SHE SCREAMED.

Galt Burglars Foiled in Their Scheme by the Outcries of a Girl.

Galt, Nov. 6.—Miss Jackson, housekeeper for A. Oliver, Preston road, was aroused about 12.30 yesterday morning by the sound of footsteps in her room. Soon muffled voices were also heard, and in a few moments a candle was held to her face and she was surrounded by three masked men. One warned her not to make an outcry, but, not heeding him, the girl gave utterance to shriek after shriek. The man who had spoken caught hold of her and tried to intimidate her with a revolver. Finally, the robbers searched the bureau drawers, and were rewarded by finding Miss Jackson's purse, containing $5 35, which they took possession of.

In the interval the girl had not ceased to scream, and at this juncture, so she says, the ruffian pointed the weapon at her. It exploded, but did no harm, and was evidently only loaded with powder. The report brought A. Oliver, sen., an old gentleman, into the room. The burglars laid hold of him, but the courageous girl succeeded in saving him from any abuse he might have received. The three then departed.

Interesting Reminiscences—Remarkable Changes Which Have Taken Place Under Mr. Cameron's Regime—Progress in Every Department—What Makes a Successful Journal—The Advertising Public and Their Relation to Good Journalism — This is The Advertiser's Day: It Only Occurs Once in 33 Years.

Last evening a company consisting mainly of the staff and employes of The London Advertiser, to the number of some 60 persons, sat down together to discuss the substantial and elegant bill of fare prepared and served in Fysh's best style. The tables were decorated with flowers, the general effect being decidedly artistic. In one corner of the room was a piano, upon which, as accompanist, Mr. Victor Colwell assisted the musical director, Mr. C. H. Fewings, and the other musically disposed members of the establishment in the various selections with which the after-dinner proceedings were interspersed.

The occasion was the completion of the 33rd year and the entrance upon the 34th, of the publication of The London Advertiser—making it practically a third of a century celebration. The guests present were confined exclusively to those now or formerly connected with The Advertiser. Other former Advertiser associates it is hoped to have present on another occasion.

The chair was occupied by Mr. John Cameron, by whom the paper was founded in the year 1863, and the vice-chair by Mr. J. D. Clarke. Seated near the chairman and vice-chairman, among others were Mr. J. S. Willison, editor of the Toronto Globe; Hon. David Mills, Mr. Thomas Coffey, proprietor of the Catholic Record, London; Mr. James Gillean, sen., and others.

"THE QUEEN."

The first sentiment—"The Queen and Her Empire"—was heartily received to the accompaniment of "God Save the Queen."

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

Mr. John Cameron, as chairman, then made the following address:

"It is a third of a century since I founded The London Advertiser. It started about the size of a copy-book. No person except myself is at present connected with The Advertiser who was connected with it from the beginning. Yet there are a number who have been connected with the establishment for periods varying from a quarter of a century down.

"The London Advertiser, like every other human enterprise, has had its ups and downs; but it has had a vigorous and I trust not unworthy past; at present it is in lively health; and it intends, with the help and good will of those about me tonight, to exhibit a still more vigorous future in the years to come. The Advertiser office has turned out able graduates, and has had identified with its columns men of the literary standing of Hon. David Mills and Prof. Goldwin Smith, and many another prominent pen unsuspected. Among its graduates we recall Mr. J. S. Willison, now editor of the Toronto Globe—the highest editorial post in Canada; the late William Cameron; W. J. McIntosh, now in Chicago; H. F. Gardiner, editor of the Hamilton Times; Harry Gorman, editor and proprietor of the Sarnia Observer; L. K. Cameron, now Queen's Printer for Ontario; ex-Warden James Bryan, Lucknow Sentinel; Miss Eva H. Brodlique, now of the Chicago Times-Herald; Cameron Brown, Belleville Sun; W. K. Atkinson, The Leader, Eau Clare, Wisconsin; Atwell Fleming, now of the firm of Hunter, Rose & Co., Toronto; Andrew Denholm, Blenheim News; Thomas Coffey, London Catholic Record; James Hooper, publishing up in the Northwest; Rev. Bernard Bryan, now incumbent of the Church of England at Parkdale, and others. Then, of course there are many of our graduates who have distinguished themselves in other fields of life.

"During The Advertiser's third of a century many have been the personal and business changes in this city. London has grown from a straggling-village-sort-of-place to a charming and prosperous up-to-date city. Of the varied business men and business interests in London, a third of a century ago, most have been outlived by The Advertiser. Very few are in business today in London who were in business 33 years ago. The Advertiser has also outlived many contemporary newspapers. There used to be a 'Prototype'; a 'Herald'; an 'Atlas'; a 'Times'; a 'News,' published on Dundas street near the Robinson Hall; a 'Standard'; a 'Telegram.' The Advertiser has seen them all disappear.

"There are a few rules and maxims that The Advertiser staff endeavor to follow: No unfair reporting. Report your opponent, if you have one, as fairly as you would your friend. Be too busy with your own proper affairs to have time to interfere with the business of others. Be diligent in endeavoring to get everybody to advertise, or subscribe, or both. The idea is partly a benevolent one, to prevent people inflicting injury upon themselves; for publishers and editors have a persistent conviction that people who neither subscribe nor advertise are pretty sure to come to a bad end. (Laughter.)

"The founder and controller of The London Advertiser trusts and believes that the influence of the paper during its third of a century of existence has been in the main on the side of those things which make for the welfare of Canada and the betterment of society.

"The Advertiser is no mere partisan paper, nor does it propose to be such. The main interests of our country are those which are common to both parties, and no one who is himself a patriotic citizen will for a moment say that patriotic citizens are to be found only in the ranks of one political party.

"In my third of a century of journalistic experience I have noted the gradual progress of the newspaper press of Canada; and I make bold to say that, in proportion to its opportunities in a yet but partially developed country, no press in the world is more enterprising or more generally wholesome in its moral influence. No press, speaking generally, acts more in accordance with the excellent motto, 'All the news that's fit to print.'

"Though a third of a century is a considerable period, I started in at an early age, and when I think of a man like Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, a quarter of a century my senior, alert and bright and vigorous in his 78th year, I feel as if in comparison I am as yet but one of the youthful votaries of the profession.

"There have been a good many changes in the world since the starting of The London Advertiser a third of a century ago. Since then slavery has been abolished in the United States, and the great neighbor-republic has grown to be a powerful nation of seventy millions. During the same period the British Empire has grown enormously in territory, population and power. Germany has been consolidated into a great national force. France has cast off monarchical habilliments and become a republic. Russia, though despotically governed still, has increased in influence and weight in the councils of Europe. A third of a century ago Japan was an inaccessible nation of savages. Today the word Japan stands for a nation powerful on sea and land, and strong in potentialities of commerce and manufacturing. When The Advertiser was established, what was then known as Canada, consisted only of Upper and Lower Canada. Today it is a Dominion of many provinces, bounded east, west and north by the Atlantic, the Pacific, and Hudson's Bay. When The Advertiser started the principal use of electricity was in the conveying of overland telegraphic messages. It was three or four years after the establishment of the Advertiser that the Atlantic cable was laid; and since then have come into play all the now familiar uses of electricity; electric cars, electric lights, electric motors, telephones, surgical uses of electricity, the telegraphing of pictures for newspaper illustrations, etc. What discoveries and inventions the Advertiser's next third of a century may show, he would be a bold man who would venture to predict. If we all meet here again 33 years from tonight, doubtless the retrospect will be as interesting as that of the tale of the years since 1863.

"And, now, thanking all for their presence here tonight, and for their loyalty and faithful services, I may say that the London Advertiser proposes, with your assistance, to continue its best efforts in making London the most desirable and soundly democratic place of residence on the continent; in promoting the development and interests of Ontario, and particularly Western Ontario, of which London is the center; in making the name of Canada a name of pride; and, finally, in helping in however humble degree in uniting in bonds of brotherliness the varied branches wherever found, of the world-spread English-speaking race." (Applause.)

THE ADVERTISER GLEE CLUB.

The Advertiser Glee Club—Messrs. A. Gorman, J. L. Goodburne, Lewis Clark, Fred. Chambers, W. W. Wright, H. B. Archer, F. N. Wonnacott, James Begg, A. Marriott and C. H. Fewings—were called upon, and proved that The Advertiser establishment has some fine musical talent. Their selection was splendidly rendered and was rewarded with loud applause. Mr. Victor Colwell made a faultless accompanist.

MR. GORMAN SENDS REGRETS.

Mr. Cameron read a letter from Mr. Harry Gorman, editor and proprietor of the Sarnia Observer, expressing regret that he could not attend, and wishing the occasion every success. Mr. Gorman's name was received with applause.

THE DOWN-STAIRS OFFICE.

Mr. J. D. Clarke, editor of The Advertiser, proposed the toast of "The Down-Stairs Office," which evoked cheers and the chorus "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." Mr. Clarke said: "I am glad to be here to rejoice with you, Mr. Chairman, in celebrating the 33rd anniversary of the life of The Advertiser, and of your continuous headship of the journal.

"If an establishment such as is ours is to be successful, we must at all times have the most cordial co-operation between every department. Especially is it necessary to have the best of understanding between those who endeavor to fill the various editions of the paper with the freshest of news and those who appropriate a portion of the space for that vital popular intelligence—the advertisements—I refer to the business office. I need not remind you that while we of the editorial department must stand between the business managers and those who would at times try to have advertisements classed as news, we recognize the usefulness of the business staff in helping us to make The Advertiser increasingly attractive to its many thousands of readers. We expect them not only to help us in supplying the city editor's staff with every "tip" that comes their way, but we look to them to keep their patrons alive to the importance of making announcements to the public at all times fresh, interesting, as full of news as the local or telegraphic intelligence.

"Through the aid of the advertiser alone can the modern newspaper, with its manifold attractions, be produced. How needful is it then that advertisers should at all times be shown that they are getting full value for their money. Enterprising advertisers do get full value. Everywhere the world over it is proved that they do. It is shown in every city and town in all civilized lands that the progressive merchant who knows how to advertise and who chooses established and reliable newspapers, read not by the head of the family alone, but by the entire household, as The Advertiser is, invariably succeeds in life. It is the intelligent advertiser who makes the money these days. Not the man who advertises Christmas goods in March, or hot cross buns in July, or trout fishing tackle in December, or picnic supplies at New Year's, but men who keep their advertisements as newsy, as attractive, as full of "meat" for men, and especially for women, as are the ordinary news columns of The Advertiser. There has been improvement in this respect in recent years. But there is room for more, and I have not any doubt that our down-stairs staff, with that energy which has always characterized them, will see to it that in this essential particular the patrons of the paper are kept fully alive to their own interest. We recognize advertising columns, so conducted, as news of the highest importance to the public, while of mutual benefit to the publishers and to us all. With this sentiment I couple the names of Mr. Millar, secretary-treasurer, and Mr. Frank Adams, cashier, who are well able to speak for the important department under their charge. (Applause.)

MR. R. D. MILLAR.

Mr. R. D. Millar, secretary-treasurer of The Advertiser, was warmly applauded on rising. He said he had not the silver tongue of Mr. Clarke and would not attempt to make a speech. He was glad to see all present, and thought the celebration of the thirty-third anniversary of The Advertiser a fitting one, and expressed a hope that a similar gathering would soon be held again. The business office staff, with which he was most intimately acquainted, is most efficient. (Applause.)

MR. FRANK ADAMS.

Mr. Frank Adams, advertising manager, was greeted with loud applause, showing his popularity among his fellow-employes. He thanked them for the honor shown, and briefly congratulated Mr. Cameron in appropriate terms.

THE MECHANICAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. J. D. Clarke then proposed the "Mechanical Department," and more particularly the composing room. He was glad he had served his apprenticeship in the mechanical department because it had taught him the requirements of newspaper copy. He had at one time thought that should the time come when he could not make his living by the pen the avenue of type-setting would be open to him as a means of livelihood, but the new plano method of setting type was out of his line. He then called upon Mr. Chas. H. Fewings, foreman, and Mr. John Dalton, assistant foreman, of the composing room.

in a few premliminary remarks, congratulated Mr. Cameron and those associated with The Advertiser on the unusual anniversary—a third of a century—and then spoke to toast as follows:

"Mechanical progress in the newspaper department is a theme upon which intelligent writers might compile volumes. I wonder if our worthy vice-chairman, when he proposed that toast, had given a thought as to the magnitude and number of changes which have taken place even in our own establishment, during the past 26 years since I first became an apprentice in The Advertiser. Improvements have been introduced into the business so steadily and surely, that the active printer could not attempt to enumerate them. They have come as naturally and as surely as each succeeding birthday in a lifetime, and just as imperceptibly; and it is only by glancing back to years ago that any real conception of the wonderful strides made in the printers' art can be obtained.

"True, there have been a few radical changes, which have fairly revolutionized newspaper mechanism, but these are rather the exception. It is not many years since a few of us were discussing some new invention in labor-saving machinery, and the remark was made—and unanimously believed as fact—'Well, they're making machines to do almost everything now, but no one will ever invent a machine to set type. Typesetting requires brains, not mechanism.' And yet, in this London of the new world, we have been for two years past setting type by that greatest wonder of the century, the Mergenthaler Linotype—a machine that is about the nearest thing to human that has yet been invented. And The Advertiser, as usual, was the first establishment to introduce them west of Toronto. They are not an experiment, but a successful and permanent addition to the machinery of the printing trade.

"When I had my first introduction to the printing office, a paper like The Advertiser of today was almost unknown even in the large metropolitan cities of the continent. It was only a blanket sheet of four pages, seven-column, if I remember correctly, and over two-thirds of the space was advertising. But what a difference now. The newspaper of today limits its advertising space, and any encroachment on the columns necessarily means an enlargement of the paper to accommodate that demand. Consequently facilities have been perfected and introduced which enable us to be ready at any reasonable notice to increase the size of the paper to almost an unlimited number of pages, or even to enlarge the size of the pages, without much previous preparation.

"My intention was to deal mainly in reminiscences of our own establishment, and in speaking of the crudeness of the past, compare it with the progress as shown today. But time is limited, and life is short; I won't attempt it now. The Advertiser of 1870 could be started with a comparatively small amount of capital, but to place a paper like The Advertiser of today on anything like a secure footing would require thousands, yes, tens of thousands of dollars; and yet the prices of material are much lower than of old. A comparatively small amount of type was necessary then, and that of the least expensive. Beauty and ornamentation were little thought of. Look at the modern newspaper. There are 50 different styles of display to one known then, without giving a passing thought to the innumerable accessories, such as rule, border, fancy pieces, etc., necessary to please the progressive business man of today in his advertisements. New designs are being introduced constantly, and to keep pace with the procession means continual adding of modern material.

"Then comes the stereotyping process. I think The Advertiser was about the first paper in Canada, outside of Toronto, to do away with printing directly from type, and to adopt the stereotyping process. This was only about thirteen years ago. Yet today there is barely a paper of any pretensions to circulation but has found the web press, with its stereotyping accessories, a positive necessity.

"And so one could go on, merely mentioning improvements, without end. But let this suffice.

"Before concluding, I wish most heartily to thank every individual connected with the newspaper, and the members of my own department especially, for their hearty co-operation in the interests of The Advertiser, and in assisting in every way possible to make the labor of publication a pleasure. A better staff of assistants no man could wish for, and I hope it may be my privilege to be associated with these same gentlemen for many years to come." (Applause.)

MR. DALTON.

Mr. John Dalton said: "Mr. Chairman,—Coming after so many eloquent speakers. I feel at a loss what to say. Having been connected with The Advertiser for upwards of 25 years, I have seen a great number of changes in all the departments, and I can safely say that all who have served an apprenticeship in that office have been able to secure responsible positions no matter where they have sought employment, either in the United States, Africa, or in Canada. I wish to congratulate you, Mr. Chairman, on The Advertiser having attained its 33rd year of publication under your able management, and I sincerely hope that it will continue for as many more years as a dispenser of news and an able exponent of public opinion. (Applause.)

A DUET.

Messrs. Wright and Chambers gave the vocal duet "Larboard Watch" in splendid voice, and were awarded an encore.

THE HEALTH OF MR. J. S. WILLISON, EDITOR OF THE GLOBE.

When Mr. Cameron stood up to propose the health of Mr. J. S. Willison, the company rose en masse and gave three cheers and a tiger for their distinguished guest.

Mr. Cameron said: "It is a pleasure to have the opportunity of proposing the health of a former associate and graduate, Mr. J. S. Willison, editor of the Toronto Globe. The leading newspaper of Canada by general consent is the Globe. The editor of that paper has the opportunity of wielding a powerful influence in a hundred directions. During its long course of 50 or 60 eventful years, the Globe has had but three previous editors-in-chief, including George and Gordon Brown, so that Mr. Willison is the fourth in the succession. I well remember the circumstances of Mr. Willison's first connection with The London Advertiser, which was his first connection with journalism. It was in October, 1882, that I received a note from a postoffice in Ontario, from a young man who said he had an inclination towards journalism, and wanted to know if I could advise him how to get a start. I was struck with the frankness and individuality of the letter. I advised him to start in, if necessary, at board wages, if he felt the call strongly enough; learn to set type, familiarize himself with punctuation, printers' devils, proof-reading and what not; and to test himself as to whether he possessed the nose for news, and newspaper instinct generally. He wrote back that something of that sort would suit him first-rate, and asked to get a start in The Advertiser Office. I told him to come along. He came. With the aptitude of ability, he rapidly learned to set type, to read proofs, to absorb and write out news items, particularly about London East, where he took up residence; soon became an efficient reporter; and later went to Ottawa as a gallery correspondent. While I was at Toronto as general manager of the Globe I needed someone of Mr. Willison's type, and gave him a position. To condense the record, he finally became sub-editor of the Globe, and when the time came for me to return to London, to the paper I founded and controlled, the editorship of the Globe came naturally to Mr. Willison. Such are the short and simple annals of Mr. Willison's brilliant journey to his present position of prominence and influence. For the early discovery and development, therefore, of Mr. Willison's genius, The London Advertiser is entitled to claim full credit. (Applause.) The Advertiser is proud of its graduate, and heartily wishes him continued and increasing success in the future."

CANADA'S GREAT EDITOR RESPONDS.

Mr. Willison, who was again tendered an ovation upon rising, said:

"When my old and honored chief invited me to attend this dinner tonight I accepted without a moment's hesitation. I was glad to come for more than one reason. In the first place, it was Mr. Cameron who opened to me a door into journalism, and to him I owe as much as to any other man with whom I have had relations during my life. And those of us—and we are many—who have to battle from the very cradle for our daily bread, do not easily forget nor lightly value the friends who drop a moment from their busy lives to hear our presentments and stimulate our ambitions. Then I was glad to come because for twelve or fourteen years I have had no satisfactory opportunity to renew associations with the staff with whom I had two years of pleasant relationships and with whom I served my apprenticeship. And I am always glad to come to London, for, while London has forgotten me, or rather, never knew me—I was for a time one of its obscure citizens—and I left it with more regret and return to it with more pleasure than any other place I have known, except the city which has become my permanent home and which seems to develop in all its residents a very aggressive civic patriotism. (Applause.) I have known The Advertiser since my early boyhood, and I have no doubt that to The Advertiser in some degree I owe my lapse from the political faith of my fathers. My recollection of The Advertiser goes back a quarter of a century to the days when we fought our political battles bare-handed, and when the stock of denunciatory adjectives in the English language was far too limited for the exigencies of our political campaigns. And if my memory serves me right, few papers struck a harder blow or was less delicate in its choice of adjectives than The Advertiser. The Advertiser was then a great influence, virile and aggressive and enterprising, and it has remained a great influence throughout all of Western Ontario, but you will perhaps allow me to say that I like The Advertiser of today, able, moderate, just and argumentative, better than The Advertiser of my boyhood. (Applause.)

NOTABLE IMPROVEMNETS.

"I rejoice that we are growing in political grace, and tempering our political judgments with mercy, as we did not in the earlier days. We are learning that a man is not necessarily a scoundrel simply because he does not accept our view of public questions. We are learning that the people will not tolerate persecution from press or platform or pulpit. We are learning that the journalist who deliberately misrepresents a political opponent, and wantonly garbles his utterances to serve a partisan purpose, ranks socially and morally below the scandal-monger, who slanders his neighbor on the street corners. Popular intelligence is broadening and deepening, and in place of a public opinion, molded and fashioned by a few little deities, we have the strong independent judgment of an instructed democracy. While I am a thorough believer in the party system, it is my clear conviction that the party organ and the corporation organ have been among the prime curses of American civilization. The best results are achieved by combinations of men to effect great reforms and to advance great progressive movements. But the man who, for the sake of mere party loyalty or mere party consistency, will follow political leaders into a course repugnant to his honest convictions is not fit for citizenship in a free country. He does not do his own thinking. He does not cast a free ballot. He is the mere tool of a political hierarchy, and is false to the highest duty of citizenship. (Applause.) Take a case in point. We had a general election a few months ago, and in the contest the question of Manitoba's school system was a leading issue. For many years one of the political parties of Ontario had maintained an attitude of hostility to the extension, if not to the very existence, of a system of separate schools in this Province. But under the pressure of political exigencies, and the persuasion of party leaders, thousands of our fellow-citizens who had been identified with the movement against separate schools in Ontario gave their votes for a policy designed to force separate schools on another province. That was plain treason to the theory of free government, an abuse of the franchise, and a surrender of private judgment to party dictation. General Ben Butler, during the later years of his life drifted away from the Democratic party and in 1884 was an Independent candidate for the Presidency. You have all heard the story that Gen. Butler was charged with stealing spoons during the time that he was in charge of the Union forces at New Orleans, and at one of his meetings during the Presidential campaign a young man rose in the audience and asked to know the truth of the story that he had stolen spoons during the civil war. Butler asked him not to interrupt, but to wait until he had finished the speech, and then he would answer the question. So, when he had concluded, he said: 'Where is the young man who wanted to ask me a question?' The questioner promptly rose from among the audience. Butler said, 'You want to know about the spoons?' The young man said, 'Yes, I walked in from eight miles out in the country on purpose to question you.'' Butler said: 'I suppose you are a Democrat?' The young man said, 'Yes; I am a Democrat, and I'm proud of it.' 'Well,' said Butler, 'so was I when I stole the spoons.' (Laughter and applause.)

TRUST THE PLAIN PEOPLE.

"Parties should unite on issues and not on leaders or prejudices, or traditions, and in proportion as the citizens cast a free ballot we may expect to realize the best results from the rule of a democracy. The great secret of Lincoln's political success was his unfaltering trust in the "plain people," and if the people will only be true to themselves, governments will not dare to be corrupt nor politicians unfaithful. The organized interests of a community can always find a voice. John Randolph, of Virginia, combatting one of the earlier protectionist movements in the United States, in the dawn of the century, said, 'The manufacturer,' and I am not directing my argument against manufacturers, for they are but a fraction of the organized interests of a modern community, and we are perhaps too ready to make manufacturers a special object of pursuit. 'The manufacturer is the citizen of no place or any place; the agriculturist has his property, his lands, his all, his household gods to defend—and like that meek drudge, the ox, who does the labor and ploughs the ground, then for his reward takes the refuse of the farmyard, the blighted blades and the mouldy straw, and the mildewed shocks of corn for his support. . . . Alert, vigilant, enterprising and active, the manufacturing interest are collected in masses and ready to associate at a moment's warning for any purpose of general interest to their body. Do but ring the fire bell and you can associate all the manufacturing interest of Philadelphia in fifteen minutes. Nay, for the matter of that, they are always assembled, they are always on the Rialto, and Shylock and Antonio meet there every day as friends, and compare notes and possess in trick and intelligence what, in the goodness of God to them, the others can never possess.'

THE PRESS AND THE PUBLIC.

"So it is still. So the press should be the voice of the people, the real articulate organ of democracy. The New York Post, in many respects the best and strongest paper in the United States, said the other day in explanation of its refusal to print the speeches of the campaign orators of the Democratic party:

"'The reason why we are not willing freely to admit Bryanites to our columns is that we believe their platform to be, from top to bottom, irrational, immoral and anarchistic. We believe the triumph of the party would soon put an end bo th to free speech and free thought, would put all property in danger, would make the United States, instead of a glory and a boast, one of the most conspicuous of human failures, would roll back the tide of civilization on this continent, would exalt ignorance and folly above experience and knowledge, and would put a premium on mendacity and imposture. This being so, it will be easily seen why we do not disseminate the views of the party. In fact, to call them 'views' at all is a misnomer. They are the yawps of ignorance and folly, and there is not, and ought not to be, a place for them in any newspaper printed for intelligent men and women.'

"To my mind, all this is eminently unwise and unsound. It is not by such treatment that men are persuaded to sound views and inspired to purer patriotism. The people rule. They bear the consequences of bad government, as they reap the advantages of good government. It is their business to determine public policy and choose the men who shall administer their affairs. They are not the serfs of journalistic popes, or political popes, and they have a right to demand from the press of the country a fair, full statement of the question at issue, a fair, full statement of all sides of a great matter of public controversy. We cannot afford to forget that this is a land where, 'girt by friend or foe, a man may speak the thing he will.' And, by the way, we are sometimes very narrow, and very petty, and very un-British in our attitude towards men who declare unpopular opinions. While it is the duty of the press within reasonable limits of time and space to open its columns to the free discussion of public questions, it is also, it seems to me, the duty of a public journal to declare its opinions on these questions without fear or favor. As I have said, the press may be the very bulwark of popular rights. The public journal has no contracts to let, and no offices to fill, and should have no lodge or church to pet, and no 'votes' to cultivate. The forces and influences that plot and intrigue to make governments serve their private ends, are always active, no matter what party may have power, but no conspiracy against the public treasury can succeed if the press, speaking for the people, stands at the back of the country's Ministers. (Applause.)

BIG PROBLEMS TO SOLVE.

"Perhaps never did greater problems press for solution. In the country to the south, with all its splendid resources and all its amazing progress there is wide and serious social discontent. We, too, should take care that we do not pursue false policies, breed social war, and raise up taskmasters for the people by inequitable distribution of the public taxes, and rash alienation of the public resources. We ought to be able to build a railway without making a half-score of millionaires. We ought to be able to raise the revenue necessary to carry on the country's business without creating a league of commercial monopolists. We ought to be able to thoroughly root out of the public mind the notion that governments are appointed to govern for a party rather than for the whole people, and that Parliament is a grand committee for the distribution of offices. We ought to be able to regulate a railway corporation or a commercial monopoly, and if necessary to resist even a labor organization, and probably to many of us the last would be the hardest test of all. We ought to be able to prove our loyalty to British institutions without voting wasteful subsidies, and issuing a daily curse against our neighbors. It is my conviction that we often blame the people when the real fault is that we do not trust the people and that politicians often feel it necessary to appeal to prejudices and passions when they would do better for themselves and infinitely better for the country by frank, outspoken, straightforward dealing with the community. I believe that upon the whole the press of Canada today is honorably doing its duty and fairly meeting its responsibilities. The ancient fanaticism of party is passing away. Man-hunting is in disrepute. It never was so easy for the best men to enter politics. The people never were so intolerant of mere partisan ranting and hysterical denunciation. The press of Canada never was so thoroughly Canadian. The miserable pessimism which has been a fatal drug upon the country's progress is going out with the rising tide of Canadian patriotism. We need not pretend to be saints, for we are not, and God keep us from playing the Pharisee. We need not look for a perfect press, nor perfect politicians, nor ever for perfect preachers. But to me, at least, it seems that we are all growing in candor, in toleration, in concern for our neighbor's good name as well as our own, in loyalty to public duty, in single-minded aspiration, not for the leveling down of any, but for the leveling up of all, and we may believe that still and always, as the Californian poet sings,

"'The dawn
Shall find us tenting farther on.'"

(Great applause.)

GRADUATES AND FORMER ASSOCIATES.

After a delightful solo from Mr. J. L. Goodburne, "Alone on the Midnight Sea," which earned an encore, Mr. Cameron proposed the health of "Graduates and Former Associates," coupled with the names of Mr. Thomas Coffey and Mr. James Gillean. Mr. Cameron referred with pleasure and in terms of highest praise to Mr. Coffey. The latter, he said, was one of the most prominent, creditable and successful graduates of The Advertiser. He had filled the position of foreman of the news room, and also of the job department, with the greatest acceptance, and had risen by his own worth and ability to the proprietorship of one of the most influential and widely circulated journals in the Dominion. (Applause.) Mr. Gillean, an esteemed and efficient member of The Advertiser staff in its early days, had reared a number of the finest boys that any one would want to be associated with. (Applause.) He was a second Gladstone—he was still the youngest man in London. (Cheers.)

OVATION TO MR. MILLS.

At this juncture Hon. David Mills entered, and was tendered a great ovation, the guests rising and giving three cheers and a tiger.

MR. THOMAS COFFEY.

Mr. Coffey was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and justified it by a capital address. He said:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen,—I need scarcely tell you that I am delighted to be present on such an occasion as this. Let me first, Mr. Cameron, extend to you my heartiest felicitations on the fact that such a goodly span of life has been given you as publisher of The Advertiser, the first number of which I assisted in printing. It is always a pleasure to meet friends, but this pleasure is doubly enhanced when we are permitted to great friends of the olden days—of the times when the world, with its trials and strivings and ambitions, was opening before use. Memory is always vigorous when it is called upon to revive early impressions, and this evening, in the company of old friends, these early recollections come as the bidding, and they bring with them a sunshine all the more beautiful the further we go back into our boyhood. (Applause.) Few of our young men realize what were the conditions prevailing 33 years ago. The London of that period was very different from the London of today. We were then in what would now be considered a very primitive stage. The world advances, and I suppose we have to move along with it. Changes—although sometimes beneficial—very frequently bring a tinge of regret. Let me mention one case in point. Thirty-three years ago there was a glory about the composing room. There were the frames and the type and the cases, and the compositors and the click of the letters as they entered the 'stick,' and the merry chat when composing time ceased and distribution hour arrived. There was a certain glory about all that, and, looking back upon the old composing room days, we can count them as perhaps the brightest of our early lives. Now the old-time composing room has almost departed! The clatter of the Mergenthaler tells us that there has been a great change, and that the old conditions have gone forever. Then again, the newsboy had not yet made his appearance in London until 33 years ago—and it is worthy of remark that the establishment of The Advertiser and his coming date from the same period.

"Now, it is a sincere pleasure to recognize that in the onward march of the press of the Dominion, London has more than held its own. The press of Canada stands on a high plane. Its great influence is exercised for good. May this ever be the case! I hope the newspapers of our country will never don the robes of extravagance and license, but will continue to send into our homes healthy, intellectual food—not rank and deadly poison. (Applause.) Fortunately, we have a public opinion which would crush out of existence any attempt to introduce papers whose influences are degrading, whose aim is solely the gaining of the 'almighty dollar,' and whose publishers utterly disregard the deplorable consequences of polluting the pure atmosphere which should surround the minds and the hearts of those who are to take our places when we have paid the debt of nature.

"I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for calling upon me to say a few words regarding my early recollections of The Advertiser. Were I to give utterance to the thoughts which are coming to me at this moment, I would say too much. There are many things connected with the olden days of which I would like to speak, but for the present I will only say that they occupy a place in memory's shrine, which recall the thought so aptly expressed by a countryman of mine:

"'Long, long may my thoughts with such memories be filled,
Like the vase in which roses have long been distilled—
They may break, they may shatter the vase if they will,
But the scent of the roses will cling to it still.'"

(Great applause.)

MR. JAMES GILLEAN.

Mr. James Gillean followed, and as he rose from his seat a hearty round of applause greeted him. He spoke of the pleasure the occasion afforded him, as an old attache of The Advertiser, to be among the staff once more, and continued: "I can assure you, gentlemen, that I am not a specialist in the art of speech-making, and have seldom made speeches on any occasion, I can assure you that I am very much pleased to be here. I was connected with The Advertiser many years ago, and although not associated with the printing of the paper in any way, I planted the paper in every village in the country. It was eagerly sought on account of its general worth, and as agent of the paper, I went from here to Montreal, and canvassed every place along the line I have taken The Advertiser from the time it published its first copy.

"I remember Mr. Coffey telling me on one occasion, when he had charge of the job department, not to go after any more work because they had enough in the office to keep them busy for a month. That was twenty years ago, and there are few here now who were there then. But I hope the success that has attended The Advertiser in the past will follow it in the future, and trust that we will all see another thirty-third anniversary of its birth." (Great applause.)

THE JOB PRINTING DEPARTMENT

Mr. J. D. Clarke, in proposing the toast of "The Job Department," said: "This department is one of the most important in connection with a newspaper office. A man like Mr. Gillean about a job department is the kind of man that is always needed—one that is ever ahead of the other fellow. You, Mr. Gillean, have a good successor in Mr. Plant. He is yet young in that particular line of the trade, yet old in the business as pertaining to the news department." (Applause.) The vice-chairman referred to the many compliments he had heard upon the promptitude with which the work in the job department was executed, and continued: "It is with pleasure that I propose this toast, because the job department is the right bower of The Advertiser, and I have much pleasure in calling upon Mr. Lewis Clark to reply."

MR. LEWIS CLARK.

Mr. Clark began by characterizing Mr. John Cameron as father of the happy family present and the assembly as brothers. He said: "I am sorry to have to make a speech. I am not a member of Parliament, or a preacher, although the son of a minister. As manager of the job department, I may say that since I have been in charge everything has been worked smoothly, and the co-operation I have with all the hands and the members of the other departments is of a most hearty nature. I have never made it a practice to rush the work except when necessary, but whenever I have asked the men to put on a 'spurt' they have responded with a hearty good will. I am pleased to see The Advertiser enter upon its 33rd anniversary, and I sincerely hope that it will see another 33 years, and that we will all be there when that times comes." (Applause.)

MR. FRANK PLANT.

Mr. Frank Plant spoke of the paper in its earlier days. He referred to the changes that had taken place, and related a number of amusing incidents in connection with his duties as junior apprentice. "I entered the employ of The Advertiser," said Mr. Plant, "on Oct. 22, 1878. At that time it was part of my duty to go to the town pump and carry water for the office several times during the night—(cries of "More water.")—and I often 'got a move on' when going through the dark Arcade. Another incident in connection with my early days was that when the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise were here I asked permission to get off. The foreman told me he didn't see how he could get the paper out if I went away. Well, when I found out that I was such a very important personage, I went to work with a good will. I have been employed in The Advertiser ever since. I have been transferred to the job department, where I sincerely trust that I will be able, by the aid of my friends, to give value for value received. In this department, as in the others, I have seen many changes. My associations in the news room were of the most cordial, and although I regret in some ways leaving there, I am happy to be still connected with the establishment. I congratulate you, Mr. President, on your having reached the 33rd anniversary of The Advertiser, and hope that I will always be able to satisfactorily do my duty toward you and your paper."

MORE MUSIC.

The Advertiser Quartet—Messrs. W. W. Wright, Lewis Clark, C. H. Fewings and Fred Chambers—sang "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," and modestly declined to respond to a merited encore.

HON. DAVID MILLS.

In proposing the toast to Hon. David Mills, Mr. J. S. Willison said it was a privilege and a pleasure that he had not expected. The public record of that distinguished gentleman was one of the best in the history of the country. (Cheers.) During a long life he had given able, honest and brilliant service to the people of Canada, and during that time there was not one act at which they could aim a reproach. (Cheers.) "A public record like that," continued Mr. Willison, "is a splendid possession for this whole people, and we owe pronounced gratitude to men who give us such eminent public services, and who preserve, amid the turmoil and strife and exigencies of political warfare, a public career so absolutely above reproach as that of the Hon. David Mills. (Cheers.) I believe that the great mass of the people of this country hope that his public career is by no means ended. (Cheers.) They trust that for many years to come, either in the Parliament of the country, or in administering the laws that, through a long life he has helped to make, they will have the benefit of his high character, his exalted views, his conscientious devotion to duty, and his unbroken fidelity to the public interests." (Cheers.)

Mr. Mills again received three cheers and a tiger. He gave one of his usual deeply thoughtful and instructive addresses, and was listened to with the greatest interest. Mr. Mills expressed the great pleasure it gave him to be present, and he returned thanks for the hearty reception of his name. He was also grateful to Mr. Willison for the kind and altogether too flattering references to his public services. "So far as that service is concerned," said Mr. Mills, "I have endeavored to make it an honest and conscientious service, and if it has been marked, through a period of 30 years, with mistakes, and I have no doubt that it has, they were mistakes not intended to be wrong-doing, but necessarily connected with the imperfections of human judgment. I may say that I gratefully remember my association with The Advertiser for the period of five years, in which I was its editor, and in which I endeavored to do my duty by those connected with the paper, and also by the Liberal party, of which The Advertiser has always been a consistent exponent. (Cheers.) There is no sphere in life in which one may not be of service to the state. In the newspaper, as editor, or as printer; as a citizen, discharging his duty as an elector; as well as in Parliament, he may confer substantial benefits. Among the benefits that the citizen confers upon the state, one of the most important is that in the discharge of his duty as a citizen, he votes strictly according to his convictions, and declines to be led along a path in which he thinks the public interests do not lie. Perhaps one of the weaknesses that has exhibited itself since the period of Confederation of this country has been the disposition to defend the leaders of parties, no matter what they may do. Now, every leader of a party may find some other interests than the public interests to care for, and he will be constantly pressed to go beyond what he himself may think to be in the public interests, to meet the wishes of importunate friends; and it is a great thing for him to have behind him men of sturdy character and strong convictions, who decline to be led in the path where they think the public interests do not lie. (Applause.) I think it is one of the advantages which public men in England enjoy, and which public men in Canada do not—at least, in the same measure—enjoy, that there is in Great Britain a large portion of the electors who have leisure to inquire into all public questions, to pursue investigations, and form opinions as mature as those of men in public life—who are responsible to nobody, and care not what others think of the views they are about to take—and who create a public opinion which no public man can disregard. There is, perhaps, in Canada many a man whose public career is marked by defects, which have subjected him, probably rightly, to reproach, who would not have committed those mistakes if a more healthful, a stronger and more independent public opinion had been behind him. We in this country are undertaking every day to raise the standard of general intelligence. We are educating our people; we are giving to the newspaper a larger clientage than those in former years had; and there is no greater opportunity open to any class of men to perform service for the state than to those who are writers of political articles in the public press." (Applause.)

ADVANTAGES OF THE "WE."

"It is said that the editor is always a man that talks in the plural and conceals his personality, and it is said that it is because he is beside himself —(laughter)—that is, he is himself and somebody else also. There is an advantage in that, for if the editor's personality was forced upon the public constantly, they would be undertaking to measure the merits of the discussion by his standard, and influence in the community, and attempts would be made to disparage what he might say by personal attacks upon him. The impersonal style, therefore, in my opinion, is the best for the editor to adopt. That style not only protects himself, but pushes the ideas which he presents to the front, and they are the only matters which are before the public for their consideration. In my opinion there is no class contributing more largely to the general education of the community than those who are connected with the press. It is one of the strictest laws of our intellectual existence that the sublime discoveries, the generous sentiments, the profound researches that are being made daily, and which are in the beginning the property of only a few, are, through the instrumentality of the press, diffused among all classes of the community. (Applause.)

PRESS AND PARLIAMENT.

"I might say something about Parliament. I spent 30 years of my life there, and I was not among the most idle of those who had seats in the House. (Hear, hear.) I think that important as the position of public men is in Parliament, certain it is that what they say and what they do on those subjects upon which they deliberate, and to which they give special attention—certain it is that the public would never reap the advantages of that special attention and the expression of their opinions with regard to those subjects, were it not for the industry and enterprise of the press. (Applause.) It is through the newspaper that what they say and think on public questions is diffused abroad." (Applause.)

PARLIAMENT AND PEOPLE.

Mr. Mills said that modern times had somewhat modified the relations between the representatives and the represented. It was a subject to which publicists had given special attention, how far the Government was warranted in dealing with questions upon which public opinion had never been pronounced. "And so in our representative system of government we base the sanction of law upon public opinion. We expect public opinion will sustain the law. There would be no propriety in legislation which would be adverse to public opinion. There are two ways by which the authority of government is upheld—the moral strength of public opinion and the force which a military power places at the disposal of a government. It is not upon physical force, but upon moral force, that the laws and political institutions of a country like Canada rest; and it is of immense consequence before any subject is dealt with in Parliament that it should be subjected to discussion in the country, for the opinions of people in the country should be formed before Parliament deals with it and before it becomes law. (Applause.) The advantages that are to be derived from it should be already known in the community. When the law is put upon the statute book, public opinion should support it. People are entitled to say whether it shall or shall not be law. When you undertake to deal with the subject, it is not sufficient that it should be good, but it is absolutely necessary that the people think it to be such, and until you convince them that it is, you should not force it upon the statute book. (Applause.)

AN ILLUSTRATION.

"It has been said that if you had government by perfect beings—by angels, for example—that such a government would be better if it was absolute. That conception is altogether unsound. A popular government is a great educational force in the country, and if you throw away its educational advantages, if you fail to take advantage of these questions upon which men are divided, and which will become the incentive for investigation and study to ascertain what is the truth with regard to them—if you throw away these advantages, then you have destroyed the chief advantage that a system of representative government offers. Take the recent election in the United States. It is not essential to my argument whether Mr. Bryan's proposals were good or bad; but they awakened public opinion, they aroused men to think. The intellectual condition of those who were lethargic was completely changed, and the result of that agitation and discussion over an economic question has carried the country forward to a higher position in the study of that subject than it otherwise could have reached; for the great majority of men would have been inclined to give their minds a holiday or troubled themselves not in the least whether Mr. Bryan's views were wise or otherwise." (Applause.)

Mr. Mills concluded by again thanking his auditors for their cordiality and attention. He resumed his seat amid continued applause.

"THE NEWS-GATHERERS."

In introducing this topic, Vice-Chairman Clarke said: "With this sentiment, there is coupled the name of Mr. Edward Clissold, news editor, of Mr. Melville Rossie, city editor, whose great powers as an after-dinner speaker are well known to you all, and Messrs. Passmore and Atkinson, assistants. The subject, therefore, requires but few words from me, and yet it is so important that one is tempted to break the rule that a vice-chairman shall make no speeches. Imagine a newspaper strike. Think what a state of mind all sorts and conditions of men would be in were the newspapers to cease publication for a week. Imagine the number of men and women who would be dying to know the commercial news, the foreign news, the political news, the legal news, the local news, news of births, marriages and deaths. Could a strike in any other business result in one tithe of the demoralization as would accrue from the paralysis of the public press? Charles Dickens, himself one of the best of English reporters, characterized the daily newspaper as 'the blood of the nation, 'the clock of the world,' 'the messenger of civilization.' It is indeed an honor to be connected with an institution of such far-reaching influence, and no branch of the profession is of more importance than that of the successful newsgatherer. No professional man has to be more in love with his work to achieve success than the man who graphically chronicles the occurrences of our every-day life. No vocation requires more ready judgment—some people would call it horse sense. A good reporter must be able to report the important speaker in full; he must be able to summarize the prosy or unimportant talker with care and discrimination. He must make friends and keep from making enemies. He must have no favorites, and carefully avoid misrepresentations of every sort. Such is the standard which we have set up for our reportorial staff; and I am glad to say that never since I have known The Advertiser—now over twenty years—has it possessed a more energetic, more careful, or more capable staff of news-gatherers than that of which Mr. Rossie is the head. Were I to say less than this on the present occasion, our local news columns from day to day would be my rebuke. I am glad to have these gentlemen associated with me, and to bear this testimony to their zeal and ability in aiding to make The Advertiser a paper for the business man and for the family—for the young and for those of mature years—a record of healthful news, ably and attractively presented." (Applause.)

MR. CLISSOLD.

Mr. Clissold, who was received with a cyclone of cheers, said: "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen,—In the course of my nineteen years' connection with The Advertiser, I have cut up and 'boiled down' a great many speeches, but I don't think I ever tried to make one, and I am pretty sure you will all be the happier if I don't begin now. However, I would like to express in some degree the pleasure which I am sure we have all felt in meeting here tonight. I heartily indorse every kindly word that has been spoken this evening, and rejoice in the evidences of good feeling between the many members of The Advertiser's large establishment. But there is one sentiment that impresses me most forcibly of all—that is, the community of interest between employer and employe. Each is dependent on the other. Legs and arms are useless without a head; a head is not good for much without legs and arms. Our interests are one. The more we realize this, and the more we pull together, the better it will be for all; and such gatherings as these, Mr. Chairman, or any means that will bring employers and employes into closer touch must work to mutual advantage. We may not be very clear on the silver question, but we know how the Golden Rule would work. The formula, 'Put yourself in his place,' is a panacea for many ills, and if we try to carry out this idea we will make The Advertiser establishment more prosperous than it ever has been. and in so doing we will each be benefited. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish The Advertiser and you, its founder, many more such auspicious anniversaries as the present." (Applause.)

MR. ROSSIE.

Mr. Melville Rossie, the local editor, spoke on "What is News, and the Mission of the News Gatherer." News, he said, was the chronicling of any occurrence or fact of general interest, provided that the recital was within the limits of decency, honesty and the libel law, and provided, too, that the privacy of the individual, the family or the home was not unjustly invaded. "News" was so comprehensive a term that he had no time to give anything like a full definition. What was news to one person was not news to another. In any publication devoted to a particular interest—sporting, scientific, theological, commercial or literary—it was easy to suit its patrons, because their predilections were the same; but the constituency of the newspaper was so mixed that it required the soundest judgment and the nicest discrimination to meet the varied tastes of its readers. The palates of their minds had different relishes; so that a newspaper might be compared to a wells-pread table with many different courses. The business man first ate the markets and nibbled at the rest. The sporting man generally fed on the races; all the others to him were side dishes. The religious man wanted the church news, and the ladies usually liked a story. When these classes were subdivided —the religious readers according to their denominational preferences, the sporting reader according to their favorite pastimes, the business readers according to their occupations—to say nothing of the individual peculiarites of all of them—there were so many appetities to satisfy that the speaker had neither thoughts to take them in, imagination to give them shape, nor time to tell them in. News was not news unless absolutely truthful. Once a paper lost its reputation for honesty and fairness, its real influence was gone. The ideal reporter should be omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent and omniverous; but as omnipotence and omniscience were editorial prerogatives, he could at least try to be omnipresent and omniverous. He should never violate private confidence and never abuse the power of the press to avenge personal injury or vent personal spleen. The reporter had missions other than news gathering. One was to put his news into good shape after he had gathered it—a statement in which the proof reader and compositors would bear him out. Literary ability was becoming more and more the sine quo non of modern journalism. It was the brilliant writer, the man with a style, who would make his mark and attract attention. Reporters should spare no effort to develop those literary powers, which their vocation gave them so many opportunities of exercising. Mr. Rossie warmly praised his staff and commended the co-operation of all departments with the editorial room.

MR. PASSMORE.

Mr. Harry Passmore followed Mr. Rossie. Like most reporters, he thought the least said was the soonest mended. In the course of his remarks, he turned to Mr. Cameron and said: "Allow me, sir, to extend to you my hearty congratulation on this the thirty-third anniversary of The Advertiser, which is known far and wide, and universally respected for its reliability and fairness. The Advertiser establishment was the first place I worked in after serving my apprenticeship as a printer in the office of a worthy contemporary, the Free Press, and on The Advertiser I received the finishing touches which every apprentice needs. They were liberally applied by Mr. Fewings. After severing my connection with The Advertiser, I traveled thousands of miles, but never in my perigrinations have I met a single person who had anything to say against those connected with The Advertiser, or against the city of London. It makes no difference in what quarter a man goes, Londoners always loom up well. They are to be found at the top of the ladder everywhere—at the head of the largest mercantile establishments, or filling editorial chairs on influential journals."

H. Atkinson, as a member of the reportorial staff, also responded briefly.

PRINTING PRESS DEVELOPMENT.

"The changes in our press printing facilities in a third of a century" was the next toast, proposed by Mr. Cameron.

Mr. James T. Archer, who was warmly applauded, prefaced his remarks with the modest statement that as a failure at speech-making he had always been a success. He then gave an interesting account of his first experience at handling a press in this city. He spoke of the pleasure and profit of these celebrations. They could not come too often. He congratulated Mr. Cameron on the success of the paper and referred to the remarkable transformation of printing press facilities that he had witnessed.

THE CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT.

Mr. J. D. Clarke, who introduced this toast remarked that there was no need of a "circulation liar" on The Advertiser, as its list was too large and solid to require such tactics. He had seen it, and knew that The Advertiser went to the uttermost parts of the earth. Agencies on Saturn and Mars would be established immediately upon inter-planetary communication being opened up. (Laughter.)

Mr. George Elliott spoke briefly in reply, and called upon Mr. A. E. White to do full justice to the toast.

A. E. WHITE.

It is generally conceded, Mr. Chairman, by men who know, that one of the most important departments in a live newspaper is that of circulation, both on account of the vast influence for good or evil wielded by a widely-circulated journal, as well as because of the large amounts annually spent by enterprising merchants and others in directing the public attention to the various lines of goods in which they are dealing. A man may spend thousands a year in advertising the cheapest, best-selected and most durable line of goods ever placed upon the market, may use his space to draw customers for his seven-dollar suits at the slaughter price of 50 cents; or may invite the busy housewife to call and sample his creamery butter at 6 cents per pound. But if the circulation of the medium is nothing but bluster, and there are practically no customers to read the announcements, the merchant loses money, and he is not slow to recognize the fact. The shrewd man of business places his announcements only with papers whose circulation is known to be thorough in the locality desired to be covered, and as a consequence the standing of a journal can largely be guaged by the amount of advertising carried. The splendid patronage enjoyed by The Daily Advertiser, as well as the Weekly Advertiser, of which you have been the able head for so many years, is a tribute to the wide circulation of your paper, a circulation that during the past fourteen months has shown a very large increase, for which I am but partly responsible, as long before assuming charge of the department, every hamlet, village and town through the west enjoyed a good share of business. It is not personal flattery when I say great success has rewarded my efforts in forwarding The Advertiser's circulation, but rather praise for your wisdom in issuing a newsy, clean and bright paper that seems so well to fill the wants of thousands of readers. There is every promise that the coming year will find hundreds added to our already large list, and advertisers can rest assured that all their contracts with us will prove a source of profit in the future as they have in the past. Mr. Clarke has said it is contemplated to extend the circulation to the planets: I apply to be appointed the first agent to represent you there." (Applause.)

"YE COLLECTOR."

Mr. John Cameron, in a happy little speech, proposed the toast of "Our Collector." He said that a collector to be successful must be patient, good-natured, gentlemanly, and genial, and thought that Mr. George Dickson was the embodiment of those three attributes.

In replying to the toast, Mr. Dickson said he esteemed it an honor to be called upon for remarks before such an assemblage, and continued: "Before I commenced my duties on The Advertiser I believed the men connected with the several departments to be a good, honest, and well-behaved lot, and I have found that my first impressions were fully justified. I am pleased to be here, and to congratulate Mr. Cameron on the great advances which the paper has founded has made. It has a wide circulation; it is truthful; it is clean, and for that reason I like to belong to it. The Advertiser is a paper that may go into every home, and be read by mother, wife and daughter, who will find its columns instructive, entertaining and pure. I hope that you will long be spared, Mr. Cameron, as head of the paper, and that you will wield the editorial pen for twice will hold sway over the establishment for twice 33 years." (Applause.)

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

Messrs. William Maynard and John Ferguson then enlivened the proceedings with instrumental selections, rendering several popular airs upon two harmonicas with autoharp and banjo accompaniments. Their excellent performance was loudly applauded.

THE STEREOTYPE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Frank Macpherson replied to the toast of "The Stereotype Department" in a few brief remarks. He stated that his connection with The Advertiser had been short, but the longer he occupied a place in the establishment the more he liked it, and he had heard nothing but good words from his fellow employes. He commented upon the efficiency of the apparatus, and congratulated Mr. Cameron upon the success which had attended The Advertiser for the past third of a century.

Mr. Henry Barcley paid a fitting tribute to The Advertiser, and in a few well-timed remarks. He said he had at one time drifted away from The Advertiser, but he had again returned to his first love, and considered it an honor to be one of the employes of the firm. He congratulated the proprietor, Mr. Cameron, on the occasion.

"THE AD. MAN."

Mr. Kompass spoke on "The ad. man's view of the situation." He said: "I find the advertising public alive to the importance of The Advertiser as a medium to make known what they have to sell, and I have the most cordial co-operation in my duties from every department of the establishment."

"MORE STEAM."

The chairman called on Mr. Rissler, engineer, to reply to this toast. Mr. Rissler said: "I have seen a great deal and heard a great deal tonight which is instructive to me. As engineer I am proud of the position which I fill. I recognize that in my charge are placed the safety of valuable lives and property, and that constant care is necessary. Electricity is now largely replacing steam, and in this respect The Advertiser keeps in the van. This week, we are replacing our steam engine by electric motors, though the heating of the establishment will still be by steam. There are differences of opinion as to the relative value of electricity and of steam as motor power, but there is a more effective stimulant than either, and that is co-operation. When a man does the best he can for his employer, and the employer does the best he can for his employe, success must be attained."

This was the last toast on the list, and the company joined heartily in singing the "National Anthem." The most enjoyable reunion was brought to a close at an early hour this morning with cheers for Mr. Cameron and Mr. Willison, and The Advertiser.

NOTES.

The piano used for the occasion—an exceedingly rich-toned instrument—was kindly loaned by R. S. Williams, Sons & Co.

The floral display on the tables, through the kindness of Mr. Gammage, was strikingly beautiful.

Mr. Victor Colwell, accompanist to the Glee Club, was a host in himself. He is a young musician of great promise.

The Glee Club would be a credit to any establishment.

Mr. Fysh supplied a most tempting bill of fare. It was well served, too. The assistants proved so expert that the speechifying was well under way shortly after 9 o'clock—most unusual celerity.

PLEASES THE VATICAN.

Rome, Nov. 6.—The Vatican received the news of McKinley's election with "marked approval," according to the correspondents. Americans here are evidently pleased.

LILIOUKALANI PARDONED.

News from Honolulu says the Hawaiian Government has granted a full pardon and restoration of her civil rights to ex-Queen Lilioukalani. The pardon is based upon the fact that during her parole she has faithfully kept the terms of her partial freedom.

DESTRUCTIVE EARTHQUAKES.

London, Nov. 5.—Advices received here show that earthquakes were renewed in the southwestern part of Iceland on Oct. 4. One hundred and fifty farms were ruined, a large number of cattle killed, and quantities of stores destroyed. The loss is estimated at 500,000 kroner. No loss of life is reported. There is much misery among the people, who are camping out under improvised shelters.

STEAMERS DELAYED.

London, Nov. 6.—The steamers Indiana and Majestic, which sailed from Liverpool yesterday respectively for Philadelphia and New York, are detained in the Mersey by fog.

The German Bundesrath or Federal Council has given its assent to a bill increasing by 1,500 marks that subsidy paid by the Empire to the North German Lloyd Steamship Company in consideration of the company establishing a fortnightly service to China.

EVACUATION OF CYPRUS.

London, Nov. 6.—The Daily Telegraph claims to have authority confirming a statement published on Wednesday in the Truth that the Government has decided to abandon the Island of Cyprus, which was given up to Great Britain for administration by the Anglo-Turkish commission in 1878. The Graphic adds that the evacuation of the island is recognized as a necessary corollary to the abandonment of the Anglo-Turkish convention. The decision of the Government was hastened by Russia's view that the convention implied mistrust of the Russian policy, and that the retention of Cyprus nullified the contention that the convention had ceased to exist. Officials at the Colonial Office declare that they are ignorant of any intention on the part of the Government to evacuate the island. The article in Truth asserted that Cyprus would be made independent, but this is not confirmed.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE.

Their Treaty—Defensive Measure That Does Not Cover Possible French Aggression.

London, Nov. 6.—The Daily Chronicle says it is able to give, on what it regards as unquestionable authority, the outlines and general effect of the instrument known as the Franco-Russian treaty of alliance. Its date was August, 1890, and at or about that period the French visit to Cronstadt was fixed. The next important date is October, 1893, the time of the Toulon visit. That event was followed by the signing of the treaty itself in December, 1893.

The alliance is simply a military convention with special relation to the balance of power created by the Austro-German alliance. It lapses on the day on which that agreement comes to an end. It is purely defensive and contains no stipulation of an aggressive nature. The defensive character of the instrument necessarily implies that it accepts the settlement arrived at by the treaty of Frankfort, and therefore could not be used by France for the recovery of Alsace-Lorraine; in other words, it is directed only against an attack by Germany such as Prince Bismarck meditated in 1875, when France was saved from invasion by the intervention of Queen Victoria and the Emperor Alexander II.

Fresh codicils have been added, dealing with two situations—first, a curious scare based on an unfounded report of an intention on Britain's part to intervene in Morocco; and, second, the recent war between China and Japan. A further but slighter development of the alliance has been the dispatch of, we believe, two French notes to England, concerning the expedition to the Soudan. These notes were shown to Russia before their dispatch.

A Singapore dispatch to the London Times says that contracts have been signed at Pekin for two Armstrong cruisers and four German torpedo boats.

Immense Popular Vote Polled for McKinley.

Mark Hanna's Latest Bulletin—Doubtful States Heard From.

1,000,000 MAJORITY.

New York, Nov. 6.—The following statement was given out yesterday noon at Republican national headquarters by Chairman Mark A. Hanna: "Official returns have been received to satisfy me that the following States have been carried by McKinley and Hobart without a doubt: California, 9; Connecticut, 6; Delaware, 3; Illinois, 24; Indiana, 15; Iowa, 13; Maine, 6; Maryland, 8; Massachusetts, 15; Minnesota, 9; Michigan, 14; North Dakota, 3; New Hampshire, 4; New Jersey, 10; New York, 36; Ohio, 23; Oregon, 4; Pennsylvania, 32; Rhode Island, 4; South Dakota, 4; Vermont, 4; West Virginia, 6; Wisconsin, 12; Wyoming, 1; total, 265, which will insure McKinley's election by a majority of 83 in the electoral college. Another most significant fact of this victory is that McKinley and Hobart's election has been secured by a plurality of over 1,000,000 of the popular vote—the largest ever given. I am confident that we shall secure the other two electors in Wyoming and the thirteen in Kentucky, and North Carolina's eleven vote sare in doubt. The importance to the country of this result cannot be overestimated, and is a matter of congratulation to all loyal and patriotic citizens of the United States. Incendiary utterances and pretended claims which question the accuracy of this statement should not disturb the public mind. (Sgd.) M. A. HANNA, Chairman."

BRYAN TO McKINLEY.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 6.—Last evening Senator Jones telegraphed to Mr. Bryan that he had given up the fight. The message was handed to Mr. Bryan at his residence. "You may say," said Mr. Bryan to a reporter, "that the election of McKinley is conceded, and that I will issue a statement."

Immediately after receiving Senator Jones' telegram, Mr. Bryan wrote the following dispatch:

"Hon. Wm. McKinley, Canton, O.—Senator Jones has just informed me that the returns indicate your election, and I hasten to extend my congratulations. We have submitted the issues to the American people and their will is law. (Sgd.) William J. Bryan."

Mr. Bryan seemed actually happy that the strain was over. He told a press representative that he would prepare a statement to be issued to the bimetalists at once. Mr. Bryan said he did not care to say anything about the result of the election now, but in response to a question as to whether he thought McKinley's election was a blow to the cause of bimetalism he responded: "The fight has just commenced."

McKINLEY TIRED.

Canton, O., Nov. 6.—Major McKinley, yielding to the pressure of friends and his physician, has at last decided to absent himself from Canton for a time, and will, with Mrs. McKinley, leave for Cleveland within a few days. They will spend a week or so quietly.

BRIGHTER PROSPECT.

Dun & Co.'s Review of the Business Situation in Canada.

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 6.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly statement of trade in Canada says:

Montreal business men in all lines profess their gratification at the result of the United States elections, and the feeling of hopefulness for the future which has been gaining ground of late is further intensified. Dry-goods men report an improving sorting business, and as far as can be judged, November 4th payments have been very fairly met. Sugars are firmer. Teas and dried fruit generally show continued tendency to advance. The leather market is hardly so active, but values are very steady, and tanners are not disposed to contract ahead. Hides hold their value well, and lambskins are advanced 10 cents. The wool market is stronger, and some holders are not inclined to sell at recent quotations. Butter and cheese are about steady at the figures lately prevailing. Hops have made some gain in value.

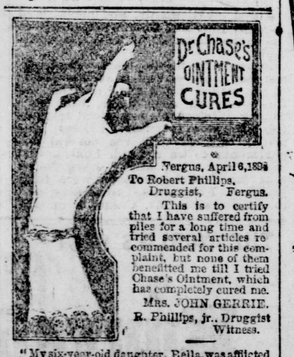

The movement of general merchandise of Toronto has been curtailed somewhat by bad weather. The trade is confined chiefly to orders of a sorting-up character. The tendency in prices appears upwards. Remittances show a slight improvement, and with present good prices for wheat and cheese the outlook is encouraging.

Failures for the week were 52, as against 49 for the same week of last year.

This is to certify that I have suffered from piles for a long time and tried several articles recommended for this complaint, but none of them benefitted me till I tried Chase's Ointment, which has completely cured me.

R. Phillips, jr., Druggist Witness.

"My six-year-old daughter, Bella, was afflicted with eczema for 24 months, the principal seat of eruption being behind her ears. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, bought innumerable medicines and soaps, and took the child to medical specialists in skin diseases, but without result. Finally, a week ago, I purchased a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the first application showed the curative effect of the Remedy. We have used only one-sixth of the box, but the change is very marked; the eruption has all disappeared, and I can confidently say my child is cured. (Signed) MAXWELL JOHNSTON

FOOTBALL

DID LOGIE DO THIS?

To Sporting Editor Mail and Empire:

Sir,—My attention has just been drawn to an article on the recent London-Lorne football match, which appeared in yesterday's issue of your paper. I trust you will permit me not only to correct certain inaccuracies which occur in that report, but to protest more earnestly against the tenor of the entire article. It is stated, for instance, that the lightest of the London scrimmagers tips the scale at 199 pounds. I have the honor to occupy a position among those scrimmagers, and not only is my weight considerably below that gigantic figure, but both of my fellow-athletes there are smaller men than I. This is an excusable mistake—this treating us like Falstaff's men in buckram—and we appreciate the delicacy of the compliment. But a thing which I, as captain of the London team, cannot so easily pass over is the extremely discourteous, and, it seems to me, unsportsmanlike, insinuation regarding the gentlemanliness of the London players. I know of no man on that team who is not a gentleman. The attitude of those members of the Lorne Club who express through the columns of a widely-circulated newspaper such discourteously unrefined imputations against their opponents on a football field is not without its touch of humor, and its own little irony. I still carry about with me several teeth marks which I got during Saturday's game, and until those teeth marks disappear I can hardly look to the Lorne Football Club to supply the members of my own team with a criterion of gentlemanliness. It is undeniably true that Saturday's game was a long and hard battle; yet if there was malicious scrapping during the game, surely the president of the Rugby Union was a competent enough referee to treat such procedure as it should be treated. I cannot remember Mr. Logie openly encouraging either side to play a "slugging" game; but I certainly can remember the answer that gentleman gave me on the field when I protested against what I thought his repeatedly unfair decisions: "My dear fellow, I don't give a ——— what you think!" We can quite sympathize with the Lornes' anxiety to have Mr. Logie referee their final game.

However that may be, surely it remains just as bad form, and just as ungraceful, for the conquering team to make such sweeping generalizations regarding the characters of their opponents, simply, it seems, because those opponents made an exceptionally great struggle to win a match which neither the gods nor the referee ordained them to win. We were the losing team; yet even we, too, may have had our complaints. It is with somewhat of a touch of pride that we say we have sustained our defeat in a gentlemanly and sportsmanlike manner. Yours, etc.,

ARTHUR J. STRINGER.

The London junior football club sent a challenge to the St. Thomas club to play them a game on Saturday next, but up to last (Thursday) evening had not received a reply as to whether it is accepted.

CURLING.

SARNIA SKIPS.

Sarnia Observer: At the last regular meeting of the curling club the following were nominated, and will be balloted for the first Tuesday in December: J. McGibbon, R. Mackenzie, D. Mackenzie, J. W. Hamilton, James King, J. Chester, A. Crawford, Dr. Johnston, A. Gibson, Capt. McGregor, R. Proctor, J. Leys, J. J. Clement, J. J. Thompson and T. H. Cook.

BASEBALL.

THE OUTLOOK IN CANADA.

Toronto World: It will be interesting to know that the veteran Charlie Maddock has been successful in securing sufficient subscriptions with which to launch a club on its journey in the Canadian League. Mr. Maddock has been interesting himself in the new scheme since it was mooted that the Pittsburg farmers would be withdrawn. He has been in correspondence for some time with President Stroud, of Hamilton, who will get the bulk of the credit for enlarging the circuit. Of the new league, the Hamilton Herald said, among other things: "The cities interested in the proposed organization are Hamilton, Toronto, Guelph, London, St. Thomas and Brantford. All are good ball towns, and would each support a club in such a league. It is gratifying to note that the correspondence, as far as it has progressed, indicates the formation of the league, and it would appear that an early meeting of the old league officials, together with representatives of the proposed new cities, should be held, that the matter might assume some tangible form. There are ball-players to be signed, and this is the season of the year when the magnates across the border have put their search-lights out for players of prominence and likely colts, and the Canadian clubs must have good players capable of putting up a satisfactory quality of baseball in order to make the game attractive to the general public. Toronto probably has had enough of the International League, and a team from that city in a purely Canadian association would become a popular feature, and do much to revive the sport in the Queen City."

American Produce Markets.

CHICAGO.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—Wheat backed down from its recent lofty position today. It was a day of liquidating, and yet it is held that only a very small portion of the long wheat accumulated has sought a market. It was due to buying against "puts" that to-day's decline was finally checked. At the close prices showed 1c recovery, but the undertone was far from stout. Liverpool declined 1½d for the day, the loss being construed as evidence of foreigners' willingness to follow America's lead. For many days short selling has been a neglected industry, and the absence of the demand which should come from that source was in itself a weakening factor, declines being more rapid than if stayed by such buying. Closing continental cables were irregular, Paris quoting moderate advances and Berlin a decline. Antwerp was also slightly higher. December wheat opened from 75¾c to 75½c, declined to 73½c, closing at 74¼c—2¾c under yesterday. Cash wheat was weak, and 2¢ lower. Corn declined 1¢, and oats 1¢. Provisions were lower.

The leading futures closed as follows:

Wheat—No. 2 Nov., 72½c; Dec., 74¼c; May, 78¾c.

Corn—No. 2 Nov., 23¾c; Dec., 24¾c; May, 28¼c.

Oats—No. 2 Nov., 17¾c; Dec., 18¾c; May, 21¾c to 21¾c.

Mess pork—Dec., $6 90; Jan., $7 80.

Lard—Dec., $4 15; Jan., $4 30.

Short ribs—Dec., $3 62½; Jan., $3 85.

Stage Gossip.

Attractions at the Grand—Joe Murphy Saturday Night—Jas. O'Neill Monday, and "Human Hearts" Tuesday.—Last Night's Performance.

JOSEPH MURPHY IN "SHAUN RHUE."

When blackthorn cudgels are conspicuous by their absence and redcoats cut no figure worth speaking of in "Shaun Rhue," the familiar play which perennially serves Joseph Murphy as a means to display his mimetic skill, still the comedy is conventionally Irish. It so impressed a large audience which enjoyed its production at Miner's Theater last night. The serious incidents are few and are soon forgotten in the steady flow of fun, in the making of which Mr. Murphy is the principal provoker. The play is too familiar to demand review. Mr. Murphy is too well established in the favor of his followers to warrant extended comment on his work. His acting is spirited and appreciative.—Newark Daily News.

Mr. Murphy will appear at the Grand tomorrow night only.

"MONTE CRISTO."

Others actors besides James O'Neil have attempted to play "Monte Cristo" in this country; but without any exception, every attempt has been a failure. Mr. O'Neill was the first American actor to make Dumas' fascinating hero, Edmond Dantes, popular with the public ten years ago, and, true to its trust, the public have never forgotten James O'Neill. On the contrary, every season the theater-goers express their continued approval of O'Neill's great performance by crowding the doors when "O'Neill in 'Monte Christo'" is the bill. This great attraction will be at the Grand Monday night.

"HUMAN HEARTS" NEXT FRIDAY.

"Human Hearts" contains a golden thread of truth, crossed here and there by a silver web of natural comedy. This beautiful story by Hal. Reid is a tale of the Arkansas hills, filled with quaintness and holly-hocks, sunflowers, crocuses, blue-flags, clover blossoms and yellow roses; the fair, sweet cry of the quail, the lowing of the kine and the bleating of sheep. In this hazy atmosphere, among its honest people, the young author has set a collection of gems whose sparkle and whose brilliancy has never yet failed to please its auditors. Harry C. Miner, who has this production in charge, realizing that such a story, so well written, needed the most careful rendering, personally selected the cast which for this season is to interpret the play. Mr. Miner, owning the Fifth Avenue Theater and five others in New York, owning and producing "Shore Acres," and having successfully piloted half a hundred past successes, should be a guarantee to the theatergoers that "Human Hearts" is well worth seeing.

"SIDE-TRACKED."

Last evening at the Grand the laughable comedy-drama "Side-Tracked" was presented to a crowded house. The patronage was well deserved, the play being highly interesting as well as funny. Mr. E. H. O'Connor, in his role as a tramp, performed his part to perfection, keeping the audience in a continued state of hilarity, while Ed. O'Connor as McGinty, Wm. Bowers as Fritz Grabhold, and Daisy Chaplain as Bessie Reynolds were excellent. The specialties introduced throughout the piece were first-class. The other parts were taken by James Wall, Osborne Searle, Frank Poole, R. E. Vance, George Arcott, J. Brophy, Gail Stanwood, Carmillia Martin and Amy Paige.

Col. Otter Speaks His Mind Regarding the Seventh.

The Inspector Much Disappointed—His Address to the Men.

The Seventh Battalion turned out again last night for the trying ordeal—a regimental inspection by Lieut.-Col. Otter, of Toronto. The turn out was weak, both in men and officers. The battalion, in command of Col. Lindsay, was formed up in the order of a square, to receive Col. Otter and his staff, composed of Lieut.-Col. Smith, D.A.G., Major Hemming, and Capt. Carpenter. Col. Otter, on his arrival, was received with a general salute, while the band struck up, "See the Conquering Hero Comes." After ordering the officers to dismount, Major Hayes was called upon to put the battalion through the manual exercise, which they did exceedingly well. They were then put through volley firing by companies, half companies and sections, and the latter caught the Seventh napping. Col. Lindsay was then called to put them through several movements, but when ordered to give the command of column to the left, he became somewhat nervous and slightly mixed. With this single exception the work was well done.

Col. Otter then took the men in hand, and addressed them as follows:—

"As inspecting officer, it is my duty to point out any defects I may see, and give credit for any points that are good. This is the first time I have seen the Seventh in a great many years; it is the first time I have inspected it, and I am going to tell you plainly of the different points to your advantage and disadvantage; of things which I consider are not as they should be, and I do so only with the purpose of giving you an opportunity to improve yourself in the future. If I did not do so I would utterly fail in my object as an inspecting officer. These things I may point out to you as requiring improvement, I wish you to recollect, and endeavor by next inspection to be in such a position that they will not have to be again referred to. The first thing that struck me last night was the weakness of the battalion. I do not understand the reason for the lack of numbers, nor can I see any reason for it. London is a large place, and one would look for military enthusiasm in it. Whether it lacks military spirit, or whatever may be the cause, the fact stands most apparent that you are weak. This evening, although the ranks are a little fuller than last night, the battalion is not up to strength, and this is a matter which, both in the interests of the locality and the corps, should be remedied. I think it can, with a little extra exertion on the part of yourselves to bring in more of your friends. A battalion of your strength, even when in full numbers, is small enough, but when it is reduced at least one-third it loses a great deal of its efficiency. In the matter of drill last night I was also disappointed. I expected to have found you farther advanced than you are, and I do not see any excuse for this, either, considering that you have here a military school, where every chance is given for obtaining instruction, and where you have soldiers constantly moving about amongst you, giving you an example and tending to rouse your enthusiasm. This evening there is another matter that has rather disappointed me. It is in connection with your strength—and that is the weakness, numerically, of the officers. Instead of finding the ranks full, as I should in a city battalion, I find only one officer to every company on the average. I do not know what possesses the young men of London, who should become officers in a battalion of this kind; but certainly I can only come to the conclusion that they lack military enthusiasm in not being found in their own corps. This evening the work of the battalion was very much better. I am pleased to see that the men in moving in the ranks the very quiet and steady, showing a strong desire to do their best. With a feeling of that kind in a battalion, there is no reason why it should not prosper, improve and succeed. I have faith in your improving, before another inspection comes on, and I am satisfied that the material I see before me is good and can be made much of. You must recollect that if it is necessary or advisable to have a battalion in London, it is necessary for the country to have its militia force in good shape, and that if the purpose is not served it is very much better that the money should be saved and no militia maintained. To make it a success we must enter into it with heart and soul."

CITY POLICE COURT.

Magistrate Parke Deals With a Number of Cases.

Police Magistrate Parke had a crowded court this morning. Albert Bolton, a young man, was accused by Joseph Fox of stealing a fall overcoat. He was arrested as a drunk on Sept. 29, and remanded for a week. At that time it was not known that the coat he wore had been stolen, but Detective Nickel in making inquiry about the man made the discovery.

The drunks discharged were William Armstrong and Thomas Cake, each of whom received a word of advice from the magistrate.

A party of young men were up for disorderly conduct at the corner of King and Burwell streets. They were Leonard Turtin, Eugene Moriarity, Christopher Martin, Fred. Heaman and Edward Brown. Mrs. Cox appeared against the young men. The magistrate fined Heaman and Brown $1 each or three days in jail. In passing judgment he warned young Heaman that if he ever came back he would send him down, as reports of Heaman's unbecoming conduct had reached his ears on previous occasions.

William Haywood, a cripple was charged with furious driving on the market. Mr. Love defended him, and told the court that Mr. Haywood was the sole support of his mother, and that the horse he drove was not capable of much speed, as its owner had purchased it for $3. Haywood was allowed to go on suspended sentence.

Mr. D. Beach, charged with infraction of the city bylaw in having obstructed the sidewalk with his wagon, was discharged.

Board of Works.

Reconsidered Old Claims Against the City.

Sewerage Construction Committee Met Mr. Chipman—Work May Soon Commence.

The Board of Works met last night, with all members present. The claim of Miss Annie Hayes for damages sustained in the patrol wagon collision was again considered. Ald. Cooper and Dreaney were indignant at the continued silence of the police commissioners.

Ald Pritchard proposed to give Miss Hayes $500, and was supported by Ald. O'Meara.

It was decided that Ald. Parnell and the mayor should interview the claimant and learn for what sum a settlement could be effected.

The complaints of Messrs. Hunt and Carr that tar was entering the river at the gas works were referred to the engineer to report.

The Trades and Labor Council's recommendation that the sewerage construction be done by day labor was considered, but no action decided upon.

Thomas Brown, of 256 Talbot street, was thrown out of a wagon on Central avenue in crossing the road where it had been torn up by the Street Railway Company, and claimed damages.

The engineer said the railway company were responsible.

Ald. Dreaney reported that the Dundas street east pavement was badly in need of sweeping, and the work will be done.

The committee sustained Street Commissioner Ironsides in his report against refunding $36 80 to Contractor Barritt, the sum being taken off on account of poor gravel supplied.

Consulting Engineer Willis Chipman arrived in the city last night and was met by the members of the Board of Works and Ald. Skinner and Dr. Campbell, who compose the sewerage construction committee.

The plans prepared, as well as the specifications, were turned over to Mr. Chipman for inspection. He will report upon these shortly, and then the only thing remaining will be to call for tenders, unless the work is to be done by day labor.

City Engineer Graydon reported that plans for the first two sections were ready.

The mayor said Mr. Chipman was present, in response to a wire from him, to receive instructions from the committee.

Ald. Pritchard wanted to know what guarantee Mr. Chipman proposed to give that the work would be properly carried out. He understood that such had been promised by the mayor.

The mayor said he had never intended to give any such impression.

Ald. Pritchard stuck to his contention and moved that Mr. Chipman give the proper guarantee before anything is done.

Mayor Little declared that such a thing as asking an engineer to give security had never been heard of.

Ald. Cooper supported Ald. Pritchard, but the motion was defeated.

The committee ordered that the plans be submitted to Mr. Chipman, and that he report back.

WHEAT OUTLOOK IN MANITOBA.

Winnipeg, Nov. 6.—Wheat prices in Manitoba today range from 60c to 70c, "according to the inclinations of the buyers," as one grain man put it. General Superintendent Whyte, of the C. P. R., interviewed today, said that shipments from Fort William were very light compared with other years; there were 2,000,000 bushels in the elevators there which owners were holding for better prices. West of Winnipeg there was about 3,800,000 bushels of wheat stored and shipments east were 50 per cent lighter than those of last year, so that the company had no difficulty whatever in filling all orders for cars. Everybody expected the highest prices.

THE 'MUM' TURNED DOWN

Chrysanthemums Not So Popular for Street Wear—Carnations and Violets the Favorites.

The reign of the chaste Chrysanthemum seems to have closed, though her dethronement may be only temporary. The many bosoms of the swell youths seldom droop this fall beneath the weight of these floral giants. The "mum" appears to have been replaced as a buttonhole favorite by the modest violet and the brilliant carnation. "The decline of the chrysanthemum has been very marked this year," said Mr. Gammage, the florist, to an Advertiser reporter. "For street wear it has been almost entirely superseded by the carnation and violet. The chrysanthemum is a splendid flower, and the decree of fashion is the only cause assigned for its being 'turned down.' I have no doubt it will again become a reigning favorite, as public tastes are always changing. Its size had perhaps something to do with its fall from grace. The carnation is perhaps more convenient as a boutonnaire, and is almost as handsome. The violet has always been popular.

A New Proprietor.

Wm. C. Wright, late of London, England, and Stratford, Ont., has purchased the business of E. Jarmain, butcher, at 336 Ridout street, and is now in possession. Mr. Wright is a man of long experience, and the public can rely on his keeping the best stock of meats, etc. The Cambridge Sausage is one of his special brands, and is worthy of a trial.

Sir Charles Tupper, in a speech at Montreal yesterday, again pitched into the Governor-General for thwarting him in his attack on the liberties of the people of Canada. Lord Aberdeen meanwhile enjoys himself on his British Columbia farm. His Excellency has the satisfaction of knowing that the people of Canada and the statesmen of Great Britain indorse his action. Sir Charles also attacked Mr. Laurier in most violent language. The Premier can stand it all.

As showing the expatriation of Canadians that has gone on in past years, the result of the New Hampshire elections are good evidence. Five members of the new Legislature are French-Canadians.

Rev. Dean Innes, of this city, was a member of a deputation from the Anglican body which called upon Premier Hardy on Thursday and asked to have the Bible made a regular textbook in the public schools of the Province, and that its contents should be explained by the teachers. At present the Bible is read, but not explained. Mr. Hardy promised to have the matter considered.

THE CUSTOMS RETURNS.

The customs returns for the port of London for October show the total value of dutiable goods imported to have been $121,172, on which $36,937 35 was collected, a decrease of $10,545 02 in the collections compared with October last year. The free goods imported were valued at $64,496, and the exports at $56,089, the heaviest items under the latter heading being bacon, $23,916, and cheese, $8,282. Of the duties collected, $3,346 33 was on fruits and $2,449 42 on spirits.

ARRESTED IN HAMILTON.

Detective Ward this morning received a message from Hamilton notifying him that Lewis McCane and Charles Marsh were arrested there. The men are wanted here on a charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses, preferred by Mr. Bachelor, of London West. The men went to live at Mrs. Bachelor's house, and told her they had money coming with which to pay for their board. They left one day ostensibly for St. Thomas for money, and it is alleged skipped to Hamilton. Detective Ward left for the Ambitious City to bring back the men. The sum involved is about $30.

SIDEWALK WANTED.

A lady subscriber from South London writes us: "Three excellent brick houses, all adjoining, have been erected during the past year on Edward street, near Elmwood avenue, but they are yet without a sidewalk of any kind, the result being that the occupants have to wade ankle-deep through the stiff clay soil which abounds in that neighborhood. The chairman of the board of works gave orders some time ago that a sidewalk should be put down, but it has been neglected by those whose duty it is to carry out the orders. Unless the walk is put down within a week or so we will be compelled to wade in the mud for another winter.

The trustees wish to state that Miss Beattie, of Guelph, has taken the position of nurse in place of Miss Argo, who resigned. There are only nine employes at the home. Three young girls are being trained to assist, and take positions as vacancies arise.

SILK-GRAHAM CASE SETTLED.

The Silk-Graham case, which has been adjourned from time to time for the last two months by Squire J. B. Smyth was settled yesterday. Mr. Silk is a bank manager at Shelburne, and it was alleged that while on his way to this city from Ingersoll, and that when he went to Graham's place the latter assaulted him. Mr. Graham claimed that Mr. Silk had been under the influence of liquor, and in knocking at his door had broken a pane of glass, and he had held Mr. Silk's bicycle until the glass was paid for. Twelve witnesses were examined at different times for Mr. Graham and ten for Mr. Silk, but the evidence of the 22 witnesses was sadly conflicting. The case was dismissed, Squire Smyth deciding that Mr. Silk pay the costs of the court, and each party pay their own witnesses. The cost to each party will be in the neighborhood of $30.

Frightful Explosion

Takes Place On Front Street, Toronto.

Three Men Received Probably Fatal Injuries.

Two Other Persons Hurt—The Building a Wreck.

Special to The Advertiser

Toronto, Nov. 6.—About 9 o'clock this morning a frightful explosion took place in the roofing material manufactory of Patterson Bros., of 301 Front street east, in which three men were probably fatally hurt and two others more or less injured. The force of the explosion was such that the entire building was wrecked.

There are three large stills containing pitch, and immediately after the explosion the flames broke out fiercely, and the firemen were busily engaged in throwing water on to keep the fire from spreading.

While attending to his duty at the commencement Fireman Hart received a severe blow from a falling brick, but was not seriously injured.

TAKEN FROM THE RUINS.

The first injured man taken from the ruins was Robert Charlton, of 13 Bright street. He was found to be severely scalded about the hands and head and his right arm broken. He was taken to the general hospital.

Joseph Lancaster, of 367 Front street east, was next taken out. He was badly scalded and burned also about the head and arm. His home being near, he was carried there, and is being attended by Dr. Hastings, who reports the injuries very severe.

The other employe, Henry Adams, of 109 Sydenham street, was frightfully burned and disfigured. His wounds were partially dressed before conveyance to the General Hospital. His head was burned so as to render him almost unrecognizable, and long strips of skin hung down, making the sight a sickening one. So great was the pain that the least draft of air could hardly be borne by the sufferer, and only after he had been completely swathed in bandages was an effort made to carry him to the ambulance.

ESCAPED.

There were five men in the building when the explosion occurred. Joseph Lancaster managed to get out without injury.

Jack Young, the office boy, jumped from the second-story window, and was severely bruised.

The loss will amount to about $20,000.

(Special to The Advertiser.)

PANIC IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD.

Toronto, Nov. 6.—There was intense excitement among the residents of the neighborhood when the explosion took place. The force was so great that nearly all the glass in the windows of the houses immediately opposite the works was shattered, and the people living in the houses ran shrieking into the streets. Fragments of the woodwork, consisting of window sills and door frames were hurled clean across the street.

THREE MONTHS IN JAIL.

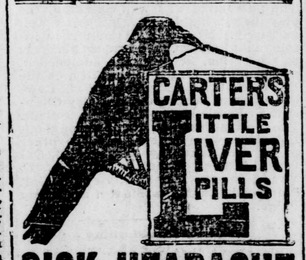

Mrs. Castle, the Wealthy Shoplifter, Found Guilty.

London, Nov. 6.—The trial of Mr. and Mrs. Walter N. Castle, of San Francisco, charged with shop-lifting, took place in the Sessions House at Clerkenwell today.

Mr. Castles was found not guilty, but Mrs. Castles was sentenced to three months imprisonment without hard labor.

Mrs. Castle sobbed hysterically when she was placed in the dock, and her husband showed traces of much suffering. Mrs. Castle has aged considerably since her arrest, exactly a month ago today, at the Hotel Cecil, on the charge of having stolen various articles, such as furs, etc., from different stores in this city. Mr. Castle pleaded "Not guilty." Mrs. Castle was then called upon to plead; but Mr. Clarke arose and said that his client, Mrs. Castle, would plead guilty to all the indictments, which were read separately, Mr. Castle pleading at the same time "Not guilty" to each separate charge. The scene was a very distressing one. Mrs. Castle's counsel, in the course of his plea, said: "The facts which the prosecution has recited suggest that there must be something extraordinary to account for them. In five or six days this lady, who had no possible reason for temptation, goes about London and takes articles under no pressure of need. When arrested she had plenty of money. Mr. Castle had started from home with a credit of £800, of which £50 was not exhausted and his wife had plenty of money. He argued it was a clear case of insanity.

The unfortunate woman, on hearing the sentence, went into hysteries, shrieking, "Oh, my God," "Oh, my God," for nearly five minutes. She threw up her arms and staggered about muttering at times incoherently and then shrieked in wild agony. At 1:45, thanks to the attention of physicians who had administered sedatives to her, Mrs. Castle was calmer, but tearful, and was able to enter a cab, accompanied by her husband and the chief jailer, and started for Wormwood Scrubbs Prison.

Mrs. Schrieber Shoots Her Boy Lover

And Then Destroys Her Own Life—A Very Remarkable Love Affair in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—Word has reached here from Elgin, Ill., that Mrs. Annie Schrieber, who eloped from here with her boy lover, Bruno Milke, has killed the lad and herself.

Bruno was only 14 years old, and was the nephew of Mrs. Schrieber, who was just twice his age. The elopement was in consequence of the following letter:

"Darling Bruno,—I love you more than I do my life. You say that you love me. I will always love you, and because I will, you must never love anyone but me. I will shoot you if you do and then I will shoot myself."

This was conveyed by the boy's father to his brother-in-law, Paul Schrieber. The woman boldly avowed her infatuation, whereupon Schrieber left her.

Next day she left Chicago, taking the boy with her, and leaving word that they would die together. Soon after reaching Elgin three shots were heard in the street and the boy was found dead, with bullets through his head and heart. Mrs. Schrieber was dying, with a bullet through her head. She died a few hours later at the hospital.

Mrs. Schrieber was an agreeable and rather handsome woman.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 6.—The result in Kentucky on Presidential electors is more in doubt than ever. A Lover's Triumph.

The next morning he walked down to the Fulton Ferry with Mr. Huntress, and on the way he remarked, with more than his accustomed gravity:

"Uncle August Gladys is going to Vassar next year, isn't she?"

"Yes; she is ambitious to take an advanced course, and there is no reason why she should not do so, if she desires."

"Will you allow me to continue my studies during the summer with Mr. Rivers, and enter some institute in the fall where I can advance more rapidly?"

Mr. Huntress turned and looked searchingly into the young man's flushed face, as he asked this question.

He was a tall, manly fellow of 19, strong and stalwart of frame, his fine, massive head crowned with waving hair a few shades darker than it was when we first saw him; his eyes full of fire and intelligence, his whole face glowing with strength of character, and a certain something which gave one an idea of great reserve power, and it was no wonder that the countenance of Mr. Huntress lighted with a look of pride, as he realized that, under God, he had been instrumental in giving to the world this noble specimen of manhood.

Then a sudden smile broke over his face.

"Why, Geoff, are you envious of Gladys, because she is going to college?" he asked, in a bantering tone.

A deeper flush suffused the young man's handsome face. Then he replied, in low, but intense tones:

"I hope I am not envious of any good that comes to her; I am more proud of her than I can express, and I would not have her anything but just what she is, the kindest, the smartest, and loveliest of girls; but I can't quite stand it to be so far behind her, to have her look down upon me and despise me for being so ignorant."

"I do not think that Gladys would ever be guilty of anything so unkind, Geoff; she loves you far too well for that," returned Mr. Huntress, gravely, but still closely watching his protege, for he could well understand the pain he was suffering.

Geoffrey's face kindled, and his companion could see his temples throbbing as the blood coursed more quickly through his veins at his words.

"Thank you, Uncle August, for assuring me of Gladys' affection; but I want her respect as well," he said, with a slight quiver in his tone.

August Huntress started at that reply, for it betrayed a great deal.

It told him that the devotion and affection which he had manifested for Gladys from the first had now grown into a strong, deep passion, which would either make or mar his whole future, and he was strangely moved by this discovery.

How would it be with Gladys if she should discover it? Would her heart respond to this wealth of love? Would she ever be willing to link her fate with his?

She was far in advance of Geoffrey, mentally, but he was making such rapid and resolute strides after her, that, at the rate he had been gaining on her of late, it could not be very long before he would reach the plane on which she was standing, even if he did not distance her altogether.

Well, well, it would be a romantic ending to the story of their lives, he thought, if these two, so strangely thrown upon his care—with so much of mystery surrounding their birth and parentage, and likely always to envelope them—should some day unite their fates and wed each other.

But he allowed nothing of all this musing to appear; he simply said, with his accustomed kindness and genial smile:

"You are worthily ambitious, Geoff, but I don't know how you will stand it to apply yourself so closely all summer and then go right on in the fall. I cannot allow you to sacrifice your health to your love for study."

"But I am well and strong as a giant; will you let me try, sir?" he pleaded, earnestly.

"Yes, indeed, with all my heart. It is a pleasure to give you advantages when you improve them so eagerly. I will make it an object to Mr. Rivers to remain with you during the vacation, and then we can decide later where you will go in the fall."

"Thank you, Uncle August, you are like a dear father to me, and I could not love you better if you really were. I hope some day to prove, in some tangible way, how grateful I am for your goodness," Geoffrey said, with deep feeling.

"Tut, tut, my boy, don't burden yourself with any sense of obligation. I am getting my pay as I go along, in the enjoyment I get out of having a fine, manly fellow like yourself in the house. I don't believe I could be prouder of my own son than I am of you, and, taking us all in all, I imagine there isn't a happier family in all Brooklyn than the one residing at No. —— Clinton avenue. Eh, Geoff?"

CHAPTER VII.

August Huntress and his gentle wife, Alice, deserved to be happy, for they had devoted the best of their lives to the work of rearing the two children who had been so strangely thrown upon their care.

Of course it was but natural that their love for Gladys should be deeper, stronger, and more sacred than for Geoffrey, for they had taken her to their hearts as their very own when she was but a tiny baby, and having had no other children sent them to share their affection, their every hope had long been centered in her.

But they felt very tenderly toward the hapless boy who had first aroused their sympathy for his misfortune, and subsequently won their love by his gentleness and confidence in them.

Mr. Rivers, Geoffrey's tutor, was very glad of the opportunity to remain with his pupil during the summer vacation; for it was simply a pleasure to teach one so eager for knowledge; while, too, being in limited circumstances, he needed the pecuniary benefit accruing from the arrangement.

Mr. Huntress sent them both into the country upon a farm, where they could have fresh air and country living to strengthen their bodies, while storing their brains with knowledge.

Mr. Rivers was most faithful in fulfilling his duties as a tutor, while Geoffrey was indefatigable as a student. He applied himself early and late; he dug to the very root of every problem and question, while he possessed the power of concentration to such a degree that he got over the ground much more rapidly than most students.

At the beginning of September he was pronounced qualified to enter a private institution for young men, where the principal, after learning the circumstances regarding his early misfortune and inability to study, allowed him special privileges.

Here he remained for a year, overcoming every obstacle with an iron will and unflagging perseverance, and surprising every one by his progress.

He developed in other ways also, becoming more mature physically, and acquired a dignity and thoughtfulness almost beyond his years, yet at the same time possessing a peculiar gentleness and courtesy of manner that won every one.

At the end of the year he was qualified to enter college.

Mr. Huntress told him that he might remain where he was if he felt the least sensitiveness about entering a university; but he was ready and eager now to take his place in the world with young men of his own age. Geoffrey had a consciousness within him that he could hold his own anywhere, and he decided that he would go to Yale.

He passed his examinations, and was received without a condition, and he could not help experiencing a feeling of triumph that at last he was on the "home stretch," so to speak, for the goal toward which he had for years so longingly and enviously looked.

Now he was only one year behind Gladys, and he hoped to be able to lessen the distance between them before he was through with his course. At all events, if his health was spared, he would now have a finished education, and would not need to feel that he was beneath her in point of intellect.

As for Gladys, herself, she was as proud as she could be when Geoffrey told her of his success.

Very Hard. Indeed.

There are so many things that appear unnecessary, and which for the life of us we can see neither purpose nor end. It may be corns are just one of those thorns in the flesh the why and the wherefore of which we cannot see. Nevertheless they are of the kind that are easily removed. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor makes short work of them. Try it and see how nicely it coaxes them out. Use none other than Putnam's Corn Extractor. Sold by druggists.

SALT RHEUM CURED.

Another Triumph for MANLEY'S CELERY NERVE COMPOUND.

Mrs. M. Wallace, of 112 Berkeley street, Toronto, writes as follows: I write this to let you know I have used Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound for salt rheum and poor blood. I did not know what to take. My daughter advised me to get Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound as she knew of a lady who was taking it and it was doing her good. I said I would try it; took one bottle and it helped me greatly, my feet got perfectly well, and my complexion became better on account of the improved condition of my blood.

BALLOTING MACHINES SUCCESSFUL

Used in New York and Massachusetts in the Late Election.

New York Post.

New York shared with Massachusetts the credit of being the first State to use voting machines in a Presidential election. The city of Rochester used seventy Myers machines, one in each electoral district, and the city of Worcester used forty-eight McTammany machines, two in each voting precinct. Each city used the invention of one of its own citizens, and local pride was one of the chief influences behind the experiments. Both machines provide a single knob for registering a vote for Presidential electors; that is to say, they are voted for in a group. The Myers machine provides a roll of blank paper on a cylinder, with a space exposed of sufficient size in which to write a name. The voter who wishes to cast a ballot for an individual elector can write the name thereon, and by pressing a knob, can have the vote recorded for counting. The McTammany machine simply provides a place in which to deposit a separate ballot. Both arrangements are makeshifts, and are not satisfactory solutions of the problem; but it is to be said that the right of voting for individual electors is a useless one, if no provision for its exercise were made.

Dear Sirs,—About three years ago, you may remember I handled some of your medicines at Queenston, Ont. I am not positive, but I think that the "Bark-well's Sure Corn Cure" that we had was got from your house. Will you kindly reply to this note, telling me if you do handle Bark-well's, and if so, would it be possible to send by mail? If I am mistaken, can you tell me what firms do handle it? I WANT NO OTHER except Bark-Well's Sure Corn Cure. It is put up in bottles, retailed at 25c. Hoping to hear from you soon, and wishing you compliments of the season, believe me, yours truly, HARRY H. YOUNG. v

A policeman and several citizens did heroic work, risking their lives to save the tenants of the house, whose means of escape were shut off by the flames.

You have been upright in all your dealings, and those who know you best hold you in the highest esteem, and we are anxious to give you a slight token of our regard in the shape of these two handsome chairs and purse, and hope you may have many a happy day to enjoy them, is our prayer. (Signed), William Legg, D. Chalmers, John Gumb, Joseph Brown." J.
