For years the Com-pany have been unable to supply the constantly in-creasing demand for their instruments, being always largely behind orders, though producing about twice the amount of work of any other maker of instru-

the amount of work of any other maker of instra-ments of the class. This extraordinary demand is evidence that they have been successful if carrying into effect two rules which it is there purpose to ad-linere to rigidly, so that they may be said to be prin-ciples of their business. Those are: 2. To make the very best work and only the best; availing themselves of the results of inventive ge-nius, every improvement, wherever effected and eve-ry facility which highest skill, ample experience, and liberal use of abundant means can produce. 2. To sell always at the lowest possible prices re-serving to themselves the least remunerative profit.
