-day we are to endeavour to change our representation in this House may it not be that the members from western Canada would endeavour to change the representation which we enjoy in the Senate.

If we insist that in this House our representation shall be based on an electoral unit of 17,000 or 18,000 instead of 25,000, which is the present unit, and which in the future may be 35,000, then it may be that the people of the west would come to the conclusion that we have lost our right to protection in the Senate, and the maritime provinces would, therefore, be in no better position so far as protection in the parliament of Canada is concerned than they are to-day. If to-day we ask the people of the west to extend their sympathy to us so as to give us what we have lost naturally under the terms of confederation, we may open an adverse current of opinion in the larger provinces which may place us in a worse position than we are in by the loss of representation which we have suffered. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that we should stand by the constitution. The constitution should be the guide of our patriotism; we should cling to it as to our only plank of salvation. We have stood by the constitution in the past. We in New Brunswick, the minority in New Brunswick especially, have stood by the constitution; we have suffered in years gone by for the constitution and in our very sufferings we have learned to admire, to love and to cherish it. We have appealed to the constitution in other moments of danger when provincial rights were assailed; we appealed to the constitution not very long ago when we formed new provinces in the west; we have stood upon the rock of the constitution, and to-day we should place our feet firmly upon that rock; we should maintain and preserve intact the British North America Act and allow time to so harden the mortar and the cement that the materials may cohere and combine to resist all attempts at changes out of a mere spirit of novelty.

Stability is better than uncertainty. We are building a great nation. We have since confederation made Canada a great nation under the present constitution. We have gone ahead in progress and prosperity at a greater rate than any other nation of the world. Our constitution as it exists has created a national sentiment all over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We want stability to-day more than ever. We are inviting people to come and settle on our fertile plains, to develop our resources. We are inviting them from the British Isles, from the continent of Europe, from the United States, whence they come as fast as steam power can bring them. We want to create a nation which will remain a Canadian nation. We cannot tell after all, what the aspirations of those people may be. They may be varied; their desires may be excessive; they may possibly not recognize limitations. We should let people know, as they come and before they come, that Canada is ruled by a stable and inviolate constitution which will for all time resist attacks not warranted by wisdom or by circumstances. We should certainly put ourselves in a position to withstand in the future every attempt to change the constitution. As I said, in the few words with which I opened my remarks, if I am in error in opposing any change in the constitution which might for the moment appear to be of benefit to my province, I say that a temporary good in the destinies of a nation, especially a nation yet in its formative state, with tendencies to disunion or disturbance, is implicitly a wrong. Therefore I say that we should stand by the terms of our constitution which is an object of admiration to other nations.

On every occasion that this subject has been brought before the House, I have heard members from different provinces, more particularly the province from which I come, quote from the constitutions of other countries which would seem to commend themselves to their judgment. I do not see why we should not recognize as much of wisdom, as much of intelligence, as much of patriotism in the constitution of Canada, which was framed by a number of men assembled together at a moment when they were moved by the loftiest possible patriotism—a constitution which has been the admiration of other people, and which should be our admiration every day of the year. I regret as deeply as my hon. friend from St. John the loss by the province of New Brunswick of two or three representatives in this House. But would he and his friends think that the provinces by the sea would be more secure in the future, with two or three more representatives in this House, which is bound before the end of the century to have 300 or 350 members, if the people of the west should at that time claim some larger representation for their provinces in the House or in the Senate? I have always been opposed to these changes in the constitution.

My hon. friend this morning made allusion to the position taken by the New Brunswick legislature some three or four years ago, in asking that some steps should be taken to have this wrong, as they called it, righted. The contention of the legislature at the time was, not that we should have a new constitution, but that the Dominion of Canada meant, so far as representation in the House of Commons was concerned, only the four original provinces which came into confederation. For my part, believing as I do that Canada should be compared in its origin to a growing tree. Canada meant the provinces that came in at the time of confederation together with all the territory that was to come in afterwards. It was not the Act of the smaller provinces of the east alone; it was the Act of British North America in toto. The courts have decided that the word Canada did not mean only the four original provinces, but all the provinces that have come in or that may come in in the future. Therefore that agitation has ceased, as the Privy Council has declared that the contention of the provinces could not be sustained.

I have full confidence that the maritime provinces are able to hold their own in this great confederation, in the development that we must expect in our resources, not merely the resources of the sea, which are inexhaustible, not merely the resources of the forest, which are great and powerful, not merely the resources of the soil, which are immense, but the resources of the undersoil, the resources of coal and iron, which have proved, in recent discoveries, to be the very richest in North America. The development of these resources is bound to bring population and capital to this country. I repeat that if the maritime provinces have lost representation in this House since confederation, it is not so much due to the constitution as it is due to our own lack of energy in the development of our resources. I place no restriction upon the possibilities of development in the maritime provinces. We have not perhaps made the same efforts for the development of our resources and the keeping of our children at home as have been made in the west. But a new era has begun, our young children have been taught to see their opportunities at home, and I have no doubt that our population will soon reach the point it ought to have reached before now, and we will then be entitled to a larger representation in this House. It is a fact which I am sorry to mention, but which is unquestionable, that since confederation until the last census two-thirds of our young men left our territory. Of late, however, we have been developing our own resources, our young men are finding more attractions at home, our population is beginning to increase, and in a few years we shall be in a position to recover our loss of representation. It is better for the representatives of New Brunswick to encourage a movement in that direction, to excite the patriotism of our young people, and induce them to remain at home and give the benefit of their labours to their own country instead of to a foreign land. If we have not made greater advance, the blame rests with ourselves, and I take my share of the responsibility. But if any efforts of mine in the district where I live have had the result of inducing our people to remain at home, if they have been the means of preventing some families from emigrating to the republic to the south, I think I have accomplished some good for my country. The present rate of emigration into the western provinces cannot continue, and I have no doubt that the maritime provinces, as their population increases, will be able not only to keep their present representation, but regain what they have lost. Let me, in this connection, draw attention to the fourth subsection of section 51 of the British North America Act, which provides:

> On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained, at the then last census, to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

So that the representation of any province is to be determined by a comparison of the last census with the one previous. But I claim that with the increase of industry and population in the maritime provinces, we shall soon be in a position to recover lost ground and regain the representation we have lost.

I therefore submit to my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) that he should join me in the patriotic endeavour to have our resources developed as rapidly as possible and thus keep our people at home. I would ask him to join me in calling the attention of the provincial governments, as well as the federal government, to the necessity of giving the maritime provinces all the transportation facilities to which they are entitled and which cannot fail to bring about a revival of industry and make our provinces the richest in the Dominion. I submit that we should direct our energies, not to obtaining a change in the constitution, but to the development of our own resources. Our resources are more lasting than those of the west because we have not only the resources of the soil but of the under-soil. We have the coal and the iron, which are every day becoming greater of greater necessity. Year after year larger quantities will be required for the purposes of the west. Only lately an iron mine at Bathurst, in my constituency. which has been proved by the Department of Mines to be one of the most valuable in the country, was sold for $80,000, and will be developed, and we have other mines existing in other parts of the province, some of them close perhaps to the constituency of my hon. friend. We have also other sources of wealth and what we require is greater transportation facilities. Let us urge on the government the improvement of the Intercolonial Railway in every way possible. Let us urge the improvement of its road bed from Moncton to Halifax. Let us insist on the acquisition by the government of many small branches which should belong to the Intercolonial Railway in order that they may be better equipped and give better revenue and furnish greater facilities to the districts through which they run. Let us unitedly ask for the further improvement of our harbours along the sea coast, from which transportation can be made across the ocean. For my part I believe that whether we be twelve or thirteen or fifteen members from the province of New Brunswick, we have no need to fear anything from the western representatives. I believe that every member of this House, whether from the east or the west, as soon as he enters this sanctuary of the Canadian people, feels himself animated with a sense of justice and British fair-play. I for one see greater danger in changing our consitution. If we change the representation in this House, we shall be called upon, in a few years, to change the representation of the upper House. In the upper House, we have our protection. A great movement has grown up lately for a change in the upper House. For my part I am as adverse to a change in the upper House as to a change in this House, for, as I have already said, our parliamentary representation is our representation in both houses of parliament; if we gain in one we shall lose in the other.

I do not wish to enter upoa n discussion of the question of maintenance of the Senate or changes in the Senate ; I say we should, first of all, maintain the protection which is given to the maritime provinces by our representation in the Senate—not that the Senate was created for the sole purpose of giving that protection, for it was created as the repository of mature wisdom, sober judgment and freedom from the turmoil of popular sentiment, but it was also so arranged that the smaller provinces should have in that body such representation as would afford them protection which they may lack in this House. Therefore, I say to my hon. friend from St. John that I, for one, as a representative of the province of New Brunswick, representing as I do a constituency which stands equally rich in resources of the sea and resources of the land, that I care not whether the province of New Brunswick has twelve members or fourteen members provided that of the Canadian tree I get the shelter and the shade.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) that the representation of the maritime provinces in this House is a question of the utmost importance. The maritime provinces are suffering under a wrong which is no fault of their own. But our constitution is not unchangeable like the laws of the Medes and Persians. We already have four amendments to the constitution made by the imperial parliament, and there is no reason why, if circumstances have changed since confederation, further changes should not be made. I think that no harm would be done by giving to the maritime provinces the same representation they had at confederation and securing it to them for all time in the same manner as such representation was secured to British Columbia when it entered confederation. I do not think it will be necessary to make a change in the representation in the upper House. It is true that the last speaker has said that the gentlemen who composed that House are supposed to be men of mature wisdom and sober judgment. The probability is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turgeon) fills the Bill to a T and that he looks forward, when tired of the turmoil of elections, he will take his rest in the upper Chamber.

Mr. TURGEON. No hope.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The hon. gentleman may not look for it now, but, perhaps, in the course of ten or fifteen years he may be glad to be clear of running around the country at election time. The constitution of this country, like the constitution of the United States, is quite different from what it was originally. Take the amendments to our constitution made since 1867—the amendments of 1871 and those following—and you will find that the changes made have been very important indeed. The constitution of the United States to-day you would not know to be the same as that which was passed by the first federal congress. The conditions changed and it became necessary to change the constitution to meet the new state of affairs. In the same way, it is necessary in the interest of the maritime provinces that, if the constitution allows their part of their representation to be taken away, the constitution should be changed so as to put them in the same position as that in which they were before. Prince Edward Island entered the confederation in 1873. That province would not enter in 1867, because the terms proposed for the admission to the union did not meet with the approval of its people, and so they kept out of confederation for nine years after the first proposals were made. And on what ground? The ground was this very principle of representation by population, which they were not prepared to accept. They told the other provinces that they would not accept that proposition. The resolution which was adopted at Quebec by the conference based the representation in the House of Commons on the population as determined by the official census every ten years. It says:

The basis of representation in the House of Commons should be population as determined by the official census every ten years; and the number of members at first should be 194, distributed as follows:

Upper Canada	82
Lower Canada	65
Nova Scotia	19
New Brunswick	15
Newfoundland	8
Prince Edward Island	5

Now, the imperial government was very anxious that Prince Edward Island should come into the union, and despatches passed between the provincial government and imperial government with reference to the matter. The government of the Prince Edward Island informed the imperial government that they would not accept these clauses of the resolutions passed at the Quebec conference. The imperial government, being anxious, sent despatches to the government of Prince Edward Island, and, at the session of 1865 of the legislature of that province, the matter was threshed out carefully. The legislature, in the first place, passed a resolution which reads as follows:

18. Until the official census of 1871 should be made up, there shall be no change in the number of representatives from the several sections.

19. Immediately after the completion of the census of 1871, and immediately after every decennial census thereafter, the representation from each section n the House of Commons shall be readjusted on the basis of population.

20. For the purpose of such re-adjustments, Lower Canada shall always be assigned sixty-five members, and each of the other sections shall at each re-adjustment receive, for the ten years then next succeeding, the number of members to which it will be entitled on the same ratio of representation to population as Lower Canada will enjoy according to the census last taken by having sixty-five members.

21. No reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the population of the whole union to the extent of five per centum.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN.

That is the relative circumstances of Canada and this island rendered a union practicable, the evident injustice of the terms agreed to by the Quebec convention would prevent their being rectified by the legislature of this island. Without alluding to all, it is proper to notice some of the objectionable features of the report. Without admitting the principle of representation according to population under all circumstances to be sound, it is, in the opinion of this House, particularly objectionable as applied to this island in connection with Canada, taking into consideration that the number of our inhabitants is, and must continue comparatively small, owing to the fact that we have no Crown lands, mines, minerals, or other resources sufficient to induce immigrants to settle here, and that we never can expect to become to any extent a manufacturing people in consequence of our navigation being closed nearly half the year, and all trade and communication with other countries stopped. Under this principle the city of Montreal alone would, at the present time have representation greater than the whole province of Prince Edward Island, and under the provisions of the convention which regulates the mode of readjusting the relative representation of the various provinces at each decennial census, looking at the rapid increase of the population of Upper and Lower Canada heretofore,—particularly the former,—and the certainty of a still greater increase therein in the future, over that of the population of this island, it follows as a certain and inevitable consequence, if a federation of the provinces were consummated upon the basis of the said convention, that the number of our representatives would, in the course of a comparatively short number of years, be diminished to a still smaller number than that allotted at the outset to us.

This resolution was passed by the legislature, and the province did not enter the confederation. At the same session an address was presented to Her Majesty embodying the terms of that resolution, and particularly setting out their objection to the representation clause, which I think is the most important clause in the address. After this address was presented to Her Majesty, the matter dropped. But the Dominion of Canada wished to round out the national territory, and it persisted year after year in making representations to the people of Prince Edward Island for their admission into the union. In 1873, at the request of the Dominion government, delegates were sent from Prince Edward Island to Ottawa, sent without any instructions from the people of the island, they went with an open mind. But there was one thing which the people insisted upon, and that was that they should have six representatives in the House of Commons of Canada, and they thought that this representation would be maintained for all time to come. In a communication which passed between the local government and the delegates when they were in Ottawa, it was stated that it was highly improbable they would get six representatives. That telegram was sent by one of the delegates to the lieutenant governor, on the 26th of February, 1873. Negotiations proceeded for a month or so, and in the month of March the Dominion government conceded to the province six representatives in this House, and the people thought that the concession was made on the same terms as representation was conceded to British Columbia. But by some oversight when the resolution passed the legislature of Prince Edward Island, it read as follows :

But the population of Prince Edward Island having been increased by 1,500 or upwards since the year 1861, the island should be represented in the House of Commons of Canada by six members, the representation to be readjusted from time to time under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when these resolutions were passed what was the condition of Canada ? There was no Northwest, and the territory of the province of Quebec was one-third or perhaps less what it is to-day. There were other circumstances which led the people to believe that the population of the maritime provinces would increase relatively with the population of the rest of the country. But as time went on we found that the great Northwest was being settled, a boom took place there, and the young men who should have remained in the maritime provinces, being of an adventurous spirit, commenced to swarm into the Northwest, and to-day one-third of the population of those provinces is settled in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Therefore I say that, conditions having changed so radically in respect to population, this parliament should take steps to give us back the representation which we had when we entered confederation. What is going to be the result to the maritime provinces when the great Northwest is fully settled ? We have not room in Prince Edward Island for a very large population, and I suppose that within the lives of the members of this House the representation of those provinces will be so reduced that from Prince Edward Island, at least, within the next forty years, we will have only one representative in this House. My hon. friend (Mr. Turgeon) wished us to abide by the constitution ; he thinks that no change should be made. I do not agree with him. I think that when the conditions change we should change the constitution. If we are to become a nation at all, we must lay the foundations of that nation in mutual confidence. We must not have one part of the country better represented than another part, and if a province is comparatively small it should have a larger proportional representation than a larger province. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) has argued here that this House should deal with this matter, and I agree with him that under the third section of the amendment to the British North America Act passed on June 29, 1871, this House can deal with this matter. The section reads as follows :

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase, or diminution, or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

Look at the province of Quebec and see the vast amount of territory that has been added to it. Yet that affects the other provinces, it affects the maritime provinces more perhaps than the province of Ontario. Now it is suggested that a large territory should be added to the province of Manitoba. These conditions have changed the whole outlook with reference to representation in this parliament. That is a matter which comes peculiarly within the third section of the Act of 1871. I direct the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to the fact that this matter is one which could be dealt with in this parliament and that it is not necessary at all to go to the Imperial parliament to readjust it. An Act can be passed by this parliament reciting that the conditions with respect to the territory of the other provinces are such that they do not correspond at all with the condition when the maritime provinces entered into confederation and this parliament should deal with the matter because the population, by reason of the addition to the territory of the other provinces has greatly increased, while the population in the maritime provinces has practically remained stationary. These are matters which should receive the attention of this parliament. Last session and the session before this question was brought up, but the government did not think proper to interfere. The Attorney General of Canada, when this matter of representation was before the Privy Council, acted for the province of Prince Edward Island and his opinion, when he argued the case before the Privy Council for Prince Edward Island, was that we were entitled to additional representation not only on the ground that the statute expressly provided that we should have such representation but also because it was the intention of the framers of the Act that we should receive six representatives. There was an abundance of evidence, outside of the words of the Act, that it was the intention of the legislature of Prince Edward Island and of this parliament that when Prince Edward Island entered into confederation she should have six representatives for all time to come. The Attorney General pressed that matter upon their lordships in the Privy Council, but they saw fit to take the letter of the law as they found it and as I have read it from the resolution passed by the parliament of Canada and the legislature of Prince Edward Island. But, notwithstanding that fact we have the assurance of the Attorney General in his argument that it was the intention of the legislature and of this parliament that we should have that representation for all time to come. I think the evidence that he produced before the Privy Council was abundant to show to the government and the parliament of Canada that we lost that representation by the blunder of the man who drew the resolution, by a mistake, in the conditions and a wrong of that kind should be righted by this parliament. I do not think that the maritime provinces should lie any longer under this wrong which was committed when we entered confederation. Take this great province of Ontario with its vast resources; every day we hear of new discoveries of minerals. It is the same in the province of Quebec. Their resources are illimitable. Prince Edward Island is a province dependent altogether upon agriculture, and we will probably never be a great manufacturing country because we are shut out, as was stated by the gentlemen who were present at the conference in 1864, for six months in the year, by reason of the isolation which results from our being an island. There may be a time when we will be able perhaps to increase our population by a small amount when we get our tunnel, but until that time comes I do not see any hope that our population will increase in proportion to the population of the other provinces of Canada, and I think. for the reasons which were given by the gentlemen who were present at the confrence of 1864 at Quebec, by reason of the facts which were adduced before the Privy Council by the Attorney General of Canada when he argued the case for Prince Edward Island, and by reason of the other facts which have been stated to this House by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) and by other hon. gentlemen who have spoken during the last two sessions upon this subject, immediaate relief should be given to the maritime province by the government of Canada.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, this has been a profitable subject of discussion in this House since the days of confederation. I do not know that any subject has created greater differences of opinion than the subject of confederation which we have before us to-day. I have with some little care, looked over the discussions of that day and I find that there were very great divergencies of opinion on the subject. George Brown, representing the large province of Ontario, was the great apostle of the principle of representation by population. One of the greatest men of that day who hoped to round off confederation, Sir A. T. Galt, when the province of Prince Edward Island was taken into confederation, tried to consolidate the province. The province had held out strongly from entering into the confederation with a small representation. I have here some of the resolutions that were offered at that time. Sir A. T. Galt moved this resolution,

That the unit of representation be reduced and that the number of members for Upper Canada be ninety-nine, for Lower Canada, seventy-four, for Nova Scotia, twenty-one, for New Brunswick, seven, for Newfoundland, eight, and for Prince Edward Island, six.

That resolution was discussed at some length and, I will quote a few of the remarks that Sir A. T. Galt made in support of it. He said :

We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio.

I think that bears on the question to-day. That was the statement of Sir A. T. Galt, one of the fathers of confederation, a man who had done more, I think, to round off and complete confederation than any other with the exception, perhaps, of Sir George Cartier, Sir John Macdonald and a few others whose names I need not mention. Mark his words :

Do you think the lower provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore the lower provinces would have the same as they have now unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off five per cent.

But the Hon. George Brown was not of the same opinion. Although Quebec and Ontario were united before confederation these two provinces had divergent views on many public questions and they never got along well together, and while Sir A. T. Galt held these views the Hon. George Brown, representing the great province of Ontario differed from him, and he moved a resolution in amendment to the motion of Sir A. T. Galt, to the effect that Upper Canada should have eighty-two members, Lower Canada sixty-five members, Nova Scotia nineteen members. New Brunswiick fifteen members, Newfoundland seven members, and Prince Edward Island six members. The disagreement between these two gentlemen shows that there was no great unanimity among the fathers of confederation as to fixing the representation. George Brown speaking in favour of his resolution said :

The practical result would be that while lower Canada certainly will not be less and the lower provinces may increase in population—

The central idea then was that the maritime provinces would increase in population. They at that time held a very prominent position ; they had resources in fisheries, mines, minerals, and agriculture and the central idea was that they would rapidly increase in population. Why they did not increase is a question for great speculation. And, Sir, the reason the maritime provinces have not increased in that rapid ratio that was anticipated by George Brown and others is because the maritime provinces since confederation have not held the position it was supposed they would hold. Newfoundland refused to join confederation and compare her position to-day with the position of the maritime provinces. Newfoundland has made more progress out of the union than Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have made in the union ; Newfoundland has done more to make her fisheries a success than has been the case in any of the maritime provinces. I tell this House that you may ask Newfoundland to joint the union as much as you like, but the record of progress in Newfoundland as compared with the record in the maritime provinces will keep her out of confederation, and you have not terms enough to offer to induce her to join. If you expect Newfoundland to come into the union, for one thing you will have to act more generously with respect to the representation of the maritime provinces. George Brown continued to say :

—the lower provinces may increase in population; they cannot decrease in the number of representatives.

That was what the people of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia then believed but that belief has not been justified by the events. One can hardly realize the time that has been spent in this House discussing this prolific question, and it is a question which will never be settled satisfactorily until a remedy is applied. Now, Sir, I purpose quoting the opinions of some other representatives from my province at the time the union was consummated, all of which go to show the importance attached to this matter by the people of the maritime provinces generally. The first confederation conference was held in Charlottetown, but Prince Edward Island did not enter the union at confederation, and I wish for a few moments to refer to the views of the representatives of my province at that time. Here are some of the views expressed at that conference by gentlemen representing Prince Edward Island. I will not read the whole of them, but I will quote enough to show the great stress they placed on that province having a fair representation in this House. Some of those gentlemen were very prominent in their own province—such men as Colonel Grey, Mr. Haviland, Mr. Palmer, Edward Whalen and James Pope. Everybody who knows anything about the history of Prince Edward Island knows that these men were men of no small calibre. Mr. Haviland said :

Prince Edward Island would rather be out of confederation than consent to this motion.

The motion was to give Prince Edward Island a representation of five members. Mr. Palmer, who was afterwards Chief Justice of the province, said :

Our trade and revenue are rapidly increasing. Why give up so great certainties for an uncertain benefit where we have only a feeble voice. Looking first at the larger provinces, Canada has secured to herself a greater number of representatives than she had before. It may be said that we may join with the other maritime provinces in any matter affecting our common interests but even then our united strength would still be far below Canada's number of representatives.

On the same day that Mr. Palmer spoke, Sir Alexander Galt said :

It would be a matter of the greatest regret that any difficulty should arise over this matter We request the Prince Edward Island delegates to reconsider their decision. It would be a matter of reproach to us that the smallest colony should leave us.

Another who spoke on the same occasion was Mr. Whelan. Every one acquainted with the history of the maritime provinces knows something of the life of Edward Whalen. He began his studies in Halifax under the tuition of Mr. Howe, one of the most eminent men Nova Scotia ever produced, the man who did the most to introduce responsible government into that province; and Edward Whalen came over to Prince Edward Island and introduced responsible government there, and his name is revered in that province from one end of it to the other. He broke up what was known as the family compact and established one of the most popular governments that ever existed in Prince Edward Island. Here is what he said :

We are in an isolated position. Our resources are large and our people would not be content to give up their present benefits for the representation of five members. It may be said that the confederation will go on without Prince Edward Island, and that we shall eventually be forced in. Better, however, that than that we should willingly go into the confederation with that representation.

I am going to quote next the views of a man perhaps equally eminent, Colonel Grey, a man who as a statesman occupied a position perhaps second to none in Prince Edward Island, and who was honoured with great distinction. He said :

I am instructed by my co-delegates to say that the provision of five members is unsatisfactory. Prince Edward Island is divided longitudinally in three counties, each returning ten members (that is, to the local legislature.) But they have always been opposed to change in representation. You cannot divide the three counties into the five members.

I do not wish to tire the House, but this matter having come up, I think it my duty to place before the House these views. I am next going to quote Mr. Pope. I suppose every one at all conversant with the history of Canada knows something about the late James Pope. He was Minister of Marine and Fisheries in this country for a number of years, and was a man of great power and influence in his province. I do not know that there was one man, or even two or three men combined, who had as much influence in that province at one time as he. He was a practical man, a man of large vision, a man imbued with a desire to promote the best interests of his country and his province. This is what he said :

I agree with all that has been said by Colonel Grey and Mr. Coles.

I am going to refer to Mr. Coles. The most popular government we ever had in Prince Edward Island was a government known as the Coles and Whalen administration. They were Liberals of the old time and the old type. It was one of the most popular administrations and introduced some of the most advanced legislation ever known in the province of Prince Edward Island. The administration of Coles and Whalen did more for Prince Edward Island than any we ever had there. The names of Coles and Whelan will live in the hearts and memory of the people of that province for many years to come. They took hold of the educational question at that time. Coles and Whalen introduced a system of free education many years before it was ever thought of in any other part of Canada. We had a system of free education in the island, introduced by the government of Coles and Whelan, when such a system was not to be found in any other part of Canada. As far back as 1858, knowing that the youth of the province could never make any progress without an education, that government said : We will lay a tax on the land and provide a fund which will give a free education to every boy and girl in the province. And I do not know that at that time there was any other province in Canada so far advanced in education as the province of Prince Edward Island. The youth of that province rapidly took advantage of that system, and you will find in every part of the world, in every part of Canada and the United States, men from Prince Edward Island at the head of affairs, always associated with progress. Need I mention the names of Sir William Macdonald, of Montreal, Dr. Andrew McPhail, of McGill College, Professor Schurman, of Cornell University. Time would fail me to give a list of the men from Prince Edward Island prominent in banking and commerce and in every thing that makes for progress. And these men will, I believe, admit that their great incentive was the educational system introduced by Coles and Whalen. At that time the government led by Coles and Whalen introduced an Act to release the tenantry of that province from the oppression of landlordism. Landlordism had hold of that province. But the government of Coles and Whalen introduced what is known as the Fifteen Year Purchase Act. They practically made the tenants of the island free. These tenants are practically freeholders to-day. I merely refer to this to give emphasis to the opinions expressed by Mr. Pope. Mr. Pope said :

I agree in all that has been said by Col. Grey and Mr. Coles.

That was the late Hon. George Coles who led one of the most popular governments of Prince Edward Island.

But the circumstances of Prince Edward Island are such that I hope the conference will agree to give it such a number as we can divide amongst our three constituencies. Nature as well as the original settlement of the island has made three counties and it would give rise to much difficulty if we have to adjust five members of the three counties. I cannot ask it as a matter of right, but one of expediency, as one without which it is impossible for us to carry the measure in Prince Edward Island. I therefore ask for six members.

Mr. Haviland. I fully agree with Mr. Pope.

I may quote one other gentleman. You know, Mr. Speaker, that there are only to-day two living out of the great galaxy of bright and able men who gather at the board to form confederation. One of them is Sir Charles Tupper and the other is the Hon. Senator A. A. Macdonald. Both men are very vigorous and healthy for their age. I have here the views which were expressed by these men at that time and as they are the views of men living to-day, I am sure they will have some force with the First Minister. I trust that something will be done to restore to Prince Edward Island what was taken from her very unjustly. The Hon. A. A. Macdonald, then a member of this House and now a Senator, spoke as follows :

We are not bound by the principle of representation by population laid down in Charlottetown. Our constituents will say and will speak of the increased representation of Canada and the decreased representation of the lower provinces.

There was the point at which the discussion rose. Later on Canada was very anxious that the province of Prince Edward Island should join confederation. The imperial parliament was also very anxious that it should. Our neighbours to the south then did not display that agreeableness which we thought necessary for good relations, and the imperial government wisely considered that the Canadian provinces should be united. But what followed? When those representatives reached Ottawa, there was an administration known in Prince Edward Island as the Haythorne administration. Mr. Haythorne was one of the delegates sent to Ottawa to try and negotiate terms. One of the principal elements in dispute was this one regarding representation. I have here copies of some telegrams which passed between Lieutenant Governor Robinson and Mr. Haythorne at that time. Mr. Haythorne telegraphed to the lieutenant governor on the 26th of February, 1875 :

Probably yield six representatives.

That had reference to the negotiations with Mr. Mackenzie. That was on the 26th of February, and the 6th of March, there was the following telegram :

Highly probably get six representatives.

Further on, in a document from the lieutenant governor to Mr. Haythorne on the same day, the governor says :

We hope six representatives will be conceded.

Later on he said :

Six representatives conceded.

And finally there came this one :

Six representatives conceded.

And Prince Edward Island was in the union. Prince Edward Island would not have entered the union without this. There had been negotiations for years, and the province never would have come into the union with less than six members. And the idea in the province was that Prince Edward Island was to have six members continually—there was to be no change. Why should I say that ? This world is a world of changes; there are changes every day, changes in everything.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Tempora mutantur.

Mr. A. MARTIN. There are changes in things temporal and things spiritual—and in things military too, I suppose the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) would say. Well, there came a change. And why ? Is there a doubt about the law ? Was the Act of union indefinite ? Was there any doubt about it ? I believe there was grave doubt. I believe that there was such doubt about it that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) accepted a retainer from Prince Edward Island to maintain before the Privy Council the right of the province to retain its six members. I think I had the honour—or, I do not know that it was a very great honour; in fact, it was a great pain, I may say—to hear the Minister of Justice, a session or two ago (it was last session, I think) telling this parliament that Prince Edward Island had no claim to retain its six members. Why should he accept this retainer from Prince Edward Island? Does not the Minister of Justice know the law ? Does not he understand the constitution ? I suppose the constitution is written so that he who runs may read. The Minister of Justice may have run, but he could not have read very well. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon), a gentleman whom I respect, a gentleman who, I believe, is sincere and who is a credit to this House, made some remarks which I find it rather difficult to understand. He spoke of the constitution—he spoke of standing by the rock of the constitution. I know my hon. friend knows the constitution. I know also that he is student enough to be aware that this country has not stood by the constitution. The hon. member is ready to sacrifice New Brunswick in order to stand by the constitution, because he says that, while that province might benefit a little to-day, it would lose more some other day, and, for that reason, he would sooner stand by the constitution. It is not long since the constitution of this country was tampered with, and tampered with without any great benefit to the province of New Brunswick, and I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turgeon) stood up in the House to maintain the constitution. It is not long since we had before this House the question of increasing the subsidies of the provinces—last year it was, I believe. The question came up in regard to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, the two wealthiest provinces of Canada. The constitution said that they were to receive 80 cents per head of the population of 1861, and no more. Did they stand by the constitution in that ? No. And there was no such thing as appealing to the Privy Council, no such thing as giving the Minister of Justice a retainer to assist in interpreting the constitution. Not at all; for these provinces were to receive a great advantage. And I want to ask the hon. member for Gloucester, in all seriousness and generosity—for he is a gentleman whom I respect—a question which I think he will admit is a fair one. The constitution was changed so that, instead of receiving 80 cents per head of the population of 1861, these provinces were to receive 80 cents per head of the population of last year and on the increased population from time to time, and these provinces profited by this to the extend of over $1,000,000 a year. How much did my hon friend's own province get out of it? I question very much if it got a dollar.

Mr. TURGEON Same proportion.

Mr. A. MARTIN. No proportion about it —they did not receive a dollar, and do not stand to receive many dollars for a great many years. And I will tell you the reason why. These two great provinces were equal to the occasion, as has been said, and as I myself said some time ago. They were very anxious to have these changes. There was no such thing as sending this to the Privy Council or retaining the Minister of Justice. Not at all; they simply said : We will snap the constitution, we will tear it to ribbons, we will treat it as so much waste paper. And why ? Because the province of Nova Scotia was getting the support of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the province of Quebec was getting the support of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the province of Ontario—well I suppose they gave it to that province in expectation of favours to come, in which I think they will be disappointed. Well, my province got nothing. My hon. friend's province got nothing, and still the hon. gentleman says that he is standing by the rock of the constitution. Mr. Speaker, if you will take up the little book containing the rules of this House, containing also the British North America Act and amendments thereto, you will find a statute known as 34-5 Vic., chap. 28, 'An Act respecting the establishment of provinces in the Dominion of Canada.' Here is a clause to which I would like the Minister of Justice, if he were in his place, to give some attention:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase, or diminution, or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

I am not a lawyer, and I would like to have some of my legal friends interpret that clause. But it is so clear that I think it is sufficient to call attention to it. Here is another amendment, 38 and 39 Vic. chapter 38: An Act to remove certain doubts with respect to the powers of the parliament of Canada under section 18 of the British North America Act.' Now, Mr. Speaker, I call attention to this fact, that here they amended the constitution because there were some doubts about it. Well, were there no doubts in regard to the interpretation of the British North America Act respecting the representation of Nova Scotia? And there were not very grave doubts, graver than in any other case, in regard to my own province? Did they proceed in the same way, by amending the constitution ? Oh, no. They said : We will send that over to England, and we will send the Minister of Justice, or the gentleman who has become Minister of Justice, with it, so that we may be sure that you will lose your case. Well, here is another amendment, 49 and 50 Vic, chapter 35 :

An Act respecting the representation in the parliament of Canada of territories which for the time being form part of the Dominion of Canada, but are not included in any province.

I do not see that there is even a doubt in this case, but they are going to amend the constitution and put something in it that is not in. In the other case they are going to amend it because there are some doubts about it. When it becomes convenient to them to trample on the liberties of the people of a small province, oh, then they send it to the Privy Council in England, and they get an eminent lawyer to plead the case, and of course we know that you will lose it. But in the other instance, they amend the British North America Act. Well, I do not think it necessary for me to dwell on this question, because it must be apparent to almost every man that we are not getting the same kind of treatment as the other provinces. I was looking over the constitution to see if there was any amendment in regard to that. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, section 92 of the British North America Act, and if you will turn it up you will see that some questions are left under the control of the legislatures of the different provinces. Now, here is one to which I call attention because it bears directly on the question under discussion. Under section (10) we find among the exclusive powers of the legislatures:

Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you look over the estimates you will find that the government is violating every item in that clause, violating it every day, violating it even without going to the trouble of passing an Act to amend the British North America Act. Why, there are telegraph lines in Nova Scotia galore, you will find one in every little corner of the province. There are telegraph lines all over the country which this constitution says belong exclusively to the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures. Take the next item, railways. We know that previous to 1883 no subsidies were granted to railways which did not extend beyond the limits of one province. But what do we see to-day? The smallest railway, wholly within one province, perhaps connecting two small villages together, is constructed by this parliament; and they come here and add to the Bill the words 'for the general advantage of Canada.' So they jump over the constitution and trample it under foot; but when it comes to a question of treating a small province with justice, oh, then we find that the constitution is a very sacred thing, and we cannot tamper with the constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have said enough to convince the House that this question is not going to subside, this question will be kept to the fore as long as there is a government in Canada until a remedy is provided. I tell you that this is a burning question in every one of those provinces ; it is a burning question in my province. When this question was up not very long ago I remember the Prime Minister suggested a remedy, and I have given it a little consideration. We know that in the United States Senate the smallest state has an equal representation with the largest state. If I remember right, and if I do not, I hope the Prime Minister will correct me, he said that that idea was worthy of consideration, and that perhaps it would be well to give the smaller provinces increased representation in the Senate and thereby increase the influence which they would have in this parliament. Perhaps it may be; I do you know. I do not know that it would satisfy the people because we believe in the principle of responsible government. But, I am of the opinion that the Senate is a most useful body, a body that I would not wish to be done away with, a body that, in some respects, is far more independent than the House of Commons, raised up, as it is, above the turmoil of questions which may arise suddenly and which may cause a wavering in the public mind. I believe that the Senate is a more independent body. I am a member of the House of Commons and members of the House of Commons are very often governed by those who send them here. Sometimes the public will may not be the correct one. I think that generally it is pretty nearly correct although it may not be sometimes. It has erred and it may err again. It has erred in every part of the world. A body which will revise hasty legislation is a useful body, and if the premier would consent to equalize the representation in the Senate it would to some extent remedy the grievance, although I do not say that it would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince Edward Island). Mr. Speaker, after the very exhaustive discussion of the subject to which we have listened, by the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, I do not propose to occupy very much of the time of the House. I was here in 1903 when this question of representation was before the House and I at that time made as strenuous objection as I was capable of against the treatment which was being accorded Prince Edward Island in again reducing her representation to four members. It was objected by the government and by the right hon. first minister (Sir Wilfrd Laurier) that, as on several other occasions, we had allowed our representation to be reduced without any apparent objection from the then members of Prince Edward Island, there could be no valid reason why it should not again be reduced upon that occasion. In so far as that argument is concerned it has very little weight. In 1882, when Prince Edward Island was entitled to only five representatives in the House, according to the unit of population, we were accorded our six representatives. Why was it that at that time the interpretation as to representation by population, within the strict letter of the terms of union, was not insisted upon ? Was not that a sufficient precedent that the terms upon which Prince Edward Island came into confederation were not to be interpreted in the manner in which they have been, but were to be interpreted in the manner that I have contended for ever since I have been a member of this House ? Because representatives from Prince Edward Island and members of the legislature of Prince Edward Island saw fit not to protest against a reduction of representation is no reason why the wrong which was done should not be rectified at the present time. The legislature of Prince Edward Island had presented to it a statement in the speech of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor dated March 19, 1903, in reference to this matter of representation in the following terms :

At the opening of the provincial legislature on March 19, 1903, the lieutenant governor referred to this matter of representation as follows :

> The claims of this province that its representation under British North America Act, in the Dominion House of Commons should not be reduced below the number of members conceded to it at the time of our entry into confederation, have been pressed upon the federal government by my premier and representatives of my administration, and I feel confident that the province will be given an opportunity to establish its rights in this respect.

And the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the Throne spoke strongly on this matter. His opening remarks were :

> We now come to the question of representation, this is to-day a most important question. In the very near future the Dominion parliament will be called upon to discuss a Redistribution Bill, and the House would be derelict in its duty if it should allow the central government to perpetrate another such error as inflicted on this province in 1891 without the strongest protests.
> A false interpretation was put on our terms of union by the Dominion government, the words: ' the representation to be re-adjusted from time to time under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867 ' were torn from their context and made to do duty as law. Mr Speaker, these words do not apply and never have applied to this province by right—it was an iniquity and we should deny it and defy it.
> What, Sir, are the principles laid down in the various Acts of confederation; is there one essential principle or are there two distinct standards of representation, let us see. In 1864 a basis of confederation was adopted by the Quebec conference, in which the principle of representation was laid down, that principle was accepted after a time by the province of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, but it was not accepted by us. We stood out for another standard and after a long fight we succeeded in securing a representation of six members for 95,000 of a population, this Sir, is quite another rule, and it is a rule of principle that has been acknowledged, accepted and applied to other provinces before and since that time, notably to Manitoba and British Columbia. One of the greatest obstacles to the scheme of confederation with this island was the insistence of the Canadian statesmen that representation by population should be part of the terms, while our people were quite as insistent of having not less than six members regardless of population.

Here was a protest from the provincial legislature at that time, and because other provincial legislatures had not seen fit to protest against the wrongs done to our province under the previous redistributions is no argument to be used by the right hon. first minister that they had acquiesced in it. In fact, we could not acquiesce in a situation of that kind without passing an Act in this House, in the provincial legislature and in the imperial parliament as we did in the case of the subsidies. In the case of the subsidies it was put up to us in the opposite way because the representatives of Prince Edward Island had accepted the resolutions regarding the subsidies, therefore it was not in the mouths of the representatives of Prince Edward Island in this House to protest. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) speaking with regard to the increase in the subsidy, said that because the representatives from Prince Edward Island at the conference had accepted the terms, we, therefore, as representatives of that province in the Dominion House of Commons, have no word to say about it. Of course it was, to my mind, a most ludicrous position in which to place the members of this House. What was the attitude of the right hon. first minister when a question of this kind was up in 1892 with regard to the province of British Columbia? At that time there was some grave doubt expressed as to the interpretation of the clause under which British Columbia came into confederation, as to whether or not she retained the representation that was given to her when she entered confederation. What do we find the right hon. first minister saying in 1892 upon that occasion when he was plain Mr. Laurier and when he was standing up for fair play to the smaller provinces of the Dominion? We find that it was then a different story altogether. Speaking with reference to the reduction of representation with regard to British Columbia he said.:

> But at the same time I am taken by surprise by the objection raised, for it has always been understood that British Columbia was entitled to six members.

Further on he says:

> I have always understood that British Columbia was entitled to six members until such time as she was entitled to a larger number, but that she should never have a smaller number than six. For my part I would be very sorry to come to any conclusion which would deprive British Columbia of that which the people supposed themselves to be their right.

Now, the case of British Columbia is on all fours with the case of Prince Edward Island, and if the right hon. gentleman wanted to treat this as a matter of fair play and justice he had only to refer back to the words he uttered in 1892 and if, to use his own words, he had given to the people of Prince Edward Island 'that which the people supposed themselves to be their right' the case would have been easily settled. The whole history of the case, the speeches made at the conference, the speeches which have been made in the House of Commons by the representatives of Prince Edward Island, the speeches which have been made in the local legislature of Prince Edward Island and all the evidence we can get as bearing upon the terms of confederation go to show that the representatives at the conference at that time were absolutely convinced that they had six members in perpetuity. We have had several expressions from the right hon. first minister and also from the Minister of Justice that would lead us to believe that in their opinion, while the representatives of Prince Edward Island expected that they were getting six members at that time, they did not have it in their minds that they were going to get them for all time to come. The Minister of Justice, speaking on this question in 1906-7, at page 2100 of 'Hansard' sad:

> The contrast between the language I have read in regard to Prince Edward Island and that which had been used in the case of British Columbia only two years before, coupled with the circumstance that at that time Prince Edward Island was not, upon the strict basis of population, entitled to six members, but barely to five, makes it to my mind irresistible that the thing about which they were stipulating, and about which alone the parties then negotiating were thinking, was the population at that time, and the representation at that time and the number of representatives in this House with which the island should enter the union.
> I do not for a moment mean to suggest that there was at that time present in the mind of the representatives of Prince Edward Island the expectation that the island would 20 or 30 years later find itself in the position it is in to-day.

Well, I will endeavour to show that it was in the minds of the representatives of Prince Edward Island and very distinctly in their minds, that in time to come the increased unit of representation in Quebec would be such that Prince Edward Island would be practically without representation in this House. The strong appeal made against the island going into confederation was based on the question of its not receiving six members in perpetuity. Sir Wilfrid Laurier apparently had the same idea as the Minister of Justice for on page 2196 of 'Hansard' 1906-1907, he said:

One thing is plain and that is that when the fathers of confederation framed the British North America Act they never contemplated there should be any discrepancy in the future career of the several provinces. They were of opinion that the provinces would march forward with equal pace and that as decade after decade passed the rate of progress would be found to be about the same in all.

That was not the case in connection with the entrance of Prince Edward Island into the union, and if the right hon. gentleman would familiarize himself with the language used by the Prince Edward Island representatives at the conference he will find they never contemplated that the island would go forward decade after decade in the same ratio of population as the pivotal province of Quebec. Speaking on a resolution introduced by the leader of the government, the Hon. J. C. Pope, against confederation and the terms of the statute, Mr. Duncan said:

Nothing could be more unjust to Prince Edward Island than representation on the basis of population as laid down by that scheme according to which Canada would have 100 representatives in the House of Commons more than the aggregate of all the colonies; the number assigned to us being only five. Representation on that basis might do well enough for Canada but as respects Prince Edward Island it would be nothing other than mere mockery.

The right hon. gentleman will find that Mr. Duncan did not contemplate that in the thirty years after confederation Prince Edward Island would go forward in the same ratio as Quebec and the other larger provinces. Does any one suppose that these representatives of Prince Edward Island were contending for representation only until the next decennial census ? Were they not contending for the broad principle, that for all time to come Prince Edward Island would have a representation of six members in the House of Commons. Every thing in connection with the history of the entrance of Prince Edward Island into confederation points to the fact that her representatives were contending for the broad principle of six members in perpetuity. It is not comprehensible that the island would have stayed out of confederation from 1867 to 1873 upon this one point, if the people of the island expected that the population of their province would increase in the same ratio as that of the other provinces. They felt that in the following thirty years their representation would be decreased to five members, and eventually to four, and that is why they contended for a fixed representation of six members. It is only reasonable to suppose that these gentlemen foresaw what would happen and that they were endeavouring to safeguard the position of their province for all time to come. Mr. Pope used these words :

Among these objections I may mention the principle of representation by population. The statistics of Quebec warrant the belief that in a few years the population will be so increased by the introduction of the tide of immigration that the island would lose in the halls of confederation even the small voice it raised at its entrance to the union.

Do you think that a man of Mr. Pope's ability would view the horizon in the limited scope that the right hon. gentlemen, the Prime Minister seems to think. These men knew that the population of the island would not increase in the same ratio as the population of the other provinces and they supposed they were protecting the isisland in her representation for all time to come. Mr. Howlan said :

The fact is best shown by illustration. Prince Edward Island with a population of say 85,000 it is said to have five representatives at the start. Suppose she increases at the rate of 20 per cent each 10 years, at the end of 20 years the population would be 126,000, but at the same rate of progress the population of Lower Canada would be 1,596,000 which divided by 65 would give one representative to every 24,550 people, so that the island would not be able to claim an increased membership.

Here Mr. Howlan prophesied what actually has taken place. The unit of representation at the last decennial census was a little over 25,000 and Mr. Howlan in the speech he made before confederation pointed out exactly what has occurred. There is no doubt in the world that up to the very last moment the contention of the representatives of Prince Edward Island was that their province should have a fixed representation of six members in perpetuity. The whole history of the entrance of Prince Edward Island into the union goes to show that the construction placed upon the terms of the union by the House and by the Supreme Court and by the Privy Council, was not the construction the people of Prince Edward Island intended should be placed on these terms. I tell the right hon. gentleman that the case of Prince Edward Island should never have gone beyond the walls of this parliament, and that the right hon. gentleman was not fair to the province of Prince Edward Island when he sent the case to the Supreme Court and the Privy Council. He was no more justified in doing that than he would in referring the question of provincial subsidies or any other alteration of the terms of the British North America Act to the courts, and declined to leave the responsibility with this parliament. This clause in the Act of union with Prince Edward Island should have been interpreted by this parliament. But the Prime Minister, because Prince Edward Island is a small province and has not the same strength in this House as the larger provinces, referred the case to the law courts, whereas if a more powerful province were interested he would have left this parliament to decide. Had a case arisen where there was any ambiguity or doubt as to the interpretation of a similar clause with regard to the larger provinces of the Dominion, the case would never have gone outside this parliament, and the right hon. gentleman and his supporters would have interpreted it, as he has declared such cases should be interpreted according to the intention of the province at the time of entrance into confederation. A few years ago the Minister of Justice speaking in this House compared the case of British Columbia as being on all fours with the case of Prince Edward Island, except that in the British Columbia Act the word 'increased' was used while in the Prince Edward Island Act the word used was 'readjusted'. I submit to the good sense of the House, the Prime Minister should have applied to Prince Edward Island the principle he enunciated when he said in referring to British Columbia in 1892: For my part I would be sorry to come to any conclusion to deprive British Columbia of that which the people supposed to be right. In the light of all the evidence, the case of Prince Edward Island should have been settled in this House when the right hon. gentleman was leader of the government in 1903, on the same principle as he declared should be the case when defending British Columbia in 1892. When negotiations for a number of years had failed to bring about the entrance of Prince Edward Island into confederation, there was a conference, and a number of messages were exchanged between the representative of the province at Ottawa and the lieutenant governor and the local government in Prince Edward Island, and I probably cannot do better than read those telegrams. On the 26th of February Mr. Haythorne, who was the representative of Prince Edward Island sent this message to the Lientenant Governor of Prince Edward Island:

Probably yield six representatives.

The matter was then under consideration. On the 6th of March this telegram was sent by Mr. Haythorne:

Highly probably get six representaties.

We have a telegram from the Lieutenant-Governor of the same date:

We hope six representatives will be conceded.

Later on the same day Mr. Haythorne wires his colleague in the government, Mr. Edward Palmer:

Six representatives conceded.

Thus you find, nine years after the question had been first mooted, and six years after confederation had taken place, the point for which Prince Edward Island had contended was yielded, and she came in on the understanding that she was getting six representatives in perpetuity. I could go on and quote further from the people who were representing Prince Edward Island at those different conferences, and perhaps clear up the mists that seem to have settled on the government side of the House as to what the real intentions of the parties were at the different conferences. A debate arising upon a resolution in the Prince Edward Island legislature as to the representation of Prince Edward Island in this House, Mr. Palmer said:

Why give up so great certainties where we have only a feeble voice?

Mr. WHALEN. Our people would not be content to give up their present benefits for the representation of five members. It may be said that confederation will go on without Prince Edward Island, and that we should eventually be forced in. Better, however, that, than that we should willingly go into confederation with that representation.

COLONEL GREY. The provision of five members is unsatisfactory. Prince Edward Island is divided longitudinally into three counties. We cannot divide three counties into five members. Besides, to divide it into ridings would cut the capitals in two.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Galt has proposed six members for Prince Edward Island. I approve that rather than Mr. Brown's motion, because it allows us to give our counties two members each.

Mr. POPE. The circumstances of Prince Edward Island are such that I hope the conference will agree to give us such a number as we can divide amongst our three constituencies. Nature as well as the original settlement of the island has made three counties, and it would give rise to much difficulty if we had to adjust five members to three counties. I cannot ask it as a matter of right but as one of expediency, as one without which it is impossible for us to carry the measure in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HAVILAND. Prince Edward Island would rather be out of confederation than consent to the motion. We would have no status, only five members out of 194 would give the island no position.

Now, why were all the men talking of giving two representatives to each of the three counties of Prince Edward Island if they were expecting that every ten years those counties would be carved up again, and that they were not getting six members for the province in perpetuity ? The right hon. leader of the government knows this ; and if he has not abandoned the position of fair play he assumed in 1907, I can appeal to him on this occasion. He hoped that the different provinces of the maritime provinces would go on and increase their population and regain their representation. This is what he said, as will be found at page 2196 of 'Hansard' of 1906-7 :

If unfortunately my anticipation should not be correct; if unfortunately these provinces should not regain their lost ground, and if as has been said by some the representation of Prince Edward Island should come to the vanishing point. I have no doubt whatever that all the other provinces would only be too glad to come to the rescue and make the necessary provision to give that province the standing it occupied when it entered confederation. I say this to show that the remedy which is sought by my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) to-day is an extreme one, and one which ought to be reserved as a last resort, if it shall be found that nothing else can be done.

If the right hon. gentleman anticipates that when Prince Edward Island gets to the vanishing point, we shall get back the representation we had at confederation, why delay till that time the doing of justice to Prince Edward Island ? It is simply a case of delayed justice. If the right hon. gentleman believes that the government at that time will step in and do justice to the province by putting us back to the place we occupied at confederation, why does he not move the will of his government to give us that justice at the present time ? I do not see how the right hon. gentleman can escape from that position. And during all that time we would have a disunited Dominion and a dissatisfied province in regard to her representation. When this subject was up a few years ago, the right hon. gentleman suggested that the proper method of bringing it forward was by some sort of address to the Throne. I cannot see why such an address as was submitted by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) upon that occasion, if it were properly worded, should not have, as I believe it would have, the support of this House. Now, this question is one of very great importance to our province, and the Prime Minister himself regards it as such. He wanted to see the case argued out in 1906. He then said :

I understand that several members desire to speak on the question who are not present. It is one of great importance, and the government has no objection to an adjournment.

My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) also said :

The subject is one of great importance and it is desired it should be discussed and brought to a conclusion. Therefore I trust the adjournment does not mean that we shall not hear any more of it.

We did not hear any more of it that year but it was brought up last session, and I hope the First Minister is still of the opinion he entertained then. The matter is one of paramount importance to Prince Edward Island and also, though in a lesser degree, to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The case of Prince Edward Island stands on much stronger grounds than theirs, and I trust the right hon. gentleman will not see this debate pass without expressing himself on the question and giving us some idea as to what action he intends taking to do justice to our province. If I can judge from the expressions he has used on several occasions in this House, I do not very well see how he can get up and throw cold water on the case which has been made out this afternoon.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.) I hardly know whether to say I am or am not surprised at the silence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) on this question, because I am bound to say that those of us who are familiar with the political career and the methods of that hon. gentleman would require a great deal on his part to surprise us. I say this in view of the position which that minister took on this question before his transference to the federal cabinet. There is no doubt that he professed a very profound interest in it for two or three years before he became a member of this government, an interest, I may say, which he valued as worth to the people of New Brunswick, $5,000, for that is the amount he took from the provincial treasury for his services in connection with the endeavour to obtain for the province of New Brunswick its rights in respect of its representation in this House—the same amount, which he obtained from the treasury of New Brunswick for his services in connection with the eastern extension claim while he was Attorney General of that province. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) not only argued these cases before the Supreme Court of Canada and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but after the judgment of the Privy Council disallowing the contention which he set up, he brought the matter up in the provincial legislature by a resolution which I believe my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) has already read. Speaking to that resolution in the legislature of New Brunswick, the Minister of Public Works said :

I hope, as a result of this discussion, that members of parliament who are friendly to us, will stand up for our rights and try to do away with the injustice we have suffered in the past.

That is the statement made by the Minister of Public Works in the legislature of New Brunswick with reference to the duty of the New Brunswick members of this parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. How many years ago?

Mr. CROCKET. In the session of 1905. Yet when my hon. friend from St. John brings this matter before the House, we find the Minister of Public Works absolutely dumb. I was occupied in the Public Accounts Committee this morning and had not the pleasure of hearing my hon. friend from St. John when he introduced this subject and am consequently not able to say whether the Minister of Public Works was then in his seat. But I do know that he was in his seat fifteen or twenty minutes this afternoon while the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) was opposing the resolution of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel). He then left the House and has not since been seen in the chamber. This is the hon. gentleman who expressed, in so earnest and sincere a manner, in the legislature of New Brunswick, his hope that the members of parliament from that province would stand by its rights in the matter of our representation in this House and not let up until justice was obtained. In the course of the debate in the legislature of New Brunswick, I find these expressions used by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) :

I have faith in the sense of justice of those administering the affairs of the Dominion.

And again :

I feel that in passing this resolution we shall have done our duty, and after that the responsibility will rest with those who have the power to remedy this injustice.

The Minister of Public Works has since then become a member of the federal cabinet. He has become a colleague of those in whose faith he expressed such confidence in 1905. He is a member of that cabinet on whom, he then said, the responsibility would rest if justice were withheld from the province of New Brunswck. In view of those declarations, what can be said of the Minister of Public Works not so much as making himself heard in the course of this debate. He has been a minister of this cabinet for ten or eleven months and has sat as a member of this House for the past six or seven months without having once raised his voice on behalf of what he declared so solemnly he regarded as a matter of most vital concern to the province of New Brunswick. I must say—and I have no hesitation in expressing my surprise in this instance—that I was surprised to find my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) addressing the House this afternoon in opposition to the proposal of my hon. friend from the city of St. John. As that hon. gentleman himself said, this is a matter of the most vital concern to the people of New Brunswick and has been recognized for some years past as one of the most important political questions that has been discussed in this parliment affecting the interest of the maritime provinces. I will venture to say his views are at variance with the sentiment of the entire province upon the question.

If I remember correctly, the board of trade of the maritime provinces, and the board of trade of the province of New Brunswick have both passed unanimous resolutions upon the question in favour of amendment of the British North America Act so as to provide that the representation of the maritime provinces should not be further decreased. I was not at a loss to understand upon what ground my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) opposed this proposition. As I understand him, it was because of the great admiration he had for the constitution and its framers, and his profound confidence in the resources of Canada. As my hon. friend the senior member for Queens (Mr. A. Martin) said, the hon. member (Mr. Turgeon) took the position that he should stand by the rock of the constitution. But as my hon. friend from Queens has already pointed out, this constitution in which the hon. member for Gloucester expresses such great confidence has been amended on more than one occasion, and within the past year that constitution, on representations of this parliament was amended in its provisions respecting the subsidies to the several provinces. I did not observe my hon. friend from Gloucester at that time standing by the constitution as it was originally adopted; on the contrary he approved of the resolution which passed in this House changing the basis upon which the subsidies were appropriated to the different provinces, and changing them, as has already been shown, very much to the disadvantage of his native province of New Brunswick. At that time, I pointed out that New Brunswick came out at the small end of the horn, that it got the smallest percentage of increase of any province of the Dominion. And yet my hon. friend from Gloucester who tells us to-day that he has such a regard for the constitution as originally passed that he is willing, as a member of this House, that New Brunswick should continue to suffer what is undoubtedly an injustice with respect to our representation here, rather than change the Act, did not raise his voice against that amendment of the constitution.

Now, as to the merits of this question, it seems to me there can be no two opinions. There can be no doubt that, although, at the confederation conference population was agreed upon as the basis of representation, as the guiding principle, yet this was expressly made subject to a limitation which is set out in subsection 4 of section 51 of the British North America Act, as follows :

On any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

It has already been shown by the quotations made from the proceedings of the confederation conference that the delegates representing the maritime provinces contended that there should be a provision that the representation assigned to the maritime provinces at the time they entered the union should not be subject to diminution. The clause which I have quoted was regarded as an absolute safeguard against that possibility. I believe that my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel)—although I did not have the pleasure of hearing his speech—made quotations from the confederation documents proving that it was stated that if this clause were embodied in the Act there would be no possibility of the diminution of the representation of the maritime provinces in this House. That clause was accepted on that assurance and it is clear that had the conditions as they then existed and were in the minds of the confederation delegates not been altered by the admission of five new provinces and subsequent legislation with reference to which the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were not consulted, the clause would have operated to prevent any decrease in our representation down to this day. Now, that being the case, I ask could the delegates representing the maritime provinces reasonably have been expected to foresee these subsequent developments? I think it goes without saying that no man could fairly have been expected to foresee, in the year 1866 or 1867, the admission of the five provinces that have been since added to confederation and whose population has been counted in their entirety against the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in the scheme of representation. There is no question that the bargain that was made between the four original provinces of confederation has been altered without the consent of these provinces. If that be so, is it unreasonable that the representatives of New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces should insist in this House upon that bargain being kept and their provinces restored to their original rights? My hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) who preceded me, quoted a section from the British North America Act providing that the boundaries of none of the provinces should be extended without the consent of the other provinces. But we know that the boundaries of the province of Quebec have since been greatly extended, so that the area of that province is now nearly double its size at the date of the consummation of the union. It has been stated in this debate that 150,000 square miles of territory has been added to the province of Quebec by virtue of the legislation of this parliament, thereby materially altering the unit of representation as laid down by the terms of the original Act

Now, it was stated by my hon. friend from Gloucester as another reason for his position in this matter that the judgment of the courts had determined the case and that therefore there should be no further agitation of the question. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that is a statement which should not have come from a gentleman so intelligent and well informed as my hon. friend from Gloucester. Surely that hon. gentleman sees at once that had the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon this reference, been otherwise than it was, there would have been no necessity for the intervention of this parliament. If the judgment had been favourable to the contention of the provinces, then we would have had within the four corners of the Act as it now stands all we are contending for. It is for the very reason the judgment of the Privy Council is to the contrary effect that we are now asking the intervention of this parliament, and the passage of a resolution memorializing the Imperial parliament to make the amendment. Now I want to point out in this connection that the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was based, not upon the Act as it was originally passed and accepted by the four original provinces of the confederation, but upon the subsequent amendments to the Act to which these provinces were not parties, and with reference to which they were not consulted. Last session I took occasion to examine the judgments of the several judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, and I find in them these extracts bearing upon that point. In the first place, I find this passage in the judgment of Mr. Justice Davies:

> After careful consideration of the whole Act and its amendments I have concluded that the expression 'four provinces' means and must be constructed as 'several provinces.'

That conclusion was based not upon consideration of the original Act, which embodied the agreement of the four original provinces, but upon subsequent amendments to which the original contracting parties were not privy. Further:

> If any reasonable doubts did exist as to the true meaning of the sections under review, this subsequent Imperial legislation would seem to remove them.

Subsequent imperial legislation to which New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces were not parties.

Upon the whole, after careful consideration, I am of the opinion that after the admission of new provinces and territories into the union, the expression 'Canada' and 'provinces' throughout the Act of 1867 must, unless specially restricted by the context, be necessarily given on interpretation different from that which they respectively bore before these provinces and territories were admitted.
