Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Because I was in the neighbourhood. I do not wish to stand up in the Senate and say that the young people to-day should do exactly what I did in those days. In my advanced years I believe it is proper for me at any rate, to inculcate better ideas, but I just wish to observe, with regard to the bull fights, that it develops in the nation a species of cruelty for which the Spanish nation has the character and when enough horses had not been killed by the bulls the ladies and all would call out for more horses. Unless the horses were killed and danger was exhibited in that respect, the bull fight was not a success. When you know and have seen how the national character is developed by just such exhibitions as that, it behooves us to consider seriously whether the hon. leader of this House is not right in putting this legislation upon the statute-book. We have our athletic clubs all over Canada, where the athleticism of our young men is developed, and it behooves us to see that it is developed on the right lines and not in the direction of prize fighting, hazing, etc. I saw the other day an account of what was practically a prize fight in one of our athletic clubs, I think in Canada, where there were 6,000 people witnessing it. It was practically, to all intents and purposes, a prize fight, but they had gloves on.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It was not in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Then it was in the United States. However, that has been developed in the United States by just exactly what has been described here, by an exhibition of the vitascope, and other means to train youth in the wrong direction, and as the hon. gentleman from British Columbia has said, by the distribution of the information in all its worst details in the newspapers. The vitascope, to be sure, does not show us all the people who are looking on—the angry faces as one paper describes it—and in one case the cheers for the victor were drowned by the screams of the unfortunate man who got the knock down blow, a blow probably in a vital part, below the ribs. He was in such extreme agony that his screams could be heard above the cheers, and in the other case the wife of the contestant was there, urging her husband on and telling him to strike the other as hard as he could.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman appears to have read these reports.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, I read them. I quite agree with the hon. member from British Columbia, that it would be a very desirable thing if the hon. leader of the House would add to the bill that a stop should be put to the distribution of these reports if that were practicable. Some hon. gentleman said that the exhibition of the vitascope did not affect this thing, but it does. It makes the value of the prize fight so much greater. I have no doubt the patent right to the vitascope is worth some thirty or forty thousand dollars. It is impossible to say what it is worth when they come to sell their patent right all over the continent; in the same way the reporter, who reports the accounts for the newspapers, collects large sums a portion of which no doubt goes as gate money. All that induces the continuance of prize fighting, so long as it was confined to a narrow element of the population it was not a force, but the wholesale exhibition of the fight to all classes must reduce the moral of the young people growing up. For that reason, I feel it my duty, looking at it from a national standpoint, as far as the education of our youth is concerned, to support that motion.

Hon. Mr. ADAMS—Just a word before the question is put to the House. I desire to say that the discussion has at least proved that the passage of this section will do a very great injustice. The more one reads and studies it, the more he must necessarily be convinced that wrong must be done, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. What harm can there possibly be to us if ten prize fights are held within the Dominion of Canada to-morrow morning so long as you and I do not go to see them? We know nothing about them outside of the papers. I witnessed an exhibition by the biograph the other day in the state of New York. It gave to me the very best intellectual lesson I could receive. The New York Central Railroad as it was flashed out by a system of electricity and placed on a piece of canvas. It represented in completeness the arrival of the train and each one of the porters and passengers could be seen waiting for the stoppage. The next thrown on the canvas was the Pennsylvania Railway train coming round the mountain at the rate of 60 miles an hour. The next was the message handed to McKinley, now the President of the United States, by the special messenger that was sent to him; and do you mean to tell me to-night—you people who preach so much morality—that harm was done by virtue of this system of electricity, or the biograph as it is called, when that flash revealed the messenger delivering the message from the great national convention of the country in which he lived, "You have been selected by the people in convention," and the reply was handed back with the words, "carry to the convention my thanks for the nomination." Out went the light again and another picture appeared. It taught at least that every woman in the land should have her children clean. There was a nice little tub of water, Pears' soap was used and the kid was thrown into the water, and thus was this form of morality taught. To-night I am told that no man in this chamber can speak on this subject unless he is gray-headed—that no man can proclaim the word of truth unless he has reached a certain age. Is it possible that I am to sit here for ever and ever and be told that I should not be heard until my hair is gray? The hon. Minister of Justice says that he has a petition from some woman, and from the W.C.T.U., and from such and such religious and benevolent bodies in favour of this b ll. Is our legislation to be founded on letters and petitions from such persons addressed to the Minister of Justice, and is the criminal code of this country to be modified and changed by their representations, and are you and I and other members of this chamber not to have a word to say about it? Are men of great experience in life—men of superior intellect, to give away because the Minister of Justice has been asked by some old women to make this important change in the criminal code of Canada? I ask with all due respect—and the hon. gentleman must never misunderstand me that I have not that for him—does the purview of this very section of the law, now under consideration and incorporated in the criminal code, belong to the provincial legislature and the police magistrate? How can it be criminal to have an intention? The act must follow the intention, to make a man guilty. The mere intention to go to a prize fight, which may not happen, cannot make a man guilty of the offence. He must be an actor; he must form part of the illegal act to make him a criminal. According to the doctrine laid down here to-night, if a man started out in the morning with the intention of going to a prize fight, he is a criminal. If that be the doctrine entertained by this House, I cannot approve of it. Whether my opinion amounts to a row of pins or not—whether men treat me with indifference or not—there is no human being who possesses common sense in this world, but will say that that doctrine is unsound, whether it is held by the Minister of Justice or any one else. I agree with the hon. member from Richmond that we should look at this matter in a fair and reasonable way. What right have we to make a man a criminal when he is not one? What right have we to issue a bulletin from this chamber proclaiming that men or women are immoral when we have no proof to warrant us in saying so. A lady wrote me a letter the other day, and on the top of the envelop were the words "For God, for home and fatherland," and she said: "Mr. Adams, will you please use all your influence to help legislation which prohibits certain classes of literature passing through the mail." With my kindly disposition—because you know I am Irish—I wrote her back asking her would she kindly give me the names of the books, and I never heard from her since. I would advise the hon. leader of the House to let this legislation drop. I see on the cars here in Ottawa the announcement that the biograph will be exhibited at Victoria Park; if the exhibition were to be the picture of a prize fight, that would be an illegal act under this bill. To be consistent, go a step further and declare that if a Christian minister, at the altar or in the pulpit, on Sunday or any other day of the week, uses an unchristian expression against another denomination, he should be liable to imprisonment or a fine of five thousand dollars for using that expression. Do more than that—prevent every newspaper from publishing that expression, and say that if any newspaper gives the people an opportunity to read what the Christian minister declared from his pulpit on Sunday, he shall be guilty of an offence. Go further still, and say that if you or I read it we are guilty of an offence for which a penalty shall be provided. Now, how does the exhibition of a prize fight picture, or the publication of the details of the fight hurt you or me? We are told that it has a demoralizing effect. At the time of the fight at Carson city, I was in New York and I stood amongst twenty thousand people opposite the Herald and the Journal bulletin boards and what was the result? I did not find any man under the influence of liquor, I saw or heard no altercation, and when the announcement was made that Mr. Fitzsimmons had defeated Mr. Corbett, the people dispersed quietly. Not only that, but where the fight took place, under the sanction of the law enacted by the legislature of Nevada, there was not a man, woman or child found guilty of disturbing the peace in the vicinity of the ring when the contest occurred. We ought to keep our own skirts clean: if we do that, we need not be looking for an excuse for condemning other persons simply because we may suspect that they may intend to do wrong. If every man does what is right, and performs his honest duty there is no necessity for the enactment of laws such as these, which rather tend to make the country immoral than to make it better.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—On consultation with some of my hon. friends, and at the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, I have consented to change the nature of my amendment, and I now beg to move that all after the word "exceeding" in the second line be struck out, and the following substituted: "one thousand dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to both."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be as well, if the clause is to be adopted, to make the penalty positively one thousand dollars? If you say "not exceeding one thousand dollars" and strike out the minimum, it would leave too much to the discretion of the magistrate.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Leave out the whole clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is another point. If you bring a case before a magistrate who is favourable to these prize fights, as many of them are, or who sees no harm in the exhibition of these pictures, he might under the clause as it stands, impose a penalty of a dollar or two, because you say "not exceeding one thousand dollars." I am speaking from experience in this matter, and I daresay the lawyers in this House may have had cases of a similar character come before them. In carrying out the customs laws, there are many clauses which provide for a maximum penalty, but no minimum, and flagrant cases of miscarriage of justice have occurred. Where the magistrates were in sympathy with the smugglers, as many of them are, and think smuggling no harm, they have imposed most ridiculous penalties. To illustrate, I may mention a case that occurred in my own province. A smuggler made a proposition to an officer of the customs to enter into partnership with him; he was to allow the goods to pass, and was to have a certain proportion of the profits. That was a direct and positive infringement, not only of the Customs Act, but of the Audit Act, but there was no minimum penalty. The law provided for the imposition of a fine not exceeding a certain amount, and imprisonment, but no time was specified. What do you suppose the sapient magistrate did? He fined the man twenty-five cents and sent him to jail for ten minutes. He easied his conscience by arguing in this way—the officer did not take the bribe, therefore, the man who offered it was not as guilty as he would have been if the officer had taken it. I can give you a dozen cases of an analogous character under the law to which I have called attention. If it is necessary, in the interests of morals in this country, that that clause should be adopted, I hold, for the reasons I have given, that the imposition of a penalty not exceeding a certain sum, and without any minimum, will prove, in many cases, to be worthless.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not agree with the views which have been so generally expressed on this subject by most of those who have addressed the House. I do not see that there is anything improper in the representation of a contest between two men, where that contest is held under fixed and well defined rules, which have been drawn up by persons who have gone through the same performance themselves. Under the clause which is now proposed, it would not be at all objectionable to have a representation of a contest with swords between two persons, or of two men fighting a duel. In my opinion, such a contest is just as debasing and demoralizing as a prize fight. Neither would it be a violation of the law, if the bill passes in its present shape, to have a representation of a riot, in which brickbats are thrown and in which weapons are used, and, perhaps, people killed during the contest. By this bill, we propose to make a criminal offence of a thing which is not now a crime in any sense. It is true that a prize fight itself is, according to our laws, an offence. Under the existing law a fight can be illustrated in a paper and the details of it published, and scattered broadcast throughout the land, and even if this bill passes, the same thing can be done, and I look upon it, as some hon. gentlemen do, that such a distribution of the details of the fight is more demoralizing than a picture of the fight thrown on a canvas by means of late scientific inventions. Entertaining those views, and believing that there is nothing demoralizing in the representation of a prize fight in that way, I move that the clause be struck out of the bill.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—Does the clause provide for the confiscation of the machine?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No.

Hon Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—It should. If it is wrong to use these instruments for this purpose, the instruments ought to confiscated.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think it would be well to take the sense of the committee on the motion of the hon. member from Charlottetown.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I wish to say a word or two with regard to the observation made by the hon. leader of the opposition that we ought not to leave to the magistrate discretion to say what the minimum punishment should be. I would call the attention of my hon. friend to this fact, that there may be a very cheap exhibition by boys, and if you were to fix the amount at one thousand dollars, an exhibition that is not intended for gain but simply for amusement would subject those parties to the very high penalty which you name. It seems to me we could not do anything which would make this provision of the law, if it becomes part of the law, more unpopular than by a punishment of that sort. I agree with the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment that this clause in its general features from the provisions that the criminal code contains with respect to prize fights, but I do not know exactly how far my hon. friend the Minister of Justice intends to carry this provision of the law. The clause reads "any kindred device or machine." I daresay hon. gentlemen have seen the representation to the celebrated prize fight and many other things bound in small volumes with flexible covers. If you turn the leaves rapidly, so that you see more than two of them in a second, you have all the characteristics of the vitascope in that exhibition. You do not have it in a magnified form, but you have it, and I am inclined to think that these words "with any kindred device" would cover those little pamphlets, or books, that are published at ten or fifteen cents each, and of which there are thousands scattered all over the country. Now, is it the intention to include these? What it seems to me is objectionable in these exhibitions, and what I suppose it would be the object of the law to prevent, is the bringing together of a large number of persons not of the most orderly class in the community—not of those who are devoted either to intellectual or to moral improvements, and who are generally brought together on these occasions by those who are seeking to make gain out of their curiosity, and if the law forbade exhibitions of that sort for gain, without touching those that may exhibit in private houses in the evening, then you would meet all that is usually aimed at in the criminal law, and if you did that, then I do not see what object is to be gained by subsection "B," because if you provide for the punishment of the party, my opinion is five hundred dollars would be a very high figure, quite enough to be most effectual, with the confiscation of the instrument. If you do that, it does not seem to me that you would require anything further, because there would be no object in bringing into Canada those photographs or representations that are alluded to in subsection "B."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would subsection "A" cover the posting of pictures or placards about the city?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There would be no object in putting up placards of an exhibition that you are not permitted to give. So if you provide for the confiscation of the appliances and punish any public exhibition for gain, you would accomplish all that is usually accomplished in police regulations of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That should not be struck out for this reason: when I came from Kingston last Monday this villanous instrument was being exhibited under the name of the feriscope, so it is necessary to have some such words as you mention. I thought the debate referred to would deal with the beneficial effects of the manly art, and I was going to have something to say on it. Prize fighting is already condemned by law, and I do not see why the discussion took the wide range it did as to those exhibitions. If prize fighting is bad, these exhibitions are bad also, and I shall vote for the bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—One who might innocently transmit or deliver the view in question might be mulct in the fine provided for in this section. I would point out the desirability of attaching the penalty only with reference to when it is knowingly done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is it not better to test the sense of the committee as to whether the clause shall pass at all first? Then, if the committee decide the clause shall pass, we can consider the amendment.

The committee divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was rejected.

Contents, 16; non-contents, 20.

The amendment, reducing the amount of the penalty, was declared carried.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that only refers to the first subsection. I think paragraph "B," in its present shape, is very objectionable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One amendment has been made, and a dozen other amendments can be proposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that paragraph "B" be struck out. He said: It seems to me that the substantial offence against which this section provides, is fully met by paragraph "A," namely, the exhibition.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We want to prevent the exhibition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is fully covered by paragraph "A"—"Exhibitions by means of the biograph, &c."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The exhibition must first take place in order to bring it within paragraph "A." Now, we want to prevent it from taking place by punishing the bringing in of the pictures.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would ask my hon. friend how he is going to know that the picture is brought into the country until something is done to exhibit it? My hon. friend is not aware of the intention in the minds of those who are going to contravene the law until some overt act is committed. But if the exhibition is restrained, surely that is what the paragraph aims at. I would not have so much objection to paragraph "B" if my hon. friend would introduce into it some provision which would protect innocent persons who might engage in transmitting, posting or delivering the scene.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What would you suggest?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest the use of the word "knowingly."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think that is reasonable enough.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Belleville is one which the hon. leader of the House might very well have considered, that this clause should be limited to cases where these exhibitions were for gain, or at any rate to where they were public exhibitions. Why any one who chooses to have a picture of this kind brought in and used in his own house should be guilty of such an offence as this and rendered liable to a penalty of a thousand dollars, I cannot see.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not see any difference in the evil arising from the exhibition whether it is in a man's private house or a public place. The whole principle of the clause is that it is a bad thing that the pictures should be exhibited, and the number there to see it is a small matter. I am surprised that it should be thought possible that a parent would bring such exhibitions into his own house, and if he does so he should not be exempt from the punishment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would just mention the fact to which I have referred already: you may have a small volume with a flexible cover containing one hundred or two hundred photographs or figures. You may turn them over a page at a time and they are as innocent looking as any other photograph which may come under your observation. Now, as long as you do not turn them over rapidly, they do not come within the condemnation provided for in this section, but if you turn them so that more than two of them pass your vision in a second, then you have the offence. That is the position which my hon. friend provides in this bill, and it makes it possible that a party may be fined a thousand dollars for a perfectly innocent exhibition.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend is quite fanciful in regard to that matter. My hon. friend thinks if you do not see the moving pictures of the fight in the book which he speaks about, and which I never heard of until to-day, and never have seen, that the book is a harmless one. You may have your pictures that are to be exhibited in public where they will not be seen, but that does not take away the offence. They may be in a dark room. There are a thousand ways that they may not be seen. At night the darkness may prevent their being seen. I do not know whether my hon. friend thinks this little book he has spoken of will come under the clause or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it is doubtful.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not think it would come under the clause as framed, but on principle I do not see why it should not be made to come under it if the pictures are so arranged as to represent the fight. That is the very thing we are legislating against. If manufacturers are making a book to represent, in this realistic way, the fight, why should not that be prevented? However, I rather think that the little book would not come under the clause. Perhaps we should amend the clause so as to cover them. I fancy that they would not come under the clause, because the clause mentions certain machines by name and then the words following "or any kindred device or machine." I think the court would say, upon a well known principle, that the word "device" would refer to machines, and would not include such a book as my hon. friend mentions. But it should include everything that falls within the principle which we are dealing with.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend insert the word "knowingly."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the clause is complete without an additional paragraph and I move to add this clause, paragraph "C":

Publishes in a newspaper an account of a prize fight.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It had better be differently expressed—"detailed account."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You are putting a controversial expression into a statute if you use the word "detailed."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not the bald statement, but there must be a description of it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move in amendment to my hon. friend's amendment that the words "detailed description" be substituted for the word "account."

Hon. Mr. POWER—I object to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. leader of the House tell us how far we can go in publishing an account of a prize fight under that clause? What constitutes a detailed account? Are you simply to telegraph over the wires that Bill and Jim had a prize fight, or that Bill defeated Jim, or can you go further and say that one was knocked out and abused brutally, or how far can you go with it? Unless you want to provide business for the legal profession——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, that's all right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you will effectually do it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I felt difficulty in drawing any clause as to newspapers, and that is the reason why I did not attempt it, but I do not think there will be much difficulty in accepting my hon. friend's amendment if we put in the word "detailed." You cannot possibly use words in legislation which will involve no question at all; but I do not think in this case, for practical purposes, there will be any difficulty in knowing what it means.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY—It will be all defeated by publishing an extra.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Publishing in a newspaper will not prevent the telegraph office putting it up with the full details?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Would the publication in a monthly magazine be excluded by that clause? You might say "publish in any shape or form."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The object will be attained if we say "publishes a detailed account of a prize fight."

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am satisfied with the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend suggested the confiscation of the instruments.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move in amendment that paragraph "C" read as follows: "publishes a detailed account of a prize fight."

The amendment was carried.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out that in the Interpretation Act there is an interpretation of a very wide character put upon the word "newspaper," but it only affects those sections relating to defamatory libel. It means any paper, magazine or periodical, containing public news, &c., published at intervals not exceeding 31 days.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The detailed account might be put up on a blackboard. "Publishes" I suppose includes everything.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Some hon. gentlemen desire that we should declare the pictures, &c., confiscated. We can put in clause "D" the words, "The said picture, material or appliance shall be confiscated."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend intend to include the instrument itself?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The pictures are what I am aiming at.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The instrument can be used for legitimate purposes and may not belong to the person exhibiting the views.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the suggestion is very important. When we provide that our own newspapers shall not publish, we should exclude from the country foreign newspapers containing accounts of prize-fights.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is true, you prevent the pictures from coming into the country, and the use of the instrument in exhibiting them, but all the New York papers with the fullest possible details are circulated through the whole country. They will sell by the hundreds of thousands, many more than if our own papers contained the account. If the clause is to be of any use at all, there should be a provision to confiscate every newspaper brought into the country with an account of these prize fights, or you simply provide a market for a foreign article which you prevent our own people from profiting by.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—If we make it illegal to write about prize fights, I would suggest that we also make it illegal for any one in Canada to talk about it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Or to think about them.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It will be easy to deal with the case of foreign publications by a short additional clause. I would suggest the following clause:

(e.) Brings into this country any newspaper or any other printed paper containing a detailed description of a prize fight.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—That would be very unjust in some cases. I know gentlemen who subscribe for foreign papers. Two or three come into the House and articles of that description might come in unknowingly to the gentleman, because he is in receipt of those weekly or fortnightly papers, and in case an article of that description happened to be in a paper of that kind, it is quite evident it would leave that gentleman open to the penalty.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Such a case would not come under what we have passed. We do not propose to punish the person receiving the paper. I think we had better leave out the confiscation of foreign newspapers. The clause will then read:

(e.) Brings into the country any newspaper or other document giving a detailed description of any prize fight.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved the adoption of clause 92.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 3rd, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (54) "An Act respecting the North American Life Assurance Company," with an amendment. He said:—I may say the only amendment to the bill is to strike out the last clause, because the committee considered what was referred to there was sufficiently provided for by the general law. Under those circumstances, as the bill has to go to the Commons, I might suggest that the 49th rule be dispensed with.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved the suspension of the 49th rule in so far as the same related to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

THE COLONIES AND THE MOTHER COUNTRY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WARK moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to take into consideration whether the present is not a favourable time to consider the necessity of drawing more closely the ties which bind the Colonies to the Mother Country, and to each other, and whether Canada as the oldest of the Colonies should not be the first to make overtures to the other Colonies.

He said:—If I had begun to think of the subject of my resolution only during the past week or even the past year, I would owe the Senate an apology for undertaking, at my advanced years, to deal with such an important question, but as far back as 1886, in reply to a request from Mr. Loring, secretary of the Imperial Federation League, I sent him a paper which was printed among the proceedings of the league, a perusal of which will show that previous to that date I had given the subject much consideration and I have since bestowed a good deal more on it. I trust, therefore, to be able to show you that, to me, the subject is not a new one. Many years ago, a branch of the Liberal party in England, known as the Manchester School, thought that the colonies were a burden to the mother country and although they did not go so far as to propose casting them off, they gave them to understand that if they wished to separate they would meet with no opposition. British statesmen of the present day entertain very different views. They cannot fail to see that Britain stripped of her colonies must soon descend from the high position she now occupies among the great powers to that of a second class state. It is to prevent this, and raise the Empire to a higher and still more commanding position that the colonies should be prepared to lend their aid. My resolution refers to our duty in the matter, and I trust will recommend itself to your honours. Before proceeding to the discussion of the resolution, I shall call your attention to two other matters closely connected with it. Some of you will remember that several years ago I brought under the notice of the Senate how I thought our militia force might be improved. I suggested that if, instead of enlisting thirty-five or forty thousand men to serve for three years as active militia, and then to be discharged and disappear among the rest of the population, a smaller force, say thirty thousand, should be enlisted for six years, to serve as at present, three years as active militia, and remain for the other three years enrolled, at a very moderate cost, as a reserve. This would form a force of sixty thousand, to be ready, if called out to duty, to obey the call promptly. This could not be considered too large a force for Canada to maintain and have in readiness for the defence of the empire, especially when our geographical position is considered. The other matter referred to was the admission of Newfoundland into the Dominion. This I thought would be exceedingly desirable. It will be remembered that I recently brought the subject before the Senate, and showed several strong reasons for endeavouring to effect the union, so as to be able to show the other colonies that our Dominion comprised the whole of British North America. It was not long after when the colony was overtaken by a great commercial misfortune which gave a very favourable opportunity for effecting the union, and it was not the fault of the late government that the union was not then accomplished. The terms offered the colony were liberal, as far as in justice to the other provinces, our government could go, but though they offered to assume a large portion of the debt of the colony, there still remained a large balance which, unaided, the colony could not possibly have met. Had the then colonial secretary agreed to assist, I have no doubt Canada would have been willing to contribute a fair proportion of the sum required, in order to bring about the union. Should the question come up again the able statesman who now fills the colonial office would probably render the needed assistance. With the proposed amendment to our militia law, and Newfoundland in the Dominion, although these are not absolutely necessary, but very desirable as placing us in a better position to open negotiations with the other members of the Empire, we could then say that as our contribution we would bring five millions of people, a territory covering (with the exception of Alaska) half the continent of North America, a territory extending from the northern boundary of the United States to the extreme north of the continent, with a frontier of several hundred miles on the Pacific coast, and on the Atlantic from the Bay of Fundy to the extremity of the continent, that on both our Atlantic and Pacific coasts as well as in our lakes and rivers, we have the most valuable fisheries in the world, that our Dominion contains vast forests of valuable timber, extensive deposits of gold, silver, coal and other minerals, and in addition a vast extent of fertile soil capable, in our highly favoured climate, of feeding millions, and yielding a large surplus of food to meet the wants of the United Kingdom, and we have on each ocean a naval station with an abundant supply of coal at hand giving our empire a great advantage on either ocean over any other power in protecting our own commerce and crippling that of an enemy, and a militia force to be ready at all times to reinforce the garrisons of these stations if the necessity required it. In entering on the discussion of the resolution before the House, two questions ought to be answered. First, what is the object to be attained? And second, how it is to be commenced and carried out? The object is to form out of the whole of the Queen's dominions, now so loosely held together, a thoroughly compact empire all under the same sovereign, consisting of a great, rich, populous and powerful centre, surrounded by a number of extensive and prosperous members, each making its own laws, and administering them, each for the present raising its own revenue and expending it, each maintaining a proportionate force for the defence of the empire, and the whole forming a complete commercial union under a system of perfectly free trade, where, like the United States, every man would be free to sell the produce of his industry in whatever part of the empire he could get the best value, and to supply his wants wherever he could do it on the most favourable terms, which ought to result in universal prosperity. The second question, how the undertaking is to be commenced and carried out, has to be considered. I have always thought that imperial statesmen, however anxious they might be on the subject, would feel a delicacy in proposing anything to the colonies that would lead to expenditure, and, therefore, that the movement should begin among the colonies themselves and that Canadians should be the first to make overtures to the others. As to how to begin, I do not know that I could suggest anything better than what proved so successful among these North American provinces fifty years ago. They had all become protectionists, and enacted hostile tariffs, which greatly impeded intercolonial trade. At length New Brunswick passed an Act authorizing the governor by proclamation to admit free of duty goods the produce or manufacture of any other province, when such province agreed to reciprocate. The offer was accepted promptly by Nova Scotia, but Canada, then including both provinces, refused to include manufactures and we had to strike them out and confine the exchange to natural products, products of the farm, the forest, the mines and the fisheries, the same as were included in the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States a few years after. Now, if our government cannot devise something better, I see no reason why a proposition of a similar nature should not be made to the other colonies with a fair prospect of its being accepted. Assuming that the proposal would be accepted by all the colonies, the next step I should suggest would be an agreement among themselves that they would commence simultaneously to reduce the duties on their imports from the United Kingdom and devise some other method of raising a revenue to meet the deficiency, which being accomplished, free trade would be established throughout the empire and the object of those who favour reciprocal trade between the mother country and the colonies would be accomplished. The question to which I have referred may be considered colonial, to be settled by the colonies themselves, but they will then have reached a point when important financial questions will require the attention of the clearest headed financiers, both imperial and colonial, to be found in the empire. How the revenues are to be raised, distributed, and expended. They will have before them the example of the United States, and also of Canada, and Mr. Chamberlain's plan of a zollverein, and no doubt the able men who will be entrusted with the duty will succeed in successfully accomplishing it. The question of a sufficient supply of food for the surplus population of the mother country is one deserving early and earnest attention with so much uncultivated fertile soil in the colonies, and so much unemployed labour emigrating to foreign countries or moving from the country to the cities where it is not wanted, and where it produces not profit, but poverty. It ought to be the fixed policy of the empire to direct the unemployed labour to the colonies where the emigrant, instead of being a consumer of imported food, would become a producer of not only sufficient to supply his own wants, but something to increase the exports to the mother country. In order to ascertain what proportion of the food imported into the United Kingdom is supplied by the colonies and other countries respectively, I have gone carefully over the Imperial tables of trade for 1895, and I find that the food imported that year cost 710 millions of dollars and of that large expenditure only 16 per cent went to the colonies and dependencies, while 84 per cent or nearly 600 millions of dollars went to foreign countries. Could the circulation of this large amount all be secured for the colonies, one can imagine how largely it would contribute to their prosperity, and it might be effected at no very distant day by turning the emigration from the United Kingdom into its proper channel. The following is a statement showing the food imported into the United Kingdom in 1895:

In times of peace they may attract but little attention, but in case of war with any country from which a large portion of the food is obtained, the result might be very serious. The United States supply the largest proportion, and I do not think there is any danger of war talk there; still it is to be wished that they set more value on the trade of our empire. Their own tables of trade for last year show that of their whole exports, to the value of eight hundred and eighty-two millions of dollars, our empire takes five hundred and eleven millions worth, or fifty-eight per cent. Of their imports, amounting to seven hundred and eighty millions, they take from our empire only two hundred and fifty-seven millions, or thirty-three per cent. Our trade relations with them are not improving. The more we purchase from them the more they try to curtail our sales to them. Let us hope that we will not require long to take from them two hundred and fifty-four millions worth more than they take from us.

Next in importance to the supply of food is that of raw material. The woollen manufacturers get an ample supply from the colonies, greatly to their mutual prosperity, but nearly all the cotton is obtained from foreign countries. Of one hundred and fifty-two million dollars paid for cotton in 1895, less than four million dollars went to the colonies, thirty-two millions went to Egypt, and one hundred and fourteen millions to the United States. Sir Samuel Baker, a high authority, said that no other country was better adapted for the growth of cotton than some parts of Africa, and as large countries on that continent have come under British influence, and as two great companies have been chartered to develop its resources, it may be hoped that they will turn their attention, among other things, to the growth of cotton. Both labour and food must be cheap, and if the cultivation is tried and proves successful, every bale coming from Africa would be paid for largely in British manufactures. Every one coming from the United States must be paid for in cash. The experiment might prove as successful as did that of tea. It was not till 1840 that the Assam Company was formed and introduced the cultivation into India, and only ten years since it was commenced in Ceylon, and last year 123 millions of pounds was imported into England from India, 83 millions from Ceylon and 5 millions from Hong Kong, making 211 millions, all produced within the Empire, while only 34 millions came from China, which so long held the monopoly of supplying the world. If the cultivation of cotton is tried it may prove as successful as that of tea. I had not overlooked the German and Belgian Treaties, but I thought that the best time to deal with them would be when the colonies had begun simultaneously to reduce their duties on imports from the United Kingdom with the express and declared object of adopting a policy of free trade for the Empire when the colonies would cease to be strictly such and become members of the Empire. The treaty powers would then see that the clause in the treaty must become inoperative and might as well be struck out. There is not much danger of any serious difficulty with either of those countries. Both do a large and profitable trade with the United Kingdom. They import from Germany twenty-seven millions sterling, and export thereto thirty-three millions, being a trade of sixty millions sterling. They import from Belgium seventeen and a half millions, and export thereto twelve millions, a gross trade of nearly thirty millions sterling. These large transactions are of too much importance to be disturbed by any supposed infraction of the treaties. Our government contains able lawyers, and no doubt they are satisfied that there is no such infraction in their lately declared policy, and it is more than probable that the Empire will be able to give both countries more favourable trade relations than they enjoy under the present treaties. Leagues and other organizations have been formed with the purpose of bringing about the object now before you, but so far as I have seen, little progress has been made. The subject will, no doubt, be before the great meeting of public men from all parts of the Empire to be held in London at an early day, and an expression of opinion by such a body as this Senate might be expected to have some influence on the discussions of that meeting. I would like to see a first step taken in this great work ; I cannot expect to see much more, but I hope that many of you will live to see great progress made in it, and I trust not a few of you will be spared to see it completed. We occasionally hear hints and even threats of war, but when the Empire becomes completely consolidated, the government will of course publish its statistics annually, and of these what will most attract the attention of neighbouring powers will be our navy, and the peace establishment of our armies in the United Kingdom, India and the other various parts of the Empire. That document will contain two pieces of valuable information. It will show that the revenue raised throughout the Empire annually amounts to eleven or twelve hundred million of dollars, and that our population exceeds three hundred and fifty millions, so that should a war be forced on us we will want neither men nor money to carry it on. These facts no doubt will lead neighbouring powers rather to cultivate our friendship than incur our hostility. I have not referred to India. It must, for a time at least, be governed as at present. The British West Indies ought to be treated with great consideration. The emancipation of their slaves gave them a great backset, and now they have another in competing with beet-root sugar, and, therefore, deserve tender treatment. The case of India, both east and west, must be left to the future. I had decided on the order in which I have laid my views before you, before I saw the government's intention of making a discount on the duties on goods imported from the United Kingdom. They have taken as their first step what I propose as the second. Both are required, and I hope both will be successfully carried out, and that there will be no stoppage till the policy of free trade for the empire is completely established. I hope the government will send the premier home with very extensive powers to arrange matters with the representatives of the other parts of the empire. He will have an opportunity of making his great eloquence tell on a most important audience of statesmen from all parts of the empire. The time to give an impetus to this great undertaking will be most opportune. There will be a universal outburst of loyalty to our beloved Queen—and well she deserves it—and a general outburst of patriotism not confined to the country of our birth or adoption, but to the great British Empire, and, under such circumstances, when men meet face to face, more may be accomplished in a few days than in as many years of negotiation.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Before the motion is carried I wish to say a word or two. Sitting near my hon. friend I was able to follow what he said, and I was very glad to have the opportunity. I am sorry so many members of the House were not able to hear my hon. friend. His voice is now weak, but it is plain that his intellect is as vigorous as it ever was. My hon. friend has attained a greater age than probably any of us will, but if we reach his age we may well rejoice if we have then his vigour of intellect. His speech was full of facts and full of figures and of thoughts. My hon. friend does not live merely in the past. He keeps pace with what is going on; and he is not only interested in the questions of the day, but I observe he takes great interest in our future likewise; his speech was especially directed to our future. He suggests in his resolution that the government should consider whether the present is not a favourable time to consider the necessity of drawing more closely the ties which bind the various colonies of the Empire together. It is satisfactory to know—he has himself alluded to the fact—that this matter is engaging the attention of the people of Canada, and of all the colonies, and of the old country as well, to a degree that probably these questions have never done before. The interest in them is more general, and there is a greater prospect than probably at any former period that the views of my hon. friend will, before any great while, have some practical recognition. I am glad that what my hon. friend has said here will be known to many who were not able to hear him. I am glad that the reporters are in possession of what he has said, and I assure hon. members that they will not waste the time which they may employ in reading his speech and in considering the views expressed therein. I have no objection to the motion passing.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGE ROUTHIER'S ABSENCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Does the Order in Council of Oct. 15th, 1883, granting Judge Routhier leave of absence for five months, fix the date at which this leave was to begin and the date at which it was to end, and what are these dates?
2. Did Judge Routhier obtain leave of absence during the year 1889, during which he made a trip to British Columbia which lasted five weeks?
3. Did Judge Routhier obtain leave of absence during the year 1892, during which he made a journey outside of the province of Quebec which lasted three months?
4. Did Judge Routhier obtain during the year 1896 leave of absence for a journey of at least ten weeks, which he made outside of the province of Quebec, to Manitoba and the North-west Territories?
5. Is the government aware that Judge Routhier is reported to have left on Saturday, May 30th last, for a voyage beyond seas?
6. Has Judge Routhier obained leave of absence in order to make this new journey, and what is the duration of this leave?
7. What reason did the honourable judge give in order to obtain this leave of absence?
8. Has the government or any member of the present administration entrusted the honourable judge with any mission whatever, official or officious, and to whom?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first question is that an Order in Council was passed in 1883, granting to Judge Routhier five months' leave of absence, from November 15th, 1883. The answer to the second inquiry is that there is no record of such leave having b en granted in the year 1889, and the same answer will apply to questions three and four. In answer to the fifth question, leave of absence was granted from the 23rd May, 1897, to the 1st July, 1897. In answer to the latter part of the 7th question, as to the reason, it was to meet his invalid daughter in Paris and bring her home, and to advise his son-in-law in England about the disposal of certain real property, and the answer to the 8th question is simply No.

DISMISSAL OF JOSEPH BOSSINETTE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Was Mr. Joseph Bossinette on the 23rd of June, 1896, postmaster at Cap St. Ignace, in the county of Montmagny?
2. Has he been since that date discharged from his work by the present administration?
3. When, why, and upon whose complaint?
4. What is the nature of the charge brought against him?
5. Has the charge been proved?
6. What is the nature of the proof?
7. If no proof exists, has the accuser at least a diploma of infallibility? Granted by whom?
8. Has the accused been made aware officially of the charge brought against him, and has he had an opportunity to refute it?
9. What was his reply?
10. Has the Post Office Inspector been required to hold an inquiry and to make a report?
11. Has an inquiry taken place, and what is the report of the officer making the inquiry?
12. If the person dismissed protests his innocence and completely denies the truth of the accusation, is it the intention of the government to grant an inquiry or to refuse all justice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have to make the usual answer to that question. Mr. Joseph Bossinette was postmaster at Cap St. Ignace on the 23rd June, 1896, and on the 29th September he was dismissed on representations made by Mr. Choquette, M.P., that he, as postmaster, had been guilty of offensive political partizanship during the last general election. The statements made by Mr. Choquette were accepted as conclusive, and no public interest would be served by having the matter reopened.

DISMISSAL OF XAVIER POITRAS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Was Mr. Xavier Poitras on the 23rd June, 1896, an employé of the Government as section-man on the Intercolonial Railway in the county of Montmagny, and was he fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his chief?
2. Has he been since that date discharged from his work by the present administration?
3. Why, when and upon whose complaint?
4. What is the nature of the charge brought against him?
5. Has the charge been proved.
6. What is the nature of the proof?
7. If no proof exists, has the accuser at least a diploma of infallibility? Granted by whom.
8. Has the accused been made aware officially of the accusation brought against him, and had he an opportunity to refute it?
9. What was his reply?
10. If the person dismissed completely denies the truth of the charge brought against him, protests his innocence and offers to make it clear, is it the intention of the government to grant an inquiry or to refuse all justice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I give the same answer to that. Xavier Poitras was employed as section-man on the Intercolonial Railway on the 23rd of June last, and his services were dispensed with at the request of Mr. Choquette, M.P., who alleged that he had been guilty of offensive partizanship during the recent election, and no public interest is to be served by making any further inquiry.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me what offensive partizanship is. I have heard it repeated over and over again, and I have been asked what it is. I would like if the hon. Secretary of State would tell me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It means a Tory.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the language "offensive partizanship" a very clear expression. It means, as a rule, that the official, the party who is receiving pay from the government, either appeared on the platform taking an active part as against the present administration, or in many instances, denounced both the premier—that was the practice in Lower Canada—and the Liberal representative for the county, and it was considered highly improper that any official drawing pay from the Crown should interfere one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Am I correct in supposing that it has been proved that all these men who have been dismissed have been guilty of those three things, namely, appearing on the platform, having abused the premier at a public meeting, and having abused the Liberal candidate?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The principle laid down, and not challenged in the House of Commons, has been that where a member of the House of Commons makes a statement over his own signature, or makes it openly in the House, that the party charged has been guilty of offensive political partizanship, that has been sufficient justification for the dismissal of the party.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—That is, if one partizan accuses another, the partizan who is accused must go.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Therefore, if he charges the person, it amounts to three things you mention, and it is taken as proved.

Hon Mr. LANDRY—I would just call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to a point or two in his answers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that I am at liberty to be cross-examined, I have given the answers, and I do not propose to be cross-examined on them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to have the complete answers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can add nothing to what I have said.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask if that man Xavier Poitras was fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his chief?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—"No" would be the answer to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The House and the country are entitled to a clearer answer from the government than that which has been given to the junior member for Halifax. It is well that the country should know what offensive partizanship consists of, or what constitutes offensive partizanship, in order that those who are receiving pay from the government may know when they put their neck in the halter. Is it offensive partizanship for a postmaster who is paid by fees, to go upon the platform and advocate any policy which may not be in accord with those who are expecting to attain power? The hon. Secretary of State said a few moments ago that those gentlemen abused the present ministry. He could not by any possibility have abused the present ministry, because the present ministers were not in existence at the time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said the first minister and the Liberal candidate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am repeating what the hon. gentleman said. He also added the other as well—for abusing the present ministry and the Liberal candidate who was then contesting the riding. If it is to be understood that any person holding a ten dollar office—for many of these postmasters who have been dismissed received very trifling salaries, about ten dollars per annum—is to be deprived of his franchise, or the right to go upon the platform to advocate any policy, the sooner it is generally known the better. The answer, I know, to that might be, if they desire to oppose a Liberal candidate at any election, they must throw up the office and tell the country that they do not want their ten dollars. I think it is well that this matter should be more clearly defined. The declaration is made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that a statement by a candidate who is a partizan—and we know that the hon. gentleman to whom he has referred is as strong a partizan as there is in Canada—accusing another man who differs from him of having opposed him, warrants the Secretary of State and government in declaring that the act of that official is offensive partizanship, and dismissing him. The House is entitled to a clearer answer than has been given by the Secretary of State to the question put by the junior member from Halifax. Does the Secretary of State lay down the principle that whether an official be in opposition to the government, or a supporter of the government, the opening of his mouth or the casting of his vote, is to be considered offensive partizanship? If so, let the people know it. All the arguments that have been adduced, and all the answers that have been made are predicated upon the assumption that these parties who have been dismissed were opposing the government of the day. They did nothing of the kind; they were supporting the government of the day; and they were opposing those who desired to obtain that position. The hon. gentleman smiles. I could refer to a good many actions of the hon. gentleman himself in 1878 with reference to the civil service, but I do not desire to go into the past record either of the Secretary of State or his interference in elections. However, I repeat a third time that the House and the country should receive a more explicit answer to the questions which were put to the government than those that have been given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is too old a parliamentarian not to recognize the rule, that a minister is not bound to answer hypothetical questions. The answers to the questions put by the hon. gentleman were clear and succinct, and all I am able to give, and I do not propose to go back on this question. I have a vivid recollection of the years 1878 and 1879 when the friends of the opposite party dismissed right and left. Take the postmaster at Hull; he did not interfere in an election, but because his father interfered he was dismissed. I am only going a mile away, but I could mention a dozen cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is one point I forgot, in my disclaimer against the assertion made by the hon. gentleman that the reasons he gives were unchallenged. He is not strictly accurate in making that statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do that from the principle laid down, that if any member on his honour made a statement of that kind it was proper to accept it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the principle laid down by the government but objected to by the opposition.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I happened to be in the gallery of the House of Commons and heard the prime minister in his place make the declaration that no such dismissals would be made without an investigation such as would be proposed and declared by a minister and not by a member of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, by a member of parliament.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I have a good deal of sympathy for the present government, and I can understand very well the position they are in under the present circumstances. I am sorry they have not the courage of their convictions to take the responsibility of these dismissals. I know, and I think it is generally known, and it is a patent fact, that Choquette has the government by the throat, and that he would have dismissed them from power and position unless he had his way in reference to these dismissals. They dare not refuse Mr. Choquette's demand for dismissals, because it is well known he wanted a place in the government—the place Mr. Tarte now occupies—and it is on that account that these dismissals are being made, contrary to the declaration of the prime minister. It is because Mr. Choquette is master of the situation just now, and they cannot refuse his demands.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wonder if the hon. Secretary of State is aware, when he uses the tu quoque argument, that the hon. member from Westmorland in his place the other day stated distinctly from his own knowledge that there were more men dismissed in the city of Moncton, N.B., in one day on the Intercolonial Railway than were dismissed during the whole regime of the Liberal-Conservative party from the time the Mackenzie government was turned out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite sure the hon. member believes the statement, but I am sure the facts show the opposite.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The facts are quite obtainable.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why not accept a statement made by a senator, if you accept a statement made by a member?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see yet, myself, what principle the hon. gentlemen are calling in question, or what they are complaining about. Does my hon. friend, who leads the opposition, say if those who are in the permanent public service receiving an annual salary, go upon the stump or go out and canvass for theone side or the other, that they do not take their lives in their hands, and are not properly dismissed if their opponent succeeds? They enter into the contest with that fact before them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They will after this.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Did they ever do otherwise? Will my hon. friend tell me a single man in the public service who ventured to take part in an election between 1875 and 1878 who was retained in the service?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I can tell you a number of them in our county.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The father of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was kept in all through.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Simply because the government was kept in ignorance of the fact.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Secretary of State referred to Mr. Loucks. Was he not dismissed because his father took part in an election? Was not the party who had been appointed from that county in the Department of Public Works dismissed from that department at the instance of Mr. Alonzo Wright, because he had taken a part in the election against Alonzo Wright?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And every man who was in the public service as an inspector of weights and measures was put out.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—No.

Hon Mr. MILLS—And when new appointments came to be made, not one of them was appointed, whether they took part in the election or not.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Was that right?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not think that was right, but I am pointing out to hon. gentlemen that the government of which my hon. friend was a member went much further than the present administration.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Oh no.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I never was a member of any government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The whole class was put out without one single exception, out, the hon. gentlemen before they went and just on the eve of the retirement of the government, took a private secretary, I think, to one of the ministers and made him a deputy minister. He has not been touched; but, when the private secretary of Mr. Mackenzie, a man of far more than the ordinary ability, was appointed as deputy minister, as soon as the change of government took place, Mr. Buckingham was dismissed from the public service.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—That case has been hackneyed about a good deal, it is one special case.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know whether it is hackneyed or not, but that was an appointment made with the approval of Her Majesty's representative in this country, because he, as well as the government who assumed the responsibility of the recommendation, knew of Mr. Buckingham's ability, and knew what claims he had because of the extraordinary duties that had been imposed upon him in the public service. He was appointed but he was not permitted to retain his office; he was dismissed, and the hon. gentleman has not mentioned a single case in which the present government has gone as far as the government of which he was a member went in the case of Mr. Buckingham.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Who was the private secretary to whom the hon. gentleman refers as having been made deputy minister just before the late ministry went out of power, and who was allowed to retain his office?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am speaking of Mr. Pope.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was not a private secretary. He was deputy clerk of the Privy Council for some six years previous to his appointment, and was promoted to the office which he now holds some time before the change of government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He had been private secretary to Sir John Macdonald.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Up to the time of his death.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. The hon. gentleman is in error. Sir John Macdonald recommended him to the position which he held as deputy clerk of the Privy Council. Mr. Pope was promoted by myself while I was prime minister, and not just before the last ministry resigned, as the hon. gentleman has indicated. Hence the case of Mr. Pope is not in any way analogous to that of Mr. Buckingham. As the hon. gentleman has said, this subject is hackneyed by frequent discussion, and I do not propose, therefore, to discuss it any more. The hon. gentleman should try to be more correct, or he will fall into the same error as members of the government that he supports have fallen into.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has not improved his position. It does not matter whether Mr. Pope was private secretary to Sir John Macdonald the day he was appointed deputy minister, or had been private secretary some months before. It does not matter whether he held three or four offices during the time that intervened. There is the fact that the former private secretary of Sir John Macdonald was transferred to the position of deputy minister shortly before the retirement of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And he was allowed to retain his position.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is where the hon. gentleman is wrong—it was not just before the change. It was done months and months before. It was done before the late government was formed and long before the elections. It must have been twelve months before.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am surprised at the argument of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell. He seeks, by showing former evils and hardships, to justify the wrongdoing of the present government. His argument can lead to no other conclusion than that, because evil was done before, therefore evil is justified now. I am surprised to hear an hon. gentleman of his intelligence and legal acumen use an argument of that kind. The thing the government should do is this, give a man charged with partisan conduct a fair trial. I heard the premier say distinctly that no man would be dismissed hereafter without having a fair trial and being allowed to defend himself. That has not been done. That policy has not been adhered to. The Minister of Railways laid down a different policy—that if any credible member of the party should charge an official with being an active political partisan he should be dismissed. Is not that a monstrous doctrine, that an official, on the information of a spy—a man looking for the place, can have that official kicked out without giving him an opportunity to defend himself. That has been done in several cases. It is a weak and stupid thing to use an argument like that. I do not justify the other government for wrong-doing. They dismissed men when they should not have dismissed them, and if they came back to power to-morrow and did such a thing I would raise my voice as strongly against them as I do now. It is a most unjustifiable thing to do in this age and in a country like this.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The last answer of the hon. the Secretary of State conflicts with the first one. I asked if Xavier Poitras, on the 23rd of June, 1896, was an employé of the government as section man on the Intercolonial Railway in the county of Montmagny, and was he fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his chief. The minister answered me that he was put out on the complaint lodged against him by Mr. Choquette, who charged him with offensive partizanship. I asked the hon. gentleman why he did not answer the last part of my question—was Poitras fulfilling his duties The minister, without looking at his notes, told me "No," he had not fulfilled his duties. If he did not fulfil his duties, why put him out for offensive partizanship? If you have a good reason for putting a man out, why do you look for a bad one and give a bad one to the House? Now, I do not complain of a man being put out if he takes his political life in his hands, but in all the cases I have cited here, I venture to say that not one of these persons had been an active or offensive partisan. Mr. Simoneau, who was put out of office, was suspected of being a Grit or Rouge, and he did not work in the election at all. Mr. Dubé, who was put out, is the father of twelve children, and though a voter he took no part at all in the election. He did not even go and vote—he abstained completely from taking any part. All these people were turned out merely to give places to others. There was no other reason for it. Why should Mr. Choquette's ipse dixit in the House be considered sufficient ground for turning those people out of office? When these people write to the department, asking for an inquiry, why are they not even answered? All those things are facts, and the hon. minister may ascertain the truth of my statements. I do not object at all to these people being put out who have really been active or offensive partisans, but in all those cases that I have brought up nothing has been proved against any one, and nothing can be proved against them.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In dealing with the employés of a government, or the servants of a private individual or firm, they cannot be tried as if they had committed some crime. That proceeding is not at all adapted to the case, but when the principle has been adopted, as it has been in this country for very many years practically, whether avowed or not, but it has been avowed for a number of years—that offensive political partizanship is a reason for dismissing a government employé, the ministry dismiss him on their responsibility to the House and to the country. They dismiss him because satisfied upon the evidence before them, that the employé has been guilty. They go wrong sometimes; juries go wrong sometimes; judges go wrong sometimes; private gentlemen, in dealing with their workmen, servants and employés, go wrong sometimes; but it is because of being satisfied of his guilt that an employé is dismissed. My hon. friends seem to think it a very objectionable thing that the information of a member with regard to this matter should be acted upon, but this fact should be borne in mind, that the member is the representative of the people. He is the chosen representative of the people—a majority of the people have elected him, and he does not stand in the same position as a private individual. One of my hon. friends opposite suggested that government employés had been dismissed on the statement of some detective without any further evidence. I do not think he will find that to be the case. The testimony of the member has been accepted, but when that was not to be had, other evidence was required to satisfy the minister, and if any of my colleagues have gone wrong in any cases, parliament may condemn them for it. My hon. friend must think, he suggests at all events, that it is a monstrous thing on the part of the Liberal party that they should now dismiss a man for offensive partizanship when they objected to that being done by the late government in the case of the translators and others. A little reflection will convince them, if they will endeavour to form a fair opinion on that point, that the objection they make is not reasonable. The Liberal party did not wish that to be the principle recognized in this country, and, therefore, objected to its being adopted when it was adopted by the Conservative government. But they were overruled in that: they were unsuccessful in their objection. The Conservative government insisted on acting on that principle and did act upon it. The Liberal party had to accept the doctrine. It was a doctrine either endorsed or laid down by the government of the day which had the confidence of the people, and the Liberal party were obliged to accept and acquiesce in it; but how absurd it would be, what folly it would be on their part, that principle having been avowed and acted upon by the Conservative government when they themselves came in, they should refuse to act upon the same rule. I do not think there is any morality in the question either way. It might be the rule of the government to turn out all officials on a change of party. They adopt that rule in the United States. It is objectionable, but I do not see anything immoral about it. I can understand a president, who wished to do his duty in every respect, an earnest Christian man, acting upon it, it being the doctrine of the nation.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is well understood in the United States as the policy.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Unfortunately it has been the rule here too. During eighteen years the Conservative government acted on it, and our friends were often dismissed. There is no use asking how many were dismissed by the one government and how many by the other. That depends on the circumstances. But the principle was beyond all question insisted upon and acted upon by the Conservative government. With regard to the number dismissed, look at the difference! When the Mackenzie government went out in 1878 they had only been five years in power. The Conservative government had been in power for a number of years before that, and had made nearly all the previous appointments. Naturally very few could be dismissed in 1878, because there had been comparatively few appointments by the Liberal government. When the present government came into power, they succeeded a party which had been in power for eighteen years, and had made nearly all the appointments held throughout the whole country. They had been in power so long that there was an impression among the officials that they were safe for any length of time, and that, I dare say, led many of them to follow the partizan course which they would not otherwise have taken. It is no argument against the Liberal government if they found occasion, coming into power after eighteen years opposition, to dismiss a larger number of persons than the government did which had succeeded one that had been in power only five years. The hon. leader of the opposition wants to know if this principle is to go so far that a man is to be dismissed for exercising his franchise. That has been always disclaimed. The law authorizes a civil servant to exercise his franchise, and every one who has spoken on this subject for the Liberal party—every Liberal has admitted that no objection could be made to a man for merely giving his vote. The objection to him must go a good deal further. My hon. friend opposite objects to Mr. Choquette's recommendation and testimony being admitted with regard to his own constituents, and my hon. friend ascribed to him a much larger power than he possesses. The people have returned in favour of the Liberal party such a large majority that there is no one member who can exercise the power that my hon. friend ascribes to Mr. Choquette. If we were a weak government, supported by a small majority, one supporter might have a great deal of power, such as he attributed to Mr. Choquette, but as matters exist, the suggestion is not well founded. I have thought it right to say these few words, but I do not think the country will benefit very much by our discussing this subject much more. It has occupied the attention of the House of Commons for many days and at great length. Everything that could be said on either side of the question has been said there, and while it was very well for us to give to it some attention here also, I do think my hon.

friends must agree with me that we have now said enough on the subject.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The explanation the hon. gentleman has made is rather fatal to many other explanations we have been listening to this session, and, in fact, last year. Then we were told that very many more persons were dismissed by the Conservative government when they came into power in 1878 than now by the Liberals, but my hon. friend now admits the very opposite is the case.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I say if the fact were as represented; that is my argument. I do not admit the fact at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend distinctly put it this way: that, if a smaller number were dismissed in 1878 than now, it was because there were so very few Liberals in office in 1878, and consequently there was not a large number of Liberals out of whom dismissals could have been made.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is quite so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And that in 1874 the Liberal party, when they came into power, did not make any dismissals—that they entered on the principle of dismissing no official for political reasons. I happen to know very well that my hon. friend is altogether wrong in that statement. I speak for my own province that dismissals were wholesale by the Liberal government. I was one of the persons dismissed myself. I was included in one of those batches who were dismissed during the month or two after the Liberal party had come into power in 1874. My hon. friend's explanation is altogether at variance, notwithstanding the attempt to smooth it over, with the explanation which the hon. Secretary of State has made to-day, and which we have been in the habit of hearing from the whole of them on that side of the House, when the question of dismissals comes up. The phase of this question I want to enter my solemn protest against is the spectacle that we have had presented to us, day after day during this session and ever since this government came into power, of a minister of the Crown freely and boldly admitting that the government has been dismissing officials on the ipse dixit of some member of parliament, or some member of the party, without any inquiry to ascertain whether the charges are true or false. The Secretary of State was asked what he meant by offensive political partisanship. He said it would be going on a platform and making a speech or canvassing. When my hon. friend asked did this man do anything of the kind, the hon. gentleman said he did not know. He has this convenient phrase, offensive partizanship, on his lips, but when he is asked if a man dismissed was guilty of that particular kind of political partizanship which he has defined, he does not know. I submit it is a most extraordinary spectacle to see members of this government rising day after day in this House, and admitting before the world that they are dismissing officials all over the country for alleged political partizanship, on the mere unsupported word of some one who is a political partisan himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why not ask the question in Mr. Choquette's presence in the House of Commons instead of asking it here?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. premier has declared here now that the government are responsible for these dismissals. Why shunt the responsibility on Mr. Choquette?

Hon. Mr. MASSON—We do not know Mr. Choquette here. We know the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Minister of Justice who are responsible to the people, and to us for every dismissal that is made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The people have sustained us in our action.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—They could not in this particular case, because it has arisen since the election. Let me put a question. I agree with the hon. gentleman on the principle that officials should be dismissed for offensive political partizanship. It is a question of fact. A political partizan, a member of the other House, tells you that an employé has misbehaved. Here is a senator who tells you "to my own knowledge I say that charge is not true." If you believe Mr. Choquette and not Mr. Landry, you are acting as a partizan. Don't you think, as a minister of the Crown, you are bound to go into detail and ascertain which statement is true and which is false, because Mr. Choquette and Mr. Landry are not responsible for the opinions they give, but you are responsible to the country for the decision you make.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How illogical the position of the hon. gentleman is. Mr. Choquette was a witness of a fact and makes a statement of what he saw. The hon. senator who brings the matter before the House was not present at the time and did not hear the statement. He is stating a negative, and the other witness is stating an affirmative. The greatest criminal might bring innumerable witnesses to say they do not believe the offence charged against him is true.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Mr. Choquette says that this man who was dismissed was an offensive partizan. The hon. senator says that the man did not even vote. You can ascertain which statement is true. I do not object to the government dismissing employés for offensive partizanship, but I object to the government, on the word of a member, on a simple question of fact, disgracing a man—that you are going to say on that man's word that an employé is to be dismissed, because beyond the dismissal there is a certain disgrace attached to a man. If a member, who has the patronage of a constituency, comes and tells you something against an employé, are you going to dismiss him without investigation? That is a principle which was never acted upon while I was in the government, to my knowledge.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the insufficient nature of the return which he brought down the other day in answer to a motion of mine with regard to the expenses and operations of the steamer "Petrel," between Capes Traverse and Tormentine, I asked in that return for a full statement of the expenditure incurred. I notice by the charter party that the charter alone is six thousand dollars, and I find only four thousand dollars of that is included in that statement of expenditure. I notice other large amounts that I know were incurred in that service are not in this statement, and the total brought down is very much less than was actually incurred in that service. I also asked for information as to the number of passengers and the quantity of freight carried and the amount of money collected for both freight and passengers. Now, I find fault that information is given in this way:

> Number of passengers, 43.
> At $2 each would amount to $86.
> (Have no details as to freight carried.)

How kind for the minister to make this little calculation for the members of the Senate and the public. I suppose he thought that we are not able to multiply 43 by 2. It is not what 43 multiplied by 2 amounts to that we want to know, but how much money was realized by passengers on the "Petrel." I asked for details of the amount collected for freight as well as passengers. The answer is "have no details of freight carried." Why has not the department details? It is now five weeks since that steamer ceased to make trips. Surely five weeks would suffice to bring up details from Traverse or Tormentine as to the freight carried. I call my hon. friend's attention to the insufficient information contained in the report, and the fact that the information I asked for has not been supplied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—If the hon. gentleman will write a note stating specifically what he requires, I shall be very glad to procure it. So far as freight is concerned, my attention was called to that, and the answer was there was no record of it here in the department.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I believe the hon. gentleman is strictly correct; there was no record of it, because there was no freight carried.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not hear that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if this return, which has been laid before the House by the hon. Secretary of State relating to the resignation of the late Judge Jones, is complete? When the Secretary of State laid the return before the House, he made a statement that this was all the correspondence less that which was of a confidential character. He will also see that he made no reference in the returns to the latter portion, that is, as to the petition. All that we have is the resignation of Judge Jones, the recommendation of the Minister of Justice to Council recommending his superannuation, and the application of Judge Jones to have his resignation accepted forthwith. What I want to ask is, was any petition presented to the government asking for the appointment of a successor to Mr. Jones? If not, of course it could not be brought down. I was under the impression that there were, and if so I should like a copy of that petition, unless it to was of a confidential character.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—After the return was ordered I looked through the papers to see what they were, and I looked through the letters, I have a good many of them, but they are all of a confidential kind. At first I thought some of them might not be, but I found that all were confidential. I am sure if there was a petition it was of a confidential kind. I shall ascertain that, however.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not pretend to say that confidential communications have not taken place, but how in the world a petition from a large city like Belleville, of 15,000 inhabitants, asking for an appointment by the government, could be of a confidential character I am at a loss to know.

INTEREST BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (I) "An Act respecting interest."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The object of this bill everybody seems to concur in; but there is no doubt great difficulty in finding out what exactly we should enact with a view of correcting the evil mentioned in the recital. It has shocked everybody to learn that the courts have found it necessary to enforce an agreement by which some 1,800 per cent was to be paid by a borrower of money. But how we are to remedy that without producing other evils is not so easy to determine. I am going to propose considerable amendments to the bill that I brought in, with a view to remedying the evil without incurring other evils which perhaps may be in the aggregate as great as that which the bill is designed to remove. The bill as brought in provided that the courts should have a discretion, where more than eight per cent is charged, to deal with the excess in whatever manner they might think reasonable. Eight per cent is more than the banks charge, and, therefore, the banks have no interest in opposing the bill as it now stands. But there is no doubt—and hon. members on both sides have called my attention to it—the fact that it is often of immense importance to get money for a short time when it can only be got by paying a much larger percentage than eight. And I am also informed—and I have no doubt truly—that in the newly settled parts of the country money cannot be got at the rates at which it can be got in other parts of the country; and that it would be an injury to those newly settled parts if no money could be borrowed safely to the lender at more than 8 per cent. What then are we to do? The best suggestion which has yet been made to me is the one I am going to submit to this House. It is a suggestion made as a result of consultation amongst business people, persons familiar with the working of the interest laws, and with the whole matter of money and the requirements of the different parts of the country in reference to it. There seems to be an agreement on this point—and it seems very reasonable—that the most grievous cases arise where the borrower did not understand that he was charged such large interest. He may be an ignorant man; but often a man who is not very ignorant has been deceived in this matter. In consequence of that, a number of years ago an Act was passed by the parliament of Canada, and is to be found in the Revised Statutes, which dealt with the question of mortgages, and contained such provisions as would secure that the mortgagor should be aware of what interest he was paying, that the interest could not be concealed by the form of a mortgage—that is, concealed from one who was giving the matter a cursory and perhaps not very intelligent examination. The effect of what was then enacted is that if the real amount of interest does not appear in the instrument, no interest at all can be recovered. And I am told—and I have no reason to doubt the fact to be that that Act has prevented from that time till now any serious evil of the kind which the Act was intended to deal with. I propose to adopt a similar principle in dealing with loans generally, and if the committee agree to the view which I am going to suggest, I think the evil would be met to a large extent without producing any corresponding evil whatever. I may say here that if the clauses which I move are adopted I propose to make a change in the preamble. I put the preamble in its present form in order to call attention to the tremendous evil we had to deal with.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is the man still living who charged that interest?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, he is still living.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—And he got a judgment for it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They will beat him on the execution.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What I am proposing is a provision to be substituted for the bill which I brought in and which is printed. I propose to ask the committee to adopt this as the first clause:

Whenever any interest is, by the terms of any contract in writing, whether under seal or not, made payable at a rate or percentage per day, week or month, or at any rate or percentage for any period less than a year, no interest exceeding the rate or percentage of six per cent per annum shall be chargeable, payable or recovered on any part of the principal money unless the contract contains a statement showing truly the annual rate or percentage of interest to which such other rate or percentage is equivalent.

Then I propose the following as a second clause:

If any sum is paid on account of any interest not chargeable, payable or recoverable under the last preceding section, such sum may be recovered back or deducted from any principal or interest payable under the said contract.

That is just carrying out the same view. The effect is to compel parties to state the annual interest that is to be paid as well as any other particulars that they choose to insert in the document.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That leaves the rate under agreement open to any amount.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, I have not limited the amount.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It can go up to any amount.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, provided the agreement states what the annual rate is, that the man may know what he is doing. No greater interest than six per cent can be recovered unless the man knows from the instrument he signs what the annual interest which he is undertaking to pay. I do not say that that is a full remedy. I do not say that anything that can be devised which would be a full remedy; but I think what I propose is a very good instalment of the necessary remedy and perhaps will be found amply sufficient. We cannot tell until it is tried. If lenders discover some method by which they can recover without the borrower knowing how much he is undertaking to pay, we may have to deal with that hereafter; but in the meantime, I think what is proposed will be a valuable protection; it will go to a great length; it will prevent persons being drawn into agreeing to pay interest which they do not know they are agreeing to pay. They may know what six per cent is, but as a matter of fact they do not calculate, in many instances, what a certain rate per week or month would be per year; and here we have a man making a business of charging five per cent per day. A copy of one of these notes was shown to me which was in a printed form, lending at five per cent per day being apparently as regards this lender a regular business and we all know a printed paper is not so apt to be read as a written one. Perhaps many of us have signed deeds and looked merely at how they are filled in in writing without reading the printed parts.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend if he intends proceeding with this bill to-day?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And ask the House to adopt it without more considerations?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If more time is desired, I am in the hands of the House. I think we had better go through the committee stage to-day and have the bill reprinted. I believe I have made all the necessary explanation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then my hon. friend will not regard the House as having acceded to the principle of the bill, notwithstanding our having consented to its going through committee.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No. I move the adoption of the first clause of my amendment.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Do I understand this bill is intended for the whole of the Dominion of Canada?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—In New Brunswick we have a very satisfactory interest bill. When we came into confederation we had the usury law in existence, and we found it very inconvenient in many transactions, and finally this parliament repealed the usury law and a law was established by which the legal interest, in case there was no writing or contract, should be six per cent, and that, on the other hand, anything that was reduced to writing, no matter what the interest would be, provided it was within reasonable bounds, should be recoverable in law and equity. We found, and we find yet, that money under this arrangement is as low and lower than when there were restrictions on the interest imposed by the law of the country. We find transactions now are carried on extensively as low as four per cent, five per cent and hardly any to be found even as high as six per cent. I feel that I have a right, on behalf of New Brunswick, inasmuch as I know they are satisfied with that arrangement, to point out that if it be possible—and I think it is—that law should not be interfered with, because it is quite satisfactory. Money is lower than it has been, and we have not had any such extreme cases of hardship or dishonesty as have been pointed out by the hon. Minister of Justice. And, therefore, I wish to point out that I think our law should not be interfered with without due consideration, I have no objection that you should make a law for Canada, or for portions of Canada; but certainly in New Brunswick we are satisfied with our present law.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Does this bill interfere with the New Brunswick law as to the rate of interest?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Do you say it does not?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am asking for information.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I understood it applies to the whole Dominion.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not understand in what particular it is an interference with the New Brunswick law.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It interferes in this way: that in cases of transactions not reduced to writing it is possible losses might occur. I can point out a case that happened before we had the present law in New Brunswick. A certain party had borrowed $10,000 and the legal interest at that time was 6 per cent. The party gave a mortgage on his property for the $10,000. The mortgagee died and his heirs wished to recover the amount, but in consequence of it being shown that he had taken a small percentage over and above the legal interest, the whole mortgage was forfeited.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What I propose does not change the present law as regards the rate of interest chargeable.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—If it does not it is satisfactory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the explanation of the hon. Minister of Justice, it simply amounts to this: that if a man who was loaning money at five per cent to-day, was lending $100 at five per cent per day, the note would have to read that for and in consideration of that sum the rate of interest to be paid should be five per cent per day, which would be equal to 1,815 per cent per annum. I would make the suggestion, while I am on my feet, that instead of the committee rising and reporting the bill, the hon. minister should ask the committee to rise and report progress. That would enable us to go back into committee and discuss freely the amended bill as it will be presented to the House for final adoption. My hon. friend will see at once why I make that suggestion. If you adopt the bill now and report it for third reading, then there would not be the same opportunity to discuss the provisions as if we went back to committee.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—At present there is no limitation as to interest?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—As long as it is stipulated at so much?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Should not there be a limit to it? If a man agrees to pay 1,800 per cent per year, I think he should not be forced to do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A man would not be such a fool as to do that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Oh, yes, they will do it sometimes. I think it would be a disastrous thing for this country if it were known that 8 per cent was the largest amount a man could collect. I suppose it was considered to be in the interest of the borrower, but they would find very soon it was not in the interest of the borrower, because lenders would find some other means to get over it. They would not lend at that rate. They would buy a note of hand or something of that kind. I think it is well the matter should be considered, and if there is a limitation it should be something reasonable.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What limitation would you suggest?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is a difficult thing to say. A man makes a contract. It is supply and demand, I suppose, but I think there should be some law to prevent a man making such a contract as to pay 1,800 per cent a year. I do not think we should encourage people, or even allow them to make such foolish and outrageous bargains. We know very well there are times when a man can afford to pay a large amount of money for a pressing necessity. You know five per cent is paid sometimes for a very limited period, but any man who pays that amount is sure to go to the wall. But in an emergency it has been paid, and I have no doubt men have been saved from ruin by getting money at that rate. All these things have to be considered, and I am glad the Minister of Justice has taken this into consideration, and that as far as the laws are concerned, they will be well considered and will be put in such a shape that there will be no mistake in the future. I hope there will be something to limit an extraordinary rate of interest being charged per annum. I think it should take some shape that could be avoided.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I am extremely pleased that the hon. Minister of Justice has changed the bill materially as he has done, and I think in the shape it is it will simply act as a signal or danger post to make impecunious borrowers know what they are doing when they are borrowing.

To my mind, the new proposal entirely, or almost entirely, removes any objections that may have arisen to the bill which I know would have been met with great opposition in the House and out of it, and it would be a revival of the old usury laws. The hon. gentleman from Rideau was barking on both sides of the fence; at one moment he deprecated that and at another moment he wanted a limitation. If you put a limitation it will sound monstrous and unreasonable, if it is going to be operative at all, and in my view usury is not practised by the bank and loan companies. It is not carried out to anything like the extent in this country that it is in other countries. I do not think such a case as mentioned in the preamble of the bill is anything but extremely exceptional and unusual, and it is hardly worth legislating for. However, I may say that the bill, as now presented, appears to be at first blush and on the face of it extremely unobjectionable and a step in the right direction. The extent of the usury carried on in this country, although misunderstood and exaggerated, is known to exist, and I hope we will be given time to consider this bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cordially endorse all that the hon. member from Kennebec division has said with respect to the meritorious character of this bill. I do not agree with him in his accusing the hon. gentleman behind me of barking on both sides of the fence, and thinking there can be no steps taken to meet the views of the hon. gentleman from Rideau. I would, with a good deal of hesitation, suggest to the hon. leader of the government in this House that something of this kind might be done to meet the views of the hon. gentleman behind me. While such contracts reserving very large rates of interest might not be declared illegal, still I think we might put a clause in the bill providing that no more than a certain rate—whatever rate was considered to be the highest rate that would be humane—should be recovered in court. That would really not affect the case spoken of by the hon. gentleman from Rideau division—the case of getting money for the purpose of enabling one to live on stock exchange, because there is a sort of free masonry amongst people on stock exchanges which would hinder them from raising any question of that kind. If it could be provided that not more than 10 per cent could be recovered in any event, that would meet his view.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the Banking Act the banks are permitted to recover 7 per cent, and this would be in direct conflict with that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a chapter in the Revised Statutes on interest which applies only to Nova Scotia, but which might be made applicable to all the provinces, or might be made applicable to this case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a special provision for every province.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am suggesting that this provision which has been inserted as to Nova Scotia might be made applicable, as far as regarded the proposed law, to all the provinces:

> Nothing in the three preceding sections shall apply to the chartered banks.

Hon. Mr. COX—I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, to fix the maximum rate at ten per cent would be equally as objectionable as eight per cent. There are many cases where ten per cent would be a much too low rate of interest. Take the farmer borrowing $50 for three months. Supposing he paid three dollars, it would not be unreasonable, still it would exceed ten per cent. And if you adopt measures to prevent transactions of that kind, which are great accommodations to the borrower, you would inflict great injury upon a very large portion of the community. I think the measure as proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice will answer all the other cases and be entirely devoid of the objections that could be urged against the measure as originally proposed. A similar provision was made with reference to mortgage loans. We all remember that several years ago a great deal of money was loaned by the loan companies on the instalment plan, where it was impossible to tell the rate, because principal and interest were blended together, and the loan was repaid in annual instalments. On the face of it the rate of interest appeared to be reasonable, but it was very high—somewhere about fifteen per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was thirteen and one-half per cent.

Hon. Mr. COX—The borrower supposed he was only paying six per cent, but was in reality paying a much larger rate. Legislation was provided compelling the mortgagee to put on the face of the mortgage the rate of interest he was to receive, and when that was adopted it put an end to this instalment plan. The proposition of the Minister of Justice will be most effectual in stopping the kind of transactions it is desired to end, and, at the same time, will not be an injury to those who want to do a legitimate business, and where the rate, though on the face of it a high one, is an accommodation to the borrower. I am in favour of the measure as at present proposed, and I think it will bear investigation and meet with the approval of hon. members if they carefully consider it as it is.

The amendments were adopted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would draw the hon. minister's attention, before the bill comes up again, to the section of the Banking Act which authorizes a bank to collect seven per cent, notwithstanding that rate may not be stipulated.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill, and asked leave to sit again.

SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (J) "An Act respecting the Supreme Court of Ontario and the Judges thereof."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT — On the first reading I explained that the first clause of this bill limits the power of appeal from the courts of Ontario to the extent that the local legislature have attempted by their own Act to limit it, as it is held by the Supreme Court that no province has a right to limit appeals to the Supreme Court—that this requires the action of the parliament of Canada. It so happens that by Dominion legislation all the provinces except Ontario have already a limit according to the amount in dispute.

The first clause was adopted.

On the second clause.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move that this clause be amended by adding the following "but leave to reside elsewhere in the province for any specified time may be granted from time to time by order of His Excellency in Council." I have had letters from two judges stating an inconvenience the clause as printed would create, and I therefore propose that in special cases, for a limited time, residence need not be insisted on.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE from the committee reported the bill with an amendment which was concurred in, and the bill ordered for a third reading.

FORGED ENDORSEMENTS OF BILLS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (F) "An Act respecting forged or unauthorized endorsements of Bills."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—At the second reading of the bill I pointed out the occasion for some provisions on this subject. This bill is needed chiefly to make clear what is probably the law now, and what I think everybody will agree ought to be the law, if it is not. The provision I now propose is that :

> If a bill bearing a forged or unauthorized endorsement is paid in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, by or on behalf of the drawee or acceptor, the person by whom or on whose behalf such payment is made shall have the right to recover the amount so paid from the person to whom it was so paid or from any endorser who has endorsed the bill subsequent to the forged or unauthorized endorsement.

There is the substance of the bill. It is a principle as old as commerce itself, I suppose, that every subsequent party is responsible for the validity of previous endorsements. Then we also provide for notice to this party. It may not be discovered for some days after payment is made that the endorsement was a forged, or an unauthorized endorsement. Then we propose to require that the holder should within a reasonable time after learning the fact give notice to the parties interested in the manner thereinafter provided. There is always a little uncertainty in using such an expression as "within a reasonable time," but it is used in the statutes in other cases; it is found impossible to provide definitely for every case, and there will be no practical inconvenience in using the expression here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend point out the distinction between the proposed amendment and the Act as it now stands? There seems to be no substantial difference except as to the notice.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In the Act of 1891, chap. 17, sec. 4, the hon. member will find the present law. The second subsection of sec. 24 of the Act of 1890, ch. 33, contains the enactment there amended. I explained before that the present law is confined to cheques, but there is no reason why it should be confined to cheques.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A cheque is a bill of exchange.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I know, but every bill of exchange is not a cheque. Then again the present law is confined to forged endorsements, and I propose to extend it to unauthorized endorsements. An unauthorized endorsement stands in reason and everything else in the same position as a forged endorsement. The difficulty of construing the language of the Act in some other respects has arisen largely from the expressions used, but the principle of the bill, as I propose it, is the principle of the law as it is now; the only substantial variations are that I expressly apply it to all bills, not merely to cheques, and then I extend it to unauthorized endorsements.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is covered in the Bills of Exchange Act.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is not in the Act of 1891.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is in the Act of 1890, sec. 24.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In the law, as it stands now, the protection applies without any limit as to the way in which the instrument came into the hands of the holder. It is thought reasonable by those gentlemen who have been assisting me in the matter, that it should be limited to cases where it has been paid in good faith. I do not think anybody would object to that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not see any substantial difference between the law as it at present stands, and the amendment, except the language as to cheques and bills of exchange.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The law is made more clear. It was found not to be quite clear as it stands now, and it is thought a matter of so great importance that I have been urged to make it perfectly clear by distinct legislation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct the attention of the hon. minister to subsection 3. The wording is "The notice of the forged or unauthorized endorsements, &c." I do not think that the wording is happy, because the notice of the forged or unauthorized endorsement would naturally be given the same way as the notice of any other endorsement. What is required is that notice that the endorsement is so forged shall be given. It might be claimed that notice of this endorsement given in the ordinary way would meet the wording of this subsection as it is now expressed, but I think it should be that the forged or unauthorized endorsement is so forged and unauthorized.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is clearly the construction the courts would put upon it, but I like to yield to any suggestion which I cannot say is objectionable, and therefore I suggest this amendment at the beginning of subsection 3, "The notice of the endorsement being a forged or unauthorized endorsement."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why has my hon. friend shortened up the notice? Under the law as it stands, a year is allowed in which to give notice of the forgery.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT — The holder might know all about it in a month, and not give notice of it for a year. That is not fair.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Have there been any abuses under the law as it at present stands?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—One can quite see how it is open to abuse, and in dealing with such a subject we ought to remove any chance of that sort. The holder might have notice of the forgery in a month, but he might keep it for some purpose or from carelessness, and not give notice for eleven months after receiving it. That might have most serious consequences to the subsequent innocent parties. I think he should be required to give notice within a reasonable time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I agree with my hon. friend, but there must have been some purpose in making it a year in the first instance.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think it was not considered.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it not difficult to decide what is a reasonable time? I might call the hon. gentleman's attention to a case which came under his own notice—I refer to the filling of the registrarship where the law is of a somewhat similar character. When the attention of the ministry of the day, in Ontario, was called to the fact that it should be filled within a reasonable time, a different interpretation was put upon it altogether from what the hon. gentleman gives to-day. That office remained open for two or three years, and yet the law required that it should be filled within a reasonable time. I dare say my hon. friend may remember.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was not in political life then.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh yes you were ; it was within the past twenty-five years.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was on the bench. In the case to which my hon. friend refers, what harm could there be from the delay? The words were directory. Here is a reason for immediate notice and a penalty for a neglect of it. That is, the holder who should have given the reasonable notice, and who gave no notice, or did not do so for a year, if you adopt the clause I have here, would lose his recourse against the parties.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be better to make it three or six months?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, that would not be fair to the party who would suffer. If he got the information within a fortnight, he should give notice within a reasonable time thereafter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This does not require him to do that. The bank might have knowledge of the fact three hours after the fraud was committed, and there is nothing here to compel him to give notice immediately. If you say he should give it immediately after he gets the information, I could understand it, but he might not consider it necessary to do so under this clause just as the hon. gentleman's government in Ontario did not consider it necessary to fill the office of registrar within what most people would consider a reasonable time. However, it is a matter for the lawyers and bankers to decide. A reasonable time is quite consistent with common sense, if it were acted upon, and every person could understand what a reasonable time really means. Reasonable time in one case might be one month, reasonable time in another might be twelve months.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That shows how difficult it is to fix a limit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It shows that you should adopt more definite language.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As to the manner in which the notice should be given I quite agree as to the expediency of giving it in this particular way, but at the same time it indicates that you must do as you would with a protest. There should be some direction to the court as to the limited construction they should give to the words "reasonable time," on account of notice being in that particular way. I do not know what my hon. friend's view of it is, but it has occurred to me in that particular way. The court might construe it in that sense and that would be entirely too short.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Ordinarily it would, no doubt, be too short and that is the reason why I cannot fix any specific time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I complain of is that it is fixed here—that you practically have given to the courts a measure by which they are to determine what "reasonable time" is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am rather surprised at my hon. friend from Calgary objecting to this, because these indefinite words "reasonable time" would open the door for any amount of litigation.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

The Senate adjourned.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (33) "An Act respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway," with amendments. He said:—Hon. gentlemen, the amendments made are very few and very simple, and the first one is merely striking out the word "will" in line thirteen, which is not only unnecessary but rather inconvenient. The next amendment is to supply a very necessary few words to remedy a failure to express properly what is meant by the clause, by inserting the words "that portion of the railway" after the word "and." The former part relates only to the time—"shall be commenced within two years and completed within five years," which has reference to the railway itself, not merely to the time. These words were necessary. The third amendment is the striking out of the third clause of the bill altogether, it being explained by the promoter of the bill that it was not only unnecessary but exceedingly opposed to the views and desires of the persons who were introducing the bill. They would rather almost have the bill lost altogether than have it with this clause in it. It is a clause striking out the requirement that

> The route and plans shall provide for the establishment of a station for receiving and despatching freight and passengers within the present corporate limits of the town of McLeod.

And the promoter urged upon the committee that this would require the company to make a circuit of great length of line which was entirely unnecessary and not at all required in the public convenience. The committee were disposed to accept that argument, and directed the amendment to be made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Before these amendments are concurred in, I should like to say a few words about the obliteration of the clause. I was unfortunately called out of the committee when this bill was going through; otherwise I think I should have been able to give reasons to the committee why it was desirable to retain that clause in the bill. Of course the promoters of the bill are the railway company, and they naturally prefer not to retain a clause like that. There are two interests in regard to this question. One is the settlers who have been located there for seventeen or eighteen years, and have built up a large centre of about four or five hundred people, with their school houses and municipal organizations, and all their homes and everything else. A railway comes along and is built over two years ago, and instead of going straight to this point—which it would be very easy for them to do—they build two or three miles away from the centre of the village. All through that western country the object of the railway companies is to get all the advantage to be derived from the town sites. I think hon. gentlemen will see that settlers who have gone into that country, and who have been pioneers, and erected a centre for themselves, purchased their lots, and expended their means, should not be called upon to move away from that position in order to transfer the profit that there is in the sale of lots in a town site which is growing and increasing by the industries of the settlers. It is unjust in the extreme. The object of the railway company is, of course, to retain that advantage. It has been a very burning question with the people out there, not only in that particular spot, but in other localities where the same thing has occurred, and I think hon. gentlemen should realize that this clause has been put in by the representatives of the people in the lower chamber, and it would be a very unpopular and unjust thing if we were to obliterate that protection that has been put in there for three or four or five hundred townsmen who have located in that district. I give notice—I hope somebody will move it for me in my absence—that I will move to refer this back to the Railway Committee for the purpose of reconsidering their action in the obliteration of that clause three, and having it restored. I propose to move:

> That the amendment be not concurred in, but that it be sent back to the Railway Committee to reconsider their action in obliterating clause three.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest to my hon. friend that, as he is anxious that this motion should have the benefit of his own eloquence and support, he had better move now, in amendment to the motion which is made, that the last amendment be not concurred in.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If I am correctly informed, that clause was put in the bill in the House of Commons by the Minister of Railways, in order to protect all parties. Of course if that is the case, if the bill goes back to the House as it is, it will not be accepted. The result will be that, if you insist upon it the bill will fall through.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I move that this amendment be not concurred in and that the clause be reinstated.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The more regular way to proceed would be this: where there is likely to be a division on any one of the amendments, to take up the amendments singly and move concurrence in each. I understand the first two amendments are not objected to. He might move concurrence in these amendments and then take the sense of the House on the third amendment.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—As I am put down as the seconder of the motion, I must say that I did not understand that my name was to be used in that connection, I agree with the hon. gentleman from Marquette, and I hold that the clause should not be struck out. Some people came down from Calgary last winter and laid the matter before me and requested my support and I think they are entitled to have the railway go into Macleod. The people of Macleod have changed the position of the town site once or twice in order to meet the requirements of the railway, and have gone from one place across the river to the other with the expectation that the railway was to go there. Now that the railway is diverted from that point to another point two or three miles further off, it is doing an injustice to the town. It is very inconvenient to the pioneers going into the North-west and locating there that a railway company should be allowed to build their railway some two or three miles away from the town site. That was the case with Calgary. The pioneers spent their last dollar, nearly, in building homesteads for themselves and afterwards found that the railway company changed the town site, and the same thing has happened in the south. It is unfair to the people there who have done as much as the railway company to develop the country —men who have invested their capital—it is an unfair thing to divert the railway from them and force them to sustain the loss of the valuable homestead.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Although this bill stands in my name, I must say I have very strong impressions along the line just stated by the hon. gentlemen from Wolseley and Shell River. As the bill stands in my name, however, I make the motion. I, however, for the purpose, if it is desired to test the feeling of the House, move that the House concur in the first two amendments, and my hon. friend can move his motion in regard to the third amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON moved that the House do not concur in the third amendment, and that the clause remain in the bill as it was originally.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Was this town site sold to the people out there by the government or by private individuals?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It was sold them by the government.

Hon. Mr. McINNES(B.C.)—What makes me ask that is, the mayor of Macleod was down here a short time ago, and he said that it was the government that owned and sold the town site to the people of the town of Macleod, and he was complaining very bitterly that they should start another town site within easy reach of it to destroy it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My attention was not called to this bill until it was moved here to-day, and as an hon gentleman has stated that the clause which is objected to was put in at the instance of the Minister of Railways, and in order to do justice to all parties, I should be glad if the House would allow the bill to stand over until Monday, Certainly a strong case appears to be made out for what my hon. friend desires.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The clause was objected to by the framer of the bill, and nobody seemed interested in retaining it—in fact nobody seemed to take much interest in the matter. After the strong expression in favour of dropping that clause, I feel disposed to support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Shell River.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am perfectly content that it should stand.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I think the hon. leader of House has misunderstood the hon.

member from Monck in regard to it. This clause was put in for the protection of the people of Macleod by the Minister of Railways, and I want it restored as it came from the House of Commons. I do not think there is any reason why it should not be.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The counsel in charge of the bill told me that that clause was put in by a private member from the North-west and not by the government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It was put in at the instance of the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There seems to be a difference of opinion with regard to the origin of this last clause, and it would be just as well to adopt the course suggested by the Minister of Justice and allow concurrence in this last amendment to stand over until Monday.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—I was informed in our committee to-day that the bill, as it passed the Railway Committee of the other House, did not contain that clause—that it was inserted in the House of Commons when there were very few members present. It was, as it were, stolen in, so it is a question which requires some consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The promoter of the bill in the Railway Committee said distinctly, he would rather lose the bill altogether than have that clause in it. This is the first I have heard of the government taking any interest in it at all. Certainly, there was no mention in the committee that the Minister of Railways had suggested the insertion of the clause for the protection of the people of Macleod. The first that I heard of it was here to-day.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The clause did not, of course, appear in the original bill. The railway company bring the bill before parliament and are anxious to retain the position they have already obtained of keeping the town site at the terminus of their line. This clause was put in at the instance of the people who, by that action are removed three miles from the town site. There are two interests, one, the interests of the railway, the other, the interests of the people, and of course the railway is not affected really, but the ownership of the town site is affected. That is all.

The consideration of the report was allowed to stand until Monday.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that Chas. A. Boulton, senator, who is attached to the Canadian Jubilee Contingent, which embarks to-morrow, have leave of absence during the remainder of the session.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not know what the object of that motion is. I think it is the first motion of the kind ever made in this House. If we were granting a privilege to the hon. gentleman, no one would concede it more readily than I, but he can take leave of absence whenever he pleases.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It will save his allowance.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—No.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I would suggest to add, "and that his indemnity be paid as if he were present."

The motion was agreed to.

THE APPOINTMENT OF QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to :

1. Inquire if the government is aware that the question as to whether the power to appoint members of the legal profession to be Queen's counsel in Canada exists in the Federal Government or in the Provincial Governments, has lately been the subject of consideration and judgment in the Court of Appeal for Ontario ?

2. If so, what is the subject of such judgment ?

3. Has the government appealed, or does the government intend to appeal, from such judgment to Her Majesty's Privy Council in England ?

4. Has the government had any communication with the Provincial Governments with reference to regulating such appointments for the future ?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—1. The government is aware that the question as to the power to appoint Queen's counsel has lately been the subject of consideration and judgment in the Court of Appeal in Ontario. 2. The substance of the judgment is that the Provincial Governments have the power, and some of the judges hold that the Provincial Governments alone have the power.

3. The government has appealed from the judgment to Her Majesty's Privy Council in England. 4. I personally have had confidential communications with the late government in Quebec and with the government of Ontario with reference to regulating such appointments in the future. There have been no other communications with any of the provincial governments on the subject.

MANITOBA SEPARATE SCHOOLS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Was the Laurier-Greenway compromise, to which the governments of the Dominion and of Manitoba came, concluded with the express intention that it should be subsequently modified in such a manner as to render complete justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, by remedying all their grievances as mentioned in their petition in appeal to the Governor General in Council, and as recognized by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England, and by the judgment rendered by the Governor General in Council?

2. What are the modifications promised by the Government of Manitoba and accepted by the Government of the Dominion, as the consideration of its acceptance of the actual compromise?

3. Have these proposed modifications been submitted to the Apostolic Delegate, and with what purpose?

4. When are they to be effected?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first question is simply no. The answer to the second question is, the Laurier-Greenway conference has not been modified or altered and that agreement has not been submitted with modifications.

PREFERENTIAL DUTIES IN FAVOUR OF GREAT BRITAIN.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that his Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Imperial Government and that of the Dominion on the subject of the tariff actually submitted to Parliament, and especially on the subject of clause 16 of this tariff respecting the preferential duties established in favour of Great Britain.

He said: As the House will in a few days be called upon to consider the new tariff, I think it is very convenient to have laid before this House the correspondence exchanged between the Imperial and Dominion governments, and it is for that purpose I make this motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has been no correspondence between the government of Canada and the imperial government in reference to the tariff, and more particularly the 16th clause of it, except of a confidential character which could not be brought down without the consent of the imperial government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this country to understand that a tariff bill can be brought down containing clauses which are supposed to affect treaties in existence between Great Britain and foreign countries, and that any communication that has taken place between the colonial secretary and this government is to be refused on the ground that it is of a confidential character? Are we to understand that when a measure is proposed to parliament, and exception is taken to the principle which is involved in the clause to which reference has been made, that we are not to know whether the Imperial government consents to the passage of a bill which abrogates, supposing our interpretation to be correct, the provisions of treaties which exist between Great Britain and other countries? Are we to understand that that is confidential? If so, how are we to ascertain whether we have been legislating within our powers and within the constitution? How is that to transpire? It is the first time during my parliamentary experience that a matter of so much importance as this is, has been considered of a confidential character. I quite understand that communications might take place between the Imperial government and the Canadian government upon a question which if legislated upon, would interfere with treaty agreements with a foreign country, but we have before us the bill itself, and the government have taken the responsibility of introducing it and asking the Parliament of Canada to pledge itself to the provisions of the clauses contained in the tariff bill. Objection having been taken to it on the ground that we are stepping beyond the powers which have in the past been conferred upon the colonies, and we are not to know whether communications have taken place between the Imperial government and Canada or not, or whether we are acting within our powers under the constitution and with the approval of the Imperial government that is interested in this matter. Now, I call the hon. gentleman's attention to a somewhat analogous case which occurred some years ago. In 1879, when Sir Leonard Tilley introduced the first tariff bill of the late government, in which was affirmed the principle of protection, there was a preferential clause in that tariff bill, and that preferential clause gave to Great Britain certain rights and privileges as to the value of goods for duty which were imported from Great Britain to Canada, which were not given to, or conceded to, goods that came from other portions of the world. I admit that that clause remained in full force for a number of years—I am not prepared to say now how many years, but I think six, or seven, or eight. The German government, having by some means ascertained that this preference was given to Great Britain and denied to them, and to which they contended they were entitled under the favoured nations clause, the British government called the attention of the Canadian government to this fact, I may as well frankly admit that at the time I had no recollection of the provisions of the treaties to which our attention was called, and perhaps I am not going too far if I say that most other members of the government had not either, never having studied them. The matter was referred to me as Minister of Customs to inquire into the cause of the complaint, and looking at these treaties I discovered that there was a provision which prevented the colonies from giving Great Britain any preference over any country with which Great Britain had a treaty containing the favoured nations clause. The result was that we came down to parliament, frankly stated the facts, and repealed that clause of the tariff act which gave a preference to Great Britain. In doing that Great Britain was asking that the Canadian government should repeal a clause which interfered with the favoured nations clauses, and though, upon investigation, it was found that it would be a loss to our revenue of between two and three hundred thousand dollars per annum, the Canadian government of that day considered it was bound to act in accordance with the wishes of the Imperial Government and repeal the clause, or to so amend it as to give the same privileges to Germany, Belgium and other countries that were parties to the favoured nations clause in these treaties. There was no hesitation at that time in saying to Parliament frankly and openly the reasons why we did that. There was no desire on the part of the government of that day to say to parliament: "True, we did give Great Britain that preferential treatment. True, the merchants of Great Britain have had the advantage of it for eight or nine years, but as it is contrary to the policy and principle of Great Britain and her general policy, we accede to it." Now, we have a clause introduced in Parliament in the present tariff which purports to give a preference to Great Britain over other countries. I am not going to argue the question now as to whether it does or does not. To my mind it does not give preference, because any other country can take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Over the United States it does.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not at all, nothing of the kind. If the United States like to come down to the terms of that resolution, they can have all the advantages of it, and so can any other country. That is all I said. I do not say it gave it to any other unless they came within the meaning of that tariff—within the meaning of the resolution when placed upon the statute book. But the question now is whether it is really and actually a preferential clause in favour of Great Britain and against the nations that are bound by the favoured nations clause in the different treaties, to which we have referred, and the motion made by my hon. friend is to ascertain what the opinion of the British government is upon this question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no information yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While we are legislating upon a question of great importance, which affects the fiscal policy and the tariff and the revenue of the whole Dominion, we are told that that correspondence is of a confidential character, but the country cannot be taken into its confidence. Whether the country would be satisfied with an answer of that sort, or with a policy of the kind that is being pursued, must rest with the future when the people have an opportunity of giving their opinion. But this question of —shall I say hiding themselves under the plea of confidential correspondence—can have no possible effect as to whether it will or not, except it would be to let the foreign nations know whether Great Britain accedes to our legislation or not, is a question that we should know. If the hon. gentleman had said "We had correspondence but it is impolitic to let you know what the opinion of the British government is upon this question for fear that it would give an impetus to the demands which are being made by the favoured nations clauses countries," perhaps we could understand him, and we could draw an inference from that which probably the hon. gentleman would not like us to draw. My own convictions are that there has been correspondence between this government and England, and if there had not been, we should not have had the changes made in the resolutions which have been made. Why have they been made? Is it because Great Britain objects to the clause as first proposed to parliament? If so, let us know it, and then we will know precisely what we ought to do, and it will put us in a position to say whether we should support a measure of that kind or not. The country, I am sure, will not be satisfied with the answer which the hon. gentleman has given, and the time is not far distant when they will be obliged to let us know what this secret and confidential correspondence, if such it really is, amounts to.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The people will know that as soon as it is possible to give them any information consistently with the rules that govern such matters. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has not said there was no correspondence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know he has not.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—But he has said that the correspondence is of a confidential character. Two or three observations may be made with reference to what my hon. friend has said in that respect. This correspondence is marked as confidential, and, of course, this alone would preclude one party from making use of it, even supposing there was no other reason. I can say this, I think, without any impropriety, that the British government has not hitherto expressed an opinion adverse to the position taken by the government here. My hon. friend referred to a case which came before himself, when he was Minister of Customs. I think he mentioned the year in which that occurred —1879. The case affords no analogy that I see to the question now before the Senate. There was no correspondence there—and how can the case have any bearing upon the question of producing this correspondence? There is a great difference, too, between what had occurred then and what is occurring now. That was an absolute preference to England, as I understood my hon. friend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—And here there is not an absolute preference given to England, but an offer of reciprocal trade, of which it so happens England can take advantage at once, and some other countries may perhaps be able to take advantage of it by and by. Further, it is a well known rule, acted upon by all good governments, that correspondence is not produced until it comes to a conclusion, even if it is such correspondence as then may be properly called for by the representatives of the people. This correspondence is still in progress and, besides all the other reasons for not producing it, that is one which my hon. friend, as an experienced statesman, will know very well is a proper ground for not producing correspondence. When it is concluded, we shall know whether it is such a correspondence as we have a right to produce. I think my hon. friend, on reflection, will see that he has no ground for objecting to the answer which the hon. Secretary of State gave.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I readily confess I am bound to do so after the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice. If the Secretary of State had said the correspondence was marked "confidential," I should have at once accepted, because I know the principle of all governments is not to publish or lay before parliament any correspondence which is marked "confidential," unless they have first the consent of the home government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I mentioned that clearly. I said it was confidential correspondence and could not be produced unless we got the consent of the Imperial government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend on the other side of the House will remember very well the case to which he referred. At the time my hon. friend and the late Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, and the Minister of Finance went to Washington, there had been correspondence between the two governments. That was asked for in the House of Commons, but it was not brought down, and on that occasion the Minister of Finance alluded to that correspondence, but nevertheless the members of parliament had not that correspondence before them. My hon. friend was saying good morning to a gentleman he has not met yet. If we had the Tariff Bill before us and were able to discuss it, and if the government had acted upon and admitted that they had acted upon a correspondence that was not before the House, or undertook to use it to justify themselves without submitting it to parliament, and without giving this House the same opportunity of judging and altering their conclusions as they have had, there would be some ground of complaint. But when correspondence is confidential and not completed, and when the subject matter to which it relates is not before us, it does not seem to me there would be any ground of complaint.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But it is coming before us soon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—However, I might draw attention to this fact, that at that time they were discussing the question of policy as between Canada, the United States and England. You were not asking at that time to legislate to affirm any of the conditions or principles involved in that correspondence. The difference between the case to which my hon. friend referred and the present is this: we are legislating and putting upon the statute book a provision in the Tariff Act which may be within our power, or may not. I readily admit that it is time enough to bid a certain gentleman good morning when we meet him. Let me hope sincerely that his remarks with reference to the gentleman may be applicable to the Tariff Bill, and that no man in the Senate may ever have the opportunity of bidding it "Good morning."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman will remember on that occasion the government was asking the House to justify its conduct without giving the House an opportunity of knowing the facts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As there is nothing to bring down we did not propose to bring it down.

FRENCH TREATY CORRESPONDENCE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Imperial Government and that of the Dominion on the subject of the French Treaty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that there is any correspondence. There may be. Whatever there is will be brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is correspondence, but the question is whether that correspondence was not laid before parliament when the treaty was ratified. What my hon. friend, I suppose, would like to know is whether there is any correspondence other than what was laid before parliament, or does he mean correspondence that took place from the time of the ratification of the treaty.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—After the treaty was introduced, and after it was changed—between these two dates.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It never was changed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (H) "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code."

On clause 179.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The law, as it at present stands, makes illegal the selling or exposing for sale of obscene books. It does not make punishable the manufacture, which is the worst offence of all, and without which there would be no sale or exposing for sale. The object of the amendment is to introduce the word "manufacture" in addition to the other words that are in the law at present, and also the distribution and circulation. It would not have been omitted if it had been thought of at the time.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All the words contained within brackets are additions.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—They are additions or changes. In this case I believe they are all additions. I have made a note to that effect on the bill, in order that hon. members might have the greatest facility in examining the clause. The words I propose to introduce are those in brackets in the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What about the penalty—two years' imprisonment?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is the present law, I have not made any change in that.

On clause 180.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The amendment to the 180th section is for the purpose of introducing a word which had been in the law before, but which has been dropped out, and the dropping of which is found now to sanction the circulation of very objectionable matter. Originally there was an Act which provided against seditious, disloyal, scurrilous or libellous matter. All those four words have been dropped from this section, but then other sections sufficiently provide for seditious, disloyal and libellous matter, but not for scurrilous matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the motives which influenced parliament, when dealing with this matter before, in leaving out the words which the hon. gentleman pointed out had been omitted. If the committee will turn to the Criminal Code, they will find that section 180 forms part of part XIII. which deals with offences against morals. Now, it is felt by the gentlemen of the committee who are dealing with this Criminal Code, that seditious and other literature did not come under this head of XIII. I think that literature of a scurrilous character would hardly come under that head either, and it was intended, and I think it was provided, that the scurrilous literature and literature of a treasonable character should be provided for in another portion of the code. I would respectfully suggest to the hon. minister that he will probably find on inquiry that provision is made somewhere else in the code. If not, then the provision should be made, but somewhere else. It does not come under the head of public immorality.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask the Minister of Justice what way this is going to facilitate the work of the post office. Are the post office officials to judge what is scurilous and what is not scurrilous? Are they going to exercise judicial functions in this regard.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—They have now certain powers in case of libellous matter. You have always to entrust those in authority with a certain amount of discretion—judicial discretion too. That cannot be helped. The present stands on the same footing as a number of other cases which are mentioned in the law as it exists. Then, with regard to its position which my hon. friend from Halifax suggests, it is not always easy to find where a matter should be introduced. I think scurrilous matter is of the same character as libellous matter. The words here are "obscene or immoral." I think it is immoral to produce anything of a scurrilous kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not in a moral sense. A man may use scurrilous language which may not be immoral language.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Scurrilous would not be a proper word for it in that case.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if a publication containing an article written by Goldwin Smith to which the St. George Society of Toronto objected, would come under this term "scurrilous?"

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not recollect of having seen anything that Mr. Goldwin Smith wrote, however objectionable it may have been, that could be termed scurrilous.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—What he wrote was considered so objectionable by the St. George's Society of Toronto that they struck his name from the list.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I would direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to something which must have come under the cognizance of a great many members here—the fact that a business has sprung up, more especially in Great Britain, of issuing invitations to "guess." The recipient is asked to fill in a blank and return the circular with a postage stamp or a small sum of money. The business has assumed large proportions. I think that should be included in this clause. The authorities in London have occupied themselves in breaking up business of that kind. They find enormous numbers of letters coming every day to the offices which contain postage stamps or small sums of money, and the reward for the successful guess is something which is offered in the way of a prize. I offer the suggestion that clause "C" should also contain the words "or promote competitions involving money deposits or promote gambling." I throw out the suggestion with great modesty, but I think it is a matter which might sooner or later become of importance in this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has it prevailed at all up to the present time?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—There have been instances in this country. In England it has grown to very large proportions. Every now and again you can see in the English reports that such arrangements have been broken up, and immense numbers of letters found.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At the last Toronto fair, there was an immense cake of soap, and there was a piano offered to the person who would guess the weight of it. Is that the character of the guessing that the hon. gentleman refers to?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Something like that, making it a pecuniary success to the owners by involving a certain payment in stamps or on account. I think all that should be put down summarily.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there was any fee paid in the case to which I refer. It simply advertised the soap maker. Does not my hon. friend the Minister of Justice think there is a good deal of force in the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Calgary? This clause says it shall be an indictable offence if "any obscene or immoral book, &c.," that can be easily understood. That is the way the clause stands now, but you add the words "immoral or scurrilous." Now what constitutes a scurrilous article? I think my hon. friend will say that a good many have been written about himself in the newspapers. There have been a great many written about myself I know. Is this amendment intended to prevent newspapers from publishing such articles? Are the post office officials to decide whether a newspaper contains scurrilous articles? For instance, was it scurrilous to declare that a member of the other House was a "slanderer and a liar?"

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It would be libellous, if written.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then, under this clause the newspaper would be guilty of an indictable offence and every postmaster would have to refuse to deliver the Toronto Globe containing that article. I do not know what would become of the hon. gentleman's party if the amendment is accepted. If that is to be the effect of it, I do not know but that I shall vote for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A new element of crime not first contemplated in the original clause of the Act is now being introduced which cannot be said to come within the class of moral evils already dealt with under section 180 of the code, in fact you are making scurrility or libel a criminal offence under this clause. If the matter is scurrilous, public morals may not necessarily be shocked. The good of the community may not in any way be injured by the publication of a scurrilous article. One can scarcely take up a newspaper nowadays where a matter is discussed in a very heated manner without finding scurrilous language used. A man thoughtlessly, while heated with passion, may write a letter of a scurrilous nature to a fellow man—a letter which is not slanderous or immoral—and for this he is to be made liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary and subjected to a heavy fine. It is monstrous that because a man uses animated language towards another man he should be liable to such punishment.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend forgets that libel is now indictable. If scurrilous is the same as libellous—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then why not deal with it as you do with libel?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Either has an extensive meaning. It may be of little consequence or it may be of a great deal of consequence. That has to be left to the courts. There is no other way of doing it. You cannot draw a line to make the whole thing clear. In all legislation you have to take it for granted that sound judgment will be exercised by the courts. None of the cases to which the hon. gentleman has referred would come under this term scurrilous. I have had some hard things said against me, but I do not remember any of them that I would consider scurrilous. I have read a good deal that has been written against my hon. friend opposite, but I do not think it was in scurrilous language. There would be no difficulty in saying what is scurrilous any more than in saying what is libellous and we have to use such terms in order to have legislation at all on the subject. I would have no objection to place this under some other section, but I was unable to find a more appropriate place. If, before the bill goes through, any hon. gentleman will put in form some suggestion with reference to the introduction of it in some other part of the bill, I shall be happy to consider it and to accept it, if there is no objection to it. I am satisfied that the present law does not provide for this class of cases.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend state an illustration which now occurs to him where the present law does not cover the case?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is difficult to present cases, but we all understand pretty well what scurrilous matter is, and it ought not to be permitted. I therefore think the clause is one which might very fairly be adopted.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I have no objection to the term used, but I think the great difficulty in the way is to define what would come under the purview of this clause. Often you see articles in the papers which, in one's judgment, may perhaps seem very scurrilous indeed, and yet if you come to discuss the language with others you might find a very great divergence of opinion—particularly if the corns of the party you appealed to were not trodden upon by the article in question! It would be extremely difficult to define what is scurrilous and what is not, in the sense of making it an indictable offence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The term was used in the law for a great many years, and I do not know that any objection was taken to it. It was dropped out because other words were used in the Criminal Code. Under the old law, every one who transmitted scurrilous matter was guilty of a misdemeanour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There must have been some reason for dropping it from the law before. The word is vague in its meaning and will lead to such difficulty in interpreting it, unless the Minister of Justice has very strong reasons for including it in the law, that I suggest that he drop it. However, if he insists upon it I shall not press my objection.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not want to insist upon it, but I think it is a needed provision and should pass. If it were possible to define scurrilous I should be glad to do so, and to add a clause for that purpose at some future stage of the bill, though in preparing the bill I found great difficulty in defining it, and I thought on the whole, it would be better left to the courts to define it. In some cases there would be no trouble at all in defining it; in others there might be difficulty. That is the way with a great many of our laws until they have been a long time on the statute book and there have been many decisions on them, and then they become clearly defined.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I am ready to admit that the judiciary of the country is of so high a character that a man's liberty is in no way jeopardized, I would point out the difficulty which faces a man in a country where free speech is recognized: before he reaches the tribunal which finally disposes of his case, he has to face a preliminary examination before a magistrate who will consider the legality of the charge made against him, and who in all probability would send him up for trial before a court of competent jurisdiction. For the time, that man is stamped as a criminal and called upon to assume very heavy legal expenses in retaining counsel and so on. He then appears before the court of superior jurisdiction, and at very great expense to himself is tried for this minor offence of using animated language, possibly scurrilous language, towards one of his fellowmen. He is branded as a criminal. He might possibly be discharged, but in the meantime he stands in jeopardy of being found guilty as a felon. I submit under the circumstances that no such offence as this should be made a crime. It is not a crime under the present law. My hon. friend I venture to say can scarcely point out to this House any illustration where there is an abuse of language on this particular line which would warrant the introduction of such a provision in the bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The suggestion of my hon. friend applies to every offence with which a man may be charged. The party charged with the offence may not be guilty, but still he has to go before the magistrate if he is summoned for the purpose. Very many do not employ counsel, but others do. Some cases are dismissed by the magistrate; others are sent up for trial. It is impossible to avoid it. There is no more danger in this class of cases than in any other. I do not think that ought to be considered an objection to the passage of the bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—A good many of the objections made to this bill are hypercritical. If we laymen expect lawyers to make bills that we can understand, there would be no use for lawyers or judges. The bill is very good as it stands now, and I have no doubt the lawyers and judges will understand it, and any person who goes before them, if he does not understand it then, is likely to understand it before the trial is over.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not wish it to be understood that I am opposing this bill. I simply suggested that the clause might be put in some other portion of the code. Still on looking over the code, I do not see any better place for it.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The next clause proposes to amend the 181 section of the code. As the law stands now—

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who seduces [or] has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, of or above the age of fourteen years and under the age of [sixteen] years.

I propose, for reasons which I stated in the note to the clause, to knock out that portion of it referring to previous chastity, and to raise the age from 16 to 18 years. This provision about the girl being of previously chaste character, is not in the Imperial Act, which makes a like offence criminal. We are neither following the English law in putting in those words, nor are we following what we have done in other various parts of our own law. For instance, in section 261 of the code, it is declared that there is no defence to a charge or indictment for an indecent assault on a person under the age of 14, that he or she consented to the act of indecency. Then 269 deals with a similar offence, and makes no such provision. In section 269 there is no reference to previously chaste character. I need not go over the other clauses, but there are several cases of this kind which parliament has dealt with, and has not thought it necessary to put in those words. The objection to them is that it is a difficult thing for many poor girls to prove what they were before. It is suggested that the converse of this should be provided for; and, if the House approves of that, I should have no objection to adding these words:

> Unless it be established to the satisfaction of the judge before whom the case is tried that the said girl was of a previously unchaste character.

There is some objection to this because we have found by experience that the existence of the clause which we propose to strike out leads to false evidence, perjured evidence, on the part of the men charged in regard to the previous character of the girl, and more injustice is done in that way than any just object served by putting in those words; and the same reasoning applies to some extent to the addition suggested I do not find such a provision in any United States laws, any more than in the laws of England. Then the other point of change which is suggested by the bill is raising the period of consent from sixteen years to eighteen years. I think all those who have studied the subject, all who take an interest in it—and there are societies and others who have made it a special study—appear to agree that this offence should apply up to the age of eighteen years, that girls should be absolutely protected up to that age. I think that is extremely reasonable, and I quite sympathize with those who have suggested the change. I am quite sure those who favour it are very numerous and of good judgment. Any one who doubts the propriety of it, probably has not been in the way of learning the facts. I hope the Senate will not object to passing the clause.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In those cases where seduction occurs under the age of eighteen are the girls protected?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes. The proposed clause reads:

All of above the age of fourteen and under the age of eighteen years.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—There is a small matter to which I wish to refer before dealing with the main question. In the second line I observe the word "and." The Act of 1892 contains the word "and," but it was amended in 1893 and the word "or" was substituted for the word "and." We go back now to the word "and."

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no objection to putting in the word "or."

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—If you look at clause 183 in the subsection you will find the word "or" is put in. There is some confusion as to the meaning of the word "or" and the word "and" in that matter, because in 1893 it was changed from "and" to "or." However, not being a lawyer I leave that to the legal gentlemen. As regards the more important suggestion of the question of the substitution of the age of eighteen for sixteen, I should like to point out to the House the obvious fact that the insertion in the Canadian Act of the words "of previously chaste character," is of tremendous importance. I think if you eliminate these words and make the limit sixteen, you do a great deal to increase the stringency of that clause, because obviously that qualifying sentence "of previously chaste character" will be adduced in the evidence and every effort made to blacken the character of the victim. A girl suffers not only from the crime being committed, but in addition to that has her character systematically blackened in the course of the trial with a view of securing the escape of the offender. If you take out from the Canadian Act the words "of previously chaste character," you greatly increase the efficacy of the clause as a protective measure. I would limit the age under this clause to sixteen, which I think would be much better. As pointed out by the Minister of Justice, the words, "of previously chaste character," do not occur in the English or United States Acts, and I think it was a very important qualification of the protection given by this Act to let it go in at all. I would, therefore, suggest the elimination of those words, and that the limit be fixed at sixteen.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I agree fully with what has fallen from the last speaker. There is such a thing as going too far in legislation of this kind. In doing so you remove all moral consideration from the parties intended to be protected here by attempting to throw this legal protection over them. I quite agree with the Minister of Justice that the qualification, as it stands at present on the statute-book, is very objectionable: that is that the previously chaste character of the girl should have to be proved under that clause. It is a very improper qualification, and I would much prefer the English law and the United States law on that point. Nor would I desire to see any such provision made as the Minister of Justice has suggested, unless it was proved on the other side that the seduced girl was previously of unchaste character. I should like to leave those two qualifications out altogether. But leaving those out, I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the age of sixteen is quite far enough to throw the shield over young women. We all know that young women at the age of sixteen are just as precocious, and understand what is necessary for the protection of their virtue, as perhaps, males at the age of twenty. It would be just as fair to protect males of sixteen against seduction from the other sex as to extend any undue protection to females at the age of sixteen. There is a great deal, I think, of false morality on this question abroad at the present day. I will not use the language which was used by an hon. gentleman here the other evening—perhaps it was not strictly correct—that this sort of legislation emanates from people who are not the best judges, female societies for instance, of questions of this kind, and who can only look at one side of the question. I would prefer to allow the law to stand as it is at present, with the simple amendment of striking out the words "of previously chaste character," leaving the age at 16. I wish the Minister of Justice would give the House an opportunity to express its opinion upon these two questions by putting the two amendments separately, and then putting the motion on the clause as it is amended. It would give more freedom if he would move that these words be stricken out of the clause, which would, I think, meet the concurrence of the House generally, and then afterwards take the sense of the House upon the question of age. That would be the fairest way to deal with the clause.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I most decidedly object to any change in the age. The Minister of Justice has given this matter a good deal of attention, and I am sure he has been prompted by only the best efforts to improve the morality of the people of this country; and while sixteen is the age at which many girls turn into women, there are cases where they do not. It is well to place that age at a period where the woman is complete, where she is not a girl. I know of cases where there have been seductions at sixteen, but they are remarkable cases; and I think we should not leave it at the age of sixteen. If the women of this country have petitioned and said that 16 is the proper age, why should we not accede to their wishes? They know more about this matter than we do, physiologically and in every other way. I think it would be wrong to change the clause, and I would rather have the limit fixed at the age of 18, when womanhood is more likely to be complete than at 16. I know many girls who are not women at 16; and, therefore, when they in their wisdom put it at an age when they would be more likely to possess all the powers and faculties that women enjoy, it is only right that their view should be sustained.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—It appears to me that the ages 16 and 18 are insufficient. There may be some girls even before the age of 12 or 15 that know everything that they ought not to know. You have all read Robbie Burns's work, "The Jolly Bakers," perhaps the most humorous of all his poems, and a true picture of low life. You will remember where one lady said, "I once was a maid, but I dunno' mind when." That is likely to be the case when a man and his wife and sons and daughters slept in the same room. I believe that is not so much the custom in the old country now; but I can remember when I first commenced to practice my profession the married soldiers and their wives slept in the room with the unmarried men. Do you think girls in those days, brought up in that way, did not know everything pertaining to womanhood? If a woman is seduced I do not see why the man who seduces her should not be punished no matter what her age may be. And therefore I would suggest the age when a woman's passions generally cease. I think nature points to the age of 45, and I would suggest that that be the age of consent. Up to that time there is the animal nature which is implanted in all our bosoms, male or female, and it ceases at that age in women. And when a woman goes astray after that age it is entirely in her head she goes astray. I would say after that age let her paddle her own canoe. If she errs from the path of rectitude after 45 years of age she will not have any children, and will not suffer the same as younger people. For that and many other reasons which the Christian societies will give, I move, if any hon. gentleman will second it, that 45 be fixed as the age of consent.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The House will remember, probably, that by the English law the age at which persons may legally enter into the state of matrimony is 12 for the woman and 14 for the man. And the crime of rape cannot be committed by a boy under fourteen.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think there should be some justification shown before any amendment is made in the Criminal Code. There seems to me to be too much of a tendency to pass laws in this direction from time to time, altering the well established criminal laws of the land, and it seems to me there is no source from which we could get so much valuable information which would be desirable to assist us in this matter as from the Minister of Justice. If the present law does not meet the requirements of society—does not promote the public good, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice should be very familiar with that fact. I would, therefore, ask my hon. friend if the judiciary of the country in any way has pointed out to him the fact that the present law does not meet all the requirements of society. Do not the criminal statistics establish that the present law fully meets the protection of society?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The hon. gentleman should not lose sight of the fact that our law alone contains the words "of previously chaste character." The English law has not got that. We are much less protected and much more liberal in regard to these offences than they are in England. The English criminal law has received the attention of the first lawyers in the world, and we are on pretty safe ground in following the English law, which has protection up to 16, and no qualifying clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The criminal law, particularly in regard to those offences, in England, has not been strictly enforced; and if there have been numerous cases of immorality in that particular direction, it is no reason why our statutory law should be made more strict than in England, for in Canada it is most strictly enforced.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I am not asking that; I want it to be the same. And there is another reason: I am not an expert on the subject, but it is generally stated that maturity is reached in this country at at earlier age than in England.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That is not so, nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am only discussing this phase of the question: is there any justification for our amending the criminal law as it at present stands? I submit unless very good cause can be shown, we should not proceed, from session to session, to tinker with the law, as has been done. I think our law should remain on the statute-books without constant amendment, except wherein it seems manifestly wanting in reaching crime.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The motion before the House is to eliminate that clause and raise the age to 18. I do not want to go so far. I want to eliminate that clause and restrict the age to 16. There is one grand principle we should bear in mind, and that is not to ride faster than public opinion will carry us. If you make it 18 it will not be so efficacious.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—The line must be drawn somewhere. It is an arbitrary line and must be drawn somewhere: and if the Minister of Justice had placed the age higher I would have endorsed it. I think 18 is not at all too high. Every day of my life I have been brought into contact with cases where girls of 16, 17 and 18, immature minds, have been ruined by their masters and employers, and hustled off. I should have been quite glad if the line had been drawn higher. Although we smiled at some of the remarks of the junior member for Halifax, there was a great deal of sense in them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It will be remembered that this portion of the Criminal Code received a very full discussion in this House in 1892, and that there was an amendment to the law respecting these offences in 1890. At that time a great deal of attention was given to the question. And at a still earlier period, I think about 1884 or 1885, hon. gentlemen who have been in the House for some time will remember there was a good deal of discussion also; and there is a great deal of force in what is said by the hon. gentleman from Calgary that it is not a desirable thing to alter our criminal law too often. But we are perfectly safe in going as far as they have gone in England; and, therefore, I concur entirely with what has been said by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, that we should strike out this provision that it must be shown that the girl was of a previously chaste character. The retention of these words renders this protection almost useless. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and I think the hon. gentleman from Kingston, appeared to be under a slight misapprehension with respect to the clause now before us. The idea upon which this section of the law is based is that those who are too immature to protect themselves shall be protected by the law and shall not be deemed capable of consenting. The age of 16 is high enough, and I hope the minister will see his way to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Kennebec and the hon. gentleman from Richmond. The hon. gentleman from Kennebec made one suggestion which I think should not be accepted or acted upon, and that is that "or" should be substituted for "and."

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—No, I did not say that. I drew attention to the fact that the word had been changed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Look at the position we would be placed in if we substituted "or" for "and." There are no ladies present, and we can talk quite freely. Every one who knows anything about life in the different cities and towns knows that there are a great many comparatively young girls who are of loose character, and if you substitute "or" for "and" there, any man who happens to fall into the hands of a girl of fifteen or sixteen is liable to go to the penitentiary. Now the girl may be, to all intents and purposes, in appearance, and every other way, a woman. So that having illicit intercourse should not in itself be a criminal offence. The seduction is the important factor and I trust that the word "and" will not be struck out and "or" substituted. I adverted, when this measure was at its second reading, to the fact that it was not desirable to substitute in the minds of the young women of this country the protection of the law for their own sense of virtue and honour. Now, if it is felt that a young man can be sent to the penitentiary if he is too intimate with a girl of 17 years, the young man being possibly not more than 16, you have a very unfortunate condition of things. And my attention has been directed by the hon. gentleman from Bothwell, who is not here just now, to the fact that he was informed by the Chief Justice of one of the Western States, Michigan I think, that very serious evils had arisen in that state from legislation just like this, that a great many young men were frightened in marrying girls who were not of very good character, very often through dread of criminal proceedings; and the next stage in the proceedings would be divorce.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVEN—For one man who has suffered, how many girls have suffered.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have got to look at these things, not through sentimental eye glasses, but through the eye-glasses of common sense; and I have not heard, except from this association whose intentions are the best in the world, of any complaint from the average man and woman through the country of the existing law; and I am satisfied that if that requirement, that the girl shall be of previously chaste character, is stricken out of that clause we shall have it just as it ought to be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will the Minister of Justice tell me how many cases have come before the courts under the Criminal Code for the seduction of girls under 16?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am not able to tell. I do not think there are any statistics.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I know of four or five.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The judges have communicated with me on the subject, and have stated to me that the present law was insufficient. I have had no communication with any judge outside of this House. But if they have not communicated with me they have had copies of the bill, and not one of them has communicated to me that he saw any objection to the bill. But we have a very experienced judge in this House, who, unfortunately, is not present here to-day, and he informed me before going that he heartily approved of the measure as a whole. He has made some suggestions, most, if not all, of which I purpose adopting, in regard to the various clauses of the bill. With regard to this matter of blackmailing, as it were, he said in the whole fifty years of his term—and that is a very long time, a longer judicial experience than any other judges have had—there had been but two attempts at blackmail.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is under the law as it is now.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, of course. That shows that the danger from blackmailing is not very great. It seldom can be successfully accomplished. I concur in the propriety of putting the two questions separately to the committee. I suggest that we put the question first as to striking out of the present law the provision of "previously chaste character."

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think that clause should be left in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have the comments here of one judge upon this point, in which he says that in his opinion sixteen years is the outside :

A girl of sixteen ought to know enough to take care of herself. There is too much opportunity given to abandoned women to levy blackmail. Women of unchaste character for money will generally swear anything. Such is my experience. I believe "previously chaste character" should be preserved.

That is the opinion of one judge to whom I sent the bill, but I must confess that that was my own opinion. However, after the testimony given by my hon. friend opposite, and my hon. friend from Kingston—two physicians who have had great experience—I shall vote for the clause as it stands.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think the question of eliminating "previously chaste character" should be put to the House by itself, because I am convinced it should be in—especially after what the hon. gentleman from Halifax said that trouble had taken place in Michigan from women of bad character making young men marry them. If it were proved that they were of unchaste character, they should not have any claim on them. I think that clause should be left in.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Before the vote is taken, I wish to say that I think there is a majority in this House quite willing to receive the bill as it is.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My motion is that the words "of previously chaste character" in the present law be omitted from it.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I move that the age be fixed at sixteen, instead of eighteen, in the fourth line of the section.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I do not think this clause should pass in its present shape. I would much rather you would place the age as I suggested. Of course some female endeavour society or some other association will come in here, and try to raise the age from eighteen to twenty.

The Committee divided on the amendment which was adopted on the following division :—

Yeas 14, Nays 11.

The clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—With regard to section 182, the law as it stands at present provides as follows :

Every one above the age of 21 years is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has illicit connection with any unmarried female of previously chaste character and under 21 years of age.

It is suggested that if a man is old enough and wicked enough to commit such an offence he should be indictable for it, though he may not be 21. Hence the proposed amendment omitting the words which restrict the offence to those over that age. That seems extremely reasonable. It is urged with great force by those who are in favour of the change. Many young men at 19 and 20 are in the same position in every way as men of 21. It would be extremely reasonable, therefore, to say, no matter what the age is, if a man under promise of marriage, seduces or has illicit connection with a female of previously chaste character, he should be punished for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman think that a boy of 16, who is supposed to have seduced a woman of 20, should be sent to the penetentiary for this long term?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—There ought to be some protection for the man in this case. It would be a dreadful thing to render it possible for a designing woman of 21 years to profess that a boy of 16 or 17 had seduced her under promise of marriage, and place him in the position of either being sent to the penitentiary or compelled to marry her. There ought to be some limit of age. The present law fixes the limit for the man at 21. Let us reduce that and increase the protection of the woman to a certain extent. I would suggest 18—two years older than the limit for the girl.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Say 20.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I should be as strong an advocate as any one for such legislation as would have the effect of preventing, if possible, the commission of such offences on the part of boys or young men, but I can conceive it quite possible that cases may frequently arise where such a law would be taken advantage of by designing young women. A servant, for instance, in a house might lead astray one of the sons of that house, a boy of 17 or 18; she might say, "Oh yes, you will marry me," the affair might pass over or be hushed up for the time, and afterwards proceedings might be brought to punish him for the offence. There is a great risk of inflicting a dreadful punishment upon a young man of that age, who has been more sinned against than sinning. I agree with my hon. friend from Kennebec, but I should prefer to make the age 19. I thought that was the limit we spoke of yesterday.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I am perfectly willing to accept nineteen. I wanted to go as far as possible. What I want to avoid is the possibility of sending a boy of fifteen or sixteen to the penitentiary, or let him fall into the clutches of a designing woman of twenty-one. Do not forget that at the present moment the law applies only to a man of twenty-one. Now you are going to make it low, and the lower you go the nearer you meet the requirements of the people who are calling out for protection.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is just as well to take a straight vote on the proposal of the Minister of Justice. .

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I would accept the age of nineteen rather than reject the clause altogether. Perhaps my hon. friend will move to strike out twenty-one and insert nineteen.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I move in amendment that the clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps the clause might be acceptable if the following words were added: "Provided always that the male is not younger than the female."

Hon. Mr. MILLER—This matter was before the committee of both Houses that framed the Criminal Code; it was fully discussed, and the danger on both sides was very calmly considered. After a consideration of the code by the committee it was also fully discussed in both Houses of Parliament, I recollect the discussion especially of this clause was very full, and after ample time was given to it it was considered inadvisable to give any advantage to the female more than is given in this case, and that the protection afforded to the male was absolutely necessary at that age. I agree with a great deal that has fallen from my hon. friend opposite on one point, that is, we should not change the criminal law unnecessarily. We should have some good ground for changing it—that it should be found to work unjustly or not in the interests of society. We have no evidence at all to induce us to change the law from what it is at present. There is so much danger in giving the female an advantage over the male under this clause that difficulties must present themselves at once to any one's mind. Take a young man living in the same house with a female servant of previously good character. He may be a very eligible match for her. She may, in fact, seduce him knowing that she has a chance to get a husband or else he is certain of going to the penitentiary. There is so much room for blackmail unless you throw some protection over the young man in this case it would be inadvisable, in the absence of any good grounds for changing the law, to change it at all. The tendency of the whole of the legislation in this bill goes too far in the right direction. I think the law is very well as it is now, and the sense of the committee may very fairly be taken on the motion of the Minister of Justice that this clause stand part of the bill. Those against it can vote against it; those who are in favour of it can vote for it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Don't you think a young man of 19 ought to have sufficient character and knowledge of the world to know how to act?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—A young man of 19 may very easily be seduced by a woman of 21 if she thinks there is any advantage to be gained by it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that when a girl has attained the age of twenty-one, and from that time out, she ought to rely upon her own virtue and her own honour more than on the possibility of sending a young man to the penitentiary.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The motion of my hon. friend from Truro is out of order, because by voting in the negative on the direct motion to adopt the clause my hon. friend secures the object he has in view.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I understand there is a motion to make the age nineteen.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If so, the amendment is in order.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It will be observed that if the clause is struck out we cannot make an amendment after that. Two amendments have been suggested. One amendment is to name 19 instead of 21. The other amendment is "provided the male is not younger than the female."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know whether the Secretary of State intends pressing that amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; I do not. I only throw out the suggestion.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There is no necessity to complicate the question. If the motion that the clause stand part of the bill pass in the negative, this clause is stricken out, and you can move to amend the existing law by another notice. We can get the sense of the committee more directly by taking the vote on the straight motion before the chair. If the clause is rejected, the law stands as it is now.

The committee divided on the motion to adopt the clause.

The motion was declared lost.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In regard to section 183, I dare say there will be no difference of opinion amongst us. The law, as it stands now, involves the same principle, and we merely extend it to girls employed in shops and as domestic servants. There is now protection for girls employed in factories, mills or workshops, omitting the words which I now propose to put in, "shop or store, or domestic service." Perhaps the most important of all is the last, because a man has a greater opportunity to corrupt a girl who is employed as a domestic servant than in any of the other cases. That is carried out twice in the clause. In addition to that, I propose to make equally guilty the man who seduces a girl who receives her wages or salary directly or indirectly from him. Though he may not be the master, any one under such circumstances, an agent or clerk, who pays her will be subject to the same penalty. As Judge Gowan observes, the person who pays wages from time to time is more in contact with a female employé than the employer, and it is proposed to extend the section in the manner I have indicated.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I would point out that the word "guardian" in subsection "A" would require explanation and modification, because if you go to 186*a* and 186*b* you will find the word "guardian" includes any society to whom a court or judge may entrust the care of a girl.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are not afraid of the society seducing the girl?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—While I cordially support the insertion of the words "shop or store" in the matter of employment, I expressly and energetically object to the insertion of the words "domestic servant." With that addition the law could not be worked, for obvious reasons. I do not know any person in the world that would not be open to blackmail if you put in the words "domestic servants." It must be obvious to every hon. gentleman that such a charge as seduction cannot be proved, except by circumstantial evidence, to the satisfaction of a jury. Two-thirds of the evidence of such proof must and ever will be opportunity. Now, how could a man, in the clutches of a designing or bad woman, ever prove his innocence if the woman is a domestic servant in his own employ? I would suggest to strike out the words "domestic servant."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is practically equivalent to raising the age of consent to 21 years. You are going to provide for an enumerable class of cases to which this would extend. You might as well instead of stopping at 16 raise the age to 21. It seems to me that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice entirely overlooks the protection which should be given to the male class of the community. They are quite as much entitled in certain cases to protection as the female class. It would be almost impossible for the head of a household who would be charged, say by his domestic servant or an employé in his shop, with any of these offences for blackmailing purposes to prove that the girl was of previously chaste character. The experience of most lawyers is this: and I do not think they my hon. friends will doubt what I am about to say —that invariably a woman however unchaste she may be, will in a court of law swear to her chastity. It is not necessary to point out the influence that a woman of that kind very often has upon a jury and even upon the judge, because a judge is possessed of human sympathy and is appealed to very often by a pathetic tale which is always, in cases of this character, told with telling effect. In my opinion this is placing premium on blackmail—by which means the head of every house is in a position of jeopardy of being removed from his family and placed in penitentiary without being guilty in the least degree. This clause would place him in the hands of an unprincipled employé. I think the clause should be stricken out entirely.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend has no faith in courts or juries. I have. A man may be charged with any sort of offence, and falsely charged, and a plausible case made against him, but it would be an extraordinary thing to say that on that account you should have no law against offences of that kind. Our whole system is founded on the assumption that when witnesses are brought forward in a case and subjected to cross-examination in the presence of a judge and jury, as a rule you can ascertain what the truth is. If they are really perjured you can find that they are perjured. You cannot always do so, but we cannot help that. This matter stands in the same position as any other matter. My hon. friend forgets that in a case of this kind the girl's testimony would have to be corroborated. No verdict would be given on the girl's testimony in such a matter unless it was corroborated to the satisfaction of the court and jury. The judge, who has experience, and the jury, who are presumed to have common sense, will form a fair judgment in such matters. Opportunity there is, of course, in such cases, but where there is positive evidence that the crime was committed, and that positive evidence is corroborated by other evidence to the satisfaction of judge and jury, we ought fairly to assume there is no substantial danger. My hon. friend says the male is to be protected as well as the female. We all know it is the female that is seduced in probably 999 cases out of 1,000.

Several hon. MEMBERS—No, No.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The proportion at all events is very small of the seductions being by the woman—certainly not ten per cent.

Several hon. MEMBERS—No, No.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—From inquiries I have made, and reading about the matter and hearing others speak who have means of judging, I have reason to believe that the percentage of men who are led astray is very small compared with the number of women who are seduced. My hon. friend suggests a case of a man having an employé of unchaste character. People do not employ servants of that character.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They do not employ them in that capacity.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It may occur. Why every assumption should be in favour of the man and against the woman, I do not understand. I do not think it is reasonable. I see no reason why we should not extend this clause to domestic servants.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman says he does not see why every allowance should be made for the man and none for the woman. The fact is we are making no allowance for the man at all—the penalty is all on the man and none on the woman. To illustrate the ease with which those things may happen, a man was released from the penitentiary here not very long ago under the circumstances I am about to relate. He was accused by the girl of having seduced her. The girl had an infant, and I presume the infant would be looked upon as corroborating evidence to the testimony given by the woman. This young man was in comfortable circumstances. He owned a farm. He was sent to the penitentiary for seven years. After he had been in the penitentiary for two years, the girl told her mother that he was not the father of the child at all, but that she had sworn against him because he had a farm and she thought he would marry her and give her a comfortable home. We go far enough to protect women now. If a girl takes care of herself, as she ought to do, she will not get into these difficulties.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—She does not want so much law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is another subject, which, as the hon. gentleman from Richmond says, was considered deliberately and at length by the joint committee of both Houses and by this House, and I see no reason to change the law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend in answer to his statement, which is unwarranted, that I have no confidence in the courts of justice of the country that he has himself shown a want of confidence in many verdicts since his accession to office of Minister of Justice. His intervention by way of clemency in pardoning some criminals, I think, demonstrates that there is a possibility of many men being liable to err in the manner I have pointed out. The hon. gentleman from Halifax has just mentioned an instance. I could mention the instance of a prominent lawyer in Ontario who almost fell a victim to just such a case of blackmail as I stated a few moments ago in which a conspiracy was put up between a servant girl and her paramour to blackmail her employer. This is not an isolated case. It has happened over and over again, and society is being jeopardized by such legislation as this.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend says that I have no confidence in courts and juries, and he referred, in evidence of that, to recommendations for pardon having been made by me against the judgments of courts and juries. I should like to know what cases my hon. friend refers to. I cannot call to mind a single case in which I have done so on the evidence they had before them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am speaking of what has appeared in the public press.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—They are all wrong. They are speaking falsely. I do not remember a single instance in which I have pardoned against the opinion of court and jury, or against the report of the presiding judge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has commuted some sentences, has he not?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is another matter. In murder cases the judge and jury say nothing about the punishment, whether by death or imprisonment for life. To commute in such cases is not going against the judge or jury.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not objecting to that.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend is making a statement on public rumour which is entirely false. In every case that I recollect in which I recommended the commuting of the death sentence, it was on the recommendation of the jury that I did it. There is just one case in which I do not remember at this moment whether there was a recommendation or not, and that was a case in which one of the questions was whether the man was sufficiently in his right mind. There was contradictory evidence before the jury as to what the state of his mind was. They came to the conclusion that he had sufficient mind to be guilty, but I am not sure whether they recommended him to mercy. There being that contradictory evidence, I sent an expert to see him and to form a judgment, and he reported that it was not clear, but his own judgment was that the man was not in a state of mind for which he ought to be punished. I advised the commutation of that sentence, and shortly afterwards the man went perfectly crazy, showing that the expert was right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does not that establish what I say that a man is not always secure in the hands of a jury?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not say that he is secure, because judges may go wrong and juries may go wrong, but I say that the charges against me that I am in the habit of going against judges and juries is utterly false. My hon. friend is misled when he assumes that the newspapers which make that statement are correct. They are not correct. The last case mentioned against me is one in which I recommended the discharge of a prisoner who had committed a very grave offence. He threw vitriol on another. I had no choice there. Through some extraordinary circumstance, neither the magistrate who had convicted the man, nor his counsel, who is a very able man with a large experience in criminal matters, had observed that the case was one of those in which the magistrate had no jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He was placed in the penitentiary nevertheless. It further establishes what I say.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not see how it does. Of course the judge was wrong, but I am now defending myself.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not attacking my hon. friend.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—A judge is not perfect. He cannot remember everything. Counsel sometimes make a mistake, as they did in this case, and when the actual facts came out I had no discretion. The man was entitled to his discharge under habeas corpus, so that the last case that is referred to, and which I see constantly mentioned in the newspapers, was one in which I had no discretion whatever. It was not I that thought of the objection or defect of want of jurisdiction—it was the magistrate and counsel who discovered it, and the magistrate advised that there was no other course open than to discharge the man. It was a crime that I would never have thought of remitting if I could have avoided it. Shortly afterwards the man committed another crime and is now in the penitentiary, for which I am very glad.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress and asked leave to sit again.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if the following announcement, which I find in the Ottawa correspondence of the Toronto Globe, is true :

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

It was announced that the government, in view of the departure of the premier and the difficulty of reconciling speedily the conflicting views as to the form that the questions to be put to the people should take, would not press the prohibition plebiscite bill this session. There is a good deal of opposition in the House to the plebiscite proposal, and the premier has no desire to see it laid before the House and defeated in his absence. When the bill is introduced next session it will be in such form as to meet with the approval of the supporters of the government and a fair fulfilment of the party pledges. Mr. Laurier, it is understood, regretted very much the necessity of abandoning the plebiscite bill, which he regards as the carrying out of a personal pledge. The franchise and superannuation bills are also to be dropped.

The correspondence states that it was the result of a meeting of the party called in caucus. As I have already intimated on two or three occasions, we have to ascertain the policy of the government through the newspapers. The government now appears to be carried on by caucus instead of responsible ministers. Would the hon. gentleman kindly tell us whether this statement is true. There is a good deal of feeling in the country as to whether this law is to be passed this year or not.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I really never heard it suggested before that the proceedings of a caucus were to be matters of public discussion in any branch of parliament. With regard to this matter of the plebiscite, an official statement will be made on the authority of the government at a very early date.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BWELL—Before the prorogation takes place ?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

The Senate then adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, 7th June, 1897.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE QUARANTINE STATION AT WILLIAMS HEAD, B. C.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) moved the following resolution :

Resolved, That the condition of the quarantine station at Williams Head, British Columbia, should be improved without delay, and advantage taken of the latest improvements in sanitation and disinfectants ;

That as much attention as possible should be paid to the comfort of passengers, compatible with the precautions necessary to prevent the spread of disease ;

That the government should impress in the most emphatic manner on steamship companies, plying between Canadian and foreign ports, the necessity and advisability of fumigating and disinfecting steerage passengers and their baggage, at the port of embarkation, as the best and safest way to prevent the spread of disease, as causing the smallest loss of time, so important to passenger steamers, as well as the smallest pecuniary loss.

He said:—My object in bringing up this resolution is to direct attention to quarantine matters in British Columbia, with a view to the adoption of the latest and most approved methods of disinfecting, with the smallest loss of time, and the least inconvenience to passengers and ships. It is not my intention to cast any reflection on the competency or conduct of the quarantine officer in that province, although I do not approve the manner of his appointment, which led to the discharge of a thoroughly efficient man. I know very little about disinfecting myself; it is a scientific process on which there are many conflicting opinions. The subject seems to be yet in the rudimentary state, but the methods adopted in Great Britain are supposed to be the most effective known. With the permission of the House, I will give the opinions of some medical gentlemen of experience on this subject:

Among the passengers on the R.M.S. "Empress" of China on her last trip from the Orient were the following gentlemen: Sydney R. Hodge, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England and Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians in London, who received his medical education at the London Hospital, the largest general hospital in the United Kingdom; W. Millar Wilson, a Batchelor of Medicine and Master of Surgery of the University of Glasgow, who also studied in Glasgow and Vienna; and G. K. Tsao, a graduate of Long College, Brooklyn, New York. These gentlemen consented to an interview on behalf of the Colonist, and in response to questions put to them replied as follows:

The arrangements for disinfecting consist (a) of bathing and (b) arrangements for disinfecting ships and baggage. The latter consists of a large room situated on the quay in which all luggage which would be spoilt by heat is placed and then subject for several hours to the fumes of burning sulphur. Other things are disinfected by dry heat in a special retort in another building. The ship is disinfected by means of large zinc tubes the size of a port hole, which are fitted into one of the port holes and convey the sulphur fumes which are pumped in under pressure by an engine. The arrangement for disinfecting the persons of the cabin passengers consists at present of one shower bath, a tent with no floor to undress in for the gentlemen, and a room for the same purpose for the ladies, and a third room is provided to redress in. The arrangements are very rough, and, we should hope, are merely temporary.

We had to send on shore the night before our bath, a complete change of under linen and a suit of clothes to be disinfected by baking. This was done up in a bag with the number of your berth on it. (No proper arrangements had been made for this, with the result that many things got lost and many perishable things got into the retort and were utterly destroyed.) This bag was supposed to be ready for you, and disinfected, at the bath house the next morning. On arrival, you undressed in the tent, leaving the clothes you had taken off to be collected by an officer for disinfection, and subsequently return to you. then beneath a warm or tepid shower of disinfecting water and then into the room beyond where your clothes were supposed to be. They might or might not be there; if they were, you put them on, if not you hunted around in nature's garb looking for them or waiting till they arrived. Your boxes, etc., had meanwhile been in the sulphur box all night. We were all disinfected twice, once on board and once on shore.

The question of the use of quarantine at all is a debatable one? We have long given it up in England, and yet we have been more successful in keeping out epidemics than any other country, and now it looks as if nations were coming to our way of thinking.

Of course, any mere sprinkling of a disinfectant over a person and his baggage is an obvious farce. If it is possible to keep a disease out by disinfection, it can only be by most thorough, minute and accurate measures. That is to say, every corner of the ship must be thoroughly disinfected, as also the contents of every box and package, and every particle of clothing must, in every portion of it, be exposed to the process.

It is generally conceded by medical authorities that, provided that a person or his clothing has not been in actual contact with a small-pox patient or with any discharge from him, that that person can neither contract nor convey the disease.

To detain and disinfect all ships and passengers without discrimination is practically impossible. It is extremely difficult to tell, in the case of some diseases, when to detain and when to set free. It is also practically impossible to be absolutely sure, too, that there is no flaw or failure in the thorough destruction of all disease germs in a large ship with a large number of passengers. Experience all over the world proves that while quarantine gives the maximum amount of inconvenience to individuals and interference with trade, it is constantly breaking down, and as a public safeguard is of little or no use.

"What do you consider a better way of dealing with infectious cases"?

"(a.) A thorough and complete system of medical supervision at every port.

"(b.) Instant removal on arrival of every person actually sick with, or showing signs of sickening. from any infectious disease.

"(c.) Thorough disinfection, where possible, of clothes of and all articles used by or for the sick person. Where this is not possible, instant destruction of same.

"(d) Thorough disinfection of the part of the ship where patient was if isolated from the rest of the ship, if not, of the whole ship.

"(e) Continuous medical oversight, from point to point of his transit, of every passenger, and immediate compulsory isolation on any sign of disease. This involves the compulsory notification of infectious diseases all over the country. This is, in our opinion, the safest and most reliable method, but involves much trouble and expense to the country. This is, however, more than counterbalanced by: (1), the greater freedom, the trade and travel, (2), the greater safety to the people of the country, seeing that it is less easy to evade such oversight and nothing is left to chance."

"Is this all you have to say?"

"We should like to call attention to the fact that on page 7 of the quarantine regulations scarlet fever and diphtheria, two of the most virulent diseases, are classed amongst the minor quarantinable diseases. Considering how difficult it is to detect these two sometimes, especially the latter, what boundless visions of defective control does this render possible! Further, we wish to say that considering how thoroughly and promptly these smallpox cases on the "Empress" were separated from the rest of the passengers, as one of us knows by personal inspection since arrival in port, we consider the elaborate fumigations and washings and the inconvenient detention to which the passengers were subjected entirely unnecessary."

Dr. Boddington, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, says:

The latest authoritative utterance on the subject of quarantine with which I am acquainted is contained in the Milroy lectures, delivered before the Royal College of Physicians of London, during the present year, by Dr. Collingridge, medical officer of health for the port of London, in which the subject is exhaustively treated. Dr. Collingridge in these lectures says that "The whole history of quarantine is a series of illustrations of its futility," and "an effective quarantine is practically impossible in a commercial country." An abstract of the lectures is published in the British Medical Journal of March 20, 1897, and the same number of that journal has a leading article on the question entitled significantly enough "The Quarantine Superstition." Both the lectures and the leading article are well worthy of perusal. Both tend to show that the doctrine and practice of quarantine are not scientific but are founded on ignorance and reared on folly.

But evidence to the same effect is obtainable close at home. The able chairman of the provincial board of health, a scientific man who keeps abreast of modern knowledge, is entirely of the same way of thinking as the authorities here quoted. In his annual report for the year 1896, Dr. John C. Davie makes use of the following pithy and striking sentences: "The first line of defence, quarantine, is never effectual. It is impossible to make it perfect. Disease always passes through it and eludes it. . . . . Great Britain has for these reasons given up quarantine. The second line of defence, sanitation, is the true and reliable one."

More evidence could be cited to the same effect. So much, however, is perhaps enough for present purposes.

A traveller makes the following remarks:

The excellent arrangements on the "Empress" steamer by which the first-class passengers are separated from the steerage, and the close attention given by the ship's surgeon, ought surely render the risk of the infection spreading to the saloon very remote, if not impossible. And to quarantine all these passengers is on a par with quarantining a whole block in this city because a case of smallpox occurred in a little room in one corner of it. Then, again, why hold this ship and her crew in quarantine for fourteen days after disinfection when she might be allowed without any danger to proceed to Vancouver, unload her cargo and return? In no other part of the world where marine interests are conserved would a ship's cargo be thus needlessly detained and commerce jeopardized. The whole business, whether it be owing to the lack of judgment on the part of the officer in charge of the quarantine or any other cause, indicates that the time is opportune to inquire into the present system of quarantine at Williams Head and to get something better in its place.

In alluding to this subject some years ago, when cholera was in Europe, I pointed out to the House the means adopted by the United States steamship companies—that was to have the steerage passengers and their baggage disinfected at the port of embarkation. There can be no doubt that this would be an excellent plan if it could be carried out, and I would suggest to the government that an effort should be made in that direction. I would also suggest that the Minister of Agriculture should call a committee of experts together, who with the knowledge of what is done in other countries combined with their own experience, might recommend a more effective, and simple method than that now used in Canada. Great complaints have been made of unnecessary detention in quarantine, and of the destruction of clothing. Hon. gentleman will easily understand that clothing subjected to 200 or 300 degrees of heat will have its fibre and strength destroyed. This is a serious matter for some people, especially so when they are not compensated for the loss.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I desire to say a few words with reference to this matter. I must first compliment the hon. gentleman on the ideas which occurred to his mind in bringing forward this subject. I have no doubt they were those of humanity and patriotism. At the same time, I must utterly disclaim any idea of impeaching any official, because we have no statement from that official, and we do not know exactly the means which he employed. It is very likely that any one disturbed or detained there would feel chagrined very much. Doctors are particularly sensitive on that point, and therefore I take their statements cum grano salis. I only wish to say, with reference to this subject of quarantine, that, as you are aware, it is a very old word, employed for centuries, but it by no means indicates that it is the same process as it was years ago. It is constantly changing and the quarantine of to-day is no more to be compared with the quarantine of thirty or forty years ago than any other department of medicine. The great march of science and the progress of medical inquiry have accomplished much. The investigation of medical science has brought to light certain facts connected with it which have worked a complete revolution. There being many ways of carrying this out, the different countries of the world follow different methods. The English system, which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, is generally of what might be called a lenient character towards the ship owners, and very properly so, on account of the enormous advantages which would be risked by enforcement of quarantine after the old method. The idea of burning a ship or cargo, or of keeping people isolated for thirty or forty days, as the name implies, would be perfectly ridiculous and would destroy the commerce of any port. Therefore, the English are more lenient, but they enjoin rigid inspection. The customs officer on entering the ship—I suppose they are the earliest to enter it—report any case to the sanitary inspector and he at once gives it a thorough inspection and separates the unhealthy from the healthy, if there are any affected with disease, and there are only, by the way, a few diseases which are liable to be found in quarantine. Formerly there were three diseases: the plague, yellow fever and Asiatic cholera. The plague has long since died away, we never hear of its being carried to England or any other country in Europe, and yellow fever does not appear often either, nor does Asiatic cholera. The American Sanitary Commission in 1881 added two more diseases to this schedule, viz., small-pox and typhus fever. Then there remained just four of these diseases. As to the general remarks of the hon. gentleman about scarlet fever, that is not liable to be carried on board and not liable to break out, because there are always fairly good doctors on board. They may not be the best in the world, but there are fairly good doctors in ships. Some of them have gone through a course in the old country as well as in Canada, and these men would surely tell a case of diphtheria or a case of scarlet fever, which are easily detected, notwithstanding what these gentlemen say to the contrary. Any one would be very ignorant indeed if he could not tell the difference. In New York, when they were checking the sanitary police, it was stated that some of them did not know scarlet fever from a mosquito bite. There are some men ignorant in this respect, but I would not think the whole of the remarks of these gentlemen should be received as an attack on the officer in charge without his being allowed to put in a defence. I admire the motives which induced the hon. gentleman to introduce the resolution, and which we hope will accomplish a great deal of good. In the first place, we require to have a thoroughly good man, as the matter entrusted to him is so important. What is recommended about sanitation and disinfection should be referred to the doctor in charge. Then, with regard to the improvements in sanitation and disinfection, these are easily accomplished. Any man can readily find out the most improved system. Different countries have different methods, but if you want to take the English system let it be so. Doctors differ and will differ to the end of time as regards the merits of sanitation and the advancement in science. We all know how the Jews of the middle ages, by reason of their cleanliness, were so free from disease that the Christians used to think they poisoned the wells on them; and we all know that London has improved in its sanitation and in its health. Two centuries ago the mortality there was 80 per 1,000, to-day it is only 23; and the British army which had thirty years ago a mortality of 20%, at the present time has not half that. This shows what good can be accomplished by proper sanitation and proper hygiene. Now I do not mean to convey the idea that there should not be any quarantine or any fumigation. The first thing is to isolate any one affected. As the hon. gentleman from British Columbia says, there should be inspection at the point of embarkation, and any surgeon of a ship is derelict in his duty who fails to inspect the passengers when they embark. If any disease should break out at sea the patients should be isolated and when their port of destination is reached, they should be isolated there. I do not say that it is necessary to fumigate them with sulphur; applying a certain degree of heat up to the boiling point, or beyond the boiling point, for dry heat is sufficient to destroy most of the germs, and thus they should be disinfected thoroughly. The quarantine officer in British Columbia may have thought that sulphur was better and perhaps he gave the sulphur and the heat too, thinking it was so much the better. I cordially agree with the resolutions that are put forward here, and I hope that they will be productive of benefit, and will lead to the fact of our having the best system of quarantine that can be established. It does not require such a great deal of money. I understand the quarantine system at Halifax is very good. I know that more than one epidemic has been prevented by passing ships being brought into Halifax before they crossed the Atlantic. I hope, therefore, the resolution will carry without anything offensive being done to the gentleman in charge of quarantine in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.) It is quite unnecessary for me to add to anything which has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I am glad my hon. colleague has brought this matter up and has shown the necessity of the greatest care possible being taken to exclude small pox, yellow fever, cholera and other diseases from entering at the western gate of the Dominion. There can be no question in my mind that, in order to exclude those diseases, it should be made compulsory on the steamship companies to not only fumigate passengers, but to have them also vaccinated before they are taken on ship board in China and Japan. The trip from Japan to Victoria takes 12 to 14 days; from Hong Kong to Victoria about two and a-half or three weeks, so that if passengers are not thoroughly disinfected and vaccinated before they leave port, if they carry any germs of disease they will certainly break out before they arrive at Victoria. The government should impress upon the steamship companies the necessity of having these regulations attended to before they take the lower class of Japanese and Chinese on shipboard. I feel confident that Dr. Watt, the present quarantine officer, did everything he possibly could to make things comfortable for the passengers, consistent with safety and exclusion of disease from the shores of British Columbia. No doubt he had before his mind the condition of affairs that existed in Victoria three or four years ago, when small-pox was imported from Japan and China and that city was quarantined. You could not get into or out of Victoria for nearly six weeks, and the consequence was that a great number of business men were ruined, some 75 or 80 deaths took place, and the city was put to the expense of nearly $100,000. I have no doubt, from that experience, that Dr. Watt was made a little more careful than he otherwise would have been, and justly so, and instead of censuring the present health officer for endeavouring in every way he could to prevent small-pox entering our Dominion, he should be encouraged in every way by the government. I know that my hon. colleague, who has brought this matter before the House, does not for a moment intimate but what Dr. Watt has done his duty in the matter. I hope these points that my hon. colleague and the hon. gentleman from Kingston have called attention to will not be overlooked by the government, and that they will take every precaution possible to prevent diseases from being carried on ship board, before passengers leave Asiatic countries for our ports.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to the resolution being adopted by the House. I shall be glad to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the facts which have been brought to our notice by the hon. Senator from Victoria, and to the valuable observations made by the hon. Senators from Kingston and New Westminster. I can quite appreciate the indignation shown by the first class passengers, more particularly the medical men, at being detained at Victoria. But it must be remembered that the small-pox epidemic in Victoria a few years ago, to which the hon. gentleman from New Westminster has called attention, was of a very serious character. It was within the memory of the residents of Victoria that only a short time before, in consequence of the introduction of small-pox into the city of Victoria, very serious consequences followed, and that disease especially is of such a loathsome character that it is perfectly natural that everybody should stand aghast at the idea of contamination being introduced into the community, and due allowance should be made for the extra precaution recently taken. The subject is mentioned in the report of the General Superintendent of Canadian quarantines, from which I shall read the following extract:

British Columbia, as far as I can ascertain, does not appear to have suffered from disease traceable to baggage from abroad. The outbreaks of small-pox seem to have sprung from actual cases arriving. A repetition of such a disaster may—in my opinion—be guarded against more effectually by other means than by a routine disinfection of baggage. Among such means I may mention vaccination at the port of departure in the Orient of all passengers embarking for Canada; daily medical inspections on shipboard; prompt and efficient isolation on the vessel of any case of declared, threatening, or even doubtful, disease; careful inspection, etc., by the quarantine officers at our ports of arrival; and the protection of the people of British Columbia by such general vaccination as may make them secure and indifferent even if small-pox should slip in.

Theoretically it would be very desirable to sterilize all baggage arriving in Canada. Indeed, as I stated in my last annual report, in my opinion the ideal protection of Canada on the Pacific side would be similar to that I have so often dwelt on for the Atlantic side, namely: medical officers responsible to our government at the ports of departure in the Orient, and inspection, vaccination, and the disinfection of luggage and effects before sailing.

Practically, however, the difficulties in enforcing a routine disinfection of all luggage at our ports of arrival, except during times of threatening epidemics, seem so great as to be at present insuperable.

There is a considerable expenditure in the direction of making the improvements mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has brought the matter to the attention of the House. Here are some of them:—

Improvements at Williams Head Quarantine Station, ordered by the Minister of Agriculture in March last, at a total cost of about $10,000:—

Hydrochloric tank.
Open shed on wharf,
Lining steam chamber of disinfecting house, &c.,
Two trolley cars.
Three-way 4-inch cock and 30 feet 4-inch wrought iron pipe to shut off vacuum pump from steam chamber,
Six large lanterns or headlights,
Partitioning boiler room, as shown on tracing,
Needle and shower baths for saloon and Chinese and Japanese passengers, &c.,
Door to cut off administration section from the corridors of the hospital,
Two large sinks,
Improvements to telephone service,
Tele-thermometer,
Quarters for crew, &c.,
One 10,000 gallons New York filter,
Thirty-two galvanized iron beds, double,
Furniture for dining room, and 32 state-rooms in saloon building.

Other improvements are still under consideration and now nearly completed. Every advantage is taken of the latest improvements in sanitation and disinfection. Every attention possible is being paid to the comfort of passengers, and every precaution is being taken to prevent the spread of disease. The question of disinfecting passengers' baggage at the port of embarkation has not been overlooked by the government, as will be seen by reference to the report of the general superintendent of quarantines in the last annual report of the Minister of Agriculture. The government is informed by the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company that on their steamers plying on the Pacific during any voyage the surgeon at intervals disinfects all steerage quarters and vaccinates every passenger and member of the crew who is not able to show a satisfactory mark. As far back as 1893 arrangements were made by the late superintendent of quarantines in British Columbia with both the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company and the Northern Pacific Steamship Company that vaccination of all Chinese and Japanese immigrants should be made prior to embarkation, and these companies have taken great pains and used every effort to carry out this agreement. If anything further can be done I am quite sure the department will be prepared to take suggestions, and if approved of, will be glad to have them carried out.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am very glad to hear the statement of the hon. Secretary of State. It shows that the government are fully alive to the necessity of doing the proper thing to put the quarantine in proper order. I want to correct a wrong impression that seems to be in the mind of my hon. friend from Kingston. There was no charge made by the doctors against the quarantine officer. They just mentioned what he did. They mentioned the inconvenience.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Was there not a charge by implication?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Not at all. Those doctors did not give an opinion about scarlet fever either:

THE DISMISSAL OF NAPOLEON DUGAL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Was Mr. Napoléon Dugal on the 23rd of June, 1896, postmaster at Beaubien, in the county of Montmagny?
2. Has he been since that date discharged from his work by the present administration?
3. When, why, and upon whose complaint?
4. What is the nature of the charge brought against him?
5. Has the charge been proved?
6. What is the nature of the proof?
7. If no proof exists, has the accuser at least a diploma of infallibility? Granted by whom?
8. Has the accused been made aware officially of the charge brought against him, and has he had an opportunity to refute it.
9. What was his reply?
10. Has the Post Office Inspector been required to hold an inquiry and to make a report?
11. Has an inquiry taken place, and what is the report of the officer making the inquiry?
12. If the person dismissed protests his innocence and completely denies the truth of the accusation, is it the intention of the government to grant an inquiry or to refuse all justice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—1. Mr. Napoléon Dugal was postmaster at Beaubien (the name of the office has since been changed to Cap St. Ignace Station) on the date mentioned. 2. He has been dismissed since that date. 3. On the 15th December last, for offensive political partisanship, on representations of Mr. P. A. Choquette, M.P. 4. See answer to No. 3. 5 and 6. The Postmaster General considered the statement made to him sufficient cause for action. 8, 9, 10 and 11. The postmaster was not called upon to reply to the accusation, nor was any inquiry held or report made by the post office inspector. 12. The government does not intend to reopen the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. Secretary of State allow me to ask for a few explanations of the answer he gave me last Friday? There is something in the reply that I cannot understand. I asked him on Friday if the Laurier-Greenway compromise to which the governments of the Dominion and of Manitoba came was concluded "with the express intention that it should be subsequently modified in such a manner as to render complete justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba by remedying all their grievances." The answer was "no." If there was no modification understood or intended, my second question was not needed. It read:

What are the modifications promised by the government of Manitoba and accepted by the government of the Dominion as the consideration of its acceptance of the actual compromise?

The answer to that question, I think, as a matter of consequence, should have been No equally, but the answer to this second question is "the Laurier-Greenway conference has not been modified or altered, and that agreement has not been submitted with modifications."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not understand the meaning of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question was:

Was the Laurier-Greenway compromise, to which the governments of the Dominion and of Manitoba came, concluded with the express intention that it should be subsequently modified in such a manner as to render complete justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba by remedying all their grievances, etc.

The answer to that was "No." There is no doubt about that at all. Then "what are the modifications"? Of course if there were no modifications promised as a natural consequence to the inquiries given, the answer would be that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The answer is, the Laurier-Greenway conference has not been modified or altered.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Compromise is the word used in the address. There was only one agreement. The terms of that agreement were published. I think they were brought down the first day of the session, and they have undergone no change. I suppose the hon. gentleman is pointing to the fact that at the banquet held in Montreal, Mr. Greenway said that in the carrying out of that agreement he would be very glad to consider any substantial grievances that the Roman Catholic minority had. That is a matter which does not rest with this government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My question was not if there were any modifications to the agreement, but if it was understood that modifications would be made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was not so understood at the time the agreement was made. What was believed was that it would be fairly and liberally interpreted. In a matter of that kind the hon. gentleman must know that that mode of administration has a great deal to do with whether a proposition of any kind can be made acceptable or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand the hon. minister to say that no modifications were promised.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

THE ST. BONIFACE ELECTION CASE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call the attention of members of the government to an extract which I shall read from the Montreal Gazette of June 5th, and which I may say I find substantially the same in other papers :

ST. BONIFACE, MAN., 5th June.—In the St. Bonifice election petition case, discussed yesterday, it will be remembered that when the case came before the Hon. Mr. Justice Killam, on April 29, for trial of the preliminary objection filed by Mr. Lauzon, against the prosecutors of the petition it was proved that both petitioners, Roy and Berthiaume, had been guilty of corrupt acts. Roy admitted he had been promised money for driving electioneers to the polls by Mr. Prendergast, the present judge. The chairman of Mr. Bertrand's committee stated that he requested Mr. Prendergast on the day following the election to pay him, when Mr. Prendergast gave him an order on Mr. J. A. Richard for the amount, which was paid by Mr. Richard. The other petitioner, Berthiaume, who supported Mr. Lauzon, in the election the year before, admitted that about a week before the election that Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast had promised to endeavour to procure him an office from the Dominion Government and he worked hard to secure Mr. Bertrand's election during the last week before the election. When this startling evidence was given Mr. Howell, counsel for the petitioners, applied for an adjournment to enable him to put Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Richard in the witness box, which was granted. Yesterday morning when the trial was resumed Mr. Howell stated to the court that in view of the evidence given at the previous hearing, he was unable to ask that the preliminary objections should be over-ruled. Judgment according was given dismissing the petition.

I think it is one of the evils of our present system that men have, as a matter of necessity, to be taken, as it were, red-handed from political contests and placed upon the bench. Experience, however, has not demonstrated that great evils have resulted from that, and some of our very best judges have been warm politicians up to the time they reached the bench, but it is not at all desirable, in the interest of justice in this country, that men should be appointed to the bench who have been made the objects of very strong political or government influence under the law in connection with the very office. It appears very evident that this gentleman, Mr. Prendergast, was influenced to change his views on a great public question owing to his getting an appointment on the bench. That in itself would be bad enough, but when it comes to this, that a lawyer has been appointed to an important judicial position in this country. who has come right from the heat of political contest, not red-handed merely, but with his hands soiled by acts of corruption, as in this case—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Order ! Order ! I think this is highly improper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am now speaking of what I think is almost a public scandal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I rise to a question of order. There is nothing before the chair. A great deal of liberty and latitude are always allowed gentlemen in this chamber, but my hon. friend will recollect that this is a matter arising out of the local election in the province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman has drawn into it the name of a judge who has been appointed. We are utterly ignorant of the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, and it does seem unfair to attack a judge on a newspaper report. I appeal to the hon. gentleman's sense of what is right. It is a local matter up in Winnipeg, of which we cannot know anything. I never heard of it, except through the Montreal Gazette.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is the government we are wanting to reach. We are not dealing with a local matter, except in as far as that local matter trenches upon the administration of justice in the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend is assuming that to be so on a newspaper statement of which he has given no notice to enable us to look into the facts. The statement may be false from beginning to end. It seems monstrous that a judge should be charged in this way without an opportunity for us to look into the case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then I shall be happy to put a notice on the order paper, and bring it up in the regular way.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—If this is going to come up, I think we will have more judges than one, because I can look back at other cases of the kind. Under those circumstances, we had better let the dead past lie.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to be a qualification for office.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT ACT.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved the second reading of Bill (M) "An Act to amend the Companies Act." He said:—The object of this bill is to give larger powers of borrowing to companies chartered under the Dominion law. A company so chartered is limited in regard to borrowing money to two-thirds, I think it is, of the capital. The effect of that is found by business men to be exceedingly embarrassing and not at all in the interests of the country. So that it is proposed to make this provision, that the limitations and restrictions of the borrowing powers of the company shall not apply or include moneys borrowed by the company on bills of exchange or promissory notes drawn, made, accepted or endorsed by the company. The Ontario legislature has been dealing with this subject, and has given considerably larger powers of borrowing than it is proposed to give by this bill. This bill has been declared satisfactory by business men, although it does not go as far as some have suggested. There are two classes of persons who, I suppose, are in view in making restrictions of this kind. One is the shareholders in the company and the other is the men who may lend money to the company. As far as the shareholders are concerned, their interest is sufficiently provided for by other provisions of the law. Then, in regard to those who may lend money to the company,—and it is their interest I suppose that is specially in view in the case of a provision of this kind—the idea is, and I quite concur in it, that we may safely leave the matter to those who lend the money. They are chiefly banks, and we may assume that they look into the standing of the company to ascertain if they are responsible for what they receive. The mere fact of a company having $100,000 of paid up capital does not show that it is a solvent company. Their stock may be at a large discount. Their credit may be bad, and there may be reasons for its being bad. On the other hand, a company may have a large amount of assets. They may have a good deal of money and their capital may be worth four times its nominal amount, and yet the borrowing power of those two companies is precisely the same. In the case of individuals, those having dealings with them have to consider whether the individual is a responsible person or not, and so it must be in the case of a company. It is no criterion of the responsibility of a company that a certain amount of its stock is paid up. A variety of things must be considered. Then again it is only the borrowing powers of these companies that are restricted. The power of going into debt for very many things is not restricted at all, and really there is more reason for a restriction of that kind than there is for a restriction in regard to the borrowing power. The banks I believe are quite unanimous in regard to the embarrassing character of the present law of the Dominion on that subject, and as to its being useless for practical purposes. The commercial community generally are of the same view, and in all the correspondence which has taken place, I have not been able to discover that any different view is entertained. The matter has been up before the Ontario legislature for two successive sessions, and on each of those occasions the borrowiug powers of these companies have in several instances been further enlarged until now it is far beyond what the bill now under discussion provides for. So unsatisfactory is the Dominion law on the subject that companies which had Dominion charters, had abandoned them and taken charters under the Ontario law. There are other companies which have Dominion charters, and who have got an Ontario charter also, and so I think we are justified in adopting substantially the amendment proposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask if the Ontario Act places no restriction on the borrowing powers of the company? I may say that the effect of this Act will be to give unlimited power to incorporated companies to borrow money on the credit of the company, and I would further ask the Minister of Justice if it will be hereafter the policy of the government to incorporate financial companies of this character without placing any restrictions upon them. It seems to me it would be idle to place a restriction upon the borrowing powers of any company, say a railway company or any other commercial company, under a special charter if, under the General Companies Act, you are going to give unlimited power to companies to borrow. An individual usually, when borrowing, is practically limited to the extent of the capital he may have placed in his business. I see no good purpose that can be served by giving to a corporation, incorporated under the sanction of the government, unlimited powers to borrow money. The representations made by companies to the public are of a different character, and are generally accepted more readily than those by individuals, and it seems to me the number of companies now in process of liquidation is a very good reason why the government should give very close scrutiny to such an enlarged power as is sought for under this Act.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I found no difference of opinion amongst business men in regard to the enlargement of these powers and some of the reasons I have stated. My hon. friend asks whether the Ontario Act does not provide some restriction. I have a copy of the clause in the last Ontario Act on the subject. It provides that if authorized by by-law asked by the directors and sanctioned by not less than two-thirds in value of the shareholders, they can borrow money on the credit of the company, within any limit sanctioned by the vote of the shareholders? They have also power to hypothecate or pledge the property and rights of the company. One of the absurdities which are pointed out as the result of the present Act is this; say a company deals in grain. They have a very large quantity of grain—perhaps four or five times the amount of grain that their paid up stock amounts to. They want money from the bank upon the credit of that grain and they cannot get it as the law stands now if their charter is under Dominion law. It does seem that one cannot defend that state of things.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with my hon. friend that if such a company has an amount of property corresponding to the amount it wishes to borrow, then it would be in the interest of the public to give it ample borrowing powers, but what I do object to is that unlimited borrowing powers should be given to a company to borrow all the money they choose to borrow without having any property out of which that could be realized.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Will the bank lend it? If any improvement can be made in the provisions of the bill, I shall be extremely glad to consider it. The bill is now in the form in which business people seem to desire it. The point is to increase the power of borrowing in some fashion and to some extent. If the Senate adopt the second reading to-day, it will be understood that they only assent to it to the extent of approving the principle of extending the borrowing power by some method.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a point that is probably worthy of consideration in connection with this subject. Clause 37 limits the borrowing power. The latter paragraph is this: "But the limitation made by this section shall not apply to commercial paper discounted by the company." This has been held, I believe, to limit it to the paper of a third party.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And here you propose to give them unlimited power in discounting their own paper.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If a bank chooses to accept it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it not intended to give unlimited power to all companies organized under the Companies Act to borrow without any regard whatever to the securities which they may have to offer, and leave it exclusively with the banks to see to the nature of their securities? How would it affect the shareholders of such a company if they had a reckless board of directors, who could go on the market, or to the banks, and obtain a speculative credit, if I may use the term, far beyond the assets of the company? For instance, shareholders subscribe a certain amount of stock, and their liabilities cease when it is paid up. Then they do what the hon. Minister of Justice intimated a few minutes ago they might do, go and purchase large quantities of grain, say, for instance, two or three millions of bushels, and the price falls in the meantime. The only security they would have would be the grain, borrowed, I suppose, on the warehouse receipts. It might realize a sufficient sum under the circumstances to repay the bank, but eventually would ruin the company and ruin the shareholders. However, the matter can be more fully discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend the wisdom of referring this bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It seems to me it can be discussed in that committee at much greater advantage than in the whole House.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think we can discuss it better here. The session is so far advanced that if this goes to any other committee than a Committee of the Whole we cannot get it through. I should prefer to have it go to a Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the whole consideration of Bill (H) "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Section 186B of this bill is as follows:

186B. In order to prove the age of a girl or child for the purposes of sections 183, 186, 210, 282, 283, 284 and 284A, the following shall be sufficient primâ facie evidence:

(a.) Any entry or record by an incorporated society or its officers having had the control or care of the girl at or about the time of the girl being brought to Canada, if such entry or record has been made before the alleged offence was committed.

(b.) In the absence of other evidence, the judge or jury before whom an indictment for the offence is tried, or the justice before whom a preliminary inquiry thereinto is held, may infer the age from the appearance of the girl.

With regard to the age of the girl, in most of these cases, there is great difficulty in proving the age, and thereby grave offences receive no punishment at all, and the Act becomes useless. I hear of that from various quarters from persons who have endeavoured to enforce these laws. When these societies take charge of girls, they try to ascertain their ages, and having satisfied themselves, they make an entry accordingly. There is no practical difficulty whatever in adopting the age which societies have in their records. Then paragraph (b) provides the judge and jury may infer the age from the appearance of the girl. In certain cases this is found to be the only way in which, so far as any one can suggest, it is possible to meet the case. Very often the girls themselves do not know their own ages, and there is no harm in allowing the judge and jury to infer the age from the appearance of the girl. It is suggested—and on this point I have no strong opinion—that it would be better to leave this to the judge alone, without a jury.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think any attempt to do away with trial by jury in those cases will not be advantageous. The word "jury" had better be there.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Very well; I will leave the words "or jury."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope I shall not be thought captious in taking objection to many of the proposed amendments by the Minister of Justice to the Criminal Code. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that the public have been very much surprised at the amendments proposed to be introduced by this bill. Many of them are extremely mischievous, and I think none of them more so than the one now under consideration. I can scarcely think my hon. friend is sincere in strongly urging this amendment on the House. It does violence to the established principles of evidence. It attacks the very security on which we rest for the trial of criminal cases either by the judge or judge and jury, and it seems to me to introduce an innovation for which my hon. friend can find no analogy or warrant whatsoever. Will the hon. gentleman just consider for a moment some of the innovations which these amendments propose to introduce into the law of evidence. We have always congratulated ourselves upon the security of trial, particularly under our system of English jurisprudence. The law of evidence by which that security is afforded to the subject has been the result of many centuries of growth. It has been transmitted from the common law down to our statute law, and thus has been built up since time immemorial. Now, during the many centuries that the principles of evidence have been built up under our system of law, my hon. friend, either under the common law or in the statute law, will not find anything analogous to the proposal which he has introduced here. It proposes to place English waifs in a position by which they can establish crime against the accused regardless of the law of evidence as at present it applies to Canadian girls. It proposes that when these waifs are brought from England and landed on our shore those who may be in charge of them will enter the age of those girls in the books of an incorporated company, books which are usually kept in anything but a systematic way. Should an entry in books which are kept without accuracy or knowledge and in which you cannot place any degree of reliance, be considered sufficient to establish crime against one on his trial on such a serious charge? In a case where a person is accused of having illicit connection with a girl born in Canada, the very best evidence would have to be produced. Her age would have to be proved beyond peradventure. The records of her birth and baptism as well as the evidence of the parents would have to be produced, and no scintilla of doubt would be permitted to rest in such a case on the mind of the court. Now, let us look on the other hand at the radical change which it is proposed to make in the law in regard to a charge of a most serious character, which may be brought against any individual in the community—namely, that with regard to any girl brought out by a society, taken from the streets of London, probably as unchaste as she can be —taken from the gutters of the streets there and placed in Canada in a better position of protection than the children of citizens of this country—in such a case all that is necessary to be done in case an accused person is being tried for having illicit connection with that girl is the production of the books of the society in this country where, by some philanthropic individual, an entry has been made in a book of the age of this girl. How is that knowledge of the age of the girl derived? It will be purely guess work. It is simply setting up judgment against knowledge. It is altogether unlikely that the age of that child will be thus inquired into. If it cannot be ascertained, those who may have charge of this batch of girls brought to this country will approximate the ages. I presume this will be done without any close inquiry, without having made any careful investigation, without taking into consideration that the liberty of a man may be in jeopardy, and will enter in those books the probable age of those girls and that book will be produced in court and will be admissible as evidence. As my hon. friend very well knows, there is no analogy which he can mention by which we would be warranted in departing so radically from the law of evidence as to introduce this innovation. It depends on the judgment simply of persons in charge of those girls as to the age which shall be entered up in those books. Therefore, it is worse than hearsay evidence. It is simply the judgment which may be exercised by an individual who may not have the slightest experience in arriving at a proper conclusion as to the question of age. It must be accepted as the very best possible evidence for the purpose of establishing a crime. On the other hand, if it is to be the result of knowledge that is to be entered up in that book, then the very best evidence should be adduced, and the source of the knowledge from which the entry is made should be produced in the court to establish the crime of the accused. Furthermore, I would point out to to my hon. friend this anomaly—legal gentlemen here will appreciate the seriousness of it—my hon. friend purposes to make this evidence and there is no way of rebutting that evidence except under the present law of evidence. If my hon. friend had gone sufficiently far and said "I will provide legislation of equally loose character by which the age may be rebutted, there might be some justification for it." But you produce a book, and although it is quite apparent to the judge and jury that the girl may be beyond the age of consent, there is no way to rebut that evidence, because my hon. friend says it is evidence, and in the face of one of those girls coming from England, it is utterly impossible to rebut that evidence, because she is practically a foreigner when she comes to this country. No one may know whence she has come or whither she goes, and yet the court by statute is bound to accept as conclusive evidence something which would not under circumstances be admitted as evidence. For instance, if she were born in Canada, there would be a possibility of the defence rebutting that evidence, but in this case you cannot rebut it, because you have made it evidence, and all the sources from which it has come are so far removed from us that it is utterly impossible to attack it. In the next case, under subsection B, I notice it is intended to leave the question of age to the judge and jury. That is not so mischievous as the other. If my hon. friend, for the purpose of attaining the object which he had in view, had provided that the evidence of medical men should be accepted for the purpose of establishing the age of the girl, he might be able to justify that particular departure from the well known rules of evidence. Then there would be a possibility of rebutting that evidence. There would be a possibility of taking the evidence given by medical men, and placing other medical evidence on the other side, but in this case my hon. friend precludes all possibility of that being done. I would thus point out to him the danger which faces us in placing legislation of this kind upon the statute-book. I would suggest to my hon. friend that that clause be stricken out, or that subsection A be struck out, and that a clause be put in providing that the evidence of medical men should be adducible as prima facie evidence of the age of the girl. But I think, on the whole, it had better be struck out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a good deal of force in the contention of the hon. member from Calgary, but I do not feel that there is enough force in it to induce me to vote with him against the clause. In the first place, the hon. gentleman will observe that it is provided in paragraph A that the entry or record must be made before the alleged offence is committed. The exact age of the child in this case is not a matter of the utmost consequence. The object of the law is to protect a child who is not old enough to protect herself, and if the child happens to be younger in appearance and otherwise than she is actually, if she happens to be four or five months older than she appears, I do not think that it is sufficient reason for removing the protection of the law from her; and, as the hon. leader of the House pointed out, in the case of those girls who come from England, it is very frequently impossible to secure any entry from the baptismal registers in the old country. I do not think that any serious abuse is likely to arise under this paragraph A. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that this evidence alone should not be sufficient to convict. After the hon. Minister of Justice reads over paragraph B carefully he will see that it requires to be redrafted. The beginning of the clause before us is that:

> In order to prove the age of a girl or child for the purpose of section so and so, the following shall be sufficient primâ facie evidence.

Now paragraph B does not grammatically agree with that. It should say that the inference of the judge and jury or of the justice shall be primâ facie evidence—not go on to tell what the judge and jury may do. I think the hon. gentleman will see that the language is not harmonious in its construction. This paragraph B needs to be somewhat altered in order to make its meaning more clear, and I hope the Minister of Justice may see his way to providing that if there is evidence such as described in B, that evidence shall be corroborated in some way by other evidence, and the hon. gentleman from Calgary has just indicated the kind of evidence which would be reasonable evidence for corroboration—the evidence of medical men. If the entry by the incorporated society and the judge or jury, or the magistrate before whom the girl is brought, agree, one evidence might be looked upon as corroborating the other, but I do not think either kind of evidence—either that set out in paragraph A or that set out in paragraph B,—should alone and without any corroboration whatever be deemed sufficient to justify a conviction.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend will see that he would leave wholly unprovided for those cases in which there can be no positive evidence of the child's age. I put in that second clause expressly to meet that class of cases where there could be no other evidence of age, and the offender would go unpunished just because of the difficulty in proving the exact age. I think it would be a perfectly safe thing to say that a judge or jury may, if they choose—I do not compel them to do it—infer the age from the appearance of the girl or child. As to the medical men being called in to express their opinion, I do not know that they are more competent to judge of the age of the girls than the rest of us. I do not see any obscurity in that subsection. My hon. friend made the objection that it was somewhat obscure. I do not see the obscurity of it. I do not know by what language I could make it more smooth. I would adopt any smoother language if I could find it. Now, when we say prima facie evidence, it means that the question is open to other evidence as well. I think the two clauses may be safely passed in their present form.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does that mean by an incorporated society in England or in Canada?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It might be either.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So far as I can learn, no country has ever gone to the extent which is proposed here. We find under the New York Penal Code there is a provision that medical men may be called in to determine the age of a girl, where better evidence is not forthcoming, but I enter my emphatic protest against going to the extent to which this provides. I say it is entirely unwarranted. It would jeopardize the liberty of the subject, and would do violence to the rules of evidence in a manner which should not be countenanced for a moment, and particularly as rebuttal evidence would be practically excluded by the operation of such a law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no question as to the difficulty of proving the age of the waifs picked up in the old country. Those who have visited these homes in the old country, are aware of that fact. They are thrown upon the world, perhaps without any parents, stunted in growth from the manner in which they have been living, sleeping about the streets, so that so far as age is concerned it is a matter utterly impossible to know, and you can only judge from the size or appearance of the child. I speak from experience, having visited these homes in London, and saw the character of the children that have been brought there, and their appearance when they are first picked off the streets and placed in these homes by charitable and philanthropic people. They are brought to Canada after being detained in these homes for some time, in order to a certain extent to ascertain what the peculiar temperament of each child is, and whether there is any possibility of reformation and doing them good by sending them away. I look upon this power given to judge or jury to convict upon mere suspicion of a child's age, as extremely dangerous to the liberty of the subject, and I certainly should, if it were put to a vote, record my vote to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is not this principle applied to other crimes as well as to this particular crime? There are numerous cases in our courts where we observe an infirmity of evidence, and where, if less strict rules of evidence were applied, a conviction could be secured. There are innumerable cases of larceny where we have a moral conviction that the accused stole the goods, yet you do not ask for one moment to relax the principles of evidence in regard to larceny, or a dozen other crimes, and why should special legislation be passed to protect this particular class of girls? These children come here and are surrounded by better en vironment than in England. They are in some cases picked up from the gutters in England, where they are rendered subject to all kinds of vice and surrounded by the most vicious influences, and are brought to this country and we are asked, forsooth, to build a barricade of law round these children to protect them better than we protect our own children. We are asked to violate the best rules of evidence for the purpose of establishing a case against an accused, possibly one to levy blackmail against a subject of Canada, and that special protection should be given to this class of children. I do protest most emphatically against it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I considered this clause as one which would be passed without any difficulty whatever. I had no idea that such indignation would be excited as my hon. friend has expressed. My hon. friend speaks of the proposed provision as entirely new and for that reason objects to it, but we are constantly amending the law as difficulties occur. We ought to amend the law. A great deal of injustice would be done if we failed to amend the law when it is found defective in regard to any matter. We are bound to amend it, and are constantly doing it. There are in the law provisions in regard to the age where apparent age is spoken of and recognized as all that is necessary to be accepted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not the criminal law.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The law should provide as far as possible for every evil. My hon. friend speaks of these children as having been taken from the gutters, as being surrounded with vice and probably being themselves vicious. My hon. friend has spoken far too strongly about that for several reasons, and one is that the percentage of the girls brought out by these societies who go wrong afterwards is extremely small. Another reason is that these societies do not send out children whom they believe to be bad. They keep them for whatever time is necessary in order to improve their disposition and so on, if they are not good when they take them up, in order to make them fit to be respectable girls in the new country to which they are sent. I think my hon. friend has done wrong to those poor girls in the way he has spoken about them. When they come here we receive them and we are bound to protect them. My hon. friend says that we are doing more for these children than we are doing for our own girls, that we are giving them more protection than our own girls. This subsection will apply to our own girls quite as well as to these children that come to the country. It would not apply to this class more than the other. With regard to the first section, the reason we do not need any protection that I know of beyond what we have now in regard to our own girls in general, is because there is almost sure to be some record of the age of those who are born here. But then I do not require a record. If you can prove the age in any other way, I do not suggest that you should insist upon a record in the case of our own girls. I think it of great importance that there should be ample protection to young girls, whether born here or in any other country, and this clause was drawn with that view. I hope the committee will not reject the proposed provision because it has been pointed out to me very earnestly, by those who have been giving attention to this subject, that some such provision is absolutely necessary, that the offence constantly goes unpunished because there is no evidence that can be given, under the present law, of the age of the girl, and thereby offenders constantly escape. We are bound to look after that, and make the best provision we can to meet the case, and the records by the societies are helpful. There is no reason why they should not be true records. The managers are intelligent people—all I have ever had to do with, and the ages of some of the girls—I do not know how large a proportion of them—are reported to them when they are brought out here. When the question is merely in regard to age, I think that my hon. friend's objections are not applicable at all, and ought not to weigh with us. An offence may be committed. It may depend upon a year or two of age what the offence may be, and since the present law does not afford us any means of proving what it is, our duty is to find some other means. These children should be protected, and by the best means our ingenuity may suggest.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says this clause is in his opinion absolutely necessary. Has he any information which he would give the House as to the extent of these offences against this class of female children—how far they have been committed in Canada?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There are no statistics on the subject.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My own recollection bears out one case that got into the newspapers, of a girl of this class having been seduced by her guardian at the place where she was located by the society. I I know there are a great number of these people being brought into this country. I remember crossing the Atlantic on a steamer where there were 700 on board; and I know this work of bringing these children into Canada has been going on for a long time and to prove the necessity of this clause, it must be shown that abuses have arisen. I feel with my hon. friend from Calgary that this is a very grave step we are taking in altering the law of evidence. The circumstances must be very serious indeed that would call for such a serious departure from the established law of evidence. My hon. friend should be able to furnish us with facts in order to ascertain whether this evil is a serious and widespread one: because, if that fact is established, it might justify us in passing this clause, and might also be held as a reflection upon the societies that are bringing out these children, that they are not exercising sufficient care as to the class of people into whose hands they are putting them. But it is certainly due to us that we should know to what extent this evil has arisen under this system of bringing these poor children to our country.

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—Having been associated with one of these homes for the last fifteen years, I think I can speak with some knowledge of the effect of bringing young girls into this country, being, as they are, while with the family who have engaged them without protection or care beyond what is supposed to be the protection and care of the family with whom they are left, who, in many cases, consider only the question of how much of labour time they can secure with the least compensation. Several cases of seduction have come under my notice, and in no instance have we been successful in bringing the criminal to justice; therefore, I can quite appreciate the necessity of very strong laws to protect this particular class of immigrants. During this period of upwards of 15 years we have had, I fancy, an average of 30 to 40 young girls, and perhaps from 100 to 150 boys—something like that—and while we generally have had little difficulty with the boys, quite often there have been cases of the character referred to by the Minister of Justice, where young girls away from home, from every tie and every affection to guide and control them, have been brought too readily under the influence of their temporary guardian, and they come to grief, and in almost every such case we have failed to bring the criminal to justice.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Have you any statistics, or do you know of any that are published?

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—Memory fails me to find one case in which we have brought the criminal to justice. Our rule has invariably been to require the parties who apply for children to send letters of recommendation from the pastor of the church with which they are associated, recommending them to be people of the best possible character; and yet, within ten miles of this city, we had a case where the hired man and a young girl of 13 or 14 years occupied the same bed-room, with simply a sheet around the bed to protect her from view. He was a hired man, and of the usual class of such men. You can naturally conclude what will be the result.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think you had better put a clause in to cover that.

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—We should have something more than a sheet to cover that. She was very indignant when, in a letter dictated by myself, I called her attention to this extraordinary conduct, and asked her the question, Would she place her own child in the same room with the hired man? I asked the question with reference to her letter of recommendation, and so on, and the answer I received led me to find the woman had most indifferent views of her responsibility.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How does that clause protect such cases?

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—The more severely you define the position of the girl, that she is an orphan and dependent, and having no friend in the country, other than and excepting the superintendent or manager of that home, who may be miles away and the dread, the apprehension and the fear of the penalty and the possibility of bringing the crime home, may act as a deterrent. With regard to the age, let me say here in the case of the home children as to a very large proportion we have an assurance as to their age. Quite a proportion of these are the children of people who were in respectable positions, but owing to sickness, or poverty, or death they have been placed in charge of our home, and after a term of from four to six years of careful training they have been sent to Canada. I am greatly impressed with this idea, that you cannot too closely surround these children, for they are no more than children, with the protection that will guarantee their being taken care of when beyond the reach of home and parents and loved ones. It occasionally happens that all the members of the family go to church, and the oldest son has some excuse to remain at home to help the young girl to attend to the household work, and the evil comes then.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I wish to make one remark with reference to determining the age. If menstruation has not occurred the age could not well be determined, because the change takes place in passing from girlhood to womanhood when menstruation first occurs. If a girl was 14 and had menstruated, I would consider she was a woman and entitled to be placed in that position. But a judge or jury in trying the case could not determine it readily without that fact being known. It occurs to me—I do not know if it would be right to put those words in the law or not—but I would take it that it should be "before or after menstruation", and that would cover the case entirely; because there would be evidence then.

The motion was defeated: Contents 13, Non-contents 19.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The next clause is the following in substitution for section 187 of the code:

187. Every one who, being the owner (or occupier of any premises, or having, or acting, or assisting in the management or control thereof, induces or knowingly suffers any girl of such age as in this section mentioned to resort to or be in or upon such premises for the purpose of being unlawfully and carnally known by any man, whether such carnal knowledge is intended to be with any particular man, or generally, is guilty of an indictable offence and—

(a.) is liable to ten years' imprisonment if such girl is under the age of [16] years; and

(b.) is liable to two years' imprisonment if such girl is of or above the age of [16] and under the age of [21] years.

In paragraph (a) 16 is substituted for 14; in paragraph (b) 16 is substituted for 14, and 21 is substituted for 16. In the first line of the section "owner and occupier" is made to read "owner or occupier." These are the only changes.

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—I think the hon. gentleman should leave out the word "owner." It is quite possible for the owner of the house not to be cognizant of the circumstance.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—But if the owner permits it and has the power to prevent it he should be punished for it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The only part of this clause that I am in favour of reporting is the amendment in the first line—that is the substitution of the word "or" for "and" in the law as it stands at present. I am opposed to the alteration of the law contemplated by subsections "A" and "B." We have had several divisions of the committee already on the principle involved in this clause and the divisions have all been in the direction of preventing an extension of the law. The argument in this case is as strong as the others, and I think the committee will have no hesitation in striking out the clause altogether. I think it would be well to take the sense of the committee on the first amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am sorry to differ from my hon. friend. The other clause which has been rejected involves the principle of evidence in criminal cases. This provides for the punishment of the owner or occupant of a property who takes a female to or allows to be used for immoral and improper purposes. I do not see any analogy between the two cases. I am entirely in favour of this clause. The only question with me is whether we should not substitute 18 for 21.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that this is one of the most atrocious practices that can possibly exist—that of bringing virtuous girls, no matter of what age, into houses of prostitution—leading them in there without their having knowledge of the character of such places. I do not think the public sense will be at all shocked by our punishing that offence with imprisonment, even though the girl is 21.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—If the hon. Minister of Justice would change the age of 16 to 14 and leave in the 21, I would approve of it. Supposing the girl is 16 years and one month old, then the offender is only punished with two years' imprisonment, while if she is one month under 16 years the punishment is 10 years' imprisonment. The critical time is at 14 years of age. I think 14 is a better period to name than 16. I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that this clause has a different bearing from the one with which we have just dealt. There cannot be a more atrocious act than to keep a house for the purpose mentioned in this clause, and the punishment ought to be severe.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think we should pass this clause without any hesitation whatever. It only proposes to punish the owners or occupants of property who knowingly induce girls to enter such places for immoral purposes, and whether the age is 14, 16 or 21 the punishment ought to be severe.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I hope no alteration will be made in the law which will prevent the punishment of the owner. It would be absurd to say that he does not know what use his house is to be put to. In many cases the owner receives a larger rent for his house when rented for immoral purposes than if it were used for any other purpose. His pretended ignorance of the use of the house should not be excused. If you fix an artificial age, 21 years is a reasonable limit. That is the age at which a man can take control of his own property, although he may have been equally competent to manage it at 19. The House will yet perceive that we did wrong in not adopting the limit I proposed—45 years.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—If we were to credit all that we heard to-day we would believe that crimes of this character are common in Canada. I do not think that is the case. In Montreal I have not heard of such a crime for years, and I believe that it is very uncommon throughout Canada. The hon. gentleman from Hamilton spoke about people getting those orphan boys and girls for the purpose of taking all the work they could out of them. I know the opposite is often the case. Many of those children are just as well taken care of as if their guardians were their parents. Very often they find happy homes and are better off than they ever would have been in the old country. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Glengarry as to the propriety of fixing the age at 14. If you are to keep raising the age why stop at 21, let us adopt the suggestion of the junior member for Halifax and say 45. Let us avoid making statements in this House which will lead the world to believe that the horrid crimes to which reference is made are common in Canada. The best amendment to this bill would be one which would throw it out altogether.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think the first amendment substituting "or" for "and" is a necessary one. The owner must be an occupier to be liable to punishment. After the amendment is made, it will read: "Every one who being the owner or occupier of any premises," etc., making the owner who connives at the use of his property for immoral purposes liable to punishment. We all know that in our large cities there are owners of property who knowingly let their houses for such purposes. Under the law they cannot be punished unless they are occupiers, but when you make this change you make a very valuable and important amendment to the section. That this crime of enticing young girls into houses of ill repute is serious there can be no doubt; but the law punishes amply at present. Consider the punishment—ten years' imprisonment—ten times as much as is sometimes imposed on a man for manslaughter. The punishment is excessive. If the girl is over 16, under the second clause, the punishment is two years. Is not that ample imprisonment for inducing a girl who ought to have more sense than to enter such a place? Some hon. gentlemen speak as if it were either this amendment or nothing—but it is not a question of just and proper and proportional punishment, but a question of excessive punishment. The existing law is deterrent enough, and I do not believe in making it so severe that there will be difficulty in putting it into execution. Where a punishment is so disproportioned to the offence many criminals escape punishment altogether. I wish the committee to bear in mind that I am not in the least degree mitigating the serious and disgraceful character of the offence here attempted to be punished, but what I ask the committee to remember is this, that we have already a section on our statute books which was placed there after grave deliberation by a large committee of both Houses and afterwards adopted after careful consideration by both Houses of parliament which is, I think, full and sufficient to meet the case. What does it say? It provides for the imprisonment of the offender for 10 years if the girl is under 14. That is very proper, but the punishment is too severe if it extends to the age of 16.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Would you have no punishment inflicted for the offence if the girl is only 16?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not think anything more is required than the statute provides at present for the punishment of this offence. I admit it is an abominable crime, but the law at present amply punishes it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest that the Minister of Justice take the sense of the committee on each of these amendments.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to point out the objection which may be raised to subsection "B." It has been demonstrated very fully in most cities where attempts have been made under the municipal law to break up houses of prostitution. They have been broken up with the result that rooms of assignation and other evils of the kind have followed from that particular action. Now it seems to me that 16 being the age of consent, you leave on the street practically, under this law, girls between the ages of 16 and 21 who may be prostitutes; you provide no place for them except these houses which are places of reception for them at the present time and you compel them to secure quarters and ply their nefarious traffic in a clandestine manner in rooms and quarters of that character. I think I am safe in saying the conclusion has been that all municipal action which has been taken in breaking up houses of prostitution, and thus distributing those girls through the city and other places to establish rooms has not been productive of good, and it would have been very much better if a dozen of them had remained together under close police supervision where they could have been looked after by the municipal authorities, and where the evil would have been concentrated instead of being distributed throughout the whole community.

The first amendment substituting "or" for "and" was adopted.

On subsection "A."

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think the age should be 14 as it was before.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If we vote this clause out, the law will stand as it is.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Imprisonment for 10 years is a very serious punishment for this offence. The effect of making so severe a punishment is that in many cases the parties escape prosecution altogether. If the period were shorter you would be much more certain to have the law effectively enforced.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The present period was fixed very deliberately at a former session. No harm has resulted from it. This is merely a maximum. The judge will consider whether in each case the maximum penalty should be inflicted. In some cases 10 years would be an insufficient punishment. It seems to be the feeling of the House that 16 in section "A" should be 14—that is, the present law should remain as it is. If that is the feeling of the committee I would prefer to substitute 14 to 16 in subsection "A."

The clause as amended was adopted.

On subsection "B."

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That should be 18 instead of 21.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I fail to see what objection there is to punishing a man for inducing a girl under 21 to enter a brothel. Any man who induces a girl to go to a place of that kind for an immoral purpose should be punished, and this two years is the maximum punishment. The court, if there are extenuating circumstances, may let him off with three months or six months.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—If the hon. gentleman from Halifax is right, strike out 21 altogether. Protect every woman, no matter what her age is. What the hon. gentleman from Calgary says has more common sense. Eighteen should be the age limit; but if 21 is to be the limit, a woman of any age should be protected.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—45!

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think there would be no objection to fix the age between 14 and 18.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause does not confine the punishment to the inducing of a virtuous girl to go into a brothel for the purpose of prostitution.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—The punishment is limited to the owner or occupier.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The point to which I desire to call the attention of the committee is this: the senior member for Halifax stated that the inducing of a virtuous girl to enter a house of this kind should be punishable. I would punish the man no matter how old she is, but it goes further than that. If the owner or occupant of the house takes a common street walker, who may have been on the street for years, into his house he is as punishable for it as if she were a virtuous girl.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The clause applies only to the occupier or owner of a house who induces a female to come to his house for purposes of prostitution, whether she is a prostitute or not. I think, under a certain age, say the age of 18, any person, whether owner or occupier, inducing a person to go to a brothel should be punished, and I do not think two years, at the discretion of the judge, is too little. Therefore, I think the Minister of Justice should adopt 18 instead of 21.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause extends to the keeper of a house of ill-fame having a girl under 21 years of age in her house.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The intention is to protect young girls. A girl at 21 should be able to look after herself. The intention it to protect girls when they are minors. I think 16 is not sufficiently high in age, and I therefore move that it be from 14 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

One clause 190*a*.

Section 190*a*.—By inserting immediately after section 190 the following section:—

"190*a*. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars, or to one year's imprisonment, or to both, who lives in a state of open and notorious adultery or fornication with another person and without any claim or pretense of their being married to one another."]

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Where there is some pretense I do not want to deal with that, whatever the ground of pretense is. Sometimes there are found to be defects, for instance in the license, and strictly speaking the marriage may not be a legal one. We have had in Ontario, and no doubt in other provinces, to pass laws from time to time to legalize marriage where it was defective. One was where the law required that the clergyman should be resident of the province, and Catholics were married by clergymen who were not residents of the province, so they were not married at all. So that I do not propose to touch any case where there is any pretense or claim of their being married to one another; but in other cases I think it is proper. In England such cases are taken cognizance of and punished by the ecclesiastical court; but we have no ecclesiastical court here to punish them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Supposing those parties say they are married?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If they make a claim to be married, I propose not to touch the case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is all they would have to do.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There are cases where there is no pretense of that kind. A case occurred in the county of Huron, where a couple of people were living notoriously in adultery, not married, and it excited an immense amount of indignation among the people; and they undertook to mob them, which they did, because there was no law to touch the case or interfere with them. I think in those avowed cases of adultery there should be a punishment.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I think this is unnecessary, if it is not mischievous, legislation. I think it is a great mistake. I have known in my life two or three cases where people would be liable to be punished, and they are as good living and as honest people as Canada holds.

Several hon. MEMBERS—Oh, oh !

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Yes, I repeat it ; they are upright, good people. I am not going into the history of the cases, but I know of three at least. This legislation is got up, what for ? The hon. minister tells us it is because of one case up in Huron.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are other cases.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There is one case of it there, and I know something of the county of Huron myself. I am perfectly satisfied that that clause 203 is, to say the least of it, and to use the mildest language, unnecessary, and we would be a great deal better if we had less of that legislation here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Alma.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—You never do.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have agreed with the hon. gentleman as to several clauses in this bill, but I do not agree altogether as to this clause. As the hon. member has pointed out, we are in a different position from what they are in England, where people who are guilty of notorious adultery can be got at through the ecclesiastical court, or could at one time. It is a great scandal that people can with impunity live in what is described here as open and notorious adultery, and it should be punished ; but I cannot say I can go as far as the next words go, because under that a man who lived with a mistress would be liable to the penalties provided by this clause. But I do think open and notorious adultery should be punished, and if the committee decide in that way—that is, not to punish the other offence—then those words "Without any claim or pretense of being married" should be struck out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As to these words "without any claim or pretense of being married," there are cases where persons have been married in the Indian Territories where courts have subsequently held the marriage was not a valid one, and those last words would protect them ; but it is a question whether those last words would protect those who claim to be married and have a wife living somewhere else—those who claim to be married a second time and have a first wife living. It seems to me under this clause you may reach a class of persons you cannot at present reach at all ; that is persons who go to the United States to marry and return with the woman whom they have married.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause would not reach that class.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It should be framed to meet it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The clause goes far enough.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not intended to meet it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is not that adultery ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, but it is a question to my mind whether the latter part of the clause would not protect them. I think the clause should extend to the case of bigamy where persons are married abroad, because I am strongly of opinion that ultimately it will be found that we cannot reach that class of cases ; and we can reach them by this section if it were altered verbally so as to include those parties.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think in dealing with this subject for the first time we should not go too far, but should leave to subsequent legislation any further enactments. I considered the matter, and meant that the clause should not apply to those cases where they went to the United States and got married. I do not think it is expedient to deal with those cases.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the words "or fornication" in the 4th line of 190*a* be struck out. There is no such provision as this in England or any other country that I know of.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then to make it consistent you should strike out from the word "fornication" to the end of the paragraph.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No. I move simply to strike out "or fornication."

The amendment was carried, and the clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is rather unfortunate that it should go abroad that in the opinion of the Senate of the Dominion of Canada it is proper and right that a man should live in fornication.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Nobody has said it was proper and right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the inverse of that statement. We propose to punish persons for living in adultery; but a man who is not married can live in fornication for his life and not be punished. I think it is drawing the line very far. I think few cases will be proved. It is rather regrettable we should lay down a rule of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call the hon. gentleman to order. The clause has been carried.

The committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (106) "An Act respecting the Safe Deposit Warehousing and Loan Company."—(Mr. Mills.)

Bill (30) "An Act respecting the Central Counties Railway."—(Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (24) "An Act to incorporate the Manitoba and Pacific Railway Company."—(Mr. Lougheed,)

Bill (69) "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlebois Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (90) "An Act respecting the Montreal Bridge Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (68) "An Act respecting the American Bank Note Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, 8th June, 1897.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.), from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, reported that the committee had under consideration Bill (68) "An Act to incorporate the American Bank Note Company," and had found that the forty-ninth rule of the Senate had not been complied with.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I take exception, as being the party who moved the first reading of this bill, to the report which has been brought in by the Standing Orders Committee. Of course, on principle they are perfectly right, but unfortunately they have not acted upon that principle this year, or any preceding year as long as I have been in the Senate. Therefore I do not think it exactly the thing, at this late period of the session, to throw out the bill for this technicality. This company is applying for incorporation. It asks for no exclusive power, or anything of that kind. The question at present is whether the bill is to be thrown out because it has not been advertised as required by the rules of the Senate. While I do not pledge myself to support the bill when it is brought before another committee, still I want to see fair, even-handed justice extended to this company as well as to any other company; therefore, I do not think the committee, taking all these matters into consideration, were justified, under the circumstances, in reporting as they have done, although carrying out strictly the rules of the Senate and being perfectly within their rights. I believe that this year there have been some sixteen or seventeen bills reported upon and with regard to which the forty-ninth rule has been suspended.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Not that many bills.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Well, a great many, and therefore, on these grounds, they should place this bill in the same position, and then, when it goes to the proper committee, they will have an opportunity of discussing it on its merits. Therefore, I move that the 49th rule be suspended in so far as it relates to this bill. It is merely just and right. In other sessions, had we carried out the rule strictly, no man would try to enforce the rule strictly now, particularly as the fault lies with the solicitor, who is promoting the bill. As you all know, this company came here at a late period in the year, and the solicitor had not time to advertise. It is a mistake on his part, and he will have to suffer the consequences if the rule is enforced as proposed by the committee. I hope the House will take all the circumstances into consideration, and allow this bill to be treated in a similar way to the bills under similar conditions this session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman will have to give notice of his motion to suspend the rules. The committee to-day inquired into this matter carefully, and there has been no case of hardship. The promoters of the bill were notified that they had not complied with the rules of the Senate, and they treated that notice with contempt, and made no effort to comply with the rules. It is true we suspended the rule in a number of cases, but there was no opposition to those bills, and to-day we are told by counsel opposing this bill that it would interfere with certain rights. In every case where we suspended the rule, the committee were convinced that the bill would not interfere with any public or private rights, and on that ground recommended the suspension of the rules. The committee have been too lax during the whole of this session in suspending the rule so frequently. It causes the Senate to be treated with contempt by promoters of bills, who think if they comply with rules of the House of Commons, they can disregard the rules of the Senate, and for those reasons to-day I was obliged to give my vote to sustain the rules. If the hon. gentleman wants to bring this bill up again, he will have to give notice of his motion to suspend the rule.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I certainly do not concur with the view expressed by my hon. friend, the chairman of the Standing Orders Committee. It does not seem to me that we ought to treat in that vicarious way this one bill, after having permitted seven others immediately preceding it to go through and to be reported upon without having conformed to the rule, but standing in exactly the same position that this bill stands in. Now, the solicitor who was before us, who had charge of the bill and who had given notice in the Gazette of the intention of the American Company to ask for incorporation here, was informed by my hon. friend the Senator from this city, that it was the invariable practice of the Senate not to insist upon this rule, but in practice to act in accordance with the rules which prevail in the House of Commons. The rules of the House of Commons require that notice shall be published in the Gazette, and our rule requires that that notice shall be published in some newspaper in every province of the Dominion. The rule of the Senate, it may be proper in certain cases to enforce. If the Senate or the committee are of opinion that there are parties whose interests are likely to be injuriously affected by the legislation, and that they are not likely to hear of it unless notice is given in the papers of the province, then it is well, perhaps, to insist upon this rule being enforced, but it it is perfectly obvious to the hon. gentlemen of this House, as it was obvious to the members of the committee, that there was but one institution in all Canada that could be injuriously or adversely affected by this charter, and that institution is in this city, and was represented before the committee, and was there for the purpose of taking advantage of the provision in this respect to refuse these parties a charter. The best evidence we could have that they had sufficient notice was that they were there, and it seems to me that their opposition ought not to have been based on a technical objection of this sort, but that the bill should have gone before the proper committee and if there were any valid reasons for not incorporating this company, these parties would have an opportunity of stating those reasons and the committee charged with the subject would have an opportunity of dealing with the question upon its merits. Now, my hon. friend from British Columbia says that we allowed seven other bills immediately preceding this to go through, although they had not given notice more than this committee had, because there was no objection. Why, hon. gentlemen, there have been no objection because parties interested did not know.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C)—Well, they ought to know.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The reason which my hon. friend gave for allowing these bills to go on may be a reason for objecting to the bills—for their being opposed by the Committee on Standing Orders, because it may be an evidence that interested parties living at distant portions of the country, whose interests would be injuriously affected, had no knowledge that such legislation was intended. The reason which my hon. friend then gave for permitting these bills to go through is rather a reason against their having permitted them to go through, and I think the committee should consider in every case, looking at the nature of the legislation called for, are there parties who have interests that are likely to be injuriously affected, and that it is the duty of this House to protect against the legislation sought. Now, my hon. friend does not pretend that there was any legislation of that sort asked for. There was one company engaged in business of the same character whose interests were likely to be injuriously affected, and if they had any grounds for opposition at all, they would have an opportunity of appearing before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for the purpose of stating their objection, and it was for that committee to consider whether this Act of incorporation should have been granted or not. Looking at the uniform practice of that committee during this session, looking at the practice which prevailed in former sessions and for a long series of years by this committee, it does seem to be a rather extraordinary position that a committee should take advantage of this provision in its rules to object on such grounds to report in favour of the bill. I think that a wrong has been done, and a wrong has been done because of the action of the committee in other cases. The practice that has grown up invited the particular course of proceeding of which the committee now complains, and that being so, it seems to me that these parties are entitled to the legislation for which they have sought.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Hon. gentlemen, if the question was as stated by the hon. member from Ottawa and the hon. member from Bothwell, I would have protested against the rule being enforced, even in committee, but hon. gentlemen know that all our committees have certain rules upon which they generally act, and the Committee on Standing Orders have, as a rule, reported in favour of suspending the 49th rule when bills were unopposed, and that is just the reason why the hon member from Ottawa and the hon. member from Bothwell have made statements which were not in accordance with facts. What are the facts? We have had before us, during the session, seven bills of which public notice had not been given regularly, and the committee recommended that the 49th rule be suspended, because in those cases the bills were unopposed. In the present instance the committee had before them the very gentleman opposing the bill coming forward and saying he had been deceived by notice not being given, and that therefore, he would urge the committee to enforce the rule. Was not this sufficient reason to induce the committee to stick to the rule? I should think so. This is far from being in accord with the statements made a minute ago by the two hon. senators, whose statement was that the bill stood on the same principles as the others. The other bills were unopposed, while this bill is opposed, so that, under the rule laid down for years past, I should think that before charging the committee with having done such a wrong as that mentioned by the two hon. gentlemen who have taken exception to the report of the committee, those two gentlemen ought to have inquired and made sure of what had been done.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I did not intend to accuse the committee of wrong doing. I merely stated facts. The gentleman who was there opposing the bill was a resident of the city of Ottawa and the county of Carleton, and he admitted that the notice was printed here. He admitted that it was printed in the Canada Gazette, and there was very little opposition as far as Ontario was concerned. I cannot understand, because a party does not oppose a bill, that ergo the committee must allow it to pass. I think it just as much in the interest of the public that the committee themselves should inquire whether any wrong is inflicted, whether the bill is opposed or not in the general interest of the country, and therefo e, merely taking what the hon gentleman said, I want to disavow any intention of throwing any slur upon the actions of the committee. I believe they acted in the best faith, but the unfortunate thing is that they have not been consistent, but they single out this one bill among so many before them this year.. It is not a correct principle to have sustained by the Senate. Make that rule whatever it may be, and have it enforced. There is no member of this House who will insist upon its enforcement more than I shall, but, under all the circumstances, an exception should be made in the case of the American Bank Note Company as has been done in similar cases. I merely wish to bring the matter before the notice of the Senate in order that they may understand the subject and if they do not agree to my proposition to suspend the 49th rule with respect to this bill, or if they insist on the notice being given for to-morrow, I shall give such notice, but I hope they will waive that, because the session is drawing to a close, and we should let the bill come up for consideration on its merits. We can throw it out if it is found to be injurious.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—This House has laid down rules which the committee on Standing Orders have to follow. In case the committee find that this or that rule may not be followed they have to be in a position to make good their recommendation. This case was an exceptional one and it was the first time that the committee was asked for the suspension of the 49th rule on a bill which was opposed, the opposition being there. What had the committee to do in carrying out their duty towards the House and towards the country and towards all parties? Has it not to follow the rule? Was it not to do what it has done? The case is now in the hands of your honour, who may suspend the rule and so condemn the act of the committee which was done under the law as it stands.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E I.)—The object of this rule is that parties interested in opposing the bill may have an opportunity to come before the committee and express their views upon it. The only parties, apparently, that have any interest in this bill are situated here in Ottawa, or in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. In these provinces the notice has been given according to our rule; therefore, I think there is no valid objection to be taken to passing the bill through the committee so far as these provinces in which the notice has been given are concerned. The only objection that possibly could be urged against the action of the committee in favour of the enforcement of the rule is that notice has not been given throughout the whole of Canada in papers published in the different provinces of the Dominion. That certainly is rather a technical objection. We know very well, although the notice may not be published in the papers of the different provinces, that it was published in the Canada Gazette and this paper circulates through every province and every province in that way has had notice, although not according to the strict rules laid down by the Senate for the guidance of the standing committees. I therefore think that we should waive the objection and suspend the rule to allow the introduction of this bill. At the same time, I believe there are clauses and conditions in that bill which I, as one member of the Senate, would seriously object to when the bill comes before the Committee on Standing Orders, or before the Senate, but we should not throw it out upon a technical objection as we have been urged to do.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Objection having been taken by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Macdonald) the hon. senator from Rideau division (Mr. Clemow) will have to give notice of the suspension of the rules. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. gentlemen from Rideau division, the hon. gentleman from Bothwell and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, that the reason of the rule having ceased, the operation of the rule itself should cease. The object of the rule is that parties interested should be made aware of the fact that this legislation is asked for. We have had the very best evidence that the only party in the country interested in the matter has been made aware that this legislation is asked for, because he is here to oppose the legislation. He opposed the legislation in the committee of the other House, and that committee decided that the bill was one which should be allowed to pass. It comes to this House, and as he has had ample notice, he should not complain that due notice has not been given. The fate of the bill should be decided on its merits.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—While those opposed to the bill have been notified to be present, the committee took the precaution to ask the promoters of the measure whether they had not received information from the clerk of the committee some time ago that the bill was not in order and that they should comply with the rules. We asked the gentleman in charge whether, since notice was given him, he had done so, and if the notice had been given from that day, the committee were ready to report to the House the advisability of suspending the rules; but he said he had not given the notice. When he did not take steps to do what we asked him to do, why should we do what the rules of the House forbid?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman gave the same notice to the other seven who did not act upon it.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That does not change the condition of affairs, because in the other seven instances it was unopposed legislation, while in this case the legislation is opposed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This bill is opposed only by parties in the province where due notice has been given.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Why should not notice be given in all the provinces of the Dominion? The hon. gentleman says that there is only one person opposing the bill. If notice had been given in the other provinces, how does he know that there would not be others opposing the bill?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman will see that that applies to all the other bills we passed.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not care about the other bills. I am not going to be drawn away from the question by a side issue. If we have rules let us carry them out, as far as we can do so without injuring anybody. The rules are there and persons who apply for legislation should have intelligence enough to comply with them. It is not asking very much of the hon. gentleman from Rideau to give notice that he will move so and so to-morrow. I have no doubt the Senate will grant his request. If proper notice of this bill had been given, there might have been hundreds of people to oppose it, because the people of Canada are interested, from sea to sea, in this company. I am surprised that there should be so much talk about suspending the rules.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I give notice that I will to-morrow move the suspension of the rules.

THE ABSENCE OF JUDGE ROUTHIER.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Is the Honourable Judge Adolphe Basile Routhier who has just been named local judge in Admiralty of the Exchequer Court for the Admiralty District of Quebec, and whose appointment has just been published in The Canada Gazette of the 29th May last, the same Judge A. B. Routhier who has just obtained leave of absence for another journey in Europe?

2. Is the government aware that the first official act of the new judge in Admiralty was to name, or cause to be named, immediately, a substitute in the person of the Honourable Judge Andrews?

3. Is not this season of navigation, which comprises the months during which Judge Routhier will be away in virtue of his leave of absence, precisely the season during which most commercial and maritime business is transacted?

4. Does the Admiralty Court usually adjourn during the season of navigation?

5. What is the usual salary which Judge Routhier usually receives, whether on leave of absence or not?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—To the first question my answer is Yes. To the second question my answer is Judge Routhier has named another judge who is to attend to any business that may arise in his absence. This he has done under a statutory enactment authorizing it, and an Order in Council has been passed giving effect to the nomination. To the third question my answer is the leave granted is for a short specified time, and only to enable the judge to receive and return with his invalid daughter who is now in Europe. I am not aware that the period of Judge Routhier's absence on leave is that on which most commercial and maritime business is transacted, but whatever business there may be will be attended to. To the fourth question my answer is No. To the fifth question my answer is as a Superior Court judge his salary is $5,000. He is to receive $1,000 as Admiralty judge.

THE DISMISSAL OF SIFROID FORTIN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Was Mr. Sifroid Fortin on the 23rd June, 1896, an employé of the Government as section man on the Intercolonial Railway in the county of Montmagny, and was he fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his chief ?
2. Has he been since that date discharged from his work by the present Administration ?
3. When, why, and upon whose complaint ?
4. What is the nature of the charge brought against him ?
5. Has the charge been proved ?
6. What is the nature of the proof ?
7. If no proof exists, has the accuser at least a diploma of infallibility ? Granted by whom ?
8. Has the accused been made aware officially of the accusation brought against him, and had he an opportunity to refute it ?
9. What was his reply ?
10. If the person dismissed completely denies the truth of the charge brought against him, protests his innocence and offers to make it clear, is it the intention of the Government to grant an inquiry or to refuse all justice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am advised by the Department of Railways and Canals that Mr. Sifroid Fortin was employed as section man on the Intercolonial Railway, in the county of Montmagny, on the 23rd of June, 1896. His services were dispensed with on the 14th August, 1896, at the request and upon the representation of Mr. Choquette, M.P., that Fortin had taken an active and offensive part in the late elections. The department did not think it necessary to go beyond the statements made by Mr. Choquette, and so he was dismissed from the service.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (119) "An Act to incorporate La Mutuelle Générale Canadienne.—(Mr. Bellerose).

MINING COMPANY'S DEVELOPMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (82), "An Act to incorporate the Mining Development and Advisory Corporation of British America, Ltd.," with amendments. He said : The first amendment is merely to amend what appeared to be an omission in that clause relating to the stock, in order to make it clear. Then at the end of the clause it is not clear—where the company ask power to issue shares, and these probably are given in payment for certain transactions—whether those shares were to be paid up or not. An amendment is introduced to make that clear. Then subsection two of clause five is amended to make clear that there shall be such a majority of shareholders, both as regards capital stock and the number of shareholders, as would be required for the exercise of this power given in subsection three. Those are the amendments.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being read,

Third reading of Bill (105) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the protection of navigable waters."

Hon Mr. SCOTT said :—I find it will be necessary to amend this bill, giving a larger definition to the word "owner." At present the definition of "owner" is registered owner, and there may be obstructions caused by a raft which, of course, has not a registered owner and it is for the purpose of giving a fuller definition. I move that the bill be referred back to a committee of the whole House to make the change.

The motion was agreed to,

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be amended by adding the following :

The expression "owner" means registered or other owner or owners at the time such wreck, obstruction or obstacle as is therein referred to was occasioned, and shall also include subsequent purchasers.

That reference to subsequent purchasers is added in case of a party, wanting to get rid of the responsibility, sells to somebody else.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to state that this clause would apply to rafts? I know that in our county the logs come down the river and form the rafts which are all registered. The marks of the owners are on the logs, so they are very easily distinguished. They could not collect their logs unless they were registered. The logs are all registered that are in the rafts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the registry in the department that is referred to here. This means registered in the Department of Marine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is an amendment to the law as it stands upon the statute-book now?

Hon. Mr. SCOOT—Yes. The word "owner" simply included a registered owner, and in a variety of cases the obstacle or obstruction was in no way registered and so I make the change.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

MANITOBA AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER moved the third reading of Bill (19) "An Act respecting the Manitoba and South-eastern Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the hon. gentleman tell us, before the bill is read the third time, how much of the road is built?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There is no portion of the road that is completely built, but there has been some grading on some parts of the railway, and we are asking for an extension of time to complete the work.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This is a peculiar bill. The company has been chartered for eight years, and the hon. gentleman tells us now that there is not a mile of the road built yet. It is a project of considerable importance to the people of this country. It is a railway that runs to the boundary of the United States, and its tendency is to make the trade of the North-west and Manitoba go through the United States. I am as anxious as any man in this country to give the people of Manitoba all the facilities possible to give them an outlet to the ocean, but I am wholly opposed to allowing the trade of the North-west to be diverted from the St. Lawrence to the United States. We have spent a large amount of money to prepare this country to do that trade, and we do not want to divert it to other channels. If we allow the trade to be diverted in that way it discriminates against Canadian vessels. In the coasting trade the laws of the United States discriminate against them, and we should discriminate in favour of our own vessels. I have no objections to this bill if we can make the terminus anywhere in Canada, at a port or harbour where the shipping of this country can connect with it, but I have serious objections to it as it stands now. We have a bill before the committee now for a railway that is to run from Winnipeg to Duluth, and this company take power to amalgamate with that company, and really the intention is to divert the trade of this country to the United States, and not to take it by the St. Lawrence. We all know the way the shipping interests of this country are suffering now, and have always suffered, and the only inducement which was given to the people when the government built the Canadian Pacific Railway was that we would have the trade of the country going by the St. Lawrence. If we are going to have this railway built to the boundary how can we do that? I shall move to have this bill sent back to the committee. The other day it went through the committee because there was no map, and we could not see the location. There was no information before the committee. It was practically smuggled through. I want to get the expression of that committee—I am perfectly willing if you put the terminus of the railway say three miles from the boundary, but I am not willing that the trade of this country should go to the United States in that way, therefore I will have to move that we send this bill back to the committee for further consideration. I think we can frame amendments to make it suitable. There appears to be new life put into this matter since the bill for the Winnipeg and Duluth Company has been introduced. The people of this country, no matter what their politics and creed may be, should try to keep the trade of the North-west going by way of the St. Lawrence to give employment to people in the shipping business, and so on, because in the United States they will not allow a Canadian to go on board one of their vessels. Are we to enrich them by giving them the trade and work which our own people ought to have? I, for one, am not willing to do it. I move that the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration. There will be a better chance to discuss it there. I think we should not allow this company to amalgamate with the Winnipeg and Duluth Company. Supposing the Winnipeg and Duluth bill is defeated in the committee or in the House, there are still the two companies. If they are partially formed now, they can act together and still have the power, in a manner, of deceiving parliament and carrying the trade of the country by way of Duluth. To-day if you carry the trade of the country through to Port Arthur, a Canadian vessel can load a cargo there and take it to Montreal, but a United States vessel cannot. It should be our endeavour as far as possible, to legislate in the interests of our own people and not in the interest of foreigners, when those foreigners do not wish to give us fair play or treat us in any reasonable way. The people of this country could afford to give their neighbours almost anything in reason, if they would allow us to participate in the coasting trade, but they will not do it. We have people in this country who care not for parish politics, but who look at the whole Dominion and to the interests of the whole Dominion, and it should be our endeavour to get the trade of the North-west to go by the St. Lawrence, and not to divert it to another country. If you allow this bill to pass in its present shape that will be the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and who has taken such strong an opposition to this bill has made an appeal to Canadian sentiment. He does not want trade to be diverted to the United States. I may say we are as much Canadians in the North-west as anybody in the other provinces. We have as much at heart the interest of Canada, but precisely because we are Canadians, we want our share of the good things that may be got from this parliament. Sentiment is of no use here. The charter that this company has is an old charter, it is true. There are some gentlemen who have raised a question as to a portion of the road only having been built As I have said, there has been a good deal of expense incurred in the building of this road, and there is a part of it already graded, but suppose there had been nothing done upon this road, there are no conflicting interests in this matter. There are no other companies asking for incorporation. I could understand if another company was before parliament asking to cover the ground that we are covering, that then we, having failed up to now to build the road, the other company might say to parliament "well, this company has failed to build the road, let us have a chance." But there is no such thing; no other company is asking for a charter for the same route, consequently, as there is no conflicting interest, I do not see any force in the argument. The object of this bill, and the only object, is to obtain an extension for the construction of the road so as to save the expense that the promoters have been put to up to the present. The promoters have a large interest vested in that road, and it would be unfair and unjust to deprive them of that when there are no other interests coming in to conflict with theirs. It would be unfair to do any act which would cause a loss to the promoters, and that loss would be not only to the promoters, but to the population of that country. There is a large tract of land east of the Red River in Manitoba, which has no railway facilities at all. Some of the settlers are obliged to come from a distance of fifty-five or sixty miles to a place where they can get a market. This road is intended to serve those local interests. True, our line goes to the boundary, but I suppose parliament is not going back to the old idea which was abandoned some years ago, that no railway should be built up to the boundary. Everybody remembers the war that was got up some years ago about this. No company was allowed to build to the boundary, but that policy has been abandoned. It is an antiquated idea, and I suppose parliament will not go back to it. More than that, supposing you would not let us build a road to the boundary, then we are not obliged to come to this parliament, because we could attain that object by a local charter. The local government could grant us a charter to build to the international boundary, so we would be in the same position as we are in now. I do not think there is any serious reason in that. More than that, this charter is an old one, and I take it for granted that parliament having committed itself again and again to the principle of this bill, will not go back on that principle. As I have said, the real object of the bill is only to get an extension of time to construct the railway, and, as an evidence of that, I will call the attention of the House to the original bill as printed and as introduced. It contained only one clause, providing for the extension of the road. The second clause, to which the hon. gentleman seems more opposed than to the other, has been forced upon us by the House of Commons. We did not care about that clause, but at this period of the session, if the clause were dropped, the bill would have to go back to the House of Commons, and we do not know what would become of it. I do not think it is safe for the promoters to consent to the dropping of the clause. I come now to the second clause. What does it amount to? To nothing at all. That clause purports to give us power to amalgamate with another company which is not now in existence—the Winnipeg, Duluth and Northern Railway Company. If that Winnipeg, Duluth and Northern Railway Company is not incorporated, if the bill which that company is seeking to have adopted by parliament is not passed, then this second clause of our bill becomes absolutely inoperative. It is a dead letter, consequently it is a harmless clause, and if the hon. gentleman is really opposed to the granting of this power, then the only thing he has to do is to look after the other bill, because the moment the other bill is killed, then this clause is killed. I may draw the attention of the House to this fact. This clause does not give us general power to amalgamate with any other company. I could understand if that clause were of that general character, that opposition might be taken to it, but it is a specific clause. It provides that we can amalgamate with one specific company. If that specific company is not incorporated, then this clause is inoperative: consequently it is harmless. On the other hand, supposing that the other company is incorporated, then it will be incorporated only with the permission of this House, and if this House is willing to incorporate the other company, and give that company the powers to which the hon. gentleman objects, then the object that he has in view will not be attained, because the other company will get such powers. It is the latter company which will divert the trade to the United States. If one company is to be allowed to to do so there can be no objection surely to let another company amalgamate with the first company. So that, whether the other bill passes or whether it does not, this clause is harmless, and no serious objection can be taken to it. I might put it in another language. The hon. gentleman does not want us to go into partnership with the other company. I do not want that either. The only thing he has to do is to look after the other company. If he can kill the other company, it would be an impossibility for us to amalgamate with it. As I have said, this clause provides only for amalgamation with a specific company. If the other bill is not passed, then this becomes inoperative, and if we desired to go beyond the boundary of the province, we would be again obliged to come before this parliament. We could not get any more powers than we have at present except with the sanction of this parliament. The Senate at present can prevent that amalgamation with the other company by amending, altering or doing away with the other bill, and if they do not, as I have said, then there is no reason why both companies should not be on the same footing. Certainly the possibility which the hon. gentleman has in his mind is too remote to justify this House in enforcing the hardships which by the rejection of this bill, would result to the promoters of the railway and to the population, the local interests of which are intended to be served. I hope, after these explanations that the hon. gentleman will see that we do not intend to be as bad Canadians as he thinks we are, and we only intend to foster the industries of a large section of the population, which is at present without railway facilities.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The opposition which comes from the hon. member (Mr. McCallum) is quite unnecessary speaking from the view of a North-west member and one who is interested as largely as I am, and as other members here are, in the development of that country. The opposition which comes from that hon. gentleman would tend to lock up one-fourth of the province of Manitoba. The position of the portion of the province of Manitoba, which is covered by that railway, is this: It has not hitherto had any chance of being opened up, and, although a considerable amount of settlement has gone on it has been retarded by the locking up of railway interests without which, as we know in that prairie country, it is impossible for farmers to make money. Besides, there are other industries which are going into that country, and they will be very much affected by the opening up of railway communication, but the hon. gentleman would have that whole district closed up. And for what? Simply because he says it would have the effect, if opened, of diverting a large portion of the trade of Manitoba to United States ports. He must know—for all of us do know—that there is a railway now in existence—the Northern Pacific—which has an outlet to the southern portion of Manitoba, and which has direct communication with Duluth, and a large portion of the grain of Manitoba certainly goes over that road, but it is impossible for legislation to interfere with the current of trade. If better rates and better facilities can be got for the handling of Manitoba grain in any way, as has been proved to be the case, the grain will go that way in spite of legislation or anything to the contrary, and, therefore, the effort which is now made to choke off this route with that idea in view, is entirely useless. We cannot block up the country to prevent the trade going in the way the rates and other conditions demand: therefore, I think, the hon. gentleman should not try to relegate it back to the condition of eight or ten years ago, when there was almost a rebellion in that country over what was then known as the disallowance question, when the railroads which were chartered to the boundary at that time were from time to time disallowed by the federal government. That went on from year to year and there was the greatest feeling raised in that country. It was only by the federal authorities doing away with that question of disallowance that they succeeded in calming the people in that new country, the people who were doing the best they could and undergoing a great deal of hardship incidental to pioneer life, and who should have been helped and encouraged in every way instead of having difficulties thrown in their way. Now, the hon. gentleman would relegate us to that old system and to those old ideas But we have passed that and we must ask the hon. gentleman not to throw out this charter which would be the effect if he had his way of referring it back to the committee. All that is asked for here is an extension of time for a year or fifteen months. The hon. gentleman complains that no work has been done. If the work has not been done his objections fall to the ground, but I may tell him that the intention of the promoters of the road is to go on with the road, but not being in a position at present to go right on with it, they ask for an extension of time. It is true another clause has been incorporated in this bill in the House of Commons which allows this company to amalgamate with another company whose charter has not yet been passed, but as the mover has explained, that can only be operative if the other bill goes through, and that is a contingency which may or may not arise. If the hon. gentleman had intended to oppose this bill he should have done so in committee, but I did not hear any voice raised against its passage through the committee, and it is rather hard to try and refer it back when it is a matter of such importance to a large population in Manitoba who are without railway facilities.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I think the opposition to this bill is a mistake. I happen to know the section of the country through which this railway is to pass. The line is to run on the east side of Red River, through the French parishes, as my hon. friend from St. Boniface has said, they have to travel a distance of 40 or 50 miles before they can get to market—60 miles some of them. There are quite a number of settlers, and although there is a railway on the east side of Red River and one on the west side as well, yet this proposed road will run through a section of country that is not accommodated by any line. I cannot understand why opposition should be offered. If it is from the fact that this road has not been built, I know that a very considerable amount of money has been expended in the purchase of right of way and some grading has been done. We all know the depression which has existed for years past and the difficulty of raising money even in that country where railways can be so easily built. The extension of the charter for a few years will cause the road to be built. Canadian as I am, I am not afraid of the trade being diverted to Duluth. As has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Brandon, we have a road on the west side of Red River. That road communicates with Duluth and I suppose a considerable amount of grain may pass that way, but not very much. If western grain passes through Duluth what is to prevent it going to Montreal? There is nothing to prevent it going to Montreal more than to Buffalo.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. own the South-eastern and Atlantic Railway which connects with their own line at Sault Ste. Marie.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I understand that very well; it runs to Fort William.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I mean the Canadian Pacific Railway, which runs to Montreal, owns the line from Duluth because they are the owners of the line which runs from Duluth to Sault Ste. Marie and then through to Montreal and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I do not see that that is any reason why this bill should not be passed.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is in its favour.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I think the hon. gentleman should get his bill in the interest of that country, and I suppose we are all interested in the development of that part of the Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The objection taken to the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Monck is not thoroughly understood. If I understand his position, it is not so much opposition to the extension of the charter to enable parties who have invested their money to continue their charter, but unfortunately in the House of Commons there was an additional clause attached to the bill to which many of the members of this House object, and which the mover of the bill says he has no desire to have incorporated in the bill. The only fear that the member for St. Boniface has, is that if the bill be sent back to the Railway Committee and that clause struck out, it would necessitate the sending of it back to the House of Commons, and in that event it might be lost. That is, the influence of the parties who insist upon the incorporation of the clause for which the company did not ask, and which they do not want, might defeat the bill, and defeating the bill would destroy investments which have been made by the parties connected with the road who live in Winnipeg, which, I understand, amount to some $30,000 or $40,000.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I was told it was $20,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the only difficulty which presents itself to my mind. If, as the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface pointed out, the bill now before the Railway Committee which has for its object the construction of a road from Winnipeg to the angle of the Lake of the Woods, thence to Duluth, be defeated, then the clause to which my hon. friend refers would have no effect and would not be operative. In looking at the bill passed by the House of Commons, now before the Railway Committee, for the construction of the road to which I have referred, you will find a similar clause to that which has been incorporated in the bill now under consideration, so that if the two bills passed there is no doubt in my mind that the amalgamation would at once take place, and that the parties who would obtain the new bill—that is the bill that has not yet passed our committee—would amalgamate with this road in order to obviate the necessity for building the road from Winnipeg to the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, where they would otherwise join. This is really, as it strikes me, the case now before the House, and I take it for granted that if the hon. gentleman from Monck had the clause to which I have referred struck out of this bill, he would not object to the extension of the time for the completion of the road under the charter which has been in existence some seven or eight years, and to which the government of the day granted a land subsidy of some 6,400 acres per mile. That is the way it stands. If it stood alone I do not hesitate to say that I would vote at once to strike out that clause, and if I thought it would not jeopardize the bill to the extent of destroying the investments which have been made, I would say to the Senate, as far as I am concerned individually, and for many of the reasons advanced by the hon. gentleman, to vote for the striking out of the clause; but it can be accomplished by the means suggested by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface. If the majority of the committee and the majority of this House are in favour of defeating the bill to which I have referred, and which is now before the Railway Committee for consideration, then the clause in the bill now before the House will be of no avail. The suggestion has been made by my hon. friend on my right that the hon. gentleman should allow this bill to stand until after the meeting of the Railway Committee to-morrow, when the other bill will be taken into consideration; then if that is not passed there will be no harm in passing this.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have no anxiety at all. I am desirous that the people of the North-west and Manitoba should have all the facilities that could be afforded them, but at the same time there are other interests—the interests of the shipping of this country—which I am looking at. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Kirchhoffer) gets very eloquent at the idea that I should venture to interfere with Manitoba at all. I have just as much interest, probably, in Manitoba, as my hon. friend, and just as much interest in the welfare of the people of Manitoba as my hon. friend or any man in the province. My object in moving in the first place to send the bill back to the committee was to see if some arrangement could not be made to satisfy everybody. Otherwise if he does not agree to send it back to the committee, I shall move to strike out the second clause of the bill. I am bound to do my duty. I have no object at all to incommode the people of Manitoba, who have to go thirty or forty miles to market, as my hon. friend from Brandon says. I wish every man had a market at his door, because they are Canadians and British subjects, and I feel an interest in them all; but if he refuses to send the bill back to committee, where we can discuss it calmly and coolly, and see what can be done to serve the interests of all, I will do my duty. I must, when he moves the third reading, move to strike out the second clause. If the Senate vote to sustain the bill as it is, that is not my business; I will have done my duty, and it is a satisfaction to a man who knows that he has done his duty.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The object of my hon. friend could be attained just as well by passing this bill and altering the clause in the other bill, which would render this clause absolutely inoperative, because although they would nominally have the power to make an agreement, still they could not make an agreement with any company, which would not be authorized to make an agreement.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Would my hon. friend allow the bill to stand until we see if the clause in the other bill can be struck out?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If the hon. gentleman will not allow the bill to stand, I shall move to strike out the second clause if I lose my motion to send it back to the committee.

The bill was allowed to stand until to-morrow.

THIRD READING.

Bill (49) "An Act respecting the Richelieu and Lake Memphremagog Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow).

THE INTEREST BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the whole consideration of Bill (I) "An Act respecting interest."

In the Committee.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Hon. gentlemen will remember that the bill was referred to the committee again in consequence of the House desiring to see the amendments in print. I have since had communications from various quarters and also observed the newspaper articles on the bill, to which they refer always with approbation. In no case have I heard or seen any objection.

On the first clause.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE moved that this Act shall not apply to any existing loan company, either Dominion or Provincial, acting under a charter of incorporation of Building Societies Act. He said:—My reason for moving this amendment is that I do not think it would be fair or right to pass any laws now that would give an opportunity for litigation. We do not want those companies to have their charters questioned at the present time, and I do not see that there is anything wrong with the amendment that I propose.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I would suggest to my hon. friend that that would come in better at the end of clause four.

On the second clause.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It appears to me that the bill is perfectly useless and quite unnecessary. I cannot conceive of anything plainer than a note of hand given stating that five per cent per day shall be paid as interest. To use the words "per annum" is no improvement. If you want to make this so that ignorant people will understand it, will they understand "per annum" better than they understand per day or per week or per month? The man who deliberately signs his name to a note agreeing to pay five per cent per day or per week, understands just as well what he is doing as if you put the words "per annum" in the Act. I submit that no such rate should be exacted from the people of this country as five per cent per day, I do not care under what circumstances, nor five per cent per month even. I would suggest to the hon. leader of the government that a bill should be introduced declaring the maximum amount of interest that shall be charged under any circumstances whatever. If this man who has been referred to in this House on a former occasion did wrong, this does not prevent such wrong-doing. All that parties would have to do, in making a contract, would be to say that the rate was 1,600 per cent or 1,700 per cent per annum, and the man making his mark would not know what the term meant if he did not understand the meaning of five per cent per day. It is an immoral and improper thing to allow any man to get such exorbitant interest under any circumstances whatever.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—All we want to provide here is that a man shall not be committed to the payment of an exorbitant rate of interest without his knowledge. We propose to prevent it by providing that the contract shall show on the face of it the amount of interest per annum he has to pay. That is a very proper amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—There is some force in the remark made by the hon. member from Murray Harbour. Under the bill, as it stands, there is no alteration of the rate of interest, and it would be just as reasonable for the individual mentioned, when the bill was first introduced, to charge his 1,700 or 1,800 per cent per annum as it was before. I think we should certainly show our opposition to any cases of that kind coming up again, by mentioning in this bill some particular amount beyond which the rate of interest should not be charged. As the bill is framed, there is no limit whatever, any more than there was before, and the bill is practically worthless, in my opinion.

The second clause, as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I beg to move the following clause:

That this Act shall not apply to any existing loan company, either Dominion or provincial, acting under its Act of incorporation, or the Building Societies Act.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—But what is going to happen such societies projected in the future? Are those companies established in the past going to have a monopoly, and are we not to allow companies in the future to have the same right? I would want it to apply to future companies as well as to the old companies.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I do not think it is necessary to reply to that at all, because I think the statement made in the motion is quite clear enough to the perceptions of every hon. gentleman in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Not to mine.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The amendment simply provides that the legislation you are passing now shall not interfere with the rights already acquired. It is no more a monopoly than they have at present.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—And to companies in the futnre?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—We need not consider the child before it is born. It is not retroactive legislation. I have had it examined by a first class authority in Montreal, and there is no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see any object in this clause at all. We are not taking away the right of these parties to make whatever bargain they please, or charge what interest they please, but it simply says you shall state the rate of interest on the document. I do not see why a building society or a loan society that advances money on buildings and accepts weekly or monthly payments on the moneys they advance, should not be compelled to comply with this law the same as any other party. It does not take away from them any right whatever. All that the bill provides is that if they are charging twelve or fourteen per cent in the form of agreement they have, that it shall be stated upon the face of the contract between the borrower and the lender. That, it seems to me, is a reasonable proposition, and I do not see why any company should seek to be excepted from its provisions.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I think there are a good many like myself who do not understand the Interest Act, the way it was brought in. There are certainly some very wide divergencies of opinion. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell said in reference to payments that in a certain way they paid 13⅔ per cent interest, and the hon. leader of the opposition said it was 11⅓.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it is just the reverse.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I thought it was the hon. gentleman from Bothwell said that, but I find I am wrong. It was the hon. member from Peterborough. In that case you see you are both very far wrong, because it is a shade over 9 per cent. It is not certainly 9⅔ per cent. It is less than 10 per cent, so that you are vastly wrong there, and I have had that gone over by one of the best actuaries of the Dominion of Canada, I do not care where the other is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What rate was that?

Hon. Mr OGILVIE—Six per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For how long?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Ten years. But the length of time does not make any difference. I do not think there is anything in that amendment or that clause which I want to have inserted now that will injure anybody. Any loan company which does not do everything fair and square and above board does not remain long in existence with us. The loan company that requested me to have this clause inserted in the bill has, certainly as good a reputation as any company in the Dominion of Canada. I recollect a case in which a "philanthropist" in the city of Montreal, one of our pious goody-goody men, got out of paying a loan of $5,000, simply because through inadvertence in the taking of the loan he was to be charged 7 per cent, and he found it was wrong under the law at that time, and he got out of paying both principal and interest. I may be somewhat obtuse in the matter, I was not sure that I understood the interest clause properly, and I thought this would preserve the rates we have now, and that is all I want.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is it going to interfere with any of our present rates?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They tell me no, but I do not know what it may interfere with before it goes through.

Hon. Mr. COX—I think the bill as introduced would interfere with building societies, but as amended it would not deprive them of any rights they now have, nor would it be objectionable to them in any way. I fancy the hon. gentleman from Montreal has reference to the bill as originally introduced. Building societies now are obliged to show on the face of their mortgage the rate of interest it bears, just the same provision as this present amendment makes for other borrowers or lenders. With reference to the rate referred to by the hon. gentleman from Belleville as 13⅔ and by myself during the last discussion as 15 per cent, both of us may be right, and the hon. gentleman from Montreal may be right in saying 9⅔. They add the interest and principal and spread it over thirty or forty years' half-yearly payments, and one company's rate may be 8, and I think I can demonstrate that some companies charged as high as 18 under the instalment plan—14 per cent, 15 per cent, and some 11 per cent, and it was impossible for an ordinary borrower to tell what the rate was at all. The amendment that was brought in compelling all companies to show the actual rate on the face of the mortgage had a most beneficial effect and did a great deal of good; and the amendment that has now been adopted in this bill will have the same effect I have no doubt. It will show borrowers the actual rate they are paying. I am sure none of the loan companies will object to this amendment. It will not affect them in any way.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I would like to say one word in answer to the hon. gentleman from Peterborough (Mr. Cox). I do not know what loan companies may charge, whether it is ten, fifteen, or, like our good friend in Montreal, 1,800 per cent; but I know this, that if a loan is made at six per cent, and payable five, ten, fifteen or thirty years, the rate of interest is not one cent different; it is exactly the same. I know what I am talking about. The rate remains the same, and whether it is five, ten or twenty years the rate is not altered one iota.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I do not see why there is so much discussion about this matter. The bill is simply to provide that the borrower, though a fool, shall know what he is paying. If a man pays five per cent per day he is paying 1,825 per cent per year. If a man is paying so much a day, this bill is to show him how much he pays a year.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I am not familiar with the operations of building societies. If there is such complication in the method of working these societies it would make it questionable whether they were charging one rate or another. It appears that there is a difference of opinion amongst experts, as with doctors, as to the rates charged under certain circumstances. Applying this to buildlng societies, is it possible they may make mistakes and misstate the amount of interest they are charging, so as to bring themselves under this clause? Otherwise I think the bill should apply to them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I intended to ask a somewhat similar question. Supposing a mortgage for $1,000 was given ten years ago, payable 20 years after date on the instalment plan, and that amount divided into 20 annual instalments, because that is the way that many mortgages were given formerly, to which the hon. gentleman from Peterborough has called attention—in that case, according to the calculation of my hon. friend from Peterborough, the mortgagor would be paying nine and a half per cent. I am not an expert on these matters, but I asked Mr. Mason the manager of the Canada Permanent Loan Company, who is well known in Ontario, what the rate would be under those circumstances and it was upon his authority I made the statement, and whether right or wrong, I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend; it makes no difference. But what I wish to ask is, would this clause prevent the collection of those annual instalments in the future as they fall due, because it is over six per cent, and being over six per cent would they not under this latter clause have the right to claim the balance? If the additional clause moved by my hon. friend from Alma is passed, that sets the question at rest. But would it have that effect?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It states a good deal more. You could have a clause stating that this Act shall not apply to existing cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am asking whether this, would prevent the collection of payments, or whether it would prevent litigation by action to collect a sum paid over and above six per cent?

Hon. Mr. COX—Let me explain what I mean with reference to this: Supposing a man borrows a thousand dollars and agrees to repay it in twenty equal payments, principal and interest combined, an ordinary borrower may be deceived as to the rate of interest he is paying, and the law requires the lender to state on the face of the mortgage what the rate is, and it is a perfectly fair and reasonable thing. It has been the law regarding loan companies for several years, and has been beneficial. The borrower knows just what rate he is paying, and this bill does not in any way interfere with that. It requires the lender on a note of hand, or the lender in any other way, to state the rate per annum, just as mortgage companies have been required in recent years to state on the face of the mortgage their rate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend knows that law was passed a few years ago. I am speaking of mortgages which existed prior to the passage of that law.

Hon. Mr. COX—I do not think that when that Act was passed it was retroactive upon existing mortgages.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, is this?

Hon. Mr. COX—I do not think it is. I do not think this refers to any building society. I do not think it affects them in any way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend knows, taking this case, that if a man borrows $1,000, payable in 20 years at 6 per cent, he gave a mortgage for $2,200, the $2,200 being divided into 20 payments of $120 a year. There are mortgages of that kind existing I believe to-day. Would this bill interfere with them?

Hon. Mr. COX—I do not think it would have any effect upon them at all.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Supposing a contract was made to-morrow, and, in the opinion of the people making it, they were charging six per cent, and supposing they had made a mistake, would it vitiate the contract?

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Would this apply to existing contracts or not?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It clearly would not apply to existing contracts. The rule of law clearly is that a bill always refers to future transactions, unless the contrary appears. I enter into a contract which is perfectly valid. It cannot be supposed that a legislature can make that invalid. If it was valid when made, it remains valid. With regard to the present amendment, I do not see that there is any danger in its adoption. Those cases do not arise under ordinary circumstances. I think there is ample provision in that case in the law as it is now, and I see no harm in adding it, and the effect of it is that whatever the law is now with regard to loan companies, we do not change it. I propose to pass the clause which my hon. friend suggests, and I will look into the matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am sorry to hear the Minister of Justice make the statement he has made. No reason has been shown why loan companies should not be subject to the provisions of this bill as well as other lenders.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They are obliged under the present law to write on the face of the contract what the rate of interest is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With regard to loan companies in the lower provinces, I very much doubt whether that is the case. It may be the case in Ontario, but I do not think it is in the lower provinces. I think these cases should be provided for, and the poor man who has to borrow money should understand clearly and distinctly what he has to pay; and if it takes the best actuary in the Dominion—he whom the hon. gentleman from Alma employs—to tell a man what rate he is paying, it cannot be very clear. The law of Ontario may provide for these cases. If you say in this bill that this provision shall not apply to these companies it is questionable whether that would not exempt them from the law they are now working under. I agree with my hon. colleague from Halifax, I see no reason why loan companies should be exempted from this provision. In fact, from what I have heard, it would seem to me there are strong reasons why they should come under its operation, from the fact that they are accustomed to make loans where the yearly rate of interest is not stated, and it is desirable the borrower should know the yearly rate of interest. I think the law should not be retroactive; it should not apply to existing contracts, because loans made in good faith where the rate was not stated might be imperilled by it; but as long as the law is not retroactive I think it should apply to every loan of money.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It would be very difficult to tell what the rate would be. In the older days it was perfectly impossible for the company to tell what the rate of interest was, and a most extraordinary rate has been charged at times. But a change has taken place since that time, and we have got into a better state, and I believe there will be no difficulty in a company stating what the rate of interest is.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to make one remark before the motion is put. I understood when this bill was first introduced it was relief of the poor unfortunate illiterate man, and that he was going to be protected from an extravagant charge of money for interest, but it appears now from the discussion that it is a covert act on the part of the building society which have the rate of interest so covered up that it is almost impossible for an educated man, an actuary and bank manager to understand the rate of interest these societies are charging, and if an exposure and a correction of the doings of these societies can be effected by a bill of this kind, I think it is necessary and desirable it should be introduced. Now, it appears that two educated gentlemen in this room cannot agree upon what rate of interest is being paid upon a certain amount which has been stated here. I think that that should be fairly and properly understood by every one, especially by those who are dependent upon these societies for obtaining money. If they borrow money supposing they are getting it at six per cent, and they are actually paying twelve and thirteen, they should know exactly the rate they are paying. It should be stated on these documents so that they would know the rate of interest that they are paying. I think the discussion has been of some service quite in an opposite direction, or in a different direction at all events, from the object which we understood was the object of the bill when introduced—the protection of the poor and ignorant man.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It seems to me the strongest argument which can be cited in favour of making the loan companies subject to the law is the fact we have before us. Here we are, a company of experts, in which there is a divergence of opinion as to the rate of interest per annum.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This bill does not affect the rate of interest at all. I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman from Alma (Mr. Ogilvie), or the institutions whose interests he is apparently upholding here, should have an objection to letting a man know the rate of interest paid.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Nor is there the slightest objection.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It appears to me, from some remarks made by hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House, that there is not a unanimous opinion as to the correct meaning of clause two. For my part I favour the clause which has been suggested by the hon. gentleman from Alma, because, if I understand this legislation aright, the principle which governs these loan companies is something different from what is intended to be introduced here. There is a clause in some Act which I cannot quote, but which the hon. leader of the House referred to a little while ago, which compels those loan companies, in making loans, to state in the contract the per annum rate of interest. It may be only in Ontario or Quebec.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is a Dominion Act.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It requires a loan company, when making a loan, to state in the instrument the rate which the borrower is paying. I do not understand that this clause is intended to affect in the same way a transaction of that kind where it is not made by a loan company. For instance, if one gentleman makes a loan to another and adds on the interest and takes from him a note payable, say $50 a month, and payable in five or six months, I do not understand that this clause affects a transaction of that kind at all. If a man draws a note, say for $500, payable $100 a month for five months and he brings that to another man and gets it cashed and receives only $250 for it, I do not understand that this clause applies to a transaction of that kind at all, but the case of a loan company is different. A loan company is compelled, under its special Act, to state on that instrument the amount of interest the man is paying for the money he receives.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If they go into the market and buy they do not.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not know that a loan company can go into the market and buy notes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They can buy mortgages.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Then it would not apply to a transaction of that kind, but it would to the kind of transaction I have mentioned, where a man negotiates a loan payable by monthly payments, and where he adds the interest to the amount of the principal and no interest whatever is stated on the face of the note which he gives. I do not understand that this applies to a transaction of that kind at all, only to a transaction such as the one referred to the other day which occurred in Montreal, where a man made a loan and stipulated on the face of the instrument that he was to pay $5 a day interest. It does not refer to a loan directly where the rate of interest is not stated on the instrument given by the borrower.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committe, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY CO.'S BILL.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

The order of the day having been called:

Consideration of the second amendment made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 33) "An Act respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED said:—With the permission of the House, I should like to withdraw this bill. The promoters think it is in their interest not to press it before the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Has the hon. gentleman consulted the hon. member from Alberta with respect to that matter? I am not objecting to the withdrawal of the bill, because I think that the promoter of a private bill has a right to withdraw it if he pleases, although it will be remembered that in a case which became very famous a different doctrine was held in this House—in the case of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. It was held there that the promoter could not withdraw the bill. In this case the interests of the town of Macleod are very considerably involved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. gentleman does not suppose the cases are analogous.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no analogy between the two cases referred to by my hon. friend. This is a case in which it was not made obligatory upon the company to extend their line to Fort Macleod, but, on the contrary, it provided, in the event of their extending their line, that they should then run into Fort Macleod. They prefer not to extend their line, but simply to leave it as it is.

With the consent of the House the bill was withdrawn.

MANITOBA AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (24) "An Act to incorporate the Manitoba and Pacific Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman should give us a little further explanation with respect to this bill. It may be a line intended to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Out of courtesy to the inquiry made by my hon. friend from Halifax, were I familiar with the particulars, I should be very pleased to give them to the House. I am simply moving this bill in the absence of my hon. friend from Wolseley.

The bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (16) "An Act to amend the Railway Act."—(Mr. Lougheed).

Bill (5) "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens."

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST READING.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (38), "An Act respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This bill is of a revolutionary character, such a bill as has never been introduced in the House before. Moreover, when the bill was brought up first in the House of Commons it met with such opposition that it was withdrawn. The opponents of the measure, thinking that it was not to come up again this session, went home, and in their absence it was taken up again without their knowledge. They have had no time to see the bill—it was not printed, and is not printed yet. It would be very unfair to those who are interested in this measure if the bill were read the second time before it is printed. It should be postponed until next week.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I merely took charge of the bill because nobody seemed to be interested in it here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At this stage of the session, it is dealing rather hardly with the bill to postpone it until next week, because that is practically killing the measure. If it is read the second time on Friday, it will not go before the Railway Committee until Wednesday of next week.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I am willing to have it postponed until Monday or Tuesday next. The bill is not printed and nobody has had a chance to see it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that there are private rights seriously affected by this bill. They might be injured if those who are opposing the measure are taken by surprise, and it would be well to postpone the second reading.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is time that we took a stand about the introduction of bills in this House when nobody has been asked to take charge of them. It would be only proper treatment, under such circumstances, to let the bill stand over until whoever is promoting it would ask somebody here to take charge of it.

The second reading of the bill was postponed until Monday next.

PACIFIC CABLE CONFERENCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to inquire of the government whether any report of the proceedings of the Pacific Cable Conference, held in London during the past year, has been received from the Honourable Sir Donald Smith, and the Honourable Alfred Jones, the Canadian representatives at said conference? If so, will it be laid before parliament, and when?

2. If a report has been received, has the government taken any action thereon? If so, what?

He said:—Hon. gentlemen will readily understand the reason why I ask for this information. It is a question in which I have taken a good deal of interest since the subject was mooted some years ago, and having been at the first meeting of the conference in London, I feel somewhat anxious to know what prospect there is of the accomplishment of the great object which the late government had in view in suggesting that conference. I ask this question, of course, with a good deal of diffidence, fearing that I may receive the same curt reply that I received the other day when I asked a question in reference to the plebiscite. However, in this, as in many other cases, I suppose we will learn the policy of the government through a published interview of a deputation with the cabinet ministers, or through newspaper reports. In that case, as in many others, we got our information, not through the proper course in parliament where inquiries are made, but through the correspondence of the newspapers from Ottawa, or through reports of deputations. As we now know what the policy of the government on the plebiscite question is, we will have to be satisfied for the time being. If my hon. friend will kindly state what has been done with reference to the Pacific cable, or is likely to be done, I think the country will be relieved of some little anxiety that exists.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fully appreciate the interest the hon. gentleman takes in this subject, having himself been so intimately connected with it, and I, therefore, will be as frank as public policy will permit me to be. The report of the Pacific cable conference has been received. The government, however, are not in a position to make it public as yet, because it is further to be considered by a conference of the premiers, who are shortly to meet in London, and for that reason I am unable to bring it down. At present it is confidential. At the earliest possible moment, however, the public will be informed of the result.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer is quite satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there any change in the position of the Sandwich Islands government with regard to the landing of the cable on their shores? They objected some time ago, and I saw recently in a paper a statement that they had consented to allow the British cable to land at the island, and that two ships of war were surveying around the shore.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not in a position to answer my hon. friend. I saw the same report in the papers to which he refers, but beyond that, I am not advised.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be possible that the British men of war are surveying for that or for some other purpose. It is improbable that consent has been given, because it is well known that the treaty existing between the United States and the Hawaiian government prevents any power being given for the landing of a cable on their shore without the consent of the United States. When that consent was applied for some little time ago it was refused by the government of the United States. Until that treaty is abrogated, the Hawaiian government is not in a position to make that concession to Great Britain or to any other country.

CANADIAN EXPORTS TO FRANCE.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of the Senate, a detailed statement showing the character, quantity and value of the different articles exported from Canada to France, for the years ending 30th June, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896.

He said: As I explained when I gave this notice, it is merely to complete the return as laid on the table a few days ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to the address going. I may say when the leader of the opposition called my attention to the omission of the exports from Canada to France in the return brought down, I gave instructions to the Customs Department to prepare the statement, and I hope to get it shortly. I have no objection to the address being passed. In the meantime the return is being prepared.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY'S PETITION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved :

That the Eighteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, on the petition of the American Bank Note Company, be referred back to the said committee with instructions to report in favour of the suspension of the 49th Rule of the Senate, in so far as the same regards the said petition.

He said : I have nothing more to add to what I said yesterday, I trust that the members of the Committee on Standing Orders will not object to the question being relegated to them again. Under the circumstances, I do not think they can have any objection to it. It is a mere act of justice to these parties, and I hope, therefore, that they will withdraw their opposition and allow it to go back for reconsideration, when further facts may be brought to their notice which will enable them to alter their decision and warrant them in reconsidering a suspension of the 49th rule. I do not think there is anything unreasonable in this demand, and I hope all opposition to it will be waived at the present time until the committee has had an opportunity of considering whether or not they can report in favour of the suspension of the rule.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I think the stand taken by myself yesterday in this matter was a wise and proper one. The motion was sprung upon the House without the House knowing what it was doing, but the Senate is now seized of the facts in connection with this matter. I disclaim, on my part and on the part of the committee, any intention of treating the bill unfairly or as a party question. We were merely upholding the rights of this House, and now that the House is aware of our reason for declining to suspend the rule, it can take any course which may seem proper to it. The House can suspend the rule or sustain it. I have no feeling either way myself. If the House feels justified in suspending the rule and going against the report of the committee, I have nothing to say. I repeat the course I took is a wise one, as a gross contempt of the rules of the House was committed and we took this step to uphold the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau is objectionable in its terms. The House has perfect power to refuse to accept the recommendations of the committee, but it seems to me a most improper thing to give a direction to a committee to act contrary to its own judgment and view. I do not think there should be any direction given. If they referred it back for further consideration, I could understand it, but to refer it back with instructions to bring in a decision contrary to their own view, seems to me to be out of place, because if the committee a second time reported that they saw no reason to suspend the rule, the House is at liberty still to refuse to accept the suggestion of the committee and to overrule it. I do not think it is proper for them to be directed to bring in a verdict contrary to their own judgment.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The House has on several occasions adopted the same course, and the committee has been obliged to do it. I have been on the committee myself, and had to bow to the wishes of the House and did bring in a report contrary to the previous one, and that is the reason I say that this motion is in order. I do not reflect upon the committee at all. I wish that to be understood. I merely desire that substantial justice be done to these parties. They have not conformed with our rules, but that was done in ignorance and without knowing the consequences, and it will be certain ruin to the gentleman who is entrusted with this bill if he is not reinstated in his rights, which rights have been given to other companies under similar circumstances. That is the reason why I object to the report of the committee. If they will say once and for all "we will enforce our rules," I shall hold up both hands to sustain them, but I do not believe in making this an exceptional case to all other cases which have preceded it both this session and the previous session.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that the course pursued by the hon. gentleman from Rideau is the only course open to him. The other course suggested could not be taken. The hon. gentleman could not take the opinion of the House over the heads of the committee. The rule relating to the matter reads :

No motion for a suspension of the rules for a private bill shall be in order unless the same shall be recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

So the hon. gentleman is obliged to refer this matter back to the committee, and he does not reflect, and I am sure I do not attempt to reflect, upon the action of the committee, but if the majority of the House have a different view of the matter, under all the circumstances, from that taken by the majority of the committee, then they have unquestionable power to instruct the committee to report in accordance with the view of a majority of the House. That has been done in a great many cases.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I cannot agree with the remarks which have fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, for this reason: that while there is no doubt that the House has a perfect right to refer any question to their committees, as a general rule, with instructions, in certain cases they cannot do so. Now this House has a perfect right to recommit a bill, with instructions to add to it, or to strike out a clause or part of a clause, but when dealing with the Committee on Standing Orders, whose duty is to inquire and see whether the petitions referred to them have been preceded by proper notices given to the public as provided by the rules concerning private bills, and to recommend to this House what best is to be done, after inquiry, I say the House has no right to order the committee to report in an opposite direction and against the conclusions they have already come to and reported to the House. Such a course would be in conflict with common sense. The committee have reported that the rule in this case must be sustained, that they cannot recommend its suspension, and the House has received their report. The House should not now say "no, we will send the report back to the committee and order that committee to reconsider its decision and report in favour of the suspension of the rule." As the hon. gentleman from Sarnia said a moment ago, if the House will refer the report to the Committee on Standing Orders, the committee will be at liberty to do this or to do that, but the House has no right to direct them to do that which they think is wrong.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is an ordinary matter to refer back to a committee a report that may be submitted to this House, and which the majority of the House does not approve of. Now, it seems to me there is too much sensibility on the part of the members of the committee—

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In regard to the report which they have made. They seem to take as want of confidence on the part of this House the failure to approve of that report. There are two or three considerations which enter into this matter, and which are worthy of the attention of the Senate. In the first place, it seems to me to be a want of courtesy to the Standing Orders Committee of the House of Commons if we insist upon throwing out a bill which was regarded by the committee of the House of Commons as having been sufficiently advertised. This difficulty may possibly confront us at some future time by the Standing Orders Committee of the House of Commons, namely, where the Senate rules are complied with and their rules are not rigorously observed, our bill will likewise be thrown out. I would recall the fact that a few days ago my hon. friend from Victoria pointed out the desirability of our rules conforming to the House of Commons rules in regard to this very matter.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Or vice versa.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Take it vice versa. My hon. friend then expressed his confidence in the House of Commons rules as being sufficient to indicate to the public the corporate powers which are being sought by applicants for such a bill as this. It seems to me that if so influential a body as the House of Commons could think that the limited advertising which has been complied with in this case is sufficient for that House, we should surely accept it in this case, and more particularly when we take into consideration the conditions surrounding this bill. It is not contended for a moment, as I understand, that this company is going to carry on operations in any of the outlying provinces of the Dominion. It is not contended that the public interests of the Dominion are in any way sacrificed by reason of this company not having advertised in British Columbia, the North-west Territories, Manitoba and other provinces. It is very well known to hon. gentlemen in this House that the intention of this company is to do business in the city of Ottawa, and in what way is the public interest in reference to this particular company affected to the extent of justifying this House in throwing out the bill at this stage? I in no way express myself on the merits of the bill, I have very serious doubts as to the wisdom of passing the bill in the shape in which it has come from the House of Commons. At the same time the dignity of this House would be sacrificed if we took advantage of the technicality which is sought to be taken advantage of in this particular case and prevent the bill going before the proper committee. This is not the first case of the kind. The occasion has arisen again and again in which some mistake has occurred by which professional men have examined the rules of the House of Commons and have come to the conclusion, as one logically would, that the rules of both Houses would be uniform on this question of advertising and have accepted the rules of the House of Commons as representing the same rules which obtained in the Senate and simply complied with the rules of advertising in the House of Commons. I need not point out to hon. gentlemen that it would be beneath the action of a dignified body like the Senate to take advantage of a technicality of this character. This technicality is being sought to be taken advantage of by reason of a feeling of antagonism to this bill. If the public interests are being sacrificed by reason of this bill, it should be disposed of on its merits and not on a mere technicality. I would, therefore, most heartily support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau division (Mr. Clemow) in this matter, and I hope the members of this honourable body will see their way to treat this bill on its merits.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I generally agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed), but I cannot say that I do so to-day. I certainly cannot agree with him that it is a sufficient reason for us to accept the bill because it comes to us from the House of Commons. There was a bill during last session that the House of Commons passed almost unanimously. We threw it out. That same bill, or a facsimile of it, came back to the House of Commons this year, and their Railway Committee threw it out by a vote of 77 to 22. I think we had better act for ourselves and on our own responsibility. The only reason I had for objecting to have the bill go back with that instruction to the committee was I thought that if I was a member of that committee myself—I used to be a member of it—and had sat and taken cognizance of that bill, as the committee I have no doubt did do, and had reported the bill, and this House passed a motion sending it back to us and instructing us what to do as a committee, I would consider it a pretty strong snub to the committee. An hon. gentleman, not many minutes ago, talking about the bill, said, "It is a pretty hard snub to me for what I have done," I said it is a harder snub to the committee.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman from Alma (Mr. Ogilvie) says, but we ought not to make such cast-iron rules at the tail end of the session. I would be considerate in this matter and kill the bill on its merits rather than take advantage of a technical point of that kind. In order to meet the objection of the hon. gentleman from Alma, I would substitute the following after the words "instructions to," "reconsider said report."

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I have no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would not be sufficient. It should be with instruction to report that the notice was sufficiently proved. The proposition made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) is one constantly brought before parliament, directing a committee to go back and report a bill. You cannot carry on parliamentary government, nor can a majority control unless you adopt a rule of that kind. A committee refuses to report a bill because of insufficient notice—is that to override the opinion of a majority of this House? What is this bill? It is purely a local bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—We do not know anything about the merits of the bill at all. It is a question of rules.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You have everything to do with the merits of the bill. Under our rules, in the case of a bill which only affects one province, the notice need only be published in the Canada Gazette and a local newspaper. I understand the full notice has been given, as far as this bill is concerned, in the Canada Gazette and a newspaper of the city of Ottawa. The company go into operation in the city of Ottawa Their business is purely local under the bill. They are not authorized to do business outside of Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The bill says anywhere in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen are probably aware of the circumstances under which the company are here. They are incorporated in the state of New York. They come here to carry out a contract given by the government of Canada. They find it necessary, in order to do that, to have their Act of incorporation recognized here. All they ask is that they be recognized in Ottawa in their corporate capacity. In all those cases the usual course has been, where no other interests were affected, to allow a bill to pass, although the notices may have been defective and even when it has been introduced without giving any notice whatever. Who is affected by this? I think the hon. gentleman will find it impossible to find any parties who are at all affected by this bill except those who were in a competing line.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—A gentleman in Ottawa, a barrister, appeared for Mr. Burland to oppose the bill. He said it affected rights and interests of his, and in view of that, together with the fact that the rule had not been complied with, the committee brought in the report before us.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a rule of all committees that if persons who ought to have notice appear before a committee, that waives the necessity of notice, because the object of the notice is that they may appear before the committee. If they appear before the committee, from the very fact of their being present they cannot plead they were not aware of the legislation. The notice is required in the public interest. No one can urge that any one outside of the Bank Note Company is affected by this bill. I will mention a few instances in which the committee has reported bills without the necessity for notice. Where no interests except those of the petitioners are likely to be affected by the proposed legislation, they dispense with notice. Where no exclusive privileges are asked for by the bill, notice is not insisted upon. No exclusive privilege is asked for in this case. The company simply ask for corporate powers. When the omission has arisen from some accident and not from any negligence on the part of the petitioner and the absence of notice would not have been prejudicial to any private individual—when it can be shown the legislation is so recent that it was impossible to give the requisite notice — when the committee have had abundant evidence that all parties likely to be affected were fully informed of the application, and that there was no opposition to the project—when the committee have found that the Act was necessary on account of some ambiguity — in all those cases the notice is dispensed with. There are innumerable instances in which, no public interest being in any way affected, the committee have dispensed with notice, but in this case full notice is given.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was given in the Gazette and in the local newspapers.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—Notice was not given in the provincial papers, and the solicitor was notified that he had failed to give proper notice six weeks ago and he did not give notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where it affects only a province or territory a notice inserted in the Canada Gazette and in a newspaper published in the county or counties affected is sufficient. This is practically a local company.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—But the bill applies to the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If you think that objectionable you can strike it out when it comes before the committee, and provide that the company shall not operate outside of the province of Ontario. That can be done if the committee think anything is to be accomplished by it. Would it not be a perfect farce to say that the company should have put notices in the papers of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, and all the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is the rule of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rule is never carried out in that spirit. I do not think that is the rule of the House. It comes under the particular rule which I have read, where the institution is located in one particular province and is not competent to do business in any other province. When the bill comes before the Committee on Private Bills, they could limit the operations of the company to the province of Ontario as the notice was limited to that province.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I wish to explain with reference to the remarks of the hon. member from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed). It is true I called the attention of the House to the necessity of assimilating the rules of the Senate and the rules of the House of Commons. I did not express any fancy for the rules of the House of Commons. That was left open. I think our own rules are preferable to those of the House of Commons. This bill stands in a different position from any other bill in another matter. A promoter of a bill could easily be misled by looking at the rules of the House of Commons only, but when a promoter is notified of his having failed to comply with our rules and neglects to comply, that alters the situation. When, through his own neglect, after having been notified he does not give notice, just to save a few dollars, he should take the consequences of his own negligence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would cost $100.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We ought to deal with this bill in precisely the same spirit and in the same way we have done with others. I do not think there is any indignity inflicted upon the committee by the motion which the hon. member from Ottawa has proposed to this House for adoption. Every committee of this House is a committee acting under instructions from the Senate to the extent to which this House chooses to give instruction. Sometimes we go into committee to consider a bill without instructions, and it is open to the House to propose when that bill is in committee——

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question? Can he cite a single instance where a committee having struck out a section of a bill the House ordered the committee to put it in?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no difficulty in the matter at all. When a committee of this House rises, after considering a bill and after having carried through all the amendments proposed, it is open to any hon. gentleman to move that the bill be not now read the third time, but that the House resolve itself again into committee for the purpose of considering the specific amendments proposed.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Hear! hear! Let the House go into committee on it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That specific amendment is the only thing that can be considered by that committee, and if the House goes into committee for the purpose the committee can carry the amendment. What does this House do? If the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) is adopted the House will have to give to the Committee on Standing Orders instructions in precisely the same way and of the same character that it gives to a committee of the whole House when it goes into committee to consider a particular motion which has been proposed, and there is no indignity inflicted on the committee. The committee, as a subordinate body of the House, is open to instructions from the House, and if this resolution is carried will receive its instructions, and the committee will be obeying the order of the House in doing as they are directed by that motion. It seems to me that that is the proper motion to make, because, notwithstanding all that the hon. member from British Columbia (Mr. Macdonald) has said with regard to the importance of persons applying for legislation conforming to the rules of the House, he knows right well that in the majority of cases which the Standing Orders Committee have had to consider those rules have not been complied with, and, except in this case, those rules have not been enforced. In every case the committee have reported that the notice was sufficient. My hon. friend from London (Sir John Carling) says that these parties were notified that the notice given was insufficient and that further notices were required. The clerk of the House informed the committee that precisely the same information given to every other party, and no other party has been ruled out, and in no other case has the committee refused to report the bill because those rules were disobeyed. If that be so, surely the committee cannot pretend to say that it is a proper reason for this House to reject this bill when it was not an adequate reason for rejecting a dozen other bills which were considered by the committee and reported. Then, further than that, we are to look at the reason of the rules. The object of the rule is to protect the public interest to see that exclusive privileges are not being sought for by Act of parliament that may prove, if granted, detrimental to other parties. Now, there is no attempt to ask for exclusive powers in this bill. There is no attempt to denude anybody else of the right they now possess or to prevent them acquiring any corresponding right for the future. In that respect there is simply a desire expressed in the bill to have corporate powers conferred upon this company, which do not limit in the smallest degree any right which might be asked for by any other party seeking incorporation. Then what reason was there for insisting upon the rule in this case? My hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Macdonald), says that the reason was that one party appeared before the committee and objected because he said the notice was not sufficient. That was not a proper objection for him to make.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—He said there were other interests jeopardized by the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a proper subject for the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to consider. They are the parties constituted by this House for the purpose of considering that matter. That is not a question that comes before the Standing Orders Committee. The Standing Orders Committee simply consider the questions of form and not questions of intrinsic merit and that proposition is a matter of intrinsic merit which belongs to another committee and does not belong to the Committee on Standing Orders. I mentioned yesterday that before this bill came up there were eight others carried through where the notices were defective in exactly the same manner that the notice was defective in this bill, and the reason given for adopting them was that nobody appeared before the committee to object to the insufficiency of the notice. The fact that nobody appeared may be an evidence that nobody was aware that such a bill was asked for, and I know the principle of the House of Commons in such cases is to regard the absence of all opposition, if a bill is one that upon its face discloses probable grounds for opposition, as a reason for rejecting the bill if the notices are not sufficient, because there may be interests jeopardized by the want of notice and the fact that nobody has appeared may be regarded as an evidence that nobody is aware that such legislation, hostile to their interests, has been asked for in parliament. But that does not apply here at all. It is a sound maxim that where the reason of the rule does not apply, the rule itself should not be insisted upon, and in this case the reasonable rule does not apply and the reasonable rule is to protect the interests of various other parties that might be injuriously affected, that might be taken away or that might be limited, and here it is not proposed to take away any right, or to limit any right, or to injuriously invade any franchise or privilege possessed by any other party; it seems to me that it is proper instruction to give at this period of the session, and we should not, upon a technical objection of this kind, which is not in any way applicable to this case; it is to a different class of cases that the rule is intended to be applied to, insist upon the observance of the rule. If this House is of opinion that that rule ought to be strictly enforced let it be known. What is the reason those parties did not give further notice after being notified by the clerk? It was because they learned that it was not the practice to do so, and that this Committee on Standing Orders had, for a dozen years or more, acted upon precisely the same principle that they acted upon in eight other cases which preceded this, that where there was no evidence that any right was being jeopardized or that anything was asked for restraining the rights of any other party, the rule would not be insisted upon, and I think hon. gentlemen will see that it ought not to be insisted upon in this case, and that the motion made is a proper one.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—In considering this matter the committee did not take upon themselves to decide whether the notice was sufficient or insufficient. They only stated the fact which they were bound to find, namely, that the 49th rule was not complied with. They do not say whether it is right or not. They say, "It is none of our business; we have only to state the facts as they are; as we have no power to decide upon it, we will lay it before the House," and they report the matter to the House, and what does the House do? The House says, "That which you are not able to do in committee, we will give you power to do, and we will refer the bill back to you, and permit you to do that which you had no authority to do." For that reason it is no reflection upon the committee. The House is only indicating to the committee what they ought to do, which is quite a proper thing, in my opinion.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It appears to me we are discussing a matter that is not really before the Senate at the present time. We have been discussing the bill. We have certain rules established by the House for the government of the Senate and its committees. This matter was referred to the Committee on Standing Orders. They were expected, and instructed and bound to carry on the business of that committee in accordance with the rules of the Senate, and the Committee on Standing Orders reported to the Senate exactly the state of affairs as they found it, and there the committee left the matter in the hands of the Senate. The proposition is now made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau Division (Mr. Clemow) that this report shall be sent back to the committee—for what purpose? That the committee must recommend to the Senate the suspension of a rule of the Senate. The Senate established a rule and instructed the Standing Committee to do their work in accordance with that rule, and now the committee, having done their work faithfully and according to the letter of the rule, the Senate turns round and says "you must recommend us to suspend that rule." It looks to me as if the Senate was stultifying itself to a very great extent in this matter by asking the committee to do any such thing. The 17th rule of this House has been referred to, and if any hon. gentleman will carefully read over that rule he will see that it is very ambiguous, to say the least of it. The lawyers would be able to find a good deal of contradiction from the beginning of the rule to the end of it, and I think the common sense view of the matter will be this: That the Senate has power to suspend that rule, without referring it back to the committee. In that case, the Senate would not stultify itself and would not ask the committee to stultify themselves, by asking them to do what they have refused to do. I can quite appreciate the special effort of hon. gentlemen on this occasion, but the eight cases referred to by the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed) and the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) were not contested. They were not opposed by any person, and no one appeared before the committee to object to the bill. In this case it was quite different. It was opposed and strongly opposed, and the committee felt that they had nothing else to do but to adhere to the rules of the Senate. I do not wish to throw out the bill on this ground. In many respects the bill is very objectionable and I should like to see it defeated on its merits. If the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) chooses to introduce a resolution to suspend the rule in the Senate, I do not say that I shall vote for it, but I think it is stultifying the Senate, and placing the committee in a false position to ask them to do what they have refused to do. They have carried out their instructions to the letter; they reported the facts of the case, and the House can do as they like with the rule.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have looked at the original bill, and I find it did not necessitate advertising in the various provinces of the Dominion. If the hon. gentlemen will look at Bill (68) they will find it is a bill simply to operate in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is not the bill that passed the Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Precisely, but you have to take into consideration the bill introduced in the first instance. Here was a bill introduced into the House of Commons to incorporate the American Bank Note Company. When that bill was prepared the promoter of the bill was entirely within the rules, namely, advertising in the province in which the bill was intended to operate. Because the House of Commons may make certain amendments in the bill and make it broader than at first contemplated, surely this Senate is not going to say "You had to anticipate the amendments which were made by the House of Commons and should have advertised in the different provinces." If that were the case, you could defeat almost every bill which comes down. The first clause of the bill states that the business is to be carried on in the city of Ottawa and the second clause states that it is for the purpose of carrying on business in the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, and the next clause provides that the business is to be carried on in the city of Ottawa. But there is not a syllable in the bill which provides that the operation shall go beyond Ontario, or that they have power to exercise corporate powers outside of Ontario, and surely hon. gentlemen will not say that the bill is to be defeated because of the amendments in the Commons. I would point out paragraph C of rule 49 which states :

> Where the bill is intended to operate in more than one province, territory or district, such notice shall be published in the Canada Gazette and in a leading newspaper in each province, territory or district in which the bill is to operate.

It is therefore manifest we are labouring under a misapprehension and the committee has misconceived the purpose of the bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—In every case where the committee reports, unless injustice has been done, it is the duty of the House to support the committee. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has the same line of argument, it appears to me, in discussing everything that is brought before this House. When men were peremptorily discharged from the situations they held without notice, the hon. gentleman from Bothwell rises and says that the Tories did the same with the weights and measures inspectors, and therefore it was right that these men should be discharged. He thinks that it makes it right because a wrong was done before; and the same way with the production of confidential papers. They were not produced by other governments, and of course that justifies the present government in refusing to bring them down. He says they were quite justified in doing it because the former ministry did the same. I should like to remind the hon. gentleman that two wrongs do not make a right. He tells us that because the committee suspended the rules in one case they should have done it in every case. When he followed the example, as he put it, of the wretched Tories, that was some excuse for him, but now he has not that excuse. Because this committee neglected their duty in one instance it is no reason why they should do it in this case.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—If the facts are exactly as stated by the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed)—and I suppose he has informed himself in the matter—and the petition in the bill, as it was introduced into the House of Commons was for an Act to operate in the province of Ontario only, then it appears to me that the objection on the part of the Committee on Standing Orders does not apply, and that the true course to take is this : that if the House of Commons have chosen to enlarge the scope of that bill beyond what the notice stated the bill was to be introduced for, then there would be good ground for action when the bill comes before the Committee of Private Bills, because apparently the scope of the bill has been enlarged without due notice to others who may be interested in the bill if it extends beyond that province, but if the bill when it was introduced in the House of Commons, and the petition which asked for that bill, was limited to Ontario I cannot see how the objection stands.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—The petition before the Standing Orders Committee was a petition to do business all over Canada.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Then my hon. friend from Calgary must be wrong.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is the bill I am reading from, not the petition. It is the bill we are to treat. The rule says that where the bill is to operate in one province, you must advertise in that province, and if it is to operate throughout the Dominion, you must advertise in all the provinces.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may be allowed to read the rule again in reply to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Murray Harbour (Mr. Prowse). I have already read the rule, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this rule is absolute and clear :

> No motion for a suspension of the rules with reference to a petition for private bills shall be in order unless the same shall be recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

Consequently the hon. gentleman from Rideau Division (Mr. Clemow) has taken the only course he could.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The rule says :

> No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or any part thereof shall be in order except upon one day's notice in writing.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I gave that notice.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—At the same time it was done by the Senate, and if the Senate can suspend one rule it can suspend any other rule. The rule continues :

Specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended.

That says any rule can be suspended following that condition :

The rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended, and the purpose of such suspension. But any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate ; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall be precisely and distinctly stated ; and no motion for the suspension of the rule upon any petition for a private bill shall be in order, unless the same shall have been recommended by the Committee on the Standing Orders.

We are not making any motion for the suspension of the rules. It is the rule—not the rules :

No motion for the suspension of the rules in relation to any petition for a private bill shall be in order unless the same be recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Is it not the rule that one clear day's notice must be given? I was a member of the committee which made the rules, and they unanimously declared in favour of the provision that one single day should intervene ; notice would be given on Monday for Wednesday. One clear day was the interpretation given to the expression "one clear day's notice."

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It was raining very hard at that time.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Notice was always given for the third day. If you go over the minutes of the Senate, you will not find one notice which is not given from Monday until Wednesday, or from Wednesday until Friday—always one clear day. It has been the practice of this House, and it is the practice in England, one day means one clear day.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I ask the indulgence of the House again for two or three minutes to correct the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Calgary. He has told the House that we are to take the bill as it was presented to parliament, and not as finally passed. Such a doctrine I never heard of. To show what the Commons has done with the bill, I will read one clause from the bill, as it came before the Standing Committee :

The American Bank Note Company, hereinafter called "the company," is hereby invested with, and shall be entitled to all the powers, privileges and rights, as a corporation, necessary for the purpose of carrying on, in the city of Ottawa, Ontario, and elsewhere in Canada, a general engraving.

If we were to go back to the bill as first introduced, it would amount to nothing. It would simply be waste paper. The notice in the Gazette contained a notice of application for power to carry on business all over the Dominion. We have nothing to do with the bill as first introduced into parliament.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Rule 13 says :

One intermediate day's notice, in writing, must be given of all motions deemed special ; and any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not the rule. It is rule 17 which reads :

No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof, shall be in order except upon one day's notice in writing and that notice has been given.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—But that specifies one clear day. That is the present rule. It is a question of order, and the speaker must decide it. The question is whether it is in order to move to-day a motion of which notice was given yesterday. I say it is not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Rule 17 says so.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Rule 13 says not and it is the rule which prescribes how notices have to be given.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a different thing altogether.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—In your mind, but not in mine.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Rule 13 deals with new matter, a motion which is the subject of discussion. This motion does not necessitate any subject of discussion, because we are dealing with the report of the Committee on Standing Orders, and Rule 17 applies—that no motion to suspend, modify or amend, shall be in order except upon one day's notice.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Not at all. There is nothing before the House except the motion of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, which is a special motion, and which has provoked the discussion that has been going on since three o'clock and it is now five. The 17th rule has nothing to do with it. If I refer to our code of rules I find that the 13th rule, to which I have referred, is found in the chapter headed by the following words: "Notices of motions and motions in general." This 13th rule is a general rule, prescribing, as I said before, how notices of motion have to be given. It clearly enacts that one intermediate day must be allowed between the day the notice is given and the day the motion is put.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to the remarks of the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Macdonald) I have in my hand the petition and the notice in the Gazette. The notice in the Gazette does not ask specially for power to do business throughout the Dominion of Canada.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—If I had to decide a legal question I would look to the rules of the courts. Before the courts, when a notice is given and a motion is made, the rules of the court always require a clear day's notice, and that means that an intermediate day must intervene between the notice and the motion.. The 13th rule of this House says:

> One intermediate day's notice, in writing, must be given of all motions deemed special, and any motion if deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

In my opinion the motion of the hon. member for Rideau is deemed special. It initiates a subject of discussion which was not yet before the Senate. It is true that there has been a discussion on the subject in the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, but we had nothing before the House until the hon. member for Rideau brought his motion, and that motion initiated the present discussion. I think the motion of the hon. member comes under Rule 13 and must be deemed special, and there should be one intermediate day's notice between the day of the notice and the day fixed for presenting the motion. Rule 17 applies only to the ordinary motions which do not initiate a new subject of discussion requiring only one day's notice in writing.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask His Honour the Speaker——

Several hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This House is not like the House of Commons. I have a perfect right to appeal from the Speaker's decision if I please.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am in order.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We have a rule in this chamber that when the Speaker is on his feet the hon. member addressing the House sits down.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—I wish to add that I should be most happy that the right to appeal from my decision should be given to the hon. member because this is overruling the practice of the House during former sessions, and I should be most happy to be corrected.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was going to ask His Honour the Speaker if he had considered rule seventeen.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—I have, but I should very much like that the sense of the House should be taken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course, after the suggestion made by His Honour the Speaker, it might be well for us to decide whether that was the interpretation intended when the rule was made. Our practice has been to consider twenty-four hours the proper time. It is a serious matter for the convenience of the Senate whether in all those cases we should not continue to construe the rule as it has been construed in the past. In the past we have always construed the rule that when a notice is given to-day it may be considered to-morrow. Of course it is a matter for the Senate to consider, because the Speaker has invited us to express the view the Senate take of it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I ask the hon. gentleman to look at the rules. Rule 13 provides that "one intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special." Every one understands by that that a day must intervene between the notice and dealing with the motion. Then the other rule provides that "no motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule, or part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying the rule proposed to be suspended" etc. Now, these two clauses apply to totally different subjects. The matter before the House is undoubtedly a special motion. Under the rule, I think the Speaker's ruling is perfectly right and clear, that one intermediate day must intervene.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think it is right to say that I concur in the opinion just expressed by my hon. friend from York. I am sorry we are not going on with this matter to-day. It is a pity the committee have reported as they have done. I do not think they were justified for the reasons given, but my judgment on the question of order is in accordance with the ruling of His Honour the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—The hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) is certainly not in a position to criticize the course followed by the committee. He has been but a few months in this House; how, then, can he contradict the statement made by members of the committee? I was been here over twenty years, and I repeat, and defy contradiction, that the practice of that committee has invariably been to recommend the suspension of Rule 49 only on petitions or bills unopposed, and never where they have been opposed.

The motion was ruled out of order by the Speaker.

BANQUE DU PEUPLE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. FORGET moved the third reading of Bill (86) "An Act respecting the Banque du Peuple."

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—It is not my intention to oppose this bill. I believe it is a good one under the circumstances in which the bank is placed. It is only right to help those who have so much money in the institution to protect their interests, but I cannot let it pass without referring to legislation which passed this parliament twelve years ago. Parliament was at that time made aware of the bad state of that bank. I shall read what was then said. At the time it was explained to the House that the charter of the Banque du People was a special one, and a bad one also—that only thirteen, fourteen or fifteen of the stockholders had a right to interfere in its management, and that all the other shareholders were nothing else but silent partners. The only right they had was to keep silence and take things as they were. I asked, myself, at the time to change that charter, because the bank was then asking for a reduction of 25 per cent of its capital. On that occasion I said:

> Such is the Act and no doubt every silent shareholders who entered the company did so with a full knowledge of what he was doing. Therefore to that, I believe there can be no objection, but to-day, after having for over 40 years administered the affairs of this bank, the directors of that corporation who elect members to replace those who have resigned, have brought the bank to such a condition that they are unable at the present time to pay dividends. They called a general meeting of the shareholders both members of the corporation and silent shareholders and they were represented at that meeting, either by shareholder themselves or by proxy, 11,000 shares. The number of shares in the company is 32,000, so that there were present about one third of the number who were unanimous in asking for an amendment to the Act to reduce the capital of the bank. It is to this amendment that I object, because it is changing the position of those who become shareholders in that company, to such a degree that it becomes an injustice

I then asked that the bank be forced to ask for a new charter like the other banks, I continued:

> I think it was stated even if I did not know that the active members of the corporation had been lending money one to the other to very large amounts, I could state this, that it must be supposed (because it is not otherwise shown, either in the preamble or elsewhere,) that it is by bad management solely that the bank has been brought to its present condition. If that administration over which the great majority of the shareholders have no control, has ruined the bank to the extent of 25 per cent, is it reasonable to reduce the capital without giving to every one of the shareholders, even the silent shareholders, a vote, so that in future they may change the administration if it is not good, and secure proper management of the bank? Now, if this bill should become law, would it not be encouraging the present corporation to continue its course and fifteen or twenty years hence to come back to this House and ask that the silent shareholders should lose the balance of their money? But there is more than that. We have an example of what can be done by good management. Only four years ago the Hochelaga Bank of Montreal, got into difficulties, not through bad administration, but because the cashier had robbed the bank of nearly $100,000; and that small bank was thereby ruined, but its directors did not come to parliament to ask for a reduction of its capital. The shareholders changed the administration, and under good management, in three years to $100,000 was recouped. In the same way, the Hochelaga

Bank, by their statement, show that they have recovered from a loss of $200,000 and are now in such a good position that they will be able to pay dividends. Surely, if the Hochelaga Bank has in three years succeeded in recouping the $100,000 stolen from it the Banque du Peuple ought to be able in six years to recover from the effects of its loss of $200,000.

By refusing what is here asked it will compel the administration of the bank to change their course and adopt a better system. Experience has shown that this system is a very bad one. The whole of the money over $1,000,000 is in the hands of fourteen or fifteen men. True, they are responsible for it but they cannot be responsible for bad administration. The shareholders must loose if the bank sustains loss. To put into the hands of thirteen or fourteen men the entire control of this $1,000,000, most of it belonging to others is a dangerous principle. While the bank is asking parliament to-day for this amendment to their charter, why should we not refuse and let them come back with another bill for the same object and including in it a provision giving a vote to every shareholder would come under a double liability. But the danger of that is only on paper. Where has there been danger to the shareholders of the 100 banks we have in this country on that account? If there is no danger to the shareholders why not bring this bank under the same condition as others? No doubt it can be shown that in some cases shareholders in banks have been dued under the double liability clause; but is it the rule to make exceptional legislation or to legislate on a general principle? If we are to make special legislation for every institution, we will be sitting here every month of the year.

In this case it has been proved before the committee that this bill has not been asked for by more than one third of the shareholders. not even a simple majority . . . . Is it not apparent at once that there is something wrong in this bill?

I will move that this bill be referred back to the committee with instructions to add the following clauses:

(5). "This Act shall not come into force before it has been submitted to a special general meeting of the shareholders of the said bank, both of those shareholders who are members of the corporation as well as those who are only partners en commanditaires, and that such shareholders representing in person or by proxy at least two-thirds in value of the whole present stock of the said bank, at the said meeting, have approved thereof.

(6). The meeting mentioned in the fifth clause will be called by a notice given during two weeks in the Canada Gazette, and in two newspapers in the English language, and in two newspapers in the French language (in the city of Montreal) during the two weeks above mentioned. A circular will also be addressed by mail to each such shareholder at least fifteen days before such meeting, giving them notice of the day, hour and place of the meeting, and of the object of the meeting."

Such were the facts and the views which I put before parliament at that time, but the House seemed to shut their ears to my warning, and gave the legislation asked for. After twelve years these predictions have been verified. That bank is a complete ruin; and not only will the shareholders lose all their investment, but even hundreds of poor widows will lose their little money deposited in the bank; and are now labouring every day to gain their livelihood. I thought I should put that on record in this instance, to show that under some circumstances parliament treats those matters too lightly. In this case some twelve years ago there was a good deal of work done outside in the lobbies, and that is always bad work.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is sometimes said that a prophet is "not without honour save in his own country." That will not apply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bellerose) who has proved to his own satisfaction, and I have no doubt to the satisfaction of other people, that the prophecy he made some twelve years ago has been verified to the letter.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—When this bill was before the committee, a question was raised by a gentleman who appeared before it in opposition to the bill, as to the jurisdiction of this parliament. The claim set up was that being a question of civil rights and property, it came under the legislation of the province. Different opinions were expressed in the committee, and it was finally stated that the Minister of Justice would be asked to give an opinion to the House on the subject of jurisdiction before the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is quite true that this bill does touch, to a certain extent, property and civil rights, but almost all legislation within the Dominion jurisdiction does deal with property and civil rights, and the construction of the courts is that wherever the Dominion has jurisdiction that jurisdiction carries with it a right to deal with property and civil rights so far as the subject requires. Take the case of the general insolvency law; that deals with property and civil rights, and although property and civil rights are expressly given to the provinces alone, still an insolvency law deals very extensively with property and civil rights. I consider this bill as being one which parliament can pass if it wishes to pass it.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA AND SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER moved the third reading of Bill (19) "An Act respecting the Manitoba and South-eastern Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yesterday I placed an amendment in the hands of His Honour the Speaker in opposition to this bill. I have not the same objection to the bill now that I had to it yesterday, because the company took power to amalgamate with a railway that was chartered to run from Winnipeg to Duluth. I see in this bill that they have the same power to amalgamate, but that other company is not in existence. I have the assurance of the parties promoting this bill that they will carry out their undertaking on their original charter—that is, to the Lake of the Woods, and therefore I have no desire to oppose the bill, nor had I in the first place excepting to prevent the diversion of our trade to United States channels. I can say further, that the power of amalgamation they have now can only be exercised under the sanction of the Governor in Council. That is very satisfactory to me, because if they step over the line and do what is wrong, we will hold the government of this country responsible. That is a further inducement to me to withdraw my opposition to the bill. Yesterday I said I thought they should build this railway, because we have had statements made in this House, that people have to go 40 or 50 miles to market. It does not say very much for the leading men in Manitoba if the people are in that position. Here they have had a railway charter over this ground for eight years and they have done nothing. Now, I hope they will go on and give the people facilities to get their crops to market, because I feel interested in that country. I hope they will do more in the near future than they have yet done. In eight years they have not completed a mile of road, and only two or three miles have been graded. I warn them fairly, that if they have to come back here again, and I am living, if they do not do better than they have done, they will hear from me. If they fail to construct, parliament should see that somebody else is given an opportunity to occupy that ground and build the railway, so as to relieve the people from the grievance that my hon. friend from Brandon said yesterday they were suffering from. I was glad to see him take such an interest on behalf of those people, and I hope he will continue to use his influence in their behalf. Although I do not live in Manitoba, I have as much interest in it as he has, and I hope he and the hon. member from St. Boniface will do what they can to have this work constructed and not permit our trade to be diverted to foreign channels. If they undertake to do that they have to consult the government of this country, and I look to them to see that that is not done. If the company build the line of railway as first contemplated, they are all right; if they do anything else, they are all wrong. I have much pleasure in withdrawing the amendment that I placed in the hands of the Speaker yesterday.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

INTEREST BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The Order of the Day being read

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (I) "An Act respecting Interest."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT said—There was a good deal of discussion yesterday on this bill in consequence of an additional clause which my hon. friend from Alma (Mr. Ogilvie) offered, the result of which was that the bill was allowed to go through committee without any additional clause, and I was to consider the matter and confer with the hon. gentleman. I have prepared a fourth clause with the assent of my hon. friend, as follows:

This Act shall not apply to mortgages on real estate.

Mortgages on real estate are already provided for by the Act respecting interest in the Revised Statutes, and the companies to which my hon. friend referred and with reference to which there was a good deal of discussion yesterday, only lend on mortgages. I do not propose to alter the law on the subject. I leave it precisely where it is. I therefore move that the order be discharged, and that the bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move that the following be added as clause 4 :

This Act shall not apply to mortgages on real estate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems to me —although I am subject to correction on that point—that it is quite as necessary that this provision should apply to mortgages on real estate as to transactions by note of hand or any other way.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The subject of mortgages on real estate is already provided for.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Not the way this bill provides.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Substantially the same way. There is this difference : that under the existing provision as to mortgages no interest is recoverable while under the bill as it stands, the lender may recover 6 per cent. With this exception this bill is really framed to follow the principle of the present law as to mortgages.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may just remark, as my reason, that a loan society, the Crédit Foncier, did quite an extensive business in the province from which I come, and there was a misapprehension for a considerable time as to the rate of interest on which its loans were based. The loans were payable by annuities instead of by a yearly rate of interest, and it was not, I understand, clearly set forth in the mortgage what that rate of interest was, and borrowers imagined that they were borrowing on the basis of 6 per cent, when in reality it turned out that they were borrowing at the rate of 7 per cent. There was no law at that time with reference to it. I am speaking of what occurred 8 or 9 years ago, and I am mentioning this case, and if my hon. friend assures me that the law provides against such a case as that in mortgages, and that it is now imperative that the rate of interest shall be stated in the instrument itself, I am satisfied.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sorry my hon. friend did not see his way clear to leave that clause out. It seems to me it is going to interfere seriously with section 3 of chapter 127 of the Interest Act, which provides for the statement of the rate of interest appearing upon the face of the mortgage, and the language used there might possibly be construed to be a repeal of that particular section. Another anomaly in regard to this bill is that it is substantive, and not an amendment to the Act respecting interest ; so that we have on our statutes two substantive Acts respecting interest. Why is it not an amendment to the Act respecting interest ?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no object in declaring that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But you have two Acts.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We can have half a dozen Acts. The first clause of the bill says this shall be called the " Interest Act, 1897."

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to sec. 3 of chapter 127 of the statutes, there may be some confusion. I am not raising any question as to the correctness of the law laid down by the Minister of Justice, but I was only going to say I think there would be in the minds of the people, at any rate in the province of Nova Scotia, some little confusion as to what the law really is. In the province of Nova Scotia we have a building society which loans money on instruments which, perhaps, looked at from one point of view, are not mortgages, and which, looked at from another point of view, are mortgages. The land does not become the property of the borrower until he has paid all the instalments, and as he does not own the property, it can hardly be said that the contract which he enters into is a mortgage. The property belongs to the building society until the instalments have been paid by the borrower, and there is some question as to whether the instrument is to be regarded as a mortgage or not. It is generally known as a mortgage ; but still there is some doubt about it. I do not know that it has anything to do with the amendment. I suppose not.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not think it has to do with the present amendment. I may observe that mortgages are either legal or equitable. My hon. friend is referring to legal mortgages. That is only one class of mortgages. Where money is charged upon real estate, it is an equitable mortgage, where the charge does not carry with it the real estate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If those instruments are mortgages, my own recollection of them is that they do not set out the rate of interest in the way in which the law requires.

Hon. Mr. WOOD, from the committee, reported bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that the bill be read the third time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Under the ruling just made by His Honour one day's notice is not sufficient. This motion for the third reading of the bill is just as much a substantive motion as the motion to deal with the report of the Standing Orders Committee, and under the construction which has been placed upon the rule by His Honour the Speaker, I do not think it can be read to-morrow.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—At all events it can be put down to be read to-morrow with the unanimous consent of the House, and I now ask the consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—To-morrow any one opposed to the bill can object to the third reading?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, because they have consented to it now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There was a unanimous consent yesterday to the motion of the hon. member from Rideau division with reference to the American Bank Note Company Bill, but it has been questioned to-day.

SECOND READING.

Bill (106) "An Act respecting the Dominion Safe Deposit, Warehousing and Loan Company, Limited, and to change the name of the company to the Dominion Safe Deposit and Trusts Company, Limited."—(Mr. Cox.)

LA MUTUELLE GENERALE CANADIENNE INCORPORATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE moved the second reading of Bill (119) "An Act to incorporate La Mutuelle Générale Canadienne."

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is this bill?

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—It is an ordinary insurance company having power to insure against everything but fire and marine risk.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that motion is out of order. The hon. gentleman only gave one day's notice. If the rule is to be applied in one case, it should be applied in all others. The hon. gentleman contends that he must have an intermediate day. This notice was only given yesterday.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—There is no rule applying to it, because it is by order of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of bill (H) "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892."

On section 179.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to subsection C of section 179. I did not happen to be present when this clause was under consideration by the committee, and therefore omitted to state my objections at that time. After the word "abortion" I wish to have added the words "or miscarriage," because in medical language the words "abortion" and "miscarriage" are not synonymous. The word "abortion" has reference to a period prior to what is called quickening, while "miscarriage" has reference to the term after that.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think that is reasonable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask my hon. friend how there could be abortion without miscarriage?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN — Miscarriage may mean abortion; I do not know that abortion necessarily means miscarriage, because abortion means the miscarrying of the ovum, which is impregnated. After conception, and up to the period of quickening, it is generally understood in medical language and in law, I think, as miscarriage.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the Criminal Code there is a much wider interpretation than that, I think.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill, and asked leave to sit again.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

The Order of the day being read,

Second reading Bill (A) "An Act respecting the Employment of Children."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT said:—This is an important measure, but I am of opinion that we have no jurisdiction to pass it. I, therefore, move to strike it from the order paper.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, 10th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRESERVATION OF CANADIAN ARCHIVES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. ALMON inquired of the government:

Whether it is their intention to provide a place for the books, plans and manuscripts connected with the Canadian archives, which are now in an underground office in the West Block, and very much exposed to destruction from dampness.

And will also point out that the selection of such a place should be more suited in location for access thereto by members of parliament.

He said: These archives are not in a proper place now, being exposed to the damp in a cellar in the Western Block. To obtain access to that place you have to enter the eastern door and go down a stair into a dark passage, and after going as far north as the passage will take you you will come to an iron door which will take you in, and you will find that the books are two-thirds under ground. During the winter and in spring there is a snow bank up against that place. I have been told on good authority that in the summer sometimes they have to build a fire in there to destroy the damp in the room. I have a small library myself, separate from the house, and I am obliged in winter to have a fire kept there, and in the summer time I have to open the window and allow the air to go through, and in spite of all that the books have a musty smell. Then there is another point—is that place accessible for the members of this House? I say it is not. I have asked a number of members whether they know where the archives are kept and many of them reply that they cannot tell. These old papers are not in print; some of them are simply manuscript, and must be found in the archives, and I have been rarely told by members to whom I have spoken that they know where the building is or that they have ever been in it. With regard to the papers, some of them are very valuable. I myself contributed some valuable manuscripts written by Andrew Cochrane, a Nova Scotian, son of a Vice-President of King's College. He came out to Canada, and was appointed acting secretary to Sir George Prevost during the war of 1812, and afterwards to Sir John Cope Sherbrooke. He wrote private and confidential letters to his father, and mentioned facts which could be known to nobody but the Governor's secretary. Afterwards, as I have said, he was secretary to Sir John Cope Sherbrooke, and continued his letters to his father, and later, when Lord Dalhousie came here from Nova Scotia and assumed the governorship, he was made a member of the Legislative and Executive Councils of Quebec. This shows that he was a man of talent and education, and his work is a very interesting one. I gave it to Mr. Brymner. Perhaps he does not think it as valuable as I do, because he never acknowledged the receipt of this donation, and if I had known he did not value it, I would certainly have kept it myself, and I am not at all certain, if I had known that it was deposited in such an improper place to keep papers, but that I would have given it to some institution in Nova Scotia, where it would be better cared for. There are a number of papers connected with the military operations in Canada in the last year of the war of the rebellion—that was the first American war. When the military forces were removed from Canada, these papers were sent on to Halifax on their way to England. They were in the office of Major Nagle, of the adjutant general's department, and he informed me that these papers were there and asked if I would like to see them. They appeared to me to be so interesting that I got the late Wm. Garvey, Provincial Secretary, to accompany me to Sir Hastings Doyle, the then Governor of Nova Scotia, and ask him to detain the papers until they could be examined to keep any relating to Nova Scotia taken out. I asked the Major what would happen if they went to England. He said they would be put in an office for years, and then if nobody claimed them they would be destroyed. However, a messenger came down from Canada and asked to have them sent up, and those papers are now here and if lost they could never be replaced. By an anomaly the archives are under the care of the Minister of Agriculture. Why they were put there I have not the slightest idea, but being there, I am going out of my way to suggest to the government that a committee of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library should be appointed to consider this question. We should appoint a certain number of Senators, and the House of Commons should appoint a number of members every year to mak provision for the care of these documents and to make suggestions with regard to the keeping of them. It would not cost any money, and from what I know of the Library Committee, I think they would be a very useful body to do that I am not reflecting upon Mr. Brymner because he differs from myself in the estimate of the value of the papers, because he deserves a great deal of credit, I must say. He has been to London to the British Museum, and had valuable papers copied there. In fact, the Archives are the only books I care about. He is a very good French scholar, because he has been in Paris and had access to the manuscripts there connected with the history of Canada. I know that I am speaking to too willing ears when I address the two hon. gentlemen opposite me who represent the government in this House, and if they do nothing it will not be because their hearts are not in it, but because they cannot get their hands on the purse strings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Knowing the very great interest that the junior member for Halifax takes in this subject, I am very glad to assure him that all books, plans and manuscripts connected with the Canadian archives were removed undamaged from the Western Block, at the time of the fire in that building. They are now stored in the basement of the Langevin Block, where there is no danger of any of the documents, &c., being injured by dampness. Arrangements will be made for the accommodation of the archives in the Langevin Block, which is fireproof, as soon as the Trade and Commerce Department return to the Western Block. It is proposed, shortly, to have them removed to the second story, I think, and to allot a place that will be suitable for them, and where an ample opportunity will be given for persons desiring to consult the archives to visit the rooms, and every facility will be given to pursue any inquiry they may think proper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think the archives would be as safe up in the second story as in the lower story? It is constructed in a manner to prevent the burning of documents of this kind; in fact the intention was, when that was erected, to occupy the whole of the flat for the purpose of the archives to ensure safety in case of fire.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are now in the Langevin Block, and it is intended that they should remain there. The Post Office occupy the first floor above the basement, and it was intended the archives should be placed in rooms on the second floor. I think they are fire-proof; we considered when it was put up that it was a fire proof building.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So was that other building.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no, there was a fire trap in the ceiling of the other. I hope there is no similar dangerous element in the Langevin Block. I should be surprised if there was.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—I think that in the Langevin Block they would be quite as safe from destruction by fire as they are now.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I wish to say that I am perfectly satisfied with the answer given by the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is very desirable, not only that these archives should be put in a fire-proof building or room, but that they should be in a place where there is sufficient light and air. Now, in the basement where they have been put, it is almost impossible to examine a document without light. I have been in there many times, and I could make very little progress on account of the want of sufficiency of light, and if those archives are worth collecting and preserving, there should be a suitable place provided for them, and a suitable place has not, up to the present, been provided.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A special building.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, a suitable building for the purpose.

THE DISMISSAL OF ALPHONSE LABERGE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire :

Has Mr. Alphonse Laberge, of Montmagny, been employed as a foreman on the work of construction of the wharf at St. Thomas, in the parish of St. Thomas, county of Montmagny ?

Upon whose recommendation ?

How many days has he been employed and at what rate ?

Is he still in the employment of the government ?

How much has been paid him for completing a waiting room upon the St. Thomas wharf, as well for materials furnished as for the completion of the work ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first query must be "yes," and to the second the answer is "on the recommendation of Mr. Choquette, M.P." To the third question, as to the number of days, the answer is "from the 18th of August to the 31st of December, 73 days, at $2 per day." To number four the answer is, "yes, in charge of the expenditures still going on, ordered on the 10th of May last to complete the work." As to number five, the sum of $32 was paid to Mr. Laberge in August last for lumber.

AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY'S PETITION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved :

That the Eighteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, on the petition of the American Bank Note Company, be referred back to the said committee with instructions to report in favour of the suspension of the 49th rule of the Senate, in so far as the same regards the said petition.

He said : This is the same question which was discussed yesterday regarding the report of the committee. I believe the understanding is to allow this motion to drop and to unanimously agree that the 49th rule be suspended.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is not my intention to-day to continue the discussion we had yesterday, or to renew it at all. I think we have taught the promoter of this bill, and perhaps the promoters of other bills in future, a salutary lesson ; that they will have more respect for the rules of this House, and that they cannot be suspended on the ipse dixit of any one without very strong reason. The Standing Orders Committee had an informal understanding. We did not meet, but we understood among ourselves that we are not going to oppose this matter any further, that we are willing to let the bill go on its merits to whatever committee it is referred, and with that understanding I will now move an amendment to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau division (Mr. Clemow), to the effect that the 49th rule of the Senate be suspended presently, so far as it relates to the petition of the American Bank Note Co.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think that motion can be carried by this House. We cannot suspend a rule except upon a report of the Committee on Standing Orders, and I think the motion of my hon. friend, as on the order paper, is the only one that can be carried except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It requires the unanimous consent of the House. I forgot to ask for that, and I hope the House will give it. It is no use sending it back to the committee. I ask the House to consent.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the motion which was put yesterday by the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) does not appear in the report of the proceedings yesterday. That motion was put in the hands of the Speaker, and the Speaker ruled it was out of order, and that ought to appear in the proceedings of yesterday. There is not a word of that. It is a most important point.

The SPEAKER—I think myself that it should have appeared in the Minutes of yesterday, and I will see that the clerk inserts it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not mean to oppose this motion. I intended to support the motion moved by the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow), but certainly if I read the clauses and rules aright it was out of order, and I do not think it can be carried, even with the unanimous consent of the House. I should like to call the attention of the House to rule 53 which reads :

> Petitions for private bills, when received by the Senate, are to be taken into consideration, by the Committee on Standing Orders. The committee is to report in each case, whether the rules with regard to notice have been complied with ; and in every case where the notice shall prove to have been insufficient either as regards the petition as a whole, or any matter therein which ought to have been specially referred to in the notice, the committee is to recommend the course to be taken in consequence of such insufficiency of notice.

The report of the committee which has been presented to the House makes no recommendation. It simply mentions the fact that the notice is insufficient. Then reading rule 17 in connection with rule 53, it is very clear to my mind that this House cannot, even by unanimous consent, pass a resolution of this kind until the Committee on Standing Orders have recommended the course to be pursued. I do not make this suggestion to interfere with business, but to point out that we have to adopt that course to conform with the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The House fell into an error yesterday in taking the construction of the rule as given by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power.) He seemed to overlook the fact that this rule deals with two classes of suspension, one upon a day's notice and the other without notice. I am not in accord with the view of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. The first rule deals with suspending, modifying or amending any rule or part thereof upon a day's notice being given. The latter part of that rule, upon which my hon. friend lays emphasis, goes on to deal with an entirely different condition of affairs, viz., where notice has not been given. It states :

> But any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate ; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall be precisely and distinctly stated ; and no motion for the suspension of the rule upon any petition for a private bill shall be in order unless the same shall have been recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

That is where no notice has been given, but in this particular case notice was given. It is on the motion paper.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—But how do you get over rule 53 ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I get over rule 53 in this way—it is simply a rule of the House and we now propose to suspend it under the former part of rule 17.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—It was suggested yesterday by every member of the House who spoke that the only course was to accept the report and pass a resolution by the unanimous vote of the House to suspend the rule.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary, and I think the rules are very clear.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is quite true that the committee in its report did not make any recommendation, but the House is now seized with the fact. What we omitted to make a report on, the House is now asked to do. Now, we ask you, being seized with it, to consent unanimously to this motion being carried. Unless you give unanimous consent it cannot be done. Supposing it goes back to the committee, the committee will report according to the instructions of the House. We know very well that without the consent of the House it cannot be done.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I wish to object to this course.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MILITARY CONTINGENT FOR THE JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Is the military contingent sent to London for the jubilee celebration composed exclusively of men belonging to city battalions ?

Are the country battalions represented thereon (and in what proportion ?)

What country battalions have been called upon to furnish their quota, and how many men have they furnished ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The military contingent is not composed of men belonging exclusively to city battalions. The following rural corps are represented thereon :

Cavalry.

King's Canadian Hussars.	4 each.
1st Hussars.
4th do
6th do
8th do
3rd Dragoons.
Manitoba Dragoons.

Artillery.

1st Bde Field Artillery.	1 each.
12th Field Battery.
15th do do
3rd Regt. C. A.	2 each.
4th do do

Infantry and rifles.

68th Battalion.	4 each.
82nd do

There are 144 N.C. officers and men of the active militia with the contingent, 43 of whom belong to rural corps. The rest of the contingent comprises officers, the North-west Mounted Police detachment and non-commissioned officers and men of the permanent force.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF XAVIER LAMONDE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has Mr. Xavier Lamonde, of Montmagny, grocer, being employed as a foreman in the work of repair at the breakwaters in the River du Sud, in the parish of St. Thomas, in the county of Montmagny ?

2. Upon whose recommendation ?

3. How many days has he been employed and at what rate ?

4. Is he still in the employ of the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My answer is, to No. 1, yes ; to No. 2, Mr. Choquette, M.P. ; to No. 3, 69 days from the 10th October to the 31st December, 1896, at $2 per day, and to No. 4, No.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF ALPHONSE LABERGE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has Mr. Alphonse Laberge, of Montmagny, been employed as a foreman on the work of reconstruction of the wharf at St. Thomas, in the parish of St. Thomas, county of Montmagny ?

2. Upon whose recommendation ?

3. How many days has he been employed, and at what rate ?

4. Is he still in the employment of the government ?

5. How much has been paid him for completing a waiting-room upon the St. Thomas wharf, as well as for materials furnished as for the completion of the work ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My reply to No. 1 is yes ; to No. 2, Mr. Choquette, M.P.; to No. 3, from the 18th August to the 31st December, 1896—73 days at $2 per day ; to No. 4, yes ; in charge of an expenditure ordered on the 19th of May last to complete the work ; to No. 5, a sum of $32 was paid Mr. Laberge in August last for lumber.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY :

1. Has the government taken communication of the following despatch published on Saturday last by the press of the country :

WINNIPEG, June 4.—(Special.)—Your correspondent has been informed that an understanding has been arrived at between Mgr. Merry del Val, Premier Laurier and Premier Greenway regarding the future attitude of the Catholic authorities towards the Manitoba school law. While no details can be obtained, it is understood that the Catholics will allow all their schools to come under the School Act, but that the law will only be nominally enforced, insistance with its provisions being only required with regard to teachers' qualifications and government inspection.

2. Is it true that a conference has taken place between the Apostolic delegate, one of the members of the present administration and the prime minister of Manitoba ?

3. When and where did this conference take place ?

4. Who is the member of the present administration who took part therein ?

5. Was the understanding of which the despatch above cited speaks, or any other understanding, really come to, and in the latter case what is this understanding ?

6. Is it really the case that as a solution of the Manitoba school difficulty the Catholics are asked to sacrifice their constitutional rights, guaranteed by the law and by parliamentary compacts and recognized by the tribunals and the government of this country, being given as compensation the contingent permission to conduct their schools in constant violation of the laws of Manitoba, without any other guarantee of security or impunity than the present good-will of the man who has frustrated the Catholic minority of his province of its most sacred rights?

7. Is it really the case that the prime minister of Manitoba has succeeded in convincing the Prime Minister of the Dominion that the Catholic minority of his province has more stability to hope for in the working of a system, put in operation outside of and against the law, than in the enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the laws themselves, and that it would be better worth while for the public authority to ignore the impediments caused in the law by its consent than to render honest justice?

8. Is the government disposed to accept such a compromise or to favour the making of these impediments?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The facts are not as stated or implied in the hon. member's questions. What, if anything, has really taken place in regard to Manitoba school matters has been with individual ministers and is confidential, and I am not in a position to answer the hon. member's questions or make any statement whatever as to the views or policy or action of the government beyond what has been made by the government heretofore.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could we know the names of the individual members of the administration?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I presume my hon. friend knows the names of all the individual members of the administration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who took part in the conversation?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I cannot give you any other answer than the one I have given.

THE ALASKA BOUNDARY.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to the matter which I I think of some importance, that is the boundary between the United States possesion of Alaska and British Columbia and our North-west Territories. I have noticed that several recent English maps of Bartholemew and also Johnson show the boundary line between the British possessions—that is Canadian and United States territory of Alaska, laid down in accordance to the United States contention. This seems to me a rather extraordinary act. One would naturally expect that the geographers of the United Kingdom, in publishing maps representing boundaries of Her Majesty's possessions in any part of the world, would give those boundaries according to the contention of the British government. It is well known that the Americans have put upon the treaty of St. Petersburg a construction respecting the separating line that is not in accordance with the British contention and I think is not in accordance with any map issued by England or Russia prior to the acquisition of those territories by the United States. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a long narrow strip of coast which, under the treaty of St. Petersburg, was recognized as belonging to Russia had the separating line drawn along the mountain range in the immediate vicinity of the coast, and where that mountain range was more than 10 leagues from the coast, then the line was drawn at a distance of ten leagues. If the mountain range was nearer the coast than ten leagues the mountain range was followed; if it was more than ten leagues from the coast, the mountain range was not followed. The intention was that in no case should the extreme distance of the territory recognized as falling to Russia extend more than ten leagues inland. Where that boundary should be drawn was where the mountain range was more than ten leagues from the coast according to the general outline of the coast. But the Americans have undertaken to mark the boundary ten leagues from the coast of every inlet that extends into the continent. It seems an extraordinary thing that geographers should give countenance to the United States contention as against the contention of Her Majesty's government. I remember very well, and I dare say hon. gentlemen here will remember, in the controversy which arose in respect of the boundary immediately to the south of British Columbia, the boundary separating the British possessions from Oregon, that the Secretary of State, in his correspondence with the British foreign office, pointed out this fact, that Mr. Wylde an eminent British geographer and manufacturer of globes, had laid down upon a large globe the boundary between the the British and United States possessions in accordance with the American contention and that fact was referred to by United States Secretary of State as an evidence that their contention was right. Mr. Wylde, then admitted that he had been specially requested by the United States Minister in England to prepare a large globe for the use of the Secretary of State's office at Washington and he had been asked to mark the boundary between the British and United States possessions in accordance with the American contention. No doubt Mr. Wylde was well paid for the manufacture and preparation of that globe, and the globe itself was made to do service in the controversy in respect to the Oregon boundary. It might be highly improper to suggest that the modern geographers in England have been doing precisely what Mr. Wylde had done, and under precisely the same influence that operated upon Mr. Wylde, but it seems to me that it is the duty of the government here to call the attention of the Secretary of State to that fact, to make earnest protest that British geographers should lend themselves to supporting in this way of the contention of another country against their own, and this has certainly been done both by Johnson and by Bartholemew in the maps they have prepared and which are sent abroad over the world.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The House is very much indebted to the hon. senator for having drawn the attention of the country to this fact. I may say to him, however, that some months ago a confidential communication was sent to the Colonial Secretary, calling attention to the efforts made by the government of the United States to encroach on what had long been recognized as British territory and advising that Canada would not consent to any such line of demarcation unless the subject were fully inquired into, and Canada had an opportunity of stating thoroughly her views on the boundary commission.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I believe the whole thing now hinges on the wording of the treaty. The treaty says that from a certain point on Prince of Wales Island the boundary shall run north-easterly. The United States construction of those words of the treaty would give our neighbours an enormous stretch of territory which we claim belongs to us. The interpretation put upon those words in the treaty will give the territory to either one country or the other. As far as the other portion of the boundary is concerned, where the 30 miles from the shore goes into the country, I believe that is pretty well agreed to. The Canadian and United States commissioners came within a few feet of each other.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is on the 141st parallel.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The point that we ought to contend for is this large tract of territory further south, near the boundary at Prince of Wales Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I might add further that the difficult point to determine with regard to the southern boundary is where is Portland Channel? If Portland Channel is where the United States contend it is, commencing due east from a line drawn from Prince of Wales Island, they will be rightfully entitled to that territory; if it is further north by north-east from Prince of Wales Island, then they are enabled to acquire some three millions or more acres at our expense. What I had more especially in view is the territory lying round Lynne Inlet, because the northern part of that inlet, if our contention is right, would be wholly within the Canadian territory, whereas if the United States contention is right, they would be able to draw the line ten leagues north of the northern extremity of Lynne Inlet, and they would have possession of the pass leading to the Yukon territory and the entire navigation of that coast. It is a vital question to us in connection with the Yukon territory whether Lynne Inlet lies absolutely within Canadian territory or whether it lies wholly within the territory of the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the hon. gentleman from Bothwell's intention in bringing up this question was not for the purpose of discussing where the actual boundary between Alaska and Canada was, but more particularly to draw the attention of the government to the fact that incorrect globes and incorrect maps have been prepared in England at the instance of the United States Minister, and that the United States Government, in their contention as to the correct position of their boundary, were using these incorrect maps and globes, and that he desired that the government should take cognizance of that fact, and make a strong remonstrance against any such evidence being admitted in considering this question. The answer given by the hon. Secreatery of State did not meet that point. He informed the House that they had protested against the claims which the United States Government were making as to certain territory. It is highly important, in consideration of what took place a number of years ago when Canada was deprived—I was going to use a stronger term, robbed—of some of the best portions of New Brunswick by somewhat similar means, by the use of a false and misleading map, which was laid before Lord Ashburton at the time. In addition to what has been said by my hon. friend, I would impress upon the government, the necessity of making an earnest and early protest to the Colonial Secretary against the admission of any such evidence in regard to this question. That is the principal point I think which the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) desired to bring under your notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The attention of the government having been drawn to it, such action will be taken as may be deemed in the interest of Canada. I noticed recently in the United States Senate that it was proposed to establish an arbitrary point on Mount St. Elias as a starting point. Against that a protest has been entered. An attempt was made to deflect the starting point some distance to the east in order to take away considerable territory from Canada.

DEBATES AND REPORTING COMMITTEE.

SECOND REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE moved the adoption of the second report of the Standing Committee on Debates and Reporting. He said:—The first item is simply to order that the paging of the daily issue of the reports of the session be made from the first day to the last continuously, which is considered the most convenient method. The other part of the report is to continue Mr. Smith in his position as a member of the staff of reporters.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (16) "An Act to amend the Railway Act."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Explain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this bill goes into committee it will be very fully explained. If the House desire it, I can explain it now, but it will occupy some time, and it seems to me that as there is other important business upon the Orders of the Day, and it will necessitate a full discussion in committee, it would be idle for me to enter into an explanation, which must be necessarily a long one. I might say, if hon. gentlemen will permit it to be read a second time now, it will not be regarded as admitting the principle of the bill. However, if my hon. friend insists upon going into the merits of the bill now, I am prepared to do it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The bill has come to us in the Senate form. Can the hon. gentlemen tell me whether any change was made in the bill in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of any change having been made.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I do not think the bill is printed yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have sent for a copy of it, and I am told that it is not printed yet.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The second reading had better be postponed until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say to hon. gentlemen that the bill consists entirely of one clause, and a very short clause, and even if it were printed and distributed, it would not facilitate the consideration of the bill at this stage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the bill is not printed, it had better be put off until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then I shall defer the second reading until to-morrow.

Several hon. MEMBERS—Monday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Hon. gentlemen will appreciate the fact that the session is drawing to a close and there is no reason why this bill should be thrown over for three or four days.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It should not be down for a second reading to-morrow, when it is not printed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am informed it is printed in French.

Hon. Mr. OGIVIE—It is printed as it is printed for the House of Commons, but not for the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The French copy is printed, but not the English one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the order of the day be discharged, and placed on the order paper for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READING.

Bill (68) "An Act respecting the American Bank Note Co."—(Mr. Clemow.)

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (M) "An Act to amend the Companies Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This bill provides that these companies should have a larger power of borrowing than they have at present, particularly trading companies. Almost all the companies that have charters under the Dominion law have been trading companies, and it is found exceedingly embarrassing that the powers should be limited as they are now. Practically their borrowing powers are limited to the extent of three-fourths of their paid up capital, and also on commercial paper which is considered to mean not their own paper, but business paper, which they have in their possession. This is one of those things which business men can advise us upon, and enable us to pass such a law as will be for the best. The proposed provision reads:

> Provided always that the limitations and restrictions on the borrowing powers of the company contained in this section shall not apply to or include moneys borrowed by the company on bills of exchange or promissory notes drawn, made, accepted, or endorsed by the company.

Companies are often unable to do the business they want to do when they cannot borrow money, and the business which their shareholders want them to do, and which they were chartered practically to do, and a very large sum of money is required often to carry on trade, particularly for example where a company deals in grain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At whose instance has this bill been introduced? Is it at the instance of the trading companies themselves who are speculating, or of the banks, or of other money lenders?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT Well, the banks in one sense, but I am assured that the whole commercial community are in favour of this bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course it is only those who loan the money who take the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in committee of the whole consideration of Bill (H,) "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 203*a*.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This clause relates to races. Some people believe that races, though they are of importance in improving the breed of horses, are very injurious to the morality of the people. That is not the general sentiment of the country, and this present amendment is not proposed on that principle, but I find that all—I think I may say all—sportsmen are in favour of some limitation to the number of days that the races should go on. In the bill which my honourable predecessor introduced last year, the period was ten days, twice a year. My predecessor thought that was the proper limit to make. In interviews I have had with parties interested in these races, and from correspondence with them, I obtained their views, which varied on this point from twelve days in each of the two half years, to fifteen and twenty days. None of them has recommended or expressed any desire for a longer period than twenty days. It would seem that all true sportsmen are in favour of the limit of twelve days. It is said the best racing sentiment of Canada desires that limitation. The short race meetings, say of ten days, are said to be good, but the longer ones are very injurious. In a sporting paper, very well known and probably the best sporting paper in the United States, I find this observation made:

> Continuous racing undermines the entire fabric in any community in which it is conducted and sooner or later brings racing into disrepute. Public opinion is aroused against it, and those who are law abiding and who are interested in the advancement of the turf eventually have to suffer through the grasping greed of unprincipled gamblers.

Where a long period is wanted, it is in the interest of almost all those who make use of these occasions for the purpose of gambling; and civilised nations have frowned upon gambling. They regard it as very injurious to the community that gambling should be encouraged.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman not think three days' racing is injurious as well as three months' racing? They can do as much evil in three days as they could do in three months.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have had no experience.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Are they allowed to have booths on the field at the race courses? In Halifax in olden times the races lasted for three days, and booths were placed on the commons and it was a continual round of dissipation and fights between soldiers and sailors and others. I should think that these matters were for the municipalities to deal with more than for the Dominion, but I am of the opinion that one day would be a much more proper time if booths were allowed to exist during that time.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Instead of twelve days, I should like to make it twenty days. About three years ago we established a track near where I reside, which has been well patronized. We always get a good string of horses from our American neighbours. If we are restricted to so short a period, we will lose their patronage, and we are anxious to have about twenty days instead of twelve days.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move the adoption of the clause limiting the time to twelve days.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has it not been urged, as one of the reasons for bringing in this bill, that in one of the western counties there has been a good deal of gambling emanating from Detroit, and they use Canadian territory for the purpose of carrying on gambling under the name of horse racing. I understood when this bill was introduced a couple of years ago, it was to meet a case of that kind somewhere in the western country.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Fort Erie and Windsor.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Fort Erie particularly where the racing was continued from day to day for a long period, purely for the purpose of betting and gambling. It was to meet cases of that kind that this legislation was demanded.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I shall read you a letter sent to me by the president of the association. It is dated Windsor, and is as follows:

> I am going to give you the views of the majority of the business people of this place and also my own as to the effects of continued or lengthened racing meetings such as have been held in Windsor during the past two summers.
> I admit frankly that a continuous racing meeting extending over five or six months, such as held in some places in the United States, is not the best interest of the city, where such meeting is held, unless the population is so large that it can support such expensive amusements. There are few places in the United States that can do so, and none in Canada except Windsor and Fort Erie and the reason is easily explained; both of those places mentioned in Canada get their attendance nine-tenths from the adjoining cities in the United States, viz., Detroit and Buffalo; and, while the money necessary to conduct the meetings comes almost wholly from the United States, all of it, I may say, is disbursed and spent in Canada, among our farmers locally, for the feed necessary to keep from 400 to 500 horses; among our butchers, bakers, hotel and boarding house keepers, in order to feed a large number of attendants, to say nothing of the aid given tailors, saddlers, blacksmiths, livery keepers, street railway, and in fact nearly every business in the place is given indirect support by the $1,200 to $1,500 that is daily paid out in prizes.

Those are the parties aided, and, as I have said, the money necessary to maintain this large daily outlay comes almost entirely from foreigners—money that we could not otherwise by any possible means procure.

Notwithstanding that we have had two seasons of lengthy racing in Windsor, I have yet to learn of any injury that has been done to anyone directly or indirectly.

We are supported by quite a number of race horses owned in Canada during this season; and had we not been operating here, those men would have gone to the United States and spent their earnings there. Since we have opened here a number of throughbred horses have been imported into Canada which will have a decidedly improving effect on the horses of this country.

We would be satisfied with a 20 day meeting with 30 days intervening between such meetings, because we know how unnecessarily alarmed many pious personages charged with public trusts become over such questions; and the danger that is likely to ensue to our property and interests under such circumstances; for the reason as I have said we would prefer to have matters stay as they are and you may depend upon it, we are not blind to our own interests to the extent of allowing anything to be done by our club that would arouse public opinion against us and then jeopardize our property. I may say in this regard, that the two members of Essex North and South are supporters of our wishes in this matter, and I am sure you know both of them well enough to feel assured they would not support anything that would be detrimental to the interest of the people they represent. This would enable us to get good stables of horses, from all parts of south and west, and the Canadian public, while reaping the benefit I have pointed out, will lose nothing from a moral standpoint.

You are aware that we have built one of the best tracks on this continent; with the purchase of the property, erection of grand stand, stabling superior to any track in the Dominion, in fact the whole plant is worth $80,000 to $100,000. Furthermore we have already entered into an agreement for the lease of the track for two short meetings, and to have the proposed changes made law, would be a great loss to us.

The business men of Windsor are simply indignant at the prospect of the proposed changes.

This letter is signed by Dr. Joe O. Reaume. I think we might as well grant twenty days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How long do these races continue at Windsor?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Sixty to ninety days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is almost perpetual, nearly the whole year.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We want only twenty days.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—What do you do on Sundays?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Go to church.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In looking at the bill which was introduced by the late Minister of Justice, Mr. Dickey, I find that provision was made for only ten days. The proposition in the present bill is to give a little longer time—12 days. I took pains, when in Toronto a few days ago, to ascertain the views of those who are interested in the Jockey Club there. I was told by the president that they were very well satisfied with this bill. They thought the restrictions were not too great, and they would like to see it become law in order to put a stop to what they considered to be exclusively gambling operations, demoralizing the people in the very section to which my hon. friend refers. It seems to me that the time mentioned here would be quite sufficient time for legitimate racing for those who enjoy that sport, and think it tends to the improvement of the breed of horses. If it is any benefit at all, twelve days should be quite long enough.

An Hon. MEMBER—Too long.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We have trotting races twice a year, in June and in September. Will this interfere with trotting races?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I should think so; they are the same as other horse races.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No, there is a difference; they are held twice a year for five days each meeting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This includes trotting races as well as running races. You will have the same length of time to carry on your trotting races.

The clause was adopted.

On section 205.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This section relates to art unions. The law contains a provision by which these are exempt, under certain restrictions, from the operation of the gambling law. I do not think anybody would have suggested a change in that respect, but for the perversion of the law which the legislation on that subject has led to. In order to defeat the law against gambling, persons have called themselves an art union and proceed in this way: they have a drawing. They distribute pictures of very little value, and with a provision that the holder of it may get in exchange for the picture he draws so much money. The practical effect is simple gambling, not the encouragement of art or the cultivation of a taste for art. Those who are interested in art unions, for their own sake, write strong letters against having these pretended art unions permitted. Some of them say they would rather have the whole provision relating to art unions removed than allow this perversion to continue. Others think if we limit the sales to a short period and actually forbid the exchange of the pictures for money or anything else, that that will answer the purpose. That, I think, is the general feeling. I myself should be sorry to deprive the artists of the advantage they have now, though if it is in the public interest it must be done. I am in favour of preventing the perversion of the law without interfering with these drawings for legitimate purposes.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—This clause has my most cordial support. The perversion of the provision in the existing law, described by the Minister of Justice, is a crying evil and should be stopped by every means in our power.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will this clause, as worded, accomplish the object in view in putting a stop to the gambling distribution of these pictures which has been going on, particularly in Montreal? I have received letters in connection with it saying that it is carried on to an enormous extent there, and that there are cases now before the courts in which they are testing the legality of the sale or exchanging of pictures. Do I understand the Minister of Justice that this is to meet cases of that kind and prevent them in future?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is the purpose. The legislation which we are seeking to enact now for the first time commences with subsection one and includes one, two and three. Some of these offices which are perverting the law are open all the time. A man can go in any time and buy his ticket. That is the reason subsection three is inserted.

The clause was adopted.

On section 261.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The law as it stands now names 14 years as the age of consent to an act of indecency. I propose to make it 16 if the Senate agrees with me. I think from what the Senate has done already they will not object to substituting 16 for 14.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is the term "indecency" used here? Why is not the offence specified?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I find that term in the law now. I do not know that you can get a better expression.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that the offence under the section which you have amended is something more than an indecency.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Those are the very words of the existing section, "an indecent assault."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may be incorrect, but I am unaware of any section in the code dealing with indecent assault in regard to girls under a particular age.

The clause was adopted.

On section 274*a*.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The law now makes provisions that a man who brings goods stolen elsewhere into Canada shall be punished. The seduction of a girl in a foreign country and bringing her into Canada is a much more serious offence.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know of any Criminal Code containing such a clause as that?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not care if other Criminal Codes do not contain it. I am asking to amend the law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend think there is any analogy between this crime and the crime of bringing stolen goods into Canada as mentioned by him?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Certainly there is an analogy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How far does this go? This clause provides that if a person seduces a girl in a foreign country and then brings her into Canada and marries her, he is to be indicted under this clause and sent to jail.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The clause does not say "marry her."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, it does; "had seduced her in the United States, and brought her into Canada," are the words used, which he might do in order to get away from the country and the scandal which would surround him there.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We might add "and has not afterwards married her."

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—There is no time limit in this. It might be 20 years ago. It would never do to enforce it. We have no right to punish crimes which are committed outside of our own border. Still, you can imagine a case where a man crosses the border and commits a crime there and then comes back again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing they did, what of it? She must have been a consenting party.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I think the clause in its present shape is altogether too vague and indefinite, and it would give rise to consequences that we cannot now foresee.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Taking the case where a young man persuades a girl to run away with him, seduces her in the United States and comes back, a clause like this would apply. But taking the clause as it stands, there appears to be great force in what my hon. friend (Mr. Drummond) says, that the offence may have been committed 20 years ago. The clause seems to me to be a sweeping one, without a limitation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Supposing the girl accompanied the man into Canada, could it be said he was bringing her into Canada?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think you could not establish that charge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How would this affect the opinion given by the Minister of Justice in reply to the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) when he asked to have a clause inserted in the Criminal Code punishing a man who marries in Canada, goes to the United States and marries another woman there and brings her back to Canada? We were told we had no power to punish the man who had committed bigamy in another country, because the crime was committed in a foreign country. This crime is committed in a foreign country, and you propose to send the man to penitentiary for it. I understood the Minister of Justice to say it was questionable whether we had power to punish a married man who went to the United States, married and came back again.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The crime is coming back with her.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the other case the man came back with his wife and lived with her. We have had one or two cases of that kind in Ontario, and we ought to try to punish them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How would this do:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to two years' imprisonment, who brings into Canada a girl or woman whom he had seduced elsewhere than in Canada, and continues to cohabit with her in Canada, not professing to have married her.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that will not do. I move that the clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I second that motion.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The feeling of the House seems to be against this. I ask to have it struck out.

The clause was struck out.

On clause 306.

By substituting the following therefor :

Every one commits theft or steals the thing taken or carried away who, whether pretending to be the owner or not, secretly or openly, takes or carries away, or causes to be taken or carried away, without lawful authority, any property under lawful seizure and detention [by any peace officer or public officer."]

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The amendment is adding to the existing clause the words, "by any peace officer or public officer." Where there is no criminal intent whatever, a party taking goods out of the possession spoken of in the Act believing he had a right to do so and with no idea at all of committing any crime, the question of right should be decided in a civil suit between the two parties claiming the property. But as the law stands now, the seizure, though made in good faith by a man claiming the property to be his, subjects him to criminal prosecution. It is thought if we add the words which hon. gentlemen will see at the end of this clause that that difficulty will be removed. Then these additional words are suggested : "by any peace officer or public officer in his official capacity."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I suggest to add the words : "knowing him to be such" ; he may act in his official capacity, and not be known to the person. I think the offence should be done knowingly.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He cannot take away the thing from him without knowing he is taking it away from him.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But he may not know the party is a peace officer.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think it is not necessary. We are going a considerable distance in the clause as it stands, for the relief of the party taking the property As a rule, he does know.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 331A.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This relates to cattle, and to the safety of the ownership of them. It makes it an offence on the part of any one who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, receives, appropriates, sells, or fraudulently procures, or assists in taking possession of, or assists in stealing, appropriating, or selling, any cattle which are found astray. I move that in section A1 the word "assists" should be interlined in the third line before the word "stealing." Perhaps my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Cochrane) could tell us something about the branding of cattle.

Hon. Mr. COCHRANE—The only way we can identify our own cattle is by brands and those are recognized, and when we sell these cattle they are what we call vented—another process, reversing the brand. While I say the cattle men want this change in the law there have been several cases in the last few years where men have been detected in stealing or taking cattle, and were brought to trial ; but as the law now stands, the brand is not prima facie evidence that the cattle were mine or any one else's, and the judge was obliged to dismiss the cases. There have been a number of cases in the last few years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I wish to say to my hon. friend that while I am familiar with a great number of those cases, I would say on behalf of the judiciary of that country that the cases to which my hon. friend refers have not gone off upon the point which he mentions. This practically leaves the law as it stands. I pointed out to my hon. friend, some time ago that the courts in the North-west Territories have held that the brand is prima facie evidence of ownership, and it is so provided by the brand ordinance of the North-west Territories, and the Witness Act provides that such a law shall be accepted under the law of evidence in a criminal case.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That only applies to the Territories.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not object to this amendment.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Would it be too much to ask the Minister of Justice to put in after the word "cattle," "valuable dogs"? It is a well-known fact that people cannot have, in this country, a valuable dog without having him watched continuously from dog thieves. I, myself, have had valuable dogs, and I would just as soon lose a horse at any time. It is quite a common thing to have dogs stolen. We have no law to punish people who steal dogs and sell them again.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I think that is a very good suggestion.

Hon. Mr. DEVER — Some dogs are valuable, worth $100—more than the price of a horse—and it is quite a common thing to have them stolen. I move that after the word "cattle" we insert "valuable dogs."

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is cattle which have strayed and have been found.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Cattle means sheep. Under the interpretation clause of the Act, the term includes horses, mules, asses, swine, sheep or goats, as well as any cattle of the bovine species.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Does the hon. gentlemen think it is not practicable to put in the words "valuable dogs" there?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentlemen from St. John (Mr. Dever) to the fact that the 332nd section of the Code imposes a penalty not exceeding $20 over and above the property stolen, or one month's imprisonment with hard labour on any person who steals any dog.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 410.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This section refers to tramps. The change is in subsection 2, which I propose to add as an additional clause. Persons engaged in the enforcement of the laws have called attention to the large number of tramps that are now going about all over the country. They go to small villages and rural places, do a great deal of mischief, and are a terror to respectable people. It is suggested that there is nothing which would be more effectual in dealing with them than whipping, and I propose to provide that if any one committing an offence under the Act is found to be carrying an offensive weapon he shall be subject to be whipped.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not whip him anyway?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—They often commit an offence in order to be locked up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why should they be whipped for the minor offence when they are not whipped for the major one of house breaking?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is an aggravation of the offence when they carry the weapons.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, that is the idea of it. I would not whip every tramp, but if he has an offensive weapon he might use it, and it is to make him afraid to carry an offensive weapon.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 479.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—As the law stands now there is no punishment for a man who passes off confederate bills as valuable to people who do not know the difference, and the same way with other things which have the appearance of money, while at the same time not worth money. I propose to put confederate bills, &c., on the same footing as counterfeit or spurious coin.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 480.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This is to carry out the same idea. For the purposes of paragraph B in this section, the notes of any bank which has ceased to do business, and whose notes are of no value, shall be deemed to be counterfeit where the dealing with them is an attempt to pass them as money.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Would that punish the man that had the confederate money at the late election down in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there anything in the clause necessitating knowledge on the part of the person seeking to pass off the money, that the bank has failed? One can very easily conceive a case of a man not being aware of the fact.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The clause meets that. It is necessary that there should be knowledge on the part of the person.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 520.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT — The present law provides against combinations for the various purposes mentioned, and it is said that this interferes with reasonable and honest combinations on the part of workmen for their own protection, and therefore this subsection is suggested:

[2. Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employés for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employés.]

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the Minister of Justice tell us why, if it be wrong to enter into these combinations, any class of people should be permitted to do it? The amendment to this clause is to exempt from the operation of the law combinations of workmen or employés for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employés. In the first place what would be their reasonable protection? The reasonable protection would be, I suppose, to get as much as possible out of their employers. This is a clause to prevent combinations by ship-owners and every one else for the purpose of increasing the price of an article unduly to the consumer, or levying greater tolls for passengers or freight, and then you exempt combinations of workmen or employés who combine for their own reasonable protection. Is not a combination of employés, to extort from an employer, as much of a crime as it is for employers to do that which would deprive the workman of a fair day's wage for a fair day's work?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You shall not employ a man who is not a member of the union.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that case is very well put. A combination of workmen declare that a man, carrying on an industry with his own capital, shall not employ a man unless he belongs to the union. If he does, a strike takes place, and the man's business is ruined. They can enter into any combination, and be exempt upon this clause. There should be reciprocity in all these things. I would go as far as reason and equity would carry me in the protection of the workingman: but I have long since come to the conclusion that the principle of socialism is extending too far in this country—that the man who happens, unfortunately for himself, to have any capital, and to do any business by which he furnishes employment to the workingmen, is at their mercy completely.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Some consideration ought to be given to the condition of workingmen and employés. But for these trades unions and occasional strikes, I have no doubt these classes would be in a very much worse condition than they are at present. It is by such means they get a reasonable increase to their wages from time to time. There are some employers who are fair to their workmen, but that is not invariably the case. While these strikes are sometimes made use of in a way to produce hardship to others, still it is the only way workingmen can accomplish anything. Those who have capital have means and power that workingmen have not. I think it is reasonable to say when they combine for their own reasonable protection that that should not be considered an unlawful thing to do.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think the power of the man who puts his money into a manufacturing establishment is gone under this clause. He has no control over it whatever, because these men can combine and deprive him of his means. I therefore oppose the clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We should not do anything which would interfere with a reasonable combination of workingmen and employés, but I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the paragraph in the law as it stands now. What are the things which are forbidden? It is forbidden

(a.) to unduly limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be subject of trade or commerce; or

(b.) to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity; or

(c.) to unduly prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof; or

(d.) to unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, transportation or supply of any such article or commodity, or in the price of insurance upon personel property.

I really do not see why the combinations of workingmen should have anything to do with these things.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax is right in that. There is no relation at all between the two in my opinion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Even if they found this clause as it stands in the Act, it is very mild. It is only unduly limiting and preventing that is made punishable. That being so, I see no reason even if the hon. gentleman from Halifax is not right, why organizations of workingmen should not be brought under the clause. Therefore, I would oppse it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is one expression used by the Minister of Justice that I take exception to. He said, there are "some employers" who treat their men well. If he had said there were some who did not treat their men well, it would be more correct. Any one who has had experience in the employment of men, knows that it is the policy of an employer, unless he is hardhearted or does not know what his interest is, to treat his men well. The exception is the other way. It often occurs that it is necessary to afford protection to workingmen who happen to be employed by that class of men, but there are very few in the community. Manufacturers know just as well as the employés of small numbers of men—as my hon. friend well knows from the treatment of the students in his office—that it is good policy to treat their employés well. The exception is the other way. My hon. friend laughs, but it is true. There may be a few Legris, as described in Uncle Tom's Cabin, who ill-treat employés, but as a rule it is the other way. I move that subsection two be struck out.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The whole clause should be struck out if that goes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has this legislation been sought in any way, as far as the Department of Justice is aware? I am heartily in favour of the maintenance of trade unions. I think they have been an advantage to workingmen, but I am of opinion it was not intended that this section, at the time it was passed, should extend to workingmen in any way.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I propose the amendment at the instance of working people. I had several communications from them through their officers. They think it important that they should have this privilege.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They have that under the law now.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—For instance, in combining to prevent articles being sold in the market that have been produced by convict labour. Considering that their daily bread depends upon their daily work, it is not an unreasonable thing for workingmen to prevent the products of convict labour coming into competition with theirs. My hon. friend says he does not see that the clause is of any consequence. If it is of no consequence, it is no harm, but the parties who are interested think that it is of some consequence to them.

Clause 520 was struck out.

On clause 540.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The reason of the amendment in section 540 is that by the code the courts of general quarter sessions are declared not to have jurisdiction in certain cases which are specified, the section does not specify offences against the election laws, the effect of which would be that those courts would probably have jurisdiction to try these cases, but the Dominion election law says such cases shall be tried by a higher court. The object of the amendment is to make the law harmonious.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 550.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The object of this is to give the judge authority to try in private cases which involve sexual questions. They have that power now—it has been so decided in English cases, but it does not seem to be understood by the magistrates here, and it is thought desirable to place it in the statute, but in doing so I have added a second section to prevent misunderstanding.

2. Nothing in this section shall be construed by implication or otherwise as limiting the power heretofore possessed at common law by the presiding judge or other presiding officer of any court from excluding the general public from the court-room in any case when such judge or officer deems such exclusion necessary or expedient.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill and asked leave to sit again.

THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (81) "An Act respecting the Great Northern Railway Company," with an amendment. He said: There is but one amendment recommended by the committee to this bill—to strike out the clause which gave additional power to raise money by preferential stock. The committee thought that the company already had quite ample power to issue bonds. They could not increase it, as was proposed by that clause, and it was struck out.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

THE HARBOUR MASTER OF ST. THOMAS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire:

Has Mr. Louis Dionne, of Montmagny, been appointed:

1. Harbour Master of St. Thomas, Montmagny? When and at what salary?
2. Guardian of the wharf at St. Thomas, Montmagny? When and at what salary?
3. Preventive officer? When and at what salary? Upon whose recommendation has this triple nomination taken place?

Has the government been informed that this titulary is actually in the employment of Mr. Joseph Fournier, of St. Thomas, hotel-keeper and merchant, as a clerk, and is it the intention of the government to permit him to serve the public and his master simultaneously?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to the first inquiry, I say yes, by Order in Council of 22nd October, 1896. Remuneration from fees collected from vessels entering the port, not exceeding $200 annually. Second, yes, by Order in Council of the 22nd October, 1896. Salary to be at the rate of 25 per cent of the tolls and dues collected. I find the third answer relates to the Customs Department, and they have not furnished me with the answer: I would ask the hon. gentleman to let the third question stand. I will give him the information as soon as I obtain it. The information sent was from the Marine and Fisheries Department, under the impression that he was only an officer of that department. He might be an officer of the customs and I will have that information

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE CLUB.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to call attention to the following facts:

In the month of October last a meeting of officers of the Quebec Military District No. 7, held in the Brigade Office in the city of Quebec, and at which was present the Hon. Dr. Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence, a memo. from the General Officer Commanding, referring to the question of Brevet Promotion, was read by the Minister himself, which memo. contained the following paragraph :—

Major-General Gascoigne wishes to add, that he will be very glad to give the representations of any officers on the militia on the matter his most careful consideration, if they will be good enough to submit them through the ordinary channel of communication.

2. Subsequently, and in accordance with the above paragraph, and on behalf of the Royal Military College Club of Canada, composed of some 250 officers, the following letter was sent through the ordinary channel of communication, to the General Officer Commanding the Militia :—

"QUEBEC, 26th November, 1896.

"SIR,—I have the honour to forward for the information of the General Officer Commanding the Militia, the following view of general order No. 73, referring to Brevet Promotion and the manner in which it is likely to influence graduates of the Royal Military College of Canada.

"We will assume that A, B, C and D are four gentlemen who graduated from the College at the same time, all being equal.

"A enters the Imperial service, by merit, with with the rank of Second Lieutenant.

"B is, through political influence, put into the permanent corps and becomes a Brevet Captain.

"C selects of his free will to join a militia corps, with the rank of Second Lieutenant.

"D having to gain his livelihood and being unable to join a corps, is posted to the reserve of officers as Lieutenant, and where there is no promotion.

"On behalf of the Royal Military College Club, I would be pleased to know why the permanent corps man has been selected for this rank, which evidently gives him superior rank without any apparent reason for so doing.

"Trusting to receive such information as will remove the present opinion that undue advantage is extended to him at the expense of others,

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,"

"ERNEST F. WURTELLE,
"Captain, R.O., Hon. Secretary-Treasurer.

"The District Officer Commanding
"No 7 Military District, "Quebec, Que."

3. A reply to the aforesaid communication was received, bearing the date of the 5th of December last, and reading as follows :—

"QUEBEC, 5th December, 1896.

"From District Officer Commanding
"7th Military District,

"To Capt. Ernest F. Würtelle, R.O.,
"Quebec.

"In answer to your letter of the 26th of November last, re Brevet Promotion, etc., the General Officer Commanding states that he cannot look on it as an official communication requiring an official reply.

(Sgd.) "T. J. DUCHESNAY,
"Lieut.-Col. D.O.C. 7th Mil. Dist."

And that he will inquire from the Government—

1. Why was not the aforesaid letter of the 26th of November, 1896, considered as an official communication requiring an official reply ?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to have a proper answer given to a demand made at the suggestion of both the General Officer Commanding and the Minister of Militia and Defence ? or to allow the officers of the militia to have been deceived by the statements made and the promises given by the military authorities ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer that the Militia Department has sent in response to the inquiry is that the letter in question, having been addressed by Capt. Wurtele on behalf of "The Royal Military College Club," the general officer commanding could not consider it an official communication requiring an official reply, as the club has no official status as such in the Canadian militia. The general officer commanding states that while he is at all times desirous of investigating any alleged grievance on the part of any individual officer of the force, he cannot officially notice communications addressed to him on behalf of any club or combination of officers, as such a procedure would be contrary to well established military regulations and customs of the service.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would call attention to this fact, that the Minister of Militia was present at that time, and he took great pains to tell us that all the regulations would be put aside for that special purpose, and that any one who had a claim or an observation to make should be free to make it, irrespective of all standing regulations. That was the impression given to every officer of the club.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The explanation seems to be that this emanates from a club—not from an officer, but from a gentleman who is secretary of the club. The club is not recognized in the Militia Department. If the inquiry were made in the name of an officer, who would be responsible for making it, the department would be enabled to answer it, although my hon. friend will notice that inquiries of that kind which are purely hypothetical as to what might result if certain things happened, are not proper subjects for inquiry, and departments are not expected to give definite answers, because answers of that kind must depend entirely upon actual facts that may be placed before the department. I mention that, because in reading over the letter of Captain Wurtele it is a hypothetical case. He supposes A, B, C and D persons and officers, graduates of the Military College, have gone into different lines, and he asks the question hypothetically as to what would happen if so and so would take the position. It is a hypothetical question and very difficult to answer. The question might be put as one of fact and I think that could be answered probably if the question emanated from an officer. Of course he would be entitled to receive the explanation. The argument in this case is that it is from a club that has no standing in the Militia Department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Captain Wurtele is not only secretary of the club, but he is an officer at the same time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He represents only the club in this case. He writes as the secretary-treasurer.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that a return ordered at my instance, as to the dismissals from the civil service, has not yet been brought down. This return was ordered in the early days of the session, and since that time I have called the attention of the government to it on three or four occasions, and have not received any satisfaction. On inquiry from the officials of the department, they tell me that the information which has been asked for could be obtained in a week at the very outside, and I think, under these circumstances, it is not fair to oblige us to get up week after week and ask for the return. If the government do not intend to give it, they should state the fact. It is now getting so near the termination of the session, that I think it is high time that the return should be brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fully appreciate all that the hon. gentleman has said, and I can assure him that I have repeatedly sent official communications to the several departments asking that the return from the particular department be furnished with the least possible delay, and I have called attention to that, not once or twice, but I think three times. I have received returns from all the departments, I think, except two or three, and I have been urging on these departments the necessity of complying with the order of the House, because I think it ought to be obeyed I do not think we ought to follow the bad example set us by the preceding administration, who were entirely indifferent to the bringing down of returns. After the change of government in 1879, returns were asked for in the early part of the first session which have not been brought down to this day. That is eighteen years ago. Subsequently other returns have been asked for from time to time, and I mention this, not urging it in any way as a justification or an excuse, but as showing how difficult it has been, from some cause or other, to obtain these returns from several departments. Going back only a few years, in the session of 1892, there were ten returns ordered by the Senate and three only of those were brought down that session. The following session two more returns were presented, and up to the present time the balance have not been brought down. In the session of 1893 seventeen returns were ordered by the Senate, and of these only eleven were brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will finish those returns when we change places in the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In 1894 a number of returns were ordered but were not all brought down. In 1895 seventeen returns were ordered and only eight brought down, leaving nine still to be brought down. That is the record for a few years, but a more important return that was moved for after the change of government—"Return of all persons dismissed, superannuated or resigned since the 10th of October, 1888, showing the offices and positions of such persons, &c.;" also, "return including names," and so on—that return has not yet been prepared. It is so long, I suppose, that they were unable to get the officers to complete it. The number was so great it never was produced.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest that that return would be interesting now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That does not justify the government's failure to bring down these returns; and why does the hon. Secretary of State refer to these returns asked for eighteen years ago? Besides that, we do not know that they were pressed, and that the attention of the government was called to them. We know that departments will easily overlook these returns.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In many instances they were pressed for. In 1895, seventeen returns were asked for, and only eight brought down. I mention this to show the practice in the past. Some of my colleagues have stated, "Very well, it will necessitate the employment of extra clerks." The Auditor General says that extra clerks cannot be paid unless they have passed the civil service examination. The ordinary work during the session is so great that all the staff of the departments is usually employed, so there is really very great difficulty. I do not mention this as an excuse, because I think the orders ought to be obeyed. I will press for the returns and I hope to get them down by the end of the session. If the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with those already prepared, I will lay them on the table, but he would prefer them complete, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I should like to have the instalment so that we will have something to go on with. It is possible they may not be able to get the balance by the end of the session, but I think if the same assiduity was exercised in preparing these returns as has been exercised in making out that list of returns, which the hon. gentleman has just read, that it would be ready now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, this list is easily made up. There are regular columns for these items, one column "Department notified," another column "Date received," and that column is blank. It never was received by the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has made that speech three times, and I would suggest to him that he stereotype it. Might I ask the Minister of Justice now if he has made any investigation to ascertain whether there is any petition from the people of Brantford asking for the appointment of Mr. Hardy as a judge? The hon. gentleman will remember that when I made the motion, I included that question in a motion. The answer was that the minister was not aware whether there was such a petition, and if there was probably it might be of a confidential character, to which I replied, I could not understand how a petition could be confidential. I want to know whether the hon. gentleman has ascertained if there is such a petition.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I will answer that on Monday.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (98) "An Act respecting the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway Co."—(Mr. Dobson.)

Bill (34) "An Act to incorporate the Canadian Securities Company of Montreal."—(Mr. Bernier.)

Bill (M) "An Act to amend the Companies Act."—(Sir Oliver Mowat.)

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (16), "An Act to amend the Railway Act."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not intend to raise any discussion on the second reading of the bill but I want it understood that it may be discussed on the third reading—that the House does not adopt the principle of the bill by consenting to the second reading now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I see that a number of hon. gentlemen are away, and I do not propose to say anything on the subject at present.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I propose to ask the House to send it to the Railway Committee where it can be discussed by every one present.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am in favour of the bill, but I do not see why the hon. gentleman proposes to refer it to the Railway Committee. A bill, or other matter, is referred to a standing committee for the purpose of obtaining what is not readily available to the whole House, but there are no details in this bill. It consists of but one clause, and the committee cannot find anything about it that the House cannot ascertain, and I do not see any object in sending it to a committee. I think it is better to refer it to a Committee of the Whole House when we meet on Monday. If you refer the bill to the Railway Committee, and the committee report favourably on it, you have the same discussion on it in the House that would take place in Committee of the Whole, and the hon. gentleman further imperils his bill by delay in sending it to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The object of sending it to the Railway Committee is to hear all parties interested in the bill. If it is submitted to a Committee of the Whole House, they cannot come here.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am very anxious to have it sent to the Railway Committee, because I have promised to vote for it on one condition, that the bicycles will be carried at the risk of the owners, and I should like to have the lawyers on each side draft a clause to that effect. That could not be very well done in the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours. My intention was to have it sent to a Committee of the Whole, but several members expressed very strongly their dissent to this view, and it was not until after the gentlemen who represent the Canadian Wheelmen's Association discussed the matter with the representatives of the railways that this conclusion was arrived at. The railway companies are very desirous of being heard before the committee, and in case the House should think that there is anything to suppress in the discussion of the bill, we readily consented to its going to the Railway Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (H): "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before this motion is put, I wish to say a word with reference to the matter of combinations against trade. Perhaps the best way to place my views before the House is to do so before the Speaker leaves the chair, because we have passed over that clause in the bill, and because I think it is a matter of very great importance. I am aware that hon.gentlemen in this House and members of the government are very earnest in their desire that all improper and illegal combinations against trade in this country should be put down.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I suppose my hon. friend is not aware that the clause has been struck out.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am aware that a proposition to amend the clause relating to combinations was not assented to in committee, but I am speaking of the section in the law at present.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. That clause having been struck out of the bill, my hon. friend cannot discuss it now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are now discussing a motion as to whether the House shall go into committee again for further consideration of the Criminal Code, and I am in order in discussing anything relating to the Criminal Code on such a motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not in the bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is in the Criminal Code, and we are now proposing to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Criminal Code, and I am quite in order in discussing anything relating to the Criminal Code on that motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I must urge the question of order. The hon. gentleman would not be in order in discussing anything relating to the Criminal Code. He would be in order in discussing anything contained in the bill before the House, but the hon. gentleman could not, on this motion, discuss matters which are not dealt with in the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is not this bill germane to the Criminal Code? If so, his argument is germane to the bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at all. I ask the Speaker's ruling.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island is not discussing anything in the Criminal Code. He is calling the attention of the Minister of Justice to what he deems the necessity of making one clause of the Criminal Code much more stringent than it is at present, and he is asking the consent of the hon. Minister of Justice to go back to it and to amend the Criminal Code as it stands on the statute-book, so as to meet the difficulties to which he refers —to prevent illegal combinations. He is not arguing the question. It has been the practice of the House, when the Orders of the Day are called, to direct the attention of the government to any subject, and ask if such and such would be done. If the answer is no, my hon. friend will stop at once.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My object is to call the attention of the House to this subject. We have a motion to go into committee to consider amendments to the Criminal Code, and speaking on the motion to go into committee, I contend that I am perfectly in order, notwithstanding the observations of the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) in calling the attention of the hon. leader of the House, who has charge of this bill, to what I consider to be a very important question in connection with the Criminal Code. I feel I have a perfect right to do that. My object is to point out to my hon. friend that there is now a provision in the Criminal Code in regard to combinations against trade, and to ask that my hon. friend will give that matter his earnest consideration in connection with this bill. I think that this is the proper place to do it. If there are, as is believed by many people, improper combinations for the restriction of trade and to put up prices to consumers in this country, we should deal with them in the bill to amend the Criminal Code which is now before us. In section 520 there are provisions affecting combinations. If these provisions are not sufficiently strong, if there is any infirmity in the law in regard to combinations against trade, I feel now is the time we should remedy that matter when we are amending the Criminal Code. In taking the course that I am suggesting now, I feel it is much better to do so with the Speaker in the chair than in committee. The provision in the present law is :

520. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than two hundred dollars, or to two years' imprisonment, or, if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding ten thousand dollars and not less than one thousand dollars, who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company, unlawfully—

(a.) to unduly limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce ; or

(b.) to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity ; or

(c.) to unduly prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof ; or

(d.) to unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, transportation or supply of any such article or commodity, or in the price of the insurance upon person or property.

Now, that is the law. It must be felt that that law is not sufficient— that it does not go far enough—that its provisions are not sufficiently stringent for the purposes it was intended to meet ; otherwise we would not have had propositions in the Tariff Bill at the present moment for the purpose of strengthening the law against combinations in trade. If my hon. friend the Minister of Justice thinks the law is not sufficient to meet the purpose intended, we should make it efficient, and the measure to enact such provisions should not come to us tacked to another bill and in another form. I think I can speak for our friends in this House, that if my hon. friend the leader of the government in this chamber, will take this matter up and carefully consider it and bring forward such well-considered amendments to the Criminal Code as will be necessary to prevent improper combinations in trade, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will give him every support and assistance. I think my hon. friend will himself see that this is the proper place to insert anything that is necessary to be inserted in our laws in relation to this important subject. If this matter comes before us tacked to the Tariff Bill, or any other bill, it will not likely receive the same consideration that it would in its proper place. I am sure I speak for this House when I say that every assistance will be given the hon. leader of the government in the Senate in any well-directed effort he may put forth to strengthen the law against improper trade combinations. I hope my hon. friend will agree with me in the suggestion I now make, and although it may not be necessary to do it immediately, yet before the committee finally reports, that my hon. friend will bring down some other amendments if he considers further legislation necessary, and I am sure he will receive the support of the House in carrying them out, and then we will not have to deal with the tariff bill encumbered with extraneous matter such as this is.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I cannot see what my hon. friend is really referring to. The provision intended in the new law respecting the tariff that in certain cases where combinations of this kind are made, in addition to all other penalties it may occasion, it is proposed that the Governor in Council shall have power to reduce the duty in such a way as to prevent the combine doing harm to the consumer. That might be in this code of course, but I think it is far better to be throughly discussed in connection with the tariff, and not on a bill like this. Further, I think it is better, since the House of Commons has been considering the tariff, and this provision in connection with it, that we should know what view they take on the matter before I propose it in this House. It is possible I may see my way to introduce the clause here if it passes in the House of Commons in connection with the Tariff Bill. For the present I think it is better to go on with this bill, and not touch the other matter until we see what is done in the Commons with the Tariff Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest an amendment to section 553 of the code by substituting the words "one and a half mile" for "five hundred yards." It will be noticed how this subsection "B" reads. A case which shows the necessity of this amendment that I offer has been brought to my notice by the police magistrate of the city of Belleville. A bridge crosses the Bay of Quinté between Hastings on the north side and the county of Prince Edward on the south. A man who went to get a ticket at the southern end of the bridge, in the county of Prince Edward, was very abusive and committed assault and battery. The matter was brought before the police magistrate in Belleville. The question with him was whether he had jurisdiction, as there was a question as to the distance between the northern shore and the house in which the toll collector lives, which is on the end of the bridge. There is another point here to which I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice, for the sake of getting his interpretation of the wording of the law. In subsection "a" the clause reads "where the offence is committed in any water, tidal or other, between two or more magisterial jurisdictions, etc." What interpretation would the court give to the word "in" in a case of that kind? Some contend that you must be in the water. The common sense interpretation would seem to be that it means that if you are in a boat on the water, or on a bridge which crosses the water. If there is anything which might be considered an ambiguity in the meaning of those words, to which the magistrate also called my attention, I would suggest an amendment to it which would make it clear. The magistrate is in this position, he has given a judgment which may be set aside on account of want of jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman will see that that might be a very serious change. If he will limit his amendment to the town of Belleville, there would be no objection to it, but he will see that if his amendment were adopted, then a rural magistrate would have jurisdiction all over a town, because one and a half miles will bring you into the heart of any ordinary town from its limits. The distance set out in the present statute is quite sufficient to provide for the case of a police officer chasing a criminal over the boundary and to provide for any case of doubt as to where the boundary is, but to say that an officer can go a mile and a half from his own jurisdiction is going too far altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's objection would be well taken if he confined it to county lines, and localities of that kind. What difference does it make whether it is a mile and a half or five miles, when it is a question between two counties? If you have a county magistrate and a city magistrate, then this present law would give the power to the county magistrate, just as much as if it was ten miles away, so far as the city and town are concerned, if the offence was committed within five hundred yards of the boundary. This is to meet a case where there is separation by water and a doubt arises. In this particular case on the south side of the bay there is no police magistrate having jurisdiction unless you go all the way to Picton.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It would be a similar change, and answer the same purpose, if you amend subsection "A" by adding the words "or on any bridge between two such jurisdictions."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You should say "structure or bridge," I think.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If you insert "in or upon any water" it would answer the same purpose better.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We will let that clause stand for a few minutes.

On clause 680.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This clause is with reference to the attendance before the courts of any person confined in jail. The English rule is that the warden or jailer should himself convey the prisoner to the place where he is wanted. It is found inconvenient as the law stands, and sometimes it would save expense and trouble and delay, if the order was upon the warden or jailer himself to convey, instead of naming somebody else for that purpose. I put this in at the suggestion of judges and others concerned in the administration of justice and who strongly recommend its adoption. The only new part is in subsection "B" which reads:

Or to himself convey such prisoner.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is the court of appeal a court of criminal jurisdiction? You have a right to appeal in a criminal case, and it has been held necessary to have the prisoner before the court of appeal in person when his case is being heard, and there are some authorities to the contrary. It seems to me a moot point I do not, however, say that there is no machinery by which the court of appeal could bring a prisoner before them. An amendment might be made in this, or it might be made sufficiently broad to include the court of appeal.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is a point not touched by the clause as it stands.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might be provided for in this section.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I should like to consider it a little first. I know a prisoner is sometimes taken before the court of appeal. I would have to look into the question to see what the law is. I propose an amendment in the first paragraph of the clause. The county court is not as such a court of criminal jurisdiction, and it is proposed to put in the words "or any chairman of general session," after the words county court in the seventh line.

The clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—A clause was suggested by one of the provincial governments which would come in here and which would be a very reasonable one. In the code, as it stands now, it is provided by section 687 that if upon the trial of any accused person it is proved upon oath or affirmation of any credible witness that any person is dead or absent from the country, then his evidence, formerly taken, may be read. In practice it is sometimes found impossible to prove directly by an oath or affirmation of any person that the man is dead or absent from the country, and what the bill proposes is that the law should provide that on the trial of an accused person if such facts are proved upon the oath or affirmation of a credible witness that it can be reasonably inferred therefrom that any person, and so on, is dead or absent from the country this will do.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 702.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What this second section declares to be prima facie evidence under the 198 section, should also be prima facie evidence under the 199th section. This 702nd clause declares that when any cards, dice, &c., or other instruments of gambling are found in any house, it shall be prima facie evidence that the house or place is a common gaming house. Clause 199 contains the same expression, "common gaming house" and this interpretation clause does not refer to it. It only refers to 198. And there is no reason why it should not apply to both sections. There is no definition there of what a common gaming house is. That expression is used in the 199th section, though the legislature has explained what a gaming house is, as used in the 198th section. The amendment of this clause 702 is to meet that difficulty.

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED—Under clause 702, it is prima facie evidence that the persons found within the house were playing therein, although no playing was actually going on in the presence of the chief constable, and so on. The 199th rule covers another class of offenders, those who are looking on watching the game. It shall be prima facie evidence that they were engaged in playing. I suppose that would throw the onus upon them to show that they were not playing.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am not changing the present law as to that Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 198 provides for persons who are the owners of disorderly houses, not persons who are simply onlookers or inmates.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Those who are owners or occupy such houses.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 199 deals with a class of offenders who are looking on, and those actually engaged in the play. Clause 702 would be quite applicable to clause 198, but it is scarcely applicable to clause 199, because it says it shall be prima facie evidence of their having been engaged in play. That is to say, you create artificial or statutory evidence. You, by statute, state a fact which is not a fact.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—But it is a fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not a fact, because clause 199 says they may be looking on at the people playing.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In a common gaming house.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 702 says it would be prima facie evidence that they were engaged in such play.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No; you only read part of the clause. The latter part of the clause explains it:

It shall be prima facie evidence, on the trial of a prosecution under section 198 (or section 199) that such house, room or place is used as a common gaming house.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—"And that the persons found in the room or place where such tables or instruments of gaming are found were playing therein, although no play was actually going on in the presence of the chief constable, deputy chief constable or other officer." I do not know as it will do much harm, but it establishes a fact by statute which is not a fact, that they were engaged in playing.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What my hon. friend takes exception to is perhaps exceptional. The statute makes it an offence for any person who looks upon a game of cards or any other game in a gambling house. This bill says that it shall be prima facie evidence on the trial of a prosecution under section 198 that the persons found in the room or place where such tables or instruments of gaming are found were playing therein, "although no play was actually going on in the presence of the chief constable and officers," and so on. Would not that take away the prima facie evidence, and make it exclusive evidence of gaming?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, it states prima facie.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Take this case—and it is a case which is liable to occur—supposing the person who keeps the house is arrested and brought up before the magistrate charged with the offence of keeping a common gaming house, and at the same time, persons who are found in that gaming house are brought up charged with the offence of playing in that house, the object of the amendment before the House is that the same evidence which proves in the case of the keeper that it is a common gaming house, shall prove in the case of the other parties, that it is a common gaming house, and that is proper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You go further. Look at the last four lines of section 702.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the law now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not the law now, because this section extends only to 198. My hon. friend asks that it should extend to 199.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 707 A.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This section is entirely unnecessary. My hon. friend seems to think that this is not already covered by the general law He says practically that any statute or register dealing with branding shall be accepted as prima facie evidence of what that statute may prove with regard to the brand. Now, the Witness Act already provides that. It provides in criminal matters or civil matters, as far as the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, that the statute laws of the province shall constitute our law of evidence. They are specially proved in this case. We have an ordinance there relating to brand ng.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think there is sufficient provision there, but this clause applies to the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then the other provinces should pass similar legislation.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This clause refers to registration merely, and we have no control over the provinces. We cannot compel them to pass laws.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are only repeating what is already the law in the North-west Territories.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is an argument in favour of the clause. I am merely giving to the whole Dominion a law which has been found to work well in the North-west Territories.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 748.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This amendment repeals the existing 748th clause of the code. That clause authorizes the Minister of Justice to grant a new trial to a person convicted of a criminal offence. I do not know how this crept into the law, but no Minister of Justice since it has become law has acted upon it. Every minister has expressed disapprobation of it. In fact, the section misleads, because no minister will entertain an application on this ground, and it is just possible, if it is in the law, that the prisoner may think he will get a new trial by appealing to the Minister of Justice instead of appealing to the court, and thus loose his chance of appeal to the court.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have an amendment which I wish to propose to the committee. It embodies the recommendation of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Criminal Code, 1892, and was approved of by the Minister of Justice at that day, but he thought that probably there was not time to discuss it in the House of Commons that session, and that it was better not to insert it in the bill, although the committee were unanimously in favour of the change. I will simply read it now, in order to give notice to the Minister of Justice and the committee. I propose to insert as clause 728A:

It shall not hereafter be necessary that a jury shall be unanimous in a criminal case, and a verdict of guilty may, after four hours' deliberation, be returned by a number of jurors not less than $\frac{5}{6}$ of the whole.

On clause 971.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This section relates to suspended sentence. The law as it stands provides that in cases punishable with not more than two years imprisonment—two years being the maximum punishment for the offence—the court may, under certain circumstances, instead of sentencing the prisoner at once, direct his release on his entering into a recognizance. I propose a slight amendment, of the first paragraph, and also an additional clause (2). In the 6th line the expression in the present law is "regard being had to the youth." I move to strike out the word "youth" and substitute the word "age."

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then as to clause (20) why is it left so largely in the discretion of the Crown prosecutor to say whether the judge shall exercise that discretion?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The judge has absolute discretion now where the maximum punishment is two years, and in extending the discretion beyond that it is thought proper the Crown prosecutor should concur.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not leave it entirely with the judge? One can easily understand a Crown prosecutor following the prisoner up with a degree of rancour and antagonism which would not be at all felt by the judge.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I prefer to have it as it is.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing an appeal should be made to the Minister of Justice, how far would the fact of the counsel had concurred affect the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Where a person is discharged on a suspended sentence, if the Minister of Justice differs from the judge, he would not have power to send the man to jail. The Executive may lessen the punishment, but cannot increase it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that that leaves almost every case in the hands of the Crown prosecutor altogether. There are few cases which are not punishable with more than two years. That subsection leaves almost every case in the hands of the Crown prosecutor, as to whether he would let the prisoner go or not, and it practically takes it out of the hand of the judge, because the judge cannot exercise the discretion without the consent of the Crown counsel.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is not in the hands of the judge at all, in the class of cases we are dealing with here. If the maximum punishment now is two years or under, the judge has now absolute discretion, but he has no discretion at all at present where the punishment is more than two years.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 967.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I cannot say that I have quite thought out the propriety of this suggestion, and yet I am inclined to think it is a good one. The Criminal Code contains provisions for whipping in certain cases. A learned judge has strongly recommended that the instrument should be named. He says:

> It would be much better if the code specified the instrument, and not leave it to the judge.

And this amendment is drawn with a view to that. The section provides that the instrument used for whipping shall be the cat-o'-nine-tails, unless some other instrument be named by the judge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there any other instrument in vogue?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think that is the usual instrument.

On clause 553.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thought it better to strike out subsection "A" altogether. I move that subsection "A" of section 553 of the Criminal Code of 1892 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

> (a.) Where the offence is committed in upon any water, tidal or other, or upon any bridge between two or more magisterial jurisdictions such offence may be considered as having been committed in either of such jurisdictions.

The only addition is "upon any water or upon any bridge."

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments.

HARBOUR MASTER OF ST. THOMAS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Has Mr. Louis Dionne, of Montmagny, been appointed:

1. Harbour master of St. Thomas, Montmagny? When and at what salary?
2. Guardian of the wharf at St. Thomas, Montmagny? When and at what salary?

3. Preventive officer? When and at what salary? Upon whose recommendation has this triple nomination taken place?

Has the government been informed that this titulary is actually in the employment of Mr. Joseph Fournier, of St. Thomas, hotel-keeper and merchant, as a clerk, and is it the intention of the government to permit him to serve the public and his master simultaneously?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I think I answered all that question before, except the last relating to the Customs Department. Louis Dionne was appointed an active preventive officer on 23rd October, 1896, at a salary of $50.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The last question I think was not answered—as to the government being informed of his being in the employ of Joseph Fournier.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the government has not been so informed.

A CHARGE OF PARTIZANSHIP.

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to Call attention to the following articles copied from the Temps of Ottawa, of the 19th of October, 1896, and from the Star of Montreal of the same date:—

"The members of the Club National met last night for the purpose of the election of their officers. A speech which very forcibly impressed the meeting was that of Mr. Pierre Rattey, an employé of the Senate. That eloquent speaker addressed a warm appeal to the members of the club, asking them to continue to work for the good cause according to the expression of Sir Oliver Mowat. He also availed himself of the occasion thus given him to tender an advice to the ministers. Mr. Rattey has been the Upper House for more than forty years, and his great political experience gives his utterances considerable value, so Mr. Belcourt listened with great attention to the eloquent speech of that leader of the Liberal party in Ottawa. Mr. Rattey wants that all the deputy ministers have their heads cut off without any further delay, to make room for good Liberals. No doubt Mr. Laurier will have to yield to the pressure brought to bear by Mr. Rattey and the Globe. The deputy ministers may expect to be dismissed before long. —(Le Temps, 19th October, 1896.

Ottawa, 19th October.—(Special to the Star.)—The French Liberal Club, Le Club National, held its annual meeting on Friday night. According to Le Temps, Mr. Belcourt, M.P., president of the club, devoted the greater part of his speech to an explanation why anti-election promises by him had not been kept by him. Le Temps says that Mr. Belcourt stated that a number of Conservatives will be dismissed from the buildings to make room for those Liberals to whom he had made promises during the general election campaign. Mr. Peter Rattey, door-keeper of the Senate, also addressed the meeting, and is reported as expressing the hope that all the deputy ministers would be discharged in order to make room for good Liberals."

And inquire whether the attention of the government has, in the past, been called to them, and, if so, whether such conduct is considered by them as offensive partizanship?

If so, what course do they intend to take in the matter?

If the utterances of Mr. Rattey have not been brought under the notice of the government in the past, what course do the government intend to take now that the offensive partizanship of Mr. Rattey, an officer of this House, has been brought under their notice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The attention of the government has not been brought to this important subject, and in fact I am unaware that any member of the government has heard of the statement, which the hon. gentleman has placed on the paper, and therefore, they have really no opinion to offer on the subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has called attention to this matter in addition to asking a question, and consequently it is open to discussion. I think the hon. gentleman must feel, when he comes to reflect upon the matter, that the course which he has followed is not the most desirable course. Mr. Rattey is not an officer appointed by the government, but an officer appointed by the Senate, and the proper tribunal to refer the matter to would have been the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. The hon. gentleman has not been well advised in bringing the matter up in this way. I do not know anything at all about the subject myself, but looking at the language of Le Temps, of which the report in the Star is only a summary, it is clear that whoever wrote the article, was simply poking fun at our doorkeeper. He evidently was not serious. Any one can gather that from the language used in the report; and it is to be regretted when the conduct of an officer like our doorkeeper is to be called into question, that it should have been done in this public manner instead of being done before the Committee on Internal Economy where proper inquiry could have been made, and where the accused would have had a chance to be heard.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Am I to consider this last speech as the answer of the Government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. I gave the hon. gentleman the government's answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think the government did answer it. The government did not answer the last portion of the question. Their attention having been called to it, what do they propose to do? The hon. Secretary of State referred exclusively to the first part of the question. I should judge, however, from the answer given by the Secretary of State, that it is not the intention of the government to take any action in the matter, that they have no information, but in this case, even supposing the doorkeeper did use the language, that having been in favour of the government and not against them, they of course approve. That is the only deduction to be drawn from the answer given. Perhaps the objection taken by the senior member for Halifax is to the point, that the Committee on Contingencies would have been the best tribunal before which to bring the matter. The Contingency Committee would have been the best place to have drawn the attention of the House to the facts, but I think the hon. gentleman who called attention to this fact did nothing more than his duty in trying to elicit from the government what their policy was in reference to all employés. They are as much members of this Senate as those who are on the Contingency Committee, and if offensive language has been used by any employé, it is their duty, leading the House, to see that the employés of the House do not infringe upon the doctrine which they themselves have laid down in so rigid a manner. The question put by the hon. gentleman last was a very pertinent one. I have noticed, and I have no doubt other members of the Senate have noticed, that whenever the ministers who lead this House fail to give such an answer as would be satisfactory, our friend who sits behind the ministers (Mr. Power) is always ready to supply any deficiency in that respect, for which I commend him, and I know my hon. friend, who sits opposite me, will feel gratified to know that he has a prompter who can always set him right, or if not set him right, suggest a means by which he can evade any question put to him, or get him out of any difficulty, or dispose of any question which is not palatable. I find no fault with that. It is assistance that all ministers like, but I would suggest to my hon. friend in the future that he should not do it so publicly, that he should not assume the responsibilities which do not rest upon his shoulders, but that he should simply intimate to the ministers what course they ought to pursue, and I have no doubt his long experience will lead them to adopt any suggestion which the hon. gentleman may make. The attention of the House has been called to this matter. I may say on behalf of Mr. Rattey, with whom I had a conversation on the matter in question, that he denies the charge in toto. I then suggested that he should frame his denial, and lay it before the Contingencies Committee, who would have the power to act in the matter of this question and report to the House. I would suggest to the Contingencies Committee that since the matter has been so publicly brought before the attention of this House, they should investigate it, in order to give Mr. Rattey the advantage of any denial he may have to make in the premises.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may be allowed to say a word in reply to what the hon. gentleman said in respect to myself. I am not in the habit of prompting the government, and in the present instance this was a matter which was quite open to discussion by every member of the House. It is a matter with which really the government have nothing to do, and that is the reason why the government should not be expected to have anything to say about it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the government should refer this matter to the committee themselves.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman had the same knowledge and the same power to bring the matter before the committee as the government had.

THE DISMISSAL OF MRS. IGNACE MERCIER.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Was Mrs. Ignace Mercier on the 23rd June, 1896, postmaster at Mercier, in the county of Montmagny?
2. Has she been since that date discharged from her work by the present administration?
3. When, why, and upon whose complaint?
4. What is the nature of the charge brought against her?

5. Has the charge been proved?
6. What is the nature of the proof?
7. If no proof exists, has the accuser at least a diploma of infallibility? Granted by whom?
8. Has the accused been made aware officially of the accusation brought against her, and has she had an opportunity to refute it?
9. What was her reply?
10. Has the Post Office inspector been required to hold an inquiry and to make a report?
11. Has an inquiry taken place, and what is the report of the officer making the inquiry?
12. If the person dismissed protests her innocence and completely denies the truth of the accusation, is it the intention of the government to grant an inquiry or to refuse all justice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The replies to the hon. gentleman's questions are :—1. Mrs. Ignace Mercier was not postmaster of Mercier on the date mentioned. Mr. Ignace Mercier was postmaster on that date. 2. Mr. Mercier had removed to the United States. He applied for a prolonged and indefinite leave of absence (he had already been some time absent) which was refused him. He did not return to duty and his services were accordingly dispensed with. 3. There was no complaint; the department was officially aware of his absence.

DISMISSAL OF XAVIER POITRAS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. Secretary of State if he can give me that information he promised, as to the date of the dismissal of Mr. Xavier Poitras on the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had it among my papers, but I do not know where it is just now. I thought my hon. friend had forgotten it.

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill (38) "An Act respecting the Pembroke and Kingston Railway Company." He said: I took charge of this bill when it was brought up here, because nobody seemed willing to undertake the responsibility. I know nothing about it and I can only move the second reading.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This bill gives power to the company to sell a railway. Such a measure so far as my knowledge extends has never before been submitted to parliament. Involving so many interests as a railway does and touching so many concerns it is necessary that the greatest care should be taken before granting such legislation and that positive proof should be given that it is in a position that requires it to be sold. The history of this railway is, in brief: At the time the railway boom was passing over Ontario, the people of Kingston were seized with that epidemic, as well as others, and resolved to have a railway. They determined, after many meetings, to have this railway to Pembroke. That project was subsequently abandoned, and the northern terminus was fixed at Renfrew. When the road got to Lake Sharbot, 47 miles from Kingston heavily bonussed though it was it failed, and the road was sold to Americans for $100,000. It was then completed as far as the town of Renfrew, so that it extends from Kingston, at the eastern end of Lake Ontario, in a northerly direction 104 miles to the town of Renfrew. This is the length of the read, but there are besides some thirteen miles of branches and sidings. It crosses the Ontario branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Sharbot Lake, and has connections with the Grand Trunk Railway at Kingston. It is also joined by the Napanee and Tamworth Railway seventeen miles from Kingston at Harrowsmith, and the two companies use the one line from there into Kingston. It also crosses the Madawaska, the Mississippi and the Clyde, all lumbering rivers. It has unsurpassed facilities for lake and river navigation at the city of Kingston. The territory which it passes through is very large, and that portion of it which extends from Kingston to Sharbot Lake abounds in minerals, principally iron ore, and furnishes a large local traffic, besides the trade derived from the Napanee and Tamworth Railway. The road was built largely by bonuses. The city of Kingston contributed $318,000 and the county of Frontenac $170,000. The local government of Ontario gave $456,493 and the Dominion government $47,599, the total bonuses amounting to nearly $1,000,000. It also received from the Dominion government a grant of public land in the city of Kingston, 125 acres which embraces the most valuable part of that city. It extends all along the water front, and if sold would go far to pay the floating debt which is on the road. With reference to the stock of the road, there have been three issues, and it amounts now to four and a half million dollars. In addition to that there are preference bonds, and the holders of these are the ones that make objection to the sale of the road. This four and a half million dollars stock may be said to be wiped out. It was sold to the stockholders at reduced rates, at 30c. and some at 50c. on the dollar. How it was manipulated, I do not know, but no stockholder considers that he will ever see anything in principal or interest from that stock. It went as high, in the New York market, as 40c. at one time, but declined very rapidly. It only remained in that condition for a few days, and finally was abandoned altogether and never heard of afterwards. As to the ownership of the road, this legislation will only touch the $572,000 preference stock and the floating debt. With regard to the division of this $572,000 stock three-fourths of it is held by Mr. Flower, ex-governor of New York, and the rest, or a great part of it, is held by persons of limited means in Kingston and elsewhere, who paid par and some of them a premium for their stock. Mr. Flower is very anxious that the road should be sold, and through Messrs. Folger, brings this bill forward. The others object to it, inasmuch as it will deprive them of an asset which was in a great many instances the principal one they had. No great change has occurred in this road from the time Messrs. Folger got hold of it until 1892, when the interest was stopped. A number of what might be called the minority bondholders were dissatisfied with this, and applied to the courts and had a receiver appointed, but, strange to say, the receiver who was appointed in 1894 has no power whatever except to receive the money and pay it out. He has nothing to do with the policy of the road, with changing its management in any way or doing anything which would diminish the expense or add to the funds of the road. Consequently he is of comparatively little value. Nevertheless, good results have followed from his appointment, and the road in the past two years has had an excess over former receipts. I have a return for five months of this year which shows an increase of nearly five thousand dollars over the corresponding period of last year. This is one evidence that the road is not so bad as one might expect. It is a singular thing that the road should be sold when its earnings are increasing. The first legislation asked for was to raise $1,000,000. Of this $572,000 was to be reduced to interest at four per cent and the balance was to be applied to pay off the debts of the company. That bill was rejected by parliament. The second bill is the one which is now before you. It was introduced not in its present state in the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. There it was opposed by a great many and was unanimously rejected. It was withdrawn and I considered at the time that we would never hear any more of it, but it was brought up again without giving any notice to the opponents of it and was put through the committee without any protest. It then went to the House of Commons and passed the third reading. Some gentlemen who opposed the first bill supported the second, for this reason: according to the bill, if a sale was effected, the bondholders were to be paid after the expenses of the Act. Then the other expenses were to be paid. They changed that and put debts for working expenses or supplies of any kind whatever first. That placed the bondholders in a disadvantageous position. Another change in the bill is that it gives power to apply to a court of justice for an inquiry as to the solvency of the road, and this is to be done within two months from the passing of the Act, and the court could then order it to be sold or continued. We all know how unfitted a court of justice is to find out the condition of a road, its abilities or possibilities. Consequently that clause was merely intended to put off the minority with the idea that they could go to a court of justice and have everything rectified. You can see how impossible that would be. The Hon. Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways, was not in favour of the bill, and he said at the time that Sir Oliver Mowat was bringing in a measure which might meet the case in point. As you may be aware, the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) has said that he does not intend to bring up his bill this session, but that he has not by any means dropped the matter. I do not see how you can understand the exact condition of this road. I live in the city of Kingston and I do not know anything about it. There has not been a meeting of the directors since February, 1896. There has been no statement published, nor anything to indicate that there was a determination to conciliate and act fairly. It is true they have by far the largest amount of stock, but justice demands that the humblest man should get his share. To force a sale now, when things are beginning to revive and when the returns of the road are improving, would be very unfair and unjust. I can understand when people want to buy a railway it takes time to consider it, and persons disposed to do so would hardly have time in two months to give it proper consideration. Mr. Osler, who understands this question thoroughly, and who has investigated all their affairs in a law-suit which was carried on to get a receiver, declares that the road never failed to pay expenses. Mr. Folger, the manager of the road, told the objecting parties that if it was not for this litigation they might have had two per cent on their bonds. As to this floating debt, the lands possessed by the company in Kingston would almost suffice to pay it. You may ask what is to be done? What requires to be done is what any cautious men would do, namely, cut down the expenses which can be readily done, and apply a little more energy, determination and spirit to the management of the road. I will not occupy your time any longer, as I presume the bill will go to the Committee on Railways I may mention that if the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) contemplates bringing in a bill which will admit of the sale of the railway, he will, in his wisdom, cause such conditions to be introduced as will enable them to be sold under fair and just conditions. That is one reason why this bill should not pass without the possibility of any one here knowing the exact condition in which the road is. Another reason is, the receivership has been attended with beneficial results. If the receiver's power were enlarged, it is considered that much better could be obtained. At present he simply receives the money and pays it out. He knows nothing about what is being done or what the intentions of the company are. Another reason why this bill should not pass and a strong one, is that the receipts of the road are increasing. The bondholders are looking after it for their interest and principal, rather than have it all sacrificed. No one can suffer, Mr. Flower is a multi-millionaire. He is the sole wealthy member of this company. I hope the committee, when they come to give the matter their consideration, will treat it in that impartial manner in which they usually treat measures that come before them, and give it that investigation which will enable them to thoroughly understand what motives might affect those who are opposing as well as those who are promoting it.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—As there is no one here in charge of the bill, and as there is so much opposition to the bill, instead of sending it to the Railway Committee, the proper thing for the hon. gentleman to do now is to move the six months' hoist so that it shall not go any further than it has gone. That will dispose of it in short order.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I move that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Although it would seem to be dealing harshly with this matter, it would really be a wise step to take with the persons in charge of this bill, because they do not deserve any consideration. Some people are beginning to show very great disrespect to this body, when they permit a bill of this kind to be sent here without any senator being asked to take charge of it, and prepared to explain it and advocate what is desired to be attained by legislation. We have heard a good deal said adverse to the passing of the bill. The hon. gentleman who moved the second reading tells us plainly that he does not know anything at all about it, and can give no explanation of its provisions. He merely moves the second reading as a matter of courtesy, in order to enable any member who might have charge of it to take it in hand afterwards. It would be a proper lesson to teach those people who are interested in the bill that they should have some member take custody of the bill, ready to explain it and advance any arguments in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before we take this extraordinary course with reference to the bill, we ought to recollect the practice which has prevailed in this House in the past. There are a great many empty chairs here to-day, and it is quite probable that some absent senator, who expected the usual courtesy would be extended to this bill, which has been extended to former bills, has relied on his colleagues in this House carrying out the practice which has formerly prevailed, and, therefore, if we adopt this practice, it will be a warning in the future, whoever is in charge of the bill, that he must personally see to it, or depute some gentleman to look after it. There are a number of bills in the very same position, and it would be rather unfortunate that we should throw out legislation of that kind after the matter had been threshed out in the other House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I observe that Mr. Britton's name is upon the bill and I think this is the bill which he spoke to me about and said he desired me to take charge of, and would give me instructions as to it after it had passed the Commons. He has not given me any instructions so far, and I know nothing of the merits of the matter, but perhaps it would be better to let it stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has it been printed in Senate form?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Let it stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I hope my hon. friend will not push his motion for the six months' hoist after the explanation we have received. An hon. gentleman in this House has been asked to take charge of it, and he has not yet received instructions. I think it is the usual courtesy to let a bill, under such circumstances, stand for a day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suggestion made by the chairman of the committee is a good one. It is not the rule to mention what took place in committee, but I took strong objections to what I consider the discourtesy displayed to members of this House by gentlemen who have bills introduced in the Commons and sent up here. They expect that their bills will go through as a matter of course—that the Senate will read them, and send them before the committee and have them passed, without any consideration whatever. The member for Rideau (Mr. Clemow) did what has been done during this session more often than ever before. No one being here to take charge of the bill when it comes up from the lower House, as a matter of courtesy, he took the necessary steps to put it upon the order paper, so that the gentleman who should take care of it, if any one has been selected for that purpose, may have an opportunity to do so. We have had before the committee a number of bills, some of them most important bills, and no one there to explain them or to take charge of them, and on one or two occasions we let them lie there until some one came to take charge of them. The sooner the members of the House of Commons who have charge of these bills are taught a lesson of this kind the better it will be for legislation, and we shall know what we are really doing. This bill has been standing upon the order paper for some days, and if there was any one who had it in charge, one would have supposed he would have been here to give the explanations necessary. My great objection to the bill is not so much to its provisions as to the manner in which we are told it passed through the Lower House, introduced with certain provisions and clauses which were so objectionable that the bill was thrown out and then, by some means or other, it was restored to the order paper, passed through with amendments which met the objections of some of those who had opposed its passage, and I have no doubt were protected in the amendments which were made to the bill, and then it was passed through without, as the member for Kingston (Mr. Sullivan) says, the bondholders living in Kingston knowing anything about it—taking them actually by surprise. If this bill receives the six months' hoist, as has been moved, it will teach the members who have this bill in charge in the Lower House a lesson that they will not forget, and the sooner we do it the better. If hereafter any one who has the bill in charge can give satisfactory explanations of the intentions and provision of the bill and the necessity for making it law, a motion can be made to have it restored, and, if the House considers it desirable, it can be restored to the order paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill only came up from the House of Commons on Friday, and was moved by the hon. member from Rideau (Mr. Clemow). Would it not be better hereafter, when a bill comes up from the House of Commons without anybody having charge of it, to let it lie on the Table until somebody takes charge of it? That would be the better way, and it would only be fair. The hon. gentleman from Rideau had no authority to move the second reading, but, out of the usual courtesy extended to bills of that kind, did so. The better way hereafter, if the hon. gentleman who has charge of it is not present, would be to let it lie on the Table rather than to throw it out, because it may be said that the member who moved for the second reading was acting over officiously.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If this question is pressed to a vote, I should be disposed to vote with the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Sullivan), because we have not heard any reasons why the bill should pass, but we have heard some reasons why it should not be passed. After the statement of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), the hon. member from Kingston might let his motion, as well as the other motion, stand until to-morrow, when we would have fuller information.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It appears to me it is trifling with the Senate to send a bill of this kind up here. Are its promoters ashamed of it that they could not ask some one to explain the bill? I see the name of the hon. gentleman from Rideau connected with the bill. What instructions did they give him about it? He has no instructions at all.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I am entirely in accord with the leader of the opposition. The sooner the course that he suggests is adopted, the better our business will be facilitated, and people in charge of bills will see that they have somebody in this House to represent them.

The main motion was allowed to stand until to-morrow.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (113) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act." He said: This bill proposes to make certain changes in certain clauses in the Steamboat Inspection Act in reference to the qualification of the third and fourth class engineers. Under the law as at present, a fourth class engineer can only act as assistant to second and third class engineers. This amendment permits him to act as assistant to a first class engineer. I do not know why the distinction should have been made. This Act proposes to alter the qualifications for third and fourth class engineers. At present a third class engineer shall be qualified to take charge of any passenger steamboat of less than thirty nominal horse power. The former Act is repealed, and there is no limitation to the horse power of the steamboat, and in the amended clause he is allowed to take charge of any freight steamboat of not more than 75 horse power nominal.

The motion was agreed to.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (120) "An Act further to amend the Patent Act." He said:—Up to the year 1888 the Deputy Minister of Agriculture was the Commissioner of Patents. In 1888 an Act was passed, which is repealed by this bill, abolishing that office and reviving section 5 of the Patent Act which provides that the Deputy Minister of Patents shall be the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. That is the only clause in the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is simply to abolish the office?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and save $2,800 a year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And make the Deputy Minister of Agriculture perform the duties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It was so before Mr. Pope's time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

VOTERS LIST OF 1897 BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (126) "An Act respecting the Voters' Lists of 1897." He said:—This bill dispenses with the preparation of the lists of the present year, the ordinary bill that is introduced. We do not propose to have any elections in the very near future—in the present year at all events. Under the law, unless this bill were passed, we should be compelled to revise the list, and that would be a very considerable expense which it is thought might avoided, and this dispenses with a revision for the present year.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (127) "An Act further to amend the Fisheries Act." He said:—A bill of this character has been before the House on very many occasions providing for the postponement of the time within which the mill owners at Ottawa shall be permitted to throw their sawdust into the river. They have made an appeal for another year, and the time has been extended from year to year for a great many years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This will make the twenty-fifth year, will it not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A good many years. The bill simply asks for an extension of one year more. Some of the mill owners are endeavouring to adapt their mills to the requirements of the law; some others may comply, but there are some of them who cannot.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I regret, as I suppose every hon. gentleman in this House regrets, and as I believe the whole country will regret, that this matter is before us for consideration again. The question has been before the Senate from year to year for a great many years. A committee was appointed by Sir Alexander Campbell many years ago, and a strong report was presented on that occasion, and we had every assurance from the government of that time that this abominable nuisance in the Ottawa River would end at an early date. During the premiership of Sir John Abbott a similar course was pursued, and later on, under Sir John Thompson, the same thing occurred. Last but not least, under the premiership of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in this House, the matter was fully ventilated here, and after a long and animated discussion it was fully understood by every member of this House that that was the last time an extension would be granted. Is it going to be continued in this way? I think it is treating the Senate and the country very unfairly. These gentlemen have never had any intention of complying with the Act. They have not made the first attempt—I say it advisedly—to prepare for keeping the sawdust out of this magnificent river. My hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Scott) knows all about it. Refer to his speeches a few years ago. He was as strongly opposed to this question as I was myself. Two years and a half ago, for some reason or other he came round, and agreed with the then government that it was desirable to give those men two and a half years, which would expire on the 30th of this month. Prior to that the time had expired and they had been actually violating the law of the country for three or four months before they had the opportunity of having the matter reconsidered by the Senate, upon which occasion they were given this extension of time, and now they come forward and want another extension. What guarantee have we that they will not apply again in another year? They have no desire or wish to conform with the views and sentiments expressed by both Houses and by every government for the last twenty-six years. If we are going to be treated in this way legislation is a farce, and I do not want the House to be placed in that position. It is a crying evil that this river, which has been polluted from year to year, continues to be polluted in that way to the great detriment, not only of the city of Ottawa, but to the detriment of the entire people from Ottawa to Montreal and lower down. Hon. gentlemen have seen it and know what it is. They know the difficulty, and they know the danger. Last fall an explosion took place under a raft of timber near Allan's house at the west end of this building, and if it had occurred three or four feet nearer to the caboose in which the poor men were sleeping, they would have been killed. We are liable to such catastrophies from the sawdust nuisance, and I think it should be ended. Why is it continued? Merely to satisfy the greed of a very few people. They have no good substantial case to come to this House and ask for further indulgence, and I am surprised that the Secretary of State, whose opinions I know as well as my own—who believes, as I do, that it is a crying evil—should lend his name to this legislation. The Ottawa was at one time one of the most magnificent rivers in the country; now it is a pond for the refuse of the mill owners, and what is the effect? We are now trying to have a bridge constructed from Nepean Point to Hull, and the main difficulty in the way is this great accumulation of sawdust in the bed of the river. It will cost a large sum of money to remove that sawdust. The city of Ottawa is trying to establish a drainage and sewage system, and the great difficulty to be overcome, in the opinion of an eminent engineer from New York, is the accumulation of sawdust. He does not know whether he can get a passage for the drainage of the western part of the city on account of the sawdust, and he told the people if it were not for our excessively cold winters, that this city would be so polluted by decayed vegetable matter that we would not be able to live in it. These are all potent points, and they have been shown to this House conclusively upon very many occasions. We had a very elaborate report submitted to this Senate by a special committee under the auspices of the hon. member from Richmond (Mr. Miller) based upon the opinions and the evidence of many witnesses pro and con. That committee brought in a report strongly condemning the practice, so much so, that the government of that day and every succeeding government have expressed their determination to abolish the nuisance. Even the men promoting the bill in the Lower House today were the most strenuous in opposing it last year, and yet they want the time extended another year. If I had any confidence that those mill-owners intended to comply with the law, I would not object to the proposed extension. They have had time within the last ten years to make some attempt at remedying the evil of which the whole people in this part of the country has complained for so many years, and it is not paying proper respect to the Senate, who have taken this matter in hand, that a further delay should be granted. Every hon. gentleman in this House is conversant with the facts, particularly the older members of the Senate. It is a very unpleasant position for me to take to be antagonistic to the interests of a few gentlemen in this city with whom I am personally acquainted, but I am performing a public duty, and I consider it incumbent on me to follow it out as best I can. I do not intend at the present time to make a motion until I hear the sentiments of my fellow senators, and ascertain if they agree with me that these gentlemen have been given sufficient time. If they think it would be advisable under all the circumstances that this additional grace should be granted to them, I shall have to yield, but I shall keep myself in a position to move a six months' hoist if I find the sentiment of the Senate will support me. I know my hon. friend, the leader of the government, was not present on former occasions, but if he will take the trouble to look over the reports since that first committee was appointed he will find that the Senate were almost unanimous in the protest against the sawdust nuisance, and no man spoke stronger against it at that time than my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and he is just as conversant with the facts as I am and could not deny the truth of what I have said. He supported me, I will say, loyally at that time, but unfortunately, some other influence prevailed, and he supported the measure of my hen. friend (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) for some reason, I do not know why—stood by the millionaires and got them an extension of two and a half years. After all these extensions, I think the mill-owners ought to be satisfied If they have not conformed to what they knew would be the ultimate result of this matter, they themselves are to blame. I do not believe that any of the mill men have taken a step in the direction of changing their methods. My hon. friend says that Hurdman & Buell have. That firm is selling the sawdust and reaping an advantage and making money out of it. If one firm can do that and if the Edwards Company can put up a machine in New Edinburgh to burn the sawdust, why cannot these other men do one thing or the other? They are simply showing an unwillingess to comply with what the country expects them to do. If my hon. friends concur with me, we should give them no further time. Let the millowners take the consequence of their inaction. If they suffer from the course they have been pursuing for so many years, they may blame themselves for having failed to take proper precautions when they were notified years ago of what was coming. When they were warned, they said "we have sufficient influence and power to carry our point." It appears they have. They succeeded with past governments, and with the new government they are equally powerful. If these men had ever seriously intended to comply with the law, they would have taken the necessary steps long ago. If we let them off now, we will find the same application next year. My hon. friend opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) assured me two years ago that that was the last time of asking, yet here we have them applying again. I hope to see the Ottawa canal constructed before long. We find the government are spending money east, west, north and south, and I expect that they will do something for the Ottawa country as well. The sooner they do away with this sawdust nuisance, the sooner we will get the Ottawa canal. That is another reason why the sawdust nuisance should be put an end to as soon as possible. Two and a half years ago I asked to have a survey made to show that there was an increased deposit of mill refuse. There is no doubt there is, and had my view been carried out at that time, we would have had a report to show that the nuisance is increasing and is becoming so formidable that the navigation of the river is threatened. I want the hon. gentlemen who differ from me to say whether, under all the circumstances, I am not entitled to ask that this bill be thrown out.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Knowing the hon. gentleman from Rideau as this House does, I am sure no member of it would be disposed to do him the gross injustice of supposing that we would do anything to restrain the working of the bowels of compassion towards those poor criminals and that he would in the exercise of that mercy give them the additional year for which they ask to prepare for the doom inevitable after the lapse of that time.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I think it is quite unnecessary to add anything to what the hon. gentleman from Rideau has said with respect to the mischief which has been done by this refuse from the mills being allowed to accumulate in this magnificent river. He has pointed out that, not only to-day, but time and again when this subject has been before the House. He has shown good and sufficient reason why the nuisance should be put a stop to. It is placing this parliament in a very humiliating position to go on year after year passing an Act providing that at a certain time this practice shall end—that after a certain date no more sawdust shall be allowed to be thrown into the river—and then, when the year expires, passing another Act to extend it a year longer. It is placing us in a very humiliating position to find that a few men can set parliament at defiance, because I do not suppose there is the slightest possible intention on the part of these gentlemen who are affected by the bill to comply with the Act of parliament now any more than there was twenty years ago; and so long as the government will bring in a bill to extend the time and the House consents to pass it, so long will this practice continue. It will go on for twenty years longer until the nuisance becomes so intolerable that parliament may be driven into some measure to put a stop to it. It is very much to be regretted that this sort of legislation should be permitted. It would be a more dignified course to repeal the Act altogether and so leave it, than to make a farce of it by asking us to pass a bill to extend it for another year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Admitting all the objections to the practice of throwing slabs and sawdust into the Ottawa river—and I am quite prepared to admit that it is a great misfortune that the river should be polluted in the manner it has been—we must remember that at the time money was invested in the limits and mills no objection was made to the sawdust being thrown into the river; it is only recently that attention has been called to the evil, and then the answer of the lumbermen was that it was impossible for them to make changes in their mills, constructed as they are and run by water power, to dispose of the sawdust in any other way. Since then Booth's mill was destroyed by fire and has not been rebuilt. The principal reason assigned is because the new law will one day be enforced prohibiting the throwing of sawdust into the river. Mr. Edwards, situated as he is at the mouth of the Rideau River, had an opportunity to make the change and he did make the change. Buell, Orr & Hurdman are, I believe, from what the hon. gentleman from Rideau says, disposing of their sawdust, but they are on an elevated site. There are, however, other mills that have not those facilities, and to enforce the law would simply mean the abandonment of their property. That is the argument used. The effect of our not granting this extension at this time would be to throw out of employment some thousands of men and do irreparable harm to a large number of people. In a great variety of ways the injury would be very serious and the government do not feel that they can take the responsibility of closing those mills at present.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Why not repeal the Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will come in time. The effect of having this legislation is to prevent the practice to some extent. In rebuilding mills they are built with that legislation before them, and changes have been made in some. While the government are disposed to give another year they have given no assurances or promise that there will be any further extension.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Will the hon. gentleman promise for the government that they will not introduce a similar bill another year?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We can deal with that when the question arises. My sentiments are very like those of the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Allan). I should like to read the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in another place when the bill was under discusion there.

I do not believe that parliament will listen to applications for any more extensions, and it was with the greatest possible reluctance that I consented to recommend this extension. There is a very strong feeling in Ottawa and outside this city that the time has come when the mill owners must make provision to deal with the saw-dust otherwise than by throwing it into the stream. I wish to take this opportunity to emphasize this announcement, and to say distinctly that we cannot give any further extensions, and this will be the last time an extension will be given.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We have had that several times. We have had it for twenty years. The last time it was before the House, the same promise was made. It is time that this nuisance was abolished. In many parts of this country people are saving the sawdust. They do not allow it to go into the water. It is only at Ottawa that the privilege is given. I know something about lumbering, I know something about sawing, and I am satisfied that by a reasonable expenditure the sawdust could be taken care of here and the mill owners might even make money out of it; but they do not appear to pay any attention to parliament. Excepting once, I voted against the extension of time, and I am getting tired of it. If it goes to a vote now, I shall vote not to extend the time any more, because the lumbermen do not mean to comply with the law. I am satisfied of that, because this evil has been going on as long as I can remember. When I was in the other House, years ago, we used to have these discussions. The mill owners were always promising and never performing, and I do not believe they will perform now. I am as satisfied as that I am speaking to you now that if we grant this privilege again and pass this bill, the mill men will be here next session asking for another extension. I suppose when the river is destroyed we shall stop them. Here is one of the most beautiful rivers in the world so filled up with sawdust that navigation is injured and the water polluted. I think the evil should be stopped. If we want to destroy the river, let us put a clause in the Act allowing the mill men to continue this practice without restriction.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to ask the government why they propose to extend the period to the first of July, 1898? Why not prevent them, after the close of the present season, so that they will not commence putting sawdust in the river next spring? If they do as my hon. friend (Mr. Allan) has said, they will likely be before us next year for further extension. I should be disposed to give them an extension for the balance of the present sawing season.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What new arguments have been adduced to change the mind of my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Scott) on this question? I understand the hon. gentleman took as strong ground against the continuation of the sawdust nuisance as my hon. friend from Rideau (Mr. Clemow), did; now he seems to have changed his mind entirely as to the necessity of giving a further extension of time. The same argument that the hon. gentleman has used to-day has been used year after year, and unless you propose to extend the time until the supply of timber becomes exhausted, or exempt the mills on the Ottawa from the operation of the Act, I cannot understand the object of it. What I desire to call the attention of the House to is this, and it is suggested by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Allan), on small streams in the northern part of this country, the mill-owners have been obliged to adopt some means by which to keep the sawdust out of the creeks and small rivers upon which they are built, even where there is nothing in the world to be injured except a few fish of an inferior kind. The small mill owners in the northern part of the country, where the mills are erected for the benefit of settlers and not for any export trade, have been obliged to adopt some system by which they dispose of their sawdust, and have not been exempt from the operations of the law, while the larger and wealthier class have year after year been exempted from the operation of the Act. I know when I was in the government we kept extending the exemption from time to time, just as the hon. gentleman proposes to extend it now, and for the very same reasons he has advanced. These reasons will be repeated year after year until all the mills are burned down or cease to work. The question is whether it is not better to repeal the law altogether or compel compliance with its provisions, or admit at once that certain wealthy firms have sufficient influence with the government to guide and direct the legislation on the subject, no matter what government is in power. I have come to the conclusion that it is better that we should put a stop to it at once. What guarantee have we, if we adopt the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Glengary (Mr. McMillan) to give them until next fall, that they will stop the practice? Is there any guarantee that they will effect the necessary improvement in their mills during the next winter? Will they not come back next session and say that the weather has been too inclement, the mills have been frozen up, and they could not make the improvements? We had better do one thing or the other, enforce the law or repeal it altogether and put all mill owners on the same basis.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I have always opposed those extensions, but to-day I feel bound to vote for the bill as it stands and against the six months' hoist, because I believe the three or four preceding administrations having extended the time, the mill owners have been accustomed to think that they can get extensions always. I would be disposed to adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. McMillan) giving them this summer, but let them understand that next summer they must begin under the law.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The great trouble last time was that the extension was too long. If we amend this bill in such a way that the Act shall take effect on and after the 1st May next, instead of the 1st July next year, it would be better. If those who support me this year accept that I am willing to adopt that course. I have no personal feeling in the matter. I am discharging a very unpleasant duty, but I know I have the people with me. Any one who goes down the Ottawa River and looks at it will come to the conclusion that we have been a very stupid lot of people to allow the nuisance to continue so long. If the government accept the suggestion to let the mill owners have to the end of this season, but no longer, I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will consult with my colleagues on the subject.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then we will take the sense of the House on it. I know I have the majority of the House with me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can move when we go into committee to strike out "July," and make it "May." If it is not carried, you can take the sense of the House on the third reading.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894, AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (11) "An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894." He said:—This bill deals with the question of powers of attorney. The law as it is interpreted now by one of the judges of the North-west Territories, requires, when a company authorizes an attorney to sell its lands, as a number of companies in the North-west are large owners, that the power of attorney must be specific. This bill proposes to do away with that necessity and allow a general power of attorney, where properly authenticated, to be registered in the registry office, and until that general power of attorney is cancelled, the person so empowered can act for the company or the parties for whom he professes to be attorney. It has become necessary, I am advised, in consequence of this decision that the power of attorney must be specific and mention the lots of land that he is authorized to convey.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

CHEESE FACTORIES AND CREAMERIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (117) "An Act to provide for the registration of cheese factories and creameries and the branding of dairy products, and to prohibit misrepresentation as to the dates of manufacture of such products." He said: This bill provides that the manufacturers of cheese and butter may register with the commissioner of agriculture. The bill is permissive. They may register or not as they please. If they register, their trade mark is preserved and they can take proceedings against any person who attempts to use it without their authority. The bill also provides that Canadian cheese and butter must be stamped Canadian or Canada, indicating where it has been made—cheese intended for export. This part of the bill is compulsory. It has been stated, and I believe with some degree of truth, that United States cheese has been marked in the London markets, "Canadian," in order to take advantage of the reputation which Canadian cheese enjoys. There has been in the past some difference of opinion, I understand, among the manufacturers of cheese in Canada on this subject, but recently I have learned there is unanimity in favour of its being stamped. The commissioner has been requested to bring in a bill requiring cheese to be stamped.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the bill is a very good one. It is a matter I have given some consideration to. I do not think, however, that there has ever been very much difference of opinion among the manufacturers of cheese as to the propriety of branding it as Canadian cheese, but there has been a difference of opinion on another point; the date of manufacture. I think the bill has been very wisely framed in that respect. Whenever any date is put on a cheese it should be the honest date, but the bill does not provide that the dating of the cheese should be compulsory. The bill is wisely drawn in that respect, because we have a great many diverse climates in Canada. The August cheese in one part of Canada might not be the best, while in another part of Canada, August cheese may be of excellent quality and the date is not a clear index of the quality of cheese in the market to which we send it. So long as the date on the cheese is an honest date, I think the bill is wisely drafted in not requiring that the date be put on all cheese for export.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The government are to be commended for bringing in this bill, but I should rather have seen it compulsory on all cheese factories to register. The effect will be that the factories which do not register will fall behind, and they will be forced before long to become registered. Did I understand from the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Mr. Ferguson) that it is not compulsory on them to brand the date?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is optional. There is a good deal of difference of opinion about that.

Hon Mr. McMILLAN—I should have been pleased to see that compulsory, but I have no doubt it will come.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the date were made compulsory, then you would also have to stamp the name of the province in which it was made. Cheese made in the lower provinces, where it is much colder than in Ontario in July and August, may be of first rate quality, while the cheese made in our own province, particularly in the warmer parts of it, in July and August, is not so good. Can the hon. Secretary of State tell me why the registration is not made compulsory? I think the word "Canada" is a good suggestion. When I was in Liverpool a few years ago, going through the warehouses, the only mark on the cheese was "Ont." The immigration agent there, Mr. Dyke, said there was not one in fifty who knew what that meant, and that it should be in full—Ontario, Canada, or Quebec, as the case may be. I would not, under any consideration, ask to have the date put on. Under all the circumstances, the view taken of it by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson), who is a practical farmer and has given a great deal of attention to the matter, is, I think, the best one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was some opposition on the part of those interested to be compelled to register. I have no doubt the registration will follow when it is found to be a marked advantage.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

HUDSON BAY AND YUKON RAILWAY NAVIGATION CO.'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Cox, moved the second reading of Bill (77) "An Act to incorporate the Hudson Bay and Yukon Railway and Navigation Company." He said: It is a simple incorporation bill for the purpose of constructing railways in the northern country—Mackenzie River, Yukon River and the great northern lakes. It contains nothing that requires explanation here, but of course it will be carefully inquired into in the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not propose to divide the House on this bill, but I wish to express at this stage my opposition to it. I have opposed every bill which proposes to make the Hudson Bay a terminus. This railway, as far as one can gather from the bill, will be near the Arctic circle. I think parliament should not lend itself to anything which is calculated to mislead investors in the old country. Therefore I am opposed to it.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (80) "An Act to revive and amend the Acts respecting the Quebec Bridge Company."

Hon. Mr. VIDAL said: These amendments were made in committee, and it becomes my duty as chairman to explain the alterations which have been made. They will be found on page 388 of the Minutes. The amendments are, first, striking out clause one of the bill for the purpose of getting rid of what has been considered by the committee an incorrect mode of expressing the powers conferred upon the company, and substituting a more correct one. It has been the habit to describe the Acts as reviving and amending the law, and it appeared very clearly to the committee that the law is not dead and does not need to be revived, but the powers conferred by the original Act of incorporation are what require to be revived and continued, and the new clause is simply a change of expression in order to meet that view of it. Clause two is also changed by merely expressing in a different manner the idea which is really embodied in the original bill. A slight amendment was made at the request of the promoters of the bill, which was agreed to by the committee, specifying a particular date up to which any shareholder who had subscribed up to the 1st July, 1896, might have the privilege on application to the directors of having his stock cancelled, and money returned to him, preserving the rights of creditors as to any claim they might have upon him as a shareholder of the corporate company. Then there is a change made of the word "twenty" to "fifty." Twenty shares were mentioned as the number of shares which should qualify a person for becoming a director. The company thought that involved too small an amount of paid up capital, and they increased that to fifty shares. Then after the word "eleven" at the close of subsection 3, the committee have added the words a "majority of whom shall constitute a quorum": and adding these words to that section made it necessary that the following subsection be striken out altogether, which said that "five directors shall constitute a quorum." In order to bring the preamble in conformity with the idea expressed in the first clause, it becomes necessary to strike out therefore the words "revive and," leaving the expression simply that it is re-enacted. The title requires the same change and as amended now reads "An Act respecting the Quebec Bridge Company." It was thought to be quite sufficient description.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was then read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (H) "An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892."

(In the Committee.)

On section 762.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We amended that section but the amendment does not carry out what we intended This is a new section I am proposing now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I regret that the committee is not a larger one. The amendment which I propose to submit is one of some consequence. My proposal is to insert as section 728A in the code this provision :

It shall not hereafter be necessary that the jury shall be unanimous in any criminal case ; and a verdict of guilty may after four hours' deliberation be returned by not less than five-sixths of the jurors.

I wish that hon. gentlemen shall understand exactly what this provides. At present, as we all know, a jury has to be unanimous. The dissent of a single juror in a jury of twelve is sufficient to prevent a verdict. If this amendment should become law, that will cease to be the case, and any number of a jury of twelve above nine—that is ten or eleven—can find a verdict of guilty which will be held good ; and in the North-west Territories where the juries are composed of six the dissent of a single juror will not prevent a verdict. This matter has been discussed on more than one occasion in this House. The amendment must be a fairly reasonable one, because in 1892, when the Minister of Justice of that day caused his Criminal Code to be referred to a joint committee composed of the professional men of both Houses, that committee almost unanimously recommended that this amendment should be made in the law : and for reasons which did not affect the merit of the amendment it was not proceeded with. It was thought it would involve discussion, and the desire of the government was to get their measure through speedily, and consequently this amendment was not proceeded with. There does not seem to be any reason whatever why unanimity should be required of a jury in a criminal case at the present day. In the first place the person who is charged with an offence is brought before a magistrate. The magistrate has to find that there is a good prima facie case against him before he commits him for trial. Then having been sent up, as they say, by the magistrate—and as a general thing the magistrate leans to the side of mercy—the accused comes before the grand jury, and the grand jury have to find a true bill before he can be put upon his trial. I do not know what the experience is in the other provinces, but I know that in the province from which I come, the grand jury often seem to think it is their duty to try the prisoner, and unless it is almost perfectly clear that the prisoner is guilty, they will not find a bill. They seem to forget that their duty is to see that there is a prima facie case against the prisoner, and leave the question of deciding as to his guilt or innocence to the petit jury or judge. But in a great many cases the grand jury with us have thrown out bills where they should not, and in some cases where there was no doubt about the guilt of the accused. Then the accused, having come before the magistrate and having been before the grand jury, is brought before the petit jury and the judge—that is unless he elects to be tried by the county judge—and is allowed counsel. He is allowed to testify in his own behalf ; the accused has every fair play that any man can ask for, and at the end of it all if a single juror, who may be a crank, who may be, without the knowledge of the prosecuting officer, a friend or an associate of the accused, happens to be on the jury, the objects of justice are defeated and all the expense which has been gone through in trying to bring this offender to justice has been thrown away. I do not think that that is a desirable condition of things at all. In former days, when the accused was not allowed counsel, when he was not allowed to testify on his own behalf, and when capital offences were counted by the hundred, one could understand that it was desirable that every consideration possible should be shown to the accused. England and the other countries which have borrowed their criminal law from England are the only countries in the world where it is required that a jury shall be unanimous in a criminal case. In Scotland, strange to say, unanimity is required in a civil case, but not in a criminal case. In civil cases, up to a few years ago, the same rule prevailed which now prevails with respect to criminal cases. But that rule has been altered. In the province of Ontario, ten jurors out of twelve can find a verdict in a civil case, and in the province of Nova Scotia seven jurors out of nine can find a verdict after four hours' deliberation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that in civil cases?

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the province of Nova Scotia the jury has been reduced in civil cases and seven can find a verdict. No reason has been shown why the same change should not take place with respect to criminal cases. No one in Nova Scotia, and no one I think in Ontario, would go back to the old system which required unanimity, and I think if we adopt this amendment with respect to criminal cases the same feeling will exist. When this matter was before the House a few years ago, the amendment which was submitted to the committee did not contain any provision with respect to four hours' deliberation. That was inserted at the suggestion of an hon. gentleman, a member of the legal profession who has since died. The object of that, of course, was to guarantee that there would be a deliberation; because it may be that the one or two men who differ from the rest of the jury may possibly be right; and at any rate it is only right and proper that their view of the case should have a fair hearing, and therefore this amendment provides that this verdict of guilty may be found by the ten or eleven jurors only after four hours' deliberation. I think that whatever the case may have been in the days to which I have referred, when the criminal law was so severe, now-a-days we should not handicap justice too much, and I think every hon. gentleman must feel that in requiring that the twelve jurors must be unanimous we are handicapping justice too much.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—It may be presumptuous for a layman to interfere in matters which belong perhaps to the legal profession, but as lawyers do not shrink from expressing an opinion on medical subjects, I think I might be allowed to give my opinion with reference to juries. I think there should be three verdicts as in Scotland—"guilty," "not guilty" and "not proven." But I would have this amendment, that in the case of a verdict of "not proven," the man could be tried again. Of course he should not be tried again without fresh evidence. Anybody who considers the matter will see the common sense of the three verdicts. If new evidence is discovered, the prisoner should be tried again. It seems to be common sense, although there may not be law in it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) whether he can tell me what is the number of jurors in all the different provinces to try criminal cases? I know in the province I come from it is twelve, and I heard my hon. friend say that in the North-west Territories it is six. Is it twelve in all the other provinces except the North-west Territories?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot speak as to British Columbia, but it is twelve in the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It occurs to me that there is one province where it is seven—an odd number, and my hon. friend might find it very incongruous to apply his amendment to a case of that kind.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the jury is twelve, ten must concur; if it is six, five must concur, and if it is seven, six must concur.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman from Halifax as to the proposed amendment. I think in criminal cases we should stand by the old principle that the jury should be unanimous. It is just possible there may occur cases where justice may miscarry on account of the obstinacy of one or two men on a jury: but it may also happen that the one or two men may be right, and it takes a good deal of moral courage on the part of a juryman to stand out against a larger number. I lean to the belief that it is not always due to pure stubbornness, but arises from sincere conviction, and he must have a strong conviction that the person is innocent or he would not stand out. It is a principle of law that it is much better that a guilty person should escape than that an innocent person should suffer. Taking all these things into consideration, I think we should stand by the old system of requiring unanimity in the jury room. From my knowledge of grand jurors, having observed in that position sometimes myself, and also having observed the course of justice in my own province, my opinion does not concur with that of the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Power) as to the mode in which grand jurors generally discharge their duties. I think it is well understood that our grand jurors are only there to find out whether a prima facie case has been made out, and they are not trying the case, but simply ascertaining whether there is sufficient evidence to warrant a man being put to the disgrace of a public trial. That being the case, there is no great relief, as it were, for the guilty, or chance of their escaping in the fact that the grand jury would stand in the way. As a matter of fact, I do not think the grand jury stands in the way of putting any man upon his trial, if he ought to be so placed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—You must have better grand juries than we have.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, speaking from his own experience may have met cases of that kind; but I lean strongly to the opinion that we ought to stand strongly upon the old way, and require that in criminal cases there should be unanimity. I have an altogether different view in civil cases. In civil cases the balance may be very near, and even a majority would not be very much out of the way. But when life and honour and everything that is dear to man or woman are at stake in trials of a criminal nature, I think the old safeguard which is thrown round the innocent, of requiring unanimity, should be maintained.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman speaks of throwing a guard around the innocent, but it is generally round the guilty. If eleven jurymen take one view, and one takes the opposite view, the presumption is that the eleven are right; and the hon. gentleman has apparently omitted all reference to the fact that the joint committee of both Houses of 1892 was made up of lawyers who are, as is very well known, essentially Conservative; and they agreed to report in that way. Unless I am very much mistaken the Minister of Justice of that day, who was afterwards premier, endorsed the action of the committee. And further, the Justice Department afterwards sent around inquiries to the judges throughout the country with respect to this question, and the answers received were about equally divided; about half were in favour of the change, and half were against it. But, unfortunately, the question which the Justice Department sent around was whether they were in favour of allowing nine out of twelve to find a verdict; and even under those circumstances, to that question about one-half of the judges answered yes. If the question were put to-day as to ten out of twelve rendering a verdict, I have no doubt the majority of the judges, who are essentially conservative, and are anxious that we should stand in the old ways, would be in favour of this change. Then my hon. friend must remember that we are continually changing the old law, and if we were to adopt his principle we should never have any reforms. It is not very long since parliament in its wisdom decided to allow a prisoner to testify on his own behalf. We departed from the old way there.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—This is a very important change and I have not made up my mind just yet how I should vote. I should like to hear the views of the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Minister of Justice on the subject. It is a legal question that laymen are not supposed to understand throughly.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am in favour of the amendment of the senior member from Halifax. If half the men found guilty of murder are to be considered insane, I do not think it will make much difference in the end whether they are convicted by a majority of the jury or by the unanimous verdict of the jury.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The subject of this motion is one in which I have for many years taken a great interest. I think that I introduced a bill on the subject a couple of years after I entered parliament. That referred only to civil cases. I did not venture to touch criminal cases. I think, however, the same principle applies to criminal cases. I proposed nine to three in civil cases if there was to be any change, but I do not say that it would be unreasonable to make it nine to three in criminal cases. The subject is one on which there is great difference of opinion amongst those who have studied the subject, both in this and other countries. In Scotland, I believe the jury in criminal cases consists of fifteen, and a majority is enough to bring in a verdict. It is the old law of Scotland. The subject of trial by jury there in civil cases is regulated by Imperial Act of Parliament, and in such cases a verdict in which nine out of the twelve agree is sufficient, so that the two systems differ there. England and most of the United States —I do not know if it is so in all the states —and the colonies of the British Empire have stood by the old rule of unanimity in criminal cases, and I think we had better consider the subject more thoroughly than we can do to-day before introducing such an important change. I am all the more anxious about this because it might prevent the passing of the bill in the other House this session, and I would, therefore, ask my hon. friend to withdraw his motion for the present. I feel with him that it is a very interesting subject. I feel that justice, from all I have read and heard, notwithstanding all that has been said the other way, would be advanced if the verdict were not required to be unanimous, but I would not attempt hastily to pass such legislation; and as it is introduced now as an amendment, without any notice to the Dominion that such a great change was under consideration, our better course would be not to deal with it at all this session. I am glad toknow that my hon. friend does not object to that course.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose the hon. Minister of Justice would have no objection during the recess to take the opinion of the profession and judges on the proposal?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I shall be glad to do that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Under the circumstances I ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I propose to move to strike out clauses 92 and 97 which refer to the representation by the vitascope of prize fight pictures. I think it is rather a trifling matter for the Senate of Canada to take up. If it requires regulation, it can be regulated by the municipal authorities, or by the provincial legislatures, though I do not know that it is of sufficient importance to be taken up by them. I move:

That the bill be amended by striking out clauses 92 and 97 which define the exhibition by means of the biograph, or any kindred device, of any representation of an encounter with fists or hands between two persons to be an offence.

The committee divided on the motion which was agreed to, contents eleven, non-contents nine.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that the committee rise and report the bill as amended.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A suggestion is made by the police magistrate of the city of Belleville that an amendment should be made in section 784 to provide that in cases where people have been tried for small thefts of amounts under $10, they should not have the choice of going before a jury, but that absolute power should be given to the magistrate to decide whether he thinks the offence is of that character that it is not necessary to go. I shall read to hon. gentlemen what he suggests as an amendment. From his experience he will have a better opinion than I can possibly have:

And where the value of the property alleged to have been stolen, obtained or received does not in the opinion of the magistrate exceed $10, etc.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I should not like to adopt that without consideration. I am not certain that it would be well to deprive the party of the trial by jury.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (92) "An Act respecting the Great Eastern Railway Company."—(Mr. Bellerose.)

Bill (32) "An Act respecting the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company."—(Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (31) "An Act respecting the Trail Creek and Columbia Railway Company."—(Mr. Lougheed.)

The Senate then adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, June 15, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire:

1. Has the Manitoba Government asked the Dominion Government to have legislation adopted by the Canadian Parliament which will permit the Federal Government to grant to the Manitoba Government a sum of three hundred thousand dollars, out of the funds created by the sales of Dominion Lands specially reserved as school lands?
2. When did such a demand take place?
3. In presenting it did the Manitoba Government represent and show to the Dominion Government the pressing necessity to grant their request to a government who had refused and still refused to render justice to the minority and to carry out the judgment pronounced by the Governor General in Council and known as the Remedial Order?
4. Is it the intention of the government to ask parliament to amend the federal law for the purpose of granting favours to a government who refused to have its own laws amended in order to give justice?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Hon. gentlemen, to the first question my answer is yes. To the second question my answer is there was no demand—a request only. The third and fourth questions are not legitimate questions to put.

CLAIMS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to Call the attention of the Senate, to the correspondence recently submitted to this House between the government of Canada and the provincial government of Prince Edward Island, relative to the financial claims of the said province against the Dominion; and inquire, what the government intend doing regarding the Provincial Premier's proposition that all the said claims be submitted to arbitration?

He said: My object in making these remarks as the notice states, is to call the attention of this House, and particularly the members of the government, to this correspondence between the Island government and the government of the Dominion in reference to some claims of the province of Prince Edward Island upon the federal government. I notice that the first of these claims in point of presentation is what is known as the pier claim. This claim was presented in August last by the Provincial government in regular form by an order in council, and through the Lieutenant-Governor. I may say that this is a subject that has for a long time engaged the attention of the provincial governments of the province and it was dealt with in a large sense by the late government some years ago. I notice that this claim, as it is now presented by Premier Peters, only refers to a portion of the piers that still devolve for maintenance upon the provincial government—the piers on one river—and I am entirely at a loss to know why this claim should be presented while the other part of the claim, referring to piers and harbours in other parts of the province, should be neglected. The claim only refers to those of the East River. I notice that no reply, no response of any kind, has been received from the government of Canada to this memorial of the provincial government made in August last. I find, however, that quite recently a correspondence has taken place on other subjects. Under date 8th April the premier of the province writes a letter to one of the ministers, the Hon. Mr. Davies, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in which he raises a number of claims on behalf of the province, in which this pier claim is not mentioned at all. I have this letter of the premier here among the papers brought down recently, and I must say that it is a somewhat remarkable document. I notice that the minister (Mr. Davies) had it for seven weeks in his possession before he thought it sufficiently important to communicate it to the government. It is dated the 8th April, and it was only on the 27th May that it was presented by Mr. Davies to the Governor General in Council. This letter deals with several claims. One is an old one, quite familiar, I am sure, to hon. gentlemen in this House; that is, that the island is entitled to consideration on account of the nonfulfilment of the terms of union with regard to winter communication. And another is a very remarkable one, to be submitted for settlement in the manner prepared—a claim of the provincial government upon the government of Canada, on account of the province not having received fair treatment in the matter of the construction of railways since confederation. The premier goes on to say that there are several other claims. One of them he enumerates as a small matter of a pension of $300 a year. He says there are others, but these are the largest, and there is no reference to the pier claim, which he himself and his government had submitted to the government in August last, and to which there had been no reply. I do not find any fault with the manner in which the provincial premier proposed to deal with some of these questions. His proposition, in his letter to Mr. Davies, is that all these claims between the province and the Dominion should be submitted to arbitration; that three men should be named, one by the province, and one by the Dominion, and the third to be selected in some other manner, and that those three persons should have power to go into all these questions, and that their report, while not absolutely conclusive, should be a good basis for future action. In my capacity, as a member of this House, I want to protest against the premier's proposal to refer the matter of railway construction in the province of Prince Edward Island to any arbitration whatever. I should have remarked that Mr. Peters makes the extraordinary suggestion, in connection with this subject, that no person belonging to Prince Edward Island should be one of the three arbitrators. That was a most extraordinary proposition coming from the premier of the province, that every person living on the island who should of all people know most upon these subjects, should be excluded from the possibility of being appointed to act as an arbitrator on this question. I do object to the premier's proposition to the government of Canada that this part of what he calls the claim of the province in the matter of the construction of railways should be referred to arbitration at all. I contend that that subject should be dealt with, in regard to Prince Edward Island, precisely as it has been dealt with in regard to every other province of Canada. The works that we claim—the fair legitimate claims of the province, for the construction of these works, should be considered entirely upon its merits and there should be no proposition of an arbitration upon the subject at all. It is the place of this parliament and of the representatives of the province in the federal parliament to press for these much needed works, and I know there are very much needed improvements in Prince Edward Island, just as the representatives of all the other provinces are pressing the claims of their provinces in this matter, and I wish to enter my protest and I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will remember what I am saying. I believe the feeling in the province is decidedly against this matter of railway construction in Prince Edward Island being treated differently from what it has been in all the other provinces of Canada. In saying this, I do not want to be understood for one moment as minimizing what are the claims of Prince Edward Island in regard to public works. A paper was brought down less than a week ago in the House of Commons in answer to a motion by Mr. Martin, showing what the expenditure on railways has been since the 1st of July, 1873, by provinces. This is the statement:—

In the province of Ontario there were	$29,889,153	expended
In the province of Quebec there were	14,666,937	do
In the province of New Brunswick there were	9,045,538	do
In the province of Nova Scotia there were	14,718,155	do
In the province of Manitoba there were	8,024,432	do
In the province of British Columbia there were	21,441,700	do
In the province of Prince Edward Island there were	635,830	do
In the North-west Territories there were	7,604,819	do

This return shows that the total expenditures on construction and subsidizing railways in the whole of Canada since July 1st, 1873, has been $106,026,767.67, while the proportion of that money which has been expended in Prince Edward Island is only $635,830.27. I think, hon. gentlemen, after perusing a statement of that kind, will agree with me that whatever our opinion may be on the question of arbitration, there is a very strong claim as far as the province of Prince Edward Island is concerned for a more equitable and fair distribution of the public expenditures in support of necessary schemes of railway extension in Prince Edward Island. I hope my hon. friend, the leader of this House, may be in a position to tell us that his government will not agree to any proposition to settle this matter, or allow it to be considered by arbitration at all, and that he will go further and say that his government will be prepared at a very early date to take up the proposition for railway extensions which the late government had in hand before they went out of office, of constructing a few small branches which in themselves would cost very little, but which would be a great improvement and great advantage to many sections of Prince Edward Island. I hope my hon. friend will not only say to this House that he will not agree to any proposition or suggestion to take the consideration of this matter out of the hands of the government or parliament, but that he will be prepared to go further and say that this government will, at a very early date, take up the matter and grant the wishes of the province of Prince Edward Island by building the small branches required, and which in themselves would only be a mere drop in the bucket as compared with the large expenditures of the country, and which would not be more than the people of Prince Edward Island, in proportion to their population and their contribution to the revenue, might reasonably expect.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Has the hon. gentleman the figures showing what the proportion of the $29,000,000 expended in the province of Ontario were expended on roads forming simply a means of exit for the trade and population of the North-west Territories?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no detail. It is simply given by the provinces. A large amount of that money was spent in Ontario. My object is not to complain that any province has got too much or raise invidious comparisons between the provinces. This statement does not contain any reference to canal expenditures whatever. It was laid on the table by the Minister of Railways and Canals only last week in the House of Commons, and I presume there can be no doubt as to its accuracy. In discussing the matters contained in this correspondence, I may say that I very much fear that the chance of the province to be justly and fairly treated is not very favourable at this moment. I notice that the government, notwithstanding the professions of their party for many years in opposition that expenditure should cease and that the debt should not be further increased and that these stupendous enterprises, which they said were forced on the country should be peremptorily put a stop to—I find notwithstanding all this, we are on the threshold of very large expenditures indeed—not on the threshold merely, but engaged in them. I am not now finding fault with any of them particularly, but I may enumerate some of them, such as the proposed extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the canal expenditures—these are large and are going to add very materially to the debt of Canada. I will not say now whether any of them are good or objectionable enterprises. I am merely pointing to the fact that very large expenditures are being entered upon, and I feel, when that is the case, as the representative of a very small province, but nevertheless a proud province, one that feels its position, however small, I would not do my duty did I not point out to the House the claims of my province, when such good things are going round. I cannot help regretting that the provincial premier should have placed himself in a position where his independence is open to very grave doubt indeed. The premier of the province has been in the employment of the federal government for a good many months past, giving almost his entire time to it, and I am very sure he is not doing this for nothing. It is a highly objectionable state of things when the premier of a province places himself under such a deep debt of obligation personally to the Dominion government as the premier of Prince Edward Island has done. The position he occupies as the employé of the government in connection with the Behring Sea Arbitration is incompatible with a proper performance of his duty as premier of Prince Edward Island, and I very much fear that the claims of the island province at this important juncture, when the government are considering such serious and grave enterprises all round and attempting as they believe to do justice in so many directions, are not likely to receive fair consideration.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am not prepared to state the policy of the government on the various matters to which my hon. friend has referred. These matters have not been considered in such a way as to render it possible for me to make any intimation on the subject. I may state for the hon. gentleman's comfort, however, that no arbitration has been agreed upon. With regard to the claims of Prince Edward Island I can say this much, they will be carefully considered, and whatever those needs and claims justly demand will be accorded to them. We cannot do everything at once. My hon. friend complains because we are trying to do too much already, and he wants us to do something more. My hon. friend thinks the premier of Prince Edward Island has unfitted himself for representing the island because he has been doing some work for the Dominion. The work he does for the Dominion is for the common interest of every part of the Dominion—for the interest of Prince Edward Island as well as of every other part. He has not been going against Prince Edward Island, but for Prince Edward Island, quite as much as for Ontario and the other provinces. If there is anything in the view that my hon. friend takes on that point, it would imply that no minister should be taken from Prince Edward Island because in the government he is bound to attend to the general interests and to promote them, and these may be inconsistent with the local claims of Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend has pressed that too far. I am quite sure the interests of Prince Edward Island are perfectly safe in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, one of the most able and vigorous members of the government, and he will be found not to have failed in his duty to his province because he is acting for the interests of the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should have called attention to the fact that my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, speaking in another place, has emphatically denied that there was any proposition from the provincial government to refer the question of railway construction in Prince Edward Island to arbitration. I may be permitted to read a few words from Premier Peters's letter. After enumerating the claims of the province, of which the railway claim is one of the largest and most important, he makes the following proposition :

OTTAWA, 27th May, 1897.

Our claims are either just or unjust ; they either ought to be paid or they ought to be refused. The fact that we are a small province should act as an incentive to induce the government to give us the utmost amount of fair-play. We are willing to submit these claims to an independent commission consisting, say, of three men, one to be appointed by this province, one by the Dominion government, and one in any other way that may be agreed on. These commissioners should have power to fully examine into all the claims, to take down the statements fully, to hear all the evidence that can be adduced either for or against the claims, and make their report to both governments. This report need not be considered as absolutely binding, but at the same time it would form a basis which would allow of a fair discussion as to the merits of our claims, without any doubt as to the correctness of any fact alleged.

I make this proposition hoping that it will meet with the favourable consideration of Mr. Laurier and his colleagues. If it should turn out by the report of this commission that our claims are untenable it is just as well it should be known. I have great faith in the strength of our claims, but I am willing to leave them for settlement in the manner I suggest. I would even agree in order to have the amplest fair-play, to appoint a man on behalf of the province not belonging to the province. In fact I think it would be better that should be done. This is the proposition which as you remember I suggested to you verbally at Ottawa, and I earnestly hope it will receive your careful consideration.

In order to show that this statement referred to the railway claim, I will read what the communication says on the subject of railways :

The next claim that we make is that at the time we entered confederation the terms agreed upon were based upon the statement that a certain sum of money was to be spent on the Canadian Pacific Railway and a certain other sum on the Intercolonial Railway ; that these sums were, in both instances largely exceeded and that we in this province received little if any benefit from such excessive expenditure. Further, that a new policy was inaugurated by the late government of subsidizing railways of local interest, and immense sums of money were spent in this direction, none of which in any way benefited this province, but to all of which we had really to subscribe our share. This claim was put forward by the Sullivan-Ferguson government about the year 1886.

I have also to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the letter of the Hon. Mr.

Davies, dated 27th May, which covered this letter of Mr. Peters and referred to it, and is as follows :

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

The undersigned has the honour to submit to your Excellency herewith for your Excellency's favourable consideration a memorial which he has received from the Hon. Mr. Peters, the premier of Prince Edward Island, in which, referring to the claims of that province against the Dominion of Canada, he prays that these claims may be referred to a commission or arbitration for adjudication.

The undersigned submits the memorial in order that the proper action may be taken thereon.

Respectfully submitted,

L. H. DAVIES.

What I wanted to call attention to is denial by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there ever had been a proposition to refer this matter to arbitration, while he himself, in a letter no later than the 27th May last, recommends that proposition to the favourable consideration of the government. My hon. friend's reply with regard to the position of the provincial premier is this that according to my argument, because I object to the premier of a province acting in the employ of the federal government, there should be no member of the Cabinet from the province, I would certainly say that if Mr. Peters was to be taken as a member of the Cabinet he should cease to be premier of the province and the same contention applies to any other federal service I do not object to the selection of Mr. Peters as counsel in the Behring Sea arbitration, and I have no hesitation in saying, although he is a strong political opponent of mine, that he is a good lawyer and I have no doubt he did his work well as counsel for Canada on the arbitration, but what I object to is that he should act in the double capacity of an employé of the government of Canada and at the same time premier of his province.

PILOTS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND MONTREAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MONTPLAISIR moved the second reading of Bill (67) "An Act to incorporate the Pilots serving between Quebec and Montreal."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond) before leaving for Montreal placed in my hands a telegram from Montreal, saying that the board of trade, the shipping interest and the maritime insurance companies were very much opposed to the passage of the bill, but I apprehend the House will have no objection to the second reading of it so long as my hon. friend will not consider the House committed to the principle of the bill, and it be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours so that these interests can be there represented to discuss the matter.

The bill was read the second time.

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill (38) "An Act respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company." He said :—I have been requested to move the second reading of this Bill to-day. The gentleman who introduced it in the lower House came to me to-day and seemed to consider that my name appearing for it was sufficient justification that I had received instructions from the promoter of the bill. He did not wish to offend the House in any way and he requested me to move the second reading of the bill at this sitting.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (92) "An Act respecting the Great Eastern Railway Co."—(Mr. Bellerose.)

Bill (32) "An Act respecting the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company."—(Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (31) "An Act respecting the Trail Creek and Columbia Railway Company."—(Mr. Lougheed.)

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (113) "An Act further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I explained on the second reading, the bill is merely the substitution for clauses corresponding to the number in the present Act, and it affects merely the qualifications of engineers.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.), from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (120) "An Act further to amend the Patent Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill consists of three and one-half lines. Its purpose is to bring the law back to the condition it was in before 1888, when the Deputy Minister of Agriculture was the Commissioner of Patents. The department proposes to save the salary of the commisssoner, which is $2,800 a year, and impose the duties on the Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

VOTERS' LIST OF 1897 BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (126) "An Act respecting the Voters' Lists of 1897."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill embraces one section, and the provision is to dispense with the necessity of making up an electoral list for the present year, 1897.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (127): "An Act further to amend the Fisheries Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill consists of but one section. It postpones to the first day of July, 1898, the period during which saw-dust may be dumped into the river. We had a discussion on this bill, and the hon. gentleman from Rideau Division (Mr. Clemow) stated his intention of moving some amendment in committee.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I beg to move that the "first day of July" be expunged and "the first day of May" substituted therefor in the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this bill was up for discussion on the second reading, the expression of opinion was pretty largely given by the Senate that the date should be changed as suggested. I do not propose, therefore, to contest the matter, and am prepared to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the mill owners be warned that they will have no more extension after this year?

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—They have been warned every year.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They have been warned for the last ten years.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—From some remarks made in the debate on this bill, I came to the conclusion that it was scarcely the expectation of hon. gentlemen in the Senate that this measure would come into force even on the first of May, or the first of July next. It has been postponed for a great number of years; and it was stated, if I remember rightly, yesterday that one objection against the passing of a bill of this kind was that it would be the means of closing up these numerous factories around Ottawa, and throwing a large number of people out of employment, because the requirements of the law were such that they could not be carried out. If the government have satisfied themselves, or can satisfy themselves that that is a fact, then I say the Act ought to be repealed altogether; we never ought to have introduced it. But if it is not true, if the improvements can be effected with any reasonable amount of cost and expense, why is it we are asked year after year to pass a bill of this kind exempting these few mills round Ottawa, while in many other parts of the Dominion the mill-owners are forced to comply with the law? The first duty of the government in the meantime is to institute an inquiry—I won't say appoint a commission, because they are celebrated for that—but to institute an inquiry into the cost of changing these mills so that the saw dust may be kept out of the Ottawa River and other rivers to which the same bill would apply. We know that the dredging of rivers has come to be a very serious item of expenditure in Canada, and if the sawdust is permitted to be thrown into these important rivers, it is only a matter of a few years before a large amount of expenditure will be required to dredge them to make them fit for navigation. If that can be prevented and avoided in time, it is the duty of the government to introduce some means of arriving at a decision on this question, and if it is found to be against the interests of the country to enforce the law as it is now on the statute-book, then it should be repealed altogether.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. ARSENAULT, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894, AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (115) "An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This amendment to the Land Titles Act embraces but one section, with two subsections. The purpose of the amendment is to authorize the use of a general power of attorney where companies are selling lands in the North-west, and when they are acting through an agent or attorney the bill authorizes that the general power of attorney will be sufficient without specifying all the lands the company own. The necessity of the bill arises from the decision given by one of the courts in the North-west, by Judge Scott, I believe, that the powers of attorney filed were defective, inasmuch as they ought to state specifically the various lands. As hon. gentlemen are aware, some companies own thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land, and it would be very inconvenient if each individual lot had to be specified in the power of attorney. This bill provides that a power of attorney, if in general terms so that it can be easily understood and will reasonably embrace the object for which it has been given, will be sufficient, and will continue to be recognized by the registrar until the power of attorney, as filed by the company or by the principal, is cancelled and another substituted.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

CHEESE FACTORIES AND CREAMERIES BRANDING BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (117) "An Act to provide for the registration of cheese factories and creameries and the branding of dairy products, and to prohibit misrepresentation as to the dates of manufacture of such products."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first section of this bill authorizes the Minister of Agriculture to keep in his department a book known as a registry book, and it is permissible, not compulsory, for the owners of cheese factories and creameries to register in this book any special brand they may choose to adopt, and that brand will be protected for them. It is not compulsory, as I explained on the second reading of the bill, but permissive. The time will come, I hope, when it will be compulsory. The other clauses of the bill refer to the branding of cheese and butter. There are penalties for parties who misrepresent or remove or obliterate or erase the marks. The last clause is as follows:

9. The Governor in Council may make such regulations as he considers necessary in order to secure the efficient operation of this Act; and the regulations so made shall be in force from the date of their publication in the Canada Gazette, or from such other date as is specified in the proclamation in that behalf.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I do not understand the meaning of the last clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The regulations are to be under the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—When does the law come into force?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law will be enforced from the time of its passing, but it can only come practically into operation when the regulations are published in the Canada Gazette.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What I wish to inquire into is whether the law will be in operation so as to have an effect on the manufacture of cheese and butter this year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think so. Of course, as far as the clauses that are permissive are concerned, it makes very little difference, because parties may or may not register. With regard to the other clauses, the Act will be in operation from the time it is passed. It will apply, of course, only to butter and cheese intended for export.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (22) "An Act respecting the Trans-Canadian Railway Company and to change the name of the Company to the Trans-Canada Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (65) "An Act respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company."—(Mr. Lougheed.)

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the promise he made me last Thursday with reference to the petition of the people of Brantford respecting Judge Hardy.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have had a search made for it, and no such petition can be found. The hon. gentleman seems to know that there was such a petition, but I have failed to find it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am informed that there was such a petition sent to the government.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, 16th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask the hon. chairman of the Railway Committee if he is prepared to present any report on the bill to amend the Railway Act—commonly known as the Bicycle Bill?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think it should have been alluded to in the report, and probably a report will have to be presented, but the practice has been in the committee, when any bill has been simply postponed, that no notice has been taken of it in the report; but of course the postponement of this is different from the ordinary postponement of a bill until the next meeting of the committee. The committee agreed to postpose the bill until the next session of parliament, and I think probably that fact should be officially reported to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would ask my hon. friend to bring in a special report upon this bill, inasmuch as some additional action may be taken.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The report will be simply a statement of what has been done by the committee. The clerk will no doubt prepare a report.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER rose to Call the attention of the government to an article which appeared on Friday last in La Patrie, of Montreal, a paper reputed to be the organ of Mr. Tarte, and entitled "A foolish attempt" (Une folle tentative). Speaking of the ministerial project of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, the article terminates thus:

"If the views of certain hot-heads were to prevail, the Senate would prevent the government from putting this railway policy into effect. The Senate is almost totally composed of Conservatives, and it has the power to arrest the progress of the country—

"If it wishes (the Conservative party) to try the resort of opposing the resistance of the Senate to the will of the representatives of the electorate, we wait for it steadfastly.

"The Liberal party has smashed many obstacles within twelve months."

And ask if the government approves of and endorses this policy of menace and violence with regard to the Senate, as enunciated by a minister publicly?

He said:—These remarks are taken from the editorial column of La Patrie, and the Hon. Mr. Tarte, an old and very able newspaper man, is reputed to write his own editorials. As the majority of this House do not usually read French, and as many of those even who usually read that language do not peruse the daily La Patrie of Montreal, I thought it my duty to warn my colleagues of the terrible calamities that are awaiting us all if we do not in a blindfolded and submissive manner pass whatever measures the hon. gentleman who is at present at the head of the Public Works Department may present to the House, and to ask the opinion of the government on the matter. If the leader of this House intends to bring in such legislation, holding in one hand his bill and brandishing in the other a whip or a shillala, or pointing a revolver, it is important that we should be made aware of it beforehand, were it merely to make our last wills and testaments. The meaning of the ukase is unmistakable. We have to swallow that seven million dollar bill or be smitten. The word to us is "vote or die." I do not know what the sentiments of the majority of my colleagues are, but for myself I must say that, while feeling disposed to give the government the greatest latitude in carrying out its political programme as expounded or hinted to the people at the general elections, nay, even lending them a helping vote, I feel that I will be baulky under the lash, not being by education accustomed to the knout or the guillotine, or naturally inclined to either of them. I may, on deep conviction, vote in favour of that bill, but it will have to be shown to me to be as clean, as pure, as unblemished, at least, as the record itself of the hon. gentleman who I am informed is at the bottom of this arrangement—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That won't be very clean.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Before I will be made to accept it under high pressure. Now, we are all interested in knowing if the government are a party to this scheme, of terrifying, if the thing could be done, or forcing the Senate to accept this or any other legislation.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am extremely sorry to know that my hon. friend is frightened by the newspaper article which he had read. Most of us have had pretty strong things said about us and are not frightened. I do not think it is necessary, however, to answer any of the observations which my hon. friend has made. He wished to make them and has had the opportunity of making them, and if they have had any impression upon the Senate I leave that impression untouched. With regard to the question of which he has given notice, my answer is: I know nothing whatever of the newspaper article mentioned by the hon. member and I decline to answer the question put in reference thereto.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not legitimate.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire:

Has the government taken communication of the following despatch published in La Patrie, on Saturday, 12th June:—

"QUEBEC HAS NOTHING TO FEAR—ITS BRIDGE WILL BE BUILT.

"Quebec, 12th.—(From our regular correspondent.)—Mr. Aug. P. Choquette, M.P., has just addressed a letter to one of his friends in this city and which is of a nature to put a stop to all the inquietude which certain persons may have about the success of the Quebec bridge enterprise. Mr. Choquette declares that, having interviewed the Hon.

Mr. Laurier just before the departure of the latter for Europe, he is prepared to assure that the federal government is ready to grant 25 per cent of the total cost of the construction of the bridge, and that this point will be regulated at the opening of next session in January next.

"From another side, your correspondent is in a position to affirm that the bridge company has more faith than ever in this great project. In a few days workmen will be occupied with the preliminary works of the construction of the bridge on the St. Lawrence at the Chaudière."

2. Is this despatch true in its tenor, and was Mr. Choquette, M.P., authorized to make known the policy of the government on the subject of the construction of a bridge at Quebec?

3. How does it happen that Mr. Choquette knows the secrets of the cabinet and a policy which has not yet been announced?

4. Is it the policy of the government to grant towards the construction of a bridge at Quebec 25 per cent of what this enterprise will cost?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I know nothing whatever of the newspaper article mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The policy of the government with respect to the Quebec bridge has been publicly stated by the premier, and there is no further policy to announce.

ST. BONIFACE ELECTION CASE.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to Call the attention of the Senate to the following extract from the Montreal Witness, of the 5th June instant: St. Boniface, Man., June 5.—In the St. Boniface election petition case, discussed yesterday, it will be remembered that when the case came before the hon. Mr. Justice Killam on April 29, for trial of the preliminary objection filed by Mr. Lauzon, against the prosecutors of the petition, it was proved that both petitioners, Roy and Berthiaume, had been guilty of corrupt acts. Roy admitted he had been promised money for driving electioneers to the polls by Mr. Prendergast, the present judge. The chairman of Mr. Bertrand's committee stated that he requested Mr. Prendergast on the day following the election to pay him, when Mr. Prendergast gave him an order on Mr. J. A. Richard for the amount, which was paid by Mr. Richard. The other petitioner, Berthiaume, who supported Mr. Lauzon, in the election the year before, admitted that about a week before the election that Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast had promised to endeavour to procure him an office from the Dominion Government and he worked hard to secure Mr. Bertrand's election during the last week before the election. When this startling evidence was given Mr. Howell, counsel for the petitioners, applied for an adjournment to enable him to put Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Richard in the witness box, which was granted. Yesterday morning when the trial was resumed Mr. Howell stated to the court that in view of the evidence given at the previous hearing, he was unable to ask that the preliminary objections should be over-ruled. Judgment accordingly was given dismissing the petition."

And will inquire if the government intend to take any action regarding the matter.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I hope my hon. friend will not go on to-day. Immediately on seeing this notice on the paper, I telegraphed Judge Prendergast telling him of the question and asking him to look at the paragraph in the Montreal Witness of the 5th June, and to let me know if he had anything to communicate on the subject. This is the answer which I received yesterday, after telegraphing him a second time:

WINNIPEG, Man., 15th June.

Sir OLIVER MOWAT,
Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Most dangerous illness in my family was cause of some delay. Had also difficulty in procuring here Montreal Witness you refer to. Had next to procure copy of evidence from court stenographer. Have now mailed full statement and evidence. Charges are absolute distortions of official report of evidence which I mail, and speaks for itself.

JAS E. P. PRENDERGAST.

Here is a very grave charge made against a learned judge, and it would be quite contrary to what is usual to go on, even in a court, with a discussion of a matter without giving the person charged an opportunity to be heard. It is treating a judge less considerately than anybody is treated under proceedings in a police court or any other court. I think more liberality should be manifested towards him, especially in a body such as the Senate, which is supposed to consider matters very carefully and gravely and which does so. It would not have occurred to me that my hon. friend, a prominent member of the Senate, would press this matter without giving the House an opportunity to hear what Judge Prendergast has to say. He says in this telegram that he is quite sure that what he has mailed to me will prove the utter distortion of the official report and the evidence. Surely hon. gentlemen do not desire to hear a statement of one side, without having an opportunity of hearing what is to be said on the other side with regard to anybody, and much more with regard to a judge.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Everybody?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no, only their friends.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I hope my hon. friend will not press this matter. He is often very strong in his statements, but at the same time is very good natured, and I should be surprised if he were to press this without waiting to receive the statement which Judge Prendergast has mailed. Otherwise it would be an ex-parte statement and the ex-parte statement would reach parties who might not have an opportunity to hear the answer. That would be an advantage which I am sure my hon. friend would not like to take. If the story on one side is to appear, surely the statement on the other side should appear at the same time. What does anybody gain by hearing one side only? This House gains nothing, the public gain nothing, and I see no legitimate advantage which anybody would gain, and I am sure my hon. friend desires only a perfectly legitimate advantage in this discussion. He does not want Judge Prendergast to be considered blamable if he is not blamable. If there is anything to be said in his defence he would not exclude that. He must perceive the awkwardness of hearing one side only to-day, and leaving to another and future day, the hearing of the other side. Such a course shocks one's sense of what is right, and I am sure will shock my hon. friend also. The time that we shall have to wait cannot be very long, and I ask my hon. friend to let this matter stand until there is an opportunity for the document, which is now on the way, to arrive.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, no doubt, is acquainted with Longfellow's poem, the Courtship of Miles Standish, and you will remember the words that the lady addressed to John Alden—"Why don't you speak for yourself, John Alden?" My hon. friend requires no such reminder. I'm afraid my hon. friend in his remarks, while putting in a good many words for Judge Prendergast, is putting in more for himself, because I shall have perhaps more to say about the administration of justice under my hon. friend than about Judge Prendergast. I should be sorry indeed to force a discussion on such a grave and delicate subject as this without giving everybody concerned the fullest opportunity of stating all that can be said on every side. A week ago last Monday I called attention to a newspaper paragraph, and my hon. friend very properly pointed out to me that I had failed to give notice, and, that being so, it was better that notice should be given, in order that the party referred to should have an opportunity of being heard in his own defence and that the government should have time to get information. I very readily agreed to that suggestion, and put my notice on the paper. My hon. friend knows that I have been ready for some three days to go on with this discussion, and at his request I have allowed it to stand in order so give him time to get information from Judge Prendergast. I am sorry that the judge has not thought proper to comply with the request, which I have no doubt the hon. gentleman made to the judge very promptly, as it was his duty to do, and if he had done so there would be no complaint at all that the requisite information is not now in the possession of this House. He says that the charges which appeared in the newspaper are an absolute distortion of the official report of the evidence, and that a copy of the official report of the evidence is on the way.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He does not say that. He says he has got a copy of the evidence but he does not say that he is sending it. What he does say is: "Had next to procure copy of evidence from court stenographer."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He does say that he has mailed it. He says: "have now mailed full statement and evidence."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I had no difficulty whatever in procuring a certified copy of the evidence, and have had it in my possession for several days. I made no effort to obtain it until it was referred to in the House ten days ago. There would be no object in putting my views before the House at the present moment if this parliament was to continue sitting for some days. But a very grave question has arisen affecting the administration of justice, affecting the department which my hon. friend presides over in the government, and in the interest of my hon. friend, as well as in the interest of Judge Prendergast, it would be a very great misfortune now if this parliament should rise, as I believe it is expected to do in two or three days, without this subject being properly discussed on the floor of the House where it is very desirable that it should be done.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It cannot be discussed on one side only.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am in the hands of the House, but I see from the telegram which the hon. gentleman has read that if I do not go on with my motion to-day I shall have to defer it until this parliament has prorogued.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no chance of prorogation for two or three days.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There will be no chance of discussing it if the House prorogues on Saturday.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no chance of proroguing on Saturday. The business might possibly be through by Saturday night, but parliament would not be prorogued for two or three days later.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a great deal of important business to come before us yet which we will have to consider, and we will not be deterred by the statement which has been read from La Patrie, from doing our duty.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no chance of proroguing on Saturday, you may rely on that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If I am thoroughly assured on that point, and that it will be open for me to discuss this question on Monday next——

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Oh, I will not say that, but there will be an opportunity on Saturday at all events.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have not taken Saturday yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we going to sit on Saturday?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think it will be unavoidable. I think we may assume that we shall sit on Saturday.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I scarcely think it is doing justice to this House or the Department of Justice—I will not put it any stronger—that this question should be deferred until there is very little more than a quorum present, until the Black Rod is rapping at our doors almost, and we are being pressed and rushed, having a sitting, perhaps two sittings, on Saturday. I must complain that, if such a course is taken, the public interest will not be served by it. I do not want to proceed now and do what would be considered as unfair, but I do complain that Mr. Prendergast, knowing that his reputation for integrity was affected by the newspaper statements, and knowing that the matter had been brought up in parliament, has not been more diligent. I must say that I am afraid my hon. friend has not made the earnest efforts he should have made in order to obtain the information, and have this subject discussed in this House. My hon. friend, perhaps, will make a suggestion as to when this subject can be properly discussed. I do not want it on Saturday, because it is a very unsuitable day.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no objection to naming Monday, if we should be sitting on Monday. I do not want to mislead the House. I could not say but there may be a chance that the business will be over on Saturday night, but I think it is a very remote chance, there is so much to be done and this is now the middle of the week, but I am quite willing that this should be made the first order on the first day that we sit after Friday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not to-morrow night? The letter should be here to-morrow night. It was mailed yesterday.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—A letter mailed in Winnipeg on Tuesday would get here on Thursday.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If I get it to-morrow I shall be very glad to have this disposed of on Friday. I will let the hon. gentleman know if it arrives.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is understood the hon. gentleman will go on with his motion on Friday?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If I receive the letter by that time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Prendergast may not send it at all. He has not been very diligent. He did not send any answer to the first telegram.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He had severe illness in his family, and as soon as he could do anything he hunted up the newspaper, and that caused some further delay, and then he applied to the stenographer for a copy of the notes. I think there has been a good deal done in the time. There is no ground for the suggestion that he has not been diligent in his own defence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I made that statement upon what the minister has said himself. The hon. gentleman informed the House, when this matter was first brought up, that he had at once telegraphed Judge Prendergast and got no reply, and had to send a second telegram.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That was only yesterday.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my hon. friend had to send the second telegram, it is the best evidence of the truth of the statement that Mr. Prendergast paid no attention to the first telegram.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He has explained the delay in the telegram. You forget that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I forget nothing. My hon. friend (Mr. Ferguson) called the attention of the House to it a week ago last Monday. He has been prepared to go on and has in his possession a certified copy of the evidence given in the trial, which alludes to Mr. Prendergast, and the copies were made and sent from Winnipeg and he has had them in his desk two or three days. Surely Mr. Prendergast could have done the same thing.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Of course it may have been my fault.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was glad to hear my hon. friend expatiating with such feeling on the desirability of both sides being heard before the matter was dealt with. I would commend the application of that practice to dismissals, so that when the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Mr. Landry) draws the attention of the House to the many decapitations in his district, it will not be stated to us by the Secretary of State that the dismissals have been made on the recommendation of Mr. Choquette, M. P. without investigation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And that there is no necessity for any investigation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The motion of my hon. friend points to further action. I should like very much to know whether the hon. gentleman thinks, if the document which he has in his possession is confirmed, that that will be sufficient to justify us in asking for the removal of Judge Prendergast. There is nothing more clearly laid down in the English rules than that, where the charge is not of such a character as to warrant the House, if true, in asking for the removal of the accused person from office, it should not be made the subject of discussion in parliament. In the case of Mr. Justice Smith, and in the cases of other parties which the hon. gentleman will find in Todd's book, the rule which I have just stated is laid down, and it seems to me that before the hon. gentleman makes this matter with reference to Judge Prendergast the subject of discussion in parliament, he ought to be prepared to take the further step, and if he thinks that cannot be taken, then the motion is one that ought not to be made, because you are weakening the authority of the gentleman who has to take part in the administration of justice, and you are leaving him in possession of the place which he occupies.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no desire or intention to allow myself to be drawn into a discussion on this question at all until it comes before us, and until I rise and am allowed to make my statement. I may say, however, in reply to my hon. friend that I fully understand the view that he has presented and that the charge involved in this matter of Judge Prendergast is of sufficient importance, if true, to warrant his removal from the bench, and in that case my motion would be intended as being preliminary to the proper constitutional steps being taken to ensure his removal.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported with regard to Bill (68) "An Act to amend the Railway Act," that the committee recommended that the further consideration of this bill be deferred until the next session of parliament. He said: It becomes my duty to make a short explanation with regard to this. The arguments adduced before the committee were numerous and strong on both sides and were very fully dwelt upon. I may state that the opinion of the committee, as embodied in the resolution, was that the contending parties were approaching a favourable settlement, that advances were made on the one side beyond anything that had been expected of them, and the others were not quite prepared to receive them, but the feeling in the minds of the committee, as expressed in that motion, was that if a little time were given and if the railway authorities and the promoters of the bill had the opportunity of meeting together, a settlement would be effected which would render it unnecessary to make any application to parliament at all. At the same time, it was very clearly stated that if the railways were found to be unwilling to make any concession at all, or to enter into an arrangement, at the next session of parliament the case of the bicyclists would certainly be taken up and dealt with.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What date has my hon. friend fixed for the adoption of the report?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—It does not require adoption. There is no recommendation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it does.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The recommendation is not to proceed with the bill. I move that it be considered to-morrow.

CANADA INVESTMENT AND AGENCY COMPANY.

AMENDMENT AGREED TO.

A Message was received from the House of Commons to return Bill (L), "An Act relating to the Canada Investment and Agency Company," and stating that they had passed the bill with an amendment to which they desired the concurrence of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND moved concurrence in the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not intend to oppose the adoption of that amendment, because the same clause is inserted in almost all bills of this character, but I am at a loss to know why, if a party borrows money and pledges his property for it, and fails to pay, and the property has to be taken in security by the loan company or the individual, it should revert back to the owner or to the heirs in case the state of the country is such that it is impossible to sell the property. I know it is the policy that has been laid down for nearly all these companies for a great many years, but where the justice or equity in a provision of that kind is, I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I think the objection just stated is an exceedingly fair and reasonable one, and I fancy this clause was originally conceived by somebody who was in a difficulty to imagine what person or persons would be the recipients of the property.

The motion was agreed to.

YUKON MINING AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST READING.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the suspension of the 51st rule so far as it relates to this bill.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I object to the suspension of the rule. It is a very important measure, one that ought to be examined very closely before it is adopted by the committee or by this House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend can surely examine it before to-morrow. The session is so far advanced that there may not be time to put the bill through if there is any delay.

Hon. Mr. McINNES—I object to the suspension of the rule.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the bill be read the second time to-morrow; then my hon. friend can raise his objection.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I object to that motion. It requires one intermediate day, and the second reading should not take place until Friday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is my hon. friend aware that this company is incorporated in British Columbia by provincial legislation?

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Yes, and that is one reason why we should examine into it very closely.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (124) "An Act incorporating the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton, Ltd."—(Mr. MacInnes, Burlington.)

Bill (99) "An Act respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company."—(Mr. MacInnes, Burlington.)

Bill (114) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the North-west Territories."—(Mr. Scott.)

Bill (116) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act."—(Mr. Scott.)

Bill (110) "An Act to incorporate the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company."—(Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton.)

DEPARTMENT OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE BILL.

FIRST READING.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (125) "An Act respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a very short bill; could not the hon. Secretary of State inform the House of the contents? It is a government measure involving a change of policy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman suggest that we should take the second reading now?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Quite the contrary; I ask what are the contents of the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is declaring what the salaries of the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue shall be. It makes no change in the salary and it provides for carrying out the policy adopted by the late administration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the bill, it re establishes the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue, or, in other words, abolishes the controllers and makes them ministers. Does that repeal the Act establishing the offices of Controller of Customs and Controller of Inland Revenue?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And it does not repeal the Act establishing the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, that continues.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then this makes an additional member of the Cabinet?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Two additional members.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It makes fourteen recognized by law as heads of departments and as ministers of the Crown, two of whom receive lower salaries than the other ministers.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—For the present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not dealing with what is to be done in the future.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The bill provides that they shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the cabinet, after which the salary shall be $7,000 per annum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course, it leaves it open to be dealt with at a future session. My principal object in drawing attention to the provisions of the bill with respect to salaries is, in the first place, I do not consider it necessary, constitutionally, to enact a law to enable the Governor General to call to his council the two controllers, if he thinks proper to do so. If you can make any person a member of the cabinet who has no position other than the fact of his being a minister without portfolio, there is nothing in the constitution to deprive you of the power of making the controllers members of the cabinet also.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad that my hon. friend accepts that view of the constitution. I am glad of it for this reason, that when I had the honour of occupying the position of premier I took the responsibility of making the two controllers ministers of the Crown, without additional salary. They, at the same time, went back to their constituents for re-election and approval of that act. The position taken by the then government was contested by hon. gentlemen in this House, and also in the other House, as being unconstitutional; however, I failed to find anything to justify that position. What I want to point out is the strange position in which the hon. gentleman is placing the controllers, giving them a salary $2,000 less than men who have infinitely less work and responsibility cast on their shoulders. I remember well that the Hon. Edward Blake, when in the House of Commons, moving a resolution affirming this principle that all cabinet ministers should be paid in proportion to the responsibility attached to the offices which they held. It is also true that he pointed out at that time that the Secretary of State and the President of the Council—I am sure of that portion, I am not sure as to the other, but I think the Secretary of State and one or two others who had comparatively little routine work to do though they had the responsibility of ministers—should have lower salaries than were paid to those at the head of very responsible departments to which was attached a good deal of hard labour. I hesitate not to say, from long experience, that there is not a head of any department in the whole government that has a greater responsibility devolving upon him, who has to work more hours out of the twenty-four, during the whole year, providing always that he attends to his duty, than the Minister of Customs, and in making the Controller of Customs, a minister of the Crown and head of the department over which he is to preside, my hon. friend should have had the courage to come down and place him upon an equality with the other ministers so far as his pay and emoluments are concerned. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand distinctly that I am not finding fault with the abolition of the offices of controllers and making them heads of departments. Experience taught me that you could not, under our present system, adopt the system which prevails in England, of having what are called under secretaries. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will remember very well that it was on this principle that the late Sir John Macdonald desired to engraft upon the system which prevails in England, that is of having a certain number connected with the government with certain responsibilities attached to the positions which they held, without giving them seats in the cabinet; in other words, to prepare them for more serious responsibility, as under secretaries prepare themselves in England.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This did not meet that case at all, as was pointed out at the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was just coming to that point. I admit that. I had grave doubts, from the experience I had had, of the propriety of the course then followed, but in matters of that kind, as most ministers of a cabinet do, I deferred to the opinions expressed, where there was no important principle involved, to the head of the government. I found that in practical experience in this country it could not work satisfactorily, and I informed the controllers myself, when they were made ministers of the Crown, that if I retained the position I then held, I would adopt some other system by which they would be made wholly and solely responsible for the departments over which they presided, by a readjustment of the different departments, which I think can very fairly be done without increasing the number; and it might be done under the present circumstances, which did not exist some ten or fourteen years ago, by reducing the number below thirteen, and that too, with advantage to the country and to the government. Desiring to know before we went into committee what the bill provided, I have taken this opportunity of expressing the views I hold and have held on the question.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The object of the government in making the provision as to the salary is, that the addition of these two members to the cabinet should not increase the cost to the country, and the only way to accomplish that was the way we have taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You could have done that by decreasing the salaries of the Secretary of State and the President of the Council and giving it to those two.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The Secretary of State is a hard working minister. How his work compares with that of the others I have no means of knowing. A minister has often to take charge temporarily of another department, and a very large part of my hon. friend's time, while Secretary of State, has been taken up in that way. If we were all working full time, so that there was no possibility of any one of us attending to any other department but our own, the public business would suffer. It is desirable that there should be at least one member of the government who can take occasional charge of another department as well as his own. My hon. friend refers to the President of the Council. There is not a more hard-working member than the President of the Council. That is because he is premier. When the premier is President of the Council, this House may be sure that there is not a minister who has harder work than he has to do, apart altogether from the public work which people know of. I was astonished at the amount of work which belongs to all the departments. I thought before I came here that in my former position I worked about as hard as I was capable of working, but I found when I came to Ottawa that to get through with the work I had to do I had to labour twice as hard as before. Some persons say the cabinet should be reduced to ten. I venture to say that no one who knows the business to be done would say so. It is impossible to do it except by some rearrangement, which I find it impossible to devise, and I have not met any one who can devise it. I suppose it would be only possible by providing additional officers who are not to be in the government, and whether, on the whole, the country would be advantaged by that I am not at all sure. I am satisfied that the experience of the country has shown that a difference in the amount of the salaries of the different ministers is an impracticable thing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do not understand that I advocated it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I thought my hon. friend did.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I called attention to the position taken by Mr. Blake and some others who followed him. I did not approve of it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend and I agree on that point, so we need not discuss it. I do not think it is practicable and he does not think it is practicable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I entirely agree with the observations addressed to the Senate by the hon. leader of the House on the subject of additional ministers. We very often hear it said on the platform, and see the statement in the newspapers, that the great republic to the south of us has but seven cabinet ministers while we in Canada have double that number. That is perfectly true, but their system of government is altogether different from ours. Ours is parliamentary, theirs is not—that is, the ministers are supposed not only to advise the Crown on subjects of public policy, and attend to the work of the administration, but also to control the legislation proposed to the two Houses, and in the House of Commons they have to make a House and keep a House, which no minister in the United States is called upon to do. Under the United States system the heads of the departments are simply chief clerks. The constitution makes no provision for any executive officer, except the president. All the executive power in that country is vested in the president; and the heads of departments, those who are in his cabinet are simply persons who enjoy his confidence and are supposed to execute his will and opinions with regard to the various administrative matters that call for action. Now, our position is altogether different, and it seems to me that any attempt to reduce the number of ministers to any considerable extent would have the effect of frequently creating crises in the House of Commons when, with a larger number of ministers such may easily be avoided. Certainly to have a political crisis every other session, or perhaps two or three times in a session, is not in the public interest or to the public advantage. When it was proposed to create two subordinate members of government in this country, I opposed it. I stated my reason in the House of Commons on that occasion, and I have seen no ground for changing the opinion which I then entertained. Our position is altogether different from that of Great Britain. There you have a number of men of fortune, who are members of House of Commons, who enter it as young men and who, if they are men of promise belonging to the one party or the other, those who belong to the party of the government are frequen ly taken as the private secretaries of the ministers. They become conversant with the opinions of those ministers. They learn their way of looking at the various public matters with which those ministers are called upon to deal, and they serve in this way an apprenticeship for a few years while ministers are in office, and at a later period, after having had this training, the more successful among them are called upon to take a place subordinate in the government, that of political under-secretaries. And so they receive a further training before they enter upon the duties of ministers of the Crown and members of the cabinet. They have been thoroughly indoctrinated into the veiws of those who have preceded them belonging to their political party, the great leaders of parties in the state; and so you have given to the government in the United Kingdom, a c ntinuity which has not hitherto been given to the government of this country, and which our circumstances, up to the present time, will not permit. Now, our position, I say, is different from theirs. If we were to make any change, perhaps to introduce the Italian ministerial system would be better than any other. Under the Italian constitution, a minister is permitted to go into both Houses for the purpose of discussing the measures of the government of which he has charge. He votes only in the House of which he is a member, but he is at liberty to take part in the discussion of the measures which pertain to his department in both Houses, and thus one who is specially familiar with the measure is the minister who has an opportunity of informing both Houses. This secures, with the smallest expenditure, perhaps the best results. It is on the whole less efficient than the English system. Perhaps it is more satisfactory than our own; but when it was proposed some years ago by the prime minister, Sir John Macdonald, to create two subordinate offices in the government, I was then of the opinion, and I am still, that that was not advantageous, and it was not the English system. It was not an approach to it, because the subordinate officers under the English system are second representatives of a department. If the secretary of a department is in one House, the political under secretary of that department is invariably a member of the other House. I have looked over the lists for a long series of years, and I have been unable to find a case where the two representatives of a department were at the same time members of the same House. These two controllers were not in any sense representatives of the departments of which some one else was chief minister and in another chamber. Take the case of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My hon. friend opposite, (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) was Minister of Trade and Commerce, it is true, in this House, and the controllers were members in the other House, but that was a mere matter of accident, and so far as I know, there has never been that intimate connection between the department known as the Department of Trade and Commerce and the offices held by the controllers, being the head of these two departments to give him charge and jurisdiction over them and to authorize him to determine what the general policy of those departments should be. In this country, where people are standing very nearly upon a footing of equality, usually the men who come into parliament and who are considered men desirable as cabinet ministers, are not likely to serve an apprenticeship in subordinate offices. Those who are most available for that purpose are persons who, outside of parliament, if they chose to devote their attention to their profession, or their private business, whatever it may be, are likely t o be in the enjoyment of a larger income than they will receive as controllers. And so the parties whom it may be most desirable that the government should obtain are those new men who are quite equal to the position of cabinet ministers, and who in the majority of cases are not likely to serve an apprenticeship in the subordinate offices. I think I could name men amongst the friends of my hon. friend who would not be likely to accept such a position. I do not think that it is in the public interest that one man should be receiving a very large salary and another a salary very much less, and in this country, on the whole, the system which will work most satisfactorily is that which places the salaries of ministers upon a footing of equality. My hon. friend opposite has said that there are some ministers who have very little to do. I do not think that that is the case. Any minister who is inclined to be industrious can always find plenty to occupy his attention, it may not be departmental, but it is none the less important in the public interest on that account. Why, in England there are a number of public offices in every cabinet which are regarded, so far as departmental work is concerned, as mere sinecures. Take the office of the First Lord of the Treasury, the President of the Council and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; what great duties attach to these offices? But in almost every case the persons who are appointed to these offices are persons of eminence, and the work of preparing the measures of administration, of deciding what shall be dealt with and how it shall be dealt with, in a large degree devolves upon these men. The First Lord of the Treasury is most always the Prime Minister; and every one of them is occupied with the consideration of questions of public policy, if he is not considering the details of the administration of the department. And I think the same rule will apply here, and if a prime minister constitutes his department in such a way that those who occupy offices the duties of which are less than those of their colleagues are not qualified to undertake the general work of the government, the preparation of the legislation for the session, then he has made an unfortunate arrangement. But I think it is fortunate, under our parliamentary system, that such is the case, and it always makes it possible for a government to be prepared with the legislation for the session. I think the proposal contained in this bill that is now under our consideration, which deals with these two offices, and which provides that those persons who are appointed to them shall be members of the cabinet, is a wise provision, and that it was a great mistake when we departed from the system which existed before, and it is a step in the right direction to return to that system again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the House will permit me for one moment, I should like to set the hon. gentleman right in one particular; that is, in reference to the position of the controllers in relation to the head of the department, and particularly as in his admirable speech he has given us a very great deal of information, especially to those who have not given the subject study. I am sure they will agree with me in saying that all that he said is correct so far as the provisions of the English constitution are concerned, and also the position held by what are called the cabinet ministers in Washington. I did not catch exactly the expression he made use of, but I understood him to say the cabinet ministers at Washington were not obliged to live there and keep houses, which they do in Canada. But in reference to the other question the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. I know that he has not read the laws or he would not have made the statement. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that no provision was made to place the controllers in a position analogous or somewhat analogous to that of the political under-secretaries in England. In England the under-secretaries belong to certain departments. As a rule if the Secretary of State or the Colonial Secretary, is in the Commons, his assistant or under-secretary for the colonies is in the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are appointed by the minister and not by the Crown.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. If a minister appoints, it is done by the Crown, because an appointment by the Queen means an appointment from the responsible minister who advises. There is no question about that. At present Mr. Chamberlain is in the Commons and Lord Selbourne in the House of Lords, and he speaks there for the colonies when it is necessary to discuss questions of that kind. In that particular the hon. gentleman is quite correct. But he is at the same time subservient to the policy of the Colonial Secretary and the cabinet, and acts in accordance with the directions which he receives from them. And so it is with the controllers precisely. What does the law provide? The very act which the hon. gentleman now proposes to repeal makes this provision:

The Governor in Council may appoint an officer who shall be called the Controller of Customs and an officer who shall be called the Controller of Inland Revenue, each of whom shall hold office during pleasure and shall under the general instructions of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Finance as the Governor in Council directs be parliamentary head of the said departments.

The same provision, clause 4, applies to the Controller of Inland Revenue, and it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce who not only suggests but directs the policy of both these departments, and no recommendation can go to the ministry of the day for an appointment of the minor officers, no matter how inferior they may be, except through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who can approve or disapprove as he pleases, when the submission is made to him ; so that a controller is de facto placed in precisely the same position to the head of the department, who is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as is the under-secretary to the head of his department in England. That was the intention of Sir John Macdonald when he placed those laws upon the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are two to one department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, there are two departments under the one head. There used to be a Minister of Customs and a Minister of Inland Revenue. They are now under one head. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the controllers were nothing more or less than political heads. If you read the debate which took place at the time, you will see Sir John Macdonald said the controllers would defend or explain the department in the House whenever they were attacked, and the propriety of a course of this kind if the head of the department were in this House can be easily understood. Where as it is now, if the matter comes up affecting the Secretary of State's Department, or the Minister of Justice Department in the lower House somebody has to speak for him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If my hon. friend looks at that bill he will find that these two controllers may be put under the Minister of Trade and Commerce or under the Finance Minister. A Finance Minister being at the head of his department must necessarily be a member of the House of Commons and so must a Minister of Trade and Commerce for the same reason.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, as a matter of policy the hon. gentleman is quite correct, but not as a matter of law or of practice. You can put them just where you please. Somebody in the House of Commons has to defend the actions of the Minister of Justice, if his department is attacked, just as much as if the administration of the Customs Department or any other department were attacked and the head of that department were in that position. However, that is a mere technical point which I do not know that it is worth while discussing or wasting time about now. I freely admit, from having been at the head of the Department of Trade and Commerce from its inception, until I was transferred to another department, I recognized fully under our system the difficulties of carrying it out. One would suppose, from the argument of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills,) that I had been opposing the proposition made by the government. I stated distinctly that I had informed the controllers, when they were made cabinet ministers, that if I continued in the position I then held, I intended to take the first opportunity to readjust the different departments, as my hon. friend proposes to do now, and to abolish the controllers, because I do not think, from my experience, the late system was practical. I wish it distinctly understood that I do not advocate the policy of inferior positions in the cabinet, either as to salary or as to the honour which attaches to the position. What I did find fault with was that they had not the courage, in making this change, to put the two controllers in as good a position in the cabinet in re salaries as the other ministers, and for the reason that I know that the duties devolving upon the Minister of Customs, exceed—if he does his duty and examines every question that comes before him—those of any other minister in the cabinet. I have said to my hon. friend on previous occasions that he would learn in a very short time, that the cry which was made against the addition to his department of a Solicitor General, was a false cry, and that the work attending the Department of the Minister of Justice—and I will always put in this proviso, if he does his duty—is quite enough for any man, I care not how industrious he may be, and a Solicitor General and a deputy besides. Experience taught me that there are two or three other cabinet ministers in the same position. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to this fact also: that when I referred to the resolution moved by Mr. Blake, he instanced the President of the Council as one of those who should receive a lower salary, and when I instanced that I had no idea of suggesting that the salary should be decreased, particularly when held by the premier of the country. The President of the Council has nothing to do departmentally except to look after the mounted police, which is attached to his department: but he has enough to do otherwise in controlling the destinies of this country, without any department at all, and instead of having $8,000 a year I would be quite willing at any moment—and I can say so freely now because I have no personal interest to serve—to vote for a much larger salary. I think he is entitled to it, I think all the ministers are, and so will anybody else who has had any experience in this matter.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if the document which he had the kindness to hand me the other day is to be considered an official answer to the question I asked.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You want the dates?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, the dates in the cases of Dubé, Poitras, and another one. The hon. gentleman handed me a memorandum giving me the dates. Must I consider that an official answer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the paper they gave me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the answer of the department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very thankful, but I think I shall be able to show that it is not correct.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent my secretary for it, and that is the information they gave him. If there is any error I shall be glad to call the attention of the department to it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wanted to know if I could consider that an official document.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those are the dates I would have given if I had answered his question in the House. My secretary may have made a mistake: I do not know that he did. He went over to the department and took it in shorthand.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is the answer of the department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, unless there is a clerical error.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON — Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether he is yet in a position to supply the further information with reference to the steamer "Petrel" that I complained was not supplied in the return brought down, and about which, at his request, I wrote him a note a week or two ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wrote a note to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries giving the details and the omission, and I have not heard from him. I will speak to him tomorrow about it, and ask whether he cannot furnish it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will observe that one important omission I refer to is amply proven from the fact that there is another amount of $6,000 in the estimates for that "Petrel" experiment.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

SECOND REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adoption of the second report of the joint committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament. He said: This report does not contain anything which involves an expenditure of money. It simply reports to this House that the accounts of the library have been properly kept, and mentions the amount which has been expended during the year; and consequently the rule which requires that the library report should be first adopted in the other chamber does not apply in this case.

The motion was agreed to.

THE YUKON MINING AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.), from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, reported Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company (Foreign)," with the following recommendation:

It being shown to your committee that the territory affected is a distant and much unsettled part of the country, where it is not possible to give the notice required by the rules, and also being satisfied with the reasons given why no petition had been presented, they recommend the suspension of the 49th, 50th, 53rd and 54th rules of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the suspension of rules 49, 50, 53 and 54, in so far as the same relate to Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company."

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Before that is adopted, I will call the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of this bill, to the fact that, if the House adopts this report, he cannot go on with the second reading of the bill to-day, inasmuch as yesterday I took objection to that bill being read for the second time under a suspension of the rule, and it could not be before two committees at the same time. It was referred to the Standing Orders Committee to-day and they had to recommend a suspension of the rule owing to lack of sufficient notice being given in the territory through which it was to operate. I merely at this stage draw the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of the bill to the fact that he cannot go on with the second reading, if this report is taken into consideration to-day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that there is nothing in the rules to prevent the different steps being taken which are already indicated both by the notice on the paper and the motion which I have just moved. In the first place, I had the right yesterday to fix a date for the second reading of the bill after its first reading, as a matter of course, and under rule 59 it went before the Standing Orders Committee. To-day it stands on the order paper for the purpose of the second reading. I would like my hon. friend to point out any rule which prevents my taking the step which I have already done.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that it should have gone there before the second reading, and it has not got the second reading now. Surely the Senate has never advanced a bill, without a suspension of the rules, two stages on the same day or during the same sitting. If the hon. gentleman advances it at this stage by adopting the report of the Standing Orders Committee, he cannot move the second reading the same day, especially as the bill has only been distributed to hon. gentlemen within the last two minutes.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think the point is this. The bill came up and was read the first time yesterday. Its promoters had not complied with the standing orders of the House. It should then go, as it did go, to the Committee on Standing Orders for report. It could not go on the minutes at the same time for the second reading, but if the report is adopted my hon. friend can put it on for to-morrow. It should not be on the orders to-day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was about to point out to the House that yesterday I was quite in order in moving the second reading, because after the first reading under rule 59 it would go to the Standing Orders Committee. I agree with my hon. friend from New Westminster that I could not advance it two stages to-day, and my hon. friend would have been in order if he had taken objection when I moved the second reading of the bill for to-day, but when we reach that stage it is my intention to move that the order of the day be discharged and placed on the paper for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B. C.)—It was for to morrow that I wanted the hon. gentleman to fix the second reading, and not to-day. If he does that it is all right, but I claim, as the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller) has pointed out, that the bill should not be on the order paper until after the second reading.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You may make any motion you like after the report of the committee is disposed of.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the bill is properly on the paper for to-day, but as I have taken the step preceding the second reading of the bill, namely, the moving for the adoption of the report of the Committee, I agree that I cannot make any further motion to-day.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—One of the mistakes we make is that we allow a bill to be placed on the paper for second reading before it is reported from the Committee on Standing Orders. It should stand until the committee reports and then be placed on the paper afterwards.

The motion was agreed to.

CATARACT POWER CO.'S INCORPORATION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) presented the twentieth report of the Committee on Standing Orders, recommending the suspension of the Rules so far as they relate to Bill (124) "An Act to incorporate the Cataract Power Co. of Hamilton, Limited."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This bill is in the same position as the last. It is on the orders for second reading. It will have to be put off until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Adopt the report first.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It does not require adoption.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—I move that the 53rd and 54th rules be suspended so far as they relate to this bill. It is on the order paper for second reading and I will make a motion when we come to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If it is in the same position as the last one, it should not have been on the Minutes until after it came from the Standing Orders Committee and my hon. friend should move the second reading to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise with some diffidence to question the view taken by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. If the hon. gentleman can show any rule which lays down the doctrine which he propounds, I have not been able to find it. Rule 53 says:

> Petitions for private bills when received by the Senate, are to be taken into consideration without special reference by the Committee on Standing Orders.

And if there is no objection the bill goes, but I am not aware whether there is any rule. There may be some rule.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is there not a rule which says that a bill cannot be reported from committee and read the same day?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not aware of it. When the item is reached on the order paper, the bill having been reported from the Standing Orders Committee, will be in a position to be dealt with by the House. There may be some rule, but I am not aware of any, which says it cannot be read the same day, and if there is no rule the House can do as it pleases.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The bill, after it is reported from the committee, is just in the same position as it was when it came down after the first reading, and it then cannot be dealt with the same day as it is reported and the same day as the report is adopted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I apprehend it is a different thing to suspend a rule with reference to the petitions and notices, as distinguished from advancing the bill by the two readings. One is dealing with the report of the Standing Orders Committee with reference to notices, and the other is dealing with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You must have some notice of the reading of the bill. You have here no notice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It should not be there. My hon. friend will admit that the notice should not have gone on the order paper until after the report of the Standing Orders Committee had been received and adopted. And in what position is it? Not on the order paper. You ask to have it read a second time without notice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I defer to my hon. friend on matters of parliamentary procedure, but I see nothing to sustain his contention in the rules.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Your first duty is to get it on the order paper and then make a motion with regard to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not accede to that. Rule 59 says that after a bill is read the first time, as a matter of course, it goes to the Standing Orders Committee. I do not see anything in the Rules to prevent its being moved for second reading at a subsequent day, and in the meantime it goes to the Standing Orders Committee and is dealt with by them, and in the meantime their report goes in and has nothing to do with the reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The committee might bring in an adverse report and the House should not fix a day until the report is presented The House fixes a day wrongly because it has not yet been reported from the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You can not make the motion to have it on the order paper before it has been reported from the committee.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—In order to avoid discussion I move to have it placed on the order paper for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We have not reached it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It will be passed over when we reach it.

The motion was agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved:

That when the Senate adjourns on Friday it do stand adjourned until Saturday next at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: I believe there is some prospect of getting through the business Saturday if we work hard.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest to the hon. leader of the House, if it is a fact that there is a chance of our getting through on Saturday evening, that it would be well to amend his notice so as to provide for two sittings of the House on Saturday, one at 11 o'clock and the other at 3.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is an immense amount of business to be done which is not down here, and I think we will require Saturday morning for other business before coming here. But if I find otherwise I can make the motion to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must certainly expect them to expedite business rapidly in the Commons if we are to get through by Saturday night. I am informed there are some eight or ten items of the tariff left over for the purpose of discussion. Then there is the Drummond Railway bill, the Crow's Nest bill, and a variety of other important bills. Could the hon. gentleman inform me if he has any idea when we shall have any of those bills from the Lower House for the consideration of the Senate? Then there are also the estimates. I do not suppose they would take any great amount of time, but the tariff will cause some little discussion, if it is only for the purpose of putting members' views on record. Whether any other discussion will take place or not I do not know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think we may expect the tariff bill up this evening or first thing to-morrow, from what I can learn. I think it will be disposed of by the House this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSALS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the different departments, or employés thereof, and Mr. Choquette, member of the House of Commons for Montmagny, on the subject of the dismissal of the following persons:—

Charles Bouffard, postmaster at Berthier.
Louis Lavoie, postmaster at à l'Ile aux Grues.
Joseph Bossinotte, postmaster at Cap St. Ignace.
Michel St. Pierre, postmaster at St. Paul du Buton.
Mde. Cyp. Dionne, postmistress at St. Pierre Rivière du Sud.
Napoléon Dugad, postmaster at Beaubien.
Cléophas Bélanger, postmaster at Landvilla.
Mde. Ignace Mercier, postmistress at Mercier.
Alfred Dubé, employé on the Intercolonial Railway.
J. B. Proulx, employé on the Intercolonial Railway.
Xavier Simoneau, employé on the Intercolonial Railway.
Xavier Poitras, employé on the Intercolonial Railway.
Sifroid Fortin, employé on the Intercolonial Railway.
Télesphore Gendreau, harbour master at Montmagny.
Maxime Dubé, customs officer (preventive officer).
Télesphore Gendreau, guardian of the wharf at St. Thomas.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSALS OF I. C. R. EMPLOYÉS.

INQUIRY.

What is the exact date of the dismissal of J. B. Proulx and Xavier Poitras as employés of the Intercolonial Railway, in the County of Montmagny?

Was M. Xavier Simoneau fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his superiors when he was dismissed for offensive partizanship?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The information with regard to these questions of course can only be obtained through the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. I give the information as furnished to me by the department here and they give it on the information they receive. It is quite possible that mistakes may occur, and it is quite possible that in the answer given the other day there may be an error. I sent to the department to have this verified and the answer which I received is as follows: 1. The services of J. B. Proulx were dispensed with in September, 1896. Was given 14 days' notice. He died in April 14th, 1897. 2. Xavier Poitras was dismissed in September, 1896. 3. M. Xavier Simoneau was dismissed 1st September, 1896. That is the best information I can get.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am asking if Simoneau was fulfilling his duties to the satisfaction of his superiors at the time. That is one thing, and I am getting an answer to another.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume not, or probably he would not be dismissed. The hon. gentleman does not suppose the minister here can be acquainted with all the circumstances of every labourer who is employed from day to day, and week to week and month to month. These men are not like the civil service employés, who have a status and standing, and while from my standpoint, and the standpoint of the government, no labourer ought to be dismissed unless his services are no longer required for reasons in the public interest or for cause, it is quite impossible for the minister, where there are many thousands of employés, to be personally responsible in matters of this kind. I think hon. gentlemen will see the soundness of the views I take. I shall get all the information I can, and have used every effort to satisfy the inquiries of the hon. gentleman, but it must be all second hand, either from the boss or the person in charge of the men in the particular district.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is so difficult to procure the information in the case of Xavier Simoneau I do not understand why the minister did not find the same difficulty when he answered my inquiry in the case of Xavier Poitras? The hon. gentleman told me that Poitras had been dismissed, and that his superiors were not satisfied. If it is difficult to get the facts in one case, why must it be so in the other, especially when the two employés are on the one footing. The hon. gentleman says it is unreasonable for me to suppose the minister can get that information. I reply, it is reasonable for me to suppose if he cannot give me the information asked for, he should say so, and not give as an answer whether the party has fulfilled his duty up to the date of his dismissal.

THE CASE OF LIEUT. SUTTON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire of the government:

1. Has Lieutenant F. H. C. Sutton, of "B" Squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, stationed at Winnipeg, who has been recently sent to England by the present government, obtained in Canada a first-class long course certificate?
2. If not, what class course certificate does he hold?
3. According to regulations and precedents is it not true that the Militia Department has already refused and is bound to refuse to send to England for a course men who have not obtained the highest possible certificate in Canada?
4. Who recommended Lieutenant Sutton, and why was he selected?
5. Why was Mr. Sutton sent to England when he had not obtained the highest certificate in Canada to entitle him to go?

I suppose the General is still absent and that he won't be back before prorogation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope so.

THE SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to call the attention of the Senate to statements reported in the Montreal Witness of the 15th instant, said to have been made by the Honourable Messieurs Déchêne and Turgeon, members of the present Government of Quebec, in which it is alleged:

They foreshadow the abandonment of the two principal features of Mr. Flynn's financial policy, the conversion of the debt and the readjustment of the federal subsidy, the one as calculated to increase the debt without diminishing the interest charges, and the other as impracticable under present unfavourable circumstances."

And inquire of the government whether there has been any communication, verbal or otherwise, between the government of Quebec, or any member thereof, with the government of Canada, or any of its members, having reference to a readjustment of the subsidies paid to the different provinces, which led to the announcement that it was "impracticable under present unfavourable circumstances" to ask for the fulfilment of the provisions of the resolution passed at a conference of Provincial Premiers held in Quebec in the month of October, 1887, of which the present Minister of Justice was a member; and which resolutions were adopted and confirmed by the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec while the Honourable Sir Oliver Mowat was premier of the former province, Said resolutions, among other things, declare:

5. That this conference is of opinion that a basis for a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be yearly paid by the Dominion to the several provinces for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislature, may be found in the proposal following, that is to say:

(A.) Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, to be according to population and as follows:

(a.) Where the population is under 150,000, $100,000.

(b.) Where the population is 150,000 but does not exceed 200,000, $150,000.

(c.) Where the population is 200,000 but does not exceed 400,000, $180,000.

(d.) Where the population is 400,000 but does not exceed 800,000, $190,000.

(e.) Where the population is 800,000 but does not exceed 1,500,000, $220,000.

(f.) Where the population exceeds 1,500,000, $240,000.

(B.) Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census, until such population exceeds 2,500,000; and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

(C.) The population as ascertained by the last decennial census, to govern except as to British Columbia and Manitoba; and as to these two provinces, the population to be taken to be that upon which, under the respective statutes, in that behalf, the annual payments now made to them respectively by the Dominion are fixed, until the actual population is by the census ascertained to be greater; and thereafter the actual population so ascertained to govern.

(D.) The amounts so to be paid and granted yearly by the Dominion to the provinces respectively to be declared by Imperial enactment to be final and absolute, and not within the power of the Federal Parliament to alter, add to or vary.

6. That the following table shows the amounts which instead of those now payable for government and legislation and per capita allowance, would hereafter be annually payable by the Dominion to the several provinces (the same being calculated according to the last decennial census for the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and according to the limit of population now fixed by statute for the provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba):

Province.	Population Census 1881.	Allowance for Government and Legislation.	The subsidy per head.	Total allowance for Government, etc., and subsidy.
		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Ontario	1,923,328	240,000	1,538,662 40	1,778,662 40
Quebec	1,359,027	220,000	1,087,221 60	1,307,221 60
Nova Scotia	440,572	190,000	352,457 60	542,457 60
New Brunswick	321,233	180,000	256,986 40	436,986 40
Prince Edward Island	108,891	100,000	87,112 80	187,112 80
Manitoba	150,000	150,000	120,000 00	370,000 00
British Columbia	60,000	100,000	48,000 00	148,000 00
		1,180,000	3,490,440 80	4,670,440 80

And further to inquire whether the government, which is now composed of a number of the members of said Quebec conference, have any policy upon the subject-matter of the said resolutions?

If so, what is it?

He said: I ask this question to ascertain what has occurred since the passage of these resolutions and the confirmation of them by the different legislatures to which I refer, and of Nova Scotia as well, that has led the present ministry of the province of Quebec, who are pledged to the provisions of that resolution, to make the announcement that they had abandoned that proposition under the "present unfavourable circumstances." What those unfavourable circumstances may be is a question that deeply interests the people of the Dominion, and more particularly the taxpayers, who would have to raise the money in order to effect the readjustment mentioned in the resolution which I quote. That the different premiers were committed to these resolutions is beyond doubt, and beyond question. I find that the premier of Quebec, Count Mercier, announced at a meeting in Montreal, when he was asking the electorate to support the Hon. Mr. Laurier in 1891 used this language:

The Hon. Mr. Laurier has accepted the resolutions of the Intercolonial conference of 1887 and promised to give effect to them if he comes into power. It is our duty to make him triumphant.

It is true he did not come into power in 1891, but we have the further evidence of his acceptance of these proposals by a telegram which he sent to Mr. Mercier from somewhere in the west when the question was asked him whether, if elected and returned to power, he was prepared to adopt and carry out the provisions of those resolutions, his answer was decidedly and distinctly that he would. I find also that Mr. Peters, the premier of Prince Edward Island, made the following declaration at a much later date, during the last election. He said, in addressing a meeting of the electors of Prince Edward Island:

What do you think a victory of the Liberal party in Canada would mean to us? It would mean that this province, which for years has been denied fair-play, would receive it. Not many years ago all the great leaders of the Liberal party met together at the Quebec conference. You all remember how they agreed upon the scheme which, if carried out, would give to this province a largely increased subsidy. When the great change comes we will receive justice.

That great change has come for the premiers, three or four of whom are in the present government; the premier of Ontario, who sits before me (Sir O. Mowat), the premier of Nova Scotia, the premier of New Brunswick, and a very prominent member, one of the leading members of the administration of Manitoba, although not the premier at that time nor has he been premier since, but still a prominent member of the party which promulgated the principles laid down in these resolutions and the demand made upon the federal treasury for additional subsidies, and therefore equally responsible with the hon. gentleman opposite for that demand. Now, if there have been any circumstances which have led the hon gentleman to change his opinion on that question, an answer to that effect will, I know, gratify a large proportion of the people of this Dominion, and more particularly of the province of Ontario of which he was the ruler at the time and for some time afterwards. I can only say, that if such circumstances have transpired as make it unfavourable at the present moment, or at any future time, for carrying out the demand in these resolutions, I should be one of the first to compliment him on the change of opinion and change of policy; and I think the country will be equally gratified to know that a change of opinion has taken place, and that the local legislatures must learn not only at the present time, but in the future, that in the management of their affairs they must meet whatever deficiency there may be as between their annual expenditure and annual income out of the pockets of those who have received the benefits, if such there have been, of the over expenditure of the money. Until they are taught that, they will indulge in the same extravagances that they have carried on in the past. Why my hon. friend, when premier of Ontario, should have made a demand for additional subsidies upon the grounds set forth in these resolutions is incomprehensible to me, and must be to every one who has read the speeches of the treasurers of that province, who have always claimed, and still claim, that they have a very large surplus at their credit in the bank and in investments. Both before and after the passing of these resolutions, and at the very time that they were affirmed, confirmed and adopted by the legislature of Ontario, the treasurer of that province declared openly and distinctly that they had some millions of dollars to their credit; and notwithstanding that fact, they passed a resolution declaring that the subsidies which were awarded under the constitutional act to the different provinces were not sufficient to enable them to carry on the affairs of their respective provinces without additional aid. I hope the answer they may get will be one that will be not only understood by the people who read it, but may be of such a character as to enable the country and this House to understand distinctly what the policy of the government is upon this question.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There has been no communication between the present government of Canada and the government of Quebec having reference to a readjustment of the subsidies paid to the different provinces; and there has been no communication on the subject between the present government of Canada and any member of the government of Quebec. I have said there has been no communication between the governments. I have not heard, and am not aware, that there has been any such communication between any member of the present government of Quebec and any members of the present government of Canada. I say present government of Quebec and present government of Canada, because I think that Mr. Mercier while premier of Quebec had some communication on the subject with the then government of Canada, or with the then premier of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—With reference to the resolutions of 1887, from which the hon. member has quoted, they were very good resolutions at the time they were passed, but it will be remembered that these resolutions were rejected by the government of Canada, and I may add that in consequence of the changed conditions since 1887, and in consequence especially of the changes which have taken place in the financial circumstances of the provinces and of the Dominion respectively since that date, the said resolutions have become impracticable and inapplicable as "a basis for a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be yearly paid by the Dominion to the several provinces." The resolutions have not been under consideration by the present government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then those are the unfavourable circumstances to which those members allude, I suppose—the changes which have taken place in the financial status of the different provinces.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am sorry to say I do not quite catch what the hon. gentleman means.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The demand on the federal treasury for additional subsidy has been abandoned for the present.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not say so. I am reading what he says:—"have become impracticable under the present unfavourable circumstances." What I asked was whether I was to understand the reasons which the hon. gentleman advanced are the "unfavourable circumstances" to which these gentlemen allude; but as there has been no communication between the government, or any member of it, and these gentlemen, I suppose they have only drawn that conclusion, or as the government have swallowed all their other promises, they have swallowed this also.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was rather amused to hear my hon. friend (Sir Oliver Mowat) say that these resolutions which he took such great pains in passing at the interprovincial conference in 1887 were very good resolutions when they were passed, but would not do now to be accepted as an unalterable basis for a settlement. It happens unfortunately that those were the very words used in these resolutions, that the settlement was to be unalterable.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, I have copied the words.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Therefore, that my hon. friend will join with us in expressing thankfulness that he was prevented from doing such a very great amount of mischief in 1887 as he aimed at and when he had such an earnest desire to do it. He admits now that these resolutions were very good then, but they would be rather the other way at the present time. The hon. gentleman is probably quite right in saying that these resolutions were good then for the purpose for which they were called into existence, and there cannot be the slightest doubt that that purpose was to embarrass the government that was in power at Ottawa at that time, and to endeavour to raise a feeling against them in the different provinces. I have an extract from a speech made by the late Hon. Mr. Mercier in the city of Montreal on the 13th February, 1891, from which I shall just read a few words to show what was aimed at being accomplished through these resolutions which my hon. friend says were very good resolutions then. This speech will show what they were good for then—all that they were good for then or at any other time.

Mr. Mercier said they demanded that the treasurery of Quebec should receive an additional $400,000 a year to support the school system, the institutions of charity which are necessary to foster agriculture. * * What were the results of the interprovincial conference? They had sent the resolution to Sir John Macdonald but they had not received any reply from that gentleman. Sir John Macdonald laughed at the decision of these five great provinces. It was now their turn to settle with him. He wished to say that he was charged to speak in the name of the other provinces. He had consulted with his colleagues at the convention and he now spoke in the name of the five great provinces.

You will notice here that Mr. Mercier spoke in the name of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who now leads us in this House, and who was then premier of the province of Ontario, and was his colleague in that convention. He had consulted with his colleagues in the convention and he now spoke in the name of the five great provinces :

To-morrow his words would be ratified from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Sir John Macdonald had ridiculed the voice of the people and it was now for the people to have their revenge. He wished also to say that he had submitted his declarations to Mr. Laurier, their great chief in the Dominion, and his answer was most important. He wished this declaration to be distinctly understood throughout the country.

Mr. Laurier accepted the resolutions of the Interprovincial Conference, and promised to carry them into effect if he came into power. He had telegraphed to Mr. Laurier if he would ratify the declaration and Mr. Laurier had replied :

"I accept the declaration as the expression of my policy."

Mr. Mercier closed with a fervid appeal to his hearers to unite in securing Mr. Laurier's triumph which would be the public salvation, whilst a victory for Sir John Macdonald would mean national ruin.

Those words were uttered on behalf of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir O. Mowat), Mr. Mercier was also authorized to speak for the great province of Ontario. He spoke for the province of Ontario, and assured his hearers that the return to power of Mr. Laurier at that time to carry out this programme, would be the salvation of the country, while the return of Sir John A. Macdonald would be the financial ruin of the country ; yet, my hon. friend says now that these resolutions were good then, but they would not be very good now. We can see, therefore, what a narrow escape the country had in 1887, even by my hon. friend's own admission. If he and Mr. Mercier had got their own way at that time, they would have passed these resolutions and made them the law, made them unalterable—that is the word he used—resolutions which he admits would not now be very good for Canada. I may say that I was a member of the provincial legislature of Prince Edward Island at that time, and our government declined to take part in that conference, because we believed that it was highly improper for the different provinces of Canada to combine to take the federal government by the throat and demand, as they were then demanding, a readjustment of the terms of confederation. I may say further that during the whole of the time that I was a member of that government—twelve years—we never demanded better terms, and never asked for a readjustment of the terms of confederation. We asked that the terms of confederation should be carried out. We were quite satisfied with the terms and are so still, notwithstanding the premier of the province, Mr. Peters, has made use of the language and expressions which were quoted by my hon. friend (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) this evening. Mr. Peters's observations were made for the purpose of influencing the late federal elections. In addition to that extract from Mr. Peters's speech, I will read another which he made during the last federal election in the province. He said:

> If a change takes place, and I am sure there will be a change, we will ask the fair minded honourable men who will then rule the destinies of the Dominion—not the men whose conduct is portrayed in drunken scenes at seven or eight o'clock in the morning—— > but men who make speeches like the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier did the other day, when he undertook to give the Secretary of State a well-merited castigation, to consider our claims. Our case is a good one and we will simply go to them and say: "this claim was made and admitted and it should be paid, not partially, but in full. If we go to Ottawa we have only to put it fairly and honourably before those men and if they pay our claim, as I have no doubt they will, we will not be in the position we are at present, compelled to think whether we can spend fifty or a hundred dollars on a necessary public work, but we will have sufficient money to carry on the business of the country in an efficient manner, we will then have funds at our command."

This is Mr. Peters's way of discussing public questions—

I am afraid he will find my hon. friend, the leader of this House, not altogether the kind of friend his province wants. He has found him a friend in another respect. He has found a good fat job for the premier of Prince Edward Island himself, but from the remarks of the Minister of Justice to-day he does not seem inclined to do very much for the province. Mr. Peters goes on:

> And if a bridge requires to be renewed we can replace it with a good solid iron or steel bridge. We have a much better chance of getting this province in a much better financial position when the Liberal party comes into power in the Dominion.

I have several more extracts of this kind from speeches made by gentlemen in different parts of Canada, showing that a great deal of influence was used during not only the elections of 1891, but the elections of 1896—that great efforts were put forth on the part of friends of my hon. friend the leader of this House to induce the people to believe that if they voted for them, they were going to get money in local affairs like the children of Israel got manna in the olden times. These were the hopes held out, and my hon. friend the leader of this House, by the part which he took in 1887, contributed in no small degree to create that impression. There was good in these resolutions. They effected their purpose, I have no doubt, in getting my hon friend into this House, but after they effected that good object, my hon. friend can see no more use for them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am rather amused at the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, taken together with the speech of the hon. leader of the opposition. The government are in a particularly bad way. They are condemned if they do, and condemned if they do not. The hon. leader of the opposition apparently is disposed to condemn the government of Quebec and the other governments who are not now insisting on the terms that they asked for in 1887, and the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is condemning the government of Prince Edward Island because they do insist.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, I have not condemned them at all for that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why use such language about the premier of Prince Edward Island if it is not for that reason? I do not propose to go into this discussion. It is not the time for it. But I wish to make one observation, that that which was true in 1887 is not necessarily true in 1397, and I know, speaking for the province from which I come, that in 1887 the revenue was very much less than it is now. At the present time the revenue of the province of Nova Scotia, due largely to the wisdom shown by the Liberal government of that province, is large enough to enable the government to deal liberally with the various public services without making any further claim upon the Dominion parliament.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Thanks to the National Policy and coal royalties.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—One of the planks of the Reform platform in the last election was the amount of money they expected to receive from the present government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Those speeches which are made in the heat of an election contest are hardly the sort of authority to quote in the Senate. If I had gone to the pains of making a collection of statements made by hon. gentlemen who were supporting the Conservative party in the province of Nova Scotia, I dare say I should have been able to submit some amusing literature.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I dare say you would, and you would avail yourself of it if they were in power.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (132) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons."—(Mr. Scott.)

THE AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the third reading of Bill (68) "An Act respecting the American Bank Note Company."

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Permit me to make one or two observations to show the necessity for making a change in the bill. The language which seems to me objectionable is in the title. No principle is laid down more clearly in regard to joint stock and other companies than the fact that their titles must not clash with those of other companies operating in the same line. It is a perfectly clear principle, and acted upon by this House and well understood, and if you refer to the Companies Act you will find it occupies at least three clauses in that Act—a provision against similarity of names. Section 4 says that the name shall not be that of any other known company or any name liable to be confounded therewith, and you will find the same thing in clauses 9 and 10, and to my certain knowledge this House has more than once acted upon that principle and changed the name of a bill. I may say that the principal opposition to this bill on the merits came from a rival company, and it has grown out of the fact that a portion of their business has been transferred to this company now under consideration. It is perfectly well known that these two rival organizations, to wit, the American Bank Note Company, and the British American Bank Note Company of this city, are both entitled to the names which they bear. We have been informed, and no doubt rightfully, that the American Bank Note Company had this title for more than one hundred years, and the British American Bank Note Company has had its for a great number of years also, but the very fact that this company is coming into this country to do business brings up with great force this question—does or does not that very fact bring about the objection which is held to be vital in these matters, that they are liable to be confounded one with the other? I may say that I have no interest whatever in the British American Bank Note Company, but the question is whether there is or is not any truth in the complaint of the British American Bank Note Company that they are being treated worse than they would be if the other organization came in here subject to the laws of this country? If there should be the slightest liability that the one title may be confounded with the other, I think the need is urgent for us to remedy it in some way, and I suggest that the words "United States" in brackets, or "Foreign" in brackets, be inserted after the title of the bill. We have a very good precedent for that, because if you look at Bill No. 6, called The Yukon Mining and Transportation Company, you will see the word "Foreign" is inserted there. There is another objection, however, and I think a very vital one; in the preamble of the bill the company desires to have its organization and corporate powers recognized and confirmed by the parliament of Canada as far as necessary to carry out this Act. Now, it is clear that we are called upon by this very clause to recognize and confirm an act of which we absolutely know nothing, and it is a style of legislation which we should adopt under extreme urgency only.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see any such provision in the bill.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It is in the preamble.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In what part of the preamble?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The bill does not give the power which they possess in the United States.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The preamble is as follows:

Whereas the American Bank Note Company has, by its petition, represented that it is incorporated under the general laws of the state of New York, one of the United States, and that it is desirous of establishing offices and works at the city of Ottawa, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned; and whereas, the said company desires to have its organization and corporate powers recognized and confirmed by the Parliament of Canada, and also to have the powers hereinafter mentioned, and has prayed for the passing of an Act for the purposes aforesaid.

Is not that a part of the bill before this House? I say it is, unquestionably. It carries with it this further point, that if we confirm and ratify by this Act legislation, the details of which we know nothing, I am not sure but that it carries out and ratifies and recognizes whatever legislation may hereafter be made for the benefit of this company in a foreign state. If that be so, we are on dangerous ground. For my part, I have no desire whatever to impede the operations of this company, having no interest in the wide world in the British American Note Company. I do not know but a little competition would be a good thing for the country. That is a matter of personal opinion. I draw the attention of the House seriously to this question, whether we are disposed to recognize and confirm an organization of whose corporate powers we know nothing. It seems to me that a wise provision would be, when this company comes into this country, to place it on neither a better footing nor a worse footing than other organizations under the laws of the Dominion. If we were to accept it as a principle, it would imply as a necessity that the provisions of the Companies Act should be applied, so far as they are applicable to this company. I therefore suggest that, before giving the third reading to this bill, this honourable House, which contains many men much better qualified than myself to form an opinion on the legal point that I raise, should give a thorough consideration to remedying the defects to which I am calling attention.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I submit to the Senate that there is no ground for the objection that my hon. friend suggests. It is quite clear that there can be no confounding of names in the case of two companies, one of whom is called the American Note Company and the other the British American Note Company. Names might be much more alike than those two are without danger of confusion. Then my hon. friend further suggests that he is afraid the bill embodies powers which are or may be in the United States charter and of which we know nothing, but a little more careful examination of the bill would have shown him that is does nothing of the kind. First, there is the recital which he has read, which states amongst other things what the company desires. After setting forth what it is petitioning for, the recital goes on to state what the company desires. It seems what the company desires is to have its organization recognized and confirmed by the parliament of Canada, so far as is necessary to carry out this Act. What parliament does appears in the enacting clauses. These do not adopt all the powers of the United States charter; I dare say parliament knows nothing about them, as my hon. friend suggests, and does not propose to adopt them. What it does do is contained in the three clauses which follow the preamble. The first clause declares that the American Bank Note Company "shall be entitled to all the powers, privileges and rights, as a corporation, necessary for the purpose of carrying on, in the city of Ottawa and elsewhere in Canada, a general engraving, printing and lithographing business in all its departments," and so on. They are not enumerated at all. There is no reference to any other document for the purpose of finding out what the powers are. They are limited to a particular business. My hon. friend's apprehension that the Act may introduce a great deal that we know nothing about has evidently no foundation. I think hon. gentlemen who are not lawyers can see the force of the clauses quite as well as the lawyers can.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—If the hon. gentleman's contention is correct, how does that agree with the words of the preamble itself? The preamble says:

Whereas the said company desires to have its organization and corporate powers recognized and confirmed by the Parliament of Canada, and also to have the powers hereinafter mentioned.

It would appear that they require by that the powers that they possess under the United States charter and also the powers specially mentioned in clauses one and two.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—None of us know what the powers are under the United States Act. We do not adopt them and are not responsible for them. The first clause provides that this company shall have the corporate power necessary to carry on its business: the second and third clauses are matters which could not possibly be in the United States Act. They relate to the service of process on the company in Canada and provide that the company's books may be used in evidence. This bill, in accordance with the intention of it, gives necessary corporate powers and also provides for service on the company here. I am sure the House will be quite safe in passing the bill and it will have no such effect as is suggested as possible.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Over and over again this House has refused to sanction a title which seemed likely to clash with the title of an existing company. I remember two bills in which the words were rather similar to these—that is the case of the British American Insurance Company. Another company applied for a charter under a somewhat similar name. That was objected to, and the title was altered before the bill passed this House. There is quite sufficient similarity between "American Bank Note Company" and "British American Bank Note Company" to justify the objection made by the hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond), because all know the tendency in quoting the name of a company, is to shorten it as much as possible and those two titles might be confused. With regard to the objection to the preamble of the bill if they had asked to have the powers "herein mentioned" and prayed for the passage of an Act for that purpose, that would have been ample, I still cannot understand the explanation by the Minister of Justice, because it does seem to me that by the preample they set forth distinctly that they desire to have its organization and corporate powers —that is, I presume as they have it in the United States—recognized by the parliament of Canada, and also to have the powers "hereinafter mentioned" that is, the powers mentioned in clauses one and two. It seems to me there are two distinct things which they ask for.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—My objection to the passing of this bill is that we are allowing a foreign company, which is very highly subsidized by our government, to compete with our native artizans. If I understand it right, the United States company is allowed to import a large quantity of plant from the United States free of duty, and some of the work is allowed to be done there. Our artizan is obliged to pay duty on his tools and on everything he imports. It is scarcely fair to allow a foreign corporation a privilege which is denied to our own people. There is a strong feeling that this company ought not to occupy such a position. We all know that there are matters connected with this contract which were settled in a questionable manner. I do not care to discuss that matter now, but I do not think we should give an advantage to a United States company over our own citizens, when we see how Canadian mechanics are treated on the other side of the line.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I fully agree with my hon. friend from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond) in the remarks he has made about this bill. It is a measure which this House should not pass in its present form, and before I sit down I shall move that it be read the third time this day three months. My hon. friend, the leader of the House, says there can be no confounding of names between this company and the British American Company. I understand there has already been confusion resulting over it —business troubles have arisen from it. I am aware that we shall hear, before this debate is over, that the American Bank Note Company is the older company and consequently, under trade marks regulations, if there is any conflict the British American Bank Note Company would have to change its name. That is too preposterous a proposition to be listened to in this House, though I have heard it mentioned elsewhere—that a company that has performed large contracts with the government of this country and has performed them in the most satisfactory manner possible—a company that has done a great deal to promote industry in our own country—that a company which has a record of that kind for over 30 years should be liable because an alien company comes in under a contract made with the government—a contract which many of us believe was not made fairly at all—to be compelled to change its name, or take back water in this respect before a foreign rival. It is too absurd a proposition to be considered at all. As this confusion has already existed, and as this parliament has always, as hon gentlemen are well aware, refused to allow any infringement on a recognized name enjoyed under legislation by this parliament, the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman from Kennebec should be incorporated in this bill, if the bill is allowed to become law. But I cannot agree with the hon. leader of the House when he says that this preamble does not confirm the organization and corporate powers which this company possesses in New York or some other part of the United States—that there is nothing conferred on this company except what is contained in the three enacting clauses. I confess I am not able to read the bill in that sense at all. I am not a lawyer, but I have heard a good deal of discussion about the effect of preambles, and I think this one goes further than preambles usually go. It says:

> Whereas the American Bank Note Company has, by its petition, represented that it is incorporated under the general laws of the state of New York, one of the United States, and that it is desirous of establishing offices and works at the city of Ottawa, Ontario, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned; and whereas the said company desires to have its organization and corporate powers recognized and confirmed by the parliament of Canada, so far as is necessary to carry out this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those are the qualifying words: "So far as is necessary to carry out this Act."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite willing to recognize the force of these words, but it continues "and also to have the powers hereinafter mentioned." My hon. friend commented so far. He says, They have that desire, but we do not grant it. What do we say? "And whereas it is expedient to grant their petition." We declare that it is expedient to grant their desires and the thing is done. My hon. friend cannot say that that preamble, whatever may be said of others, has no potency. My hon. friend shakes his head. I know we might have a very learned discussion from him, but we must look at this like men of sense—like laymen of ordinary common sense. That preamble is there for something. Surely my hon. friend, the leader of the House, and my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), will not tell us that the preamble has no meaning? It has force; every word in that preamble has a meaning and force, and we have a right to find out what it is. This House will be likely to agree with me, many of the laymen and some of the lawyers as well—that by that preamble we are accomplishing this company's desire and their wish to have all their corporate powers, whatever they possess in the state of New York by law, recognized in this county as far as is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act. I am opposed to that, and I think it is so radical an objection that no motion except the one which I am going to move—that this bill be read a third time three months hence—will meet the objection. There is another objection which is almost as strong—that this company is asking, and we are proposing to enable it to do, business as a body corporate in Canada without being subject to those wise restrictions that parliament has imposed upon corporations doing business in Canada under the Companies Clauses Act. This company, owing to the peculiar way it is seeking power to do business here, will not be subject to the restrictions that are wisely inserted in our law in order to govern all companies that are doing business in the country. It is true that this company will not be entirely without restriction. They will be under the general law of the country as to crime and everything of that kind, but these have not been considered sufficient to restrict our own companies when they ask to do business, and we have imposed restrictions in our Companies Clauses Act, and I think that when a foreign company comes into the Dominion to do business they ought to put themselves on an equal footing with our own people when they are asking for corporate powers.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What are the restrictions that my hon. friend says our companies are subject to which this company is not subject to?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can mention some. I have turned up our Companies Clauses Act, and I have noted some of them. One is very important. I will just mention it—perhaps not the most important. There is no provision in this bill for a Canadian directorate, and consequently there can be no personal liability for wages of employés. That is a very important provision.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The property is here and that is liable.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says the property is here and is liable. That is a poor recourse for an employé who goes on Saturday night to look for his wages. It would cost ten times as much as the wages to find out what the company are worth and how to reach them. I say that this company should be called upon to put themselves in the very same position as our people are when they ask to be empowered to do business in Canada. I would allow them every privilege which our own people enjoy to carry on business in the country, but nothing more. I think the bill should not pass for the reasons which I have mentioned, first the objection to the name, and next the objection that this preamble sanctions powers conferred in the United States, and of which we know nothing. If not, why is it so carefully stated? If we were to move to knock that out, I think the Minister of Justice would find that there was some importance in the preamble, and would ask to have it retained, although he now asks us to believe that it means little or nothing except a desire entertained by some people in New York. I suggest that we have no right to encumber our statute-book with the desires of those people, unless we are complying with their desires, which I think this preamble actually does. On all these grounds I oppose this bill, and I therefore move that it be read the third time this day three months.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the meaning of force of words contained in the preamble of a bill and not enacted in the clause of the bill?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It has no force as an enactment. The preamble may be referred to in order to make an enacting clause intelligible, which would not be intelligible without it. Occasionally, if there is an equivocal enactment which a reference to the preamble would make plain, the preamble is useful in that way. You do not enact in a preamble.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Then these words in the preamble are of no use.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, they are of no use. It would simplify matters very greatly if they were not in the preamble. If I were drawing this bill I would stop with the words, "for the purposes hereinafter mentioned," in line six.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I know it would make no difference to this company whether the bill is lost or not. They have a contract, and whether this bill passes or not, it would make no difference to them. I think they should not have got the contract, and I wish to mark my disapprobation of giving a contract to a foreign company, when there are people in the country qualified to perform the work, and shall, therefore, vote against the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the Minister of Justice to say that the preamble was not essential. Suppose the preamble was struck out who would be incorporated?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The preamble is used for the purpose of making the enacting clauses intelligible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. minister explain what it is?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In this particular case I do not know that it would make any difference if we took the preamble away altogether, because the first clause is expressed this way: "The American Bank Note Company hereinafter called the company, &c."

Hon. Mr. POWER—We might strike it out altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it not usual to set forth in a bill who the incorporators are and where they live?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If it is a new corporation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is new, so far as Canada is concerned.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In case of a foreign corporation, incorporated here, it is never done. We never go into the details at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The sooner we do it, the better.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think we generally do.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend who has moved for the rejection of this bill seems to think that a great wrong has been done in permitting the Bank Note Company to come into this country and invest capital here, and undertake to do business?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not say anything like that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You did not use those words.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No; nothing like them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But what the hon. gentleman said implies what I have stated in more explicit terms.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I said they would not be in this country doing business at all, if they had not got this contract.

Hon Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman said they would not be in this country except they had got a contract. I do not know that any foreign company would ever come to this country except it were for the transaction of business, to do or sell something or other out of which they expect to make profit, and if my hon. friend were to lay down the rule that no foreigner who comes to Canada shall ever find employment here, and that no foreigner, if he does find employment, shall make anything out of the transaction, then my hon. friend would undertake to act upon the rule which he has laid down in this case. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and those who are associated with him politically, and who share his views on public policy, have insisted over and over again that foreigners who are engaged in the purchase of logs for the purpose of converting them into pulp or lumber ought to be compelled to manufacture them in this country. They ought to come here to do business. They ought to enter into competition with those who are engaged in similar lines of business in this country. The hon. gentleman says that it would be to the advantage of this country, notwithstanding the number of Canadian lumbermen already having capital invested here and having mills located, to induce Americans who are engaged in the lumbering business to come to Canada and to convert the logs into lumber here, and to convert logs into pulp and pulp into paper here. My hon. friends are hardly consistent when they are undertaking to put this company, coming into Canada, undertaking to do business here and investing their moneys to carry on their operations.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If hon. friend will allow me——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I listened to my hon. friend, and I hope he will now listen to me. He said when discussing this question, that there was a company engaged in the business of engraving here, and that they had invested capital, and that it was unfair to permit a foreign company to come into this country and enter into competition with them. Could we not say the same thing with regard to the manufacture of lumber and paper?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, you did.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend forgets what he said.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend says I said it was unfair to allow a foreign company to come into this country to compete. My hon. friend has been misrepresenting me all along, though perhaps unintentionally.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is my hon. friend opposed to this company? Has he not said that this American company is a foreign company which is entering into competition with a Canadian company in the same line of business? Does my hon. friend object to that?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, but I object to any privileges being given to them which are not given to our own people. I am quite willing that they should come in if they are given no special privileges.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The hon. gentleman wants to associate me in the same views with the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island. In the few words I made use of I expressly disclaimed jealousy of the American company, or any desire to keep them out, and the hon. gentleman from Bothwell is simply setting up an image of his own construction to be knocked down; he is combatting an opinion which is not expressed or felt by any member of this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend takes exception to the inferences which I have drawn, not from the observations which he addressed to this House, but from the observations which the hon. gentleman who preceded him addressed to the chamber, and I listened to him with some care. The hon. gentleman complains of the preamble. The preamble is not an enacting part of the bill. It is enough to enact the principle of the bill. There is nothing included in the preamble that is not included in the clauses which follow, of any consequence, so far as the legislation is concerned. The preamble here states what the parties ask. It states in the enacting clauses what parliament is ready to give them, or what those who are promoting the bill think parliament ought to give them, and if there be anything in the preamble beyond what is contained in the enacting clauses, it counts for nothing. This United States corporation has come here for the purpose of acquiring certain franchises. A corporation of course is an artificial person, having just those powers, and qualified to engage in those undertakings which are set out in the Act of incorporation, and if we want to know what this corporation may do in the United States, we look to the charter which they hold under the authority of the legislation of the state of New York. My hon. friend from Montreal complains of the name, but this company has this name. This bill does not purpose to gave to the company a special name. It has the name as a company, as an artificial company——

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Not in Canada.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It has a name as a corporation, and it cannot come with an alias to this House. It has no right to come here under any other name than that name which, as a corporation, it possesses, for apart from its being a corporation, it has no existence, and it is the American Bank Note Company, known as such in the state of New York, known by the charter of incorporation which it holds. By that name it comes here and asks from us certain powers, and you propose to give it, not all that it asks, but to give it certain powers which are asked for in the bill, and what is the objection, apart from this which I have mentioned? My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Drummond) says there is a possibility of confounding this with the other name. I say it is a very remote possibility.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Oh no, I can prove you are wrong.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The one is known as the British American Bank Note Company, and the other is called the American Bank Note Company, and that is all the difference necessary to distinguish the one from the other. They are perfectly distinct. If you enter into a contract with the one, it is with the British American Bank Note Company. If you enter into a contract with the other, it is the American Bank Note Company, and this corporation seeks certain powers which are set out here in the clauses which follow the preamble. Has my hon. friend objected to any one of the franchises which we have proposed to confer upon this company? Does the hon. gentleman say that there is a franchise here that the bill proposes to bestow upon this company that it ought not to possess? The hon. gentleman did not mention one. He did not discuss the bill. He discussed the parties who were asking for the bill. He said their name is not a proper name to have, and that the preamble does not suit him, and so he proposes to deprive a foreign corporation that comes here to do business, that has invested a large amount of capital, which has invested capital in this city here, possessing a corporate existence—he proposes to deprive them of the right to transact business here under the name which they possess and which they had before they appeared here at all.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They have not got the name here.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If my hon. friend were to go to New York and ask for an Act of incorporation for himself as a corporation solely, does the hon. gentleman say that he ought to appear under some other name than that of his own?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I say I would not get the charter if I did not appear in a different name from the other.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If John Smith and William Smith come, William Smith must call himself something else than Smith or he will not acquire any rights under the law. I think that is a preposterous contention which my hon. friend maintains.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The very case which the hon. gentleman thinks preposterous occurs every day. There was a firm in London of the name of Brinsmead who were actively engaged in manufacturing pianos, and they formed a joint stock company under their own name, giving the full initials and everything else, Brinsmead & Son, and it was held by the court that the name of Brinsmead as manufacturers of pianos was liable to be confounded with the well known Brinsmeads and they were obliged to change it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would not have addressed the Senate had not my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) referred to myself and the principles which we advocate as a party. I am glad to know that in advocating the policy of an export duty on logs and pulp wood, of preventing its exportation to another country and to establish an industry of this kind, has been confirmed at present by his own party, and those now in power. I should also like to call his attention to the fact that the Minister of Justice adopted a similar policy in the province of Ontario, when, in selling the timber lands of that country, he imposed a restriction that the parties purchasing should manufacture in this country, and not export to the United States.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You are objecting to that rule here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not objecting to anything just yet. If my hon. friend would wait a moment, perhaps he would be able to build a paper castle and then knock it down as violently as he has done in referring to my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Ferguson). He attributed to that hon. gentleman language he never used, and the inferences and deductions he drew from the remarks made by my hon friend to my right (Mr. Ferguson) were neither correct nor were they justified. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) says there is a great difference between the names of the two corporations. One is the American Bank Note Company and the other is the British American Bank Note Company. I can give another illustration somewhat similar to that given by the hon. gentleman from Montreal a few minutes ago. There are two business colleges in the city in which I live (Belleville), one called the Ontario Business College and the other the Belleville Business College, and the communications which are taking place from all over the country, even from the West Indies, sometimes go to the wrong college, and people are confounding the two. The one college is constantly getting the letters of the other, through a misapprehension as to the distinction between the two. The hon. gentleman claims, because this is the American Bank Note Company, that therefore we must recognize it, no matter what company we may have in Canada of a similar character. Supposing there was a United States company under the name of the British American Bank Note Company, would the hon. gentleman say we would be justified in incorporating that company under the same name, precisely as the one that exists in this country? That is the only deduction that can be drawn from his remarks. He says this: here is a foreign company having a certain name under which it carries on business and operations in the United States, therefore it is entitled to be incorporated in this country under that name. Then he instanced the case of Jim Smith and Bill Smith, as if they had anything at all to do with it. From the fact that there are so very few Smiths in the world I suppose there would be no danger of any complication arising from anything of that kind. A foreign company desiring to do business in this country—and we desire to have as many as possible—should come in properly and legitimately to do business. What we contend is this, that that foreign company has no right to come here and assume a name somewhat analogous, and certainly which would be confounded with that of a company which has existed here for thirty or forty years. I am not going to attack the government or object beyond giving an expression of opinion as to the contract. That is not under discussion, nor have we anything to do with it at the present moment, further than to say this, that if the papers which have been laid before parliament are correct, then the contract was given to this company unfairly and improperly, for the simple reason that it was changed, the arrangements were changed, altered and amended by the Finance Minister after the tenders had been asked for and the tenders put in. Beyond that I do not propose to go into the details of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And the work will be done in a foreign country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend very properly says a large proportion of the work and some of the most expensive is to be done in a foreign country, when the advertisement asking for tenders made special provision that all the work should be done here and not in a foreign country. However, I do not desire to discuss that question at the present moment. If this company is to be incorporated, let it be incorporated under a name that will not conflict with any name we have in this country. My hon. friend talks a good deal about foreign capitalists. I hold in my hand a bill which has the approval of the ministers of the day. The premier himself, before attaining power, pledged himself, in order to secure a certain class of votes, that he would put this bill upon the statute-book, and it has come here for our approval, by which aliens are to be prevented from coming into this country, unless they become residents and citizens of the country. I will say this, however, that while I shall vote for that bill under the present circumstances, with certain amendments to it, I do not believe it is good policy to place any such law upon the statute-book, unless it be under extraordinary circumstances, such as are presented to-day in this country, owing to the legislation which exists in the United States.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am afraid that our friends of the American Bank Note Company will form rather a low opinion of the hospitality of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—We are not particular.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, I suppose we are not, but it reminds me of a story when the question was asked by one man with respect to another "Who is he," and the answer came "He is a stranger." "Heave half a brick at him." I do not think that is the sort of principle which should govern the Senate. The promoters of the bill have good reason to complain of the way in which they have been treated in this House. There are certain recognized rules of parliamentary procedure, and certain recognized rules of practice. One of the recognized rules is that if there is any objection to the principle of a bill, it shall be discussed at the second reading. One hon. gentleman did say a few words against this bill at the second reading, and of course that hon. gentleman is perfectly justified in opposing it now. There was no substantial opposition to this bill at its second reading. The bill went before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, and the committee is the place where any serious opposition to a bill is always offered. There was no opposition.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—There was some.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some hon. gentleman may have said something, but there was no discussion as far as I know; there was only one negative vote in committee.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I have heard quite a different account of it.

Hon Mr. POWER—My hon. friend may have given a negative vote.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I have heard there was a very long discussion and a long speech against it. If you tell me there was not, I am mistaken.

Hon. Mr POWER—There was no long discussion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There was a long discussion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman confounds the Standing Orders Committee with the other committee.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—No, there was discussion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The two counsel were heard, but there was no discussion.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—My hon. friend to my left (Mr. Prowse) spoke a quarter of an hour.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, the hon. gentleman who opposes the bill spoke in committee, but there was really no serious opposition, and the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow), the promoter of the bill, and myself were rather surprised that there was no opposition in the committee. That was the right place to have the opposition. Without any notice whatever, at the third reading of the bill, the hon. gentleman moves the three months' hoist. That is a most unusual proceeding and I do not think it is at all creditable to the Senate. What is the position? The American Bank Note Company have been doing business for many years. I understand from the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson) that they are an older corporation than the British American Bank Note Company and have been doing business in the United States for half a century. They have acquired certain property here and have begun to do business here and have come to us for recognition. If it was not a corporation, if it was just an individual who came in here, he could do business without any Act of incorporation, but being a corporation they must have their standing as a corporation recognized by the parliament here to enable them satisfactorily to carry on their business, and that is all that this bill does. Of course, when profound lawyers like the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson) undertake to interpret statutes, the Minister of Justice and professors of constitutional law like the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and inferior lawyers like myself have to hide our diminished heads. This section says:

> Whereas the said company is desirous of carrying on a general engraving business in the city of Ottawa, and desires to have its organization and the fact that it is a corporation in the United States recognized and confirmed by the parliament of Canada so far as is necessary to carry out this Act.

They are given no powers except such as are necessary to carry out this Act. In order to find out what the powers are we have to look at the enacting clauses: and those clauses are that it is to be a corporation as in the United States, and to have such powers as are necessary to enable it to carry on a lithographic business in all its departments, and manufacturing such machinery as is required for its own use, and also of acquiring and holding such real and personal property as, from time to time, is required for the convenient and proper carrying on of its business. Is there anything objectionable about that? These people have already erected an expensive building in the city of Ottawa, and given employment to a great many Ottawa workingmen when employment was not easily got elsewhere, and no one has objected to their doing that. The clause proceeds:

> Provided that when any such property is no longer required for the said purposes, the company shall forthwith sell and dispose thereof.

The next clause is simply with reference to the service of any process. This company being a foreign corporation, there might be some question as to the manner in which a lawsuit should be begun against them. The next clause provides that service is to be made upon the chief officer or manager of the company, or upon any adult person in charge of such office. So that any one who has a suit against the company has no difficulty in making service. And the last clause is about the books being prima facie evidence. The hon. gentleman, the distinguished legal authority who moved this hoist, said the property is no security to the poor man who may have a claim against the company. Supposing, for the purpose of recovering what was due, this body, or any other body, had been incorporated here in Canada, in what other way could the poor man get at them except by bringing a suit?

In connection with the question of the liability to confound the names, the hon. leader of the Opposition gave us an illustration which I think completely cut the ground from under his own feet and those of his friends who have taken this objection. He said in the city of Belleville there are two colleges totally unlike one another, and still there is confusion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say they were totally unlike.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would you give the names.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Ontario college and Belleville college; but they are both in the city of Belleville. Notwithstanding the difference in the names, both being in Belleville created the confusion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It shows how much force there is in the objection. I have not the slightest interest in this Bank Note Company; I only wish I had. I think it would be a good thing to be a shareholder in; but for the credit of the Senate and the credit of the country, we should not refuse those people any facilities that are necessary to enable them to do business.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to say one thing which I omitted when on my feet, and that is to have apologized to the House for expressing any opinion on this bill in the presence of such an eminent lawyer as the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not claim to be an eminent lawyer, but I could not help thinking——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I concede you are the greatest lawyer in Canada.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat after a great deal of trouble might have spared himself the responsibility of looking so carefully after the credit of the Senate. This House is able to look after its own credit as a body, individually and collectively. The hon. gentleman would like to have the House believe that this bill was not opposed in the Private Bills Committee. If he had been there he would have heard a good deal said against the bill on that occasion, and he would have heard, too, a very long speech from his friend, the hon. gentleman opposite me, from Toronto, in favour of the bill; and there was quite a little discussion, although it came from one very humble member of the Senate and a humble member of the committee. It was opposed also by a gentleman from Quebec on that occasion. It must be borne in mind that the committee was very poorly represented in numbers. There was another committee of the Senate meeting at the same time and we barely had a quorum. When the question was put by the chairman they were not disposed to divide on it, and it was allowed to go by default. The objections that I raised in the committee have been raised in a much better way in the House to-day. The first objection I raised was to the similarity of names. It was represented before the committee that confusion had already taken place, and that letters intended for one company had gone to the other company. That was not denied. There may be men who want to do business with these companies who are not well educated, and who, nevertheless, may be doing a successful business. We know that a great deal of canning business is going on in this country to-day, and an almost unlimited number of labels must be prepared for the canneries. Supposing a canning company sent an order addressed to the Bank Note Company, which company would be entitled to receive it? It is a very natural thing for such an address to be put on a letter. Another objection that I raised was on account of the exemption that this company had from the Companies Clauses Act. We were told before that committee that it was not necessary that they should have this bill passed by this parliament—that they could get all the necessary powers from the Ontario legislature. Why do they not go there for it like all the rest of them, if it is only needed for the business to be carried on here? There must be some object in it. They probably could carry on the business without any Act being passed at all here. One objection, in addition to what I have already mentioned, is that I want to give an idea to the country of the sympathy I have for our own people. We have very little sympathy and very little chance of competition across the border. We know that there is a persistent effort in the United States to exclude every Canadian who crosses the line to earn a dollar there. I want to say this, from what I have heard and read, and what I believe in reference to the contract made between this company and the government, that there is something in it which is not creditable to the government. Tenders were called for certain work, and tenders were received. The only local tender that was received was rejected. What took place then? A private correspondence was opened up, a private dicker was made between the government and this company, and the man who made the honest and faithful tender never had an opportunity of competing with the party who got the contract. I say this, from the information I have, that the Canadian company, who had an establishment here for the last thirty years, have not had fair play in the awarding of the contract. I want to express my sentiments in favour of our own people, and give my sympathy to our own people in preference to a foreign corporation which has sought this legislation.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Being unfortunately in the position of promoter of the bill,

I suppose it is nothing but right and fair to all parties that I should give my views with respect to the action taken the other day in the committee. The committee discussed this matter. Two able counsel also appeared, one for the British American Company and the other for the American Bank Note Company. The party advocating the cause of the American Bank Note Company produced several precedents where a similar course had been adopted by this country in legalizing corporations from the state of New York and other states. They also showed that when a company obtained a name, it was like a trade mark and could not be changed, and was recognized all over the world.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—No, no.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That was the legal argument; whether it was right or not I do not know. I do not give it as my opinion. Under these circumstances the committee considered the matter. It is true that upon one occasion the hon. member for Toronto advocated, upon one side, the carrying of the first part of the bill, and the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Prowse) was the only man who took an active part in opposing it in any way. I expected, from what had been said, that we would have had a pretty animated discussion in the committee, and I never was more surprised in my life than when we took the vote and no one said a word. I am in a peculiar position, because I do not approve of the bill in every respect. I do not approve of the name.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why did you not say that in the committee?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Because I was not a member of the committee.

Hon Mr. OGILVIE—You had a right to speak though.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think it would be perfectly right and proper if the company agree to put in, after the name of the company, the word "foreign." Would that be a sufficiently distinguishing mark to prevent confusion? It has been done in the case of the Yukon Company. If the Senate approved of incorporating this company as "The American Bank Note Company (foreign)" I hope they might allow the bill to pass with that change. A good deal of irrelevant matter has been introduced into this discussion with respect to the contract. The contract is not to my liking, but we have nothing to do with that now. We are merely to decide whether this company is entitled to legislation such as has been granted to similar corporations before.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They can go to the Ontario legislature for it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It has been shown that several corporations from the state of New York have been granted legislation here, and I see no reason why there should be a distinction made in this instance.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE.—I can tell the hon. gentleman from Rideau division of one case that would apply. The Sun Life Insurance Company of Canada went to England to do business. They certainly were not a foreign company in England; they were just as much a British company as the Sun Life Insurance Company there. The Sun Life Insurance Company of England took a suit against the Sun Life Insurance Company of Canada, and after a good deal of trouble and a great many thousand pounds sterling having been spent, the Sun Life Insurance Company of Canada were allowed to keep their name, but they had to add to it the words "of Canada," just the same as the hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond) proposes in this case to add the words "United States" or "foreign" to the name of this company. I think it is very often necessary to do that. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) always makes a nice speech. He says the government made a contract with this company, and is not going to make a mistake in the names, but there is no man in this House knows better than the hon. gentleman from Bothwell that it is not the government that we are thinking about at all, but the general public that the company deals with. Nine times out of ten the public will be mistaken in the names. I do think that it is a very strong point that a United States company is allowed to come in here and do business under the name of the American Bank Note Company. It will be a very great injustice to the British American Bank Note Company to have the name given to them by Act of parliament. I did not realize the injury it would do until I heard the hon. gentleman from Kennebec

(Mr. Drummond) suggest it. It would be taking away from the British American Bank Note Company its name and business amongst people who do not know anything about this new company. We are not bound, as an hon. member said a moment ago, to give the American Bank Note Company their title, or any title ; let them come in and ask for a charter under any name they may select, the same as a Canadian would have to do, and if they are treated as well as a Canadian company, they certainly have nothing to complain of. I do not see why we should be asked to give special privileges to a foreign company coming in here. We are told that they are going to invest a lot of capital in Canada, but a large portion of their money is spent in the United States to-day and their men are working to-day in the state of New York. That is where the work is being done and that is where all their expensive outlay is, and instead of $6,000 a year being spent there $60,000 would be nearer the amount.

Hon. Mr. COX—I think it unfortunate this discussion should have taken the course it has. I do not think there is much danger of any confounding of the names American and British American, and I cannot see how any great harm would arise if a mistake did occur by one party getting a letter intended for another. These things occur in names much more dissimilar than those to which we have been referred. The British American Assurance Company, a Canadian company, was admitted to do business in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that there is an American Assurance Company there. We would have all felt it was a very small piece of business if the British American Company had been refused admission to the United States because of that. The Canadian Bank of Commerce is admitted to do business in the city of New York, with the Bank of Commerce—an American bank —doing business on the same street.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They are taxed on the capital they have.

Hon. Mr. COX—The American Bank Note Co. will be taxed here. If not, they ought to be, and undoubtedly will be. I simply wanted to point out that we are exhibiting a feeling about the similarity of the name that I am afraid arises from the fact that we are not altogether pleased that the American Bank Note Co. has been given this contract.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Hear, hear. I acknowledge the corn.

Hon. Mr. COX—The danger is that we are influenced, whether we intend to be or not, by that fact, and I think this is a poor way of showing it.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—That is a matter of opinion.

Hon. Mr. COX—I am only giving my opinion. A great many of our Canadian institutions are doing business in the United States and a great many United States institutions are doing business in Canada to the mutual benefit, I believe, of all those institutions, and it would be a great pity to have any feeling arise or any discussion take place that would create a prejudice or want of friendly relations between the two countries.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The alien labour law, for instance.

Hon. Mr. COX—We all deprecate that. We are ashamed of it. We have to pass a similar law here, and we feel ashamed of it. I think it is a small business for either country. I am afraid that this discussion is partaking of something of the same character—it is a feeling of prejudice because the American Bank Note Co. got the contract, and we are showing it in a way that does not do the Senate credit. I hope the bill will pass. It will not do this House or the country any harm to pass it now, and to throw it out would be displaying a feeling that would not be creditable to the dignity of this House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot acquiesce in much that has been said by many of my political friends on this side of the House with regard to this bill. I usually agree with them because I recognize their wisdom indisputably on many subjects they discuss. But on this matter I differ on two or three propositions that they have laid down. In the first place serious objection is taken to the passage of this bill by reason of its being alleged to be a novel act and without precedent. If we have precedents of this character, and there is a line of precedents establishing this class of legislation, and there has been no abuse of charters of the kind in question I think we should not depart from the precedent which has been so long established in our statute books, in reference to this particular class of charter. Therefore I cannot agree with the objections which have been taken by many hon. gentlemen that this class of charter should not be accepted by this House, and that it is questionable in the extreme by reason of its not setting out the domestic regulations which must govern this company. My attention has been directed to three or four charters of a similar character which have passed the Canadian parliament. In 1882 an Act was passed by the Dominion parliament respecting the New York and Ontario Furnace Company, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, United States of America, I find at that period the parliament of Canada passed a precisely similar charter to the one now before us. The charter obtained by that particular company in the state of New York was recognized by parliament, and a charter was given to them almost precisely in the language of the charter now under discussion. At a later period, in 1886, during that session of parliament two charters were granted to similar companies. One was under the Act respecting the Anglo-American Iron Company, a corporation incorporated under the general laws of the state of Ohio, one of the United States of America, in which almost the same language is used as we find in the Act before us. During the same session of parliament another Act was passed known as the Canada Copper Company, whereby an American corporation incorporated in Ohio received recognition by our parliament, and the Act passed in the language of the Act before us. Therefore upon that particular ground the argument is untenable. There are precedents governing the passage of a charter like this. Knowing as I do that there are several Acts on our statute books of a precisely similar character, I am bound in justice to the petitioner for this bill to support the measure on that particular ground. The next serious objection which has been urged is the use of the name American Bank Note Company. Of course this is a matter upon which the discretion of hon. gentlemen can be exercised and which cannot be arbitrarily governed by precedent. I would point out, however, a very serious consideration in connection with this particular branch of the question that if this parliament should not grant to the American Bank Note Company the name which they are now using and which I understand they have used for the last half century there is nothing to prevent the Governor in Council under the Letters Patent Act from granting them that particular name. That is to say, this company under the General Companies Act could have applied to the Governor in Council for letters patent asking for a charter of incorporation and asking for the sanction of the Governor in Council to this particular name and I am satisfied that the Governor in Council would have granted them that name. There is nothing, I presume at the present time, to indicate if we should throw out this bill and not permit them to use the name under which they have been doing business for so many years, the Governor in Council would not use the discretion vested in him and grant them the name which we would refuse. The throwing out of the bill in the Senate seems to be in the air. I have been recently made the victim of a bill being thrown out and the discretion of the Senate in doing so can of course be so exercised. But I think when the Senate exercises its discretion in refusing legislation, there should the best possible ground for doing so. I do not think, with due deference to the arguments advanced and objections taken by my hon. friend on this side of the House, that there is sufficient ground for the objections taken. So far as a conflict may be concerned in the user of the two names, I apprehend that the Dominion government will hardly make a mistake in the matter of their contract between the two companies. If the Dominion government should make a mistake and throw their work to the British American Bank Note Company, I fancy that company will make no objections. I cannot see, therefore, so far as the government is concerned, that there is any danger of their mistaking the entity of either company. So far as the public mistaking those two names is concerned, I do not think there is much probability of that arising for the simple reason that parties doing business with these two companies here, parties occupying a high position in the commercial world, and that they are not likely to fall into confusion as would be the case with illiterate persons having business to do with them. The American Bank Note Co. has been doing business in the Dominion of Canada for a great number of years. I accept the statement of the solicitor of the company that for many years previous to the establishing of the British American Bank Note Co. the American Bank Note Co. did do business in the Dominion of Canada, and did it on a very large scale under the supervision or agency of the present president of the British American Co. I am also informed that the American Bank Note Co. have been doing business for a number of years with a dozen chartered banks of the country and under that particular name. Unless a more serious objection can be urged to the adoption of the name in question we should not conclude that confusion would result from the employment of this name as has been urged by the opponents of the bill. I would therefore submit to hon. gentlemen that unless very serious objections are shown to exist to this bill hon. gentlemen should divest their minds of all political phases of the subject and deal with the bill on its merits.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I would appeal to the mover of the amendment to adopt the suggestion which I threw out. It would be an extreme measure to throw out the bill at this stage of the session, and I therefore respectfully move that after the words "American Bank Note Company" in the title the words "U.S." in brackets be added. There could be no mistake made as to the title; and further in the preamble, after the word "mentioned" in the sixth line, expunge to the word "Act" in the ninth line, and make it read

Whereas the American Bank Note Company has by its petition, represented that it is incorporated under the general laws of the state of New York, one of the United States, and that it is desirous of establishing offices and works at the city of Ottawa, Ottawa, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned; and also to have the powers hereinafter mentioned, and has prayed for the passing of an Act for the purposes aforesaid.

We have been told that the preamble is a matter of no consequence, and there can be objection to making this change.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to leave out to the word "aforesaid" in the eleventh line; it would read better.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would the hon. gentleman suggest a change to the corporate name?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—No, to the title.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company under the first clause, assuming this bill to pass, would be incorporated as the American Bank Note Company, wholly apart from the title at the head of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You could insert "U. S." in the body of the bill too.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would not do. They are known all over the world as the American Bank Note Company.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—It is their name; they are the United States company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Their name in the United States is the American Bank Note Company.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—When they come to Canada they put "U. S." after their name in brackets so that they will be known.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have been doing business in Canada for many years. The great banks of Canada—the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Commerce and other banks have gone to New York to do business with them. Some hon. gentlemen appear to be of the opinion that it would be infinitely better to have them send their work to New York and have it done there, than to have it done in Canada. That is evidently the view of the House, and all for a matter of feeling which I think ought not to be introduced into a question of this kind. I have no recollection of a bill so restrictive as this bill coming before the Senate, consisting as it does of one single clause (because the second clause relates mostly to the service of processes). Of course the company can get letters patent; it is only a matter of six weeks' delay. If the House choose in this way to express dissatisfaction with the policy of the government, they have a right to do so, but they do not hit the Bank Note Company very hard, because all they have to do is to apply for letters patent. Had they any idea that such an opposition would be offered they would not have come to parliament. Their establishment is known over Canada. The banks of this country have done business with them, and we certainly ought to invite them to come to Canada, wholly apart from the question of the contract with the government by which it is believed that $125,000 can be saved. Of course, I am not going to discuss that now, but there is that feature which hon. gentlemen should bear in mind apart from the fact that we are now sending a large amount of business to New York from various important institutions in this country which can be saved to Canada. That is something to be considered, wholly apart from the question of giving them the engraving of the Canadian notes. The bill confers less powers on this company than on any company that has ever been incorporated by the parliament of Canada, because an unusual clause is added. In the first place, their incorporating powers are for the carrying out of the contract. The moment they go out of that business they have to sell their property. There is a provision in the bill to that effect. Will any hon. gentleman point out where similar words are embraced in an Act of parliament? My memory does not recall a single instance where a limitation of that kind appears. They have asked for as little as it is possible to ask for. They have agreed that their business shall be carried on for certain limited purposes; and when those limited purposes are over they shall sell the property and no longer continue in existence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman tell us why that clause is there compelling them to sell the property?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. My attention was never called to it.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I wish to give my reason for my vote on this bill. I do not think we should approach this question in a narrow spirit, nor should we be influenced by the circumstance of any contract which may have been entered into recently. But it occurs to me that there are objections to the preamble, and very strong objections. First, there may be an injustice done to the Canadian Bank Note Company by the incorporation of another company with a name so nearly similar. Several hon. gentlemen seem to have the interest of those on the other side of the line very much at heart. But let us look to our own institutions and not permit injustice to be done to them. My other objection to the preamble is that we are asked to pass an Act "for the aforesaid purposes," and what are the aforesaid purposes? To recognize and confirm an organization with corporate powers of which we really know nothing. I should object to any preamble asking us to give unknown powers and to recognize an organization from any other country when we do not know the powers which we are asked to extend to our Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As I understand, there is a disposition to accept some amendments to this bill, and I therefore beg leave to withdraw my motion, and let the sense of the House be taken on the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You kill the bill if you adopt the amendment. They cannot go on without their corporate title. It is too late in the session to pass the amendments through the House of Commons

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kennebec:

That after the words "The American Bank Note Company," the word "foreign" be put in brackets; and that all after the word "mentioned," in the sixth line, be expunged up to the word "and" in the ninth line, and the word "also" in the same line.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READING.

Bill (92) "An Act respecting the Great Eastern Railway Company."—(Mr. Bellerose.)

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the adoption of the third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Before this report is adopted, we should have some explanation with reference to some of the clauses. The principal clause which calls for explanation is the ninth. It is only a few years since this House deliberately made arrangements with regard to the party in whose charge the messengers were to be. At that time we placed the messengers of the House in charge of the serjeant-at-arms. This is about the only reform that has been made since the change of the committee and they must have had this in view when the committee was named. They took away the charge of the messengers from the serjeant-at-arms and placed a portion of them under the housekeeper. Some I notice are not under the charge of anybody. The newsroom keeper should be his own master, but I do not see why we should have the Speaker's messenger and the messenger employed to assist the clerk of stationery without any particular head. The messenger employed in the stationery department is employed only a short time during the recess, while the stationery is coming in. Under this arrangement he would be at liberty to be kicking his heels about the streets. He should be under the charge of somebody.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—As far as the item to which the hon. gentleman objects is concerned, the matter was debated before the committee, and they came to the conclusion that when the messengers were placed in charge of the head messenger we should not interfere with whatever control the Speaker had over his own messenger. We did not think it would be right for us to take him out of the control of the Speaker and put him in charge of anybody else. With regard to the other, he is under the control of Mr. Young, and he has special duties there. If it was shown that the messenger in Mr. Young's department had not enough to keep him employed all the time, or any time he was needed in the department to which he is assigned, there would be no objection to his services being used in the way of general messenger.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I thought the hon. chairman of the committee proposed to move that this report be considered clause by clause. That would be the better way.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved that clauses 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the adoption of the sixth clause.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN moved in amendment:

That the said paragraph be adopted except that portion which relates to the increase of salary of Edward Ashe, and that it be resolved that such increase be $100 instead of $50.

He said: As he is in charge of everything that belongs to the Senate restaurant, and is obliged to take stock now, and will be obliged also to take an inventory of everything there before the House meets again, and his duties are not very small. In fact, the responsibility is large and the sum of $50 for this service is considered too small. We ask for $100.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If anything of that sort is to be done, the regular way to do it is, unless it is done by unanimous consent of the House, to refer it back to the committee to make the change. However, I shall not take the objection unless any other member of the House chooses to do so, but what I suggest would be the regular course to adopt.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Such a course as that proposed by the hon. gentleman would necessitate another meeting of the committee. I do not suppose any member of the committee, when it is brought before him as it has been done by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. McMillan), will have any objection to take the course which he proposes. I for one have no objection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Mr. Ashe has been a very good messenger, but it will require a little experience to find out whether or not he is going to be quite successful in the new role which he has to play, and inasmuch as parliament is likely to meet, I suppose, six months from now, if Mr. Ashe so manages things during the recess of parliament as to give satisfaction, the additional pay can be provided for at the next meeting of parliament.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What duties has he to perform during the recess?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We have the cheque of the caterer for $100 to make good all losses and breakages, and in order to discover how many articles have been broken and done away with, a regular inventory of the stock must be taken. That will entail perhaps three or four days' labour.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But while he is doing that he will not be doing anything else.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He has been doing work for the Senate Restaurant Committee ever since the House met, and this amendment states that he is to get the increase from the 1st of July next. Before the House meets again he must take that inventory to ascertain what stock we have, so as to be able to tell exactly what breakages or losses have occurred between. Besides, he has charge of the stock and is responsible to the House for its safe keeping.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The point the hon. gentleman from Glengarry seems to lose is this: we are paying Ashe $600 a year. We are paying for his services for a certain number of hours a day, and if he is engaged attending to business for the Restaurant Committee he is not engaged at the other business for which he is employed; and I suppose when the House pays an officer a salary, the Senate is entitled to all his services as far as they are required for the purposes of the Senate. As I said before, we give him $50, because a portion of his time now is to be devoted to the Restaurant Committee instead of to the service of the Speaker. If it is found at the expiration of the recess that he has done things in such a way as to give perfect satisfaction, I should not object to giving him a further increase of $50; but I do not think we should be too liberal with the public money. Probably if Ashe were the employé of one of the individual senators, he would not feel called upon to increase his allowance in this way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As I understand the question, the proposition of the committee is to relieve Mr. Soutter, who formerly did the work now relegated to Ashe. For that Mr. Soutter was paid $100. That is taken from him, and $50 recommended to be given to Ashe. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. McMillan) proposes that the $100 formerly given to Mr. Soutter should be given to Mr. Ashe. I am informed, and speak with the consent of the Speaker, that Ashe has really been doing this work for a long time, and that he is, without exception, one of the most reliable men connected with his department; and whenever he has any responsible work to do, or places anything in his charge, it is well attended to, and that he has the most implicit confidence in him. It is not increasing the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Excuse me, it is increasing the expenditure, because the committee have only taken $50 off Mr. Soutter's salary. He did receive $100 for that work, but only $50 is taken off.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I cannot understand how that is done. Mr. Soutter occupies the position, I take it, of either a second or third class clerk, whatever his position may be, and the recommendation would have to be, if he is relieved of that work, to increase his salary by the amount of $50.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, unless there is no minimum or maximum salary attached to the position which he holds. In the Civil Service Act the maximum pay of second class clerks is $1,400, and the maximum pay of a third class clerk is $1,000. However, when I made the first statement I supposed it was just transferring the duty from one to the other, and that it was carrying the extra pay which Soutter received for it. I quite agree with the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power), that in the case of a servant of the Senate or of the government under a salary, the government is entitled to all his time within certain hours and within a certain time, and that we should not recognize the principle which has prevailed to a very great extent in the past, to pay a certain amount, and if you ask him to do anything more, give him a little extra.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, it may be pointed out that Mr. Soutter, who formerly acted as clerk of the committee, was paid at the rate of $150 a year.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—$100.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—$150.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought it was $150 he was paid.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I will read from the Journals of the House, vol. 28, page 252, 1894:

> The clerk of private bills shall perform all the duties of the clerk of the committee on the restaurant and render the necessary assistance and supervision of the restaurant and taking care of the furnishings thereof, your committee recommend that the salary of Mr. Soutter, clerk of Private Bills Committee, be increased from $1,500 to $1,600 per year, such increase to take effect from the 1st day of July, 1894.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Previous to that date the practice was to vote $100 extra to Mr. Soutter for the care of the restaurant. That mode of paying him was objected to by the Auditor General, as being a payment outside of his salary. The committee intended giving him an increase of $50 to his salary, and in addition to that, they made him clerk of the Restaurant Committee and added $100 to his salary. He would have got $50 any way, and the allowance for the restaurant was only $100.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—This discussion shows the wisdom of the whole Senate resolving themselves into a contingencies committee to discuss these contemptible little things, as if a committee of 25 members of this House were not sufficient to attend to it. I will ask the House——

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is out of order. The question has been put.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am not out of order. I take exception to the motion because it is out of order. The only amendment that can be made to this report of the committee would be an amendment to send the report back with instructions to amend it in a certain way, and if that motion is made the sense of the House can be taken upon it, but I object to the motion before the House as out of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the hon. gentleman's point of order is not well taken. The chairman of the committee moved that the report be taken up clause by clause, or rather paragraph by paragraph. When this House has a paragraph before it, the House is seized of it and can do just as it pleases with it. If the House chooses to refer any portion of the report, it can, but if it does not, it can deal with it here.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I differ from the hon. gentleman. It does not follow, when the chairman moved that the report be taken up clause by clause, that he moves that it be taken up and dealt with in any way except by parliamentary rule. According to parliamentary rule the way to amend any portion of the report of a committee is to send that report back to the committee to amend it in accordance with the wish of the House. It does not follow that, because we take the report up clause by clause, we can deal with it in an unparliamentary fashion. It means that we shall take these clauses up one by one, and if it is the desire of the House, for instance, that clause 6 should be amended in any way, it is done by motion that the clause be referred back to the committee to be amended according to the wishes of the House, but it cannot be done by a vote of the House. If you put the motion that way, we will come to the same thing in the end, and we will understand clearly what we are at. The way to do is to move that this clause be sent back to the committee to amend it in any way we think proper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There must be some misapprehension about it. My recollection of this item is that it was represented that Mr. Soutter's salary was $1,550, and that he got $100 increase for attending to the restaurant, and as the Auditor General objected to pay it in that way, his salary was finally made $1,650. It was to get over the ruling of the Auditor General. Then when we placed Mr. Ashe in charge of the work performed by Mr. Soutter, and it was discussed whether, considering the position he occupied, the addition of $100 would not really be more than was justifiable, it was decided that instead of taking the whole $100 off Soutter's salary, we should divide it and give $50 to Ashe and reduce Soutter only $50, and that seems to be approved of by the committee. The $50 would seem to be ample for Mr. Ashe. I think it would be better to let it go as it is.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I would rather withdraw the motion than divide the House on it.

The motion was withdrawn, and the clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved concurrence in clause 7 of the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there a change in the salary in this clause?

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—No.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved that the 8th clause be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I asked the committee to insert that clause. It does not increase Mr. Young's salary any. He was paid $1,400 as clerk of the routine and journals, and $200 as stationery clerk, but the Auditor General it seems, made some objection to allowing the two sums in two different capacities, and therefore the two sums were placed into one, and his salary was fixed at the sum of $1,600 in one item.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved concurrence in clause 9 of the report. He said:—I may mention that the clauses referred to, Nos. 16 and 17 in the report of July, 1894, are as follows, clause 16 reads:

With a view to improving the discipline in that branch of the service, your committee recommend that the doorkeepers, messengers and pages be placed under the supervision of the serjeant-at-arms, who shall have power to suspend any member of that portion of the staff for a fortnight, any longer suspension to be by the clerk.

No. 17 reads:

The housekeeper, or chief messenger, is to continue to direct the staff of messengers, subject to the control of the serjeant-at-arms.

When this matter came before the committee it was thought that a divided control was not advisable in dealing with these servants of the House, and it was better to have the control of the messengers consolidated under one man. It was thought that the head messenger himself would be the proper one to have control, as he is here the whole time, both during the sitting of parliament and during recess. He is the only one who is immediately in contact with all these different servants, and it was thought that the serjeant-at-arms would have no wish to have the responsibility of looking after these messengers and pages and all that sort of thing, and that the man who was individually responsible for them should be the housekeeper. The matter was discussed in that way in the committee, and there was not a dissentient voice raised against it.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes there was.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Since then I have been interviewed by each servant in the House with a grievance, each man complaining that his standing had been lowered. The charwoman objected to being placed on a level with the doorkeeper, and the doorkeeper objected to being placed on a level with the charwoman, and so on down, and each one thought he was either being reduced or degraded, and not one of them thought he was promoted. I did not pay much attention to it, because I did not think it was consistent with the dignity of the committee to listen to every grievance coming from the servants.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I see it refers to the Speaker's messenger and the messenger to assist the clerk of stationery. There have always been two messengers in the Speaker's room.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—In the Minutes I can only find there was one Speaker's messenger referred to. In looking up the matter with reference to the Speaker's messengers I found a memorandum. It goes back to the 21st of April, 1887, Larose was appointed, and in June the appointment of Ashe was confirmed. On the 3rd of July, 1894, paragraph 17 of the report states:

No further appointment will be made until the number of such messengers be reduced to five and the Speaker's messenger.

It only refers to one messenger, and it was adopted the same day, and then there was a meeting of the Committee on Internal Economy and the Minutes of their report show as follows:

Ordered that the chairman is to issue instructions that during vacation the Speaker's messengers:

They used the plural on that occasion.

When not required for the Speaker, &c.

In the Minutes of the 15th of April, 1896:

The report of the sub-committee to whom was referred the report—clause by clause—

Clause 1 was adopted, and it was resolved to make no report thereon. I believe it was decided it was better it should not be made public, and clauses 2 and 3 were adopted in the same manner. The report proceeds:

The sub-committee further recommend that, after the close of the present session, the Speaker for the time being shall be entitled to the services of only one messenger, and at the close of the session the Speaker's messenger shall join the staff of the permanent messengers.

That is the authority I had to go upon. That made it very definite that there was only one messenger under the control of the Speaker. Other hon. gentlemen may have a different light upon it, but that is all I can find.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—As the paragraph stands now, Ashe, the other messenger, would by this paragraph be placed under the control of the housekeeper. I can only speak from my experience as a Speaker: I must confess I should object strongly to have my messenger placed under the control of anybody. So long as he discharges his duties as efficiently as he has done, I do not think he should be placed under the control of the housekeeper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is under the impression that that part of the report was adopted unanimously. I stated an objection to it. I thought it would be much better if the control of the messengers was left as it had been in the last two or three years, in the hands of the serjeant-at-arms. He would no doubt delegate to the head messengers special duties, but that there should be some sort of appeal to him in the event of any appeal being made to exercise an undue and unpleasant control; but the committee, I am sure, had their attention called to it, would not have adopted the resolution in the words in which it is now presented to us. It surely could not be contemplated that a messenger attending the Speaker during the session was to be under the control of the head messenger, nor do I think our doorkeeper should be under the control of the head messenger. I think he should be under our control. His duties are not germane to those of any other messengers.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—He is a special officer. He is not a messenger. He does not come within the rule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh yes, I think so. If the rule were interpreted widely, as it now reads that would be the effect of it, and I am quite sure that would not be the intention, I would suggest that those two messengers be excluded from the operation of that clause.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—That is the intention. It was the intention of the committee that the Speaker's messenger should be excluded from the operation of the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is not excluded according to the report.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is pretty clear that the effect of this 9th paragraph of the report of the committee was not as thoroughly understood by some of the hon. gentlemen of the committee as might be. What does it propose to do? It proposes that paragraphs 16 and 17 of the order of the House made on the 9th of July 1894 be rescinded. These paragraphs are as follows:—

17. The housekeeper or chief messenger is to continue to direct the staff of messengers subject to the control of the serjeant-at-arms.

That puts the whole staff of messengers under the head messenger, subject to the supervision of the serjeant-at-arms. Then paragraph 16 says:

With a view to improving the discipline in that branch of the Senate service, your committee recommend that the doorkeepers, messengers and pages be placed under the supervision of the serjeant-at-arms, who shall have power to suspend any member of that portion of the staff for a fortnight, any longer suspension to be by the clerk.

The committee adopted the practice of the House of Commons. In the House of Commons the serjeant-at-arms has the general supervision over the messengers. There had been difficulty in this House and confusion arising from the fact that no superior officer had charge of the messengers, and it was with a view to putting an end to that condition that this report was adopted by the House. The question is: how has that system worked? I have yet to hear that the first complaint has been made as to the action of the serjeant at-arms. He has been an officer of this House for some twenty-seven years. He is an officer with whom no one has ever had any reason to find fault, and in his dealings with the chief messenger he has been most considerate, and I am satisfied that the housekeeper himself will be the last person to complain in any way whatever of the action of the serjeant-at-arms. It will be seen at once that the action of the committee, in the recommendation that they have made that the jurisdiction which was given in 1894 to the serjeant-at-arms should be taken away from him, is a reflection on that officer and an implication that he has not been discharging the duties assigned to him under that report in a proper way. For that reason I object to that portion of the report. When a system is working well I do not think it should be altered. Then the latter part of the paragraph is rather more objectionable than the first part. The committee could not have intended that an officer who was directly an officer of the House in its capacity of a legislative body, like our door-keeper, should be under the jurisdiction of an officer who has no jurisdiction within this chamber.

That the door-keepers, messengers and charwomen will be placed under the control of the housekeeper with the exception of the news-room keeper and the Speaker's messenger and the messenger employed to assist the clerk of stationery.

Let us look at the history of the matter and the effect of adopting this report of the committee. In 1894 it was thought an addition to the staff was necessary. Some hon. gentlemen thought so, and the housekeeper thought so, but the committee decided it was not. In 1896 the matter was again brought to the notice of the committee, and the report which the hon. chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy has quoted from was adopted. And what was the nature of that report? They did not decide that while parliament was in session, or while the Speaker required the services of his messenger, he should be under the jurisdiction of the chief messenger and liable to be taken away from the Speaker: but they decided that during the recess of parliament the Speaker's messenger was to be under the jurisdiction of the chief messenger, who was again, of course, under the general supervision of the serjeant-at-arms. It will be found on reference to the pay-list that the Speaker's messenger is getting $800 a year. Under this report he is to get $850. Is that $850 to be paid to the Speaker's messenger solely for his services during the session? Was it not intended that that sum was to pay him for his services during the whole year? And the same way with the messenger who is attached to the stationery department. The sub-committee of last year found, on inquiry, that there was very little to be done in the stationery office by the messenger, except on a very few occasions when the stationery was being opened up and placed in the trunks and it was necessary that there should be a messenger there, and on a few other occasions. The sub-committee recommended that that messenger should be in the messenger's room and under the jurisdiction of the chief messenger, and should be summoned to the stationery office only when he was required. What will happen under this report? As soon as parliament ceases to sit that messenger and the Speaker's messenger will be under the authority of no one. The jurisdiction of the serjeant-at-arms is taken away, and this paragraph proposes to take away the jurisdiction of the chief messenger, and you have those two messengers, who are paid for their services the whole year, walking about at large under the control of no one. Our staff of permanent messengers had been considered too small, and the committee of 1894 made those arrangements to avoid appointing permanent messengers. It seems to me there is nothing in this paragraph of the report which should commend itself to the good judgment of the House.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Are you referring to the last paragraph?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, the 9th paragraph. In the first place I do not think we should reflect—as this paragraph will be understood to reflect—on an officer like the serjeant-at-arms, who has been 27 years here, and against whom there is nothing to be said; and while I voted against the chief messenger, I am bound to say that he is energetic and thoroughly honest and reliable. I do not see why any messenger should be taken away from his control and placed in the position of a gentleman at large, because that is just about what will happen. Feeling that way, I move that the 9th paragraph of the report be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It will have to be referred back.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No; the hon. gentleman moved that the 9th paragraph be adopted, and I move that it be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—In reply to what the hon. gentleman from Halifax has said, I wish to say a few words. In regard to the appointment of the chief messenger, it is needless for me to say that the committee did not intend, and did not make any reflections whatever on the serjeant-at-arms, and he must go out of his way if he attempts to find himself insulted by the action of the committee. With regard to the former condition of affairs working so admirably, I heard something entirely different. A great many of these messengers are employed for the year round, and have an easy time of it, and their services are often needed during recess; but according to the way it was reported to me, whoever looked after them during that time, there was no authority ever invoked; if these men were wanted to work they could not be found, and there was no way in which their services were used during the recess. That is the way the report came to us, and it was thought, consequently, that the party who was nearest to them who would have them under his immediate control, who was here the whole time, should be the one to have the authority over them. As far as the doorkeeper is concerned, I do not think he can be dignified with the title of an officer of the House. He does not spend his time in taking care of the Senate, but in taking part in other matters, some of which have been brought before the Senate. He has not been under the control of anybody. If anybody had had control of him, certain circumstances which have arisen would not have been allowed to arise. These matters were discussed before the committee, and after a full discussion, and after all the facts were brought out, it was thought better not to have divided authority, but to have it under the control of one man who would be responsible, and whom the committee could bring to book if he had not exercised his control in the proper way. I do not think it would be right to strike out that clause.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Is there any objection to adding an "s" to the words "Speaker's messenger?"

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Not the slightest.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Is it understood that out of session these two messengers shall be relieved from duties altogether?

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It makes no difference between session and out of session. I contend the Speaker's messenger during the session should not be under the control of the housekeeper at all.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I admit that, and we should have it understood whether those two messengers are to be under the control of the housekeeper during recess. He has as much need of them during the recess as we have for them in the session. The pay-roll of this House has Larose as the Speaker's messenger, and the other man has been there continuously from year to year, and there has never been an attempt to take it away from him except during the recess. I do not think it is wise that these two messengers should be relieved from all responsibility as soon as the House closes, and that is the meaning of putting the two messengers in this place.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think it is the duty of the Senate to see that those messengers are under the control of an officer of the House. They were formerly under the control of the Usher of the Black Rod, and a couple of years ago they were put under the control of the serjeant-at-arms. There is no complaint at all, as far as I have heard, at the present time, of the way in which they were looked after by that gentleman, and considering that he is the proper officer to be in charge of those persons, I am in favour of the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Halifax that this paragraph of the report be struck out.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not see the hon. gentleman here who made the motion on which the clause was put in the report. I do not agree that there was no complaint made as to the way in which the messengers were managed under the serjeant-at-arms. The head messenger did complain that during the recess, while he was in the building all the time in his office, the serjeant-at-arms was not there all the time, and that the messengers did just as they pleased, and he had no control over them; and it was not with the intention of casting any reflection upon Mr. Lemoine that the motion was made or seconded, but because it was considered necessary that an employé of the House who was continually in his room and who was well qualified to have supervision of these inferior servants, and look after them that the motion was made. I may say, with regard to the chief messenger, I did not vote for his appointment; but I think, from the experience I have had of him since he was appointed, he is a very efficient officer in his position, active and useful, and tries to make himself as accommodating as he can, and to do his duties as well as he is able; and I think for the reason that the serjeant-at-arms is not here all the time during the recess, and that some supervision is required over these officers, it is well that the messengers who are in the messenger's room should be under his control. The reason the change was made two or three years ago was that our then chief messenger had then become old, and was considered not active enough, on account of his years, to look after these subordinates and it was for that reason they were placed under the control of the serjeant-at-arms. From the little experience I have had myself—although I did not move in making the change, I made no objection to it—I think ordinary messengers would be better under the control of the chief messenger who is always here.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I believe it was by my vote that the chief housekeeper got his appointment. There was a tie in the House, and my vote in favour of the present chief keeper got him the office. That officer is a most efficient one. No better officer can be found. While things are so, it is no reason why we should not follow the rule which is usually followed under such circumstances. An inferior officer has always a superior officer over him, and I feel that while the Speaker is away, there ought to be a superior officer who has supervision of subordinate officers.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The clerk of the House is supposed to have supervision over the whole department.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I should think that it is better to have a superior officer who has the authority of this House than one who is only supposed to have it. In the present state of things if the serjeant-at-arms is absent during the recess, or in any other circumstance, this does not deprive the chief keeper from using his authority,—on the contrary, it is then that he ought to be more strict. I cannot understand how it can be stated that because there is a superior officer who has a general supervision, therefore, if that officer is absent, the chief keeper has no control—and I should think that if the messengers have refused under such circumstances to do their duty, they should have been dismissed. Surely the name of chief keeper ought to show what his position is—he is chief of the messengers. The serjeant-at-arms has not been appointed commander, but superintendent. So when the superintendent is absent the chief keeper is in command, and he has a right to force those messengers to do their duty. There is no use in advancing as arguments statements which are not arguments. The facts are these: let the House decide on them. If the serjeant-at-arms is set aside, I say no other superior officer of the Senate ought to have supervision, and the chief keeper ought not to be left alone, and that is the reason why, though favourable to the chief keeper, I believe it would be wrong to accept the 9th item of the report doing away with the arrangement of a few years ago, which was the wisest one the House could adopt.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The reasons which have been cited by the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller) fully justify this clause in the report. For myself, and I think every member of the committee, there was not the slightest reflection intended to be passed on the serjeant-at-arms in making this change. Mr. Lemoine we regard as a most valuable officer in this House, who does his duty well, but, as the hon. gentleman from Richmond has stated, Mr. Lemoine does not live in this building even when the House is in session. I am here some times very early in the morning and late at night, and I have had occasion to trouble the chief messenger a good deal, and I have learned from what I have seen late in the evening and early in the morning, and also what, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, occurs during the recess, that upon the whole it would be better that the control of the messengers should be in the hands of the housekeeper who is always here and who is very competent. I am quite satisfied that the proposed change will lead to efficiency. There will not be any divided control. The man who is here all the time, and is admittedly competent, will have control of the messengers. I do not understand these questions as well as the older members of the House and I was not aware of how the duties were divided between the messengers, and I would not have the slightest objection to amending the report as suggested if it is usual to have two of the messengers assigned to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I should like to support the report of the committee, because I think they are in a very much better position to judge of the propriety of making changes than the Senate is. At the same time, in this case, I am disposed to support the amendment because, if we adopt the report of the committee, there are two messengers who have no supervision whatever. The rule adopted some years ago is repealed by this clause, where all the messengers were placed under the supervision of the serjeant-at-arms. By adopting the report of the committee, we relieve them from the control of the serjeant-at-arms and we do not place them under the control of anybody else. Consequently, when the Senate prorogues these messengers are gentlemen at large. There has been no friction, as far as I know, I understand the serjeant-at-arms is here all the year round. He is not living in the building, but he is here to listen to complaints, and I understand there has been no friction whatever. In fact, I understand the housekeeper has practically had control of the messengers, and that is a good arrangement to make. The serjeant-at-arms has not interfered except on an appeal from the housekeeper. Then the serjeant-at-arms is a higher authority to settle the difficulty. Looking at it from this point, I am inclined to think the committee has made a mistake in removing the control from the serjeant-at-arms and placing it in the hands of the housekeeper. I have no fault to find with the housekeeper. He is an excellent officer, doing his duty well, but this change proposed by the committee will not work so well in the future and we had better strike out the clause

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected by the following vote:

McCallum,

Hon. Mr. McKAY—It appears to me that the sense of the House a little while ago was that there should be some change with regard to the Speaker's messenger. This change might be stated "with the exception of the newsroom keeper the Speaker's messenger during session." If I had my own way I would strike out the messenger employed to assist the clerk of stationery. With the consent of the House that change might be made. In order to test the sense of the House I move that the amendment be made.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—I believe the House is taking away the privilege which has been granted to Speakers before me. It was always understood that the Speaker's messenger was under the control of the Speaker. He may, for instance, come here during the recess, and my predecessors have always had the service of their own messengers, even during the recess. I see no objection to the Speaker's messenger rendering services as a messenger when he is not called upon to serve the Speaker, but I would suggest that the position of Speaker's messenger should remain as before. If you make this change the Speaker's messenger would now be in a worse position than he has been in under the old arrangement.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I can corroborate what His Honour the Speaker says. It has always been the custom of the Speaker to have control of his messengers, and several speakers have taken their messengers away from the seat of parliament—taken them to their homes and used their services during the recess as officers attached to them personally, whose actions and services they had the right to control. It will be just as well, as the Speaker has raised the point, to leave it as it is.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I understand the Speaker to object to the amendment on the ground that it is making matters worse. My intention was to improve the position of the Speaker's messenger, but having heard the Speaker's view of it, I wish to withdraw the amendment.

The paragraph was concurred in and the report as a whole was adopted.

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON introduced Bill (N) "An Act to amend the Act respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec." He said:—There are only two financial institutions affected by this bill—the Caisse d'Economie of Quebec and the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal. They both suffer, at present, from a plethora of cash—more money than they can dispose of, and this bill merely enables them to extend the list of securities on which they may lend, and the list of securities in which they may invest.

The bill was read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM, in the absence of the chairman (Mr. Vidal), moved the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, to whom was referred Bill (16) "An Act to amend the Railway Act."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I had charge of the bill with which the report deals, I desire to say a few words before it is finally disposed of. I might say that the promoters of the bill until yesterday had reason to congratulate themselves upon their success with the bill through its various stages. They were successful in the different steps taken in the House of Commons with this bill until yesterday they met with disaster. They have intimated to me that, notwithstanding the defeat of yesterday at the hands of the committee, they are not disposed to abandon the bill without again bringing it before this House and presenting their case in as brief a manner as I possibly can. There may be many hon. gentlemen who were not present in the Railway Committee when this bill was considered by that body, and as the principle of the bill was not discussed in this House upon its second reading, it therefore may not be amiss on my part to outline and direct the attention of the House to the scope of the measure. It proposes, as hon. gentlemen who have studied the bill will observe, to simply declare that the Railway Act should be amended by stating that bicycles shall be regarded as baggage by the railway companies. The public seem to have fallen into what I may term an error in thinking the railway companies are obliged to carry baggage free, and the impression has also prevailed that this bill calls upon the companies to carry bicycles free of charge. I may say that that is a mistake. The Railway Act does not make it obligatory on railway companies to carry baggage free. Railway companies, catering to the public to secure their patronage, have made the concession of carrying for the public their baggage free. Now, the only section in the Railway Act which deals with the question of baggage is section 250, which this bill proposes to amend. That is as follows:

> Checks shall be affixed by an agent or servant to every parcel of baggage having a handle, loop or fixture of any kind thereupon, delivered to such agent or servant for transport, and a duplicate of such check shall be given to the passenger delivering the same.

We are informed by the Canadian Wheelmen's Association, a very influential and very numerous body, that until a year ago the railway companies of Ontario and Quebec carried bicycles as baggage and free of charge. At the present time the railway companies of the maritime provinces, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, carry bicycles free in those provinces, and in the western part of the Dominion I understand they likewise carry them free, but in these two very influential and thickly populated provinces wherein is the bulk of the population of the Dominion, bicycles are rendered subject to a charge and not carried as baggage. The wheelmen of the Dominion feel that a very grave wrong has been perpetrated in subjecting them to a very onerous charge in connection with this particular subject. Consequently, upon parliament meeting at the present session, petitions signed by over 25,000 wheelmen, I am informed, were presented setting out their desire that parliament should intervene and pass the legislation now before the House. It was in deference, no doubt, to these petitions and to the strong feeling expressed by the public on this subject, and also strongly represented in the press, that the House of Commons deemed it their duty to recognize public sentiment upon this question and crystallize it in the shape of the bill which successfully passed that House, supported by a very large majority. That bill upon coming to the Senate, as I stated a few moments ago, met with defeat at the hands of the Railway Committee by the small majority of, I believe, three or four. The chief objection raised to the passage of the bill seemed to be that it was deemed an interference with vested rights, and an interference with those rights always exercised by the railway companies at their own volition and not impressed upon them by legislation. I should like to point out to hon. gentlemen who choose to look at the subject in this particular light, that under the Railway Act there are strictly speaking no vested rights. The power has been reserved to the Governor in Council to at any time interfere, on the question of tolls for instance, with railway companies. Upon subjects of this character, parliament exercises a sovereign right to at any time intervene and pass legislation, notwithstanding the contention so often urged against legislation, particularly of this nature. I had occasion to point out to the committee that during the present session parliament has exercised the right of interfering with the so-called vested rights of railway companies by passing legislation of a very important character, entailing upon the railway companies very large expense. If this argument should prevail in the particular instance now before us, then to a very much greater extent has there been a decided interference with vested rights in enforcing upon the railway companies the adoption of very costly appliances in the matter of brakes, and other changes in their rolling stock for the protection of life, as well, I presume, as for the convenience of the public. Now, the growth of legislation in this particular direction has been strongly accentuated in late years in parliament calling upon the railway companies to defer to public opinion upon all classes of subjects with which the public may have to do, and which may press in an onerous way upon the public. New conditions arise, and are arising every day, and we thus find it not an unusual thing, and not an unreasonable thing, that large railway corporations, or other corporations which have to do with the public interests, should be rendered subservient to the wish of parliament, particularly when their interests conflict with the interests of the public. Therefore, we find in the present session a precedent for the so-called interference with vested rights. The Wheelmen's Association felt justified in appealing to parliament for legislation upon this subject. Canada should be in the vanguard of progressive legislation, as well as the United States, particularly in regard to matters of this character. It may be that the legislation asked for by the wheelmen had its origin in the legislation which has passed many states of the union and has now become almost the general law of the United States of America. It has been pointed out in a circular which has been distributed in the Senate that no less than eleven of the most important states of the union have adopted legislation of this character, and most of the large railway systems of the United States are carrying bicycles, not only under this particular law, but in many instances voluntarily. I, therefore, think that under these circumstances it would not be unreasonable to suppose that the people of Canada should aspire to be equally progressive with the United States. In railway legislation the Dominion of Canada can well afford to follow the example set by the United States, because we know that the most advanced legislation in railway matters is to be found in the republic—I say it should not be deemed unreasonable that this legislation should be sought from parliament by the Canadian Wheelmen's Association. I also find that in the republic of France an order has been issued at the instance of the government by which bicycles are dealt with as baggage and are carried as such, and this by the intervention of the government. Hence we find two very progressive countries adopting the legislation which is here sought. Notwithstanding the many overtures made by the wheelmen to the railway companies to secure a compromise upon this question, they have not been able to reach one. Since November last repeated attempts have been made by those gentlemen to induce the railway companies to accept various propositions which have been advanced, but without success. Counter propositions very truly have been submitted by the railway companies to the wheelmen, but they have not been of a satisfactory character. Hence all attempts at compromise or conciliation have failed, and since the introduction of this bill in the House of Commons attempts have been made to have a sett'ement, but without avail. The committee thought yesterday that if further time were given to the two contending parties a settlement might be reached. I hope, in the event of this bill not being carried this session, that before the next session of parliament a satisfactory compromise may be arrived at, but I must say I am very sceptical upon this point, and I base my conclusions upon the failures which have already been met with by the wheelmen in their various attempts to secure a settlement. I might say that the various sections of the press throughout the Dominion have taken up this subject, and the press of this country I consider a very safe exponent of public opinion, on public and non-political matters of this character. Such leading papers as the Globe, the Mail, the Citizen, and various other papers which might be named, take a very strong stand upon this question and have strongly urged the adoption of the legislation in question. I might say that also behind this movement there cannot be very much less than half a million young men constituting the——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Draw it mild.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Constituting the muscle and the brawn and the hope of this country, and they certainly have not been idle in moulding that public opinion which has already expressed itself so strongly on this subject and which must eventually crystallize itself into legislation. I say to hon. gentlemen that you might as well attempt to stop the ebb and flow of the tide as to try to prevent this sought for legislation from becoming a law upon our statute book at an early date. Hon. gentlemen of the Senate might as well be progressive in passing legislation upon this question, as waiting for public opinion to express itself more strongly upon it, and then afterwards reluctantly conforming to that opinion. I do not wish to create any feelings of antagonism against this bill in this House, as I fully recognize the wisdom which hon. gentlemen of this House always bring to bear upon all questions. I know that reasons may be urged against the bill, but I do contend that very much stronger reasons can be urged for its adoption, and on account of those reasons I urge its adoption to-night. There are times when public opinion may express itself in an apparently arbitrary form. You cannot always meet with that element of what you may consider justice in all movements of this kind, but yet we never hesitate, when public opinion does express itself strongly, to accept that opinion as representing the wishes of the community, and although the principles of justice which it may involve may not be according to our opinion, yet we accept it as the opinion of the public and mould it into legislation. I therefore would respectfully urge upon this House the advisability of not adopting this report, but of sending it back to the Railway Committee, or of this House resolving itself into Committee of the Whole and amend the bill and give it a third reading. I might say that the promoters of this bill had very strong hopes of securing a majority of hon. gentlemen in this House to support the bill, and thus assist its passage, but the results of yesterday, though having a dampening effect, will not lessen the ardour which will be felt for ultimate success. While perhaps called upon to bow to the opinion of the committee upon this subject, yet under the present circumstances I would move that the report be not now adopted, but that the House form itself into a Committee of the Whole and deal with the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is rather a summary way of disposing of the report of the committee. A motion not to adopt it would be quite proper to those who hold the same views as my hon. friend does, but if it is not adopted it will have to go back to the committee for reconsideration, with instructions to report in its favour. Even if the majority of the House are in favour of the principle of the bill, that could not be very well accomplished this session; and for that reason I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should not press that motion, but leave it for the next six or seven months, during the recess, with the railway people and the wheelmen. I make that suggestion because, from conversations I have had with those who represent the railway people, I have no doubt some equitable arrangement between the parties will be arrived at before the next session of parliament; and if that be not accomplished, it may have the effect of changing the opinion of some of those who voted against the principle of the bill, as introduced by my hon. friend. The bill as it stands is too peremptory in its character. The wheelmen themselves agreed to certain amendments which would make it less objectionable than it was as first introduced, and as considered before the committee, and I must call my hon. friend's attention to this fact, that though the committee did not adopt the bill as introduced, and did not accept the amendments which were proposed, the decision was to delay the consideration of the bill until the next session of parliament. It was not a total and final rejection even of the principle of the bill, and while that is the fact—and I speak for one who had very strong opinions against peremptory legislation of that kind—that if the railway people do not come to some arrangement with them, which is more favourable to the travellers with their wheels than at present, I do not say, speaking for myself, that I would not be prepared to insist upon placing those people in a position by which they will have a greater privilege than they have at present. Having pointed out that the principle of the bill was not totally opposed or denounced, by the action of the committee, but simply a postponement of its consideration, I would suggest that my hon. friend should not press, at the present moment his motion. If he does press his motion to reject the report and restore the bill to the order paper, it is utterly impossible to get the law placed upon the statute book during the present session.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I did not think the hon. gentleman would bring this matter up in the Senate again. I feel that my motion will be carried, but I can say this, I am perfectly satisfied that if this House drop it now, we will never see anything more of this bill; this will be the last of it, because it is not desirable for any railway company in this country to be at war with the people. Their object is to be at peace with all mankind, and take their money and make all they can out of them. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion. I am satisfied—in fact, I am pretty well informed—that before very long this will be settled between them, that is, if they are open to reason, and if they are not open to reason they will come back here again. There is no desire in the Senate to do injustice to anybody, and my opinion is that the hon. gentleman should not push his motion because he cannot get it through now anyway, and the bicyclists of the country will not suffer very much during the next two or three months and that is as long as they can use their wheels. When the ice comes they cannot use them. The wheels are used for sport and recreation, and it is well enough that those who own them should pay a few shillings to the railway companies for carrying them. A man should be willing to pay if he travels for pleasure, and I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion and let the matter drop, and let the parties who are most interested—that is, the railway companies and the wheelmen—settle the matter among themselves, which they will do. Of course, if they do not do it, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition says, I do not know what course I may take another year. If the railway companies do any injustice to the people, we cannot allow it to continue. However, I cannot see the injustice yet myself; I may see it by and by. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Withdraw, withdraw.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not wish to force upon this House a motion which would meet with a measure of antagonism and thus sacrifice any sympathy with this bill. Owing to the rather hopeful and assuring remarks which have been made by the hon. the leader of the opposition, and my hon. friend from Monck, I am led to hope that there will be a more favourable reception given to this bill at the next session of Parliament. I desire to say, in the event of this bill being withdrawn—and it is my intention to withdraw it in view of the observations which have been made—and the railway companies not making satisfactory concessions to the wheelmen during recess, that this bill will confront parliament next session and be pressed with all the vigour of which its promoters are capable.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I would suggest that the wheelmen, instead of sending that petition to the Senate, should send it to the railway companies who are the parties interested.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The report of the committee was adopted.

THE YUKON MINING AND TRANSPORTATION CO.'S BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading of Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company (Foreign.)"

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED said:—I hope hon. gentlemen will permit the second reading of this bill to-night. I admit the irregularity of its being on the order paper, but, owing to the very short time before us, and the fact that the Railway Committee will sit to-morrow, I ask to have it read the second time to-night.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I thought you had come to an understanding about this bill. I know the parties interested in it, and they are not here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Any opposition can be urged against it in committee. Whoever opposes the bill will not oppose it to-night. If the hon. gentleman takes that position, I ask to have the order discharged and placed on the order paper for second reading to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yes, that was the understanding.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am afraid that means practically killing the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have no object in killing the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I fear I contributed somewhat to my hon. friend not getting the second reading of his bill to-night, but I did so simply when an objection was raised by the hon. gentleman behind me (Mr. McInnes, B.C.) as to the irregularity of the bill being on the order paper. Of that irregularity there cannot be the slightest doubt, and my hon. friend admits it. I think I have convinced him that the position I took at the time was a right position. The bill, after the first reading, should have been sent direct to the Standing Orders Committee to be reported upon, but it could not possibly have gone on the Minutes until committee had reported, because, the committee might have reported against it or for it, and such a thing as putting a bill on the orders of the day for second reading before the Committee on Standing Orders had reported on it, is unheard of. It is an exception to the general rule that a bill is allowed to go on the Orders of the Day for first reading before it has been passed on by the Committee on Standing Orders, because the regular course is for the Committee on Standing Orders to pass upon the bill and to pass upon the regularity of the proceedings connected with it before it receives the first reading. It is irregularly now upon the Orders of the Day; it should not be there. When a report came in it was quite competent for my hon. friend, after the adoption of the report, to move to put it on the Orders of the Day, but to move the second reading before it was on the Orders of the Day was out of the question, and I interfered so that the proceedings might be regular. I regret very much that my hon. friend cannot get his bill read to-night and referred to the committee to-morrow, but I do not think there is any help for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Order Paper for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CATARACT POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading (Bill 124) "An Act incorporating the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton, Limited."

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) said: This bill is in precisely the same position, and it is getting so near the end of the session that I hope the House will grant the indulgence of having it read the second time, more especially as there are some gentlemen here from a distance who are waiting for the result of the bill. With the permission of the House I ask that the bill be read the second time now.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There is the same objection to this motion. If these people wanted legislation they had plenty of warning to come here and give notice and get their bills through. The bill incorporating the Cataract Power Company is a very important one—one of the most important bills before the House this session, as hon. gentlemen will see before we get through with it. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I shall not consent to the second reading, because the bill is irregularly before the House.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Order paper to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENTS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (125) "An Act respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue." He said:—This bill in effect proposes to restore the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue to the position they occupied before the passing of the Act of 1887, which placed those two departments under the control of the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the time being. At that time the argument used in making the important change was that those two departments would be subsidiary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and that the controllers were not to occupy seats in the Cabinet. Sir John Macdonald, in introducing the bill in 1887, used these words:

> I may say, in the first place, that the bill will provide that it shall not come in force until proclaimed—it will come into effect by proclamation. The two Departments of Customs and Inland Revenues are administrative departments merely; they are not suggestive departments, and it is intended that in due time these two departments shall, as it were, be sub-departments of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is also provided that the heads of those sub-departments shall be under secretaries as it were—to go in and out, but not to be members of the Cabinet, and to have diminished salaries. That is the principle of the bill.

That view was enlarged upon at the next stage of the bill, and so it continued from 1887 down to 1895, when Mr. Wood and Mr. Wallace continued to act and were not members of the Cabinet. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman, who has had a very large experience of the Department of Customs would have appreciated during that time that the absence of those ministers from the Cabinet Council was a very serious drawback to the satisfactory way of discharging the business of that department, inasmuch as the Department of Customs is the great revenue producing department of the government and one involving a very considerable knowledge of the tariff and the various changes that from time to time have been made affecting the tariff question, and so in 1895 or 1896, when Mr. Clarke Wallace resigned, never having been a member of the Cabinet, the member for Victoria was called to fill the position formerly held by Mr. Wallace, and assurance was given that he would become a member of the Cabinet and he and Mr. Wood were subsequently introduced and became Cabinet ministers, equal in power with the other ministers. It could not be considered that the moment they took seats at the Cabinet table they were subordinate to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because the members present at the council table certainly are on an equal plane, and their views would be equally powerful with the Minister of Trade and Commerce whatever the original intention might be. This bill practically, therefore, by legislation places those two officers in the position which the late government considered they should occupy. Objection was taken to the mode of introducing them into the Cabinet, more particulary as Sir John Macdonald himself, when he introduced the bill, laid down the principle that they were not to be Cabinet Ministers, and it was contended that the spirit of the Act of Parliament under which those officers had been created was broken by their being made members of the Cabinet without further legislation. So that practically this legislation is quite in line with the policy of the late government, because although they are Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue in the bill now before the House, their powers are really no larger and no greater than the powers that were exercised, at all events by the gentlemen who held those offices in the late government, after they became members of the Cabinet. The salary was fixed under the provisional statute, and that salary remains the same. There is, as was observed at the first reading of the bill, a provision that when the number of ministers holding departments falls to the level of 13, that then the salary of the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue shall be brought up, as the case may be, to the level of the salaries of the other ministers. I quite agree with all that the hon. gentleman said at the first reading of this bill in reference to the duty performed by the Minister of Customs. I look upon it, myself, as really one of the most important offices in the government, because the Minister of Customs is called upon to exercise a judgment that involves day by day very large sums, defining the interpretation of the tariff of the country. He must be a man very familiar with the business of the country, and he must be exceedingly quick to come to a conclusion, and therefore, I entirely agree with all that the hon. gentleman said as to the position that the head of that department should occupy in the government, but we did not feel that it was well, at the present time, to depart from the rule in reference to the salary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I expressed my opinions in reference to this bill very clearly upon its introduction, and I should not at the present moment have again referred to it had it not been for the misapprehension under which the Secretary of State labours, and the remarks which he made. While I admit, as I formerly did, that the opinion held by Sir John Macdonald as to the admittance of the controllers into the Cabinet, is quite correct, there is nothing in the constitution that prevented nor is there anything that compelled the succeeding premier to depart from the policy which he laid down at the time when he was premier, and at the time when he made the remarks that have just been read by the hon. gentleman, and when I pointed out what I considered the constitutionality of the course that was pursued at that time, it met with the approbation and approval so far as right was concerned, of the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman is wrong, however, in saying that while these gentlemen were made ministers of the Crown, they sat at the council board with the same power and the same authority as a minister of the Crown, other than the right to speak, to vote and to express their opinion upon the policy of the government on any question which came before the Cabinet for discussion, in the same manner as the gentlemen who occupy similar positions to-day who have no portfolio and consequently no departmental responsibility. The fact of making them ministers of the Crown did not change the provisions of the law which placed them under the control and direction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce at the time; or the Finance Minister, had he been made the head of the two departments. I know it may be said that, as a controller, sitting at the council board he would have the right to recomnend say the appointment of an officer, or the change of any regulation in the department—such is not the fact, all recommendations from either of the controllers coming before Council, would have to come through the head of the department and not from the controller as such; hence the incongruities of the position which was held and which led me to the conclusion that a course should be adopted somewhat similar to that proposed in this bill; but it did not alter, change, or affect in any way, their status or power as controllers, while they would have the perfect right of sitting at the Council board and discuss questions affecting each of their departments which such questions would come through the head of the department before the Council. I know there is a misapprehension that existed in the minds of a good many members, and I found the hon. Secretary of State was labouring under the same hallucination. These gentlemen, I repeat, were just in the same position, so far as their power and their authority to advise Her Majesty is concerned, as the gentlemen who held no portfolio at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think at this hour of the evening, and with several private bills to be moved along a stage, it would not be proper to discuss this bill on the second reading at any length. I presume the hon. gentleman in charge of it has no objection to some observations being made on the motion to go into the Commtitee of the Whole. Of course, I can make them then, or now, but it would be more convenient to make them then.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

RESTIGOUCHE AND VICTORIA RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved the second reading of Bill (99) "An Act respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—As this bill seeks to incorporate a company to build a railway through the county which I have the honour to represent, I ask the indulgence of the House a few minutes while I say something with respect to the measure. I may say that in the year 1885, when I had the honour of a seat in the local legislature of New Brunswick—

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would not it be better for the hon. gentlemen to reserve his observations till the bill goes to the committee.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—No, I think not. In 1885 this company got a local charter. In 1894, not having done much towards the survey of the proposed line, they came to the local legislature again and asked an extension of time. That time was granted them. They were given three years within which to complete the survey and three years further to complete the work. On the 21st April last, the three years' time had elapsed and the people of the county that it most interested, the county of Restigouche, being convinced that the company which had the control of that charter were not moving forward as rapidly as they desired, a meeting of the county council of that county was held at which it was unanimously decided that a new charter should be sought in order that the people might have that railway. Accordingly, a new charter was granted by the local legislature at its last session. This is an application to grant another charter for the same road. I think that this parliament should hesitate before they grant a Dominion charter to build a road over the same line. It is not disputed that the local legislatures have the right to grant charters to build railways. In fact, I may say that about all the railways in New Brunswick have been built on local charters and when a charter is now in existence granted by the local legislature, this parliament should hesitate before they grant another charter. It will certainly not tend to the building of the road. It will throw obstacles in the way of building it and the local government have acknowledged the charter which has been passed through the local legislature and have promised a subsidy, which I can verify in no better way than by reading a telegram from the Attorney General of New Brunswick and the leader of the government:

ST. STEPHEN, N.B., June 16th.

The provincial subsidy is promised to the Restigouche and Western Railway Company.

That is the name of the company which got a charter at the last session of the local legislature.

And we do not recognize any claim of the Restigouche and Victoria Colonization Railway.

With the local subsidy pledged to this company which got a charter at the last session of the local legislature, it would seem unfair and would not have a tendency to promote the construction of that road, if this House should grant a charter. The promoters of this bill had legislation for twelve years under which to construct this road, and in all that time they had not succeeded in even filing the necessary surveys in the office of the Provincial Secretary to keep their charter alive. They now come to this House and ask for a Dominion charter to do the same work. You will find, before this bill passes, that nearly every senator from New Brunswick is opposed to this legislation. The representatives of the province of New Brunswick should know what that province wants, and should know what company is in the best interests of the province, and will construct that road. This House should hesitate before passing such legislation. As to the proof that they have not filed the papers, I have here, from the Hon. Mr. Emerson, of the Board of Works, a statement that the papers have not been filed:

In reference to the Restigouche and Victoria Colonization Road, I can only say, the plans filed were not in conformity with the requirements of the case.

Mr. Wetmore, the engineer, also says:

The plans were entirely inadequate.

In twelve years this company has done nothing but barter its charter, and this House should not grant the legislation asked for. The publication was not proper either. The first notice was published on the 23rd April. That does not comply with the conditions, and such legislation as this should at least comply with the requirements of the House. Therefore, I move that this bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I trust the House will not adopt this motion. It is a thin House. The course adopted is an unusual one; and I understand that most of the allegations which have been made by the hon. gentleman will be controverted or met in some way if the bill is allowed to go to the committee. The Railway Committee is clearly the right place to discuss statements such as those made by the hon. gentleman. For instance, the hon. gentleman has made the very serious charge against the people who are applying for this act of incorporation—that they have held a charter from the local legislature of New Brunswick for a great many years, getting it in 1885, and that they have done nothing under the charter. I understand that the people who are applying for this charter now, under the name of the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, are not the people who got the charter from New Brunswick in 1885, but that the people who now hold the other charter are substantially the same people who got the Restigouche and Victoria charter in 1885, that they held it for ten years and did nothing with it, and then sold it to the gentlemen who are now applying for this charter, and these gentlemen have had their plans made and spent some money, and have declared that they are prepared to go on with the work. This statement alone shows that there are two sides to this story, and that it is a matter which should be discussed before the committee and not in the House. With respect to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that there had been no proper notice given, the bill has been reported upon by the Standing Orders Committee, and it is too late to take that objection now. I trust the hon. gentleman will not push his motion. It is a very unusual thing to do with a private bill. I want him to understand that I am in no way pledged to support this bill, and I should like to hear both sides before I make up my mind.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington). I have no interest whatever in this bill in any shape or form. I have been simply asked to take charge of it, and certain information has been placed in my hands which I think it will be much better to lay before the Railway Committee of the Senate, where both sides can be heard with reference to the merits of the question. I am informed that Messrs. Pritchard & Inglis, who are known to me as responsible contractors, have contracted to construct the line and have agreed to pay all just debts of the company. That appears to me to be a fair proposal. Therefore, I shall move that the bill be referred to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman from Edmundston (Mr. Baird) will not press that motion.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—It is an unusual thing to try and stop the course of a private bill on the second reading. There is no just reason in this instance why it should be done. I believe the bill will be found to have merits, and whatever they may be will be discussed before the committee.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The reason why the House always takes that course is that many members of the House may not be aware of the facts, and may wish to hear them fully stated before making up their minds. If the bill is to be thrown out in this way, we cannot form an opinion on the merits of the measure.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I ask leave to withdraw my motion.

The bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington) moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not propose, at this stage, to take up the time of the House but I have been looking over this bill also, and looking over a printed memo which, I believe, has been circulated among the members of this House, and it appears to me that there was one point which should be considered by the Senate before the bill is sent to the committee, and that is, whether this a bill which parliament should consider, or whether it is not, rather, a bill which should be dealt with by the legislature of New Brunswick. I know, personally, very little of this railway, or the proceedings in connection with it, but turning to the preamble of the bill itself, I see that this company obtained its charter originally from the legislature of New Brunswick in 1885, that that charter was renewed in 1891, and renewed again in 1894, and again in 1896, and the hon. gentleman from Edmundston tells us that the local legislature of New Brunswick passed another Act incorporating a new company to build this road in 1897. As he has stated, and as I know to my own knowledge of the province, this is a purely local matter. Indeed, I find by referring to the statutes that until the Act of 1894 was passed, it was called a colonization road. In that year its name was changed to the present name, the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company. It only passes over a portion of two counties in the province. It has always been dealt with by the local legislature, and the local legislature last session refused the very application here made by this company for an extension of their charter and powers, and granted a charter to another company to build this line. I see, in reading over the bill, too, that there is nothing whatever in it which necessitates the company applying to this parliament for legislation. The only clause which could possibly necessitate their making application here would appear to be the 9th clause, in which they ask power to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and certain other railways to lease the line or to sell it, I suppose. To obtain that power, I presume it will be necessary for the company to come here, but even if they were obliged to come here for that legislation, there is no need whatever for their coming here at the present time, for that legislation can be of no effect until similar legislation is passed authorizing these other companies to negotiate, or enter into agreements with this company, either for the lease or the sale of the road. I mention this as the impression which I have formed. I wish to deal fairly in this matter. I do not wish to approach it in an unfair way in any respect, and if the parties who are applying for this charter have any rights, I do not wish to say anything to prejudice their rights; but, generally, looking at the matter as I have been looking at it this afternoon and evening while we have been sitting here, it appears to me to be a subject which should be left to be dealt with by the local legislature of New Brunswick, and it is only that phase of the case which I wish to press on the attention of the House before they come to a decision to send it to the Railway Committee where, of course, if the rights of these parties are dealt with we all admit it should be considered.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think it is the duty of the hon. gentlemen who are supporting this bill to refer it to the Committee on Standing Orders. I do nor think it has been reported on by that committee, or referred to them yet. It was read the first time yesterday, and has not yet been referred to the Committee on Standing Orders to whom it should go before going to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES (Burlington)—I believe it has gone through its regular stages.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

NORTH-WEST TERRRITORIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (114) "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories." He said:—At this late hour, probably the House would allow the bill to take its stage and permit explanations to be made in committee, because really it is largely made up of detail. It is giving increased power to the North-west Territories.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It extends the power and authority that the legislature of the North-west Territories had?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is practically giving the Lieutenant Governor the selection of his council. It, in a measure, brings the North-west Territories legislature up in its powers and privileges.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not the full powers of a province?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, only for the appointment of minor officers, such as justices of the peace.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

DOMINION LANDS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (116): "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act." He said: This is a bill dealing with the details of administration, and probably it would be more convenient to go into it at the next stage.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

ALIEN LABOUR BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved the second reading of Bill (5): "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens."

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a very important bill, and I think that there ought to be some explanation. If the hon. gentleman does not object, he might make his explanation when he proposes to go into Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Leaving the members free to vote on the principle of the bill.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, 18th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE HUDSON BAY AND YUKON RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (77) "An Act to incorporate the Hudson Bay and Yukon Railway and Navigation Company."

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Under the circumstances in which we are placed, knowing how near it is to the closing, I hope that the House will consent to dispense with the rules in so far as they relate to this bill and allow it to be read the third time presently.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I would ask the hon. gentleman why he wishes the rule suspended in this particular instance—is he afraid that the bill will not go through?

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The hon. gentleman will remember that yesterday the Minister of Justice stated that there was a possibility that we might get through our business to-morrow.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no possibility of that now.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—That may be, but that was the hon. gentleman's statement yesterday, and as he has only just now contradicted it, I think the House would have no objection to suspending the rule, as they have done on previous occasions, and allow the bill to go to the House of Commons at once.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that I am not opposing the bill at all. I merely ask the question for this reason, that nearly all bills of the same character have been left to the dying hours of each session. If there is anything suspicious about a bill, it is generally left till the last.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I hope the Senate will put its foot down and not allow these bills to be passed without proper discussion.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I hope the Senate will not put its foot down yet, but will allow this bill to be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—If that is done, probably other hon. gentlemen will urge the suspension of the rules with regard to other bills which may be objectionable. Therefore I object to it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I move that the bill be read the third time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

PILOTS INCORPORATION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (67) "An Act to incorporate the Pilots serving between Quebec and Montreal," recommending that no further proceedings be taken with regard to the bill, as they considered it not in the public interest to pass the same. He said:—I do not know that it is necessary that I should give any explanation of the action of the committee. There was no amendment to any of the clauses such as would require explanation. It was the opinion of the committee, after hearing the bill very fully discussed by advocates and opponents, that the best interests of the country require that such a bill as that should not be on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND moved that the report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) presented the report of the Committee on Standing Orders recommending the suspension of the 49th and 50th Rules so far as the same relate to the petition of Treffle Berthiaume and others, praying to be incorporated as the Southern Counties Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I object to this motion, because it relates to a very important bill, to which all due consideration should be given. I object to the suspension of the rule.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—If it is objected to, it is more than probable that it will have the effect of entirely defeating the bill.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I am very sorry.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is what the hon. gentleman wants to do.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Then it must stand as a notice of motion until to-morrow.

DISMISSAL OF PROULX AND POITRAS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to draw the attention of the government to the following facts:

1. On the 28th September, 1896, answering a question on the subject of the dismissal of Messrs. Proulx and Poitras, employees on the Intercolonial Railway, the Honourable Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways, made in the House of Commons this declaration:

"THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Proulx and Poitras have not been dismissed."

2. On the 1st September, 1896, Mr. J. B. Proulx had received the following letter from his immediate superior:

"INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY,
"RIVER DU LOUP STATION,
"September 1st, 1896.

"To J. B. PROULX, Section Foreman, No. 133.

"DEAR SIR,—On and after the 15th of September your services will not be required as section foreman. You will give up all tools and books to the foreman that will be appointed to take charge.

"Yours truly,

(Sgd.) "JAMES YEO, Track Master."

3. On the 5th October, 1896, Senator Landry received the following letter:—

"ST. PIERRE, 5th October, 1896.

"Honourable PH. LANDRY.

"DEAR SIR,—In answer to your letter of date 30th September, I have to say to you that there is nothing correct in the answer of the Minister of Railways to the question put with regard to me. You must have the order which I received and which I sent you. I am out of employment; I have been replaced by Beaumont and the two other section men are Martineau, of St. François, and Letourneau, son of Godefroy, of St. Pierre, consequently everything is incorrect.

"I wrote to the minister three weeks ago, asking him for an inquiry, but I have received no answer. I put the whole thing in your hands with the firm confidence of good success.

"Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) "J. BTE. PROULX."

4. On the 4th January, 1897, Senator Landry received the following letter:—

"Mr. PH. LANDRY,

"SIR,—I have not yet had any news on the subject of my place. I really think that the Liberals will not remain long in power, and if the Conservatives come again into power I ask you not to forget me. I am out of employment and I have great need of my place.

"I remain with the greatest of respect,
"Your ever obliged.
"J. BAPTISTE PROULX."

5. On the 5th June instant, on the express request made by Senator Landry the Honourable Secretary of State sent him the following memorandum :—

(Memorandum.)

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"MINISTER'S OFFICE, OTTAWA.

"J. B. Proulx was given fourteen days' notice in April, 1897, and died before his time was up on 14th April."

After having drawn the attention of the government to the preceding facts, the Honourable Mr. Landry will ask :—

1. Whether it is true that on the 28th September, 1896, Mr. J. B. Proulx had not yet been dismissed, as the Minister of Railways has officially stated, in his answer publicly in the House of Commons Debates, volume 43, column 847?

2. Whether it is true that in the month of April, 1896, M. J. B. Proulx had not been dismissed, as the memorandum given by the Honourable Secretary of State to the Honourable Senator Landry officially proves?

3. Whether it is not true, as a matter of fact that Mr. J. B. Proulx received from his immediate superior, Mr. James Yeo (track master) notice of his dismissal and an order to hand over his tools and his books to his successor on the 15th September, the said order having been given on 1st September, 1896?

4. Whether it is not true that on the 15th September, 1896, as a matter of fact, Mr. J. B. Proulx was replaced by one Beaumont, who since that date has occupied the place and has drawn the salary which Proulx formerly had?

5. Why did the Minister of Railways and the Secretary of State give information contrary to the facts?

6. Who suggested to them these fantastical answers?

7. May the government have been deceived by the denunciations of offensive partisanship brought against poor employés, as it has manifestly been in the answers which have been suggested to it and which it has given to the questions which have been put to it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As to the first question, my answer is that I presume the letter from Mr. James Yeo, trackmaster, gives the correct date of dismissal, the 15th September. I have no reason to doubt it. The hon. gentleman has very much fuller information on the subject than I have been able to obtain. As to the second question, the information furnished me was evidently an unintentional error of the clerk having charge of the papers. I presume that is the way it arose. These mistakes will occur.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is the death a clerical error?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware whether the man died or not. It is too serious a question to be trifled over. I gave the information as I got it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see how it could be a clerical error.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows whether he is alive or not. I will accept his statement as to that. As to question three, as far as I have been able to ascertain, the answer is yes. As to question four, I do not know who replaced Proulx. As to question five, information such as the hon. gentleman asks for has to be filtered through a list of officials before we get it here. The request for the information has to go from the office here to a general superintendent, and from him I suppose to the superintendent of the division, and from the superintendent of the division probably to some local agent, and when the reply is received it is not at all improbable that a mistake might arise. As to the sixth question, I am quite unable to answer that question, and as to the seventh, I am unable to give any positive answer on the subject. It is a hypothetical question which I am not bound to answer.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY DISMISSALS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire :

Why did the Minister of Railways, in answer to a question, declare to the House of Commons, on 28th September, 1896, that Mr. Poitras had not been dismissed, when, as a matter of fact, the said Poitras had been really dismissed, as appears by the following documents :—

(a.)

"INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY,
"RIVIÈRE DU LOUP STATION,
"September 1st, 1896.

"To XAVIER POITRAS,
"Section man, section 131.

"On and after the 15th of September your services will not be required as section man on No. 131 section.

"Yours truly,
(Sgd.) "JAMES YEO,
"Track Master."

(b.)

"CAP ST. IGNACE, 7th October, 1896.

"The Hon. Senator LANDRY,
"Villa Mastaï.

"HON. SIR,—I have seen the answer of Mr. Blair to the question which was put him in the House of Commons on 28th September last. I find it really singular to see the response he gave, for I am well and truly dismissed as you can see by the letter which I have received from Mr. Yeo. I can then only attribute my dismissal to Mr. Choquette, who puts me on the sidewalk out of a simple spirit of vengeance because I am a Conservative.

"Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) "XAVIER POITRAS."

2. Who took advantage of the good faith of the Minister of Railways by thus giving him information manifestly contrary to the truth and the facts?

3. If the Minister of Railways has been deceived to the point of leading the public astray, may he not have been equally deceived to the point of dismissing poor employés without any form of trial?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the Minister of Railways made his statement on the 28th September, he could not have heard of the action taken on the first September. He must have got his information from some official; according to the letters the hon. gentleman produces now he must have been mistaken. The dismissal was some days earlier than that. As to the second question, I assume the Minister of Railways obtained his information in good faith from the general manager, who would have received the report from the assistant superintendent, and the assistant superintendent probably from some minor official whom I cannot name. As to number three, I am unable to answer the hon. gentleman's question, it being entirely hypothetical and not such a question as I am bound to answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is not the first time I have had erroneous answers given to me, and I will point out one here which was given by the Minister of Justice himself and one which cannot be explained by the few words that the Secretary of State has just uttered. When I asked, in the month of April, at what date Judge Routhier of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec was appointed, the Minister of Justice answered that he had been appointed in 1889, though he had been appointed in 1873, and when I pointed out the error when I brought up the question for a second time, the Minister of Justice turned the difficulty by saying "now that you ask, not for the district of Quebec, but for the province of Quebec, I will answer you the truth," but my first question was identically the same as the second one, and the second was the same as the first one. I had asked was Judge Routhier appointed judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, and not for the district of Quebec. The distinction was not made by me, but by the Minister of Justice himself, just to explain the erroneous answer he had given me the first time.

I put another question the other day and the Minister of Justice said it was not a legitimate question.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not know that the Minister of Justice is the proper authority in this House to put out any question I may ask or to refuse to answer it on that ground. If the question is not legitimate the Speaker could rule it out of order, if the Minister of Justice or any other minister undertakes to decide whether a question is in order we do not want a Speaker any longer, and we could save his salary to the country. When I gave notice the other day calling the attention of the government to facts the Minister of Justice said he was not aware of certain facts. I am referring to facts imputed to Mr. Rattey. At the time the answer was given the Minister was aware I had brought that official under the notice of the government and the government could not say they did not know—they did—they might not have known when the question was put on the paper, but they were made aware of it by my motion. When I spoke of the Quebec bridge and of the fact that Mr. Choquette had made known the policy of the government on that subject, I asked the minister if Mr. Choquette had been authorized. This is a question which the hon. gentleman said was not legitimate. I think it is legitimate for us to know whether the government has authorized or not authorized a statement. I do not see why a question of that kind should be out of order. We should know from the government if they have authorized or not authorized a member of the House of Commons to make known their policy on that subject. If that question is not in order I am willing that the Speaker should rule it out of order, but I should like to have the decision of the Speaker on a point of that kind and not the decision of an interested party.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY DISMISSALS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to draw the attention of the government to the following declaration made on 1st September, 1896, to the House of Commons by the prime minister, the Hon. Mr. Laurier, and reported in the House of Commons debates, volume 43, column 506 :

The PRIME MINISTER—No minister would pretend to dismiss any official unless he had an opportunity to defend himself; but when the case is within the personal knowledge of the minister himself, under such circumstances there is no case for inquiry. When the minister is not cognizant of the facts himself, whenever the case is brought to him by extraneous evidence, those statements must be substantiated, and every man must be given an opportunity to defend himself. I do not want, for my part, and I am sure the government does not desire—and I can speak for the government on this matter—to act arbitrarily on this or any other subject; every one must be given a fair opportunity to be heard before he is dealt with

And will ask :

1. Are these words really those of the prime minister and of the head of the present government?

2. Whether the cases of offensive partisanship denounced by Mr. Choquette, M.P., which have brought about the dismissal of all the accused without any inquiry and without the accused having an opportunity of defending themselves, are cases of which the Postmaster General and the Minister of Railways had a personal knowledge?

3. If the Postmaster General and the Minister of Railways had not a personal knowledge of the facts denounced by Mr. Choquette, why were the accused dismissed without any form of trial, contrary to the doctrine enunciated by the prime minister himself?

4. Is it the intention of the government to make reparation for the injustice committed?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Before I answer the hon. gentleman's question I would just observe that most of his questions here contain illegitimate matter, though we have answered a number of things which there was no obligation to answer according to the practice in such matters. The hon. gentleman will find that what I say is correct if he will take the trouble to look into the English authorities on such matters. My answer to the hon. gentleman's question is :—I have no reason to question the accuracy of the official report of the debate and speech mentioned. 2. To the second and third questions, my answer is : Where a member testifies to the offensive partisanship of an officer or employé of the government on his responsibility as such member of the constituency, this has in some cases been deemed sufficient evidence of such partisanship and not to need further extraneous evidence. 4. The government is not aware of any injustice having been committed requiring reparation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. minister mean by "some" that it is the condition of all the cases that have been brought, or all that have been mentioned?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Some have been dismissed on the testimony of the member, and others have been dismissed on other evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In all the cases that I have brought up, the dismissals have been on the member's denunciation.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It seems to me, from the constant iteration and reiteration of the name Choquette in connection with these dismissals, that that gentleman must be spending an immense amount of gratuitous energy in laying up for himself wrath against the day of wrath.

JUDGE PRENDERGAST'S APPOINTMENT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to call the attention of Senate to the following extract from the Montreal Witness, of the 5th June instant :

ST. BONIFACE, MAN., June 5.—In the St. Boniface election petition case, discussed yesterday, it will be remembered that when the case came before the Honourable Mr. Justice Killam on April 29, for trial of the preliminary objection filed by Mr. Lauzon, against the prosecutors of the petition, it was proved that both petitioners, Roy and Berthiaume, had been guilty of corrupt acts. Roy admitted he had been promised money for driving electioneers to the polls by Mr. Prendergast, the present judge. The chairman of Mr. Bertrand's committee stated that he requested Mr. Prendergast on the day following the election to pay him, when Mr. Prendergast give him an order on Mr. J. A. Richard for the amount, which was paid by Mr. Richard. The other petitioner, Berthiaume, who supported Mr. Lauzon in the election the year before, admitted that a year before the election that Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast had promised to endeavour to procure him an office from the Dominion government, and he worked hard to secure Mr. Bertrand's election during the last week before the election. When this startling evidence was given Mr. Howell, counsel for the petitioners, applied for an adjournment to enable him to put Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Richard in the witness box, which was granted. Yesterday morning when the trial was resumed, Mr. Howell stated to the court that in view of the evidence given at the previous hearing, he was unable to ask that the preliminary objections should be over ruled. Judgment accordingly was given dismissing the petition.

And inquire if the government intend to take any action regarding the matter?

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I hope my hon. friend will not press this matter now. He wants to make an attack upon Judge Pendergast on a onesided statement, without giving ample opportunity to Judge Pendergast to show his side of the case. I do not know what object my hon. friend has in this. As long as he has an opportunity to to make his attack sometime in the session, that should satisfy him. I cannot imagine that my hon. friend does not feel how important it is that a judge, if attacked, should be allowed an opportunity to be heard at the same time. Is it not contrary to all that we know of precedent and to reason that an attack of this kind should go on before the judge attacked has an opportunity to defend himself? The notice has been very short—a week or ten days. That amount of time would be given in any court for any kind of offence, however slight it was, or however unimportant the individual. All I am asking is that the question should not be brought up until I have the means of answering it. Usually questions can be answered here but this is a case in which I have no means here of answering. The judge lives two days' journey from Ottawa, and from the difficulty of communication he has had no opportunity of taking advice here. I understood my hon. friend to say the other day that his only object was to have his statement made before the session closed. I have not the papers yet, though I have a telegram that the papers are on the way. It is quite certain that the House is not to prorogue on Saturday. It is quite certain that it will have to sit on Monday. That is quite certain now, but it was not certain before. My hon. friend when formerly asked to postpone this matter said that Monday would be a good day, and that he was willing to take it then. Then I was not sure whether the House would be in session on Monday, now we are sure that it will be in session Monday, and I am satisfied that my hon. friend would prefer to have the reply of Judge Prendergast when the attack is made. I hope the House will take the view which is the correct one, the only defensible one to take. If my hon. friend persists in pressing the matter I shall be astonished to find him doing so, my request is so obviously reasonable. Judge Prendergast may not be as diligent as the hon. member thinks he should be. Since telegraphing him I have had two telegrams about the illness in his family. It turns out, from the last telegram, that his wife is very ill and the doctors are afraid that she will not recover. To drive a man to greater expedition than he has used under these circumstances is something which I am sure the House will consider unbecoming. I do not want to exclude the hon. member's case from the public or from the Senate; I I only ask that the hon. gentleman shall not press the matter on the House until the facts are before us, and until I can state to the House what Judge Prendergast's answer is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have only this desire that I should have the opportunity to make my statement before the very close of the session, when the rush of other business would make members impatient, and when it is possible that I would not have an opportunity, without trespassing on the patience of my colleagues to make the statement at all. I feel, therefore, that I should have been allowed to go on with it to-day and that my hon. friend should have been ready. This motion was brought up in the House last Monday.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—How could I be ready?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not necessry to refer to that again. Notice was all that was asked for then, and notice was given, and a week was allowed to intervene before I proposed to move in the matter—just one week from the time I first mentioned the subject and then my hon. friend asked to have time to get information. Some telegrams from Judge Prendergast have been shown me, and I know some of the statements contained in these telegrams are not correct, and I am strongly inclined to the belief that dilatory tactics are purposely being pursued in order to prevent this subject being ventilated on the floor of this House before the House rises. Judge Prendergast stated, in the telegram read on Wednesday, that his statement and evidence had been mailed. If that were correct they would be now in the possession of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. Therefore that statement could not be correct, that his papers were sent at that time. This matter was started a week ago last Monday, and my hon. friend telegraphed Judge Prendergast, and he pleaded in his telegram that he had only received the hon. the minister's telegram a week before that time. All this shows that dilatory tactics are being pursued to prevent a proper discussion of the subject on the floor of this House before prorogation. I would, however, feel myself at a great disadvantage in discussing this question if it could be pointed out to me that my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, was not in possession of the fullest information. I want that he shall be in possession of all the information that can possibly be put in his hands, in order that he may be able to show that the facts I am going to put before the House are wrong, if they are wrong, and I shall, therefore, consent to this : if my hon. friend will give me and this honourable House the assurance that I will have the opportunity of making this statement before the Supply Bill and the Tariff Bill are disposed of in this House, I will resume my seat now and wait until, say to-morrow or Monday—until the hon. gentleman is in possession of the information he desires.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think it extremely likely that we shall not receive the Tariff Bill or the Supply Bill until Monday, but they may come to-morrow, and in that case if the House wish to go into it at once, I should enter into an undertaking to discuss my hon. friend's motion to-morrow, but the great probability is that the bills will not be up. I wish my hon. friend would say Monday, and if Judge Prendergast has not by that time given me the information, I shall not ask any more delay. I will consider him too dilatory. It may be the very first thing on Monday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Supposing no charge was made in this House against Judge Prendergast, would the hon. minister think it proper to take any notice of what appeared in the Montreal "Witness," or what appeared in any paper, reflecting on a judge in this way? Should the paper be prosecuted or should the matter be dropped—a public charge in a public paper against a judge?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not know that I can answer a question like that. I am always a reader of the newspapers, and if information comes to me that I think should be considered and acted upon, I consider it and act upon it, but I do not think it is proper or reasonable that I should take notice of everything that appears in the papers. Even judges are attacked sometimes in newspapers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I consent to have my motion stand until to-morrow. We will then know if my hon. friend has the papers and we can proceed, or if circumstances permit of discussing it on Monday, we can take it up then.

QUALIFICATIONS OF LIEUTENANT SUTTON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire :

1. Has Lieutenant F. H. C. Sutton, of "B" Squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, stationed at Winnipeg, who has been recently sent to England by the present government, obtained in Canada a first-class long course certificate?

2. If not, what class course certificate does he hold?

3. According to regulations and precedents is it not true that the Militia Department has already refused and is bound to refuse to send to England for a course men who have not obtained the highest possible certificate in Canada?

4. Who recommended Lieutenant Sutton, and why was he selected?

5. Why was Mr. Sutton sent to England when he had not obtained the highest certificate in Canada to entitle him to go?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first question is, no. To the second, he has first class short course grade B; first class short course grade A, and a second class long course grade A. Royal School of Cavalry. With reference to the third question, there is no regulation on the subject. Previous to the present year officers have been sent who had not the highest possible Canadian qualifications, but the policy of the department has now been changed in that respect. To the fourth, Lieutenant Sutton's application was approved by the Minister of Militia some two months before any change of policy was arrived at. The fifth question is answered above.

EMIGRATION TO DAKOTA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to direct the attention of the government to a paragraph in last evening's Journal headed "Gone to Uncle Sam." It reads as follows:

Winnipeg, Man., June 17.—A party of 150 Galicians left yesterday via the Northern Pacific for Dickinsons, North Dakota, where they will take up land. This is evidently the result of the visit of the North Dakota emigrant agent, who was discovered recently in emigration hall trying to persuade the foreigners to settle in the states.

When the Minister of the Interior took office, his advent was heralded with a flourish of trumpets, and great things were predicted as to what would be achieved by his vigorous immigration policy. Since then I have seen one of the results pointed out in the arrival of a large party of Galicians, and it was reported then that they had with them considerable money. It was stated that they had no less than $28,000 amongst them, and it was pointed out, with a great deal of pride, that the immigration agents who had been sent out by the present Minister of the Interior had in a short space of time achieved such admirable results. I should like to know if the government can give any explanation as to how, after having evidently expended a large sum of money bringing these people to the country, getting them to Winnipeg, they allowed foreign agents to come in and take the whole party away without any attempt to interfere with their doing so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I saw the report referred to this morning, but I have not any official information on the subject. I am not aware that the Department of the Interior contributed in any way to the immigration of those Galicians. On the contrary, we have had a paragraph in the papers sometime ago from Winnipeg that they were regarded as paupers and being sent out of the country, and not regarded as a desirable class of immigrants. I am not aware that they were brought in any way by the Minister of the Interior. I speak without absolute knowledge on that subject, only what I have been able to gather. I may be wrong as to that, but I am inclined to think they were not brought here by the department.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER— Surely it cannot be possible that a party of one hundred and fifty souls, taken as far as Winnipeg with the immigration agent of the government in charge of them—the party newspapers taking a considerable degree of credit for the Minister of the Interior having brought them into the country—it cannot possibly be said now that they are not brought in on the authority of the government and that the anxiety is to get rid of them instead of keeping them in the country. As a matter of fact, a number of these Galicians are already settled along the line of the Manitoba and North-western Railway, and those who came out were supposed to be taken over to join the settlement already made, and it is quite impossible they should have come out without doing so under the auspices of the government. If so, it is the first time a party have come out under those circumstances.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Is it not possible that this is due to some portion of the national policy being left in the country? We were told that it was the national policy occasioned the loss of immigrants. Do you think if the country had been more purged of that policy that these people would have remained?

THE RESIGNATION OF JUDGE JONES.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In reference to the matter of the resignation of Judge Jones, and the petition referred to by my hon. friend, I informed him that I recollected no petition, and that I had not been able to find one. I have made further inquiries and taken a great deal of trouble, but it turns out my trouble was unnecessary. I find the facts are that there was a petition addressed to me, which had received a number of signatures, but before it was sent to me it was decided to drop that petition. Therefore it was not sent and I cannot produce it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Probably the gentlemen who signed it were ashamed of it.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the government if they can inform the House whether there is any truth in the rumour that they have received a despatch from Winnipeg informing them that the Catholics of that province had accepted the Laurier-Greenway compromise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the government have not received any despatch on the subject whatever.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Has any minister received any such despatch?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I think if any minister had received any despatch I should have heard of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, will you inquire?

YUKON MINING AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the second reading of Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company (Foreign)."

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Explain!

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I have not a very clear explanation to give myself. I have merely been asked, in the absence of Senator Lougheed, to move the second reading of the bill. I would ask the House to pass the second reading, and the House need not be committed to the principle. I intend to move that it be referred to the committee.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If this bill does get its second reading and it is referred to the committee, I should be glad if the committee would look at the recital, which I am told is incorrect and from the examination I have given I think it is incorrect. It speaks of this company being incorporated under the Companies Act of the province of British Columbia, and also incorporated by an Act of the legislature of the province of British Columbia. I understand that that is not the case. It is material that the recital should be properly expressed. It appears that it is a United States company incorporated in the state of Delaware, and then there is a law in British Columbia by which foreign companies registered there have certain powers and rights, but they are not incorporated under that law. Then the bill is also referred to in another Act passed recently, and in looking at that also I find no incorporation by the laws of British Columbia. There is no reason why the real facts should not be expressed in the recital, and the committee, I have no doubt, will see to that in case they report the bill.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I oppose this bill on two or three very important grounds. It is only some eight or ten days ago since we passed a bill entitled an Act to incorporate the British Yukon Mining and Trading Company, at the head of which is the Duke of Teck and a number of other very wealthy influential Englishmen, Scotchmen and I believe Irishmen.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Are you sure they are Irish?

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Yes and some Canadians. To-day we had in the Railway Committee, and here some few minutes ago, another Yukon bill that my hon. friend from Toronto had charge of. He wanted the third reading of that bill to-day for a line of railway from Hudson Bay to the Yukon. These are all good and proper bills, and they receive my unqualified support, but here is another company that ask for the same powers as the British Yukon Company, and their starting points on the Pacific coast are only seventy-five miles apart, the British Yukon Company starting from the head of Lynn Inlet or canal. This company proposes to start at the head of Tacu Inlet, a distance of only seventy-five miles from Lynn, and the powers asked are practically the same. Above all, I want to draw the attention of this honourable House to the fact that the country through which they asked those powers to be exercised is practically the same. For that reason, if for no other, I oppose the bill. Although there is a very large area of country to be opened up, yet the avenues of communication in that mountain country are solely confined to mountain gorges and valleys, rivers and lakes, so that if those two companies are incorporated and build railways and enter into mining and smelting and trading generally, they will come into contact with each other at almost every point in that vast region. I think hon. gentlemen will recognize the fact that it is scarcely the correct thing for this parliament to pass two bills practically of the same kind and of the same nature for the construction of lines which traverse the same territory. It is true both of those companies have received powers from the local legislature of British Columbia. As the hon. Minister of Justice has pointed out, there is a very great inaccuracy in the title of the bill under discussion at the present time, and it will require to be rectified, even supposing it should become law this session. Apart from that I say, that we have already incorporated a company and given them powers to build a railway and enter into general mining and development in that region of the world, I think we ought to support them and do all we can to see that they open up the resources of that country. If this second bill is passed it will only have one of two effects, either that the present company, the British company, will be forced to buy them out, or it will be the means of preventing either of those companies going on and opening up that western region of our domain. I think that is a very undesirable thing. They have powers from the legislature there to go on and do certain things. If they are in earnest, if they intend to build railways to make their improvements there, they can go on and do it under the Acts they received from the legislature of British Columbia. It would be unwise and impolitic in us to give similar powers to this company that we have given to the British company. The second point is that this is a foreign company, as has been stated by the Minister of Justice. They come in here and ask for rights and privileges equal to anything that we ourselves enjoy. I do not think I am a narrow gauge individual; I believe in liberty to the fullest extent, but the treatment that our people have received by those in authority enacting laws in the neighbouring republic in the last few years has been to alienate the feeling of every true British subject, especially a Canadian, against the course pursued by that people. In the Citizen of Wednesday the 16th, hon. gentlemen may have observed a short paragraph which I think will confirm what I have stated. It reads as follows:

HEAD TAX ON IMMIGRANTS.

SENATOR TILLMAN PROPOSES CHARGING ALL ALIENS $100 EACH.

Washington, June 15.--Senator Tillman to-day gave notice of an amendment he will offer to the tariff bill, providing for a head tax of $100 on all immigrants to the United States. The amendment also makes it a misdemeanour, punishable by imprisonment, for any person to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in trade or manual labour without intending to become a citizen.

It may be said that that is merely a notice of an amendment offered to the tariff bill, and that there is only one Senator Tillman, but unfortunately our experience within the last few years has satisfied us that there are a great number of Tillmans, not only in the Senate of the United States, but in the House of Representatives. It is high time that we should look after our own interests. We have been coquetting too long with our great neighbours to the south. Instead of treating us fairly, they have taken advantage of every concession we have made them, and they look upon us now as being so dependent upon them that we cannot thrive without their aid and assistance. It is high time that we should show them that we can live and prosper without them. In view of this, we ought to look after our own people and especially in that western portion of our Dominion, where English capitalists have been attracted in the last year or year and a half in particular. Money is pouring in there, and if we can demonstrate beyond a doubt that there are profitable openings for their investments, it will continue to pour in. I think we will not be doing any capitalists, and especially Canadian capitalists, the justice they are entitled to unless we give our own people the first opportunity. Some hon. gentlemen may take high and exalted ground and say if our neighbours do wrong that is no reason why we should do the same. That has been the course unfortunately that England and Canada have taken in the past and in consequence of taking those high grounds, what has been the result? A large portion of the state of Maine that legitimately belong to Canada we have been deprived of. Again, the Pacific coast, as far south as the Columbia River, belong to Canada, and ought to be a portion of Canada to-day. Only some twenty-four years ago that beautiful island, San Juan, in the Gulf of Georgia was improperly handed over from Canada to the United States. It is time for us to look after our own interests and if there is anything good let us have the benefit of it. If the company already chartered will carry out what they pretend to carry out, let them show it between now and next session, and if they fail to do their duty I will support this measure, but until they do fail doing their duty, this House should reject the bill for the reasons I have given. I, therefore, move that the bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day three months.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B C.)—I do not deny the force of the argument made by my hon. friend. It is a very strong one, but this House cannot deal with a measure of this kind unless the maps are placed before them, showing whether the proposed line comes in competition with any other line. I ask the House to allow the bill to be read the second time and let us go to the committee where the bill can be dealt with on its merits.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I rise to endorse the remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentleman from Victoria. For my own part, I have not sufficient information to attempt to vote on the motion of my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McInnes), and I think the fairest way, and the way usually adopted in this House when there is any dispute in reference to a railway bill or any other bill, is to allow it to go to its proper committee, where information can be had on both sides and where an intelligent report may be made to the House. I do not think it would be acting fairly to discharge the bill in this summary manner.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Particularly in the absence of the hon. gentleman who had charge of the bill, it would be unfair to take this extreme course. It has not been taken in any other case this session, and it would be better to let it go to the committee and we can come to a conclusion on their report. I want to see whether it interferes with the rights of any other company. The English company may be all my hon. friends says but this may be an equally good company.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—We do not know whether the interests are proper interests or not.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I said I was unable to give an explanation of this bill which should be made to-day. No doubt the remarks of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster come with a great deal of force, he being a resident of the country and cognizant of the affairs of that country, but when he states that his objection to this bill is because he has lately advocated the passing of a bill in which the glamour is thrown around the names of the promoters by the Duke of Teck being incorporated in it, the hon. gentleman, by rubbing shoulders with royalty, must have abandoned the democratic ideas he has hitherto entertained. The fact of the Duke of Teck being incorporated in that company does not give it any moral effect. I would not consider if the Prince of Wales were included that the company would be any the better than if the names of good capitalists were incorporated. In our part of the country we always encourage all who are willing to provide facilities for developing the means of travel and facilitating the marketing of the produce of that country. According to the hon. gentleman, the Yukon country, large as it is, can only be reached by certain passes. Yet he tells us that these passes should be given to a monopoly—that one company and no one else should be allowed to enter in. I cannot understand how that corresponds with our ideas of how a country should be opened up. For my part, I should like to see the best access given, so that everybody who wants to get into that country can get there with the best facilities possible. We all know how difficult it is to go there now. It takes months for parties to reach their destination by the present channels. If these passes are to be possessed by one company, who will be able to charge what they please, it will lock the country up for a number of years. It would be a most unwise policy. As far as United States capital coming in here is concerned, the hon. gentleman's ideas are so different from the ideas enunciated by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House last night, on the subject of the American Bank Note Company, that they require some explanation, Last night he wanted to incorporate a United States company to do business here; now he says that United States capital should not be allowed to be introduced. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he does not know himself that the development of the mining industry in British Columbia is largely owing to United States capital, and if we had waited for Canadian or English capital, a great many railways and mines in that country would have been unconstructed and undeveloped. We merely ask to have the second reading of the bill now, and to send it to the committee, where its details can be fully considered. There will be before that committee gentlemen who have thoroughly looked into this question, and who will be prepared to deal with the legal aspect of the case. To throw out the bill without such an investigation would be most unwise and unfair.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It strikes me that as we chartered two companies to go into that country already, it would be only justice to them to give them a little time to see what they will do before we give them competition. The hon. gentleman from Burlington wants a lot of companies. If we grant this, does he think it will assist the others?

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—It is going to kill the project.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have no objection to the bill going to the Railway Committee, but at this late stage of the session do you think it will be properly considered. There are enough bills before that committee already to take the whole of their time. My own opinion is that you are only giving us more work that amounts to nothing. We may as well dispose of the bill now. If there are any advantages to be had I am in favour of giving them to British subjects and not to foreigners. When our neighbours are excluding us from their country, we should not be too generous to them. I do not object to Americans coming here. I do not object to trade with them and take their money if they have any to give us, but this is not the time to give them a preference over our own people and allow them to interfere with British subjects until we first give British subjects an opportunity to see what they will do to open up that country. My hon. friend says, give them a charter. For what? To embarrass the other company so that they will have to be bought out before anything will be done? The bill has my opposition, but I am not particular whether it goes to the Railway Committee or not. If the hon. gentleman pushes his motion I shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—As a request has been made to let the bill go to the Railway Committee, I shall withdraw my amendment, I thought that owing to the late stage of the session it was just as well to dispose of it now, because I believe it is impossible that it can become law this session. It is just as well for my hon. friend to abandon the bill now.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is the fault of the promoters if it does not pass.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—That is just what I mentioned to-day, that people leave bills to the dying hours of the session and bring them forward just at the last moment. It is an insult to the House to bring them in under such circumstances, when we are all anxious to get to our homes. It would be only a proper rebuke to those people to throw out their bill and teach them to bring in their bills hereafter at a proper stage of the session.

The motion was agreed, to and the bill was read a second time.

SECOND READING

Bill (124) "An Act incorporating the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton, Limited," (Mr. MacInnes, Burlington).

DEPARTMENTS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (125): "An Act respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the bill, but to make some observations which have been suggested to me by the discussion which took place the other day. The position is this, that by Acts passed in the year 1887 the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue, which had been under the control of independent ministers with seats in the cabinet, were taken from under the jurisdiction of those ministers and placed each under the jurisdiction of an officer called the controller, the understanding being that the controllers were not to have seats in the cabinet; and it was stated by the leader of the government of that time that they were to be something like the under secretaries in England. This Act, though passed in 1887, contained a suspending clause, and it was not put into operation during the lifetime of Sir John Macdonald, under whose administration it had been passed, but was put into operation, I think, in 1893. There were two or three discussions on the matter in the House of Commons, and looking at those discussions, one would have supposed that the view taken by the first minister of that day that it would be convenient to have officers corresponding with the under secretaries in England, was the correct view. Experience has shown that it is not so. Different reasons have been given. Some, I think, are not really very substantial. For instance, the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in this House gave, as the strongest reason why the Controller of Customs should be a minister with a seat in the cabinet, that that officer had a great many matters to attend to. I do not think that that is a reason in itself why an officer should have a seat in the cabinet. The probabilities are that some copying clerks and typewriters and other persons in the very lowest offices in the service are very hard worked and have more to do than those standing near the head of the list. The character of the work has a great deal more to do with the advisability of the officer being in the cabinet than the quantity of work which he has to do. It was recognized in the discussion in the House of Commons in 1887 that the duties theretofore performed by the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue, and which, under the law now existing are performed by the Controllers are almost purely administrative. The Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue have nothing to do with shaping the fiscal policy of the country; they simply carry out the laws respecting customs and inland revenue as they appear on the statute-books, and it is not necessary, for merely administrative purposes, that an officer should be a member of the cabinet. Of course it is understood, and the hon. leader of the opposition stated at the first reading of this bill, that the government of which he was the head had decided that these two controllers should be made members of the cabinet, as it had been found impracticable—I do not know that he used as strong a word as that, but at any rate it had been found exceedingly inconvenient that the Controllers of Customs and Inland Revenue should not have seats in the cabinet. When the present administration came into power they found things in that position. Their predecessors had actually constituted the then existing Controller of Customs and Controller of Inland Revenue members of the cabinet. Inasmuch as the ground taken by the members of the Liberal party had been that those officers could not with propriety be made members of the cabinet except by legislation, it followed, as a matter of course, that without a complete change of policy it was necessary that some such legislation as this should be introduced by the present government. I should not have said anything if nothing further had been said in connection with this measure, but further expressions of opinion have been given utterance to by gentlemen both in the House of Commons and in this House, and I wish to say a few words about those expressions of opinion. It has been intimated that the number of ministers, which will now, as I understand, be fourteen, is to be reduced; and either in this House or in the other House, or in both, it was suggested that some existing departments—some two of them—might be united into one, and it was indicated that the office now held by the premier —President of the Privy Council—and the office now held by the hon. gentleman who has charge of this bill—Secretary of State—should be consolidated. The ground was taken that these officers were not worked as hard as they might be. As I said before, the amount of work which is done by an officer has very little to do with the question whether he should be a member of cabinet or not If we consider the matter a little carefully, we shall come to the conclusion that the line indicated for the reduction of the number of ministers is not the most judicious line to take. It has always been felt that the premier of the country, whose time is largely occupied with questions of general policy, could not undertake to discharge the duties of any departmental office which involves very much labour. We have had examples to the contrary, as hon. gentleman know; and I think we have seen the evil results which have followed from the fact that gentlemen who had important and laborious departments had assumed also the duties of premier. The tax imposed upon the physical and mental powers of a member of government who, in addition to discharging the trying duties of premier also undertakes to discharge the duties of a laborious department is too severe, and we have seen the evil results of the attempt to combine those duties. Consequently, I do not think it would be desirable that the Department of the Privy Council should be united with any other department. It is just the department which I think ought to be held by the premier of the country. Then as to the Department of the Secretary of State, that has existed from the very beginning in Canada. I do not know how onerous the duties of the department may be, but there is in almost every government some officer who corresponds with the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State is the channel of communication with the Imperial government and with all bodies outside of our own government. He is the Registrar General of the country; and we have had testimony from the first minister that the Secretary of State has quite sufficient to do as Secretary of State, and in addition to that is obliged occasionally to assume the duties of other offices; but as I say, the important point is that in every government you will find there is some officer whose title and general duties correspond with those of the Secretary of State. It seems to me that in the future, if it is desirable to reduce the number of departmental officers, as I think it is, we should look in some other direction. It will be remembered that when these controllerships were created there was also created a Department of Trade and Commerce, so that we shall have here in Canada, if this bill becomes law, four heads of departments dealing with the one subject of finance. There is the Minister of Finance, there is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there will be the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue. I think that is something that is not to be found in any colony of Britain. It is not to be found in any foreign government that I know of. I presume in England, if you take the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the under secretaries of various kinds, that you will have about that number of officers dealing with the finances of the country, but we are not England; and I think it is perfectly clear that by the time reorganization is reached, there is no reason why the Department of Trade and Commerce should co-exist with the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman tell me how the Minister of Trade and Commerce has anything to do with the financial departments? I can understand the other two departments, to which he refers, dealing with moneys, because they are really the collecting departments of the government, but in what way does the other?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The fact is that in this country, up to the time this Act of 1887 was put into operation in 1893, the duties which have of late been discharged by the Minister of Trade and Commerce were discharged partly by the Minister of Finance and partly by the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And partly by the Postmaster General.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the portion of those duties discharged by the Postmaster General was not large, and looking back to the discussion which took place in 1887, it is clear the idea was that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was to take over the duties which had been theretofore performed by the Ministers of Customs and Excise, and if we put cabinet ministers at the heads of the Customs and Excise Departments it seems to me that there is no necessity for the continuance in existence of the Department of Trade and Commerce. This is a change which cannot be made at once; and I am speaking now of the future when these changes can be made. If any hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look through, for instance, the Statesman's Year Book he will find—I think I am correct in saying that—in no British colony is there any more than one member of the government who deals with the question of finance, and when I say that I mean trade and commerce as well as finance strictly so called. It has been recognized here in the past and it has been recognized in all the other colonies, that the duty of the Finance Minister is to lay down, of course with the consent of his colleagues, the financial policy of the country, and I cannot see why there should be four ministers in this country dealing with a matter which, in all other colonies is dealt with by a single minister. Of course there was no necessity for my making these observations, but as the subject has been talked about a good deal, I thought there was no reason why I might not, at this stage of the bill, express in a very imperfect way, I am sorry to say, the views which I have entertained. I have not undertaken to put those views into shape at all. I have simply spoken without any preparation other than a little thought on the matter.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You do not propose to move a motion of want of confidence?

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am very much obliged for the hints you have given, and as soon as the change of government takes place, we will put them into effect.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of bill (132) "An Act to further amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons." He said:—I desire to bring under the notice of the House a request made by some members of the House of Commons, which I think, under the circumstances, may be considered reasonable. It is that the bill which is upon the order paper for to-morrow, to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons, be passed to-day, as it will suit the convenience and interest of every gentleman of the House of Commons, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read at length at the table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have no serious objection to the bill, but on previous occasions a great deal of trouble has arisen from this twelve days' provision. We have been left without a quorum almost, and there should be some provision for an emergency of that kind. On several occasions we have not had sufficient members at the committee meetings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Wholly apart from the patriotism of the Senate—which I am sure would never permit us to leave the seat of government until the public business has been disposed of—it has been arranged that there will be no departure without consent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a good deal of force in what the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) has said. A bill of this kind has been brought down every session since 1891. The more becoming course would be to have some permanent legislation on the subject. I do not think it is a thing which is calculated to raise the dignity of parliament to have bills of this character coming down every session. There are two ways of dealing with the matter. One way would be—and I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of it—to alter our present law with respect to indemnity altogether, and simply provide that each member shall have a thousand dollars a session, without any restrictions as to his absence or presence.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Half of them would not be here at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the solution following out logically the line which has been pursued. If it makes no difference whether a member has been absent 12 days or not, why should it make any difference if he was absent 30 days? That is one way of doing it, and another would be to pass an Act saying a certain number of days should be allowed in each session. I think there should be a provision in the bill that these days of absence should not be at the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say members will not go away, but a number have gone away, and they have gone away relying on being paid for the days they are not here.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—How would you deal with a member coming here for two or three days?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We discussed that on former occasions, but my opinions on the subject did not meet the approval of the late government, and I am afraid they do not meet with the approval of this government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The practice in the past has been a very disagreeable one. Of course I am speaking of the past, and I do not know what will be done now; but generally members go to the leader of the government of the day, and if he gives an order to the clerk, or intimates to the clerk, the propriety of paying the member it has been done. I know it has been found very inconvenient; in some cases you feel that you ought not to say to the clerk to pay these gentleman, because sometimes important bills were coming up. Upon other occasions, if nothing particular was going on, you would give it as a matter of course. but if you consent to one you cannot well refuse another. I am fully of the view held by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Power), and would be glad to see the government take up this question, and make some provision with reference to it. If the calculation is made, it will be found that a large amount of money is paid to men who come here for a few days and go away. The principle suggested by the hon. gentleman from Halifax is that which prevails in the Australian colonies. They give the members from New South Wales £300 a year and pay him just the same as your hired man. You draw your £25 at the beginning of every month, whether you attend the parliament or not. When I was there one of the members of the cabinet accompanied me to this country, and he got his £25 a month just the same as if he were attending parliament. The hon. gentleman who came here for two or three days would get his $1,000, if the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax were adopted, unless you made some provision against that. It would be well if the hon. gentleman could induce his friends, who now have the power to change the law, to meet his views, and accept the restrictions which the hon. gentleman suggested when he was sitting in the seat behind me and I occupied a seat on that side of the House.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I very much wish some change could be made in reference to this matter. It makes it particularly unpleasant, in view of the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, and others for those who may be obliged to go away just before the conclusion of the session, when a bill of this kind is brought up and passed a few days before the session terminates. There are some like myself who have, I think, been tolerably punctual, attending to their duties here during the whole session; but as hon. gentlemen know, the termination of the session was looked for long before this. It was stated at one time pretty positively that the House would be prorogued on the 10th of June, and then again that it would close on the 16th, and then a later date was mentioned. Honourable gentlemen can quite understand that business matters of great importance to individual members may have been put off under the impression that the session was just about to terminate, until at last they can be put off no longer, and finally a member is obliged to go away without being able to avoid it; I would rather see a bill of this kind introduced if it is introduced at all, the very last day of the session, because it could not be said then that gentlemen went away when they found there would be no deduction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My view is that the present law as it appears in the Revised Statutes is an admirable one. It is calculated to guarantee the close attention of members, provided there is a slight amendment made in it, which has been discussed on more than one occasion, under which a gentleman who comes at the beginning of the session and remains for one day could not at the close of the session draw the greater part of the full indemnity.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (114) "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the North west Territories."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill proposes to grant to the North-west Territories some of the powers and privileges in a modified form that appertain to the provinces. Under the Act establishing the government for the North-west Territories, chap. 50, R.S., the Lieutenant-Governor administered the government under instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council or by the Secretary of State. The Governor in Council was empowered to appoint six persons to be a council to aid the Lieutenant-Governor, and the number was subsequently, by the Act of 1894, reduced to four persons to be known as the executive committee of the Territories. Provision was made in the original Act that so soon as any district contained 1,000 inhibitants, it became an electoral district and entitled to elect a member of the council, of legislative assembly, and so on, as electoral districts came into existence and the population increased, the number of representatives kept pace until the number reached twenty-one, which number was subsequently increased to twenty-six by the Act of 1894, at which the representation was limited. They were to hold their seats for two years. In the bill before the House the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is substituted for the Lieutenant-Governor, and provision is made for the election of a legislative assembly, and the Lieutenant-Governor selects the members of the executive council. Under the original Act the Lieutenant-Governor in Council was authorized to make ordinances in respect to the mode of calling juries in criminal as well as civil cases, and under the bill the legislative assembly make the ordinances in respect to calling juries. Formerly the Lieutenant-Governor was authorized to appoint justices of the peace. Now justices of the peace must be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. While the minor appointments rest with the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, the sheriff will be appointed by the Governor in Council. Clause seventeen explains the general scope of the bill, which provides that the government shall be administered by the Lieutenant-Governor and an executive council.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do I understand the sheriffs will be appointed by this council?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the appointments still rest with the council. There is no change made in regard to the sheriff, but the minor appointments will be made by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

On clause nine.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do I understand that clause to mean that when the Lieutenant-Governor may select a man to be a member of cabinet, that that man has to go back to be elected?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Under section 18 he must go to his constituents to be elected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In addition to that must he be a member of the house.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see any provision in the bill that none but members of the assembly shall be members of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I see no provision in the bill that a member of the executive must be a member of the assembly, nor is there any provision that I can see that if he is selected the principle of responsible government goes so far as to send him back to his constituency. We should know whether any person can be appointed a member of the executive.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What my hon. friend desires to accomplish is not a matter of statutory direction anywhere that I know of. There is nothing of the kind affecting us in our position in the Dominion. The practice stands very much in the same position as responsible government. There is no statute about responsible government, and still it is in force. It is a practice which is constitutional and yet not embodied in any statutory provision, nor is it expedient that it should be so. It is a settled principle that the Crown may call to the executive council any one, though at the time he is not a member of either House, but then by constitutional usage he must become a member. There is no fixed period for that. This is the same provision, as we have it here, which applies in all the provinces.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the understanding is that if a gentleman is selected as a member of executive who does not hold a seat in the assembly, he must seek one?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (116) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In administering so large a department as that of the Department of the Interior, we have found it necessary from time to time to come to parliament and ask for amendments. The changes in this bill involve matter of detail. No new principle is introduced. There are two clauses in the bill affecting individual interests. One is the case of a gentleman, a senator, who has put up a building on land near the border of British Columbia and built a mill upon it. It was found afterwards that it was a school section, and it was impossible to give him a deed for it. The mill was burned, but at the instance of the neighbours he was induced to rebuild the the mill, and under an Order in Council the land is to be sold to him at $1 an acre. It required, however, an Act of parliament to carry out the arrangement. Another was the case of a man named Edward Johnson, who was entitled to a patent and was unable to obtain it under the wording of the Act, and a special clause is introduced here to cover that case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do you make provision, where you divert the school lands, to set aside an equal area of other lands for school purposes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh yes, it is the duty of the commissioner to set apart an equal quantity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And of equal quality?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests with the minister, and I presume he would be guided by what is reasonable and proper. In the bill it speaks of an equal area. The amount in this case is only twenty-five acres.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That amount of land, with a valuable mill privilege on it, particularly in a country like the North-west, where mill privileges are not as numerous as they are here, the twenty-five acres might be worth more than a whole section and twenty-five acres of less valuable land would not be a fair equivalent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall amend the ninth clause to provide that the land substituted shall be of equal value.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Those lands should be held as a sacred heritage, and no power should be vested in anybody to give a deed for a valuable piece of property on merely setting apart an equal area, which might be of less value somewhere else. I am not objecting to it, but I want to see it properly credited.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is quite correct and you will find that it is so.

On clause 15.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I do not approve of subsection two. It is as follows:

2. In case of any entry obtained before the thirteenth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, the right of the person obtaining it shall be liable to forfeiture in the discretion of the minister if the application for patent is not made on or before the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

A great many people do not know this law and they will not make application in time and in that case the minister could cancel the land on them. I think the parties ought to be notified, three months prior to taking such action, that the time would expire for their making application for a patent. They ought to have due notice before the land is cancelled on them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister has the discretion. He is not likely to exercise it. There are many of those lands where the rights are likely to be cancelled and they stand fifteen or twenty years, without any cancellation taking place.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—But the minister could do it if he wished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister has large powers which he can exercise at his discretion, but he does not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The man may be away out of the district somewhere, and know nothing of the risk he runs.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He may be out of the country and how can the department give him notice?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Send the notice to his post office address.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—There ought to be a notice of that kind given, and provision should be made here as to how it should be given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would not the existing law cover that?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Not this. The law clerk agreed with me and wrote out an amendment which I have here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be perfectly safe as it is, because no minister ever thinks of cancelling the rights of a settler except after many years, and then only for cause. I have had a long experience of that both as Minister of the Interior and as Commissioner of Crown Lands in the province.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With a virtuous government like the present one, we might trust the minister, but some other government of a different kind might come into office in the remote future. It is not unreasonable that the settler should have some notice before his land is forfeited. The Act itself may contain some provision with respect to notice, but if there is no such provision there should be some.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The Secretary of State is wrong in supposing that a long time elapses before cancellation. Two months is the notice required now and the land is cancelled.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have had hundreds and hundreds of cases under my own personal observation where it has gone on for ten and fifteen years. One of the things that I always objected to was cancelling a man's right. If he had any claim to land at all he was fully notified and given an opportunity of doing something.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is of a very kindly nature, and he did not administer the law in a harsh manner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that is the practice followed by the heads of all the departments. The only effect of that proposed provision would be to prompt the minister to avail himself of the opportunity to serve a notice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the clause stands here, it might interfere with an actual bona fide settler. We know there are many persons who settle on land, and do not think it of any consequence whether they apply for a patent or not, and they may not have the ten dollars to send for it. The Secretary of State has the management of those lands now, but he might be succeeded by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) who might not be so kind-hearted.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—It is very hard that a settler, who may have performed his settlement duties, should be subject to having his land cancelled. In this case, after the settler has done his duty, what difference does it make to the government whether he takes out his patent or not? He might go to the old country and be away for years, and you might not be able to get at him for some time. As long as the man has performed his duties, the land should not be subject to cancellation.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If the time expires when a man should take out his patent, I suggest that three months' notice should be given before cancellation takes place.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I would go further than that. I do not see the necessity for this clause at all. I want to be shown what necessity there is for a man to apply for his patent when he has complied with the requirements of the law. If anybody suffers by it, I could understand the reason. The man himself is the only one who could possibly suffer, because he cannot sell or mortgage the land. I move that the clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Prior to 1891, a man could get a pre-emption as well as a homestead; now the law requires that after he has made application for his homestead, in six months he must pay for his pre-emption or it is liable to be cancelled on him.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The law as it stands now provides that if a man does not do his homestead duties, the land can be cancelled if application is made by another party for it, but that is only when a man has failed to perform his duties.

The clause was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. FORGET, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill.

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON moved the second reading of Bill (N) "An Act to amend the Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec." He said:—The clauses are so few that we might pass this through Committee of the Whole at once.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No; better refer it to the Banking Committee.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The bill is one of such a character that it might well be dealt with by a committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill has to go to the other House and it cannot pass this session unless it takes this stage to-day.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—This bill has been gone through, and thoroughly approved of by the Deputy Minister of Finance, so that the House may feel quite safe that it contains nothing objectionable.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—It has been prepared in large measure, by the Deputy Minister of Finance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What new powers does the bill confer?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—Under the existing law the savings banks of the province of Quebec are empowered to deposit twenty per cent of their money with the Dominion of Canada; in this bill we add "and any of the provinces thereof." As it is now we cannot deposit with the provinces nor in provincial securities for this purpose Then we wish to extend our investing powers. There are other securities in which we would wish to invest. Then, again, under section 20, we ask for the privilege of lending upon the securities mentioned in the last four lines of the bill. We want to lend directly to the companies and not through third parties, who may be men of straw, as we are obliged to do now. The company cannot borrow, but a man of straw can come and pledge those securities, lent him for the purpose, and we would rather deal with the principals than with third parties. Then the other change is this—we can now lend to municipalities of twenty thousand, but there are municipalities in Canada of two, three and four thousand which may be much better sometimes than many of twenty thousand, and as certain insurance companies in Canada have the privilege of taking the debentures of municipalities of two thousand we simply ask to be placed in the same position as those companies. We amend nothing; we simply ask for an extension of our powers to invest and to lend.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—You ask to be allowed to lend on personal security?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—No; personal security must be not only backed up by collateral, but in addition to that, the borrower, whoever he is, must pledge ten per cent more of collaterals than the amount of his loan. We cannot lend to individuals. We cannot lend upon property, but we can lend to an individual on collaterals. The two banks in question, the Caisse d'Economie of Quebec, and the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, are suffering from a plethora of money. The Montreal institution has to-day three-quarters of a million dollars lying on deposit, a greater part of it at two and a half per cent, while it gives to its depositors three per cent. It costs one per cent for administration, so that the bank is out one and a half per cent on every dollar that is deposited. On the other hand, it is bound to give to a charitable fund six per cent on $180,000. So that where we may make only three or four per cent we are obliged to give six.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if the last lines in the 20th section are not entirely new where he proposes to lend directly, as I read it, to

The corporation of any city or town in Canada with a population of at least two thousand inhabitants, or to any waterworks company, gas company, street railway company, electric light or power company, electric railway or street railway company or telephone or telegraph company incorporated in Canada, if such company has no power to issue or does not issue debentures.

I understand those lines to authorize the bank to loan to any of these companies which have no debentures to give as security—merely lend on the personal security of the companies themselves. It appears to me, if that is the power asked for, it is an entirely new power.

I do not think I ever saw that power in any bill that has come under my notice with reference to an insurance company or any other company. I know in the section of the country where I live, there are a number of little telephone companies, and I think they are all incorporated under some general provincial Act for incorporating these companies; but I know some of them have an exceedingly small amount of capital, and it would not be very desirable for any company that wished to make good investments to lend them much money on their personal security, without any collateral whatever.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I may say that the banks merely ask permission to lend. On the other hand, there are ten directors largely interested in the success of those institutions alluded to. Some of the companies issue debentures, and some cannot issue debentures; but the banks wish that a resolution of the board of directors with its corporate seal will, to all intents and purposes, be accepted as a debenture: that is, of course, with the additional margin of 10 per cent which these institutions require from borrowers. Any company or individual wanting money, as it is now—and that law remains unchanged—for every $1,000 he gets he must deposit not less than $1,100; and if the stock goes down—we will suppose the stock is at par, and it goes down 5 per cent—this $1,000 becomes $950, and he has to keep up the margin or in 24 hours his security may be sold. Those are the terms upon which loans are obtained. What is the result? I say it with pride that those institutions have been carried on for thirty years without losing one shilling during the greater portion of that time. Now, however, they are suffering from a new condition of things, a plethora of cash, and wish to extend the line along which loans can be effected.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I would like to say that as this matter presents itself to my mind, the argument which the hon. gentleman has just addressed to the House would apply to withdrawing any limit whatever, from the investing powers of these companies; that is to give them power to lend to any person, private individual or otherwise, any person the board of directors thought was a desirable sort of person to lend to. That is one line of policy, but hitherto we have adopted an entirely different line of policy. The only object parliament has in passing this Act in regard to insurance companies, investment companies, and savings banks is to guard the public who deposit their money with these banks by limiting the class of securities that these companies invest in to what are considered a tolerably safe class of security; and the point I have just now called the hon. gentleman's attention to is that if this policy was adopted, or the line of argument which he has addressed to the House is a sound one, it would lead to the logical conclusion that any limitation whatever should be removed, and that the whole matter should be relegated to the board of directors of the company to accept any sort of security which they thought proper. Having in view these two different lines of policy, I must say just at first glance—and of course we have had no time to consider this, or look at it; it has only been placed in our hands within the last few minutes—it does appear to me that the last two lines of section 20, give this company a power with regard to investments which I have never known to be given to any insurance or other company whose power of investment we have dealt with in any way.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This is a very important bill, and I want to inquire into it. It may affect these two banks in lower Canada, but I want to see the effect it will have on our savings banks and other institutions, I do not think we can give it proper consideration at the present time; and therefore we should refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and let them ascertain what the effect of the bill will be. Banks have a good deal of money, and want to get rid of it; but other companies may not be in the same position.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—These two institutions ask for nothing that other banks do not possess.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, they do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it would jeopardize the bill if the hon. gentleman would take the second reading now, and refer it to committee to-morrow.

Hon Mr. ALLAN—The hon. gentleman will really lose nothing by it, if he gets the second reading now.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—Then I will move the second reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Saturday, 19th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SAVINGS BANKS IN QUEBEC BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (N), "An Act to amend the Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec," with amendments. He said:—The amendments to the bill are almost entirely verbal. As the hon. mover of the bill is present, I will allow him to move the adoption of the report.

Hon. Sir WM. HINGSTON moved concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—As I said yesterday, I object to bills of this kind being introduced at this late period of the session without any notice at all. This bill came up yesterday evening at half-past six, and we had to consider it to-day at ten o'clock, and I do not think it gives the country a fair idea of what is going on in the way of legislation, and certainly it is not treating the members or the men responsible for this bill fairly. I took the opportunity this morning to consult some of the bank managers in this city, but they were in the same position as we are—they could not pronounce on the merits or demerits of this bill without consideration. The bill might be all right, but what I find fault with is that we have not had time to properly consider it; we have not given it the consideration it should have to pass this legislature. I do not offer any opposition to it. I believe that the general consensus of opinion is rather in favour of it, but I wish to enter my protest against bills being introduced in this hasty fashion and being rushed through, and I intend to protest in future against such a practice. It is not treating the Senate in the correct way to introduce this important measure so late in the session. Therefore I hope there will be an end put to this sort of legislation in the future, and as far as I am concerned I intend to raise my voice in protest against bills being introduced without members being given a fair opportunity of considering them upon their merits. I see some defects myself in this bill; but I do not wish to set up my opinion against the opinions of other members of the Senate who may be in favour of it, but I desire that this bill shall be considered by the people in the country who are interested and who will be affected by it, and then we will have opinions upon which we can rely, and we can come down to the House with confidence that we know what we are doing. I shall not oppose the bill further, but I simply say that I do not approve of bills of this character being introduced so late in the session.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in the abstract, but in the concrete sometimes an injustice might be done, and I thank him for signifying to us that he intends to withdraw any opposition to the bill after stating his objections. I beg to move the suspension of rule 70 so far as relates to this bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall object to the suspension of the rule, and I wish to direct the attention of the hon. gentleman from Sackville (Mr. Wood) to the fact that the bill with respect to Savings Banks in the province of Quebec is now before the House and he may have an opportunity to express his views with respect to the measure. The views which I have heard him state to the House are my own. This bill proposes to put the savings banks in the same position as the ordinary banks of the country, and the hon. gentleman who has charge of the bill appears to think that they should be put in that position, but it will be seen that the cases are entirely different. The ordinary banker is dealing with his own money or with the funds of the shareholders who put their money in the bank, in a certain sense, as a business speculation, but the savings banks are dealing with the savings of poor people as a rule, whose money is put in there for safe keeping, and to my mind the directors of a savings bank are in a position not of ordinary business people, but in the position of trustees, and every hon. gentleman knows that the laws of the various provinces impose restrictions on trustees as to the manner in which they are to invest trust funds I think there is the same objection to giving unlimited powers of investment to a savings bank as there is to give unlimited powers of investment to trustees. Unless the hon. gentleman from Sackville and other hon. gentlemen have a strong opinion about it, I am not going to take advantage of the rule of the House to prevent the measure passing, but I really think it is a measure which should not become law.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I did not intend to take up the time of the House with any further observations on this bill, but if there is time to devote to it I have no objection to expressing the strong opinions which I hold with regard to this measure. This bill proposes to extend the investing powers of these savings banks to a very considerable extent. To some of the extensions proposed I have no objection to make. The portion of the bill which I think is very objectionable is contained in the last four lines of sub-clause 20 of clause one in the bill. If this clause passes in its present state, it gives these banks the power to loan to waterworks companies electric light or power companies, electric railway, street railway companies, or telephone or telegraph companies incorporated in Canada, upon their own note, or obligation, or bond or whatever you may take from them where they have no power to issue debentures. It does not appear to me that a company belonging to any one of these classes incorporated in Canada, that has no power to issue debentures—or does not issue debentures because they have not sufficient capital and sufficient property to warrant the issue of debentures—is not a very good company for a savings bank to loan its money to. I do not wish to put up my opinion as a very high authority on this point, but so far as my own observation and experience go, in the section of the country where I come from, there are a number of small companies in country villages and towns incorporated mostly under the General Act of the local legislature for the purpose of establishing some short telephone communication or for establishing a little electric light plant which will serve the interest of a few leading people in the place or some small section of the community. There are, I know, a number of these small companies, and I think there are very few of them that issue any bonds or debentures, for the very simple reason that they would be utterly unable to sell any bonds or debentures on the market. The amount of capital which these companies have invested in these enterprises is very limited indeed, and in my opinion it would be a very undesirable class of investment for any savings bank to have power to make loans to these companies. It was urged in committee, in answer to this objection that I made, that, under the power granted by the preceding part of this section, those companies have already the power to lend to individuals on collateral security of the stock or debentures of these companies, and it was argued that if it was wise to allow a company to loan to an individual, who might be a man of straw, taking stock of one of these companies as a collateral, it was much better security to lend directly to the company itself and have the liability of the whole company whatever that may be worth, but I wish to point out this difference between those two modes of loaning money, and it appears to me it is this principal difference which has governed the legislature in the past in limiting the power to the one class of investments and not allowing it to accept the other. Where a person makes a loan to an individual, taking as security the stock of the company or the debentures of the incorporated company the amount of that loan is limited to the amount of stock which the company can issue, generally I think to the amount that is paid up on that stock, although I have not had time to examine the clauses of the Acts of those loan companies, but they are limited I know. At least, to the best of my recollection, in the various loan companies, insurance companies and other companies, which make this class of loans, their power of loaning is limited in some way by the amount that is paid up on the stock of these various companies. So the House will readily see that where a loan is made even to a man of straw, on the security of the stock of this company, they are at least limited to the amount of capital that has been paid up in cash on the stock of that company. If they are loaning, and bound to loan, on the security of the debentures of a company, their power of loaning is limited in that way to the amount of the debentures which the company is authorized under its Act of incorporation to grant, and when that Act of incorporation is granted the legislature looks carefully to see that the power to issue debentures is proportionate to the amount of capital stock paid up, so that, so far as it is practicable by legislation, there is at least some safeguard or security to the public that a loan made in that way has some guarantee behind it of being paid, but if this power is granted, as expressed in the last clause, these companies can go to any of these electric light or telephone companies, be they big or small, and lend them on their own note, obligation or bond, or anything of that character, any amount at all. There is no limit whatever on it, so far as I can see. They can lend, just as though it were to a private individual, $100,000, if they saw fit to do so, when their whole capital stock might be $5,000 or $10,000. There is no limit whatever. These clauses appear to me to be removing every safeguard which in the past this parliament has attempted to place upon the public who deposit their moneys in these savings banks, to prevent the savings banks loaning to an undesirable class of persons. I can only repeat what occurred to me yesterday and am firmer in the view the more I consider the question, that the adoption of that clause as it stands here is simply wiping out, so far as these companies are concerned, all the limitations and all the safeguards that we have adopted in our legislation in the past, and giving them a free hand to lend to these companies to any amount they choose, leaving the matter wholly in the discretion of the directors of the companies, without limitation as far as the law is concerned. If that principle is to be adopted, we had better adopt it with all these loan companies, savings banks and insurance companies, and all the companies of that class, which in the past we have been attempting to restrict in their investments, and give them all a free hand to lend to whoever the directors think fit, whether it be an incorporated company or an individual. I should say, looking at it from a business standpoint, if you were to give such power to these companies, you had far better give them power to lend to individuals on their notes, because there is no doubt the argument which is presented in favour of these companies will apply to individuals. You will find plenty of individuals in Canada that it will be perfectly safe for these companies to make loans to, if the directors see fit. There is one other point in connection with these companies. As far as my experience goes, the small class companies to which I refer get incorporated. Some of them have respectable men in them. They get incorporated for the express purpose of limiting the liability of the persons who are connected with them. who are men of any substance or standing, and who are willing to subscribe $1,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 for the sake of getting these things going, but are not willing to be responsible for the financial success of the enterprises. They are willing to launch them in that way and let them try to work out their own salvation. It appears to me really that this is a very objectionable clause. It is taking an entirely new departure: it is entirely reversing the policy which has governed parliament so long as I have had the honour of a seat in parliament, and personally I hesitate very much about changing the policy of the past and sanctioning these few lines in the latter part of this bill. To the rest of the bill I have no particular objection.

Hon. Mr. COX—Since the bill passed the committee this morning, I have had communication with Mr. Lash, the solicitor of the Bankers' Association, who has been instructed by that association to object to these lines that the hon. gentleman from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) has already taken exception to.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Those are the last four lines?

Hon. Mr. COX—Yes. They also want an amendment in clause 18, leaving out the words "or in such securities as are accepted by the government of Canada as deposits from insurance companies." Under the present charter the savings banks have to hold twenty per cent of their deposits in Dominion securities or in deposits in chartered banks. They are now asking to have it increased by adding the words "provincial securities" and these other words that I have just read that the Bankers' Association want taken out. That is to say the Bankers' Association are willing that they shall have it in Dominion securities and provincial securities and deposits in chartered banks. That is giving extended power to what they now have. I have been discussing it with the promoter of the bill, and I think with these changes made, the powers will be very much enlarged and practically that will be satisfactory to him and it would remove the objections which have been urged by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Do I understand the hon. gentleman that the suggestions made by the bankers committee have been acceded to by the promoter of the bill? Because you will remember I pointed out what I thought was objectionable in the last four lines.

Hon. Mr. COX—I am not authorized to say that he does assent to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no reason given why the company should not be allowed to accept such securities as the Dominion government accept from insurance companies. Surely if the Dominion government think such securities are good enough to insure payment to those who may lose by the failure of any bank, they ought to be good enough for a loan society to invest their money in. That question has been discussed, I suppose scores of times before the treasury board and they have been very particular in restricting the quality and kind of securities which shall be accepted by the government, and in all municipal securities they only take 10 per cent discount.

Hon. Mr. COX—Clause nineteen gives them power to invest in all these securities. The change suggested is that they should not be the securities held as part of their reserve—that they should be excluded from securities held as reserve but not excluded as securities in which they shall be allowed to invest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is another thing.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This bill seems to require more consideration than it is possible to give it now, and I should like to give whatever relief is absolutely essential to these parties. Several things have been suggested now as to which there is a difference of opinion. On one point the committee took one view and the bankers took another view. Then again, while loans are allowed on the personal security of individuals providing certain collateral securities are taken in addition, there is no restriction as to the necessary amount of the latter. For instance, $50,000 may be loaned to a man on his personal security, and the additional security may not be worth more than $1,000. That is one of the defects of the bill. The restriction as to additional security is a mockery unless you fix in some way the proportion of collateral to the loan. I do not think any one would say it is a desirable thing that these companies should lend on personal security merely. The whole spirit of the law is against savings banks having that privilege. If we are to pass some bill on the subject in order to afford present relief to these banks, I would suggest that the Act be in force only a year, in order to give time to consider the whole subject. The bill, with my Ontario notions, certainly shocks me—that trustees should be at liberty to invest the money entrusted to their care, in all the ways provided in this bill. Still, making such changes as we can now, and with the additional limitation that the Act shall be enforced only until the next session of parliament, I do not see why it may not be passed. I am told that there are only two savings banks in Quebec now, and that they are both managed by gentlemen of great wealth, ability and experience. Other savings banks may be established however and they cannot be of the same standing—it would be almost certain they would not be of the same standing as the two companies in existence now. We may consider these amendments, and

I would suggest, instead of concurring in the amendment proposed by the special committee that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering all the amendments, and we can go back to the Senate then and pass the third reading after all is done. We cannot make the amendments in any other way satisfactorily. I suggest, in lieu of concurrence in the amendment, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON moved that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole presently.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This bill is of an important character and it would be better that legislation on this subject should be deferred until next session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—We can amend it in the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The suggestion of the hon. leader of the House is that the bill should be in force only for a limited period—say until next session. If it once becomes law and these banks operate under it and take loans in this way, we will have given away the whole ground; no matter how much parliament may desire to go back to safer ground next session it would be difficult to do so. It would be really better, if the introducer of the bill could see his way clear to allow it to stand over till next session. If that were done, it could be considered as a general measure. Institutions of a similar nature all over the country may feel the same difficulty that the institutions represented by my friend do, and then it may be well and carefully considered as to whether this was proper legislation or not. If the amendment suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the House is adopted, we will be practically giving away the question, and the House will not be in the position to deal with the whole question that they would be in if we deferred the legislation until next session. Not only that, but as every one knows, the bill was brought up too late in the session and there was not an opportunity to consider it in the committee this morning as thoroughly as was desirable. The introducer of the bill would meet the views of the House and the general interests of the community by letting it stand over until next session.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—The Bankers' Association, judging from the telegram which I saw a while ago, does not object to the whole tenor of the bill, but to certain portions of a couple of clauses of the bill, which can be dealt with if we go into Committee of the Whole and disposed of.

Hon. Mr MILLER—I do not think it has been shown to the House why this bill has not been introduced before. Here is a bill, certainly very important and sweeping in its clauses, and likely to be followed by very serious consequences, brought into this House in the very last days of the session and attempted to be forced through under a suspension of the rules in a manner in which I think a bill like this should not be forced through. We have had no reason given why this bill was not brought before us at an earlier period of the session. These banks have got on for a great many years without this legislation, and I think they can do a little longer without it. It would be far better to drop the bill than to rush it through with our eyes almost blindfolded as to its consequences.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The financial men of the country agree to the bill with the exception of one or two amendments which they wished to have introduced now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The points at issue are very well defined now. Those who have given the subject attention quite understand them. They are comparatively few, and I think while the subject is fresh in the minds of those who have studied it, we could reduce the claims and powers made in the bill and let it go.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Although this has been introduced as a private bill, it is really a public bill. In the past the House has dealt very carefully with legislation of such a character. It seems to me that if there is legislation of this kind to be introduced it should be introduced by the government on their responsibility. The government should have ample time to consider the effect of the language which they use in the bill. It is all very well for the hon. Secretary of State to say that it is all right and that every body is satisfied, but I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman has not read the bill through carefully himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No one is in a position to give a reasonable and carefully considered judgment on the lines of this bill, and under the circumstances I think the best way is to let it go until next year.

The Senate divided on a motion to go into committee which was adopted by the following vote:

On clause 18.

Hon. Mr. COX moved that in section 18 the words in the 9th line "or any such securities, as are accepted by the government of Canada as deposits of insurance companies" be struck out.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I should like very much to accede to the wish of of the hon. gentleman, but it does not help us out of our difficulty. In fact, that is the essential part of the bill, to relieve us from the obligation of placing our money in banks that will not give us within one or one and a half per cent of what we have to pay to our depositors.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand, this clause as amended, gives the savings banks the right to hold their 20 per centum in the securities of the provinces in addition to those of the Dominion. On reference to the Act of 1890, I find that is the case. This is an extension of their powers.

Hon. Mr. COX—A telegram has just been handed to me from the Bankers' Association of Montreal urging changes.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That shows the inexpediency of taking up such important legislation and passing it through in this hurried manner.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I was just going to remark, that if we wanted any conclusive proof of the impropriety of dealing with this bill at this period of the session in this hasty manner, when the members have hardly had time to read the bill over, it is furnished by these telegrams. The course that has always been adopted in dealing with bills of this kind is to send them to the Committee on Banking and Commerce to be carefully considered and for these banking institutions to be notified. They send a person here to represent their side of the case, and the committee has time and opportunity to consider the whole subject. I suppose that this bill has only reached these bankers to-day and therefore they have not had time to come here and represent their case, but have sent in telegrams at this late stage of the session and at this stage of the progress of this bill. I would also like to emphasize what the hon. gentleman to my left (Mr. Ferguson), called attention to a while ago, that this morning when we were in committee, the committee was most impatient. A number of its members got up and said they would not stay, that they had to leave and attend another committee, and the bill really did not receive the consideration it should have received in the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I should like to know whether this bill is to be considered as a public or a private bill. Being in the hands of a private member, I suppose it is a private bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—In the technical sense of the word it is a public bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is in the hands of a private member.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I observe in the telegram just received attention is called to the fact that this bill omits the word "public" before the word "securities" in the 19th clause, third line. I see no reason why it should be left out. I move that the word "public" be inserted before the word "securities."

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Before clause 19 passes, I should like to call attention to line 25:

Or in the manner provided in the two sections next following, but not otherwise.

So far as this bill goes, there is only one section following.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is substituted for a section in the existing Act.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—And the same word is in the existing Act, is it?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, there is a question which arises under line 17:

Or in the securities of any municipal or school corporation in Canada.

Under the existing law they have the right to invest moneys in the securities of any municipal corporation. I very much question the wisdom of adding school corporations. The question is what sort of school corporation is it? There are incorporated schools whose securities would not be very valuable, some schools which are incorporated and dragging out a very miserable existence, and I do not think it is wise to give these banks the power to invest indiscriminately in the securities of school corporations.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—This means Protestant and Catholic school corporations.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then you should say "public school corporation."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I should insert the word "public" before the word "schools."

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are all public schools in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is the language objected to by the hon. gentleman from Sackville:

Any gas company, street railway company.

Well, those might pass.

Electric light or power company, electric railway or street railway, telephone or telegraph company incorporated in Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Those are all good securities.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not object to that, and I am afraid the House has not understood the observations which I made a little while ago. Certainly the hon. gentleman from Halifax could not. I do not see any objection to lending on the security of the bonds or debentures of these companies provided they are companies who have power to issue bonds and debentures and do issue them, but what I do object to is the line in clause 20 which confers an unlimited power to give any amount of money to these people without issuing bonds or debentures.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I object to this language on my own account and independently of what was said by the hon. gentleman from Sackville (Mr. Wood), and I can give an instance. We have had in the city of Halifax, within my limited recollection, two street railway companies both incorporated under Acts of legislature, and both of these companies came to grief. If we had a savings bank in Halifax other than the government savings bank, and that savings bank had invested the funds of the poor people which were in its possession, in the debentures of these corporations, the funds would have been lost. I do not think the unlimited power to invest in street railway debentures is one that should have been given to the banks.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—You must bear in mind that the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal is a large institution, and conducted by the best business men of Montreal, to the number of ten, and that bank has been a credit to Canada. The parties who have placed their moneys there feel perfectly satisfied, and I believe the reason why the City and District Savings Bank are asking amendments to their charter is because they have too much money. They do not know what to do with it, and to-day they want legislation to authorize them to lend it elsewhere, not to be forced to lend it according to their charter, by which they do not find sufficient investment. I can assure you the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal is considered one of the best institutions that we have, and well conducted. I have no doubt that if we give them sufficient powers they will use them advantageously for the bank and for the shareholders. Besides the money that is deposited there, they have a guarantee. There is a certain amount of money—the shareholders hold a large amount—there is a large capital, and I am surprised that anyone in Montreal should try to put obstacles in the way of this company obtaining these amendments, because I really believe there is not an institution in the country which is better conducted than the Montreal City and District Savings Bank.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We want to keep it that way.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—But this is a general Act, and not an Act for those savings banks alone. It is a general Act for all savings banks that have been, or may hereafter be, established in the province of Quebec. If this was a bill for those two savings banks alone, one might agree to a number of things on account of their high character, but we are not dealing with them alone and must contemplate the case of any number of savings banks having been established and acting under this Act, and they would not be all of as good a character as this bank; and in case of a general Act applying to all savings banks in the Dominion, these provisions for Quebec would be taken as precedents in all cases. We may be getting bills from Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the North-west Territories, and they will insist on these provisions which we only incorporate here because of our high opinion of these two banks. The more I consider the bill the more difficult I think it is to concur in it. In the 35th line of the 20th clause, I suggest that after the word "taken" we should insert "to the same amount." I am proposing that for the reason already mentioned that, as the bill is drawn now, it requires when money is lent upon personal security, in addition to that you should have some other security, but it does not establish what amount. If you were lending $50,000 you might only take $5,000 or $10,000 additional security, and I propose to provide that the additional security be of the same value.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We should make it read "not less than the amount."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no objection to put it that way "to not less than the amount of the loan."

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. COX—The last lines of clause 20 read as follows:

> Or to any waterworks company, gas company, street railway company, electric light or power company, electric railway or street railway company or telephone or telegraph company incorporated in Canada, if such company has no power to issue or does not issue debentures.

I move to strike out all the words I have quoted.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—We have that power and have enjoyed it for the past nine years. By this change we improve our position. Instead of accepting bonds, which would rank on the estate, we become first creditors by lending them directly, and instead of diminishing the security of the bank we increase it. The debentures and bonds do not come in until after the creditors are paid.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Have you that power now?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—Yes we can lend to those companies now. Our charter reads:

> That the bank may lend on such securities upon the personal security of individuals or corporate bodies, provided collateral securities of the amount mentioned in the next preceding section or stock in some chartered bank in Canada, or stock in any building or loan society, or bonds or debentures of any incorporated company, or any such securities.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Have you not got those words in your charter:

> Do not issue debentures.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—We contend under this clause we have the right to deal with them where they do issue debentures, but we wish to deal with them where they do not issue debentures. Practicably we have been lending year after year to these companies upon bonds and debentures. I will give you an illustration. The gas company in Montreal, an enormous wealthy company, may issue bonds and debentures, and we may buy up the whole of them or lend upon the whole of them to the extent of a million if we want to, but we desire to have the privilege of lending to when they do not find it convenient to issue debentures upon the resolution of the board of directors signed by the president and the secretary and the seal of the company, which to all intents and purposes is a bond. In that way we come in before the bondholder. We are a first creditor in the case of difficulty, so that we improve our position so far as the depositors of the bank are concerned instead of adding to the risk.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Will that be fair to the bondholder.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—That is a matter for the gas company?

Hon. Mr. COX—The power that the hon. gentleman has now is the power that is conferred by clause nineteen, but if you read it carefully you will see that the last five lines of clause twenty give additional power to what they now have. It is to these words that the exception is taken by the Bankers' Association.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Those who are moving these amendments should bear one thing in mind, that the directors of these banks are not idiots. They have been managing the affairs of their banks very successfully for many years.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—Is it the intention to prevent a bank from lending to a street railway or gas company or telephone company, whatever may be the strength or character of that company?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—You have the power now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The language in the first part of clause twenty should be reinstated to make the clause clear. As it stands now it takes away from those banks certain powers of lending which they now have, and I think the power ought to be left as it is.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It has been suggested by some hon. members that in consequence of the amendments we have made the powers of the banks may be in some respects more limited than they are now. With a view to meeting that objection, I propose to add the following clause as clause two:

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to prevent the banks from investing in any security in which the bank was authorized to invest before the passing of this Act.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I understand it is the deire of the government to omit the last line in clause twenty from the word "inhabitants."

The CHAIRMAN—Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

KINGSTON AND PEMBROKE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported that they had considered Bill (38) "An Act respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company," and found that the preamble of the bill had not been proved, and that it is not expedient to pass the bill. He said:—The committee makes no specific recommendation to the House; but having examined the bill (and I can assure the House we have examined it with the greatest care), and having heard able counsel on both sides, the decision which the committee came to was that the bill is of such a character that they could not recommend its adoption to the House. They considered the preamble was not proved. I move the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not know that it is necessary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The House is supposed to dispose of the bill in some way. I did not care to second the motion because I have this feeling with respect to the matter:

this company was authorized to issue bonds. The danger is, that if the bondholders are not allowed to realize upon their securities, and the impression gets abroad in the money market in England, the effect will be rather to damage the standing of our railway securities in that market, and I trust that the government will, at the next session, introduce a general measure which will enable the holders of these railway securities to realize on them.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (142) "An Act to confirm a certain agreement entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond Counties Railway Company for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that the bill be read the second time on Monday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the government will see that that bill is printed and distributed in time to allow us to understand it thoroughly before the second reading. It is scarcely fair to submit such an important measure without affording us an opportunity to give it proper consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to direct the attention of the government to the following statements which I find in the Ottawa Citizen of this morning:

> The statement in The Citizen that Mgr. Merry del Val had accepted the Laurier-Greenway settlement was a fruitful theme of discussion about the House yesterday. So far as can be learned there hangs a tale thereby which quite alters the situation pictured by this report. It appears to be true that the papal ablegate has approved the compromise, but in its general terms only, and asks certain modifications which Mr. Greenway is stubbornly resolved not to concede. He was urged in vain to do so by the government at Ottawa, and failing to obtain his consent by correspondence, the cabinet decided to send Mr. Sifton out west to endeavour to bring the Manitoba premier to terms.

I should like to know from the hon. gentlemen representing the government whether there is any truth in the statement which I have just read. Has Mr. Sifton left for the purpose indicated in that paragraph? Since the beginning of the session we have not been able to obtain any information from the government on this subject. I hope this time that they will consent to take the House into their confidence. We are close to the end of the session. All sorts of rumours are afloat, and a good deal of anxiety is the result of these rumours. I should be glad to be informed by the government that they have succeeded in obtaining for the minority satisfactory concessions from the Manitoba government. If that should be the case I shall be glad to congratulate them on their success. If there is any such thing as negotiation between the local government and this government, it is much to be regretted that in all those negotiations the representatives of the parents of the minority who before all should be consulted are not consulted in the least. It has been stated that the question is dead. I should like to inform the hon. gentleman that it is not dead, and it will not be dead until the rights of the parents, as vested in them by the constitution and by the law of nature, are fully restored to them. However, I hope the government is now in a position to state to the House that matters are in such a position as to afford hope of complete relief to the minority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only arrangements made by the government are those already in possession of parliament and the people of this country. The persistency with which the hon. gentleman brings this question under the notice of the House and the country is an indication that there is a desire to baulk any further advantages that might possibly be obtained. The hon. gentleman knows very well that delicate matters of this kind can only be advanced by confidential communication and by such influences as may from time to time be brought by personal intercourse, not by diplomatic correspondence, and the very fact of this question being constantly discussed in the public press of this country creates an irritation necessarily, and creates obstacles to any further concessions that might, under ordinary and happier circumstances, be obtained. The hon. gentleman is aware that Mr. Greenway, in a public speech made in the city of Montreal, declared that in the administration of the law he would endeavour to remove, as far as practiable, any difficulties that might impede the minority in the exercise of their views in regard to school education, without at the same time conceding what was demanded, separate schools. That is all I know at the present time. The government, as a government, completed the negotiations they had made and gave them to the public. It is now for Mr. Greenway to deal with the minority in the spirit that he indicated on that occasion. I have every hope that he will do so. I am not aware that he has done so up to the present time, and I cannot inform my hon. friend any further than the information he gets from the public press.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has not answered the question at all. He has made a very nice little conciliatory speech which I should have been delighted to have heard falling from his lips a few years ago. Its contrast is so great that one cannot help complimenting him on the change of tone he has adopted on this important subject. The only question asked by the hon. member from St. Boniface was whether the statement was true that Mr. Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, had gone to Winnipeg as indicated in the paragraph which he read, and if he had gone there for the purpose of trying to impress upon the Greenway government the necessity of obtaining certain concessions which had been granted to the minority in the past. That is all the hon. gentleman asked. If Mr. Sifton had not gone, no, would have been the answer. If the hon. gentleman did not know why he had gone, all he had to do was to say so without reading a lecture to this side of the House. It was very ungracious—I say it with the full meaning of all the words imply—for the hon. Secretary of State knows the history of this question—to accuse any hon. gentleman on this side, of taking a course which would have the effect of baulking a question in which my hon. friend from St. Boniface has taken so deep an interest, ever since the matter has been before the country. Had that come from some other gentleman, I could have understood it, but falling from the lips of the hon. Secretary of State, it is not only ungracious—I was going to say unmanly—to attribute to the hon. member, who, whatever course he has taken in this matter, every one must believe has been from a conscientious conviction of right, to accuse him of trying to baulk that which he has been fighting so assiduously to obtain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is very consistent for the hon. leader of the opposition to make any charges in reference to the position of this delicate question. I have always held the view that when the year expired and the government declined to veto that bill, the power was then gone—that the rights of the minority were for ever sacrificed by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. They were afraid, as the elections were coming on, to face public opinion, and so they left the question to be settled by the courts. The courts blundered, as I have always maintained they did blunder—no man doubts that in the light of past history—in the attempt to get back to it. It does not come with very good grace for the hon. gentleman to lecture me. My course has been consistent from the very beginning. I recognized that the rights were as sacred as any Act of parliament that had ever been passed, that they had been ratified and verified during a long period of eighteen years. I recognized also that there was just one course to save the rights of the minority, and that was the disallowance of the Act. When that year was over and the Act was not disallowed, under our constitution—unless the courts came to the assistance of the minority—the privileges which they had enjoyed under the Manitoba Act were for ever lost and never could be restored except through concessions obtained from the Manitoba government. I have always thought myself that the late administration should have taken a firm stand from the beginning, before the public became possessed of this question and before irritating articles were written in the newspapers, and before the pulpits and platforms all through this country rang the changes on the question of separate schools and not on the question of whether the minority had been deprived of any rights, but on the abstract question of whether separate schools were best or not—because the main issue was entirely forgotten and completely overshadowed by the abstract question whether separate schools were right or proper. If, in the earlier years, 1891, 1892 or 1893, any efforts had been made to settle the question in an amicable manner, there would have been some better hope for it. As years went on difficulties only increased, and I have said over and over again on the floor of parliament that if this question could be dropped by everybody, and nothing said about it for three years, it would settle itself. I have said that over and over again in this House, and I say it now. I have had forty years' experience in it, and I know how delicate a question it is to handle, and I know the more you talk about it the less chance there is to accomplish anything. That is the history of it. History is philosophy teaching by example, and there never was a better illustration of it than the history of the separate school question for the last fifty years. Any hon. gentleman whose memory goes back, as mine does, to the various occasions when this matter absorbed public attention, knows very well that the public men of this country have been met with difficulties in dealing with it, caused by the persistent efforts of people on one side and the other in bringing this question under public notice. Every time it goes into the public press, and every time it is mentioned in parliament, it produces a barrier to the future settlement of the question, and if it could only be let alone and the public mind calmed down, the people of this country are probably the most tolerant on the face of the globe. They are anxious to live together harmoniously. It is only the irritating politicians and people who have strong sectarian views on one side or the other that insist upon questions of this kind being brought up.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says hear, hear. I make the statement advisedly. I say the minority may be entitled to their rights, and the object ought to be to secure what they desire. They cannot obtain it by an Act of parliament. They may obtain it by diplomatic silence, as has been the case with other matters in the past. We know very well while this question was up in Prince Edward Island, and in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia and it was up in Ontario——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was it by silence that the question was settled in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it was not discussed in the pulpits in Ontario. After the agitation commenced in 1855, '56 and '57, extending down to 1862, it was not discussed to the extent that it is to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has become of the hon. gentleman's memory?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I should know something about it. It was won by conciliatory meetings, that the question was settled, and the concessions then obtained were a mere bagatelle to those that were obtained as years went on without any public announcement being made about it, and so it would be in Manitoba if the question were left alone, but if it is repeatedly brought before the public and the newspapers are allowed a fertile subject to discuss, the settlement, no doubt, will be postponed. I have no answer to make to the question. The hon. gentleman knows as much about it as I do.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I cannot accept the reproach of the hon. Secretary of State when he says I have constantly brought this matter up before the House. During this session of three months this is only the second time that I have called the attention of the government to this very important question, and yet the hon. Secretary of State goes on to say that I have been constantly bringing this matter up before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is your colleague who brings it up every few days—the hon. gentleman sitting in front of you (Mr. Landry.)

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The hon. gentleman addressed himself to me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will transfer the observations to my hon. friend opposite.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will take them.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The remarks of the Secretrry of State were unfair. No more moderate course has been taken than the course I have pursued on this question. Although one of the representatives of the minority I have always discussed this question in such a way that I can appeal to the whole House and ask them whether I have ever offended anybody in his feelings or in his sentiments, and this is only the second time during this session that I have called the attention of the government to it. I did not do it in an unfriendly way, but extended them a friendly hand, expressing my readiness to congratulate them on any success they have achieved on this question. The hon. gentleman may be assured that we will not let this matter drop ; we will not let it alone, and if the moderate course which we have adopted up to the present time is not more appreciated by the government, I may inform the hon. gentleman that we may in the future change our tactics.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I think it is inadvisable that so many questions should be asked the government in reference to this matter. The first thing they know, some measure will be defeated by the public press taking notice of it, and questions being asked in this House. It seems hardly a fair thing for the government to be questioned. Silence is the best course to adopt ; and I think in regard to two or three measures, if the public press and the House would remain silent, probably they would get them through. That is what they want.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman refuse to answer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not in the public interest to answer more than I have answered.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has spoken three times, and I wish to say one or two words in reply to his first remarks, particularly in reference to myself and the government of which I was a member. There is something very remarkable in the memory of the hon. gentleman. It is one of the most convenient ever possessed by a public man. The idea of that hon. gentleman telling us, that in the fifties and sixties there was no agitation on the separate school question, particularly when he introduced his bill ——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said it was not what it is to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say it was worse than it is to-day. I contested an election in 1863 on this very question, and had the manliness, notwithstanding the charge which the hon. gentleman has made against me of cowardice, in a large Protestant constituency to stand up for what I believed to be the rights of the minority, occupying the high position which I did in a society which is supposed to be inimical to the liberties of mankind, and I was defeated, and yet the hon. gentleman tells us there was no agitation at that time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The last Act was in 1863.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's memory is at fault again. Did I not expose him here two or three years ago upon this very question, when he made the same accusation he does now ? The bill known as the Scott Separate School Bill was introduced in 1862, and he carried it through the House of Assembly in Quebec to the first and second reading, a large number of Protestants voting for it. The hon. gentleman opposite me (Sir Oliver Mowat) on every occasion voted against it, and he had not the courage to force it to its third reading in order to send it to the legislative council, because the moment the House was prorogued he had to go to the people, but just as soon as the election was over, the bill was re-introduced which is now known in Ontario as the Scott Act and was placed upon the statute-book. There are gray-headed men here, older than myself who remember all these circumstances. I remember them well, because I attended public meetings at that time, when the excitement ran to such an extent that heads were broken and clergymen had to run out of the public meetings ; and yet we are told at this date, because he fancies we are mostly young men and know nothing about it, that there was no excitement at that time. When the hon. gentleman said that, I will not say he did it deliberately to deceive this House, because I cannot conceive it possible he would do so, but he did it because of a defective memory of past events. The hon. gentleman may send for all the statutes in christendom and they will only confirm what I have stated. I have all the votes which took place on that occasion in my scrap book, which I exhibited to the hon. gentleman a short time ago. The course pursued by the late government was strictly in accordance with the constitution, and was not only in accordance with the laws on the statute-book, but based upon a resolution suggested and introduced in the House of Commons by the then leader of the hon. gentleman whom he followed with as much servility as he ever did any man. It was moved by Mr. Blake and accepted by Sir John Macdonald, for the very purpose of avoiding the necessity of disallowance, and for no other reason.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He did not follow the resolution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's memory is just as defective on that point as it is on the other. When Hon. Mr. Blake introduced that motion he saw looming up in the future the very difficulty which arose in Manitoba, and in order to remove it as far as possible from the political arena, he moved a very wise resolution providing for the referring of these questions to the Supreme Court for adjudication.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why did he not do it then? He did not do it until the next year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question had not arisen; it was only being discussed, and Sir John Macdonald accepted the proposition, reserving at the same time the right and power—or, rather, not surrendering the rights, privileges and powers vested in the ministers of the day, but he did accept the resolution; he crystallized it into law and placed it on the statute-book, and when the appeal came from the minority in Manitoba represented by the late Archbishop Taché, a conciliatory reply was sent to that government and they refused to act. I need not go on to establish that fact. The hon. gentleman says the decision of the court was a judicial blunder. He does not mean the Supreme Court of Canada, because the Supreme Court of Canada declared the Act ultra vires. It was the court of England which he has denounced on very many occasions in this House, and in not very respectful terms either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And yet my hon. friend tells us that there was no agitation at that time, and that we were too cowardly to disallow an Act which he knows in his conscience—and which every man who knows anything of the circumstances knows—would have been re-enacted over and over again in the province of Manitoba, and the result would have been infinitely worse than it is to-day. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman would have liked the government under similar circumstances to disallow the Jesuit Act, in order to get his party, led by that pure man the late Mr. Mercier, to re-enact it again and throw the whole country into a blaze of agitation and discontent. The government took the correct course, and the best evidence that they took the right course is, that the highest courts in Canada decided that it was ultra vires, and if it were ultra vires, then there was no necessity for the government disallowing the Act. All that had been taken from them would have been restored, and the government only acted in order to restore those rights after the highest court in the realm had decided that the minority had been deprived of those rights. The hon. gentleman is neither consistent with his party predelictions, his party principles or professions, when he claims that the late government should have taken the extreme course of disallowance. One of the planks in his platform, which has existed for years and years, is that, except upon clear evidence—so clear that there could be no misunderstanding that no act of the local legislature should be disallowed. That there was a difference of opinion as to the powers of Manitoba in dealing with that question is proved by the fact of the different courts, from the Superior Court in Manitoba to the Supreme Court, and the highest court in the realm, have differed upon this question, and that being the case, it is the best justification there could possibly be for the late government in pursuing the course they did. Talk of cowardice forsooth! Why the hon. gentleman has had one of the ministers smuggled off in a hurry, at a moment when important questions are to be considered, to Manitoba. The fact that the hon. gentleman refuses to answer the hon. member from St. Boniface is the very best evidence that Mr. Sifton has gone there for the purpose indicated in the paper, and the hon.

gentleman dare not, he has not the courage to avow it so that the public may know what they are doing. Here is a government negotiating with another province for the purpose of settling one of the most disturbing questions that has ever agitated this country, and they come down and tell us when we ask for the correspondence that there is none.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Who ever heard of negotiations taking place between one power and another where there was nothing but verbal conversations between them? Had Sir John Macdonald or Sir John Thompson's government, or any of his successors, pursued a course of that kind, I fancy I could have heard the indignation of the hon. gentleman sitting opposite me. Everything we did, we did above board. We placed it upon paper, and our opinions are there upon record for all time to come, and as one of that government, there is nothing I have done that I am ashamed of in this respect; but these gentlemen send up a deputation, or rather send for one, and enter into negotiations, and there is not one single line of record to hand down to posterity as to the course that the government adopted, or as to the result of their negotiations; and now they send their minister to the west to try and induce, so the newspapers say, the local government to make certain concessions.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—To please whom?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To please a foreign delegate under whose control they are at the present moment, and they dare not deny it, or act contrary to it; yet they expect to get a little éclat in the country for what they are doing, without having the moral courage to tell the people they have an existence as a ministry.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The church of Rome is safe now.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

AN OMISSION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are called—it would be no use calling the hon. gentleman's attention to it when the estimates come before us—I wish to say that I observe that while there is a provision made in the supplementary estimates for the payment in full of the sessional indemnity to the premier, to Mr. Prior, to Mr. Domville, Mr. Tucker and Mr. Tyrwhitt. I see no provision made for Senator Boulton. I understand that Senator Boulton has gone over to England in the same capacity as the others. I take it for granted that the omission must be an error.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I thought it was in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to it, so that it may be mentioned to the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was dropped out by a clerical error.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—All the government's errors are clerical.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (116) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When we last had this bill before us, the committee rose while considering clause 15. It was suggested by an hon. gentleman that the powers given to the minister there to cancel the rights of a tenant were rather extreme, and that it ought to specify that notice should be given. I have accepted the suggestion and propose adding a proviso to that clause to carry out the suggestion, so that notice will be sent after the time has expired, and the owner will have ample opportunity to take out his patent.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—It appears to me that clause 15 contains an extraordinary provision. A person may have completed all his improvements and yet his land may be cancelled.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—This provides that they shall be notified.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—If they have completed their improvements why should the land be cancelled?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has always been the law.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—It makes no difference if it has been in the law. A man who has completed his improvements should not lose his land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause is necessary. There are many cases where land has been taken up and practically abandoned, and it requires to be cancelled. There are lots of cases where parties perform a portion of the settlement duties, and not all.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—If they have performed all their settlement duties why should their land be cancelled?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill is extending the period for another year and a half. That right of forfeiture has always been in the Dominion Lands Act, and has been carried along year after year.

The clause was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had a discussion on the fourth clause, where I had introduced the word "parent" in place of "father," to cover the case of a mother being entitled to the right of the homestead, and it was suggested that the word "settler" should be introduced. On consultation with the officials of the department, they say that that will not answer, and the hon. gentleman who made the suggestion recognizes now that "parent" would be a better word. I move to restore the word "parent" instead of "settler."

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DEVER, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

ALIEN LABOUR BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (5) "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Living as I do on the border, I should be derelict in my duty if I did not call attention to the harsh and shameful treatment that Canadians are subjected to when going to the United States in search of employment, especially at Detroit and Buffalo. Not a day or week passes without some Canadians being deported to Canada. We on the frontier are indignant at the conduct of the United States authorities towards Canadians who cross to that country, and the appeal to fair play or neighbourly feelings so far had no effect, and I think that this policy of harassing our people should be met by a legislation of this kind, so as to meet our neighbours with their own weapon and give them a dose of their own medicine. If Canadians are to be expelled from the United States, Americans should not be permitted to come into Canada and underbid our own people. One would suppose that Congressman Corliss's amendments vetoed by ex-President Cleveland would put an end to all difficulties, but it does not; the same alien law prevails, is still on the United States statute-book since 1885, and it is the same law under which Canadians are deported. Now, I desire to bring before your notice the anti-Canadian nature of the United States alien labour law and its offensive enforcements, for that purpose let me read to you a few comments of the press on that subject, which will impress upon you the objectionable treament, in some cases, to which our people have been subjected :

The customs and immigration officials of the United States government at Detroit are still pursuing their offensive conduct towards Canadians.

A few days ago a young Canadian arrived here from Toronto on his way to the United States in search of employment. He has a brother who is pastor of a church near Chicago and it was the intention of the young man failing to get employment in Detroit, to push on to Chicago or to Cleveland where he also has friends.

He was well dressed and highly respectable and had sufficient money for his present requirements and, if necessary, could draw upon his friends at home for more if required.

He took his ticket to Windsor and after remaining here with an acquaintance for several days, took his grip and started for Detroit, where he had worked for nine months in 1893 and where he had a number of acquaintances.

When he arrived at the customs-house at the dock on the Detroit side, he was stopped by an officer named Flummerfelt and taken into a room. Here this officer subjected him to an examination as to his intentions, the amount of money he had and other things. The officer conducted himself towards the young man in a most offensive way calling him a liar and insisting on reading his private letters. He informed the young man that they intended to keep Canadians on their own side of the river.

After this insulting and brow beating official had vented his spleen on Canadians to his heart's content, the young Canadian was told that he was on parole ; that he could go up town but must leave his valise in that office.

When the young man saw one of his friends up in the city he was advised to make application for his first naturalization paper. He did so and was asked by the clerk if he had been six months in the country and answered that he had. He paid fifty cents and received his papers. With his papers he returned to the customs office at the dock and asked for his valise.

He was told by Officer Flummerfelt that his papers were no good, and after more brow-beating he was hustled back to the city hall where he received his papers and the clerk who informed him that he had received his paper by misrepresentation by saying that he had been six months in the country, while he had only arrived from Canada a few days previously.

The young man explained that he understood that it referred to any time, and, as he had been in Detroit for nine months at one time, he thought he was answering correctly.

After some more unparliamentary language he was hauled before the great McLogan, the Canadian bouncer, to the immigration department. Here the young man was again threatened with prosecution for an alleged false declaration, and the prosecuting attorney's office was called up by telephone and consulted.

No prosecution followed, but the young Canadian was taken down to the ferry and given his valise and allowed so many minutes to get back to Canada and ordered to stay there.

He remained in Windsor for a few days with a friend and was then asked to accompany a young lady to Detroit. He did so but was met again at the landing by the same officer, Flummerfelt and again told to get out of the country and obliged to return, leaving the young lady to go on alone.

I have a letter here addressed to a young lady from St. Luke's Hospital, Duluth, who has been discharged from the hospital because she is a Canadian :

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., June 7, 1896.

Miss FLORENCE CORBET,
St. Luke's Hospital,
Duluth, Minn.

Miss CORBET,—You are hereby notified that, by order of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States, the Hon. Herman Stump, you have been adjudged an alien, having come to the United States under contract to perform work and labour and that you must at once return to the country from which you came.

Very respectfully,

M. T. STOKE,
U.S. Immigrant Inspector.

The following despatch shows that similar acts occur at Buffalo :

BUFFALO, Dec. 18.—Immigration Inspector De Barry received from Washington, last night, notice of a new ruling by the Secretary of the Treasury on the Alien Labour Law. This ruling is on the question that was raised in this city, two years ago, as to whether the Canadian trained nurses who come to this country to work in hospitals do so in violation of the law.

The Secretary of the Treasury has ruled that these nurses can be deported. As soon as Mr. DeBarry received the notice of this new ruling he started out to get lists of the Canadian nurses in the hospitals. Mr. DeBarry said, last night, that all of these nurses would be deported.

Inspector Estell, of Ogdensburg, is now at Dansville, where he went to deport five Canadian nurses who are employed in a sanitarium there.

The latest instance of this unneighbourly conduct occurred some weeks ago at Detroit where 20 Canadians who were going to the Michigan lumber camps, were deported across the river to Windsor. Some legislation of this kind should be passed to prevent our people from being treated in this way. In December last, I wrote to the hon. Secretary of State. After this happened I was asked to do something and wrote as follows :

WINDSOR, 28th December, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—I consider that I, as a representative of the county, would be wanting in my duty if I did not bring to your notice the offensive conduct of the United States officials, at the port of Detroit, towards Canadians who pass over into that country seeking employment. Not a week passes without citizens of this country being sent back ; only a few weeks ago this unneighbourly conduct occurred, when 20 Canadians, who were going to the Michigan lumber camps, were deported across the river to Windsor.

The latest instance was last Friday, when a young Canadian from Toronto, on his way to the United States, was stopped at the customs. The conduct of the officer towards him was most offensive. I send for your perusal the inclosed paragraph from one of our local papers, from which you can judge of the infamous manner our people are treated.

The present government is now engaged, I believe, with the United States government, endeavouring to bring about trade reciprocity between the two countries. I think the first step the Canadian government should take would be to emphasize the public disapproval of the action of the United States towards our citizens who go over the border to work. It would certainly be very unneighbourly and small to retaliate, but I suppose it would be the only way to bring the Americans to their senses, and meet them by some legislation of the kind. Hoping that you will bring this matter before your hon. colleagues, so as to prevent any further results towards our countrymen,

I remain respectfully yours,
CHARLES E. CASGRAIN.

To the Hon. R. W. SCOTT,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

The following is the answer I got from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
MINISTER'S OFFICE.
OTTAWA, 4th January, 1897.

DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, with reference to the harsh treatment accorded by the United States authorities at the port of Detroit to Canadians crossing the boundary in search of employment.

With regard to the case you specifically cite, I may point out to you that you do not give the name of the person on whose behalf you write.

I observe by the newspaper cutting you inclose that a sworn statement in this case has been forwarded to the authorities at Ottawa. No communication on this subject, other than your letter, however, has reached my department. If you will procure and send me a sworn statement of the person aggrieved setting forth, over his own signature the facts of the case, I will take the necessary steps to bring the matter to the attention of the United States authorities at Washington.

Believe me,
Yours truly,
R. W. SCOTT.

The Honourable
CHARLES E. CASGRAIN,
Windsor, Ont.

At the time I wrote this letter the young man was gone and I could not get the evidence from him, but I could read statements of any number of outrages perpetrated on our people at Windsor and Buffalo. I think that it is low and contemptible to talk of retaliation. We desire to live in peace and harmony with our neighbours to the north of us. Retaliation is a measure to be deplored, but becomes a necessity for a nation, which has a sense of its own dignity and of the protection due to its citizens. If this obnoxious American law is to be maintained by the United States authorities, then the time has come for the Canadian parliament to enact a similar law for Canada, and in its terms it should be word for word the same as the United States alien labour law.

On the first clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Canada will be the second country to take action such as we are now considering on this question, and it certainly is not in line with the nineteenth century. All nations deplore and condemn the action taken by the United States in passing the alien law, and we must all recognize that the enforcement of it has been quite contrary to the spirit of the present age—contrary to the spirit which prevails in every other civilized nation. However, I doubt very much the propriety of our following suit. If we put this on our statute-book, it is an announcement of what our intentions are. Do we propose to follow them up? I do not think we do. I notice our Act is in no way similar to that of the United States. There the officers, such as DeBarry, stationed on the line between Canada and the United States, at Buffalo, Detroit, Ogdensburg, Niagara and several other points, have arbitrary powers and can deport a man without the intervention of a police officer or any judicial authority. We do not propose to lay down any such rule. On the contrary, no action can be taken under this legislation except by the Attorney General for Canada. Even the provincial authorities have no power to act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not passed yet. I propose to move to strike that out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Something should be done, because to enforce a law like this, it ought to be done promptly and directly. Persons coming into a large country like Canada are absorbed in our population and cannot be traced after they enter the country. It is absurd to suppose that the persons who wish to enforce the law can apply to the authorities at Ottawa to do so.

Where is the alien labour law enforced against Canada? I know it has been in some cases. I know it has been in the case of nurses and labourers and others.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It it done every day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether at Detroit and Windsor and Walkerville, there are not every day hundreds of workingmen passing from Canada into the United States and hundreds of workmen passing from the United States into Canada, who are entirely unmolested. I have seen them myself in the docks at Walkerville, Windsor and Detroit. They go simply in hives there morning and evening, and return. That is so on both sides. If my memory serves me right, a newspaper man with the energy and enterprise characteristic of newspapermen, actually made a count of the number.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is that recently? It used to be so years ago, but I doubt if it is so now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, recently. About the time the hon. gentleman brought this particular case under my notice, there was a kind of understanding along that frontier—I do not know that it exists to the same extent elsewhere. Of course there are points on the frontier where the law is not observed at all. On the line in the province of Quebec the law is not in force nor is it on the line between the United States and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is a fact that many labourers or woodmen of Quebec and New Brunswick work every year in the forests of Maine in the winter months, taking out timber and contracting, and they are not disturbed. What I fear is that by our adopting a law of this kind we will only make matters worse. They will say: "You adopted a similar law, and it is a justification for us to go on and enforce ours to the extreme letter that we are authorized to do." That might be the effect of it; and I do not think it would be really wise to pass this Act. I do not think it is likely to be enforced, and when it is not enforced it is a pity to place it on the statute-book, because it is not on a line with the views of the people of Canada. They are hoping for a better state of things, and we hope the time is not far distant when the alien labour law in the United States will break down. It is a disgrace to the United States. It is toadying to the labour vote for political purposes, and not intended to be enforced. De Barry has made himself very prominent in sending back Canadians in very many instances. There was an instance at Niagara Falls where a man had been living in the United States for three or four months, and they were afraid he was going to be a charge on the town; and the matter was brought under my notice. I thought it my duty to bring it to the attention of the authorities. But they took no action. The argument was that this man had no visible means of support, and the winter was coming on, and he would be a charge on the municipality, and they sent him back to Canada.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Our paupers are sent back to us in Halifax.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In cases which have come under my notice, except those in reference to nurses, they have not been followed up. They have had that excuse, that the parties might be a charge upon the United States, and that was their justification, just as we sometimes send back emigrants who are not able to support themselves, and we compel the steamers to return them.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Because they are paupers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But there are instances where the law is carried out to the full extent in the United States, but not to the extent that it might be brought into operation. I should like to ask my hon. friend from Windsor whether it is not a fact now that hundreds of men cross and re-cross every day, Canadians working in Detroit, and people from the United States coming to work in Walkerville?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Yes, a good many cross.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With the knowledge of the officers?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The authorities wink at it, I suppose. Perhaps when a man has a contract they will follow him up. But there is a kind of understanding about it, and it runs all along the frontier, and that is the very thing that breaks down the alien labour law. If it were observed to the full extent it would be a shocking thing, and would mean the turning back of 500 men. However, it is winked at, and it is known they go over there to work and return in the evening. That is also the case along the St. Lawrence River and that section of the country. If we put ourselves on the low level of the persons in the United States who prompted this kind of legislation, we will not be in an equally strong position to condemn their legislation, and it is for that reason I think it is not wise to approve of it. That is my own judgment, and I should be sorry to see it on the statute-book, because I know it would be an idle Act. It would be an announcement that we were going to do it, and we would not do it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I promised to support the bill, and I have done my duty in presenting it to the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What course does the hon. Secretary of State take with reference to this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I advise that it be dropped, because it is not a bill which should be enforced, unless there was machinery provided, unless we authorized somebody with arbitrary power to act where a man, for instance, crosses from the United States into Canada over the suspension bridge. If we had an officer there who would say: "you are coming to work in Canada: we have a law against it, and will force you to go back," there would be something effective about it. But under this Act persons can come in by the thousands, and it is only when a report is sent to the Attorney General and he makes inquiry that any action would be taken; and of course the party would by that time be absorbed in the community, and that would be the end of it. It is something which we do not propose to carry out.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I admire the sentiments of the hon. Secretary of State to a certain extent. But why should we take all the buffets and all the insults, and get our people turned out of the neighbouring country and keep perfectly still, saying nothing at all? I do not think it is dignified in us. In a nation of seventy million people, in the home of the brave and the land of the free, they do a thing of this kind to protect their people, and should not we do something to protect our people? It is well known that United States contractors come into this country and employ Americans instead of Canadians. In the mines of British Columbia the United States mine owners prefer to have Americans work for them, and it is unfair to our people. When I first saw this bill I thought it interfered with European immigration and labour, but you will see that it only refers to such countries as enact legislation against us, and I would not give to the United States one single thing. To-day the government have put an export duty on logs and pulpwood. I hope they will have the backbone to enforce that law. If this duty on lumber is to prevail, I hope the government will do their duty and let the duty on logs and pulp wood prevail also. I should certainly like to try this bill. It can be repealed afterwards if the Americans do the correct thing and leave their country open to us as it has been in former years, and as ours has always been to them, but I should meet them with blow for blow.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think if this Act was drawn up as the similar law in the United States, I should be disposed to give it my support. I am aware that it is not only at Windsor, Detroit, and at those points that this alien law is enforced by the United States, but at almost every point where the people cross the line. Coming into the province of New Brunswick by the Canadian Pacific Railway, where people pass into the state of Maine, we see at different seasons of the year in the press, reports of various persons who have been returned from there to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, as the case might be, who were not allowed, because they had not a sufficient amount of money in their pockets to keep them for a month or so in the United States, to go enter the country. These men were labourers, or persons having a trade or occupation by which they could earn sufficient to support them wherever they went. They could go to the lumber woods of Maine or engage in any other employment in the United States and were not persons at all likely to become a burden to any country to which they went. It seems a very unfriendly act on the part of the United States to enforce such a law against the people of the British provinces—their next-door neighbours, and the place from which many of them emanated, perhaps, a few years ago. If this bill had been one that could be made as effective in the Dominion as the other has worked in the United States, I should give it my support, but in its present shape this bill would be totally inoperative. So far as I can see, it would be of no benefit whatever. Therefore, I should not vote in favour of the measure in its present shape.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I should be very sorry that this measure should pass without a provision that it should not be put into operation until the government used every effort with the government of the United States to endeavour to persuade them to repeal their law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suggestion is a good one if you were dealing with a government that had any control. The late government used all the persuasive power it had to induce those in authority to take steps for the repeal of this obnoxious law. When Sir John Thompson Mr. Foster and myself were in Washington we called Mr. Blaine's attention to the Act, and his answer was "we have no power as a government. This was introduced by an independent member of the House of Representatives and placed upon the statute-book and that any recommendation we might make would be treated with contempt unless they were in favour of it." We know very well what the opinion of the House of Representatives would be, from the fact that the most objectionable clause of the late bill was struck out by the Senate and immediately re-enacted by the House of Representatives, so that any representation to the United States government would be utterly valueless. But what I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say was that he did not think that in passing this law there was any intention of carrying it out or putting it in force, and that he thought the 8th clause with reference to communication with the Attorney General of Canada in Ottawa before you could prosecute, was nonsense. I think that is what he said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not a government bill. It was introduced by a private member.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that you object to that clause?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; what I objected to was that there was really no power to enforce it on the same line as the United States law.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Why not?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I want to call the attention of the House to is that this is another illustration of that unanimity which exists—I know the hon. Secretary of State does not like to hear it, but he shall—between the members of the government. The premier pledged his word over and over again, that if returned to power, he should take the first opportunity to place an Act of this character upon the statute-book. I do not say provisions of that kind, because I agree with my hon. friend that it is to a certain extent inoperative; but the government as a government were pledged as much to that as they were to anything. It is somewhat singular that the gentleman who insisted upon placing this clause on the statute-book, was one of his own colleagues. It was not the gentleman who introduced the bill nor those who supported it. It was neither the gentleman from Welland, nor was it Mr. Taylor who had had this matter in hand. The bill was so mutilated by Mr. Davies, from Prince Edward Island, who insisted upon that clause being placed in the bill, that he has rendered it inoperative, and this is what the hon. Secretary of State has objected to so much. One of the strongest advocates of an Act of this kind, said in the House of Commons, that the government had so mutilated it that it was unworthy of further support. Now, as an additional evidence of hardship, my hon. friend from Windsor read some communications. Take a case of this kind: A few weeks ago a young man in Colborne received a telegram from a merchant in Los Angelos to come on and take a situation at $65 a month, and he gave up his position in the village of Colborne, Ontario, which is about seventy miles west of Kingston, and proceeded westward. All went well until one day a man walked into the store where he worked and remarked, "you are from Ontario?" The young man said "Yes." Then he was asked, "well, how did you happen to come here?" The stranger was told the truth and immediately disclosed his identity. He was an officer and he told the youth that he must return to the country from which he came. In addition to that his employer was served with a writ for $1,000, and the young man was forced to return home, losing his situation and $107, in passage money. The citizens of Canada can see plainly how Canadians are treated in this wonderfully free country across the line. Has not the time come when retaliation is necessary? The hon. gentleman is right, to a very great extent, in reference to the number of people resident in Canada crossing over from Windsor to Detroit, and crossing over to Niagara Falls, because the Grand Trunk Railway there has works on both sides, but it is a fact that Canadians living on the Canadian side, working for the Grand Trunk Railway, having to cross the bridge every morning to their work, have been sent home by the alien labour officer, and they have been obliged to become citizens of the United States or lose their employment. That has been done in Windsor, as my hon. friend knows well, over and over again. It is only perhaps where there is a very exacting and imperious alien labour officer that this is put into force. It is not so much the case in the lower provinces as in Ontario. The question is, why an exception should have been made in this case. You profess to adopt the principle of preferential trade against the United States because they will not reciprocate. Why should not we do it in this matter? I am fully in accord with the hon. gentleman from Victoria, that the sooner we act as they do in matters of this kind, the sooner our people will be satisfied. I admit at the same time the full force of the argument of the Secretary of State; sumptuary laws of this kind are not in accordance with the civilization of the age, but when we are met as we are in the United States, we ought to pass it. If we go on with the bill I shall move that this 8th clause be struck out of the bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I concur in the general observations of the hon. gentleman. I quite sympathize with the object of the bill under the circumstances in which we are placed. It would be out of the question if we were not treated as we are by the people on the other side; but, being treated as we are, it is entirely legitimate and expedient for us to pass some legislation of this kind. It is said that this clause is inoperative. I do not agree to that; I say it is not inoperative. I would be glad if we had a clause here which would make it more imperative than it is, and in that respect it would correspond more with the United States law. But I do not know that that would be on the whole more desirable, because the matter might get on this side, as it is on the other side, into the hands of an unscrupulous agency, who would use the power in a very objectionable way. Then, there are points on our long frontiers where our own people do not desire to have this law. It is not convenient for them; it does not answer their purpose so well; and the clause which is objected to enables these people who do not desire the benefit of such law to be free from its operations for the present. My hon. friend interprets that clause as though no person could be dealt with until that persons is reported to the Attorney General. That is not the meaning of the clause. What are the words of it?

No proceeding under this Act or prosecution for violation thereof shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General for Canada or some person duly authorized for him.

The Attorney General does not manage these transactions personally; it is done by others. He appoints the person who is to attend to it. I am not anxious about it, but by having this clause you enable some discrimination to be exercised in carrying out the Act where it is in the general interest of our own people that there should be that discrimination, that it may not be left in the hands of some ill natured or ill tempered man who might carry it out in an objectionable way. If we want to pass a bill this session, it being so late, it will be necessary to pass it very nearly if not entirely in its present terms, and I would ask hon. gentlemen who are in favour of the bill and would like to see it pass, not to move amendments which they do not think absolutely necessary, because it may have the effect of the bill being lost. I am satisfied the clause has not the meaning attributed to it, that on the contrary it would be a useful clause as it is.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not it be better for the hon. gentleman to make it the Attorney General in the province in which the offence is committed?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—If the Senate would prefer to leave the responsibility with them, I would be glad to be free from it; but being our own law it is natural that our own officer should be the one to exercise it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My only object was to make it operative and workable. Take the case of Ontario, where it would occur oftener than anywhere else; it would be easier to reach the Attorney General of Ontario than it would be to come here.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Personally I have no objection, but I think it is not desirable to amend the bill, as we run the risk of losing it altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Rather than lose it, I withdraw my objection.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This alien labour law has been in operation for a number of years. They have certainly had time during that period to modify its terms. If they can carry out such a law in the United States I do not see why we cannot do it here, but I did hope, when the present government came into power, that all these grievances would have been removed and that we would have heard no more of the difficulties between the United States and this country. We have found by this time that what they prophesied in the past has not been fulfilled. They are just as much opposed to the people of this country as they were a number of years ago. We were told that the United States were all against the Conservative party, but they are just as much against the Reformers. We thought we were going to have everything as nice as a rose as soon as this party came into power, we were going to have reciprocity and neighbourly treatment, but they were greatly mistaken. This law has been in operation for some years. Why have they not changed it? I know of many cases of injustice. I know young men who have left this country to obtain situations in New York, in the mercantile business, who have been compelled to return to this country because they were Canadians. There are a great many such cases, and I think it is time now for us to show a bold front and to tell the Americans that if they intend to act in that manner towards us, we will do likewise, and as soon as you do that they will change their course, because these people in the United States look after their own interests and the more you try to coax them the less you get. I would say to meet fire with fire and say we will fight you in your own way. If you adopt that course they will relax and take a more sensible course and remove the grievance. We do not want these obstructions. We would rather see people come into this country. We have always been willing to lend a hand to people coming from the United States, but when a Canadian goes over there he will find every one against him, I think it is time to show our hand, and if they are determined to continue their present poliey, no other course is open to us but retaliation. The sooner we put this law on the statute book and show that we are determined to act in our own defence the defence the sooner the United States will come to terms.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We had better pass this bill, and it can be further discussed on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendments.

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I have already asked, privately, the consent of hon. members, and they have very kindly consented to the suspension of rule 41, in order that a matter of form may be gone through with. I move the suspension of the 41st rule, in so far as it relates to Bill (N): "An Act respecting certain savings banks in the Province of Quebec."

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON moved the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, 21st June, 1897.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE RESTIGOUCHE AND VICTORIA RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported that they had considered Bill (99), "An Act respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company," and had found that the preamble was not proved to the satisfaction of the committee, and recommended that no further action be taken with regard to this bill, as in their opinion its passing would not benefit the district or the line of railway therein mentioned.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD moved the adoption of the report.

The motion was adopted.

THE ST. BONIFACE ELECTION CASE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to call the attention of the Senate to the following extract from the Montreal Witness of the 5th June instant:—

ST. BONIFACE, MAN., June 5th.

In the St. Boniface election petition case, discussed yesterday, it will be remembered that when the case came before the Honourable Mr. Justice Killam on April 29, for trial of the preliminary objection filed by Mr. Lauzon, against the prosecutors of the petition, it was proved that both petitioners, Roy and Berthiaume, had been guilty of corrupt acts. Roy admitted he had been promised money for driving electioneers to the polls by Mr. Prendergast, the present judge. The chairman of Mr. Bertrand's committee stated that he requested Mr. Prendergast on the day following the election to pay him, when Mr. Prendergast gave him an order on Mr. J. A. Richard for the amount, which was paid by Mr. Richard. The other petitioner, Berthiaume, who supported Mr. Lauzon, in the election the year before, admitted that about a week before the election that Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast had promised to endeavour to procure him an office from the Dominion Government and he worked hard to secure Mr. Bertrand's election during the last week before the election. When this startling evidence was given Mr. Howell, counsel for the petitioners, applied for an adjournment to enable him to put Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Richard in the witness box, which was granted. Yesterday morning when the trial was resumed Mr. Howell stated to the court that in view of the evidence given at the previous hearing, he was unable to ask that the preliminary objections should be over-ruled. Judgment according was given dismissing the petition.

And inquire if the government intend to take any action regarding the matter?

He said: In pursuance of notice given two weeks ago to-day, both verbally and by the usual notice on the order paper, I wish to call the attention of the House to some very important matters connected with the administration of justice in the province of Manitoba. It may be necessary, before stating my views on this subject, to refer very briefly to the history of the case. It begins with an estimate, submitted to the House of Commons in September last, to increase the number of county judges in the province of Manitoba by the appointment of an additional judge. The sum of $2,000 was then placed in the estimates for the purpose of providing the salary for an additional judge. It seemed a very extraordinary thing to do under the circumstances, as there were already five county court judges in the province of Manitoba, which seemed to be quite sufficient, taking into consideration the population of the province and the requirements of the administration of justice there. Nevertheless, this item of $2,000 appeared in the estimates. It is very well known, hon. gentlemen, that provision for a judge's salary should not be made simply in this way, that if it is proposed to increase the number of judges in any province in Canada, the proper way to do so is by a separate bill making the salary a permanent charge upon the consolidated revenues of the country. I could very easily quote authorities to show that this is the proper course; in fact it has been the practice of Canada all along to do this as soon as the legislative provision has been made in the province and as soon as the department resolves that it is necessary to add another judge. As soon as that step is decided upon a bill is introduced. This is the usual constitutional course, and authorities are very strong on the point that the position of a judge should not be made dependent on the annual estimates of parliament. I refer to Bourinot on this question. He says:

The independence of the judiciary has been for many years recognized in Canada as one of the fundamental principles necessary to the conservation of public liberty. The judges are not dependent on the mere will of the executive in any essential respects, nor on the caprice of the people of a province for their nomination and retention in office, as in many of the states of the American Republic. Their tenure is as assured in Canada as in England, and their salaries are not voted annually but are charged permanently upon the civil list. In case it is necessary to provide a salary, or increase of salary, for a judge, the proper course is for the government to proceed by a bill.

This course was not pursued in regard to this matter, and that in itself was sufficient to excite suspicion. Up to the present moment no bill has been passed through parliament. I understand that since this matter has been started in this House, a bill has been introduced in the other branch of parliament, providing for a permanent salary for the judge in question, but up to the present time, this bill has not been passed. It has not, I believe, come to this branch of the legislature yet. I do not know what progress has been made with it in the other House, but my point is that this appointment should have been started properly; that a bill should have been passed providing for the payment of this judge's salary, and making it a permanent burden, like the salaries of other judges, upon the revenue of the country. If that were done the person appointed, whoever he was, would be in an independent position. He has not been in that position so far, and that is the first point of objection. When this vote was before the House of Commons last year the Solicitor-General made a very extraordinary statement in regard to it. He said:

> The appointment is of necessity of a provisional character. I do not say that we cannot proceed to make the appointment after this item has been voted, but it will still continue in the control of this House, because, until such times as the statute is amended, the appointment is essentially provisional. Therefore, at any time until the statute is amended, by dropping this item in the estimates, the appointment will cease.

This extraordinary statement was made by the Solicitor General when the item came before the House. Notwithstanding this, the government went on and voted this $2,000. They said there was great necessity for the appointment of another judge. It was urgent, and that was the reason it was not provided for by bill, and that the item should appear in the estimates at that particular moment, it was in the estimates of the next fiscal year. As I remarked a moment ago, it provides for six county court judges in the province of Manitoba. By the last census the population of the province was only, I think, 160,000, which gives one judge to less than every 30,000 of population. In the province of Nova Scotia there are only seven judges with a population of nearly 450,000; in New Brunswick there are six county court judges where there is a population of nearly 350,000, and in the province of Prince Edward Island there are only three county court judges with a population of 120,000, and the greater subject for surprise in what has been done in this matter is that almost one of the last acts which my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, did before he left the province of Ontario, where he was Premier and Attorney General, was to introduce a bill, which he passed into law providing that in any county or union of counties, over which a county court judge presided, no second judge should be appointed where the population did not exceed 80,000. My hon. friend leaving the province of Ontario, where he was responsible for the administration of justice by putting on the statute book an Act declaring that in future no second judge should be appointed for a district unless the population exceeded 80,000, comes into this parliament and one of the first things he does here is to provide that there shall be an additional judge appointed in the province of Manitoba where they had five judges already, making six altogether for a population of less than 200,000. There were rumours at the time this item appeared in the estimates that it was intended for a gentleman then in the legislature of Manitoba. Rumours connected his name with it, which have since been amply verified. Mr. Prendergast was then a member of the local legislature. A few months afterwards this gentleman resigned his place as a member of the House of Assembly of Manitoba, and an election took place for the district of St. Boniface, which he had represented in the legislature of Manitoba. There were two candidates in the field, one of whom was Mr. Bertrand the Liberal and the other was Mr. Lauzon the Conservative candidate. Mr. Prendergast was chairman of the committee for Mr. Bertrand during this election. Mr. Lauzon was elected by a very large majority, and a petition was filed against his return by two men, one of whose name is Joseph Roy and the other Joseph Berthi-aume. Preliminary objections were filed to the petition and on the 29th of April the matter was brought up before Judge Killam, of the Supreme Court of Manitoba, and these objections considered, and these two men who filed the petition, Joseph Roy and Mr. Joseph Berthiaume, were placed in the witness stand. They were examined with regard to those objections, and I have in my hand the evidence of these men as given in the court. This evidence is certified as correct by William Perkins, official stenographer of the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba. What I propose to read to the House is the official report of the evidence taken in relation to these preliminary objections urged to the petition against the return of Mr. Lauzon in the district of St. Boniface. I will read first the direct examination of Joseph Roy, one of the petitioners. He was examined by Mr. Phippen, and his examination reads as follows:

Q. Do you speak English, Mr. Roy?—A. No; not much.

Q. Do you remember the election in St. Boniface?—A. Yes.

Q. That was held on the 20th of last February?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Lauzon and Mr. Bertrand were the two people who were running—they were the candidates?—A. Yes.

Q. You remember that?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you vote at that election?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you afterwards sign some papers in Mr. Howell's office?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that your name (showing witness petition and notice)?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you write that?—A. Yes.

Q. That is your signature to the original petition?—A. Yes.

Q. You signed that?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you a horse?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do on election day on the 20th February?—A. I drove a single horse—one horse.

Q. Whose horse was it?—A. It belongs to me.

Q. What purpose did you drive the horse for—what were you doing with the horse? Driving people to vote?

[Witness does not answer, but speaks to an interpreter.]

His Lordship.—Can't you tell us in English what you did that day?—A. No; I can't understand all. I can understand some, but I can't understand all.

Mr. Phippen.—What were you driving the horse for that day—what were you doing with the horse?—A. I brought the people to vote.

Q. Were you to receive any money for driving people to vote?—A. Yes. On that day, do you mean?

Q. Yes. Were you to receive money for driving people to vote—for driving voters on that day—for driving a horse?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you hire it with?—A. Mr. James Prendergast, the president of the committee.

Q. Whose committee?—A. Mr. Bertrand's committee in St. Boniface.

Q. When did you make that arrangement with Mr. Prendergast?—A. The day previous to the election.

Q. Were you to be paid for that?—A. Yes.

Q. What?—A. I have a team to earn my livelihood.

Q. How much were you to be paid?—A. That day for she single horse, $5.

Q. That was the arrangement with Mr. Prendergast?—A. It was.

Q. Were you paid?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. I was paid on the following day.

Q. After the elections?—A. Yes.

Q. Who paid you?—A. Mr. Richard.

Q. Who is Mr. Richard?—A. The one that keeps the liquor store.

Q. How did he come to pay you?—A. I cannot say, Mr. Prendergast sent me there and I was paid.

Q. After the election you went to Mr. Prendergast?—A. Yes, and he gave me a paper for Mr. Richard.

Q. You took the paper to Mr. Richard?—A. Yes.

Q. And he paid you $5?—A. Yes, Mr. Richard paid me for my day.

Q. That was for election day?—A. Yes.

Q. Providing the horse?—A. Yes.

Q. And what you did with the horse was to take voters to the polls?—A. Yes. I did not bring many because I went and brought one in the forenoon very far and I did not get back very early.

Q. That was all you did that day?—A. Yes.

Q. Did any one instruct you where to go for the voters?—A. They told me only to go and take one from a distance.

Q. Who told you that?—A. Mr. James Prendergast.

Q. That is the present judge?—A. Yes, that is the man, Jim Prendergast.

That is the whole of the direct evidence of Joseph Roy. There was a good deal of cross-examination, the material point of which turned on the point whether the man could speak English. The other witness, Jos. Berthiaune, was put on the stand by the petitioner's counsel, and there was a very long cross-examination. I will just read from the cross-examination the parts that bear materially upon the matter at issue:

Q. You have always acted with the Conservative party until recently?—A. Only once.

Q. When was that one?—A. Well, I think it is on Mr. Lauzon's election.

Q. How long ago?—A. Two years or one year ago I suppose.

Q. So within a year you called youself a Conservative, didn't you?—A. No, I never called myself a Conservative.

Q. You voted Conservative?—A. Yes.

Q. Deeds are better than words?—A. Yes.

Q. You worked for Mr. Lauzon?—A. I voted for him, but I do not believe I asked anybody, but I am a man to mind my own business if I can.

The witness is now asked about his motives for signing the petition against the return of Mr. Lauzon.

Q. You told him the reason you wanted to sign or you told Cyr you would sign it was because you told Cyr it would help you to get a government position?—A. Yes, that is and was my own idea. I do not remember whether I told Lauzon that, but that were my own mind too.

* * * * * *

Q. Did you tell Mr. Senecal that Cyr told you that signing that petition would help you to get the position?—A. Yes, he said so after I had signed it.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Senecal that he told you before you signed it that if you signed it it would help you to get this position?—A. Well, I may have said so.

Q. You said at once that you would sign the petition when he asked you to sign it?—A. Yes, because that came into my mind myself and he never asked me in the first place.

Q. You thought your opportunity had come, I suppose, to help you to get your government position?—A. What do you mean, please?

Q. You thought it was fortunate for you that Cyr had come to you so that you could get the position in the government through this petition?—A. Yes.

Q. Through this petition?—A. No, not through this petition.

Q. You thought it would help you?—A. Yes.

Q. You were a good deal interested in getting this position, were you not?—A. Yes, I was a little anxious.

Q. You had done some little writing?—A. Yes.

Q. You had written some letters?—A. Yes.

Q. After the last general election you thought you would write your Liberal friends down in Quebec?—A. Yes.

Q. You had some communication with Mr. Tarte?—A. Yes.

* * * * * *

Q. Who did you go to see? You spoke to Mr. Prendergast did you about that office—did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. What did Mr. Prendergast tell you?—A. He told me many things.

Q. That he would help you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Bertrand tell you that he would help you?—A. No, he said that he would see Mr. Prendergast about it.

* * * * * *

Q. When was the last election in St. Boniface? A. Mr. Lauzon's election I think was in October.

Q. I am asking you about this election just over?—A. That was in February.

Q. The 20th February?—A. Yes, 19th or 20th.

Q. Tell me how long before that it was that you saw Mr. Prendergast about this position?—A. I can't tell you how long about; I can't tell you exactly what date or what month, but still it was before the election. * * * * * * I went to his own office in Main Street and I asked him if he was willing to help me to the position that I were asking and he told me that he would do what he could. I never was promised. I never received any promise.

Q. He said that he would do what he could?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that two weeks before the election that you saw Mr. Prendergast? A. Well, say about two weeks. Under oath I have to tell the truth but I can't remember exactly.

Q. Mr. Prendergast was taking a pretty active part in the election helping Mr. Bertrand all he could?—A. Yes, I guess he was.

Q. And he thought you had better go and have a talk with Mr. Pendergast, he being a prominent man and helping Mr. Bertrand all that he could?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Pendergast said that he would do all that he could for you?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you know he was taking a prominent part in Mr. Bertrand's election?—A. I saw him acting. I knew he was chief of the committee rooms.

Q. You saw him moving about the committee rooms pretty actively?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew that he would have a good deal of influence down at Ottawa to get you this position?—A. Yes.

Q. Because he was acting prominently for Mr. Bertrand? A. Yes.

Q. When did you talk about this position? How long before Mr. Bertand's election, a week or ten days before the election had you spoken to Mr. Bertrand?—A. It was about on the same day that I spoke to Mr. Prendergast—no, it was about ten days before that I asked him if he was willing to help me to that position and he told me yes, but he says I will see Mr. Prendergast.

* * * * * *

Q. Mr. Bertrand was the candidate for that constituency then?—A. Yes.

Q. Who else did you go to see about this office that day?—A. I guess that is all. I may have seen a great number of others, but I did not ask anybody else to help me that day that I remember.

Q. How long did you go to the committee rooms before the election.—A. I guess I went to the committee rooms for a whole week before the elections, nearly every night, I guess I did. * * * * * * A. I spoke to Mr. Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast together. I spoke to Mr. Prendergast two or three times.

Q. You went to see both of them on the same day?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you leave your work to come over that day to see Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Bertrand?—A. No. I was not doing anything that day; in the winter time we do not work.

Q. What induced you to go over and see both Mr. Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast that day?—A. Because I had it in my mind to get all the people I could to help me.

This is the evidence, as far as it relates directly to the charges that Mr. Prendergast was guilty of corrupt acts in connection with the St. Boniface election. It was on the 29th of April last that this evidence was given. At the conclusion of the hearing of the case, Mr. Howell, who was acting for the petitioner in the matter, is reported in the official report which I have and from which I am still reading, as saying:

I will have to ask that this case stand over for a little, I want to get witnesses here to contradict this man.

That is Roy, the first witness whose evidence I have read. He continued:

I want to call Mr. Prendergast, and he is in Ottawa, I think, at present.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I think, as I said in the Carillon matter, when matters are brought up in this way without notice, counsel should have an opportunity to meet them.

Mr. HOWELL.—Yes, especially under the suspicious circumstances.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I do not know that there is anything suspicious about it. It is a fact that you can easily disprove if it does not seem to be the truth.

Mr. HOWELL.—I want to go into the box myself, as I wish to contradict nearly everything this witness has said, and I wish to get counsel to conduct the case while I am a witness.

The matter was now adjourned to come up at a time to be agreed upon between counsel.

That was on the 29th April, and it seems that counsel agreed, and the court did not resumed its sitting on the 4th day of June, a few days over a month later. All this period intervened from the time the evidence was given. The counsel for the petitioners obtained an adjournment in order to put Mr. Prendergast and witnesses on the stand to contradict the evidence. The court gave him the time and on the 4th day of June the court resumed, and what happened is, I believe, correctly reported from information that I have from many reliable sources. I am in a position to establish that what is reported in the newspapers, and which is included in the notice I have submitted to the House, is a correct statement of what occurred. Mr. Howell, counsel for the petitioner, rose and said that after the evidence which had been given when the court adjourned he was not in a position to ask that the case be proceeded with and he consented that the petition should be dismissed. The point I wish to make here is this, that it was the duty of Mr. Prendergast, whose integrity had been assailed in the most extraordinary manner by the evidence given by two men who were the witnesses of his own friends—the men who had signed the petition asking that Mr. Lauzon be brought into court to answer to charges of corruption—these two men had themselves, on the witness stand, distinctly sworn that offences had been committed against the law, that one of them had received the sum of $5 as a consideration for driving voters to the polls, which is a distinct offence constituting bribery under the laws of Manitoba, and the other had received promises with regard to his appointment to an important government position, which constitutes another offence of the same character. Now, I say it was the duty of Mr. Prendergast at that time, if he valued his integrity, knowing as he must have known that he was, if not then actually a judge, to be placed on the bench in a short time afterwards, to have gone to that court, even if the counsel for the petitioners had not intimated he would do so, and gone on the witness stand and contradicted these witnesses if he was able to do so. He did not take that course, and therefore the impression remains against him. A strong prima facie case was made out in open court and the matter stands in that way still. I shall be told, I dare say, in reply, that these offences committed by Mr. Prendergast with regard to these two voters in the St. Boniface election were offences that occurred before he was appointed to a seat on the bench, and that that being so, it is not proper or necessary to discuss the matter at all before the public. I am not aware of the exact date of the appointment of Justice Prendergast to his position in Manitoba, but I assume that he was not appointed on the 20th February, the date of the election, for I can scarcely think it possible that a man who was appointed as a judge could have acted as chairman of an election committee, as he did on that occasion, to say nothing of these other offences that he was charged with having committed. I assume that the date of his appointment is after that of the election. I have not been able to see his appointment gazetted, but I think it is very likely that Judge Prendergast was appointed before the 29th of April. I hope, for the sake of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, that that was the case, for if the appointment was made after the 29th April, the very serious charge would lie against my hon. friend that after that evidence came out, he consummated the appointment before the matter could be cleared up. But whatever the date of Mr. Prendergast's appointment may be, we know that he was not sworn in at the time that this evidence was given. We know that he was not sworn in on the 29th April, or during the whole time from the 29th April to the 4th June while the court was waiting for his evidence, and we knew he was sworn in on the day following the announcement of counsel for the petitioner, that in consequence of this evidence the petition would be withdrawn or they would submit to the petition being dismissed. On the 4th June counsel withdrew the petition, and on the very day following, the 5th June, Mr. Prendergast appeared before one of the judges of the province and was sworn into office. I am very much surprised that my hon. friend was not advised, as I assume he was not, between the 29th April and the 4th June that this evidence came out. Had he been, I am safe in concluding that my hon. friend would have delayed matters. Even if the appointment had gone out, he would have prevented this judge being sworn in until the matter was properly investigated. However, he was sworn in on the 5th of June, and is now one of the judges of our country. I am prepared to hear offered as a reason why this matter should not be discussed in this House, or perhaps discussed at all, that Judge Prendergast is now a judge of the county court of Manitoba, and that this offence, whatever may be the gravity of it, was committed before he became a judge. In regard to that matter I wish to submit the law of Manitoba with regard to offences of this kind. In looking over the election law of the province of Manitoba, I will read the parts of the statutes that relate to offences of this nature. The first section is sec. 214, and that section provides that an act or offence done under any of the provisions of the 215th and 226th sections shall be corrupt within the meaning of this Act and the Manitoba controverted election law. Sec. 215, subsec. b, says:

> Every person who directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, causes or procures or agree to give or procures, or offers or promises any office, place or appointment, or promises to procure or endeavours to procure any office, place or appointment to or for any elector to or for any other person in order to induce such elector to vote or refrain from voting, or corruptly does any such act as aforesaid on account of any elector having voted or refrained from voting.

Sec. 215 B, therefore, is pointed directly at the offence of promising an office to a voter with a view of influencing his vote at an election, Sec. 226 says:

> The hiring or promising to pay or paying for any horse, team carriage or cab, or other vehicle by any candidate or by any other person on his behalf to convey electors to or from the poll or to or from the neighbourhood therein or at any election or the payment by any candidate or by any person on his behalf of the travelling or other expenses of any elector in going to or returning from any election are unlawful acts, and whoever so offends shall be liable to a fine of one hundred dollars and to imprisonment for three months in default of payment. The mere hiring of a team from a voter is a corrupt offence without reference to the motive of the offender.

Then for the penalties, Sec. 235:

> Any person other than the candidate who is guilty of any corrupt practices in any proceeding which after notice of the charge he has had an opportunity of being heard shall during the eight years next after the time at which he is so found guilty be incapable of being elected to or sitting in the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba or of voting at the election of any member of such House or of holding any office in the nomination of the Crown or the Lieutenant Governor of the province.

That is the clause in the Act which refers to a corrupt act by any person not being a candidate. Then there is another provision in a later section in this Act. Section 262 provides:

> Every prosecution concerning a penalty imposed by this Act may be brought for hearing and determination by any person before any two justices of the peace or a police magistrate.

And 267 provides:

> Every proceeding or prosecution brought in virtue of this Act shall be instituted within twelve months next after the commission of the offence, and not later unless the defendant by absconding withdraws himself from the jurisdiction.

I submit this statute of Manitoba with this view: in the first place, I want to show the House that these two offences, of hiring and paying for teams and of promising to procure or endeavouring to procure an office, with a view to influence the vote of an elector are both under the law of Manitoba set down as bribery; that the prosecution by any private prosecutor may take place within twelve months after the commission of this offence. That is where a penalty is imposed, as in the matter of the driving of teams. In that case any person may prosecute and Judge Prendergast is liable to prosecution within twelve months from the commission of the offence and the penalty, as I have already read, is a fine of one hundred dollars or imprisonment for three months and disqualification. I submit, therefore, that although these offences were committed possibly before Mr. Justice Prendergast was appoint as a judge, the consequence of these acts follows.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not think you mentioned the day of the election.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The 20th of February. I assume, however, out of regard for my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice that he was not aware even on the 5th of June of the nature of the evidence that had been given, or Judge Prendergast would never have been sworn in, but assuming that he was not a judge at the time that these offences took place, I still contend that the consequences of these offences are of such a nature that, if not controverted, the consequences follow him to the bench and make it impossible that he can remain on the bench. What, for instance, if any person—and it is open to any person to do it—were to prosecute Judge Prendergast for hiring the team and paying five dollars in violation of the law? If that offence were proved before two magistrates in the province of Manitoba, and these magistrates should impose one hundred dollars fine, or in default of payment three months imprisonment in jail, can it be supposed for a moment that these are not circumstances of such a nature as would affect his integrity and usefulness as a judge, even though the offences which became punishable in this way had been committed before his elevation to the bench? If I were to state an extreme case, I would ask what would be the result if a judge had committed a felony—if the prosecution of the felony began in some way or another and he had been appointed after the offence and before the prosecution, would it be possible for him to continue in that position, if the crime was brought home to him afterwards? I therefore submit it is no answer to the complaint I am making against Judge Prendergast in this matter to say that the offence was committed before he became a judge, and therefore this parliament has nothing to do with it. I want to say a word or two upon what I consider to be the indecency of the appointment, and my remarks on this head will have more to do with the government and with the administration of justice than with the gentleman who received the appointment at their hands. As I have already stated, this amount of $2,000 was put in the estimates for the payment of the judge's salary. If was made on the allegation that there was urgent need of this appointment, that it was important that it should be done, yet nevertheless we observe no appointment was made for a great many months afterwards, and it was only within the present month of June that it has been finally consummated by the judge being sworn in. The appointment itself was indecent, in view of the circumstances surrounding it, no law being passed to make it a permanent burden on the revenues, and there being apparently no necessity, apart from political necessity, for the appointment at the time. Whatever may be the date of his appointment, it is certain that Justice Prendergast had a very strong assurance—it is almost certain that he had an assurance long ago—that he was to receive this appointment. Public rumour associated his name with it when the $2,000 was placed in the estimates, and as time went on his name was associated with the appointment and associated with it in connection with the Manitoba school question. It was alleged that Mr. Prendergast, who had been a very strong supporter of the rights of the minority in the province of Manitoba so strong that he was really their champion on one occasion and delivered a speech no less than seven hours long against the Manitoba, School Act of 1890. It was observed after the $2,000 was voted that he began to change his views and that he began to favour the settlement which the government of which my hon. friend is a member were reported to be making with Mr. Greenway and the province of Manitoba on this question. I shall read a few words of the peroration in the speech of seven hours made by Mr. Justice Prendergast in 1890 in the legislature of Manitoba:

> He had no doubt the bill would receive some majority in the House. The question will then be brought before the courts; they would appeal to every possible tribunal. They would not submit to the bill unless more tangible proof of its constitutionality were forthcoming. They would not submit. The consequences ahead might be most serious. For himself he declared that he would not submit to such taxation as was intended; and he would resist all efforts to distrain till they had the decision of the very highest tribunal of the land. When the Government could come back and say "This is the decision of the highest authority," then he, for one, and believed the whole Catholic people of Manitoba, would submit—sad but resigned; conscious that they had contended for the most elementary principles of Christianity; and they would look for homes in other countries where, perhaps, they would not find more favourable condition of things, but where the principle will not have been laid down that all contracts may be ruthlessly trampled upon; that right means something only when it is in the hands of the majority; and that the most solemn privileges are mere trifles in the hands of politicians to be used for party purposes.

This was the declaration of Mr. Prendergast in the Manitoba Legislature when he was opposing the passing of the school law in that province, about which there has been so much trouble since that time, but shortly after $2,000 appeared in the estimates, Mr. Prendergast was observed to change his views, and there is a long interview with that gentleman reported in the Toronto Globe of the 29th of November last, in which he announced a very great change in his views on the Manitoba school question. I merely state the facts. I am not going to state that this change of views was produced by this sum of $2,000 placed in the estimates providing the salary of a judge and promises held out to Mr. Prendergast that he would be appointed. I have no evidence such as would warrant me in saying that Mr. Prendergast acted from such very base motives as these. But I think that in another sense we have very strong evidence that this sum of money was put in the estimates with a view to affect Mr. Prendergast's public action on the question, and that the judgeship was held dangling before that gentleman for many months with a view to influence his action. I am sure, whatever we may say upon that subject, that we are all agreed upon this, that if Mr. Prendergast had not changed his views on that question, my hon. friend and his colleagues in the government would never have appointed him a judge. They have not been in the habit, since they came into power, of pouring favours upon those who are opposed to their policy, and it would be a very natural conclusion for us to come to that they were not acting upon a very different principle in this matter. The appointment was made when, I consider, it was unnecessary. It was made indecently, urging that there was an absolute necessity for the appointment. It was made without the authority and sanction of this parliament, placing the salary a permanent burden upon the revenues. It was held actually for months and months until Mr. Prendergast had announced his support, and until he became an active supporter of the government of my hon. friend in the policy they were pursuing with regard to the Manitoba school question, and I will say this much, whether Mr. Prendergast's public actions were influenced—they changed we know that—whether they were influenced by the prospect of this appointment or not, I must say I think it was extremely indecent—to say nothing of the charges made against him of committing offences against the election law—that he should in that by-election that was held to fill his own seat after he had resigned to accept a judicial position—continue to act as a violent partisan and be chairman of the committee of a political party. The appointment, as I have said, was indecent under the circumstances. I remember very well a case that came up in the other branch of this parliament a little more than a year ago. It was the appointment by the late government of Mr. Justice Masson to the County Court of Huron. While there was nothing in the world to show that that appointment had been held out to influence his political action—he had been a lifelong Conservative and remained so, and there was no change looked for by his friends—nevertheless he was appointed at the end of the first session of 1896, and his appointment called for some very strong comments on the part of gentlemen connected with the present administration who were then in opposition. I notice that no less an eminent constitutional authority than Mr. Edgar, the Speaker of the House of Commons, said in regard to this appointment:

> Why this sudden recommendation and sending Mr. Masson up to be sworn in on that particular day? Why, sir, it is because he had earned his reward, and he demanded his pound of flesh. If he had not made a bargain with the Minister of Justice—and the Minister of Justice denied it, and I believe him, of course. I do not think he would personally make such a bargain. But the facts prove it, and any jury on their oath would find there had been a bargain from the circumstances of the action and the results.

Then we see what Sir Richard Cartwright says. He is not generally disposed to mince matters, and he was not out of his usual way of feeling on this question. He says:

> This is a particularly attrocious job. In the first place, it is a piece of practical bribery of members, and that of the very worst sort. It is as clear as daylight that the late hon. member for North Grey had a pledge and a promise of that office, and he sat in the House with that promise in his pocket.

And I could read in the same strain from Mr. Mulock. Mr. Davies, the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, said :

> The appointment under the circumstances * * * * is a crime on the part of the government, and a shame and a disgrace to them. I say that Mr. Masson never can hold that independent positian which the county court judge of Huron ought to hold.
>
> I cannot exonerate him (the Minister of Justice) from being a party to an act which I say is a disgraceful act, of appointing a gentleman to a judicial position after the appointment has been kept dangling before him for 12 months—for the purpose of unduly influencing his political conduct.

I submit that whatever criticism may have been directed against that appointment, that the strong objections that are now directed against the action of this government, did not apply in the case of Mr. Justice Masson. There was no question of change in Mr. Masson's political views associated in any way however remote with the appointment. His name had been associated with the office. That was the only point of resemblance. His name had been connected with the appointment for some months before that time, and he sat in parliament during the time and after it was believed he had received this promise, although there was not very much evidence that he had received any such promise.

But in this case the complaint we make is that the office itself was created—was indecently created—not for any necessity that existed in Manitoba that there should be an additional judge, for we have the Minister of Justice's own law in the province of Ontario, limiting the number of judges to one for every 80,000 of the population, and the very action of the government up to within a month ago in not filling the appointment showed it was not any urgency in the public service that called for putting that amount in the estimates on that occasion. The further indecency is associated with it that Mr. Prendergast not only changed his views on a great public question, but that he remained an active partizan long after he resigned his seat in the local house, which resignation, it is well known to-day as it was then was to prepare the way to an appointment to the judgeship. He remained chairman of a party committee in St. Boniface election in February last, to say nothing of the offences with which he is charged in the sworn evidence which I have read. I want to say a few words as to what right or power parliament has in dealing with such cases as these. On that subject we have had a good deal of precedent in Canada. In 1893 or 1894 a very long debate took place in the House of Commons upon certain charges against the judiciary of New Brunswick in reference to the imprisonment of Mr. Ellis, for contempt of court. On that occasion Mr. Davies, a member of the present government, moved a very long resolution, which it is not necessary for me to read or give to the House in full, but I want to read the closing paragraph of that resolution as indicating very clearly the whole tenor of it. It is as follows :

> That the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick upon John V. Ellis in the month of October, 1893, for an alleged constructive contempt of court, contained in an article published by him on the Queen's County election herein referred was arbitrary, excessive, inimical to the public interest and deserving of censure and in so far as it added costs to the fine and imprisonment, without precedent.

This resolution was submitted and received the support of a large number of members in the House of Commons, in fact it was only defeated by the strictly party vote, the present premier of the country and all his friends voting for this resolution on that occasion. Mr. Laurier in discussing that resolution said among other things :

> I say that the theory of the British Government is that there is no power in the land, judicial or otherwise, that is above the review of Parliament.

Mr. Mills, our colleague from Bothwell in this House, who I am sorry is not present to-day, said :

> I find everywhere in the community a feeling that judges like other men ought to rest for their protection on these principles of law administered in the ordinary way which are regarded as adequate for every other class in the community. If there is special protection afforded to the courts, however proper that might be in a former period, except in very rare instances, it will be regarded with jealousy in our day.

I find that another very important debate occurred in the House a year previous to that, in 1893, they were known as the Tarte charges, when Mr. Tarte made very serious charges against the judiciary of Quebec. Mr. Tarte said, among other things :

> Is it not a fact that to-day the whole judicial system of Quebec is saturated with political partisanship.

Mr. Tarte continued :

> And, sir, when I see that among the judges that are acting to-day as commissioners, some of these judges have been tools in the hands of my hon.

friends on the other side. I thought I was within parliamentary rules in saying that they were paid for their services, I may be wrong and I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice and the acting Prime Minister to-day to that state of things.

And he continued to say a great deal more in that strain. Mr. Laurier said :

It is with the bench as with every other class of the community—the judges will be treated, not all with the same respect ; there will be some degree in the respect which is given them, but all will enjoy the respect, I believe, to which they are entitled and which their conduct deserves. * *

I say unhesitatingly that the present government have appointed men who have no other qualification for the position than that they have been party hacks. * * * * *

It is asserted, and I believe the truth will be forthcoming some day, that judges contributed to the election fund of the Conservative party at the last election. * * * * *

It is asserted, and hon. gentlemen know the names as well as I do, that judges of the province of Quebec have paid for their appointments.

I produce these extracts to show what a strong position our friends of the other side have taken in regard to these matters in other years. I could bring up other cases besides these I have cited to show the course pursued by the political friends of the Minister of Justice in the past with reference to the conduct of judges. A very large number of the members of the House of Commons voted for this resolution to censure and condemn the judge who sentenced Mr. Ellis. Sir John Thompson and Mr. Dalton McCarthy agreed, in that case, on the line of conduct which parliament should pursue. When two such authorities agree it is a pretty clear indication that their views are about right. Sir John Thompson says :

The hon. member has mentioned eight or ten instances in British history in which in the Imperial House of Commons the conduct and language of judges, or their demeanour on the benches, or their fitness to serve upon the bench has been brought in question. But I ask the House, I ask every member who listened to the hon. gentleman if the cases which he cited, and which show the range of discussion with regard to the judiciary in parliament do not prove that that range has been absolutely limited to these questions, the fitness of the judge—his deportment on the bench, the partisanship of his conduct, or his expressions in addressing juries as showing that he was departing from his business of laying down the law and that he was dealing with politics instead of law. That is the entire range which the discussion of the judiciary has taken in the British Parliament.

Then I find that Mr. Dalton McCarthy, following Sir John Thompson, expressed himself in almost a similar way :

The case in our own opinion that was referred to by my hon. friend, as he will see in a moment, was not in reference to the judgment of a judge. In that case the judge was accused of sitting on the bench while under the influence of liquor. That had reference to the conduct or misconduct of a judge, not to his judgment, and, therefore, did form a proper subject of investigation in this House. What I say is that with regard to matters of judgment, it is not wise or prudent for this House to attempt to review what we have not the power to rectify or set aside while on the other hand, we have full power and authority when the proper case arises to investigate, to consider and to rebuke the conduct or misconduct of a judge.

The view of Mr. McCarthy and Sir John Thompson as against that of Mr. Davies and Mr. Laurier and other gentlemen, was simply this : We have no right, said Sir John Thompson and Mr. McCarthy to sit in judgment on the judicial decisions of the bench. The administration of justice is wisely set apart from the work we have to do. Our work is legislative, and theirs is judicial. We have not the means, the evidence, the opportunity of hearing both sides. We have not the means of forming a judgment as they have. The duty has been assigned to them. We have a right to constitute the court to give decisions, but we have no right to sit in judgment on the decisions themselves. They agreed in this view as against that of Mr. Davies and others, and they were equally strong and decided on the other opinion, that parliament had the right and power to review the conduct of a judge as to his fitness for his position, and, in fact, his conduct in every respect, apart from the judicial decisions which he had rendered. I have also an opinion given by the Hon. Mr. Blake, when the Bothwell case was before the House in 1882. Mr. Blake said :

I have no quarrel with the statement of the hon. the first minister in part when he declared that a judge's conduct ought not be attacked at any rate with a view to an inquiry such as this unless the charge against him be one of serious impropriety—a charge I think the hon. member said, which if true would warrant his dismissal from office.

I come to another point, and that is with regard to the remedy. In my notice I have asked the government what they propose doing—if it is their intention to take any steps in regard to this subject, I have come to the conclusion, from the authorities I have quoted and from the investigation I have given to the subject, that the Senate and House of Commons of Canada are not empowered to move an address for the removal of a county court judge from the bench. I turn to the British North America Act, section 99, and I find there that such a remedy is provided in the case of the superior judges, and only the superior judges. I find that is the opinion of Sir John Macdonald, and the same may be found as the opinion of Bourinot on page 135. The foot note there says the proceeding by impeachment does not apply to county court judges. By referring to the Act of 1882, I find ample constitutional provision has been made for dealing with charges and complaints against county court judges for incapacity, misconduct or any other cause. The Governor in Council is clothed with complete power to institute inquiries, and it is for the purpose of putting the view I entertain on this case fully and fairly before the House that I have taken the step I have taken in order that the Minister of Justice may put in motion, as I conceive it to be his duty, the machinery provided in our law for the purpose of inquiring into this matter and finding whether the offences alleged to have been committed, and the misconduct in this instance, are of such a nature as would warrant the removal of Judge Prendergast from the bench of Manitoba by the Governor in Council. On this subject, in case there should be any doubt about it, I shall read what Sir John Macdonald said in regard to the Bothwell case in 1883 :

> He (Mr. M. C. Cameron) says that I knew that no complaint should be made against a judge unless it was by petition. He was quoting a case where a petition must be presented. Why? Because all these petitions were presented against a judge whose tenure of office depended on a vote of both Houses. But neither this House nor the other House, nor the two Houses together, can by any action of theirs remove a county court judge. That is another and a different tribunal.

That was his view, and I find that view is entirely in accord with Bourinot's opinion, and that the British North America Act only extends the power to proceed by address in the case of superior court judges and that an Act was provided in 1882 for inquiries into the conduct of county court judges and their removal for cause. The provisions of that Act are very wide in their reasons for removal. It is only necessary that a commission of judges of the superior court should be appointed to inquire into the matter, that they should give notice to the party accused of the charges made against him, and that he should have every opportunity of being heard in his own defence. My view is that the duty devolves on the Minister of Justice. There is no high court before which we can bring the hon. gentleman for making the appointment excepting this House, and here we can bring my hon. friend to account for having made such an appointment, for his own connection with that appointment under the circumstances. This is the only place where we can criticise my hon. friend and inquire into his conduct, but there is provided in the law an inquiry of such a nature as will bring Mr. Prendergast before his accusers, and where he will have every opportunity of clearing his character from the imputations which have been made against him if he is innocent. I could support my position by reference to a number of English cases I have notes of them here, and I have the books at my hand to which I could refer if it were necessary. I thought, perhaps, from observations which were made on a previous occasion, that my right to discuss this question freely might be challenged, and I was therefore prepared, should that position be taken, to support the course that I am taking, by authorities. However, as objections have not been raised, it is not necessary for me to produce these authorities. I dare say the point may be raised, that as we have no right in this House to move an address for the removal of a county court judge, and as my notion does not provide for an inquiry by this House, there may be some objection to the course which I have pursued in that regard. On another occasion my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) referred to the case of Baron Smith. In that case Mr. O'Connell made a charge against Baron Smith and moved for an inquiry with a view to remove him. Earl Grey, who was a leading member of the government, suggested to Mr. O'Connell that the ends of justice might be served by limiting his motion to a censure on the judge, as the offence was not of so serious a nature as would call for his removal. That view was concurred in by the government and was accepted and carried. Sometime afterwards Sir Robert Peel brought up a motion to rescind the vote of censure, holding that a vote of censure should not be permitted to remain on the minutes unless the judge was removed. I do not feel that I would be justified in moving a vote of censure. We have not both sides before us, and possibly an injustice might be done. I, therefore, decided to put the facts that I know of before the House and ask my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, to have a thorough and proper inquiry instituted in this matter under the provisions of the Act of 1882. It is a matter of very great regret, as I have already said, that Mr. Justice Prendergast did not avail himself of the opportunity that was given him, between the 29th April and the 4th June, of appearing before the court and giving his evidence in that matter. To that fact is due the public attention which has been drawn to this question and my own action in this House. Had he gone on the witness stand and been able, on his oath, to contradict the material allegations of these witnesses, there would then have been his evidence against theirs, and there would not rest that strong case which now exists, in the minds of the people, for an inquiry. But having failed to take advantage of that opportunity, which any man of honour would have taken, he has laid himself open to all the strictures and condemnations that have followed from that time forward, and this matter cannot be set at rest until the Minister of Justice takes what I conceive to be the proper course under the law, of appointing a commission of superior judges to inquire into this matter.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I understand my hon. friend to read some extracts from the evidence of both of the persons named in the notice?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, both of the parties who were examined.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This morning I received some papers from the learned judge. They appear to have been put on board the train, which may perhaps be the reason I did not get them more promptly. The papers refer altogether to one of the cases named, namely, Berthiaume. In his letter to me the judge states, to account for his delay:

I supposed from the telegraphic news contained in the press of the same morning, that this referred to the question brought by Hon. Mr. Ferguson concerning my participation in the late St. Boniface election, and on this somewhat vague information I wired in reply that I would send a full statement without delay.

I, however, tried in vain to procure the issue of the Witness you refer to, although I applied for the same at the Parliament Library and searched the files of the City Hall, which was the cause of some delay. It also took me some time to procure from the court stenographer, copy of the evidence at the trial in question, the exact nature of which I had not even taken the trouble to ascertain before. And lastly, most serious illness, the end of which my physician cannot foretell and which is prevailing still unabated in my family, was the next uncontrollable cause of some further delay in my reply.

I gather from such information as I could procure that I am charged (1st) with having corruptly approached one Berthiaume and promised him a government position whereby I secured his support in favour of Mr. Bertrand, the Liberal candidate in the St. Boniface election held in February last; and (2nd) with having hired one Roy to team electors to the poll on election day, and given him on one of my friends (Mr. Richard) order for money, which was paid by the latter. And it is boldly alleged that these charges are proved by the evidence which these very men, Berthiaume and Roy, gave as petitioners at the recent controverted election case relating to the said election.

I deny these charges, and I oppose to the same not only my own statement of the case, but also the very evidence adduced against me, a copy of which I have procured from the court stenographer at the trial, Mr. Perkins, and I now inclose herewith.

First as to Berthiaume:

I may say that I was, up to a few months ago, the only Liberal French Canadian in active politics here, and it was generally known amongst our section of the population, that I had several personal friends amongst the Liberal members of the Commons as well as amongst the members of the government.

Months and months before the elections, and during the election, and since the election, in fact ever since the 23rd of June last, parties in and outside of the constituency have come to me to the number of perhaps fifty or seventy-five, asking me to help them in securing some position or other in the civil service of the Dominion.

Mr. Berthiaume was simply one of these. I did not approach him as represented by some newspapers; it was he, as he himself states under oath, who came to me at my office in Winnipeg. It could not be ten days or two weeks before the election, as some would have him say; nor one month before, as he states—as I was at the time in Ottawa, as Hon. Mr. Sifton and others know, and I only returned here the second day before nomination. As a matter of fact, it was a month and a half before the election, long before the writs were issued.

Mr. Berthiaume sat down in my office and opened the conversation by saying he had come to ask me a favour. I asked him what it was. He replied that before telling me he wanted one thing to be understood—that was that his father and his family were all life-long Liberals, that he himself had always been a Liberal, and voted Liberal except once, in 1896, when he had voted for Lauzon against me upon personal grounds connected with a suit in my office; but, that as far as the next election was concerned, he would vote with his party, as he had always done with that one exception, and had fully made his mind as to that. Then, in two or three different forms, without one word on my part, he repeated that he did not want to have matters mixed, nor to be taken for what he was not; that the vote he was to give was one thing and the favour he wanted another; that as far as his vote was concerned it was assured to the Liberal party, and that it would not be altered in any way if I told him that I could not or would not grant him the favour he wanted.

He then proceeded to say that he wanted some situation connected with the Dominion Department of Public Works, as he was a builder of considerable experience and could satisfactorily inspect and superintend any kind of work in his line. He added that the party was indebted to his father, that he knew Mr. Monette, the member for Napierville in the Commons, and other prominent Liberals, to whom he had already written or was about to write. He spoke for about a quarter of an hour, with intervals of silence, during which time I did not put in a single word of any significance, busying myself chiefly, as he spoke, in revising a document which was before me on my desk.

I replied to him in a way which was little encouraging, pointing out the fact that these positions were very limited in number, and that even prominent Liberals to whom the party was particularly indebted had been unable to secure any appointment in spite of their very special claims. I then closed the conversation with the very non-committal expressions that I would try and help him, or do what I could or something to that effect. I did not even mention Mr. Bertrand's name, nor refer in any way whatsoever to the approaching election nor to the vote he was to give therein.

Such is the nature of that so-called corrupt bargain between Mr. Berthiaume, one of the petitioners, and myself.

I next saw him about two months later in Mr. Bertrand's committee rooms, when, of his own motion, he once or twice at the most told me that a couple of voters would likely go for Mr. Bertrand; but never did I ask him to see any one, or to take any part whatsoever in the election, nor did I consult him in any way concerning the same.

Now, you have the evidence, such as I procured it from the court stenographer. It is the very identical report coming directly from him. It bears out in every respect and particular the statement which I have made. Here are some extracts from his evidence:—

I have been a Conservative once in my life; that is, I have voted for the Conservative party once in my life. I never called myself a Conservative. I spoke to Mr. Prendergast about that office. He said many things. He said he would help me. This was a long while before the election; it was a month before, sure—It was more than a month—I went to his own office on Main street, and he told me that he would do what he could. I never was promised. I never received any promise. I don't think he asked me if I was going to vote for Mr. Bertrand; no, I don't think that he did ask me—No, he never asked me if I were voting for Mr. Bertrand. I don't think he ever asked me to help Mr. Bertrand all that I could. He did not tell me what he had done to get me this position in the government, He did not mention that—I was not on Mr. Bertrand's committee—As to doing any committee work for Mr. Bertrand, I spoke to some body, may be, about my own idea. I told my own idea to different people—I was not out going from house to house asking people to vote for Mr. Bertrand—I had not any canvassing book—I moved about very actively during the last week of the campaign—I went to the committee room for a whole week before the election, nearly every night—I did some canvassing—I did not offer any one any inducement to vote for Mr. Bertrand—I did not ask any one to take a drink with me over Mr. Bertrand's election—nor to take a meal with me—I never asked any one to work on that account—I was not employed anywhere in connection with that election—I was employed by the returning officer, Mr. Paradis, as poll-clerk—I did not handle any money during the election—nobody gave me any money to use during the election, not a dollar. During the last week of the fight, I guess that I went to Mr. Prendergast to tell him that so and so were voting for Mr. Bertrand, and so and so were voting against him. I went to see Mr. Bertrand and Mr. Prendergast, because I had it in my mind to get all the people I could to help me—I spoke to Mr. A. F. Martin about this position; my own idea is it was after the election—also to Mr. Chevrier—also to Mr. Paradis, after the election."

Now, sir, without commenting on the evidence you have in your hands, I will only ask Mr. Senator Ferguson and every fair-minded man of the Senate and Commons: what is there in this to incriminate me? When did I approach Berthiaume? When did I ask him to work or vote for Mr. Bertrand? What promise did I make to him? When, where and how did a corrupt bargain pass between us?

My wife is at this moment almost lying at the point of death, as Dr. A.F. Dame, my attending physician can certify, and I must ask you to be allowed to defer until the next mail my statement of that part of the case relating to the other petitioner Roy. I must also ask to keep until then the copy of his evidence for reference, although having announced above that I was inclosing it herewith.

Regretting that the present unfortunate circumstances under which I am labouring do not allow me the time and liberty of mind which I would require for a further statement.

I have the honour to remain, &c.,

That letter puts a different complexion altogether upon the case, as one would suppose it to have been from the extract my hon. friend read from the evidence. That letter relates to the one party (Berthiaume), and as to the other (Roy) I have not yet received the papers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—You will never receive them.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Mr. Prendergast says, with reference to the other case explaining what he had done to be in a position to answer me:

I must ask you to be allowed to defer until the next mail that part of the case relating to the other petitioner Roy. I must also ask to keep until then the copy of the evidence for reference.

I can say nothing about Roy, because at present I have no information in regard to it. My hon. friend thinks that Mr. Prendergast had plenty of time to answer. I must say, in my own dealing with the officers of my own department not residing in Ottawa, I never in a single case confined them to ten days or any such time, when more time was required. My hon. friend has limited Mr. Prendergast to some such time as that and has rendered it very difficult to get the information in time to have his statement here. My hon. friend quoted from Bourinot and other books for the purpose of showing the proper course to pursue. I find this general statement in Bourinot in reference to all the cases, as a summing of them all :

> The speakers of the English House of Commons now always interfere to prevent as far as they can all personal attacks on the judges and the courts of justice. They have always felt themselves compelled to say that "such expressions shall be withdrawn" and that "when it is proposed to call in question the conduct of a judge the member desiring to do so should pursue the constitutional course of moving an address to the crown.

My hon. friend says that there was no necessity for this judge. The reason he was appointed was because one of the other judges, whose junior he is now, had reported that he could not possibly get through the business, that he had given the matter a fair trial and could not possibly get through the business. I do not know this judge. Judge Walker is his name. It was in consequence of that, I understand, and the personal knowledge which the members of the government had, that the Order in Council was passed by the Manitoba government to add another judge. I do not know that there was any other reason to provide for the appointment of another judge than the necessity created by the need, in the administration of justice, that another judge should be appointed. The appointment of Judge Prendergast was made on the 2nd of April, and the occasion that my hon. friend referred to when the petitioners were examined was the 4th June, and on the 5th June he tells us the judge was sworn in. I assume that to be correct, although I have no information in regard to it except what my hon. friend has just given me. I heard nothing whatever of the charges my hon. friend is now making until he made them. No communication was made to me previous to the 2nd of April on the subject, and none on that day, and no communication was made in reference to what took place on the 4th of June. The first time I heard anything of the kind was when I saw the notice my hon. friend gave here. Therefore if it was not proper, under the circumstances—I do not say anything about that either way—to appoint Mr. Prendergast to the judgeship I had, and I have no materials to judge whether it was proper or improper. My hon. friend says that at all events I should have prevented the judge from being sworn in. I had no reason to prevent his being sworn in; otherwise I should have considered the matter after possessing myself of all the facts, and after giving an opportunity to the judge to give his statement as is done in the case of magistrates against whom complaints are made. When I was premier of Ontario there were complaints made against magistrates, and my invariable practice, which I thought was the proper practice in reason and according to precedent, was to call upon the magistrate complained of for an answer to the charge, and to give plenty of time for that purpose. If he could not get ready in ten days, he had a fortnight, and if he could not get ready in a fortnight, he had a month, or whatever time was necessary; and after getting his answer I came to a conclusion whether it was a proper case for removal. It is not in every case where a judge or magistrate is charged that a formal inquiry should take place. He may give such an explanation as shall satisfy the Minister of Justice or Attorney General, that there is no ground for the charge. My hon. friend says that Judge Prendergast changed his views in regard to separate schools, or the Manitoba School Act, and he tries to make out that it was in consequence of that change, or to induce that change, that he got the judgeship. My hon. friend knows very well there are very many Roman Catholic gentlemen in the various provinces who regard with indignation the school law passed by the Manitoba legislature, and yet are of opinion that it is better, under all the circumstances, to adopt some peaceful solution, who are not in favour of going on with a fight between the provinces of Canada upon this question, who think their own religion will be advantaged by avoiding a course of that kind. I believe that is the position of my hon. friend the Secretary of State. Nobody could feel more strongly than he does in regard to the impropriety of the Manitoba School Act. He has shown that throughout, from that time until now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He is of opinion that a peaceful and tentative settlement is better than to have a war arising out of religious differences. I have not the slightest reason to think, notwithstanding all the hon. gentleman has said, that the position which Judge Prendergast took in regard to the Manitoba schools, first and last, was anything else than a conscientious judgment that the course was the correct one. My hon. friend asks—and that is the whole object of his long notice—if the government intend to take any action in regard to the matter. My answer is that I do not intend to consider the matter until I am in possession of all the facts, which I am not at present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That will be on the last Day of Judgment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the House will be somewhat astonished at an eminent jurist, like the leader of the government in this House, taking the position that he has upon so grave a question as that which has been brought before him by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. If I understood him correctly, his position is that he read from the stenographer's statement as sent to him by Judge Prendergast, and the explanation of the judge himself as to the actual occurrence which took place during the election and his conduct throughout. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is the only course.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then my hon. friend's position is, that the stenographer's statement given to the accused, and the explanation of him who has been accused of the grave charge of having violated the election law, are quite sufficient to justify the Minister of Justice of Canada in holding him guiltless, notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend read from a certified copy of the evidence which was given at the election trial.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I said nothing about holding him guiltless.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says he said nothing about holding him guiltless. I admit that in words he did not say that, but no one listening to his remarks could have come to any other conclusion. The hon. gentleman said, after reading the judge's statement, that that put a different complexion upon the case.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear!

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the case established by the Minister of Justice, after reading a statement of the man who had been accused of doing a wrong. I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say, that he was not aware of Mr. Prendergast's violation of the election law when he had him appointed, but it is somewhat singular to me that no one in his department or in the government should have been made aware of it, or that the Minister of Justice himself, who, I take it for granted, is a constant and attentive reader of the newspapers—that he and all his government should have been utterly ignorant of the charges which had been made, and which had been proved, and yet in the face of that, in the face of the sworn evidence and the certified copy taken from the records as read by my hon. friend who has just spoken, we are told that the mere statement of Mr. Prendergast is quite sufficient to counteract any effect which might prevail in the public mind upon this charge. My hon. friend says that sufficient time was not given for Mr. Prendergast to answer and to send him a copy of the evidence which was taken in court Judge Prendergast had the same opportunity and precisely the same time to obtain the evidence from the record of the court in Winnipeg, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island had. My hon. friend had no knowledge other than what appeared in the newspapers when he put the question upon the notice paper, and called the attention of the House to the fact. The statement made in this House in reference to Judge Pendergast was sent to the public press in Manitoba, and the next day an answer was sent to the hon. gentleman stating, that a certified copy of the evidence which was given before the election court, before Judge Killam, would be mailed to him at once, and it was copied and sent to him. My hon. friend admitted a few days ago that he had wired the judge two or three times before he could get him to act. If he were as guiltless as the Minister of Justice, from the remarks which he has made, would have the world believe him to be, he should have taken the same course as the gentleman did who sent the copy of the official records to the hon. gentleman. who moved in this matter. Were my hon. friend occupying the eminent position of a judge in the Superior Court of Ontario, I scarcely think, having heard his judgments repeatedly when he was on the bench, that he would have committed himself as a judge, with the whole of the responsibility upon his shoulders, to the statements which he has made here today, and it only convinces me of the difference there may be and is, and is exhibited on every occasion by an hon. judge sitting upon the bench, adjudicating upon difficult questions of this kind; and when he becomes a politician and desires to serve his supporters. There must be a marked difference. If this gentleman was as guiltless as he says he is, why did he not, as soon as his lawyer, Mr. Howell, asked for an adjournment of the court in order to put him and the gentleman who was accused of corrupt practices in the witness box, and prove under oath the falsity of the charge, rather than by the mere statements which he makes here to be read in the Senate chamber—why, I ask again, did he not go at once to the court and contradict the statement made by these two men, who swore positively and distinctly, not that he gave them money, but that he gave them an order —and mark the ingenuity with which he makes the statement that he handled no money upon these occasions. No one accused him of handling money. What he is accused of is, being chairman of a committee, of promising a man his support for a certain office, which he proposed to obtain for him from the Dominion government, that he hired a man under the circumstances mentioned to the House and gave an order upon the treasurer of the committee to pay him. That is the evidence. The hon. gentleman is altogether in error in reference to this 226th clause of the Manitoba Election Act, when he says that there must be a motive. It matters not whether there is a motive or not —the law is plain, distinct and positive. It says that if a man did a certain thing—hires a team, or promises an office in violation of this law—he is guilty of an infraction of the law and subject to fine and imprisonment. It is not necessary to prove a motive in case of a violation of a law of that kind. Perhaps it may be considered presumption in me, as a layman, to discuss questions of this kind, but the law is so plain and distinct that any layman, even though an illiterate man, if he can read at all, cannot come to the conclusion that you must establish a motive for such an infraction of the law. His motive was to win the election and in order to do so, paid for taking voters to the polls. Now the hon. gentleman's defence of Mr. Prendergast in the position he took on the school question, is well worthy of his ingenuity. I must confess I could not help smiling when I heard it. Here is a gentleman forming one of Mr. Greenway's government. The school question arose, became a burning question among the different parties in Manitoba, and he, being one of those who believe the minority had certain rights taken fro n them, resigned his position in the cabinet. He made a most inflammatory speech —much more earnest, I am sure, in condemnation of the act of the government than my hon. friend could make in his defence. He remained in that position until, by some process or other—I do not desire to throw out any insinuations, I am only taking the facts as they occurred—a sum was placed in the estimates of last session of parliament to provide for the payment of an extra judge in Manitoba. As soon as that appeared, and as soon as it was decided to appoint a judge, although no bill was introduced to give them the power and authority for making that appointment. When the government was attacked upon that point the Solicitor General, the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, said the appointment was only temporary, and, as a matter of fact, no law exists yet which justifies the appointment of that judge, so that in fact he occupies only a temporary position; but a marvellous transformation took place in the opinion of Mr. Prendergast almost immediately on that estimate being passed by parliament. He then began to see new light, to see the impropriety of raising sectarian questions; he then began to think that it was much better that these sectarian divisions should be removed from the political arena, and he was prepared, after the Minister of Public Works visited Winnipeg, and after the premier, Mr. Laurier, had been in that country, to accept the compromise.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY — And Judge Routhier?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know nothing about Judge Routhier, who seems to haunt the hon. gentleman day and night. We find all at once that this man Mr. Prendergast began to adopt a moderate course, and to our astonishment, he finally became an ardent supporter of the Greenway candidate who was running in opposition to Mr. Bertrand, who condemned the settlement of the school question and pledged himself positively to oppose the government which Mr. Prendergast had left, and which he had condemned with equally violent language. It would be improper for me to say here that Mr. Prendergast was actuated, in the conversion which took place in so short a time, by a prospect of a judgeship in the future, but we do know this, that after this election trial—after the evidence had been taken—after it had been proved in court that he had violated the law—after the lawyer who was prosecuting the case asked for an adjournment in order to put Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Richard in the box to answer the distinct and positive declaration that had been made by these two witnesses—Mr. Howell, the lawyer instead of placing Mr. Prendergast, who was not then a judge and Mr. Richard, who is a merchant in Winnipeg, in the witness box, came to the court and said:

> Since I have read the evidence given by the two witnesses, I think it would be useless to go on contesting the case and I desire to withdraw all our objections, leaving Mr. Lauzon in peaceful possession of his seat in the Legislature of Manitoba.

Then, what follows? This evidence was before the country two months before Mr. Prendergast was sworn into office. Then it became known to the public that Mr. Prendergast was to be appointed as judge. The press called attention to the violation of the law, a violation which subjected him to a penalty and imprisonment. Next followed the motion of my hon. friend, who called the minister's attention to it; and then the government, after their attention had been called to it, allowed this man to be sworn into office as a judge. That is the position my hon. friend the Minister of Justice occupies to-day. I am surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Ferguson), who is a close student of politics, should express any astonishment whatever at this course. If he knew anything of the actions of the government of Ontario in the past, he would know this: that the greater the political crime committed by a supporter of that government, the greater, apparently, the recommendation for appointment to office by the hon. gentleman opposite. Does he want a few illustrations? While my hon. friend was premier of Ontario a gentleman known as Major Walker ran against my hon. friend behind me (Sir John Carling) in London. In the election trial that man was put in the witness box and gave evidence of what he had done. What did Justice Haggarty say? "After hearing your evidence, you might as well ask me to believe that a man dipped in Lake Ontario would come out dry, as to make me believe your statement," or words to that effect, and he disqualified Major Walker during that parliament. Then what followed? My hon. friend appointed him to one of the most lucrative offices in Ontario, that of registrar of the county of Middlesex. That is one case. Do you want another? There was a gentleman named Currie, who represented Lincoln, who embezzled the money of widows and orphans to such an extent that, when he was brought before the bar of Ontario, he was disrobed. My hon. friend gave him a good office. Then take the Apjohn case in Algoma. His conduct, with that of two or three others, was of such a character that they were prosecuted and Apjohn was condemned to pay a sum of $1,000 penalty. A law was introduced removing the penalties from the other violators of the law. There is another very interesting case. My hon. friend is very sensitive, and justly so, when his administration is attacked. I should not drag the Ontario politics into this arena.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend from Halifax says hear, hear, but when a similar question comes up, and when the policy is being pursued in the Dominion which is exactly in accord with, and analogous to, that which has been pur sued in Ontario, I have right to call the attention of the House to what we may expect in the future when questions of this kind come before us. My hon. friend will not forget the case in Renfrew lately, where there was an election, and a certain gentleman who ran for the constituency was beaten, and he desired to protest the election of the successful candidate. My hon. friend knows that he pleaded most earnestly with the party who was seeking an office, which he told him he could not give unless he had the approval and recommendation of Mr. Dowling, the man whose election was contested; but he begged him in the most pathetic manner, with that plausible tone which he adopts in this House, not to prosecute the poor fellow—that if he knew anything against him and the member was unseated, it would only hurt the party, and no matter what the offence against the laws of the country was—no matter how corrupt the act committed in the interest of the political friend, if it was going to hurt the party, rectitude and political honesty might fly to the winds. That I may not be misunderstood, and that it may not be said that I am stating what is not strictly correct, I shall read the two letters which the hon. gentleman wrote to this applicant for a position under the Ontario government. The hon. gentleman on March 15th, 1883, when the case was about going to court, wrote to Mr. Hickey of Renfrew as follows:

TORONTO, March 15, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have your letter of the 12th March. From what you say of your services to the Liberal party you certainly are entitled to every consideration. As your letter is marked private, I cannot without your permission communicate its contents to Dr. Dowling. The appointment must be made on his recommendation, though his nominee must be a fit person. With regard to your taking steps to unseat him, do not forget that by unseating Dr. Dowling, if this should be in your power, you accomplish something much more important, and that is you do an injury to the cause which you have so long supported. I have not seen the copy of the Pembroke Observer which you mention in your P.S. as having sent to me.

Yours truly,

(Sgd) O. MOWAT.

JOHN A. HICKEY, Esq.,
Eganville, P.O., Ont.

P.S.—Since the above was written, I have received and answered your telegram.

Then, in reply to the second communication—it is to be regretted we have not the whole record of this transaction in order that the country may be in a position to judge of the matter. My hon. friend wrote:

TORONTO, April 2, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have your letter of the 26th which, partly through absence from the city and partly from pressure of business, I have not before acknowledged. It is really impossible to deal with the inspectorship except through Dr. Dowling. I am extremely sorry for the trouble that has arisen about it. I think it possible that I may before long have an opportunity of recognizing your continued services (as I have learnt from you) to the party, though there is no opening in any of the departments just now.

I hope that in the general interest you will do what you can to defeat the petition, which I see has been filed, and thereby afford another proof of your good feeling towards us.

Yours truly,

(Signed) O. MOWAT.

JOHN A. HICKEY, Esq.,
Renfrew, Ont.

That there may be no misapprehension as to the authenticity of the letters, I give the following from the officer of the court:

I hereby certify the above to be true copies of the letters of the Hon. O. Mowat, filed at the trial of the South Renfrew (local) election petition against the return of John Francis Dowling, M.M.P.

C. C. ROBINSON,
Registrar of Court.

AURORA, Aug. 12, 1884.

No matter what Mr. Dowling may have done, that was a matter of very little consequence, but if it were going to hurt the party, you must not under any consideration take any steps to have him unseated; and if you will only behave yourself for a little while, and get Mr. Dowling's consent, I will appoint you to an inspectorship as a reward for having failed to give evidence of a violation of the law, which was the duty of the attorney general to have punished to the fullest extent. That was the position of the present Minister of Justice. The question of party intervenes, and that was of infinitely more importance than that the law of the land, or justice between man and man, should prevail. A case occurred the other day in Winnipeg. Perhaps my hon. friend is not aware of the circumstance. I shall give the facts as they have transpired, and shall then listen with a good deal of interest for an ingenuous defence of this appointment.

The other day in Winnipeg Mr. Sifton appointed a man by the name of King to an immigrant agency. King had been accused of and convicted of having committed an act which is tantamount to, if not actually direct perjury, yet Mr. Sifton did not hesitate to justify the appointment, and, what is still worse, justify the action of this man King. Under the circumstances Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper asked how it came that Mr. King, an immigrant agent in Winnipeg appointed by Mr. Sifton, had been accused of an offence tantamount to perjury? He referred to the case of King vs. Roche, the Marquette contested election case, in which Mr. King, after charging Mr. Roche by affidavit, with all the offences in the Code, admitted in the court that he knew nothing about any of them, evoking from the bench the censure that it was an abuse of the process of the court. Mr. Sifton was surprised that an ex-Minister of Justice should brand a man with perjury because on cross-examination he had not been able to show knowledge of the various allegations in an affidavit which his solicitor had advised him to make. The thing was common enough, and every lawyer knew it. He admitted Mr. King had been wilfully careless.

This was another election case: in which perjury would be justifiable if it only happened to hoist a member of the Commons who was a conservative. I do not believe that my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, would deliberately draft an affidavit charging another man with all the crimes in the political criminal calendar, and then ask a man to swear to that deliberately and positively as having knowledge that he believed him to be guilty of all those crimes, without first asking the man whether he had any knowledge of the contents of the affidavits and of the statements made therein. I should be very sorry to believe that he would do a thing of that kind. Then Mr. Sifton says what is still more astounding to a layman like myself, "the thing was common enough and every lawyer knew it." He admitted King had been "wilfully careless"—wilfully careless in doing what? In making a solemn affidavit that the member for Marquette had been guilty of crimes which would not only have unseated him, but would have subjected him to heavy pecuniary penalties, and also to imprisonment. Sir Charles Tupper very properly said in reply, that he was pained that Mr. Sifton should take such a light view of so serious a case. He would defy him to lay the facts before Sir Oliver Mowat and get such an opinion as he expressed. Nor did he think that after the denunciation of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Attorney General of any province other than Manitoba would have allowed such a man to go unpunished. Not only was King guilty of culpable carelessness, as Mr. Sifton admitted, but having acknowledged that he knew nothing of any one of the charges against Mr. Roche, to which he had sworn to, and that he didn't even know why he had made them, King was clearly guilty of everything that constituted the crime of perjury. It was all very well for Sir Oliver Mowat in the Senate to try to improve the criminal law, but what would his efforts amount to with a colleague in the Commons who says that making a false affidavit is excusable because the man was told to do so by his solicitor—and Mr. Sifton, too, a member of the bar? To this vigorous roasting Mr. Sifton answered not a word. Had his case come under my notice lately, when the criminal code was under consideration, I should have deemed it my duty to move, whether the House would have accepted it or not, an addition to that code which would make it punishable by fine and imprisonment for any minister to appoint a man who had been guilty of an act of this kind, to any responsible position under the government; and I am inclined to think that that act would justify the government in adding a clause to the criminal code to that effect; and if they would not, they have sunk low in political morality. I apologize for bringing this under the notice of the House, but I have done so, because I was surprised and astonished—I would say astounded, not at the open and declared defence of Judge Prendergast, but at the ingenious apology of my hon. friend who knows so well how to turn a corner when it is necessary to befriend a friend,—I am surprised that he should have adopted a course in this House which he followed in his own province, of rewarding those who had been proved to be guilty of grievous political offences. I could instance a dozen more cases, but I do not think it is necessary. We were told the other day, and that, too, by the Minister of Justice, that because a man's father-in-law said to the Postmaster General, "if you appoint my son-in-law to this office,

I shall resign," that that was a violation, if not of the word, at least of the spirit of the Criminal Code, and therefore dismissed him, without a particle of evidence to show that the man had been appointed to the office or had had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the correspondence that took place between his father-in-law, the member from Annapolis, and the Postmaster General; but it was quite sufficient for the government to know that the postmaster asked to have another man appointed and that then he would resign, to justify his dismissal from office. While we have these cases to which I have called the attention of the House of appointing persons guilty of flagrant violation of the law, I hope they are not to be repeated.

I do not accuse my hon. friend, or the government of which he is a member, of rewarding other criminals. It is only when a political offence is committed that it is done. I hope the day will soon come when the government, and the hon. Minister of Justice in particular, will take steps to punish to the fullest extent of the law, any one, I care not who it may be, who is found guilty of violating the law. He might well take a leaf out of the book of the late Sir John Thompson, who, immediately upon violations of the criminal law being called to his attention, and that, too, by some of his own party, did not hesitate one moment to bring the offenders before the courts and have them tried legally, and convicted and punished. I know the statement has been made—"Oh, yes; but when you put them in jail you let them out." But the law was vindicated. It matters not whether they remain in jail one month or six months, it proved this fact, that the Attorney General of Canada, when a violation of the law was brought to his notice, did not hesitate one moment to perform the duty which devolved upon him as Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and insist on having them prosecuted. And my hon. friend opposite helped him in doing so by appointing, if my memory serves me right, a lawyer to prosecute on behalf of the Crown (he being then Attorney General for Ontario), in addition to the lawyers and barristers selected and paid by the Dominion Government for prosecuting. That is a course I should like to see every Minister of Justice take.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And after they had been sent to prison I understood that the then Minister of Justice ordered their release.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I referred to that fact. I stated that that had been the case. I do not desire to go into a defence of that action. The Minister of Justice ought to know that they had been there for months before they were released—that it was done on the certificate of physicians; one of them, I believe, furnished by Dr. Landerkin, a supporter of the present government in the other House.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—And one of the men released died soon after.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to say that; proving the correctness of the doctors' certificates. What I did say was that no matter whether they were reprieved or not, the law was vindicated in its majesty. The attorney general at the time, instead of making a plea in their defence, had them tried and sent to jail, and whether they were in prison for one month, two months or ten months, the law was vindicated, and it was a warning to all men in the future not to do as they had done. That is a question that I might argue for an hour, but I do not propose to do so. I felt that it was my duty, under the circumstances, when I saw that the same policy is being pursued by the present government in connection with violations of the election laws, as was followed by my hon. friend in Ontario while he was premier of that province, to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that we are to have a continuation of it here, and to try and induce, if I possibly could by any word of mine, the law officers of the Crown not to interfere on behalf of criminals—not to appoint them to lucrative positions, but to punish them and send them to jail on every occasion when the law provides that they shall be so punished. If the government did not know that Judge Prendergast had been guilty of this offence, their attention having been called to it, it is their duty to see that he has full opportunity to defend himself in such a manner as to justify his retention on the bench. You could scarcely expect him to punish another man who will be brought before him for an offence which he himself has committed and for which he has been rewarded. I leave the case with the hon. gentleman, and if he has no better defence for violations of the law than he has given to-day, the sooner he reforms and adopts the principles of his party—or rather the name of the party, I withdraw that word principle—and plays the part of an actual true reformer, the better it will be for justice and the good of this country.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I certainly did not expect to be the object of vituperation such as the hon. gentleman has delivered himself of on this question. During the two sessions that I have been in the Senate this is the first time that I believe any member of the Senate has been made the object of personal attack.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny making a personal attack, it was a political not personal.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The hon. member has been hunting up old election stories told of me during my quarter of a century of public life as premier of Ontario. Every one of the cases which the hon. member refers to has been the subject of discussion on platforms during the elections, and what has been the result? The people of the country in every instance negatived every charge made against me. In every instance during that long period I had the support of the people of this country, notwithstanding all charges that were made against me. There were circumstances which justified every appointment which was made, and to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and those circumstances were laid before the people. It would take a long time to discuss them now—my course was endorsed by the people on every one of these occasions. My hon. friend says I defended Judge Prendergast. I have neither defended him nor attacked him; I have neither said he was guiltless nor guilty; but I have said that I did not mean to consider the case until I had all the facts before me. That is the principle upon which I always act. That is the ground upon which every judge should act, and upon that ground I am bound to act in the position which I occupy in regard to such matters. I do not want now to discuss them. I do not want now to say how far a man is guilty of a crime which should disqualify him for the bench because he has paid a cabman at an election four or five dollars, or because a voter comes to him and asks for his help, and he says he will give him his help; I do not want to discuss whether those are such serious crimes as to disqualify, because I do not know all the facts. They may be better than stated here or they may be worse. If they require consideration they shall receive consideration, and the best judicial ability I can bring to bear on them. My hon. friend read with great emphasis a couple of letters of mine as if they condemned me for ever before the public of this country and this House. He has misinterpreted those letters. He has given them a meaning which they do not possess. My hon. friend is an old politician. He knows that many things upset elections which are not fraudulent and not corrupt, but mere informalities. I had no doubt there was nothing corrupt in the election of Dr. Dowling. I had no doubt, from what I knew of Dr. Dowling and what I knew of the election, that he had done nothing culpable in a moral sense. Sometimes an election is set aside without any moral guilt connected with it, and we all feel when such cases occur that a man—a friend—should not set up such irregularities, but the hon. member chooses to give to my letters the construction that I was endeavouring to keep back proofs of corrupt conduct which this man had in his possession. There is no foundation for that charge. The hon. member referred to Sir John Thompson's course in certain cases. I do not intend to go into those cases. I have respect for his memory. He is gone from us now and I am not disposed to call to mind what may be said with regard to the cases referred to. Many things were said at the time which I might repeat if I were to follow the example of the hon. member in speaking of me, but I do not choose to do that. These are all old matters. My hon. friend has brought up here and occupied the attention of the House in discussing dead issues which had been slain long since when submitted to the people. One of these cases the hon. gentleman has given us the date of. Some of them are older than that one, but that one he gave was in 1883. He has gone back fourteen years to find something against me; but whatever he and his friends endeavoured to do in that respect when I was premier of Ontario, they failed entirely; and I venture to say that I will stand as well with the Senate, notwithstanding the observations of the hon. gentleman, as if those observations had not been made. I have no apprehension of being lessened the respect of the Senate by these observations which the hon. member has made, and the charges which he has brought causelessly against me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the last few minutes I have been casting my eye over the examination of Mr. Bertrand, one of the official documents we have here, and the only one, and I am amazed at the shallow basis upon which an attempt has been made to found a charge against Mr. Prendergast. I venture to say you will not find a parallel to it in the whole history of Canada. Mr. Prendergast was an old politician of many years' experience. In the month of January last, or December—the time seems somewhat uncertain from the papers—a man who knows he had been working with him says he wants to get some employment or to get some office, and he asks Mr. Prendergast if he will not help him. Was Mr. Prendergast wrong to say that he would help him? It is said that this action was to change his politics. I find this man states on oath that he has been a Liberal all his life, and only voted Conservative upon one occasion, and yet Mr. Prendergast is to be condemned because he says he will help this man. How did he help him? Simply made a promise to help him. It was not consequent upon his voting one way or the other in the slightest degree, and it was six months ago that Mr. Prendergast met this man.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No; not six months ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; he says it was in the month of January.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The election was in February.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One month before the election.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He came down to two weeks.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is splitting hairs. That was in the month of January or the month of February—the idea of a transaction occurring then—and what the man asked was that he would help him to get an office, or to get some employment, I believe, were the words. Is there a man in this chamber that has not, over and over again, when he was before the people and when he has been asked if he will not help a man or voter to obtain some employment, promised to do it? I have done it a thousand times in the last forty years.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And I would not be worthy of being in the position I hold if I did not promise to do it. I believe in the cause which I am advocating, and I think it is fair and reasonable, and there is not an hon. gentleman in this House who has ever appeared to a constituency if he was asked "I want to get some employment, will you help me?" who would not say "Certainly, I will." If that is to be an offence, everyone of us is committing an offence. If that is an offence and the whole of the statement here—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why did he not defend himself.?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because he had an utter contempt for the charge that was made. He did not suppose that a body of intelligent men would regard that as a charge, because there is nothing in the nature of the charge about it. Did this man Bertrand get any employment? No, he did not. The whole thing is visionary and based on air. All that is said is that in January last, when Mr. Pendergast was perfectly free to make any statements he pleased, he told this man he would help him. Did he mention any particular office? No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What about the carters?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not the papers before me. I have no doubt those charges were as hollow as the other. I did not take any stock in the charges, because I thought they would turn out to be baseless and I paid no attention to the matter until the papers were handed to me, a few minutes ago. I know the hon. gentleman's feeling in the matter, and it is quite unnecessary for him to interrupt me. If any hon. gentleman would take up the papers and read them it would not be necessary to make any further inquiry,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What are you reading from?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the stenographer's report I am reading from.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the one from which the hon. Minister of Justice read?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, he says he never was promised or never received anything. Why? Mr. Prendergast was not in any position to give him an office. There was nothing corrupt in Mr. Prendergast making a promise. My hon. friend may read the law, but do you suppose any judge and jury in Canada would stultify themselves to that degree by conjuring up a case against a man because one individual asks another "Will you help me"? If he got a position there might be something in it, but it does not appear to have gone any further. He says "Will you help me," and the man says "Yes, I will help you," and there is the whole thing in a nut shell, and Mr. Prendergast was perfectly free to say this, because he was not a judge for some little time after that. The thing is so perfectly idle that I can not conceive how any hon. gentleman can for one moment torture statements of that kind into a charge. I do not think it is fair to Mr. Prendergast. I did not follow the dates because I did not look at the papers until they were put into my hands a few minutes ago, but he is now sworn in as a judge. Is it a right thing to attack a judge as he has been attacked to-day, and slander him as he has been slandered, and to say he has been guilty of a corrupt practice and a crime? Is it fair, or is it honest or proper, or has it ever been done before in this Senate? It has never b en done. I am glad to say the records of this chamber are too pure to be soiled by a charge made against a judge without some kind of foundation. I have before me any amount of authority, if it is necessary to quote it, showing that we ought to be exceedingly sensitive about making charges against judges. It should be only on petition and then only when the facts have been stated, and when he has had the charge laid before him and asked to explain. He is on the level of a county court judge and the statute which would govern this case provides that a judge of the county court may be relieved from office by order of the Governor in Council on the ground of ill-health or any other cause or misbehaviour established to the satisfaction of the governor provided the circumstances respecting the inability, incapacity or misbehaviour have first been inquired into by virtue of and under an order of the Governor in Council and that the judge had been given notice of the time and place appointed for the inquiry, and have been offered an opportunity by himself or by his council of cross examining the witness and adducing evidence on his own behalf. Has that been done?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the inquiry I am asking the government to make.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman makes a charge and does not give the accused an opportunity. There is the law. The Governor in Council has not the power to trump up a charge against Judge Prendergast. The law does not authorize them to do it. The law says that before any action is taken, the circumstances—the inability, incapacity or misbehaviour must first be inquired into by virtue of and under an Order in Council. That is the first preliminary stage, that an Order in Council must first issue and an inquiry be made at which the witnesses shall be examined, and a judge or jury shall have an opportunity of cross-examining him. Has that been done? No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why do not you do it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is not any charge that a Governor in Council would for one moment listen to.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not desire to take any part in the discussion. I do not know anything about it. But I want to understand it. I believe the ground taken in the case of this gentleman is that he should not have been appointed judge because he committed an illegal act before he was appointed. What the hon. gentleman is reading, about promising to help to get an office, is perfectly legitimate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the illegal act.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—No; do not get away from it. The charge is that he paid a man $5 to a voter at an election, and that is the corrupt act. That is the way it strikes me; but I wish to understand it. The charge is that the hon. Minister of Justice appointed this gentleman to office after he knew that he had been guilty of this corrupt act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; there are two charges. In the papers which I have read there is only the one charge, that he promised to help the man named Bertrand to get some position. As to the other charge, I have not seen the papers. They are not before me, and I have never had an opportunity of examining them—that is, the paying of some four or five dollars to a cabman. I take the ground that it is not the proper method of laying the charge. We are trying him on mere report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not Judge Prendergast that we are trying but the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that is really what it is, because he sees that it was no use fighting with an impossibility, and with the exercise of common sense and judgment he has decided that the proper way to obtain relief is in a particular direction, and that is why the attack is made. There is no doubt about it at all, otherwise the gentlemen who are so keen to destroy his reputation would not show the feeling they do at the present time. There are two charges. I analyzed one of the charges, and the other we have not before us. I understand the other one is based on the payment of four or five dollars.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Did the Minister of Justice know that Mr. Prendergast was guilty of that when he appointed him to office?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; he knew nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If my understanding is wrong, I wish to correct it. My understanding is that they were aware at the time that he was guilty of this offence, and he is disqualified from being appointed judge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was present at the meeting of the council when he was appointed, and I never heard of its being brought up. But what I lay down as a principle is, that the law is clear that before any publicity is given to it or charge made, the circumstances shall be inquired into by an order of the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council shall require an explanation, and before the charge is culminated the judge will be called upon to give his answer and examine the witnesses. I do not know what the other papers may disclose, but I confine my observations to the documents before me, and I say it is unworthy of any gentleman to attempt to defame the character of a judge upon the slender pretext that an old politician applies to a man and says can't you do something for me, and the man says, Oh, certainly I will. But he does nothing. The man was satisfied. We all have to say: "Oh, I will help you." It is perfectly legitimate and perfectly proper, and the idea of trying to build up a charge of corrupt practice on a mere verbal statement of that kind is as hollow and baseless as any charge I have ever heard of.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to say a few words in answer to what the hon. Secretary of State has said, and I will endeavour to make him understand the difference between a charge made against a judge and a charge made against a government. He has not come to that point yet. He did not understand the question put by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson). The question put by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island was: "What will the government do in this matter." The hon. gentleman did not understand the question and he does not want to understand it. He brings up now this assertion that there is an accusation against a judge, and says "you are accusing a judge here and that is not the proper way to deal with the question." We are not accusing the judge, but charging the government with not taking the proper step to vindicate the law when a judge is accused here, not by any member of this House, but by testimony given in court. And what is Mr. Prendergast's defence? The charge was made in court, and on two points; first on a charge of promising a position, and secondly on the charge of hiring carters. Mr. Prendergast takes up one of the two charges, where a motive of his action must be proved in court, and says, "I had not that motive imputed to me; I had no corrupt motive, so give me the benefit of the doubt." But on the other point, where there is no necessity of proving any motive, where the mere fact of hiring a carter is a corrupt practice, what is the defence of Mr. Pendergast? He has no defence, and he cannot bring in a defence, and the hon. Minister of Justice will wait till the end of the session and the day of last judgment before getting an answer. He will never get it. But the session will be over and the Minister of Justice will say that the public interest requires the government to go no further. Unable to defend Judge Prendergast themselves, they endeavour to come out of the difficulty and accuse the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson) of doing what he is not doing, of attacking the judge, while he is really charging those who do not vindicate the majesty of law violated by Judge Prendergast.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—When I heard the remarks made by the hon. Secretary of State I asked myself whether he really was acting in defence of Judge Prendergast or not. I do not know whether his remarks were intended as a defence, but it seemed to me that if that was all the defence he had to offer, and if that was the only way in which he was able to defend himself, if the hon. gentleman has had much experience in criminal matters, he must have succeeded in getting off very few criminals. I can quite understand that my hon. friend has sympathy with Mr. Prendergast in this matter, because they both had the same views on one question which was before them, and they both took opposite views about the same time in different ways. I would not make the accusation that the hon. Secretary of State would be influenced in his change of views, but I think the people who know Mr. Prendergast and all connected with him are perfectly satisfied about what has influenced him in his change of views. There is no doubt among those in the province of Manitoba and those who have known Mr. Prendergast for a long time that the change in his views was influenced by the promise of a judgeship. It is all very well for the hon. Secretary of State to read the evidence of Mr. Berthiaume and to say there was no promise made by Mr. Prendergast in that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Supposing a promise had been made, what did it amount to?

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I heard the letter of Mr. Pendergast read by the Minister of Justice, and I saw how carefully he guarded himself when he discussed what was done with Mr Berthiaume. Berthiaume came to him and said:—"You must recollect I was always a Liberal until the last time, and the last time I voted Conservative."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He said he voted Conservative only once?

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Yes, but now he says "I want you to do something for me: you just obtain a position for me, but recollect it is not to influence you or me whether you do it or not. I am going to vote for you whether you give me anything or not," and I thought to myself of what Shakespeare says, methinks the hon. gentleman "doth protest too much." That is the way Mr. Prendergast guarded himself. But why should we take this case of Mr. Prendergast only? Fifteen days elapsed since Mr. Prendergast was asked to make a return with regard to this, and he sends down the evidence which is least likely to incriminate himself; and he has not sent yet, and the Minister of Justice is not able to take up the evidence as to the actual point where he was proved guilty of corrupt practice, and how can we expect this matter to be gone into when the Minister of Justice states he will not take the matter up and will not ventilate it until such time as Prendergast chooses to furnish him with the evidence in regard to the other matter? He might have furnished both depositions together, and as I cannot believe from what the Minister of Justice has said, that he has had that information in his hand; if it is not here it has been held back by Mr. Prendergast, because he knows if he had all the evidence here it would incriminate himself in every way.

It may be that we deserve the stigma the Secretary of State has cast upon us, that we are not an intelligent and enlightened body if we cannot see the matter through the same spectacles as he does. Perhaps that is so. But a number of us are in that position, that we cannot see the matter in the same light as he does. By the evidence taken in court Prendergast was proved to have been guilty of a corrupt practice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—He was given an opportunity by his own counsel, who apparently could not imagine he was guilty of corrupt practices, and who asked to have the case put off to permit him to come and deny it; but when the case was called he was afraid to appear and deny the charge, because he knew he could not deny it. With regard to the law which the hon. Secretary of State read in regard to this matter, he read the law only as it governed his own actions. His government has to take the initiative. We cannot force them to do so if he says, "We won't pass the Order in Council, we cannot force them; and he shelters himself under that.

But I say, the evidence produced by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island is most disgraceful as regards Prendergast, and he only asks the government one single question, whether they are going to take any action in this matter. I have heard our leader pitched into, but I have failed to hear them say whether, in the event of the evidence being brought down, if the Minister of Justice ever does insist that that evidence should be produced before him, and that evidence warrants him in taking action —I have yet to hear him say whether he will take such action as the evidence warrants.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION BILL.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved that the House do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think we should have the sense of the House on this motion. We should meet to-night. The business of the country should be carried on. I do not see why we should adjourn now, because we could do a lot of work between now and twelve o'clock. I call for the yeas and nays.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I ask for the yeas and nays.

The motion to adjourn being put to the House, it was declared lost on the following division:

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I apprehend that the House is anxious to know whether there is any truth in the rumour that Mr. Sifton has left Ottawa to proceed to Winnipeg to confer with the Manitoba government in reference to the Manitoba school question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has had a notice on the paper pretty persistently during the session as to the movements of the papal delegate and the various phases of the Manitoba school question. I do not think the constant bringing of the question before the public will help it. The hon.

gentleman knows my views. A delicate matter of that kind is not helped by discussion. The negotiations—if there are any negotiations in progress — are always embarrassed. It creates irritation. If the hon. gentleman is sincere in his desire to see any reasonable arrangement, his own judgment and discretion will prompt him not to be constantly catechizing ministers, because there are questions which ministers are not obliged to answer. For instance, if negotiations are in progress that in the interest of the public should be confidential, it is recognized that ministers ought not to be catechized. We all know that the object of those negotiations is often defeated if it becomes public—I am merely speaking generally now. So far as Mr. Sifton's movements are concerned, as you all know, he is an old resident of Winnipeg. Mr. Sifton was desirous of seeing some persons in Winnipeg, I do not know who they were, and he left Ottawa on Friday. I have no doubt he will do as other members of the government have been endeavouring to do, to solve as far as possible the difficulties which impede the way. It is well known that there is a very considerable element of the Catholic population that are not satisfied with the result of the negotiations concluded last fall, and think that more ought to be done for the minority. Mr. Greenway, as you all know—you know just as much about this as I do—has promised that in the administration of the law we should endeavour to meet the objections that were urged against the regulations. How he is going to do it, or in what way, I am really unable to inform my hon. friend, because I am not aware of it. It is not a hard and fast programme that can be settled by being presented, because you know very well that in the administration of a law of that kind it is always better to get the two parties together and know what one is prepared to accept and the other prepared to concede. It can only be done by friendly interviews—by an anxious desire on both sides to effect a settlement and a disposition to give and take. That is the only way to accomplish it: I have really no more information for my hon. friend than what he sees in the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the hon. minister sent in a report?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, I have not heard anything of it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I make the inquiry for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite appreciate the purpose. Apart from that, I know the public feel a great interest in it. The public are not concerned about these delicate features of it to which I have adverted. They do not reflect on the injury to the progress of the negotiations that is caused by constantly bringing it before the public. I am quite unable to say whether anything is being done. All I can say is there is nothing on record and nothing official.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In making this inquiry I am acting on precedent. I will give one to the hon. gentleman which will convince him that the construction which he puts on my conduct will apply better to his chief. Last year Mr. Laurier, on the 23rd March, 1896, said this, I have just copied his words.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He did not say it 19 times.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, because he was answered immediately and answered in a very civil way. The question and answer are as follows:

MR. LAURIER—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I apprehend that the House is anxious to know from the leader of the House whether there is any truth in the rumour that a Commission has been appointed to proceed to Winnipeg to confer with the Manitoba government in reference to the school question?

That is the question put by Mr. Laurier. I have just copied his words. Sir Charles Tupper's answer is as follows:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—I may say that a delegation has been appointed, consisting of the Hon. Minister of Justice, the Hon. Minister of Militia and the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) and that they proceed to-day to Winnipeg for the purpose of opening negotiations with the government of Manitoba who have, as the House is aware, been good enough to adjourn the Legislature of Manitoba until the 11th day of April, instead of proroguing as they had intended before this arrangement was made; and I take this opportunity to say how glad the government will be to have the kind co-operation of the hon. leader of the opposition and his influence with his friends, the government of Manitoba, in doing what he can to facilitate the object of that mission.

Later on the Hon. Mr. Laurier stood up again in the House of Commons and reiterated his demand, and asked if there was a report, and the government said yes, and they were very glad to bring in a report. We see the different way pursued now by the present government. We can get no information from this government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was a formal proposition. Our formal proposition was closed long ago. This is a matter of administration that some dissatisfied Catholics were anxious to have explained by Mr. Greenway. There is no formal proposition made to-day at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—So that when one of the ministers leaves Ottawa in great haste and goes to Winnipeg, it is nothing formal and nothing to be relied on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was not done by Order in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh! Mr. Sifton is absent without leave.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer given by the Secretary of State is constitutionally correct, provided he had stopped with an answer. Whenever a question of that kind is put, if I might be permitted to suggest to the hon. gentleman, the answer of the Minister should be that there are no negotiations going on, or that there are negotiations going on, but that it is not in the public interest that they should be divulged. That is an answer, no matter where or when given, whether in the Imperial parliament or in our own, which is always accepted. While the hon. gentleman made a nice little speech which could not evoke any serious reply, he failed to answer the simple question which might have put an end to the whole of it. If he had said Mr. Sifton has gone home on his own business, and is not deputized to enter into any negotiations, there would have been an end to it. Or if he had said, yes, we hope to get the Manitoba government to give greater concessions than any that have been given, but the matter is not in a state that I can tell the hon. gentleman what we are doing, that would have been more statesmanlike than to get up, as the hon. gentleman did the other day, and read us a lecture on the impropriety of our conduct, and to-night read us another lecture, and tells us how bad the results would be from these constant questions. One simple word from the hon. gentleman would have put an end to it at once, and our impetuous friend from Stadacona (Mr. Landry) would have been satisfied.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—The hon. Secretary of State should return thanks to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down for his lecture on the performance of his duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman knows that the suggestion I made was strictly constitutional, and that the course pursued by the hon. Secretary of State is not constitutional or according to British practice.

ALIEN LABOUR BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) moved the third reading of Bill (5) "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens."

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time.

On the question shall this bill pass,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not now of course the proper time to take exception to this bill, but as it is receiving its final stage here, I cannot allow the bill to pass without expressing my very great regret that the parliament of Canada should have taken the step it has with regard to this measure. It would have been much more consonant with our history and associations in the past that we should have extended the olive branch rather than returned a blow given by the United States Congress. They are more under the influence of popular feeling than we are. This House, particularly, is far removed from anything like popular sentiment. If we do not approve of a measure we are not bound in any way to give effect to it. We know, as a matter of fact, that this law is not intended to be put in operation. The manner in which it is drawn shows that it is really not a practical measure, and it is giving blow for blow to the feeling of those who originated the measure in the United States. Our neighbours have fallen very much in the estimation of the civilized world by the action they have taken in this regard. We are follow-in their footsteps, I think, to our very great discredit. The sixth clause provides :

The collector of customs at any port in Canada, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land in Canada contrary to the prohibition of this Act, shall cause such immigrant within the period of one year after landing or entry, to be taken into custody and returned to the country from whence he came, at the expense of the owner of the migrating vessel, or, if entered from an adjoining country, at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services.

You can all see that in a great country like this, with four thousand miles of frontier, if the attorney general has to be appealed to in every important case, there is no serious intention of putting the law into operation. It is one of those laws which, if enforced, must be enforced promptly when occasion for action arises, as it does when an emigrant is landing from a car or boat, or walks across the imaginary line which separates us from the United States. Therefore that clause must have been introduced by some person for the very purpose of throwing ridicule on the bill. We are putting on the statute-book the statement that we propose to retaliate against the United States. If retaliation is to be carried on, we are hit nine times to their being hit once, because I venture to say there are nine who go from Canada to the United States to be employed to one who comes into Canada. We know that in large sections of the country there are numbers of men who go at regular seasons of the year into the United States to get employment. They are not interfered with. It is only an occasional instance when the deportation of the Canadian labourers is brought out prominently in the press. It is discussed in the newspapers and brought under the notice of the government, and the attention of the Washington government called to it: but it is only one case in a thousand. When I catechised my hon. friend Mr. Casgrain on the subject, he admitted what I said, that there is not a day of the year in which thousands do not cross the frontier, both ways, to earn their living. Is it desirable that we should stop that and build up a Chinese wall between the two countries?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill is now at its final stage on the question of His Honour the Speaker, shall this bill pass? Some years ago I defeated a bill after the question had been put by the Speaker, shall it now pass?—one of the most important bills that ever came before this chamber. After the third reading had been carried and the question had been put, "shall the bill pass," I made such an appeal to the House that it did not pass. I do not propose to take this course now, because the House seems committed to it, only I did feel that, as we were taking this final action, I should like to put myself on record as being opposed to the spirit of the bill.

The bill passed.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called for Second Reading Bill (142), "An Act to confirm certain agreements entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said: This bill is in charge of Sir Oliver Mowat, who desires to continue in charge of it, and as I was coming into the chamber a few minutes ago I received a note from him saying that he was not well enough to come up this evening. For that reason I move that the order be discharged, and that it be put on the paper for Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Would the hon. gentleman read the note to us, if he is really in earnest, because we are very anxious that this bill should be disposed of one way or the other? Unless the Minister of Justice is very seriously ill, I should prefer to go on with it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He says he is not well enough to come up here this evening. He was not well when he left here at six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He is running after Mr. Sifton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the hon. gentleman propose to do? Will the hon. gentleman go on with any other measures? There is the Crow's Nest Pass measure before us.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will take up these measures on Wednesday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To-night, I mean? You have kept us here to-night, and surely we have not been brought here for nothing to-night.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If I had proposed to take up any other measure the hon. gentleman would have a good right to say that a bill only coming up from the House of Commons to-day should not be taken up without time for consideration.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I do not know what course will be taken on this measure, but I rise to protest against this delay. We have been kept here for three months and have had very little before the House until to-day. Now we are asked to postpone a measure because one of the ministers does not feel well. For those who live in Ottawa it is all very well, but for hon. gentlemen who live some distance from the capital, it is not fair to keep us for months with little to do, and then when there is a bill on the Order Paper, to ask that it be postponed for two or three days more. For my part I am ready to go on to-night.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—It appears to me to be extraordinary, if it was the intention of the Minister of Justice not to be here to-night, that we did not adjourn at six o'clock until Wednesday, so that members could have made a different disposition of their time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These complaints do not come with a good grace from hon. gentlemen who voted against the government's motion to adjourn. There is some reason in what the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface (Mr. Bernier) says, but illness is one of these things which we cannot be responsible for, and I never heard of such a thing as raising a question about going on when the minister in charge of a bill is prevented from being in his place. The mere statement of the fact ought to be enough to satisfy hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—It might be the same thing when we meet on Wednesday. It shows that our leader in the Senate does not treat us with the consideration he should.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He should have taken medicine, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—He should not treat us with contempt. If he was not able to go on, the Secretary of State is here, and is quite able to take charge of the measures. We could reach a vote to-night and it would be much better that we should go on. I could see before six o'clock that it was intended not to meet to-night at all. The object was delay. We can see the object, and it makes people dissatisfied. I do not like to be treated in that way. I am very sorry the leader of the House is sick, but he may be worse by next Wednesday, I hope that the vote we gave him before six o'clock did not make him sick. He is treating us with contempt in not coming here if he is able to come.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The Secretary of State is here, and we should go on with the bill. Is parliament to be kept in session doing nothing because a member of the government is sick? If we are to give way on this thing to-night, I hope it will not happen again—that we shall go on on Wednesday, and not be brought here for nothing. The idea of keeping members away from their homes! We come here to do the business of the country, and when we come the leader of the government is not here, and the Secretary of State says he cannot go on. He should go on. I shall have much pleasure in listening to anything he has to say on this measure. I will listen to him until twelve o'clock if he can say anything in favour of the bill, and support it. On the contrary, if he does not show that it is a measure that will be of advantage to the people of this country, I cannot support it. I do not speak from a party standpoint. The leader of the House should have told us at six o'clock that the government would not do any business to-night. I hope, if Sir Oliver Mowat's health is not so far recovered that he can proceed on Wednesday, that the hon. Secretary of State will take charge of the bill himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I hope so, because it is not treating us fairly. I think I can see just as far into a millstone as the man who picked it, or any other man. I am not going away from here, if it takes until fall, until I see what advantage the country is going to have from this large expenditure of money. I want to see that, because the public are looking to us very much, and any man who leaves here and does not do his duty will be a marked man.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I suppose my hon. friend enjoys that. From his former independence in this House and his sticking up for economy in every branch of the public service, I hope he will not put the glass to the blind eye when he looks at this bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is a good bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If the hon. gentleman calls it a good bill, he will have to justify it. He is here, and when Sir Oliver Mowat is here he can defend the bill. I am sorry the Minister of Justice is ill and cannot be here to-night. I hope it will not occur again. I know there are many hon. gentlemen in this House who feel on this question as I do, but they do not say it. When we meet on Wednesday, I hope he will get through with this business without any more jockeying, keeping one bill back until another is passed.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think that this measure would be very well in the hands of the Secretary of State—that it will suffer no loss through the absence of the Minister of Justice. We ought to go on with it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I hope the Secretary of State will not stop the work of the House at this late period of the Session. Many of us have been here three months, and the bill is before the House. There may be a long discussion on it—there probably will be, and why not take a part of the discussion to-night. It will not alter the effect of it in any way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have already explained that the bill is in the hands of the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat.) He was particularly anxious to have charge of the bill, and I will explain to the House that he did not desire to come back this evening, as he was not feeling well. Still, I thought as the Speaker left the chair we would see him here when we met this evening' Under the circumstance, it is a matter of ordinary courtesy, when the leader of the House who has charge of a bill states that he is unable to be present this evening, and asks to have it postponed until Wednesday, to grant his request.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I am sure the Senate would treat the leader of the House with all the courtesy that is possible, and we have always been disposed to do that since the hon. gentleman has had a seat in this chamber; but it seems to me this House has a little courtesy to expect from the government. There should be courtesy on both sides. There is more than courtesy expected from the government on a subject of this kind. The interest of the country—the fate of a measure involving an expenditure of millions of money, ought not to be kept back until the last hours of the session before giving the Senate an opportunity of expressing their views on the subject. I submit we are not being treated with that courtesy which the chamber is entitled to in this measure being kept back. In the last few hours left us, we have not an opportunity of discussing the question to-night after being brought back here. There must be something wrong with the measure—something that this House should be very careful and cautious about before they decide to pass it. I live in the lower provinces, which are more interested in having direct communication with Montreal than other provinces, and I say it does not look as though the interests of the country were at heart in bringing such a measure before us. In view of that fact, this House ought to have ample time to discuss the question, and we should have had it weeks ago if it was intended to ask the country to engage in such a large expenditure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must confess that I feel myself in a very difficult position individually, after the expressions of opinion by many of those who are desirous of going on with this bill, yet I feel that it would be rather a want of courtesy, after the statement of the hon. Secretary of State, if we do not accede to the suggestion for the reasons he has given. But I should like to call the attention of the senior member for Halifax to the fact that when the House voted by a two to one majority in favour of meeting to-night, it was for the purpose of going on with this measure, and had the Minister of Justice then said that he did not feel able for the task, that he was not well enough to come back, I have no doubt the House would, at that time, have acquiesced in the adjournment. I have not the slightest doubt about that, but the adjournment was voted down by a very large majority. I am not speaking without knowing what I am saying, that it was known—and many were led to believe—that this adjournment is to meet the views of those who are most deeply interested in that scheme, and who expect to put the most money in their pocket by it, because they have been talking around the lobbies that they wanted this matter put off, for what purpose I do not know. They must know; but that is the fact, and I am not speaking now at mere random. It appears to me that this House ought to know whether the promoters of the bill, who expect to make large amounts of money out of its passage, are to dictate to the Senate and the Parliament of Canada when and how we should proceed with measures of this kind. There is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Prowse) has said. Here we have measures brought down about two days before the expected prorogation, involving expenditures amounting to from ten to fifteen million dollars. It is all very well to say, "It was your duty to follow the debates in the House of Commons, and make yourself acquainted with what was being done, in order that you could give your vote when it came here without any further consideration." But that is not a reason why we should act in accordance with that suggestion, and if that is to be the policy pursued in the future it would be better to abolish the Senate at once, and leave the whole management of the country in the hands of the popular branch, where the great corporations can affect the different constituencies and frighten representatives, from party reasons, to vote for measures which, in their conscience, they know are not in the public interest. I daresay my hon. friend will say "oh, you used to do the same thing." Well, supposing we did; the hon. gentleman condemned it, and condemned it in very virulent and energetic terms, and we thought when he came to occupy his present position that he being a Reformer, was going to end all what he termed iniquitous proceedings of the past; but the Reform government are ten times more than the unfortunate Tories, whom he used to condemn so vehemently in the past. I really do not know myself what to suggest. I feel the difficulty in this way; the hon. gentleman says the health of the Minister of Justice will not permit him to come here, and he declines to take the bill up himself. I will make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman; supposing I take the bill in charge, move the second reading, and ask some of my friends to move the six months' hoist; I should be very much inclined to vote for it, and we could settle the question at once. We could test the sense of the House without any debate at all. If he will move the second reading, and promise not to say anything, as far as I am concerned—and perhaps I can speak for my friends round the House—we will take the hint and vote on the bill, because most of us have made up our minds to vote on it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Take a vote now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a fair proposition. Shall I move the second reading?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is rather a serious matter to be jocular about.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks he is treating the Senate properly and with respect? If the hon. gentleman had said before recess that neither himself nor his leader, from physical inability or from any other reason, could go on with it to-night, it would have been altogether different: but there was no reason given further than a desire to postpone it. I frankly tell you I feel a little annoyed, because I had very important duties to perform in my own city, and I was in hopes that I should be able to get away. I suggested this course when the House met this afternoon, and I am here now to sit till day-light, if need be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will not think I am violating any confidence, after what he has stated, when I say that before six o'clock I went over to the hon. gentleman and informed him that the leader of the House was not well, and was not really in a condition to go on with this measure, and that we had better adjourn at six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Why did not the leader state that to the House?

Hon. Mr. POWER—He did not state it to the House, but he stated it to me, and I went over to the leader of the Opposition, which I thought was the correct thing to do. I had not intended to make the matter public, but I think it only fair, as the hon. gentleman has referred to the matter in a pointed way, to state what took place. I thought that the hon. leader of the Opposition consented to the adjournment, and I was surprised when he voted against it. Although I do not speak for the government, I may say that the majority of the Senate have the business in their own hands, and if they require a week to discuss this measure, they can take it. It is anything but gracious, on the eve of the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty, when all should be peace and good will, that we should be showing disrespect to the leader of the House.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—After what the senior member for Halifax has said, that Sir Oliver Mowat told him before the adjournment that he did not feel well, I withdraw what I said and think we should not go on with the business.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Have you made your mind up?

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I have made up my mind to that, and I apologize to the senior member for Halifax for agreeing with him. I know I am treading on very treacherous ground, and in all probability may get into the mire, but still I shall run the risk this time, I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With reference to the remarks made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power), he did come over to me and speak to me, but I have no recollection of his speaking of Sir Oliver's illness. I will not say that he did not, but what I remember distinctly his saying to me was, "would it not be better to put the bill off till Wednesday," and that Sir Oliver did not want to go on to-night? I said I would have no objections to that, but I said I was just as ready to go on with it to-night as any other time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I began the observations by saying the hon. leader of the House was not well.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—After the explanations which have been made, there is nothing open to us but to accede to the request of the government. Apart altogether from what has happened now, I must enter my protest against the way the Senate is treated by the government. As a matter of fact, it is known now that formal preparations for the closing of parliament are going on, cards are being sent round, and everything indicates the close of the session soon, and I have been taxing my memory to find the important bills that we ought to be considering that are not yet sent down to us. There is the Crow's Nest Pass Railway bill.

Hon. Mr. BOWELL—We have got that; it is on for the second reading.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, it has not come to the House yet at all. The Intercolonial and Drummond Railway deal is here, but the government is not ready to go on with it. The fast line contract is not here, the tariff is not here, and the estimates are not here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The tariff is here; it is fixed for Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the fast line contract come before the Senate?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. On former occasions I know the Senate made a very strong protest because contracts of that kind had been confined exclusively to the House of Commons, and in looking up recent legislation on the subject, I find that in the first Session of 1896, in April——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was not through speaking. Then, the tariff is here. I did not know that. Of course it will go on the Order Paper for Wednesday. The estimates are not here, and then there is another measure that was submitted to the House of Commons, I do not know what its fate is—in fact, I think two resolutions were submitted to the Commons, one proposing to allow the province of Manitoba to draw $300,000 from the school funds. If that measure is alive in the minds of the government, it is not here. There was another resolution granting better terms to the province of Manitoba, and I do not think that is here. Then again there is a fifteen million dollar loan in the air—a proposition is made about that. All these measures appear to be in the hands of the government, and they are going to ask us, within a few hours of progation, to give our assent to all these importtant measures. I think it will have to be admitted we are not fairly treated. My hon. friend was just going to say, as he usually does when fault is found with the government, that some other government was just as bad. I think my hon. friend was then about making his old excuse—that if this government is bad, other governments were bad.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Probably worse.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not experienced enough in the affairs of Parliament to venture the statement very strongly, but I think it is doubtful if in all the different parliaments we have ever had, such a lot of important measures have been held over till the end of the session like this. If it ever occurred, it was reprehensible. It is a pity the members of the government have not shown more respect to the Senate by pushing some of these measures at an earlier time in the session and sending them down in detail, instead of holding them till the last and sending them in a batch. It is not fair to the Senate or to the country. My hon. friend, the leader of the House, will see that since he has been a member of the government, although the majority of this House is opposed to him, we have shown every desire to facilitate public business, and there has been no factious opposition on this side of the House, but, I think, we would be stretching moderation and good nature too far, if we did not complain when we are treated in this way by the government in regard to these measures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am exceedingly sorry it has not been possible to have important measures down early. But it seems to have been the history of this country from the very beginning that the House of Commons retained important measures up to the very last. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that we have had the estimates come down when we were all ready for prorogation. That has been the usual time. After the desks were all cleared away and the Governor General was expected, the estimates have been brought up from the House of Commons, and other important measures have been kept till the last moment. It is not so very far back when the Governor General came down to prorogue parliament and he found me speaking at the time the aide-de-camp came to the door, and I was asked if I would not desist from speaking. On that occasion His Excellency was asked to postpone the prorogation for another day, and he did so. I regret the delay, but I have no apology to make on the subject. It seems to me certainly we might have had the tariff; but there is the fact that it was an important measure, and the government had to listen to people up to the last moment, and it has been kept back very much longer than I think is proper or defensible.

Hon Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is the last measure generally.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The speech made by the leader of the opposition contained observations that have fallen from myself on very many occasions, and not only myself, but other members of the chamber who felt that the Senate was not properly treated. I hope in future business will come down at an earlier period, so that hon. gentlemen will have ample opportunity to discuss it. Of course no arrangements have been made for prorogation, and none will be made until this House has thoroughly disposed of all the business.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We need not be under obligation to the hon. gentleman for that promise, because the government cannot prorogue till this House is ready.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's own party arranged the date of prorogation before we were through on one occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, except where it was simply a question of the estimates, with which this House never interferes, no matter what government is in power. That was the only question left to be disposed of in that way. The hon. gentleman remembers the Hudson Bay Bill very well, and his actions thereon, but that was more of a private character. So that the case he refers to is not at all analogous. I hope the Senate will take upon itself the responsibility of declining to pass the estimates until these other measures are properly considered. If the estimates were once obtained, I have no doubt as to the course the hon. gentleman would pursue.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSSON—Among the important measures that I understand are on their way to us, is a re-arrangement of the terms with Manitoba, and the granting of money to Manitoba from the trust money, the interest of which, under the law, was to be given to the province of Manitoba for education. I should like to know whether those measures are on their way to us, or whether the government have abandoned them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not remember the position of them. I do not remember what stage they have reached. One of them is before the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would inquire from the hon. Minister of Justice if it is the intention of the government to lay on the table of this House the correspondence that they have received from Mr. Sifton, now in Winnipeg.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend has not mentioned in respect of what this correspondence is. I am not aware of any recent correspondence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I might say on the school question.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am not aware of any correspondence on the school question. Of course if there was any it would be confidential, but I am not aware that there is any.

A QUESTION OF ORDER.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to call the attention of the leader of the House to the Order Paper. I find that the important bill we were to have considered on Monday evening is put down at the foot of the list. I must confess my ignorance of any rule of the House that would place that order in the position in which it appears on the notice paper to-day. I find that there are set before this not only the consideration of the amendments, but also the second reading of the Customs Act, the Inland Revenue Act, the Export Duties, the Petroleum Inspection Act, the Judges of the Provincial Courts Act and the Cold Storage Act. Now if these Acts are to be discussed, they all are subjects which will secure a greater or less attention from the members of the House, more particularly the Tariff. Although we may not be in a position to change any of the items, still the principle involved in the tariff is of such a character that it will call forth some remarks and an expression of opinion from some of those who disapprove of its provisions, if nothing more than that. If this is to be the order which we are to pursue to-day, it certainly is misleading. I say frankly that I did not come here this morning prepared to discuss the tariff question, although I shall have some few words to say upon that subject when it comes up. I came with the expectation that the equally important question of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway was to be considered. Perhaps the older members of the House, who are better acquainted with the rules than I am, will explain why that order is placed in the present position. I think I am safe in saying that every member of this House went away last Monday night with the impression that this question was to be the first on the orders of the day, and it is only fair to the members interested, that the hon. leader of the House should make it the first order and that we should go on with it now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The statement of the hon. gentleman is perfectly correct. I think the understanding was that this matter, the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, should be taken up the first thing to-day.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That was the understanding.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The placing of that item where it is must be the result of some oversight on the part of some of the officers whose duty it is to make out the Orders of the Day, according to rule 12. I happen to know particularly about this rule, because it was at my own instance that the special committee appointed by the House some three years ago altered the previous rule. The rule before that time was that the Orders of any day which had not been disposed of were to be taken up after the Orders of the Day which were put on at the next day, and the committee thought it was a very inconvenient and unfair arrangement that the Orders of the Day which had not been proceeded with at the previous sitting should, instead of going before, come after the regular Orders of the Day, and rule 12 says :

> The Orders of the Day, which at the adjournment have not been proceeded with, are considered as postponed until the next sitting day, to take precedence of the Orders of that Day unless otherwise ordered.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—How does this order come to be at the foot of the list to-day?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is just what I was asking.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Has the hon. gentleman made any motion in regard to it?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I merely called the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the fact, as being contrary to the understanding.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Not only contrary to the understanding, but contrary to the regular course of procedure in the House, This order should be at the top of the list, and I presume the hon. leader of the House will put it there.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The House can order it there now.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was understood that the House should proceed with this order the first thing on meeting this morning, and I presume the House will see that the wishes and understanding on Monday last will be carried out. I do not know who attempted to tamper with the notices, whether anybody has, or whether it was by accident.

Hon. Mr. COX—A number of bills were referred for second reading to-day before that item was reached, and I suppose it would naturally follow that way in the minutes. In saying this I am not objecting to taking up the last order first, but I can quite understand that the Minutes would appear that way, because the Intercolonial Bill was the last thing referred.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I cannot understand anything of the kind, and I have a more extended acquaintance with the Minutes of this House than the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I cannot understand how, by anything but design, that order should appear in the place it is to-day on the Order Paper. I say it advisedly, and I do not suppose the House will submit for a moment to be so treated.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Let us hear what the government has to say about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I don't care what the government has to say about it.

THE SPEAKER—The assistant clerk has just informed me that he put it there thinking he was right, and the reason was that the order for that item came last, taking the other bills up read the second time; but it is clear that by rule 12 the item should have been first.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is it understood the order takes it proper place now?

Several hon. MEMBERS—Yes.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have not looked into the forms with reference to this matter. If I were satisfied that the rules of the House were consistent with its being in its present place, I would not ask that it should remain there, as my hon. friends around me say there was an understanding that the bill should be taken up the first thing. In that case, even if, as a matter of strict right, it stands where it is, I would not insist upon that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no understanding that I heard of on Monday that this was to be the first order. I am not going to dispute it, but I certainly was not under that impression. Of course, if the rule required it, that is the end of it. I asked the clerk whether it was to go to the head or the foot, and I was informed it went to the foot.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman will remember that the House was prepared to discuss the bill on Monday night, and at his request it was postponed until to-day, and it should be the first order for to day

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is understood it stands at the head of the list now.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY, DRUMMOND COUNTY AND INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved the second reading of Bill (142) "An Act to confirm certain agreements entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal."

He said: In moving the second reading of this bill I desire to state that the government, in making that agreement, subject to the decision of parliament, made it upon strictly business grounds. They made it in the belief that it was, on business principles, a right agreement to enter into, that it was of great importance to the country that the Intercolonial road should have an entrance into Montreal, that the best method, the most effectual and economical method of accomplishing that object would be by the agreement which has been entered into: that every alternative had disadvantages which this line had not, and which the purchase of this line has not; that the purchase agreed upon is better than the building of a new road would be, better than making an agreement with those who are interested in what is called the South Shore Line would be, and better than any agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway with respect to their road from Lévis. I would be hopeless of any correct conclusion on the part of this House if honourable members were to enter into the discussion of the question, or were to act in voting upon it, on any other than business principles. The opposition in this House, of course, is largely in excess of the supporters of the government, and if party should govern in this House, I should despair of our constitution. The only hope of its working well is because the members of this House forget their party predilections as every bill comes up, and as every motion is made, upon which an opinion has to be expressed. I therefore purpose confining myself to the business consideration of the whole subject. I myself have come to the conclusion, the more I have studied this, that the Minister of Railways made no mistake in studying up this question—made no mistake in recommending to council that this agreement should be entered into—that the government made no mistake when they heard what he had to say and when they discussed the matter in council, in assenting to the proposals which the Minister of Railways made and in adopting the conclusions at which he had arrived. The first thing to be considered was, and the first thing to be considered now is, whether there is any good reason why we should provide for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I do not think many persons can have any doubt with regard to that. The practical effect of there being no present extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis to Montreal is, that hardly any of the through freight from Halifax, if any at all, comes by the Intercolonial Railway. The want of any connection at Quebec is a bar which makes it desirable for shippers to take the other lines if they have the choice of the two. Then it is a well known principle, a first principle in railway management, that access should be got by railway at or near to large cities where there are any. It is considered of immense importance to a railway that its terminus should be in a large city. The Grand Trunk Railway itself spent millions in order to have a terminus in Chicago and the shareholders and officers of the company do not doubt that it was wise to spend those millions. The same has been the practice with all railways. We should deal with our Intercolonial Railway, if we can, in the same way, and on the same business principle that other railways are dealt with which are under the management of companies; and the same reason why a company would have considered it utterly out of the question that this railway should be without an extension from Lévis to Montreal ought to be our guide in this matter. Here we have a road on which $50,000,000 have been spent and which has hardly ever, if it has ever any year, paid for the running expenses. There is, apparently, an inevitable deficit every year of from $50,000 to $100,000. There may have been some difference made in one year or another by economical management, and by increased skill and ability in the management, but with all the economy, skill and experience that can be brought to bear on the matter, our experience shows that we cannot hope to make this road pay unless some new method is adopted for that purpose; and what a private company would say, as probably the only way of accomplishing that purpose, is by getting an extension to the commercial centre—Montreal. Experts say that on that point there can be no difference of opinion. I do not know whether a different opinion will be expressed here. I cannot imagine any one, who has given attention to the subject at all, having a doubt upon the point, though I believe some speaker elsewhere did oppose that view. However, I assume it here to be correct, and then the question is what is the best method, or one of the best methods, by which that object can be accomplished. There may be a difference of opinion on that point, an honest difference of opinion, but I suppose this House will not negative a measure brought forward by the government and supported in the House of Commons because there may be a difference of opinion in regard to it. I assume the Senate only will negative this measure if there is a clear objection to it—if the measure is clearly one which is against the interests of the country and ought not to be entered into. What we have done is this: we have made a bargain, subject to the approval of parliament, by which a road, partly belonging to the Grand Trunk Railway Co. and partly to the Drummond County Railway Company, should become practically the property of the government of Canada, in order to provide the extension which we seek to the city of Montreal. That portion of the road from Montreal to Ste. Rosalie belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway. Then the remainder extending to the Chaudière, belongs to the Drummond County Railway Company—about seventy-three miles, I think, is the exact distance so far as it can be measured by us with exactness, now in operation; and the remainder of the line, forty-two and a half or forty-three miles, is not yet built, but by the agreement the Drummond County Railway Co, who own the road, are to build that portion by the 1st November next. Indeed, I believe they have entered upon the building of it already, not apprehending any difficulty in the confirmation of the agreement by parliament. There is a short distance between the Chaudière and Lévis which belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We are to pay for the use of that short distance the amount which the Drummond County Railway Company had agreed to pay the Grand Trunk Railway for it, namely, $6,000 a year. In regard to that, I believe no difference has arisen in the discussions elsewhere. There has been some in reference to the westerly part of the road which belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway, and also in regard to what is to be paid for the right of crossing the Victoria bridge, and for the use of the station grounds and terminal facilities generally in Montreal of the Grand Trunk Railway. But I do not think much need be said in regard to that portion of the road. If we are to get into Montreal at all, it must be either under an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway or by building a new road; and everybody can understand how enormously expensive it would be to build another bridge across the river and to provide station and other terminal facilities in the great city of Montreal, where land is so expensive. Instead of paying what we have agreed to pay the Grand Trunk $134,000 a year, it would cost us probably $25,000,000. It is said that what we have done involves a debt of $7,000,000, which I deny; but if it involves $7,000,000, to attempt to accomplish the object by building a new road and bridge and obtaining station grounds of our own instead of using the Grand Trunk Railway from St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie, and then the Victoria bridge and the station and other facilities in Montreal, the cost would be enormous and would amount to a sum which no one would think of investing, notwithstanding the great importance of getting this entrance into the city of Montreal. We may have something more to say on that point if there is really any question raised in regard to it, but the chief question is as to the portion of the road which belongs to the Drummond County Railway Company. What we have provisionally agreed to in regard to that portion is that it shall be taken as of the value of $1,600,000—that we shall pay four per cent on that sum, or $64,000 per year for 99 years. At the end of that time the road and all belonging to it shall become absolutely the property of Canada. Is that sum a reasonable one? Is $1,600,000 a reasonable sum? That is the business question in the matter. You may bring in other things, either of a party or a personal character, but that is the question for us to consider if we want to decide this matter on business principles and no other. Then, again, in regard to the value there may be always some difference of opinion. Something more than a mere difference of opinion should influence the Senate in considering whether to pass this bill. The propriety of taking this road was under consideration by the late government, and the engineer was asked by the then Minister of Railways and Canals to make an estimate of what the road was worth and what it would cost to complete it—I am speaking of the road from Ste. Rosalie to Lévis. He made a report, which we have, finding the amount to be very nearly $1,600,000, and that was exclusive of the land. That was what might be the cost of building the road. We got no estimates—it was found impossible to get any satisfactory estimate that you could put in figures—with regard to the amount we would probably have to pay for land and land damages, but no doubt it would be a considerable sum. All experience shows that. The amount that had to be paid for the purchase of right of way from Rivière du Loup to Levis is an example of what those damages are likely to be. The $1,600,000 which has been the basis of the agreement now under consideration includes land damages as well. We have to pay no land damages beside, so that if the engineer came to a right conclusion, and there is no reason to doubt that he did, we are evidently getting the road for considerably less than it would cost to build a new road. Then I need not say that the engineer who made the estimate is a man of very great ability and experience, and has the confidence of all parties. He does not belong to our party, but all in the government have a high estimate of his ability in dealing with such matters. I have mentioned the value which he stated to the late government. He has again been asked the same question and has again come to the same conclusion. On the general question I meant to say a word or two which it occurs to me now I omitted to say. To satisfy the House that the amount is a reasonable one I mean to point out that our object is to make the Intercolonial road pay, and we hope to have an amount of business done, if the road is extended to Montreal, which will not only pay the running expenses and pay the rentals, but afford a margin in addition, and perhaps a considerable margin. This is not a mere guess on our part—not a mere assertion on our part that it will be so, but we have taken the best means which the case admitted of to find out the probability of the case. The man who could give us more assistance than any other on that point is the manager of the Intercolonial Railway. A report from him has been asked for and his opinion obtained.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. gentleman who made the report?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was referring to Mr. Pottinger, who has been manager for a great many years He was appointed, I believe, by Sir Charles Tupper, and we have continued him, knowing very well his ability and the great advantages the country possesses from his long experience in railway matters and from his knowledge of the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was appointed by Sir John Thompson to the position he now holds when Sir Charles Tupper was not a member of the cabinet. It makes no difference, only I desire to put the hon. gentleman right.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have all the more confidence, perhaps, because he was an appointee of Sir John Thompson's. There is no doubt of the gentleman's ability and fidelity, and if we are to get an opinion from anybody on this point, I do not think we could do better than ascertain what his view was. He has given us the figures. I have them here, and if it is necessary to turn to them, I shall do so. Taking the number of tons of freight going over the road now, and the number he is satisfied would go over the road if extended to Montreal, the result shows a considerable excess of revenue over the rentals and the running expenses.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was there any report from Mr. Pottinger on that?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I suppose my hon. friend does not doubt that he gave the estimate I have mentioned, it has been stated in the other House that it is so. I do not know that we need be less believing in this House about it than they were in the other House. The matter was discussed there with great vigour, perhaps I might say in some cases with virulence, but I do not think a question was raised by anybody as to the fact after the Minister of Railways made that statement. If my hon. friend is informed that the statement is not correct, I shall be glad to learn on what grounds he says so. I assume that the statement is correct, and I assume that we may all take it to be correct.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Mr. Pottinger is now in Ottawa in the department, and can be questioned, if necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What difference does that make?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend would not doubt the correctness of his statement?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said nothing that would imply such a doubt. I have a higher respect for Mr. Pottinger, perhaps, than the hon. gentleman has.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not know that. I have as high a respect for him as I could have for any one of whom I have the same knowledge.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The point to which the hon. gentleman is referring now is a very important point, and one upon which I, as one, should be glad to obtain information, and up to the present time I have not been able to obtain any report or any definite information as to the estimated increase of traffic from the extension to Montreal. I should like very much, if the hon. gentleman has these figures, if he would place them before the House.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have the figures, but I have not any report. I may give them later on, to avoid delay at present. We have the great advantage, in taking this road instead of building a new road, that this road has always paid its running expenses and something more, and if we were to build a new road we would only get for our new road a portion of these profits. This Drummond County road being the first road there, having made its arrangements, having secured the traffic would probably get more of the local traffic than the government road would. And at all events, in discussing the matter on business grounds, it may fairly be assumed that we would not get more than half the freight which the present company is getting. That company has had a surplus over and above running expenses from the very first. The whole length of the line which is opened at present has been running for something like three years, and figures have been given—I have them here also—to show how much had been earned over and above all expenses each year. The present year is not quite out yet, but the period is such that we can pretty well estimate that this year there will be a surplus of $35,000. We have all those advantages over what the government would have if they took the South Shore Line and over what the engineer says it would cost to build a new road. We save all claims for land damages, and we get the whole of the local business of that territory. It was said, in the early discussion of this subject, that the road of the Drummond County Company was a very poor and insufficiently built road. I do not know whether any of my hon. friends now assert that, for the evidence is overwhelming that the road is in a very good condition, and has been well built. Not only were the objections made which I have mentioned, but the roadway was also described as a very crooked road. All that has been negatived by the evidence, and the very interesting fact came out in the course of the debates, and in other ways, that this road originally was intended and expected to be purchased by the Grand Trunk Railway. The authorities here were of opinion that it would be in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway to have this road, and consequently the road was designed by, and the building of it for some time was under the supervision of the Grand Trunk Railway authorities here, but the English shareholders did not take the same view. They did not want to spend any more money, and, therefore, the idea was abandoned, but it is some indication that the road is a proper one, it having been originally designed to be purchased by the Grand Trunk Railway and the parties here were interested in having it properly located and properly built. I have mentioned what the profit is upon local traffic on this portion of the road. It stands to reason that when the road is completed from Moose Park it will have a larger amount of freight and a larger amount of profit. If we obtain considerable through traffic, after getting the extension to Montreal, that will of course increase further the profits of this portion of the road. Looking at the proposal apart altogether from any feeling, and as a business man would look at it, there seems no reasonable doubt that the road would pay very largely in addition to all running expenses, and then we shall also have the profit on the freight from Halifax to Lévis, for which we get little or nothing now. We ought to bear in mind, too, that the amount of freight we may well calculate will be constantly increasing from year to year. There is an enormous amount of exports and imports as compared with what there was a few years ago, and we all feel no doubt that as our country has made progress in the past, so she is going to make progress in the future—progress in the matter of products and so on. It is very reasonable to count on that, and I suppose all persons engaged in railway matters do count on a large increase in the amount of business done; so that we have not to consider the present state of matters as being perpetual, but we have to consider the future as well. It is said that the Grand Trunk Railway would never agree that we should compete with it for the trade of the west, that it is absurd to suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway would do anything of the kind. The argument is one which demonstrates how much struck the writer was with the great advantage of this bargain, if it is carried out. He thinks it is so good a bargain for us that the Grand Trunk Railway would never enter into it; but the Grand Trunk Railway has entered into it, and has agreed to provisions which are of the most satisfactory kind possible in regard to the transfer of freight and so on, at Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway. Under this agreement, if it goes into effect, our agents will go through the west securing the freight, just as the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway do. By the proposed agreement the Grand Trunk Railway is under obligation to give us equal advantages in regard to freight which comes from the west. That freight will come over their line to Montreal, but if it is to go by the Intercolonial Railway we have arranged careful provisions that it is not to be intercepted by any other road at Montreal; that the Grand Trunk Railway is not to carry it over its own road beyond Montreal, but that it is to go from Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway. The provisions of the agreement are extremely strong, clear and satisfactory upon that point. The fortieth provision of the agreement reads:

> That notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement between Her Majesty and the company heretofore made and now existing, all traffic offered the company at any point on its lines west of Montreal which the shipper desires to ship via the Intercolonial at Montreal shall be billed by the company for shipment in such manner, and the company shall deliver all such traffic to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, and passenger tickets for any point on the Intercolonial Railway east of Montreal shall be sold by the company's agents at all stations and agencies on its lines west of Montreal on request via Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway, and such ticket holder shall be entitled and shall be permitted to take the trains of the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal for such points easterly on the Intercolonial Railway.

Then the forty-first clause reads:

> That in respect of all traffic originating throughout the company's system west of Montreal and offered for shipment for any point on the Intercolonial Railway via the Intercolonial at Montreal, the company shall not ask, impose or exact any rates or tolls from the point of shipment to Montreal which shall discriminate or tend to discriminate in favour of the company and against the Intercolonial Railway taking or receiving such business at Montreal, or which shall induce such shipment via the company's lines to Lévis or Chaudière for delivery to the Intercolonial at either of such points in preference to Montreal.

Clause 42 reads:

> That in order to facilitate and develop the business of the Intercolonial Railway and the company, every effort shall be made to cause close and suitable train connections to be made at Montreal between the trains of the company west of Montreal and the Intercolonial Railway.

Any possible method by which a company that thinks of its own interests only might deprive us of the advantage which we contemplate, has been prevented by express agreement. On the whole, the Grand Trunk Railway consider that it is well worth while giving running powers over their road to the Intercolonial on the terms which have been agreed to, those terms corresponding with what has been paid for similar privileges on other roads by private companies. Indeed we have some advantage over what private companies usually have in such cases, because we are at liberty to have the local traffic without paying anything for it beyond the agreed rental. I am referring to the road between St. Lambert and Ste. Rosalie. Usually the company having the running powers is not at liberty to take local traffic, or has to pay a large percentage of the receipts from it, sometimes eighty per cent, but here we get that advantage without paying any additional sum. There are clauses besides those which I have mentioned bearing upon the same point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—So that after all this outlay the Intercolonial Railway does not get into Montreal?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—We are to have running powers over the Victoria bridge.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But you have running powers now.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, the hon. gentleman is quite mistaken, we have not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How does the freight come to Montreal?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The Grand Trunk Railway take it from us at Levis for their own benefit. It will be remembered that this Drummond County road is intersected by several other roads and by various rivers as well, all which help to bring business from all quarters. Between St. Lambert and Point Lévis there are no less than six lines running to the south bank of the St. Lawrence. These are feeders to the main line and afford great facilities to these sections of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the Drummond County Railway pay any dividends at present?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have mentioned that they will have made this year about $35,000 profits over and above expenses—net earnings amounting to that sum.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are the dividends in the expenses?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, not dividends. The amount named is the whole profit, out of which any dividend is to be paid, if one is paid. What we have to consider is the net earnings of the company in order to guide us in determining whether the proposed transaction is a good one. The town of Drummondville is on this road, with three thousand people and an immense undeveloped horse-power equal to three hundred thousand horse-power besides what is used; and just now there are manufacturers preparing to build mills there to take advantage of a portion of this water power, which will involve the employment by them of twelve hundred hands, and will mean a large amount of business for the road. There is a large amount of business now in agricultural products and also in lumber, and there are many thousand car loads of lumber now ready to be moved. There seems no reason to doubt that the lumber business will afford for very many years a great deal of employment, and then the country, generally, is a very fine farming region. That portion of it that is cleared and occupied and settled upon is very fine farming land, and the remainder, when the timber is removed, can be settled and will be profitable to those engaged on it. On the portion of the road which has been constructed, the rails are fifty-six pounds to the yard; on the Intercolonial Railway they are seventy; but on the new part of the road the company agree to put on the same weight of rails as on the Intercolonial, which is seventy pounds. The present rails are in first rate condition. The evidence shows that they will answer all the purposes of the road for probably many years to come. For the satisfaction of those members of the House who have no sympathy with the present government it is fortunate that we have so many able and competent officers, who got their appointments from the party of my hon. friend opposite, to give us information in regard to the road and assist us in forming a judgment as to what it is best to do. The minister had also an opportunity of conversing on the subject with those who are familiar with the roads at all season of the years, persons belonging not only to our own party but to the party of the hon. gentleman as well, and he learned from them all that the road was a very satisfactory line. Later in the season, further reports were obtained from engineers in the department, men we found in the department and who had the confidence of hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Schreiber said:

In compliance with your request for information as to the general character of the road constructed by the Drummond County Railway Company from Ste. Rosalie Junction on the Grand Trunk Railway via Drummondville and St. Leonard to Moose Park, a distance of 73 miles, together with a branch of 17 miles in length from St. Leonard to Nicolet, and also my views as to the standard on which the balance of the road from Moose Park to its junction with the Grand Trunk Railway near Chaudière bridge should be built, assuming that the line was to form a section of the Intercolonial Railway, I have to report:

That 73 miles of the road are built and in operation, that the gradients and alignments are favourable, there being only one grade exceeding 53 feet per mile, and that one is 64 feet to the mile; that with one exception there is no curve of a less radius than 1,433 feet, and that the one exception is a curve of 953 feet radius.

That the roadbed is well and substantially built, the cuttings being 20 feet and the embankments 15 feet wide at sub grade. Ample drainage is provided by substantial steel structures resting on massive masonry spanning the larger rivers, and steel plate girders resting on strong well built masonry spanning the streams of a lesser magnitude, whereas the general drainage throughout the smaller rivulets has been passed through culverts constructed of sound cedar timber 10 x 10 inches square. The larger portion of the line through the cleared land is inclosed by a substantial post and board fence, whereas on a small portion of the line, a wire fence has been erected. The permanent way is laid with 2,600 ties to the mile, the steel rails weighing 56 pounds to the yard connected with steel fish plates.

The road is well ballasted with a very fine quality of gravel, the station buildings are neat buildings of what I consider sufficient capacity for the requirements of the road, and the water service is good.

I think you will agree with me from the description I have given of the works that a really good road has been secured, fully up to the general standard of railways in Canada. At the same time, I think, you should insist on the 64 feet per mile grade being reduced to 53 feet, in making an arrangement for the acquisition of the road, if such be your intention, which I assume to be the case.

I may say the grade is to be reduced under our agreement with the company. Mr. Ridout, an engineer of the department, reports:

I found the line in excellent condition, fully ballasted with the exception of about three miles near the St. Francis River, the location of which is to be changed in order to reduce the gradients to 53 feet per mile—the track throughout is in very good condition the rails being 56 pounds steel—and in good order, new ties were being put in where required.

All the bridges are of steel superstructure on very good cement masonry abutments and piers. At the St. Francis River there is at present 60 feet of trestle work which is to be replaced with a permanent structure.

The station buildings and sidings are amply sufficient for the traffic, some of the buildings require repairs and painting, which I was informed is to be done at once.

Mr. Johnson, another engineer, of the department, was also directed to inspect and report. He says:

I found the roadbed to be firm and in very good shape throughout, and, with the exception of three miles purposely left without ballast, in view of a contemplated change of alignment, well ballasted, the material being of exceptional excellent quality.

The rails are all in good condition weighing 56 pounds to the yard.

The grades are not excessive, the only point at which 1·00 per hundred is exceeded being at the St. Francis River, the approaches to which, on either side, are now 1·20 per 100. I understand the company are to reduce this grade before the road is taken over by the government.

That is part of the stipulations of the contract, that the grades which are now objectionable shall be improved. Then he refers to the present percentage of curvatures, as follows:

The percentage of curvature is exceptionally small, the curves with one exception (one of 6°) not exceeding 4°, or a radius of 1,433 feet.

I may say, in this connection, that on my return journey, the train, consisting of an engine and combination car, made the distance of 68 miles in 90 minutes, including two stoppages, the last 28 miles being run in 30 minutes, without the least discomfort to the passengers on the train.

The principal bridges are those over the Black River, the two branches of the Nicolet and the Becancour. These are all fine, substantial, steel superstructures, resting on massive, well-built masonry abutments and piers.

Mr. Kingsford, another engineer, reports to the same effect:

It will thus be seen that in these 73 miles there is a good roadbed, well ballasted; the rails in line; the ditches freely carrying off the water, with regularity of different grades;—the whole in efficient and satisfactory working order.

So that there is no room for any doubt whatever that the road is a first rate road. We are not buying a useless road, but a first rate road, and wherein it is defective, the defects are to be remedied before we take over the road. One might go into all these things more fully. I have done so for my own satisfaction, and the more fully I entered into the subject the more clear did it seem to me that to a business man the contract will appear a good one. It has been mentioned, truly enough, that subsidies were given towards the building of this road, and that is suggested to be a reason why we should not pay the full value now, but I submit there is no force in the argument. The subsidies were given absolutely to the company; the money became theirs quite as much as money raised in any other way, and I see no ground why we should refuse a good bargain because of those subsidies. If we were to insist on deducting the subsidies, the company would not agree to the bargain. In fact, the company asked more than we are agreeing to give, but the final result of the negotiations was what is now embodied in the agreement. Then it has been said that we should have made a bargain with what is called the South Shore Road, a part of which is now built from St. Lambert to Sorel. That road is longer and more expensive. The bridges across the rivers are much more expensive, because they are nearer the mouths of the rivers where these are widest. Then, there are deep gulleys which are avoided on the other route. I do not know whether it is seriously said now, though originally it was said, that we should have bought the line of the Grand Trunk Railway to Richmond and have running powers from Richmond on. It was not found that any satisfactory arrangement of that kind could be made. The road itself is more objectionable, a great deal, than the one which we have taken, because there are some heavy grades on it which would interfere with the profits to be made by the carriage of freights. The Grand Trunk Railway wanted an enormous sum—two and a half millions of dollars—and we are paying now $1,600,000 and getting all the advantages which I have mentioned. I do not know that I need trouble the House with any further observations. I proceed entirely upon the transaction being a good business transaction, the object being to get an extension to Montreal. On the whole, I claim that the bill sets forth a contract which it is in the interest of the country should be confirmed and adopted, and which I hope this House will not obstruct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask a question or two in regard to this point: what is the capital stock of the Drummond County Railway Company?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the real amount paid by the shareholders of the Drummond County Railway?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not know that either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By the official returns, the stock subscribed and paid is $400,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it really so?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So I believe. I have just the official source which the hon. gentleman has access to.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The road has been built, not only by stock subscribed, but by borrowing money—issuing debentures.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the real amount paid by the shareholders on their stock?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I cannot tell that, and it is quite immaterial for our present purposes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am asking what was the real amount paid up by the shareholders on their stock?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have said I do not know, and I say it is immaterial.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What amount has been paid to the company as government subsidies?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all in the blue book. I will send for the blue book.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is entirely immaterial. I have answered that in advance; it is entirely immaterial how they got their money, whether they got part of the money from Canada or not; it was theirs wherever it was got. We could only make a bargain on the basis of what the road was worth itself and what it was worth to us.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman said the amount to be paid annually to the Drummond County Railway Company is $64,000.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—On page 16 of the Act it says, "Yielding and paying therefor seventy thousand dollars of lawful money of Canada."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The difference is this: the $64,000 is what the Drummond County Railway Company is to receive; but they have a binding arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of a portion of their road, between the Chaudière and Lévis, for which they pay $6,000, and we get the advantage of that. It makes the $70,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. gentleman who has moved the second reading of the bill now under consideration, and I am very much pleased to hear him say that he desires to discuss the question exclusively on business and commercial principles; but, unfortunately, the next moment he appealed to the Senate not to be influenced by party considerations, and intimated that the Senate, after having studied this question so far as it was possible for them to study it with the papers before them, should not allow their party predilections to interfere in any decision to which they might come. The intimation was so clear that no one who listened to him could by any possibility have misunderstood it. Had he studied the history of the Senate, he would have come to the conclusion that upon very important questions, the Senate, though composed of a large majority of a party that he himself says is opposed to him, have asserted their independence and proven to the world that they were above party prejudices in the votes they gave and the decisions at which they had arrived. While I had the honour a short time ago of occupying the position which the hon. gentleman now occupies, the Senate asserted its right, and had I not withdrawn one of the most important commercial bills—I say it advisedly—ever presented to a legislative body, that dealing with bankruptcy, and affecting the whole of the Dominion, I should have been defeated on the second reading. That was intimated to me clearly and plainly, and while I was very strongly in favour, and while the government of which I was a member at the time, was very strongly in favour of placing on the statute-book a law regulating the distribution of bankrupt estates, this House, notwithstanding every board of trade in the whole Dominion had passed resolutions in favour of the bill, and notwithstanding the pressure that was brought to bear upon almost every member of the Senate, in the public interest, declined to place that law on the statute-book; and I was obliged to withdraw it or submit to defeat. That is one of the instances in which the Senate, though largely Conservative, acting on the principle on which the Senate is founded, that of calm, deliberate revisers of whatever may be brought before them, acted strictly in accordance with their consciences and what they believed was right. However, I shall not discuss this question to any great extent. But I may add that while I was a member of Sir John Macdonald's government I remember distinctly a bill being brought before this House to provide for the short line which was to have been built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, so as to secure a shorter route to Halifax. The Senate then asserted its right and threw it out. These are two very important questions which have come before the House, strongly Conservative, as my hon. friend says it is, and while a Conservative government was in power, at the head of which a man presided who had certainly more personal magnetism, and, I hesitate not to say, was held in greater esteem as a politician by the people of Canada than any other statesmen who have lived in the Dominion, yet those measures were killed in the Senate. I might enlarge on this subject for some time, but I will leave that question and the defence of the Senate, on that point, to older and more experienced members than I am, so far as this House is concerned. The hon. gentleman has told us a good many things which are new. He has told us that the chief engineer, Mr. Schreiber, had made a report to the late government. If that be the case, which I do not attempt to deny, it was after I left the government. No such report was ever made while I was there, nor was this question ever discussed during the seventeen and a half years in which I was a member of the cabinet, other than the ordinary discussions which take place between railway people, the Minister of Railways, and individuals. When I say it was never discussed, I may say it was never discussed as a cabinet question. I wish that to be distinctly understood: the question of extending the western terminus of the Intercolonial Railway has been discussed I think almost ever since it has been built, but it was not discussed while I was a member of the cabinet, as a question which the government had taken in hand. What was done after I left the government I do not pretend to say, but this is the first I have heard of it. Except some rumours in the lobbies and corridors of the House—I never heard of the report to which my hon. friend has referred. If there is such a report, and if it is of such a favourable character as the hon. gentleman says it is, why has it not been laid before parliament in order that the House and the country might know what the opinion of that eminent engineer, Mr. Schreiber, is? Then he tells us that Mr. Pottinger has made a report. I was in the government when Mr. Pottinger was made chief superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. I know that he had the full confidence of every member of the late government. I believe him to be a safe man in the performance of his duty. My hon. friend tells this House that he has made a report and has made calculations.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not say made a report. The information was got from him; I do not think it was in the form of a report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was it given orally?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not say that either. There may not be a formal report and yet it was made in writing I have no doubt. It was not a formal report, so far as I know.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the information to which my hon. friend has alluded was given in writing to his superior officer, that was to all intents and purposes an official document and contains information which this House and the country are entitled to see and to know. After referring to these two new points that have not yet, so far as I could learn, been before the public, I want to point out to this House and the House of Commons that the people of Canada have not received any information in reference to this very question. Why was the information, which was in the hands of the government, held back from the people? If you look at the different reports which we have—and I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am now discussing only those points which have been laid before parliament—what information they may have in their own breasts and which is not to be given to the public I know not, and consequently cannot deal with it. Now, Mr. Schreiber made a report, to which the Minister of Justice has referred, on the 2nd day of February, 1897, and Mr. Schreiber made the statements to which the hon. gentleman referred, but he went further. My hon. friend would have done more justice to himself and certainly more justice to Mr. Schreiber had he read another paragraph which he dexterously omitted. Mr. Schreiber says, in making the report to which the hon. gentleman referred:

> Should you finally decide to acquire the road, before the matter is absolutely closed I suggest it would be prudent to have an examination made into its condition. Of course, this season of the year is not favourable for making such an inspection, nor do I think it desirable that it should be made during the spring freshet or when the frost is coming out of the ground, but later on in the season when the roadbed is settled down into place, and any damage, which may have arisen from the spring freshets may be seen, is to my view the proper time to have the road looked over.

Now, that is just such language as I would expect to come from a gentleman occupying Mr. Schreiber's position, and more particularly from the intimate knowledge I have of that gentleman's character and the care with which he commits himself in making a report of that kind. We shall see presently, as we proceed, whether they acted in accordance with the suggestion made by Mr. Schreiber and obtained the facts which he said were absolutely necessary before they could come to a proper consideration of the subject. It will be found, on looking at these reports, that the Minister of Railways and Canals made his report to Council recommending entering into arrangements with the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the 20th of March, 1897. That was before there was a possibility of acting in accordance with the suggestion and recommendation made by the chief engineer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At what date did the hon. gentleman say the agreement was entered into?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The report to Council was on the 20th of March.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not with the Drummond County Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said the Minister of Railways and Canals made his report to Council on the 20th of March, recommending the purchase. The Order in Council was approved by the Governor General on the 24th of March, giving power and authorizing the Minister of Railways and Canals to enter into such arrangements as he might think best. Parliament was called together on the 25th day of March, just one day after the Order in Council had been approved by His Excellency, and these words were put into His Excellency's mouth, as you will all remember:

> I have much satisfaction in informing you that arrangements have been concluded which, if approved, will enable the Intercolonial Railway system to reach Montreal.

On the 20th the recommendation was made to the Council; on the 24th it was confirmed and approved by Council and by His Excellency the Governor General, and on the 25th the Governor General is made to tell the people of Canada that an arrangement had been entered into by which they were to secure an extension of the Intercolonial Railway westward into Montreal. Yet you will find, if you have paid any attention to what took place in the other chamber, that the Minister of Railways and Canals more than once—two or three times I think—informed the House, when the questions were asked as to why the contract was not laid on the table, that the final arrangements had not yet been completed. Then when the contract was laid on the table we find that the contract was signed on the 15th of May, but withheld from parliament until some time afterwards, to which I shall call attention in a few moments. I wish to direct the attention of the House particularly to show, shall I say the prevarication of ministers in giving their replies—probably that would be unparliamentary; I will not use that expression; I will say the unfair treatment which has been dealt out to representatives of the people in the lower House and to this body. Now, the engineers reports, to which my hon. friend referred, and on which he places so much reliance to justify the action of the government in entering into this contract, were signed by Mr. Kingsford on the 2nd day of June, just 17 days after the contract was signed. Mr. Kingsford, bear in mind, is the engineer, I so understand it, in charge of the road, and consequently in the pay and under the direction of the Drummond County Railway Company. Mr. Johnson's report is dated the 14th of June, 1897, just twenty-nine days after the contract was signed. The report of Mr. Ridout, an officer of the Railway and Canals Department, was made on the 15th day of June, just one month after the contract was signed; and yet this House is told with a good deal of earnestness and solemnity, that on the strength of these reports the government came to the conclusion that this road was in a state that would justify its purchase, and the enormous expenditure to which they put the country in order to secure that western outlet. I leave that with the Senate without further comment. Let us pursue this line a little further. That contract which was signed on the 15th of May was not laid before the House of Commons, in order to give them an opportunity to judge of its contents and its merits, until the 11th day of June, nearly a month after it was signed and nearly three months after the passing of the Order in Council, and one month after the contract had been signed and the number of days to which I have already called the attention of the House before the engineer's report—which they say justified them in entering into the contract—was made at all. The Order in Council authorizing the entering into this bargain was only laid before parliament on the 16th of June, two months after it had been approved, and yet parliament was in session all the time, and the House of Commons moved into committee to consider the question on the 16th of June, the very day on which it was laid before them. We come now to our own House. This bill was introduced on the 19th of June, and we are asked to consider it upon its merits, its business benefits and its commercial advantages to-day. Taking the whole of these facts into consideration, can any reasonable man come to any other conclusion, than that these papers were designedly kept from the public eye so as to prevent the possibility of coming to a correct opinion on the merits of the whole transaction? I do not think that requires much further consideration. My hon. friend referred to the necessity of extension. I suppose it is a general principle laid down by all railway corporations that the covering of a larger area going from one part of the country to another so as to take the trade from any portion of the Dominion would be an advantage. We all admit that, but the question arises and must suggest itself to every member and to every man in the country, as to whether the present arrangement is one which is justifiable on its merits, and whether an entrance into Montreal westward could not have been obtained at a cheaper and much more advantageous rate. You are dependent upon eight miles of the road from Point Lévis to the Chaudière, which will be leased if confirmed under this contract. You are then subject to the whims—I will not use that word whims, I will withdraw that—you are subject to the control of the Grand Trunk Railway Company for thirty to thirty-five miles from Ste. Rosalie near St. Hyacinthe, until you reach the bridge at Montreal, and then the crossing of the bridge to Point St. Charles. Could not running arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the same way that running arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from Toronto to Hamilton? Could not, I ask, running arrangements have been made without involving the country in this expenditure and placing in the pockets of certain railway speculators, as I will show before I get through, a very large amount of public money, just as well from Point Lévis to Montreal as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the west? If that could not be done advantageously, could they not have built a bridge or assisted in building a bridge, at Quebec, thereby making connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, actually having then two competing lines to operate with in order to secure all the traffic that they possibly could. We are told that in addition to this very large expenditure which is to be incurred in this arrangement if approved, we are to pay out of the public revenues of this country $1,000,000 to assist in building the bridge at Quebec. That, I think, has not been denied. We assist them to build a bridge in order to make connection across the river to divert as much traffic as the Canadian Pacific Railway can possibly divert from the line which we are now attempting to acquire. There is another fact which my hon. friend must bear in mind, when he talks of the advantageous position in which the Intercolonial Railway will be placed in arriving at Montreal; does any reasonable man suppose for a moment, that the Grand Trunk Railway will not use all its influence and all the power that it possesses, from Chicago and eastwards down to Montreal, to secure all the freight possible, just as much as they do now, and send it to their seaport, Portland? They are not going, through pure love for the Dominion of Canada, to allow the freight, if they can prevent it, being diverted from their present line, and when you consider that line is about 480 miles nearer to Portland than it is to Halifax, that is one of the disadvantages that will present themselves in attempting in the west to secure traffic for the Intercolonial Railway. We have had agents in Toronto and Chicago and through the whole western portion of Canada and the western portion of the United States, doing what? Securing the very traffic which the hon. gentleman says they are now going to secure by the means of this road. Freight arrangements have been made, and if the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not make freight arrangements, let me say parenthetically, there are powers under the Railway Act to make them give equitable and fair rates over their road. It is only during the winter season that they can avail themselves of this advantage, because if you take a cargo of wheat or grain from Duluth or anywhere west, it can be sent through to Quebec by water, and there transhipped to the Intercolonial Railway, just as grain has been shipped in the past and will continue to be shipped in the future. Then we have another competing line in Montreal. The Canadian Pacific Railway will not relax one iota of its influence to secure all the western traffic that it possibly can to go down by the North Shore Road, and if they had the bridge to which I have referred, the running arrangements would enable you to cross and go on to Halifax if it were necessary to do so. Then we must bear in mind that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a line running from Montreal to St. John, just as good a shipping point for grain or freight as there is upon the western Atlantic shore, and that is about 226 miles shorter than via Halifax. If you take the whole Canadian Pacific Railway, it has an advantage over this new route to Halifax of about seventy-four miles. You are involving this country, for the opening up of this new route, in an amount of six or seven million dollars, notwithstanding the denial my hon. friend has made upon that point. Let us look for a moment at the terms of these contracts and see what we are receiving, and what we are paying for the privileges to be obtained through the ratification of the contract. We secure running powers from Montreal to Ste. Rosalie, over the Grand Trunk Railway, a distance of thirty to thirty-five miles. I am not positive as to that. Then we have the right to run over that branch which extends from Chaudière to Lévis, and the use of the Victoria bridge and terminal facilities at Point St. Clair, for ninety-nine years with right of renewal. Those are the rights which we acquire under the contract with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for which we pay $140,000 a year for ninety-nine years, in monthly payments of $11,666, or to be exact $11,666.66. If you capitalize that amount at an investment of three per cent, it means $4,996,600. Then you must bear in mind that in addition to that we give to the Grand Trunk Railway an actual bonus of $300,000 to aid in the enlargement and improvement of the Victoria bridge. Taking that at three per cent, that is an additional sum of $9,000 per annum. So that, in reality, for the advantages which we acquire under this contract, instead of $140,000, we are paying a little over $149,000 per annum. In addition to that, we have to pay our proportion of all the improvements and all the repairs and keeping that portion of the road which we lease in such order as to accommodate the traffic upon it. But a most extraordinary point in connection with this clause is that the country is not to pay its proportion in cash, which would be certainly, as I will point out to you in a moment, a somewhat more equitable mode of dealing with the question, because the government could borrow the money at from two and a half to three per cent, while we are bound by this contract to pay for ninety-nine years five per cent for every dollar that the Grand Trunk Railway Company thinks proper to put into the repair of the road.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; not what it thinks proper. It must obtain the consent of the minister.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I understand that. I rather think when the Grand Trunk Railway goes to the government and says it is necessary to rebuild a bridge, it is necessary to rerail the road, that it is necessary to do the repairs on a portion of the road which may have been washed away or worn out, that there is no government which would hesitate to say "we will assist you in doing that." There is no company which would, unless it gets its money for nothing, put improvements on a road that were not required. The Grand Trunk Railway Company have the right to establish passenger and freight rates over that portion of the road, by this contract, which gives them greater power. Has any hon. gentleman taken the trouble to look into this question as to how that affects the country? The government can raise its money, and so can the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with the pledge which it has, under this contract, of about $150,000 a year, as much money as is required to repair the thirty miles when necessary at a rate of three per cent, extending over ninety-nine years. Take an illustration. The Grand Trunk Railway Company require $100,000 to put the road in repair. They would borrow at three per cent, and that would involve an interest of $3,000. Canada has to pay one-half of that, $50,000, and she would pay out of that $2,500 interest, leaving the Grand Trunk Railway to pay $500, and if by an extended time it went over the full ninety-nine years, they would get it at two and a half per cent, in which case the country would pay the whole of it, and the Grand Trunk Railway not one cent. Any school boy can make the calculation for himself and ascertain whether what I have stated is correct. How any one having any knowledge of the raising of money, or financing, could have entered into such a transaction is a marvel to me. I compliment the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and find no fault with them for taking as much advantage as possible of the inexperience of those who entered into this arrangement with them. It shows at least the keen appreciation of the ability of the western railway managers, on the part of Sir Rivers Wilson, when he selected the present Mr. Hayes to manage the road. And if he, with his astuteness, got an advantage in the bargain, it is legitimate enough. I find no fault with him, but I think we should hold the government responsible for entering into an arrangement by which they virtually pledge themselves to keep that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway over which we are to run for ninety-nine years, with the right of renewal, for a second ninety-nine years, and so on to eternity, in repair. My hon. friend called attention to another clause in which he said that they had attained very great advantages and from which they were to acquire a revenue from the running of this road, and that was the local traffic. It is not for me, as a layman, to place a construction upon a clause which involves a question of law, but this question was fully discussed in the lower House and some of their own friends, prominent among them, one of the members from Toronto, gave it as their deliberate opinion that the wording of this clause which refers to the through traffic (because it says nothing about the local traffic) would prevent them from taking a passenger or one pound of freight between the two ends of the road—Montreal and Ste. Rosalie. My hon. friend stated—and he took some five or ten minutes to point out—the advantages which would accrue and the financial advantages which would arise from this bargain through the local traffic. It is not a very populated part of the country, although I believe that a portion of it is tolerably well settled, but the local traffic there, we must bear in mind, would be only competitive, because the Grand Trunk Railway runs over the same ground; and there is another extraordinary thing in this clause in connection with this same line. The Grand Trunk Railway Company reserved the right to lease that portion of the road to any third or fourth party, and the provisions are that if a third party obtained permission or authority by lease or otherwise to run over that road, they are to pay their proportion of the expenses attending the management, and any repairs in proportion to the mileage which they use and the number of cars they send over it; but there is this proviso in it which is most extraordinary: it goes on further and says they may make this arrangement with another company free if they please. They can enter into an arrangement on the western branch of thirty miles with any railway in the states with which they are connected, or with any portion of a road in Ontario and Quebec in consideration of the use of another road, and shall pay them nothing for running over this portion of the road in the province of Quebec from Montreal to Ste. Rosalie; and if they get nothing, then the country will have the pleasure of paying their proportion in proportion to the use which they give to it in running over that road to the extent of the deterioration of the property by the third party running over it. I think it is necessary, in connection with that, to show what the real effect of these clauses is and then you will find, on reference to another of the clauses, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has the right also to establish the rates, and the Intercolonial Railway has to submit to them. I shall not further waste the time of the House because I think the probabilities are that every man has given as much attention as I have in discussing the different clauses, but shall confine myself as much as possible to the bargain made with this company.

The debate was adjourned.

It being one o'clock the Senate then adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

I. C. R. EXTENSION BILL.

THE DEBATE RESUMED.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before continuing my remarks on the subject before the House, I will take this opportunity, with the permission of the House, of congratulating the hon. Minister of Justice upon the further recognition by Her Majesty of his long services to the country. Whatever our political differences of opinion may be, there is one thing on which we are united, a sincere and ardent love of country and devotion to the Crown. The hon. gentleman has displayed it upon all and upon every occasion where an opportunity has presented itself, and where he has been called upon to express his views as a British subject. I refer particularly to the time when we had under discussion the questions of commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity and other questions which were likely, if adopted, to impair the connection between Canada and the mother country. The hon. gentleman never hesitated to express, in the most unreserved manner, his devotion to his country and his antagonism to any policy which would tend to the separation of Canada from the empire. all have a sincere feeling of gratitude that Her Majesty's government has, of late years recognized the services,—perhaps I should not say that, as it might be construed as referring to myself as well—of representative men of all political parties in this country, when they have, in the opinion of those who represent Her Majesty here, rendered services to the Crown and to the country.

I desire now to call the attention to one or two points which I omitted this morning in reference to the Grand Trunk Railway. I do so because I think that in all probability advantage may be taken of the omission of these points by hon. gentlemen who may possibly reply. In the report of Mr. Schreiber, he mentions the fact that there are heavy grades of sixty-four feet per mile on this line and intimates in very clear language that in case any arrangements are made for the acquisition of that railway, stipulations should be made for the reduction of the grades. Provision has been made in the contract for that reduction, but what I desire to say is this, that the grades on the Grand Trunk Railway, had the Intercolonial Railway obtained running powers from Lévis to Montreal, could have been reduced just as well as the grades upon the other. I desire also to emphasize the portion of my remarks in which I called attention to the fact that whatever had to be done could be done with very little expense, if any, to the Grand Trunk Railway, and that the expense would fall upon the revenues of this country. In order to substantiate my position on that point, I desire to call attention to the important fact that Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, when addressing his directors not long ago, in London, intimated to them the great improvements which were to take place upon certain portions of the line between, as I understand it, Montreal and Quebec, and the increased facilities that were to be provided on the Victoria bridge, and that it was not going to cost the company anything. Now I can easily understand, when he knew that the company was to have a subsidy of $300,000, and to receive five per cent upon half of the improvements to be made upon the Grand Trunk Railway, after this contract had been ratified, that they would have nothing to pay, particularly if they obtained their money at two and a half per cent; and even if they obtained it at three per cent, which I contend they could do as well as the government, by pledging the rent which we have to pay, at most, all they would have to pay for all those repairs would be one-half of one per cent. If the House will permit, I will for a short time call attention to that portion of the arrangement which refers to the Drummond County Railway. I find by looking at the report of the Department of Railways and such other documents as I could obtain, that the length of the road, including the Nicolet Branch, would be ninety and a half miles. Thirty to thirty-five miles to be built in order to connect the road at the Chaudière with that short portion of eight miles, to carry them to Point Lévis. Now, if you take the rental of $70,000 a year, payable $35,000 half-yearly, you will find the country is paying for this road, very nearly $17,500 per mile. And, mark you, that does not include the rolling stock which we are bound, under the contract, to purchase from the Drummond County Railway at a valuation, or at such price as may be agreed upon by the parties, so that there is to be an additional investment for rolling stock. Taking the whole mileage constructed, and including the rolling stock, it has cost the company, so far as we can ascertain, from the limited knowledge of the documents put before us, about $1,366,485 or about $15,000 per mile. Now, the company, in order to enable them to accomplish what they have done, received from the Federal government in cash $287,936, they obtained from the Quebec government $300,445.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—And free right of way through the government lands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says that in addition to this they had free right of way through the government land; that is something that I was not aware of before. In addition, as I was pointing out, they received some $15,000 from municipalities. That makes a total sum of $603,381 of bonuses. Now the hon. leader of the House, in referring to this fact, stated that we had no right whatever to consider this point when discussing the question of purchase. That may be logically correct, but in computing the amount of money which these gentlemen are to put into their pockets, it is a very good argument, and a very fair position for us to take, to say you have received just so much money to assist you in this undertaking, and you have expended just such an amount, and the balance you put into your pocket if you sell it at a profit. The cost to the company, therefore, is just about $8,500 per mile after deducting the bonuses, and the government pays to the parties who have entered into this speculation, about, as I have already intimated, $17,500 per mile, for a road which cost the actual promoters, the actual builders, that is the company, about $8,500 per mile. And then in addition, as I have already intimated, we have to pay for whatever rolling stock they may have in their possession, thus showing the net profit to the railway manipulators, the promoters, speculators or whatever you think proper to call them, of about $1,084,800, to be divided among the speculators. These are figures which nobody can controvert. You may manipulate them as much as you please, but so far as the information which is laid before us shows, that will be the net result to the parties who own the Drummond County Railway, if they succeed in having this contract ratified. I may also point out that, in addition to the $603,381 of bonuses received from the government and from municipalities, the company obtained $141,686 of other capital not taken into account in the above estimate and statement. I have been unable to discover, in looking through the papers, from what source that $141,686 came, and consequently I am not in a position to give any explanation as to its receipt or as to its expenditure. I merely mention the fact as being shown in the papers, that in addition to the amount to which I referred they received this extra sum. Then I find the company has a floating debt of $221,000.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—Would my hon. friend allow me to ask, for information, upon what principle it is that he says that the bonuses they had received should be taken into consideration in any disposition of this road by its owners? They received over $600,000 as bonuses from both governments, but still, when they had received those bonuses and built the line, the road was theirs, and why should any account be taken of that in the disposition of the road by those who received the bonuses? Because, I take it, the moment they got the bonuses and completed the work, the road was theirs, to do with it just as they liked. Do I make myself understood?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes; but the hon. gentleman is waiting till the hon. member from Toronto sits down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been waiting until the hon. gentleman from Toronto had resumed his seat before answering his question, not because I did not understand him. I do not think my hon. friend followed closely what I stated.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—I have been trying to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt about that. I stated that the Minister of Justice, in referring to that point had stated that we had no right to take the bonuses into consideration. I conceded that, so far as the sellers were concerned, but what I did say, was that in pointing out the profits which were to accrue to the promoters and those who sold the road, we had a right to consider that, and more particularly as this money and these bonuses was public money and not private money. If it had been the donation of a parent to a son, and he was selling the property, then I recognize the full force of the statement and the inference which my hon. friend desired the House to draw. But I make a distinction between a case of that kind and where a company has received out of the revenues, out of the pockets of the people, a certain amount to assist them in their enterprise. I hope my hon. friend understands my position. I was referring, when interrupted, to the fact that this company had a floating debt, as shown by the papers, of $221,000, and it has a bond issue of $1,000,000. What has been the result of the bond issue and what proceeds have been received from that issue, I have been unable, in looking through the papers, and in examining the documents so far as they came under my notice, to find out until reading one of the speeches in the Lower House. I ascertain, as I supposed, that this million dollars of bonds is invested in a bank as security for the advances which have been made, and of which I presume—I cannot speak positively—the $221,000 is a portion. This inference may or may not be correct. Where I have to deal particularly with a question of figures and accounts in which I could not trace them to the legitimate and proper source whence they came, I do not desire to speak positively upon a question of that kind, but I think the inference which I have drawn is very clear that they have never been sold, and that the bank holds them as security for the advances which have been made, so that it would show that with a nominal capital of $400,000, which they have upon their books, whether paid up or not is not known, but we will take it for granted that it is paid up, I think if an examination took place, it would be found that the documents would show that this $400,000 had been paid, not in cash or in money by the stockholders, but in consideration of the promotion, or what is called "to the promoters," and the promoters are generally the stockholders in an enterprise of this kind. It is plain, therefore, that this capital of $400,000 and the proceeds, if there were any, of the million dollars, did not go into the construction of the road, but, on the contrary, whatever was obtained by the sale of these bonds, went into the pockets of the promoters of the road. It is not necessary for me to point out to this House, because I am sure every man knows it, that there are certain promoters connected with all companies of this kind—not with all companies, because I was connected with one myself, and was years at it and never got a dollar, so that I am out of that ring—but what has come under my observation is, that there is a class of people called promoters who generally absorb whatever amount is received from stock. How this money was spent it is difficult for us to know, and we can only draw inferences from what we see published in papers and in investigations. We do know how a portion of this money was spent, because if hon. gentlemen will only turn their attention for a moment to the evidence that was given in the Baie des Chaleurs investigation, they will find these items:

> Drummond Counties Railway subsidy—$7,762 reached Mr. Beauvais, a brother-in-law of Count Mercier, and $5,000 credited to Mercier personally for election accounts.

Now, those are the only developments, so far as I can find, that came to light during the investigation, in connection with this railway, so that we can easily understand how portions of the money obtained from the Dominion treasury, the provincial treasury, and municipal treasury, were disposed of, and that was to aid in certain elections which were going on at the time in the lower provinces, and the Dominion elections. I do not know how true the inferences may be as to the expenditure of another large amount of this money, but I shall take the opportunity, and crave the indulgence of the House, while I read for a few minutes some portion of an article which appeared in the Montreal Star of the 19th. It may be said that this is pure imagination. It may be said that these charges are unfounded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All I have to say is, Mr. Hugh Graham, the proprietor of the Star is a responsible man, and there are the courts of justice in which the character and reputation of those who are assailed can be easily justified if they dare to go into court. The Star says in the leading article, which is double leaded:

> In looking into this question in an impartial spirit—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—"Impartial spirit," hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says "hear, hear." I think he has a vivid recollection of the time when he moved the six months' hoist to the Pacific Railway Bill before he was employed as solicitor by that company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When he endeavoured to throw it out of this House. That is the particular time in which he displayed his impartiality. Let me hope he will exhibit the same impartiality and the same candour and the same desire to vote and work in the interest of the country as he did upon that occasion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So he will.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will begin again :

In looking into the question in an impartial spirit, it is desirable but most difficult to discriminate between what are obviously facts bearing upon the case and what are only surmises, inferences or even vague suspicions. But neither inferences nor suspicions can safely be ignored by a government jealous of its honour, when they are matter of common talk, when they harmonize with indisputable facts, and when they have an appearance of extreme improbability. They cannot be laughed down nor can they be voted down by the mere brute force of majority.

Then the article goes on to say :

The critics further say "that the agreement was entered into ——"

—that is the agreement to which he refers.

"before any official reports had been made upon the property"

The documents which I have read, and the dates which I have given, prove the correctness of that statement.

and that the Order in Council authorizing the deal was actually passed before the government had been in power a month.

That statement is not verified by the date of the Order in Council, but if he had said that this arrangement had been entered into between the Drummond County Railway Company and the Government one month after the election, and that the question had been discussed and decided by Council what they would do—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Never heard of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not the slightest doubt it would then be correct. It has been my painful duty, upon another occasion, not long since, to refer to the lack of memory on the part of my hon. friend. I am tolerably well acquainted with the past history of my hon. friend, hence his interruptions enable me to refer to that which I otherwise would not do. Then the article proceeds :

That on the strength of this agreement, a bank in this province discounted notes for a large amount the proceeds of which were applied partly to paying the Liberal expenses in the Quebec provincial elections, partly the Liberal expenses in the Dominion by-elections, partly to paying the deposits in the contestation of Conservative seats and partly subsidizing heavily certain Liberal newspapers. It is alleged to be within the absolute knowledge of the Railway Department that a first-class road to connect the Intercolonial Railway with St. Lambert should be constructed for less than two million dollars.

That is a fact which the government themselves ought to be in possession of, and should be able to say whether it is correct or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Greenshields made the deposit in the Champlain protested election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Very likely. We all know how much was deposited—although that was not connected with this point—in the fifteen counties after the elections in 1891 ; that may be a matter of consideration hereafter. The article proceeds :

It is interesting to note that the contract bears date the 15th May, just four days after the provincial elections. The public will find it difficult to determine just how much of positive fact and how much of surmise there may be in all these allegations, but parliament certainly should not ratify the bargain without making an effort to find out, and it is not in the interest of the government to have this contract passed under a cloud of suspicion. The House of Commons has committed itself so thoroughly that the only practical method now would appear to be an inquiry by a committee of the Senate as in the Baie des Chaleurs case. The Senate did the country a good service in that instance, and now as then would have the moral support of the country. It is impossible to conceive of the government interposing any obstacles in the way of such an investigation, and it is equally impossibly to conceive of the Senate assuming the responsibility of endorsing the contract without making the necessary inquiry.

With these sentiments I must confess that I am fully in accord. Now I must refer for a few moments to the character of this road of which the hon. minister gave such a glowing description. One would have supposed after reading or hearing his remarks that it was a road which had been in existence as long as the Intercolonial Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway ; and that, therefore, its bed was in such a condition as to enable the trains to run at the rate of fifty or sixty or more miles per hour. I have only to point out what Mr. Schreiber says in reference to the road. He gives no opinion as to its stability or its permanency except in connection with the bridging, but he says distinctly that before entering into any contract a thorough examination should take place in the summer, when the frost is out of the ground, to ascertain what the true character of the road was. As I have also pointed out, the three reports upon which the government profess to have based their contract were made and sent to the government days and weeks after the contract was signed. Now I shall read the report of an engineer whom, I dare say, many of the residents of Quebec may know, and they may be able to judge of his reputation and the dependence that should be put on anything that he would say. Mr. F. A. Salisbury, a civil engineer, who, I believe, has been employed on the Eastern Counties Railway for some time past, having gone over the road, makes the following report:

This road commences at Ste. Rosalie.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is Mr. Armstrong's engineer?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know that he is. It makes no difference if he is. It is the truth of his statement with which we have to deal.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It makes all the difference in the world.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Be that as it may, I give this report for what it is worth, whether it be Mr. Armstrong's engineer or whether it be an independent engineer. When the hon. gentleman says this is from Mr. Armstrong's engineer, I do not know what Mr. Armstrong has to do with this contract. I do not see that his name has anything to do with it at all. I might just as well infer that the government engineers were instructed to make improper reports.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Mr. Armstrong is the promoter and manager of the Eastern Railway Company who are anxious that the government should have taken that means of getting access to Montreal, and naturally being a competitor with the Drummond County people, he would be anxious that the Drummond County road should look as bad as possible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Greenshields is the president and those associated with him are the promoters of the Drummond County Railway, and it is their interest to make Mr. Armstrong's road look as bad as possible—to throw discredit on those who differ from them as much as possible; so that that argument is just as applicable to one as to the other. Mr. A. F. Salisbury's report is as follows:

This road commences at Ste. Rosalie, in the county of Bagot, a point on the Grand Trunk Railway, 38 miles distant from Montreal; thence to Drummondville, a place of some importance in the county of Drummond, on the St. Francis River. From Drummondville the line extends to Forestdale, in the county of Nicolet, through a country the most of which is uncultivated. From Forestdale to Moose Park, 8 miles, the line is in operation, but in an incomplete state.

This railway has been constructed in as cheap a manner as is possible. The grade of the line to a very large extent is a surface one, consequently having bad grades that would have been avoided in a first-class line by accepting heavier work.

Grading has been done in a great many cases in a very injudicious manner. In most places where the banks have been made from side work, the ditches have been made too close to the bank, leaving no berm, consequently allowing the slopes of the embankments to reach into the ditches. The banks are so low that in numerous cases the water in the ditches is only a few inches lower than the rail, keeping the embankment in such a wet condition that it must be very difficult to keep up to its proper shape and causing sags in the rail.

Another defect is that drainage has not been properly arranged for, the water lodging in the culverts not having proper outlet by tap drains, as are usually provided.

The track is very good in places, but there are stretches where the lining and lifting is not what it should be. The rails have not been bent on the curves, and a great number of rails are getting badly worn. There are several places on the line where the tangents have bad bents in them, notably just west of Aston Junction and close to St. Winceslas. The curves on the line as a rule are light, there not being many of a very heavy degree of curvature. Some of them, however, are badly in need of lining, one in particular just going into Forestdale being from six inches to a foot off centre by their track centres. The rails are the 56 lbs. section joined together by common fish plate.

The ties are chiefly hemlock mixed with a few cedar, etc.

Between Aston Junction and Waddington Falls the right of way has only been partially cleared up, the logs and brush being only partly burnt, and there is quite a stretch of the line not fenced.

The culverts are chiefly wooden beam, built mostly of hemlock. The workmanship on them is rough. The culverts not having the proper deck are without any guard-rail, as the common tie is used.

In addition to the wooden culverts there are some masonry beam culverts in good condition, as also some masonry boxes.

The pipe culverts on the line are not protected at the ends as they should be. This is a source of danger, as the banks at outlet and inlet are sure to be damaged in high water by scouring.

The quality of the ballast on the line is, as a rule, fairly good, with the exception of some few places, but the whole line needs a good lift.

Between St. Leonard and Carmel there is a great deal of ballast of a very sandy nature.

The track in that district is also entirely too low, needing a heavy lift of ballast to make a good track.

At Drummondville station the track is in bad condition, ties bedded down in the mud, badly lined, and heaved with frost.

At Blake's Mills, between Mitchell and Carmel, there is a very heavy grade, which necessitates the cutting of the trains when they consist of more than ten cars, making two trips to surmount the grade.

This defect in the line can be got rid of by building to the north of the present line.

The bridging on the line is very good, the masonry, iron work and timber superstructure being in good condition. The principal rivers crossed are :

The St. Francis at Drummondville, four spans.

West Branch Nicolet, near Mitchell, one span.

East Branch Nicolet, near St. Leonard, steel trestle.

Becancour River, near Waddington Falls, four spans.

There are some other small bridges in good order with the exception of one just east of Forestdale, which is a small girder, probably thirty feet, resting on timber abutments, which seem to be of a weak description.

At the bridge over the East Nicolet there is a very heavy sag in the grade, which should have been avoided by keeping up the grade, especially as a trestle bridge has been used there.

The fence on the road is built of the cheapest kind. The bulk of it is the common four-wire fence, with one board on top. The posts are mostly split ones, and placed too far apart to make a good solid fence without an intermediate small post to brace the wire. Between Drummondville and St. Hyacinthe there is a considerable stretch of board fence four boards high. This is in bad condition, as it is badly heaved by frost, consequent to the post being insufficiently sunk in the ground.

The station buildings on the road are mostly of a very cheap nature—small, unfinished and unpainted. This is accounted for by the bush country through which the road runs.

Drummondville has the best station on the line, and also a repair shop, which is a building 75 or 80 feet long with a single track running through it. It is a very inexpensive building.

The water supply is provided by tanks at Drummondville, St. Leonard and Forestdale.

The main defects in the line are the narrowness of the banks, the need of another lift of ballast before any fast running can be made and the condition of the wooden culverts and cattle guards. Ties also need replacing, but new ties are already distributed in many places.

This report has been published in the Montreal newspapers for some time. If it is of the character which the hon. senior member from Halifax (Mr. Power) indicates, it was the duty of the government to have had a second survey made of the line and prove to the country and to parliament, when it is asked to ratify this agreement, the incorrectness or falsity of that report, and if they have failed to do so, they have tacitly admitted the truth of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Engineer Ridout has surveyed the line since that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Ridout says nothing of the kind, if the hon. gentleman will permit me to make such a positive declaration. I was a little astounded, if one can be astounded at statements which are made when a question of this kind is before the House—at the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice in reference to the earnings of this road. There is not a man in Canada who has given any attention to this subject that does not know that the Drummond County Railway was originally conceived, and the construction commenced for one purpose solely, and that was to take out the inferior quality of lumber that there is in that country, and the immense amount of tan bark which exists there, and just as soon as that tan bark is finished and the traffic from it ceases there will be consequently a decrease in the earnings. There are gentleman in this House who are lumbermen, who know all about that section of the country, and know that a large portion of it is unfit for settlement and never will be settled. In a large portion of it there are no inhabitants and I am safe in saying will not be any for a century. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his figures, but the only figures which I can lay my hands on are those which appear in the official records of the country, and these official figures give the earnings and expenditure of the road, for the last year. The statement shows that they earned $14,774, from passenger traffic, and $74,117 from freight, principally consisting of tan bark and the lumber which is obtained in that section of the country along the line of the road, or in its near proximity; and $9,904 for carrying the mail, making the total earnings for the year $92,795. Now, the cost of operating the road which brought to the company the gross revenue of $92,795, was no less than $63,728.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is for 1895?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, this is for 1896. My notes show last year.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is a mistake. It must be July, 1895, to July, 1896.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It shows the net revenue to be $29,067. I think, if I remember correctly, the hon. gentleman said very nearly that sum.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is the correct sum for that year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then my figures are right?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, for that year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The net earnings were $29,067 for which we are to pay $70,000, or nearly $40,000 more than the net earnings of the road.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not catch the idea.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say the net earnings last year were $29,067.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Not last year—the previous year. From July, 1895, to July, 1896.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course we could not have this year's until July, 1897?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—But we have it for ten months of the present year, and the net profit is at the rate of $35,000 for the twelve months.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Here is further evidence of the manner in which facts have been kept from the House which are necessary to form a correct opinion. I am dealing with the figures to July, 1896. Has my hon. friend shown that the revenue has increased and the expenses have diminished during the ten months of 1897. My hon. friend may be quite correct; I do not know about that. I am dealing with the facts which have been made public, and I prefaced my remarks with a denunciation of the government for having kept facts from the public which are necessary to come to a correct conclusion.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Mr. Blair stated them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With a net revenue of over $29,000, we pay a rent, to begin with, of $70,000 a year, being nearly $40,000 over and above the net revenue, as shown by these figures. I have no doubt my hon. friend will argue that that does not cover the whole road. I admit that, and the argument will be this: that as you extend the road to Quebec, so in proportion will the earnings increase; but I venture this statement, that in proportion as the earning power increases will the expenses of running and operating it increase—I am speaking in all sincerity, when I say there is no prospect of that road becoming a paying concern. The hon. gentleman has called attention to the fact that another interest is claiming that its road is shorter. I believe there is a shorter road. Might I, before I go any further, ask the hon. Minister of Justice whether there is any report in the department from Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer, as to the probable cost of a new road from Montreal to Point Lévis. I have been told—I do not vouch for its accuracy—that there is a report, and that that report, if made public, will show that it would not cost nearly as much as we are involving the country in if this scheme were adopted.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no doubt that is a mistake.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Could we not tell that by asking how much the Intercolonial Railway cost per mile?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that has nothing to do with it. You might just as well ask how much the Grand Trunk Railway cost per mile. The Grand Trunk Railway was built when labour was two or three times higher than now, when rails cost five times more than they cost now, and at a period when people of this country knew nothing at all about building railways; consequently that road cost three or four times more, I venture the assertion, than it could be built for to-day.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Labour was cheaper then than now.

Hon. MEMBERS—No, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, when upon this point to say that Mr. Schreiber did examine this road and had reported to the government that in order to obtain the facilities for extending the Intercolonial Railway that are secured by this contract, it would have cost this country about twenty-five mil ions of dollars.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I mentioned that amount, but I did not say that Mr. Schreiber said so. I said it was estimated, but it was not estimated by Mr. Schreiber. I quoted no such figures from him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the statement made by my hon. friend was not authoritative. It was merely a statement made by somebody, I fancy, who knew nothing about it. I wonder if he ever took the trouble to calculate what that means per mile. I notice, by looking at the distance by one of the routes now contemplated, from Montreal to Point Lévis, that it is 173 miles. Now, if you divide that into $25,000,000, you get $165,000 per mile.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The amount that I mentioned included the bridge and the terminal facilities required in Montreal, not the road independently of these.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We still give you the benefit of the bridge and terminal facilities, and then you will have it about $100,000 a mile. When I said $165,000 a mile, I referred to the Grand Trunk Railway. By the route mentioned by the hon. gentleman, at the price mentioned by him, it would give $170,000 a mile. That would acquire terminal points and build a bridge. The Victoria bridge cost five or six millions of dollars, if I remember correctly, but the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, very nearly the same length at Lachine, did not cost two millions of dollars. With facilities for building bridges, and the inventions of recent years, and the light that science has brought to bear on these questions, the construction of those great bridges is fifty to seventy-five per cent cheaper than forty or fifty years ago.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Then there is the station ground in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—What amount did the hon. gentleman give as coming from the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Twenty-five million dollars.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—It would take $20,000,000 of it to get into Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That depends altogether on circumstances. I admit the force of the statement as to the cost of land damages. There are two ways of constructing roads. There is, unfortunately, I admit it, a desire on the part of property owners to put a value upon property when the government want it that they would not think of asking under other circumstances, and I am sorry to say that when you go into the Exchequer Court you find witnesses prepared to justify, under oath, the claims of the owners. There is another point in reference to this question, and that is the character of the country through which the line runs, and which is, I think, a very important one. I have before me, compiled from the last census, a statement showing the inhabitants of the sections of the country through which this road, and what is contended by some to be the shorter road along the south shore of the St. Lawrence, which would certainly give accommodation to a greater number of people. The population along the line of the Drummond County road of 120 miles amounts to about 16,658 souls, all told, and that includes Nicolet, Iberville, Drummond and Bagot. The only large villages and towns, so far as I am informed, along the route, are some of them eight or ten miles from the line of the road. Now, the South Shore Line runs through a population of 48,677. Whether that is a consideration or not I must leave the House to judge. I have a very few remarks to make in reference to the necessity for the construction of this road.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is the South Shore Road the Armstrong Road?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think so. It is the one in connection with which the Quebec government passed an Order in Council, I believe, to guarantee the interest upon certain bonds which they were to place upon the English market. The House must not misunderstand me. They were to make a certain loan. They were to depo-it with the Quebec government a certain amount of money, which would be equal to the interest upon the amount which they would guarantee, or in other words, a similar transaction to that of the Dominion government, guaranteeing the bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It has been stated that the Senate is an independent body, an irresponsible body it has been termed, and not dependent upon the will of the people and therefore has no right to interfere with the will of the people as expressed through their representatives. Now, to a certain extent, I admit that proposition; but I ask whether this deal with the Drummond County Road was ever submitted to the people? And I ask further, with the facts before the people of this Dominion, whether they would ever think of ratifying this contract if they knew its contents and knew what they were paying for the accommodation which they were to receive. Let me refer to the House of Lords. The same argument was used against the House of Lords for daring to reject a bill granting certain concessions of Home Rule to Ireland. They threw out that bill by an immense majority, and they were denounced by all the Radicals throughout the country as an irresponsible body, and the same threats were made against the House of Lords that have been made to-day against the Senate of Canada if they dare have an opinion upon a public measure which affects the interests of the country. What was the result? Lord Rosebery, appealed to the people on this very question, and what followed? Not in our own history has there been such a complete revolution of public opinion as there was on that question. Lord Salisbury took this ground, that the Upper House was there as a protector of the Crown and the rights of the people; that this question of Home Rule was not submitted to the people of the British Islands when the election took place; that, on the contrary, Gladstone studiously avoided giving any opinion as to what he would do, but told the people that when he was elected and his party returned to power, he and Lord Rosebery would deal with the question. And upon that ground Lord Salisbury moved in the House of Lords to eject the bill, and they went to the country upon the question of Home Rule. The action of the House of Commons, which pretended to represent the opinions and feelings and desires of the people of Great Britain, was condemned; and the result was, as I have already intimated, that he came back to power, overturning the Rosebery government, and is now governing the country with a majority almost unprecedented in English history. I do not know that I should make any prophesy, but we are, in a smaller way, in precisely the same position as Lord Salisbury and Lord Rosebery were when that question was before the people of the British Islands. An opinion upon this question has not been expressed by the people of this country. This is an arrangement, I firmly believe, arising out of what took place during the last election, and as a result of the last election, and now it is hurled upon the people of this country at the very first opportunity, in the hope, as one of the gentlemen in the Commons said to me the other day, that it would all be forgotten before the next election came round. Is public opinion so far as we can ascertain, in favour of this bill? I have a telegram from the mayor of Nicolet, a town that is deeply interested in this and other roads, a town that has connection with the Drummond County road by a branch, and what does the mayor say? This is dated the 17th June, Nicolet, Quebec. To the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Ottawa:

> At a special meeting of Nicolet town council held this day it has been resolved that said corporation disapproves and condemns the deal of the Drummond Counties Railway by Federal government as absolutely disadvantageous to the country generally, and for the south shore of the St. Lawrence particularly. GEORGE BALL, Mayor.

I suppose those gentlemen ought to know what their interests are, and whether that or another line would be in their interest. Then take the press of Montreal, the city in which it would be supposed that they would be deeply interested in the proposed extension of the Intercolonial Railway. The Montreal Gazette, the leading commercial paper in that city, denounces it in unmeasured terms. La Presse with a daily circulation of over 54,000, condemns it equally as strongly as the Gazette. The Montreal Star, with a circulation daily of nearly 50,000 and about 87,500 of a weekly circulation condemns it in still stronger terms than any of the other papers. Following in their wake come Le Monde and La Minerve, and my hon. friend says the Witness too.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would you allow me to finish. I was going to accede to that point. I have an extract here from the Witness in which they condemn the terms. I have an extract of an article a few days ago in line with the government policy and now supporting it, and that is all. The Witness has always pursued that course. The hon. gentleman knows that very well, and his pet organ the Globe is in precisely the same position, as I will point out in a few moments. They condemned the project before they knew what the government was going to do. I would particularly call their attention to an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe last September, in which they wrote an admirable article on the matter of railway subsidies, an article which met my approval exactly; and I was in hopes, from the tone of that article, that it was speaking by authority of the government, and that bills such as we have before us at present, were at an end for ever. But if you read the article of last Friday, the 15th, you would find that it, like a true party paper, condemned though it has been repeatedly by the hon. Secretary of State as unworthy of the confidence of the Liberal party, wheels into line and now publishes a very strong article in favour of the bill, and did me the honour to devote nearly a column of condemnation of myself, for which I have to thank them. I have put the question as fairly as I can and I think it is unnecessary to say more to convince this House—that they should not ratify this contract. Attempts have been made to influence the members of this House by promises and by threats, which I think they will find, before they get through with the Senate, will be treated with contempt. First of all we hear around the lobbies promises that purchases are to be made of certain roads in the maritime provinces, as branches of the Intercolonial Railway. There is one running to a little place called Chatham. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Northumberland knows where it is—which includes, if I am correct, what they call the Fredericton bridge, which owes to the country a good sum. I do not know how true it is, perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I can tell you all about it if you want to know.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know something about that very road and so does my hon. friend. He and I have discussed that matter often, and it is just possible that these railway claims are to be settled. I would not think for a moment that any man's vote could be influenced by anything of that kind, but I do not know that there are certain claims, because they have been in existence since I was acting Minister of Railways and Canals. I know, I thought them of such a character that I felt obliged to reject them, and I know other claims have been made of the same character. From what has transpired around us, and what is indicated in these very resolutions that are in this bill before us, I am beginning to get suspicious, great as is the confidence I have in the politicians who control the destinies of the country at the present moment. However, that may or may not be proved. Let me refer to the threats. We have, first of all, the whip of the lower House, who is supposed to speak the sentiments of the government, telling members of this House that if we dare—no, I do not think he used that word—that if we rejected this bill they would appeal to the home government to appoint additional Senators. A minister has threatened to withdraw the Crow's Nest bill if we rejected the bill before us. What has the Crow's Nest Pass in the Rocky Mountains to do with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec to Montreal? I cannot understand it, but there is a method in their madness and when they have gone to members of this House and made these threats for the purpose of influencing members of the Senate who are known to be favourable to the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and who are friends, as I trust every man in the House is, of that great enterprise, the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I say this, that it is disreputable—and that is a strong word—on the part of any member of the other House, whether he represents the government or not, to hold out such threats to an independent body of gentlemen like those who compose the Senate of Canada. The next threat we have is from the newspapers. It has been intimated—and I am sure this will have a marvellous effect on the members of the Senate—that if we take an independent position upon this question, if we dare to have an opinion of our own, our sessional indemnity is to be decreased just one-half. I hope the time is coming when we shall be in the same position as they are in England and in some of the Australian colonies, when we will refuse to take any money at all, but a threat of that kind is beneath contempt. I think I have said quite enough on that point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The Grits will not agree to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. They would be the first to kick. La Patrie has made threats against us if we dare to refuse to reject measures. I will not say much about Mr. Tarte's paper or the Globe. I will, however, just refer to an article in the Globe of the 21st, and those of you who have not read it will be able to form an opinion as to how far you should be influenced or cajoled into taking a position that your conscience and your belief as to what is in the interests of the country suggests or dictates. The Globe of the 21st says:

> Mere hostility to Mr. Tarte, because he has done so much to overthrow Conservatism in Quebec, or to Mr. Blair, because he has dismissed a few Conservative partisans, will not justify the Senate in opposing the measure, nor will these mere general charges of corruption afford any basis for hostile action by the Senate.

Had it stopped with these remarks I think every member of the House would have said Amen, you are quite correct. Then he proceeds:

> It is hardly too much to say that ever since confederation the upper House has been merely registering the decrees of the Conservative membership of the Commons.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is not so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I leave that point to gentlemen who will follow me, to contradict:

> There was no proposal too extravagant, no job too flagrant for the Senate to swallow when Conservatives had control of the affairs of the country; and if now, without the most substantial reasons, the Senate should undertake to continue Conservative administration by blocking the measures of the Liberal government, a new issue will be raised that can only be settled by the smashing of the institution that stands in the way of the declared will of the people.

I think I have already pointed out, so far as the will of the people is concerned, that they have never been consulted on this question, and as for the "smashing" of the Senate, all I can say to that is, that I think there are gentlemen here who will have something to say before they will allow themselves to be smashed. That is my impression at least. But fancy, in all sincerity, a presumed organ of public opinion, a paper of such standing as the Globe of Toronto, occupying the position that it does as the exponent of the opinions and principles and policy of the Liberal party, holding out over the heads of independent members of the Senate a threat of that kind! It might affect such gentlemen as sit before me, the Minister of Justice and the hon. Secretary of State, but I can assure them—and I think I speak for the party to which I belong—that threats of that kind are not very apt to make them depart from the path of rectitude, and a policy they believe to be in the interest of the country. The reference to myself I do not propose to discuss more than to say, they altogether misstate my position in this House. The Globe says:

> We believe that Sir Mackenzie Bowell, as leader of the Conservative party in the Senate, will set a better example to the country.

I propose, so far as my humble ability and my position in this House is concerned, to set an example to the people of this country by preventing one of the grossest jobs that I believe has ever been attempted to be perpetrated in this or any other country. I have no more power in this Senate than any other hon. gentleman. I have the power, I hope, of expressing my own individual opinions, and I shall not hesitate to express those opinions on every occasion when it may be necessary, without any reference whatever to the gentlemen who are leaders of the government at the present day. It it is our duty as a Senate to forget for the moment partisan feeling, and to look as the Minister of Justice stated in his opening remarks at the merits of the question before us. If, as I believe, and as I am satisfied I have shown, this whole transaction is neither upon a business nor a commercial bases, it is the duty of this House to reject it. I should like to place a motion upon the records of the House giving the reasons why I think the House should reject the measure in toto, but as has been intimated to me, if I attempted a motion of that kind, your attention, Mr. Speaker, would be called to the fact that it had a preamble, and therefore would be entirely out of order. I should like to place upon the records of the Senate a resolution declaring that this bill is improvident in its character and that it is not based upon commercial principles.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—As bad as the Harris job.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, infinitely worse than the Harris job. If there was any job in the Harris matter, it was considered by the best men that you have in the city of St. John, who represented that it was worth from twenty-five to fifty thousand dollars more—

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I deny that they were the best men.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They were just as reliable men as my hon. friend. They were men like Mr. Fairweather and Everett, and others, from whom I obtained the information and the valuation. I took particular care about it, and I am sorry my hon. friend interjected that expression, because it is just possible that my hon. friend is right so far as the value of the property was concerned I was acting Minister of Railways and Canals at the time, and I have knowledge of every particular in connection with it. I know the pressure brought upon the government of that day to obtain more room at St. John. I knew from experience that additional room was necessary, and before I consented to take a single step in the matter, I referred it, as I believed, to the best men in St. John at the time, for report as to the actual value of the property which it was intended to acquire, and after the report came we cut it down, if my recollection serves me properly, over $25,000 before we made the purchase. It is just possible that we gave too much after all. I am not prepared to combat that with the hon. gentleman. He ought to know, but it is the first time I have heard a St. John man make that statement. I have stated what I should like to place on the records of the Senate—and I have given the reasons why I have not taken that course—the fact that the bargain into which the government have entered is extravagant in its character, and that the road is not worth what they are giving for it, that the advantages which are to be derived from it are not such as have been indicated by the hon. Minister of Justice in his opening remarks: that, as a whole, it is improvident, involving a charge directly or indirectly upon the revenues of this country of the interest on about $7,000,000—but after consideration I have deemed it better to adopt the course pursued by my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller) when he moved to reject the bill that was laid before the Senate by the Right Honourable Sir John Macdonald's government in reference to the Short Line via Harvey—the hon. gentleman knows what I refer to—and that is by moving a plain, straightforward motion for the rejection of the bill. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville, that the bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read this day three months.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—May I ask the hon. Minister of Justice if he has that report of Mr. Pottinger in regard to the increase of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway resulting from the extension to Montreal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will give the House the benefit of it, until I saw the statement in the Conservative press last week, I was not aware that there was anything in the present bill that was going to evoke opposition in this chamber. Hon. gentlemen may smile at what I am stating; and I can only account for the threat which appeared in the papers, or the improper articles written in the various papers in reference to the condition of the Senate, by the fact that that report had gone abroad before the bill had been considered in this House. Under no circumstances was the action taken by the various papers which my hon. friend has alluded to defensible or justifiable. At the same time, I mention that as one of the reasons why they were probably influenced to write in the spirit in which they did. I think I am quite right in saying that this Senate had judged of this case before the bill came up; because it is an undeniable fact that before the bill came into the Senate it was repeated in a number of papers published over this country, originating in the city of Montreal, that the Senate intended to throw out the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is that justification for you——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no justification; I am stating it as a fact, because on the present occasion I feel extremely embarrassed at the spirit which has been shown before this measure has been fairly considered by the Senate. I do not propose to follow the hon. leader of the opposition in the line of argument he has taken against this bill. He has highly coloured a number of imaginable statements which have been made, and exaggerated in other cases. He has quoted from authority which I dispute, statements which I am prepared to show are indefensible and unwarrantable. And I think before I sit down I shall be able to satisfy the House if they look at it from the standpoint which the hon. gentleman said it was the duty of the Senate to regard it, that it is a fair question whether it is in the interest of Canada to ratify this agreement—that I shall be able, if it is approached from an impartial standpoint, without a preconceived and predetermined disposition to throw out the bill, that the majority of the senators here would give their assent to the measure before the House. I do that because I feel just as the hon. Minister of Justice felt, that the more one looked into this case, not only the more defensible and justifiable does the action of the minister appear, but it was the best thing in the interest of Canada. It was the best method of obliterating for ever those deficiencies of the Intercolonial Railway that appeared year by year, for the last twenty years, when they brought in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I presume every hon. gentleman in this chamber will at least recognize this proposition, that the Intercolonial Railway will do a larger amount of business if it has one of its termini in the city of Montreal than if the terminus is at Levis. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the question of the advantages that will flow from it. They are too apparent. Originally the Intercolonial Railway terminated at Rivière du Loup. It was a very heavy drag upon Canada. There were deficits year by year and the government thought it was improving the road to bring it up to Levis at a very large expense, very much larger than we are paying for this extension to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I will show figures just now. Hon. gentlemen will get them all in such a way that they are not to be disputed. They brought the road to Lévis and terminated it there. It was brought, I believe, eight or nine miles from Lévis to Chaudière Junction. It became a branch of the Grand Trunk Railway subject to any terms for its traffic the Grand Trunk Railway might choose to impose. It had large terminal advantages at the Atlantic coast, but it was unable to utilize them, and had to take its traffic at any rate the Grand Trunk Railway choose to gave it. The Grand Trunk Railway had its outlet at Portland. It had an ocean line from Portland to the Maritime Provinces, so it only sent traffic over the Intercolonial Railway when it suited its purpose, and at figures which suited the Grand Trunk Railway. The hon. gentleman has said why did not they make the same arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway that were made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway between Hamilton and Toronto. It would have meant the payment of at least seventy thousand dollars a year more than the present arrangement, because the line is so much longer and the mileage which is ordinarily paid under these conditions without the advantages of terminal facilities is recognized as being on a fair basis at one thousand dollars a mile, so that going either over the Grand Trunk Railway or over the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north side would have resulted in an increased annual expenditure, not a payment of two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, but of two hundred and seventy thousand dollars a year. Sixty thousand dollars would be the difference, calculating the running arrangement over the Canadian Pacific Railway or over the Grand Trunk Railway into the city of Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask if that was the amount asked by the Grand Trunk Railway? I understood the hon. gentleman to say we pay $140,000 now to the Grand Trunk Railway and $70,000 to the Drummond County road.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; $210,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say it would have cost $60,000 more?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes: if we had made arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, based upon the terms agreed upon between Hamilton and Toronto.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the government negotiate on that basis?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I stated as a fact, based on the ordinary mileage paid in other cases, that the cost would have been more than by adopting the policy we have in purchasing the Drummond County Railway. The hon. gentleman, in making his calculations of last year's profits, did it on the assumption that this was a finished road, whereas the line from Ste. Rosalie runs to nowhere in the woods. I ask him if it is a fair test of the capacity of a railway to earn anything when one end of it runs into the woods—an uncompleted line? Yet it was quoted as evidence of what the road is going to earn.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It must go into the woods for the tan bark.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The arrangement is this: at the Chaudière bridge, and the terminal in the east end there was an agreement between the Drummond County and the Grand Trunk Railway to pay annually a sum of $6,000. That is, of course, transferred to the government of Canada in connection with the Drummond County Railway. The Drummond County Railway is 132½ miles long, and for that we pay $64,000 a year, terminable in ninety-nine years—that is, the whole amount is paid up at the end of that period. That makes $70,000. We will deal with that question first. In reference first as to the railway, a good deal has been said of the condition of it, and it has been assumed that this road was not to be put in condition when the government took it over. On the contrary, the agreement is that the curves are to be made equal to those of the Intercolonial Railway and the gradients are to be reduced and very considerable changes are to be made in the road to put it in a first class condition. The 42½ miles yet to be built are to be built on the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, with rails of seventy pounds to the yard. So that we shall practically take over a finished railway, equal in all particulars to the Intercolonial Railway for the 132½ miles for which we pay that $64,000 per annum. A good deal has been said to belittle the condition of this road, and the evidence of an engineer whom I have never heard of, has been quoted. It has been said that this evidence comes from the engineer of a rival company. There is no doubt about the facts, and I am not disclosing any secrets of the cabinet when I say that a very considerable pressure was brought to bear on the government to take the road on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, but it would have cost a very much larger sum for a road which would not have been as advantageous to Canada. It would have involved the building of a bridge at Montreal, and altogether the proposal was not one that could at all be compared with the proposition that the government have entered into, subject to the approval of parliament. I desire just to quote for the information of the House some points in the evidence that have been laid before us in the reports of the engineers as to this railway. I may say it has been assumed here, and I think stated, that this was a corrupt transaction—that it had its origin during the late election, that funds were advanced by parties interested with a view to the transfer of this road which were used for corrupt purposes. I deny absolutely and positively any such statements. I never heard of this road until the month of February last. It was not brought under the notice of myself or my colleagues. Some of my colleagues may have known about it, but I am breaking no confidence when I say it was some time in January or February when this matter was first submitted to the consideration of the government, and the negotiations occupied a considerable period, because the terms first proposed were far in excess of those afterwards secured. I mention that, because it is placing my colleague and myself in a very invidious position to make charges, as they have been made to-day, without any foundation or justification for them. They have been hurled across the floor that it is a corrupt transaction, the result of a bargain made at the last election, that we dare not have submitted it to the people last election, that it is not in the interests of the people of Canada, that the Senate is going to receive a large amount of applause by throwing out this bill. I doubt very much, should the Senate throw out this bill, if a year hence the applause will be as loud as they think. The Senate is asked to judge this agreement, not on the government proposals, but on the statements of a rival company, jealous of the superior advantages which the Drummond County Railway possessed. They are making statements that are false. When I read the Star the other day I was astounded —I could scarcely believe that a paper which is reasonably fair, would make statements which, if true, ought to force this government out of office, and yet they are read here to-day as if there was any foundation for them. Hon. gentlemen's minds are prejudiced against the proposition of the government. I do not think the Senate, as a rule, approach ordinary matters in that spirit, and I trust, before this debate closes, that they will at least feel, when the figures are all submitted to them, that there is in this transaction a good deal more to recommend it to their judgment than they at first supposed. Mr. Schreiber says :

That 73 miles of road are built and in operation, that the gradients and alignments are favourable, there being only one grade exceeding 53 feet per mile, and that one is 64 feet to the mile.

It was understood in the agreement that the grade is to be reduced in order to correspond with the grades on the Intercolonial Railway. The report continues :

That with one exception there is no curve of a less radius than 1,433 feet, and that the one exception is a curve of 953 feet radius.

That the roadbed is well and substantially built, the cuttings being 20 feet and the embankments 15 feet wide at sub-grade. Ample drainage is provided by substantial steel structures resting on massive masonry spanning the larger rivers, and steel plate girders resting on strong well built masonry spanning the streams of a lesser magnitude, whereas, the general drainage throughout the smaller rivulets has been passed through culverts constructed of sound cedar timber 10 x 10 inches square. The large portion of the line through the cleared land is inclosed by a substantial post and board fence, whereas, on a small portion of the line, a wire fence has been erected. The permanent way is laid with 2,600 ties to the mile, the steel rails weighing 56 pounds to the yard connected with steel fish plates.

The road is well ballasted with a very fine quality of gravel, the station buildings are neat buildings of what I consider sufficient capacity for the requirements of th · road, and the water service is good.

I think you will agree with me from the description I have given of the works that a really good road has been secured, fully up to the general standard of railways in Canada. At the same time, I think, you should insist on the 64 feet per mile grade being reduced to 53 feet, in making an arrangement for the acquisition of the road, if such be your intention, which I assume to be the case.

This was before the contract was made.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Read on to the last part of the report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has the report before him. He can be governed by his own judgment in the matter.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no use concealing it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not concealing it. I had this book distributed this morning as soon as it was published.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We have it and can read it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not take over that road until it is all put in order. The parties are to-day spending a very large sum of money upon it. I understand they made arrangements some time ago for $200,000 that is being now expended on this in order to bring it up to the government standard.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the use of holding back that part of the report that refers to the necessity of further examining the road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not holding it back ; the hon. gentleman has it before him.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend only gave it to us an hour ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I found it had not been distributed here, and I at once went to the proper source to have it distributed, because I wish the Senate to have every information necessary to form a judgment on the subject. Mr. Kingsford, who has been represented as the engineer of the road, and therefore prejudiced, is not the engineer of the road. Mr. Kingsford was sent there by the government, and he reports :

On the condition of the road-bed it is my duty favourably to report. The ballast is of an excellent character, and there is plenty of it. It is not very neatly dressed off, as on older lines, but that is more a matter of appearance affecting the finished look of the work than in any way a detriment injurious to the safety and character of the track. I have myself been on a train which travelled forty miles an hour, and I never felt the slightest anxiety as to the propriety of this speed.

That cannot be an inferior road if it is in that condition. Of course, if hon. gentlemen find it distasteful to hear the government side of the question I shall stop, but I claim in a matter of this importance hon.

gentlemen should allow the government to state the case to be submitted. The Mr. Johnston who is referred to here is one of the oldest officers of the railway department. He has been there for a good many years. He says:

I found the roadbed to be firm and in very good shape throughout, and, with the exception of three miles purposely left without ballast, in view of a contemplated change of alignment, well ballasted, the material being of exceptional excellent quality.

The rails are all in good condition, weighing 56 lbs. to the yard.

The grades are not excessive, the only point at which 1·00 per 100 is exceeded being at the St. Francis River, the approaches to which, on either side, are now 1·20 per 100. I understand the company are to reduce this grade before the road is taken over by the government.

The percentage of curvature is exceptionally small, the curves with one exception (one of 6°) not exceeding 4° or a radius of 1,433 feet.

I may say, in this connection, that on my return journey, the train, consisting of an engine and combination car, made the distance of 68 miles in 90 minutes, including two stoppages, the last 28 miles being run in 30 minutes, without the least discomfort to the passengers on the train.

The principal bridges are those over the Black river, the two branches of the Nicolet and the Becancour. These are all fine substantial steel superstructures resting on massive well-built masonry abutments and piers.

The same evidence comes from Mr. Ridout, a gentleman who for very many years has been the officer delegated to examine the railways when they were paid their subsidies. I presume he examined the Drummond County road before the company got their subsidy The late government would not pay subsidies until the road was inspected and Mr. Ridout's certificate was furnished. I will just say a word or two as to the cost we are paying for the 132½ miles—that line with stations, sidings, tanks, land damages, and all $15,000 a mile, and that is the road that this Senate is asked to say forms the basis for a job. I ask this House, has any government in Canada at any time ever built a line of railway for $15,000 a mile, or been able to purchase a railway at any such figure? At $15,000 a mile it would cost $1,987,500. The interest at 3¼ per cent—that is certainly as low as it is possible to put it, because even at 3 per cent we cannot negotiate a loan under one-eighth, I have never known one to be negotiated for less—the interest on the amount would be $64,593,75 which is in excess of the annual payments to the Drummond County Railway, and you must recollect those annual payments cease at the expiration of the term. There is the statement, and figures will not lie and cannot be got over: we are paying only at the rate of $15,000 for that railway, and I ask you whether any similar road has been built in Canada for any such figures, or whether any government in building roads on its own account has been able to build a road for any such amount.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is too much if we do not want it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not understand what report the hon. gentleman is reading from?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am taking the figures as they are. We are paying $64,000 for the 132½ miles of road. At $15,000 a mile the cost of the whole line completed, with stations tanks and everything of that kind, would be $1,987,500. I say that the interest on that amount at 3¼ per cent is $64,593.75 which is more than we are annually paying for the road. Our annual payment is $64,000. That would be leaving less than a fourth of one per cent for the sinking fund. Now I would ask hon. gentlemen what other roads have cost the government of this country? When the late government thought it was in the interest of the people of Canada to take over the Rivière du Loup line I am not aware that the Senate or any one else questioned the propriety of the government doing so. The road was run down, it was not in a fit state to be operated and yet the government of the country paid $12,000 a mile for it in the condition it was. The repairs on the road cost $1,076,939, making, together with the sum paid, $2,576,939, which is equal to $20,615 per mile. Nobody questioned the propriety of the government doing so. They were with the best possible motive endeavouring to raise the Intercolonial Railway from the annual deficits. I wrote the chief engineer to know the particulars of that purchase and I got this reply from him:—

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS,
OTTAWA, 23rd June, 1897.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to your letter of this morning's date inquiring for details of the purchase from the Grand Trunk Railway Company of the Intercolonial Extension from the Rivière du Loup to the town of Levis, a distance of 125 miles, I beg to inform you that the purchase money was $1,500,000.

The road, however, had previously been allowed to run down and was not in good condition, and after taking possession of it, it was found necessary to spend a large sum upon it, in ballasting it, relaying it with steel rails, improving the road bed and rebuilding some of the structures. The amount expended in bringing the physical condition of the road up to the standard of the Intercolonial was $1,076,939, paid Grand Trunk Railway Company $1,500,000; total $2,576,939: which is equal to $20,615 per mile.

Yours, &c.,

(Sgd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER.

The Honourable R. W. SCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Now, that transaction was not challenged. Nobody thought of challenging that and accusing the government of purchasing it from any improper motive. The government brought the road round to join the Grand Trunk Railway near Chaudière Junction. Later on, some time after that, the government were asked to build a direct line to Levis; so the government, at the instance of the people, who believed some advantage would grow from it, consented to build the fourteen miles known as the St. Charles branch. Did the Senate challenge that? The government built the branch I presume, from the very best motives, but still it did not give any important advantage. That fourteen miles cost as much or more than the 132½ miles we are buying, yet this House did not enter a protest because the government spent such a sum in building that road. Here is a letter from Mr. Schreiber on the subject:

OTTAWA, 23rd June, 1897.

The Hon. R. W. SCOTT,
Secretary of State. Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—Answering your letter of this date on the subject of the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial Railway, I beg to inform you that the land and land damages in the said branch, a distance of 14 miles, were estimated at about $320,000. The actual sum paid therefor was $935,777.86. The cost of construction was $822,763.39—altogether $1,758,541.25.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER.

The cost of construction of the 14 miles of the St. Charles Branch is about equal to the amount proposed to be paid for the 132½ miles of the Drummond County Road. One would have thought that, if anybody had been disposed to protest against unheard-of extravagance, this House would have been prepared to challenge that, yet it went by without a challenge—nobody said a word about it; and if the Conservative government had effected the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, do hon. gentlemen, in all fairness, mean to say that the Senate having approved of such extravagant projects as the St. Charles Branch without challenge, they would not confirm a transaction that can be defended before any fair audience in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific—a road that is to be made an extension of the Intercolonial Railway at a cost of $15,000 per mile, including land damages, sidings, stations and all the other et ceteras connected with it? Hon. gentlemen cannot point to any single instance where any government—I care not what government—has made so advantageous a bargain. The government of which I was a member, tried railway building, and found that it was a very dangerous thing for the government to attempt to build a railway—that the cost was also in excess of the estimates, and that it was a good deal cheaper to buy a road after the parties who built it were unable to sustain it. I have quoted the experience of the late government showing that it cost to build fourteen miles $1,758,541, while we are purchasing 132½ miles for a sum equivalent to $15,000 per mile. Is that a matter which should cause hon. gentlemen to pause before condemning this Drummond County Railway contract?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I have a little difficulty in following the hon. gentleman. I understand him to say that the government in buying this Drummond County Railway consider they are buying 132½ miles of railway which they value at $15,000 a mile.

Hon, Mr. SCOTT—That is what t will cost us.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is, $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years that the government pay amounts to about $2,000 000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the figures I gave my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Is it too high a price?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I want to know what the price is. The reason I am asking the price is this: I do not wish to embarrass the hon. gentleman, but I understand the hon.

leader of the House to say when he was dealing with this question that the price they pay for the Drummond County Railway is $1,600,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He was taking it at four per cent.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I understand the hon. Secretary of State now to say it is $2,000,000, and I want to know which is right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a question of interest. My hon. colleague was estimating the interest at four per cent. He thought that would be a fair sum to pay. I am taking it at a different rate of interest. I am now giving the Senate the benefit of what I consider is the lowest rate of interest that could possibly be arrangedi.i a financial transaction of that kind. As far as my information goes, even in making our best loans we have to pay one-eighth commission.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If I understand the hon. gentleman, the $64,000 per annum will be paid during the period of ninety-years?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What portion of that annuity is allowed for the payment of interest and what for the payment of sinking fund?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the whole amount.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The annuity comprises two portions, the interest and the sinking fund, and I want to know what is the difference between the two.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We made no calculation of that kind. Hon. gentlemen can do that if they please. I am making a calculation myself to show what it would result in if you take the amount at $15,000 a mile. Supposing you could build that road and equip it at $15,000 a mile the cost would be what I have said. Three and a quarter per cent on that makes the sum of $64,593.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What I want to know is if that sinking fund put out at compound interest during the ninety-nine years, would make up that $1,500,000 or a larger amount

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is pretty hard to tell that. I allow one-eighth per cent for the sinking fund. That is as little as one can allow—at all events I think that is a very fair proportion from my experience of transactions of that kind. The cost of the road has been variously estimated at—I think my hon. colleague quoted from the Minister of Railways and Canals—$1,600,000 and they were calculating that 4 per cent on it would be equal to $64,000. That cost I understand was independent of the land damages. It would appear that in 1894 the question of purchasing this road was being considered, although no action was taken, still it may be well to call attention to the fact. In order to pay a subsidy, the government require that the road shall be up to a certain standing. We have to assume that the road came up to the standard or the subsidy would not have been paid. If the land damages were to be anywhere on the basis of the land damages for the fourteen miles of the St. Charles branch, the land damages alone would amount to considerably over $1,000,000. At all events at that time the road was only opened for the seventy-two miles including the branch to Nicolet. In regard to the agreement, I desire to say a word or two, because it was asserted here this morning that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had the advantage in this contract that it had a superior position, so far particularly as the local traffic was concerned, and the opinion of Mr. Lount was quoted. I have been endeavouring, since I heard the statement, to find some basis or authority for that, and I failed up to the present time to do it. I would not need to ask Mr. Lount his opinion, or any hon. gentleman in this chamber. If he would only read the paragraphs affecting this question he would not need to refer to any lawyer as to the interpretation to be placed upon it, because I may here say that the Intercolonial Railway from Ste. Rosalie to the bridge and from there on to Bonaventure Station will stand in the same position as the Grand Trunk Railway. The Intercolonial will have the right to half the privileges, not only of the railway and bridges, but half of those terminals which to-day could not be replaced in the city of Montreal for ten million dollars. I do not know the exact figures, but other hon. gentlemen will know. The Grand Trunk have machine shops there and connections with the canals and a vast amount of sidings and the government railway is to enjoy equal privileges in every way, even so far as local traffic is concerned. The Intercolonial between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal will stand just in the same position as the Grand Trunk Railway. The 15th clause reads as follows:

That the Intercolonial Railway shall have the right to carry in and on its through trains traffic to and from and between all points on the line of railway extending from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, both inclusive, and in the conducting of its business between and including these stations shall have the right of conducting this business in as full and complete a manner as the company itself.

That is very plain. Nothing could be plainer than that. Then it goes on:

That the rates and fares charged between points on the joint section shall be those established by the company and to and from points on the Intercolonial Railway shall be the same by the company and the Intercolonial Railway.

It makes no difference in that case whether they are collected by Grand Trunk officials or not:

That all moneys collected in the vehicles and trains of the Intercolonial Railway at any and all points between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal shall belong to and be deemed to have been earned by Her Majesty, and the company shall not be entitled to receive any portion thereof: and that all money collected and received by the station masters, freight agents, ticket agents, baggage masters and any and all persons who may, from time to time, be authorized or instructed by the proper officials of the Intercolonial Railway to collect and receive money between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal for Intercolonial Railway business and traffic, including among other things car rental, storage of freight in cars and storage of goods in the company's warehouses and freight sheds, or collected and received for any other business in any way connected with the Intercolonial Railway, belongs to Her Majesty.

That is perfectly clear, that even moneys collected for travelling in cars belonging to the Intercolonial Railway, although collected by the ticket agents of the Grand Trunk Railway, shall be paid over to Her Majesty for the Intercolonial Railway.

That local tickets issued by either of the parties hereto for passage between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal or any intermediate station shall be accepted on all trains of either party hereto between said points, and the party who issued the tickets shall, on presentation of the ticket so used and collected, pay to the party who carried the passengers the full amount received for the said ticket.

That is a perfectly mutual arrangement. If the Intercolonial Railway carry the passengers they are paid. If the Grand Trunk Railway carry the passengers, although the ticket may be issued by the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway get the money. Nothing could be fairer than that. Nothing could be on a more mutual basis than that arrangement, and that is the spirit of the whole arrangement, including all the advantages that will flow from having those terminals in the city of Montreal. What are those advantages of the terminals in Montreal? It is that the Intercolonial Railway is then on an independent foothold, that it can compete for travel between the cities of Montreal and Quebec, that it would have the advantage in that traffic and that I think is a very important point that it is a shorter line than the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north side and a shorter line than the Grand Trunk Railway on the south side.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What is the mileage?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By Drummond County Railway, Quebec to Montreal is one hundred and sixty-one miles, and by the Canadian Pacific Railway it is one hundred and seventy-fonr.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is one hundred and seventy-three.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be seen that the Intercolonial Railway will have an immense advantage in the traffic between those two cities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much shorter do you make it by the Drummond County Railway between Montreal and Quebec?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be eleven miles shorter than the Canadian Pacific Railway and thirteen shorter than the Grand Truuk Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I make it fourteen miles shorter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I might be wrong a mile or a mile and a half—I cannot tell. I took the figures from the time-table, but it is quite clear, so far as the mileage is concerned between those two cities, that the Intercolonial will have the advantage, and that they must reap a very large advantage from being the shorter line. The Intercolonial management can go into the market and compete for the travel, just as the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grank Trunk Railway do, and the important part of this arrangement is the fact that all over the Dominion, wherever the Grand Trunk Railway and its branches extend, the agents of the Intercolonial Railway have a right to make contracts for travel over the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal to Halifax. They have that right, and the Grand Trunk Railway is bound to carry their traffic to Montreal and give it to the Intercolonial Railway. Is not that an immense advantage? Is not that placing the Intercolonial Railway where it never was before? It never had the opportunity of securing any traffic outside its immediate vicinity, and I need not quote the past history of that road. It has been year by year simply heaping up deficits. An hon. gentleman asked what were the advantages. It did appear to me that any one familiar with traffic arrangements must have seen that the arrangements contained in this agreement were so manifestly valuable that it did not require any argument. The Intercolonial Railway is to be placed at the foot of navigation of the St. Lawrence and great lakes. The Intercolonial Railway will obtain traffic that comes west of Montreal over the Grand Trunk Railway, and, not only that, but they are on a level with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway in the city of Montreal in the enormous traffic that comes from the great lakes to Montreal, and for the enormous traffic that goes out and comes into the city of Montreal from the maritime provinces. The hon. gentleman should not require any argument to recognize the immense value that that is. I have under my hand the report of Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber, who are probably in the best position to know whether there are to be any benefits, and what they will be. They are two gentlemen who have been prominently connected with the Intercolonial Railway for many years and have no doubt been endeavouring to devise means by which that deficit could be removed, because it was always a reflection on the officers having charge of the road that the annual report shows a loss. There has been no interest paid on capital account, and in addition there has been this annual loss charged to the people of Canada. Here is the estimate made by Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber, not a hasty estimate, but one that they have taken time to consider and to think over, and they have judged it by the traffic of the last few years. You know very well that the first year in which a railway gains access to any point where there is competitive traffic is never as good as it subsequently obtains—that they have got practically to bid for the business. Here are the official returns for 1895-96:

ESTIMATED traffic on the Intercolonial Railway for the first full year of operation after being extended to the City of Montreal.

—	1895-96.	After extended to Montreal.
Length of road in miles...	1,142	1,295
Gross earnings.....	$2,957,640	$3,885,000
Working expenses.....	3,012,000	3,365,000
Profit..		$520,000
Loss	$ 54,360
Tons of freight carried...	1,379,618	1,698,000
No. of passengers carried..	1,471,866	1,700,000

(Sgd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER,
D. POTTINGER.

The estimate is based on a full knowledge of the subject; they must be in a position to know what the working expenses will be of the additional one hundred and sixty-one miles. They put down working expenses including extra mileage to Montreal, $3,365,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What are the working expenses?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—$3,012,300, and when extended to Montreal they estimate the working expenses $3,365,000.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And to that you add the yearly rent $212,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The tons of freight carried last year were 1,379,618. They estimate that if the road is taken to Montreal the tons of freight carried—and you will agree with me that that estimate is not certainly an extravagant one—will be 1,698,000. The number of passengers actually carried on the Intercolonial Railway last year was 1,471,866. They estimate that when extended to Montreal they will carry 1,700,000. That is on the average in round numbers of about 1,300 passengers to the mile, and I ask hon. gentlemen whether the average number of passengers between Montreal and Quebec will not be far in excess of the number of passengers carried on those sections of the Intercolonial on the east side of Quebec. Yet basing it on that standard, taking the estimate as a low estimate, every one will admit that the passenger traffic will be larger pro rate per mile, and how does the profit and loss come out on this transaction? Last year the loss was less than on some previous years, but it amounted to $54,367, and they estimate that bringing the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal on the terms now proposed by the government, the profit will be over $500,000, and that proposal the Senate is asked to condemn.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is that less rent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether it includes rent or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Your own figures show it includes it. It estimates the probable increase in passenger traffic and draws the result.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What will be the profit? Three hundred and ten thousand dollars. That would be the difference supposing you charged it up to two hundred and ten thousand dollars that we are going to pay, yet they show a profit of three hundred and ten thousand dollars. That is the estimate of Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber. Those two gentlemen have discussed it together. They are familiar with the traffic and charging it with the two hundred and ten thousand dollars, and yet it leaves a profit of over three hundred and ten thousand dollars, instead of a loss, and this is the project which we are told is a corrupt bargain, and done, not in the interests of Canada, but proposed to further the interests of some gentleman who has been subscribing to some of the funds in connection with the late elections—a pure business transaction which we thought we were entering into for the benefit of the country, has not only been met in a hostile spirit, but we are denounced as corrupt, though the road has been bought for a less figure than has ever been paid for any railway before. You can point to no transaction in Canada which will at all compare with the economical features of this transaction, and yet the Senate is asked to throw out the bill and say to the people of Canada, "You shall not get the benefit of this transaction." It is quite true that the best authority that can be quoted, the only authority that can be quoted—not politicians but business men and experts, and whose reputations are at stake in this matter — say, "If you adopt this arrangement, you will be saving to the people of Canada nearly half a million dollars," because if you add the deficits to the three hundred and ten thousand dollars you bring it up to nearly half a million, which is saved to this country by this transaction which the Senate is now asked to condemn. Is there a fair basis for that condemnation? Is there on the face of the papers we have submitted to you any justification for the action which it is proposed that this House shall take to throw out this bill? Will the people of Canada think you have acted for their best interests if it can be made to appear by officers who are in no sense political allies, who have had charge of this work, who are most interested in showing a credit instead of a debit annually on this road, who come forward with figures showing us the tonnage in the past and the tonnage they know will be obtained by this extension, and that they say to us there will be an advantage to the people of Canada of nearly half a million dollars annually by the adoption of this proposal, and we are asked to throw it out because, forsooth, somebody inspired the Montreal Star and some other Tory papers to take up the hue and cry that this was a corrupt arrangement instigated by whom? By parties who were unable to unload a project on the government, although some of them were friends and allies and supporters of the government, yet because we would not accept their job in preference to a business arrangement, they by subsidizing the person circulating those reports endeavour to destroy the character of gentlemen in this country who never heard of this road until a few months ago when this arrangement was projected.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Does the hon.

gentleman wish us to infer that these papers that spoke against the bill were subsidized?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite likely they have some motive, perhaps political. It was certainly done for a purpose. Some papers took up the cry and they never examined the items and never saw these reports of the road. They killed the bill before it came to the Senate. I was amazed when I read in the papers last week that there was any such feeling in this House. I was not aware of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You never laid those reports before the Senate until the 16th. How could they condemn it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter was not thought to be of that supreme importance. Here the House of Commons were engaged in a task that absorbed and monopolized all the attention of that House in connection with the tariff and with the estimates, and it was impossible.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It was of sufficient important to be mentioned in the speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and there were other measures which were mentioned in the speech and only taken up the other day. It was a commercial matter involving the outlay of money and had to be brought up first in the Commons, but I never heard the government condemned because they did not bring it down earlier. It has not been the principle in the past to do that. I am not going to defend the withholding of measures, because I have complained of that myself, but it is sometimes impossible to get measures down early in the session.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—If my hon. friend would prove the statement that the papers were subsidized, it might have a great effect on the vote we are about to give.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What did it cost to build the North Shore Railway?

Hon. Mr. ALMON—That is not an answer to the question I asked.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was built by a good Conservative government. It is reputed to have cost $7,000,000 and we know the Canadian Pacific Railway paid $4,000,000 for the road without those terminal advantages. It had only a small station in the east end of the city of Montreal, and yet they paid $4,000,000 for it without any of the advantages offered under this arrangement.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The Canadian Pacific Railway obtained the greatest possible advantages in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They had to pay for them wholly apart from the four million dollars paid for the North Shore. In the first place, it cost seven million dollars, and the Canadian Pacific Railway paid four million dollars for it, and they have since paid about five millions in Montreal for terminals.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—Did the four millions include the terminals?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would seven million dollars purchase the terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway at Montreal, taking the large area at Point St. Charles and the works at the canal, and the sidings? What would be the use of building to Montreal if we had to build a bridge and buy terminals there? It would be absolutely ruinous. It would be very proper, I think, then, for the Senate to condemn the government because the expenditure would be so enormously in excess of any value. We do not propose to add to the debt of this country. We propose to pay so much annually, and we tell you what we are going to give and we say give us access to the city of Montreal by the Grand Trunk Railway and we will give you two hundred thousand dollars a year without adding one cent to the debt, whereas, if we ourselves undertake to build that railway, it would cost a large sum of money with the terminals—it might cost ten or fifteen million dollars. That two hundred and ten thousand dollars we pay annually will be more than covered by the increased earnings of the Intercolonial Railway, and Canada will not be called upon to pay one fraction of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is hypothetical.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given you the basis upon which I form my judgment, and my hon. friend will not challenge that statement made by Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have you that report of Mr. Pottinger?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Blair stated in the House that they had no report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wrote to those gentlemen and told them I must have the report. I will lay the report on the Table in a few moments. I do not know that there is any other point to which I need call attention. I can bring, in addition to the evidence before the House, innumerable instances where the government of this country have paid very much larger sums than we are paying for this project. I have taken as an illustration the line adjoining, and I have shown that you have paid not fifteen thousand dollars a mile but fifty thousand dollars a mile for a connecting link, for fourteen miles of the St. Charles branch to Levis, but you are now asked to approve of the present agreement for the one hundred and thirty-two and a half miles for a very much less rate. Hon. gentlemen may smile, but these are facts which cannot be got over, and it will be for the people of Canada to say whether the government have produced evidence which will justify this House in refusing to accede to the action of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—With nineteen thousand of a minority of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not catch what the hon. gentleman says. The vote was taken on the 23rd of June last. The people of Canada voted to change their confidence.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was this question before the people?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The general administration of the affairs of this country was before the people. This question was not particularly discussed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The people of Canada would have the right to censure the government if they could make no better showing on the Intercolonial Railway than the late government have done. That is one of the arguments brought over and over again, that the Intercolonial Railway had not been properly administered, and was a drag on the people of this country and a great expense to the government. That was a question before the people at the polls, and it was a question that was repeatedly brought up, and it was the duty of the government at the earliest possible moment to devote their attention to the points which would enable them to consider in what way the Intercolonial Railway should be managed so as not to be a heavy charge on the people of the country. They have arrived at a solution, and they have shown hon. gentlemen, on the statements of men who are best able in the whole of Canada to make a report, that if this project is carried out, instead of a deficit, there will be a gain to the people of Canada of nearly half a million a year. And yet, if I correctly judge the spirit of a large number of gentlemen in this chamber, they will say that rather than give the government authority to go on and complete the proposal and remove the deficits, that that deficit shall continue to exist on the Intercolonial, that it shall be made tributary to the Grand Trunk Railway, and that it will be a charge of from $50,000 to $250,000 a year on the people of Canada. I do not think the people of Canada will endorse any such action. I think the people of Canada will be prepared to say that for nearly 20 years the late government failed to bring the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway up to a level year by year, and large deficits were shown, and here is a proposal by which, on the authority of the only two gentlemen who are capable of expressing an opinion, the deficit is to be removed and a large profit assured to the people of Canada. And yet the Senate will say "No, rather than pass this bill in the Senate we will continue to see deficits on the Intercolonial Railway." That is the verdict this House is asked to give. That is the appeal that is made to them to throw out this bill, to teach the government the lesson that they have no right to interfere with the Intercolonial Railway management by bringing it to Montreal before it was submitted to the people. I say that we did submit to the people at the last election that we should, by the adoption of some policy which we would inaugurate, change the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway; and we have submitted a business proposition to you, which, if submitted to the people, would be endorsed by them to-morrow. Until the articles appeared in the Montreal papers about this matter I had not heard one single gentleman in this Senate express a hostile opinion. The opinion might have been expressed by some one, but I did not know it.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—We did not know anything about it.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I told you if you proved what you said it would have a great influence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given a plain statement of the facts and I trust and believe that the calmer judgment of this House will say that it is infinitely better to pass this measure than to defeat it: that if the anticipations of the government, based as they are on reports, are wrong, that you will have an opportunity of criticising the conduct of the government better than if you throw out the bill. It is not at all likely that there can be deficits in the future. But of course Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber may be mistaken.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Mr. Schreiber gave an opinion as to the Curran Bridge which I think was perfectly right, and the judges so found, but your party, through the newspapers, said his judgment was not at all reliable. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot understand what the hon. gentleman is driving at. I cannot understand what he wants me to infer. He talks about Mr. Schreiber and the Curran Bridge.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Mr. Schreiber gave an opinion of the Curran Bridge which your party said was a swindle and fraud and scandal. He examined the work and said the work was perfectly good. I understand it was referred to judicial authorities and they said Mr. Schreiber was right. Your party did not think Mr. Schreiber was correct, but still you want to force him on us now. I believed him then.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to make any apology for the Curran Bridge. I know nothing of it except what appears in the blue book. Some hon. gentlemen wish to see this report of Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Pottinger's. I now lay it on the table for their inspection. I hope hon. gentlemen, before expressing any final opinion on this matter, will really disabuse their minds of any influence that may be brought to bear by the newspapers. The newspapers are not good authority for this House to quote. We know that newspapers are always in the interest of political parties, both on one side and the other. I do not claim for the papers on the Liberal side any greater immunity from reproach than the papers of the Conservative party. They act from influences which they think are going to benefit their party, but it is not always safe for us to be guided by inspirations of that kind, and I say, in view of the facts and figures which I have submitted to-day to the Senate, this House will make a very grave mistake if, on the present occasion, they act on the suggestion of throwing out this bill.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. WOOD resumed the debate. He said: I desire to say at the outset of my remarks that in the observations which I may address to the House, I desire to be governed by the rule which the hon. leader of the House himself laid down, that is, to treat the question which is now under consideration as a business question, and to deal with it on business principles. So far as I am concerned, I do not wish to judge it from any other standpoint. With regard to the observations which the last speaker addressed to the House, I have very little to say. He referred to some newspaper report. I can only say, with regard to these, that until I heard them read in the House to-day by the hon. leader of the opposition and by the hon. Secretary of State, I had not seen them. They have had no influence upon me whatever. I believe that I am not as regular a reader of newspapers as some of my friends who sit around me. The hon. gentleman criticised these articles that had appeared in the newspapers. The criticism that he offered was that he thought the editors had written those articles without having fully understood them or studied the question. If I were to criticise the speech of the hon. Secretary of State, I think I should feel like making a somewhat similar comment. I judge from the nature of the observations he has addressed to the House that he had not given this question very full or careful consideration. The hon. gentleman referred to some other matters which perhaps I should mention, but which I do not wish to refer to, as I consider they are entirely foreign to the subject we are discussing. The hon. gentleman referred to the large amount which the government paid for the acquisition of the Rivière du Loup branch of the Grand Trunk Railway in 1879. As I understand that transaction, the amount paid was not considered the fair market value, if I may use the expression, of that portion of the road at that time. There were certain conditions attached to that purchase, that an amount of money was to be retained by the government and to be expended by the Grand Trunk Railway Company on extensions of their line in other directions, chiefly, I believe, for the purpose of obtaining a connection with Chicago, and that these extensions were to be made with this money subject to the approval of the government. However, I do not intend to discuss that question, nor to discuss the cost of building the branch line at St. Charles—the branch from the Intercolonial Railway to Point Lévis, opposite Quebec. I admit that the cost of that branch seems to me to be an enormous sum. Why it cost such an extravagant sum I am not able to say. I thought that the real object which the Secretary of State had in adverting to these matters at all was to call the attention of this chamber to the fact that these measures, when they were submitted by the late government to the Senate, were passed in the Senate because the majority were in sympathy with the general policy of the late government, and that if the majority of the Senate in this case threw out the measure which is now submitted for our consideration, he would infer that they were influenced purely by party motives in doing so. If that was the argument which the hon. gentleman intended to make, I simply wish to say, that so far as I am concerned I do not intend to be, and I hope I shall not be influenced by party feeling in this matter. I assume that when these matters to which the hon. gentleman made reference were submitted to this House they received due and careful consideration, and if they met the approval of the House they no doubt were sanctioned in this chamber. I propose that this measure now before us shall be dealt with on its merits and on the principle which the hon. leader of the House himself laid down, that is, the business features of this transaction. The hon. Minister of Justice in submitting this bill for our consideration said that he did not think that the policy of extending the Intercolonial to Montreal would be questioned by any person. That is a pretty broad and sweeping assertion. I am not prepared to say whether the general public may approve of this extension or not. I believe it is a somewhat new question. While it may have been discussed in some newspapers in parts of the Dominion, and while individuals may have discussed the project or expressed opinions upon it, I am not aware that it has ever been a question for general discussion throughout the country, or that there has been any very pronounced public opinion expressed upon that point. Certainly, during the long years that the Intercolonial Railway has had its terminus at Point Lévis, if there had been any very strong public opinion in favour of having it extended to Montreal, it seems to me a rather remarkable fact that it has never found expression, in some way up to the present time. However, on the question of policy, I have just one or two observations to make, and I desire to say at the outset that on general principles I am opposed to the government owning and operating railways. I think the general policy adopted in this country in the past, of allowing private companies to own and operate the railway system of the country, and where it has been found necessary to do so, to grant them subsidies and aid in the construction of those works, is a far better policy than placing these great public highways under the ownership and control of the government. When the Intercolonial Railway was constructed there were exceptional reasons why it was built as a government work. At the time of confederation there was no railway communication between the maritime provinces and the great provinces of Quebec and Ontario in the west. One of the terms upon which those provinces entered the union was that railway communication should be established between them, but at that time it was generally acknowledged that a railway constructed between the maritime provinces and the great centres of the west would not be a property in which any capitalist would be willing to invest his money. No capitalist, I venture to say, could be found, either in this country or in any other country, that would be willing to risk one dollar in that undertaking at that time as a commercial enterprise. In deed, so doubtful was the government at first as to what might be the result of the operation of that railway, that they appealed to the Imperial government for aid and assistance, and the Imperial government aided the construction of that road by guaranteeing the interest upon a large loan to be used for its construction. These were the reasons which operated at that time to have the Intercolonial Railway constructed as a government work. The policy of enlarging the government ownership of railways, or extending the system of railways which the government own and control is, therefore, a new policy, and to my mind, it is a policy which, while it may in this case have something to be said in its favour is, on general principles, open to grave objections. It is not a policy which should be hastily entered into, but a policy which should be very carefully discussed and very fully considered. The grounds upon which this policy has been advocated, so far as I have been able to discover from the observations which have been addressed to this House and the observations which have been addressed to the other branch of the legislature by the Minister of Railways and Canals, are, first, that the Intercolonial Railway, by being extended to Montreal, and having its terminus in that great commercial centre, will be in a better position to compete for freight. I endeavoured to get some estimate of the probable increase of freight. We only obtained that a few moments ago, and have not been able to give it careful consideration. I can only say with regard to it that I am disappointed in the nature of the report which has been submitted to us. It is of a very general character indeed. It gives us the gross earnings and operating expenses last year of the Intercolonial Railway, which is 1,100 or 1,200 miles in length. It tells us what, in the opinion of Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber, the earnings and operating expenses during the first year, after this extension is completed to Montreal, will be. They give us an estimate of the number of additional tons of freight and the number of additional passengers which they think the railway will carry after this proposed extension is completed. The number of tons of freight carried in 1895-96 was 1,379,618. The number which they estimate would be carried after this road is extended to Montreal is 1,698,000, the increase amounting to about 320,000.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Carried from where to where—from Montreal to Quebec or Montreal to Halifax?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is the point to which I was about to refer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course, it would be different points.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I was about to say that this statement is a bald statement of what, in their opinion, would be the additional number of tons of freight carried, locally or otherwise, over the whole length of the Intercolonial Railway after it was extended into Montreal. What I should have liked to know, and what would have aided us in forming an opinion in regard to the wisdom of this policy, would have been a statement showing what we might expect to derive as local freight or through freight from this extension to Montreal. This report, unfortunately, gives us no details with regard to that. The number of additional passengers they estimate at something like 200,000. It is evident, however, in regard to both freight and passengers, that they must be principally local. I have not had time to make the estimates, but if any hon. gentleman will take the pains to make the estimate he will see that it is utterly unreasonable to suppose that there will be anything approaching that increase of through traffic between Montreal and the Maritime Provinces, either in passengers or freight. That calculation might be made by showing how many passengers that would be per day and how many tons of freight it would be per day. We have all travelled over the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John, and the Intercolonial Railway to Moncton, and know about the average amount of travel and freight that go over those two lines at the present time. But leaving aside the question as to what may or may not be the increased traffic, as the result of the extension of this line to Montreal, to my mind there is a far more important question than that involved. The simple fact of increase of traffic is not, to my mind, a sufficient reason to justify the adoption of this policy. It depends on the nature of the traffic that is to be acquired rather than its amount. If this traffic is to be simply local traffic between Montreal and the maritime provinces, and if the Intercolonial Railway being extended to Montreal creates no new traffic, it does seem to me that to divert local traffic from existing lines owned and operated by private corporations, is no justification for extending the government railway. The government propose to use the credit and means of the country to extend the railway to Montreal, to enter into competition for local traffic with existing lines controlled by private companies. As a matter of policy, if those are the grounds on which they seek to justify the arrangement, it cannot fairly be justified. By using the same argument we would justify the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Toronto and the other great centres in the west. No one will dispute that if that policy were adopted the Intercolonial Railway might be, and no doubt would be, successful in diverting a considerable portion of traffic from the west to the maritime provinces from the existing lines which carry it at the present day. There is one reason which might have been given in support of this policy, and which I admit would have had very great weight in my mind. If the government had been able to show that by extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal they would be in a position to divert to the Intercolonial Railway, not local traffic from other lines, but a considerable portion of the through traffic from the west to the ocean which now finds its outlet over the railways running to Portland and Boston they would have furnished us with an argument which would have had a very strong influence upon my judgment with regard to this matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The contract provides for that. I read the contract.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Will the hon. gentleman point out the clause to me? I have been unable to find it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Grand Trunk Railway Company undertake to carry any traffic that may be picked up by the Intercolonial Railway agent in Ontario and western points.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Which is the clause?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is clause 40—that is one clause. I think 40, 41 and 42 all make provision for that.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I must take issue with the hon. gentleman upon that point. Clause 40 reads as follows:

40. That notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement between Her Majesty and the company heretofore made and now existing, all traffic offered the company at any point on its lines west of Montreal which the shipper desires to ship via the Intercolonial at Montreal shall be billed by the company for shipment in such manner, and the company shall deliver all such traffic to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, and passenger tickets for any point on the Intercolonial Railway east of Montreal shall be sold by the company's agents at all stations and agencies on its lines west of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Go on.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The balance of the clause is as follows:

—On request via Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway, and such ticket holder shall be entitled and shall be permitted to take the trains of the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal for such points easterly on the Intercolonial Railway.

That clause simply provides, if hon. gentlemen will note it carefully, that the Grand Trunk Railway, in selling tickets from any point west ——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And freight too.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Selling tickets or receiving freight at any point west for some point east on the Intercolonial Railway local traffic, for points on the Intercolonial Railway in the maritime provinces, shall bill that traffic over the Intercolonial Railway between Montreal and Lévis, and not bill it over the Grand Trunk Railway between those two points. That is all that the clause provides. It does not refer to one carload of through freight.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman look at clause 44?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman calls my attention to clause 44, which I shall read:

That as regards traffic shipped to and from Europe and the British Isles through Halifax per Intercolonial Railway, the rates of the company for the carriage of such traffic west of Montreal shall not be higher per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile, than the amount per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile, charged by the company on similar classes or descriptions of traffic carried by it for others to and from the same places, and intended for or coming from the same place in Europe or the British Isles. In ascertaining such rates of freight, all drawbacks or deductions allowed are to be taken off before fixing the rates.

If the hon. gentleman can find anything in that to support his contention, I should like to have it pointed out. There is nothing in it whatever to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway from using all its powers and all its influence in every possible way to send every car load of through traffic which it receives in the west, or which it can obtain, to Great Britain via Portland, over its own line in preference to the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—When the hon. Secretary of State interrupted me, I was making this argument, that if the government had shown, or could show, that by extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal it would be in a position to divert any considerable portion of travel or traffic to the Intercolonial Railway and to our maritime seaboard which now finds its outlet via the United States through Portland and Boston, it would be a strong argument in support of the policy which they are advocating, but I say, and the interruption of the hon. Secretary of State only confirms the point I am making, that no provision of that kind whatever has been made and no reason has been advanced by either of the gentlemen representing the government who have addressed the House, why we should expect such a result to follow. For my own part, I have studied this question with such care as I have been able to give it since the facts were submitted to the House, and after careful consideration of the question, I can see no reason whatever to warrant me in reaching a conclusion that the Intercolonial Railway, by extending its line to Montreal, will succeed in diverting from other lines any portion of the through traffic between the west and Europe. In support of my position, let me just call the attention of the House for one moment to the origin of that traffic, to the lines which control it, and to the course which it would naturally take in reaching its destination. I think we all will admit that the through traffic which comes to Montreal from the west comes principally through three great channels, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the water borne traffic which comes via the lakes and the canals. So far as I can see, the Intercolonial Railway, by extending its line to Montreal, will not be in one whit a better position to get through traffic from any one of these three sources than it is to-day. Take first the traffic which comes via the canals and lakes. That is water borne traffic which comes through the season of open navigation, when ocean steamships are lying at Montreal ready to carry that traffic to its destination on the other side of the ocean. That through traffic is invariably transferred from the craft which bring it to Montreal via the canals and lakes, to the ocean steamships which carry it to its destination on the other side. There is no intervention by any railway company. Take the traffic which comes by another great channel, the Canadian Pacific Railway. At the present time, through traffic coming to Montreal by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is forwarded by the same line over its own road, via St. John to a seaport in the maritime provinces. No member of the House, I venture to say, will assert that when the Intercolonial Railway is extended to Montreal, the Canadian Pacific Railway will be any more willing to transfer through traffic to the Intercolonial Railway, at Montreal than it is to-day. Then, take the traffic which comes by the other channel, the Grand Trunk Railway. If this extension has any influence whatever upon the traffic coming over the Grand Trunk Railway, it will be to divert it, not to the Intercolonial Railway, but to Portland. When the through freight coming over the Grand Trunk Railway—I am speaking altogether of through freight now—was transferred at Lévis, the Grand Trunk Railway received a larger percentage for carrying that traffic and the inducements were larger for sending through traffic that way. The Grand Trunk Railway had greater inducements for sending through traffic via the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax or St. John, when it transferred that traffic at Lévis than it will have if it transfers that traffic at Montreal, for, as I said before, its pecuniary interests lie to a greater extent in sending it in that direction, because it had the long haul and received a larger percentage of the through rate for carrying that traffic. When the Intercolonial Railway is extended to Montreal, that will be changed, and the provision which the hon. gentleman has just referred us to in this agreement only increases the difficulty, for if that provision has any force whatever it is a provision that even if the Grand Trunk Railway desired to send through traffic via Halifax, they could not send it over their own line from Montreal to Quebec but would have to transfer it at Montreal. The effect of that provision, if it has any effect at all, will be to place greater inducements before the Grand Trunk Railway than they ever had in the past to divert every possible carload of freight that they can from the seaports of the maritime provinces and send it over their own line to Portland. I have said this much with regard to this great question, this question of the wisdom of the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and I propose to leave it with the simple observation that, in my opinion, no sufficient reason has yet been given in justification of that policy, that on general principles I am opposed to the government ownership of railways—I am opposed to the government extending its present system of railways, unless some amply reasons can be given why that policy should be adopted. I will now turn from that point, for I do not wish to occupy the attention of the House at too great length, and offer a few observations upon the terms of the contract which have been entered into. At the outset I may say that this contract, as we all observe who have read it, is lengthy and somewhat complicated in its details, and the time at our disposal since it has been placed in our hands has not been sufficient to give it that careful consideration which its importance merits. I shall, therefore, not detain the House by going through very many details of this contract. I propose merely to express my opinion with regard to some prominent features of it, and I shall confine my observations to those features in regard to which the data given us and the information in our possession enable us to reach an intelligent conclusion. The first part of this contract is an agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the main provisions of this contract are that the government acquires an undivided one-half interest or equal running rights whichever we choose to call it, over the portion of the Grand Trunk Railway between Ste. Rosalie and Victoria bridge. It acquires also the right of running the Intercolonial Railway trains over the Victoria bridge, and the right of the use of Bonaventure Station and all the terminal facilities which the Grand Trunk Railway Company has in the city of Montreal. For these properties and rights which it acquires under this contract the government undertakes to pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company annually the sum of one hundred and forty thousand dollars. That is certainly a pretty large amount. It represents if we estimate the interest at five per cent, a capital expenditure of $2,800,000. If we estimate interest at three per cent, which the government would have to pay in England, it represents a capital expenditure of $4,666,000. These are large sums, and it is perhaps, difficult for a person who has not a large experience in these matters, to hastily come to a conclusion as to whether this is an extravagant sum to pay for the property and rights acquired, or whether it is not. We have to form the best judgment we can from the details, and from the data which have been placed before us. So far as I myself am concerned I must say that I think in assenting to the payment of this large sum, the government have manifested a degree of extravagance which this parliament will not justify. I will give the reasons which have led me to that conclusion. They may commend themselves to the judgment of the House or they may not. According to the report of the Minister of Railways, in the little blue book which has been laid upon our desks to-day, this sum of $140,000 is distributed as follows: $37,500 represents the rental of this portion of the line from Ste. Rosalie to Victoria bridge; $40,000 represents the rights which the government have acquired of running Intercolonial Railway trains over the Victoria bridge; $62,500 represents the rental of the privileges and rights which the government acquire in the use of Bonaventure station and the terminal facilities of the Grand Trunk Railway in Montreal. Take first the piece of road between Ste. Rosalie and Victoria bridge, thirty-five miles long. For this the government propose to pay a rental of $37,500. If we estimate interest at five per cent—and I think, if I read aright what has been said in the other House by the Minister of Railways and interpreted aright what has been said by the hon. gentlemen who represent the government in this House, they arrive at this sum by fixing the value upon this 35 miles of railway and fixing the rental at five per cent on one-half that value. If I am wrong in this I shall be very glad if the hon. leader of the House will correct me. $37,500 at five per cent represents a capital investment of $750,000. If that represents half the value of the line between Ste. Rosalie and Victoria bridge, the whole value of that line would be $1,500,000, which represents a cost of $42,857 per mile for 35 miles of railway. I do not know what the judgment of other people may be, but my judgment is that that is a very high price to fix as the value of that road at the present time, and upon which to base a rental valuation of five per cent. But this is not all: Section 35 of the contract or agreement must also be read in connection with this transaction, and section 35 provides:

> That if at any time hereafter the business or traffic shall, in the opinion of the parties hereto, necessitate or warrant the laying of double tracks between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, or the making of more extensive yard improvements at Point St. Charles or intermediate points between that point and Bonaventure station, or the laying of additional tracks between such points, or shall warrant or necessitate any further expenditure—and so on. Perhaps it is not necessary for me to read the whole of the clause:

> Her Majesty shall pay annually for the use of any such works and improvements five per cent upon one-half of the actual cost to the company of the construction of said works and improvements.

I do not think there is any hon. gentleman here who will not admit that the time has come, or will come in the very near future, when the Grand Trunk Railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert will need to be double tracked, and we are safe, too, in assuming that when that necessity arises the government will be obliged to assent to it, and if they do they will be obliged to incur an annual obligation equal to five per cent upon half of the money actually expended. I have not at hand any very correct data to enable me to determine what the cost of double tracking that line of railway might be. I think, however, from such information as I have been able to obtain from different sources, that I am safe in assuming that it will not be less than $6,000 per mile, and probably it will not exceed in any case $10,000 a mile. That is quite a wide margin, but, as I say, I have no data for arriving at a correct conclusion. I propose, for the sake of the argument which I am making, to allow the doubt, if there is any doubt, to be on the right side, and assume that it can be double tracked for the small sum of $6,000 per mile. That would represent, for 35 miles of railway, a capital expenditure of $210,000 and under this contract the government will be obliged to pay interest for all time to come on one-half of that sum, or $105,000. The interest upon that at 5 per cent amounts to $5,250, and, when this is added to the $37,500 which they are obliged to pay at once under the present contract, we have a total annual obligation, when this road is double tracked, equal to $42,750. I said that I had come to the conclusion that that was an extravagant sum to pay, and the reason I come to that conclusion is that $42,750 represents to the government, who can borrow money at 3 per cent, a capital expenditure of $1,425,000. That is within $75,000 of the value which I understand from the government they place upon the Grand Trunk Railway between those points as it stands to-day, or $1,500,000; but this $1,425,000 is equal to $40,714 per mile for that 35 miles of railway. In my opinion this is an extravagant sum, because, whatever may have been the cost of the Grand Trunk Railway in the past, I do not believe there is a gentleman listening to me who will venture to assert that a line of railway could not be built between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert for less than half that sum to-day, and my argument is that if the government desire to have railway communication between St. Lambert and Ste. Rosalie, a more economical and far better policy to pursue would have been to go to England to borrow the money that was necessary, and build an independent line of road.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hear, hear, those are my sentiments.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—What would have been the cost of such a line? We have the statement of the chief engineer of government railways, in the pamphlet which has been laid upon our desks to-day, that the cost of building a line from Chaudière to Ste. Rosalie would be covered by $1,600,-

000. He says he thinks that this sum—I think these are the words he used, I am quoting them from memory—would cover the cost of construction by the government of a line between Chaudière and Ste. Rosalie, and he tells us that the length of that line would be 115 miles. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to make the calculation they will find that is a little less than $14,000 per mile. I can see no reason why the cost of a new line of railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert would exceed the cost of the new line of railway between the Chaudière and Ste. Rosalie. So far as I know—and I think the knowledge of other hon. gentlemen who sit around me is perhaps better than mine—the portion of the Grand Trunk Railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert is principally within the valley of the St. Lawrence. The land is level and the construction is easy. There are no engineering difficulties, and in my opinion $14,000 a mile would be an ample sum. Indeed, I have pretty good reason to believe that from $10,000 to $12,000, exclusive of rolling stock and terminal facilities, would build to-day a new line of railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert; but the point may be raised that they would have land damages to pay. I cannot speak definitely as to that. It does not appear to me, from my knowledge of the country, that the land damages could be very excessive, but suppose they are added, one, two, three or four or five thousand dollars, if you choose, per mile to that cost, make it if you choose twenty thousand dollars per mile for building a new line of railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, what would be the cost of that thirty-five miles of railway? At $20,000 per mile it would be $700,000. The government could go to England and borrow $700,000 for 99 years at three per cent, and the interest would represent $21,000 a year. That would be the annual charge incurred, and I wish to call the attention of the House to this fact that it is less than one-half the annual charge which they, under this contract, undertake to pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of that line for all time to come. I say that, judging the transaction in that light, I for one feel that the government have not made, as the hon. leader of the House claims they have, a good business arrangement in concluding this contract with the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the serious error which the government appear to have fallen into is this—they have based the amount of rental which they were justified in paying at five per cent upon the cost of construction of the line over which they intended to operate their railway. They made another error in placing—in my opinion at least—too high a value on that line, and the result of these two errors, when they could go to England and borrow the money on their own credit at three per cent, is that the government could have built a new and independent line of railway between these points by incurring an annual obligation of $21,000, while under this agreement they incur an annual obligation of upwards of $42,000. The same line of reasoning, I may say, applies to the use of the terminals in Montreal. They have fallen at least into one of the same serious errors. They have based the rental value of the rights and privileges which they acquire at five per cent upon the estimated capital cost, when they could go to England and on their own credit borrow money at three per cent. The hon. leader of the opposition called the attention of the House to the advantages which the Grand Trunk Railway Company would derive from this operation. He dealt with that point, and I do not propose to discuss it. Having said this much with regard to the contract with the Grand Trunk Railway, I now propose to offer a few remarks with regard to the contract with the Drummond County Railway. The second part of this agreement contains the contract which has been entered into between the government and the Drummond County Railway, and under this part of the contract the government acquire that portion of the Drummond County Railway which is now completed, and contract with the Drummond County Railway Company to complete the remaining portion of their line to the connection at Chaudière bridge. For this the government undertake to pay, according to the terms of the contract, $70,000 per year in half yearly instalments of $35,000 each on the first days of May and November in each and every year during the term aforesaid. I understand, however, that $6,000 of that $70,000 represents the contract which the Drummond County Railway Company has with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the annual use of the Chaudière bridge, and for the use of the branch line between Chaudière bridge and Point Lévis, and that the government, in entering into this agreement, take over that contract and therefore assume this liability of the Drummond County Railway, and are in future to pay that $6,000 to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the use of the Chaudière bridge and the line to Lévis: that the other $64,000 per year represents what they are agreeing to pay for the remainder of the line—the line between Chaudière and Ste. Rosalie, with the little branch down to the town of Nicolet. The Minister of Railways, in his report to Council, which is in the little blue book laid upon the Table to-day, on page 4 represents that the sum, as I read it, which the government propose to pay the Drummond County Railway for the property and rights which they acquired is $1,600,000, and that $64,000 represents interest upon that amount at four per cent. There seems to be some little confusion to-day between the remarks of the hon. leader of the House and the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State as to what the government really did intend to pay for the property and rights of the Drummond County Railway Company which they acquired.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sixty-four thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—As I understand it, they fixed the value of that property at $1,600,000, and I understood from the hon. Secretary of State to-day that they acquired one hundred and thirty-two and one-half miles of railway, that if this sum was reduced to cash at the present time on the basis of three and one-quarter per cent——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was my own calculation. I gave you that as my calculation.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—You assume it is right, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, but the $64,000 is a fixed sum, and you can make your own deductions.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I would like to understand the hon. gentleman, because I do not want to misrepresent anything in regard to this matter, but if I understand the hon. gentleman the calculation which he has submitted to us to-day was simply a calculation of his own.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that's all.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am glad to hear it. It does not, in that event, require any further reference from me. A point which I was anxious to know and which the observations of the hon. gentleman entirely settle, was this: that the price which the government, upon the advice of their chief engineer, or after they had the estimate of the chief engineer, intended to undertake to pay the Drummond County Railway Company for the property and rights which they acquired was $1,600,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. We pay $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years. The terms are stated and you can make out what it represents in capital if you like.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I take the road to be cheap at $1,500,000, and I found, as that worked out, it did not work out to $64,000.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I told the hon. gentleman that that was his calculation, and I was not interested in dealing with it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The contract is plain enough.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Yes; and I think the statements of the hon. Minister of Railways to Council are plain enough, and the remarks which the minister addressed to the House of Commons are plain enough; and if I can understand plain English at all, the government, when they bought that railway, estimated its fair value to them, estimated the sum to be paid for this railway as $1,600,000. I have read the report of the Minister of Railways, and I have read some of the remarks in the discussion of this question in the other House, and from all these sources I arrive at these conclusions—and I think I am right, and I think I understood the hon. leader of the House to make the same statement in his opening remarks to-day—that the government, when they were considering how much they were justified in paying the Drummond County Railway Company for the property they were purchasing from them, decided that $1,600,000 was a fair sum, and they proposed to pay it by paying $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The contract is perfectly plain if the hon. gentleman will read it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I told you I had read it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The contract reads "holding and paying therefor yearly the sum of $64,000."

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is just what I have been stating to the House; I do not know that the hon. gentleman alters my statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still. The contract speaks of two sums that are to be paid for ninety-nine years, and it says $64,000 for ninety-nine years.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I stated that a while ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You state something different now.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I stated this, that under this contract the government agrees to pay $70,000 for ninety-nine years; that $6,000 of that represents the rental paid to the Grand Trunk Rrilway, therefore the government propose to pay $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years to the Drummond County Railway Company for the property which they are purchasing from them, that the government arrived at that decision from a report of the chief engineer of railways, and from a report made by the Minester of Railways to Council, that it would cost the government $1,600,000 to construct a new line over the same route, and that they considered that was a fair price to pay the Drummond County Railway Company for the property they were purchasing from them. That is as I understand it, and if the hon. Secretary of State desires to correct that, I shall be very glad to have him do so, but that is my understanding of it. I only wish to know what value the government did place on that railway. I am not particular—and it will make no difference whatever for the purpose of my argument—whether they say they fixed the value of that railway at $1,600,000 or whether they fixed it at $2,000,000. I merely wish to know what value the government did place on that railway when they purchased it, and the only value which appears to have been mentioned, and the only sum which appears to have been discussed by the Minister of Railways and his colleagues in Council, was $1,600,000 and the hon. the Secretary of State has just now said that this $2,000,000, which he figured up at three and a quarter per cent, was a calculation which he himself made to-day and which has never been discussed before. If we may assume anything, it is fair to assume that the value which the government considered this railway represented was $1,600,000. At all events, until I can get some further light upon the subject, I will proceed upon that assumption. My first observation, with regard to that contract, is this: that if the government placed a value of $1,600,000 upon the property and rights which they were acquiring from the Drummond County Railway Company when they agreed to pay them $64,000 for ninety-nine years, they agreed to pay them $400,000 too much; that when they entered into an agreement with the Drummond County Railway to pay them $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years, they placed in their hands a contract what they could take to the London market and sell for $2,000,000 cash and upwards, and I therefore say, if they fixed the value at $1,600,000 when they entered into that contract, they paid the Drummond County Railway $400,000 too much. In order that this point—and I feel that it is a most important one—may be made perfectly clear, I will ask the House to follow me in a calculation which I have undertaken to make and which has convinced my mind at least, on the subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Minister of Railways in stating that in the House, stated that they did not include land damages. In the estimate he was furnishing of the cost of the railway, it did not include land damages. He could not tell what they would be.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Did the government propose to pay the Drummond County Railway $1,600,000 and pay them land damages besides?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, nothing of the kind. If the hon. gentleman will not take the explanation, I cannot make it any clearer. It did not form the basis of the operations with the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much is that $64,000 capitalized?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister stated that a report had been made, and the estimate in round numbers was about $1,600,000. It did not include land damages.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—So far as my argument goes, I do not see that the question of land damages has anything to do with it. I may be exceedingly stupid, and I must apologize to the hon. Secretary of State if I cannot understand his explanation, but I must confess that the remarks he has just now been making, so far as I can understand them, have no bearing whatever on the argument I am trying to present to the House. My argument is this, that the only sum which appears to have been discussed in Council—and if any other sum was discussed in Council I should be glad if any member of the government should state it on the floor of this House—was the value of that road, the sum which the government were justified in paying for that road, and they decided that the cost of the construction of a new line by the government would be $1,600,000, and they undertook to pay that sum by paying $64,000 a year for 99 years, and when they did that they paid $400,000 too much, for they placed in the hands of the company a contract which they can sell for $2,000,000 cash. I will put this in another way, and perhaps it will make it clear between the hon. Secretary of State and myself. We will suppose that the government had gone to the Drummond County Railway Company, and instead of offering to pay them $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years had told them, "we will give you $1,600,000 in cash for your railway," is there a man in this House who doubts they would have accepted it? If the government knew that they would not have accepted it, I shall be glad to have them state so. If that course was open to the government, they could have pursued it. If they did not adopt that course, they should have done it, for if they had gone to the Drummond County Railway Company and purchased that road for $1,600,000 what would have been their position as compared with what it is to-day? They could have gone to the London market and borrowed $1,600,000 for niney-nine years at three per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman asks a question and I think it is only right that he should get the information. In this report submitted to the Council by the hon. Minister of Railways, he makes this remark with respect to that question of the purchase and loan:

> So far as the Grand Trunk Company is concerned, the sale could not, for obvious reasons, be contemplated perhaps by either party. But as to the property of the Drummond County Company, he would have favoured a purchase in preference to a lease, had the company been disposed to enter into negotiations on that basis, being unwilling to do so, the only remaining alternative to the acceptance of the company's offer if the extension to Montreal is to be proceeded with, would be for the government to undertake the construction of a new line of railway, which would not only be parallel, but throughout its entire length would run contiguous to that of the Drummond County Company.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like the hon. member from Halifax, if he can answer the question which I asked the House a little while ago, to give an answer to my question, and that is, whether if the government had offered the Drummond County Railway company $1,600,000 in cash for the property which they desired to acquire, the Company would not have accepted it? Is the hon. gentleman prepared to say that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not had any communication with the Drummond County Railway Company, and I cannot tell what they would have done.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—As I said before, if the hon. gentlemen on the other side will take either one of the two positions, it is quite immaterial to me which they take. If they say they were prepared to pay the Drummond County Railway Company $1,600,000, then they have paid them in entering into this contract $400,000 too much. If they say they intended to pay them $2,000,000 for the railway, they are willing to pay them an excessive price. I do not care which horn of the dilemma they take. What I desire to get, and have not been able to get, is what value the government placed on that property when they agreed to purchase it from the Drummond County Railway Company? I should like to call the attention of the House to this other point, and it would be better to do it here because it will perhaps enforce better upon the minds of hon. gentlemen who compose this chamber the point I am trying to make; we will assume, if you choose that the Drummond County Railway Company were not willing to accept $1,600,000—that they said,

"No, we want $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years." The government could say to them, "If we give you that, it amounts to an equivalent of $2,000,000 cash to-day. It is too much for your road. We can, from the report of our own engineer, build and own an independent line of our own from Chaudière to Ste. Rosalie for $1,600,000. Therefore, if you ask $2,000,000, or the equivalent of $2,000,000, for that road, you ask $400,000 too much. We will not buy it; we will build a road of our own." I do not care which position the hon. gentlemen take: they can take either; I am basing my argument on the assumption that the value they placed on the road was the cost of building a new road—$1,600,000—and that that is what they were willing to pay, and no more. If they were willing, when they could build a road for $1,600,000, to pay $2,000,000, they were willing to pay $400,000 too much—$400,000 more than they were justified in paying under any circumstances. I am satisfied that the government would not be so regardless of the interest of their country as to pay $2,000,000 for that road when they could get it for $1,600,000; and I prefer to return to the position I took some time ago, that the value the government intended to pay for that road was $1,600,000, and that the error into which the government fell was in arranging a method of payment by which they entered into a contract on which the Drummond County Railway Company can realize $400,000 in excess of the amount which the government felt they were justified in paying. To illustrate to the House the serious consequences of falling into an error of this kind, let me call the attention of hon. gentleman to what this involves. Suppose the government, instead of buying the Drummond County Railway, had said "We cannot afford to pay more than $1,600,000 and we will build a road of our own," they had gone to London and borrowed $1,600,000 for ninety-nine years at three per cent, involving an annual charge of $48,000. They would effect an annual saving of the difference between $48,000 and $64,000, which is $16,000 a year. In ninety-nine years, or hundred years, $16,000 amounts to $1,600,000 for interest alone that they would save in building the road themselves. But that is not all: if they would take that $16,000 a year which they would save under that arrangement and invest it in the bank as a sinking fund, where it would accumulate at three per cent, they would have saved in ninety-nine years the enormous sum of $9,418,000—enough to pay the whole cost of constructing the road and some millions of dollars besides.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman calculate compound interest?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Yes, the same as if they had deposited it in any savings bank where you get three per cent, compounded for ninety-nine years, it will amount to that sum. The government, therefore, in my opinion, have fallen into a most serious error, either in paying $400,000 for the road more than they could have built a new road of their own for, or else in adopting a mode of payment which places the company in a position to go to the London market and realize $400,000 more than the government considered the value of the road when they were buying it. The government have fallen into another serious error in this transaction in estimating the value of this road which they were acquiring at $1,600,000; they have estimated the value upon the cost of construction of a new line. That would be a proper mode of estimating the amount they were justified in paying, so far as any unconstructed portion of the line was concerned, the forty-two miles which are yet to be constructed between Moose Park and Chaudière Bridge, but so far as the completed portion of the line is concerned, the government have fallen into a most serious error in basing the value of that line upon the cost of construction and not upon its market value. I maintain that any railway company, any number of gentlemen who enter upon any enterprise in this country, are only entitled to receive the market value of the property which they own or the enterprise which they control. That market value may be determined in various ways. It may be determined by the earning power of the road. We have some means of testing the market value of this road upon that basis. There was some discussion this afternoon as to the annual earnings of this road. I see by the statements of the Minister of Railways in the House of Commons that the net earnings of this road for 1895-96 amounted to $29,000, and the hon. leader of the House tells us that for 1896-97 they estimate an increased traffic, and the net earnings might reach $35,000. Any capitalist who was willing to invest his money in that enterprise on commercial principles would certainly expect to realize six or seven per cent from his investment, and on that basis the value of that property would be something between $400,000 and $500,000. There is another way of estimating the market value of an enterprise of this kind, and that is the price which its bonds and stock will bring in the market. I am not aware that we can arrive at the market value of this enterprise in that manner, for so far as my knowledge goes, the bonds and stock of this company have never been sold in the open market, and there is no quotation on the stock exchange for them. But we have other data by which we may arrive at the market value of this enterprise and that is, by the amount of money which capitalists have been willing to loan upon the security of the enterprise and in addition to that I suppose the amount of money which the company itself have been willing to invest in the enterprise. If we turn to the report of the Minister of Railways for the year ending 30th June, 1896, we will find that this company have a debt of $221,692.99. This represents the amount of money which they have been able to borrow upon the bonds which they have issued upon their undertaking and they have invested in that enterprise capital from other sources amounting to $141,-686.61 in all a money expenditure of $363,-379.60. But I must call the attention of the House to the fact that this sum represents not merely the road bed which the government buys, but it represents all their rolling stock, and the government in entering into this agreement undertake to take over their rolling stock at what may be considered a fair valuation, so that from this amount, if we wish to know the value of the property which the government acquire, we must deduct the amount of the rolling stock. From the sworn statement of the company as published in these railway returns, I find that the rolling stock on the 30th June, 1896, amounted to five engines, one first-clas car, two second-class cars, one express car, twenty platform cars, besides two snow ploughs and flanger. I have endeavoured to ascertain the fair market value of this stock, provided it is in good condition, and as far as I can ascertain, it represents a value of $50,000 or $60,000. Deducting this from the figures I have read a few minutes ago, the total cash this company have been able to raise on their bonds, and which they have been willing to invest themselves in this undertaking, amounts to about $300,000. In addition to this there appears from the returns to be $400,000 of ordinary capital stock, but as the hon. leader of the House himself remarked to-day, we all know this $400,000 capital stock does not represent cash actually invested in the undertaking, but is distributed among the stockholders for promoting expenses and—.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It was not I who said that. It was my hon. friend opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell).

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I said nothing like it, but my hon. friend said exactly that.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If the hon. gentleman did not say it, I withdraw that part of my remark, but I hope he will corroborate my statement when I say that it is the usual custom of railway companies, when they are incorporated and launching their enterprises, to distribute capital stock among the promoters and shareholders for their promoting expenses—for expenses of organization and expenses of that kind—and that very little, if any, of that money is ever actually expended in the construction of the line. But even supposing it is, we have $300,000 of cash besides this. Even supposing that some part of that $400,000 did find its way into the construction of this line, the market value which I have already mentioned—$400,000 or $500,000—would, even on that basis, represent the fair market value of this road at the present time. What I said was that the government, in purchasing the completed portion of the Drummond County Railway, were bound to purchase it at its market value, at the price which any capitalist would be willing to loan upon the security of that undertaking at a sum which represented not very much in excess, at all events, of the sum which capitalists were willing to invest in the undertaking, added to the sum which the company themselves were willing to invest in the undertaking. That instead of doing that, they bought that portion of the road at a price based upon the cost of construction, and the cost of construction included not only the market value, as represented by the amount of money invested in the undertaking by the company themselves and the money which they were able to borrow, but it represents, besides, the subsidies and aid from various sources which the company had received, and in this case it represented subsidies from the Dominion government to the amount of $297,920; from the provincial government, $300,170; from the town of Nicolet, $15,000, and for the land subsidy, $42,250—in all $655,000. These form the two principal features of this transaction to which I am opposed, and I say, to sum up, the government, in this transaction, has fallen into two serious errors, first in paying more, by $400,000, for the road than they could have built a new one for, or else, if they bought the road at $1,600,000, by entering into a contract which represented $2,000,000 or $400,000 in excess of that price, and secondly falling into the even more serious error of buying the completed portion of that road at a price based upon the cost of construction, when the cost of construction represented over $600,000 of subsidies in addition to the market value of the road. It will be observed, as the hon. leader of the opposition remarked, that the result of these serious errors into which the government has fallen, has been to give the Drummond County Railway Company an enormous profit upon their enterprise. We have in the public returns data by which we can form a very accurate estimate of the amount of profit which the Drummond County Railway Company will receive out of this venture, under the sale proposed in this agreement. I have estimated in this way: the amount of their floating debt secured by their bonds, as I have already stated, is $221,692.99; capital from other sources $141,000. From this I deduct the rolling stock, making $300,000 as I said a short time ago, money actually invested by the company up to the 30th June, 1896, according to the sworn returns of the company itself, published in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals. But the company undertake, in addition to that, for this $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years, to construct the portion of the road yet to be built—the 42 miles to Chaudiere bridge. We have data from which we can form a tolerably accurate idea what that will cost the company in cash. If we estimated the cost to the company by the cost of the construction of ninety and a half miles which they had completed on the 30th June, 1896, the cost would be about $10,000 a mile. The 99½ miles which the company had built on the 30th June, 1896, according to their own sworn return in the report of the Minister of Railways, amounts, exclusive of the $400,000 stock, just to about $10,000 per mile. We have the estimate of the government engineer of railways that to construct a new road through that country would cost about $14,000 a mile, that is for 115 miles, $1,600,000. I venture the opinion that $10,000 would be nearer the actual cost to the company than the estimate of $14,000; but for the purposes of my argument, and as I wish, as I said before, to show the advantage of every doubt against my argument, I am willing to estimate that this 42 miles of road will cost the company in cash for construction $14,000 per mile. If it does, that will amount to $588,000, and added to the amount of money they had previously invested, their total investment, when this road is completed and ready to be handed over to the government, will be something less than $900,000. But in case this $400,000 of stock may represent some value, or in case there may be some incidentals which we may have omitted, I propose for the purpose of my arguments to add another $100,000 or a little over, and call it $1,000,000. We will suppose that the company have, when this road is completed and ready to hand over to the government, actually invested in that undertaking, $1,000,000. The hon. Secretary of State has furnished calculations to-day to show that the company, when this contract was signed, can take it and realize $2,000,000. It will herefore be seen that the actual profit which the Drummond County Railway Company are to derive out of this transaction, owing to the serious errors into which the government have fallen, in negotiating this business, amounts in all to $1,000,000 in consequence of the mode of payment which they adopted, paying $400,000 in excess of the price they should have paid and $600,000 which they paid them by fixing the value for the constructed portion of the line upon the cost of construction and not upon the market value. The hon. leader of the government, in introducing this bill, asked us to judge of this transaction on business principles, and it is that I am desirous of doing. I am aware that some of the newspapers—I have not read it myself in the newspapers—have characterized this transaction in strong terms. I have spoken of it as an error of judgment on the part of the government. Possibly some hon. gentleman who sit here think I should denounce it in stronger terms. I do not wish—I certainly would hesitate long before I would charge the hon. gentleman who leads this House, or his colleague who sits beside him, with corrupt motives and dishonest actions, but I think that hon. gentleman himself will pardon me if I say that I think it puts a very severe strain upon the credulity of an honest ordinary business man to believe that gentlemen, possessing the acknowledged ability of the leader of the government in this House and the acknowledged ability of the Minister of Railways, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works, could have made such serious errors in negotiating a transaction of this kind and should not have discovered that, as the result of those errors, they were enriching the Drummond County Railway Company to the extent of $1,000,000 at the expense of the Dominion Treasury. If the hon. gentleman desires to look at it as a business transaction, he will admit that it is at least a pardonable curiosity that impels one to inquire who are the stockholders and the bondholders of this Drummond County Railway Company. Where does this sum of money go? How is it to be distributed? Into whose pocket is it ultimately to find its way and for what purpose is it to be used? I shall not detain the House with any further argument on that feature of the question. There was one other point raised by both the gentlemen who addressed the House on the other side, upon which I wish to say a word, and that was that in coming to the conclusion that it was wise to purchase the Drummond County Railway, they had carefully considered the alternative which the government might have adopted, and they concluded that this was the best. The hon. gentleman referred to the proposal which had been made in some quarters to purchase the Grand Trunk Railway via Richmond, and another proposition to purchase the South Shore Railway. So far as those proposals are concerned, I am not in a position to say anything with regard to them. I do not know the merits of either proposition, but I desire to submit that there was at least one alternative which the government might have adopted, and which would I think have been more satisfactory to this House and to the country generally than the course which they have adopted. If hon. gentlemen who care to follow this will take the report of the Minister of Railways for the year ending 30th June, 1896, and open it at map No. 4, they will find traced on that map the completed portion of the Drummond County Railway. This map shows that the completed portion east of St. Leonards lies almost in a direct line from Chaudière bridge to Victoria bridge—that from St. Leonards to Drummondville it takes a southerly course for a distance of nineteen miles, that from Drummondville to Ste. Rosalie it takes a south-westerly course for a distance of 26½ miles: that from Ste. Rosalie to Victoria bridge it takes a westerly course for 35 miles. This portion of the road is not a direct line, but follows a somewhat circuitous route. The alternative which, I submit the government might have adopted, was to have built a direct line from St. Leonards to Victoria Bridge; to have acquired the portion of the Drummond County line which was completed east of St. Leonards, and to have completed the other 42 miles to the Chaudière Bridge. The length of such a line would not have exceeded 135 or 140 miles. The air line on the map is about 130 miles, and allowing for curvatures a line of railway could no doubt have been built there not exceeding in length 140 miles. I have been informed, on what I consider good authority, that an actual survey has been made through that country, and a line could be obtained which would be only 138 miles in length, but we will call it, for the purpose of my argument, 140 miles. Now, the one alternative which the government might have adopted was, if they considered it desirable to carry out this policy of extending to Montreal, to have built a line of their own from Chaudière to Victoria Bridge acquiring the portion of the Drummond County Railway which lay in the direct line of that route, provided, of course, that they could have acquired it on reasonable terms. The cost of constructing 140 miles of railway, at the estimate of the government engineer $14,000 a mile, would be $1,960,000, or allowing for contingencies say in round numbers $2,000,000. The cost to the country would have been this. The government would have been obliged to go to London and borrow that $2,000,000, which they could have borrowed for ninety-nine years at three per cent, which would represent an annual charge for interest of $60,000. Supposing they add to that a sinking fund of $4,000—if they wish to pay off the principal in ninety-nine years—that $4,000 would be sufficient to pay off the capital invested, so that for an annual charge of $64,000 the government could have constructed a direct new line from Chaudière to Victoria bridge at least 10 miles shorter than the present one and involving, as I say, an annual charge for ninety-nine years to extinguish both principal and interest of $64,000. That is just the amount which they propose to pay to the Drummond County Railway under this contract. If they had adopted that alternative, and I can see no possible reason why they should not have adopted it they could save the entire amount, which under this arrangement, they propose to pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of its line from Ste. Rosalie to Victoria Bridge, which at the present time amounts to $37,500 a year, and which, when the line is double tracked, will amount to upwards of $42,000 a year. This saving represents, capitalized, a sum of $1,425,000, and in 99 years would have represented an enormous saving to the country of upwards of $25,000,000. I have some other calculations here, but I do not propose to detain the House any further. I think I have said enough already to place the House in possession of reasons why I feel myself impelled, under the present circumstances, to vote for the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition. I have felt it, on this occasion, my duty to lay my views before the House at greater length, and to give the House more clearly the reasons which influenced my action, as it has been already suggested that it might be inferred that the gentlemen who do not sympathise with the government of the day in their general policy were influenced by political motives, and were not judging this transaction upon its merits as a business transaction.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I thought when I came in here an hour or two ago that I knew something about building railways, and something about how people went to work to build railways, but really at the present I am doubtful after what I have heard from the hon. gentleman opposite. He has asked us repeatedly what is the cost of the railway, and what it should cost. As he has had some experience as well as myself, I imagine that he knew and could put one in full possession of the information possessed by him. I suppose I had better confine my remarks to the Drummond County Railway, because this is the railway that is now directly before us, and it will be more easy to come to a speedy decision as to what it is worth and how far the government are to be praised or censured for the arrangement they have made. The hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Wood) has dwelt a very long time on the arrangement the government have made. They have bought the road at a rental of $64,000 a year. I can find nothing else. That is all that has been put before the House. Different individuals have undertaken to capitalize that amount in different ways. The hon. leader of the House capitalized it at four per cent and said in that case it represented a debt of $1,600,000. The hon. Secretary of State capitalized it rather differently. He said he put the value of the road at $15,000 a mile; and that, in so doing, it came to $1,900,000, and that the amount capitalized then would be three and a quarter per cent. I would not like to bewilder my hon. friend opposite and get him muddled, but I would capitalize it in a different way. But at the same time, the capitalizing of the leader of the House, or the capitalizing of the Secretary of State, or my capitalizing is not going to affect the question that the government have agreed to pay $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years, and at the end of that time the railway is to become the property of the crown. If at the expiration of ninety-nine years the railway is to become the property of the crown, it is necessary to put by a sinking fund to buy that railway, if we are going to capitalize it——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is that amount?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I would say the proper amount would be three and a quarter per cent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Including the sinking fund?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Three and a quarter per cent annual interest, and three-quarters per cent sinking fund would just about bring it out; probably you would have a little surplus. And that is about the position the railway was in. My hon. friend opposite said: "What is the value of that railway?" I would ask my hon. friend what is the value of a mile of railway? Would he undertake to give me the reply to that question?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If the hon. gentleman wishes my view on the subject, I would say a mile of railway in some sections of the country would perhaps cost from $7,000 to $10,000 a mile for the construction, and that in other sections it would cost double that sum, and in others perhaps three or four times that sum. It all depends on the country, and the engineering difficulties and other difficulties you have to meet.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I find by the railway returns that there is a railway down in New Brunswick called the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway, 35 miles in length: it is put down that that railway is worth $525,000. There are 35 miles of it, and at the rate I make out that that railway is worth over $15,000 a mile. There are no iron bridges on it, there is no heavy ballasting, there are no cuttings and no embankments: so that I assume that that is about a fair value of a railway. Put the Drummond County railway down at even less than that, and make any reasonable valuation: I would put it in this way: that this railway evidently had been capitalized at $12,000 a mile. My hon. friend opposite and several hon. gentlemen opposite say it is too much. If it is too much, where is there a railway in the Dominion of Canada which has cost less money? Give us a sample of such a road, a good road: because my hon. friend opposite, the leader of the opposition read a report from an engineer, evidently a hostile one, who was sent to report on that road. What was the report of that engineer? A few minutes before he read, from the blue book put in our hands, where Mr. Schreiber recommended that it should be again looked over, that it was not a proper season to look it over; that they would have to wait till the freshets subsided, and later on in the season they could make a report. This report of Mr. Salisbury evidently was made just at the season of the year when Mr. Schreiber said it would not be prudent to make a report; and the only thing he did report against the road was that there was considerable water in the ditches, and that it came up high on the embankments. The culverts were stone, and first class, and the bridges were good steel structures, the road was, in many places, well ballasted, but he said it would require one good lift of ballast. One lift of ballast would make the road good, and it is not a very expensive thing to do. Here is a new road that has only been constructed three years, and the larger portion of it is still under construction, and that road only wanted one lift of ballast. An expenditure of about three hundred dollars per mile would make it a first class road, according to the report of an engineer who was actuated by anything but friendly motives in making that report. What better report could you have of the character of that road than the report of that gentleman? I would not ask any better report than the report of that gentleman, whose feelings were rather hostile than otherwise. I will deal a little further on with the value of the road, and I would say that $12,000 a mile is a very, very low value for any road. What did the Intercolonial Railway cost? Take for instance, the extension that was bought by the government from Rivière du Loup to Point Levis: there was a road bought for a million and a half, and it is a cheap piece of road in a country where labour and materials are cheap, and it cost $20,116 per mile. The Intercolonial Railway including that road, which was a cheap piece and brought down the average of the other parts of the Intercolonial Railway, cost $48,000 per mile. I find by the Statistical Record here that the average value of the principal roads in the Dominion is given at $61,000 per mile—that is of the principal roads. I was glad to hear the hon. leader of the opposition say that he was favourable to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, but he was not in favour of the present mode of getting in; and certainly the people in the lower provinces and the people that know the circumstances of the Intercolonial Railway are anxious that it should be extended somewhere. If my hon. friend held those views, why in the eighteen years during which he sat in authority was not some better progress made in extending this road into Montreal?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said owners of railways generally were anxious to extend their roads, but I gave no opinion upon it.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—If the hon. gentleman is satisfied that the people of the country want the extension, then he wants it too. The Intercolonial Railway has been extended from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis, and afterwards from Point Lévis to St. Charles, fourteen miles, at a cost which astonished me, namely, $125,610 per mile. Supposing it extended further at the same cost to Montreal, where would the country land? This little book contains statements with reference to this Drummond County road; and every one who knows how this book is got up understands that the different railway officials in the Dominion are compelled, under penalty, to send in a sworn statement: and according to the sworn statement in reference to the Drummond County road, we find that up to the time this report was made in June, 1896, that there was expended on that road $1,366,000. We find there is still 42 miles of railway to be built. The construction of that 42 miles of road will cost $20,000 or $22,000 a mile. It has to be a first class road; it has now to be built under the directions of the Dominion engineers and it must be first-class in every respect. This extension can reasonably be put down as value for another $1,000,000. The road cost, according to the railway returns for 1896, $1,366,000 so that it is going to cost that company two and a half millions. The hon. gentleman is enjoying it very much. What is wrong about this estimate?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—What would that 42 miles cost?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I said $20,000 a mile or $880,000 to $1,000,000.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—When you say $20,000, I say you are estimating twice the cost.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Can the hon. gentleman name one road that has cost less than $20,000? If he will name one, I will tell him the character of the road. We have a good many branch roads, one in his county, but some of them have no bridge at all. Again, the earnings of the Drummond County road are extraordinary, according to these same reports, and that is all that any hon. gentleman in this House has to deal with. The earnings of that road are over $90,000, and have been for a couple of years, in spite of the fact that it is an unfinished road. The hon. gentleman opposite has said that the business of the road is carrying tan bark, and that the tan bark has been pretty much removed, and there is nothing now but a little waste material. That is entirely different from any information I have been able to get in reference to the character of the road. I am told that a small portion of that road, some 30 or 40 miles, is very well wooded, and the remainder of it is cultivated country. Now, the waste in a growing country, in a good young growth, is just about the most valuable portion of it. If there was originally hemlock there, when they take the bark they have got the hemlock trees, which are not altogether despisable. Then there is pulpwood, which is looked upon as a valuable asset to any person who has exhausted timber limits, where the better class of timber is taken off. But if that Drummond County road had not one stick of timber or one inhabitant on it from one end to another, I maintain this country needs that road to get into the city of Montreal if for through traffic only.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—And Toronto?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes, and Toronto.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—And Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I would not care if there was not one article of freight on it: but the freight is there, and that road can be locally a self-sustaining road, and an assistance to the Intercolonial Railway from the day it is opened. I am told that there are large settlements, and that there is a large passenger traffic, and that the people generally do their marketing in Montreal. But what is wanted for the Intercolonial Railway is connection with the railway system of the west. This country has undertaken to build, and we did build, 1150 miles of railway, called the Intercolonial Railway, leading from Halifax and from St. John to Lévis in the province of Quebec. Hon. gentlemen say, why cannot we continue to run over the Grand Trunk Railway? We have done so for many years, and we have found it impossible to make the Intercolonial Railway pay, as appears from the reports. So far it has paid the country nothing, but I do not think it is impossible to make it pay. They talk of connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway in Quebec. The Canadian Pacific Railway has no connection with it in Quebec. In the first place there is the river. When the bridge is built the Canadian Pacific Railway has its termini in Boston and in St. John, New Brunswick, and certainly it will not bring freight down and give it to the Intercolonial Railway if it can avoid it. The Grand Trunk Railway has its terminus in Portland, in the state of Maine, and it will take the freight there so as to get all the freight instead of part. My hon. friend was referring to the freight coming down the Grand Trunk Railway, and asks will that company hand over freight any more than they did before the Intercolonial Railway gets into Montreal, and if they did would it be on the same terms? Certainly not on the same terms. The Intercolonial Railway will be to all intents and purposes absolute owners of the road into Montreal where the eastern freight goes, and western freight originates, and the merchants of Montreal control the freight and send it by the road by which they can do it most conveniently and best, and it will be largely by the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway will be in a position to have their agents all through the west to solicit freight and send it via Montreal. They will bill it to Montreal and then over the Intercolonial Railway, whether it is for Europe or the lower provinces. The idea of building the Intercolonial through Quebec was to have it a purely British road, one not connected with the United States in any way. Here we are asked to refuse to build a road to Montreal to give us command of the freight of the west to assist the west in getting an outlet. Supposing the United States put in force their threat to stop transit in bond, where would we be? The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway would only be too glad to have this outlet, but at the same time it would give the whole country better facilities. I find that in the principal railways in the Dominion there is $822,000,000 invested, and I suppose including the minor roads there is $1,000,000,000 invested in railways in Canada. A very small portion of that only is in the lower provinces. Possibly, of the 16,000 miles of railway there is not 3,000 east of Quebec. This country has expended $80,000,000 in canals, and those canals are all west of Montreal. And what have we done? We have brought our Intercolonial Railway up to Quebec and our canals down to Montreal, and we have left 150 miles of a gap, over which we are entirely dependent on rival roads to give us the benefit of freight. To look at it as a business enterprise, it is astonishing how that road has been allowed to stay there, the butt of everybody, and treated as if it did not belong to anybody, because it belonged to the government. I find the same idea entertained by many members of this House. What do they say to-day? They build up the road! What for? To take traffic away from the Canadian Pacific Railway? Have not we nursed the Canadian Pacific Railway from its inception? Have not we done for the Canadian Pacific Railway what we never did before for any railway? If they want further assistance let these subsidized roads come openly and ask for it, but put us in a position to make the $55,000,000 we have invested in the Intercolonial railway profitable and pay its working expenses. It is time we stirred ourselves to make this road pay. As to running over a portion of the Grand Trunk Railway and getting into Montreal, what better bargain could possibly be made? Supposing some portion of it did cost $40,000 per mile if capitalized, even then it is as cheap as we have been building railways. But what are we going to do after we get into Montreal? The whole amount capitalized which we are paying to the Grand Trunk Railway would come to $4,666,000. What are we to get for that? We are to get privileges in the city of Montreal which, if the government had to build them and build a bridge to go into Montreal, could not be obtained for $12,000,000. Then, again, what effect would it have? We see that all over the world the larger cities are concentrating the business in Union stations and keeping the railways from doing an injury to cities, which they have to do when they are scattered here and there, and it is just exactly the principle which has been carried out by the government of the day in making this suggestion to get into the city of Montreal, where there are immense facilities and where they will have all the advantages just as freely as if they owned the Grand Trunk themselves. There is a slight misapprehension in this matter. According to the bill put before us, the government, if the agreement is carried through, are in as full possession of the Grand Trunk Railway into Montreal with their stations, tanks and sidings, as the Grand Trunk Railway Company is itself, and every dollar they collect for terminal facilities will go to the savings of the Intercolonial Railway. So that in every respect, as regards the station at Montreal, as regards the railway bridge, as regards the approach to the railway bridge, the government own it as fully as it is owned by the Grank Trunk Railway Company themselves and all revenues they receive are derived directly for themselves.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—They have to pay for the use.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—We have got to pay $140 000.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—You have to pay for the use of the road.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—No, we have to keep it in repair or rather pay half the cost of doing so. Of course we must do that. There is no further use to pay for. Another thing that has been said against this road is "Why did they not make arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway Company and use the Grand Trunk Railway to Point Levis?" We have been doing so as fully as we are able to do so, but it has been a failure. Besides that, there are some grades on the Grand Trunk Railway which are so severe that it is impossible to take such loads as the Intercolonial Railway are able to take over their own road. Something has been said about the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having a shorter route to St. John. They have a shorter route, but I maintain that the Intercolonial Railway is so much better built, and the curves and grades are so superior, that the Intercolonial Railway can carry a train over twenty five per cent more mileage and do it for less money: 50·80 is the maximum grade on the Intercolonial Railway and on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company grades as high as 90 are to be found. One train may take a few hours longer, but when it gets there it has double the amount of freight. The Intercolonial Railway is not handicapped by the greater distance. It is shorter by the Canadian Pacific Railway they say to Halifax by seventy-four miles than it is by the Intercolonial Railway. What do they gain by that? If it is seventy-five miles shorter, they have to go over 275 miles of the Intercolonial Railway to get there, and when they take that way of going to Halifax they are placed at the same disadvantage as we are, not being able to get into Montreal. So that there is no advantage by the shortness of the different routes. If you bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, for six months of the year we virtually have a road right through to Chicago through our canals. The whole canal system is open to us, and when we get to Montreal we are so far hemmed in that we only have the two roads, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, but if we find when we get there that we are still hampered—which I do not believe that we will be—the Intercolonial Railway will have to stretch out to Coteau or as much further west as will secure connection with other roads. I claim that the province of New Brunswick has done more of itself to build roads than any other province, and I am astonished at the hon. gentleman from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) being unfavourable to the government building roads and unfavourable, I suppose, to giving assistance to all roads. However, I know what would be the interest of the county of Westmorland and the whole of Nova Scotia and the whole of New Brunswick, and that is to have the Intercolonial extended—not that we will receive any advantages as regards freight rates, but that the Intercolonial Railway will be in a better position to transact its business than it has ever been before.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did you ever think of it before?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Ever since confederation we have been thinking of it, and have been advocating it in the province, and as soon as we got a provincial man in the cabinet he attempted to carry out what the province desired. The Intercolonial Railway to-day carries more passengers per mile and more freight per mile than the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway; but it is so hampered on account of doing its business heretofore at such a low rate of freight that it has been impossible to make it a paying road. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, from Lévis to Montreal, has been in the habit of charging the Intercolonial Railway a high rate on coal, which was carried cheaply, and a very small margin was left for the Intercolonial Railway. It was the unfair division of freight that made it unprofitable. It has been said on the other side, "Why don't you build an independent road entirely?" What is the width of country from Richmond, on the Grand Trunk, to the St. Lawrence? It is not very great, yet we have the Grand Trunk, the Drummond County Railway, and the South Shore Railway. Are these hon. gentlemen serious in asking that a fourth line should be put down in that narrow strip of country? They know very well that they would not do it, and they feel that this is the very best bargain that could be made in the interests of the country, and they do not feel disposed to let the present government get the credit of such an extraordinary good bargain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—The transaction can be defended on its merits before the severest tribunal which could be named, if the tribunal is an impartial one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him one question? The hon. gentleman said just now that the $64,000 represented interest at 4 per cent on the $1,600,000; that ¾ per cent would represent the sinking fund. That would be $12,000 per annum for a sinking fund.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—That is only my version.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to see if the hon. gentleman is in earnest when he says that that will be ¾ per cent.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Three-quarters of one per cent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Three-quarters of one per cent in that transaction represents $12,000. One per cent would be $16,000, and ¾ per cent would be $12,000.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Did the hon. gentleman calculate what that would bring the sinking fund to, if it was placed at compound interest, at 3 per cent during 99 years? It would represent $7,063,645. That is what you are paying.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I do not know how many dollars it would make. The hon. gentleman is evidently unable to make a calculation. If he will come over to me, I will teach him a lesson in arithmetic.

Hon. Mr. COX—If we had under discussion a proposal to construct or purchase a railway from Halifax to Montreal I should be quite in accord with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland as to government ownership of railways, but that is not the question we now have to decide. We have to deal with matters as they exist, for over twenty years nearly $56,000,000 of this country's money is locked up in 1,142 miles of an incomplete railway project. I say incomplete, because it now terminates at a point 160 miles distant from Montreal, its natural western terminus and the greatest freight distributing centre in the Dominion. If it had been completed to Montreal there is every reason to hope that instead of an average annual deficit of $230,000 there would have been a surplus in the operation of the line. It was the duty of the late government to have completed this line long ago, if the same aggressive and enterprising policy upon the part of hon. gentlemen opposite that assisted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to complete their line to the Pacific seaboard, and assisted the Grand Trunk Railway to complete their line to Chicago had been manifested in the completion of the government line to Montreal, instead of annual deficits of a quarter of a million of dollars, we should probably have had a substantial surplus each year. Hon. gentlemen, members and supporters of the late government having so long neglected this important duty, now oppose the present government in their efforts to carry out this extension so unmistakably in the interests of the country. I am glad that many gentlemen opposite approve the completion of the line to Montreal but regard the present proposal as unsatisfactory in its terms, especially that part of it referring to the Drummond Counties Railway. I regard it as highly satisfactory, it will bear rigid examination and I submit it is the duty of this hon. House if it is not satisfactory to them to try and make it so, and not reject it altogether.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The same suggestion was made in the Commons and the Hon. Mr. Blair, the Minister of Railways, said that not a word in that contract could be changed or altered, they would have to accept it as it was. But when it was pointed out to him that the word "east" meant nothing, and that the word "west" must be substituted for it, he called the parties interested in it together and, as I understand they all consented, because it was merely a clerical error; but beyond that they would not submit to any change.

Hon. Mr. COX—If this hon. House makes an effort in that direction and fails, it will at least have done its duty, for instance the hon. leader of the opposition objects to that clause in the agreement whereby the government agrees to pay 5 per cent interest on one half the cost of any improvements that may be mutually agreed upon between the government and the Grand Trunk. Surely that could and should be changed. It would be much better for both contracting parties to try and reconcile any difference of opinion as to the details of an agreement in carrying out such an important work, when nearly every person admits the desirability of having it done. The importance to the province of Ontario and to all the western country of having this alternate route from Montreal to the Atlantic seaboard cannot be overestimated. The late government purchased from the Grand Trunk Company 125 miles for the purpose of this same extension at a cost of $20,615 per mile, they constructed an additional fourteen miles for the same purpose at a cost of $1,758,541.25. It is now proposed by the agreement under consideration to purchase 132½ miles from the Drummond County Railway Company, at a cost of $15,250 per mile, even if you convert the annual payment of $64,000 upon a three per cent basis, it must be admitted these figures bear a favourable comparison with those paid by the late government, over $5,000 per mile less than was paid for the Rivière du Loup line. Then we have the estimate of Mr. Pottinger, the manager, and Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer, that the completion of this extension will convert a deficit last year into a surplus of $520,000, or after deducting the total annual payment of $210,000, a net saving to the country of $310,000 plus last year's deficit, how can this House reject an agreement so clearly in the interest of the country.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I cannot give my vote without protesting as strongly as I can against the remarks which were made by the Minister of Justice in moving the second reading of this bill. In those remarks the hon. gentleman, as I understood him, most certainly indicated that in his opinion the members of this House who might vote against this measure were actuated, not by considerations as to whether it was a good business transaction or not, but by partisan motives.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is exaggerating what I said. I did not say they were; but I expressed a strong hope they would not be. They are two very different things.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The suggestion that the House might take such a course is almost as bad, and I protest strongly against any such suggestions. I desire to say that, as far as I am concerned, I have given to this subject anxious consideration, endeavouring to understand it as far as I have had information within my reach, and I am most anxious to give what I feel in my conscience would be an honest vote on this question; and on behalf of this Senate I would protest against any such insinuation as that we are actuated in dealing with great and important questions before the country by partisan motives. The history of the Senate on various occasions shows that that has not been the case—that they have always been willing to give full and impartial consideration to any measure coming before them, no matter from what government it came. I have listened with no little astonishment to the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. He has also advised us that we should not consider this measure in a partisan, but in a patriotic spirit, and decide upon it in a business like manner—that if we are of the opinion that it is not a business transaction we should endeavour to amend it and make it so. I can hardly conceive that he is serious in such a proposition. If I believed for a moment that the government were prepared to go through this contract and allow it to be altered or amended in such a way as, in the opinion of this House, might be suitable, then I should be rejoiced to adopt that alternative, and I would very much rather see such a course adopted than that this House should be forced to vote yea or nay upon the question of a three months' hoist. My hon. friend (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) will bear me out when I say that I expressed the opinion to him when the bill was first introduced, that I would rather adopt a resolution to withdraw the bill for the present session in order to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to consider it than be obliged to vote for the three months' hoist. If the government however, are prepared to reconsider the matter, that is a different question, but I do not suppose for a moment that at this period of the session the government are prepared to go into a discussion of that kind, or that the House of Commons would be prepared to reconsider their desision in any respect, or that the gentlemen who are parties to that contract would be prepared to discuss changes now. It appears to me to be a thing entirely out of the question, at this period of the session, and it just shows the mischievous effect, to use the mildest term, of the government bringing down important measures in the last days of the session when it is impossible to discuss them deliberately and give them that consideration which their importance requires. If this matter had been brought down at an earlier period of the session, we would have been prepared to discuss the whole thing and see what could be done to make the contract, as we consider it, a more business-like contract, and then there would be nothing to say against it; but as it is now, unless the Minister of Justice is prepared to make some statement in answer to the hon. gentleman from Toronto to the contrary, I suppose we have no alternative but to either vote for the second reading of the bill or to vote for the three months' hoist.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—My hon. friend says, supposing we amend this contract, would the company accept it? I should think not. They did not consult us before they entered into it. It appears to me the only object in view is to get an outlet for the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. If this is going to cost us seven and a half million dollars and may be ten million dollars before we are done, I would vote to-morrow to give aid to build the bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec. I believe we should give a million dollars for that purpose, and then you have the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company allowing them to come to Quebec and Montreal, and giving competition for the Intercolonial Railway. That is very easily done. There is more cry than wool about this matter. I cannot see any trouble about it, but to say we are going to adopt this bill I would be ashamed to go home if I voted for such a proposition. The government should say nothing about party politics. They appealed to the country and got a snap verdict on false pretenses. They appealed to the country on the pledge of economy in every branch of the public service. The very first thing, on a falling revenue, they ask for this expenditure of $7,000,000. I try to be non partisan.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I wish my hon. friend would be as non-political as I am. I am not such a politician as he is. I could not go home and explain to anybody in the country, if I so far forgot my duty as a senator, that I vote away the people's money, and how can the government go and face the people of the country. We have been told that the country is with them because they have a majority in the House of Commons. If the majority there were polled without political feeling they would be opposed to this contract. The Senate of Canada may save some of them by throwing out the bill. What has the country been paying us for? We have been here waiting for legislation; to allow the government to fritter away $7,000,000 at the last stage of the session is something I cannot sanction. I am not built that way.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—At this late hour I feel that I would be inflicting on you something which you would not receive with pleasure, if I were to occupy your time at any length. This afternoon the question has been so thoroughly debated that I think hon. gentlemen understand it very correctly, but inasmuch as I am from one of the lower provinces, I feel it is my duty to state to you the way we look at this matter from our standpoint. You are all aware that thirty years ago the question of confederation came up, and we were induced to enter the union.

One of the conditions of that arrangement was that we were to have a national road known as the Intercolonial Railway extending from Halifax to the commercial heart of Canada. Now, what is the fact? The fact is that we have borrowed money and sunk some $55,000,000 in that road, which begins at Halifax and terminates in the woods somewhere in the neighbourhood of Quebec. That road is sinking $50,000 annually, yet some hon. gentlemen oppose a measure designed to bring that railway into the commercial heart of Canada, thereby placing it in such a position that it will pay henceforth. At all events, it will give the Intercolonial an opportunity of moving freight between Halifax and St. John, to and from Montreal. There is another consideration. We are led to believe that we would have this independent national road in case of any trouble arising between ourselves and our neighbours. That was one of the great considerations which led us to locate it along the banks of the St. Lawrence instead of adopting a more southern route. After waiting 30 years for commercial results coming out of confederation, we find to day in the lower provinces this road is perfectly worthless to us as a commercial railway. In fact, we are wholly dependent to-day on a road built by a private company going through a foreign country, at any time liable to be interfered with in case of trouble with our neighbours, and still the great national highway of Canada is kept in a position that we cannot utilize it as a national road to any advantage.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Why?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The reason is that it begins at Halifax and terminates at Point Lévis or, in other words, in the woods, and is in a position that before we can get business for it we have to make terms with a company whose interests are that they drain Canada and ship all the products by way of Portland, in the state of Maine. If this state of things continue, in my opinion, confederation will lose its great hold on the people of the maritime provinces. If we must come to a conclusion that after the Pacific Railway was built to British Columbia, then when it comes to the time that we expect some return for the money we pay interest on, we are left at the mercy of two roads, both going through a foreign country, and that our own road is placed in a position that we are not to receive any benefit from it, it is time to consider how serious the position is. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company owns a road down to the city of Quebec. It has been argued that a bridge should be thrown across there, and in that way the Canadian Pacific would be utilized. Then, what would we have? We would have the Canadian Pacific on one side and the Grand Trunk on the other, both interests combining against us. We do not feel disposed to be placed in that position, and, as you are all aware, for six months of the year navigation is closed by climate, we contend that something should be done. This proposed route may not be the best that could be furnished, but, in my opinion, taking as a basis the cost of the Intercolonial Railway, and placing it against this 132 miles, we have a very good bargain, and I am satisfied the country would think so. It is a much better bargain than if the country ran the risk of extending the road. No doubt, by the same process under which the Intercolonial was built, the cost of buying land and other things requisite for the railway, and borrowing money to construct the road, it would cost at least five or six million dollars. The argument has been used against this contract that the interest, $210,000, is a very large amount. But when you come to take into account a road of the same length costing $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, I cannot see how it can be argued that the government had made a bad bargain. I have confidence in the present government and I believe the country has confidence in it, as was shown by the last election, and I believe also that the people expect that the government will undertake this work, and when they find out that it is only checkmated in this Senate, which is not responsible to the people, —in fact not responsible to anybody at present, because the government who appointed the majority had their heads cut off at the last election—I cannot see how they can urge hon. gentlemen to throw out this bill. I think the public will find a means of reaching them if they do, because in my opinion the people are set on the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal and in such a manner that in the future it will be a paying and independent line. Some hon. gentlemen talked of extending the line to Toronto. There is no necessity to extend it to Toronto, because between Montreal and Toronto there are two competing roads, and we know that in consequence of that competition the freight going by the Intercolonial will necessarily and naturally be offered at such a rate as will be satisfactory. Therefore, the argument for extending the Intercolonial to Toronto falls to the ground. The very fact of coming to Montreal will satisfy commercial men that a great trade will be had for the railway—such a trade as it is likely will stop the leak and loss of $50,000 per annum that we are suffering from now. I can see the hostility there is to this measure. I do not think it is creditable to men who profess to be honourable.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I do not hesitate to say so. I have been hearing for a week that a combine has gone forth against this bill, a combine that will not redound to the credit of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is in the discretion of the House to adjourn or not.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Go on.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If I had time to condense my remarks and put my views in a systematic form, I think I might get through in an hour.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will allow you two hours.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Speaking in the discursive manner in which I shall have to speak, it will take me some time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Of course it is all right. Hon. gentlemen have been loud in their denunciation of the government for not giving time to discuss the subject, and now they want to take a vote on this bill without fully discussing it. As the hon. gentleman from Peterborough (Mr. Cox) has said, we have $56,000,000 invested in an unprofitable road, a road which, with its connections, extends about 1,200 miles, and this measure proposes to try and make that investment profitable; and the Senate should hesitate—that is the drift of his remarks—before it interposed an obstacle in the way of bringing about that desirable result. It is just as well to look a little at the history of this question. I feel that I would not be justified in allowing this vote to be taken without expressing my views distinctly on the question. The city of Halifax and the whole province of Nova Scotia, have been from the year 1867 very much interested in the Intercolonial Railway. They have felt that the railway has not done all for them that it should have done. The road was finished through to Rivière du Loup in 1877, or late in the year 1876, and was first used as a means of through traffic in 1877. We congratulated ourselves that this connection had been made with the upper provinces, but a very short time only had elapsed when it was discovered that this connection was not of a very satisfactory character, and in the year 1879, the government, of which the hon. leader of the opposition was a member, brought down a measure to improve the condition of things. They brought down a measure to take over a section of the Grand Trunk Railway lying between Chaudière and Rivière du Loup, a section 125 miles in length. As has been stated, that railway cost the government in absolute money paid as the purchase money of the road, $1,500,000, and it has been shown that in addition to that the government were obliged to expend immediately something over a million dollars on the road, so that in that case we spent two and a half millions of dollars practically for the purpose of affording better communication between Rivière du Loup and Chaudière. A great deal has been said about the want of respect which the present government have shown to the Senate in introducing this measure at this late stage of the session; but I wish to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that in 1879 the bill to take over the Rivière du Loup section—a bill which involved the expenditure of $2,500,000 was introduced on the last day of the session. The bill was introduced on the 14th of May, and there was no business done on the 15th of May beyond the formal business of prorogation. It received its first, second and third readings without any intermission, and the debate which took place on it covers about four pages of the Official Debates of that year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What did the hon. member say about that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. member did not say anything. We recognized the fact that it was a desirable thing. The hon. leader of the opposition of that day recognized that it was a desirable thing to do, and he did not devote hours to try and find out just how much there was for the Grand Trunk Railway in this transfer, although as a matter of fact, the country, for the money that they paid for that road, merely got the road bed. The sleepers were nearly all decayed. The rails were nearly all iron rails. There were very few steel rails on the road, and the Grand Trunk Railway, under the agreement, took the iron rails.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Is it worth while to bring up what may have been a very bad bargain or improper proceeding which took place under another government, when that question cannot possibly affect the measure now before us. We may be quite ready to admit all that, but how does it bear on the present question?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to make my speech in my own way. If we were to eliminate from the Debates of this House the references to what took place under former governments in former years, much less would be said than is said in our discussions. What I am saying now is germane to the question. I want to show a good example for what the government propose to do now. I want to show that the government formerly supported by hon. gentlemen opposite undertook to do something similar to this and gave the Senate no time at all to consider it—that a measure was brought down the last day of the session, and it was passed without any inquiry into the minute details of the matter and that we assumed that the government of that day was fairly honest and not actuated by any improper motives. I quote a little from the longest speech made on that bill, one delivered by the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller), a speech which deserves to be quoted. He said:

> I think that, whatever the country may have paid in times past for that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway, and whatever claim the country may have had for it, that claim is now, unfortunately, barred by the statute of limitations. I do not think that my hon. friend from Hamilton would like to take an assignment of that claim as a valuable asset. There can be but one opinion on the subject in this country, we have no legal claim —none that can be considered in the nature of an asset—and, therefore, we have to deal with the Grand Trunk Railway Company as though we never had advanced a dollar on that road. On the main question I congratulate the government for having taken a very wise step in the right direction. Since the completion of our magnificent Intercolonial Railway—one of the finest roads on the continent—in consequence the ownership of that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway between Rivière du Loup and Quebec, and the bad state of repair in which it has been kept by the present owners for some years past—owing, no doubt, to the unprofitable character of the work—the full value of the Intercolonial Railway has been lost to our people. The Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Rivière du Loup has always been in such a condition as to enable travel and traffic to pass over it at a most rapid rate, but on several occasions—in fact for the last year—it has been felt that no matter what condition the Intercolonial Railway may be kept in, no matter how perfect the arrangements may be from Halifax to Rivière du Loup, there is no certainty of rapid transit on the branch between Rivière du Loup and Quebec. I have heard complaints of parties who desire to carry on trade between the maritime provinces and the upper provinces—in fresh fish, for instance—that there is no safety for perishable goods on that branch. If the line was good through to the upper provinces as between Halifax and Rivière du Loup there would be no trouble in carrying on a valuable trade all the year round in fresh fish, but after freight of a perishable kind arrives at Rivière du Loup the transit is so tardy that a cargo is liable to be lost. Two or three speculations in fresh fish having failed on that account, it has discouraged people from embarking in such a trade ever since. It is absolutely necessary that the intercommunication between these four great provinces of the Dominion should be as perfect as possible. We are by nature sufficiently separate to render it very often inconvenient to transact public business and unprofitable to carry on trade and commerce between the upper and lower provinces. No effort should be spared in order to facilitate intercourse between the Maritime provinces and the rest of the Dominion, and that could never be done without acquiring this Rivière du Loup branch from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The government are entitled to the thanks of the whole country for the prompt manner in which they have taken hold of this matter, and I think it is highly complimentary to the Minister of Public Works, and quite characteristic of the energy and ability which distinguish him in the discharge of his official duties. He has placed the whole country, and no part of it more than the lower provinces, under a deep obligation by the businesslike manner in which he has dealt with this matter. That the transaction will receive the sanction of this parliament, I have every confidence. When this line is acquired by the government and put in running order, on an equality with the Intercolonial Railway, we will then have between the maritime and the upper provinces as fine an intercolonial highway as there is on this continent, and when, ultimately, that highway is connected with the line on the northern side of the St. Lawrence, and up the Ottawa valley, connecting, as I hope it will at some future day, with the Pacific Railway, we will have what everybody who desires to see British power consolidated on this continent—that iron band which will unite us from ocean to ocean and make us one in sympathy as we are politically.

There was no dissent at the time that that bill was passed here. One hon. gentleman from Hamilton did demur rather, and the hon. gentleman raised an objection very like that which has been raised here by the hon. leader of the opposition and some other gentlemen. Senator Hope is recorded as saying :—

I understand that the government is to allow th Grand Trunk Railway Company about $15,00 per mile for the Rivière du Loup Branch. Th original subsidy was equal to that, and it appears to me as if the government had paid for it in the first instance, and now they are called upon to pay for it the second time.

That was the only word raised against the arrangement between the government of that day and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and no hon. gentleman endorsed that statement of the hon. gentleman from Hamilton, and it was not suggested by anyone that the ten thousand dollars a mile which was paid to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for their Rivière du Loup section by the government of Canada should be deducted from the amount which should be paid to them, and why should hon. gentlemen who endorsed that arrangement urge that in dealing with another railway company or adding another section to the railway we should not treat them in the same way that the Grand Trunk Railway Company were treated. Why should the comparatively small subsidies to the Drummond County Railway be deducted from the amount paid to them when the ten thousand dollars a mile was not deducted from the amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway? I was going on to say that with certain slight changes the position to-day is just the same as it was then. It was thought—and I confess I was one of those who agreed with the hon. gentleman from Richmond—that if the Intercolonial Railway were extended to Levis we should be placed in an altogether different position from the one in which we then were. We thought, as the hon. gentleman said in a portion of his speech, that we should have connection across the river with the railway on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and that we should in that way have competition. We should have the company which owned the North Shore Railway competing for the Intercolonial Railway business with the Grand Trunk Railway, which ran on the south shore; but it has not happened that way, and one of the reasons why it has not happened is that not very long after this transaction took place the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which owns the road on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, became the owner of a much longer road running from Montreal to St. John, N.B., and it has become the interest, and consequently the policy, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, instead of sending business to Quebec to cross over and take the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis, to send it by their own line to St. John and get a long haul; and for all practical purposes we are no better off than we were before. Of course, we are somewhat better off than we were at Rivière du Loup. We come to Lévis in quicker time than we did before, and can go over to Quebec if we choose, but the change is not very great, and one might say, for practical purposes, we are nearly as badly off as we were at Rivière du Loup. The complaint made of the delay in perishable freight is loud to-day, and it is found that the freight which should go from Montreal to Halifax or any other point on the Intercolonial in forty-eight hours takes a fortnight to go through.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Always.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It takes a fortnight to get from Montreal to Halifax or any point on the Intercolonial Railway, because the Grand Trunk Railway give the preference to their own Richmond branch, and cars intended for the Intercolonial Railway are left standing at Richmond and other stations while other cars are being pushed forward, and the object of this agreement is to put an end to that condition of things and provide that freight to and from the lower provinces over the Intercolonial Railway shall reach Montreal, which is the distributing centre of this country, with the least possible difficulty and delay. Freight, instead of taking a fortnight, would take only forty-eight hours, or at the outside sixty hours, and every hon. member who comes from Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, or the North Shore of New Brunswick must feel that it is desirable, as to passengers, that a change should be made. Extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and one can leave Halifax one afternoon at half past two and be in Ottawa next evening about nine o'clock, instead of having to stop over all night in Montreal, as is the case now. Some hon. gentleman said it was a remarkable thing that no one has asked for this change. I am well aware that the newspapers have been crying out for a change of this sort. I know that the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax has passed resolutions and sent memorials, and I think sent deputations to Ottawa, asking for an extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. We know that resolutions have been passed in numbers of places in the province of Quebec in favour of the same extension.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Freight from the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Mr. Dwyer, of the Halifax Board of Trade, protested against it, and said it was no good to Halifax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am aware Mr. Dwyer is opposed to it. Will the hon. gentleman pin his faith in matters of every kind to Mr. Dwyer?

Hon. Mr. McKAY—He is a Halifax citizen.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am perfectly aware of that, and I want to say here, as far as I am individually concerned, speaking for the business men of Halifax, I do not think that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal will be, or that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway beyond Moncton has been in the interests of the business men of Halifax. It would have been better for the business men of Halifax that there was no railway connection between Montreal and Nova Scotia at all; but we have the Intercolonial Railway. I cannot, here in my place, look at the Intercolonial Railway purely from the point of view of a merchant doing business in Halifax. I say that in the interest of the lower provinces, not of the merchants of the city of Halifax, but in the interest of the people of the lower provinces, who, I presume, are anxious to get their goods as cheaply as they can, and in the interests of the people who have to travel to and from between Montreal and points in the lower provinces, it is desirable that the Intercolonial should have the best possible connection, and in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, which stands us in $56,000,000, it is most desirable that something should be done to enable that road to pay its way. So much by way of preliminary. That is the position, that it is desirable—it is felt at any rate by the people in the lower provinces and it is felt by the business men of Montreal and the west generally, that it is desirable that the means of communication between Montreal the trade centre of the upper provinces and the lower provinces should be made, and consequently that in some way the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to Montreal, and then the question comes as to just the best way to do it. I confess, hon. gentlemen, that at first my own view was in favour of the extension of the road from Sorel along the south shore of the St. Lawrence to Chaudière or Lévis, but when it was pointed out to me that in the first place that line is ten miles longer than the line which is provided for in the bill now before the House, when it was pointed out that the bridges crossing the Yamaska, the Richelieu, the St. Francis and other rivers, being near their mouths, would be very much heavier than up above, and when it was pointed out that as there were numbers of depressions running down to the St. Lawrence, it would mean more expensive work, I felt that it was not desirable that this line should be chosen. The truth is that the bridges on the Shore Line alone would cost almost if not quite as much as the government propose to pay for the Drummond County Railway. And then there was another circumstance: supposing these objections were counted for nothing, there is another circumstance in connection with the South Shore Railway. I was made aware of the fact that the land damages for the fourteen miles of the St. Charles branch amounted to about one million dollars. I know that a great part of the South Shore Railway would run through cultivated land, through some of the longest settled portions of the province of Quebec, and that if the government undertook to build that railway as a government railway they would have to pay as much for land damages alone as the government will have to pay now for the whole of the Drummond County Railway. Under these circumstances, I felt that the line along the South Shore was out of the question. Then hon. gentlemen wanted to know why we did not take the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not see that there was any more reason why we should select the Grand Trunk Railway then the Drummond County Railway. To begin with, the Drummond County Railway is admitted to be at least 13 miles shorter and the grades on the Drummond County Railway are not as serious as those on the Grand Trunk Railway, and the only offer I think the Grand Trunk ever made was an offer to sell their road to Richmond for two and a half million dollars. Under these circumstances, I think it would have been out of the question to have undertaken to deal with the Grand Trunk Railway Company; and the assistant general manager, Mr. Wainwright, stated that the rent the government would have to pay for the road from Richmond into Montreal would be $50,000 a year more than they are paying for what they are getting. So that I think it was quite out of the question that the Grand Trunk Railway could be taken. It seems to me that unless there is something very unreasonable in the contract that has been entered into, the Government have made the best choice. They have taken the shortest line and the one that is the most advantageous. The hon. gentleman who spoke a little while ago (Mr. Cox) said that, not being familiar with the practice of parliament, if this five per cent which is mentioned in the thirty-fifth paragraph of the agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company were looked upon as objectionable, the agreement might be amended. We could not amend the agreement in this House, but I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that the payment of that five per cent is optional. If hon. gentlemen will read the clause they will see that the government is not obliged to pay the five per cent. It is only in this case, after the improvements have been made :

> If Her Majesty should determine to use any such works or improvements and the minister should so declare such works and improvements are hereby understood and agreed to form part of the leased premises and Her Majesty shall pay annually for the use of any such works and improvements five per cent upon one-half of the actual cost to the company of the construction of said works and improvements.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B C.)—Under the bill they would use the works of course.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the contract which is ratified by the bill. The government lease certain things from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company think it desirable to double-track the road, the government are not bound to pay five per cent of half the cost.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B C.)—I believe they are.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, not unless they make use of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And they would use it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And the same way with respect to stations. The government can take just what they are taking now, and if they do not wish they need not pay for more.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Would not the government be sure to use the double track if it was there?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a matter in their own discretion.

Hon Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—They could not help themselves.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, if they do not think it to their advantage they need not use it. I should like to know what the speech from the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland was. He spoke an hour and a half, but was it not all detail?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—It was not much, but he made some very good points.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The question is as to the nature of this agreement. That has been explained by the hon. Secretary of State. It was put also by the hon. leader of the government in this House, and it was put by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the House. I do not think it is necessary to go into that at any length, but my attention has been directed to one matter which has been referred to by the hon. leader of the opposition. That hon. gentleman intimated that there never had been, as far as he knew, any intention on the part of the previous government to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. It is a rather singular thing that I find that in another place the hon. gentleman who was Minister of Railways, under the present leader of the opposition when he was leader of the government, stated that he had had some negotiations with the Drummond County Railway, and the hon. gentleman who was Minister of Railways in the late administration differed altogether from the hon. gentleman from Westmorland. He thought it was much better that the government should own the road. He did not think the road should be operated by private companies. He took a totally different view, and he admitted that he had been thinking of taking over this Drummond County Railway.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When was that opinion expressed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In 1894.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is out of order to quote the Debates in the House of Commons, but if the hon. gentleman will look at the Commons Hansard, 19th June, 1897, and will carefully read through the speech of the Hon. Mr. Haggart, he will find a great deal of information there which would be valuable to the hon. gentleman, because it seems to contain information which is not possessed by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that all the answer I can get?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Well it has been said—I shall not quote the opinion about the kind of people who ask questions that wise men cannot answer. I have referred to the fact that the hon. gentleman who was formerly Minister of Railways did discuss this matter, and I find that, altogether unlike the hon. gentleman from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) the hon. gentleman who was Minister of Railways under the late Administration—I presume by the way that as the relations between that hon. gentleman and his leader some year and a half ago were very much strained he may not have communicated his intentions to the gentlemen who led the government at that time—but I find the gentleman who was then Minister of Railways did not put the value of the road down quite as low as hon. gentlemen here put it. He recognized the fact that without the 42 miles which have to be built, and built to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, this road was worth $14,000 per mile from Ste. Rosalie.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That it cost that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, and then he admitted that the cost of the additional 42 miles was nearly $600,000—$570,000, and that gentleman then made the cost of this road $1,970,000. I commend that calculation to the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland, who, I think, quite paralyzed most of the members of the House by his wonderful calculations. It was the business of the Minister of Railways at that day to keep himself familiar with that matter, and that is the result at which he arrived. I do not propose to go over this contract in detail. It has been done already, but there are a few points which I think it well to refer to. I notice that the hon gentleman from Westmoreland is not in his place, and I am very sorry he is not here, as I listened with a great deal of attention and considerable patience to his speech. I notice that that hon. gentleman did not appear to know what land damages had to do with the price of a railway. If the hon. gentleman had to build a railway along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, he would find that the land damages had a good deal to do with it. It sometimes means half the cost of the railway, and the calculations show that this Drummond County Railway without any allowance for land damages, would cost the government $1,600,000 to build, if they built the road in the same place and of the same character, without the land damages, and the probabilities is that the land damages, although not so great as in the other region, would amount to about $400,000 any way; so that the road which the government are getting for $1,600,000 would have cost the government probably $2,000,000. I do not attach any importance to those fine drawn calculations as to how cheaply a government can build a railway. I have heard these things before, but the experience is that no government railway is cheaply built and that every government work has cost a great deal more than it had been estimated to cost. It is quite out of the question, and quite impossible for the government to acquire or construct a railway like the Drummond County are Railway for anything like the money they paying for it. The hon. leader of the opposition was rather facetious over the character of the Drummond County Railroad. If I am not mistaken, he made some reference to it as being a tan-bark railway and so on, or perhaps it was some other hon. gentleman said that, but when that hon. gentleman was in office and leader of the government, his engineer went down and inspected that road for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was entitled to the payment of the subsidy which had been voted by parliament, and the hon. gentleman and his engineer thought that the road was good enough for that. It was quite up to the desirable standard. Now it suits the hon. gentleman to talk about it as a tan-bark road and a road not good for anything. In his vigorous speech, in moving that this bill be read a second time this day three months, the hon. gentleman wanted to know why the arrangement for running powers with the Grand Trunk Railway Company could not have been made similar to that made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for running powers from Toronto to Hamilton. I think if the hon. gentleman will look into that agreement he will find that it would not be a more advantageous arrangement than the arrangement which has been made. The arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway between Toronto and Hamilton is an arrangement under which the Canadian Pacific Railway pay for the mere right of running on the road the sum of $1,000 a mile a year, and then they have no right to wheelage, and they have not the privileges which the government have from the Grand Trunk Railway Company at all. If the government had made such an arrangement as that the hon. gentleman would probably have condemned them and wanted to know why they could not make an arrangement similar to the one they have made. He wanted to know if a bridge could not have been built at Quebec to get competition. I have already pointed out that you cannot get it through the Canadian Pacific road. The Canadian Pacific Railroad will send their freight over their long line to St. John. They will not send it to Quebec to be transferred to the Intercolonial Railway, and I presume if the government had brought down a proposition to spend $5,000,000 to construct a bridge at Quebec, he would have wanted to know why they could not spend a much less sum and get to Montreal by doing what they are doing now. I do not think that the government could have any arrangement with respect to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, affording better connection with the Intercolonial Railway that would have met with the approval of the hon. gentleman. He is perfectly aware that people most competent to judge of questions of this kind do feel that the government have made a very good and business-like arrangement. It was suggested by some hon. gentleman that advantage might have been taken of the necessity of the Drummond County Railway and that the bank's claim against them might have been bought out. That would have been a sharp trick which I do not think would have been worthy of a government, and that I am satisfied the leader of the opposition would not be a party to himself. A great deal of stress was laid by the hon. leader of the opposition on the fact—and I notice that the leader of the opposition in another place laid a great deal of stress on the same fact—that the new line would be seventy-four miles longer than the Canadian Pacific Railway to Halifax. That is true, or nearly true. The difference will be something like that. As it is now, owing to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway is a better road, has a better roadbed and more favourable grades and curvatures, trains make better time over it with less expenditure of power than they do over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am satisfied that if the railway is extended to Montreal by the method proposed, one can go from Halifax or Moncton or any point east of Moncton and get to Montreal just as rapidly as they can get there by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The difference now is only three hours, and that difference will be made up by the improved road. A great deal has been said about the rate of interest. It has been said that the government can borrow money at three per cent, but hon. gentlemen must remember that the Drummond County Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company are not the government, and that the four per cent bonds of the Grand Trunk Railway are selling at 85 cents on the dollar.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—But with this contract they could borrow?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman think so? Possibly; but I doubt it. The hon. leader of the opposition laid a good deal of stress on the fact that the subsidies should be deducted. I have said something about that already, but I wish to call attention to the fact that in addition to the Grand Trunk Railway's Rivière du Loup section, the Conservative government in former years took over the Canada Central, a road which had been largely bonussed, and they did not take back any of those bonusses or deduct them from the price. It has never been done in any case.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is a private affair. It was handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman laid some stress on a telegram which he had received from a Mr. Ball, who is, I think, mayor of Nicolet. I desire to call attention to the fact that Mr. Ball, in addition to being mayor of Nicolet, is a director of the Armstrong Company, which has been disappointed about getting this contract. Then the hon. gentleman thought it desirable to give us an extract from La Presse.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No; I did not. I read no extract from La Presse.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman did not read the extract, but he referred to the fact that La Presse took the same view as that conveyed in the extract he did read. I have in my hands a newspaper which is recognized as reflecting as accurately as La Presse does the Conservative opinion of the province of Quebec, that is La Minerve, and I shall read from La Minerve of to-day an opinion with respect to the proper action for the Senate to take.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is this morning's issue.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Read it a few days ago.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I prefer to read its latest utterances. I do not generally read this paper, but I read it to-day and I find it contains advice of an excellent kind.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Like the Witness.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not read the Witness either. Speaking of this railway arrangement, La Minerve says:

> It is an Act of the Laurier government. The majority of the House of Commons approved of it and it is to be presumed that the whole country, which for the time is Liberal, it has approved of the job.

He does not like it but thinks the Senate should endorse it. The article continues:

> On the other hand, the amount of public funds affected by the consummation of this affair does not make a sufficiently large sum to affect the credit of Canada. Our theory as to the role of the Senate is different from that expressed by several of our confreres. This branch of parliament has for its principal mission the hindering of all hasty legislation which the House of Commons, under the influence of public opinion, violently excited, might adopt without having taken time to measure all its consequences. The role of the Senate is essentially the role of a meditator. It is enough to say that the Senate should not nullify the action of the House of Commons except in extremely grave circumstances. The Senate should, in order to preserve intact its prestige and political usefulness, guard with jealous care, itself from ever intermeddling in the question of the hour for which the party in power for the time being assumes all the risk and all the responsibility. To act otherwise would be to misunderstand the august character with which the constitution and the nature of things clothes the Senate. We believe in a wide and restraining action and in the necessity that the Senate shall assume a thoroughly national attitude. The affair of the Drummond Railway does not seem in any way to justify anything more than the ordinary discussions of an objectionable law. For that reason, we are of opinion that the Senate, while appreciating as it ought to do, this improper transaction, should not go any further.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who wrote that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I say, I think La Minerve is probably as good a representative of public opinion in the province of Quebec as La Presse; and La Minerve, while taking the same view with respect to this transaction—a view which is not justified by the fact at all—which the hon. leader of the opposition takes, adopts a different view from his, as to the course which the Senate should take. I think that it is a matter for grave consideration. Of course, we have the constitutional right to throw out this bill, just as we have the right to throw out the supply bill. The question is whether on the whole it is a judicious or proper thing for us to exercise that right. I must say that my own impression is rather the other way. If this transaction were clearly and essentially bad—if there were no good about it—if it were not likely to bring about good results, then I say the Senate might be justified in throwing out the bill, but no one has denied that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal will have good results. It has been said by some hon. gentlemen that some other way might have been found to do it, and that this company might be induced to take something less than we are paying for the road, but after weighing the pros and cons, whether or not the bargain is the best that might be made, this House would not be justified in throwing out such a measure. This is a measure which is essentially a money measure—it is a proposal to pay a certain amount of money. It is the kind of measure which comes almost within the exclusive jurisdiction of the other branch of parliament. We cannot amend it. It is not our business; and the Senate, in throwing out this bill under the circumstances, would be taking as extreme a step as that of throwing out the supply bill. That is a step which I think the members of this House should consider very seriously before they take it. I do not think that the hon. leader of the opposition, or any other hon gentleman, has made out a case sufficiently strong to justify this House in going out of its proper sphere and undertaking to throw out a measure for which the other House is exclusively responsible. We are not responsible. It is purely a money matter, and as La Minerve says, the other House which represents the popular sentiment for the time being, are responsible; and I think the country will probably not approve of our interfering in this way. I am satisfied that the people in the lower provinces, who will find their hope of getting better access to Montreal cut off, will not approve of the action of the Senate, and the people who would be employed in the work that would be rendered necessary by the passing of this bill, will not be thankful to us for having cut off the work. I presume, however, anything that I could say would not in the slightest degree affect the vote, and I simply feel it my duty to state, in this hasty, unconsidered way, my opinions on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not intend to prolong the discussion, nor did I intend to address the House upon the motion or the amendment before us, but I understand during my absence my hon. friend from Halifax has made some allusion to me and quoted a speech which I made some years ago in this House in connection with the transfer of the Rivière du Loup branch to the government of Canada, and also quoting from remarks of mine in favour of the extension of the line from Point Levis to Montreal with a view, I suppose, to show inconsistency on my part.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at all. I simply read the speech with a view of showing that his argument, which we all concurred in then, applied to-day to the further extension. There was no desire to reflect on the hon. gentleman in any way, and I am sure every one who heard me will confirm what I say.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If there was any inconsistency in my conduct I would not complain of my hon. friend showing it up to the House, because it would be a legitimate argument and I would not consider he was doing anything unfair. I left the chamber, not through any disrespect towards my hon. friend, but in consequence of the extreme heat in the chamber from the large display of gas we had here in the evening—of course I have no reference to my hon. friend—and I am somewhat subject to headache. For another cause, I did not care to follow very closely the arguments of the hon. gentleman, because I had studied the question very closely myself and made up my mind not to occupy any time of the House in participating in the discussion. But I can only say, as I am on my feet now, and I assure the House I will detain it but a very short time, that when the transfer of the Rivière du Loup branch took place I entertained the strongest desire to see the Intercolonial Railway extended to Montreal, and I feel on that point just as strongly to-day as I did on that occasion. I think it would be for the benefit of that great national work to have the Intercolonial extended to Montreal, and any feasible scheme towards that end I should support as readily as any man in this House, but it does not follow, because one may be in favour of a certain policy or idea that we are committed to the details by which that policy or idea may be carried out. What I am called upon to-day to do is to support the policy which is best intended to carry out my desire to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I frankly admit that I have no ideas on the subject to-day different from those I had in 1879. At that time, when the River du Loup branch was taken over by the government of Canada from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, we had no

Pacific Railway on the north shore. To-day we have. My idea now with regard to connection of the Intercolonial Railway with Montreal is this: I think the true policy of this country would be the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Quebec and securing running powers over the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal. The Canadian Pacific Railway has running powers over the Intercolonial Railway between St. John and Halifax, and there is no reason why a similar arrangement could not be made by the government with the Canadian Pacific Railway, to have running powers over the Canadian Pacific Railway track from Quebec to Montreal. In every sense in which we can look at this question, that would be the true policy of this country at present. I regret that time does not permit me to go into details to support this view, but I asssure my hon. friend of one thing, that if a policy of that kind was inaugurated by the government although I am not looked upon as a supporter of the government, I shall be happy to give it my most cordial support. With regard to the scheme before the House, I think in the first place the bargain is an improvident one. The terms on which we are asked to secure the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal are terms not in the interests of this country. I believe that we are asked to pay an excessive price for what may be in itself a benefit, and I do not agree with the hon. gentlemen who say that the results likely to accrue from the policy propounded in the bill would be realized if it went into operation. I believe that instead of reducing the deficits, when we come to reckon the large amount to be added to the expenditure of the Intercolonial Railway by the policy before the House, the probability would be that the deficits in the Intercolonial Railway would be larger afterwards than they are to-day. Then, again, with regard to the bargain which has been asserted by a leading member, who ought to speak with authority, in another place, that twelve months ago, before these negotiations were entered into by the government of Canada with the Grand Trunk Railway and Drummond County Railway, the property for which we are asked to pay now $1,600,000 could have been purchased perhaps for $400,000 or $500,000. Besides, in the public press it is openly stated that at the bottom of this transaction there is a very heavy layer of corruption—that there is a deal—that there is a job. I do not mean to say that there is any truth in these assertions, I have no evidence whatever on which I would be justified in coming to the conclusion that there is the slightest foundation for these charges, but I do say this, in the face of these circumstances, we should not be asked at the closing hours of the session to pass this bill, not alone for the amount of money involved in it, but for the character of the legislature of this country which is also involved. The Senate of Canada, in my humble opinion, would be recreant to one of its first duties if, in view of the charges which have been made in respectable newspapers in this country against what is called the Drummond County deal, we did not see that the matter was fully ventilated before we crystallized the negotiations founded upon that deal into law. If this bill had come to us a month or two ago, we would have spent time to have sent it to the Committee of Railways and there investigated it. It is true the negotiations were not completed in time for that, but if we reject it now, next session it can be introduced early in the year, and we will have an opportunity of referring it to the Railway Committee where all those charges can be ventilated, and we can act upon the evidence, which we will be able to obtain by such a course. It is in the interests of the country on these two grounds that we should not hastily adopt the bill before the House, and that we should give time for investigation of those serious charges which are calculated to do so much injury to the public men of the country and the government. My hon. friend has alluded to a newspaper just now, which I thought stood very high in the estimation of the party to which it belongs. As a journal conducted with marked ability it stands high in my estimation, although I do not agree with everything I see in it, and I see lately it has taken a short turn on the subject before the House. I allude to the Montreal Witness. I may say such articles as this in such a respectable paper as the Witness—because although I differ politically from the Witness I believe it to be a respectable paper conducted with marked ability—are enough to arouse in any man's mind, which is not sluggish indeed, a desire to inquire into the facts concerning which a presumably impartial paper would use such language as this. I quote from the Montreal Witness of June 12th, 1897 :

The arrangement entered into will certainly benefit the Grand Trunk Railway, which by it secures the urgently necessary reconstruction of the Victoria bridge at small cost to itself. The Drummond County Railway will also be a great, a very great, gainer. That the Intercolonial will greatly benefit seems doubtful. But if it be admitted that the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal was a wise policy, Mr. Blair's explanation of the arrangement seems to show that it was more prudent to secure the agreement entered into than to construct a new south shore railway or secure running powers over the whole distance of the larger route of the Grand Trunk Railway. The late government, also, seems to have entertained the project of extension, and had also, it appears, considered in this connection the purchase outright of the Drummond County Railway. But the extension of the Intercolonial Railway is a very doubtful policy, and to create an annual charge of $210,000 for such a project at a time when economy and retrenchment were necessary, and while expenditures upon the fast Atlantic service, upon rapid deepening of canals, and upon the Kootenay railway and other public works to which the government was committed, had just increased the cost of public works by about a million dollars annually, seems unwise, especially in view of the fact that there was no public demand for the extension of the Intercolonial.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That is a subsidized paper.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Which ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—It has been asserted that those papers which had anything to say against the project, were subsidized papers.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is reading such articles as this in the better class of journals in this country that induced me to ask myself if there was any necessity for forcing this doubtful scheme upon the country at the present session, and I had no hesitation, after a full investigation of the whole question, in coming to the conclusion that there was no necessity for haste, that it would be a great deal better for parliament to postpone the consideration of this question to another session, when there will be ample time to give it the fullest investigation. I am afraid I am breaking my promise of not occupying your time too long, but there is one point upon which I wish to make an observation, and it is as to the power of this House to deal with a question of this kind. This House has power to deal with any bill that is presented to it, whether it emanates here, or whether it comes from the other branch of the legislature. We have one restriction with regard to money bills that we cannot amend them, but with that simple qualification we have ample power—just as much power to deal with any measure, I care not of what character, I care not whether it may be a bill involving fiscal considerations or whether it may be a bill involving the franchise of the House of Commons, which is more domestic to that House than any other question—I care not what the question is, this House has absolute power under the British North America Act to deal with it, and the man who asserts to the contrary is, in my humble opinion, ignorant of the first principles of the constitutional system given to this Dominion. I say, therefore, it is useless, and the argument ought never to be heard in this House—I do not like to hear a member of this House utter any language which would go to weaken the authority of the House, because I think, if experience has proved anything at all, it has proved that it might have been in the interest of good government to a great extent if the powers of this House were not confined and limited in some respects as they are, because since the passage of the Act of 1867 creating this Dominion, I feel that this House has a record of which every member of it should be proud, Never has it been proved to be factiously hostile to any government in power, and always has it been shown to be on the side of every great measure of public policy—every one of those great measures of public policy which have made Canada what it is to-day, the boast and pride of every true Canadian. I say this House has a record which, if demagogism should raise its head against us in this country, we can well submit and say to the people of this country look at our record, where have we attempted to thwart your wishes, where have we stood in the way of the national will, point to the instance in which this House has proved unfit for the high duties with which it has been invested, and they will point in vain. I say while that record lasts this House has nothing to fear from the threats or insolence of demagogues, either in the House or out of it. One word more. This House is called upon, on the present occasion, to vote for this bill, that otherwise we would be running contrary to the other branch and thwarting the will of the people. I say if the government to-day exercise the constitutional power they possess, supposing this bill is cast out, as I believe it properly will be by the vote shortly to be taken, let them appeal to-morrow against this Senate and I venture to say there is not a man among us who shall vote against this bill who will not be vindicated by the verdict which will be rendered by the people. Therefore these idle threats are useless, to a body composed of men who know their duty, and have the courage to perform it.

The amendment being put to the House, was declared carried on the following division :

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I paired with the Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat at his request.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that when the House adjourns to-day it stands adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, 24th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an order of the Senate do issue for a copy of all petitions on the part of the cultivators or preparers of tobacco in relation to the new tariff, and also of all correspondence exchanged on this subject between the government and these producers.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to inquire of the hon. minister if there is any report whatsoever coming from Mr. Sifton on the Manitoba school question.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—None.

THE DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before we proceed with the business of the day, I should like to call the attention of the Senate—it may be somewhat unusual—to the Supplementary Estimates laid before the House of Commons—

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Had we not better leave that until we have to do with it practically ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances the hon. gentleman would be quite right. What I propose to ask the hon. gentleman is the meaning of an incident which occurred last night in the House of Commons, after twelve o'clock. It will be remembered that this House rejected the proposition that was laid before it in resolutions for the ratification of an agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Drummond County Railway Company, which involved the expenditure of a large amount of money. As I am informed, and the proceedings of the House of Commons indicate, after the rejection of the policy involved in these resolutions, the government deliberatly laid upon the table a supplementary estimate asking for a sum in order to enable them to carry out the provisions of that contract which had been rejected. If any satisfactory explanation can be given it might enable the Senate to form some opinion as to the course they ought to pursue in the future. The proceeding in the Lower House occurred after twelve o'clock, because the date is Thursday (that is to-day) which is the regular course to pursue with reference to any proceedings which take place after twelve o'clock, and hence I infer, as the newspapers state it was one of the last things done, about two o'clock in the morning; that the government in the Lower House must have been informed of the action of this House in rejecting that policy when they laid on the table estimates asking for a sum to enable them to carry out the conditions of that very contract, and it appears that they also have the Governor General's warrant for so doing. The proceedings read:

Mr. Fielding delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General, which was read by Mr. Speaker, as follows:—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ended 30th June, 1898, and in accordance with the provisions of the "British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 23rd June, 1897.

I have not those estimates before me and I cannot speak as to their contents further than what appears in the newspapers.

Then, just at the last moment, the government played the card which it evidently had kept up its sleeve against the rejection of its Drummond County deal by the Senate. Mr. Fielding it was who did the trick, by laying on the table, as the committee rose, "further Supplementary Estimates" for the year 1897-98, headed as follows:

"Intercolonial Railway extension to Montreal. To pay rental to the Grand Trunk Railway and Drummond County Railway companies for the railway from Chaudière to Montreal, to be operated as part of the Intercolonial Railway for nine months, $157,500."

This will, of course, be added to the Supply Bill, so the Senate cannot reject it without throwing out the bill as a whole. After this stroke the Commons adjourned at 2.15 a.m.

I do not desire to express any positive opinion on this matter until we have the government's explanation, but I will say this, I cannot conceive it possible that His Excellency the Governor General authorized the placing of this item in the estimates before parliament with the knowledge of the rejection of the whole policy by the Senate. I can only infer, that, in the ordinary mode of doing business, this message from the Governor General was obtained prior to the rejection of the bill, and that it was held quietly in the desk of the Finance Minister for a coup d'état in this House. I await the explanation of the hon. gentleman before deciding what the Senate should do to maintain its own independence and dignity.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am not able to say when His Excellency sent the recommendation in regard to this matter to which my hon. friend has referred. I left the House before the conclusion of the proceedings, having paired with the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Allan), finding the burden of sitting here any later in this bad atmosphere too much for me. With regard to the item referred to, it was at one time intended to have it in the estimates, I do not say that particular sum, but a sum which would be required for the year under the proposed agreement if it had been sanctioned. Of course the agreement is abandoned, and now the item is replaced in the estimates for consideration. I believe the object is this, that hon. members having doubt, or more than doubt, whether the business to be done would warrant the expenditure, it was felt desirable that there should be an opportunity to us all to know by actual experiment how that would be. Then, also, there would be an opportunity of considering whether there could be any modification made in the details such as might make the permanent agreement more satisfactory and suitable to the members who are now opposed to it. The matter will probably be brought up in the House of Commons to-day and a more full statement of the object of introducing it will be there given. I did not expect the question would be put to me, so I am not prepared to say anything further on the subject at the moment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before discussing this matter further, might I ask the hon. gentleman if he would make inquiry and let us know at three o'clock what course the government intend to pursue? The hon. gentleman says the question has only just been put to him. I was not aware of it, nor had I seen it until I came to the House at ten o'clock. He will be in a position to tell us at three o'clock after meeting his colleagues, what the intention is with regard to this matter.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The explanation of the Minister of Justice is satisfactory as far as it goes, and was what I should expect from a statesman of his high reputation as a constitutional lawyer. I know my hon. friend cannot but view with alarm such a step as was taken in another place last night when the result of the decision on the Railway Bill was known from this House. Imagine for a moment such a thing occurring in England. Imagine in the House of Commons, under similar circumstances, if the Upper House had rejected a bill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer bringing down to the House estimates in violation and defiance of the will of that branch of parliament! It could not possibly occur. I believe that we are in a crisis in our constitutional history—I believe the time is at hand, or very near at hand, when it has to be decided whether this Senate is to occupy the position it was intended to occupy under the constitution or not. I believe we are shortly to be brought face to face with the fact that we must either be content to allow our constitutional privileges to be overridden by the arbitrary wish of the ministers in another branch of the legislature, or must take a stand which may shake perhaps the constitution itself. We may be compelled to subject the constitution to a wrench, the consequences of which may not, perhaps, at the present time be foreseen. For I take it for granted there is no member of this House, who voted with the majority who will, by any manœuvering adopted elsewhere, consent to have the deliberate decision of this House set aside and laughed at. If this can be done it would be better that the Senate should be abolished at once. If we are afraid to exercise our constitutional privileges, or afraid to take steps to meet efforts to deprive us of those constitutional privileges, then this body will have no need for an existence and should not be continued an incubus and an expense on the country. If, after the deliberate vote of this House last night, the estimates contain any provision for the Drummond Railway deal as contemplated by that bill, I for one, shall be prepared to consider the propriety of rejecting the estimates.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The speech of the hon. gentleman is a very good illustration of what is called leaping before you come to the stile. The hon. leader of the opposition very properly asked for an explanation of the government's intentions. The hon. leader of the government intimated he would give the information when the House met at three o'clock, and consequently it is absurd——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In your opinion, of course—a wise man like the hon. gentleman!

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am stating only my humble opinion. I know my opinion is not worth nearly as much as that of the hon. gentleman, but I do state that in my opinion to talk about a crisis in the constitution and of throwing out the Supply Bill until we know what the government propose to do and on what ground they are doing it, would be very unusual. I do not wish the Senate to occupy a position which is inconsistent with its dignity, and I think it is much more consistent with our dignity to wait, to be calm, and not, to use a vulgar phrase, to go off the handle at once.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I hope the hon. minister will consider the gravity of these circumstances. His Excellency has been asked to sanction a proposition to override the will of parliament. The government is asking parliament to appropriate money for a purpose which has been condemned by this House. It is a most grave thing, and the ministers ought to consider whether they are going to recede from the position they have taken or not. If they do not recede, they raise a very grave question. They put His Excellency the Governor General in a very awkward position, that he should override the will of parliament, before knowing what parliament is going to do.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see the grave crisis which hon. gentlemen have referred to. The majority of the Senate last evening exercised, no doubt, a constitutional right in discussing the measure submitted to this House by the administration. The majority of the Senate voted to reject that measure. Now, one of the items of expense associated with that is included in the Supply Bill. Is not the House of Commons exercising its undoubted constitutional right in so doing? Will any hon. gentleman in this House say that the House of Commons has not the right to do what the House of Commons is undertaking to do at this moment? Does any hon. gentleman forget that when the House of Lords rejected the proposed abolition of the paper duties, that that abolition was included in the Supply Bill, and that which the House of Lords had rejected when proposed as a separate measure, they acquiesced in when included in the Supply Bill? The House of Lords, in rejecting the proposed abolition of the paper duty, exercised their constitutional discretion, did what they undoubtedly had a right to do under the circumstances—I am speaking of the legal right—and they were checkmated in that course by the subsequent action of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—But at that time the system in England was different from what it is at the present time. It was the habit then to bring down separate Supply Bills in connection with each service, and the House would have an opportunity of meeting each case as it arose. Here, where all the appropriations are in bulk, we have not that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is mistaken. It was included in the general Supply Bill—what the House of Lords had rejected as a separate measure—and that bill was carried through parliament. Take another instance where the action was the action of the executive authority. It was the abolition of the purchase of commissions in the army. Mr. Gladstone proposed a bill for the abolition of that system. That bill was rejected by the House of Lords. The practice had existed under an order in council, and there had been no previous legislation on the subject, and after the rejection of that measure by the House of Lords, the government advised the Crown by Order in Council to abolish the system, and it was done without legislation, and although there was a discussion on the subject undoubtedly, I do not think that any one successfully maintained in either House that the government had not the power to do what it proposed to do under these circumstances. If hon. gentlemen in this House think that the administration had not the power to advise the Crown in respect to supplies on this subject, and if they think the House of Commons has not the legal and constitutional right to entertain that proposition——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nobody is denying that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then there is nothing illegal and nothing unconstitutional in the course that has been proposed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nor will there be, I suppose, if the Senate rejects the estimates. They have the power to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No doubt they have the power, and they know what responsibility they assume in pursuing such a course. I was addressing my observations to what my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller) had said with regard to the action that was taken. It is an action within the constitutional discretion of the other House, just as the action taken last night was within the constitutional discretion of this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The two cases cited by my hon. friend are not applicable to the position I have taken. The instance before us in this House is that of the Senate rejecting a measure for the expenditure of a large sum of public money upon public works, and after the deliberate decision of the Senate on a bill sent from the other House to that effect, the Minister of Finance in the popular branch submits estimates in direct defiance of the deliberate action of this House. This is a very different case from either of the two cases mentioned by my hon. friend. A principle was involved, but it was not a question of imposing taxation—not a question in connection with the expenditure of public money. The other was also not a question involving the expenditure of public money. Although we have not the initiation of money bills in this House, we have the right to reject them, but we cannot amend them, and it is taking an unfair advantage of the position of this House to put an item of supply in the general bill which has been condemned already by this House, and send it to this House to pass upon, giving us the alternative of either ignoring our previous action and accepting the charge which we had rejected, or rejecting the whole Supply Bill. I say the two cases are not analogous at all. If my hon. friend could cite a case where a bill had been sent up from the House of Commons proposing a heavy expenditure of public money on fortifications or public works of any kind, and that that bill had been rejected by the House of Lords, and after the rejection of such a bill by the House of Lords, that then the money intended to meet the object of the bill had been placed in the Supply Bill, he would have cites a case in point, but the two cases which he cited are not in point, and I defy him to get a case in English history on all fours with the case before us.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The first case I gave is exactly the same as this in principle. There the House of Commons proposed to abolish the paper duties. It was proposed as a separate measure. It was sent to the House of Lords and the Lords in the exercise of their constitutional discretion rejected that measure. The House of Commons included at the instance of the government of course, that abolition in the general Supply Bill, and the House of Lords had the alternative of rejecting the entire Supply Bill or acquiescing in a principle that is exactly the same as this, except that the one is imposing a tax and the other is withholding it, both in the imposition and the abolition, the House of Commons is the paramount body.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The cases are not in point. I recollect the case of the paper duty very well, because members who have sat in this House as long as I have, recollect that in a very important discussion, on the initiation of the national policy on the motion of Sir David Macpherson, I had occasion to bring up that case and quote it as a precedent for the position I then took. There is not only the difference which I have already stated between the position of the Senate at the present time and the position of the House of Lords on the paper duty—that is that the bill was not a bill for the expenditure of a large sum of public money upon public works which had been rejected by the House of Lords—but it was not even a case of the imposing of taxation. It was a case of relief from taxation, which makes a very great difference. With regard to the remarks which fell from the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power), I do not think anything I said justified the tone in which he chose to speak. Still I do not complain. I say now, and I believe every hon. gentleman who hears me believes, we are in the face of a crisis. We have to deal with bold and determined men who have objects, perhaps, that we cannot fathom and who have reasons, perhaps, for the bold stand they are taking that we do not understand. They will go any length and I should not be at all surprised to see a provision for the payment of the annual subsidies of these two railways in the Supply Bill when it comes down, but I warn the government they will have to bear the consequences before the country, because I believe we represent the country on this question. They will have to take the consequences before the country that I believe will inevitably ensue if that turns out to be the case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Richmond.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman spoke himself, but he denies the right to others.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no motion before the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am accustomed to this sort of interruption from my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller) that there is a very distinct and very wide difference between the case of the paper duties and the matter now engaging our attention. In that case it was relieving the people of a burden and in this case it is proposed to impose a burden, and in addition to that I have not had time to look up the authority but I had occasion to look up the question of the paper duties not long ago—I found that the action of the House of Commons on that occasion was condemned very strongly and the action of the House of Lords has been vindicated and supported. This matter stands in this position : the advisers of His Excellency propose to enter into this contract, and they made it a part or a condition of this contract that it should receive the sanction of the Senate as well as that of the House of Commons. They came to the conclusion that such sanction should be obtained for that contract, and they submittted it to both Houses. Having failed to secure the assent of this House to that contract, they turn round and do evidently what they thought would not be right to do when they sought the sanction of the Senate—they turn round now and propose to carry out the spirit, at all events, of their original proposition without the sanction of the Senate, which they considered necessary only a short time ago. I do not know that this matter involves so grave a crisis as my hon. friend from Richmond appears to think it does. Of course the action itself shows a disposition to treat this House very unfairly and discourteously, but on first blush, at all events, I am not at all inclined to think that it will be anything more than just an exhibition of feeling on the part of the government of the day in bringing down this amount in the estimates, for the most they can do is to vote an annual amount. Annuities such as are included in the contract cannot be voted, and they will find in the end they would have been much wiser men had they not given such an exhibition as they have done by bringing in that vote when this House had, after due and careful deliberation, rejected the Drummond County Railway Bill as a measure not in the best interests of the country.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I wish to make clear one or two things before the motion is withdrawn. I meant to explain before, but I do not appear to have been understood, that the object of this item was not to compel, in effect, the adoption of the agreement, but it was thought that hon. members who oppose the agreement as a whole would feel there were good reasons why this particular item for a nine months' experiment should be approved—that there was no inconsistency between the two things. There was no thought, I am sure, of getting this House to sanction in one way what they were rejecting in another way. This House may not agree in that view. The House may choose to think and say and act upon the view that the two things are identical. But they are not proposed with the view that they are identical or that they are accomplishing the same purpose. The item is merely suggested in order to afford an opportunity of making an important experiment in this matter, the government believing that the profits will be so large as to satisfy this House that the bargain is a very good one, while at present the majority of this House do not take that view of the matter. It is said we are in the face of a crisis between the Senate and the House of Commons. I hope we are not. I should be very sorry to see any such crisis brought about, and I hope some way will be found by which all appearance of a crisis may be removed. I seem to have been misunderstood upon one point personally. I think I was understood, by what some hon. gentlemen opposite have said, to have undertaken that when the House met at three I would give full information after seeing my colleagues. I did not say so. We are dealing with a matter here in advance of the item being entertained in the House of Commons, and for all I know my colleagues may take the view that this House have not to do with the matter until it comes before them regularly. It may not come in the form in which notice has been given of the item, and the amount may be different, or the item may not be passed in the Commons and may not come here at all. It is quite possible my colleagues may take the view that I should not make any further statement here. I did not promise to make a statement, but the Council is to meet between now and three o'clock, and I shall be able to say at three o'clock, if the House desires it, whether a statement is to be made here in advance of any statement that the government may make in the other House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—At all events, could we know if the Governor General gave his assent before or after midnight?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no personal knowledge on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We could know it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think perhaps it would be fair to say that I have no idea that the Governor General did give his assent after the vote here. I do not think he did. I have no personal knowledge, but I do not at all suppose he gave it after that.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Perhaps there is no member of the House who gets more of the indulgence of the Senate than the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Power). He speaks when he pleases, and I hardly can recall an instance in which the rule has been attempted to be enforced against him. I recollect when he was in the habit of speaking half a dozen times a day and no one called him to order: I have myself tried to speak twice briefly when he has called me to order. My hon. friend from Charlottetown (Mr. Ferguson) had not spoken once on this occasion when he was called to order by the hon. gentleman who had himself spoken twice on the subject. That sort of treatment is not calculated to engender liberal treatment from the other side of the House, and if it is put in practice against the hon. member he will be called to order half a dozen times a day.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

The motion for adjournment was withdrawn.

YUKON MINING AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining and Transportation Company (Foreign)." He said: I move the consideration of this report, merely to give an opportunity to members of the House to see in print the alterations which have been made in the bill in committee, so that they can compare them with the original bill, and see their character and extent. Although occupying a good deal of space, there is very little change made in the bill. I do not think it is necessary that I should enter into an explanation of them. The promoter of the bill will no doubt give the reasons why those amendments should be accepted or disagreed to. I may explain briefly one of the essential features that it was considered necessary to amend. The original bill spoke of that company as an incorporated company. On investigating the bill, it was found that there was no incorporation whatever. It was simply extending to Canada the powers given to the company incorporated in the United States, and it was necessary therefore that some changes should be made in the phraseology of the bill, showing that we do not incorporate the company but merely recognize a foreign corporation and extend to them certain powers in this country, but not dealing with their stock or the amount of it, or their internal management. That is one of the principal alterations. They imperfectly described the geographical position, which hon. gentlemen could not understand without a map showing the country. It is a region which is not yet surveyed, and there is a vast difference of opinion about the location of some of the lakes mentioned there. We have no way of deciding between the conflicting authorities and to meet some of these difficulties the phraseology of the described line of railway was somewhat altered. Beyond that I do not know that there was any great amendment made in the bill. The promoters of the bill agreed to the amendments which were made; they considered that it improved the bill.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I must confess that yesterday, when I inquired if the bill had been reprinted, I was very much surprised to find that it had not been reprinted. The chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, when he presented this report a couple of days ago, stated that the alterations were so numerous that he would not ask to have them read—that the bill was practically a new one and, as I and a number of other hon gentlemen around me understood him, the bill was to be reprinted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—The amendments were to be reprinted.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—That was not my understanding at all. If there had been any such understanding, I should have moved that the bill be reprinted. I have in my hand the bill as amended, and I submit that it is impracticable to take up the amendments which appear in the minutes and put them in their proper places and have an intelligent knowledge of the bill. As was very properly stated by the chairman a minute ago, the Yukon is a new country. Even before the committee, one of the companies contended that the lake that was represented to go by a certain name was not the lake at all, that the lake referred to was over one hundred miles further south and therefore, instead of accepting the amendments, I shall move, before I resume my seat, that the bill be reprinted. With all due respect to the hon. gentleman who has charge of this bill, and who is pushing it to a conclusion—a gentleman for whom I have the greatest respect, a liberal, broad-minded man, and as jolly a fellow as any that stands in this House—I think I have a little more interest in that portion of the Dominion than he has. I may state here, for the information of the House, that there are no politics in this bill. The man that introduced it in the other House, is one of the Liberal members from British Columbia, although not representing that portion of the province through which the proposed railway will be built and the other improvements are supposed to be made.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Good men come out of Gallilee.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—Yes, and even out of Halifax. I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman in the House of Commons who represents that district, Mr. Maxwell, is opposed to the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—He is crazy.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I have had an interview with him, and he is distinctly opposed to it. The bill will affect the Burrard district and Vancouver Island more than any other portion of the province of British Columbia. But apart from that, I am opposed to the passage of the bill under any circumstances. I care not how you amend it; and I agreed with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power), when he suggested in the committee that the bill should be remodelled. I do not know who these men composing this foreign company are, and the hon. gentlemen here do not know who they are—I am informed they are a lot of Yankee speculators. This company has been incorporated where? In West Virginia. I am informed on the very best authority that they are nothing more or less than an off shoot of the North American Trading and Transportation Company, which now has a monopoly of the United States portion of the Yukon country and now desire by this bill to extend their operations into the Canadian Yukon. It is for trading purposes that they wish to extend their powers away into that portion of British Columbia and into the North-west Territories. I agree with what the hon. gentleman from Halifax said the other day, that a foreign company coming in here and taking advantage of their foreign incorporation are placed in a very much better position than our own people. They have no personal responsibilities such as our own people assume when parliament grants them charters: and, as I said before, every man of this company, as far as I am able to judge, is a foreigner.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We do not know who they are.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—They were not willing to submit their names. We have not the slightest knowledge who they are, and I claim, under the circumstances, that they have come in under false pretenses. They claim in the bill that they have certain powers and privileges from the legislature of British Columbia which, on investigation, was proven to be untrue. The preamble of the bill had to be altered: and I am astonished at my good natured friend from Brandon insisting on having the bill passed in the dying hours of parliament. The reason why I am opposing this bill is that I am satisfied that instead of opening up that country it will have the reverse effect. It will have the effect, probably, of stopping the operations of the other company who are now, I may inform the House, engaged on their trails and surveys, and building wharfs. They are at work now, and this bill, if passed, will have one of two tendencies; if this company can get what they ask for, the other company will be compelled to buy them out, because there is not room for two companies there now. The hon. gentleman says, "Oh! I know what I am talking about," but I do not think the hon. gentleman knows anything about it. If I were to dictate to members of this House as to the local conditions and what would be contrary to their interests away down in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, or some remote portion of our Dominion————

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—He did not say that.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I have to a great extent a local knowledge of the condition of affairs in the Yukon country, and I say it is not in the interest of British Columbia or the North-west Territories or the development of that portion of the country, that this legislation should be granted. If the present company which obtained a bill from us the other day, fail to do their duty and construct the works they have agreed to construct, then if this foreign company should come here next year and apply for a charter and place their names before the public and ask for the same rights and privileges as this other company above board, not under the shadow or wing or shield of any United States company, then I do not know that I would oppose it. The chances are I should support it, but at the present time I ask the Senate not to pass this bill. In a few months we are to meet again, and if they come to us at any time and ask for legislation which we would be justified in granting, I for one shall not oppose it. I ask the hon. member not to press this legislation further this session. I move that the report be not now adopted, but that the bill be reprinted so that every hon. gentleman can see the full meaning of the legislation asked for in the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We ought to have the amendments printed.

The motion was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I should like to have the bill printed so that I may see what it is. I do not like to speak of what takes place in committee, but they could not tell within hundreds of miles where they were going, and it appears to me a strange thing that we should grant a charter to people when we do not know who they are. They have a charter from the legislature of West Virginia, and they come in here for legislation, and we are not to ask any questions of them as to who they are. The fact that the legislature of British Columbia has recognized them is no reason why we should not be allowed to ask any questions.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The printing of the bill will not give you all that information.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—But it will tell us what we are doing. The hon gentleman may be satisfied with it as it is, but it does not satisfy me at all. We want to know to whom we are giving these powers. We want some responsible parties. We do not want a lot of foreigners to come in. Who are they? Are they black or white? We do not know anything about them. I desired that the bill should be reprinted, but that motion was lost. If my hon. friend wants to move the six months' hoist I will second it, or if he does not, I shall move it myself. It takes me a long time to make up my mind on questions of this kind, and I want to have a chance to record my vote against it, even if I stood alone. This old man's vote will never be recorded in favour of foreigners unless he knows what they are. Therefore, I move that this report be taken into consideration this day six months.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I second my hon. friend's motion. We are too ready to grant charters to foreigners before we know who they are. I do not know that it is going to be any benefit to the Dominion of Canada to have foreigners coming in and taking up the trade and work of the Dominion when there are so many in the Dominion who are ready to do that work if they consider it for the advantage of the Dominion generally. I know very little indeed about the merits of the bill which has been submitted, as there has been very little said here in advocacy of the measure itself and from the small part of the discussion that I heard respecting it in the Railway Committee, I am decidedly opposed to passing that bill, and shall support the motion made by my hon. friend from Monck.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken and the hon. gentleman from Monck are under a misapprehension. The province of British Columbia chartered the company to do certain work in the Cassiar and Yukon district, and this company finding there is a certain point which they wish to reach that may be beyond the limits of British Columbia, come here and ask power from the Dominion to reach that place.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—There is no British Columbia charter.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Time and again we have extended provincial charters, though we had not got the names of the incorporators before us, and there are hundreds of bills on the statutes of the country similar to this one. We merely extend provincial powers and make the bill a Dominion bill, because they go beyond the boundaries of the province. That is all that this bill asks. I am in favour of the first company which got th charter, the Duke of Teck's company, and I hope they will proceed, but I am not in favour of monopoly. I do not wish to lock up that enormous territory for any one company. There is room for half a dozen companies there. While I wish every success to the first company, I do not wish to block out any one, and therefore we give these people rights to go to a certain lake out there and that is the whole object of the bill. My hon. friend knows that the amendments proposed are all technical. The law clerk of this House discovered little flaws in the bill as it came from the House of Commons, and to rectify those he proposed some amendments striking out some sections which referred to British Columbia which were not quite in accordance with the facts, and the committee struck them out. It does not alter the route or the incorporators, and does not alter anything except little technicalities to cure the defects in the Act of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Does it conform to the laws of this country to recognize incorporators when you do not know who they are?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You do it hundreds of times.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Then we should stop doing wrong.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Companies incorporated under provincial bills come to this parliament over and over again for Dominion legislation and in such cases we have not got the names of those who apply.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Is the hon. gentleman ashamed to give the names of the people?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—With regard to foreigners, I should like every foreigner, be he Russian, German or American, to bring all the money he can to this country, and if this company, or any other company, from any other part of the world want to bring in money let them bring it in. The progress British Columbia has made up to this date is entirely due to United States capital. I know what I am talking about. In the town of Victoria in 1858, when the discovery of gold was made, we had about one hundred people in the whole place. In two months 20,000 people came in with pockets full of gold, and a town lot which you could have bought for $50 before, would bring $7,000. From that time Americans have been greatly instrumental in building up that province in order to enrich themselves it is true, but at the same time they helped the province. That is the effect of it. The Americans came into Rossland and they first got charters to drain certain lands, and but for the United States capital which came into the Rossland mines they would not be known to-day. The only things I have against the Americans is that they prefer employing United States labourers to Canadians, but now we have an Act to prevent them doing that, to a certain extent. But let foreigners bring all the capital they can into the country and open up the country. That has been the effect of it in days past. Although we are a British colony, the British government has never spent one shilling in carrying the mail to us. Although we have had mails brought to us, they were carried by Americans, and what did the English government do? They carried the mails to the West Indies, Chili and Peru and other parts of the world, but they did not spend one shilling in carrying the mails to our colony. All that work was done by the enterprise of the Americans. There is a great difference between a United States company coming in and carrying the money out like the American Bank Note Company, and a foreign company coming in and bringing money into the country.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman is entirely incorrect in stating to the House that this company is incorporated in British Columbia. The very fact that it is not incorporated in British Columbia made it necessary to strike out all reference to being incorporated in that province.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It should be incorporated.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman appears not to know what he is talking about, and he tells us all about that country and about the Americans carrying the mails, but I do not know that that has anything to do with the bill. He cannot tell us the names of the incorporators but he is willing to vote for their incorporation, because the Americans conferred some benefit on the province of British Columbia formerly. He thinks we ought to take that into consideration. I feel an interest even in that country, though I am a long distance from it. What is the object of this company? There is a company working there now, trying to carry a railway into the Yukon and make improvements, and if you charter this company the first company will have to buy them out. We do not know what the responsibility of these men is, or anything about them. They appear to be here from the state of West Virginia and because they are incorporated there we are asked to grant them what they want here. My hon. friend lays great stress on that, and refuses now to have these amendments put in proper shape so that we can see them. I am not prepared to adopt the bill as it is, and I now move that it be considered six months hence. I have already given my reasons for making this motion. It is not that I am against the improvement of the country, because I am always in favour of that, but I prefer that it should be done by British subjects, and not by foreigners whom we do not know. How are we going to reach them in another country? I want to charter people in this country and get their names and know who they are. We do not desire to give people vested rights in this country until we know them. It may cost this country a large sum of money to get rid of that vested right by and by.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—How far is it north?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not know how far north it is, and I do not care—not desiring to give you a short answer. I am opposed to foreigners coming in here and asking parliament to give them a charter to interfere with companies of British subjects incorporated by this House. This has been sprung on us at the eleventh hour, and we are asked to give them a charter and force the others to buy them out.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—The great objection to the company is that they appear to be foreigners. We do know who the other company is. The Duke of Teck is an Austrian, and all the money he gets is the pension he receives from Austria, and the money he receives for marrying a cousin of the Queen. If the objection is simply to foreigners, perhaps the hon. gentleman would make his argument over again and apply it to the Duke of Teck. I shall be very happy to hear it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What the hon gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Macdonald) says is substantially true. Most of the amendments made to the bill were purely formal amendments, or almost purely formal, made at the suggestion of the law clerk; but there is one amendment to which the attention of the House has not been directed, and which deserves attention. Page 2, line 20, leave out "Teslin Lake," and insert "a point on Teslin Lake not further west than the one hundred and thirty-third meridian." It was claimed on behalf of the British Yukon Company—and with a certain amount of truth—that under the wording of this bill, as it was originally introduced, this company might come and undertake to lay their railway tracks and do their other work in places on the line which had been selected by the British Yukon Company, but under the bill as it stands now that is impossible. This company begin their railway at a point which is distant I think about one hundred miles from the point where the British Yukon Company begin their work, and then they are obliged to go eastward to Teslin Lake. There was some question as to which lake was called "Teslin" and in order to make that clear and prevent this company interfering with the other company the amendment which I have read was inserted. If this company go to Teslin Lake, they must go to a point not further west than the one hundred and thirty-third meridian, and the other company do not go further east than the one hundred and thirty-third meridian, so that there is at least forty miles between the works of the companies, and I think that is not an unreasonable thing. The promoters of this company propose to begin at the head of Taku Inlet, running east, and the other company begin at the head of Lynn Inlet and run nearly due north. I think it is absurd to talk of there not being room for two companies in an immense country like that, and I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is not desirable that it should be monopolized by any one company.

Hon. Mr McINNES (B.C.)—I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am not opposed to any foreigner coming into Canada to engage in any business enterprise whatever. I will hail them with the greatest delight, but I would want to know in the first place who those foreigners are, and I do not wish to have foreigners placed in a more advantageous position than our own people. With all due respect to what has fallen from the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Macdonald) about the developments in our colony in the early days which he attributes greatly to the Americans —and I give the Americans credit for what they have done—the conditions to-day are totally different. Within the past few years, as my hon. colleague knows, English capital has been seeking investment in that country and will continue to pour into the United States and develop the resources of that great country. Some of it has now been directed to British Columbia and I am satisfied that all the capital that we require for the development of our natural resources can and will be obtained from England, and we can get on very well indeed without aid or assistance from foreigners. I wish to see my province and the Dominion generally prosper. I believe if this bill is passed it will have a tendency to retard the improvements that are going on and to be prosecuted within the next few years. If I believed that by allowing this bill to pass it would have a tendency to open up that portion of the country more quickly, I should be the first to raise my voice in favour of their getting in there, but this company is in direct opposition to those who made the first application for a charter to go in there, and although in railway construction thirty or forty miles may appear a great distance between starting points in this level country, allow me to inform hon. gentlemen that you may go twenty, thirty, forty or one hundred miles before you can get a sufficient space between the mountains through which to pass to reach a certain point in the Yukon region. What does this bill ask for? Is it for the construction of a railway? Look at the marginal note.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman has spoken twice on this motion. The hon gentleman has no right to speak further on the motion.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think the hon. gentleman is perfectly in order. This motion is to throw it out, and he is at liberty to explain all about the whole of the bill. The hon. gentleman from Victoria spoke four times.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I spoke once on the subject; that was all. The hon. gentleman has spoken a dozen times.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I am much obliged to my hon. colleague, but I have not spoken to the motion now before the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the motion before the House?

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—That this report be taken into consideration this day six months. It is on that motion I am now speaking, and I hope my hon. colleague will not get so excited over this matter. When interrupted, I was drawing the attention of the House to the fact that this bill asks for all manner of things. It is not to build a railway; it is to go in there and build telegraphs and smelters, and to engage in trade generally, and own vessels and wharfs ——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I could show you twenty bills with the same provisions.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—But this bill asks for privileges and rights which will overlap those of the other company. It is true that their starting points on the Pacific are about seventy-five miles apart, but when they get into the interior about seventy-five or one hundred miles, if they are to take advantage of the lakes and the tributaries that flow into the Yukon River, they are bound to come into contact. I ask this House to postpone the consideration of this bill until the next session of parliament. I do not think, even if this House should pass this motion, that it is possible for the bill to pass the other House. If it goes down there with the amendments, practically a new bill, certain rules and regulations have to be observed there, as well as in this House, and I know of several hon. gentlemen there who opposed it in the strongest possible way when it was before the lower House who will continue to oppose it and take advantage of every legitimate means they have of defeating this bill. I would ask my good Christian colleague from Brandon not to proceed further with this bill, but allow it to drop, and if, as I said before, the company we have chartered fail to do their duty and show any tendency towards monopolizing that territory,—if we find that they are not doing that which is right for the development of the country, he will have my support.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division :—

The report was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I object to that. It cannot be done without the suspension of the rule, and we must be unanimous before the rule can be suspended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Rule 70 says :

No private bill shall be read the third time on the same day on which it is reported from a committee.

This bill was reported three days ago.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—That means when it is acted upon. You may report it six months beforehand, but the meaning is when it is acted upon. I submit that to His Honour the Speaker.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—In my opinion rule 70 does not apply to the present bill. I certainly gave the opinion that no private bill shall be read the third time the same day on which it is reported from committee. This bill was reported from committee two or three days ago, and I think the question of order is not well taken.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

THE TARIFF.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (143) "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the duties of customs." He said :—The subject of this bill has been so thoroughly threshed out in the public press and at public meetings, not to speak of the debates in the House of Commons, that I doubt whether the Senate would feel obliged to me if I were to enter into a very full explanation of all the incidents connected with this measure. It is of course within the recollection of hon. gentlemen that for many years the main issue between the two great political parties in Canada has been the question of protection—in the abstract, protection and free trade. Practically, it has been admitted that free trade was too far in the distance to be thought of in Canada under present conditions, for many years to come ; that we must at all events adhere to a tariff for revenue, if we do not go any further. The people of Canada are scarcely educated up to the propriety of paying direct taxes for the administration of affairs, and therefore our revenue must be raised by what might be called incidental protection. The course pursued by the present administration in the preparation of the measure now submitted to parliament, has been on very similar lines to that followed by their predecessors. They adopted the same plan by the ministers who were particularly charged with the consideration of the fiscal policy of the government meeting the people at various points throughout the Dominion and taking suggestions and opinions from them as to their views on this important subject. The result of that has been that this bill was prepared probably more on lines and views that were gathered than on the abstract views of the members of the government. The various industries in this country that had, I may say, been subsidized under the system of protection, had assumed such vast proportions that the government did not feel that it would be proper to take the responsibility of practically wiping out these industries, as the result would be if a tariff exclusively for revenue were introduced, and therefore, considering the position of those industries and considering the vast interests that were affected by them, the banks of the country and persons who had large sums of money invested in those industries, while we recognized that it was contrary to sound principle, yet it was one of those questions regarding which you had to adopt a modified view. The tariff as prepared now really does not make the material changes that we had expected it would. There are particular lines in which material changes have been made, and those are especially in relation to what is known as the iron duties, iron being looked upon as the basis upon which so many other industries were dependent as raw material. As raw material for those industries it was deemed advisable to reduce the duties largely on iron. If hon. gentlemen have the bill before them, I shall briefly go through it and explain the changes. The duties on ale, beer and wine have not been altered. The duty on spirit has been changed the increase being from $2.12½ to $2.40 per gallon. Then page after page of the present bill might be passed over where no increase or no reduction has been made. I call attention to one or two items which are not of themselves very important. The most important item would be that of Indian corn which has been placed on the free list. That is an item which has been discussed a great deal, and upon which a very wide difference of opinion has prevailed, inasmuch as during the last eight or ten years Indian corn has been grown much more extensively than in former times, and counties in the western part of Ontario to-day raise very considerable quantities. Canada, however, is a very broad country, and a tariff that apparently suits one section of the Dominion is not favourable to another. To the east of Kingston, or perhaps even of Toronto, through to the Atlantic coast, the quantity of Indian corn produced is quite insignificant, and therefore the demand for free corn among farmers of Eastern Ontario, the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces was universal, whereas naturally in the western section of Ontario a contrary feeling prevails, because it is a well recognized principle that every man is a protectionist so far as his own interests are concerned, and a free trader in everything where he has no interest. That may be regarded as a principle that is extremely broad. We are all naturally very selfish, and I suppose we all like to introduce into even matters of this kind what benefits self, and that is quite apparent in the arrangement of the tariff. Every person giving an opinion on the tariff speaks entirely from how it is going financially to affect himself, but it was thought that the largest number would be benefited by placing free corn on the list. It had been a debatable subject for very many years, and there were changes from time to time, but the general conclusion was that the larger number would be benefited by putting corn on the free list, except so far as the distillers are concerned.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—It is pretty hard on the farmers of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite admit there are portions west of Toronto where it might work that way.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Yes, and east of Toronto. It comes in competition with coarse grain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that would be taking the protectionist's view, that the farmer would want protection in order that he might get higher prices for his pease, oats, barley and grain. The distillers do not get their corn free. Of course it can be argued with great force that there may be opportunities for frauds on the revenue. I think it will be difficult—although some persons do profess to say it is discernible in many instances—to classify United States and Canadian corn. There must be varieties of corn grown in both countries quite similar, and probably the same, and therefore it has been argued that the distillers will buy imported corn from the farmers. It is open to that objection. As a rule, however, distillers purchase in large quantities and import their corn. Of course the officers of the Inland Revenue Department and Customs Department have ready access to the books of the distillers and can keep some check, at all events, upon them, but whether it is effectual or not I am not prepared at this moment to discuss. One item, which has been very much discussed indeed, in which changes have been made from time to time in another branch of the legislature, has been the duty upon rice. It was one of those particular articles in which it was alleged that it was a mistake to protect the industry in Canada, inasmuch as there were so few people engaged in it. I believe it is limited to less than a dozen, and yet they pleaded for a further existence and the tariff as introduced originally would have had the effect of wiping them out, so to speak, and a change in the opposite direction has been made. The duty on uncleaned rice is now half a cent a pound. It is one of the subjects which, though not important, was debated very much in another place and has been discussed in the press, a very considerable number of people believing that the revenue would be benefited to the extent of eighty or ninety thousand dollars if we put the duty entirely on the cleaned rice, and gave no protection to the uncleaned rice. If I am correctly informed, there is one rice mill in Montreal and another in British Columbia. I have heard they were owned by the same party. Their business was not very large, but they pleaded for some degree of protection, and after the item had been passed over in the House of Commons, it was reconsidered and they were given some degree of protection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh don't acknowledge that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rice, uncleaned, was half a cent per pound. It was formerly three-tenths. It was estimated that if the protection was entirely withdrawn, all our rice would be imported as cleaned rice, and the revenue would have got the benefit of uncleaned rice that is now brought in at the lower rate. There is a slight reduction on wheat of from fifteen to twelve cents, and a corresponding reduction on flour from seventy-five to sixty cents a barrel, but the other items in that class do not seem to have undergone very much change. There is, I believe, no change in fish, and the products of fisheries, except item 112 "Anchovies and sardines when imported in any other form, thirty per cent ad valorem." That was formerly a specific duty of five cents a box. Whenever specific duties could be removed they were removed, and an ad valorem system adopted, and in many instances where the ad valorem and the specific existed, an effort has been made to strike out the specific and, if thought prudent and proper, to increase the ad valorem perhaps not to a full corresponding amount, but still to give them some degree of benefit and the former protection they enjoyed; but it was felt, and the argument was an irresistible one, that the imposition of two classes of duties, an ad valorem and a specific, was exceedingly misleading, that under it duties as high as seventy-five and eighty per cent were given and people could not appreciate it. They might appreciate it in principle if they inquired into it, but in purchasing an article subject to those duties, they were not aware of what the duties were in consequence of the specific and ad valorem being united and being an undefined amount. In books and papers there has been a change which has been discussed very naturally in the press. Books were formerly six cents a pound and the item now reads:

Novels or works of fiction or literature of a similar character, unbound or paper bound or in sheets, including freight rates for railway and telegraph rates bound in book or pamphlet form, but not to include Christmas annuals or books commonly known as juvenile or toy books, twenty per cent ad valorem.

That has undergone two or three changes in the House of Commons from time to time under the influence no doubt of the press, who perhaps more thoroughly understood that subject than ordinary politicians.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Is that twenty per cent limited to works of fiction or novels, or what is the "literature of a similar character?"

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is unbound novels and books and pamphlets—unbound or paper bound. It specifically states it, but it does not include juvenile toy books or Christmas annuals. They are exempted from it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The books printed are only ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—And novels or works of fiction are twenty per cent. I have not the slightest objection to it, but what does "literature of the same character" comprehend?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know myself really, unless it includes biographies.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Fairy tales.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would be works of fiction. As my hon. friend who sits alongside of me is well aware, there are many puzzles in any Customs Act you may draw up, and I have no doubt he has devoted a good deal of time to inquiring what the intention of parliament was when they passed the words in that paragraph. Item 126 is as follows:

Advertising and printed matter, viz.:—Advertising pamphlets, advertising pictorial show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals; illustrated price books, catalogues and price lists, advertising almanacs and calendars; patent medicine or other advertising circulars, fly sheets or pamphlets; advertising chromos, chromotypes, oleographs or like work produced by any process other than hand painting or drawing, and having any advertisement or advertising matter printed, lithographed or stamped thereon, or attached thereto, including advertising bills, folders and posters, or other similar artistic work, lithographed, printed or stamped on paper or cardboard for business or advertisement purposes, n.o.p., fifteen cents per pound.

That formerly stood at six cents per pound and twenty per cent ad valorem and it was found necessary to depart from the principle that was laid down, of an ad valorem duty and that was fixed at fifteen cents per pound. Then labels for cigar boxes had a combined duty before of fifteen cents per pound and twenty-five per cent and it was thought to reduce that to the standard by putting up a duty of thirty-five per cent. It was not desirable to reduce it on those particular items and thirty-five per cent was thought to be equivalent to fifteen cents a pound and twenty-five per cent. Printed music was formerly ten cents a pound and it is now ten per cent ad valorem. I do not know whether it has affected the value.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What would blank books and copy books be?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no change in that. Then books, printed, periodicals and pamphlets or parts thereof, not to include bank account books, copy books, or books to be written or drawn upon, ten per cent ad valorem.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Would blank books come in free?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no duty fixed for that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All articles not mentioned in the tariff are 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is not to include blank books or copy books. I should think they would come in free as far as the tariff goes now. These goods are mentioned, and they are exempted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then as to chemicals and drugs, there are very few changes in that. Acid sulphuric, twenty-five per cent ad valorem. It was formerly four-tenths of a cent per pound, and a specific of two cents. Paraffine wax, thirty per cent ad valorem. It was formerly two cents per pound. In the next division, colours, paints, oils and varnishes, there are very few changes. I think the first change is in 161. Paints and colours, ground in spirits, and all spirit varnishes and lacquers, $1.12½ per gallon. I think what was formerly twenty-five per cent ad valorem. Putty of various kinds is twenty per cent, formerly it was fifteen. There is a change in olive oil reducing it from thirty to twenty per cent. Oils, coal and kerosene distilled, purified or refined, naphtha and petroleum and products of petroleum, five cents per gallon. That was formerly six cents and it is reduced to five cents.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Why do you give a relief to those who use coal oil?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have you changed the standard on coal oil affecting its liability to explosion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a bill which alters the flash test now on the order paper. Slack coal remains the same, 20 per cent ad valorem. It comes through a half-inch screen, subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs. Bituminous coal, round and run of mine, was 60 cents formerly, and is now 53 cents per ton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would you inform the House why an exception was made in favour of coal, and the duty taken off corn—upon general principles, I mean? I can understand if you tell me that you want to supply corn to feed cattle, and at the same time to protect the coal industries in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The duty on coal is reduced from 60 to 53 cents a ton. These have been the subject of compromise. They have run very much together.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no compromise in this.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I am aware of that. It gave to the government a great deal of consideration and trouble.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the only matter which gave the government trouble.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The motion is that the House do now adjourn. I think if that motion carried without some qualification, that it will adjourn us over until to-morrow at three o'clock, because at the close of the sitting yesterday, the minutes show that the the hon. Secretary of State moved that the House do now adjourn and it was not stated in the motion that each sitting should be a separate session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I move that the House meet at three o'clock, the afternoon session to be a separate and distinct sitting of the House.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceeding.

THE TARIFF BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT resumed the debate on Bill (143) "An Act to consolidate and amend the Act respecting the Duties of Customs." He said: When the House arose at its last sitting I had been making some comments and pointing out the important changes in the new tariff. We had reached the item of earthenware, cement, slate and stoneware in which there are some changes that I desire to call the attention of the House to. The first item, "earthenware and stoneware viz.: demijohns, churns or crocks, 30 per cent ad valorem." The duty was formerly three cents per gallon: it now goes into the 30 per cent list with items of the same character.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much reduction would that be in the protection of that industry?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is following out the rule, as far as possible, putting it in the ad valorem column. I do not know if it makes any change: I presume it does not, because the desire of the officers was, in changing items of that kind from specific to ad valorem to base the ad valorem as nearly as possible on the specific, reducing them to a slight degree. That occurs also in item 187 which has been a good deal discussed and commented on and which is practically just where it was before, except that cement is 12½ cents per 100 pounds instead of 40 cents per barrel. The argument used in reference to that was this, that barrels of cement were not always of the same size, that there were barrels of 250 pounds and barrels of 350 pounds; in fact the gradual tendency, as the duty was so much per barrel, was naturally to increase the size of the barrel until the duty, as I am advised, was not operating fairly in that way. An importation of barrels containing 250 pounds each paid just as much duty as an importation of barrels containing 350 pounds each.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Still you retain the specific duty?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is now 12½c. per 100 pounds, so that if a barrel weighs 350 pounds, the duty is practically the same as it was before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why have you retained this obnoxious principle, as you have described it, on this article instead of making it ad valorem?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is ad valorem—it is twelve and a half cents per 100 pounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you said twelve and a half per cent it would be ad valorem, but twelve and a half cents per hundred pounds is a specific duty, which you condemned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That seems to be the easiest way to get at it in order that all parties should pay a fair proportion. We had this difficulty to deal with—the 40c. per barrel was an arbitrary way of fixing the rate of duty, and it did not operate equally in all cases. We thought the fair way was to put the duty on the quantity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite approve of the change, but it does not meet the difficulty at all. If you had said an ad valorem duty, you would have adopted what you have always represented to be the right principle. What I want to know is why a specific duty is continued upon cement when it is taken off everything else.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not everything else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mostly everything else?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt the argument is a strong one, but in that instance, as in several other cases to which notice might be drawn, it was found that the law would be much more easily interpreted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That applies to all specific duties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There would be less difficulty of evading the law, I quite recognize that. The next item is "Plaster of Paris, or gypsum, ground, calcined or manufactured, &c., 12½ cents per one hundred pounds." The old duty was 40 cents per barrel of 300 pounds. There it was specifically defined, although that had not been done in the case of cement. Marble and granite, finished and polished and all manufactures of marble and granite, n.o.p., 35 per cent ad valorem. That was formerly 30 per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will you tell me where these quarries of marble and granite are and give me a reason why you increase the duty 5 per cent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I regret that I am unable to say.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are marble quarries in Cape Breton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason I ask that question is this: it is one of those cases where there has been an increase in the duty, and it is an increase in the direction of protection as to which I am fully in accord with the hon. gentleman. I wanted particularly to know whether in this case, as in many other cases that I know of, the representatives of the district where the quarries are, happen to be supporters of the government? Their interests have been taken care of.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Were they not before?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, we acted from principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman, as we go on, will find that we have been obliged, in several instances, to increase the duty on articles over the former duty—a very slight increase—and that is due to this fact, that when the twenty-five per cent cut was considered in the possible event of other countries—for instance Germany and Belgium—coming in, more particularly in reference to the items we are now discussing, we felt that to reduce the duty and at the same time apply the twenty-five per cent cut would be going very much further than the government thought would be quite fair to the parties who had their money invested in certain industries of the country, and consequently, as you will observe in this particular branch, the duties have been raised on an average of two and a half per cent on a number of articles made in Canada, so that if the cut applied, the twenty-five per cent reduction would not apply with the same force as if the duty had been left as before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is, you did not wish to destroy all the industries?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had a little mercy on those we could save. Item 203 "plate glass not bevelled in sheets or panes, not exceeding 25 square feet each. The duty now is 25 per cent ad valorem. It was formerly 9 cents per square foot. Item 204, plate glass, not bevelled, in sheets or panes, n.e.s., 35 per cent ad valorem. That was 4 cents per square foot before. Here is an item to which the remark I made a few moments ago would apply, and it is quite obvious that the reason is a very sound one. Item 206, "silvered glass, bevelled or not and framed or not," that was formerly 32½ per cent. That duty is now 35 per cent. That is glass, I believe, that comes largely from Belgium. German looking glass plate in silver, &c., 20 per cent ad valorem. That was formerly 17½ per cent under the old tariff. The reason for the increase I have already explained.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the rearrangement of these duties, making them ad valorem instead of specific, I note the 20 per cent will after the reduction of 25 per cent, leave it nearly as it was before. I do not know whether the government, or the Minister of Finance who is principally responsible for these changes, was aware of the fact that these changes will be in the interest of the German and Belgium manufacturers and directly against the British, because in adopting an ad valorem duty upon this class of goods, the duty which will be paid by the Belgian and German manufacturer will be a good deal smaller than that paid by the English manufacturers, from the fact that the plate glass of all classes which comes from Germany and Belgium is an inferior and consequently much cheaper class of goods, and the ad valorem applied to them will discriminate against the better class of goods coming from England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were before in the ad valorem class.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Some of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The silver glass was, and the German looking-glass plate was. That was 17½, it is now 20 per cent. Although in framing the tariff we had in view the probability of Germany and Belgium taking advantage of the favoured-nation clause, we quite appreciated that it was a question which would have to be considered without depending, of course, on the views that might be entertained on the subject; our own opinion at the time, after fully considering it was that when the treaties of 1863 and 1865 were made, a reciprocal element was not in contemplation. We received, as one of the colonies of Great Britain, certain privileges in Belgium and Germany in common with Great Britain and gave certain favours in return. In the clause which stated that any advantage given to the mother country in the colonies should be shared by Germany and Belgium, we thought at that time that the reciprocal element now introduced into our tariff was an element not then considered. The hon. gentleman knows that in the United States, in making treaties, the favoured-nation clause has been held not to apply where the reciprocal element was brought into operation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that the United States have never been a party to any treaty containing the favoured-nations clauses. The tariffs which have been introduced by the United States government have made special provision for reciprocal trade with certain countries on certain conditions, but they never became a party, so far as I know, to any of the treaties which were entered into with Great Britain in reference to favoured-nations clauses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no, not with Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But they have had treaties containing the most favoured-nations clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have nothing to do with that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was taking the view from the international standpoint, not having any idea that the hon. gentleman understood me as indicating that there was a favoured-nations clause between Great Britain and the United States. There never was, but there was between the United States and other nations. I was bringing it forward as an illustration of the reasons on which we based our conclusion with regard to those treaties. Of course the matter is open to discussion and will be discussed in the future.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will not open the discussion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not worth while. We cannot accomplish anything by it. In the next classification of articles there are very few changes. The changes are in the direction that I indicated a few moments ago and for the same reason. The first change comes in item 215, japanned, patent or enamelled leather, and morocco leather, 25 per cent ad valorem. It was formerly 22½ per cent. The next item, leather board, leatheroid and manufactures thereof, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem. It was formerly 20 per cent. In the two items which relate to india-rubber boots and shoes and all manufactures of india-rubber and gutta percha, the change is in rubber boots and shoes. All manufactures of india-rubber and gutta percha are 25 per cent ad valorem. Boots and shoes were in the 30 per cent column. We come to that portion of the tariff where the changes were more material and important than in any other clauses—that is the duty on metals and manufactures of metals. "Iron or steel scrap, wrought, being waste or refuse, including punchings, cuttings or clippings of iron or steel plate, or sheets having been in actual use; crop ends of tin plate bars, or of blooms or of rails, the same not having been in actual use." The duty formerly was $4, and on some items $3 per ton. In the present tariff it has been reduced to $1 per ton. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge and cast scrap iron, the duty was formerly $4 per ton; it is now reduced to $2.50 per ton. On "iron or steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, puddled bars and loops or other forms, n.o.p., less finished than iron or steel bars but more advanced than pig iron, except castings"—in this class there is a material change. Formerly the rate was $5 a ton. It is now reduced to $2 a ton. Railroad iron remains where it was before. In bar iron there is a material change. That was formerly $10 per ton. It is now reduced to $7. In item 233 "skelp iron or steel, sheared or rolled in grooves, when imported by manufacturers of wrought iron or steel pipe for use only in the manufacture of wrought iron or steel pipe in their own factories," I suppose the greatest change has been made. That was formerly $10 per ton and it is now reduced to an ad valorem duty of five per cent. It was thought very important to make that concession to the manufacturers. In item 239 there has been a change from $10 to $8 per ton. The duty on iron and steel bridges was formerly 30 per cent; it has now been made 35 per cent. That may be for the reason I gave before, to prevent the competition of outsiders. "Forgings of iron or steel of whatever shape or size or in whatever stage of manufacture, n.e.s.; and steel shaftings, turned, compressed or polished; and hammered iron or steel bars or shapes, n.o.p.," formerly 35 per cent, have been reduced to 30 per cent. A change has been made in stove plates and stoves of all kinds. The duty was formerly 27½ per cent; it is now 25 per cent ad valorem. There is an important change in the item respecting spring axles, axle bars, n.e.s., and axle blanks and parts thereof of iron or steel, for railway or tramway or other vehicles. They were formerly $20 per ton; they are now 35 per cent ad valorem.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can you give me the probable reduction?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not sufficiently familiar with the trade values of springs and axles. Of course there is a great deal of labour expended on them and probably 35 per cent may be not very much less than $20 per ton. They are of course very weighty articles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not that an article that has been increased since the original introduction of the tariff?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know that changes have been made, but I could not tell my hon. friend exactly what the changes were. I think in the debate in the other House the item was, after very considerable discussion, changed once or twice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To make it equal, these articles should be worth about $65 to the ton. At 35 per cent it would give about $20 per ton. I have forgotten what the prices of these articles are and whether this is a reduction or increase. I should like to know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am inclined to think it is a reduction. They preferred having it as it was before, but 35 per cent was thought to be a reasonable protection for the industry. Wrought iron or steel boiler tubes, n.e.s., including flues and corrugated tubes for marine boilers were formerly seven and a half per cent. They are now five. Tubes of rolled steel seamless, not joined or welded, not more than one and a half inches in diameter and seamless steel tubes for bicycles, were formerly 20 per cent. They are now 10 per cent ad valorem. In wrought iron or steel tubing, plain or galvanized, threaded and coupled or not, two inches or less in diameter, n.e.s., were formerly under a combined duty of five-tenths of a cent per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem. They are now 35 per cent ad valorem. Iron or steel cut nails and spikes and railroad spikes were formerly ¾c. per pound are now half a cent a pound. There is a cut there of a quarter of a cent. Another item that has caused a good deal of discussion is that of wire nails of all kinds, three-fifths of one cent per pound. It is said they are very cheaply made now. The duty was formerly one-tenth of a cent a pound. There was another item that was said owing to a cheap method of making, to be enjoying considerable protection, that is item 259, iron or steel shoe tacks, &c.

They formerly paid one cent per 1,000. The duty is now placed at 35 per cent. It will be observed where the duty was considered too high before they have all been placed in one column.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It sounds like a good free trade tariff.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not conform in any sense to my ideas of free trade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or anybody elses. I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One does not like to create a crisis in the country. It is very unfortunate that, after eighteen years of growth and development, those industries are not able to stand without this continued aid and assistance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have often heard that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Wood screws also are placed in the 35 per cent ad valorem column. Item 262 is an important one—barbed wire; and galvanized wire for fencing, numbers 9, 12 and 13 gauge, 15 per cent ad valorem until 1st January, 1898; thereafter free.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wish to make a remark or two on the duty on iron before leaving that part of the list. I confess at once that I am not sufficiently posted in the minutiæ of these duties as applied to each article enumerated, but I do know this that the course which has been adopted by the government in the changes which they have proposed and carried out in the tariff with regard to iron, is, in the county from which I come, very materially and injuriously affecting the interests of very large iron industries. I cite now specially the Nova Scotia Steel and Iron Company, located in New Glasgow, which is a very large manufacturing establishment employing some 600 hands and which is the means of distributing a great deal of money in the neighbourhood in which it is situated. I know that the changes which have been made by the government in these iron duties, have made it, in the minds of gentlemen who are managing that institution, a very serious consideration whether they shall or shall not be able to continue their manufacture under the present arrangement. As I said at the outset, I am not sufficiently acquainted at the present moment with the minutiæ as applied to the different articles, but I have it on reliable authority that that is the result in regard to this large manufacture in the neighbourhood of which I speak. The hon. gentleman said a few minutes ago, in reply to the remark made by the hon. leader of the opposition, that after 18 years of experience these infant industries ought to be able to stand upon their own basis. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if it was not for a very much longer period in that great free trade country, England,—which is so often cited as an example for us—if it was not a much longer period than 18 years before her industries were able to stand alone? I regret that I am unable to specify the particular items which are objected to, but I know what the effect of this tariff has been, as I have mentioned, on the industry I refer to. In regard to the manufacture of other iron articles, I see by the newspapers that many of these manufacturers are seriously considering whether it would not be advisable for them, under the circumstances, to close their establishments.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I quite agree with a good deal that has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. While I am not opposed to all the reductions in the way of cheapening iron, because it is, to a large extent, the raw material for a good many manufactures of the Dominion, I cannot divest myself of the idea that the pig iron itself is a raw material which deserves the fostering care of the government to a very great extent. I consider that the mining industry is of very great importance to this Dominion: there is no mining industry in the world that is of more importance than the iron mining industry. When we take into consideration the fact that you can take a ton of iron and make the product of it more valuable than its weight in gold, one can see the importance of it. What makes that addition to the value is simply the labour put upon it. If we can develop our iron industry, especially our mining industry, it is of much more value than the coal, because after the coal is taken out of the ground there is no more labour put on it, but in the case of iron, the labour is put on it until it is greatly increased in value. As I said, I am not very strongly opposed to the reducing of the duties on common iron, but I say in proportion as the duties on iron are reduced, the best policy the government can follow is to give a bounty to the companies that mine the iron ore and take it out of the earth and manufacture it into a valuable article—giving them a bounty to correspond equally with the duties they take off. As has been said very properly by the hon. gentleman who has resumed his seat, it took a great many more years than eighteen to develop the iron industry in England. With the cheap labour they had it was only developed by a high protective duty. What do we see to-day? We find even that country, which has so completely developed all its mining industries, has to compete with the raw material which comes from the United States and other countries. While that is the case, I think the proper policy for the government to adopt is to be careful not to allow infant industries, such as the Nova Scotia Steel Company, which is giving employment to a great many people furnishing traffic to the Intercolonial Railway and other roads, and giving employment to shipping industries in carrying ore and other articles—I say the government would be doing right in giving them such a bounty as will compensate them for the duties they have taken off.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite right in calling attention to that fact, but he omitted to point out to the House that there is a bill before parliament with a view to putting a bounty on iron and steel. The principle of bounties is being continued to a very considerable extent. Of course, the whole system is so complicated, and in my judgment so illogical, that it is very difficult to frame a tariff which will give each person his share of protection, and it is only in a spirit of compromise that any Act at all can be passed. It is all open to objection from the fact it is so difficult to equalize the rates of duty that ought to bear on each individual industry.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Are the different items of the bill coming up for discussion, or are we to wait until the hon. Secretary of State is through?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The usual course in this House has been that the bill is read the second time and third time. It is not referred to committee and it is open to the House to discuss any item of the tariff at any time.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Does the hon. gentleman consider the system of bounty has been carried out sufficiently to encourage the production of raw material in the country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My own opinion on the subject would be worth very little.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We do not want your individual opinion. The government is responsible for this tariff, and we want their opinion. What I want to know is why the hon. gentleman has changed his opinion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not changed my opinion, only—

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Under stress of circumstances.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not changed my opinion at all, but the responsibilities of the government are very great, and you have to recognize conditions which have grown up and for which we are not responsible. I protested against it for the last eighteen years. My protests were disregarded. Hon. gentlemen were so patriotic that this idea of the national policy captivated their judgment, carried them away and so we find ourselves in this sea of difficulties at the present moment, trying to improve matters, and no doubt in many cases where the general public derive considerable benefit from it, individual interests are considerably affected by it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—A good many items have been passed over that I should like to discuss.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question or order. The hon. Secretary of State is making his speech and it will be open to every hon. gentleman to speak afterwards, but it is most irregular to interject speeches into the speech of the minister. There will be every opportunity to discuss the tariff after he is through.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. Secretary of State has just referred to the fact that that has not been the case with respect to the tariff; that it is usually discussed, each item as we come to it on the second reading. That is the reason why I rose to speak at all now. But if it is to be understood that this can be taken up afterwards and discussed by every member and senator who wishes, I am satisfied to wait until that time arrives.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any time that is convenient to hon. gentlemen will suit me, but as the hon. gentleman from Halifax has said, I am now moving the second reading and I am asked to explain the particular items. It is quite open, when any item is mentioned, for any hon. gentleman to discuss it or to discuss it afterwards when I am through with the items.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The point of order might be very well taken under ordinary circumstance, but it has always been the practice, not only here but in the House of Commons, to ask for an explanation on each item. Unless the minister who is making the explanation objects to these questions, they are quite legitimate and quite proper, because they would save time by preventing the questions being put again after he is through with his explanations. I agree with the hon. gentleman, however, that the general discussion of the principle of the tariff should not be introduced while the Secretary of State is making his speech.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As hon. gentlemen are aware, the farmers have been crying out for cheaper barbed wire, and I see these two items are, after a limited period, to be put on the free list. Until the 1st of January, 1898, the duty will be reduced to 15 per cent ad valorem, then barbed wire will be placed on the free list.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is not this wire imported plain and afterwards manufactured?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. Of course there is plain wire imported and converted into fence wire.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understand from the manufacturers of barbed wire in Winnipeg, we have three or four, that they complain that they have to close up their industries from the fact that there is a duty on the wire which they have to use in manufacturing, while the barbed wire is to be admitted free. The barbed wire is two strands of plain wire twisted, with spurs to form the barb. They have machines by which they take and twist the two strands together, putting the barbs in to make the barbed wire. Now I understand this finished article is to be on the free list, so that barbed wire can be sent into this country free, while the plain wire has a duty on it. If that is so, I cannot understand the policy of the government in keeping the duty on the raw material and letting the manufactured article come in free. If they had reversed it and taken the duty off the plain wire and placed it on the barbed wire, they would have protected that industry in the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The difficulty is this, if the wire was placed on the free list, the wire that is used for barbed wire is also used for a variety of purposes and there would be no possibility of discriminating. Every importer would say this wire is introduced for the purpose of manufacturing barbed wire. That is, as I am advised, where the trouble would arise. The demand has been very general to put barbed wire on the free list. Barbed wire and binder twine were two items on which there was a great deal of discussion in past years. The farmers were clamouring for some benefit out of the tariff, and they got those two items at all events.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Under this tariff you place us entirely at the mercy of foreigners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason for postponing the operation of it until January, 1898, was to enable them to get rid of their stock, and then if they could go on and compete with the United States manufacturers well and good. The duty on the wire, as the hon. gentleman will see by the next item, will be 15 per cent ad valorem. Whether they could pay that duty and compete in the home market I am unable to say.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—As it stands now, I am under the impression that the farmers will not get any benefit from the change. I remember some years ago that wire brought into Wolseley by the carload cost seven and eight cents per pound. The other day I bought wire to fence my farm with for three and a quarter cents laid down in Wolseley—for considerably less than half what was asked for it four or five years ago. I might state the same thing about binder twine. I wrote to the manufacturers of barbed wire before I left my home, to ask them what reduction they would give me, having in expectation building some eight miles of fence on my farm. I refused to buy my barbed wire anticipating the policy of the government would be to place it on the free list. That is what we have been educated in our country to believe the government would do. I refused to buy my barbed wire except under the condition that I should have the benefit of any reduction in the duty. When I came here I corresponded with certain firms in Winnipeg, and they told me that they had to go out of the trade—that they could make no reduction, that the trade would go out of the country altogether—that they had to close up all their establishments and go out of the manufacture of barbed wire.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. Secretary of State scarcely knows what the tariff is, I do not say that disrespectfully—when he tells us that difficulties might arise from the importation of this wire and the use of it for other purposes. That is always the case where there are special concessions made, and I recognize at once the difficulties in carrying out a policy of that kind, but if the hon. gentleman will turn his eyes to the free list he will find that provision is made in numerous cases for the importation of certain articles free when used for special purposes. That is the point to which my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) has called attention. Why should not this wire be admitted free for manufacturing barbed wire, thereby protecting and sustaining that industry. If you turn to items 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598 and 600 and a number of others which read in this way: take as an illustration. Items 592, 592*a*, steel wire number 11 and 12 gauge or under when imported by the manufacturers of wire mattrasses to be used in their own factories in the manufacture of such articles—that is free. The same principle could be applied in the case to which the member for Wolseley (Mr. Perley) has called attention, so that the reason advanced by the hon. Secretary of State for not applying that principle to the item under discussion certainly has neither force, logic nor reason. This barbed wire, as I understand it, is going out of use to some extent.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Not in the Northwest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under the impression that barbed wire was the cause of so many accidents to horses and cattle when they ran against it, that it was going out of use a good deal in Ontario. However, it is only to be free from and after the 1st of January next. I was going to suggest to the hon. member for Wolseley that if he was buying on condition of having a large reduction, he should make his paper payable after next January and then there would be no duty attached to it, but his misfortune is that the clause itself prevents the possibility of any manufacturer bringing wire into this country paying $15 on every $100 worth, and then manufacturing it and adding to its value fifteen per cent more and competing with the German wire. The United States is becoming a competitor in this particular article. The German buckthorn is so low that it is almost as low as you can manufacture the wire in this country. That was the case, I know, when I was dealing with questions of this kind. Is it not a fact that this wire fencing was placed upon the free list when the tariff was first introduced? That is my recollection, and it was the strong pressure of manufacturers, and particularly the manufacturers of the county of Essex, that induced the hon. gentlemen to give those manufacturers an opportunity of getting rid of their stock during the present year, thereby punishing the farmers, if punishment it is, for this summer and giving them a salve to heal the wound next year. That is now the object. I think I shall be able to call attention to that point presently and I will show that there are a number of cases of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My remark applied to wire generally. There are classes of wire out of which barbed wire may be made and other fencing wires which are on the free list to which I will draw attention now. "Strip fencing, woven wire fencing and wire fencing of iron or steel, fifteen per cent ad valorem." There are others where the gauge is mentioned. If you turn to 602, "Steel strip and flat steel wire when imported into Canada by manufacturers of buckthorn, to be used in their own factories." That will be free. There is no reason, if they can use that wire in the manufacturing of wire fencing, why they should not avail themselves of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a different kind of wire altogether.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—"Iron galvanized wire, twelve and thirteen." These gauges were selected because it was thought they could be used by the manufacturers of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, they were placed in there because they were not manufactured in Canada and in order to give the farmers the advantages of a free article not manufactured here, and not interfering in any way with the factories in Canada, they were allowed to be imported free so that they could furnish the farmer with a cheaper article.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—"Steel strip and flat steel wire." In the condition they are imported on the free list they are not available for the farmer. They are made up into panels and sections and disposed of to the farmers in that way, so that the raw material in that sense is really free.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It says "for that purpose," for the manufacture of what? Buckthorn and strip fencing. And that can only be imported free when the article is to be used in the importer's own factory.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I do not object to barbed wire being free, but I object to the material out of which it is made being free.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether steel strip or flat steel wire are capable of being made up into barbed wire.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, I am informed that they cannot.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object in placing those particular wires on the free list was to give the manufacturers an opportunity of making up fence wires from those particular brands. There is a slight change in item 267 "woven wire, brass or copper." The duty was 20 per cent, and that was made 25—a change in the wrong direction There is a change in the duties on lead, item 272: "lead, old, scrap, pig and block, 15 per cent ad valorem." It was formerly 40 cents a hundred pounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that a decrease on that item?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is a slight decrease, I cannot tell. There is an instance where we have been obliged to adhere to the principle that we endeavour to get away from, and that was allowing in one or two cases the ad valorem and specific to prevail. "Lead pipe, lead shot and lead bullets, 35 per cent ad valorem." It was formerly four-tenths ad valorem and 10 per cent. Item 279 "Iron and steel nuts, washers, rivets and bolts with or without threads, and nut bolt and hinge blanks and T and strap hinges of all kinds." They were formerly one cent per pound, and 20 per cent ad valorem. They have been reduced three-quarters of a cent per pound.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You retain the specific there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, we allowed it to stand. In the item 280, "Builders, cabinet-makers, upholsterers, harness-makers, saddlers and carriage hardware, including butt hinges, locks, curry combs or curry cards, horse boots, harness and saddlery," that was formerly 32½ and it is reduced to 30. Item 281, "Skates of all kinds, roller or other and parts thereof 35 per cent ad valorem." They formerly had ten cents a pair on that article and 10 per cent ad valorem, which was considered rather a high duty.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Does the senior member for Halifax know how that item affects the trade in Halifax?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was not paying attention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am afraid it affects it injuriously. They had a high duty; they had ten cents per pair and 30 per cent ad valorem.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWEL—That would make it 7 cents and three-quarters on a 25 cent skate. There are plenty of skates imported from Germany which come in at 25 cents.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—They ought not to have been brought in at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is one reason why the late government put this high duty upon them, which was equal in many cases to 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They cost too little; you get too much for your money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, you do not. There is such a thing as buying an article which is worth nothing, and you get too little for your money, no matter what you give.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Still if people want to buy an article which is cheap and poor they can get it. Then 288 "files and rasps," there has been a reduction of 5 per cent; it was 35 before and it is now made 30.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do the other articles not enumerated remain the same as before?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was an item of cutlery in the old tariff; I did not find the corresponding item here. It has been reduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You leave it about the same when the reduction takes place. It would be 22½ if you take 25 per cent off.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Item 289 "Adzes, cleavers, hatchets, saws, wedges, sledges, hammers, crow-bars," etc. The same remark applies to that. Item 290, "Axes, scythes, sickles or reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, edging knives, hoes, rakes," etc. They were 30 per cent formerly, and now they are 25 per cent. The next item 291, has had a great deal of protection, "Shovels and spades, iron or steel," etc. They were formerly protected by 50 cents a dozen and 25 per cent ad valorem; and they are now placed in the 35 per cent list, still a pretty high protection. The next item is 296, Carbons over 6 inches in circumference, 15 per cent ad valorem. They were formerly two and a half per thousand. I presume they are getting cheaper each year. Item 297, "Lamps, side-lights and head-lights, lanterns, chandeliers, gas, coal or other oil fixtures," etc., formerly 27½ are now 30. I presume they were raised for the reason I have already given. Item 306, "Guns, rifles, including air-guns and air-rifles," etc., formerly in the 29 per cent list are now in the 30 per cent list.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So that when you take the 25 per cent off it will still be higher. Those are not manufactured in this country. I suppose that we may consider that a revenue tariff.

Hon. Mr, SCOTT—To get a revenue out of them I suppose The next item where a change has been made is 315, steam engines, boilers, ore crushers, etc. All the items enumerated in 215 are now placed in the 25 per cent list. Some of them were in the 27½ per cent list, and others were in the 30 per cent list. There is a change in 323, "Buggies, carriages, pleasure carts and similar vehicles."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there no change in 322?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. Buggies, carriages and so on were formerly $5 each, and 25 per cent ad valorem, and they have been placed in the 35 per cent list.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fancy it is a slight reduction, but not very much.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The price of a good buggy would be $70.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The buggies from Cincinnati cost $25, $30, $40 and a $50 buggy is a very high priced one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a pity the people should be allowed to buy such cheap buggies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the matter we are discussing. $5 on $50 would be 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have raised them 10 per cent on the ad valorem duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When you take off the 25 per cent it will be a very great reduction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Coming from the United States they would not get the benefit of the 25 per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will not apply certainly to the United States, unless they revolutionize their tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will only affect the gentlemen's carriages in England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The 25 per cent reduction will never apply to the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you give them up as hopeless protectionists.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not. I think there will be a revolution on that subject in the United States in a few years. Coming now to that class of articles under the denomination of "Manufactures of wood, cane and cork," the changes are very few. Item 326, "Cane, reed or rattan, split or otherwise manufactured, 15 per cent ad valorem." It was formerly 17½. Item 331, "Veneers of wood, not over three thirty-seconds of an inch in thickness, 7½ per cent ad valorem." Some of the articles were in the 5 per cent list and others were in the 10 per cent list; and we have put them all together in the 7½ per cent column.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That leaves them about the same?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and there is no change in the rest of them. Item 345, watch cases, 30 per cent ad valorem. Watch cases were formerly 35, and they are put in the 30 per cent column. "Jewellery for the adornment of the person, including hat pins, hair pins, belts or other buckles, and similar personal ornamental articles commercially known as jewellery, n.o.p., and all manufactures of gold and silver, n.e.s., 30 per cent ad valorem." They formerly were in the 25 per cent column.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How is it you did not put a heavy duty on precious stones? I used to hear a good deal when I was sitting on the treasury benches in the lower House about letting stones come in free; while all that was necessary for the poor people came in taxed. You are pursuing the same course in allowing stones in free. Can you tell me why you departed from that principle?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On reflection we thought we had better have some regard for people's eternal welfare; and we thought this was one of the cases where men would probably commit perjury.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I never knew you were ministers of that character before.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In minerals there is no change. There is a slight change in musical instruments. Pianos which were formerly in the same class with organs and musical instruments are all put now in the one column, 30 per cent. Pianos were formerly 35 per cent and organs 30, and we put them all in the 30 per cent column.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is an article of luxury.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, we wanted to reduce the number of items as much as possible. In textiles there are some changes made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not very much.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Cotton batts, batting and sheet wadding, cotton warps and cotton yarns were formerly 22½ and are now 25 per cent, and for the reasons which I gave before. It was thought that probably would be subject to the 25 per cent cut, and it would be rather a serious blow to them. Cotton fabrics, 359, were formerly in the 22½ column, and they are now 25.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What is the object of the 25 per cent cut, when you raise the duty on the article?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is this: by and by we shall probably come to a decision on the proposal that articles coming from certain countries whose tariffs are on the whole not higher than the Canadian tariff, would be entitled to come in at the 25 per cent cut on the tariff we are now considering; that all the articles in the tariff—except certain definite articles, such as wine, bear, ale, sugar, tobacco, which are exempt—will be subject to a reduction of 25 per cent when the products are manufactured in a country that will be entitled to what is known as the reciprocal trading clause; so that those cottons would probably come from countries that would be able to avail themselves of that reduction in the duty. And therefore, in order that the reduction might not be too serious, or affect the industries existing in Canada at this time, the rate was raised from what it formerly was.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—A good deal of unnecessary work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Item 361, with the exception of towels, was formerly in the 25 per cent list, and is now 30. Embroideries, enumerated in 362, were formerly in the 30 per cent column, and they are now in the 35 per cent list. Item 364, "Jeans, sateens and coutils, when imported by corset and dress stay makers for use in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories, twenty per cent ad valorem. They were formerly 25 per cent. There is a change in the next item, 365, collars and cuffs of cotton, linen, xylonite, xyolite or celluloid. They were protected by a duty of twenty-four cents per dozen and also 25 per cent ad valorem. Now they are placed in the 35 per cent list. Cuffs, however, were in a different position. They were not in the same category. They were four cents a pair and 25 per cent ad valorem and shirts costing more than $3 per dozen had a protection of $1 per dozen and 25 per cent ad valorem.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Now you have made them thirty-five, and I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that thirty-five per cent on shirts of a superior quality would be higher than the specific and ad valorem duty. It would make it just about equal when you make the cut of twenty-five per cent. I have made the calculations, and in very many cases it is a higher duty than it would be under the old tariff, but changes have taken place since the tariff was first introduced, but this item in particular I know would give a higher protection than under the old tariff, except on a very cheap article. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says the cheaper and dirtier it is, the greater facilities are given for people who wanted cheap goods.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There were very serious items to consider.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was after the strong deputation came from Montreal. I congratulate the hon. gentleman and his colleagues on having yielded to the pressure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that we yielded.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh yes you did, because you made the change.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We tried to make them uniform with other articles. Then there is no change until you come to item 376 "all manufactures of hemp, flax or jute, n.e.s., or of flax, hemp and jute combined twenty-five per cent ad valorem." Formerly it was twenty per cent Then item 378 "Felt, pressed, of all kinds, not filled or covered by or with any woven fabric, twenty per cent ad valorem." It was formerly seventeen and one-half per cent. In item 381 the same change has been made "Cloths, not rubbered or made water-proof, whether of wool, cotton, unions, silk or ramie, sixty inches or over in width and weighing not more than seven ounces to the square yard, when imported exclusively for the manufacture of mackintosh clothing, under regulations to be adopted by the Governor in Council, fifteen per cent ad valorem." They were in the twelve and a half per cent column and are now in the fifteen. In item 385 the same change was made, "Oiled silk oiled cloth, and tape or other textile india-rubbered, flocked or coated, n.o.p., thirty per cent ad valorem." That was formerly twenty-seven and one-half, and is now thirty. Item 386 "Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, alpacas, orleans, cashmeres, henriettas, serges, buntings, nun's cloth, bengalines, whip cords, twills, plains or jacquards of similar fabrics, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, alpaca, goat, or like animal, not exceeding in weight six ounces to the square yard, when imported in the gray or unfinished state for the purpose of being dyed or finished in Canada under such regulations as are established by the Governor in Council, twenty-five per cent ad valorem. They were in the twenty-two and a half per cent column, and are now placed in the twenty-five per cent for the same reason I have explained. Socks and stockings of all kinds formerly had the double duty of ten cents per dozen and twenty-five per cent ad valorem, and they are now placed on the thirty-five per cent list. Shawls of all kinds, railway or travelling rugs, were formerly in the twenty-five per cent column and are now thirty. Item 393, "Yarns, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat or like animal, costing thirty cents per pound and over, when imported on the cop or tube or in the hank by manufacturers of woollen goods for use in their products. They are now in the twenty per cent column and formerly, in addition to twenty per cent, they had five cents per pound of protection. I suppose that is a concession to the woollen manufacturers. Item 394, "Fabrics, manufactures, wearing apparel and ready-made clothing, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat or other like animal, n.e.s.; blankets, bed comforters, or counterpanes, flannels, cloths, doe-skinks, cassimeres, tweeds, coatings, overcoatings and felt cloth," are all in the thirty-five per cent column. Those items down to the third line, n.e.s, were formerly thirty per cent, but other articles, blankets, bed comforters or counterpanes, flannels, cloths, doeskins, cassimeres, tweeds, were formerly twenty-five, but had this additional protection of five cents a pound. They have all been put in the thirty-five per cent column. Item 396, "carpeting, rugs, mats, and matting of cocoa, straw, hemp or jute, carpet linings and stair pads," were formerly twenty and are now twenty-five per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You made a mistake. You are going to destroy that industry.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clothing is the article which will suffer most probably. There is no change in boots and shoes, furs and capes and hats and caps. No change until you come to glycerine, item 415. That is simply a change in the mode of imposing the duty, "glycerine, when imported by manufacturers of explosives, for use in the manufacture thereof in their own factories." It it now ten per cent ad valorem, and it was formerly four cents per pound. I do not know how it worked, I fancy it is very much the same. Item 426, buttons. Those buttons had a varied duty according to the material of which they were made, and they have all been placed in the thirty per cent column. I presume buttons, under the old tariff, were not changed since 1894. They were four cents per gross and twenty per cent ad valorem, and now we have put all buttons in the ad valorem column at twenty-five per cent. That item is "Buttons, viz.: pantaloon buttons wholly of metal, and shoe buttons, n.e.s., twenty-five per cent ad valorem. Buttons of all kinds covered or not, n.o.p., including recognition buttons, and cuff or collar buttons (not being jewellery), thirty-five per cent ad valorem." Under the old tariff buttons of vulcanite and composition, etc., were two cents, buttons of pearl, ivory, etc, were eight cents per gross and eight per cent ad valorem. We have made a different classification and divided them into two classes, one at the rate of 25 per cent and the other thirty-five per cent. Those in the 35 per cent were buttons that came in under item 469 of the former tariff, "buttons, pantaloon and all other buttons, twenty per cent ad valorem," so that we have given that item a protection of twenty-five per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have you had any representations from the button manufacturers of Berlin?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think their industry was discussed a good deal in the west. There is no change until you come to item 432, "Rove when imported for the manufacture of twine for harvest binders, five per cent ad valorem." It was formerly ten per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it not strike the hon. gentleman as a most extraordinary thing to put a duty of five per cent upon the raw material of an article which you have made free? That is just as flagrant a violation of the principle upon which any tariff should be established, as that to which the hon. gentleman for Wolseley (Mr. Perley) referred. You declare the binder twine—on which we shall have some discussion hereafter—shall be free after a certain date, and yet you put the rove, which is one of the raw materials used in the manufacture of harvesting binder twine, at a duty of five per cent. Why?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—He has done that on whiskey.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not a raw material and not used for manufacture—except to manufacture a drunken man out of a sober one. I quite understand allowing clothing to come in free and charging a duty on the cloth out of which it is manufactured, and that is precisely the case to which I have called the attention of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — Item 433 reads: Binders' twine or twine for harvest binders of hemp, jute, minillia or sisal, and of manilla and sisal mixed, ten per cent ad valorem until 1st January, 1898; thereafter to be free."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have given no reason for that change.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are inconsistencies in tariffs which I cannot explain. We have had these things a great many times. The hon. gentlemen made a great many changes in the tariff in the eighteen years they were in power and they never got it to suit. It is perfectly impossible to so arrange the various items that they will bear the fair proportion to each other that the industries which they represent deserve.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—None of these complications to which the hon. gentleman refers are applicable to these items.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The result will be to close down the manufacture in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Binder twine is one of the articles which will be free after the 1st of January. Up to that time it is protected by a duty of ten per cent. The next item we come to is sugars, syrups and molasses.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What about the duty on binder twine?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was twelve and a half per cent under the old tariff. It has been a good deal higher but was reduced two or three years ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was twenty-five per cent and it was reduced three years ago. Nearly all the articles out of which it is made are free and this rove—I do not know whether it is one of them or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Rove was in the ten per cent list.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Because it was partially manufactured.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In sugar, syrup and molasses hon. gentlemen will probably recognize that the one change we have made in that was the reduction of the fourteen cents per hundred which the refiner enjoys. The duty now is one cent a pound on the refined.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You make a difference between the raw and the manufactured just one-half per cent, without taking into consideration the waste in the refining of the raw sugar. That is the protection that you have really taken away from the sugar refiner.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a very small tem.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I forget now. I know it is not very large.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I tried some years ago to make a study of this question, but I confess I had to give it up. I followed very closely the evidence given in the United States by Havemeyer and those interested with him in the trust in that country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can congratulate yourself; you are not alone.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The difficulty was, what was a fair protection? It ranged from thirty up to one hundred, and now they are getting a very much higher duty than that. There was very great difficulty in ascertaining what would be a fair sum for the protection of the refiner. We have taken fourteen cents per hundred pounds off it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That has been the United States duty.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It depends on what sugar the refiner uses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The polariscope, I suppose, is the only way of testing the saccharine in the sugar.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When you use the centrifugal and use the aniline dyes they do not lose a half per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would arise from the frauds committed on the revenue by the colouring with aniline dyes of the raw material. I have tested sugar which under the Dutch standard, that is by colour, would pass as low as No. 9 and yet when you would analyse it you would find there was 95 per cent of saccharine in it, and the only deterioration in the quality of the sugar, so far as the strength was concerned, was the colouring. That was one reason which induced the late government, on my own recommendation, to adopt the polariscope system.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The next articles are tobaccos. The duty has been increased on cigar, and cigarettes from two dollars a pound to three dollars, and cut tobacco is raised fifty-five cents.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is where you have made another mistake.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then manufactured tobacco and snuff, fifty cents per pound. It was formerly thirty-five and twelve and a half per cent ad valorem. That completes the list of articles subject to duty. The next items are those on the free list, Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can you tell us what additional articles have been placed on the free list?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first item, 479, "Artificial limbs," has been placed on the free list and mining machinery formerly stood in the same position. My hon. friend recognizes that he had a great deal of difficulty in settling what articles ought to be admitted under the clause in the late tariff which allowed mining machinery not manufactured in Canada to come in free. It was a very difficult question to settle, and at the instance of those engaged in mines it was suggested that a special list should be framed to avoid all confusion in the future, and the list in 555 was agreed upon as embracing the articles of mining machinery not made in Canada, and which might very properly be placed on the free list. It is a long list and some of the articles are only used in special cases. I am not sure whether items 602 and 603 were on the free list before. That is the special kinds of wire that were allowed to be put on the free list for the manufacture of fences.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, they were on the old list.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Having gone through the list the only clause in the bill before you to which I think it is my duty to call your attention would be clause 17, which reads as follows:—

> When the customs tariff of any country admits the products of Canada on terms which, on the whole, are as favourable to Canada as the terms of the reciprocal tariff herein referred to are to countries to which it may apply, articles which are the growth, produce, or manufacture of such country, when imported direct therefrom, may then be entered for duty, or taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada, at the reduced rates of duty provided in the reciprocal tariff set forth in schedule D to this Act.

That reduction is twenty-five per cent on the articles to which attention has been drawn while I have hastily gone through the items in this tariff. It was thought, however, it would be unfair to apply that cut at once, and therefore the twenty-five per cent was divided and half of it was to apply between the twenty-second of April, or the day on which the tariff was introduced in the House, and the first of July next year. After that, the whole twenty-five per cent would come into operation.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The first of July coming?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the first of July, 1898. It would extend over a year. Of course the main purpose we had in view in this clause was to endeavour to develop trade with the United Kingdom. We felt that the door had been slammed in our faces by the United States, and it became necessary to look abroad to increase our trade with those countries who were trading with us on terms more favourable than the United States. We had been buying very largely from them, giving them an immense benefit in our trade, and it was a perfectly legitimate and proper thing for us to do, wholly apart from the natural preference we had to deal with Great Britain, that our tariff should have been arranged in order to accomplish that purpose. There were two ways of doing it: either by the introduction of the principle set forth in this tariff, or by the reduction on those classes of goods which could be imported from Great Britain cheaply. They would be on certain classes of iron goods and on nearly all the classes of woollen goods, but it was found that in recent years other countries had been developing their iron industries very materially, more particularly Germany and the United States, and, therefore, although we might have reduced the duties on those classes of goods we had been importing from Great Britain more than on goods we had been importing from Germany and the United States, yet, owing to the increased development of those particular branches of industry in these two countries the object we had in view might possibly fail, and therefore we adopted the scheme of making a direct cut of twenty-five per cent on articles coming from the countries that would be entitled to consideration under this tariff; and although we had in view only the mother country at that time, still it was recognized that there were other countries that might possibly come in. The tendency is towards free trade in many countries at the present day. We know that one of the Australian colonies had already adopted the free trade principle and no doubt that colony would be entitled to come in on the same terms that the mother country did, and it is quite possible that after our drawing attention to it, other countries may eventually come in, but the immediate object was, of course, to give substantial preference to the mother country and hon. gentlemen need not be reminded that that movement has been highly appreciated by the British people. They have recognized that an advance has been made towards closer unity between the colony and Great Britain than ever before, and it has placed Canada in an exceptionally good position, as is quite apparent from the whole trend of opinion at gatherings of public men and the whole trend of opinion in editorials in newspapers and in other ways. I might remind hon. gentlemen of the position Canada has been placed in at the recent Jubilee celebrations in London to indicate that the attention of the British people has been more particularly directed to Canada through the action taken by our parliament in giving to the mother country a preference. An argument against that is that other countries enjoying with Great Britain the most favoured-nation clause may come in, and in that way gain some advantage that we do not ourselves contemplate. We fully recognized the possibilities of that. We believed, however, at the time the treaties were entered into that Canada was not really a contracting party, though we had acquiesced for years; still we had an independent autonomy, and there was this reason, from an equitable standpoint, to justify our position, that when those treaties were entered into, there was nothing in view of a reciprocal element in them. Great Britain and her colonies conceded to Germany and Belgium certain privileges, and they conceded certain privileges to us, and we availed ourselves of them. Our shipping had some considerable advantage from the Belgium treaty in the way of tolls and other duties that were of considerable value, but there was inequality in the concessions mutually granted, and we considered if we now proposed to ask an alteration in our fiscal policy, offering something new, something that had not been contemplated when the treaties were entered into, that they fairly could not come within the benefits, that they were not offered to a nation or to nations that were placing our products in a different position from the position they enjoyed under the favoured-nations clause. That was the view we took. It is within the bound of possibility that that view may be overruled. We of course are unable to say, but we clearly think that if it were held that Canada was compelled to admit the products of those countries under the conditions which I have referred to, that then we had a fair claim on the mother country to say that those treaties ought to be denounced—that we have placed the mother country in a position of considerable advantage as far as trade with Canada was concerned, and that we did not, in giving them that advantage, intend that other countries that were not entitled to any special privileges from Canada, should come in and share that advantage. I think our ground is a substantial one. I think the arguments are very strong. I do not propose now to elaborate it. I merely draw the attention of the House to arguments which presented themselves to our minds when we deliberately placed that reciprocal clause in our tariff: that we fully recognized the possibility of the favoured-nations clause applying, but we felt that we gave reasons why it should not apply and if those reasons were overruled that then we would be in a position to say to the mother country: "Well, we having offered you special advantages under conditions such as we thought did not exist as far as those other countries were concerned, you ought certainly to denounce the treaty or you ought to say to those countries, Germany and Belgium, unless you yourselves come in and place your tariff, as far as Canada is concerned, on an equally favourable basis, then Canada should be allowed to withdraw from that treaty."

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Is not that the tariff of Belgium now under these conditions? It is more favourable than ours, so far as the tariff is concerned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it would come in, but I am advised that it is not. I have not analysed that part of it. I am merely giving the principles which actuated us in the framing of this reciprocal proposal. I do not know that there is any other point of the tariff to which I should refer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given us another evidence of that want of unanimity of opinion as expressed by himself and his colleagues. The explanation given to us is in direct contradiction to that of the premier in his late speeches in England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The premier has stated distinctly that what is termed the zollverein or preferential treatment between England and her colonies is the thin edge of protection, and that that is not what his government has in view, that the object was to establish as far as possible a system of free trade with all parts of the world, because some of the English press and others have commented rather severely on this opinion, as being in direct contradistinction to the sentiments of the Colonial Secretary in favour of a preferential tariff between the colonies and the mother country. However, that is a matter I am not going to quarrel with the hon. gentleman about.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not recognize that there is any inconsistency. I have read Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speeches very thoroughly and I cannot recognize that there is the inconsistency the hon. gentleman has drawn attention to. He has pronounced himself a free trader, but he recognizes, as he has repeated over and over again, that it was an impossible state of things in Canada.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—The Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat promised to give us important information at three o'clock to-day with regard to the tariff.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before coming to that I move the formal reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—But the Minister of Justice made a promise.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I explained that I made no promise—that I could make no promise about it until I could have an opportunity of conferring with my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I understood him to say that three o'clock was the time he would give us the information.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was afraid from some observations which had been made, that some hon. members did take the view that I was making that promise, and therefore, before the matter was parted with, I was explicit in saying there was no promise of the kind. I have conferred with my colleagues, and they agree that there should be no statement in this House in advance of the matter being taken up in the House of Commons and an explanation given of the item where, in the first place, it properly belonged. They think that it would not be fitting that a statement should be made on the subject in this House now, and I concur in that view.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend forgot one very important clause in these tariff resolutions, and that was the 18th, what is termed the combines clause. I have read that three or four times, and it is somewhat difficult to arrive at a conclusion as to what it means.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The language I think is very plain and very expressive:

That whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that as respects any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among the manufacturers of such article, or the dealers therein, or any number of them, to unduly enhance the price of such article or in any other way to unduly promote the advantage of such manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Supreme Court or High Court in any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in Council whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists; with power to such judge to compel the attendance of witnesses and examine the same under oath, to require the production of books and papers, and with such other necessary powers as may be conferred upon him by the Governor in Council for the purposes of such inquiry, and if such judge reports that such trust, combination, association or agreement exists, and if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumers is facilitated by the customs duty imposed on a like article when imported, then the Governor in Council may place such article on the free list, or so reduce the duty upon it, as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in such article.

The Governor in Council may make such regulations as may be deemed advisable for the effectual conduct of such inquiry.

It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen, it is not many years ago since committees were formed in another branch of parliament te endeayour to prevent combines in restraint of trade. From time to time legislation was suggested to meet those combines, and it has been found that they were almost like invisible bodies—that they were hard to reach. The House of Commons on two or three occasions passed a bill that if combines were formed they should be illegal. When it came up to this House we inserted a very important word "unduly," which it was thought, in the minds of many, nullified the action that the House of Commons sought to accomplish. It is well known that there are in all countries, more particularly the United States, trusts formed that do accomplish a large amount of individual financial advantage at the expense of the consumer. I need not go further to illustrate it than the present sugar trust in the United States. It is a generally admitted fact that that trust has become so powerful that the Senate and House of Representatives are controlled by it. Hon. gentlemen will remember—it is only I think four years ago—when the sugar bill was up in the United States Congress, and it was kept there three months, from October to February, and in the meantime it was alleged, and never successfully contradicted, that senators were in the combination with the trust and that stocks rose from 85 to 125.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is this explanation of my hon. friend intended to show how this clause will affect trusts in the United States?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I am merely illustrating. Many hon. gentlemen wish to know what the purpose of the clause is. I was illustrating that under certain conditions those trusts will form. They are formed, I dare say, in all countries, and it has always been found necessary that there should be some superior power, when those trusts are formed, that will defeat their object. No hon. gentleman will for a moment take the ground that any action that is proper on the part of the government in instituting an inquiry as to whether a trust had been formed would be unparliamentary or improper. If they are an illegal combine, surely we ought to be empowered to defeat their purpose, which is to extract a larger sum from the pockets of the consumer than is reasonable or fair. Therefore, it is felt that powers of that kind could be safely entrusted to the government in Canada. They depute to an independent body the taking of evidence and the inquiry as to the truth of the allegation that a trust really existed. It was a matter of proof, or evidence. The judge would report the evidence, and if it was found that there was a trust—that it was a combine and a great injury to the consumer, it seems very proper, under the authority of parliament, that the Governor in Council should be authorized to so reduce the duty as to defeat the object of the trust. We authorize the Governor in Council—we have had it on our statute-books for very many years either to reduce or to impose duties. We have had on our statute books authority to impose export duties under certain conditions. It comes uuder cases of that category and it is highly improbable that any improper exercise of that power would take place. The very fact of it being there will be a protection to the public.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not a bit of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because if those who unite feel that they can be reached they are less likely to make a combine. Hon. gentlemen must admit that. The government of the day can only exercise action of that kind subject to public opinion—subject to the approval of parliament when it meets, and it is highly improbable that there will be any undue exercise of such power, more particularly when the inquiry is made by a court of justice and where the result, if it proves the existence of that combine, is simply to authorizes the reduction of the duty on the article which forms the subject of the trust.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose it is just as well, upon the motion for the second reading of the bill to make whatever remarks may be necessary on this tariff. The hon. gentleman has referred to a great many changes in the tariff, but he has given us very little information as to the principle on which the tariff is based. If I may be permitted, I shall refer in my first remark to this clause to which he has just called the attention of the Senate; and let me say that I do not think, nor will anybody else who reads the tariff as it stands on the statute-book to-day, think, that this clause, giving certain powers to the government in reference to these combines, is at all analogous to existing legislation. The one gives the power to place an article which is considered a raw material upon the free list when imported for the purpose of being manufactured into some other article. The combine clause, to which he has referred, gives the power of punishing those who have entered into a combine and thereby violated the provisions of the clause. That is totally different from the placing of an article on the free list, which is within the power of the Governor General in Council, after the question has been examined and reported upon, and decided as being for the use and purpose of manufacture, by the treasury board; then they have the power to aid the manufacture of an article by allowing the raw material that enters into such manufacture to be put on the free list. In this case the government have arrogated to themselves the right to inflict punishment; they become the judges to inflict a penalty upon those who violate the law. The House will agree with me, that there is no analogy whatever between the power which the Governor in Council has under the Customs Act at the present time, and that which they propose to exercise under certain circumstances under this 18th clause. As a matter of principle I think the clause is vicious in every respect. While we all agree that combines for the purpose of extracting more from the consumer than is a legitimate profit on the article manufactured is not right, the question of whether that power should be vested in the executive, is another matter. If any one will read attentively that 18th clause, and tell me how it can be put into force, and be of any effect, for the purpose for which it is intended, he will have accomplished more, I confess, than I have been able to do. If you read it carefully, you will find that whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe—they are the first persons who are to form an opinion, as to whether a combine exists or not, and that will have to be brought under their notice, I presume, by those who think themselves aggrieved by it. That having been done, they then have to decide as to whether the manufacturers in this combine have adopted a course which "unduly enhances the value" of the article which they are selling. The House of Commons, I remember distinctly, and so will the hon. member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), objected to this word "unduly" very strongly, but I see the government have adopted it in two cases—"unduly enhance the value," and in any other way "unduly promotes" the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumer. Then, after that has been ascertained, the Governor in Council may commission—they "may," they are not obliged to do it—or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or any Superior Court of any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary manner as to the truth of the allegation of unduly enhancing the price of an article. They give power to the courts to make the investigation. The courts having investigated the question have no authority or power to punish. If the clause gave the power to the courts to impose a penalty, then I think there would be a very great deal of force in the argument of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and it would give effect to the clause which we are considering. But it does not. All that the court has to do is to consider whether anything has been done which unduly enhances the price of the article.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It reports the fact.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yet it goes a little further. The court has to inquire in a summary way and report to the government whether such trust, combine or association or agreement exists. Having done that, it is referred to the Governor in Council. Then it says: if the judge reports that such trust, combine or agreement exists, and if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumer is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article, then they can put it on the free list. If they desire this clause to have any effect to punish these combines when it appears to the Governor in Council from the evidence which has been adduced in court, and reported to them, why should it be left discretionary with them to punish? That is a question which I should like to have answered. It places the power in the government of the day to hold it in terrorem over the heads of all the manufacturers of this country, whenever any vicious person thinks proper to make charges against them, and by that means exercise an influence over them which no government ought to exercise or have the power to exercise. Let me give an illustration of one or two things which suggest themselves to me. If you look at the tariff, for some unexplained reason the duties in favour of the combine which exists in Nova Scotia on coal have not been interfered with. We all know there has been a combine to keep the price of coal in the United States at a certain rate, and we know that those combines have existed among the retailers in the different cities of the country. Whether it is in Ottawa or not, I am not prepared to say, but I know in my own city it is. The coal dealers—there are not many of them—meet together and say: "We will not sell except at a certain price." We have established the fact that they are taking more from the consumers than they should pay, and the government would have the right to reduce the duty. Does any one suppose that if a case were made against the coal miners in Nova Scotia who retain their protection, while corn is put on the free list, will have their combine interfered with? They have retained protection on that particular article, which is really and to all intents and purposes, if you adopt the principle of raw material, the most expensive raw material that is used in the country. Do not understand me to advocate free trade in coal, because that would be an encroachment on the principles which I believe should govern this country, and that is protection. While I admit the statement made by the Secretary of State a short time ago, that in a vast country like the Dominion, extending over such an immense area, when you adopt any fiscal system it must interfere with the interests, to a greater or less extent, with some portions of the country. That which would be advantageous to one imposes a tax upon another section of the country. Any one who has studied the tariff of the United States, or who has watched and paid any attention to their fiscal policy, must have come to that conclusion. The interests of the east are not identical with the interests of the centre, nor the interests of the centre with those of the west, nor the interests of the west with those of the extreme west on the Pacific Coast. You cannot adopt a system for one part that will not sometimes interfere with the interests of another. As an illustration of what I mean, the Hawaiian treaty gives a free entry for all sugars from the Hawaiian Islands, while it imposes a high duty on all other sugars imported on the Pacific Coast. This was an instance in which the United States used this argument, and there is much force in it, they say that freight by railway across the continent is so great that the admission of Hawaiian sugar free into the ports of the Pacific Coast would not interfere with the protection given to the industry in the southern and eastern portions of the country. We can easily understand that. I simply give that as an illustration of the working of the protective tariff, and the circumstances which may exist which would justify the action taken by the United States government, and which would justify a similar action in this country, having a territory quite as extensive from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as that of the United States. We all know that protection on bituminous coal is to the advantage of the coal producers and coal miners of Nova Scotia; this the free trade government admit, although they pledged themselves in the most solemn way to put coal on the free list. The Finance Minister and the maritime provinces ministers in the Cabinet had sufficient power to induce and compel their colleagues not to fulfil the promise which they had made to the manufacturers of the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, just before the election. It is true the hon. Secretary of State says that the duty has been reduced. It is not reduced upon the principle of free trade. It is not reduced upon the principle of a revenue tariff, but it is reduced from sixty cents to fifty-three cents, because the United States did not impose a 75 cents per ton duty. That was the reason of the reduction as given by the Finance Minister in another branch of parliament. What I contend is this, and every man who has given this subject the slightest study must come to the conclusion, that you are empowering the executive of the day to exercise the authority given them in this clause or to not exercise it, as the case may be. I venture this prediction although prophets are seldom appreciated in their own country, that from the wording of that clause and from the powers which are vested in the executive, you will never use them, and if I could conceive for a moment that under this clause it would be used, I should move to strike it out of the Tariff Bill; but believing it to be just one of those clauses--I would say buncomb clauses only it might not be considered parliamentary—adopted for the purpose of impressing on the minds of consumers that you had taken the power to protect them which I believe under no circumstances will you ever exercise the power.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—It is humbug.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the best word to use. It partakes to a very great extent of the character of the Alien Labour Bill which we considered the other night, and which the hon. Secretary of State declared had no meaning, which he believed was vicious in principle and was put on the statute book for no other purpose than to humbug the labour people—I do not believe he used the words "humbug" but to deceive the labour people. I regretted that the Minister of Justice was not present, because judging from the remarks which he made the night before, in which he took exception to his colleague's interpretation of that Act as to its effect on those who come into the country and as to its practicability —I regretted that he was not here in order that we might have the pleasure of listening to, and witnessing another difference between two members of the cabinet on a grave question, which has agitated the country for some time, and as to which his leader promised to place a law on the statute-book on attaining to power. Taking the view that I do of the impracticability of this clause, I have made up my mind, so far as I am concerned, not to take the responsibility of moving to eliminate it from the statute-books. The hon. the Secretary of State smiles; I suppose he thinks that under the constitution we have not the power to do that. I have been studying the constitution lately, and have come to the conclusion that we have full power to do so, but it is better to leave it on the statute-book just to see what nonsensical clauses can be put into the Tariff Act without the slightest intention of ever putting them in force. I make a further prediction, that no matter what combine is proved to exist in this country, whether it be upon coal, binder twine, or any other combine, that the hon. gentleman will never have the courage to put those articles on the free list. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Dever) very often refers to the extreme duties or liquor. Supposing we prove to the satisfaction of the government that there is a combine among the distillers to keep up prices, I suppose my hon, friend (Mr. Scott) would argue no matter how high the price would be, it would not be any great disadvantage to the consumer, and therefore they would not interfere; but take the article of coal, will they ever do it? I believe not. I desire to have my opinion put on record on this question, that the taking of power of that character to impose a penalty for a crime, as the law has declared it to a crime—my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head. If we have a law on the statute-book which declares that a man is to be punished for any act that he commits, then they make that commission of that act a crime. If these combines are not a crime to be punished by a loss of money, it ought not to exist. The subject of a zollverein is a prolific subject. It is the first time, in my recollection, that I have heard so plain and distinct a statement made as that which has been given by the hon. the Secretary of State to-day, that the cabinet in adopting the principle of what he calls preferential trade, that these treaties were discussed at the Cabinet Council when they framed that clause. I have come to the conclusion that they could not have discussed the favoured-nation clause; if they had, they could not very well have come to the decision they did. I might give another reason. They know very well what the feeling of Canada is to the mother country. They know that the House of Commons has affirmed over and over again the principle of preferential trade if we could possibly get it with England. We know also, because it is on record, that the hon. gentleman's party have affirmed over and over again, that if they could get reciprocal trade, or continental free trade with the United States they cared not one rap for England, that they were quite willing to adopt a principle of that kind, however much it militates against or was a discrimination against England. That is an undisputed fact, and how often has the Conservative party been condemned, in not at all mild language, for what has been termed their dislike to the United States, because that country would not reciprocate with us. We heard it over and over again in this House from the hon. Secretary of State himself, that our course has been one of annoyance, rather than conciliatory to the United States. In that respect they have now come to the conclusion that discrimination is the best policy and have adopted it. I congratulate them on having stolen another plank from the platform of the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Stolen?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, stolen.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a crime

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, it is a political theft. The misfortune is, and I intimated to the hon. Minister of Justice a few days ago that had I thought of it during the time the Code was under consideration, I would have introduced a clause to punish people for appointing to office people who had committed a crime; and I would go a little further, if the hon. gentleman thinks it would be an advantage, and make it a crime for any one to steal the political opinions of their opponents to which they had professed to be opposed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend when he did this stealing, did it across the border. He went into a foreign jurisdiction. He appropriated the political sentiments of the other side.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not at all. Does the hon. gentleman think, because France, Germany and other countries have a protective policy, that therefore people in any other country, holding the same views and trying to put them on the statute-book, steal those opinions?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Suppose my hon. friend applied that in this case?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, there is just this difference. That is the usual dexterity of a lawyer. If from your childhood you have been a free trader and have come in contact with me, who has been professing protection all my life, you still adhere to the opinions you formed in your younger days and I go over to your views in order to attain power, then that would be stealing your views. There is all the difference in the world.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not a theft. It is a case of enlightenment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad indeed that my hon. friend is becoming enlightened. I congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite on the rapid advance they have made in twelve months, and if they go on in the same ratio they will soon be higher protectionists than I am. The hon. Secretary of State said that the cabinet had discussed this question and that they had read the treaty. My hon. friend from Bothwell asked me the other day whether we ever received any answer from the Colonial Secretary as to preferential trade.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, yes, I have read that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hold in my hand the despatch of Lord Ripon in reply to the Intercolonial Conference resolutions, bearing date June, 1894, in which he explains the different treaties and calls our attention to them. He goes further than that: he lays down the principle that if any law is passed by a colony, or one of the dependencies of Great Britain, which interferes with these treaties, that that ought to be reserved by the Governor General for the sanction of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think that is good advice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit it is not good advice, but it only shows the difficulties, and I recognize them fully, in dealing with this question of preferential trade, where it interferes, or is supposed to interfere, with the treaty relations between Great Britain and other countries to which they have made the colonies a party. Hon. gentlemen talk about the autonomy of this country. Why, the autonomy of Canada was just as great in 1865 as it is to-day, so far as responsible government is concerned. I admit we are advancing continually, but we have never got to that stage yet where we could induce the British government to abrogate those treaties. I should be delighted, and will congratulate my hon. friends, if by the step they have taken they can get that concession from Great Britain, because it will place us in a position to do precisely what my hon. friends say they have done, and which their leader in England says they have not done, give the mother country a preference in our markets over foreign countries. I shall not waste the time of the House in reading the despatches to which I refer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have already read them. I thought his language was very strong.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, because it says that, "the produce or manufactures of Belgium shall not be subject, in the British colonies, to other or higher duties than those which are or may be imposed on similar articles from Great Britain." Then there is still stronger wording than that in which it declares positively and distinctly that no advantage shall be given to England other than that which is given to the favoured nations. It is a very prolific subject, but might I ask the hon. gentleman, before going further, whether he can give us information as to the negotiations which have been going on in England on this question, or whether there is a probability of the interpretation put on these treaties by the government as indicated today, by the Secretary of State, being accepted by the Colonial Secretary; and, if not, whether they have any despatches which would lead to the conclusion that they must give, while these treaties exist, the same rights and privileges to those countries which are a party to the favoured-nations clause as we give to England, or whether there is any intention whatever to ask for the denunciation of those treaties, because really these are the principal points which we have to consider in connection with this tariff. I simply want a reply, yes, or no.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not know that my hon. friend desired an answer at the moment. There has, of course, been correspondence. It is incomplete, and, therefore, correspondence that we cannot produce. The British government has not taken ground against the view for which we contend with regard to the favoured-nations; neither has it accepted the other view. The whole matter is still a subject of correspondence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is in abeyance?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes; in abeyance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have a few remarks to make with reference to the tariff. I did not intend to discuss the other question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is an instance in which the Portuguese government gave a special preference to France after adopting the most favoured-nation treaty, and after a discussion of a treaty being negotiated between France and England. This action on the part of Portugal was referred to one of the ministers, and the reply to the party who mentioned the matter, that Portugal having made the special treaty with France in respect to matters of trade, what she had conceded to France could not be considered a violation of this favoured-nation treaty she had with England.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have an indistinct recollection of the circumstance to which the hon. gentleman refers, but not sufficiently clear to enable me to discuss it with him. What particular form it took afterwards I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an instance in which England adopted the United States doctrine, that a reciprocal arrangement does not come within the purview of the most favoured-nation clause as generally adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That might arise from the particular wording of the treaty with Portugal, and there may have been this distinction between them—I will mention this as it suggests itself to my mind—there may have been a difference between two foreign powers, one of which was not a party to the favoured-nation clause and a country that took upon itself and had the right at the time to bind a portion of her own empire. There may be a distinction in that respect. Portugal was dealing with another foreign power; England dealt with a foreign power in arriving at certain terms which were embodied in the treaty, and to which she bound the different dependencies of the empire. I can draw the distinction without considering the matter fully. It strikes me as being a reason at once why there might be a great difference in the working of the favoured-nation clause as between two foreign countries, and between one country and another, in which one party to the treaty had bound her colonies, though they might have that autonomy which enabled them to carry on the ordinary affairs of trade and of business. My hon. friend, I admit, has given more study and consideration to those questions than I have, but that seems to me a reason why the difference would exist. I may be wrong in that, however. With reference to this tariff, my hon. friend has laid down the principle of preferential trade with England, and that it is to be of a certain benefit to England, that it is not to the United States. I thought when this proposition was first made that we should hear a good deal of denunciation of the proposition which had been made by the Canadian government from the United States press and statesmen, but those who read the articles published in the United States press, written by men who have some knowledge of the workings of the tariff, and who have an intimate knowledge of the trade relations between the two countries, will find that they laid down this doctrine, that notwithstanding the apparent discrimination against them, there is really none in fact, and will not prove to be any in practice, and for this reason, that the articles which we import from the United States are not of the character of those which we import from England, and vice versa. The advantage to England, as pointed out in these articles, is in the matter of woollens particularly, and scarcely anything else. It will not affect manufactures of iron, though cottons it may to a certain extent. Perhaps this view could be better placed on record than I could possibly explain it by a well written article headed "The New Era in Canada," published in Harper's Weekly of June 5, which deals with the question in the following manner:

> The new tariff must give many advantages to England as concerns woollens, cottons, linens, silks, gloves and glassware, but on close examination it is not clear that it will largely curtail American trade with Canada. The United States exports more goods to Canada than England does, but the gain over England is principally in respect to articles on the free list. Instead of the free list being cut down it is enlarged by the addition of corn for stock-feeding, binder-twine, and fencing-wire, so that the United States, which last year sent into Canada goods of the free list class of the value of $21,000,000, three times the value of those of the same class received in the Dominion from Great Britain, are, so far as the free-list is concerned, in an even better position than they were under the old National Policy which turned the cold front of protection alike to Great Britain and the rest of the world.
>
> The new arrangements between Canada and Great Britain may result in some troublesome smuggling of the better class of British goods into the United States, but taking the free list and the dutiable list together, the bulk of the Canadian import trade is still likely to be with the United States. Last year, even of articles paying duty, the exports from the United States into Canada were valued at $29,000,000 as against $24,000,000 from Great Britain; and in comparing the articles imported from the two countries, it is evident that the changes in the tariff cannot seriously decrease American trade with Canada. Most of the items in the American list which overtop those in the English list are heavy goods—metals, minerals, such as coal and oil, lumber, carriages and wagons, musical instruments and other goods in which, the proximity of the United States to Canada gives great advantage in the export trade over Great Britain.
>
> The Fielding-Cartwright tariff, while it does make better terms all round for England, is one that cannot materially reduce the American trade.

The party who wrote that article—and I suppose it ought to have some force because the hon. gentleman's (Sir Oliver Mowat's) photo is printed with it—understands evidently the trade of this country as it exists with the United States. I go further, and say that any one who has paid attention to the trade relations of Great Britain and Canada, and the trade relations between the United States and Canada, will come to this conclusion, as figures show, that the National Policy tariff made no material difference or any distinction between the one country and the other, nor did it impose a heavier import duty comparatively on English goods, than on United States goods. I took the trouble some time ago to take the imports, free and dutiable, from Great Britain in 1878, while we had what was termed a revenue tariff (what was known as the Cartwright tariff) and the tariff of 1895. I have not made the calculation since, but you will find, while the duties are heavier, that the relative duty paid between the two countries there is only a fraction of one per cent against one country in favour of the other, and that is against the United States. I mention that fact because we hear the declaration made so often that the late tariff always discriminated against British goods. This article puts the question beyond a doubt on that point, calling attention to the fact of the different classes of goods that go from one country to the other.

Now, looking at the provisions of this tariff, one cannot but come to the conclusion, after the changes which have been made since its first introduction—and they are just as numerous as the items in the tariff, whether they were clerical errors or not, I am not prepared to say—but you can come to no other conclusion than that the tariff as it is presented to us to-day is as complete and palpable a violation of all the principles which were laid down by the gentlemen now in power, when they were seeking the suffrages of the people, as it possibly could be. They justify it upon this ground, that the circumstances of the country are such that they would not be justified in interfering with the vested rights of the people and those who had invested their money in these industries. That is a question we have discussed for years and years. That is a question which was discussed in the United States. That was the principle involved in Hancock's last address that he issued to the people of the United States, when he was running for the presidency. In conversation with that gentleman when I was on my way to California, he said: "But you could not interfere with vested rights." That was after he had issued his address on the free trade principle. I could not help smiling, and replied: "General, that is the very principle that is laid down by our free traders in Canada. The result of that was to lose you the election." A more mongrel tariff than this never was brought before parliament, and had it been passed as it was introduced, it would have destroyed a large number of industries in this country; but public opinion was so strong that, notwithstanding the solemn declaration made by the premier and those who addressed the electors in different parts of the country, they did not dare to put the principles which they had advocated before the people and on which they had been agitating the country for 16 or 17 years, on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Which carried the election?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Quite true. I thank the hon. gentleman for that interruption—that professions carried the election. If those professions carried the election—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am putting a question which you misunderstand.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know I am dull of apprehension. I shall listen to the hon. gentleman if he has any explanation to make.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I put this question to the hon. gentleman—"which carried the election"? Was it that unpopular thing which they dared not carry out, or was it that which you were ultimately compelled to adopt?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It did its work in the locality it was intended for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There were other causes which contributed to the defeat, which I shall not discuss just now. What I charge the government with is that the professions and promises which they made prior to the elections in parts of the country where manufacturing enterprises did not exist to any great extent, were not carried out. I say when they announced their policy, and brought down their tariff, it was of such a character that the whole manufacturing industries of the country, together with those who support the principles of protection, brought such pressure to bear that the government had to recede, and they have placed before us now a tariff which, to a very great extent, is just as protective as the old tariff, and for which I am very glad. To go into the clauses of the whole tariff would be altogether too great a task at this moment. We have discussed the question of the preferential trade clause. To my mind it is not a preference to Great Britain alone. I wish it could be. It will have my earnest support, and I think I can say as much for the party to which I belong, and of which I am an humble member. Our desire is to cultivate that trade as much as possible. I have strong feelings on that question; still, remember that I do not want to extend preferential trade to foreign countries where cheap labour exists, and where it does extend virtually if they ever succeed in carrying out their views and adopt a principle which I think will be inimical to the interests of this country. There are only one or two points to which I shall call the attention of the House. The protection which we always contended was given to the farmer and the agricultural industries was denounced in every part of the country as being an imposition. The farmers were told that it was all humbug, that there was no protection for them at all: that the duty should be wiped out, and they would be infinitely better of. How did the government carry out that promise? They touched nothing. Why did not you carry out your free trade principles? Why did you not adopt a revenue tariff principle, when you came to office and redeemed your pledge to the farmers?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot do it at once.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have lowered the duties on wheat, and lowered the duties, to a small extent, upon flour, but you have kept up the duties upon the articles manufactured from wheat and flour. Is that because one member of the cabinet is interested in the manufacture of articles made from flour? Instead of reducing the protection on the article consumed by the people, made from flour, you have made the raw materials cheaper but you have kept that which is consumed by the people at the same rate of duty, and thereby given the biscuit makers and those who make cakes, or who use it for bread or such articles, a higher protection than before. Then you have, in carrying out your theory of free trade, taken the duty off corn, but you keep it upon coal. Now, why should the farmer in this respect be discriminated against and the coal dealer protected? Is it because an election was going on in the province of Nova Scotia, and you dared not interfere with that industry lest it should be the means of losing the local election? Mr. Fielding, the Finance Minister, and others gave as a reason for their violation of their pledges to the people that they desired to keep the duty upon coal until they could see whether they could obtain a concession from the people of the United States. If there was any argument in that, why did they not apply it to corn? If they had said to the United States give us free barley or admit other things raised in this country, which they do not raise to the same advantage in the United States, then we will take off the duty from corn, I could understand their policy.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before continuing the remarks which I intend to make in reference to the Tariff Act, I desire to set myself right and explain a misunderstanding that has occurred between the Whip of the other House and myself, in reference to remarks I made in this House the other day. I do not say that it is the fault of the press, because it is just possible that during the interruptions which were taking place, I may not have made myself as clear as I intended to do. I will read what Mr. Sutherland, the Whip, said in the other House this afternoon when the Orders of the Day were called, and then I will explain what I did say, or intended to say. I am not at this moment in a position to say distinctly that the newspaper reporters did not report me correctly. I have not seen the official report, and I am speaking now of the newspaper reports. Mr. Sutherland said to-day:

> Before the orders of the day are called I wish to make a brief statement with regard to a report in the Ottawa Citizen of this morning, in which report the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell is stated to have said:
>
> "The whip of the liberal party in the House of Commons had been telling the members of the Senate that if they rejected this measure the government would withdraw the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Bill. What in the world had the one to do with the other? Was it simply an idle threat, used in the hope of influencing members of the Senate who were known to be in favour of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Bill being passed and who were friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway."
>
> I simply wish to state that if the honourable gentleman said what he is here reported to have said, he was misinformed, for I never made such a statement to a senator or to any other person, nor would I be guilty of using a threat to a senator or any other person. I simply wish to make this statement, although it is a matter of indifference to myself personally, but because I think it is only fair to the government and to the public, as well as myself, that I should say that there is no truth whatever in the statement so far as I am concerned, and I am sure the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell would not wish to misrepresent me.

In the latter remarks he is quite correct. Whatever my opinions may be, I never wilfully or intentionally misrepresent any one: and in reference to the threats that were made by members of the government, and by newspapers, in reference to the doleful consequences that were to follow if we dared to exercise an opinion of our own, I certainly never intended to attribute that remark to Mr. Sutherland. When I mentioned the Whip I intended to say—if I did not say it—that he had intimated to a senator that if we rejected that bill the government or the party would appeal to the Imperial authorities, or to the parliament of England to increase the number of senators in this House. That is what I desired to attribute to Mr. Sutherland; and in conversation with him to-day I made that explanation, and he admits that he did say that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is not that a threat?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not say that it is not a threat: I am merely making the explanation. The threat that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Bill would be withdrawn was uttered publicly on the railway train going from Ottawa to Montreal, and that was made by Mr. Geoffrion, a member of the Cabinet. I did not mention Mr. Geoffrion's name before, because I do not desire, further than to justify the statements I made, to mention any names. I am very much pleased to be enabled to make this explanation with reference to Mr. Sutherland. I repeat that in conversation with Mr. Sutherland I made this explanation, and told him that possibly it might have been from the interruptions that were made at the time while I was speaking, that I may have misled the reporters. That is what I intended to say, and I acquit him of making any such threat; the only threat which I desire to attribute to him was that they were going to have some additional senators appointed.

THE TARIFF BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL resumed his speech on Bill (143) "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs." He said:—I may occupy the attention of the House for a very short time longer upon the tariff question. I think when the House rose at 6 o'clock I was referring to the taking of the duty off corn and retaining the duty upon coal, giving the reasons why the ministers adopted that course, as I believe from the expressions they have made use of. They justify the removal of the duty from corn, I think, because they desired to assist a certain class of people who were feeding cattle; and they retained the duty on coal in order to effect a reciprocity with the United States in that particular article. I must leave that for the gentlemen on the treasury benches to explain to the country. The taking of the duty off corn directly interferes with the coarse grain trade, not only of Ontario, but of Quebec. The protection afforded to farmers in this respect led in the western portion of Ontario, particularly in the counties of Essex and Kent, and the Pelee Islands, to the production of corn to an extent that had never been contemplated, while corn was on the free list. But the duty has been retained upon corn so far as affects the distillers. The hon. Secretary of State called attention to the mode by which the revenue might be defrauded by buying United States corn that was claimed to be of Canadian growth. That may or may not be the case; I think the probabilities are that the distillers will buy Canadian corn, which is grown very largely in all sections west of Kingston, and particularly on the southwestern peninsula of Ontario, and the farmers will import the corn from the United States free. Then there is another point that may not have suggested itself to the Controller of Customs or to the Minister of Finance when they adopted this policy. Is there any reason, when you consider the increase in the excise duties, that you should have placed the distiller in an invidious position as compared with the other feeders of cattle? It is known to those who have any practical experience that when the corn is imported and goes into the distillery, there is a certain amount of spirit extracted from the grain, the residue is used in feeding and fattening of cattle for exportation. So that for every 7½ cents that the distiller pays, he has, if my information is correct, about one-third—some distillers say two-thirds—of the value of that corn which is used for feeding purposes, there is a discrimination against him to that extent. The cattle feeder, pure and simple, imports his corn free; he feeds it to his cattle; he fattens them and exports them. The distiller imports his corn; he extracts from it the spirit; he sells the residue to the feeder of cattle, who feeds and fattens his animals for exportation—and there is a discrimination of three to three and a half cents against these cattle feeders, because they feed upon the residue from the distillery. Is there any justice in that? A man who goes to a distiller and says, "I will purchase what they call the slop from your distillery, and feed a thousand head of cattle' (I believe that is done in some of the distilleries in Toronto, and I do not think I am exaggerating when I say 1,000 head), why should that man have a discrimination to the extent of three and a half cents of the value of the corn imposed upon him, while his neighbour, who feeds his corn after being ground and cracked, uses it for the same purpose, and there is no discrimination against him? It may be said it is because it goes through the distillery. But what is the excise duty? It is $1.90, is it not?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—$1.90 I think.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it is $1.90 and he extracts three gallons of spirits from a bushel of corn—and I believe that is about the amount in the distillation—he pays $1.90 upon each gallon that is extracted from the corn, and then because he uses the balance in feeding, he is taxed for it in addition. If the government had applied a little practical knowlege to the working of the tariff, and to the effect of placing corn upon the free list and taxing the distiller, they might have easily avoided any frauds, and they would not have done an injustice to that industry in the country. If they had said, as 7½ cents is to the bushel, so is three gallons of spirits to the duty required, and then put it on the spirit, letting the corn remain where it is, the result would have been the same, the revenue would have been protected and the injustice to which I have referred, would not have been committed. There is no difficulty in arriving at a decision as to the proper proportions. That came under my observation when I was Minister of Customs. The starch manufacturers imported very large quantities of corn from the United States for the purpose of manufacturing into stock. They exported the article and they received a drawback of a certain proportion of the duty which they had paid upon the corn, and upon investigation we found that about five cents out of the seven and a half cents was expended in manufacturing starch; or, in other words, the glutinous matter, which constituted the properties of the starch, amounted to about five cents, the residue, two and one-half cents, was sold to the farmers and the people about the towns and cities where the factories were, and consumed by cattle and pigs, so that when we paid them the drawback we paid them only five-sevenths of the amount which they had paid, because the balance went into competition with the coarse grains of the country. The same principle might have been applied to the distilleries and the revenue protected in the manner in which I have pointed out. There is also another point in connection with that to which it is not necessary for me to refer, beyond the mere statement of the fact that the protection given to the corn growers in Canada has resulted in the production of a quantity almost sufficient for the purposes of the country, and had it gone on for a few years more, we would have raised all that we want in this country, of corn, just as good in quality if not superior to that which is produced in the United States. We are told that this industry cannot flourish in Canada. That is a mistake. I have seen corn in the south-western peninsula of Ontario superior to any I have seen in the states of Ohio, Illinois and Iowa, and I paid a good deal of attention, so far as I could while travelling by railway, to ascertain the quality of the corn, the extent to which it is grown and the quantities produced, and I hesitate not to say—and I venture the assertion that those who have been in the south-western portion of Canada, west of Toronto, will confirm the statement, that I make—that corn can be grown just as well and, at the present moment considering the price of grain and the price of wheat, more profitably to the farmer than any other crop. That is a bold statement, but I have it on the best authority—and as to the quality of the corn and the quantity which can be produced per acre, that we could in a few years be completely independent of the western states for that particular article. I know in my county that the duty on corn helped materially, the market price which the farmers received for their coarse grain, and for that reason I regret exceedingly that the government should have listened to a few interested cattle feeders, who have been, to use a not very elegant expression, howling for years for free corn. Those men are agriculturists and pretend to be, and perhaps are, farmers, but their whole time is devoted to the fattening of cattle rather than the cultivation of the soil, and on the pretense of being farmers they have induced the government to take this step.

I have not stated the case as strongly as I should have stated it. I find that two-thirds of the corn imported by the distillers is fed to the cattle, which would be five cents distinct discrimination against that class of feeders. I have under my hand a statement with reference to the English market for bacon, and the product of the hog in the English market, and it states distinctly—and it is a fact known to every one who has paid the slightest attention to that particular branch of trade—that Canadian bacon, Canadian hams and Canadian pork sent in a cured state to England—and I can safely say that there is no class of people in the whole world so fastidious in their taste as the English are—that our bacon, fed upon the product of our own farms, is a much finer quality of meat than bacon produced in the United States, and the result is that it brings from a half penny to a penny, and sometimes three half pence a pound more than United States cured meat. Multiply that by the millions of pounds that have been manufactured and cured in this country and sent to Europe during the existence of the protection upon the products of the hog—a protection which has kept the United States product out of this country—and you find that you have by this change inflicted enormous injury, pecuniarily speaking, upon the producers of those articles of food. But they say "Oh, we have not taken the duty off the other agricultural products; we keep that on in order to protect the farmer"——

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—"But we have relieved you (the agriculturists of this country) from that enormous burden of the iron duty which has been weighing you down for years. You are to get your nails a little cheaper; you are to get everything that is produced by the manufacturer and which you desire to use upon your farm, at a lower rate because we have lowered the duties on iron." They have lowered the duties on iron it is true, but they have taxed the farmer, for whom they have expressed so much solicitude in the past, an additional amount in the way of bounties to the iron producer and the iron manufacturer, or, in other words, they tell them "We have removed the duties from iron and thereby relieved you of that taxation, but we put our hands into your other pocket and we take an equal amount, although you cannot know it, in order to pay the bounties to the iron producers." I did not find fault with the system of bounties, but I was looking at the debates a couple of days ago, and my eye happened to strike a speech made by the hon. Secretary of State, and the expressions were something like this:

> Is it possible that we are never to stop this mad career of folly in paying bounties upon iron?

And yet we find the hon. gentleman sitting here to-day with a proposition before this House to increase the bounties in order to remunerate the iron producers on account of lowering the duty upon the very articles which they produce. That is another evidence of that extreme mad folly which characterizes some people when they are uttering sentences rather for effect than from any fixed idea or fixed principle. I compliment the hon. gentleman upon his conversion upon this particular point. He shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No conversion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And yet he accepts it. A man of high honour, a man who held strong political views upon the fiscal policy of the country, and more particularly a question so important as that of free trade and protection, would never sit in a cabinet and allow himself to become a defender of that which, while advocating, he is obliged to say he disapproves in principle. There is not a statesman of any standing in England, who, being a free trader, would ever think of remaining in a cabinet that was advocating and placing upon the statute book a protective policy; and when a man who aspires to the dignity of an adviser of His Excellency goes to him and says "True, Your Excellency, I am a free trader in my heart, and in my conscience, and from principle, but for expediency's sake and to retain my position, I will swallow all the convictions I ever had and remain here as your adviser, and do that which my conscience tells me I should not do." I do not claim too much virtue politically, any more than anybody else, but I do not hesitate to say that if I were placed in a position of that kind I should leave the cabinet. When overtures were made to me some time ago—I am not going to tell any particular secret just now—at a certain political crisis in my life, I might have adopted a policy which if I had consulted my own individual interests would have kept me in power some time longer, but I said no alliance of that kind will ever be made with me unless it is upon the principle of protection, which I have believed from my boyhood up, to be right and just; and as long as I am in political life I shall adhere to protection or go out of power. That is the position my hon. friend should take, and that is the position to which we desire to raise the standard of political statesmanship and rectitude in this country, and which every man should aspire to. We should have principles and act upon them. They may be wrong. The views I hold upon this question may be and are denounced to be heretical and not such as should govern a country. I differ from that. It may be my stupidity; it may be my ignorance of political economy, but conviction, the result of study, the result of watching the practical operations of the different tariffs in different countries, has led me to that conclusion, and until I see differently I shall adhere to that policy. I would not find fault with my hon. friend if he came forward and said, "Yes, I held those views at a certain period of my life, but I have changed them. I believe from experience and what I have seen that they should not be continued." That would be an honest, frank confession. I do not pretend to say for a moment that all the views which I held as a young man, I still hold to-day. There were many views which I held in reference to the governing of the country, and in reference to race, religion and creed, that I would not think of advocating to-day, and I say it frankly. If my hon. friend would do the same thing, we would respect him; but he says, "I am a free trader, I believe we are rushing on in a mad career in continuing this system of bounties on iron, taking the money out of the pockets of the unfortunate consumers who know nothing about it; and handing it over to a privileged class, but I hold to this place, now that I am here, and I will stick to it notwithstanding what my views may be. I do it upon the principle of expediency. That is, we cannot jump the fence all at once. That is, we have to crawl up and tumble over on the other side. I pity this country when it has to be governed upon such principles. I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice for what reason is binder twine kept among the dutiable articles until a certain period? Is it because a political friend bought the whole output of the Kingston Penitentiary, and to give him an opportunity of selling it at an enhanced price which, of course, they say will be exacted from the consumer as long as the duty remains on it? Did they forget the interest of the poor farmer who was suffering from having to pay a few cents upon a hundred pounds of binder twine in order that Mr. Hobbs, of London, a strong political partizan of the party in power, should have an opportunity of putting a few more cents into his pocket. I cannot conceive any other reason than that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Should Hobbs be cheated because he is a Liberal?

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he should not be cheated because he is a Liberal. I speak of keeping on the duty for the purpose of assisting a Liberal for a certain time, and making all others suffer. In the selling of this binder twine to Mr. Hobbs, why did not the free trade government at the time say to Mr. Hobbs: "In buying this you will have to compete with all the other binder twine makers, not only in Canada, but upon the continent." Then they would have treated him fairly. It would be, I admit, a dishonest act to have said to Mr. Hobbs, "Here are so many hundred thousand tons of binder twine that we want to sell; and should he have purchased it under a protective tariff and, the government, then, immediately after selling it, takes the duty off and make him lose by it—I quite agree that that would be a dishonest thing; but supposing that this had been an independent manufacturing establishment, instead of a government manufacturing establishment, do you suppose the government would have taken the individual manufacturer into consideration any more in the question of binder twine than other manufacturers where they have reduced the duty? Not a bit of it. And then we have the statement that has been made so often, that the national binder twine combination of the United States controls the output of the United States and also of Canada. Supposing that is true, it would not make a particle of difference to them. They can establish just such prices as they like until they get a competing establishment in this country. The charge is that the national binder twine combination of the United States combine, not only to keep up the price in the United States, but that they bought up all the twine of the manufacturing industries in this country, and, having control of that, they control the price; and it makes not a particle of difference to that Yankee institution whether it is made free or whether there is a high duty, because they can put the price just as they please until we have competing establishments. That is the only reason why the late Sir John Thompson, and the late government, adopted the principle of manufacturing binder twine in Kingston penitentiary; I suppose that was the reason which induced my hon. friend (Sir Oliver Mowat) who sits opposite me to establish a like industry in the central prison in Toronto I quite approve of that policy, and I know in my advocacy of it I called attention to the policy of the Ontario government in utilizing criminal labour in order to produce an article which could be furnished cheaper to the farmers of the country, than coming from individual establishments, and I think it was a very wise policy. So much for the binder twine. I have already called attention to the question of flour and wheat, the duty on which has been slightly lowered, but the product of these two articles has been kept precisely as it was. I can readily understand why the bounty upon pig iron was kept on when we know that some of the followers of the Liberal party in the lower House have large sums invested in the production of pig iron, particularly in the province of Ontario. I never forgot a remark made by a Liberal gentleman in London when I was there last summer. When I was discussing this very important question with him, I said, "I know you are a Liberal but you have been, so far as I know, all your life a protectionist. What are you going to do when the question of taking the duty off iron, and particularly pig iron, comes up?" He said, "Oh, not the slightest danger. Do you suppose I, who have got two hundred and fifty thousand dollars invested in that industry, am going to allow my party to take that duty off?" They took off the duty and raised the bounty, and the bounty is infinitely better to the producers than the higher duty, because for every ton of pig iron they produce they are sure of so much money put in their pockets. On the other hand, on account of the over production of this article in the United States, and more particularly in North Carolina at the present time, where iron ore, coal and flux are found together, and where they can produce pig iron cheaper than it has ever been produced in England, Germany or Belgium. I can easily understand why the manufacturer would prefer a bounty, which he is sure of and can put in his pocket, to any protection you can give him. Cottons are not much reduced and I am very glad of it. In going through the whole of this tariff, where you find there is scarcely any reduction made, you can trace it to interests belonging to the Liberal party. You may think I am speaking not only at random but very boldly on this question. My long connection with the Customs Department brought me in contact with manufacturers of every description, and the men who invested their money in these enterprises. Take the woollen industry on the contrary, and two-thirds of them—I am safe in saying more than two-thirds—in the whole Dominion are Conservatives, and they have been struck straight under the belt. The result may be that half the establishments, before many years roll around, will be out of existence. Such are the principles which seem to have guided the framers of this tariff, and I cannot look upon it in any way other than as an insidious device and scheme to upr ot ultimately the principle of protection in this country, and deceive the people who are to live under it under the guise of protecting the investments for the time being, and at the same time hold out the bait of preferential trade to other portions of the world which is not as a whole understood by everyone who reads it. In short the whole principle of the tariff, to my mind is nothing more or less than a fraud upon the face of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have listened with some interest to my hon. friend and what puzzles me more than anything else is to know that he should have made this complaining speech, beginning some time this afternoon, and ending now at nine o'clock, about a tariff with which he so cordially agrees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Partially.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has said that this is a highly protective tariff; but he does not complain of it on that account; that he congratulates the government for having adopted this protective tariff, and yet his speech from beginning to end is a complaint against the government in respect of the tariff. My hon. friend has said that the policy of the government consists of planks stolen from the platform of my hon. friend and his colleagues.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the bounty principle.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If that were so, I would say that it was a very foolish act, for if they have taken anything from the tariff of my hon. friend, they have stolen what is of very little use. They consist of very poor timber. They will break with those who trust themselves to them, and I think that the sooner the government, if they have adopted any portion of the trade policy of my hon. friend, can abandon that portion and act upon a policy that they can with greater confidence rely upon, it will be so much the better for the country. My hon. friend is not quite satisfied with the tariff after all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is correct.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was quite sure that I would say something with which my hon. friend would agree, and I am pleased that he is not satisfied, for if my hon. friend, knowing his extreme protectionist views, had been satisfied with the tariff, I would have come to the conclusion that that tariff had very little merit in it from my standpoint. I do not pretend that this tariff is all that I could desire to see it. In so far as the government have gone, they have gone in the right direction. The step which they have taken has been taken at a period when the business of the country was much depressed, when there was a great deal of distress, and when it was not in the public interest to create any very serious disturbance in the public mind, and what would have been possible if the country had been in a highly properous condition, and trade had been flourishing, you cannot expect to accomplish under circumstances that are altogether different. Now, in my opinion, we have taken a step in the right direction, and it will be the business of the administration and the business of the representatives of the people who sit behind them, and who seek to support the course which they have taken, and to which the entire party, for a long series of years, have stood pledged, to see that each favourable opportunity, as it is presented, is utilized to carry forward those principles of public policy in respect to taxation which in my opinion are in the public interests. My hon. friend says that the Secretary of State is all wrong. The Secretary of State holds views which, from an academic standpoint, are thoroughly free trade, and because this tariff is not in every particular based on free trade lines, then the hon. leader of the opposition claims that my hon. friend is politically an immoral man, because he has not gone further—that he has acted upon the principle of expediency, and that the principle of expediency ought not to govern the conduct of public men. Now, I do not agree with my hon. friend, I do not admit the soundness of the doctrine which he has laid down. We have very high authority for the doctrine of expediency as distinguished from mere abstract propositions. I remember on one occasion it was said to a disciple of our Lord, "Does your Master pay tribute to the Temple," and he said, "Certainly, my Master pays tribute," but when our Lord questioned him on the subject he asked was it sons of the household who paid tribute, or was it strangers. They said strangers. Then said he, "the children of the household ought to be free." "I am entitled on principle to be relieved from taxation, but nevertheless lest we offend, we will pay." Now that was the doctrine of expediency, and I think the doctrine of expediency, when properly applied, is always a proper doctrine to recognize, and the man would not govern long, and would not be fit to govern a country long, who failed to recognize the principle of expediency as applied to the affairs of government. Now let me take another case, a secular one. Long ago, before the principles of free trade were adopted in England, Lord Lansdowne, in a careful speech in the House of Lords, set forth those doctrines and principles which he had learned from Adam Smith. He stated what he considered sound principles of taxation and economy, but at the same time, while these were his views, he stated that the circumstances of the nation were such that it would be impossible to press those views for immediate adoption, and the principles set forth by Lord Lansdowne on that occasion, were quoted in one of the most celebrated speeches ever made in the United States Congress, by Daniel Webster in 1824. Any one who knows the circumstances under which free trade was adopted in England,—the bread riots, the scarcity of food, the distressed condition of the poorer population, especially in the cities,—knows that it was a state of social distress approaching very nearly to a revolution that made it possible to introduce the principles of free trade, and no one in this country, looking at the straitened circumstances of our people, the low prices for all products, the stagnation of business, the burdens incurred for public enterprises that have not proved profitable, and the high rate of taxation to which the people of this country have been subjected, in order to meet those liabilities, knows right well that it is well nigh impossible for the government under existing circumstances to go as far as the principles to which they subscribe, and which under other circumstances might have been, in a larger degree, adopted—I say it was impossible for them to go much further than they have gone. Now, the question of the tariff is, in this country, largely made an academic question, under existing circumstances, because when you look at the debt of the country, the amount of money that it is necessary to raise every year to meet the interest on that debt, the cost of government, and the various other purposes for which public revenues are necessary, it is impossible to do otherwise than to impose a very considerable measure of taxation, and so far as I know, there is no public man, of any prominence upon the Liberal side of politics, that has ever proposed that you shall abandon customs duties, and indirect taxes, and depend upon direct taxation as a means of revenue. I say that has never been proposed, no one has argued in favour of that position. My hon. friend opposite sometimes, and some of those who are associated with him confuse direct taxation and free trade; but I say they are not identical. I may be, and I am, in principle a free trader, but I had never supposed that it was in the public interest to depend upon direct taxes instead of customs duties for the purposes of revenue. There are many reasons I think in favour of the system of indirect taxation. In the first place you are paying your taxes in the way most convenient for you. You are paying the taxes when you are purchasing articles imported into the country. You pay at every season of the year. The amount of money that is constantly coming into the public treasury, is an amount that is not drawing a large sum of money from circulation. It is paid day by day and month by month as circumstances call for it, and the cost of collection is less than a direct tax would be. Supposing you were to impose a direct tax, how often in the year are you to collect? Once a year would produce a financial crisis every time you attempted to collect. If you collect it frequently, look at the enormous cost of collection and look at the very great inconvenience to which you subject the population, who are called upon to pay taxes, when you want it, and when they are not quite ready. When you examine the whole question, you will see that the indirect tax, if wisely imposed, is the cheapest form of taxation. It costs less to collect it, and produces the least friction. That is a wholly distinct question from the question of protection. If I wish to collect taxes upon imports—if I am looking solely to the question of revenue, I impose a tax on articles which will diffuse that burden over the population, as nearly as may be, in proportion to their ability to pay. I impose that tax in such a way that I will take from the pockets of the population only what goes in the public treasury. I can very easily suggest taxation which if you were to impose it on the community, would cause them to pay manyfold a larger sum, than the government receive. That tax is an incidental tax that goes to somebody else. It is not adding one dollar of wealth to the country; all that you have done is take from one without compensation a portion of his fortune and you have made it the property of another. That does not add to the wealth of the country, I am very sure. Then you have the third question which I mentioned at the outset, and that is the question of distress and disturbance. You do not give to the man who is suffering from disease just the same diet and the same regime that you do to a man who is in perfect health, and when a community have for a long period of years been subjected to a policy which is highly artificial and which has disturbed abnormally the production and possession of wealth, you cannot get rid of it in an hour. There are times, there are circumstances, when you can go very much further in making a change, than you can in others, and I say the circumstances existing at this moment considering the large liabilities that existed in the case of some of those manufacturing establishments—when you consider the extent to which the banking institutions of the country have been carrying many of those establishments, it was in the highest degree inexpedient to adopt a financial policy at the time whatever might be its merits in the abstract—it would be highly inexpedient to adopt a policy that would produce serious disturbance and create serious distrust. You might produce a financial crisis that would lay in ruins a great many institutions of the country, just simply on the ground of distrust. Now, I am not saying one word in favour of the principle of protection. I say in all these things I am not advocating protection. I am discussing these matters on broad grounds of state policy, and I am not giving you economic reasons which relate to the production of wealth, but economic reasons which relate to the security and confidence which the population ought to have in the condition of things, if you are not to produce very serious disturbance; and yet, because my hon. friend the Secretary of State has taken these matters into consideration and has allowed them to govern him for the time being, to enable him to reach the advanced point at which he now stands—a point of observation—until the more favoured opportunity arrives for going, with the public sanction and consent, a step further, my hon. friend thinks that he is all wrong. I do not think so. I do not think that what my hon. friend has done and what the government have done, is open to the objection which the hon. gentleman has pressed upon them in this regard. I do not think the course which the government have taken, if they were to come forward and declare this tariff as a finality, as the perfection of wisdom—as all the country ought ever to expect, with which they ought, for all time, to be contented—they would satisfy the just expectations or the real wishes of their friends; but no one has said that any minister has taken that position, and it seems to me that, under the circumstances, the course taken, was the one suggested by prudence and what the public interest requires under the circumstances. Then, my hon. friend says, if I do not misunderstand him, that we were very anxious at one time to discriminate against the mother country and to establish more extensive trade relations with our neighbours.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I did not put it in that way. I did not say you were anxious to do it. What I said was, you were prepared to accept reciprocal relations with the United States, even if it discriminated against England. That was the declaration of Sir Richard Cartwright and others of the party.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That would depend upon the circumstances of the country, whether it would be in the interest of England or not. I apprehend if you had round the whole border of the continent of America, say a 15 per cent or 20 per cent tariff, that the British government and people, the commercial classes of England, would prefer it even though there was absolute free trade between Canada and the United States—they would prefer it to absolute free trade with Canada, and a high protective tariff against them in the United States. I think that is perfectly certain and my hon. friend will see that whether what he has stated now as a proposition is an objectionable and an unpatriotic one or not, would depend altogether on the manner in which it was carried out. For myself I have never favoured unrestricted reciprocity with our neighbours in the sense of absolute free trade with them and high taxation against the mother country, and I have spoken many times upon the subject, and I think my hon. friend will not find any such propositon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think I accused you of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, and I am perfectly sure my hon. friend could not. Then the hon. gentleman will remember some two or three years ago—perhaps four—a resolution was proposed from our side in the House of Commons, declaring in favour of more favoured trade relations with the mother country, and declaring that the liberal manner in which the mother country deals with the people of Canada entitles them to the favourable consideration of the people of this country. Now, the government have proposed in this schedule, schedule D, attached to this tariff, certain reciprocal trade arrangements that apply specially in the first instance to the trade between Canada and the mother country. I listened to the debates in the other chamber and I suppose the views put forward there fairly represent the views of my hon. friend and that while they are ready to concede reciprocal trade relations to the mother country, it is not an unconditional arrangement, but unless the mother country were to concede something specially to this country, unless they not only give us reasonable and generous treatment, but unless they hit somebody else, discriminate against some other country, we would not be satisfied.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You do not apply that to me?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand my hon. friend wants the government of Great Britain to discriminate against others, in order to entitle that government to receive special considerations at the hands of the Canadian people.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will frankly say that I would like to do that, but I would give them preferential trade, even if they gave us nothing at all. I stated that in my remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, but I would take the other if I could get it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say that, but he has come much nearer to our view than any members of his party of the other House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not responsible for what they may think.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am simply getting a declaration from him to see how near he comes to our view, and in that declaration he will see we have not stolen any plank from the platform of the Conservative party. Now, that is a matter of very considerable importance. I am not, at this hour of the evening going into a discussion upon the question of law connected with that proposition. Whether the German treaty and the Belgium treaty bind us, or whether they do not bind us is a complex and difficult question of constitutional law, that would require much more time, if fully discussed, than I feel warranted in claiming at your hands here to-night: but let me say this; that the United States in all the arrangements which they have made with other countries, have never admitted they were bound by the most favoured-nation treaty stipulation to concede to those with whom such stipulations had been entered into the same rights and privileges commercially, that they concede to those countries with whom they had special reciprocal relations. Favoured-nation clauses similar in terms to those treaties now in controversy have been discussed between the government of Germany and the United States and on these occasions the United States have maintained the principle of public law as I have stated it, and the governments of Belgium and of Germany have both ultimately conceded the attention of the United States, and it does seem to me that when they have yielded that proposition and accepted the construction of public law for which the United States authorities have contended in respect to two treaties, almost precisely the same as these two, and as the provision of those two treaties which are in question, that it will be extremely difficult for Germany or Belgium to maintain that their treaty arrangements with the government of Great Britain ought to be construed and ought to be understood differently from the treaty arrangement with the government of the United States. When one of the commercial treaties with France was under discussion in parliament, the attention of the ministry was called to the discrimination of Portugal in favour of France, but a minister replied that that was under a special arrangement with France, and so did not violate the most favoured-nation treaty with Great Britain. Having said this, I need not go into a general discussion of the subject. I am perfectly aware that the Crown is the only medium of communication between the United Kingdom or the British empire and foreign countries. The Crown, in making treaty stipulations, enters into an agreement on behalf of the United Kingdom and on behalf of the British empire, as the case may be, and in these treaty arrangements the Crown is advised by the ministers, who are the paramount authority in the executive government of the empire. But you have this point to consider—in no case does the treaty operate under the government of Great Britain as a law. In every case a treaty is simply a compact between the sovereign authority of the United Kingdom and the sovereign authority with whom that treaty has been made. So no treaty has ever been held to interfere with the private rights of any party, whether he be a subject or a foreigner. No treaty has ever taken away any personal right from any party, and wherever a treaty stipulation has had the effect of altering any part of the law, it is inoperative until it is sanctioned by Parliament. Take, for instance, the various decisions that have been given in which the question of the convention between the United States and Great Britain has risen in reference to trade marks. Now, under the convention, the party who has his trade mark registered in one country is entitled to have that trade mark registered in the other. The English statute says that he must make application within four months. There are a few cases in which application has been made after the four months had expired, and in every instance the courts have said there is an engagement —there is a compact between England and a foreign state, it is the duty of the government to see that that compact is obeyed, but we have nothing to do with that; we have simply to interpret the law, and the law of the land says that unless application is made within four months the parties are not entitled to register. And so we will find that where the Crown undertakes to speak, the Crown in speaking for the United Kingdom subjects its advisers to the censure of parliament, but may not require the assent of parliament. If there is no alteration in the law required to give effect to the treaty, the assent of parliament is not necessary to the validation of what is done ; but the censure of parliament may turn out the government, and Mr. Gladstone mentioned a few years ago, that during the whole period of his life, and for some years before, there never had been a treaty entered into that had been successfully moved against in the House of Commons. That only goes to show with what care the ministers study the House of Commons and keep themselves in touch with the majority, and while that rule is perfectly proper so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, the rule, it seems to me and I humbly submit to the consideration of the House, does not apply when we are making a commercial treaty in which a dependency having a parliamentary government is interested. The Crown is advised by men who deal with the foreign relations, who have an exclusive right to advise the Crown with regard to those foreign relations. Our law does not operate nor can we pass a law which will operate more than a marine league from our shore, but when the imperial officer of Her Majesty deals with foreign relations, and in dealing with them, incidentally turns to a colony, which has self government, and imposes treaty stipulations without the authority of that province, and ties its hands, so that it cannot thereafter legislate, his acts do violence to the imperial constitution. Now, when the Crown in Council do that in England ministers risk the censure of parliament; and when the Crown acts for us, ministers are beyond our censure ; we cannot touch them, and so the very principle and spirit of our whole constitutional system requires, that when dealing with foreign relations, if they turn towards the colony, and invade its authority, and the exercise of that authority overrides and limits the power of the colony, we ought to be heard, we ought to be consulted, otherwise our rights as British subjects would be a delusion. We will be playing at parliamentary government, while everything we did would be simply done by sufferance, or, as a matter of forbearance. Now I am not putting forward any claim to the idea that we have any power to negotiate, or that the negotiation or compact does not bind the mother country, but I am pointing out that the constitutional doctrine which applies to them cannot in these matters apply to us. Let me say no rule is better settled than this, that the Crown in Council is subordinate to the Crown in parliament: so it may be asked, how can the Crown in Council tie the hands of the Crown in parliament? You cannot go further than this, that the Crown is a part of both and the Crown in parliament may say that I have already been advised and have on that advice entered into a compact which cannot be disregarded without dishonour; so I am bound and the parliament having acquiesced in what was done is also morally bound not to exercise the supreme authority of the state for the purpose of repudiation. But that does not apply to a colony having colonial self government. We never had the opportunity of opposing it. We have no power to censure: our authority does not extend beyond our own borders, and if I say again there is an attempt to invade that by the exercise of imperial authority, then we ought, in that case, to be consulted, and whatever view the imperial government may take of the effect of those two treaties upon the government and people of this country, that fact must have very great weight and it seems to me if denunciation is necessary—if notice and denunciation is necessary—notice and denunciation are pretty sure to be had. I shall not further trespass on the indulgence of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I intended, just before my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) rose to say a few words on one or two features of this tariff and in doing so now I shall not reply particularly to the remarks which have just fallen from the hon. gentleman. He has no doubt given this subject of preferential trade very great consideration, and I do not pretend to have given it such careful attention as he has, or to be as well informed on it as he is. However, as that is a prominent feature of this tariff, I may be permitted to say a few words as to what I conceive to be our position at this time with regard to that question. From the observations addressed to the House to-day by the hon. leader of the Senate, I have understood, if I heard him correctly, that up to the present time the British government have not signified their approval of the proposition contained in this tariff regarding preferential trade, or that they had not signified their disapproval of the treaty, or, in other words so far as the question stands since it was brought up in this tariff, there has been no expression in one way or the other by the British government upon it. Therefore, this question stands now exactly as it stood before this tariff was launched upon the parliament of Canada. How did it stand at that time? We had a very long and a very thorough discussion of this question in this chamber in 1894. An assemblage of statesmen from all parts of the empire held a conference here at that time. I was here at the opening of the conference, and that conference was attended by very able men from every important colony of the empire and it was also attended by a representative of the British government in the person of Lord Jersey. This subject of preferential trade was very fully discussed at that convention, resolutions were adopted and a report was made. One resolution, a very strong one, was carried unanimously in favour of preferential trade and urging the abrogation of these commercial treaties by which England had tied our hands with regard to preference within the empire itself. There was a report from Lord Jersey to the British government which I have now before me. In that report there were conclusions arrived at, which conclusions I take from the statement which my hon. friend the leader of the House made to us to-day are still binding and still in existence—at least our government has no intimation that the British government has changed its position which it occupied at the close of that conference in 1894. Based upon that report which Lord Jersey made to his government at the close of that conference, there is a circular despatch bearing date 28th June, 1895, not quite two years old—a despatch that was sent to all the governors of all the colonies, and which contains the deliberate views of the British government as they existed at that time, and as to which I infer from what the hon. Secretary of State has said there has been no change up to the present moment. These three conlusions will be found in this circular. First, I may say, the Marquis of Ripon in this despatch which I have before me announced as the policy of the British government, that they were not prepared to seek for the abrogation of the commercial treaties with Belgium and Germany and the favoured-nations clauses in other treaties. That was one decision that was arrived at. In section 40 of this despatch of the Marquis of Ripon I find the following words: "The general effect of these stipulations"—that is one of the German and Belgium treaties and the favoured-nations clauses which are all discussed, in regard to import duties as understood by Her Majesty's government are stated in a note on page five of Lord Jersey's report as follows:—

> As they do not prevent differential treatment by the United Kingdom in favour of the British Colonies.
>
> Secondly, they do not prevent differential treatment by British colonies in favour of each other.
>
> Thirdly, they do prevent differential treatment by British Colonies in favour of the United Kingdom.

Now, my view of it is that if the preferential clause of the tariff that we have before us means anything, it means a preference in favour of England, but in this despatch of the Marquis of Ripon it is clearly laid down as the third proposition that these commercial treaties now in existence do prevent preferential treatment by the British Colonies in favour of the United Kingdom. Then I find in another part of the same despatch that the Marquis of Ripon says, after referring to the imperial legislation which had removed restrictions on some Australian colonies which interfered with any arrangements of a differential nature that they might wish to establish between themselves or between any of the colonies and the empire, and while he explains this clause had been removed, he goes to say in clause 34 of this despatch:

> While, however, parliament has thus removed all legislative restriction on the colonies, so far as the imperial legislation is concerned, it will be necessary in order that Her Majesty's government may be in a position to give effect to their responsibility for the international obligations of the empire and for the protection of its general interests, that any bill passed by a colonial legislature providing for the imposition of differential duties should be reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure so as to allow full opportunity for its consideration from these points of view.

It follows on, section 35:

> For this reason, and in order to prevent inconvenience, it will be desirable, if such duties are included in a general tariff bill, that a proviso should be added that they are not to come into force until Her Majesty's pleasure has been signified.

These instructions which were sent to all the governments are, as far as we know at this moment, in force. They are the instructions that are in existence now, by the information that we have to-day received from my hon. friend. That being so, when the government of Canada introduced this tariff now before us, and which contains this provision for perferential duties, they introduced a provision which the Governor General of Canada was, by express instructions, forbidden to give the royal assent to unless it contained a suspending clause and was reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure regarding it. That was the position of affairs. There could be no other position than that, as far as this parliament is concerned. Members of the government appear to ignore all that. They talk in parliament, and their friends talk all over the country, and even to some extent in England, the press took up the idea, that they were all powerful in this matter and that they meant to do what they professed to do, that is, give preference to Great Britain in trade.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not based on preference.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Finance Minister came down with an amendment which provided that this preference which at first it was plain was only to reach England, and afterwards New South Wales or any country that had as low a tariff on an average as the tariff we are now adopting in Canada—that the application of this tariff should be made to other countries which had treaty rights with the empire. When this amendment was put in the tariff by the Finance Minister, he completely conceded the position which had been taken by the Conservative party in the country and in parliament with regard to this question, and the view which I have presented with regard to the instruction to the Governor General were entirely admitted to have full force and effect. I am sorry to say that I think the proposals of our government have been a leap in the dark from the information we have from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. When they brought down the tariff without the amendment subsequently attached to it, and even after that when they attached the amendment to it, they were still groping in the dark with regard to that subject, and I am sorry to say that, in my humble opinion, the government in pursuing the course which they did in regard to this matter, have injured rather than advanced the subject of preferential trade within the empire. There is another matter to which I wish to refer, that is, the combines clause of the tariff. I look upon that provision in the tariff as a very bad piece of legislation indeed. I had heard that the hon. leader of the House would have consented to a proposition made to him in the Senate and would deal with this question of combines in another way than by attaching it to the tariff, where it does not properly belong. I look upon it as a very bad piece of legislation in many respects. The hon. Secretary of State, when the hon. leader of the opposition asked him to-day to give an explanation of this combine clause, at once made an explanation which was the strongest possible argument against the clause. He commenced to deal at once with the immense sugar trusts there are in the United States. I asked him across the floor whether, from the fact of giving this illustration, this combine clause was intended to give us a remedy against the American sugar trusts. He said he did not mean that, but gave it as an illustration. I look upon this clause in relation to the very point he illustrated it with, as a very dangerous proposition. It is proposed that if the government shall have information that if one or two or three mannfactories in any particular line of industry in Canada should be found to have entered into any combine for the purpose of unduly enhancing prices, then the Governor in Council shall cause an examination or inquiry to be made, and if he finds these facts to be established, they will take off or reduce the duty. Suppose some of the sugar refiners of Canada were found to have transgressed against this law and an inquiry is set on foot and the government have information that the combine would come under the provisions of this law, what is the remedy? The remedy is to take off the duty, a remedy which, while it would be a punishment to them, would be a premium and a reward to the sugar trust of the United States, and because it would punish the Canadian manufacturers by allowing a foreign trust to come in and take possession of our markets. What is true of sugar, is true of other things as well. That is one strong point against the combines clause of the tariff—that the remedy which it proposed, even if it is a remedy, would be a punishment on our own people and a great reward and advantage to combines in the same lines of business in other countries But there is another bad feature in this clause, and that is that it will punish the innocent with the guilty. It may be found that one or two or three persons engaged in some industry that is very general in Canada, have transgressed this law. My hon. friends institute an inquiry, and the charge is found to be substantiated. As soon as that is done the duty is reduced or taken off and the consequences will fall, not on the offender alone, but also on the manufacturers all over the country who are not in that combine and who are working legitimately in their business. The effect of this clause, if it is put into operation, will be to punish the innocent for the sins of the guilty. There is another view of it, and that is that the government, in conferring any such power as this on itself, is invading the judicial functions which do not belong to them at all and which they never should possess. Under our system we have a judiciary for settling judicial questions, and if you put a stringent law against combines in the Criminal Code, the judiciary of the country will be called upon to deal with violations of that law as they are called upon to deal with transgression of the other laws of our country. But the gentlemen in the government take power to themselves to become the judges in this matter. They name a judge who makes a summary inquiry. It is not provided that there shall be an open inquiry with evidence and all that; nothing of that kind is proposed, but they name a judge who makes a summary inquiry, and they find one or two or three manufacturers in some particular line have entered into a combine, and then the government is clothed with judicial functions, to impose penalties which I say the government should never possess. I will put an authority before my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, an authority for whom he has great respect, as I have. I quote the Hon. Edward Blake on this question. He says:

> Now, sir, the general notion that the executive the legislative and the judicial departments of government ought to be so far as practicable separate and apart, is one held by many of the most eminent constitutionalists as a fundamental principle. There can be no doubt that the absolute union of these departments is neither more nor less than absolute despotism. Unite in one hand, I care not whether it be the hand of an autocrat or the hand of a council, the power of legislation, the power of adjudication and the power of administration and you have the most absolute despot that is conceivable. The separation of these departments the degree to which without over weakening or over complicating the action of the machine, you can separate them, mark the degree to which, in this aspect of a constitutional question, you have attained perfection.

Yet in opposition to this great authority and his opinions, which are the opinions of eminent authorities all over the world, my hon. friend in this combines clause, confers on the government of this country legislative, judicial and administrative functions. I am astonished that such a provision as this should be placed on the statute-book of our country; for, just as Hon. Edward Blake says, it leads to the establishment of a despotism. I shall be glad, indeed, if it turns out that this combines clause does not lead to something worse than that. My hon. friend the leader of the House says he does not believe it will be implemented at all; it is only put in the tariff for spectacular purposes.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Minister of Justice said he thought there would be very little need for it; that the very fact of its being there would keep people afraid, and render it unnecessary to put it into practical operation in very many cases. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition went further and said he believed it was never intended to be implemented, and was only put there for the purpose of humbugging the people and making them believe that the government were very earnest and zealous in the interests of the people. I hope my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is right, for there are very grave suspicions abroad in Canada that this clause has not been put there for a purpose of this kind, but to enable the government to exercise power and authority over the manufacturers which the government should not possess. I shall be very glad, indeed, if it is found that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is right—that the intentions of the government were, as he thinks they are, to put it there just for the sake of effect, and to make the people believe that they are very much against combinations in trade, and not intending to put it into practical operation. I am satisfied if an attempt were made to put it in practical operation the effect would be bad in every respect. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who I do not see, is not in his seat at this moment, entered into a long defence of the practice of expediency in politics. Whether my hon. friend is right or wrong, it is not necessary for me to consider just now, because I did not understand my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, to have charged the government with the comparatively small offence of expediency in connection with their tariff policy. I understood him to go a good deal further than that and charge these gentlemen with something which was not very honest with regard to their announcements of policy within the last few years. He charged them with advocating a certain policy in one part of the country and a totally different policy in another part of the country—with announcing policies on the trade question when they were in opposition which they have not paid any attention to in practice since they came into power. That was the charge, and, therefore, it was unnecessary for the hon. gentleman to enter into the long disquisition which he gave us in defence of expediency in politics. Whether he was right or wrong in that I am not going to discuss, but I want to put two or three matters of evidence before the House in regard to what the policy of the Liberal party has been on the trade question. The first evidence that I shall submit is an extract from the platform of the Ottawa convention in Ottawa in 1893. The following is a fair extract from that policy:

> We denounce the principles of protection as radically unsound and unjust to the masses of the people and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.
> This issue we unhesitatingly accept and upon it we await with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electors of Canada.

Only four years ago the Liberal party met in solemn convention, with my hon. friend the leader of the Senate as president, and adopted a set of resolutions, one of which was a declaration that the principle of protection was radically wrong and that any tariff whatever based on that principle would afford no relief for what they regarded as the unfortunate circumstances of the country. The party from that time forward up to the elections declared that that platform was their bible. From every platform they said: "No matter what Mr. Davies or Mr. Laurier or Sir Oliver Mowat may have said somewhere else, they do not speak for the party; the party spoke for itself at this great convention and that was the policy decided upon and that is the policy to which the Liberal party adheres." They came into power a year ago and, as far as it was possible to get political support, they got it on the strength of that platform. We have their tariff before us, and I ask the hon. leader of the House himself if he will venture the assertion before the country that the tariff is not based on the principle of protection. It is undoubtedly a protective tariff, and this government from first to last, in framing the tariff, has respected the principle of protection When they sent the Minister of Finance and the Controllers around this country consulting the manufacturers, what was that but recognizing the principle of protection. They consulted all these different interests to find out what would suit them and made the tariff, as they believed, to give them all the help that it was possible to afford in the carrying on of their business without going too far in the matter of protection. In fact, take the tariff as a whole, although there are instances in it in which they have almost despoiled and ruined industries—take it as a whole the principle of protection underlies it, and in adopting the tariff we are not charging them with the offence of expediency, but charging them with violating their most solemn declarations made to the people before the elections. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said "we found a state of things existing in this country; interests had grown up under this system of protection and we found that we could not make very radical changes." This was my hon. friend's doctrine, that it was not expedient to adopt free trade. My hon. friend ignored the fact that when the Liberal convention made this platform at Ottawa, when they were going round this country making speeches, some of which I shall quote from presently, the state of things existing in Canada was not essentially different from what it is at the present time. In fact, the conditions were altogether similar to what we have to-day. The industries of the country had developed almost as much then as they have now, and therefore there was no difference in the situation which presented itself when these gentlemen were making their promises from the situation to-day when they are violating them. The hon. premier of the country spoke at Newmarket in September, 1893, shortly after the convention at Ottawa, and denounced the system of protection. Then, he spoke at Victoria, the city represented in this House by my hon. friend opposite (Mr. McInnes) and in the course of his speech said:

If the Liberals were successful they would cut off the head of protection at once and trample on its body.

Hon. Sir Richard said:

Our policy from first to last has been to destroy this villainous protective system by free trade, revenue tariff, or continental free trade.

And again:

Sir, they demand our policy. Well, sir, they shall have our policy, and here I believe I speak for my hon. friends beside me. Our policy is death to protection and war to the knife to corruption.

No Drummond Railway deals to be thought of then! We have death to protection in this tariff before us, and death to corruption in the Drummond Counties Railway deal with a vengeance, Sir Richard continued:

Sir, we strike and we will strike for liberty and freedom from this system of protective taxation, and I tell the hon. gentlemen that we will not rest until the slavery that they have imposed upon us has became a thing of the past, and until Canadians are as free as Canadians ought to be, free to make the most they can of the opportunities God has given them.

And again:

There is no Canadian manufacturer who need be afraid to face the competition of the world. Our policy is death to protection. There are two lessons which I think the Reformers of Canada should learn. One is presented for our example and warning in the fate that has befallen the Democratic party in the United States. It shows to all who choose to read the signs of the times that when a party places itself at the head of a great popular movement, if that party tenders the people a stone instead of bread, it is half-hearted in the prosecution of the great aim it sets before it, and will be deservedly swept out of power by the very people who would have sustained and advanced it.

At Pembroke in 1890 he said:

I say our protective system was a huge mistake in so far as it was honest at all and in so far as it was not honest, it was a huge scheme of robbery.

A small ring and clique of combiners and protected manufacturers, who, as I have told you, have been permitted for years past to make a prey and plunder of the people of Canada.

And at Meaford in 1890 he said:

I stand by the declaration I have made, that protection is nothing more or less than deliberate legalized and organized robbery, and more than that if you do not stamp it out it is the very high road to political slavery and industrial slavery afterwards.

Those were the expressions of Sir Richard Cartwright at that time. Here is what Mr. Davies said at Middleton in September, 1893:

The convention of the Liberal party which was held at Ottawa during the present summer has emphasized more clearly than ever the differences between the policy of the Liberal party and that of the government. In ordinary times the differences between the two political parties are frequently these between the ins and the outs, but there come times when little party issues disappear, and the great historical parties of the country divide upon some vital issue which affects not only the present but the future interests of the people. To-day the people of Canada stand face to face with such an issue, and the next contest is to be one between free trade and protection. * * * * The policy of the Liberal party is the reform of the tariff by the elimination from it of every vestige of protection. In our convention platform we denounced the protective system as unfair, unjust and burdensome.

I am in a position to know, and I do know, that that speech of Mr. Davies was not reported exactly at the time, but after his return to Charlottetown it was written out by Mr. Davies in his office and furnished as a carefully prepared statement of what he said at Middleton. The speech from which I am giving this extract was not of that nature in which he might be led into making random statements from the excitement of a public meeting. It was the deliberate preparation of the hon. gentleman and supplied to the Halifax paper in which it appeared.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—What paper?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Halifax Chronicle, September, 1893. I come now to 1895, when the Hon. Mr. Laurier took part in an election in the city of Montreal. He addressed a meeting in Windsor Hall at the very end of the year, when he was assisting in the election of James McShane against our colleague, Sir William Hingston. He said:

There are two articles which are raw material of every manufacturer.

That is just what my hon. friend the hon. leader of the opposition pointed out to-day in his remarks:

And those articles are coal and iron, and are they free? If you have a revenue tariff the object will be to develop the country and all raw materials should be free under such a tariff.

This was a direct bid for the support of the manufacturers in Montreal on the policy that coal was to be made free by the Liberal party if they got into power. This was only a few months before the general election. This tariff which we have with a duty on coal was introduced, and even with the duty as it stands to-day is a fitting answer to this promise which the hon. leader of the government made in Montreal only a few months before the election—that if his party came into power the raw material of the manufacturers, these articles of coal and iron, were to be admitted free. I do not intend to pursue these observations any further. All I have to say is that the Conservative party have no reason to be dissatisfied with the course which the government have pursued with regard to this tariff, upon the whole. The greatest compliment and the greatest flattery you can pay to a person is to imitate him, and they have so far imitated the Conservative party that they have paid the highest possible compliment to them. How they are going to settle accounts with their own friends who believed they were fighting for free trade or a revenue tariff is another question. These people have asked for bread and have received a stone. That is a matter of reckoning between the hon. gentlemen and their supporters in the country. As far as the provision in the tariff with reference to combines is concerned, certainly I do not endorse the tariff. What I find fault with in the tariff is that it is strongly protective in spots, while in other respects it goes to almost the other extreme. It does not adhere to any correct principle in its general features; I have that very strong fault to find with it. We might take stronger ground by dwelling upon the instances—and there are not a few—in which this tariff has injured the manufactures of the country. We might make more political capital by dwelling on these features, but we have to acknowledge the fact, which is apparent on the face of it, that this is essentially a protective tariff and that the Liberal party, by adopting this tariff, have not only fallen into the error that Sir Richard pointed out, and the same mistake which the Democratic party fell into in the United States, but they have gone further than the Democratic party in adopting the policy of their opponents. The preferential clause in the tariff I feel has been ill advised. It has been taken as a leap in the dark. Hon. gentlemen are forced to acknowledge that, and that they had no authoritative information when they dealt with it, and they are without information at the present time. The preferential clause has been a leap in the dark, and the combines clause in the tariff is bad legislation in every way you look at it. It opens the door—I do not say my hon. friend the leader of the House would be guilty of anything of the kind, I am not insinuating anything like that—but possibly there are members of this government who might not be above, through their heelers and party friends, intimating to manufacturers in this country that if they do not do certain things which the government and their friends require of them, this punishment under the combines clause may be visited upon them. It puts a dangerous power in the hands of the government. It bestows upon them the power of being judges, legislators and administrators of the law, which power they should not possess. I look upon it as a dangerous clause from beginning to end, and I am sorry my hon. friend did not see his way to remove that from the tariff and place it where it should be, in the other statutes of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—After all the great guns have been discharged I do not know that it is a miss for me to claim the indulgence of the House for a few minutes. I would not have done so had it not been for a little article which appeared in the Journal reflecting upon the members of the Senate who voted against the government on the railway bill. So far as I am concerned, I have made it a point since I have had a seat in this chamber, to be a very good listener. I never crave indulgence from this House to make long speeches. I have contented myself with listening to remarks made by other hon. gentlemen, and when they have got through I have considered the whole matter and voted as I thought right. I might say, in regard to that article which reflected upon the senators who gave a party vote, as they say, as far as I am concerned I deny it in toto. I do not find much fault with the Journal which published that statement, but I regret that that opinion was expressed by the hon. leader of the House and his associates at the opening of the debate. It was hardly fair to stigmatize any man who voted against them and who might have been formerly a Conservative or may be now a Conservative, as a partisan who had given his vote on party lines.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not charge that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes, at the commencement of the debate.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, I stigmatized nobody and have not done so yet.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It has been stated publicly, and it has been stated on the floor of this House, and it is to that statement that I take exception, and for that reason I offer a few remarks this evening. When I was appointed to this Senate I did not seek the position. The seat was offered to me and I declined it. I felt that a seat in this body was a very responsible and honourable position for a man to occupy, and I had only had a short experience in the Commons at that time. However, I was prevailed upon to accept, and when I did accept the seat I felt the full responsibility of the position I was about to occupy as a senator. I felt that we were an independent branch of parliament, and whatever our opinions might be on political questions, it was our duty to give a fair and impartial vote in the interests of the country whose servants we were. From that day to this I have endeavoured to discharge that duty in an honourable and creditable manner. I felt it was my duty, as a man, to do that which was right and honourable, and I felt that, as a member of this body, I must do that which was right and honourable for the dignity of this honourable House. And I have done that on all occasions. It is in the memory of hon. gentlemen that when the late Sir John Macdonald—who had the respect of every public man—introduced a measure in the other House respecting the building of the Harvey and Salisbury branch, I joined the Reformers and voted against the government, and helped to defeat the bill. It is well known that when the Insolvency Bill was before the Senate in charge of the hon. gentleman who is now leader of the opposition, we told him that we would not support the measure, and the result was when he found his Conservative friends were opposed to it he withdrew the bill. Even down to the election of a messenger, I have always taken an independent, straightforward course, and acted upon my own judgment. When journals or parliamentarians undertake to say that I voted on party lines, they say that which is false, whether the statement is made in ignorance or maliciously, I do not care what way they put it. As far as I am concerned, I am in favour of protection. I believe it is the policy best calculated to advance the general interests of Canada, and I always supported that policy when I was in New Brunswick. I was a straight protectionist there, and since I have been in the North-west, I have remained a protectionist still. I am as much a protectionist to-day as I ever was in my life. But ever since the question of protection has come before the country, the party at present in power have been decrying that policy. They have been saying all sorts of things against it. In the North-west they have been running down that policy from the very day I went there till the present time. They have been calling it a ruinous policy, and they attributed every misfortune which a man had in life to the National Policy or the Canadian Pacific Railway. Even a leading member of the government of that country said he would refuse to encourage immigration to this country as long as the National Policy was on the statute-book. The present government occupy a different position from that occupied by the late government, because the Conservative party never ran down the country and never complained or found fault with it, and never blamed the National Policy for bad crops and never condemned the Canadian Pacific Railway in unmeasured terms. But now the opposition are in power they will not do as they did before. Therefore, I think the country is now in the beginning of an improved era, and its prospects are better than ever before. During the last election I felt some little hesitancy about taking any part in it: but when that convention, which has been referred to, was held here in the Russell House, and when I saw senators occupying a position in this independent branch in parliament taking part in that political affair I ventured to do the same thing. I took an active part in the last election in the North-west Territories, in the riding where I live, and I have to say that the party for whom I was working was defeated by a tremendous majority. The other candidate was elected by over a thousand majority. I attended a public meeting addressed by the Hon. Mr. Laurier, in which he denounced protection in unmeasured terms as a piece of high-handed robbery. He said if he were in power he would support free trade as they had it in England. These are the very words he used. He denounced protection in language which I shall not undertake to repeat here, and other members of his party and at present in the House of Commons described the National Policy as the national poultice drawing the money out of the people's pockets. The member representing the Reform party from East Assiniboia in the other House denounced protection all through the riding in unmeasured terms. He told them he was in favour of free implements, and in favour of a reduction on the various articles the farmer required, and he was decidedly opposed to increasing the burdens of the people. His declaration of policy was received with tremendous applause and carried every place he addressed. The people had been educated up to this point, "We must have tariff for revenue only; we must not increase the burdens of the people; we must reduce the national debt, or at least not increase it." Upon that policy that gentleman was elected to the House of Commons. When I came home to my town, and found the country had been carried by such an overwhelming majority in favour of the policy of the present government, I made up my mind that I would not set up my opinion against the majority of the people. I said to myself: "The free trade party have carried the day; they have declared for a different policy, and I am not going to set up my opinion against them; and, although I do not believe in that policy, and if the government will introduce a policy of tariff for revenue only, or free trade—I do not care what it is so long as they do not increase the burdens of the people, and will give us freer goods—I shall support that government." That is the policy I came down this session to support; and that is the policy which I announced to the people I would support, although I do not believe in it. I said, "I will bow to the will of the majority, and the majority in the North-west should they endorse that policy." But what do I find? In place of carrying out that policy, they have done the very reverse; and, if ever there was an indorsement of the policy of the late government in regard to the question of trade, the hon. gentlemen on the other side have endorsed it. It is a hundred times stronger than if the Conservatives had come into power and introduced this bill. I am not going to discuss the merits of protection and free trade. These measures have been discussed in both Houses. The Drummond County Railway Bill is the first question that has come before us on which we could pronounce. We cannot amend the tariff, but we could vote on the railway deal because it was a proposition to increase the burdens of the people and the taxation of the country: and so far as the Intercolonial Railway Extension Bill is concerned, I voted upon my own conscientious convictions. Party had nothing to do with my stand on that question. I do not care a snap who rules the country; I do not expect any favours of the government, and all I care for is the good of the people, and I advocate the policy which I think will be best for the country, no matter who introduces it. I intended to support the government if they introduced a policy which would be for the benefit of the people, but they have not done so. Why should they complain if I voted last night against a measure which was directly opposed to the principles which they declared before the people they would adopt? It is very unfair to denounce a man who, like myself, came down to support the policy the hon. gentlemen opposite had promised to put into force. If they had introduced such a policy they would have had no stronger supporter than myself; but when they did not do so, I made up my mind to oppose them. I remember very well, at the time of Confederation in New Brunswick, that the Intercolonial Railway was a great factor in the election. There were two routes spoken of, the valley of the St. John River and the North Shore route. The gentleman advocating the North Shore route carried the day, and the road was built by a route it should never have taken. If it had gone by the valley of the St. John River, it would have been a trunk line to Montreal; but it was taken round by a route where there was no traffic, and nothing for it to do, and it has been run at a loss, and will never be any use. That railway is run at reduced rates. If I have a carcass of beef to ship out in the North-west, I have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway charges, which are based on commercial transactions. But I have been told that on this Intercolonial Railway they carry coal and lumber at very cheap rates of transportation, and that the haul was too great, or the charge too little. If the road had been built by the route where it should have gone, it would have been a paying institution; but if you increase the length of it now, you are increasing opposition to private enterprise, and I do not think it is a good thing. With reference to the matter of binder twine, the government would have better continued it as they had binder twine made by prison labour. A railway is a great institution, and it is hard to keep it running. They all declare a very small dividend, and to my mind it is not in the interests of the country to increase the expenditure in lengthening the Intercolonial Railway. If we were given an opportunity to vote on the question, I would vote a thousand times over to sell it to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and have two competing lines to the maritime provinces, rather than to allow the government to come in and build a competing line. I say it is neither fair nor just. I think it is an unjustifiable expenditure of money, and I was bound to vote against it. I am not ashamed of my vote. I think it was a good one, based upon the principle the government themselves laid down, that it was wrong to increase the burdens of the people by voting away public money in an extravagant manner. They promised us cheap coal oil, binder twine and barbed wire. In looking over the list in this bill I find they have taxed the raw material, but are going to allow the barbed wire to come in free. That is a policy I cannot understand. In regard to binder twine they have done the same thing. They tax the raw material and let the manufactured article in free. The people have been educated up to this matter in the North-west Territories for a number of years, and I may say now that they are a greatly disappointed people: they feel that the Government have not carried out their pledges. I would like some hon. gentleman on the government side to tell me one pledge they have carried out. I do not agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition, who says he is satisfied the tariff is a good one. I am dissatisfied with it because they have not carried out their promises in framing it, and we cannot ascertain now which is the best tariff. I am dissatisfied because they deceived the people; and if we vote against them now it is because they have not carried out their promises and they are not entitled to support. The 25 per cent reduction in the tariff is a matter that is very amusing to me. The hon. gentleman says they passed a resolution which has brought great fame to the country, and more fame to the Premier of Canada: that is the preferential trade clause. I cannot understand how England can give them any credit for it at all. It is explained to us that on all articles on which they want England to come under the preferential clause, they raise the duty to such an extent that the reduction under the preferential clause will simply bring it down to where it now is. Where there is any advantage to England in that is something I cannot see at all. I am very much astonished at that. I did not rise to-night to make a speech, because I am satisfied to listen; but I rose in my place to say that, although I believe in the principle of protection, I came down to Ottawa to support the government if they introduced a free trade policy or revenue tariff, as I had told my friends I would. If the government will make a reduction in the tariff, I will not offer any factious opposition, because so many people in the country have endorsed the policy of free trade which the government advocated before the election. But I am sorry to say that I cannot support the government now, because they have not kept their promises. And if there is anything for which the Liberal party should be denounced, it is the deception they are practising on the people of this country. The temperance people are being deceived. I heard the promises made by the Prime Minister and his associates to the temperance delegation in the railway committee room. The Witness has said that they made no promises, outside of the promise made in the Speech from the Throne; but I heard the Prime Minister state there, emphatically and in unmistakable language, that he would this session prepare legislation to provide for taking a vote of the people on the question, and that if it was carried he would pass a prohibitory law. They have deceived the prohibition party of the country, and as such they are deserving of condemnation, because it is wrong to deceive the people. And they are going to add on to the plebiscite the question of taxation, in order to divert public attention from the true issue of prohibition. I only have to say now, that so long as I am here I intend to give a straight vote on the merits of measures as they are presented. I took particular interest in this Intercolonial Railway question: I went to the House of Commons, to the Senators' Gallery, when it was under discussion in the other chamber, and sat the whole evening through. I listened to the speech of the Minister of Railways from start to finish. I have a great regard for him, he being a countryman of mine. I also listened to the address in reply, and I have listened to the arguments in this House: and if I had no opinions of my own, if I had no knowledge of my own, if there were no pledges being violated, I would, upon the arguments I heard advanced for and against that measure, decide that it was a bad measure, and feel justified in voting against it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There are a few observations which I think I ought to make on the subject before the House. With reference to the speech of my hon. friend who has just sat down, I am glad to have his expression of independence of party bias, and I have no doubt that what he has stated is his honest conviction and his honest intention. He has remarked, as other gentlemen on that side of the House have remarked, upon what is done by the tariff in favour of preferential trade with England. He has told us, as other gentlemen have told us, that what we have done amounts to nothing whatever, that it is of no use to England, and that it is astonishing it should be acceptable there. Well, it is certainly astonishing that all England should regard what we have done as a great advance, if there is nothing in it. Every party and class of the people there has taken that view, and it seems most extraordinary that that view should be taken there, if it amounts to nothing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the reference to my remarks?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was particularly referring to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley. I do not remember exactly what my hon. friend who has just interrupted me said upon that point. Most intelligent people will think there must be some mistake on the part of those who take such a view of what we have done in the tariff as to make out that it gives no advantage to England and is not worth anything. My hon. friends on the opposite side are extremely concerned about the consistency of the Liberal party and the Liberal leaders. Our reputation appears to be very dear to them, and they extremely regret that we have been inconsistent, even if the inconsistency is in their own direction. They lament and mourn because we have adopted some views of theirs, as they say. That ought to be a matter of rejoicing instead of mourning, if the fact were as they have stated. Without entering into the details of the changes we have made, we certainly have made very great changes. They say this is their system, but we certainly have made enormous changes in their system: and, while we have not abolished the duties, while we retain some vestige of protection, the general effect of the changes we have made is certainly in favour of free trade. Free traders do not say that the tariff as we are to have it now is just what they would desire. I do not know that any member of the government will say, on a matter on which there may naturally be considerable difference of opinion, that the tariff is just what he might have preferred. But we are free traders; we believe free trade is the true principle; we think it is to be regretted that a different system has been introduced into this country, and we can only move in what we regard as the right direction; we cannot have free trade absolutely. Our tariff goes in the right direction; I do not think it can be denied—it certainly cannot be denied with effect—that there is a great deal of leaning towards free trade in the tariff which we have prepared. Extracts have been read from what is reported to have been said by various speakers amongst the Liberal leaders in favour of free trade; but no man in a speech discusses the whole subject. These speeches from which sentences have been read to us may or may not have been a full discussion of the whole subject. But when we spoke of free trade, no man imagined we were not to have a revenue tariff. We cannot have a revenue tariff without duties. No sensible person has ever imagined that we could have perfect free trade in this country. We must have a revenue tariff at all events; and yet the expressions which have been read here would imply that the speakers meant to say we should have no duties at all, and that the trade was to be perfectly free. That could not have been their meaning; nor could any one have so understood them. It is only lately that I have had to do with federal politics. When I was urged to enter federal politics some fifteen months ago, I wrote a letter to the Liberal leader, Sir Wilfred Laurier now, stating what I considered to be his views and what were my own views on that subject; and that letter was quoted in all the newspapers in the province, and was accepted by Liberal newspapers as containing all that Liberals meant by free trade, and what their general politics were on that subject. I stated there that I was a free trader; that I, in common with Sir Wilfred Laurier himself, to whom my letter was addressed, believed it was a misfortune that a protective system had ever been introduced here; but that it had been introduced eighteen years ago; that the people had stood by it for eighteen years; that special interests had arisen on the faith of the system which the people had adopted and had sanctioned so long; and I thought it unjust that protection should be suddenly abolished, that the interests arising in this way should be wholly disregarded; and I expressed my satisfaction at learning that my leader saw his way to give the country a large measure of free trade, without unnecessarily injuring these parties who had built up an industry, perhaps at considerable expense, upon the faith of the policy which the country had adopted, unhappily adopted, as I believed, but still had adopted. Statesmen must look at things as they are. It is not statesmanship to ignore actual facts. We had to consider that these interests had arisen. We had to consider that for eighteen years that policy had been upheld by the people, and we had to modify our tariff from what we would like with reference to those circumstances; and that is what we have done. Without pursuing that matter any further, let me just say a word upon the clause in the tariff which is before the House now with respect to combines as they are called. That there have been most injurious combinations of persons engaged in one trade or another, I suppose nobody denies.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE— In Canada?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, in Canada, and also in the United States, and we have legislated about the matter; we have legislated in order to prevent the wrong in years past, and to make it punishable: but neither in the States nor here has any means yet been found to prevent those combinations. They are bad things;

nobody can deny that they are bad things—that is to say there may be combinations which are bad. The clause in the bill describes and defines the combinations which we want to prevent as those which "unduly enhance" the price of goods, and "unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturer to the prejudice of the consumer." A combination which does that is certainly a bad thing, and it is most desirable to prevent it. No method yet adopted has remedied it. My hon. friend says we ought to provide some punishment for it, and some punishment that the courts can enforce, and that they need not come before parliament at all. We have laws on the statute-books now, but they are evaded. The object of the clause is not punishment in that way. But it occurred to some of us who were studying this question that if persons who were engaged in these combinations knew that the effect of their success would be, or might be that the duty on which they relied, and which enabled them to form those combinations, might, by an Order in Council, be reduced or abolished altogether, that would be much more effectual—and it was well worth the experiment—than any punishment which could be inflicted by the courts. My hon. friend (Mr. Ferguson), in his very clear and forcible speech—as all his speeches are clear and forcible—spoke of the combinations which this article of the bill dealt with, as being combinations of two or three or four people. I do not think my hon. friend ever suggested the number four. He spoke of two or three. Where a multitude of people engaged in a trade my hon. friend thought the bill was intended to attack a combination of two or three in that great multitude. That is not the purpose of it at all. Such a purpose would be open to all the observations my hon. friend made in reference to it. But the object is different from that. My hon. friend says that a judicial function is by this clause imposed upon the government. My hon. friend is quite wrong. The judicial work is to be performed by a judge.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Not all of it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The whole of the judicial part. The object of the clause is not a punishment of the offenders: it is the protection of the consumers. It is providing for reducing the duty and thereby preventing the evil that arises from a combination taking an injurious advantage of the duty. What the clause has in view is to prevent the evil, the mere punishment is nothing. We want to prevent the evil from occurring, and mere punishment does not amount to anything for this purpose. All experience shows it is nothing. It accomplished nothing in the States, and it accomplishes nothing here. This is a new experiment we are trying. Where the evil cannot be met by existing laws it is for the legislature to say "How can we change that and prevent the evil that is going on." This provision occurred to us, and when it was announced it was received with universal favour throughout the whole Dominion in the first instance, though afterwards it was attacked. But I think even now it is regarded by the Conservative party throughout the country, as well as the Liberal party, as a most desirable provision, and one which will have a good effect and will accomplish its purpose better than any previous laws which were provided for it. What the judge has to do is to take evidence and then decide whether such trust, combination, association or agreement to unduly enhance the price of the article, to unduly promote the manufacturer's interest at the expense of the consumer—to decide whether a trust, combination, association or agreement with that object exists. That is the judicial work. But then the injurious combination may be proved to exist, and yet it may be an inexpedient thing in the public interest for the duty to be reduced or abolished. A judge would not be a proper tribunal for determining whether the duty should be reduced or abolished. There is no legal principle upon which he could decide a matter of that sort. Then, again, take the case which my hon. friend put several times about there being only a combination of two or three of a great multitude in the trade, there should be no reduction there and there would be no occasion for it. It is where there is a combination embracing nearly all in the trade perhaps; and that is where it is effectual. If only two or three of many combine there is no practical harm done, and it is necessary to have some authority to determine whether the combination is broad enough and important enough to have this remedy applied and whether it is or is not a case in which more evil than good might not arise from executive interference. This is not a judicial power but a political power and nothing else. You must trust the government of the day with a large amount of power in a great variety of things, and such a matter as this among the rest. The government is responsible to parliament and responsible to the country, and in such a case as this there in no danger of any unreasonable exercise of this power. The leader of the opposition has said that he thinks the clause will do no harm. He does not feel at all alarmed, though my hon. friend from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) seems alarmed, lest a bad use should be made of the power by the government of the day. If you give no power to a government that they may abuse, then you give them no power at all, and we need not have a government. We must run the risk if risk there is. The people choose the government of the day and on them rests the responsibility of choosing persons who will not abuse their powers. But in this case the power cannot be abused. I am satisfied the clause is well worth the experiment. I believe the effect of it will be to prevent some of the combinations which otherwise would take place. There certainly will be secret combinations. Heretofore there have been openly avowed combinations, but probably we shall not have any such combinations hereafter, by reason of this clause. The clause does not abolish previous provisions of the law in reference to the punishment of combinations, but this is a different matter altogether. I am glad to know that there is no idea of striking out the clause, for it is an experiment of great importance which I think will have the effect intended and which has for its object the removal of a great evil.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to make one or two observations on the clause now under the consideration of the House. It appears to me this is a provision in the bill that is really at the present time unnecessary. I do not consider, from all that I have heard and read, that there are any injurious combinations in Canada to-day. I believe that where there is a combination as a general thing among manufacturers in this country, it is only brought about from absolute necessity and to prevent bankruptcy. I know an industry that was flourishing apparently some few years ago: I refer to the grey cotton industry, and I know too that they had a sort of combine that they would not sell their cotton below a certain price. And what was the cause of it? The cause was that they were manufacturing a lot of cotton that they could not find a market for, and the different factories were cutting prices at such a rate that it became a question of the survival of the fittest. They therefore found it necessary to come to an arrangement, and what was it? That they would put their prices at such a figure as would secure them five per cent profit a year. Is that an injurious combination? Nothing of the kind. What was the result of that combination between the cotton manufacturers? They held together for a few months, and one weaker than the rest said: "I have got a lot of cotton and cannot find a market, and unless you allow me to put it on the market at a low price I must go bankrupt, and then it will go on the market and sell at a low figure. You must either let me sell it cheaply or advance me money on it, or buy it from me." One after another these mills were allowed to sell out a lot of cotton at a cheap rate, and finally a syndicate was formed to buy up the cotton mills and a lot of money lost. It will be time enough to make provision for this when it is demonstrated that there is an injury. I look upon this clause as placing a dangerous power in the hands of the government, I care not how honest they may be: and when we find a party going to the country with the declaration of a certain policy, and then coming into power and going quite contrary to their declaration previous to their election, we have a right to suspect the honesty of their intention in reference to public questions. It is placing in the hands of the government of the day, I do not care whether it is Grit or Tory, a power which the government should not have. What is the fact? We meet in session here every six months, and are in session from three to five months, and if there is any injurious combination in the country it is only going to exist four or five months until parliament can provide a remedy. It is a matter which should be discussed openly before parliament, and parliament is the power which should deal with it. The government introduce their tariff and give their reasons for the changes in the tariff, and I submit it is parliamnt only that should take the final act in reference to the fixing of the duties upon imported articles or the protection of the public in that regard. I wish to make one other remark bearing upon this same question. It has been stated—whether it is true or not I cannot say—that to a large extent there is a great deal of corruption carried on during elections in Canada, to the disgrace of Canada, I must say. In the little province from which I come in years gone by we knew nothing of that kind—but we know there are large amounts of money, election funds collected or supplied by men of means to both political parties at the present day. I have been told—I do not know whether it is true or not, but I will give the House the benefit of what I have heard—that there are certain large contributors to election funds who have contributed to both political parties during the last election. Is that true? If that is true the parliament of Canada is getting into a dangerous position, and what is the combine resolution going to do? It is going to place in the hands of the government of the day the power to say to an industry in this country: "If you do not supply us with the necessary funds to carry the election we will declare you a combine." I say the industries of the country should never be placed in that position by the government of the day, or any other party, and for that reason I think we are justified in asking the government to take that dangerous clause out of the bill before us. It is placing the manufacturers of this country in the hands of the government, which should not be done. It should be at the disposal and at the will and disposition and decision of the people's representatives when they meet in parliament every year.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second and third times and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, 25th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (144) "An Act further to amend the Inland Revenue Act." He said: The principal object of this bill is for the purpose of imposing increased duties on spirit. The duties at present are $1.50 on certain classes of spirit and that duty has been increased to $1.90, and a corresponding increase takes place in duties on a scale which has been in operation for some time. On spirit now dutiable at $1.52 the duty hereafter will be $1.92, and on spirit now at a duty of $1.53 the rate hereafter will be $1.93. There are some details of the bill which are more departmental than laying down any new principle. For instance, the amount of spirit that may at present be exported is limited to 50 gallons. This change will permit of the export of quantities of not less than thirty gallons; the penalty for distilling without a license is increased from imprisonment for six months to imprisonment for twelve months at the discretion of the judge. There is a change in the clause with regard to the law relating to the brewing of beer for private use. The clause is as follows:—

Utensils used by any person solely for the purpose of brewing beer for the use of himself and his family, and not for sale, are exempt from the provisions of this Act.

The new portion of the clause is as follows:—

Provided due notice of the possession thereof and of his intention of using them for the above mentioned purpose is given to the nearest collector of Inland Revenue or to the Department of Inland Revenue at Ottawa; and beer so brewed shall not be liable to any duty under this Act, nor shall any license be required by any person so brewing for his own and his family's use.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second and third times and passed.

EXPORT DUTIES BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (145), "An Act respecting export duties. "He said: As hon. gentlemen are aware, we have from time to time had on our statute-book a law which authorized the Governor in Council under certain circumstances, consequent upon the imposition of higher duties on similar articles in the United States, to place an export duty on certain articles that are defined. This bill proposes to enlarge the number of articles. At the time the Act was put in force before, pulp wood had not attained such an important position in the trade of the country as it has now. The quantity of pulp wood in the United States is rapidly diminishing, while Canada has a large supply, and it therefore has become important that we should add spruce to the list of wood on which an export duty may be placed.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B C.)—Will the hon. gentleman explain why ores are to be subject to an export duty?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason is this: I understand, as probably the hon. gentleman knows, that the mines in the southern Kootenay are largely owned and controlled by citizens of the United States, and ore from that section has been going out of the country up to the present time, and we are advised that it was proposed to put up a smelter at Northwood, south of the boundary line, a few miles from Rossland. It would be a monstrous proposition that we should permit the ores mined in this country to be taken out of Canada and smelted in the United States, and this bill gives the government power, by Order in Council, to put an export duty on ores.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—After the ores have been treated to a certain extent, I suppose they may be exported? The United States is our principal market for those ores. Unless that was permitted it would kill the whole trade of the country.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I suppose the hon. Secretary of State is aware that contracts for pulp wood are generally made in June or July, and for a whole year. The wood has to be cut at a certain season and hauled to the stations in the winter and shipped to the United States. If the proclamation should stop the exportation of this pulp wood without warning, it would be a very serious matter for those who have made contracts, and I hope the government will see that warning is given to the exporters so that they may not be exposed to serious loss. In several cases this pulp wood is removed in clearing land, and if the government could see their way to exempting such pulp wood from the export duty, they might make a proviso to exempt farmers, who cut pulp wood in clearing their land, from the operations of the Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be exceedingly difficult to make regulations to apply locally. However desirable the object might be, it would be open to grave suspicion. In reference to the first point which the hon. gentleman raised, he is correct in the view which he takes. It would be exceedingly improper to issue a proclamation when contracts are being made, and no proclamation will be issued during the present year. Ample warning will be given so that parties will not make their contracts in ignorance of what the regulations are to be. I think an announcement was made in another place that there will be no interference with contracts during the present year.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—While I have had occasion to oppose the policy of the government on another measure which they introduced, it affords me great pleasure to give them my hearty support as far as this measure goes. I have several times advocated in this Chamber, and in the other House, an export duty on logs and pulpwood. I believe it is for the interest of the country that such a duty should be imposed, and I am very glad, indeed, that the government have adopted that policy. I hope the power which they are taking here will be exercised at an early date. I would have preferred to see the limit $5 per 1,000 ft., instead of $3, but $3 is better than nothing. With regard to the second clause of the bill, that relating to the export duties on ores and minerals, I desire to say that I have for many years favoured in theory the imposition of an export duty on our mineral ores. I believe that these great resources, at some future time, will be a source of enormous benefit to the country, and, in my opinion, they should be so husbanded as to develop, simultaneously with the mining of the ores, the establishment of such industries as are necessary to convert those ores into articles of commerce. I have never thought the country derived much benefit from the mere mining of those ores and the export of them in their raw state to foreign countries. Even if it retarded, to some extent, for a few years, the development of mining industries, I believe it would be of immense advantage to the country to retain these valuable ores in our own possession until such industries were established as would convert them into articles for our own use and for the commerce of our own country. I merely wish to say that the policy and principle involved in this measure meets with my hearty approval and support.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman intend to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I do not; it has not been usual in our House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am quite willing to facilitate the passing of this measure as far as possible. If it had been advisable, we could have referred the tariff to a committee and discussed every item. However, not having power to change a clause of the bill respecting taxation, that right has also been conceded. I shall not repeat the expression of opinion just uttered by the hon. member from Westmorland (Mr. Wood), but I am fully in accord with every sentiment he has expressed. Another opportunity presents itself to congratulate my hon. friends opposite on a still further conversion to the policy of the late government. What the Secretary of State a short time ago denounced as the "mad career" on which we were rushing, he now advocates. I congratulate him, and I hope that he and his government will continue to improve in their principles, and soon get fully in line with the old government.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is never too late to mend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. "While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return." What I wish to call attention to is subsection "c" of the second clause:

(c.) On ores which contain copper, or any metal other than nickel or lead, when exported from Canada, an export duty not exceeding fifteen per cent on the value of the said ores;

(c.) On lead ores, and on lead and silver ores, when exported from Canada to a country which imposes an import duty on lead in bars or in the form of pig lead in excess of the import duty on lead contained in lead ores or in lead and silver ores,—an export duty on the lead contained in the ores so exported from Canada, to an amount per pound equivalent to such excess.

Why, I ask, is there a different principle embodied in the bills, as far as it affects lead ores, and lead and silver ores, from that which is contained in the subsections to nickel ore in matte and other ores? If it be desirable that nickel and other ores, which we have in abundance in this country, should be smelted and refined in Canada, why is an exception made in the case of lead and lead and silver ores? They are found, I understand, in immense quantities, particularly near the border; is it not just as much in the interest of Canada that we should smelt and refine these ores in our own country as to permit them to be exported without any export duty being imposed upon them, to a country that would not relieve us from import duty on lead in bars, etc. I remember reading a few days ago a discussion on this question in the House of Commons, and I was somewhat surprised to see the argument advanced by the late Minister of Finance in favour of an exception in these ores. If there is any principle involved in the imposition of an export duty on ores, of different kinds, I cannot understand why it should not be extended to all ores. I thought the answer given by the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals at the time was unanswerable. He said, if you permit these ores to be exported free, the Americans would at once erect smelters just across the line and thereby deprive Canada of that industry which we hope to build up by the imposition of this export duty. I can only come to one conclusion. It seems to me—I do not like to say it because it is a reflection perhaps upon the whole of us—that where our personal interest is brought into contact with what it is proposed to do, we are very apt to take a different line. Now, upon the broad principle of imposing an export duty on these articles, I should like to see it imposed upon all, irrespective of what any other country may do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The immediate impulse that is given to this bill arose from a number of telegrams received by the government from several towns in southern Kootenay, intimating that the principal owners of the mines being Americans were about to erect a smelter at Northwood, just two or three miles outside of Canada and it was going to ruin that section by drawing away the population. It was done so openly that it created a great agitation and we were requested to state what our policy was likely to be, as the owners of two of the principal mines were about erecting a smelter, and unless we put an export duty on the ore they would commence the erection of a building at Northwood and it would probably be too late. An intimation was given that the government would submit for the consideration of parliament the propriety of putting an export duty on the ore. With reference to sub-clause "c," as I am advised, the United States is the principal market for lead, a better market than any other country, and that is the reason for this discriminating duty.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—The proposed amendment to the tariff of the United States, increases the duty on lead ores from one and a quarter to one and a half cents, and I think that would be a justification for the government putting an export duty on lead ores as a greater inducement for smelters to be established in that region that produces such large quantities of lead. I do not know why the United States is such a large consumer of lead. I do not know why that should be one of the principal countries to which our Canadian lead is shipped. I do not think they consume it at home. I rather think they must manufacture it and ship it to foreign countries. I am speaking in ignorance of the facts. I have been unable to ascertain what superior inducements are held out to ship lead away to the United States rather than to other foreign countries. If the hon. Secretary of State can enlighten us on the subject I shall be under an obligation to him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to give any other reason than that the price is a shade higher than it is in Europe.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.—I understand subsection "c" in this way: under the United States tariff a higher duty is imposed on bar or pig lead than on lead in the ore, with a view to encourage smelting in the United States, and the object of this subclause is to give the government of Canada power to impose a duty on the export of the ore that would be equal to the discrimination that the United States make in favour of ore as against lead in pig, and place smelting in Canada in the same position as it occupies in the United States. The clause is a good one, if I understand it rightly. My understanding is that it provides that the government of Canada may put an export duty on ore shipped from Canada to the United States that shall be equal to the excess which the United States tariff imposes upon lead in the bar over lead in the ore.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have only recently cast my eye over this clause, and while the interpretation put upon it by the hon. gentleman is correct to a certain extent, does it not go further? Does not this prevent the imposition of an export duty upon the lead ores in case of a foreign country not imposing a duty which is higher than that on lead in bars? It says the Governor General may by proclamation impose a duty on lead ores, and lead and silver ores to a country which imposes an import duty on lead in bars, or in the form of pig lead in excess of the import duty on lead contained in lead ores or in lead and silver ores. Suppose the foreign country does not impose a duty on lead in bars, &c. in excess of a certain amount, then you have no power under this clause to impose an export duty at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not if they have any duty on the lead.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is in violation of the principle which is involved in the two preceding paragraphs "a" and "b" and the whole bill, or in other words, it prevents the government from imposing an export duty only under certain circumstances. What I should like to see done is to take the power—which I hope it will be done—and impose the export duty on these qualities of ore, in order to accomplish the object which you have in view in imposing an export duty on nickel and other ores—that is, the establishment of refineries in this country. What the hon. the Secretary of State says in reference to the exportation of lead is quite true. Lead ores in the past have been exported from British Columbia exclusively to the United States. Why? Because we have had no refineries of any consequence in this country; but as the hon. gentleman from New Westminster (Mr. McInnes) properly says, the United States is not an exclusive market for the consumption of lead. It is manufactured into pig lead, then sheet lead, and then into the form in which it is used in Japan and China for the packing of teas. That is the great market the United States has for lead. If an export duty is imposed upon that particular quality of ore in this country, and we can establish an industry, we will find labour for a large number of artizans, and keep the capital within our own country and find a market in those foreign countries for the output. That is my idea. I am sorry the government have not treated these ores in the same manner that they have the nickel ores. The question was brought under my notice when Minister of Customs very often, I had then all the figures and facts to show the expense of those manufactures and also the markets for them. I assure the hon. gentleman that he is in error in supposing that the United States is the sole market for the output of these refineries. They take our raw material, do the work, find employment for their own people, take the profits, and send the products to foreign countries. That is what I should like to see transferred to our own side of the line.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Before putting on any export duty, the government should send an expert to that country. They have no agent there now, and they should be careful to see what the operation of the export duty would be before imposing it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On reading the paragraph, I am inclined to think that its operation is wider than the interpretation placed upon it by my hon. friend. Owing to the punctuation, it does not read correctly. There would be the power to impose an export duty first on lead ores, then on lead and silver ores, when exported from the country, so I am inclined to think the power would be given under this clause absolutely to place a duty as much on lead ores as on nickel, otherwise why should the "lead ores" be repeated?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can get lead ore without having quantities of silver in it, and you can find galena with large quantities of silver. That is the reason they are separated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the qualifying paragraph there refer to both subjects, or is it only a qualification of one of the preceding sections?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. I am not sufficiently familiar with it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the qualification is to both.

The bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it were not so late in the session, I should ask the government to reconsider clause "c," but I should rather see it go through as it is than obstruct its passage by any amendment. I hope the government will, between now and next session, ascertain if they can apply the principle of placing an export duty on all those ores.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall draw the attention of my colleagues to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (139) "An Act further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act." He said: This bill contains only three clauses. The first clause refers to the flash test. By the law on the statute-book, the fire test is 275 degrees Fahrenheit. In 1894 the flash was fixed at 290 degrees. The change makes it 270 degrees Fahrenheit.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Why the change?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose the experts in the department, from the improved quality of the oil or some other good reason, allow the change. It gives of course, a better field for our Canadian oil. I have no doubt that is the reason.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman is in error. It must be for the other reason. The reason why the flash test was raised formerly was to protect the people in this country against the use of a dangerous article, and to prevent an inferior article from coming into the country. I understand now that you have lowered it. That would admit United States oil at a lower test, and consequently make a greater competition with our own, and permit a dangerous oil to be used.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may be wrong. I have no information from the experts. I presume they have found that the flash test proposed was sufficiently high, and therefore recommend it. Of course it is determined by the experts of the department, and it is by them the suggestion is made. Clause two relates to the importation of petroleum in tank cars and tank ships. Petroleum can now be imported at such points as the Governor in Council may designate. I think oil was not permitted to be imported before in tank ships; it had been imported in tank cars. There has been a considerable demand in the maritime provinces to admit tank ships, but they are only to be allowed to enter at points to be designated.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Is it intended to increase the number of places where tank cars can be filled?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think that is one of the objects of the bill, because it is permissive in this bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not understand what the explanation was for the change. What was the former Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Tank cars were allowed to come in, but tank ships were not, and there was considerable agitation, particularly in the maritime provinces, for this amendment; it would allow them to get cheaper oil if it was allowed to come into the country in tank ships. This will allow the government, by Order in Council, to designate ports where tank ships may be admitted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why does the government ask for a power of that kind? If there is any advantage to the consumer and to the trade of the country to import petroleum in tank ships, why should not the people along Lake Ontario, or any other portion of Canada, have the right to import in tank ships as well as parties in the maritime provinces? Why the distinction? This is an indirect blow at the policy of protection, so far as the oil industry is concerned. There is no question about that; but why give an advantage to Halifax, say, or to any other maritime port, over Toronto, Kingston or Hamilton? If there is an advantage to be derived from this change, why should not the whole country get it? Why should there be sectional legislation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those points in Ontario are more accessible by rail. I do not know why "ships" would not include a schooner fitted up with tanks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not see that it would.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said the demand came principally from the maritime provinces. I did not say that it was limited to them at all, because the law is general for the whole Dominion. I supposed it was there the demand would be greater. To my mind, the points on the north shore of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie are so accessible by rail that there was no complaint there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Still the hon. gentleman has not answered the question I put: Why does the government take the right to say where it should be admitted? Why not say that oil can be imported in tank vessels without taking the power to themselves to say that a tank vessel can go to one port but not to another?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason is obvious, because it must be most carefully inspected and tested. We must have an expert at that particular place and we could not have experts at all points. The late government followed out that same principle. Tank cars are not allowed to be admitted at any town, but only at certain places.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Where there are inspectors.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are inspectors at Toronto and Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I suppose after being inspected, it might be conveyed to any other place?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is only the first entry.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I suppose the reason why tank vessels are mentioned is because the western country is supplied with tank cars.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The whole bill is objectionable. The first clause of the bill reduces the test of the oil from the standard fixed some years ago and brings it back to what it was originally. It was found, when a lower standard was in force, that the oil brought into various parts of the Dominion from the United States was of a very inferior quality. It was not only very objectionable for use in houses and places in which it was used, but it was a dangerous oil and that was the reason why the test was increased up to the standard now in use. If we are going to bring it back to the old standard, we are taking a retrograde step and bringing in what was objected to throughout the whole Dominion years ago. Therefore I object to the legislation intended in this first clause of the bill, reducing the standard by which the oil is to be tested, because it will admit a very inferior quality of oil. With respect to the second clause of the bill, which admits the importation of oil in tank ships or tank cars, I think that also is objectionable. We know it is only the Standard Oil Company and the large companies engaged in that business in the United States that have those tanks for the purpose of sending their oil to various distributing points, and this legislation is taking the business of carrying oil out of the hands of our own people who have vessels in which they can carry it in barrels. This legislation is throwing the trade into the hands of those who have the tank ships to carry the oil. Another objection to this is that the very fact of our reducing the standard of oil will be that the oil brought in those oil tank vessels will be of very inferior quality—not only objectionable for use, but dangerous. In many places there will be objections to its being landed on the public wharfs. It would be a very difficult matter to get oil of that standard landed at any wharf in Charlottetown, because it has been objected to before, and protests have been made by the residents of the city against oil of a low standard being allowed to land there while the low test was in force and there was a demand made to have the test raised. Since it has been raised the oil from Canadian oil refineries has been found very satisfactory indeed. If this bill goes into force it will take the whole matter out of its present satisfactory condition and bring it back to that unsatisfactory state in which it was formerly.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Before the law is changed with regard to the flash test, this House should be thoroughly satisfied that it is in the public interest. It is well known that prior to the increase of the flash test, explosions frequently took place, and there were fires and loss of life. Of late years that has not been the case, simply because the flash test has been raised. Reducing the flash test is not in the public interest and should not be approved by this House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think this bill is a mistake. The amendment proposed in the first and second clauses, at all events, are such. As my hon. friend has just remarked, the lowering of the test should be very seriously considered before we permit it. The other provision is simply for the purpose of assisting the Standard Oil Company of the United States. My hon. friends in the government yesterday gave us to understand the earnest solicitude they feel for the consumers and their anxiety to protect them against trusts, and they ask us to clothe them with extraordinary power to prevent Canadian combines by which prices can be enhanced. This provision is simply to give the greatest trust in the world an advantage they do not now possess in our markets. Even supposing the advantage that is proposed to be given to them is one that might be unobjectionable in other respects, still if my hon. friend the leader of the House carries out the provisions contained in the combines clause of the bill of yesterday, he should use the powers of legislation to punish such people. Instead of that he is giving them a great advantage. I understand advantage has already been taken of the reduction of the tariff on oil, and I suppose the further provision contained in this bill is in favour of the Standard Oil Company; that they are making arrangements to come into Canada and that in a very short time, from the communication I have heard of, they will be in possession of our entire market and we will have this gigantic trust, that dominates so extensively all over the world, in full blast in Canada without any competition whatever. It is a serious matter, and we should consider it carefully before going one step in the way of giving this trust power to dominate in the market of Canada as they are very likely to do. I may say further that, from my own experience as a consumer, the quality of the United States oil that is put on our market in the lower provinces within the last year or two is very low. There has been a great deal said about the superiority of the United States oil in years past, but I am sure, as far as my experience goes, and I find it is the general experience, in my part of the Dominion anyway, that a very inferior quality of oil from the United States is now being brought into consumption there and I do not think we should go further in the direction of encouraging the importation and consumption of such oil in this country than we have gone. There has been a reduction in the duty which has taken away part of the protection that the Imperial Oil Company has had. Whatever the Imperial Oil Company may have done in the past, within the last two or three years they have not abused the protection they enjoyed under our own tariff. They have made a most laudable effort to put a good quality of oil on the market at a reasonable price. The great improvement there has been in the quality of their products and the prices at which they have supplied the oil within the last two or three years, should have stayed the hands of parliament from doing anything to break down that business by the competition which we have and which I may say the world has in oil. The tendency of the reduction of the duty and the provisions of this bill is to give the Standard Oil Company an opportunity of dominating our market altogether and shutting off all competition in the production of oil.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—Ever since the Standard Oil Company have had control of the markets in the United States, oil has been sold to the consumer, from that time down to the present, cheaper than ever before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A combine must be a very good thing, then.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—It may be said that after a little while they will raise the price. We must find a way to meet it in that case, but certainly they have sold oil at a very low figure and if they had been refused the privilege of shipping in tanks in the United States they could not have sold at such a low price. That is what all the smaller dealers complain of, that they have been allowed to ship in tanks. Well, others were allowed to ship in tanks if they chose to do so. A company with a large capital and the best machinery, can produce goods better than they can be made in the case of ordinary establishments, and that is clear when we consider the matter of agricultural implements. The establishments for the manufacture of agricultural implements are now confined to two or three firms in Ontario, and for a while they charged big prices. Now the prices are lower than they ever were. It is the same with regard to railways. and dangerous legislation.

We had a branch railway running north from Toronto. I have had to pay for shipping a few head of cattle on that short railway up to a farm in Markham, a distance of twelve miles from the junction, as much as I had to pay from Montreal to that point. The two roads are combined now and you can get as cheap a rate now from Montreal to Markham as you could get previously from the Junction up to Markham. This great trust company in the United States has continued to sell at low prices. They are said to be selling the petroleum in Detroit at five cents a gallon. I do not expect they can continue to do that, but they have done so for some time now. They are selling petroleum lower than it was considered possible to sell it, but of course they have the monopoly of the United States and have the control of the trade there. At the present time English dealers buy from them because they can sell it cheaper than it is sold for in any other quarter. There is another matter to consider in this connection, and that is, if they are not allowed to ship oil in tanks the freight up to Manitoba will continue to be higher and the reduction of a few cents a gallon will not be felt at all. It is the freight that keeps the rate high, but let them send it up in tanks as far as they can, and they will deliver it in Manitoba at such a low rate that it will be used, and I cannot see for the life of me why we should prevent it. I know that we have used United States oil for years. We have never been able to get the Canadian oil so well refined. We can get it ten cents a gallon cheaper, but those who have to use the lights would rather pay ten cents more for a gallon of good oil. Another reason is because there is never an explosion unless a man puts a can of oil over the fire. There is practically no danger. I think the inspection should be performed in such a manner as to give sufficient protection whether the oil comes in tanks or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I am sorry that I was not able to hear clearly the remarks of the last speaker. I do not wish to recapitulate the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) or the hon. member from Charlottetown (Mr. Macdonald), but I wish to place myself on record as being thoroughly in accord with their arguments, and to say that I consider this proposed legislation unnecessary, unsafe

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not a little surprised at the arguments addressed by my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Ferguson) and the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Macdonald). It seems to me that when these regulations were adopted relating to the carrying of oil in tanks, the government desired to give to the Canadian oil refiners an amount of protection against their United States competitors, that they were not disposed to state the specific rate of duty set out in the tariff legislation. There were two ways in which protection was given, one by the duty imposed, and the other by the impediment put in the way of transportation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is right.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course there can be no question with regard to that, and the duty by way of impediments imposed upon the transportation were, in case of places at a long distance from the place of the oil production, a higher charge than the mere duty that was imposed. It does not seem to me that this was a frank way of dealing with the matter. We are seeking to extend commerce. We profess to favour trade, and yet when, in an article largely consumed by the people of this country, a trade, springs up, then government and parliament deliberately put impediments in the way of that trade—impediments greater than they had the courage to state in their tariff legislation. My hon. friend from Marshfield is in favour of the continuance of these impediments. The government propose by this Act, if not wholly to remove them, greatly to lessen them. There have been complaints by the people of the maritime provinces, and those complaints have been confined not to particular localities; they have been almost universal, and so far as the public sentiment has been concerned, so far as I can gather that from the expressions of opinion in the other chamber and in the press, the views put forward by my hon. friend opposite and by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the House are not views in harmony with the opinions which the people themselves entertain. They are the opinions of those hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this chamber upon the subject.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—How are they not representative opinions?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman asks, how are they not representative opinions? Because they are not the opinions expressed by any hon. gentleman of any shade of politics in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—They are the practical opinions of practical men, who know the difficulties and dangers which will accrue from the adoption of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say to my hon. friend that when a large number of the people of the maritime provinces deliberately undertake to obtain the oil from across the border, which enters into consumption so largely, and upon which they pay no duty, they do not attach the same risk to the importation of the oil as the hon. gentleman has done. They are ready to take the risk, they have taken the risk, and while, as one hon. gentleman said some time ago in the other House, they subscribe in the daytime to the opinions which my hon. friend has expressed, at night they entertain different opinions, and they manage to take in the United States oil, with all the attendant dangers of which my hon. friend has spoken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are free traders by night.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, and the less light they have, the more thorough are their convictions in that way. My hon. friend has complained of the removal of this protection which the Canadian oil refiners have. I suppose Canadian oil refiners have stated their views to the Minister of Finance, and, so far as I can learn, that is the arrangement that the government propose to submit to parliament. If they make no complaint on their own behalf, I do not see that my hon. friend, who lives one thousand miles away from them, should make a complaint for them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are you speaking by the book, when you say that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I know what their opinions are and the opinions they expressed to me. I know nothing about what they expressed to the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did they express satisfaction?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No; I am speaking of the rate of duty, and this is a matter of transportation, and the question I have to consider in connection with this proposal is, how does it affect the facilities for transportation? You impose what duties you please, you state how high they shall be, but once you have done that, you have disposed of the question as to protection, and now you have another and different question—the question of transportation, and surely no hon. gentleman can pretend to say that the privilege of importing in cars or in tank vessels does not necessitate the carriage of the oil at a lower rate and does not enable those who wish to bring it into the country to pay the duty upon it and furnish it to the consumer at a lower figure than they could do if you put serious impediments in the way of transportation. The government have asked here that they may designate places, and so on. I understand that the importation of oil, no matter how it may be carried, is attended with some risk, and so far as that provision is concerned I understand it to be simply a police regulation. I know all along the border, even in the district where the oil is produced, an immense amount of smuggling goes on and people take the risk of forfeiting the article which they are undertaking to bring in rather than pay the duty which is imposed, and if you, in addition to that, put impediments in the way of transportation you cannot increase the revenue. You cannot get at the population of consumers, and what class of the community is it that you are undertaking to legislate for on the line that my hon. friend opposite has mentioned? In every case there can be no doubt that the public are benefited this way. Take for instance the importations from the State of Maine. The Standard Oil Company send their oil in tank vessels, and you import it across the border. How can you prevent smuggling in that event if you insist upon carriage as it is now being done under the law apart from this amendment? You cannot do it. You lose an immense amount of revenue, and in undertaking to serve the parties you are doing the public revenue of the country a very serious injury.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to make an explanation before we go further, as I have received more light on the subject. The difference is that the 290 is the fire test and 270 is the flash test. I am advised by the Deputy Minister that in copying the transcript into the statute they put by some mistake the flash test at 290 instead of the fire test, and they thought the simplest way to correct it was to substitute 270 for 290.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the difference between the two?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a difference of 20 degrees between the fire and flash test. One is in the background and the other is the burning of the oil on the top.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—There is no change with regard to the flash test?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. "Petroleum designated and known as high test petroleum may be sold in Canada for illuminating purposes under such resolutions as to gravity as are established by the Department of Inland Revenue, provided the flash test is not less than 290 degrees." They put flash test there instead of fire test. They have been breaking the law because they have not followed out the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the difference between the flash test and the fire test?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Twenty degrees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And you want to make the fire and flash tests the same?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The statute provided that the flash test should not be lower than 290 degrees, and it should have read "provided the fire test is not under 290."

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Does that mean the degree at which it will explode?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How will it read with your amendment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will read section 4 in the statute:

Petroleum designated and known as high test petroleum may be sold for use in Canada for illuminating purposes under such regulations as to gravity as are established by the Department of Inland Revenue, provided the flash test is not less than 290 degrees.

It will then read 270. The figures 270 will go in place of 290.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then there is no provision for a fire test?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The fire test is 290. They have been using the flash test. I suppose it is a more convenient way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then we are to understand that this provision of 290 for a flash test in the law, as it has existed for some years, has been a mistake?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And has been deliberately ignored?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It has not been followed by the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood there was a difference between the fire test and the flash test.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Twenty degrees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then why is the fire test reduced to twenty degrees?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not reduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is reduced. You are substituting by this clause 270 for 290, and the Secretary of State says it should have read fire test instead of flash test. You say there is a difference between the fire and the flash test of twenty degrees. You are reducing the fire test to 270.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we are applying it to the flash test and making it 270.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which is the more dangerous?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are the same.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The provision is for the flash test. It says "Provided the flash test is not under 290." They intended at the time to use the words "fire test," and that was to be 290, and the simpler way is to leave the flash test as the test and put it at 270.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are making the test of the oil at 270 for both?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, only for the flash test.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are making no provision for the fire test?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will not use it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—270 flash test and 290 fire test produce the same result. If you have fire tests you have 290 and if you have flash tests you make it 270. The flash test being the most convenient they adopt it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The section in the Revised Statutes, chap. 102, the place of which was taken by this section in the Act of 1894, says "flash test." Section 4 reads:

> If it will stand a fire test of 275 degrees Fahrenheit thermometer, or if when heated in an open cup to a temperature of 250 degrees by Fahrenheit thermometer it does not emit a vapour that will flash.

This is simply going back to the fire test in the original Act, and the Secretary of State explains that it was owing to a printer's error the word "flash" was inserted instead of "fire," and now they think they will leave it to flash and put it 20 degrees lower. The hon. gentleman makes it now 270 degrees fire test.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, flash test; 270 flash test is a great deal higher than 270 fire test.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The objection is only a flash in the pan.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This measure comes up as a departmental measure. In the Revised Statutes passed in 1886 the fire test was 275 degrees. In the Act of 1890 it was fixed at 280, and now it is fixed at 290.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Strike out the 290.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, it is 270 flash test. There have been some remarks made on another portion of the bill on which I may be allowed to say a word or two. In 1894 it will be remembered the law was altered by hon. gentlemen opposite. Previous to that time the duty on petroleum had been seven and one-half cents a gallon and petroleum was not to be allowed to be imported in tank cars. At that time the price of petroleum in Canada, in places not very remote from the United States border, was out of all proportion to the prices of petroleum in the United States, and the consequence was, as would naturally be expected, there was a great deal of smuggling. In 1894 the government reduced the duty from seven and one-half cents a gallon to six cents a gallon, and they also made this regulation :

Notwithstanding anything in this section contained the Governor in Council may designate places at which petroleum may be imported in tank cars under regulations established jointly by the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue, but all petroleum so imported shall before being removed for consumption be put in packages, inspected, and made in accordance with the requirement of section seven of this Act.

The effect of allowing the petroleum to be brought in in tank cars was very considerable, because a consumer had formerly to pay for the cask, and the cask, which contained forty or fifty gallons, would add something to the cost. There was a considerable reduction in the practical duty on the oil when it was allowed to be imported in tank cars. Naturally the people in the lower provinces did not see why they should not have the same privilege of having petroleum imported in tanks which w s enjoyed by the people of the other provinces, and I presume the same thing might apply to people on the shores of the great lakes in the upper provinces and it seems to be only fair. The government now have simply gone a little further in the direction in which the late government went in 1894. The government at that time took one and one half cents a gallon off the duty and allowed the introduction of petroleum in tank cars. Now, the government take off another cent of the duty and allow the petroleum to be imported in tank vessels as well as tank cars. As a matter of fact, I do not think the present tariff is any more liberal than the tariff of 1894 was, or not much more liberal, because the price of petroleum in the United States has diminished since. Here is a necessity which is used by the poorer classes all over the country, and at the present time the reduced duty of five cents a gallon is, at the prices at which the oil is sold in the United States, 100 per cent. Why should that enormous duty be increased by difficulties and expenses in the way of getting the oil into the country? I think that the idea of trying to increase the duty, which is now 100 per cent on a necessary of life, and a necessity consumed chiefly by the poorer classes, is something that cannot be defended at all, and I trust there may not be any disposition on the part of this House to reject this measure.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And further, in the interests of the revenue, it is a great deal better that the obstacles in the way of bringing large quantities of petroleum into this country should be removed. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said if we put up this tremendous duty, and put all the difficulties we can in the way of importing United States oil, it will be smuggled in in large quantities. It is smuggled into the province from which I come in large quantities. We use the United States oil there and the same thing happens in the border counties in the province of Quebec, and we have the evidence of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell that it is that way in Ontario. We have every object in passing this measure, which is not nearly as liberal as it might have been. I had hoped to see the duty reduced to three cents a gallon on petroleum, which would be quite enough.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before this lucid explanation was made as to the tests, the objection was not taken by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island as much to the introduction of the article in tank cars, as to reducing the test of the oil, thereby creating a greater danger from accidents.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The Secretary of State so considered it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was in the same position that I was, he did not understand it. The explanation has been given that it required 290 for a fire test, and that 270 of a flash was equal to 290 of a fire test. That removed the objection which the hon. gentleman sitting behind the Secretary of State (Mr. Power) made to to the bill just now. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) argued strongly in favour of the permission for transportation by tank cars in order that the oil might be delivered to the consumer at a lower rate than that which would have to be charged if it came in casks on the railway. The argument was inferentially a condemnation of the late government because they had not gone further. When the hon. gentleman's friends were in power, during the Mackenzie administration, they were not then permitted to import United States oil into Canada in tank cars at all; that concession was made by the late government, in addition to the reduction of the duty. The speech made and the arguments adduced in favour of the bill before the House by the hon. gentleman for King's (Mr. Reesor) was a splendid argument in favour of trusts. I should like to have heard him make that speech while the combines clause was under consideration. Had we moved to strike it out I am quite sure he should have voted with us after his remarks. He told us that through those trusts oil was sold in Detroit at as low a price as five cents a gallon. To complete his statement he ought to have told us that Detroit is just opposite the Canadian oil producing section of the country, and that this great trust put down the prices so low as to enable people in that section of the country to purchase it, pay the duty, and bring it into Canada; but I venture this assertion, that at no place in the United States, in the interior, away from the border, and at such a distance that the Imperial Oil Company of Canada cannot compete, can you get oil at five cents. What we have to fear is that once you so amend the law, as to allow the American Standard Oil Company combination to get into Canada, and thereby crush out the native industry, you will find the price of oil in Canada will be precisely the same as it is in the interior towns of the United States. I remember distinctly when this question was under discussion some years ago. At that time I had all the prices within fifty miles from the border, and the further you went from the competing point, the higher the price at which the oil that was furnished by the Standard Oil Company of the United States was placed upon the market. I make this prediction, that just as soon as that Oil Company get control of the oil wells of Canada, up will go the price. I am quite sure it will be the case, for the reasons which I have given. From the explanations which have been made in reference to the question of the test, there will be no objection to this clause. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power) was not justified in appealing to the House against the rejection of this bill. No one intimated a desire to have it rejected. What they wished to understand was what was the real meaning and intention of it, and what the effect of it would be, and if the lowering of the test would have the effect of making it more dangerous, they would desire to amend it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Are these experiments made in the department, or does the department take the experiments of others?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are made under instructions at the various points where the oil is inspected.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—But the government have a regular laboratory, and make those experiments themselves?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If you looked into the effect of carrying the oil in these ships, would it not be found that probably some dangerous gases would escape? If oil were allowed to remain long in a vessel with agitation, would not benzine and some of these inflammable gases be generated?

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Before we leave this matter, I wish to say in the best possible good humour that it seems to me my hon. friend from Bothwell endeavours to pose in this chamber as being the sole exponent of representative opinion. I gathered that from the remarks he made in reference to the opinions expressed by other hon. gentlemen present, and in supporting his position he cited what appeared in the papers. I have seen utterances in the press which I am sure, from my knowledge of the hon. gentleman, he would not agree with, as being representative of public opinion.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the said bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I know there are sections in which it is considered very objectionable to have petroleum imported in tank ships, and I think where that is the case, where there are objections on the part of the municipality or of the residents, and the municipality desires to make regulations for the purpose of enforcing the objections of the citizens against the importation in tanks, could there not be some arrangement made in this bill whereby the municipalities may regulate that? In the city of Charlottetown the landing of petroleum even in casks on the public wharf is very objectionable, and many citizens have protested against its being landed on the wharf in the city at all, because the buildings in the town run down to the bank from which these wharfs start, and the fact of several thousand barrels of petroleum being put on the wharf and remaining on the wharf sometimes for several weeks in the summer heat is a source of very great danger to the people living in the vicinity. If the bill permitted the city council to make such regulations respecting the landing of that petroleum as would prevent its being landed on the front of the wharf, it might remove that objection. It is very much more objectionable to have it brought into the city in tank ships than in barrels, because there is the danger of an explosion when it is being removed from the ships and put in barrels along side of the wharfs. I think it is a highly objectionable part of the bill. I do not wish to object to the bill as a whole, but I think people in different sections should have the priivlege of making regulations. It certainly is not acceptable to the province from which I come.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is not compulsory at all. Section 3 provides for it and I think it is perfectly safe. The government have to give their consent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it is the wish of the people of Charlottetown not to allow tank ships to land at their docks it will not be done. It is simply according to the wish of the people, whether they desire tank cars or tank ships to discharge their load at the different places. When it is imported it will come in ships, and it will be subject to inspection at certain points, and it must be transferred to barrels at those points; but as a rule the desire has been to allow as many points as possible to be designated for the tank cars. It has been a pretty universal desire. The oil that comes in the tank cars from Petrolea is inspected, as it can be inspected where it is loaded on the car; but with regard to oil that comes in from a foreign country, an inspection must be made before it is transferred to barrels. Of course if the people of any town or city do not desire that the town should be included among the places to be designated, the department would not certainly put it in operation in those particular places.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I might say, as representing one point of view from which people in the maritime provinces look at this question, that at the present time the United States oil which is imported into the maritime provinces is brought down in coasting vessels, little schooners that are running between the ports of the United States and the ports of the maritime provinces. These vessels bring this oil down: it furnishes them a little freight, and the desire there is to retain that business. If this bill is adopted it may—and I have no doubt it will—effect a change in the method of transporting oil so far as the maritime provinces are concerned. The United States company owing these tank steamers will, two or three times a year, send a steamer down with a large quantity of this oil, unload it in some large distributing centre, such as St. John or Halifax, and have it barrelled there. I understand that that is the way this business is carried on where the oil is transported in tanks. The coasting vessels which are principally owned in the maritime provinces, will, therefore, lose the business which they have heretofore enjoyed of carrying this oil, and I believe the general feeling among the people of the maritime provinces is that they would prefer to have the matter stand as it is now, and to have the oil imported as it has been in their own coasting vessels. However, while this is my own view, and I believe the view of the majority of the people in the maritime provinces, I do not intend to vote against the adoption of the bill. If the government take the responsibility of making the change, I do not propose to object.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think, as a rule, the oil is brought to large places in these coasting schooners. If tank steamers came to Halifax or St. John, it would not interfere with carrying the oil to the smaller places by the schooners; because after the oil is brought to Halifax or St. John, it will have to be brought by rail or schooner to the smaller places.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The difficulty is this: that the United States oil is under the control of a large combine, and where they have the power of shipping it in their own tank steamers, they have the power to so arrange the freights that they control the whole of the transportation. That is the difficulty, and if we once give them that power they will no doubt use it, and use it in such a way as to entirely prevent the shipping of oil by schooners.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Up to the present time I believe all the oil which has been imported to Halifax has been imported there in barrels by schooners and not in tank vessels.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I thought it came largely in steamers.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Steamers are not allowed to carry petroleum.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax is wrong. So far as my experience goes the oil that comes down to the maritime provinces comes all together.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I am entirely in accord with the hon. gentleman from Westmorland (Mr. Wood). I know that is the case in Pictou and all the ports in the neighbourhood of Pictou—that that oil has been brought there in schooners, as the hon. gentleman says, and not otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I am not particulary opposed to the bill that is before the House. I may say that during the late election contest the great question before the people in my section of the country was the fearful, terrible tax upon the people in reference to kerosene oil, and the people were led to believe they were going to get the kerosene oil free of duty. Whatever action the government has taken in that direction I approve of, because it is carrying out their promises; but it is a very small step, and I was struck with the remark of the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) when he said that the duty now, after all these promises, was still 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—About that.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—That is a very high rate of duty to place on anything, unless it is intended to be prohibitive. Owing to the lower price of oil now, the five cents is just as high a duty as the six cents was formerly. In reference to the question of bringing in oil in tank vessels, although there may be an objection, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Mr. Macdonald) on account of the annoyance and the danger of these tank vessels coming into a place like Charlottetown, still I think the advantages to the whole province will counterbalance, and more than counterbalance, the injury and annoyance to the residents of Charlottetown in that regard. I take it that there will be proper safeguards, that they will protect the city from any conflagration that might take place owing to the oil coming in tank vessels; because Charlottetown will be the distributing point for this oil for all the rest of the province, and if we have to depend upon this oil coming into Halifax or St. John, and have to get it from there, we may just as well import it in the old way from the United States, or from Ontario, as we have been doing in the past. By having this oil in tank vessels we will encourage an important industry in the manufacture of barrels, instead of paying a high price for those manufactured in the United States. In that regard I think the change is in the right direction. I had intended to say something as to the test, but the explanation of the hon. Secretary of State has satisfied my mind fully on that. There is no change made in the test: I was inclined to deprecate the idea of reducing the test, more particularly on account of the greater danger that will be caused by using tank vessels; but in that regard it is quite satisfactory, and I think the people of the lower provinces will be pleased that they are getting such a reduction in the oil, and on the other hand they will be displeased because it is not a very much greater reduction than it is.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I presume the House is generally aware of the difficulties which have arisen in our Committee on Railways and Canals. The question has arisen in the minds of some members as to the constitutional right to meet at all on account of a certain formality having been neglected of adjourning to a specific day or authorizing the chairman of the committee to call a meeting. This irregularity having taken place, I assumed it to be my duty, as chairman of the committee, which is in existence as long as this session lasts and which I could not conceive had the power to commit suicide, having had referred to it certain bills to be reported to the House, there was no other way I could conceive how they could be summoned except at my call as chairman. I, therefore, undertook to call the committee, and the committee met, but some members considered it unconstitutional and contrary to rule. Without desiring to discuss that question, it has occurred to me, in order to facilitate the business of the House, to propose to the Senate a motion which I trust I shall be allowed to make even without notice. I move:

That the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours be and is hereby instructed to meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock to consider and report upon the several bills which have been referred to that committee on which there has been no report hitherto made to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think that motion requires notice. If the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss it I have no objection if he will let it stand as a notice until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not consider it to be a motion of that nature requiring notice. It involves no particular assertion of a new principle, but is simply to meet an accidental emergency which has arisen, and to ask the House to use its power to obviate delay at this late period of the session. The delay would result in defeating some of the measures before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I always supposed that every standing committee had the right to meet whenever they thought proper on the call of the chair, or by a motion made by the committee itself. When the committee meets, the practice has been to adjourn to a certain day, and if there is no adjournment specifying the day, then it has always been the practice, so far as my experience goes, for the chairman, in a case of emergency, if there is any business to be brought before it, to call the committee. What necessity is there for taking that power out of the hands of the chairman of the committee, or that this House should direct them to do that which they have the power to do themselves? It seems to me it would be establishing a vicious principle in the future, because an objection might be taken at some other time. It would be interfering with the rights of the committee, and the gentleman who presides over it for the time being. I have stated my impression from a somewhat extended practice. I think those of equally long experience in public affairs will concur in my view.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—My own view entirely coincides with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman, but quite a considerable number of the members of the committee took the opposite view and contended that I had no authority to call the committee. They based this claim upon some remarks which were found in May and Bourinot touching on the question, not on any specific rule of the House. The authority read by the law clerk contained the statement which led some members of the committee to think that our position was entirely irregular. I maintain that, as chairman, it was my duty to call the committee together; otherwise the committee could never meet if they had adjourned without specifying a day at the last meeting or specifically authorized the chairman to call a meeting. It struck me to be an absurd objection. It was perfectly clear to my mind what our position was, and as the leader of the opposition has stated, it has been the uniform practice of both Houses that the chairman of a committee can call a meeting of the committee at any time. Our experience this morning justifies my proposing this motion. Almost the entire time of the committee this morning was taken up in discussing whether we were legally constituted or not. I wish to save the time of the committee, because there is a good deal of business to be attended to, and the efficiency of the committee would be promoted by adopting the motion before the House.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I should think the committee has not only the right to meet, but it is in duty bound to meet. What is a committee? It is a part of the House appointed to consider such questions as are referred to them, so that when the House refers a question to them they are bound to take it into consideration and report their opinion upon it. A reference has been made in this House to two or three bills. The committee has not obeyed the order of the House. Suppose the House were prorogued to-morrow that legislation would not be completed. Why? Because that committee has not met and attended to its duty. I have been in this House twenty years and have attended those committees every session, and on many occasions our committees adjourned without specifying a time to meet again. It never entered anybody's mind that the chairman of the committee had not the right to call a meeting of that committee. I can see nothing in any authority to show that a different practice prevails in England. If there were such a practice it would be contrary to common sense.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have no doubt that the view expressed by the leader of the opposition and my hon. friend near me (Mr. Vidal) is the correct one. I have no doubt the chairman is entitled to call together a committee of this kind. Several hon. gentlemen have mentioned the long experience they have had in parliament, and how invariable the practice has been in that way. Reason and common sense support it. I have had a long experience, too, though not in this House. The rules of the Ontario assembly are adopted from the rules here, and my experience there quite concurs with what has been mentioned as the experience in parliament. I do not think it admits of serious argument that the chairman is entitled to this right.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The question was brought up this morning. It arose as to whether we were sitting legally or not. As explained by Bourinot and May, it appeared to me we were not. The duties of the chairman are to preside over the meetings, to put all questions, and to maintain order, but he should consult the committee as to when he is to call them together. He is not to be a dictator, because he is in the chair. I am not prepared now, off-hand, to discuss this question whether we were legally constituted or not, but I take my right to object to that motion being put without due notice. Let it stand as a notice, and we can discuss it to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Will my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) point out the rule which requires notice? Because I contend this motion does not require a notice. It is a matter of our own domestic management.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The suggestion made by the hon. Secretary of State covers the ground, that this is a question of privilege—a question of the privilege of the House and its committee. A question of privilege is always in order, and the hon. gentleman has a right to move his motion without notice. As to the rule, I quite concur in the view expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition and the leader of the government—that our uniform practice, for the last twenty years at any rate, has been in that direction.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not want it to go to the world, or to be admitted that we have been all session acting illegally in the Committee on Railways and Canals. The hon. gentleman seems to have made up his mind that we have been acting illegally. I want the committee to be properly constituted. He wants me to point out the rule: in order to be able to do so I ask him to let this stand as a motion. Then we can see who is right. The hon. gentleman admits he has been acting wrongly during the whole session; otherwise why ask this power now? Give us time to discuss it, because, as I understood this morning, from authorities read by the law clerk of the Senate, we have been acting illegally. I want to see whether we have been or not. The hon. gentleman gives up the case, but I want time to see whether the committee is acting in a legal manner. I insist that notice of the motion be given. Of course if the hon. gentleman is determined to go on, as he did before, and call a meeting without consulting the committee at all, he can do so.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I was present in the committee to-day. The objection taken was not that the chairman had the right and that it was his duty to call a meeting, but that at the previous meeting, by a resolution of the committee, it should have been postponed to a certain day or at the call of the chair. There were no such minutes as that recorded, and that is the point on which my hon. friend from Monck and others took exception, and I must say that the authorities quoted by the law clerk sustain that contention. There is where the whole point is.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—The point taken was that in order to give the chairman the power of calling the committee together when he saw fit, the minutes of the previous meeting ought to show that it was left to his discretion to do so. That formality had been neglected at the previous meeting.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—And all the meetings this year.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—That was the point at issue to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was the question put to the Law Clerk, what would be the effect of the adjournment of the Committee without instructions as to future meetings? Would that kill the Committee? Could they never meet again?

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I think that point did come up. Then they would have to come to the Senate and get fresh orders from the Senate. I am not contending this, but merely mentioning what took place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The chairman, where a committee have not decided upon calling a meeting at a specified time, undoubtedly has the right to call the committee together. What is the committee? It is a committee of this House constituted for the purpose of carrying into effect the orders of the House. There were referred to this committee several bills relating to the incorporation of railway companies or the amendment of charters. Those are all before the committee. The committee may adjourn from time to time, but it must never adjourn in such a way as to fail to discharge the duty the House has imposed on it. It must not act in contempt of the House. Supposing the committee had agreed upon a day for adjournment, and that day had been fixed at some period late in the session, the chairman may find that the amount of business is such that it requires earlier action, and undoubtedly the chairman would have a right to call the committee together at an earlier period, because the decision of the committee must always be taken to be subordinate to obedience to the House. The committee exists for the purpose of carrying into effect the decision and instruction of the House, and it cannot even adjourn for a longer period, or fix its sittings so remote as to make it impossible to carry into effect the instructions that the House has given it. The chairman undoubtedly had the right to call a meeting of the committee. When the chairman ruled that he had that right, I do not think the question was before the committee to discuss the propriety of his decision. If the committee wish to appeal they may do so without discussion, just as in this House we may appeal from the chair, and the decision of the majority of course will be the decision of the committee for the time being, but there is no rule better settled than this, that the committee acts under the rules which govern this House and are subordinate to the House, and there can be no question whatever that the action of the chairman was perfectly regular and that the meeting of the committee was a regular meeting as long as there was a quorum present.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If he was acting legally why does he want this power now?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I have already replied to that. I have shown to the House that my object in making this motion is to enable the committee, when it meets, to attend to the business committed to it and not have the whole time of the committee taken up in discussing this question, which may rightly enough be discussed here, but, as has been said by the hon. gentleman from Bothwell, should not be discussed in the committee. It would be an appeal to this House, where the matter might be brought up. I felt, as chairman, that the committee required to have a decision that I had called the meeting in a regular and proper manner. Almost the whole time that the committee was in session was taken up with discussing the question of order to the neglect of duties which the House had committed to us. By making an order of that character, once we do meet there need be no discussion of this matter of the right or the wrong of the act of the chairman.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I rise to a question of order. How many times can a member speak on a question?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal), says that the rules which govern the Senate govern the Commons. There is no doubt about that. I want to act legally, and when my hon. friend says or rules so and so, he rules as the committee will allow him, just as you, Mr. Speaker, rule as the Senate allows you. The chairman of the committee thinks he is monarch of all he surveys, and I am opposed to that. I want to go along regularly, and I ask that this matter be postponed until to-morrow, until we can get a proper decision on it. If the House decides against me, I have nothing more to say.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Having been present for some time in the Railway Committee, and having heard the authorities—May and Bourinot—quoted as to the powers of the Commons under the particular circumstances which occurred at the previous meeting, I came to the conclusion that the stand taken by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) is the correct one, and that this matter should be deferred until to-morrow, when there will be further time to look into it and look up the authorities. The rule laid down by May and Bourinot, which governs this case, is applicable under the circumstances in which the committee rose the day previous, and I believe myself it is necessary, under the rule, to have the authority of the Senate before the committee can meet again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the beginning of the session we appoint no less than ten standing committees. After these committees are appointed they exist until the House rises. They are always ready to be called together by a majority of the committee or by the chairman of the committee. I venture to say in no case has the proposition to which the hon. gentleman from Monck has referred been made that a committee should adjourn to a particular day. Some of those committees meet at long intervals. Take the Committee on Internal Economy. It meets only two or three times in the session and only when the chairman calls them together. So it is with the Debates and Reporting Committee, the Banking Committee, and all others. They are standing committees, always supposed to be ready for work whenever the House directs work to be sent to them. When the House sends work to them they are supposed to go into operation at once.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—The rules of the committee are the rules of the House, and what are the rules of the House? According to those rules the bills then before the committee would be rejected. Why? Because there was no adjournment of the committee, and if there was no adjournment of the committee the bill would be lost and could come up no more, but this does not prevent the committee meeting next day and complying with the orders of the House to take into consideration the other bills on the list. The very argument made by the hon. gentleman shows that the chairman was right so far as meetings of the House are concerned, that he ought to have refused to take into consideration the bill upon which there had been no adjournment of the debate and declare that the bill was out of the jurisdiction of the committee then, and that he had to ask the committee to go on with the next item. According to the rules of the House that would have been the case.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I am very glad to hear from the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière (Mr. Bellerose) that the meeting of the committee should be governed by the rules of the Senate. Does not the Speaker, in adjourning the House, announce when we meet again? What I complain of is that the rules are not carried out as they should be. The chairman of the committee finds the rules were not complied with, and he applies to the House for authority for the committee to meet. He acknowledges that he was wrong, and that he had been acting illegally all session when he asks now for the authority of the House. He did not ask the authority of the committee, and now invokes the rules of the Senate. I want time until to-morrow to discuss this question, and I renew my objection.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Is all this discussion on the question of order I raised a while ago? There are two points of order. The first is, how many times is a member allowed to address the House on one motion? The hon. gentleman from Sarnia moved a resolution without suspending any rules. The hon gentleman from Monck takes objection to it, and there is no necessity for discussion. A decision is all that is required on those two points, and we need not waste time discussing the matter at all.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I contend that it is a matter of privilege.

The Hon. the SPEAKER—The point of order raised by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Prowse), should not be ruled on by me to-day. Before ruling on the matter, the Senate should come to an understanding as to the number of times a member should be allowed to speak on any motion. There is no doubt the discussions are frequently irregular, and members speak more than once, contrary to the rules of the House; but this irregularity has been so often allowed and the rule has been departed from so constantly, that I should not like to take it upon myself to decide to-day that a member cannot speak more than once on a resolution, and as long as the Senate does not require that the rule shall be strictly observed. As to the second point of order, whether this motion is necessary or not, in my opinion it is not necessary, because I am entirely of the opinion that the chairman of the committee has a perfect right to call the committee together as often as necessary, when work is sent to the committee. Even to-day I believe the hon. member from Sarnia could, by his motion, ask for an immediate order of the House to have what he wants by his motion granted. I do not believe that a motion of that kind requires notice. The House has a right to exercise that power without notice at all.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (148) "An Act to authorize the raising by way of loan of certain sums of money for the public service."—(Mr. Scott).

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT moved the second reading of Bill (140) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts." He said:—This bill contains two clauses, one of them relating to the province of Manitoba and the other to the district of Quebec. The occasion for the bill, so far as it relates to Manitoba, is this: the present law of the Dominion provides for the payment of five judges in Manitoba. The number of judges is a matter which is determined by the local legislature, and in the present case the local legislature has added one to the number of judges. The history of the matter may be stated for the information of this honourable House. By section four of the 33rd chapter of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, it is provided that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may alter the judicial divisions and establish new county courts. Then, by section eight it is provided that there shall be one county court judge for each county court division or judicial district, and the same judge may exercise or continue to exercise jurisdiction in two or more such divisions until a judge is appointed specially for that particular division. Then there are the Dominion statutes. By the second section of chapter 36 of 58 and 59 Vic., "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Judges of Provincial Courts," provision is made for the salaries of five county court judges of Manitoba, that being the number then in existence, and still in existence until the Order in Council was passed under legislative authority, as I have mentioned, for the addition of a sixth judge. Amongst other provisions of the statute of Manitoba, section 10 provides that more than one county court judge may be appointed for any judicial district or county court division in the province, if it be deemed necessary, and in such case the judge appointed shall have jurisdiction therein, the judge last appointed to be known as the junior judge. The action of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council arose in part from an application by one of the judges, who represented that he had more than was possible for him to do—that he had given the matter a fair trial, and that it was quite impossible for him to get through the business. The letter is addressed to the Attorney General of Manitoba. This is what the judge said:

WINNIPEG, 10th September, 1896.

DEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL,—You will recollect that soon after the passing of the amendment to the County Courts Act, extending the jurisdiction of the court, I expressed to you my apprehension that I would not be able to meet the work thereby imposed. Now after a fair and severe trial, I must in justice to myself as well as the suitors in the court, again formally call your attention to the fact, and respectfully urge your serious consideration of the necessity of ensuring the appointment of a puisne judge.

It is needless for me to specify particulars as I have been informed your attention has been frequently called by the members of the profession to the amount of work cast upon me, and I might add it has been only through the kindest indulgence of the profession that I have been able thus far to cope with the same, although not satisfactorily.

Trusting that this may receive your most careful, earnest consideration, I am, etc.,

Sd. D. M. WALKER.

That was communicated by the Attorney General, who was then Mr. Sifton, on the 12th September to the premier of the Dominion. This is the letter:

WINNIPEG, 12th September, 1896.

Hon. WILFRED LAURIER,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

DEAR MR. LAURIER,—I have the honour to inclose herewith a copy of a letter received by me yesterday from Judge Walker, the senior judge of the County Courts in the Eastern Judicial District.

In my opinion it is necessary in the interests of the proper administration of justice in this Province that an additional county judge should be appointed for the Eastern Judicial District. I may say that I have brought this matter before my colleagues and they all concur heartily in the opinion which I express.

Yours faithfully,

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

The question has sometimes arisen how far parliament is bound to act upon local legislation adding new judges. On this subject Sir John Macdonald stated this:

It is very difficult indeed for the federal parliament to decide when a wish is expressed by the legislature of any province that it should be disregarded.

The constitution, organisation and maintenance of the courts are left to the provincial legislatures. The cost and responsibility for the administration of justice are thrown upon the different provinces, etc.

So that when a provincial legislature passes an Act declaring that an additional number of judges is required, for the due administration of justice, it is incurring a great responsibility for the Federal parliament and government to say: You do not want them.

Sir Alexander Campbell spoke to the same effect on another occasion. If any one desires to see what he said, I may refer him to the Senate Debates for 1880, at page 460. I may mention also that in 1894, at the request of Mr. Daly, Sir John Thompson appointed Mr. Carter Locke, Queen's Counsel for the fifth judicial division of Manitoba before the law was amended providing for the appointment. We propose to place the sixth judge, thus declared to be necessary by the legislature which has the right to deal with the matter, on the same footing as the other five judges in regard to salary. Then, with regard to the district of Quebec, the law as it stands now provides that the local judge of the district of Quebec should receive $2,000 per annum. It was understood at the time that that sum was agreed to—I am told it was understood in the House—that in case of a future appointment the judge should have only $1,000. A very eminent lawyer, eminent for his knowledge of maritime law, was the judge at the time, and held no other office, and whose services could not be obtained, I believe, for a less sum than $2,000. It was thought his case might be made an exception; therefore, two thousand dollars was provided for. We propose to provide that the salary for the future shall be one thousand dollars so long as the parliament leaves it at that sum. That appears all the more reasonable, because the appointment has been of one who is a judge already, additional work being imposed upon him; but there is not the same reason for giving him two thousand dollars that there was where the Admiralty judge had no other judicial office. I do not know that the bill requires any other observations than those which I have made. I move the second reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask whether the six county court judges in Manitoba have not already been appointed, or whether there are only five and this provides for an additional one.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The six judges have been appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This bill is to confirm the appointment?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, the appointment has been made and legislation is not required to confirm it. The British North America Act provides that the judges shall be appointed by the Governor General. A judge is not appointed by parliament. It is in pursuance of the British North America Act that the appointment has been made and all that I come here for is to provide the salary, because that is all parliament has to do under the British North America Act with respect to judges.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps I do not understand it. I understand the provisions of the British North America Act. If I recollect aright only two thousand dollars was voted in the estimates during the last session of parliament. The Solicitor General stated that it was for the purpose of providing for another judge in Manitoba, and that it must be considered temporary until an Act of parliament had been passed not to appoint, but to provide the salary for this extra judge.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In order to make the salary permanent under the law rather than to have to vote it every session—that I take to be the object of the bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The sixth judge was appointed, and he will be paid out of the last appropriations, and this is to provide for the future payment as long as he is there, and the sixth judge I understand is Mr Prendergast.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend in introducing this bill has explained its contents. As far as I have been able to hear him, I observe that the changes which the bill proposes to make in the law are to provide a permanent salary for an additional judge in Manitoba, and to increase the salaries of all the judges from $2,400 to $2,500 per annum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is after three years' service.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes. After three years' service. Under the present state of the law, they receive $2,400, starting with $2,000, but this amendment provides that they shall start with a salary of $2,000, and shall, at the expiration of three years, receive a salary of $2,500, or one hundred dollars in addition. The other provision refers to a local judge in the district of Quebec. These are the changes as I understand them. My hon. friend I think is beginning now where he ought to have begun in September last, when, as we all remember from previous discussion, the sum of $2,000 was placed in the estimates for the appointment of a judge. This statutory provision is required and necessary under our system in all cases. Circumstances have arisen, which have been fully discussed in this House, which warrant our challenging the propriety of this vote. It is perhaps wholly unavoidable to refer somewhat to a previous discussion, but so far as that discussion contained statements of fact or presentation of a defence of charges, I suppose we have unavoidably to refer to it. The charges made against Judge Prendergast are that he had taken part in an election contest shortly before his appointment, and that from evidence which was disclosed in an election investigation it transpired that he had entered into a bargain to pay a man for carrying voters to the polls—a bargain that was fully consummated after the election—and that he had promised a man an office. I am not going into these matters further than to say that a defence was set up for this judge in reference to one of these charges, and a statement was read to the House by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, which purported to be extracts from the evidence taken in the case. I have looked over that statement since it was submitted to the House by my hon. friend, and I am sorry to say that they are not true extracts from the evidence. I have here a certified copy of the evidence in full, and I have compared these extracts which were made and furnished to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and I find that they only purport to be extracts relating to one of the charges, that of promising a man an office, and I submit they are not fair extracts. They do not claim to be a full statement of the evidence. That was perhaps impossible to make in a communication of that kind, but I submit the whole of the evidence ought to have been sent to my hon. friend, and then he would be in a position to say whether he was submitting to the House a fair statement or not. I have the evidence in full, and I can easily show my hon. friend that the extracts submitted by Judge Prendergast in this case are not correct extracts from the evidence. The other charge is far the more important one, because in that case the motives of the act are not inquired into; the simple act of hiring a man to drive voters on an election day, and the paying him for it, or causing him to be paid, is a corrupt offence, and the motives are not to be inquired into. The bare fact being proved, it is an offence under the Election Act. In view of the fact that these charges have come out in the public press, and been formulated in this House, the judge did not take the course he should have taken. When this offence transpired on the 29th of April in the election court of Manitoba before Hon. Justice Killam, the court was adjourned with the understanding, expressed by the counsel for the petitioners, that Mr. Prendergast would be put upon the stand to answer these charges and explain them. Thirty-six days transpired before the counsel agreed to ask the court to meet again, and when the court met Mr. Howell, the lawyer for the petitioners, admitted that in consequence of this evidence which had been given, he would not ask, or could not ask, that the petition should be maintained, and consented to its being overruled and dismissed. It may be that Judge Prendergast can make a perfect defence, but for his own sake it was most unfortunate that he did not go on the stand and tell the truth, according to his knowledge, about these charges that were preferred against him. They were very serious charges, affecting the integrity and character of a judge. It is very much to be regretted that he did not take that course. He did not take it, however, and then, when he was requested to make a statement and a defence, he should have put a complete copy of the evidence at least into the hands of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—He did send me a copy of the evidence.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That must have been subsequent to the day it was discussed in this House. My hon. friend gave us to understand that he had not received a copy of the evidence that day.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—You must have misunderstood what I said, because I had a copy of the evidence then.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is on one charge.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Only one.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes, and I had to go on that day, because my hon. friend urged it so strongly, but I have since then received the evidence in the Roy charge.

Hon. Mr FERGUSON—I understand my hon. friend to say that he had in his possession, when the matter was discussed in this House, a certified copy of the complete evidence in the case of Berthiaume?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But he was not then in possession, or is not yet in possession of the evidence relating to Roy?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was not then in possession of it, but I am now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—All I have to say is that if my hon. friend was in possession of the evidence in full, and a certified copy of the evidence in the Berthiaume charge in that case, he must have drawn the inference from that evidence that Prendergast had promised this man an office to secure his vote. I am sorry that my hon. friend did not compare the certified copy of the evidence with Mr. Prendergast's own statement, because he would have found that the judge's summary was materially wrong. Not only does he omit the crucial point in that evidence, but he imports into it some statements that are not to be found in the certified copy.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I should like to know what those statements are.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is one statement that I will just refer to in which he says that he was employed as poll clerk on election day by the returning officer, Mr. Paradis. The evidence, if my hon. friend will look it over, will show that Mr. Prendergast employed him, and spoke to him and procured the appointment.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Did the evidence of Berthiaume not say that he was appointed by the returning officer.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He said that in the first instance, but when he was asked further on as to who got the appointment for him, he said Mr. Prendergast.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is entirely omitted and I mention that to show how unfair the extract is, inasmuch as it does not show who secured the appointment for him. It matters little, in point of fact, who was the party under whose employment he was that day; it was the man who hired him and got the position for him. That is the chief point in it, and that is entirely left out. The other charge has not been replied to at all. There is no statement furnished this House with regard to it, and there was no reply. My hon. friend says he is now in possession of the evidence. I should be very sorry to do anything that would be regarded as unfair in this matter. As it stands at this moment, a most unfavourable impression exists with regard to Judge Prendergast's position in the public mind. There is a provision in the law by which an inquiry can be made into the conduct of a judge, and the grounds for this inquiry are very broad, for it sums it up by saying: "any other cause." I should be sorry to take any strong course in this case if my hon. friend can assure me that he will look at that clause in the Act and have a proper inquiry made into this matter. If my hon. friend will assure me that he will do so, I shall withdraw my opposition to the bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—What is the clause that my hon. friend refers to?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is in the County Court Act of 1882. My hon. friend will find it in the Revised Statutes, and the hon. Secretary of State read extracts from it the other day. It is chapter 138, Revised Statutes of 1886.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the authority of the Governor in Council to deal with County Court Judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I submit that in view of the law providing for such an inquiry as this, and in view of all that has transpired, it is necessary that this inquiry should take place, and if such an inquiry cannot be granted, I feel disposed to move an amendment to this bill striking out the clause which refers to the appointment of an additional judge in Manitoba until the matter can be properly settled.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I ought to consider the statements on both sides more thoroughly than I have been able to do so far, before coming to a decision to take any action. I mean to do my duty in this matter whatever it is, whether it is a disagreeable duty or not, but my hon. friend knows my mode of proceeding, that I act cautiously. Therefore, I am not prepared to say, without a more full consideration than I have given to the statements on both sides, whether a commission should issue or not. If it is proper that a commission should issue on these facts, I will see that one does issue, but I am not prepared to say that at this moment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I might ask my hon. friend whether he would, at a later period to-day or to morrow, be able to give an answer upon that point, because in that event we could defer until to-morrow any action which we propose taking.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is perfectly impossible to give this case consideration while the House is sitting. I am overwhelmned now with work, and I cannot undertake to look into the matter before the session closes. I wish I could, but I cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is nothing, under the circumstances, for this House to do but just to take the course which we consider to be right in this matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to suggest to my hon. friend on the other side, that he should consent to the second reading of the bill, and that the third reading should not take place until to-morrow. That would not, of course, prevent discussion on the third reading. The motion to go into committee can be made to-morrow and if, under the circumstances, it is considered in the interest of the country that this bill should not pass, then the motion could be made for the three months hoist, or we can allow it to go into committee, strike out the first clause and then report the bill as amended. I can readily understand the difficulties the hon. Minister of Justice has just now, and I think that every one who has had experience as the head of a department, more particularly during the sitting of parliament, will realize that his time is fully occupied, especially at the close of a session when so much business is thrust upon him all at one time; but he might take the twelve or fourteen or twenty hours we shall have at our disposal to consider this matter, and after that he might be able to give some answer that will satisfy my hon. friend that the matter will receive the fullest possible consideration and that an investigation will take place into the conduct of the judge, should the certified evidence be of such a character as to justify it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think my hon. friend is quite right; he may move the six months' hoist at the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think my hon. friend desires to kill the whole bill. He is in favour of the increase in the salary of the judge to whom the second clause applies. I had forgotten at the moment, but I remember the circumstances after attention had been called to it. There is no reason why the additional $100 should not be added to the judge's salary.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend can move in committee to strike out the clause as to the Manitoba judge if he pleases. It does not require my consent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was pointing out what I thought the best course to pursue—to let the second reading take place, giving my hon. friend time to look into the matter until to-morrow and then, if my hon. friend from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) did not receive satisfactory assurance as to what would be done in the matter, he could take whatever course he thought proper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite willing to allow the bill to be read the second time and go to the Committee of the Whole House to-morrow, and then my hon. friend will have time to consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It strikes me that the hon leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield are under some misapprehension as to the effects of this bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then I am surprised at the action taken by the hon. the leader of the opposition. This has been treated as a case of misbehaviour on the part of a judge. What are the facts? The facts are that at a period not later than the month of February, when an election took place in the province of Manitoba, Mr. Prendergast, who was not then a judge, and was not appointed for nearly three months after, is alleged to have taken some part in the election. How that can be misbehaviour on the part of a judge which would bring him under the provisions of the Act, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, is something I cannot understand. The provision reads:

> Every judge of a county court in any province of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour as a judge.

It does not refer to the time before he was appointed.

> A judge of the county court may be relieved from office by the Governor General in Council for misbehaviour, incapacity, or inability to perform his duties properly.

It does not mean that if a judge, before he went on the bench, happened to be a pretty active politician, that that is misbehaviour for which he could be removed. That would be extreme. We have very few judges throughout the Dominion who have not taken an active part in politics. What are the offences that Judge Prendergast is supposed to have committed two months and a half before he was appointed a judge? One was that a man who came to him, and alleged that he was going to vote for the Liberal candidate, stated that at the last election he had voted Conservative, but this time was going to vote Liberal, and asked Judge Prendergast, a somewhat influential man, if he would use his influence to get him a position, and after some time Judge Prendergast said he would. I do not think that that is a serious offence. There is no moral guilt involved in it. There is nothing discreditable about that. Any member of this House is liable to do the same. It is a reasonable and proper thing to do. The other offence is that Mr. Prendergast, on the 16th of February or thereabouts, two months and a half before he was appointed a judge, paid a carter five dollars for conveying voters to the polls. I am quite aware that that is a violation of the law for preventing corrupt practices at elections, but there is no moral guilt about that. If a carter drove voters to the polls on election day, five dollars was not an unreasonable sum to pay. I may say that in the county from which I come, Halifax, it is found that it is necessary that cabs and carters should be employed on election day, and in some cases arrangements have been made between the two parties that the mere conveying of a voter to the poll shall not be regarded as a corrupt practice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law says it is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Five dollars is not an unreasonable sum to pay for a day's work, and that is the offence with which Judge Prendergast is charged. How these two comparatively minor offences, if they are offences at all, can be held in any way to affect Judge Prendergast's position is something that I cannot understand. There are very few judges on the bench in Canada who have not, at one time or other, before they were appointed to the bench, committed acts which were of much more serious consequence than those alleged against Judge Prendergast.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

COLD STORAGE ON STEAMSHIPS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (141) "An Act respecting cold storage on steamships from Canada to the United Kingdom and in certain cities in Canada." He said:—For some time past the Minister of Agriculture has been giving very close attention to the methods by which perishable products of Canada can be placed in the markets of Great Britain. We have in the past enjoyed a very limited trade in what may be called perishable products, in butter, eggs, dressed meat and fruits. Very limited quantities have gone from Canada, although great quantities are consumed in Great Britain. One hundred and eighteen million dollars worth of dressed meat was consumed in England last year, of which Canada furnished less than four per cent. Of butter, the importations were $74,000,000, and Canada furnished $1,500,000. It increased about $1,000,000 last year by the improved methods which had been adopted. Of eggs, in 1896 $20,000,000 worth were imported of which Canada sent only half a million. Of raw fruit the importations averaged $15,000,000 to $23,000,000, and Canada has furnished about one-tenth, which was almost exclusively apples. The United States government have recently appropriated a considerable sum of money to test the matter of placing butter on the English market. We know that Australia has for some time past been forwarding dressed meat to the British market through cold storage, and contracts have been made with the various steamship companies in Canada for the placing in vessels of what might be called cold storage departments, and contracts were made with the Elder-Dempster Company for a weekly sailing from Montreal to Avonmore. I have here the contracts but they have not been printed. A contract was also made with the Donaldson line, Montreal to Glasgow, for one steamer. With the Allan line a contract was made for one steamer from Montreal to Glasgow. Arrangements were made for three steamships by the Thompson line from Montreal to London. The Allan line from Montreal to London three steamships fortnightly, and the Torrance line two steamships from Montreal to Liverpool, and with the H. A. Allan Company, two steamships from Montreal to Liverpool.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They are all from Montreal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are all Montreal firms.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The point of departure is Montreal in each case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Montreal or Quebec. There seems to be a port of call at Prince Edward Island, because I see the bill authorizes a payment of 5 per cent on the sum for three years for the consideration of cold storage accommodation at Charlottetown to the extent of $20,000. I have not had the opportunity of carefully going through the various contracts, but I presume that arrangements must be made for calling at Charlottetown. The terms of the agreement are for the carriage of butter, cheese, and other perishable products in cold storage at a temperature of 30 to 35 degrees for butter, and about 34 for cheese and fruit; each steamship to have cold storage capacity of 10,000 cubic feet; estimated cost of putting in the storage arrangements, per steamship, $10,000; and the rate for above freight ordinarily charged will be 10 shillings per ton on butter and cheese, and the same charge for an equivalent space for the other products—10 shillings per ton in addition to current rates for freight. The agreement is to stand for three years, and the payment of storage to the companies is distributed over those three years. The estimate was $10,000, and the government agreed to pay one-half, but the payment of that is to be distributed over the three years, 1897, 1898 and 1899. In the products fresh creamery butter is always to have the preference, supposing the steamers have not the space to take all that is offered, and the Minister of Agriculture is allowed to send forward at any time two cargoes to be known as trial shipments which are also to have the preference. This bill proposes to confirm those agreements. In addition to that, authority is asked from parliament to pay five per cent on sums to be expended on cold storage appliances in Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Toronto and Charlottetown. The amounts are not to exceed $40,000 in the cost of each place in Quebec, Halifax and St. John, and not to exceed $50,000 in the case of Toronto, and not to exceed $20,000 in the case of Charlottetown. The five per cent guarantee on the outlay will extend over the three years, during which this trial is to be made. It will be observed that in an important article, of which there is a large consumption in England—that is cheese—where it can be preserved without the temperature being reduced to 34 or 35, as in the case of butter, we have practically captured the British market and of the amount of cheese which is imported into Great Britain, Canada has furnished more than one-half. Formerly the United States furnished a large amount, but our cheese is very much preferred, and has cut the United States cheese out of the market, as we have more than half the trade in cheese outside of Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Can the hon. gentleman give us any information in regard to the result of any shipments which have been made in cold storage at this season, especially in regard to chilled meats and butter?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the experiments are only going on now. Professor Robertson is going now to superintend the shipments which are being made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is a great pity that my hon. friend had not arranged to have the copies of this contract in the hands of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is just what the House of Commons had.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I notice that in the first clause of the bill reference is made to contracts which have been entered into with certain companies under the authority of an Order in Council dated the 4th day of May, 1897, and that "these contracts are hereby sanctioned and confirmed." Therefore, although the bill is apparently, on the face of it, a very simple one, it is a very important one. Are we, by adopting this bill, sanctioning and confirming contracts which we have had no opportunity whatever of considering? I cannot, just from the glance I have had within the last five minutes over the provisions of this contract, ascertain exactly what they amount to; but my impression is that these contracts are altogether from the port of Montreal to some ports of Great Britain—London, Liverpool, Glasgow and other ports.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From Montreal and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I notice a provision in one of them for calling at Quebec, but, so far as I have been able to glance over them—of course I may not be correct in that—I cannot observe any provision for calls being made at any other points. This scheme should be made sufficiently comprehensive to include calls or departures from the ports of the lower provinces. My hon. friend thinks that that must be the case. I hope he is right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not had time to read the contract.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon friend infers that such is the case from the second section of the bill which relates to a bonus of five per cent of the amount that the government are instructed under this law to give for three years to any company or companies that may establish cold storage premises and refrigerating plant at different points, including Toronto, Quebec, Hallfax, St. John and Charlottetown, with specific amounts which will be guaranteed for the different places in proportion to the size and importance of the trade which is likely to arise or offer at these different points. That is all right, but it seems to me there will be very little benefit in the bonus that is given to cold storage at such points as Halifax, St. John and Charlottetown, unless there are some departures of steamers arranged for from these points. It is possible this may be in these contracts, but my hon. friend is not able to assure the House that such departures are provided for, and I have not been able to see it. Under the circumstances, we should not proceed very far with the bill after the ground, as it were, has been broken; we might put off the further consideration of it for a short time in order that an opportunity may be given to hon. members to examine into these contracts and know what they are voting for. On the general principle of the bill, I congratulate my hon. friend the Secretary of State and the government on their having adopted very faithfully in this respect, as well as in many others, the policy of their predecessors. This matter was brought almost to the point of completion under the late administration. The Minister of Agriculture met with a certain amount of success under the administration of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in this House, and other Conservative administrations. Particularly under the administration of my hon. friend (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) this matter had been advanced to a very satisfactory point, and the policy of the late government was to perfect, as far as possible, a system of cold storage in order to give the producers of perishable products in our country all the advantage that such producers in other countries derive from the improved and modern methods of transportation by cold storage. Possibly we may find that full provision is made in this bill for the different parts of the country, and that these contracts are in every respect such contracts as we ought to approve of. It is possible we may find all that to be the case, but even if we should not agree in the details, we are very glad to be able to congratulate the members of the government on their having adopted the policy of the Conservative party on this very important question, which is one that lies at the very foundation of the prosperity of the farmers of Canada. I should like to reserve for myself the right to speak further upon this bill, after an opportunity has been given of examining the provisions of these contracts, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that the matter should lie over until we have a better opportunity of examining it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We might read the bill the second time to-day and refer it to Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I desire to enter a protest against this mode of procedure. This is a principle which I believe every one who takes an interest in the welfare of the agricultural community will readily adopt, and vote for almost any sum that may be asked in order to accomplish the object in view, which is the placing upon the British markets of articles which may be considered perishable—to export them in the condition in which they will bring the highest possible price. But is it fair to ask us to confirm a number of contracts involving the expenditure of large sums of money, without even knowing what they contain? Even the hon. the Secretary of State, who moved the second reading of the bill, when asked for an explanation, stated that he had not read the contracts, and did not know what they were.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave a synopsis of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman could not give a synopsis intelligently without reading the contracts. The hon. gentleman may possess powers which other people do not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I knew what the basis was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is more than we knew. He said he had not read the contracts, and consequently could not answer the question asked by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. I am fully in accord—and I am sure every man who has the welfare of the country at heart will be in accord—with the principle involved in these contracts. It is something that has received the attention, not only of the late administration, but of the administration before it; and I know arrangements were made for carrying it out nearly, if not quite, as extensively as this bill proposes. Shipments were made some years ago; but the facilities for taking the articles to the English market in a state in which they could be properly placed before the consumer were not of such a character as to justify its continuance. The present government have taken up the question, and I believe that they have not only arrived at a decision, but have entered into contracts which I hope will accomplish the object we all have in view. But I must again protest against this mode of asking the Senate to confirm contracts and solemnly pass an opinion upon a question which involves the expenditure of a large amount of money, without giving us at least 24 hours to examine the contracts and the documents. If I should be here next session, I notify hon. gentlemen opposite that if measures of this character come down at this late stage of the session I shall endeavour to delay the House until members of the House can ascertain really what they were voting for.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When contracts of that kind are brought down in the House of Commons in connection with bills, it is usual to print them, and I supposed they had been printed. I sent to Mr. Botterell to know where they were, and he could not give any account of them. Then I sent over to the Clerk of the House of Commons, and I found that the printing committee had never ordered that they should be printed. The contracts are all alike, though in different forms. The terms of each contract correspond. If they had even printed one copy, we would have had all the details before us, but the House of Commons did not think it of sufficient importance to order the printing of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was only laid before the Commons on the 17th of the month.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I am pleased to hear that the government have taken the matter of cold storage in hand and introduced a bill, provided the terms of the contract to which it refers are such as would meet the approval and the requirements of the people generally in the Dominion of Canada. It is a matter that is of very great importance, as has been stated, to every section of the Dominion. It is of very great importance to the little province from which I come, in which there is produced now a very large quantity of butter and cheese and various other articles which can profitably be sent to the old country if there is a proper system of cold storage introduced, and if the steamers call at Charlottetown for the purpose of taking the articles which are preserved there. But if they have to be sent to any other port from the port of Charlottetown without being in cold storage during the time they are being conveyed to the steamer at some other port, it will be of very little benefit to the people of Prince Edward Island. I trust, therefore, that the arrangements are such that these steamers will call at certain fixed periods at Charlottetown, for the purpose of taking from there the products of the province which are intended to be preserved by cold storage to their destination. It appears that this system of cold storage at present is rather an expensive one; but in comparison with many other inventions, this is an invention which is still almost in its infancy, and may be improved upon and perfected beyond what it is now at a very early period. And in connection with that I may refer to an article in the Citizen of yesterday morning, in which it is stated as follows:

> Dr. H. B. Evans, an English physician and chemist of good standing, now residing in Picton, Ontario, has written to the Minister of Agriculture here in reference to the cold storage system, that he is prepared so to fit up a ship to go across the Atlantic with a sample process of preserving meat at a cost of $1,000 as against $10,000 as estimated by experts. If this be true, it opens an illimitable trade in dead meat between the colonies and Great Britain that it is almost impossible to estimate. He claims all he wants is a clean well-ventilated "between-decks," without any elaborate and expensive machinery, whilst time and distance is of no account. It might be applied to Australia as well as Canada with equal results. South Australia has offered an immense bonus to a man who shall land a cargo of meat in Great Britain in good marketable condition. So has New Zealand and Tasmania. Dr. Evans, like most men and inventors, is not a capitalist, and seeks aid from such to carry out the enterprise.

If there is anything in this such as the doctor claims it is a most important matter for Canada, and not only for the Dominion, but for all other parts of Her Majesty's possessions in which articles are produced, which may be forwarded to Great Britain or to their best market by means of cold storage. There is no doubt that the system of cold storage which is now in vogue will be perfected in a short time, and rendered much more cheaply available than it is at present. It is within my own recollection, and not more perhaps than 20 years ago, when a gentleman from our own province invented and patented a system of cold storage, which was found to be very efficient and very effective; but at that time it was so expensive that, although patented in Canada, it was never put in use here. I believe one or two companies were formed in the United States, where the patents were secured, and the companies were organized with a capital of something like $1,000,000, but it cost such a very large sum to put the system into practical operation that it did not pay the inventor or those who embarked their money in it. It was used also at that time for the purpose of preserving fish which were brought in a fresh state from the Baie St. George to the United States market; and it was subject to the same objection there, that it was too expensive. From that time up to the present there has been a very great advance made in the method of cold storage, and in comparison with what it cost at that period the cost is now moderate and reasonable; and it is quite likely that in the course of a few years further advances in science will reduce the cost in proportion, perhaps, to what it has been reduced in the past. If that should be the case, it will be a great boon to the Dominion, and no part of Canada will benefit more than the maritime provinces, which produce so many articles that can be exported in cold storage to the markets of Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I should like to ask if any provision is made for the handling of the goods in the old country after they arrive there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, Prof. Robertson is on his way over there now to meet the first shipment and make provision for its distribution on arrival there—practically to introduce the system.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have gone over the contracts, and I can find no provision of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire tomorrow, and see what provision is made.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Saturday, 26th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN COUNTIES RAILWAY CO.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (110) "An Act to incorporate the Montreal and Southern Railway Company," without amendments.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVLLE moved the suspension of the rule.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I object to suspending the rule.

The bill was allowed to stand for third reading on Monday.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER rose to move:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidies granted by the Parliament of Canada to the Drummond County Railway Company, in the province of Quebec; the present financial position of the said company, its liabilities of every description, whether matured or accruing; the condition and classification of the said railway, as well as its equipment, and also, all other matters and things relating to the said subjects or any of them, as well as all other matters and things relating to the said railway; with power to send for papers, persons and records, and to report from time to time, and that the said committee consist of the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Messieurs Ferguson, Power, Scott, Macdonald (P.E.I.), De Boucherville, Primrose, Cox, Landry, Prowse, Wood, Thibaudeau (de la Vallière), and the mover.

He said: In making this motion I have very little indeed to say to the House, and I think it will not be necessary for me to make any very extended remarks. The important action of this House in relation to the bill for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal a day or two ago placed that question in a very peculiar, if not extraordinary, position. It is said that, with a view to checkmate the action of this House on that occasion, it is the intention of the government to take some other steps which will have the effect of carrying out the policy indicated in that bill, although possibly not in precisely the same way. Now, the action of this House on the bill for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal was based upon two grounds: first, that the bargain was an improvident one from a business point of view; secondly, that it was clouded with suspicions of corruption on the part of those connected with the Drummond County Railway. For my own part, I am not in a position to say and have not the information necessary to form a judgment as to the wisdom of the contract with the Grand Trunk Railway Co. and the Drummond County Railway Co. from a business point of view, and it was therefore desirable that further action in relation to that proposed work should be postponed, at least for another year, until such information could be submitted to parliament. In the second place, with regard to the charges of corruption indicated in the public press, I am also without a tittle of evidence as to the truth of those charges. Still they are so very grave that I think it is due to all concerned that there should be a public investigation in connection with them. In fact, I think it follows, as a logical consequence of our action the other day, that we should proceed at once to make such an investigation. I shall give, not in my own words, but in an extract from a leading journal of the province of Quebec, the Montreal Star, a statement which will put these views very clearly before the House, and upon which I think the propriety of an investigation is clearly indicated. This paper says:

The rental is equal to three per cent per annum on $7,000,000, which sum may fairly be taken as the amount of public money to be sunk in the enterprise.

Critics of the transaction say:

That there has been no great public demand for this great undertaking, and that it offers no material public advantage.

That suppose the extension of the Intercolonial to be desirable, the route is neither the shortest nor the best available.

That the Drummond County Railway is of inferior construction, and the price agreed upon exorbitant. That whereas the total outlay of the company on the road would be between $600,000 and $700,000, the Government is paying for it $2,200,000 and that it has actually been offered for sale, lock, stock and barrel within the last two years for $400,000. The general impression is that the line has cost the proprietors very little money indeed. The company claims to have a paid-up capital of $400,000, but it is a common practice in companies of this sort for the shareholders to pay up only the ten per cent of the capital which is necessary to obtain a charter, and there is no reason to believe this one to be an exception. The total cost of construction, according to the Government reports, is put down at $1,366,485, but it is altogether probable that this amount includes the paid up capital of $400,000, which was most likely accepted by the contractors for the building of the road in the form of stock according to a practice that is not usual. The total cost of the ninety miles of railway constructed, omitting this paid up capital, which we assume had an existence only on paper, was probably $966,485, made up as follows: Subsidies paid, about $700,000; floating debt due the Eastern Townships Bank, $221,692; ten per cent on the nominal paid up capital, $40,000. The amount of subsidies voted is as follows: Dominion, $297,920; Quebec, $549,000; Nicolet & St. Leonard, $15,000, and on account of these about $700,000 has been actually paid. As to the reported offer of sale for $400,000, it is alleged that one gentleman had an option of purchase at little more than this figure, and actually negotiated with a well-known firm of financiers in London for the issue of bonds on the strength of this option.

Now here is a statement of fact which I think demands a public investigation in this House before any further proceedings are taken by parliament towards the extension of the Intercolonial Railway, from Levis to Montreal through such a scheme as that in the bill that we rejected a day or two ago. The article in the Montreal Star continues:

The critics further say:

That the agreement was entered into before any official reports had been made upon the property, and that the order in council authorizing the deal was actually passed before the government had been in power a month. That on the strength of this agreement, a bank in this province discounted notes for a large amount, the proceeds of which were applied partly to paying the Liberal expenses in the Quebec provincial elections, partly the Liberal expenses in the Dominion by-elections, partly to paying the deposits in the contestation of Conservative seats, and partly to subsidizing heavily certain Liberal newspapers.

I think all hon. gentlemen will agree that these grave charges demand an investigation by a committee of this House, and it is with a view of having such an investigation before any further steps are taken by the government or parliament to carry out the proposed scheme of railway extension, that I now move for this committee. I would say that I have been requested to add two names to the committee, and, if the House will permit me to do so,—of course, I cannot make an amendment of this kind without the permission of the House—I would add the names of Mr. McInnes (B.C.) and Mr. Clemow to the committee.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am in favour of inquiring into the affairs of this railway company, inasmuch as charges have been made in this House and elsewhere in regard to the proceedings of that company, and I think it is desirable that those charges should be investigated. But it is impossible for us to investigate them this session. It is a well-known rule that prorogation ends the powers of committees and after the prorogation it would not be desirable to keep twelve or fourteen members here in Ottawa for a month, or whatever term should be required for that investigation even if we had the legal power to do so; but we have not. My own opinion is, that it is undesirable to enter upon this investigation when we have not time to go on with it, when the time before prorogation is so short that it may be possible at night or some other hour to examine only a witness or two who may be strong partisans, hostile men, the inquiry then standing over for six or seven months. That would be unfair, and I am sure my hon. friend and the House would not wish to do anything unfair in the matter. It is eminently the duty of the Senate, not only to be fair in all matters, but to seem fair. Our peculiar constitution adds special strength to that course being taken. My hon. friend does not claim to any personal knowledge in regard to any of these matters that are to be inquired into. He disclaimed that. He said he knew nothing about them, but he read an extract from a newspaper. It will never do for this House to lay down the rule that a committee must be appointed to investigate every charge that a newspaper may make. Such is not the rule now, and I hope never may be the rule. I appeal to my hon. friend that no useful work could be done by the committee this session. There is every probability that no work could be done this session, and it is perfectly certain that but a small amount of work, if any, could be done, and that no good would be accomplished by the appointment of a committee now. If one or two hostile witnesses were to be examined here, you must give notice of it to the parties whom it affects, of course. It is not intended, I presume, to go on with an examination in an ex parte manner. The examination would have no weight with the country, and ought to have no weight with the country, if that course were taken. I am sure the intention is that those interested in taking a different view from my hon. friend himself in regard to the charges should have the fullest opportunity to meet the charges made against them—should have full notice and be at liberty to appear before the committee, either personally or by counsel, as such persons may desire. The business of the House and of parliament will probably be closed next Monday. We will probably be engaged all day next Monday. We shall have a morning session and an afternoon session. The committee could not commence acting, even if it were the early part of the session, without at least a day's notice. The committee, if appointed now, might meet on Monday, not before, to make arrangements and give notice. There is no time for all this. I do not know what object my hon. friend would suggest as demanding haste. If this motion should be made next session, I would suggest that action should be taken early in the session, when the Senate has little to do, and when there can be a thorough investigation. I would use what influence I possess to have the investigation of that character. I hope my hon. friend will not press the motion. It is quite clear that the matter cannot be fairly dealt with under the motion; and I assume that my hon. friend does not wish to do anything unfairly. If we were settling the terms of the motion, I would suggest some changes in the expression of it, though I do not know that there is any use doing that now if the motion is to be withdrawn, as I hope it will. For instance, after asking that the committee should inquire into the expenditure of subsidies and the present financial condition of the company, its liabilities of every description whether matured or accruing the condition and classification of the said railway, as well as its equipment, the motion enumerates all branches of the inquiry that any one could think of. I do not object to the following words: "And also all other matters and things relating to the said subject, or any of them," but the next line should be struck out if all these subjects are to be investigated. There should not be the following words: "As well as all other matters and things relating to the said railway." That might embrace matters with which we have no concern. The committee should confine this investigation to matters with which the public are concerned.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You could add the words: "Of public concern."

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Then, again, I would strongly urge that when this motion is made next session we should endeavour to come to some mutual arrangement about who should compose the committee. It is really a judicial work on which the committee is to enter. Any one who desires a fair result, as I hope we all do, must see the importance of the committee preserving a judicial character. The committee are, in fact, judges. They ought not to lean in favour of one side or the other: they ought not to desire the success of one side more than the other. The large majority in this House, unfortunately, are the opponents of the present government and are against this railway, and have rejected the bargain we had made with the railway company. Therefore, I am not quixotic enough to imagine that the House would agree to anything else than having a majority on the committee. But it would be a fair thing that the two sides should be equally represented on this committee. I cannot expect the House perhaps to agree to that, though it would be a very reasonable thing to do. It would give great confidence to the public in the proceedings of the committee and the report they might come to after hearing the evidence, but if that is too much to expect, then there ought to be not more than a majority of one or, at the most, two—one, I think, ought to be enough. Then I think we ought to sit down and see whether this committee is the most satisfactory which we could agree to on both sides. I do not think the public would consider it so, constituted as it is. I do not care to discuss names here, because my brother senators are all men for whom I have respect, but there are some changes that would appear to me we might make with advantage, and I would not at all despair of coming to a conclusion satisfactory to us both if, before the motion is made next session, my hon. friend would sit down with me and consider who best should form this committee. These observations I make with reference to next session, when we will have plenty of time for the investigation. I wish we had time enough now. In many respects it would be desirable if we had time, but we have not. We either cannot enter on an investigation at all now or only a small part of the work could be done, and that part would consist merely of the examination of one or two hostile witnesses, by which no good could be accomplished. A party good might be accomplished, but the House does not desire to take a party view. It might answer a party purpose if one or two hostile witnesses were examined and their evidence spread over the country, and not answered. The statements they might make, there would be no opportunity of having examined. The reasons for withdrawing the motion seem to me of the strongest possible kind. There are constitutional difficulties in the way of a measure of this kind in the Senate, but I am not urging those, because what I want is that there should be a thorough investigation, under the circumstances, which everybody will see is advantageous and which may have a result which will be satisfactory to the country.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I desire to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I feel that there is a great deal of force in the objection which the hon. the leader of the House has offered to this investigation being undertaken at the present time, and that is the impossibility, unless we keep the two Houses of Parliament here for some weeks to come, of carrying on this investigation satisfactorily to ourselves and to the public and reach a decision which would generally give satisfaction. It appears to me, too, that the position of this question has very materially changed since the consideration of the measure was before this House a few days ago—that is, the measure involving the agreement which had been entered into between the government and the Grand Trunk Co. and the Drummond County Railway Co. The defeat of that measure in this House has put an end to that agreement.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The proposal now, as I gather by the few remarks made by the hon. leader of this House the other day, and from what was said in the other House, (I think it was last evening when this matter was up there for discussion) is merely to ask a sum of money for the present year to make an experiment, the object of which I understand to be to endeavour to show, as far as it is possible in that way, whether the proposition of the government to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal is a wise and good policy or not. That I understand from the government to be the object of placing this proposed sum in the estimates for this year. It is, as it were, a means of getting further information to enable us to form a judgment on that point. There are other questions, of course, involved, as to whether the amount they propose to pay is larger than they should pay or not, and whether this mode of extending the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal is the best mode of accomplishing that object or not. Those are questions which would properly come up for consideration after we had decided upon the general question of the policy of extending that road to Montreal. It appears to me, therefore, that there are some weighty reasons why it is not important that this investigation, if an investigation is to be had, should be at once. If the original agreement, as submitted to us to-day, is hereafter proposed to be carried out I have not any hesitation in saying that an investigation of this kind should be held before that agreement is entered into. But there is the further objection which the hon. leader of the House has mentioned to-day, that at this stage of the session it is practically, without great inconvenience to all the members of parliament, impossible to enter upon an investigation which will necessarily be lengthy to be satisfactory. That is a reasonable objection, and for my own part—and I am speaking only for myself as an independent, I hope, member of this Senate—I would join the hon. leader of the House in urging upon the mover of this motion not to press it this session.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no doubt, as my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) remarked, a considerable amount of force in what the hon. leader of the House has said as to the inconvenience of entering into such a very long inquiry as this would necessarily be, in a thorough manner at such an advanced period of the session. We who have had any experience in parliamentary affairs know that this inquiry would necessarily, to be of value at all, have to be a thorough one, and would occupy a very considerable amount of time, and there is no doubt in the world that in the present state of the public business, the prorogation being now pretty nearly in sight, it would be inconvenient for this House, and perhaps not desirable for a number of reasons, that this inquiry should be undertaken at the present moment. But we have to consider, in connection with that, whether steps are not proposed to be taken which would complicate the question in such a way as would make the inquiry next session very much like the position of locking the stable after the horses have been stolen. We have to look at that. If I am correctly advised, there are now under consideration in another place some three distinct propositions, which will have a very considerable effect upon the merits of this question. There is a proposition to vote $157,500 to lease these particular lines of railway for nine months. The amount set forth in that item is, I think, precisely the same amount as was in the bill which we rejected the other day, for the same period of time. Then, I understand, there is another provision in the estimates under consideration in another place, for appropriating $100,000 to purchase rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, for this portion of the road.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That makes it stronger. I was under the impression that it was simply to purchase rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway, but my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, tells me that it is intended to invest $100,000 for the use of these roads that they propose to rent.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is for both purposes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is to enable them to do the extra work in case they lease.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—And also we intend to purchase rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway. It is required this year, as in past years.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A portion of this item, at least, if not all of it, is to be used in purchasing rolling stock for the purpose of carrying out the proposed rental of these roads, the Drummond County Railway and that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway which the government proposed to acquire under the bill rejected in this House a few days ago. Then, in addition to that, there is a proposition for voting a subsidy to that 42½ miles of the Drummond County Railway not yet constructed, a subsidy which will probably result in an expenditure of four or five or six thousand dollars a mile for that road. As far as that is concerned—I speak merely my own opinion and have not heard that of other gentlemen—I do not think there would be any very serious objection to it. That is a portion of the country which has no railway, and for local purposes there is no question that that district has the same claim on this parliament for railways that other parts of the country have, and the expenditure of that money, when it is being done precisely in the same way as it has been done in promoting the construction of railways in other parts of the country, would not be open to objection even at the present moment and under the present circumstances; but the proposal to lease these two lines of railway and to commit the country to the policy which was laid down in all its details in the measure which was before us the other day just at this particular time, is, I think, a very serious step. At the end of nine months, should it be found that the experiment was not a successful one, and the government were to tell us the results were not satisfactory, and they were not prepared to carry out the plan, the rolling stock which will probably be acquired from the Drummond County Railway—I take it that it is highly probable the intention is to purchase the rolling stock at present owned by the Drummond County Railway Co.—however, whether purchased in that way or in any other way, it affects the question in the same respect, the government would be buying rolling stock which they might not at all require, and to that extent, at least, they would be committed to a policy of extending the railway in some way from Lévis to Montreal. I do not think there is any necessity for such hurry with regard to this matter. Too much haste has been the trouble from the beginning. If there had been less haste, in the first instance, in launching this scheme before the country, and perhaps a little more hurry in bringing it down to this House at an earlier period of the session, there might have been a much better understanding arrived at than exists to-day. Feeling, as I do, the inconvenience that would result to the members of this House and the difficulty of making a complete and thorough investigation at this time, I would join with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken in asking my hon. friend to allow the motion to stand over at the present time, to be taken up very early next session, if this matter should be allowed to remain in statu quo until then. There would not, as far as I myself feel, be the slightest objection to voting a subsidy to the unconstructed portion on the Drummond County Railway, for the reason I have already given, but I do not think this House should be called upon, or that the government of the country should commit itself, as it would be committing itself, to the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal over this particular line of railway in the way indicated, without further consideration, and without having this investigation, which appears to be now required, gone into before a committee. Apart from the reasons that I have already given, I think it very likely, although I am not a railway man and know very little about the operation of railways, that if the government entered upon the leasing of those two lines, they would find it necessary to enter into arrangements of a permanent nature; that there would be expenditures which would require them to exercise the power of using the Governor General's warrants, or some such means as that, to meet the expenditure. I feel sure whatever way the expenditure would be met, the government would be confronted with practical difficulties in the way of leasing and using these railways by a simple rental which would complicate the question and give them trouble, and seriously complicate the matter when it would finally come up before parliament. While I agree with my hon. friend who has moved the resolution, that such an inquiry as he has asked for is necessary, and while I shall be prepared to support his motion should a policy that I cannot agree with be persisted in by the government with regard to it, I feel that it is not wise to adopt any childish tactics either one side or the other. We should approach this question seriously, and while I would not feel disposed to press this inquiry if the government would take a reasonable course and not attempt to force their entire policy upon us, yet, if that course is not adopted, in the public interest the country will expect that we should not commit ourselves to any course that would fasten the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway over these roads into Montreal, which would involve an increased expenditure beyond the rental, and which would be almost sure, in the end, in the practical carrying out of it, to involve large expenditures besides these which I have indicated. The views which I now express are mine. Others may not agree with me, but these are my views in regard to it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—There is no intention of committing the country to a permanent arrangement by what has been proposed in the other House. On the contrary, the intention is to make such a temporary agreement as shall not have that effect. We earnestly mean to make a mere experiment. There has been no negotiation with the company and it may be impossible for us to come to any agreement. There has not been time for any negotiation, but the intention of the government is that it shall be a mere experiment; the agreement shall be such as will make it of that character, and will not render necessary the adoption of any permanent agreement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is perhaps just as well that the majority of the members of the House should express their views on the question. The motion which the hon. member from Richmond (Mr. Miller) has made has been amply vindicated by the statement which the hon. leader of the government has made respecting it. We are now in a very different position from that which we occupied when that subject was under discussion in the first place. The present proposal is that a new arrangement should be made. No arrangement has yet been made concerning the Drummond County Railway.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—No agreement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—No agreement exists, but it is proposed that a temporary arrangement should be made for the purpose of trying the experiment of running the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal for a period of nine months. It is proposed to vote for that purpose an amount equivalent to the rate that those roads were to cost the government under the arrangement first talked of. I may just as well express my opinion now, as at any other time, respecting that. I am decidedly opposed to that policy for many reasons, on account of the cost that it would entail upon the country. Let us look for one moment at the amount of money that is necessary to carry out the experiment. In the first place, it is proposed that the sum of $157,500 should be voted for the purpose of making that arrangement for nine months. Then, there is an additional sum of $100,000 to be paid for the purchase of rolling stock, either from the Drummond County Railway or some other company, for the use of the Intercolonial Railway. Then, besides that, it is proposed to give a subsidy for the construction of the 42½ miles of road additional required to carry the Drummond County Railway to the Chaudière or towards Quebec. That subsidy, at $5,000 a mile, would amount to $212,500.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—$2,200 per mile.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Even at $2,200 per mile, it would amount to somewhere about $135,000 or $150,000. The whole thing, reckoning at the smallest figure, would amount to $400,000 or $450,000. I am not prepared to go in for any such expenditure as that for the purpose of experiment, and I believe if it ever becomes necessary to continue the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, we can do it on very much better terms than by entering into an experiment for that purpose, involving an expenditure of some $400,000, which if it happens not to be a success, must be thrown away in the experiment. Therefore, I wish to let the government know that I, as one member of the House—and disposed at the same time to give the government my support for every measure that I consider fair and advantageous for the benefit of the country—would be opposed to that arrangement. I do not forget that the province from which I come has a claim upon the Dominion government far beyond that which any other province can set forth—a claim for the construction of railway accommodation for the people of Prince Edward Island, for furnishing the branches necessary to finish the Prince Edward Island Railway. We have a legal and equitable claim upon the government of the Dominion of Canada to finish that railway and to give the people of Prince Edward Island the accommodation which they have required ever since they went into confederation and which they have had a right to expect from that time up to the present, and until the Dominion government take that into consideration and treat the province from which I come with that justice and equity to which we are entitled, I shall raise my voice against any extravagant expenditure for the purpose of giving railway accommodations that are not asked for to any other province in this broad Dominion.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to take exception to some remarks which have been made more than once in this House where we are described as partisans.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It is said that a large majority here is opposed to the government. I for one, speaking for myself, do not feel at all in that position. I felt disposed from the first time I took a seat in this chamber, to give the government of the day the benefit of every doubt and to interfere as little as possible with their financial arrangements, but when a measure is proposed, which I believe in my heart to be contrary to the best interests of this country, I feel called upon to oppose it, whether it comes from the government or from the opposition. In regard to this question of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, it must be borne in mind that when the Intercolonial Railway was constructed over thirty years ago, it was never anticipated that that road was going to be a paying concern. It was part and parcel of the terms of confederation, and the confederation of these provinces could never have been accomplished without the building and completion of that railway up to Quebec, just the same as the Canadian Pacific Railway was part and parcel of the terms by which British Columbia was taken into the union. A great deal has been said about the great cost and the continued expenditure and cost to this country of the Intercolonial Railway. I admit all that. It is costing the country a great deal, but the people of the country are getting the benefit of it, and I do not know that any province of the Dominion is getting more benefit from it than Ontario. Before confederation Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick imported the principal part of their supplies and goods from the mother country. To-day, the large proportion comes from the large manufacturers of Ontario, and all that the western section of the country takes from us, is simply the coal that we produce, and not a great deal of it. The greater part of the coal consumed in Ontario comes still, I believe, from the United States; so that we may look upon the Intercolonial Railway just as we look upon our highways, as a public necessity, and we cannot expect it to pay just now. It may become in the future a self-sustaining institution. We are getting no direct benefit from the large expenditures we have made upon the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are getting no direct benefit in returns from the large amount, the millions upon millions of money spent upon the canals of this Dominion, nor from the large expenditures that have been made upon other railways throughout the Dominion, and why should we run such a terrible risk of losing more money upon the Intercolonial Railway by trying this experiment of extending the line into Montreal? Are not the railways already connecting Quebec with Montreal able to do the work required of them? If not, if the requirements of the country demand additional railway accommodation, there might be some reason for extending the Intercolonial Railway, or building some other road up to Montreal; but I believe the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that great highway the St. Lawrence, are quite sufficient to carry all that traffic from Montreal down to the lower provinces and all the traffic from the lower provinces up to Montreal for very many years to come. Then we have the great public highway, the St. Lawrence. We have the Canadian Pacific Railway and we have the Grand Trunk Railway, all supplying the wants of the country in this direction, and can we expect by building a competing line, spending millions of money to bring the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, that we are not only going to get back enough to repay the extra cost to the country, but to reduce the yearly expenditure and the yearly loss upon the working of the Intercolonial Railway? It is an unreasonable thing to expect, and consequently I am opposed to extending the line in that direction. In reference to the new proposition that has been made, it is even a more objectionable one than the original proposition. And why? Because I cannot think it possible that you could get any fair and reasonable results from such an experiment. What is the experiment? A provisional contract has been entered into between the government, the Grand Trunk Railway Co. and the Drummond County Railway Co. I believe the Drummond County Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Company are anxious for the fulfilment of that contract, that it should be made binding by parliament. That bill has been defeated by this House, and the experiment is to be entered into to see if this contract is going to be a success or not. And why is the Grand Trunk Railway Company so very anxious to make it a success? Because it wants the contract already partially entered into, accomplished. And the result is going to be, when you undertake this experiment, that all the influence of the Grand Trunk Railway will be thrown in favour of the trade of the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—For nine months.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Yes for nine months, to make it appear that it is going to be a success in the future. Is the Grand Trunk Railway Company going to do that after the contract expires? No, the Grand Trunk Railway will turn around and be a strong competitor with the Dominion government, and compete with the Intercolonial Railway, and the experience and special training of the managers of the Grand Trunk Railway, or the managers of any other railway, will be sufficient to get the best trade in spite of all that the government or the Intercolonial Railway can do. The experiment, in place of being a fair test of the success of the scheme, will be quite the reverse. It will be misleading. I anticipate that if this experiment is proceeded with, it will be made to appear a grand success, that all the loss on the Intercolonial Railway is going to be wiped out, and that it is a grand bargain for the government; but when the experiment is over, and when you come into competition with the Grand Trunk Railway as well as the Canadian Pacific Railway, you will find that it will be adding yearly to the losses that are already incurred by running the Intercolonial Railway. I do think the proposition which has been made by the hon. member from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) is a very fair and reasonable one. It is too late in the session—it is very late I admit—to go into an investigation such as is asked for, but if the government is determined to go on with this business this session—and I do not see any necessity for it, as we have done without this extension until now and can do without it for some time yet—if they insist on going on with it, I think it is the duty of this House to proceed with the investigation. We are the servants of the people, and the members of the House of Commons are the servants of the people, and I do not see why parliament should be prorogued in a day or two If we are the servants of the people we should remain here as long as the interests of the country require us, and if this experiment is going to cost half a million of money, it will be time well spent to stay here a month and make this investigation before we commit the country to an unnecessary expenditure. After the investigation is made, after every information which can be had is obtained, then if it is found on examination to be a profitable arrangement and for the benefit of the country, I take it the Senate will offer no further opposition to the scheme proposed; but until then I think we should be very careful, and not consent to a measure of this kind without a very full investigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—While the hon. gentleman was speaking I sent for a volume of the statutes to ascertain what has been usual in reference to the management and administration of the Intercolonial Railway, and I find that year by year parliament has voted very readily any sums of money that were asked by the government who were responsible for the running of the Intercolonial Railway, and we have never challenged their rights to build additions and branches, and constructions of one kind or another. We have added year by year to their rolling stock. Challenges have been thrown out that it was highly improper that a government should ask to expend one hundred thousand dollars, but I find that in 1892 we voted increased accommodation at Halifax, $152,000, rolling stock, $20,000, extension along the river St. John, $14,000, additional accommodation at St. John, $121-000, sums aggregating half a million dollars and in another year, 1894, just the same charges, rolling stock, improvement on the road, and so on. The first item was $20,-000 of rolling stock. In 1894 there was an item of $10,000 for rolling stock, besides other increased accommodation.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Are the cases analogous?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they are. I think the administration of the Intercolonial Railway has been conducted in that way ever since it was constructed. The hon. gentleman smiles. It is quite true this House does not think the government should be trusted with the expenditure of that small sum of money for the extension, but we are asking for a less sum this year for expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway than is usual for the parliament to vote each year. I simply give these figures as an illustration. No such feeling was exhibited when the government asked leave to build branches of the Intercolonial Railway, or to extend it, whether it was a branch west or south or north. No one hesitated about authorizing the government to carry the road from Point Lévis to Rivière du Loup, and I find that in 1894 the amount voted by parliament was $464,375. When we find that year by year the administration has asked parliament for those large sums and they have freely granted them without any criticisms, it does seem to be dealing out a different policy towards the present administration to that which has been usual in the past. The government have very frequently said they think it is in the interest of the country to try this experiment. Those agreements which were read are not at an end. This House declined to accept them. At the end of nine months we may all be in a very much better position to say whether an agreement, either on grounds somewhat similar or on a different basis, will be in the interest of the people of Canada. Surely the money cannot be lost. The money voted for rolling stock cannot certainly be lost, because the Intercolonial Railway, with its 1,200 miles of track, is constantly requiring renewals, and money has been granted for that purpose. I think, in view of these facts, and considering the comparatively small sum the government is asking this year, it would seem a little more reasonable to trust to the government which has at present charge of the administration of affairs, and allow them at least the same degree of latitude as has been allowed to governments in the past.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Is there not a statement from the manager of the road of the quantity of rolling stock required?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no doubt, in all those cases the management of the road submit their proposals to the government and ask for such rolling stock as they may think necessary for the year.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I rise for the purpose of endorsing the remarks which have fallen from my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Prowse) in reference to the charge that has been made more than once in the Senate, that the disposition of the members in this House was to approach the consideration of this subject from a party standpoint. I repudiate that utterly, and I cannot help coming to the conclusion, dictated by my own judgment and by the information which I have been able to gather regarding this matter, that the measure is one which should not receive our support. The circumstances connected with the initiation of the scheme under consideration were questionable, those connected with its promotion as exemplified in the mode and time of its presentation to parliament are equally so, and the discussion which has taken place in this House has led me, and the majority of the members of this House, to the conclusion that it is also unsound at the core. Being thus objectionable in almost all its salient features, this honourable House did by it according to its desserts and cast it out as a piece of improper and undesirable legislation, thus teaching to the Canadian people its appreciation of the sacred trust committed to it by that people, and its desire and ability to discharge that trust aright in promoting all pure and righteous legislation that tends to further the prosperity and well-being of Canada, and rejecting, as it has repeatedly done in the past irrespective altogether of party influence or bias, all such proposed legislation as to it appears unworthy in its aim or pernicious in its tendency. This and this alone, if I judge rightly, is the standard of action which this honourable House always places before it for its rigid observance entirely uninfluenced by any threats or attempted intimidation emanate whence they may and which members of this honourable House can easily allow to "pass by them as the idle wind which they regard not."

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—As I do not, for one—and I am sure the majority of this House does not—wish to play the part of an obstructionist in this matter, I must admit that I consider the proposal of a trial for nine months or a year an acceptable one to the Senate. So far we have performed what we thought our duty, irrespective of political party. I, for one, would have given the very identical vote I gave had the proposal been made by the Conservative party. We have had precedents in this House where projects like this—and perhaps not so serious as this, and not so objectionable—have been rejected by a Conservative majority of this House when propounded by a Conservative government. And I should think that this ought to be an answer to the charges—because they are almost charges—that are made. But surely if we, the majority, who have voted one way are guilty, those who belonged to the Liberal party are equally guilty, for they have voted, to a man, on the other side of the question; and, therefore, I think that the matter should be left as it is. I, for one, will support the testing of this proposal for nine months. Furthermore, I think the government should have proceeded in that way at first, and not come here and asked us to saddle such a heavy burden upon the country without a previous trial. Besides the $157,000 for the nine months trial of this matter, there is another item which might be objectionable, and which in my opinion is objectionable: that is the item of $100,000 for buying rolling stock. Whence is that rolling stock to come? If I am assured by the leader of the government in this House that the rolling stock is not to be bought from the Drummond County Company, I shall also willingly vote for that item, because the objectionable features about it will disappear: but if it is to buy the old rolling stock of the Drummond Company, I am decidedly opposed to it. I have before me, in the last report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, a list of the rolling stock of the company. It might be interesting to the hon. members of this House to know what that stock comprises. Here it is in its entirety: Number of engines, five; number of sleeping cars, none; number of palace or drawing room cars, none; number of first-class cars, one. And I may here remark that that one first-class car is about equal to a second class car on the Intercolonial Railway if at all to be compared with it. Number of second-class and emigrant cars, two. They are like cattle cars on the Intercolonial Railway very likely. Number of baggage, mail and express cars, one; number of cattle and box freight cars, nine; number of platform cars, twenty; number of hopper and dumping cars, none. That rolling stock no doubt has rolled for very many years. It has not been inspected. There was no possibility of exchanging the first-class cars; there was only one. It must be, therefore, in a very bad condition, and I for one would emphatically be opposed to one dollar of the public money being applied to buying second-hand or third-hand stock. If it is to be new rolling stock, there is not the same objection to it. There may be an application for it, because the Intercolonial Railway may be in need of it. Before I resume my seat I would ask the hon. leader of the House what is the intention of the government in this matter? I should like to be assured that no part of the rolling stock of the Drummond County Railway will be bought. That rolling stock may be good enough for the Drummond County Railway as it stands, but it will certainly not be suitable for the road when it is made part of the trunk line from Montreal to Halifax and St. John. With reference to the proposition of my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller), I think the objections made to it by the hon. leader of the Senate are to the point. The position of the Senate now is one of a powerful body in this legislature, performing an important and conscientious duty, which is not a pleasant one. If we were to precipitate matters, we would not improve the financial condition of the country, or our own position towards the country. I would ask my hon. friend to allow himself to be prevailed upon to withdraw his motion, and let the experiment be tried for nine months. In the meantime, some of us will have occasion to cool down, if it is necessary, and see how things have worked; and perhaps, acting according to the British spirit, give the benefit of the doubt to those that are simply accused, but are certainly not proven guilty.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I may say here that I voted on Wednesday night against the purchase of the Drummond County Railway and the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, on the ground that I am opposed to that principle entirely, and on the ground, also, that I did not think the deal they were making was a good one. After having listened to the discussion and thought the matter over, when they want to connect the Intercolonial Railway with a railway that has such an inferior rolling stock on it as the Drummond County Railway, it convinces me that the extension could not conduce in any way to the business, freight or traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, and I am more strongly opposed than ever to the deal. Apart from that, I am also opposed to the inquiry, because I think the inquiry spoken of in the motion before the House is premature. Nothing has been done which we want to inquire into. We cannot inquire into wrong-doings until some wrongs have boen perpetrated. It is only so far a matter of newspaper talk. If the government proceed now to make this experiment, which is an undesirable one, they cannot, in justice to themselves, make an experiment which would add any light or information by associating themselves with a railway of such a character as the Drummond Railway, particularly as there must be money expended in completing the construction of the road. I think the better plan would be for the government—and I am not their adviser in any way—to make a proper inquiry during the next 9 months, and have a survey made, and the proper papers brought down to parliament next session, showing the true condition of things, and what might be reasonably expected. That would be very much better than to ask us to sustain them in a vote of $150,000 now to make an experiment when they have nothing to make an experiment with which would be creditable to themselves, or to the country, or satisfactory in the end. I think the experiment is an unjust and unfair one; and does not bear any degree of intelligence on the face of it, and I will oppose it because I do not think it would be a just and proper expenditure of public money, and because I am not in favour of the government owning railways. If the government would introduce a scheme to sell the Intercolonial Railway to the Grand Trunk and make a rival line competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway I would vote for it. There would then be two gigantic concerns competing for traffic, and the country would receive the benefit. But I think it is monstrous for the government, after subsidizing the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway, to build a rival line themselves, and it is not on party grounds that I am opposed to it, because if the government had been composed of angels I would have voted against it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I only wish to say a few words with reference to this vote. I consider that this is an unprecedented occasion in the history of this country. I have not heard or read of any such occasion occurring before. Stripped of all subterfuge, it is a conflict between this House and the House of Commons, and, therefore, I think we should approach this matter with the greatest degree of caution and honesty. I am not in any way in favour of restricting the dignity of this House, or interfering with its action in any way. I incline to share the opinion which has been given by the hon. gentleman from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) who reviewed this matter thoroughly and satisfactorily, and who delivered, in my opinion, a most convincing speech on that question. If his views were to prevail, and if the hon. leader of this House were given an opportunity to postpone this matter, it would benefit the country, and would not at all interfere with our dignity. The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller) may know of some dishonesty in the matter, but I do not know of it, and no party trammel will bind me to do what is wrong. I would consider myself as doing wrong if I voted for the motion of the hon.

gentleman. He has not taken the trouble to give us any information which he may have; if he has any information I wish he would state it, and if anything dishonourable or dishonest has been done, I for one shall oppose anything further being done in connection with the railway deal. However, I do not think it would offend the dignity of this House, or that the public interest would suffer, if we were to agree a little with the majority in the popular chamber. It would be acceptable to all parties if we would at least try to give way a little, and make things as agreeable as possible. But if I were anxious to get parties into trouble, I think I should let them steal before warning them not to steal. I therefore think that this motion is very inopportune, and shall vote against it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It seems to me that the discussion is beside the motion before us. We have had a discussion upon a bill that was rejected in this House a few evenings ago. We have had a discussion with regard to a proposition which, I understand, has been introduced into the House of Commons, and is not yet before us; but we have had very little discussion with regard to the motion submitted by the hon. gentleman from Richmond to-day. I agree with the leader of the House that a motion of this sort having been made, an inquiry ought to be had; but I think that inquiry ought to be in the body which, under the constitution, is entitled to make that inquiry. And it seems to me that this House is going a very long way outside its constitutional functions and duties to undertake to inquire into the expenditure of public moneys, and the regulation of that expenditure. We have had, of late years, on several occasions very wide departures from what is the well known and settled English practice. Usually inquiries of this kind in this country have been by the House of Commons. That is the uniform rule in the United Kingdom. A few years ago charges were made, with regard to the expenditure of public moneys, in the House of Commons, and a committee called for, and, instead of the committee being granted, a commission was appointed by the Crown for the purpose of inquiring into certain expenditures, alleged to have been improperly and irregularly made, and in which a minister of the Crown was charged with being interested. All these matters were inquired into by the commission issued by the Crown, upon the advice of the then government. I regarded that as an irregular and unconstitutional proceeding. I think that the Crown has, under the statute, the right to make inquiry in certain cases, a right to inquire into the conduct of its officers, and a right to see whether they are properly discharging their duties or not. But it was never intended that the Crown should appoint a committee upon the advice of ministers to inquire into the regularity of the conduct of those ministers themselves. That information which was necessary to them in order to enable them to advise the Crown was information that was already, without inquiry, in their possession, and the expenditure of money itself was an expenditure of money voted by the House of Commons, and over which the House of Commons had exclusive control. This body, I believe, a few years ago, upon a motion by my hon. friend who has made this motion to-day, appointed a committee to make investigation; and that committee went even further than it is proposed the committee in this case should go. It inquired not merely into the expenditure of money and of subsidies voted by the parliament of Canada, but inquired into the subsidies voted by a local legislature; and, if I remember rightly, the prime minister of the province of Quebec was summoned before this committee to answer for his conduct in respect to the expenditure of money entrusted to him by the legislature of Quebec, and to which body alone he was constitutionally responsible. I ask the attention of hon. gentlemen to the first part of this resolution. The motion reads:

> That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidies granted by the parliament of Canada.

I ask hon. gentlemen is this House constitutionally competent to make that inquiry? And I say without hesitation that it is not; that it is no part of its function, and that you cannot legally summon a party before you, or undertake to punish him for contempt of your summons, if you call him for any such purpose. Look at what was done in England in the case of the inquiry into the financial expenditure of India in 1871. Mr. Gladstone proposed a joint committee of the two Houses for the purpose of making that inquiry. Mr. Disraeli, then a member of the House of Commons, pointed out that such an inquiry ought to be made by a committee of the House of Commons alone, because the House of Lords ought not to be a party to inquire into jointly the expenditure of public moneys, even in India, because the financial condition of India might be one which ultimately would indirectly affect the financial condition of the mother country. But while Mr. Gladstone conceded the proposition that the House of Lords could not appoint a committee, nor could any of the peers be members of a committee to inquire into the expenditure of money of the mother country, he contended that they might be appointed on a committee to inquire into the finances of India, because the finances were charged upon the people of India, and the House of Commons had no more special control over that than had members of the second chamber. When that question was discussed in the House of Lords, Lord Lyveden and the Duke of Argyle took exactly the same position as was taken in the House of Commons by Mr. Gladstone. Here are two great leaders, men who were thoroughly conversant with English parliamentary law and practice, Mr. Disraeli on the one side and Mr. Gladstone on the other, and they both admitted that with regard to the expenditure of moneys of the United Kingdom the House of Commons alone had charge, and the House of Commons alone could make inquiry. Hon. gentlemen will see that that is the necessary outcome of the exclusive jurisdiction of the House of Commons over questions of supply. It is the House of Commons which votes the public money. We have the power to reject or to acquiesce in their expenditures. But the question whether those expenditures have been regularly or irregularly made, whether the money has been used for the purpose for which it was voted, or misapplied to other purposes is a matter with which the House of Commons alone are charged. We are barred by the fact that we are precluded from initiating appropriations, and so, not being able to initiate or to control them, we cannot follow them and see how they are used. That is a part of the function of the other chamber. While I think this inquiry ought to be made, I think it should be made by the body which is authorized to make it by the constitution, and most assuredly it is not by this House or by any committee of this House. In the case to which I have referred, there were two great leaders in the House of Commons, and two very prominent members of the House of Lords, men of long experience, men of great parliamentary distinction, Lord Lyveden and the Duke of Argyle, all four of whom entirely agreed in the proposition that with regard to the expenditure of public moneys the House of Lords cannot charge a committee to make an inquiry. That being so, I think it is perfectly obvious that the motion before us, though I think it is a proper one, and one which ought to be made, should be made in the House of Commons and not elsewhere, by the majority of the House that control the public finances and are responsible to the people of the country for the use which they make of the public moneys.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I should like to ask a question of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. Is it not the privilege of this House to make an inquiry upon any subject upon which it is called to vote, so as to post itself on all circumstances and to give an intelligent vote?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have just pointed out to the hon. gentleman a subject upon which I think they are not entitled to make an investigation

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the House will concur in the opinion which I expressed that this motion, as proposed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, was couched in language which is courteous, and in a manner altogether unobjectionable. I was glad the Minister of Justice made the statement that he was in favour of the investigation, though he thought that the investigation could not be concluded during the present session; but the reasons which he gave were objectionable in their character and in the manner in which he placed them before the House. In the first place, he found fault with the composition of the committee, inferring or insinuating that there were on that committee members who would not do justice in the premises, but would be actuated, guided and controlled by party feelings.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not mean to say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman spoke of the committee, and spoke of the partisan witnesses, and the partisan character of the Senate as constituted at the present moment.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not think I said that. I do not think I said partisan.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said the witnesses who would be subpœnaed to give evidence would be of a violent partisan character.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I said that they might be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, they might be. I will change the expression—that they might be of a violent partisan character. I do not think it requires a very great degree of penetration to understand what was meant by that expression, and I give the hon. gentleman the fullest possible credit for his attempt at showing the difference between "there would be" and "there might be;" because he followed it up by adding that one or two of these witnesses might be examined who might be of a violent partisan character, that their evidence would go to the people, and it would be unfair and unjust to those who were accused, because parliament in all probability would be prorogued immediately after these partisan witnesses had given their evidence. That might or might not occur, and could only occur if the government took the position that this question was not of sufficient importance to keep parliament in session until after the investigation had taken place. To that mode of argument I decidedly object. The hon. gentleman also said that this committee ought to be of a judicial character.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does that mean? Are we to infer from that language that because the gentlemen who are to form that committee, or a majority of them, do not hold political views in accord with his own, therefore they could not be judicial in any decision to which they would come, in a matter affecting the character and reputation of those who might differ from them; or perhaps who were in accord with them in their political view or political sentiments? I have heard it intimated that one of the ministers in the House of Commons, in discussing this matter last night, intimated that if this investigation took place, some of the members of the opposition party would be implicated. For one I say that I care not who the man is that is implicated in any transaction of a boodling character, you shall have not only my consent but you shall have all the energy that I can infuse into the investigation to expose it. It is quite time that this kind of charge should cease in Canada, and it is time that our public men should be in such a position as not to be exposed to charges such as appear in the extracts from newspapers which have been read by my hon. friend from Richmond. If they do that which they should not do, let them be exposed and punished and driven into private life, as many of them have been in the past. I shall refer to this in a few moments after having made some remarks in reference to the position taken by the hon. member from Bothwell. I think I can show that the action of this Senate did more to expose boodling operations and the misapplication of public moneys for improper purposes than ever the House of Commons did since I have been a member of it, and that is since confederation, and I should hope that they will continue it as long as they have any power or any voice in the matter. The hon. gentleman said it was unfortunate that the majority in this House are opposed to the government. I think it is exceedingly fortunate for the country. It is a matter of opinion, and a difference of opinion which I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to indulge in. I fully concur with him that unless the House was kept in session for five or six weeks it would be utterly impossible to do justice to this subject, and that a proper investigation could not by any possibility take place. I further state that, on behalf of myself and those with whom I act in this House, I believe they are just as capable of coming to an equitable decision upon a question of this kind as those who differ from us in politics. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Sullivan) puts the question in a nutshell: is this a conflict between the representatives direct of the people in the House of Commons and this House? The House of Commons came to a decision, by a majority, that a certain policy was in the interests of the country, and affirmed as a justification for their stand that they represent the people, and therefore their will should be paramount in the administration of public affairs in this country. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that the appropriation must be made by parliament. I have always been under the impression that the Senate was just as much a part of the parliament of Canada as the House of Commons is, and it is a new theory to lay down that because the House of Commons, being the representative of the people and the only ones who can initiate appropriations—though the Senate has a right to reject the Supply Bill, and thereby express its opinion on the expenditure of money that it has no right whatever to make any investigation or to inquire into the manner in which that money has been expended. This House took exception to the terms proposed for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal for two or three reasons. One was pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, that he was opposed to this expenditure altogether, not deeming it necessary, believing that the objects which the government had in view can be accomplished without the expenditure of so much money, and that the money might better be expended in those sections of the Dominion which have not the railway accommodation to which he contends they are entitled. Other members took exception to it because they thought it an improvident and improper bargain to make under the circumstances imposing an additional debt on the country which was not justifiable and from which no adequate return could be made to the revenue. Those were the different positions. The House of Commons took exception to that, and tried not only to destroy the influence of this House, but to set it at defiance by adopting another mode of obtaining money for the accomplishment of the same purpose. There is where the conflict arises. In looking at the debate in the House of Commons last night and the declaration of the leader of the House to-day, I find there is some little conflict. The hon. Minister of Justice stated that this appropriation which they are asking for is only of a tentative character and to try for a short time whether the policy of the government was right or wrong. The hon. gentleman from Charlottetown put the question very fairly that nine months of the receipts and expenditures connected with the running of the railway would be no test upon which any government could come to a decision as to what their policy should be in regard to making a permanent arrangement in the future. Any one who knows anything of business will know that. In order to show that some members of the government who advocate this policy in the House of Commons do not look upon it in the light the Minister of Justice does, perhaps it is just as well that I should read a portion of the utterances of the Minister of Railways and Canals on this subject. He lays down the principle distinctly, that they and they alone have the right to deal with a question of this kind, and that any interference with their policy is an infringement of their rights as the representatives of the people. More than that, he makes the statement that this policy, to use his own expression, has come to stay, and they intend to carry it out. In order that I may not misrepresent Mr. Blair, I will read what he said:

> While we are not pretending to dispute the right of any other branch of parliament to take any view of the subject that may seem best to it with regard to the condition upon which we hope to carry out the arrangement, we do insist upon the right of the people of the country and upon the right of this House to put us in possession of the funds to enable us to put the plan into, at all events, experimental operations. I have no doubt in my own mind, and I may say that the government had no doubt whatever as to the ultimate success of this policy. It is a policy that is bound to be adopted. The Intercolonial Railway is bound to find its terminus in the city of Montreal. That is fixed and determined and nothing is going to stay or alter that policy.

With this declaration, that nothing is going to stay or alter that policy, I cannot conceive for the life of me why the Senate should be asked to approve or disapprove of any proposition that they make to this House. Then the hon. gentleman says further:

> This idea that the arrangement which we propose with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway was a job will have been fully exploded by the investigation which is going to take place in the other chamber.

He recognized in that declaration the right of the Senate to make an investigation, and it must be the wish, not only of every parliamentarian, but of every public man, that if an investigation is made, based upon the charges which have been published in the newspapers, no evidence can be produced to implicate any man in wrong-doing. I am sure that every public man in the country would be delighted to know that there is no truth in the charges which have been made. But denials were made just as strongly and vigorously and vehemently when the Senate entered upon the Baie des Chaleurs investigation, and had it not been for the courage and perseverance of some members of this House, the exposure of rascalities and the misappropriations of public money on that occasion would never have taken place, because they failed to do it in the House of Commons for many and various reasons. If I were to adopt the same argument that my hon. friend opposite adopted, I should say at once that any committee appointed in the House of Commons would be of such a partisan character, the government having such a large majority there, that no good result would follow from the investigation. Now that is the inference which every one must draw from the remarks of the Minister of Justice as applicable to this House, and if applicable to this House, composed as it is of gentlemen independent of party and independent of constituencies, surely the desire to hide and becloud an investigation by a partisan committee, whose members have to go back to their constituents and who have an ardent desire to cover up any little piccadilloes of those they support, would be much stronger than in this House. Mr. Blair continues :

> We invite the investigation ; we do more than invite it, we defy it. We challenge those hon. gentlemen who have been building their opposition and their obstruction to this measure upon the ground that it has its base in jobbery—we defy them to proceed with their investigation and unearth the transactions that have taken place in connection with the Drummond County Railway from its inception and their dealings with this government.

That is from the beginning of the construction of the road until the present time and the subsidies which have been given by the two governments to aid in its construction. He continues :

> We have nothing to fear from any such investigation.

That is the policy of the government (to lease the Drummond County Railway and the portion of the Grand Trunk Railway necessary to get into Montreal) that has come here to stay, and if they cannot do it by the measure first proposed and which was rejected by the Senate, they will do it by placing a sufficient sum in the estimates to enable them to frustrate the action of the Senate on this subject. My view is confirmed by the following language :

> And it will take more than the opposition which has so far developed to it to occasion any permanent delay.

In order that he may not be misunderstood, he was a little more explicit as he warmed up to his subject. Mr. Blair, concluded with the declaration that the government were absolutely committed to this policy and would persist in it to the end. The proper deduction to be drawn from that last declaration would be that, being committed to it, they will persist to the end, and if they cannot obtain it by one means, they will obtain it by the mode I have suggested and go to the people and ask them whether they approve of it or not. In another portion of this speech the hon. gentleman says the action of the representatives of the people should not be frustrated. In that I am fully in accord with him, and had this question been submitted to the people at the last election and had the people given a verdict upon the question, no matter what we as an independent body—they having furnished the money in order to carry it out—might think of the proposition, it would be a grave question whether we should interfere with them. I can only repeat what I have already said on that subject, that this question was not submitted to the people, and the Senate has no right to assume that the people approved of it simply because the ministry of the day were supported at the late election by the people upon issues altogether different and apart from this. I shall not waste the time of the House by referring to the speech of that genial member of the cabinet, Mr. Tarte. Hon. gentlemen can read it at their leisure when it is published. I will not refer to it further than to say this : he charges, in the most explicit manner, the majority in the Senate with having entered into a conspiracy with a man named Armstrong, who seems to haunt the dreams and the day life in fact of some of the ministers of the day. I can speak for myself, and with every degree of safety for those who vote for me on this question, that we had no more to do with Armstrong in considering this question than with Mr. Tarte himself, and if Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Tarte have any quarrel, we will let them fight it out. He also says that those newspapers which condemn the Drummond County deal are subsidised, and that Mr. Armstrong has given them a large amount of railway stock. That may or may not be; it is a matter between themselves. It is a matter that could be brought out very fairly when the investigation takes place, but I have a better opinion of the standing of the gentlemen who control the press of Montreal than to believe for a moment that they could be influenced by any action on the part of Mr. Armstrong. It is absurd to say that the Montreal Gazette and the Montreal Star, with the great influence which they possess, with the character they have as public journalists, would take a lot of stock in a bridge or a railway which, like many others, may never pay one cent of dividend, and that such considerations influenced them in discussing a question of such vital interest to the people of the country. It is a little too absurd, and I resent it, as an old newspaper man, as being unfair and discourteous. I can only account for it by saying that the Minister of Public Works, who is a news paper man himself, is judging other people by himself, and measuring their corn in his own half bushel. The Secretary of State, as is his wont on all occasions, tried to draw a herring across the trail, to lead off the scent, while he read us something in the appropriations in reference to the purchase of rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway. He was very virtuous in saying that they did not oppose such appropriations when they were in opposition. I am not aware that any one opposed the purchasing of rolling stock required to carry the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, and as the business increases, just so in proportion must the rolling stock be increased, and just in proportion as it wears out and becomes useless, must it be replaced. But Mr. Blair said distinctly, in his statement in the House of Commons, that the purpose for which this $100,000 was to be applied was the purchasing of rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway and the running of the Drummond Counties Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway when they got it in their possession. I paid particular attention to that part of his speech asking for an appropriation for additional rolling stock necessary for the Intercolonial Railway to accommodate increased traffic and increased business; if that was the reason for it, the government would be quite justified in making the appropriation, whether the amount was $100,000 or $200,000. What my hon. friend objected to was that any portion of that money should be applied to the purchase of the rolling stock of the Drummond County Railway. Now, if they lease the road and run it for six months, they must of necessity have additional rolling stock, unless we are to come to this conclusion, that the Intercolonial Railway at the present time has more stock than is required for the business of the road. If the Intercolonial Railway is not properly stocked—and the very fact that a portion of this appropriation to be voted is for the purpose of buying additional stock for that road is an evidence that it is not—the balance will have to be used for the nine months' extension. What necessity, let me ask the Minister of Justice in all seriousness, is there for asking for an appropriation to run any of those roads for nine months? We are now in the month of June, very near the end of it. Under the conditions of that contract, had it been confirmed and ratified by the Senate, it would not have been ready even to put an engine upon it, either for freight or passengers, until late in the fall, and is it to be supposed that, with the negotiations which would have to take place in the raising of money in order to complete that road —the forty odd miles—and to put the other road in the condition they say it must be put to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, that that could be done within the next nine months? Is it as a basis to enable the Drummond County Railway directors, managers and manipulators to raise money to go on with the work that the $157,000 and the $6,400 per mile is to be paid to this company for the purpose of completing this road—for you must remember that the appropriation is $3,200 with the right to increase it to $6,400 under certain contingencies and under certain circumstances. I should be very much mistaken, and the country will be very much mistaken, if you do not find that when this subsidy is voted, they will get the full amount instead of the smaller amount, particularly as they say the road will cost over $15,000 per mile, an estimate which is very doubtful, if the road is properly built and the enterprise properly managed. I should like to ask my hon.

friend opposite, and this is merely for information, whether the government have made any advances to this company, or whether they are aware that negotiations for the raising of money have been entered into between the company and the banks, and money advanced on the strength of an Order in Council which was passed on the 20th March last? If there has been, then the advance was made on the assumption that parliament would confirm the agreement into which the government has entered, and parliament not having confirmed that agreement, it puts them in the financial difficulty in which the company find themselves, and it is necessary—at least so those who entered into the bargain I have no doubt think—that a scheme should be devised by which they can be relieved. I do not desire to enter into the other questions which have been raised during this discussion, but I want to say one word in reference to the statement made across the House in regard to the action of the late government, more particularly in connection with the New Glasgow branch. There is this to be borne in mind, this purchasing of rolling stock, this building of branches of the Intercolonial Railway, whether it was the eastern extension or the New Glasgow branch or bridges —they were all brought before parliament. The initiation of the appropriations was made in the House of Commons and confirmed by the House of Commons and by the Senate, before a dollar was spent, or a contract was entered into with any person, so that there is no analogy whatever between those cases and the present one. The constitutional proposition laid down by the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is theoretically, perhaps, correct, and that only to a certain extent. Either the Senate is part and parcel of the parliament of Canada, with certain rights and privileges, or it is not. If it is merely the recorder and approver of the action of the House of Commons, then the sooner it is abolished the better. It is an independent body, irrespective of the popular will, as is the House of Lords in England, and we know that the action of the House of Lords when they have thrown out bills from the House of Commons has been afterwards approved by the people. On the other hand, when the Lords have found that the action of the Commons was not too precipitate, that they were not advancing democratically too fast, as shown by the verdict of the people, they have yielded, and I have no doubt if the people of Canada expressed an opinion on any great subject, whether it was a question of policy or the expenditure of money which they would have to pay, that this House would yield at once. Beyond that I do not intend to go further than to say that, as an integral branch of the parliament of Canada, the Senate have as good a right to inquire into and investigate the expenditure of money which they have voted as the other branch itself. Past experience has proved the advantages arising from a policy of that kind, and instead of belittling the powers and narrowing the functions of the Senate, we should try rather to extend the powers of this chamber and show that we are of some use as a legislative and revising body in the body politic of this country. It has been charged in the past, as it is at the present, that the Senate has never done anything but approve the action of the House of Commons while a certain party was in power. That statement has been sufficiently answered by the hon. gentleman who spoke a few moments before me, as it has been in the past, and I hope the members of the Senate will, in approaching a subject of so much importance as this, pursue the same course precisely as they did in the investigation of the Baie des Chaleurs matter, and show the world that they can act impartially no matter what their political predilections may be. I frankly confess I do not think that a committee should be appointed at the present time, unless parliament is prepared to sit for five or six weeks longer to accomplish the object that the hon. hon. gentleman from Richmond had in moving the resolution for a committee of investigation. I must dissent from the position taken by the hon. leader of the House, that the committee should in any way be considered a political one, or that any reflection should be cast on those who compose it. I have sufficient confidence in the members of the House to believe that if a wrong is shown, whether it be perpetrated by a Liberal or a Conservative, the Liberal members of the committee will be just as ready to report to the House not only the evidence, but their own conviction of the wrong, if a wrong is done, as if they were Conservatives. I would feel just as safe, if my own reputation were at stake, in the hands of hon.

gentlemen opposite, as I would in the hands of those who act with me in all questions affecting the management, control and government of the country, and I hope that every member of the Senate will in the future look at this subject from the same standpoint. It is for the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Miller) to state what he thinks best to do under the circumstances. If he thinks it is better to go on, I shall stop here until next fall, if need be, to assist in the work of this investigation, and endeavour if possible to do justice to all parties who may come before the committee.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend has asked one or two questions which I shall answer. The hon. leader of the opposition asked whether advances have actually been made by the government to the company, either upon a former agreement or upon any agreement now in contemplation. I have to say, in reply, that not one dollar has been so advanced, nor has there been any promise of one dollar. The hon. member asks whether the company have not made arrangements with some bank upon the faith of this agreement. I can say nothing on that subject. I do not know of the arrangement, if any has been made. It has been stated, and I suppose truly stated, that the company has commenced the work of construction on the 42½ miles of section, but as to that I have no information beyond what other hon. members have. The hon. gentleman read extracts from the speech of the Minister of Railways in the other House in which Mr. Blair stated, with considerable emphasis, his opinion that this policy was going to stay, but the meaning of the whole of that is very obvious. The minister and his colleagues have confidence that this is a very good bargain, and that as the country get more and more information they will be all the more satisfied that it is a good bargain, and therefore will insist upon its being carried out. The various expressions used by Mr. Blair were merely indications of the great confidence he has of the wisdom of his policy and its practicability and therefore its ultimately receiving favour. When a period of nine months has been spoken of for the experiment, it must be remembered the nine months will begin when the road is opened. According to the original agreement we were not to take possession until the unconstructed part was built and taken over. Of course, in the new bargain the same conditions will be exacted. There may be no new bargain. There have been no negotiations yet on the subject, and we may fail to get a bargain which will be satisfactory for the purpose and for the country; in that case no bargain will be made. In the observations which I made—courteously made I thought, with all respect to the members of the House and the committee—as to the desire of our agreeing on a committee instead of my hon. friend, who made the motion, selecting the members of it, I had in my mind the fact which everyone knows, that some hon. members are more suited for one committee and others for other committees. There are some committees of this House on which I think I should be of service, and others on which I think I should be less useful. I still think it would be a desirable thing, in the common interest, and for the common purpose, that we should agree upon the members forming the committee. As the notice was printed, there were nine of the party of the opposition and four members of the government party. This I understand now is altered, so that there are ten members of the opposition and five members supporting the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It represents the House.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The members of this House are not elected by the people. The Senate has come to what it is by circumstances which I need not further allude to, but I do not think it is a fair way to take the House, as it is constituted now, and say that all committees shall be constituted that way, and especially committees of a judicial character.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the hon. gentleman's opinion, provided this is a political committee for political purposes. If not, the argument has no force.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Quite the other way: it is a judicial committee. If it were a strictly political committee, I would expect the committee to have the proportions which prevail in the House, but as it is not a political committee I urge it should be differently constituted. There should not be such a large preponderance of the members on the other side of this House.

I intend to go on in this matter in the most friendly spirit possible, and I have no doubt whatever that next session we shall agree to the terms of the motion, when it is made, as to the composition of the committee, and then as to the work to be done, and I hope my hon. friend will yield to that.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With regard to the request of the leader of the House that I should withdraw my motion, I may say to him at once that I do not feel myself in a position to do so. It has been stated in some journals of this country that I have acted on my own responsibility in bringing this motion before the House. I wish to give that statement a flat contradiction. I was requested by members of the House to make this motion, and I was approached by other leading members of the House, after the motion was made, with a request that I would not withdraw it, but that I would push this investigation along. Therefore, I am not in a position to withdraw the motion—at all events until I have had time to consult with the hon. gentlemen at whose request I have acted. I should, therefore, say that at the present time although I shall not press the motion to a division to-night, I shall ask that it be postponed until Monday, when I will have an opportunity of seeing those gentlemen with whom I have been in consultation with regard to the motion, and coming to a conclusion with them. I was surprised to find the unanimity that prevailed amongst the hon. gentlemen who spoke to me with regard to the desire, the necessity, in fact the logical necessity, after our action the other night, of having an investigation of the charges which were current in the press with regard to the Drummond County Railway. Several members, in fact, every gentleman who spoke to me on the subject, expressed a willingness to stay here for another month, if it should be necessary to occupy that time in having a satisfactory and exhaustive investigation into these charges. I do not intend to make another speech on the question, but some extraordinary ideas have been propounded from a source I did not expect them from in this House, with regard to the power of the Senate to deal with a question of this kind. The hon. member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who has the reputation of being a great constitutional lawyer—and I have no doubt he deserves the reputation—tells us that we have no power to deal with a question of this kind, and as he always has precedents at his command, he cited some musty precedent from the journals of the House of Lords to sustain his position. I desire to tell my hon. friend that these precedents have no application whatever to the question he was discussing—not any more application than the precedent of the celebrated papers duty bill which he cited on another occasion in this House not long ago, and which had no bearing and was not a precedent at all in support of his views, but was, in fact, in direct contradiction of those views. I may say further that when I want to find out what the powers of this House are, I do not go for precedents to the House of Lords. We have a rule which says that when in matters of practice our rules are silent, we are to follow the precedents and practice of the House of Lords, but when I desire to know what are the powers, privileges and rights of this body, I do not go for precedents to the House of Lords, because the House of Lords is an institution of long growth. Its character has been moulded by centuries of precedent down to the present day, and within the last quarter of a century at any rate—at any rate within the last century—the power and influence of the House of Lords has been greatly modified by precedent. But I tell my hon. friend where I go when I want to find out what the powers and privileges of this House are. This House was created by the British North America Act, and the rights powers and privileges of the Senate are defined in that Act. I am sure my hon. friend heard of that Act before. I doubt if many people have studied it more closely than he has himself. In that Act there is a clause which was certainly placed there after due deliberation—I assume that, because after it was passed it required amendment and it was amended at the instigation of the Minister of Justice—I mean the 18th clause, which was replaced by the Imperial parliament some years afterwards in consequence of the necessity of an amendment in it. What does that section say about the privileges, powers and immunities of this House? Clause 18 says:

> The privileges, immunities and powers to be held enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons and by the members thereof respectively shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and by the members thereof.

Now, here are the powers, privileges and immunities of the House clearly defined. We have, under that section, all the powers, privileges and immunities of the House of Commons, excepting where they are restricted by express reservation. We have express restrictions to the effect that we cannot initiate a money vote; we cannot amend money bills, but we can reject them, and therefore, apart from these two exceptions, we have the same powers, privileges and immunities that exist in the House of Commons to-day. Otherwise, would it not be absurd to suppose for a moment that this House, clothed with power to concur in money votes, had not the power to investigate as to a misappropriation afterwards of those money votes? Would any one suppose a constitution to be framed with such an idea in it? I am sorry that my hon. friend represents a class in this House who, whenever it clashes with their party interests, are prepared to abandon all its privileges. To-day it may be the fiscal policy; to-morrow the Franchise Act—you will be told that it is a matter of domestic economy of the House of Commons, and that we have nothing to do with it. I hope this House will never surrender the privileges which it possesses herein under the constitution, because if it did, it would be better to sweep it out of existence immediately. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the question of the merits of the bill we were discussing the other evening. I think these arguments are somewhat irrelevant to the matter before the House, but I do contend that the Senate has power to institute such an investigation as contemplated in the motion I have placed on the order paper, and having assumed the responsibilities of putting it there, and being satisfied that the exigencies of the public service at the present time demand that this investigation should take place, because it may possibly prevent the government from committing the country to a policy which will entail an expenditure which we are now told will be $7,000,000,—perhaps a much larger sum—I think if by any investigation we can make at the present day, even though we should be kept here three or four weeks doing so, the country has the right to expect that sacrifice from us and it would be our duty as members of this House to willingly consent to that course. Therefore, I desire to say that I am willing that this motion shall stand over until Monday, and after consultation with my friends with whom I am acting, I shall be prepared to say whether or not I shall proceed with it. My action will then possibly depend upon circumstances which may develop themselves between now and then, because circumstances are developing themselves in another place with regard to the policy of the government on this question every hour of the day. Therefore, I move that the motion stand adjourned until Monday.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I should suggest to my hon. friend to move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If that course would be more acceptable to the House I move that the debate be adjourned.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (149) "An Act to provide for Bounties on Iron and Steel made in Canada."—(Mr. Scott).

COLD STORAGE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (141), "An Act respecting Cold Storage on Steamships from Canada to the United Kingdom and in certain Cities in Canada."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We discussed this measure very fully when it was up for the second reading. There was some information, however, which was not then available, which I promised the House to obtain before the bill went to the next stage. It will be noticed that the agreements ratified refer to those vessels which sail from the St. Lawrence. With respect to the maritime provinces, I am advised by the Minister of Agriculture that agreements have been entered into, but will not be ratified in time for parliament to act on them. Mr. Fisher has entered into negotiations for the purpose of procuring the service of a steamship to run direct from Prince Edward Island to England proposing to have cold storage in the summer. He was asked by the people down at Prince Edward Island to make it independent of the service between St. John and Halifax and England. He therefore entered into communication with the Elder-Dempster Company in Montreal, with whom he was discussing other cold storage arrangements. He had hoped up to a week or two ago that they would put on such a vessel, and the only reason they did not do so was that the probable amount of freight offering on the island did not seem to justify it. He also had a communication with Carvell Bros., of Prince Edward Island, who had suggested that they might be able to do it: and it was only Thursday he received an official letter from them saying that they could not do anything. Mr. Hugill, of the Furness Company, in Halifax, had also suggested that they might do something of this kind, but in consequence of the representations from the people in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Fisher thought they preferred having an independent vessel, and therefore, as long as there was a possibility of such independent vessel being provided, he did not encourage Mr. Hugill's proposals. The Minister still has the subject under consideration, hoping that he will be able to accomplish something to provide cold storage communication between Charlottetown and Halifax which would temporarily secure some accommodation. If not, possibly arrangements might be made for cold storage vessels to connect with Charlottetown, Halifax and St. John, which would be better than not having a vessel direct from Charlottetown. I am advised by Mr. Fisher that Mr. Hugill might do something of the kind. They might possibly be able to make some arrangement by which they would carry the storage articles from Halifax or St. John, but when the negotiations were under way the minister thought that he would be able to perfect some arrangement by which Charlottetown would be provided with cold storage accommodation running directly from Charlottetown to Liverpool or some other British port. It stands in that position at the present time. The minister has not been able to make any arrangement there, fearing the parties would not provide enough freight. If the hon. gentleman who represents Prince Edward Island will make some suggestion, I have no doubt the minister will be glad to consider it. Prince Edward Island, in proportion to area and population, would probably be able to furnish a larger amount of perishable products than any other part of Canada, and I think Mr. Fisher quite appreciates that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I regret very much to find that this matter stands in the position which the hon. gentleman informs us that it stands, not only in regard to Prince Edward Island but also in regard to St. John and Halifax.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have explained, as far as St. John and Halifax are concerned, that the arrangements are completed, although the agreement is not signed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They are far from being in as satisfactory a state at St. John and Halifax as they ought to be, compared to Montreal. There are two clauses in this bill, one of which relates to cold storage on steamers, and the other to cold storage premises at the principal points, Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Halifax and Charlottetown, and they depend upon each other for success. You cannot call cold storage premises at any point into existence unless cold storage ships are provided for a term of years. At Montreal it is all right. They provide for a three years' contract for those steamers, and the consequence will be that from all points from which Montreal can be served as the shipping point, cold storage will come into existence, because there is not only a bonus, but the assurance that it will extend for a period of three years, and that shipping facilities with cold storage connected with it will continue for three years. The position in which St. John, Halifax and Charlottetown will stand when this bill is passed will be this, there will be no contract—the government will not be in a position to make a contract extending beyond one year, and it is not likely in any one of those three ports companies will be got to undertake the expense of providing cold storage premises unless they have the assurance that they will be put in permanent connection, for a period of years, as in Montreal, with cold storage steamers which will carry perishable products to the markets to which they are ultimately destined to go. As it stands now, my hon. friend may be able to make arrangements with steamers with cold storage apartments at St. John and Halifax, but I fear very much that the want of contracts based upon a period of years will stand in the way of cold storage premises being provided either at Halifax or St. John.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, that is all arranged. They have agreed to put on the three steamers from St. John and Halifax, and two more if necessary.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why was not a contract made ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has not been time. They have faith enough in the government carrying it on and they will go on. It will go into operation immediately.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps I am wrong. The point I make is this, that the companies that propose to rent cold storage premises in Halifax and St. John will not have that assurance which they ought to have and which they have in Montreal, that this contract will extend for a period of years, and consequently there will be a difficulty in getting capitalists to erect premises.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The agreement with the steamship companies is made for three years, and with the assurance that the government will ratify it next session.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are no contracts attached to this bill, or being ratified and confirmed by it, excepting those relating to the port of Montreal. As far as Charlottetown is concerned, I fear that the lack of an arrangement such as has been made in this bill for the port of Montreal will be fatal to the erection of cold storage premises there. I know a little about it, and those who subscribed stock for the erection of cold storage premises in Charlottetown did so on the understanding that a contract for a boat to call there for three years would be made, and further that a bonus would be provided by the government of Canada. That bonus is provided in the second clause of this bill ; but I fear it will be perfectly useless, because capitalists will not erect cold storage premises in Charlottetown unless they also know that facilities for transporting the perishable products from these premises to the markets they are ultimately designed to go to is also assured. Hon. gentlemen know very well that, after articles of this kind have once been placed in cold storage, they perish very rapidly when exposed to transportation in the ordinary way, and that unless you have cold storage continuously from the refrigerator to the market you might as well not have it at all. The point I am making—and I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to it—is that I doubt whether the government can make the contract for three years without the sanction of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would sanction it at the next session.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But we are dealing with the question now, and I think it is very much to be regretted that the government did not exercise diligence and act with more promptness in this matter, and have the whole matter completed, so that one bill would have assured this very important service with the lower provinces at the same time as they are dealing with the port of Montreal. I know I am speaking of a subject which, with the people of my own province, is second in importance to nothing discussed in this House. The people have their minds upon it: they know the progress that has been made, and $20,000 has been subscribed : but the subscriptions have been given with the understanding that they were to have a guarantee of a three years' service to take the products away, and with that assurance the subscribers were prepared to go on, and I fear that if the government are not able to make a contract for a term of years my province will be deprived of all the advantages arising from this movement on the part of the government, which is very creditable to them as far as they have gone, and which I regret very much they have not made general. The late government took very great care in dealing with matters of this kind that the smaller outlying provinces were treated better than the great centres, which were able to take care of themselves. I regret very much that the House is going to rise and leave the cold storage in such a way that: as far as Prince Edward Island and Charlottetown are concerned, it is put over for another year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to discuss what the preceding Minister of Agriculture or the present one has done. No one could be more anxious to push it forward than Mr. Fisher. But he was dealing with matters he could not control. If he could not get steamers to take it at the high rate we are offering, he could do nothing. He corresponded with all parties with whom he supposed we would make an agreement. The government bonus was offered, and every possible inducement was held out to them; but the argument with regard to Charlottetown was that they could not get freight enough to make it pay. He thought he would have succeeded in it, and correspondence took place with shipowners, but finally they declined to enter into any arrangement. I suggested to him whether it would not be possible to have a vessel fitted up with cold storage that would connect with Charlottetown and Halifax. That would not be as satisfactory as the other plan, but it would meet the exigencies of the case in the meantime. So far as the service between Halifax and St. John is concerned, that is completed. It has not been completed in time to have it ratified by parliament, but the parties have sufficient confidence that it will be carried out, and the contracts with them are of an equally binding character with those laid on the table; but they cannot be ratified this year, because they have not been able to lay them on the table. They would not enter into a final agreement until they saw they were able to carry it out.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would not it be possible to insert a provision in the bill authorizing the government to enter into contracts for three years with steamers from these ports?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I asked Mr. Fisher, and he said no. I think it is the Furness Co. that took the contract. They had no hesitation in closing the matter. I made that suggestion to him, and he thought it was quite unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot speak for Halifax or St. John, but I am quite sure that for Charlottetown it is very necessary; and if my hon. friend could amend the bill by adding a clause that would empower the government to make contracts for the other port, I think it would be very desirable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we can get such contracts we will make them.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—There are a number of steamers calling at the ports there, and I think there would be no difficulty in making a contract with them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That might be done this year, and next year we might get a steamer direct. I spoke to the minister about it, and I said that Prince Edward Island would be able to send to market, in proportion to population, a much larger quantity of products than any other part of Canada. He was most anxious about it, because he takes a very great personal interest in it, wholly apart from the political situation, and is most anxious to have it carried out.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope the hon. Secretary of State will call the attention of the minister to this point that, without a contract for three years, the cold storage premises will not be erected in Charlottetown, because it was on that understanding the shares were subscribed to the company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the minister is able to make public the fact that he has made arrangements with a local vessel leaving Charlottetown and connecting with the vessels from Halifax and St. John, I think that would be sufficient to justify them in making the contracts.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I should like to know why Ottawa is not included in this? I do not see why Ottawa should be left out. There are a great number of creameries in this neighbourhood.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—There is no danger of Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—On every occasion we are victimized—this Washington of the north. A very large part of the products of the creameries must find their way to the markets, and Ottawa should have the same privileges as the rest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are twenty or thirty other places where they are asking cold storage, and the products would be taken up in refrigerator cars. Toronto is the only point in Ontario where arrangements have been made.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Why should Toronto be the only place?

Hon. Mr. COX, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

CATARACT POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a notice under my name on the order paper, that I will move:

That the thirteenth and seventieth rules of the Senate be suspended as far as regards the Bill entitled: "An Act incorporating the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton, Limited."

When I put that notice on the paper it was with the expectation that that bill would be reported from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours at to-day's meeting, and it was with a view of securing the passage of the bill through this House, if the committee so reported. The committee have met, and have failed to deal with the bill. I understand there is not to be any further meeting of the committee, and I therefore ask that this notice be dropped.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I am very glad my hon. friend has dropped the motion, because it was out of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In order that the promoter of the bill should get the fee in the House of Commons, they require to have some evidence that it has been brought to this chamber, and the chairman of the committee should make some statement in reference to it, otherwise they would not have any evidence of what became of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—There are other bills in the same position.

The notice was allowed to be dropped.

DISMISSALS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. Secretary of State whether it is likely we will have that report moved for by Mr. Kirchhoffer in reference to dismissals?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Brandon said I could bring on part of it, and I have brought all I could get, and will now lay it on the table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps you will have it complete next session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman promised to have a full and elaborate report next session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will do the best I can.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will be understood that the clerk will refer it to the Printing Committee next session.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN COUNTIES RAILWAY CO'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE moved the third reading of Bill (110) "An Act to incorporate the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. POWER—This bill is one which I do not think that we should pass. Hon. gentlemen remember during all the years that I have been on the Railway Committee that we have never passed a bill of this character in this form. The objections to the bill are many. I am not going to detain the House by discussing them now, but I will call attention to some of them. In the first place, this is a local measure. I do not think that by any straining of the constitution it can be held to be a Dominion measure. This is a bill to incorporate a company to build tramways in a section of the province of Quebec, and consequently it is a bill which should not have come here. Then the notice was insufficient, and a great many parties were interested who apparently did not receive sufficient notice. The chairman of the committee received a telegram from the mayor of St. Hyacinthe indicating that he was opposed to the passing of the bill, and that there were grave doubts as to the wisdom of passing it. The company under this bill take power to carry their line all over the most populous portion of the province of Quebec. They ask power to go into thirteen counties lying to the south and southeast of the River St. Lawrence, and there is no protection whatever to the companies which now have rights in that district. There is nothing in the bill to indicate where the line is to begin, or which way it is to go, or where it is to end. That is contrary to the uniform practice of this House. Every bill should indicate where the railway is to begin, the direction in which it is to run, and where it is to terminate. There is nothing of that sort in this bill. Further, there is no protection whatever for the rights of municipalities. In every case where we have allowed companies to erect even telegraph poles, we have inserted provisions to protect the interests of the municipalities. In this bill it proposes to give power to erect trolley lines anywhere the company pleases over these thirteen counties: there is not a single provision to safeguard the interests of the municipalities. That, I think, is a most serious objection to the bill and one which, of itself, should condemn it. Then hon. gentlemen will see that on account of the indefiniteness of this bill the promoters of it, after it becomes law, will be in a position to dictate to a certain extent terms to the companies which now have railway lines in that section of the country. It is only necessary to threaten to parallel the line of a railway and the owners of the railway may be induced to pay a ransom. The hon. gentleman from Sorel waited here for a whole week, I believe, for the purpose of opposing this bill in the Railway Committee and was at last obliged, by stress of business, to go away, and he probably will be here this afternoon, but is not here now, to express his views on the subject.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Who is that gentleman?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Hon. Mr. Forget. I do not propose to say anything more except just to make one last remark. It is a matter of common observation that the most objectionable private bills generally reach us in the last days of the session.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Public bills too.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps public bills too, but at any rate that is the case with private bills, and if the Railway Committee had not felt that amending this bill would have meant its defeat, it would certainly have been amended in several important particulars. Now that the bill has come before us, I think it is a mischievous one in itself, because it will establish a very bad precedent such as we have not now on our statute-book. It is the duty of this House to postpone it, and I, therefore, move that this bill be not read the third time now but that it be read a third time this day three months.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman who opposes this bill says, in the first instance, that the notices were not given properly. The Committee on Standing Orders, to whom this bill was referred, reported that the House might dispense with the rules, and that suggestion was adopted by the House. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. member from Sorel, who has been remaining here for months, is obliged to absent himself. The hon. member from Sorel is the senator from Montreal who opposed this bill because he thought it would give them a right to go into the city of Montreal, which they do not ask. They did ask that right at first, but this clause was thrown out by the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman says that this bill ought to be purely a local bill, but by clause eleven it comes under The Railway Act, by which it is provided that if a railway crosses or touches a federal railway, then it comes under the federal law. The hon. gentleman says this bill does not describe, or does not say where it will start from and where it will end. If he reads the fourth clause he will see that it starts from the northern limit or north-west limit of the county of Chambly, and of course it must start from a bridge. If it were not known whether there was anything in the railway subsidies permitting or assisting the construction of the bridge at Longueuil, it might be different, because there would have to be two bridges, but as this is not the case, there is only one road remaining—that is the Grand Trunk Railway. There is not a great distance between the two, only about three miles. Then it is said that the road shall end in or near the city of Sherbrooke. That is enough to show where it starts from and where it goes. The hon. gentleman says that the bill should indicate the different places it will pass through. Hon. gentlemen in this House know that in giving a charter for a road we generally say the railway starts from such a place and ends such a place, naming the particular cities it will pass. But this is not a steam railway. It is an electric railway, and its cars, if asked to stop, will stop in a hundred places, nay more, will stop at every man's house. This cannot be done with a steam railway. Therefore, if we had to mention every place where it is going to stop it would be impossible. We would have to name every house by which it passed. I think I have answered about all the objections of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What about protecting the rights of municipalities?

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—It is well known that these electric railways generally pass on the public road and it cannot use the public road if the municipalities object. This bill has passed through the committee and is on the paper for third reading to-day.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Entertaining the opinions I do respecting this bill, I must support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. This road, as stated, starts from the northern limit of the county of Chambly and ends somewhere near Sherbrooke. I believe that, according to the evidence that was given before the committee, it is about one hundred and ten miles long, whereas the distance between these two points is somewhere about half of that, as I have been given to understand. I do not say so of my own knowledge, but merely from what I have heard from others. This bill states that it is a railway for the general benefit of Canada, and that, therefore, it will be entitled to a considerable subsidy from the government if it is carried out. It is not an ordinary railroad, but an electric road, and I am not aware that we have up to the present time declared other electric roads, of any extent at any rate, to be works for the general benefit of Canada, and where they pass only through a limited section of one province I do not see that the people of the Dominion should be taxed to incorporate or bonus a local road of that kind. The bill sets out that the capital stock is to be $500,000 and that the company may issue bonds, debentures or other securities to the extent of $20,000 a mile on its railway and branches in proportion as the road is constructed. I do not think these are at all prudent precautions to be taken respecting a railroad of this kind, nor do I think it is a road that should be bonused by the Dominion and governed by the rules relating to steam railways. For these, and for other reasons which I could enumerate, if it were desirable to go into the matter fully and take up the time of the House in discussing it at very great length, I am opposed to the bill and will support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—At first blush, before hearing the explanations on the bill, I felt opposed to it, but now, as I understand the matter, I intend to vote against the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I understand the intention is to allow the farmers to go to market with the products of their farms, and I do not see that it is going to interfere with anything. My hon. friend talks about subsidy, but when the question comes up the company would have to satisfy me pretty well before I would support such a claim. I would oppose them on the question of subsidy, but that is not before us now. If the people desire a railway built in order to obtain access to the markets, I say that we should not stop it at all. After considering the whole question, I do not think we should throw out this bill, now that it has passed through committee.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I opposed the bill in committee and I oppose it now, on the ground that sufficient notice was not given to these parties who will be seriously affected by the passing of the bill. That is one very serious objection, to my mind at any rate. In all cases of this kind the people interested should have due notice. Our rules are explicit on that point. It is true the Standing Orders Committee reported in favour of the suspension of the rules, but still it was open to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to inquire into that and they did inquire, and I think the conclusion was that there was not sufficient notice given. There were other things not mentioned in that bill which are very important. I refer to the matter of electric poles. In all charters granted hitherto there have been express conditions as to their powers with respect to the location of poles on the highway. In this bill there is no limitation, and they can erect poles twenty, thirty or fifty feet high anywhere they like, and there is no power in this Act whereby they are limited in any way.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Is not that provided in the Railway Act?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, it does not provide with respect to electric roads at all. I have always thought there should be a general act for electric roads, and then we would know what we were doing, but all roads we have chartered in the past have contained these provisions. I think hon. gentlemen will find that if these people are allowed to erect trolley poles fifty feet in height, it will be very objectionable to the community. The bonding of that road at $20,000 a mile is extreme and out of all proportion to its cost. I happen to know something about the cost of electric roads, and I say that the figure of $20,000 a mile, in a country like that where the land damages will not be very great, is excessive. I am told they can go through farms as they like. This roaming charter gives them that privilege, and if you are going to allow this company to bond its property at $20,000 a mile, I think it will not be safe. Then on this question of the farmers getting to market, the farmers have now, I believe, communication with a good many roads and this road will take the business away from the other roads. Is that in the general interest of the country? These roads have been subsidized and are running, and now you are going to place this road in competition with them. The people interested have not had notice of it. I believe several gentlemen have already expressed their dissent from the passage of this bill, and we will have more I think. The mayor of St. Hyacinthe sent in a telegram and other parties have objected. These people should have had sufficient notice in order to give them the information that it was intended to pass such a bill. That is the reason why I support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—My hon. friend forgets that an electric railway and a steam railway are two different things.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know that.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE.—An electric railway car can stop at every man's house; the hon. gentleman knows it would be impossible for a steam railway to do that. Would not it be a great advantage, if it were possible in Upper Canada, to have an electric railway on every road in the country? Of course I know it is impossible to expect that, but it would be an ideal state of affairs if we could have an electric railway at every man's door. We have not that. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island says we have not given those powers to every electric railway. There are not many other electric railways that I know of which go into the country and which cross or connect with the steam railways; but this one must pass over certain railways. It will have to pass over the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Chambly, and the Vermont Central; and the 11th clause says that the Railway Act shall apply in every case. As to the erection of poles, they will either erect the poles on the farms or on the public roads. The public road belongs to the municipality, and the farms belong to the proprietors. What danger is there in erecting poles fifty feet high? It is not in a city. If it were in a city I could understand it. In the country, if a farmer will allow them to erect a pole five feet in diameter it does not matter; there is no danger to anybody; but you are refusing this great advantage, if you vote against this bill, to all the farms in twelve or thirteen counties, and on what ground? On the demand in a telegram sent by the mayor of St. Hyacinthe. It has been stated, here and elsewhere, that it might hurt a road called the United Counties Railway. This United Counties Railway is a very near relative of the Drummond County Railway, a road of the same sort. Should we deprive the farmers of these counties of such a great advantage as having an electric railway, merely for the pleasure of listening to a telegram? Are we to be stopped by the absence of the hon. gentleman from Sorel (Mr. Forget), who could be here if he liked? Is there any danger, because they take the right of borrowing $20,000 per mile, of capitalists advancing that sum to them? This is not an immense undertaking like the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway; it is merely a common electric railway which will probably not be completed for many years. It will be constructed as the advantages of it are better known.

The Senate divided on the motion, which was rejected by the following vote:—

McDonald (C.B.),

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not object to the bill on the grounds which have been stated, but it has always seemed to me that projects of this sort, lying wholly within a province, should not come here for incorporation. There have been so many bills of this sort carried through parliament to which that objection might be taken, that I thought in this case it was not proper for me to make a distinction between this and other measures on that ground, but looking at those provisions of the British North American Act which give jurisdiction over certain work and undertakings to the local legislatures—subsections A, B, and C of subsection 10 of section 92, when read together it is clear that measures of this sort were never intended to come before the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I had some hesitation in voting, for the reasons which my hon. friend has stated, though ultimately I came to the conclusion that I should vote for the bill. What strikes me as particularly objectionable in this bill, and a great many other bills, is that the works mentioned here are declared by parliament to be for the benefit of the Dominion, when so declaring is really a perversion of the provision of the constitution for the purpose. It was intended by the British North America Act that local matters should be disposed of by the provincial legislatures. Then, naturally, it occurred to those concerned in preparing the Act that a question might arise in regard to a particular work whether it was really for the common interest or not, and how is that to be disposed of? It was thought not to be desirable that the question should go to court, and therefore our parliament itself received authority to declare when a work was a matter of common interest, but parliament ought to exercise this authority in a judicial spirit—they ought not to do it merely to get over a technical difficulty. That is very often done. My attention was called to it very much, when in another position and viewing things from another standpoint. I think both Houses of parliament ought to consider whether it is proper to put that statement into a bill in unless there is solid ground for it, and whether it is proper to insert it in regard to local matters which in the spirit of the constitution ought to be disposed of by the local legislature.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I am very glad that this point has been brought out by the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Bothwell. We are now, under this bill, putting a different class of railroads into the same category as the steam railroads of the country, and I have been unable, up to the present time, to find any precedent for an electric road being declared by legislation to be a work for the general benefit of Canada when it only goes through a very limited section of one province and does not touch any other province directly or indirectly. This road is brought within the jurisdiction of this parliament merely because it happens to cross the track of the Grand Trunk Railway or some other road in that section. It is very objectionable, indeed, to initiate this new principle in our legislation.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B.C.)—I would ask the hon. gentleman if the Montreal Belt Line Bill which we passed last session was not declared to be in the public interest of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—As for the electric railways, if science advances in the future as it has advanced in the past, we will soon have all our railways run by electricity, and do away with steam entirely, and I do not see why we should stop this railway from being built, giving the farmers of that section of the country the advantage of it. They say this interferes with other railways.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—As long as it does not tap the Welland Canal it is all right.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman has the same interest in the Welland Canal that I have. I have just the same interest in that canal as the other five millions of the people of Canada. If the hon. gentleman will look into the canal matter when it comes up again, I think I shall have his support to preserve the navigation.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—As there appears to be a general discussion on the bill before it passes, I might make one remark in reference to bills of this kind. I quite agree with those who object to the great bonding privilege connected with this enterprise, and I think the time has come in the history of Canada, when this privilege should be curtailed to a very great extent. It appears to me that these enterprises are started by mere penniless speculators, who, in the first instance, come to parliament and get a charter and ask for extraordinary bonding privileges. They float their bonds, then they come to the Dominion government and get subsidies, and to the local government and municipalities and get subsidies, and they are in a position to control a large amount of the stock without putting one dollar of their own money into it. That is all wrong. We should not grant charters to men of straw. They should be men of means who would put their own money into it and would see that the enterprise is conducted on business principles. If we go on in this way, granting almost unlimited powers to such corporations to issue bonds and sell them in foreign countries, where they do not know the circumstances, we deceive the public and injure the reputation of our own country.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed on a division.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

The Order of the Day having been called:

Resuming the adjourned Debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Miller, that a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidies granted by the parliament of Canada to the Drummond County Railway Company, in the Province of Quebec; the present financial position of the said company, its liabilities of every description, whether matured or accruing; the condition and classification of the said railway, as well as its equipment, and also, all other matters and things relating to the said subjects or any of them, as well as all other matters and things relating to the said railway; with power to send for papers, persons and records, and to report from time to time, and that the said committee consist of the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Messieurs Ferguson, Power, Scott, Macdonald (P.E.I.) McInnes (New Westminster), De Boucherville, Primrose, Cox, Clemow, Landry, Prowse, Wood, Thibaudeau (de la Vallière), and the mover.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said:—I moved the adjournment of the debate at the last sitting of the House in order to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity of speaking on it who might desire to do so. I have nothing further to say myself on the subject than that events have occurred in another place since the last meeting of this House which compel me to press this motion. I believe it is in the interest of the country that this investigation should be granted, and that it should proceed at once. I believe that it will not occupy as long a time as many hon. gentlemen fear. I think before a couple of weeks we could get to the conclusion of the investigation. Therefore I cannot comply with the request which has been made to withdraw the motion. I must take the sense of the House upon it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to say a word in justification of the course which the hon. member from Richmond is pursuing. On Friday or Saturday, when the hon. leader of the government in this House intimated a desire that this question should be postponed, I was somewhat inclined to agree with him, for the reasons which he then advanced, and that was the difficulty in proceeding with a question of this kind at such a late period of the session: but after what took place in the House of Commons and what has been stated in the public press representing the hon. gentlemen opposite, there is the best possible justification for the course which the hon. gentleman from Richmond has pursued, in persisting in moving his resolution. I notice in the Montreal Herald, which is the mouthpiece of the government in the province of Quebec, and if report be correct, is owned principally by one of the parties interested in this railway deal, an article, in which the following language is used :

If the Senate, by a non-partizan vote, had postponed the bill for further consideration, had made amendments to it, or had deemed itself justified in asking for an investigation into charges of wrongdoing, which senators and others have hinted at, then the country might have withheld judgment on its action.

I admit there is a good deal of force in the remark in the first part of the argument. If information had been given to the House as to the details of the bargain, and the government had waited until they received the report of their engineers to justify the bargain into which they had entered, there might be some force in those remarks. What I desire to call attention to is what follows :

Having the power to convey an impression to the country that the new government has been guilty of jobbery, it conveyed the impression without daring to crystallize the innuendo into an official inquiry. Having the power to embarrass the administration in respect to an important matter of public concern, on which immediate action is imperative, it embarrassed it when it might by amending the measure, have made it possible for the necessary legislation to be passed at this session. The Senate in times past has not been chary about appointing committees of investigation. In 1891 it went out of its way to order an inquiry into matters concerning the government of this province. Why does it hesitate now ?

I was not in the Senate then, but they did not appoint a committee for that purpose. That matter was investigated in the railway committee, to which certain bills had been referred, and they proceeded with the inquiry with the result which is well known in this country. The Herald's article continues :

Why does it hesitate now ? It pretends that it believes that there has been wrong-doing in connection with the Drummond County arrangement. Why does it not investigate the matter ? Is it because it knows that to investigate would be to destroy the fabric of suspicion that it has sought to weave and to remove every objection to the ratification of the contract.

I do not hesitate to say for myself, and I believe I speak for those with whom I act, that if that would be the result of the investigation, it would be a source of gratification to every public man in Canada to know that no improper expenditure of public money had been made in connection with this or any other undertaking. The course that the Senate is pursuing is not followed because they desire to make political capital, but to put a stop to what they believe has existed in the past, that is, the misappropriation of money, no matter by whom or by what party. So much for the Montreal Herald. Then we have the Toronto Globe of Saturday, which comes out with an advertising head, about what we would call in printers' phraseology "a six line pica heading." It says :

Storm signals. Down. A peaceful atmosphere at Ottawa and the Drummond Railway fight postponed. No investigation wanted.

Whether that last sentence, "No investigation wanted," is intended for Mr. Tarte, I know not, nor should I have known, had I not read in the article the following :

There is an atmosphere of peace and amity around the parliament buildings to-day, strangely in contrast with the air of excitement observable earlier in the week. It seems to be agreed that the session is to be closed up as early as possible, that the Senate will not again display bad temper, and that if there is to be a row over the Drummond County Railway, it shall be held over until next year. This understanding is believed to be the more acceptable to the Conservatives because of the very evident desire of the Liberals to have the question of the disposal of the subsidies granted to the Drummond County Railway investigated. It is not forgotten that a number of prominent Conservatives were rather intimately connected with the road at the time it secured the Dominion subsidy. If the Senate Committee should be appointed to look into the question next session the discovery may be made that the thing was loaded up wrong way and that instead of Liberals being involved in improper proceedings, some of the most prominent Conservatives in parliament will be driven from public life by the anticipated revelations. The peaceful fashion in which the Senate is at work to-day and the lamb-like air of the Opposition in the Commons can be accounted for in no other way than by the supposition that a hint of what may happen has reached the party leader. It would be a most ludicrous ending to the war talk of the Tory senators and the hints that corruption was attendant on the Intercolonial extension, to discover that the corruption was Tory corruption and the culprits leaders in the Tory party.

I have only to repeat what I said a few moments ago, that if there are those connected with the Tory party, as they are designated by the correspondent of the Toronto Globe, guilty of wrong doing, the sooner we know it the better, and I hesitate not to say more, that if there are those belonging to the party with which I have acted who are in the position indicated by this article, the sooner they are driven from public life the better it will be for the country, and infinitely better for the party to which they have attached themselves. With these statements and the efforts made to intimidate those who desire to do what they believe to be right in the matter, there should not be any delay in the appointment of the committee. I have one more remark to make, and that is in reference to the position which I occupy in this House, and the interpretation which has been put upon it by the leaders of the party as expressed through their newspaper organs. I know my hon. friend the leader of the government in the Senate said the other day that he did not think we should take notice of all newspaper articles. I quite agree with him upon that point, but there are occasions in our political lives, and there are events and utterances which are made by those who lead a party, and by those who direct to a certain extent its policy and its course upon public matters as expressed through the press, of which we must take notice. The Globe on a former occasion in its leading article, double-leaded, says :

> It is to be presumed that the plan has the approval of Sir Charles Tupper, and Messrs. Foster and Haggart, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell has been chosen to lead the attack in the Senate. The point need not be dwelt upon.

And then it winds up by saying that "Sir Mackenzie Bowell knows best what consorts best with his own respect." I trust I do. I wish to say, as far as I am concerned, and as far as I know the views of the other senators who have taken action in this matter, that they have done so wholly and solely on their own responsibility, and not at the dictation of Sir Charles Tupper or Mr. Foster, or Mr. Haggart. For myself, I have never interchanged an opinion with either of them on this question, and with only one, Sir Charles Tupper, have I even passed the time of day since I have been in the city. As to what comports with my own self respect, I propose to be the judge of that. I acknowledge no leader in the House of Commons at present, more particularly the gentleman who is now leading the opposition in the House of Commons. I wish to be distinctly and positively understood on this question, that whatever I do on this or any other matter will be from a sense of what I conceive to be my duty as a public man ; and while I shall not, at least intentionally, lose my personal self-respect, I shall at the same time not forget the duty which I owe to my country in exposing any wrong-doing which I believe to exist in connection with the Drummond County Railway or any other matter.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Since my hon. friend has determined to go on with his motion, and my hon. friend opposite concurs with him, I, for one, shall not vote against it. I take it for granted, also, that I need not say anything again in regard to the composition of the committee, because I perceive that what I said before did not receive the concurrence of my hon. friend from Richmond. I should like to have my hon. friend from Bothwell added to this committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have no objection

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a very unusual proceeding to be instituted. I am not aware of any precedent for it. It is peculiarly a fishing committee, to endeavour to find out something that will damage political opponents. The practice of Parliament in the past has been not to notice newspaper reports, or to be governed by street reports, but to hold any senator or any member of the House of Commons, responsible for any position he may take on a charge of this kind. Otherwise, I suppose both Houses of Parliament would be pretty well occupied with making inquiries into various charges against one side or the other. We know very well that newspaper men write under very severe tension, and that they write exaggerated articles, and if gentlemen in public life were to notice newspaper articles, their time would be pretty well occupied. And therefore, the rule in the past has prevailed—and it is the rule more particularly in the House of Commons—that if a charge of political corruption or any other charge is to be laid, some gentleman in parliament rises and makes the statement on his responsibility, and the investigation is ordered. That is the way that several commissions of inquiry have been inaugurated. I need not remind hon. gentlemen that in that most important investigation, the Pacific scandal, the Hon. Mr. Huntington had to take the responsibility of making the statements, and stating that he was prepared to go before the committee and prove them. In the present case there is not an hon. gentleman who even states that he believes those reports. I have not heard a single member rise and say he placed any confidence in them. At the time of the Pacific scandal there were ugly rumours reflecting on the honour and character and integrity of the members of the government. Articles appeared day by day in all the papers all over the country reflecting on the members of the government. These papers were dissatisfied with their policy, and were making various charges. Surely in laying a charge of this kind somebody ought to be responsible for it, and we should not act on mere newspaper reports. Therefore, I say it is a very extraordinary step to be taken, and no one can doubt that it is intended that this committee shall be a political machine to damage the present administration. And yet you propose to try the government by a jury of nine to four. That is practically what it amounts to. I have been on juries of that kind in this House before on several occasions. One of the first we had was an attempt on the part of this House to condemn the government, of which I was then a member, because they saw proper to make Fort William the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway on Lake Superior. It was declared to be a blunder and a mistake, and that we should have gone to Port Arthur. A committee of this House was solemnly chosen, and they sat for months and months, and proved to their satisfaction that Port Arthur was the proper place for the outlet of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that Fort William should not have been chosen. They made a report to the country, and yet we find to-day they were wrong in their conclusions. Fort William is the outlet of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Port Arthur has been entirely abandoned, notwithstanding members of this House declared Port Arthur was the proper outlet. They did it because they were going to damage the government by it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the attempt, and there was a reflection on the late Alexander Mackenzie, who is now so much lauded as a far-seeing statesman and an honest man and one who had the interests of his country at heart. At that time he was said to be a traitor to the people of Canada, that he did not possess that perception necessary for a minister leading the government of this country, and all manner of unfriendly criticisms were hurled at him. Yet to-day, when political feeling has passed away, it is found that the verdict would be the other way. I am not opposing any investigation in this case. On the contrary, I am quite ready to go into it. I know nothing, nor have I heard anything to justify the formation of this committee. Hon. gentlemen who are moving in this matter have their judgments based entirely upon newspaper reports in papers that are unfriendly to the administration. That is where the charge comes from. It is a very unfortunate precedent. It is a precedent of course that only prevails where one side is so very much stronger than the other that the minority are completely overruled. That is practically the position we are in to-day; no one can deny it. It is all very well to put on an air of indignation and be so exclusively pure that the honour and credit of the government must not even be touched upon by the public press of the country without inquiry being made into the facts. Of course, hon. gentlemen, this committee can do what it thinks proper This committee can begin its inquiry, and I hope they will push it to the end. I appeal to the committee that in this inquiry at all events ample time shall be given for a full investigation, and that all parties who desire to be heard before that committee will be heard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman one question. Is he not rather at fault in his memory, when he speaks of the great opposition being given to Fort William as the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and declaring that the terminus should be Port Arthur?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. Port Arthur was the port which the committee held to be the proper place, and as soon as the change of government took place, this government voted some millions of money to make a harbour. They tried to make a harbour there and failed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman not to lose his temper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not losing my temper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The great objection made to the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not to Fort William, but to what was termed the town plot, some miles above Fort William. I have a distinct recollection of taking part in that discussion. The objection was to running up a narrow river to what they termed the town plot where the famous Neebbing hotel was built. The objection was not to Fort William. The contention was that had Fort William been selected, which was just round the corner of the river, the objection would not have been so great.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not at all.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is only a matter of recollection between the hon. gentleman and myself, and there need be no difficulty in settling that point. We can turn up the record and it will be seen which is correct.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I was going to suggest that if the name of the Hon. Mr. Mills is added to the committee, I should like also to have that of Mr. McCallum added.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The hon. Secretary of State says this is an extraordinary motion to make. It may be an extraordinary motion but it is in response to an extraordinary proposition submitted to this House. A few days ago a proposition was placed before us within a few hours of the closing of the session—a proposition of the most important nature ever submitted to this House or any other parliament—and we are told now, because we desire that further and more complete information should be obtained respecting this matter, that we are doing what we should not do. How is it possible for gentlemen to enter into an arrangement of this kind with such short notice? I was very glad to hear the hon. leader of the House say that this matter would be settled upon purely business and commercial principles. I wish it had been so. I wish the government had taken the same method of obtaining information as commercial men would have pursued had they undertaken a matter of such gigantic proportions as the measure now under consideration. What would commercial far-seeing men have done under circumstances of this kind? They would have taken, in the first instance, an opportunity of ascertaining the amount of business that had been carried on between these two centres for some years past. Then they would have come to a determination whether a shorter line could be had. They would also have taken into consideration the amount of business that belonged properly to the Intercolonial Railway and found out by actual calculation whether that would be sufficient to support this additional line of railway between Lévis and Montreal. I am not pretending to say that this line should not be extended to Montreal, but I want to know, in the first instance, whether it is going to be a paying or losing speculation, and I contend, from the information we have before us at the present time, that it is utterly impossible for any man to come to a conclusion one way or the other, and I think that would be the true business line to have proceeded on. If commercial men had the same undertaking in their hands, they would proceed in that way. But in place of that, the government of this country propose a scheme by which we would be bound for ninety-nine years, making no provision for a break in the arrangements. Changes will take place, I have no doubt, and are taking place every day, that may very seriously affect the carrying out of this proposition. The commerce of the country is undergoing great changes, and I think it is a mistake to enter into an arrangement for ninety-nine years. I do not recollect a similar arrangement being entered into, and yet when the Senate ask for time to investigate and inquire, their acts are characterized in all manner of ways, and it is said they are acting from political and improper motives. For my part, I repel insinuations of that kind. I am, and I have always been, inclined to listen to any argument that is brought under our consideration since my advent to the Senate, and I have not been influenced one way or the other by political considerations. Hon. gentlemen in the Senate have just as much right, on a question of this sort, a purely business matter, to express their own opinion as the Commons have. It is true we differ. Is not that reasonable? Is not that logical? Are we to assume, because the Commons agree to this measure, that we must holus bolus acquiesce in it? If that is so, we are of no further use to the country, and the sooner we are disposed of the better. We are capable of forming an independent opinion of this project. It is a purely commercial matter, and I think I am quite capable of finding out whether this bargain, or pretended bargain, is to be of advantage to the country. This important bill has come down to us very late in the session. I have always opposed the practice of bringing measures down to us at the close of the session, and I think we should make up our minds that we will not consider bills that are of such an important character, unless we are given an opportunity to study them and make necessary inquiries. In the present case we have not been given that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no such bill before the House.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—But it was before the House, and, therefore, I think we have a right to discuss it on this motion. If it had not been for the action of this House, the bill would have passed and the people of this country would have been bound for ninety-nine years to a most improvident contract. Therefore, I think the Senate has done a service to the country in throwing out the bill, and you will find, before the next session of parliament, that the whole country will uphold them. I want time to examine into this matter. My hon. friend from Richmond has moved for a committee, it is true. I think the committee is needed, and if the government had taken the proper course in the first instance, they would have adopted the means we are taking now. But no, they would not do that. They try in some other legerdemain way to get over the difficulty. We want full time to inquire into it. If it is inadvisable, after all the circumstances are known, after the country has been given an opportunity to understand it, then we will be in a position to judge of its merits and demerits. The hon. leader of the government said there was no intention to spend any money this year. If that is the case——

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It will take some time to put the road in proper condition. All I want to know, as a commercial man, is whether, when this road is built, it is going to be a paying road or going to increase the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. Those are points I want to know. I desire a full inquiry before being in a position to judge. Whether the measure be Grit or Conservative, I want the full facts established for the satisfaction of the Senate and for the satisfaction of the people of this country. When that is done we will be in a position to judge, and we are not in a position to do so at the present time. At least I am not. I may be very ignorant and obtuse. I cannot understand those questions as well as other gentlemen, but still those are my views and my ideas, and I am not afraid to express them. I am not influenced by political or other improper motives, I am merely advocating what I consider in the interest of the great masses of the country. That is the course I have taken in the past and the course I intend to take in the future.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This, I think, is a very important matter, and I say to-day what I said when the hon. member for Richmond first introduced this motion, that it is a matter, after what has been said, that ought to be investigated; but it ought to be investigated by that body which, under our constitution, has the power to investigate it, and to whom that power has been committed by the constitution. One extraordinary thing about the whole affair is this: hon. gentlemen are constantly asserting that they are not actuated by any political consideration. I do not know that they have been so charged.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not here.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly not in this House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, in this House, by inference.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yet it is a very extraordinary thing that hon. gentlemen should constantly reiterate this statement and insist upon a committee after they have defeated the bill. What was the proposition made by the government? To grant an appropriation for railway purposes, to acquire certain lines so as to extend the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec to Montreal. That was the proposition embodied in the bill that came up to this House. The vast majority of the House rejected that bill; and now it is dead. After rejecting the bill, hon. gentlemen propose an investigation to see whether they were right or wrong in what they did. If hon. gentlemen wanted an investigation in this matter, that bill ought to have been kept alive and they should have proposed the postponement of the bill until after the investigation, but that is not what they proposed. After the whole matter is dead, they propose an investigation. I say again, what I said before, that questions of finance are not directly under the supervision of this House. We do not make the appropriations. Hon. gentlemen know right well that when His Excellency will take his seat on the Throne, and the Speaker of the House of Commons appears at our Bar, the appropriation bill will be presented by the Speaker of the House of Commons. That bill, when carried through the House of Commans comes here. It is passed by this House, and this House does not present it to His Excellency for His Excellency's sanction as they do any other bill, and why not? Because the appropriation of public money is the sole act of the House of Commons. The money is under their supervision. They speak for the people, and state for what purpose that money shall be applied, and after they have made that appropriation, it is the business of the House of Commons to see that the advisers of the Crown apply that money in accordance with the Supply Bill. They are entitled to make an inquiry, but I should like to know on what grounds this House has any jurisdiction in the matter whatever. I called the attention of the House, when the subject was under discussion before, to the opinions of two of the greatest parliamentary leaders who ever sat in the House of Commons, Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, and in discussing the India Bill they both admitted that inquiries into the financial transactions of the United Kingdom were not matters which could be made by the House of Lords, nor could the members of the House of Lords be members of a committee by which such inquiry was made. That is the view taken in the United Kingdom, and Mr. Gladstone maintained that the proposition he had made did not come under that rule, because the moneys as to the expenditure of which they were to make inquiry, were moneys voted by the government of India, and not by the parliament of the United Kingdom. They were not expenditures of the United Kingdom, and so under the statutes, both the House of Commons and the House of Lords had an equal right to make inquiry. The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller), who made this motion, told the House that those were old musty precedents; that they had no application to this House; that this House is governed by the provisions of the British North America Act; and that we enjoy in this House exactly the same rights, privileges and immunities as are enjoyed by the House of Commons in England. As far as our power stands, that is true. If the hon. gentleman's contention is right, this House would have a right to amend a money bill. In the British North America Act it is stated that financial legislation shall be initiated in the other House. There is not a single provision in the British North America Act with regard to supply beyond that, but we were given a constitution similar in principle—it is expressed in the preamble that that was the intention—to that of the United Kingdom, and we look to the constitutional usages of the United Kingdom to see what our powers are, and our powers with regard to financial matters, are in this respect exactly the same as they are in the House of Lords. There never has been a demand made by the House of Lords that they may even initiate a money bill. There has never been a demand that they may amend a money bill. The law of England, as to these things, is a matter of usage, and those usages and functions are, as they are settled by the constitution, as much a part of the law for our guidance, as are those contained in the Act itself. It is a maxim of law that the law itself is abrogated by usage. A few years ago, when it was proposed to establish life peerages, when Baron Parke was made a life peer, the House of Lords took exception. It was shown clearly that that was anciently a prerogative of the Crown, but Lord Lyndhurst, in rejecting the proposition, said it was wholly contrary and irreconcilable to the usages which had long existed, and the prerogative having remained in abeyance, although strictly it was still law, it was not a law that could be complied with in consequence of the usage which had grown up, and he points out this difference: he says, that if the Crown chose to make one hundred peers a day, the Crown would have the power to make those hundred peers, it would be strictly legal, but it would be a most unconstitutional proceeding, because it would practically swamp and render useless the second chamber of the British parliament. I admit that a great portion of this resolution might come within our jurisdiction, and it has been admitted over and over again in England that the House of Lords may inquire into matters where questions of finance may be incidentally involved, but that they have no power to inquire into a direct question of public expenditure and that is the objection I make, and the objectionable words stand in the first sentence of this resolution. I should like to see this House maintain its usefulness in our constitutional system. I should like to see it preserve its dignity and make some effort to obtain public confidence, but if the House undertakes to set itself up against the House of Commons, and to claim powers that belong to the House of Commons, and that are incident to the special power which, is possessed by the other House, and the other House alone, then I say that the Senate is entering upon a conflict out of which it cannot come with strength and dignity. This House is undertaking to usurp the functions that belong to the people's House. The people's House must vote public moneys. These public moneys are an appropriation put into the custody of the Crown, controlled by the advisers of the Crown. Those advisers have the right to appoint commissioners to inquire into the conduct of the subordinate officers, and to see whether the law has been complied with in carrying it into effect, if such a commission is necessary in their opinion. But this House has no jurisdiction in the matter whatever. That appropriation is the appropriation of the House of Commons, and the expenditure of that appropriation is under their jurisdiction and the ministers are responsible to them if they have misapplied the money. They have the right to inquire, and it is their duty to inquire, but it is not the right or duty of this House to make any such inquiry whatever, and I trust hon. gentlemen will not proceed in a course which certainly cannot lead to the advantage of this House, but on the contrary, will be a source of serious detriment to it. I am astonished, I must say, at the leader of the opposition suddenly acquiring such great confidence in in an inquiry by this House. It was proposed some time ago that an inquiry should be had by the House of Commons into a charge made specifically against a minister of the Crown with regard to the expenditure of money that had been appropriated by the House of Commons and placed at the disposal of the Crown, and that hon. gentleman voted against an inquiry by the House —an inquiry by the only body, under the constitution, that had the authority to make that inquiry and he put it into the hands of a commission. Does the hon. gentleman ask for a commission to-day? He has not the same confidence in a commission to-day that he had when that inquiry was proposed. Not at all. The hon. gentleman is in favour of an inquiry by this House. I very much regret that the Senate propose to undertake an investigation in this House when it belongs wholly to another chamber. If we can maintain our own rights we shall do well, but if we undertake to invade the rights of others, we are likely in the end to find that our constitutional powers are diminished.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken is no doubt very justly regarded as an eminent authority on constitutional matters, and when my hon. friend is in a thoroughly judicial mind we listen to his utterances with a great deal of respect and deference, and are generally disposed to accept his views, but on this question my hon. friend is rather acting the part of a special pleader than discussing the matter in a very judicial frame of mind. He comes to the conclusion, and asserts with great positiveness and emphasis, that the Senate of Canada has no power or right to inquire into any financial transactions or the expenditure of money whatever.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the hon. gentleman took that ground.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I said we could not inquire directly into a special appropriation. There may be an expenditure of money incident to the construction of a railway, in the manner of its construction, which might properly be investigated by the Senate, but that is not what is proposed here.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, exactly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an inquiry into the subsidies granted by the parliament of Canada to the Drummond County Railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And other things.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a direct proposition to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidy granted to the railway company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—You cannot interpret the whole resolution by reading a small fragment of a sentence. The motion says:

The present financial position of the said company, its liabilities of every description whether matured or accruing, the condition and extension of the said railway as well as its equipment, &c.

It is not confined to this. This is merely incidental to the general scope of the inquiry that is proposed. In Bourinot, on pages 471 and 472, after discussing the question of a supply bill, the author goes on to say:

As an illustration of the desire of the Senate to keep closely within their constitutional functions, we may refer to the fact that that House has declined to appoint a committee to examine and report on the public accounts, on the ground that while the Senate could properly appoint a committee for a specific purpose—that is, to inquire into particular items of expenditure—they could not nominate a committee like that of the Commons to deal with the general accounts and expenditures of the Dominion.

They have the power to inquire into any specific item in the expenditures of the country, but they have not the right to deal with the general expenditures of the Dominion:

A subject is within the jurisdiction of the lower House where all expenditures are initiated. It is legitimate, however, for the Senate to institute inquiries, by their own committees, into certain matters or questions which involve the expenditure of public money. But the committee should not report recommending the payment of a specific sum of money, but should confine themselves to a general expression of opinion on the subject referred to them.

There can be no question, therefore, where Bourinot stands with regard to such a matter as that which we are now considering, and what the views are in regard to it. I turn to May, and I find in the tenth edition of May, on page 541, he speaks of the power of the House of Lords. My hon. friend has been very strong in the statement that we have only the powers in regard to this matter that the House of Lords possesses. He may be right and he may be wrong. But certainly, in taking that position, he cannot dispute our having the powers of the House of Lords:

The Lords may also express their opinion upon the public expenditure or method of taxation and to financial administration, both in debate and by legislation, and they investigate those matters by the select committees. Nor do the Commons, as formerly, attempt to exclude the Lords from inquiries of this nature by not transmitting to them reports and papers relating to taxation, or by declining to permit the attendance of a member to give evidence on this subject before a select committee of the Lords.

Here we have these two eminent authorities in the most express manner against the contention of my hon. friend from Bothwell.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, not against—they are precisely the same.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If they are not diametrically opposite to the view my hon. friend has submitted, I fail to understand the import of the English language. My hon. friend has instanced another case, the inquiry into the financial state of India, where the House of Commons declined to come forward and appoint a general committee with the House of Lords to enter into these inquiries. That is altogether a different matter. The House of Commons, we know, has always been very jealous of its privileges, and in all ages it has gone perhaps further than the House of Lords would allow that it had a right to go in excluding the Lords from giving an opinion on the administration of the public moneys. That is the position the House of Commons took in 1871. They were jealous of their rights, as I think the House of Lords and this Senate of Canada should be jealous of their rights. They ought to assert all the powers they possess under the constitution. I have the authority under my hand, and while I lean to the view expressed by the members of the House of Commons in declining to have a general committee with the House of Lords to inquire into the financial administration of India, they do not dispute that the House of Lords had a right to make such inquiry on their own account. The following is from Todd's Parliamentary Government in England:

In 1871 Mr. Gladstone claimed for the House of Lords an equal right with the House of Commons to inquire into the finance and financial administration of India, and though he abandoned his purpose for a joint committee of both Houses on the subject because it did not meet with general acquiescence with the House of Commons, yet he protested against any attempt to narrow the deliberative functions of the Lords except on grounds of broad constitutional principle. And subsequently the Duke of Argyll declared that "should any suggestion emanate from the Commons Committee of which the Government or the House of Lords might doubt the propriety, it would be their Lordships' duty to institute a full inquiry before pressing any measure founded upon it."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Mr. Gladstone contended that the House of Lords had the same jurisdiction as the House of Commons with regard to India finances, but both Mr. Gladstone and Disraeli and every one who discussed the question admitted that, so far as the expenditure of the United Kingdom was concerned, the House of Lords could not compose a committee to make an inquiry, nor could they be members of a joint committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not necessary for us to discuss that question at any length, because we have no such difficulty in Canadian policies, and therefore it has nothing to do with the question we are discussing at the present moment. We are not asking for a joint committee. If we did, very likely the House of Commons would not agree, but we are not proposing anything of that kind. I am very well pleased to find that my hon. friend admits the force and correctness of what I have said as to the conduct and duty of the House of Lords with regard to the administration of the revenues of the Colonies or of India. As far as that is concerned, he is quite prepared to admit, and has admitted, that Mr. Disraeli and Mr. Gladstone and the others whom he has named quite sanctioned and approved of the claim on the part of the House of Lords to enter into an examination of these affairs.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sorry I can not understand my hon. friend the way he wishes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman proposes to inquire into the expenditure of the moneys voted by the parliament of this country for the public purposes of this country, and those cases which I refer to show that, so far as the appropriations of the treasury of England are concerned, the House of Lords has not a right to direct an inquiry.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As against that view I will read again to the House the opinion of May which I read a moment or two ago, and my hon. friend may or may not accept him as the highest authority, but I think the House will accept May as a high authority.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I accept May, but not your comments.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will read it without comments. I think it strong enough to carry conviction without the necessity of any comments:

The Lords may also express their opinion upon the public expenditure or method of taxation and to financial administration, both in debate and by legislation, and they investigate those matters by the select committees. Nor do the Commons as formerly attempt to exclude the Lords from inquiries of this nature, by not transmitting to them reports and papers relating to taxation, or by declining to permit the attendance of a member to give evidence on this subject before a select committee of the Lords.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—That, then, is May vs. Mills.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman may put it that way if he likes. I have submitted these authorities, and I think they will be admitted as strong authorities in the minds of hon. gentlemen in this House. Notwithstanding all the deference we have for the views and experience of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell, we will nevertheless come to the conclusion that we are quite safe in this chamber in following such eminent authorities as May and Bourinot. As a committee is to be struck, and I observe that my name is suggested as one of that committee, it is not perhaps the best thing in the world that I should discuss, at any great length at all events or very minutely, the matters that it is proposed to investigate. I may say this much, however, that notwithstanding the observations that have fallen from hon. gentlemen in this House and also in another House, I take it that the main object of this committee will be to inquire into the financial standing of a particular railway with which it is proposed that the government of Canada shall enter into a partnership, or something nearly like a partnership. I assume that that is the main object of the inquiry that is proposed to be made, and if it should incidentally come out in the work of that committee and appear that all the public men of Canada who have anything to do with the enterprise in one way or another have conducted themselves honourably, no one will be more delighted than I shall be, and I may say hon. gentlemen in this House will feel the same. But if information should come out of a different character, which we must all hope will not be the case, it cannot possibly be helped. My hon. friend from Bothwell takes the ground that we are proceeding wrong end foremost in this question. We have defeated the bill that was sent up to us, and now we propose to investigate with regard to the subject of that bill. It might or might not have been proper and necessary, if the suggestion had been made when this bill came before us, to have a committee of inquiry such as is now asked for. It might or might not have been necessary, in order to arrive at a proper conclusion as to whether that bill should be passed or rejected, to have a commission of this kind. In the estimation of many hon. members there were bold, leading features on the face of the bill—that is which could be ascertained and discovered by an ordinary examination such as members of this House could give to it—which called for its rejection. It had been prepared and brought before the country with a great deal of haste, without being canvassed by people either at public meetings or through the press in any way or to any extent, and it had been delayed and not brought before this House until a very late period of the session, and I think the general opinion of this country is—and that opinion extends to a very large number of people even among those who support the Liberal party in Canada—that there are things in connection with the bill which are objectionable, indeed the hon. gentleman sitting opposite me (Mr. Cox) who is as good an authority on commercial matters, as any gentleman in Canada, admitted in the course of the debate that there was one very important feature in the bill of which he did not approve and which he thought should be amended in this House, but we were told by the government that amendments to the bill were impossible. It is not necessary for me to discuss, notwithstanding what my hon. friend from Bothwell has said, whether we were right or wrong in rejecting the bill, or whether we did right or wrong in not having a committee of investigation before the bill was rejected. Apart altogether from the charges of corruption which have been made in connection with the Drummond County Railway, which I hope are not well founded, and which are not the principal objects to be reached by this Committee, we have at the present moment this question coming before us in another shape. We have the statement made in a rather definite manner by the ministers that that plan was going to be accomplished. They were not to be put off the track by any impediments which might be thrown in their way, in this or in any other quarter, and that this plan was going to be carried out, and in the fulfilment of this threat we have some seven different measures, I believe, undergoing consideration in the House of Commons at the present time. One of these is to subsidize the unbuilt portion of the Drummond County Railway, as to which, as I said before and I have no hesitation in saying again, there can be no further reasonable objection. There is another proposition to vote a sum of money, $100,000, to purchase rolling stock which would only be necessary, as I take it, or the greater part of which would only be necessary in the event of the permanent acquisition of the Drummond County Railway, and getting running powers over the Grand Trunk Rail way. In addition to that there is a proposition to vote a sum of money sufficient for the rental of the Drummond County Railway, and portions of the Grand Trunk Railway which were included in the measure before us a few days ago, the rent of these roads and the bridge and everything else, for nine months. We have this action on the part of the government, although it is not, in proportion, nearly so alarming in the public mind as the proposition to enter into a permanent arrangement for a century to come, involving a payment of enormous annuities to these companies, but we have the fact stated by the Minister of Railways that the rental of this road, with the other steps that are taken, are with a view to carry out that deal and which I suppose implies the bill in its entirety. From these statements it becomes a question whether we ought not, in the public interest, to get every possible information about this Drummond County Railway. I think that that is all the more necessary from this fact, that two sets of figures, with regard to the probable earnings or advantages to arise to Canada from the proposed acquisition or renting of the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway were submitted to parliament. In the House of Commons, the hon. Minister of Railways put certain statements of information based, as he said, upon the authority of the chief engineer of railways, Mr. Schreiber, in which he asserted that there was to be an increase in the tonnage carried over that railway of 500,000 tons a year, and in the same statement he also put before the House of Commons information, on the same authority, that there would be an increase of 632,000 in the number of passengers that would be carried. The statement submitted by my hon. friend, the leader of the House, was very different from that. It shows that in place of 500,000 additional tonnage to be carried by the railway, the additional tonnage to be carried dropped to about 200,000 tons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, 320,000 and something.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I did not mention the number.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—1,698,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—At all events, the estimate fell and both these estimates were alleged to have been made on the authority of the chief engineer of railways, Mr. Schreiber.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was one from Mr. Pottinger in addition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The fact nevertheless remains, explain it as you will, that when the hon. Minister of Railways came down to the House of Commons with this bill, and when he was asked to give reliable information to that House as to what the increased earnings of the Intercolonial Railway would be under the plan which he was proposing, the information which he gave, and which he stated in his place in parliament was made on the authority of the chief engineer of railways, Mr. Schreiber, that he estimated there would be over 500,000 tons of freight carried in addition to what had been carried in the past, and that there would be an increase of 630,000 in the number of passengers. When the matter came before the House my hon. friend the leader of the House submitted a statement signed by both Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Pottinger, which differed materially from that. It differed in the matter of carrying passengers, and very much in the freight. In the one the alleged increase in the passengers to be carried was 630,000 while in the other it was 230,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—228,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is giving me the exact figures. The Minister of Railways went before the House of Commons supplying them with what he said was thoroughly reliable information, based on the authority of the chief engineer of railways, that there would be an increase in passengers to be carried over that road in the first year of 630,000; my hon. friend the Secretary of State on the same authority, Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Pottinger's name added, submitted that the increase would only be 228,000. In view of this serious discrepancy I think we have a right to know more about this Drummond County Railway ——

Hon. Mr. POWER—We are all agreed about that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—and all the transactions connected with the railway before we are a party to committing the country to any very large expenditure in connection with it. As far as I am concerned—and I think I am speaking the sentiments of my friends as well—the principal object in view in this inquiry is to find out the facts of the case. In view of the discrepancy between the information which was supplied the House of Commons and that which has been supplied the Senate, we want to get the best possible information in order that we may not be making a leap in the dark with regard to it. I think hon. gentlemen will say this much, that there has been no intemperate discussion in this House upon this question. I know that on Saturday last the remarks of hon. gentlemen were studiously moderate on both sides. There were no immoderate statements made here which could excite gentlemen in any other place, or provoke any retaliatory expressions. That such expressions have been made in other places is very unfortunate, but that should not influence our action in the slightest degree. I think we should approach this question carefully, and it is a matter for the government seriously to consider whether this whole matter should not lie over till another session, and then we could take it up. What is the need for hurry?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh, we will stay here and finish it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot say that I speak for my hon. friend who has made this motion, but I conceive that there is no public interest which would be imperilled if the propositions of my hon. friend and the government with regard to acquiring this railway and buying rolling stock were allowed to lie over till next session, and my hon. friends might take advantage of the intervening period to prepare a far better measure. Although I have not a great amount of confidence in my hon. friends as a ministry, I think if they take time they may be able to submit a measure which will meet the approval of all parties. My hon. friend, the leader of the House, has great experience in public affairs, and is always noted for the care with which he deals with public matters, and I think we might appeal to him for a reasonable amount of delay in order that this matter might be brought before the House in a proper form, and if it were still desirable that the Intercolonial Railway should get into Montreal, they might be able to initiate a scheme which would meet with the approval of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Would the hon. gentleman explain to the House whether he means the delay of the committee or the appropriation for the road?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am referring to the delay of the appropriation for the road. I cannot speak for my hon. friend from Richmond, but if that delay were given, I think there would be probably no necessity for holding this parliament together for a month or more for the purpose of making an inquiry at the present time. I hope hon. gentlemen have fairly understood my remarks. I am not suggesting that my hon. friend should drop his motion by any means, for I am quite agreed with him that if parliament is asked to pledge itself to a partnership with the Drummond County Railway and vote certain sums of money for the purpose of consummating that partnership, it is necessary for us, in view of the difference in information submitted to the House of Commons and to this House, and in view of the agitation all over Canada with regard to the merits of the question, and the fact that it has not been well considered, the government not having taken the time necessary for the consideration of the matter this year—whether under all the circumstances it would not be necessary and better in the public interest that these contentious votes should be allowed to drop for the present, and if they are brought up another session and an inquiry is made, it can be undertaken at the beginning of the session, when they could take time to consider it. I am, therefore, favourable to the appointment of a committee. I do not see how any other step can be taken by this House, unless it be that the action of the government which necessitates the appointment of that committee would be such as would warrant us in letting it stand for the present.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (136) "An Act further to amend the Civil Service Superannuation Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a bill authorizing the government to pay any officials, who have been dismissed from the service, what they have deposited with interest. I move the second reading of the bill presently.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I oppose any suspension of the rules in regard to any measure the government may bring down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I move that the bill be read the second time at the next sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

THE CATARACT POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved that the petitioners for the passage of Bill (124) intituled "An Act to incorporate the Cataract Power Company," be permitted to withdraw the said bill. He said:—It is not any fault of the promoters or petitioners for this bill that the bill has not been reported to the House. It has been postponed from time to time and for want of a quorum it could not be proceeded with. The only opportunity they have to apply to the House of Commons to have the money refunded, which has not been expended on the bill, depends on our allowing the bill to be withdrawn.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was withdrawn.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The order of the day being called,

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Miller, that a special committee of the Senate be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidies granted by the parliament of Canada to the Drummond County Railway Company, in the province of Quebec; the present financial position of the said company, its liabilities of every description, whether matured or accruing; the condition and classification of the said railway, as well as its equipment, and also, all other matters and things relating to the said subjects or any of them, as well as all other matters and things relating to the said railway; with power to send for papers, persons and records, and to report from time to time, and that the said committee consist of the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Messrs. Ferguson, Power, Scott, Macdonald (P.E.I.), McInnes (New Westminster), De Boucherville, Primrose, Cox, Clemow, Landry, Prowse, Wood, Thibaudeau (de la Vallière), and the mover.

Hon. Mr. POWER said: I do not propose to make a speech on this subject. I propose simply to make a few observations, of, I hope, a very moderate character. What is the position of the Senate at the present time? No doubt the relations at present between the Senate and House of Commons are somewhat strained. It may be that language has been used in both places which was a little stronger or warmer than could have been desired. This subject is one which should be discussed in the calmest and best tempered way. The Senate should not desire to do anything which would place it in a false position before the country, and I think that where political action is governed in any degree by temper or passion, mistakes are very likely to be made. I regret, consequently, that there has been to-day a certain exhibition of something other than calm and deliberate argument and consideration of the question before us. There was a bill before the Senate which had passed the other House. That bill contains a portion of the government policy with respect to railway extension in this country. It set out an agreement for doing part of the work which the government thought ought to be done. The bill with respect to the other portion of the government policy is not yet before this House. At first blush, does it not seem that the government of the country, who are responsible to the people, are the parties whose policy in connection with the expenditure of the finances of the country should govern, and above all, when that policy is endorsed by a large majority of the other chamber, does it not seem that that matter was one which was peculiarly for the government, and for the other House of parliament? However, I am not going to insist on that point, I only mention that en passant. The Senate exercised its undoubted right—I mean its legal right. I think the hon gentleman from Bothwell showed that, according to parliamentary practice, although we might have an absolute right, we were departing from the procedure and functions which govern parliament. Without going into the authority I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that at page 471 Bourinot lays down the general principle. He says:

Since 1870 no attempt has been made in the Senate to throw out a tax or money bill. The principle appears to be well uuderstood and acknowledged on all sides that the upper chamber has no right to make any material amendment in such a bill but should confine itself to mere verbal or literal corrections. Without abandoning their abstract claim to reject a money or tax bill, when they feel they are warranted by the public necessities in resorting to so extreme and hazardous a measure. The senators are now practically guided by the same principle which obtains with the House of Lords and acquiesce in all those measures of taxation and supply which the majority in the House of Commons have sent up to them for their assent as a co-ordinate branch of the legislature. The Commons, on the other hand, acknowledge the constitutional right of the Senate to be consulted on all matters of public quality.

Then at page 591 I find the following language, and this was referred to by the hon. gentleman from Bothwell :

In the speech with which the Governor General opens and closes every session of parliament he recognizes the constitutional privileges of the House of Commons with respect to the estimates and supply ; for he addresses its members only with respect to these matters.

Then he goes on to state that the Supply Bill can only be presented for the assent of the sovereign by the Speaker of the House of Commons. On the following page you find the same principle laid down, and all our reading is to the same effect, that the House of Commons is the chamber which has to deal with money matters. However, we acted on our strict legal right, although we are not acting according to the practice under the British constitution, and threw out this bill. What is the result? That this measure, which would have obliged the country to pay a certain rental for 99 years, is not operative. There is an end to that agreement, and that agreement cannot become law until it has received the assent of this House. The agreement itself contains that provision, and if the Senate is not satisfied next session, or the year after, that the measure is not one which should pass, the Senate can prevent it from passing. It cannot become law without being submitted to us. As I hav· said, if there are objectionable features in the bill—I did not myself observe any of any consequence—if these are not removed we have it always in our power to prevent that measure becoming law. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell was right also in contending that, as we had thrown out the bill, there was nothing before us to justify the appointment of the committee. According to strict practice there should have been some formal charge stated in the House, but even though, as in the present case, the charges which are made by persons who do not pledge their standing or their veracity to the truth of these charges, still, as these charges have been made, and as suspicion has to a certain extent, I presume, been sowed in the public mind, it is necessary, in the interests of the persons who govern the country and of those who are connected with the Drummond County Railway, that there should be an inquiry. I have not heard any dissent from that position in this House. Then the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), recognizes the fact that the inquiry was necessary, but took the ground that that inquiry should more properly take place in the other chamber. I think that, strictly speaking, the hon. gentleman is right, but I do not think he went so far as to state positively his opinion that there should not be an inquiry by this House. The hon. leader of the government assented most readily and cheerfully to the proposition that there should be an inquiry, and he urged that that inquiry should be of the most thorough character. No one has objected to an inquiry : we are all agreed upon that point. As I have said, the hon. gentleman from Bothwell took the ground that there should be an inquiry in the House of Commons. I think, myself, that probably that is the more proper place—in fact, I am satisfied it is, but if it was apparent that no inquiry was to be made by the House of Commons, then the Senate would not only be justified, but it would be the duty of the Senate to make an inquiry, and if the House of Commons were not prepared to make the inquiry, we should not be going beyond our duty in doing it. Such inquiries have been made in the Senate. I cannot say that the result has always been most satisfactory, looked at from the public point of view, not a party point of view. There was a case given by the Secretary of State before one o'clock. As I say, we have all agreed that there should be an inquiry, and a thorough inquiry, and the only question which was to be considered was when that inquiry should be made. On Saturday last the sentiment of this House, as far as I could gather, was that the inquiry had better be postponed until next session. The bill could not pass without our concurrence ; we would have ample time at our disposition. The inquiry could be made without any inconvenience to the members of this House or of the other House, while if the inquiry is to take place now, it means just this, that when the usual business of parliament is about at an end, we begin an inquiry which may extend very possibly over six weeks or two months, and the members of both Houses are to be kept here attending to this work. I had hoped myself, as I suppose other hon. gentlemen had, to spend the months of July and August at home, and naturally I feel somewhat disappointed that that is not to be the case, but one has to accept the situation and suffer for his country. I have this feeling that, as regards this House, if a certain number of Liberals are suffering for their country, a much larger number of Conservatives have to suffer with them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a consolation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is, that we should have companions in misery. As I say, the consensus of opinion on Saturday appeared to be that, as a matter of convenience, in fact in every way, it was more desirable that this inquiry should be postponed until next session. Sunday intervened, and Sunday is a day when one would suppose the sentiment of love to our fellows would be strengthened and increased, and a peaceful sentiment would be much stronger in the minds of hon. gentlemen than it was on Saturday when the discussion had been going on, but it is regrettable to state that, after passing over the Sunday, hon. gentlemen came here on Monday morning with sentiments much more bellicose than on Saturday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Moral: do not read Grit papers.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. leader of the opposition has, to a certain extent, shown that it would have been better for him to have attended to his prayers yesterday than to have read the papers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is what we find. What are the reasons for this change. Something was said about an item which appeared in the estimates, but that item was in the estimates on Saturday. It was known that that item was to be in the estimates on Saturday as well as to-day, so it is not the appearance of that item of $157,500 which has made the change. As far as I could gather from the speech made by the hon. leader of the opposition, the reasons for the change were two: one that the hon. Minister of Railways had said something in another place who indicated an intention on the part of the House of Commons to persist in putting this item in the estimates. That was about the substance of it; another reason which operated most with the hon. gentleman was an article which he read from the Toronto Globe. It strikes me that that was not a sufficient reason for such a body as the Senate changing its opinion on an important question. The Globe, as every hon. gentleman knows, has, as far as my recollection extends, never been friendly to the Senate, and has, in fact, never failed to take every reasonable opportunity of making an attack on the Senate. The Globe is taking its old policy. In 1878 I felt myself called upon to write two letters to the Globe in reply to attacks on the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And very able letters they were too.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am glad my hon. friend appreciated them. I felt it was my duty to do it, but to-day I do not think it is my duty to take notice of its utterances, because the Globe is something like Ephraim, "joined to its idols" and it is just as well to let it be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Hon. George Brown made the most powerful speeches in favour of an appointed Senate, I know my hon. friend opposite took a different view.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I was in favour of an elective instead of an appointed Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is another circumstance, the Globe does not claim to be the organ of the government. The Globe has said on several occasions that it is not the organ of the Liberal party, and, to say the least, it is not at all a dignified proceeding on the part of this House to be governed in its actions, on a solemn occasion like this, by what happens to appear in a newspaper belonging to the other party. I cannot conceive, if a great constitutional difficulty arose between the House of Lords and the House of Commons, the leaders in the House of Lords basing their proposed action upon a question of this kind upon what had appeared in the newspapers of the day before or two days before. We ought to do what we think on the whole is right, and follow the course which we believe to be convenient without regard to what is said in other places, or what is written in party newspapers. Anything that has been said in the Globe or the Montreal Herald—although I did not think there was anything out of the way in what the Herald said—anything that may have been stated in the newspapers or in another place does not change the position. The position is exactly the same to-day as it was on Saturday; consequently, although I presume the decision of the majority is final, I regret that that decision should have been arrived at, but anything I could say would not change that decision. It is only right to put the thing as a matter of business, and point out why, as a matter of opinion, we would have done better to have adhered to the conclusions at which the House had apparently arrived on Saturday. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield held out the olive branch and felt that possibly even yet if the government would consent to withdraw the item in the estimates which concerned the extension of the Intercolonial Railway, the Senate might consent to postpone the committee until next session. Hon. gentlemen who are so vigorous and resolute in defending the rights and privileges of this House must expect that the other House will be pretty resolute in defending the privileges of that House. We have no right to expect it, and this House would be going altogether out of its constitutional position if it undertook to dictate to the House of Commons what items should be put in the estimates. If there was any item in the estimates which interfered directly with the rights and privileges of this House, it would be a different thing. For instance if the House of Commons struck out the provision for the indemnity of senators from the Supply Bill, then the Senate might have some ground for undertaking to give advice as to what was to be in the Supply Bill, but we have no right whatever to undertake to tell the representatives of the people what items they are to put in the Supply Bill. When the Supply Bill comes up here, then it will be our right to discuss it and if we think fit, reject it; but I do not think that we have any right whatever at this stage to persist, or to undertake to dictate to the other chamber and to the government what items are to be in the Supply Bill. I can only add that, as this investigation is to take place, and it apparently is to take place forthwith, I trust, as was stated by the hon. leader of this House, that the investigation shall be of the most thorough and searching character. I heard a rumour to-day, which I trust is not well founded, that an hon. gentleman who is now a member of this House and who would very probably be an important witness before this committee, is about taking ship for Europe, so that it will be necessary for this committee to move very rapidly when it is appointed and to see that no one who would be in a position to give important evidence gets out of the jurisdiction of the Speaker's warrant. I have nothing further to say on the matter.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wish to take exception both to the words which were used and to the manner of using those words of the hon. Secretary of State. The hon. leader of the opposition admonished him, so to speak, not to get into a passion, as he was discussing these matters, but that admonition seemed to fall on dull ears in a measure, because I did not observe any very marked change in the method of the address of the hon. Secretary of State. At first I could scarcely believe that I had heard the hon. gentleman correctly, until I had asked the question of some of my fellow senators who were opposite him, and therefore in a position to hear more correctly than I, that he had characterized this committee as a fishing committee, and that the investigation which they would hold would in all human probability be a purely political investigation. Now, I wish on my own behalf, personally, to repudiate utterly either and both of these charges, and I think that I may very fairly take upon me to repudiate them also on behalf of my colleagues, who have been named to act on this committee. After all, there was a certain appropriateness in the simile which the hon. Secretary of State used in referring to this committee. He called them a fishing committee. I am something of a fisherman myself; I have spent some happy hours fishing, and I have realized an experience which I think is very common to fishermen, and that is that they do not always know the manner of fish that they are going to take when they let their lines down. Some of them may be the choicest fish of the water: others of them may be like Pharaoh's lean kine, "evil, exceedingly evil." It was appropriate for the Secretary of State to characterize the members of this committee as a fishing committee, because, if my opinion is worth anything, I gather very decidedly that there is a strong consensus of opinion throughout the Dominion of Canada that this transaction is something of a fishy transaction—that is from what has been presented. I speak now without any personal feeling whatever, but from what I have seen in the newspapers and heard, and apart from any political bias, this transaction might, without any great unrighteousness, be characterized as a fishy transaction. Apart from that altogether, I think the style and the language of the hon. Secretary of State were very far, in my estimation at least, beneath the plane of a person occupying the high and responsible and honourable position of Secretary of State for the Dominion of Canada. Whilst he was speaking, and under the admonition of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I could not but call to mind an old classic which I repeated to myself, "and have celestial minds such anger." It appears so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Terrestrial.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I do not know if that was low enough, but I cannot understand the need for the anger. The hon. gentleman professes, as do his colleagues, that they are perfectly willing to have this investigation go on at once and sift it to the bottom, and yet witness the style of the Secretary of State in addressing the Senate this morning. He was so angry that his words rolled together. I have this much to say in regard to the matter; I wish on my own behalf decidedly and most emphatically to repudiate the charges of the Secretary of State, as I was appointed on this committee without any desire of my own and without any knowledge of it. I wish to state that any business ability I may have, or any mental power I may possess, is perfectly at the service of my country in this matter, irrespective of political bias or influence in any degree whatever. I shall not be influenced in that way in regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) takes the position, and takes it very strongly, that the policy of the government should govern, supported as it is by a large majority in the other chamber. If the hon. gentleman can make me well assured of the fact that that large majority were perfectly unanimous in support of this measure, then I could see some force in this argument, but I am constrained to believe that there was very far from being unanimity amongst those who support the government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The vote on this particular question was about two to one.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I am aware of that. Can not the hon. gentleman imagine a man voting with his party and against his own conviction?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some Conservatives voted for it too.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I suppose some Conservatives are no better than Liberals. I absolutely demur to the position taken by the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Power), that it is the duty of the Senate to pass bills coming up to this honourable House from the lower chamber, making provision for an expenditure of money, even though they may most conscientiously disapprove of the provisions they contain. The quotations given this morning by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, I think clearly demonstrated that, and it was just a case of May and Bourinot against the authorities on the government side of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But I cited Bourinot.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I do not think the arguments which the hon. gentleman cited from Bourinot had the cogency of those cited by my hon. friend from Marshfield. He takes the position also that it is unbecoming and unsuitable, ultra vires in fact, for this House to dictate to the House of Commons what items are to be in the Supply Bill. Does not the hon. gentleman recognize a difference between the position I have described in this House of bills coming to the Senate with money appropriations in them, and the position which he talks of when he says we dictate to the House of Commons what items are in the Supply Bill? To my mind, there is a great difference. I have become possessed of some information contained in a telegram which I desire to submit to this House for their information. Some hon. gentlemen may not be aware of the fact which this telegram states. It is a telegram which may be considered, in a certain sense, official as coming to one of our local papers. It is to the Courier du Canada. It is a special from St. Hyacinthe, and is as follows:

At 10 o'clock this morning fire broke out in the office of the Drummond County Railway. All the inside of the office has been destroyed and also several account books the property of Mr. Fee; loss under $1,500.

This, hon. gentlemen, is purely an accident, but none the less regrettable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. COX—It appears to me neither necessary nor desirable to prolong the discussion. So far as I understand the feeling of this House, all are agreed as to the desirability of proceeding at once with the investigation, and personally I should like to see it proceeded with at once.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (140) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts."

(In the Committee).

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When this bill was read the second time, it was understood in the House that an opportunity would be allowed my hon. friend, the leader of the Senate, to consider the suggestion to institute an inquiry into the conduct of Judge Prendergast. Perhaps my hon. friend is in a position to make a statement regarding it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The early adjournment of the House on Saturday enabled me to look into the matter and into the various points suggested during the discussion. The desire of my hon. friend was that steps should be taken under the Revised Statute, chapter 138, section 2, for bringing this matter before the Governor in Council with a view to the removal of the judge for the reasons mentioned. The first thing that I looked into was whether the case as stated comes within that authority, and I am not prepared to say that it does. I am not prepared to say that the statute embraces offences committed before the party was made a judge—that the purpose of it is not confined to cases where the misbehaviour—that is the word in the statute, "misbehaviour"—took place after the judge's appointment. If that is the proper construction—if the statute does not apply to an offence committed before the appointment, then the course would be an address from the two Houses to the Governor General, asking him to remove the judge. Originally, we all know, the removal of a judge was a matter for the mere discretion of the Crown—that was the law and the practice until the Act of settlement in 1700, which provided that no judge could be removed except on an address of the two Houses. The statute did not limit at all the causes for his removal. The Houses were left to their own sense of what was just and proper and necessary as to the reason why they desired the removal of a judge. Our statute is for the Governor in Council to act without any action on the part of the two Houses. It is quite intelligible why there should be a limited authority where the Governor is acting without an address of the two Houses of parliament, and an unlimited authority where he is acting on the address of the two Houses of parliament In the one case, where he has to act without the action of the two Houses, his authority is limited to certain specified particulars, very wide particulars but still to certain particulars, while in cases for which the proper remedy is an address of the two Houses there is no restriction at all. The effect of that will have to be thoroughly considered. Then, if any further proceedings are taken in this matter, several other things would have to be considered. Of course it is quite clear that action for a judge's removal is not to be taken for every violation of the law which had taken place before the judge's appointment. There are many violations of law which common sense indicates would be quite out of the question as grounds for his removal. He may have assaulted somebody, or published a libel about somebody; he may have bought a lottery ticket, for that is a violation of the law. He may have allowed a nuisance on his property under circumstances which made it a criminal offence to do so; but these would certainly not be grounds for his removal, and where is the line to be drawn? It is very difficult to draw it; it is very difficult to know, when you go back of the appointment, what acts in a man's previous life would have the effect of justifying his removal. In Mr. Todd's book he lays this down as a definition:

> Constitutional usage forbids either House of parliament from entertaining any question which commissioners with the jurisdiction of the court of law should determine, or from instituting investigations into the conduct of the judiciary except in extreme cases of gross misconduct or preversion of the law. That might require the intervention of parliament to obtain the removal of a corrupt or incompetent judge.

These observations are used with reference to the conduct of a judge after his appointment, but of course they apply a fortiori to offences previous to his appointment. I have studied more closely than I did before what the evidence is of the two offences with which the Judge Prendergast is charged. One is testified to by one Berthiaume, and I think, when my hon. friend investigates that case, taking the evidence just as the witness gave it, he will see that it is defective in this respect, it does not say that the promise to help him was in order to induce him to vote. He does not state that. It does not appear from the conversation any reference was made to the election or to voting, and I daresay when my hon. friend observes that, he will see that there is not much to be made on the evidence as it stands now. Then, in the other case, there is the evidence of the cabman Roy that he had been employed during an election for a day in bringing voters to the poll. Of course that is illegal, but whether a single instance of employing a man to bring voters to the poll and paying five dollars is such a serious matter as to cause the removal of a judge is worthy of my hon. friend's further consideration. This matter of paying for bringing voters to the poll has not always been considered an objectionable thing. It was practised by everybody until quite a recent period. I think the first English statute on the subject was in 1854. Until that time it was a perfectly legal thing to do. Then in 1854 it was rendered illegal in some cases but not in others, and it was not until 1883 that in England it was forbidden in all cases. In England it is not called a corrupt act, and by our own Canadian statute it is not called a corrupt act. It is called an illegal or unlawful act. We know it is unfortunately a very common thing, notwithstanding the law. It is not so common as it once was, because it has to be done with a certain amount of secrecy. But still it is very common, as I am afraid we all know. I am afraid there are county court judges, and superior court judges too, who in their political days have been charged with some violation of the political law in this respect as well as in other respects. It does not prevent their being good faithful and true judges.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Would the judge be disqualified if he was proved to have committed the offence?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—From being a judge do you mean?

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—From holding any office under the Crown?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The Manitoba law does not govern us in this matter. I rather think there is some provision in the Manitoba Act. But this is an officer of the Dominion government and appointed by them, and therefore the law of Manitoba does not govern. I am suggesting all these things for further consideration. They occurred to my mind, and I thought they might assist any hon. gentleman to come to a conclusion as to what should be done and as to the proper course to pursue. Most members of this House, probably were politicians and party men before they became senators, and a good many of my friends disclaim being party men now, and I am very glad to accept that disclaimer. In this House we should not be party men, so far as it is possible to be otherwise. But there was a time when we were all party men, if we are not party men now, and I doubt very much whether some of my hon. friends can say that they were not guilty of similar violations, or perhaps they did something in their time which would not be legal now. Perhaps the same thing can be said of ministers of the Crown on both sides. I mention all these things to be considered when we are taking into account how heinous it is for a man to be proved—assuming it is proved—to have been guilty of one act of paying a cabman $5 for a day's work in drawing voters to the polls. Judge Prendergast does not admit that the statement of Roy gives an accurate account of what took place. I am considering the case just as if it were not contradicted. I think it is fair to so regard it, because Judge Prendergast had an opportunity o appearing before the judge and disputing these allegations, but he did not think it necessary to do so. It is quite fair, therefore, to assume that Roy's statements are true. I should be glad if hon. gentlemen would consider what course has been adopted with regard to county court judges who have been known to have taken part in election matters. Take the case of Judge Fitzgerald—he was found guilty, at an election court, of corrupt practice in getting an alien to vote, a man who knew he had no right to vote, and this occurred under the law of Ontario, which expressly declares that an act of that kind is corrupt. That happened two or three years ago, and notwithstanding that he was appointed. I do not say anything against that. Though he was carried away, as many men are in elections, to do things he should not have done, I think he has proved a very good judge, and it would not be right to move that he should be deprived of his office. I would not think of doing so. I believe my hon. friend does not intend to press the objection he made the other day. It would be satisfactory to the House generally to know that if Mr. Prendergast is left on the bench, there is every reason to believe and know that we are leaving there a very able man and a very active judge. The day after he was sworn in, he took his seat in the court and was addressed by two members of the bar on behalf of the bar, both gentlemen who addressed him being prominent Conservatives, and one of the men who addressed him is perhaps the first man in the Manitoba bar. They spoke of his ability, courtesy and integrity, and in fact attributed to him the possession of all the qualifications necessary to make a good judge.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Who were those gentlemen?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Mr. Munson was one, and Mr. Bertrand the other.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Is he a lawyer?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes. And this is the newspaper account published next day of what took place:

His Hon. Judge Prendergast took his seat in the county court for the first time this morning, having been sworn in on Saturday. As the senior member of the bar present in court and on behalf of the bar Mr. Munson, Q.C., stated that he desired to express the great pleasure with which the appointment of his honour had been received, not only by the bar, but by the community at large. It was satisfactory also to think that the position had been filled by a member of the Manitoba bar. The increased jurisdiction in the county court demanded an increased responsibility in the position of a judge. One thing was certain that all suitors alike would receive at the hands of his honour that same courteous treatment that his honour had been noted for when at the bar, and he sincerely hoped he would be spared for many years to fill the new position to which he had been appointed.

Mr. Theo. Bertrand followed in a speech in French in which he stated how glad Mr. Prendergast's friends were to hear of his appointment. He spoke very highly of the known courtesy, integrity and ability of his honour and that there was but one opinion that his honour would make a good judge.

His honour replied to Mr. Munson in English and Mr. Bertrand in French. He thanked them both for their remarks and the kindly expressions they had uttered; he was well aware of the onerous duties of the office of a judge and however unworthy he might be to fill it he would endeavour to do so with satisfaction to the members of the bar and the community at large. He hoped that the pleasant relations which had existed between himself and the other members of the bar while at the bar might be always continued.

Hon Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Bertrand was the candidate who was defeated in the election by Mr. Lauzon.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—This Bertrand, I am told, is a Conservative. It cannot be the same person. The other was a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There are two Mr. Bertrands. The candidate was Mr. S. A. D. Bertrand: the other, Mr. T. O. Bertrand, is an attorney.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is it. The Mr. Bertrand named is, as I have said, a Conservative. I think it fair to add a word or two in regard to the judge's career and qualifications. He is a man of education. He was educated at the Quebec seminary and Laval University, where he graduated in arts and law with high honours. He settled in Manitoba in 1881 and has been there for sixteen years. He has been six times elected to the Manitoba legislature. He was president of the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Manitoba from 1885 to 1896. He was for three successive years elected unanimously as mayor of St. Boniface, and was a member of the provincial Board of Education for six years, until its abolition in 1890; and for the last ten years he has been a member of the Council of the University of Manitoba, which office he still holds. If he is to remain a judge, I am sure it will be a satisfaction to my hon. friend to know that there is every reas n to believe he is an able and cultured man, well known to the people and acceptable to them. I am glad to believe that my hon. friend does not intend to press his objection to the clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am very much pleased to hear my hon. friend say these things about Mr. Prendergast, and read some complimentary things that were said to him and about him on the occasion of his being sworn in. It is gratifying to find that he is not altogether fitted out with a pair of horns, and that there are some who esteem him—at all events that he has friends who esteem him, and that he is not in all respects an unfit man to be appointed to that position. I have listened very carefully to the remarks which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has made, and I think I would not be inclined to agree with him as to the power of the government in dealing with a judge in such a case as this. Under our Act of 1882, the Governor General in Council has very extensive powers, and considering the words "any other cause" in that section, it could be made to apply to such cases as the one we have now under consideration.

Hon Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The words are incapacity or inability to perform his duties properly, on account of old age, ill-health or any other cause.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is a little wider than that, and that the word "incapacity" is scarcely connected with it in the way which my hon. friend thinks it is. However, I am not going to press that matter further that to say this, that while it may be true that that Act only contemplated an investigation into the conduct of a judge after his appointment, while that certainly appears on the face of it to be the meaning and intention of the Act, my hon. friend will not deny, I think, that if the consequences of an illegal act committed before his elevation should come home afterwards by a transaction, such as might be done in this case, or by a trial which might result in his disqualification, which I do not think would strictly legally apply to such an office under the Dominion government, but to an appointment under the Crown as represented by the Governor of Manitoba—but even if he were subject, as he might be should this offence be brought home to him, to fine or imprisonment, after his elevation to the bench, although the offence were committed before it, a very serious case would arise which would probably call for action on the part of the Governor General in Council. It is not necessary that I should again discuss this matter. It has perhaps received all the discussion in this House that it ought to receive. I am still of opinion that the actions of Mr. Prendergast were of a very questionable character, and that it is a very great misfortune for the administration of justice that these things should have been connected with his name just at the very time we may say when he was being elevated to the bench. There is a difference between that case and the case of Judge Fitzgerald. I do not remember very closely all the matters in connection with Judge Fitzgerald, but I think, whatever it was that occurred in his case, it was something that happened very many years ago, and the consequences of a prosecution could not possibly be brought home to him at the time he was appointed to the bench. That is correct at all events as far as the date of the offence. It was an offence that had happened so long ago, if it were one at all, that the man might fairly be held to have lived it down, and as the legal consequences could not be brought home to him, it could not be urged against his appointment. In this case the strong feature about it is that the time had not elapsed which would support a prosecution in bringing the charge home to Judge Prendergast, and the consequences might follow. However, I am not going to object any further to the course which my hon. friend proposes to pursue. He has not, as I understand it, come exactly to the conclusion that the Act does not meet such a case. At all events, he is in a judicial frame of mind upon the subject, and that being so, I am disposed to leave the matter in the hands of my hon. friend with the wish that he may in the future do a little better than he has done in the past. This bill involves an increase of $100 in the salaries of all the judges of Manitoba. The estimates only provide for the $2,400 to each.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is after three years' service.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That is a printer's error. I did not observe it until the matter came here, and it was not observed by my hon. friend who had charge of the bill in the other House. I propose to bring in a short bill to make that $2,400. I would move this as an amendment now, but I think it is a matter which we have no jurisdiction to amend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it is too much.

Hon. Mr FERGUSON—No, I do not think it is.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—No, but I could not justify giving the Manitoba judges $2,500 and the judges of the other provinces $2,400 ; but if I can prevail to make them all $2,500 I would agree to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have always thought, considering the position of our judges and the way they have to live, that their salaries are too small : I am speaking as the salaries simply, and have no reference to Mr. Prendergast.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

PUBLIC SERVICE LOAN BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of bill (148) "An Act to authorize the raising, by way of loan, of certain sums of money for the public service." He said :—The bill now before us authorizes the Governor in Council to raise, by way of loan, the sum of $15,000,000. The necessity for it arises from the fact that the borrowing power is reduced lower to-day than it has been for very many years. In 1888, which was the last occasion when parliament was asked to authorize the Governor in Council to borrow, the amount of the borrowing powers that had then not been exhausted was $26,000,000, and authority was asked at that time to raise, by way of loan, $25,000,000, so that the borrowing power at that time was over $50,000,000. Since that time there have been a number of loans made. In 1888, a loan was made for $21,-500,000 ; in 1892, $18,000,000 ; in 1894, $10,950,000. In addition to that, the Savings Banks deposits increased $5,669,000. So that at present the borrowing power is reduced to $8,000,000. Of course, the Governor in Council taking power to borrow money, it does not follow that the money will be borrowed except as necessity arises.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No trouble about spending it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are outstanding now temporary loans about $5,000,000, and two or three millions of that was outstanding at the time the government assumed office, and the balance of it is due to the present government. Then the capital appropriations in the estimates this year, chiefly for the finishing of the canals, which it was understood were to be completed within the next eighteen months to the fourteen feet, would be $7,154,000, Crow's Nest Pass, $4,300,000. Those were the immediate items the necessities of which required this bill. With this $15,000,-000 it would leave the borrowing powers at the present moment $20,613,000 as the $8,613,000 is the exact amount which the Governor in Council is now authorized to borrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—I move that the bill be read the third time to-morrow. It is not usual to refer money bills to a committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to be postively sure on that point. Are there any money bills not referred to the Committee of the Whole?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no money bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes ; when you introduce the estimates you dispense with all rules, you move that the rules be rescinded for the time being, that course has been adopted by all governments for the reason that the Senate has no power other than to reject, and that extreme step has not been taken or suggested in the past ; but I know of no rule which says that money bills shall not go to Committee of the Whole, because it is there that the discussions can freely take place. We are very loose in discussing questions here. The object of the Committee of the Whole is to enable an interchange of opinion, either in debating or in conversational tone.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You cannot amend the bill. What do you go to committee for?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite true, but that does not prevent discussion with a view to other action, if such be deemed advisable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have never gone into Committee on the Supply Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But this is not the Supply Bill. It is a bill to authorize the borrowing of $15,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You cannot alter it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is certainly a money bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose it can be discussed at length at the third reading, as it contains only one clause.

The motion was agreed to.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of bill (145) "An Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada."

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to call the attention of the government to the first clause. It appears that the manufacturers of iron have been struck hard by the present government in the great reduction of duties upon iron manufactures of all kinds, and they are to be compensated to some extent for the losses which they will sustain, and in order that they may be able to carry on their business it is proposed now to give them a bounty for the manufacture of iron in Canada. It is a pity—and I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact—that they have not made it positive in place of leaving it optional with the government whether they shall be paid or not. It says:

> The Governor in Council may authorize the payment of the following bounties.

and it leaves the manufacturers in doubt as to what course the government will take in regard to these bounties. It is very desirable that they should know for certain before they make arrangements to carry on their business, that they are assured to a certain extent of getting the bounties mentioned in the bill. The way the bill is worded they are not by any means certain of it. They may make large preparations, and the government has the power to withhold any bounties.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wish to reassert the position which I took in regard to this matter the other day, that these proposed bounties do not counterbalance the change in the duties. I read from a paper published in our country that the managers of the Nova Scotia Steel Co. in New Glasgow, to which reference has been made in the House as a very large industry, have concluded to reduce the salaries paid by them ten per cent. That indicates that the managers of the concern, who know what is for its interests and otherwise, regard the operation of this change as prejudicial to them to the extent that they are called upon to reduce the wages ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words used here are the words used upon all occasions. In the Act of 1894 to provide for the payment of bounties on iron and steel manufactures, it says:

> The government may authorize the payment of $2 per ton on all pig iron, &c.

Those are the words that are ordinarily used. They are the parliamentary phrase, I take it, and I think there can be no doubt about it. It would be highly improper to give authority, unless it was intended to exercise the authority, where the Act was specified to define what can be done. To the extent of that, I presume the government will be bound. It would be a departure from well recognized principles if the government were to exercise any discretion at all on that point. There was some discussion in the other chamber as to whether it would apply on iron made for export. I do not know what the conclusion of the House of Commons was, but I recollect there was a debate on that part of it, but the Finance Minister, in moving the resolutions in the other chamber, gave an estimate of the quantity of steel ingots and pig iron that would be manufactured and made now in Canada, and he estimated the amount paid for that would be $45,000. On another class of iron he estimates that the bounty would be $13,500. Of pig iron manufactured from ore, which is the largest quantity, he estimated there would be $175,000 paid, making a total charge on the revenue of $233,500 and you will observe the bill says :

> The said bounties shall be applicable only to steel ingots, puddled iron bars and pig iron made in Canada prior to the 23rd day of April, 1902.

That limits it to five years. In the other Act it was limited to a period between March, 1894, and March, 1899, both days included, a period of five years from the date of commencing operations. This Act follows on that line and proposes that the bounty shall be paid for a period of five years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a marked distinction and difference between the provisions of this bill and that which stands upon the statute-book at the present moment. First, it is an increase of the bounty. Secondly, it provides for the payment of $3 per ton for all pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore, and $2 per ton for that which is manufactured from foreign ore. Under the old law and regulations the bounty could only be paid upon pig iron and ingots manufactured from Canadian ore ; so that it will be seen that the principle is extended to that of foreign ore, allowing the manufacturer of pig iron to import from any foreign country the raw material—that is the ore—manufacture and smelt into pig iron, and then pay him a bounty upon that portion of the pig iron produced from the ore.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the old Act contemplated foreign ingredients—"such other ingredients as are necessary."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes ; but it was confined exclusively to the product of the Canadian mines. I desire the hon. Secretary of State should understand my position. I am not now complaining of the extension of the principle. I know that a difficulty arose under the old regulations in paying the bounty, because the bounty was claimed by the manufacturers when they mixed Nova Scotia with Spanish ores, or other ores which were imported. My own view is to a great extent in accord with the provisions of this Act. Under the old Acts if they mixed ores, which it is necessary to do in order to produce a certain kind and quality of pig iron, the bounty could not be paid. My recollection leads me to this conclusion at the present moment, that we passed an Order in Council—I know I recommended it, but I cannot say positively whether it was passed—allowing the mixture of foreign ores with the Canadian ores, but only paying the bounty proportionate to the amount of pig that was made from the Canadian ore, and that I think should have been the principle adopted. But as my hon. friend and the government do not base the principles involved in this resolution upon the question of protection, I suppose my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will justify it upon the principle of expediency ; perhaps that might be correct from their standpoint, but the principle of paying a bounty upon iron manufactured from foreign ore may not be correct. I cannot understand why it should be restricted to the output of iron furnaces, which is consumed in Canada. As I have read this bill hastily just now, I think they have omitted that clause which appeared in the original bill as presented to parliament. I am glad that in this matter, as in very many others, the hon. gentlemen have changed their opinion. I suppose an open confession is good for the soul. I hope my hon. friend will be enabled to give us a reason why he has changed his opinions from those which he expressed so strongly in 1890 when the proposition was made by the late government to grant bounties. The hon. Secretary of State, then leading the opposition in this House, said in discussing the question :

> It has not proved sufficient. So we enter upon the mad career of paying the manufacturers for making iron in this country taxing people in order that an establishment existing in one province may make money. This bill preposes to again increase it to $2 : not only that but to tie up the hands of parliament, so that this large bounty shall continue to the year 1897.

I could quote half a dozen sentences of that kind, but I do not deem it necessary to do so. I merely wish to call the attention of the House to the expression of opinions but a few years ago of the hon. Secretary of State, and to ask him, for the benefit of those who hold the same opinions that he did, for the reasons why he has changed his opinions expressed so late as 1894. I will not waste the time of the House by quoting from his remarks, but I want to give the opinion of what I may consider high authorities upon the principle of bounties generally. Sir Richard Cartwright, now the leader of the government in the lower House, when the question of bounties came up in 1894, only two or three years ago, opposed the extension of the principle by the late government in language of this character:

> The concluding paragraph here is especially objectionable.

That is the same paragraph that is in this clause, which binds parliament for five years.

> The concluding paragraph here is especially objectionable. Nothing can be more opposed to all sound principles than an attempt to tie the hands of parliament for a period of ten years. For myself I utterly refuse to be bound by it, and I say so expressly for the benefit of those manufacturers that I for one will utterly refuse to be bound by any such proposition. I do not recognize the authority of this parliament to tie the hands of our successors for any definite term of years.

Then my hon. friend who sits before me just now (Mr. Mills) had very strong principles upon economic questions of this kind, and he gave utterance to the following language:

> It seems to me that the government in making this proposition has confused two things that are wholly different. The government is entering into a contract from which the public receive some benefit or advantage in return for some service rendered, and may ask parliament to make a contract or engagement that will be binding for a certain period of time, but as a matter of policy where there is no contract between the government and the party, where there is no service rendered by the party to the state for which a consideration is being given, the government have no power and this parliament has no authority whatever to fix a time. There is nothing better settled than that one parliament cannot bind its successors, nor make a matter of public policy an engagement that will pledge the public faith. I could in half an hour turn up a dozen cases in which ministers in England have expressly laid it down that such an experiment to pledge parliament is a most unconstitutional proceeding.

This is so well put from the hon. gentleman's standpoint that I will, even at the risk of being a little tedious, read a little more:

> You have no authority whatever to put the party in the position of saying, "The public faith is pledged to us." No rule is better settled than that one parliament cannot bind another parliament, or make any engagement which will interfere with its authority. Here is a question of public policy. It is open to every man in this country to invest his money in whatever he pleases. It may be a farming operation, or it may be a manufacturing operation; but you cannot tie the hands of parliament by enabling him to say, "I am carrying on a private business in milling or manufacturing, and you cannot alter your legislation, because it will be a breach of faith with one in carrying on important private business." The whole thing is monstrous, and I hope the government will not persist in a declaration of that sort. There is no contract between those parties and the government, there is no service being rendered; and that being so, I hope the hon. minister will agree to abandon the proposition.

I should like to ask my hon. friend if he has changed his opinion upon these questions?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then he may make another quotation from Holy Writ to prove that expediency is justifiable. The justification in this case would be that there are different people governing the country. I congratulate the country on the advance which the Liberal party are rapidly making.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Advancé—that is Irish.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman would let me finish my sentence, it might not be Irish. I was going to say I congratulate the government on the advance which they are rapidly making to the principles and policy of those whom they denounced so vehemently a year or two ago, in this as in other matters. I hope they will go on advancing, reforming and improving. It may be, however—and perhaps there is some force in what the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has said—that this government in this proposition are only pledging in part, for the five years, during the existing of parliament, and therefore they are not inconsistent in the course they have pursued as indicated by the extracts which I have read. That kind of sophistry I have no doubt may possibly be indulged in; I do not think it was indulged in by my hon. friend from Bothwell. But if the principle is applicable to, and if it is enforced in its application to a parliament, it has just as much application to a session of a parliament, because there is no guarantee—although I know my hon. friends expect it—that they will remain in power for five years, nor is there any guarantee that there may not be a change in the opinions of the House of Commons and the Senate in reference to bounties, before the five years expire. But under the conditions of this law they are morally bound to carry out the guarantee which is given to the investors of money for five years from the passage of this Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman contend that every government now, supposing there were a change of government, would be bound to give effect to that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say they would be morally bound. I do not say that an incoming government might not repeal it: they have full power to repeal it, and the parliament would have full power to repeal it, but I say it would be a gross injustice to men who have invested their money in that enterprise, for any parliament or class of politicians to change the law until the expiration of that time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing it became clear that it was for the public interest to make a change, does the hon. gentleman say that contracts of that sort, entered into by governments relating solely to public policy, and not to the service to be performed by the other party, are binding upon the country, and that they should submit?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think the hon. gentleman did.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say that if it was found in the interest of public policy and in the interest of the country, that this clause should be repealed two years hence, after men had invested a large sum of money in it, parliament would not only be justified, but equitably they would be bound to indemnify those who had invested money under the law. I consider that to be a moral and equitable obligation devolving upon the government. I can understand this proposition very well coming within that category, because, under the law as it stands, it is only two dollars that is given for the production of iron, but this goes further, and must therefore injure the investors of money in this enterprise to a greater extent. It gives them three dollars, and it gives them two dollars for the production of an article for which, under the old law, they could not receive one cent. So that this does not stand in the position of a total repeal. I do not propose to discuss constitutional questions, but I know that to common sense men, who have any regard for the rights of investors of money under a promise of the government, they should be indemnified if such promise be violated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing the parliament should declare that a certain rate of taxation should exist for five years, and parties invest under that, would a new government not be morally bound to adhere to that rate of taxation?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it is worth while discussing suppositious questions of that kind. There is no tariff ever placed on the statute-book of which I have any knowledge—perhaps my hon. friend can correct me if I am wrong—in which there has been any declaration in the clauses continuing a tax of that kind any length of time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where is the difference?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is this difference: when a tax is placed upon the statute-book every one knows that that is subject to a change at any moment, and if an investor puts money in any enterprise, or buys goods with that tariff upon the statute-book, he knows he runs the risk at the next session of Parliament of having that tax raised or decreased, but in this case he enters into an arrangement in which he invests his money with the positive declaration on the part of parliament that that shall continue for five years. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. It says it shall continue for five years, and if my hon. friend can see no distinction between the two——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing it said one hundred years?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman may suppose until doomsday. I do not propose answering all his suppositions. I will let him put his case as he pleases when he rises. I want to hear my hon. friend justify the vote he is about giving, because if he acquiesces in it without a vote being taken, he is just as responsible as if he voted for it. It might be well to call for a vote and place the hon. gentleman in the position of voting against the government. I congratulate my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, on his conversion and hope he will continue to improve, and he will be a good politician by and by.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no conversion, I hold the same views now as then, only we are under artificial conditions created by the late government. It should not require any explanation. We are taking away from the manufacturers a large amount of protection. The protection they previously had was four dollars. They had two dollars a ton bounty. We are cutting it down to a dollar and a half and two dollars.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Apply that principle to the proposition of my hon. friend from Bothwell.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are in this position: under Acts of parliament which have been revived from year to year, industries have sprung up, and large bodies of men have interests invested; many claim that we should say to the eight or ten thousand people whose interests are involved: "You had no right to be in this business, you should have gone into some other."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In that event we would be liable to be condemned even by our own friends. The hon. gentleman says there was an assurance given to capitalists to go into this industry. Acts of parliament were passed upon it. We have to recognize that. That is just one of the fearful effects of protection, that once you fasten it on the country there is no getting away from it. When Sir Robert Peel, in 1841, turned from one side to the other, being a protectionist to a free trader, did he sweep away the tariff at once? He did nothing of the kind. He took many years to do it. We have in this House taken away, on the average, about one dollar of the protection they had. Supposing we had done more, would not the hon. gentleman be the first one—and properly so—to condemn the government for not recognizing a condition of things for which we were not responsible? Our views are unchanged. If we were creating this for the first time, then we would be open to the censure and ridicule the hon. gentleman proposes to heap upon us. But we certainly would be liable to severe censure if we refused to recognize the conditions under which those industries were brought into existence, and supported by the people of the country for so many years. If we entirely ignored that and proposed to abolish all protection, I think we would be liable to severe condemnation. There is no man in this country who would be so unfair, no matter how extreme a view he might take of the folly of protection, as to reject this proposition. I think we would not be justified in sweeping away industries which have grown up, and it is for that reason the government feel bound to bring in the bill now before us. We have modified it, and the world knows our views. Men have to rearrange their business and to recognize that a period is coming when protection, we hope, will be swept away. It will take a long time to do it. We cannot do it by a single Act of parliament. It would be monstrous if we were to do it. My views are not changed on the subject, but I have to recognize present conditions and act accordingly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is just this difference between the arguments—if I may so term them—of my hon. friend and the facts. He refers to Sir Robert Peel. Sir Robert Peel reduced the duties until they were wiped out, but my hon. friend has increased the duties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have reduced the customs duties.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have done that which you condemned vehemently when in opposition; you have reduced the customs duty, but you more than compensate by the bounty duty, which you said was robbery of the farmers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say you have reduced the customs duty, but you have more than compensated the manufacturers by the bounty which you have given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have given them two dollars bounty on pig iron manufactured from foreign ore, on which they received not a cent under the old Act; therefore you have not acted upon the policy of Sir Robert Peel, nor of Mr. Reid who introduced the free trade theory in New South Wales a year or two ago, by gradually reducing duties. There would be some force in the hon. gentleman's arguments if he had continued the bounty and taken a certain amount of that protection from them with the ultimate intention of depriving them of the whole. But what have they done? They have decreased the customs duty, which enables the agricultural implement manufacturer to obtain his raw material cheaper than he did under the old law; but they have not reduced the duty upon the manufactured article, which they said was robbing the farmer, and they have compensated the pig iron manufacturer by increasing the bounty. Now everybody knows that a dollar bounty to the producer is better than a dollar protection.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a less charge on the public.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it a less charge on the public? The argument of my hon. friend who is constantly interrupting me, is this, that you are putting your hand into the pockets of people who do not use iron at all, to keep up this industry. You have extended that principle. I am not finding fault with it: I am only complimenting the hon. gentleman, but I do hope when he rises to make an explanation in the future, he will make it so plain that it is understandable, and so that it may not be considered fallaceous and absurd; or make it in such a manner as to leave the impression on the minds of those who hear him that his hearers know nothing of what he is talking about. I find that my hon. friend proposed, when the late government introduced a bill to continue bounties upon iron that he suggested a bounty upon exports of wheat. Why has he not carried that out? I do not object to it, although he does not now consider it necessary to do it for the benefit of the farmers for whom he expressed so much solicitude when in opposition, and whom he has forgotten since his advent to office.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I am glad the government have agreed to increase the bounty, and in that manner offset, to some extent, the reduction they have made in the duty on imports of those materials. These industries are very important in the maritime provinces, especially the province of Nova Scotia. We all know that there are large numbers of persons engaged in the production of iron and steel at New Glasgow and several other places in that province, and the fact of these persons being engaged in that business puts a large amount of money in circulation. I believe it is asserted, and has been proved, that 80 per cent of the whole amount expended in the production of iron and steel, is expended in labour, and in that way is a benefit to a great number of persons. We find in the section in which this business is carried on that towns which a short time ago were but small villages are increasing rapidly in extent and population, and that the people who live there are in very comfortable circumstances financially, because they have had steady employment and good wages, and it is gratifying to find that the government is keeping up this bounty, enabling the industry to be carried on better than it was before. It is true that, owing to the reduction in duty, the persons employed in these manufactures of iron and steel have given their employés notice that there would be a reduction of 10 per cent made in their wages; it is possible that, after this bill passes, they may not enforce that reduction and that they may still pay the former rate of wages. The fact of this money being circulated in that province, and so many persons being engaged in that manufacture, makes a large and convenient market for the agricultural production of our province, and although many years ago, when the reciprocity treaty was in force, we were able to export very large quantities of our products to the United States, still since that treaty has been abrogated and various industries have sprung up in the neighbouring province, we find there a market which is almost sufficient for the productions of our province, not entirely in Nova Scotia but there has been also a very large portion of our productions marketed in Newfoundland. The mines at Sydney, Cape Breton and other places have a great number of small vessels employed in carrying coal from those mines to our province, where there is no coal. It enables them to get return freights from Prince Edward Island to the mines. When they go back they carry our hay, pork, beef and vegetables of all kinds, and many things that the miners require, preserved fruits, for the production of which there is an establishment in the island. It is of great importance to certain of these industries that they should know in what position the export duties are to stand under this bill. There is a certain kind of iron made, called charcoal iron, for which there is a great demand for export, and which brings a much higher price abroad than it commands in Canada, and it is essential that those people should know whether they are to receive the bounty on exports of that kind of iron. This bill should go further than it does and declare that this bounty should be paid on iron exported as well as on that which is used for consumption in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to give a positive answer to my hon. friend. The clause provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations to carry out the intention of the Act. There is no restriction whatever in the Act, so far as the export goes; nor, from a hasty reading of the Act of 1894, do I find there is any mention of the export. I am not aware whether any premium was put on ore exported.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We never inquired what became of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite unable to say what the policy of the government would be on that subject. It follows simply the same lines as the Act of 1894 did, leaving it to the Governor in Council to make regulations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we may fairly infer, from the reading of this bill, that the bounty is payable on all pig iron manufactured in Canada in the proportions stated. I come to that conclusion from reading the debate in the House of Commons, where I think it was Mr. Foster, who called attention to what he thought were restrictions contained in the original proposition to prevent a bounty being paid upon exports, and Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, said he would consider the question if it were laid over. This bill, I take to be the result of that consultation, because there is no restriction in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No restriction. I notice when the other bill was introduced it did not go to committee. It was read the three times at once. A message was brought from the House of Common the last day and the bill passed through all its stages under a suspension of the rules. It did not go to a committee.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (136) "An Act further to amend the Civil Service Superannuation Act." He said:—This is a very short bill and applies only to persons who have been in the Civil Service and have been dismissed. The object of the bill is to enable the Governor in Council, under a recommendation from the Treasury Board, to pay to parties dismissed from the service the moneys they had paid towards the superannuation fund before the dismissal, and interest thereon not exceeding five per cent per annum. It was felt the government had not power to pay back those moneys unless there was other than a political reason for dismissal. It would be highly unfair that they should be deprived of the money and the interest upon it. This bill is to enable the government to recoup their advances to the superannuation fund.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not fully understand the meaning of the last expression of the hon. gentleman when he said that for purposes other than for political reasons. Are we to understand that if an officer is dismissed for political reasons he is to be deprived of the advantages which would accrue from the passage of this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is to enable the government to repay him his money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend said dismissal for other than political reasons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If a person is dismissed for crime, the practice of the government has been not to repay him the amount of his contribution to the superannuation fund.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am aware of that fact. If an officer is dismissed for misbehaviour he would not be entitled to anything, but the reason I asked for information was from the expression of the hon. gentleman when he said it was in cases of dismissals for other than political reasons, that they wanted the power to repay them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. It is quite the reverse.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not the word "dismissed" a rather harsh term under the circumstances? Is it proposed, that if an officer is removed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, which provides for cases where an office is abolished for the purpose of effecting efficiency and economy in the service that this Act is to apply?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not apply; he would not be entitled to receive the money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I cannot understand what the word "dismissed" means? What are to be the reasons for dismissal? If a man is to be dismissed for fraud, he should receive no benefit. That is quite right. If he is to be dismissed because of the abolition of his office, what then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He gets his superannuation, or the amount that he has advanced, repaid with five per cent interest. The law provides for that. This bill does apply in cases of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. There is no such provision in the law. There is no provision in the law for paying an officer who is dismissed. If he is removed to effect efficiency in the service, or on account of the abolition of office, before he has served the time which justifies the putting him on the superannuation list, he can be superannuated, not otherwise. I understand the object of the government is this, that where they are removing so many officers who do not come within the meaning of the superannuation law, that they shall be entitled to be paid back a certain amount of money from the superannuation fund. The law makes this provision, that if it is necessary for the purpose of effecting a saving, promoting the efficiency of the service, to remove a man who is totally unfit for the position, though he may not have served the full term of years, you can add to the number of years which he has served, and that entitled him to superannuation. That is provided for. The practice has been, although there is no law for it, that if an officer is serving the country and you want to abolish the office and he is not entitled to superannuation, you can give him a gratuity; as a rule gratuities are recommended to parliament. This bill, as I understand it, is to give power to the government, without the intervention of parliament, to give a gratuity to a man whom they have dismissed or removed from office. Would it not be better if you said "any person dismissed or removed" you might remove a man for certain causes, which does not come within the meaning of the Act, and then you take power to grant the gratuity. I do not like the word "dismissed."

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 11 of the Civil Service Superannuation Act says that if any person to whom this Act applies is removed from office in consequence of the abolition of the office for the purpose of improving the organization of the department to which he belongs, or is removed or retired from office to promote efficiency or economy in the public service, the Governor in Council may grant him such a gratuity as will fairly compensate him. The man who is dismissed for any other reason is not entitled apparently to any allowance, and this bill empowers the government to repay the amount contributed under the superannuation fund, with interest, to persons dismissed for offensive partisanship. I presume that is the English of it. If the hon. gentleman does not think such a payment should be made, we should throw out the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the first place, I do not think any one should be dismissed for the cause the hon. gentleman mentioned, unless it is a case of a very aggravated character. You had better put in the words "dismissed for partisan conduct": then the public would understand what it means.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Would not those parties be entitled to their superannuation allowance although they were dismissed? Those persons whom it is proposed to benefit under this bill have not committed any fraud, so far as we know. They are persons, I believe, who have taken an active part in the elections and voted for the government which was defeated at the polls. Now, it is within my recollection, at the time responsible government was granted to the provinces, that this question came up in the legislatures of the different provinces—at any rate in some of them—as to whether the new government coming in should have the right which they claim of dismissing those who were office holders under the former government because they had voted against the Reform government which came in. If my memory is right, a despatch was received from the hon. Secretary of State setting forth that, as these people had committed no offence known to the law, having only voted in favour of the government they were serving, as it was their duty to do, that therefore they should not be dismissed. Now, that principle is being reversed, and because people have voted for the government which was defeated at the polls, they are dismissed from office.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should make such a statement. There has not been a single instance given of a man being dismissed for simply voting.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—There are instances—not a single instance, but several within my own knowledge and recollection and I can name the parties here if necessary.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You could name them by dozens if it was necessary.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I could name dozens from common report, but I could name some of my own knowledge.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—We will hear of them next session probably.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have heard enough of them this session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—If there was no other charge against them but that of being active partisans, and if they were entitled to their superannuation under the Superannuation Act, why should they now be sent off and merely refunded the money they had paid into that fund which should entitle them to certain moneys for life? I do not see that there is any justice or fair play in taking that course. If they were entitled, before losing office, to superannuation then they should receive it.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—The bill repeals no part of the existing law. It takes away from no one any right which he has now. But it is found in the cases of some of those persons dismissed for political partizanship that the minister did not feel at liberty to say that they should have the superannuation allowance, and that was all that the present law provided for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You could not, under the present law, grant the superannuation allowance unless the party had served ten years.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am speaking of those who, if the Governor in Council chose, would be entitled to superannuation. The minister does not think, under the circumstances, that the dismissed officials should get that advantage, but is willing that they should be repaid what they contributed to the superannuation fund, with interest. We could not do that under the law as it stands now, so we ask this power in order to do something for the men to whom I have referred. With regard to persons having been dismissed merely for voting, that was never intended. No minister ever intended to dismiss any one for merely voting. If it has been done, it was done contrary to our policy and intention.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The leader of the government has informed us what the government do not intend to do, but will he inform us what the government intend to do in the case of employés of over ten years standing? Take the case of a foreman, or a lockmaster, who had been contributing to the superannuation fund for twenty-nine years; he and others in a similar position on the canals have been dismissed. Since that date, also, the collector on the same canal has been dismissed. Now, those gentlemen have not been political partizans—have not taken part in elections further than voting. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) says that not one official has been dismissed for simply voting; what action do the government intend to take in cases of that kind? Do they intend to pay those men the amount they are entitled to under the Superannuation Act, or do they intend to take advantage of this measure to refund them simply what they have paid into the superannuation fund with interest at five per cent?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—They have committed no offence against the law.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I have merely stated the general policy adopted, and the general intention of the government with regard to these matters.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The government have stated what they did not intend to do in certain cases. I am asking what they intend to do in special cases such as I have mentioned. I am sure the House would like clearly to have that information before them before adopting this bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend any information on that point beyond what he has.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—In case any one of those parties is dissatisfied and declines to take the money which he has paid into the superannuation fund, with interest on it, and desires to sue the government, are the government willing to allow an opportunity of testing the matter in the courts?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I do not think there is anything to contest in the courts. The statute does not give an absolute right to the superannuation allowance. It only gives power to the Governor in Council to grant it, but it is generally granted, under ordinary circumstances, as a matter of course, not because the party is intitled to it as a matter of law, but because the Governor in Council, exercising the power he has, chooses to give the superannuation allowance.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—But surely there is some principle on which the government act. If the man has committed no fault or offence, surely no government would deny him the right that the law gives? In that case the government could not possibly deny him the right, and I think he would be entitled to have the matter fairly tested to see if there has been any just or sufficient cause for his dismissal. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Mr. Landry), for instance, has cited several cases where people had been dismissed who had not even voted, merely on the complaint of Mr. Choquette, or a member of the Local House. If that is to be the case, we do not know where this matter will stop. We know that one of the officials of this House, the door keeper, demanded the dismissal of the deputy ministers. If that principle is going to prevail, what is to be done? Surely if the government take that course they ought to have some consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister of Justice is quite right. There is no power given to the government. While superannuation is permissive, the rule has been always to grant it unless there has been cause not to do it. If a man has not behaved himself and the government dismiss him, the power is given to the Governor in Council to reduce the number of years on which the superannuation should be made. I can scarcely conceive it possible, in the cases stated by the hon. gentleman from Argenteuil (Mr. Owens), that superannuation should be withheld from that lockmaster. There is no crime charged against the man. Unfortunately for himself and his family, he happened to be a Conservative, but we are assured that he was not a violent partizan. He had served twenty-nine years as lockmaster, and yet he has been dismissed without the slightest consideration. I should think any one having any regard at all for right would place that man upon the superannuation list. There may be this difficulty: he may not be of sufficient age to be superannuated, and then unless they have the plea that it is done for the sake of efficiency and the improvement of the service, the government cannot, under the law, put him on the superannuation list, and hence they should have come to parliament to ask for an appropriation to pay him back his money with interest. Is this man sixty years of age?

Hon. Mr. OWENS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I can understand where the difficulty arises. It is a gross, palpable injustice. I know a case in Manitoba which, to my mind, is exceedingly hard: that of a man with a family of seven or eight children. Because he went into a political meeting at the local elections and defended himself against a charge of disloyalty, he is denounced by the present Attorney General of Manitoba and the gentleman who represents that constituency as a violent partisan, and has been turned out on the world. Those of his religious creed had been attacked as disloyal, and when his name was mentioned he rose in defence of himself as being of that creed, and gave as a proof of his loyalty that he went to Manitoba with Lord Wolseley to assist in putting down the rebellion, and was in the service of the government for a long time, he was dismissed as a violent partizan. He used to represent a constituency in Manitoba for several years in the local legislature. He was a strong politician, I suppose. He was accused of having left his office as sub-collector of customs to attend political meetings, and put the United States collector in charge of his office during his absence. The United States collector made an affidavit that the statement was absolutely untrue, and that this man had always attended to his own business. That charge having failed, the next charge was that he went to a political meeting, and his own statement is, that he having been attacked, and those belonging to his faith attacked as disloyal, he arose and defended himself. That is his explanation. I have read all the correspondence which has taken place between him and the Controller and can find no other evidence, yet that man is deprived of his office without a single cent gratuity. He is not put on the superannuation list. He cannot be, because he has not been long enough in the office, and he is thrown out on the world with a family of seven or eight children. I intend to bring the matter up next session and ask for papers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What is his name?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He is the sub-collector at Gretna. His name is Tennant. I made the appointment myself. The man is well fitted for the office. He is an educated man who does his work well, and to the satisfaction of the country. I would suggest, in order that there may be more positiveness about this bill, when we go into committee to add a few remarks to make its provisions clear, and not leave it so much to the option of the government of the day to punish officials. It leaves the discretion with them to say whether a dismissed servant should have the full amount, or a certain amount of that which he has contributed to the superannuation fund. This should be so amended as to compel the payment of a certain sum except where dismissed for misconduct.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Another clause should be added to the bill to provide that where persons have been a sufficient time in the Civil Service to entitle them to superannuation, the government should have the power and right to pay them the superannuation to which they were entitled, if they have only been guilty of a political offence.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I think my hon. friend, in making that suggestion as an amendment to the bill, did not remember for the moment what House he was in. The bill affects the revenue and we have no power to amend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I should be inclined to reject the bill altogether.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—That would be against the interest of those persons who have been dismissed. I know that some hard cases have occurred. I feel sorry for them and should be glad to see them remedied.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They can be remedied if the hon. gentleman puts down his foot and says, justice must be done. I cannot conceive it possible, that he is a man of so little influence in the government that he could not do it. Let him prove the sincerity of his sorrow by seeing that justice is done.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (148) "An Act to authorize the raising by way of loan, of certain sums of money for the public service."—(Mr. Scott.)

Bill (149) "An Act to provide for Bounties on Iron and Steel made in Canada."—(Mr. Scott.)

Bill (140) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Judges of Provincial Courts."—(Sir Oliver Mowat.)

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the Orders of the Day are disposed of, I may be allowed to do what I have never done in the House before: that is, to call attention to a paragraph in a newspaper. In the Citizen this morning, I find the following paragraph in what purports to be a summary of the report of our proceedings yesterday afternoon:

> If the Senate was going to investigate, said Senator Power, the sooner it got to work the the better, for he had heard that one public man likely to be required (probably meaning Mr. Tarte) was about to sail soon for Europe.

I do not wish to have any misapprehension on that subject. I was not dreaming of the hon. Minister of Public Works; the gentleman whom I had in my mind was a gentleman who was a member of the late administration, whose connection with railway subsidies was known to be of a very interesting character. I may say, since I made those observations, I have learned that that gentleman who, it was understood, was to sail for England on Saturday has determined to accelerate his departure and sail from New York to-morrow, leaving this city to-day.

An Hon. MEMBER—What is the name?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not necessary to give the name, and I refrain from giving it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—We ought to have it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is another circumstance to which I would bring the attention of the leader of the opposition. The Citizen newspaper is regarded as being the organ of the Conservative party in this city. It has never stated it was not the organ, as the Globe has done with reference to the Liberal party, and it is generally assumed to be the organ of the Conservative party in this city. Now, in this morning's Citizen there is an article under the heading "The Job explained" which I take to be a gross contempt of parliament. It is very well known, hon. gentlemen, that if a matter which is before a county court is discussed in the press and conclusions drawn about it and language used calculated in any way to influence the mind of the judge or the minds of the public or the jurors, if there are any, that that is a contempt of court which can be punished by the judge; and here we have a matter before the high court of parliament, and have a newspaper undertaking to prejudge the case and to tell what the evidence will show when no one knows what the evidence is going to show. I do not ask that any summary steps should be taken by this House for the purpose of enforcing its authority and protecting its dignity, but hon. gentlemen opposite should see that their organs are not guilty of contempt of this House. Hon. gentlemen appear to be—and properly so—very anxious respecting the privileges and dignity of the Senate; to my mind, nothing is a more gross infringement of our privileges and dignity than the publication of this article respecting the investigation going on before a committee of this House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—You did not read the statement.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not propose to read the whole article.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not read it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know why my hon. friend called my attention to this article?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is particularly fond of calling the attention of this House to newspaper articles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When I do that I generally gave the reasons for doing so, and I would like the hon. gentleman to understand that the custodian of the honour of this House is the leader of the House, and not myself. If the rules of the House had been infringed, if a contempt of the Senate exists in this article, it is the duty of the leader of the House to take cognizance of it and to bring the party to punishment if he deems it worthy of punishment. If I occupied my hon. friend's position, and I thought that the dignity of the House had been infringed —if there had been a gross infringement of the rules and privilege of the House, I should not hesitate a moment to take cognizance of it and bring the party to punishment. Not being in that position, it does not fall upon me to take action, any more than it does on the hon. gentleman who has spoken. If the statements made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power) be correct—and I presume they are correct or he would not have made the statement—that some person who is well known to have had something to do with railway subsidies, and, as he insinuates, not very creditably, is about leaving the country, his duty was to have called the attention of the committee to that fact this morning so that he could have been served with a subpœna, and detained here in order to obtain from him such information as the hon. gentleman intimates he could give in connection with this and other matters with which he has been connected. I am not aware of any member of the late administration who occupies the position that the hon. gentleman says he does, more particularly in reference to the investigation going on at present. If he is going away for the purpose of evading a summons——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not say that he was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but the hon. member intimated it. The hon. gentleman said distinctly that there was a member of the late administration who had been connected with these railway subsidies, and that he was about going to England, and that he had facilitated his movements by arranging to leave to-morrow. That would imply that this gentleman, whoever is meant, is going to leave the country for the purpose of evading the service of a summons and giving evidence, or it means nothing. That is the language the hon. gentleman used, and I repeat, that if he had done his duty this morning before the committee, he would have given that information to us in order that a summons might have been issued forthwith to detain him in this country, for the purpose of divulging any secrets that he may have, or for the purpose of extracting from him an admission of any misconduct on his part. It is extremely unfair that while he speaks of a newspaper being guilty of contempt of this House, he at the same time throws out insinuations against a gentleman—we do not know who it is, or who he means—leaving the impression upon the House, and when reported to the world, leaving the impression upon the public mind, that some member of the late administration is culpable in connection with this railway deal, and that he is leaving the country for the purpose of preventing the truth being elicited from him in connection with it. It certainly bears no other construction. If my hon. friend has any other construction to put upon it I should like to hear him give it. In all cases I think the hon. gentleman will give me credit for this, that if I have called attention to newspaper articles, I have given my reasons for it, and I have either given them a flat contradiction, or made an explanation as to why I brought the matter up. The hon. gentleman might just as well have called attention to an article in the Citizen in which Mr. Bertrand, one of the proprietors of La Presse gives the lie—that is the Anglo Saxon word he uses—direct to a Minister, Mr. Tarte, who charges him ——

Hon. Mr. POWER—That has nothing to do with this House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but it has to do with this investigation. He might just as well have referred to the other article in which Mr. Bertrand gives the lie direct to the statement made by the minister that he had an interest in the bridge scheme in connection with the South Shore Railway.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) and the hon. leader of the opposition appear to be anxious to know the language used in this article.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not anxious. I read it this morning.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The whole article is of the character I indicated, but I wish, in order that there may be no mistake about the matter and in order that the hon. gentlemen may feel that my language has been perfectly justified, to read the last two sentences in the article. They read as follows :—

In the light of the above facts is any investigation needed, and what is it needed for ? Are not the facts themselves damning proof of a gigantic act of public robbery ?

Is not that prejudging the case ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is very strong language.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, it is very strong language. I had hoped the hon. gentleman would have expressed his intentions that his organ should not use such language as that in the future with respect to the matter which is before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I had any control of the newspapers I might.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power) should give us further information as to the identity of the member of the government he refers to who is leaving for England to evade the investigation. It is a matter that may reflect upon people who should not be reflected upon in this way at all, and it is only right and just that the name should be given, and not render liable to suspicion those who may not deserve to have any such reflection cast upon them. The only parties whose names I have seen in the papers as about to depart to Great Britain are members of the present government. I am sure he did not intend to reflect on any of those ; there is no reason to reflect on one of them at any rate, the member from Prince Edward Island, who is about to leave immediately. He cannot be subject to any charge of this kind, and it could not have been intended for him. It would be only right that the hon. member should name the party for whom it was intended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing before the House.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of bill (136) "An Act to further amend the Civil Service Superannuation Act."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose making any objection to the bill further than to point out the right of the Senate to amend this bill if it is thought proper to do so. I have taken some trouble during the recess to make inquiry from the best parliamentarians that we have upon this subject, and there is no doubt whatever, that we have the right to change and amend bills of this character, so long as we do not make any proposition by which a tax would be levied upon the people. We have the right to say how, and why, the money should be paid, and we can direct the manner in which it is to be paid other than that which is provided for in the bill. In looking at Todd and Bourinot, I find there is not a question that in a bill of this kind, we have an absolute right to change its wording so long as we keep within the limits I have already indicated. There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. It was argued yesterday that it was not necessary to go into committee upon the bill. Now, the authorities lay down this rule, that any bill, whether it be the Supply Bill or any other, which comes from the House of Commons, should receive not only its three readings, but should be referred to committee, particularly public bills. I think you will find that laid down very clearly, but as Bourinot has said, and very properly, we have fallen into the habit of not sending bills of a certain character to a committee of the Whole House, but it is an improper procedure. In all cases, all bills, no matter of what character, should go to a committee and for this reason, that though you may not have the power to change any clause affecting a money grant, you can discuss in the committee the propriety of making the grant, and you might point out reasons which would induce the government to change it, while if you adhere strictly to the rules of the House you can speak but once. The object of the committee is in order that you can discuss calmly, and in a conversational manner across the floor of the House, the different clauses. I am also informed that this system of reading a bill at length at the table is obsolete. It was the practice a great many years ago in the Imperial parliament, and though in this House very often short bills are read at table by the clerk, it is not practised in the Imperial parliament at the present day. It has been done I know in the House of Commons, as well as in this House, but not so often as here. It is a very rare occurrence in the House of Commons. That practice Bourinot describes as obsolete, and one which should not be followed, because it prevents due discussion and consideration of the question before the House. I bring this under the notice of the House, more particularly, in order that if the question should arise next session the Speaker may have an opportunity of looking into and making himself acquainted with the authorities—if he is not already acquainted with them—so that in case a point of order on that question should be raised, he may be in a better position to give a matured decision. The House will understand that I have not made these remarks in a captious spirit, but in order that we should get into a correct mode of procedure. The moment we depart from it, as we have done in this House, we discuss questions nearly all the time as if we were in committee, which I think is highly objectionable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fully appreciate the object of the hon. gentleman in bringing this matter under the notice of the Senate. I spoke from my experience in the Senate, but of course I pointed out that bills of this character had in the past invariably been read the first, second and third times and not referred to committee. In twenty-five years I have never known a supply bill to be treated in any other way in this House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it ever has been in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not in my recollection, nor any of that class of bills, such as loan bills, bounty bills, &c.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

THE BOUNTIES ON IRON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be a little out of order, but perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to ask a question about the bill relating to the bounties on iron. Did he make any inquiry as to the payment of bounties on iron exported?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have had no opportunity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been looking at the bill as introduced in the House of Commons, and I find that there was a special clause giving power to the Governor in Council to impose an export duty upon all pig iron exported equal to the amount of the bounty which you pay. That being struck out, I presume the government intends, in order to encourage the industry, to pay the bounty on all pig iron.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I noticed the same myself, and it was from that fact that I suggested yesterday that probably it was intended to pay it indiscriminately. That is what I thought. I could not explain the dropping of the clause in any other way.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (150) "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1897, and 30th June, 1898, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time at the next sitting of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice that this is only for $26,000,000 odd—where is the balance? We shall be very much pleased to know that this is the total amount. Might I ask, before we discuss this question, whether it is the intention of the government to bring down the Crow's Nest Pass Bill and the bill before the other House for subsidies to railways; and also, to my mind, the very important bill diverting some $300,000 of the educational fund to the Manitoba Legislature, or, in other words, relieving this government of the responsibility of dispensing that money of which they are the custodians, for educational purposes in Manitoba. I do not know that that would interfere with this, and I shall not object to the Supply Bill.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—It is intended to pass the Crow's Nest Pass Bill and bring it to this House. It will probably be here to-day. The same with regard to the Railway Subsidies Bill. With reference to the Educational Fund Bill, I shall be able to answer probably when we meet this afternoon. I have had no recent conversation about it. The Minister of Railways yesterday made a statement about another matter as to which this House has taken considerable interest. I dare say hon. gentleman have seen it, but I read it now for the purpose of endorsing it as government leader of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that in the Citizen?

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—Yes. The statement has reference to the vote for $100,000 for purchasing rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway. Mr. Blair said:

> Since the item passed the committee he had gone over the matter again, and as the original programme for a 99 years' lease had fallen through, and the estimate of $100,000 was based on that proposal, according to the estimate furnished him by his officers he had concluded to reduce the vote for additional rolling stock by $50,000, making the vote $50,000. He assured the House that no portion of the money would be used in purchasing the rolling stock of the Drummond County railway.

Representing the government here, I endorse that statement. I should like to say further, though it is only repeating in substance what I said a few days ago, with regard to the $157,500 asked for the rental of the two pieces of road belonging respectively to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Drummond County Railway Company, that this amount is only wanted for a tentative purpose, to ascertain by experiment the effect of nine months operating the road as part of the Intercolonial Railway, and with a view to be in a situation to consider more satisfactorily a permanent connection with Montreal by some means, whether those spoken of heretofore or some other. The purpose, therefore, of what is to be done is temporary only, and is not to be of such a character as to bind the action of parliament next session. Parliament next session will be entirely free to accept or reject the or any other proposal that may be made by the government. Hon. gentlemen will remember that I made a statement to that effect before, but I repeat it after having had several interviews with my colleagues on the subject. They understand the matter just as I stated it before, and as I state it now; and if any expressions have fallen from any of them which may seem to have indicated anything different, those expressions are not to be taken as conveying anything different from what I state now and what I stated before. With regard to the committee which has been appointed, I hold the same views that I expressed before. I think it important that the matters which we have been talking about should be thoroughly investigated. They have indeed been brought forward in newspapers, and I quite admit that we are not to investigate everything that newspapers may state, but there are circumstances connected with this particular matter which make it quite proper that an investigation should take place, and as soon as it can be done, effectually and consistently with considerations which ought to weigh with us in such a matter. The object of the investigation I cannot but think would be accomplished quite as effectually if we go into it thoroughly next session instead of going into it now at the end of the present session when members are tired, when they want to get home, when a long session has already been had and while the weather is quite unsuitable for remaining longer here, on a work of that kind. I am sorry for that delay. I should be glad if we could investigate it now as efficiently, but I still think we cannot do it, and that nothing would be lost to either side, politically speaking, or lost to individuals either, if we should take up the matter early next session instead of attempting to take it up now. I thought it due to the Senate that I should make these observations, so that there could be no mistake with regard to my position or the position of the government generally. We do not object to the investigation—in fact we shall be glad of an investigation in order to remove doubts, so far as we are concerned, and so far as others are concerned too. We all consider, and I am quite sure a great many members of this House who are not supporters of the government consider, that the work could be as effectually done and accomplish every purpose if we take it up early next session instead of going on with it now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After the statement made by the Minister of Justice in reference to the action of the government in asking for this appropriation, and the purposes for which it is to be applied, I may say, on behalf of the gentlemen who are quite anxious to have this whole matter thoroughly investigated, that they to a certain extent, agree with the opinions which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman, that the investigation can be much better held at the beginning of another session than at the present moment, when it would be necessary to keep the members of both Houses here for probably five or six weeks. I must, at the same time, frankly admit, that many of us—I am among the number—think it was somewhat cool on the part of the government in asking parliament to make an appropriation to rent the Drummond County Railway line and a portion of the Grand Trunk Railway, even if it be for only nine months, after the decision of this House in reference to the policy involved therein. Whether the policy of extending the road to Montreal be advisable or not, is not a question that I desire to discuss now. The principal reason that induced the Senate to reject the Drummond County Railway bill was, that they thought the bargain an improvident one, and that they were placing too much money in the hands of private speculators at the expense of the country. Now that the hon. gentleman has given us distinctly to understand that no portion of the Drummond County Railway property will be purchased, out of the amount of money which they have asked for the purpose of acquiring additional rolling stock. I take it for granted that the $50,000 is to be applied, more particularly as it is charged to capital, to the purchase of additional rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway proper, and it is to meet the requirements of that road owing to increased traffic.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—My hon. friend does not mean that it should not be used for the other bit of road too, that is to Montreal?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but it cannot be for the purpose of replacing rolling stock which is worn out, because in all cas s of that kind the amount should be charged, and has been charged in the past, to the current expenses of the road. It is only when additional rolling stock, engines, cars, &c., are added to the stock already on hand that it is permissible to charge it to capital account. Now, there was a strong feeling in the minds of many members of this House, having taken the view of the action of government that I have already expressed, to take the full responsibility of stopping the Supply Bill if it contained any sum for the purpose of securing that road. I recognize, and so do all those with whom I act, the grave responsibility that would devolve on those who would take so extreme a measure, and it would only be justifiable under circumstances in which the government of the day had set at defiance the will of one branch of parliament. But with the explanation which has been given by the hon. leader of the government, I can safely say that no attempt of that kind will be made, and that while those of us who take the view that I have expressed in reference to this whole scheme, will allow the Supply Bill to pass without a division, it is understood distinctly that it is done under a solemn protest against any act which may be taken under the authority implied or acquired by the passage of the Supply Bill to pledge the House or the country through, parliament to any action in connection with the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway, or with a view to making the temporary arrangement to which they have referred, a permanent one. We may safely accept the assurance of the hon. gentleman, but at the same time I must add my own opinion and that, I think, of those for whom I speak, as being in accord with the leader of the government when he says that this is a matter, from the length to which it has gone, that should be, in the interest of the country and of the government, and of those who are connected with railways, thoroughly and fully investigated. And that unless circumstances transpire which would justify another course, I think I can say to the minister that at the beginning of another session of Parliament steps will be taken similar to those which have been taken already, to have a thorough and full investigation into all matters connected with the Drummond Counties Railway matter; first, with the object of ascertaining what the road has cost, so that if the government desire to purchase they will not be paying too much for it, and to see whether there has been any improper conduct on the part of those connected with it, in order that the political atmosphere may be purified to as great an extent as possible. I have consulted with my friends who have taken the matter of the investigation in hand, and I can predict that the matter will not go any further at the present session, for the reasons given by the hon. Minister of Justice.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (146) "An Act to authorize a subsidy for a railway through Crow's Nest Pass."—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (150) "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

He said: The Supply Bill now before the House asks for a vote altogether of $26,552,226. Of that amount $19,860,530.85 is chargeable to what is called the consolidated fund, the balance amounting to $6,691,696, is chargeable to capital account.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much do you make it altogether?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—$19,860,530.85 is the amount contained in the Supply Bill that is chargeable to the consolidatad revenue fund and the amount authorized by statute, is $19,320,700.27, making altogether the charges on the year, wholly irrespective of capital account, $39,181,231.12. Then, as I explained before, the amount, chargeable to capital, which has been voted this year is $6,691,696. In addition to that there is an annual charge that is made which is known as the sum authorized for the redemption of public debts, which amounts this year to $108,879.68. The two items together, representing the amount chargeable to capital which is being voted in the Supply Bill, make a total of $6,800,575.68. Probably the most intelligent way of getting at it would be by a comparison with last year's expenditure, because of course unless hon. gentlemen had before them the estimates that are voted by statute, the Supply Bill does not really give you very much information. What are known as the main estimates last year—that is including what is provided by statute and what is provided for by the annual vote—amounted to $39,698,000. This year it is $38,111,000. Supplementary estimates last year, $510,897; supplementary estimates this year, $1,655,215, and the further supplementary estimates this year are $157,800, making a total vote chargeable to consolidated fund account last year $40,539,822; this year $39,824,378.62 The amount chargeable to capital last year in the main estimates was $5,832,102; this year, $6,594,575. Supplementary estimates last year, chargeable to capital account, $460,518; supplementary estimates chargeable to capital account, this year, $305,000. The grand total, adding the items chargeable to capital account and the items chargeable to consolidated account, last year, $46,132,442; this year, $46,124,954.32. On looking over the estimates, I find there has been struck out altogether since they were submitted to parliament, the sum of $92,447. This includes $50,000 for purchase of rolling stock for the Intercolonial extension to Montreal, struck out last evening, and several post office items which were struck out during last evening also.

Hon. Mr. McINNES (B C.)—What was that $50,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In connection with the Intercolonial Railway stock. If hon. gentlemen had the items before them they could see what was struck out. The principal items struck out were what I have given the House. The post office items struck out in the House of Commons were New Brunswick, St. Martin's Custom House, $5,000. At page 4 of the supplementary estimates, 97A, there was an item struck out, Quebec Military Building improvements, repairs, &c., $7,500. The total items struck out amount to ninety odd thousand dollars, as I have stated. There was an item struck out on page 2 of the supplementary estimates, 97A, "Civil government, amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act accruing on the 1st of January, 1897, which were temporarily suspended to continue during the year 1897." The amount struck out altogether, not voted in Schedule A, the supplementary estimates for the current year, was $6,000. In Schedule B, that is the main estimates, the amount not voted and struck out of the estimates as they went through committee was $92,447.50.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the motion is put I think we might spend a few minutes very profitably in looking at these figures which we are called upon to assent to in the motion now before the House. Our friends in the government have been in power for about a year and it has been their good fortune to have to vote two sets of estimates during that period, and the manner in which they have discharged this duty can now be compared with their professions upon these matters before they assumed the reins of power. I have some very interesting information on this point in my hands. I find now, by the statement which my hon. friend the Secretary of State has made to us, that the estimates for the fiscal year which is now about ended or will end in two or three days, amount to over $46,180,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is including capital.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Including capital expenditure and that for this year it is nearly the same amount including capital expenditure; it is a little less on consolidated fund and a little more on capital account. I take it, however, that capital account for the present year does not include the railway subsidies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The comparisons do not include railway subsidies.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The bill before the House does not include the railway subsidies and the comparison is scarcely fair, as we have the estimates before the House, comparing them with the same votes of last year, but a complete comparison of the two years' operations including the railway subsidies that are voted this year shows that the expenditure of this year on capital account is very much larger than last year and these figures also, as explained by my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, do not include the very large amount that we are called upon to vote for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. That also has to be taken into consideration and to be added to the obligations or the burdens that we are in this parliament imposing on the country. However, my object in making these observations is not so much to institute comparisons between the estimates of this year and the estimates of last year as to compare the financial operations, the estimates of the two years together, judging and reviewing the whole two years at length with the professions and promises that the gentlemen in the present government made when they were in opposition. There was a convention held in Ottawa in 1893 at which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice presided, and they solemnly came to this resolution amongst others:

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt, and the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.

The figures that my hon. friend has just submitted to the House as the estimates for the fiscal year, showing over forty-six millions dollars voted, without including the railway subsidies which amount to some millions more, and without including nearly four million dollars for the Crow's Nest Pass, show how beautifully our friends in the government are carrying out their promises when in opposition. This resolution was not merely the speech of some one gentleman of the party, but it was the solemn deliverance of the party as a whole, comprising at that convention I think every gentleman who is now in the Liberal administration, and they were all bound by it. I pass now to quote some individual opinions of members, individual promises made by members of the government upon this subject. The premier, Sir Wilfred Laurier, speaking in Toronto in 1894 on the 23rd August, used these words:

> Has the expenditure gone down? No, it has gone up. It went up two, three, five, ten millions and more until it is now $38,000,000. And the Conservatives do not shrink from it, but swallow it all. If we come into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that although we may not be able to bring the expenditures back to what they were we can reduce the amount two, yea, three million dollars a year. (Applause.)

I quote these speeches to show that it is not merely in one place, not merely a slip of the tongue on the part of the hon. gentleman, but that this was a matter that he was promising in nearly all his public speeches and promising on behalf of his party. The same gentleman, Sir Wilfred Laurier, speaking in Brantford the same year, spoke as follows:

Do you imagine there is any justification for this increase of expenditure? The Conservatives tell us that there is a justification. The population has increased they say. Oh! yes, it has increased 9 per cent, but the expenditure has increased 100 per cent. There can be no justification for such an expenditure (the increased debt) when as has been stated the great bulk is a corrupt expenditure. Moreover, they tell us that if we were in power we could not retrench and economize. But, I do not believe that it will be a very difficult task. (Hear, hear). It would not be a very difficult task to the extent of one, two, three, and Mr. Mills told his constituents a few days ago that it was possible to retrench to the extent of four millions a year.

Sir Richard Cartwright made a speech very much later than that, in February, 1896, addressing the House on the estimates which the Conservative party brought down. This is what he said in the other House on that occasion:

I say it is a disgrace and a shame to the government that have been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of $38,300,000 a year for federal purposes. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustificable!

If I am not mistaken Sir Richard Cartwright is a prominent member of this administration which has brought down these immensely swollen estimates including subsidies to railways, Crow's Nest Pass Railway, &c., amounting to over fifty millions of dollars, which would be nearly, if not altogether, sixty millions of dollars, had not this House clipped its wings in the matter of the Drummond County Railway deal. Then another gentleman in this government, Sir Louis Davies, in Februaay, 1896, made these remarks in the House of Commons:

Now, what is the policy of the Liberal party? Summed up in a few words, it is to reduce the expenditure of the country to the lowest possible point consistent with an efficient service. You tell us that that cannot be done. We have spent hour after hour on this side, going into details and showing how it can be done. In reply to challenges which came from the other side, gentlemen on this side undertook the labour of pointing out the particular departments of the service in which money can be saved and those are all upon record.

It is a pity that these hon. gentlemen lost the result of all these researches when they got into the government. In some unaccountable way they lost every memorandum and lost the secret which they knew so well while they were in opposition. He continues:

We are ready to go to the country with that statement on which we pledge ourselves that very large and important reductions can be made in the expenditure of the country without impairing the efficient administration of its affairs.

Now, last year when the Liberal government brought down their estimates in the September session, they were criticised for bringing down estimates in excess of those of former years instead of carrying out their promises of reduction and for that the Finance Minister and Sir Louis Davies made explanations. Sir Louis Davies spoke in the House of Commons only as late as September last, the substance of his explanations was this, these estimates we have brought down now are not our estimates; they were prepared for us by the government which preceded us; we had not time to go into the details of the administration to find out what should be put in practice now, but at the conclusion of another session, when we have time to prepare our estimates we can. He says:

That the facts are serious, disgraceful I acknowledge but every atom of responsibility is chargeable upon the hon. gentlemen for the reckless manner in which they managed the finances * * * * The people are willing to wait for the development of my hon. friend's policy which will take place next session and they will judge the Finance Minister by the policy which he then proposes.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries asked the public to suspend criticism until they had an opportunity of going into the affairs of the country—until they had an opportunity of bringing down estimates of their own and when that was done they were prepared to stand or fall by the result. The result is in the figures which have been brought before the House this afternoon, partially, by the Secretary of State, but we will have the whole of them before we rise. The Minister of Finance also made some explanations on the 5th of October last:

We had to say in the beginning that we accepted the estimates of the hon. gentleman opposite with a full and clear understanding that we had not an opportunity of inquiring elaborately into the details of the organization of public affairs; but that our hope and expectation was that we would be able to make some reductions in the expenditure. I have a strong hope that before the end of the fiscal year we may be able to effect some changes in fulfilment of our promises in that direction to show the public that we are able to effect economies which have been spoken of by hon. gentlemen opposite. But it will not be until this first year is completed and until we have paid the debts of hon. gentlemen opposite and entered upon a new year for which we shall prepare the estimates ourselves and have full and complete control of them that we shall be in a position to make comparisons. I have not the slightest doubt that when that time comes a comparison of the records of the Liberal party and the Conservative party will show that the Liberal party is one of economy.

We have these declarations by these hon. gentlemen; we have their assurances on the public platform and in parliament when in opposition that their policy was one of retrenchment—that such an expenditure as $38,000,000 a year was disgraceful. We have their promise at the close of last session that when they came to frame estimates of their own for which they would be responsible that we would see there would be a new era, and that there would be large economies in the administration of public affairs. We have arrived at the time when we can judge their promises and their performances as well, and I say we stand faced by propositions propounded by the present government unheard of in Canada for their volume and extent. For a government that made such strong professions of economy when in opposition, having renewed those promises last year that when they came to frame estimates of their own they would have some regard for their professions, we find estimates submitted to us larger and more extravagant than ever submitted to parliament before except one of the years when the great Canadian Pacific Railway had to be built. Certainly with that single exception we have the estimates swollen beyond comparison with any ever before submitted to the people of Canada. I feel that we would not be doing our duty if we did not, in discussing these estimates, realize what we are doing. It is not the place of this House to change these estimates; we need not discuss that, but it is our duty, as representing the people, to put on record our opinions of the state of things which exist at this moment. The action of this House has saved the country from one very large expenditure indeed, and probably other expenditures which were in contemplation, which have not reached this House. The fact that they have not been put on the statute-book may have arisen from the halt which this House called in connection with the enormous burden proposed to be put on the country in connection with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, but even without that, putting all that aside, we have in the estimates submitted to us, in the estimates that we know are on their way to us, one for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway which is coming to us, and the railway subsidies—we have in all these very large and extravagant estimates and I submit that the gentlemen composing the present administration have a very serious responsibility attached tc them and will have something serious to answer for before the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I regret that it is so near the close of the session that we have not had a fair opportunity of examining the various amounts that are proposed to be expended under this bill. Had we further time to go into it thoroughly, there are many amounts in it that senators could urge various strong objections to. The total expenditure, as proposed under this bill, and as stated by the hon. Secretary of State, comes to a very large sum indeed—a sum I believe which has never been exceeded in the history of the Dominion excepting on two occasions, one during the suppression of the rebellion in the North-west, and one during the time parliament was assisting the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is not to be wondered at that we feel that the expenditures of the country are being increased at a rate that is not warranted by the circumstances of the Dominion. That view has been drilled into the people of the country in the last fifteen years by those who were in opposition during that period. They have impressed upon the people of the Dominion at every gathering where they could get the people together, that the debt of this country when it amounted to two hundred and forty millions of dollars was greater than the resources of the country could bear—was more than we were warranted in endeavouring to pay taxes to meet, and they were continually finding fault with the government then in power for the expenditure which they had made. When they got into power, what course did they pursue? They have not only emulated the expenditures of the former government with which they had found fault, but have surpassed them, and voted a larger sum than has been voted for many years past for the public service. There are very many items included in that expenditure which I myself do not approve of, but not having seen the details of this bill, the bill not having yet been laid on our table so that we could see the various items, we have to take it as a whole and cannot criticise the different items in it, because we only know it from hearsay or from the debates in another place.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were all in the estimates which were distributed long ago.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is true that these amounts were in the estimates, but one of those estimates has never been submitted to this House. There have been three or four estimates submitted to the House of Commons, but one has never come to us. Besides the amounts which are included in the appropriation bill before us, I understand there is another bill to come here in which a large amount of money is being voted as subsidies to various railways throughout different sections of the country. Some of those railways the people have never asked for; there has been no petition before parliament or before the railway committee asking for any grant from the government of the Dominion in support of those railways, and even when the question was asked in the other House as to where some of those railways began and where they ended the information was not authentic. No member of the government, or of the House, was able to tell the exact termini of those roads. There was a general appropriation for a railway across the country. This is not the way in which we should vote away the hard-earned taxes of the people. We should be more careful than to grant subsidies in this way to every railway that is asked for throughout the country. I know in the province from which I come we have been for years asking for certain railway accommodation in order to complete the line of railway which runs throughout the greater part of the Island. There are sections of that province which are fifty miles from the nearest point on the railway, and when our people have paid their share of the taxes of the Dominion, they feel that they have a right to expect that their claim for railway accommodation should be acceded to, and that the Dominion would assist in completing the government road which extends throughout the greater part of the province. They have claims which no other province can set up, because they have a claim for a large amount due them by the Dominion on account of railroads that have been undertaken and canals that have been built or are being built throughout the Dominion by which our province benefits to no extent whatever. And when the province of Prince Edward Island went into confederation a part of the agreement then set forth was that the public works of the Dominion amounted to a certain sum of money and upon that claim the debt of Prince Edward Island was fixed, and we find now that the expenditure for canals and for railways throughout the larger provinces of the Dominion amounts to a very much larger sum than was at that time estimated would be required to complete the railway and canal systems of the Dominion. Therefore the province from which I come has a claim which no other province can set up on that account, because it was a part of the terms under which we became a member of confederation. I fear that if we go on as we are doing at present, increasing the expenditure of the Dominion year by year and granting such subsidies as are now proposed to railways, many of which will be of no great public utility, we will be increasing the debt of the Dominion at a rate which we cannot justify, nor will the people of the Dominion be satisfied that their representatives should go on increasing it in such a ratio as we are doing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it is necessary to discuss this question at any great length particularly after the remarks which have been made by my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Ferguson,) though we have good cause to complain that within two or three hours of prorogation we should have not only the supply bill, that very often comes down at a late period, but also a bill also involving the expenditure of three or four millions of dollars for subsidies to railways, because of the terms and conditions on which these subsidies are to be paid, will in all probability amount to seven millions of dollars. In addition to these we have the Crow's Nest Pass railway scheme involving an expenditure of over three and a half millions of dollars. Then we have another bill which has come to us—the Civil Service Superannuation Bill, a very prolific subject, although the bill is not a long one. In addition we have a bill for the re-organization of the Post Office Department. Let me ask, in all sincerity, if the ministers think they are treating this House with respect in asking the Senate to swallow down all those bills in one gulp, without even making a wry face? Former governments were bad enough in this respect, I admit, but this government was to reform all these abuses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are following your bad example.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And very apt pupils you are. You have become so much worse than the late government that the people will never recognize you in your present clothing, especially when they contemplate what you looked like formerly. It may be said that these bills though of an important character, have been thoroughly discussed in the lower House. I admit that, but if we are to have any voice in the legislation of this country, it is quite time that the ministers should learn that they must bring down important bills at an earlier period than this, or expect to have the House sit three or four days until we can thoroughly discuss them I throw out that hint as to what may be expected in the future, as, considering the youth of my hon. friend opposite (Sir Oliver Mowat) and my own, we will be able to discuss questions of this kind for many years to come—at least I hope so. After all, my hon. friend (Mr. Ferguson) has exposed in such a clear manner the extravagance of the economists that it is unnecessary to repeat his arguments. I had a little table prepared on that subject. Of course the figures would have to be varied a little from the speech made by the hon. Secretary of State, but taking the estimates as they were brought down, we find that the hon. gentlemen opposite have in one year's duration in office, including two years' expenditure, run up $116,000,000—not a bad showing I confess, and the people, when they come to understand it, will reach the same conclusion. They say they are not responsible for the estimates of last year—that is true to a certain extent, but not wholly. The excess over the estimates of the old government is very large, and although not a member of the government, or responsible for those estimates, the criticisms that were made upon them were unfair, because the new government took the sheets—as I understand their argument before the country—that were sent from each department to the Privy Council, and exhibited them to the world as being the estimates that were proposed to lay before parliament. Any one who has had experience of the government knows that the departments make estimates beyond what are presented to parliament, and that they are cut down to what is supposed to be absolutely necessary; consequently the sheets from which these gentlemen made their estimates do not represent what is fair and honest to their opponents. The only estimates that they should consider are those which they laid before parliament. Take the figures presented to parliament for the year 1896-97—I am giving the statement from the estimates as they were laid before the House; they amount to $46,608,000, and for this year, including everything, they amount to about $47,744,000, and there must be added to that the liability of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, amounting to $3,630,000; the railway subsidies amounting to $3,520,000, with a provision that they can be doubled in case any road costs $15,000 per mile. Now we were told when we were discussing the railway question the other day that no railway in Canada has been built for as small a sum as $15,000 a mile, ergo you may double the $3,520,000. The hon. gentleman no doubt will say that a large number of these revotes are appropriations made by the late government. Admitting that to be correct, they denounced the policy of granting subsidies to railways. They said it was vicious in principle, that it was a bribe to the people. Coming in as reformers, they had the opportunity, if these subsidies had lapsed, to have struck them out of the estimates. But instead of doing that they revote the whole, and add another million dollars to the sums which had been voted before. Then there was the Drummond County Railway deal, which, had this House not defeated it, would have added another seven million dollars. And they have also added the five million dollars for the fast line, making a total of $117,023,464. I will accept the reductions made by my hon. friend to strike out a million and a half—millions do not amount to much in the minds of the Liberal government—I would not mind taking a couple of millions off, and then you will have an addition to the debt of the country and an actual expenditure in the country for two years of over one hundred and fifteen millions. If you take an estimate of the value of that five hundred thousand dollars a year, which is tantamount to five million dollars, you will find capitalized that is an addition to the debt of about eighteen million dollars. I do not find fault with the addition to the debt which is being incurred in connection with the fast line, but I may ask why the hon. gentleman who sits opposite me, the Secretary of State, who contended so earnestly a short time ago that none of these contracts should be entered into unless they were laid before the Senate, has not asked us to consider them. This is a question in which the whole country has taken a very deep interest, and if the government can succeed in establishing the fast line upon the basis that the debates led us to suppose the contract provides, I think the country will be well served, and it will be money well expended. It is very problematical, however—it is experimental. The new vessels are not of the character of those which have been plying the ocean. They may be better. They may succeed. Whether they will be able to succeed in obtaining money for the purpose of establishing that line is a question that is in the future. I have noticed that the first brokers who took it up, men who stand high in their profession and business in London, have had to abandon it—perhaps I am misinformed in that respect—and that the attempt to float this scheme has been transferred to another establishment, or another banking institution, who are brokers. Perhaps my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, could tell us whether that is correct. If it is not correct I shall be so much better pleased.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I did not catch the point of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the brokers, into whose hands the scheme for raising the money for the construction of the steamers for the fast line was placed, have given it up—have failed—and has been transferred to another broking firm. If that be true it indicates a difficulty in raising the money, and the probability of failure. I would not be at all surprised that a scheme of that kind should fail in England at the present moment and for many years. We know that the Allan Line, the Dominion Line, the Beaver Line and every line of steamships plying between England and Canada would try their utmost to destroy an enterprise of that kind, because it would come in competition with them in the carrying trade; nor is the influence which is brought to bear upon the money market in England confined to Canadian interests. It will be a competing line to the Cunard and the White Star Lines, and all lines plying between England and this continent; consequently you must expect that difficulties will be thrown in the way of any firm in England which undertakes the establishment of a fast line, or "greyhound" line, as it is termed, between England and Canada. All their interests will be affected directly pecuniarily by it, and hence that is one reason, and a very powerful reason, why the terms offered to establish this line of steamers would have to be much larger than under other circumstances. I know my hon. friends, the government, have reduced that subsidy by $250,000 per annum, from what was offered by the late government, and then there was a difficulty in getting it established. I sincerely hope, in the interests of the country, and in the interest of the trade, that Canada will be placed in as favourable position in her passenger traffic between Canada and Europe as any of the United States lines, and therefore it is with some degree of anxiety that every public man must watch the result of the new contract. There are many items in the tariff that I think we might fairly criticise with advantage to the country. I would like to ask my hon. friend what he thinks the result of what is termed the vigorous immigration policy is to be. There is a large amount—I think it is double if not more—asked in the estimates for immigration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think it is less than $200,000, which has been about the normal sum voted for the last few years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very nearly double. I suppose the hon. gentleman has watched with no little degree of anxiety the result of sending the agents of the government to Ireland. We know that Mr. Devlin, who was a member of the Lower House, was selected. He resigned his seat and was appointed as immigrant agent to that country. We know, from the Irish newspapers, that instead of his having the effect that was anticipated, and which he boasted would be the result of his mission, has utterly failed. He told the electors at Aylmer, after his appointment, that he was going home to Ireland to point out the advantages which Canada presented to the over population of that country, and as the late government had neglected his country men and his co-religionists, he was going over to do away with the evil influence of the horrid Tory government which had prevented his co-religionists in Ireland from coming to this country. My hon. friend says he does not read the newspapers as much as he thinks I do. I will, therefore, read him a few extracts from Irish newspapers to show the effect that the sending of this gentleman to Ireland has had upon that class he was supposed to be able to influence and bring here to settle in the country. I would like to also call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. Devlin has been writing letters to the newspapers, commending the government that appointed him. Whether that would be considered, under the circumstances, offensive partisanship, I am not prepared to say it is; but if they put the same interpretation upon his letters that they have put upon utterances of their political opponents, they should have recalled him long ago; and if they had recalled him, perhaps we would have been saved the mortification of having our country described as it has been by newspapers in different sections of Ireland. If my hon. friend has not read of them, I have one or two extracts which I shall read for his special edification, and I am sure after he has heard them, and ascertained the papers from which they are clipped, he will come to the conclusion that his vigorous immigration policy has resulted simply in a useless expenditure of money in sending a gentleman to Ireland to bring out immigrants. The Dublin Nation says:

Our effort to protect our poorer countrymen against the effects of the scheme which Mr. Devlin and his colleague, Mr. O'Kelly, have been landed on our shores to work out, there is really nothing in the letter save idle declamation relative to the condition of Canada as a whole, which has no bearing on the point which is of moment. We are not now concerned with the question as to the extent of the political freedom enjoyed by the people of the Dominion, although we can hardly advise Mr. Devlin to seek a declaration upon this point from the Catholics of Manitoba. Neither do we need to be informed that there are portions of the country which are not covered with ice and snow for nine months out of the twelve. The question upon which we want to be informed, and upon which we invite him to place a definite statement before the Irish public, is as to the nature of the so-called 'mission' which has brought him to Ireland.

We have already been informed, as we have told our readers, that one object of Mr. Devlin and Mr. O'Kelly's visit is to promote Irish emigration to the generally ice-bound and always dreary and inhospitable plains of Manitoba.

Then further on it says:

Writing in this regard it is worth while pointing out that the tariff referred to by the Daily News is that lately proposed by Mr. Laurier, who seeks to weaken the old protective system of Canada by admitting English manufactured goods at a rate of duty now one-eighth and intended to become eventually one-fourth less than that levied on other foreign manufactures. Mr. Laurier is a French-Canadian. He should be a Catholic, and he ought to be a patriot, yet we find him on one hand sacrificing the interests and denying the rights of religion, and on the other boasting in the Canadian House of Commons that he is a "Britisher"! Mr. Devlin talks of the freedom of Canada, but there are some despotisms more congenial than that liberty which he invites our people to enjoy in the wilds of Manitoba.

The Kilkenny Journal not to be outdone by the Dublin Nation, holds forth as follows:

To warn the Irish people against this sinister design of driving them to a place that is worse than Connaught, and a little bit better than hell. The name of the Canadian commissioner has rather an immediate connection with the latter place. Our correspondent properly points out the fact that the climate is most inhospitable, and the people who go there from Ireland will have the happy alternative of starving if they do not freeze.

This is the country where my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Perley) lives; he does not look much like a starved animal. To show how wide this feeling extends over the whole of Ireland, we have another paper, the Journal, speaking as follows:

If our people must leave our shores let them seek some clime where they can exist, and some people amongst whom they can live. * * * We are told that Ireland is being drained of her population by "A Million a Decade." Unfortunately the tale is too true, but then many of our exiled fellow countrymen were forced to leave their homes and their native land were afforded a chance of gaining a livelihood in some friendly sphere.

Then the Munster News, published in another province, holds forth as follows:

As a matter of fact, transportation to Siberia would be preferable to the lot of unfortunate Irishmen who may be entrapped into this Manitoban scheme. The country is not alone without the least prospects from an agricultural or industrial point of view, but the majority of the inhabitants are rampant and intolerant Protestants, and Catholics find the greatest difficulty in practising their religion, being as often as six months without hearing Mass. The clergy, and all who are concerned in the fate of poor Catholic emigrants, are asked to use their influence to prevent such an atrocity of our religion and our people, as is about to be attempted by the Freemasons who manipulate the Canadian government.

I do not know whether the hon. Secretary of State is a Freemason or not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman excuse me if I say one word? Does not the hon. gentleman feel that it is not a patriotic thing to do, giving publicity to these libels on our country?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes I do, and I should consider it a greater shame, a greater disgrace, and a much greater load of sin upon our shoulders, had I been the party to send such emigration agents to Ireland, because that has been the cause of all these utterances in these papers. I have another short extract. The Nation evidently becomes fearful that its Kilkenny and Munster confrères would carry off the palm in denunciation of Canada, hence it returns to the fight and belches forth after the following style:

Canada has no practical history unless the lives of the individual hunters, squatters, cut throats, brigands, blackguards, and the rest of the motley crew which throng to a new country, could be regarded as history. Celts can afford to be a trifle exacting when history is in demand. Our own is certainly a very troubled one, but it is old enough, not alone to be respectable, but to entitle us to hold our heads pretty high.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Are those editorials?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are editorials from the paper from which they have been clipped, and they are recommendations which have been given to the Irish people not to come to this country. The hon. gentleman from Kingston, as an Irishman, will recognize no doubt the untruth of all these statements, and so will those who have been listening to them. I apologize for reading them, but I do it to show the effect of what has been termed a vigorous immigration policy—as the result of sending demagogues and men who had not the confidence of these people among an excitable class of our countrymen, preventing them from coming to a country where every one knows there is a home for all of them, and a good one at that; where they can obtain for themselves and their wives and families a comfortable sustenance. Yet these gentlemen who were the most blatent when they were in Canada, denouncing the late government for what they had done, and in defending what they termed the rights of their co-religionists, have gone all over Ireland for the purpose of inducing them to come to this country. The result is just what I have read to you. There are plenty of other instances to which attention could be called in connection with the administration of the affairs of the country, which seems particularly, in this branch of the public service, to find places and offices and emoluments for a lot of hangers-on of the government, instead of spending it in a manner which would be an advantage to the country. I say more, that the policy of the government in the appointment of a dozen or fifteen officers in the North-west, and sending men to the old country, is a system that was exploded years and years ago. It has all been tried before, and proved an utter failure, and I can see no reasons for the course they have adopted, other than to find places for those who aided them in getting into power. I am not going to waste time now, as we have these very important bills to deal with, therefore I will not pursue this subject further at this period of the session, but I think the country will learn, before five years roll around, what an economical reform government means when they have the resources of the country to dispose of among their friends.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I only wish to make a remark with regard to the last expressions which have been used by the hon. leader of the opposition, and it is simply an explanation. I do not differ from him as to his opinions about encouraging immigration to this country—whether it is good or not I am not prepared to say. We have not given the subject the investigation which its importance deserves, but it has been the practice in this country for some years, and in sending this young gentleman to Ireland they could not have selected a more eloquent man nor a more enthusiastic man, nor a man more desirous of helping this country and of helping his own country than Mr. Devlin. With regard to what has been written about him by the press in the old country, it just shows how easy it is to excite animosity in Ireland, how ripe that country is for differences of any kind. I am told on the best authority—and that is the reason why I rise on this question—that those letters have been written in this country——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Written in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That men who have been bitter enemies of this young man have sent these letters and information to the old country, and I would be very wanting in generosity and charity if I did not, on this occasion, rise to defend this gentleman, because I think he would have done it for me if the occasion arose. There are questions that rise beyond politics and this is one of them. I am sorry that the press of Ireland should have been so sensitive and so easily impressed as to publish such articles. There is no doubt, whatever, in my mind that all this bad feeling has come from this country and has been excited by men who live here and who ought to be the friends of this gentleman. This is one of the causes which have made Ireland what it is to-day, and I am glad that the occasion presents itself to me to express my opinion of the gentleman who has been sent to Ireland as an agent there. No one could have better fulfilled the duties than Mr. Devlin. He was met by the hostility, not of the Irish people, or of the press, but of opponents in this country, and if he has suffered he has suffered unjustly as might have been the case with any of us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know nothing about any information that have been sent from this country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No, but I do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not dealing with letters sent from this country. I dealt simply with the editorials in the Irish press. Whether they were misled by parties in this country or not, I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—They have been.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have taken the newspapers containing articles inflaming the minds of their readers against this country and denouncing the country in terms which my hon. friend knows, as well as I do, are not correct. Had Mr. Devlin not been sent there, these editorials would not have appeared, whoever instigated them.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It was through animosity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The editors of the papers could have had no animosity against Devlin. They did not know him. They might have been inflamed from some other cause ; I do not know.

Hon. M. SCOTT—I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sullivan) has spoken as he has done to-day, and the friends of Mr. Devlin will be grateful to him. These articles have all been traced up. They were inspired by letters written in Canada by political opponents of Mr. Devlin.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the fact remains that the articles were published.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those editorials were due to letters sent from Canada, written in order to induce editorials in the papers. They came from such a source that it was quite natural the Irish editors would have been deceived. I do not care now to disclose the source of them, but it is very well known where they came from by those who will take the trouble to inquire. The writing is known.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing what the hon. gentleman says is true—I am not going to deny it because I know nothing about it—the effect is the same upon the readers of the papers, no matter how the articles were inspired.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand the logical position of my hon. friend to be this : if you send a Liberal emigration agent to Ireland, some one here will send abominable letters about him, and the Irish press will publish articles unfavourable to him, therefore you must not send a Liberal agent, you must send a Conservative agent. That is the logical result of the hon. gentleman's statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt that would be the correct result, although I dispute the hon. gentleman's argument, or the correctness of his deductions from what I have said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A question was asked me by the hon. leader of the opposition in reference to the brokers who were first employed in connection with the fast line; I am not able to give him any information, as I am not aware of the fact that there has been any failure. I have not heard of any. As far as I have understood, it was considered that it was going to be a financial success. The hon. gentleman spoke also about the contracts not being brought down to this House. We had for many years a statute in force which required that contracts of this kind, extending over a long period of years, should be brought down to the Senate as well as the House of Commons. But almost the last act of the hon. gentleman's government the first session of 1896 was to introduce and to place on the statute-book a bill which dispensed with the necessity of producing these contracts before the Senate:

> The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any company for the purpose of a fast steamship line for the sum of $750,000 etc., provided such contract shall not be binding on Canada until it has been laid on the table of the House of Common and approved by that House.

I had been asking to have that contract brought down to the Senate, and I was referred to the statute passed by the late government, which I thought was rather unfortunate, more particularly as for the last twenty-five years those contracts have been laid before the Senate. As to the matter of immigration, I have turned up the vote in the present year and find it is $175,000. It is in excess of what was voted last year, but the normal vote for a great many years has been $200,000,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then according to the hon. gentleman's statement it is less this year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is more than it was last year and perhaps the year before, but I took the average for a number of years. If you go back eight or ten years, you will find it was between $180,000 and $200,000, and sometimes it went over that. That was the average vote. I quite agree that there is a difficulty in reference to the immigration question, particularly now as they are more prosperous on the other side of the Atlantic, perhaps, than we are. As to the matter of bringing down measures at a late period of the session, I quite agree with all that has been said. I have complained of it myself in former years. Turning up the journals, I find on the last day, when the House was being prorogued, we received the usual supply bill, and this House had to dispose of it. I can only express my regret that these measures are brought here at this late period, and I hope there will be an improvement in the future, and that this House will receive those bills at an earlier period in order that they may be fairly discussed.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second and third times, and passed.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (146) "An Act to authorize a subsidy for a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass. He said:—For the last eight or ten years public attention has been directed to the district called Southern Kootenay, and to the development of the mines in that section of British Columbia. The country immediately contiguous, the state of Washington, was the first to send out miners to work the mines in British Columbia, and the centre of operation was Spokane. Spokane has grown rapidly under the advantages it has derived from being the centre of the mining industry located in the Kootenay district. A railway was built from Spokane up to the boundary and extended on to Nelson, which was the principal town in Southern Kootenay. The mines were chiefly developed by United States capital. Up to about eighteen months ago the mines in that country were almost entirely in the hands of United States capitalists, and claims were taken up by United States citizens. It had a very great effect upon Spokane, which ten years ago had rather been set back by a land boom that burst. However, in the last five or six years it has been making material progress, due almost entirely to the wealth that came from the Kootenay district in British Columbia. The trade of that country has gone almost exclusively to the state of Washington. About eighteen months ago our predecessors had under consideration the propriety of subsidizing a railway through what is known as the Crow's Nest Pass, in order to recover, if possible, a part of the trade that had gone south, and negotiations took place, but they resulted in nothing. The legislature of British Columbia had chartered a railway as far back as 1888, and had largely subsidized that road, giving it a subsidy of 20,000 acres per mile, a portion of the subsidy lying in a district which is known to contain large deposits of coal. Yet with all that assistance, and with the fact that it was intended to penetrate a very rich district, they were unable to float the scheme. In January last, as I am advised, some gentlemen, who were also interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway, acquired stock in the road which was then known as the British Columbia Southern, and proposals were made to the present government to construct a line if a sufficient subsidy were granted. As for very many years there had been great complaints against the tolls charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and it had been urged that it was due to the high tolls prevailing in the North-west that the country had not been developed to a greater degree, and allegations were made from time to time that the settlers there were charged more than they were south of the line, the government thought it was a favourable opportunity if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were willing to revise their tolls and to offer substantial advantages to the people of the North-west, to entertain the matter of a subsidy. For some three months negotiations passed between the members of the government and the company, to ascertain what deductions they were ready to submit to. It resulted in the bill which is now submitted to this House for its approval. It will be seen that the reductions of freight rates contemplated in this bill are of a very important character. I believe an examination had been made into the tolls charged by the company, and it was found that they really were not in excess of the tolls charged by the Northern Pacific, or the Great Northern, or the Union Pacific, while they were felt to be a heavy burden on the settlers in the North-west, and under the charter granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in 1881, it became one of the terms of the contract that the tolls were not subject to the ratification of parliament. A contract was made by which those tolls should not be reduced until they reached a sum exceeding ten per cent on the capital actually expended in the construction of the line. That was their position. The government, however, regarded it as extremely important that this rich country should be penetrated by a railway, more particularly as it was said to contain coal, and that this coal would be a very valuable element in the development of the mines in Southern Kootenay. I am told at the present time that coke costs about sixteen dollars per ton, whereas if access were had to the mines just west of the Crow's Nest Pass that coke could be delivered at the mines for about $5 a ton. So that there is a very wide margin, enabling mines that are considered very lean and poor to be worked. As hon. gentlemen will see, the company agreed also that this railway and all the lines belonging to the company in British Columbia that are south of the main line should come under the operation of the Railway Act. They were not under the operation of the Railway Act before, because the C.P.R. charter protected them from any intrusion by the Railway Committee or the parliament of Canada. The company consented, however, that all their lines, south of the main line in British Columbia—and also the steamboat lines on the lakes should come under the operation of the Railway Committee or any commission that may be appointed hereafter to supervise them or control them. The agreement embodied in this paper gives the government, or gives the railway commission if such should be appointed hereafter, control over all freights from other parts of Canada in the east that go over the Canadian Pacific Railway line and are intended for what is known as the Crow's Nest Pass line. The rates on all freights that originate on that railway and that are intended for other parts of Canada going over the Canadian Pacific Railway line are also subject to the control of the Governor in Council and the commission, when appointed, in reference to the rates. Special articles are mentioned as to which it is agreed that the tariff going west shall be reduced according to a scale which is given in the bill. Then, again, on grain coming out of the North-west, there is to be a reduction, when the Act goes into operation, of three cents per 100 pounds. The rate now from Winnipeg, 17 cents per 100 pounds, will be reduced to 14 cents. Taking last year's crop, the reduction would amount to nearly $400,000, which the company are virtually giving up by this bill. In that one item alone of grain and flour going east they are relinquishing in the neighbourhood of $400,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that is in consideration of the bonus of $11,000 per mile which the government are giving them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was one of the elements in the consideration.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Is that at three cents per 100 pounds or a cent and a half.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Three cents per 100 pounds on grain and flour coming east.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is $400,000 on that item alone?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. On a bushel of wheat the present rate would be $10\frac{6}{10}$. The reduced rate would be $6\frac{4}{10}$, so that it amounts to a very considerable item. That is a very large item which goes directly to the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say now that they would not have given $11,000 a mile subsidy if it had not been for this reduction?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. The negotiations occupied at least a month or six weeks. The company were pressed. They represented that it was a very serious matter and required a great deal of consideration, and the bill before the House now is a compromise. The government asked reductions on a number of other items. The bill now is the result of the agreement between the company and the government.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You say the saving of $400,000 a year is on wheat?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the crop of last year on grain and flour coming east, the saving would have amounted to that sum. I have not made any calculation of what the reduction would be on the articles named in the bill going into the country. But take the item of green and fresh fruits, the reduction is $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent on the present rates.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What would that likely amount to?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot tell, because I understand those rates change from time to time. The rates were not as high as the company were authorized to charge, and that reduction is taken on the lower scale of rates, so it will make a very marked reduction in the charge.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What is the whole amount of the concession that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are supposed to be giving? You say $400,000 on wheat and flour: what is the additional concession?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot tell; I have no means of telling. It is spread over a great many articles which are mentioned in the bill. Some of those articles were very low before.

Hon Mr. PERLEY—You would require to have an estimate on these articles.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no estimate that I have been able to arrive at in reference to these articles, but it must amount to a very considerable sum.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—When does this reduction first take place? It says on the 1st September, 1898.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the articles going west the reduction takes place on the first January next. On the other it takes place one-half in one year and the other half in the second year—that is a cent and a half on 100 pounds on the first September, 1898, and the additional cent and a half on the first September, 1899.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There will be no reduction this year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it will not begin until the first September next year. I have placed on the table a plan showing the line of railway. It extends from Lethbridge through to Nelson. A portion of it is to be built before the end of next year—that portion of it down to the lake shown on the plan, and the other portion of it will be built the following year to Nelson.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Has the hon. gentleman the length of the British Columbia Southern Railway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The whole distance to the British Columbia boundary is 113 miles, and in British Columbia 217 miles—330 miles altogether.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Does the plan cover the route of the British Columbia Southern Railway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it follows it closely. In addition to the very large concessions that the Company have agreed to make, there is also this important one: just west of the pass there is supposed to be a rich coal district. It is said the area of the coal lands is 250,000 acres. Of that I cannot speak positively. It was feared at one time that if those lands fell into the hands of a company there might be a monopoly of the coal. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company were themselves anxious to avoid the possibility of those lands being possessed by a monopoly. What they desired was the development of the country. So they have agreed that in their arrangement with the British Columbia Southern, a portion amounting to 50,000 acres of the average value of the coal lands in that section should be transferred by the Crown in British Columbia to the Crown at Ottawa in order to be a check on anything like a monopoly or an excess of prices in the charge for coal. The bill provides that the charge shall not exceed $2 per ton on the car, and as the Crown has the control of the rates, hon. gentlemen will probably appreciate best the low prices at which coal will be delivered at the important points where it is now sold at so high a figure. The effect will be to encourage largely the development of mines that cannot now be worked—lean mines that it would not pay to develop under present circumstances. The fact of their being able to get coal and coke at so low a rate, will so stimulate those mines that hundreds of mines which to-day are abandoned will spring into life and be of great value to the country.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Can the hon. gentleman give us any idea of the cost of this railway?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—No, I cannot. Its estimated cost is $25,000 to $30,000 a mile. Some parts of it of course will cost more, as it is through a very rough country.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Can the hon. gentleman say how much of it is difficult construction and how much is prairie?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The 113 miles will be through a country that is not so difficult. The longer distance, from Crow's Nest through to the Lake and on to Nelson, will be in a very expensive country as you will see by the map. It has to wind in and out according to the topography of the country. The British Columbia Southern had a right to a subsidy of 20,000 acres per mile. A good deal of that land has timber on it, and one of the conditions is that the timber land and the land fit for agricultural purposes must be disposed of at such prices as the government will approve of, so that practically the British Columbia Southern Company are deprived of any opportunity to exact extreme prices—that is, they must put it on the market at reasonable rates approved by the governments of British Columbia and Canada.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am sorry the hon. gentleman could not give us an estimate of the cost of building the road. I think we should have had that, and I suppose the government, before entering ino a contract of this kind, would have a careful estimate from a competent engineer of the cost of building the road. I do not see how they arrived at an estimate of the subsidy they were justified in paying unless they had some idea of what the road would cost when completed. The subsidy of $11,000 a mile will amount to $3,630,000, and, if I understood the hon. gentleman's remarks correctly, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be entitled to some 4,000,000 acres of timber land which they get from the British Columbia government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, those lands belong to the British Columbia Southern and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or some of its stockholders, have acquired an option on the charter, but not on all the adjuncts of the charter, as I understand.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It certainly was stated that the British Columbia Southern transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company all the lands that they acquired from the British Columbia government except the coal lands, which were estimated at 250,000 acres, and 50,000 acres of these are to be transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and by them to the government, so that if I have made the calculation right, there would be about 4,000,000 acres (exclusive of this 250,000) of timber and other lands which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be entitled to when this road is completed. I should like to know if I am right as to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The lands in British Columbia, when acquired by purchasers, do not include the precious metals, and the only lands that are really valuable for any purpose are the coal lands. The other lands are only valuable so far as there is timber on them. Other hon. gentlemen can speak more authoritatively than I can on that subject. The bill provides that the land shall be sold on such conditions as may be imposed by the government, so no excessive charge can be made. The lands in British Columbia that we give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the twenty mile belt, have not any special value. As a rule they are not fit for agricultural purposes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That twenty mile belt was not given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; it was given to the Canadian Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was set apart as a reserve for the building of the railway. The government have never been able to realize much out of the lands in British Columbia. The highest price I have ever known any lands to be sold for was $5 per acre. I do not think any special value was attached to those lands.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I can hardly understand how that can possibly be if there is good timber on the land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is very little timber on it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The point that occurs to me is this—perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell me whether I am right or not—the subsidy amounts to $3,630,000, and besides that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acquire, exclusive of the coal lands, some 4,000,000 acres of lands which are supposed to be timber lands. I should incline to the opinion, if we attach any value at all to the lands, that these two amounts, the subsidy and the value of these lands, would build the entire railway. No doubt the concessions in the freight rates are very important, and possibly they are sufficient to offset the whole amount of the subsidy paid by the Dominion government. The point that I am trying to get at is what the views of the government are; what is the basis on which they entered into this arrangement?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the last eight or ten years, since this land grant was donated by the British Columbia legislature, the holders have been trying to float the enterprise, and yet, with all that land grant they were unable to accomplish anything. Last January some parties interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway bought some of the stock, but until then they found it impossible to float the scheme. It has been offered over and over again in the financial world and nobody would take it up.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Can the hon. gentleman say who built the railway that runs south to Spokane?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was Austin Corbin, the capitalist, of New York.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Was any bonus given?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, that is a road running directly south to the boundary, and that is extended to Nelson.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That was built as a commercial enterprise?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I do not think they got anything from the State of Washington. That road has been doing a very paying business and has been carrying off the whole trade of that section to Spokane. If the hon. gentleman will look at subsection (h) he will find that provision is made there for the lands:

(h) That if the company or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement on the subject shall, by constructing the said railway or any part of it, as stipulated for in the said agreement, become entitled to and shall get any land as a subsidy from the government of British Columbia, then such lands, excepting therefrom those which in the opinion of the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada (expressed in writing) are coal-bearing lands, shall be disposed of by the company or by such other company to the public according to regulations and at prices not exceeding these prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council, having regard to the then existing provincial regulations applicable thereto ; the expression " lands " including all mineral and timber thereon which shall be disposed of as aforesaid, either with or without the land, as the Governor in Council may direct.

So it is practically under the control of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That very clause that the hon. gentleman has just now read is one that impressed upon my mind the idea that this 4,000,000 acres of land must be valuable, otherwise it would be unnecessary to have any restriction upon them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was put as a precaution that the company could not hold them and prevent purchasers going in if it was thought desirable to buy.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That must be based on the idea that there is some considerable value in these lands. I really think the government, in entering upon an enterprise of this kind, should ascertain whether there was any value in these lands, and also what the cost of constructing a railway in that section of the country would amount to. Otherwise it is very difficult for members of this House, or anybody who has not had an opportunity to investigate for himself, to judge of the merits of an arrangement of this kind. If these lands have any value—if they are worth even one dollar per acre, hon. gentlemen will perceive that the whole subsidy is ample to build that road, even if it is an expensive road to build.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are a number of roads in British Columbia that have similar subsidies, and I have yet to learn that any of them have been able to use their lands. Land is abundant there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand that the minerals in this land granted as a subsidy have been reserved by the Crown.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, all the lands in British Columbia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If all the minerals have been reserved by the Crown, there is no value in the coal lands. There are small areas, in portions of the country which are very well wooded with good timber, but there is no great quantity of land after you leave Pincher Creek until you strike the Crow's Nest Pass through to the Columbia except when you reach the lower Kootenay. There is some good land at Carnbroke, where Col. Baker has his ranch, and where there is an industrial school. There is very little timber land in that portion of the country. The reason I speak so positively about it is, I rode on horse-back from Fort McLeod to the Columbia through the Crow's Nest Pass for my own personal instruction, and to ascertain what there was there. If I understand this bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they have secured the charter of the British Columbia Southern Railway Company. They paid them so much conditionally, that they were to have 5,000 acres of coal land only, for their own use and purposes so as to prevent —a very wise precaution on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—there being extortionate rates charged to them or to others, and to prevent a monopoly. The government in making their bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if I understand it correctly, exacted in addition to other conditions, 50,000 acres of the coal lands. If I have arrived at a correct conclusion from reading the debates, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company do not secure those 50,000 acres of land from the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, who hold the charter, then the government is not to pay any of the subsidy. Is that the case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then that land will have to be procured.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is part of the conditions, that they acquire from the British Columbia Southern Company the 50,000 acres. The 50,000 acres are now in the Crown, represented by British Columbia, and will remain there until the lands are earned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand, it is in this position : the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made a bargain with the British Columbia Southern County Railway Company for their charter. They have a certain time, after the passage of this bill, to complete that bargain. If the British Columbia Southern Railway Company refuse to make a concession in the bargain which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has made with them, then the bargain between the British Columbia Southern and the Canadian Pacific Railway fails; and it follows that, notwithstanding any expenditure that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may have made, the government is not bound—and, as I understood Mr. Blair to say, he made it part of the contract that they should not receive any portion of the government subsidy. Is that the fact?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the condition, that they are to hand over 50,000 acres to the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to oppose this scheme. I think it is improvident. I think you are paying too much, but at the same time my principal reason for not objecting to it is that it is an undertaking which may, and probably will, prove profitable to the company, because if it proves profitable to the company it will be beneficial to the country, and we can afford to be liberal in order to retain within our own country the trade of that section of the Dominion, whatever it may be, rather than let it go to the United States; therefore, from a national point of view I am quite willing, speaking for myself, and I think it is the interests of this country that we should deal liberally with those who undertake enterprises of this kind. If that land were such as my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Wood) intimates it is, the subsidies would be enormous, and if the lands are as valuable from a mineral standpoint, as we hope they are, then it will be an enormous subsidy, but even if it is an enormous subsidy, if we can drain the trade of that section and of the United States south of the line through Canada, we will reap an ample reward for the expenditure, and from a national standpoint, I am quite willing to give my support to a scheme of this kind, although, I repeat, I think you are paying a little too much for the whistle.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—If this road is such a one as is likely to pay from its inception, as many believe, I think the government should have built it as a government undertaking, from first to last. We are granting a pretty liberal subsidy, and it is stated in the public press that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were going on with the construction of that road before there was any grant by the government. It was only the other day I saw a statement made in the Montreal Witness to the effect that the government subsidy was not necessary to secure the construction of the road. That is confirmed by the fact that at the last meeting of the shareholders the directors declared that they had determined to construct the line as a profitable undertaking. The article I refer too is as follows:

> That the government subsidy was not necessary to secure the construction of the road is proved by the fact that at the last meeting of the shareholders the directors declared that they had determined to construct the line as a profitable undertaking. The company had already begun operations to that end, and shortly afterward bought the material for the road. When those opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's taking possession of the only pass through the Rockies south of the pass already possessed by the company, raised a protest, they were told that the company could not be restrained, as their charter empowered them to construct branch lines anywhere in the North-west. So it came to this, that the government was then being urged to grant, and has now granted, a subsidy of three and a third million dollars to a company to build a road which the company had already declared its intention of building. The Canadian Pacific Company evidently regard the road as one which would pay, and those who urged its construction declared it would be commercially profitable from the date of its completion. Moreover, the company had already possession of a charter for the construction of that portion of the line in British Columbia which carried with it enormous grants of valuable coal areas.

Now, that is the opinion of a newspaper which has been supporting the government, and which is still supporting the government. The construction of that road may possibly, and probably will, be a benefit to British Columbia, and to that portion west, but it will be of no benefit whatever to this section of the Dominion. The principal mining industries in the neighbourhood of Rossland, in British Columbia, are in the hands of citizens of the United States, and it is in that way going to benefit those who are located there more than it will benefit Canadians, because there are very few Canadian interests in the vicinity of Rossland. I consider, myself, that the grant given by the government to this road for the purpose of extending the line, has been a very extravagant one, and that the proposition made by the late government to bonus the road to the extent of $5,000 a mile and to lend the company $20,000 a mile for the purpose of construction, would have been a much better one for the country. With the interests that are now being developed in British Columbia, if that course had been persisted in, there is no doubt that the road would have been constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the Dominion would have saved a large amount of money.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It might not be amiss to put on record at this stage the recorded opinion of a very prominent minister of the government with regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway: I refer to Sir Richard Cartwright. He said:

> Why, he asked, should we be called upon to tax the ratepayers of Canada $108,000 for the development of some valuable coal mine, whether it belongs to the British Columbia government or to some private individuals? What justification is there for heaping on this overburdened people expenditures for enterprises of the merits of which we know nothing at all, and which, if they be one-quarter as valuable or one-tenth as valuable as they have been represented by the hon. gentleman, ought to be able to pay their own way? I object to the whole system, for the matter of that. But particularly, it seems to me, that going into the wilderness in this fashion on the vague statement that there are valuable coal mines in which, even though they are as valuable as they are represented, the people of Canada have no interest, is something worse than throwing away our money. The pratical result of all this is that these gentlemen whom the hon. gentleman has just named, these capitalists, as I believe some of them are, not content with having got very cheaply, an extremely valuable deposit, must needs come to the parliament of Canada and demand that the ratepayers be obliged to contribute $108,000 for the purpose of making their individual fortunes.

I do not know what the $108,000 refers to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It refers to the bonus of $3,200 per mile, offered by the late government, amounting to $180,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Sir Richard Cartwright came to the conclusion that the government should leave the affair severely alone. I have just read this as another illustration of the extraordinary swallowing capacity of the gentlemen comprising the present government. I do not oppose this bill. I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that the bargain might have been a better one in the interests of Canada, but I think, as I have thought for some years, that it is the duty of the government of Canada to open up that valuable mining, and to some extent grazing, country of Southern British Columbia and on that account I am not opposed to the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is the age of conversions.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (151) "An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the bill. He said:—This is known as the Railway Subsidies Bill. The only material point about it is in reference to the grading of the subsidy where the cost of construction is in excess of $15,000 a mile. I might say here that the larger number—nearly all of the railways that are being aided by this bill, have already been before parliament, and subsidies voted to them. They have not been built, and probably a great many of them will never be built. In answer to the observations made by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island in which he said that petitions had not been presented to parliament, the practice in the past has been, I believe, that the railway companies apply always to the Minister of Railways, and he submitted the list of applications to the Governor in Council, and the selection was there made of those that would be submitted to parliament for the approval of subsidies. The last Subsidy Bill was submitted in 1894. It embraced sixty railways. This is in one respect more modest, as the number is less than fifty—some forty odd railways.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to ask one or two questions of the hon. gentleman in regard to this proposed grading of subsidies, about this $3,200 per mile—what the government include in the cost of construction?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the past, in special cases where the country was known to be very difficult to build a road in, subsidies to the amount of $6,400 have been given, and it was thought that it would be fairer to grade the amount where it was over $15,000 per mile. Perhaps in one case the road might cost $20,000 per mile and another $25,000, and in those cases they would receive the same subsidy of $6,400. It was considered the experiment should be tried to grade them. Attention was called to the fact in the House of Commons that where a road was built into a town or city it might enable a road, which otherwise might not be entitled to $6,400, to obtain that subsidy, and so an amendment was made, in this bill, that it should not include the cost of equipping the railway, nor the cost of terminals of the railway in any city or incorporated town; so that it would only apply on the ordinary line, and not be due to causes which would of course increase the cost of all railways—that is the entry into towns. The practice has been to give to bridges fifteen per cent of the cost. There is no statute on the subject, but it has been a settled practice that railway bridges, as a rule, receive that subsidy. I do not know of any case where it was refused. It is here provided that where the bridge forms part of the railway line, and the cost of the bridge does not exceed $25,000, it counts in as part of the line. Where the cost is greater than that, it is entitled to the usual bonus of fifteen per cent on the cost.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Do I understand that these clauses are added in the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These amendments are made in the bill.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—We have not seen them here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they were made in the House of Commons this morning.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Those amendments do certainly remove what appeared to me to be the chief objection to that feature of the bill. There is only one other question which I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, and that is with regard to town and municipal grants. Do the government deduct them in estimating——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no, they have never been deducted in the past.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has that bill been circulated?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it has only been printed. This bill and the Supply Bill have never been printed as a rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These subsidies are set out in the minutes of the House of Commons. The resolutions are set out in the minutes of the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another very important point to which the hon. gentleman has not called attention.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They were only made in the House of Commons this morning.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. I was going to point out that though they may be in the minutes of the House of Commons, we do not see the amendments and consequently cannot speak intelligently upon them. If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken had seen the amendment, he would have been saved the trouble of asking the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I must apologize of course. The practice has been an objectionable one, and I shall do my best to have it changed. If you look over the journals you will see that in former sessions the House of Commons has sent down a number of bills on the last day when it was impossible for us to give them proper consideration. We have often protested, and I think we will insist another year that this shall not be allowed to continue. It is not justifiable. I can only throw myself on the kindness of the House on the present occasion and apologize for what I think is an improper treatment of this House.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—We are not in a position to consider those bills intelligently without having them before us a little earlier, and having some time to give thought and attention to them. If I have correctly understood the amendments which the hon. gentleman has just read, they certainly do remove the objection which I had to the bill as it stood before. It was objectionable as it first came in.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask the hon. gentleman in charge of this bill how the cost of the railways which exceed $15,000 is to be ascertained?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government engineer is to inquire into it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that in the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think it is. The actual cost has to be ascertained.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if there is a provision in this bill which I have seen referred to as being a very desirable one to put into bills of this nature, providing that if the government require at any time to take over one of these railroads, the subsidy which was paid by the government would be taken into consideration in payment for the road? Is there such a provision in this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. I have never known that to be in a bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It would be a very proper precaution to take, I think, in granting bonuses of this kind to railroads. Not having seen a copy of the bill, and knowing very little about it, I should like to ascertain whether there is a vote there of $114,270 for the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company for 85 miles of road.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think that is in.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—And is there a vote to the Grand Trunk for a subsidy towards the building of the enlargement of the Victoria bridge at Montreal—fifteen per cent on the amount expended, $300,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is in.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—We have these explanations in a round about way, and a good deal of information which it would be desirable for us to have, we have to take on trust, not having a copy of the bill before us and knowing nothing of the various amounts it is proposed to grant under this bill. On some other occasions similar bills have been brought down very late in the session, and these objections were taken against them. I thought with a change in the administration that all these little matters, which those in opposition had occasion to find fault with in other years, would have been amended, but it is the same now as it was before. I had occasion once, when I was present near the close of the session before, to urge the same objection against votes of this kind, and I believe one or two of us here present on that occasion voted against the bill altogether, and I hope this will be the last time that similar bills will come in at such a late period of the session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the motion is carried, I want to put on record my protest against the further subsidizing of railways in the manner in which they are presented to us here to-night. In the past, hon. gentlemen opposite could find no language strong enough to denounce the policy of subsidizing railways in different parts of the country; now, they are proposing to extend that principle. I was in hopes, after reading a very able article a few months ago in the columns of the leading organ of the gentlemen who now rule the destinies of this country, that the system, as it has been in vogue for a number of years, was going to cease. The bad effects that it pointed out, if correct, which have justified the present government in putting a stop to these subsidies, until the revenues of the country at least, would have warranted further expenditure. When the late government first adopted the system of subsidizing railways, it was out of surplus revenues, and it is well known that in countries where there is self-government, the principle is that just as soon as the revenues of the country exceed the annual requirements, the taxation should be reduced. In England we know that is done almost every year, but their system of levying taxes is so different from that which prevails in this country, that that system could not well be adopted in Canada, because it would be disarranging the whole tariff regulations and the whole fiscal policy of the country. In England, where you have an income tax and various other means of raising money, you can easily take a penny off the income tax or add a penny to it, and thereby increase or diminish the revenue some millions a year. Instead of the government acting upon the principle which they had laid down for so many years, that it was vicious in principle to continue a practice of this kind, they are not only satisfied with adopting the policy of the old government, but they have duplicated it by taking the power to themselves to increase the subsidy to any of these railways just one hundred per cent. Why should we have adopted that course, particularly when we know that for two or three years past, there has been a falling off of the revenue, and a deficit, with a prospect of a deficit this year, and perhaps for one or two years to come, and we can only supply that deficit by borrowing, thereby increasing the public debt and the annual interest which we have to pay, which will either have to be raised by direct taxation, or by indirect taxation or by borrowing money. I was sincerely in hopes—because I have had my doubts of the propriety of continuing a system of this kind for a long time—that the organ of the party to which I refer was speaking the sentiments of the government, but unfortunately the organ has changed as rapidly as the government has, and we have now before us a system which gives the Minister of Railways and Canals and his colleagues the power to increase by one hundred per cent the subsidies to all these railways whenever an opportunity presents itself. Does any body suppose for a moment that there is a single railway to be subsidised today, that will not get $6,400 instead of $3,200?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The original basis upon which the $3,200 was given, was that it was then calculated that that amount would purchase the rails for the railing of all these roads. At that time the rails were from twenty-five to thirty or thirty-three and a third, and in some cases forty per cent dearer than they are at present. So you not only rail the road for the $3,200, but you add to that by direct subsidy for the grading and so on, and now you double it. I hope this is going to cease, unless under the new economic arrangements of our tariff you are going to get an immense surplus. Then you can spend it, and I do not know that you can spend it in a better way. But what I object to in this bill more than anything else is the placing in the hands of any party—and more particularly an unscrupulous party, if there be any such thing in the person of the Minister of Railways—the power to hold out to railway builders or speculators the inducement of $6,400 a mile under certain circumstances. It has been declared in this House over and over again within the last few days that there is no road that does not cost $15,000 and more per mile. If that is so, they will get the increased subsidy. The question put by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Macdonald) was a very pertinent one, and more particularly in the light of events which have occurred in connection with railways. The government have tried to purchase the Drummond County Railway, which has been subsidized by the Dominion government, by the local government, and by municipalities to the extent of six or seven thousand per mile all through—some six thousand odd dollars per mile. Now we are going to add $3,200 per mile to the regular subsidy granted to the company that is to build the balance of that road of some forty two miles. The subsidy will be doubled in that case beyond a doubt. The question asked by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, supposing the experiment that you are to try with the $157,500, that you have taken for the purpose should prove to be of such a character as to justify your buying that road, are you then going to give them the full value of the road, or will you deduct this additional subsidy which you are now giving the company? If you decide hereafter to purchase, and can induce parliament to purchase, you are assisting the same gentlemen to the tune of $6,400 per mile to complete the road to the Chaudière, and then you turn round and pay them at the rate of $17,000 per mile for the road that you have helped to build. It is about time the whole of us went into railway building, if we can get the government to purchase roads from us at that rate, or, in other words, get the government to pay about $17,000 per mile for a road which cost the promoters six or seven thousand dollars at most. If we had time, I certainly would move to add a clause to the bill, making two provisions, one that in case of a purchase of any road by the government, whether for a branch of the Intercolonial Railway or any other purpose, the amount of subsidy granted by the government should be deducted from the purchase money. I would go further—I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to this point, that we grant a large subsidy for the construction of a road: we afterwards find that the road, so far as its paying properties are concerned, is useless, and it fails. There is no redress at all. You cannot take it. I think the government should be enabled, under those circumstances, to take possession of the road and, if necessary, to sell it and recoup themselves for the amount of money which has been expended upon it. I have heard no explanation on these railway subsidies yet, nor have I read of any in the lower House, or the reasons which induced them to take the Baie des Chaleurs road to experiment with at the expense of the country, and whatever reasons there may be for it I should like to understand what authority the government has to take any railway under its control, run it at the expense of the country and lose a lot of money without the sanction and authority of parliament. I am not aware that the government has one tittle ofauthority by law to take possession of any railway and run it for the advantage of the people who live along the road, at the expense of the country. If they have, perhaps the Minister of Justice could inform us of it; and if they have not, they should inform the House, if they have not already informed the country, the reasons why they take that in hand, and by what authority it was done, and whether they have asked an indemnification from parliament for spending the public money without the authority of parliament. It is a very grave question. I may have overlooked the debates in the House of Commons, and consequently may be speaking not by the book, but I have failed to hear or to read of any explanations why the government did what I have indicated they have done. We know that they did take it in hand at a time when it was thought it was going to pass into the hands of the Quebec government. They might better have left it to the Quebec government to operate. As I understand, it proved a failure and caused a large loss to the revenue of the country, and then they gave it up. What is being done with the road now I do not know. I make these remarks to place myself upon record as opposed to the principle of the distributing of subsidies in the reckless manner we have been in the past indulging in, and more particularly against that clause which duplicates the amount to be paid, leaving it to the discretion of the Minister of Railways and his colleagues to say whether they shall advance it or not. If there has been corruption in the past, we are placing it in the hands of the government to perpetuate that system, and to increase it to an enormous extent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a point in connection with the extra subsidy to which I should have called the attention of the House:

> Any company receiving a subsidy in excess of $3,200 shall be bound to carry Her Majesty's mail free of charge for a period of ten years.

That applies to all railways where the subsidy is more than $3,200. It was not supposed that it was going to increase the amount at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course that is no security where the road fails to run, as happened with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and I think one railway in the county of Albert, N.B.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If they earn more than $3,200 they are bound to carry the mails free for ten years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you purchase that Drummond County Railway will the subsidy be refunded?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh yes, I announced that. There is no mistake about it. It was announced in the House of Commons. We would not be likely to overlook that.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (129), "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where is this bill? Can we see it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill is limited to placing the mail clerks under one superintendent. The mail clerks are now under the inspector of each locality, and it was thought that considerable improvement could be made in the service if they, instead of running short routes, ran longer routes under the direction of the chief inspector. It is recommended by Mr. Sweetman, the head of the branch. It was at his suggestion entirely that the bill was introduced. There is no principle involved in the bill. It is simply placing the mail clerks under one chief, who has been in the department for the last thirty years, and who thinks both economy and efficiency will be secured if the control is removed from the local inspector to one general inspector who will define the longer routes. As it is at present, the mail clerk enters upon the car, and he goes perhaps fifty or sixty miles. He might just as well finish the route to some terminal point, one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five miles, instead of having a change. The bill does not disturb any other portion of the administration of that department than the mail clerks, placing them under one chief, and it is recommended by the gentleman who has been for the last thirty years in charge of that department.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may mention that the bill is not now in the form in which it was printed. There was a clause in the bill which authorized the Postmaster General to make contracts, and that met with considerable opposition in the House of Commons, and was omitted from the bill. As it comes now, the bill met with the unanimous approval of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then the bill, as I have it in my hand, is not the bill now introduced?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, the objectionable clause has been struck out.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It may be a very good bill, but we know nothing about it. I did not understand from the hon. Secretary of State what the advantages are going to be. Is it going to curtail the expense in any way?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it will not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At present a mail clerk runs thirty or forty miles, according to the instructions of the local inspector under whom the clerks are supposed to be. Under this bill he may have to run a hundred miles, according to the instructions of the general inspector, and that will be his particular beat, and he will distribute the letters over that whole line. At present they are limited to local divisions, and when a man reaches the end of his division, somebody else has to come into the car and take up the work of distributing the letters, and that requires two or three servants where the work might be done by one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would you kindly repeat that last statement?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At present, as I am advised, the railway mail clerks are under the control of the local inspector, and it is proposed in this bill to place them under the control of one officer, who can direct them to extend their beat say for a hundred miles instead of fifty miles, and in that way it is believed a less number of officials will be able to perform the work in a more satisfactory manner than at present.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not agree with the view taken of this measure by the hon. Secretary of State. It seems absurd for any gentleman to state that the route of a mail clerk may be extended by another officer. There is no province in which a railway mail clerk, who is under the control of the inspector of that province, can have a longer route than he can reasonably be expected to run over and return in one day, and I can see, therefore, no object in appointing a superintendent of railway mail clerks. The postmaster of the particular province in which these mail clerks are stationed is the proper officer to have control of them. The postmaster at St. John, or some great mail centre, from which these mail clerks are sent out, is the proper officer to have sole control under the post office inspector of that division, and there is no reason in the world why the post office inspectors of the different divisions should not continue to do as they have done in the past, to regulate the mail clerks who may now run from the province of Quebec right through to Vancouver and back again under the control of the different inspectors that are over the route from one province of the Dominion to the other. I mean to say that there is no economy at all in the appointment of new officers as proposed under this bill. It will not lessen the pay of the mail clerks if they get mileage. They will travel more miles and their cost to the country will be increased without any advantage to the public service. I understood, until I heard the hon. Secretary of State explain the bill, that this bill contemplated the appointment of several superintendents. I gathered from what the hon. Secretary of State said in his remarks that it only contemplated the appointment of one superintendent for the whole Dominion. How is that going to be regulated?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh there will be others. I will read the report of Mr. Sweetman.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—If we had the bill before us we could gather from it what was intended: but a bill comes up at the last hours of the session, and it is only laid on the desk of the Minister who is leading the House. We cannot be expected to know what the provisions of such a bill may be, or to deal with it in such an intelligent manner as we might be expected to deal with it if we had the bill before us and had studied its provisions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. Secretary of State said there was only one superintendent to be appointed—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no, I think there are nine superintendents over the whole Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes. The bill is for the purpose of reorganizing the department under different heads. They are to appoint a controller who is to be the head of the whole mail service, and then in addition to that they are to have superintendents in different provinces and in different parts of the provinces, who communicate directly with the controller, and the operations of that branch of the service are to be carried on from the central point here. They have adopted, so far as I can ascertain, the system which prevails in the United States at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And in England, so I am told.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps so, but I know in the United States everything is operated from Washington. It is therefore a centralization of the whole system under one management in Ottawa. I feel quite confident, from the limited study I have been able to give this bill, that the system is not a bad one; I think it will work very well. I do not, however, believe that it is going to be an economical system, unless they can so reform the service as to dispense with a number of officers. In the other House the Postmaster General said:

> I am going to appoint from the experienced officers in the service a controller. We will have to increase his salary, but the office will be at headquarters here, at the department. They will appoint a certain number of superintendents also among the mail service.

Supposing it is eight or nine, as the hon. Secretary of State says, they will have to increase their salaries, because they are holding a superior position, being like a foreman in an establishment to guide and direct the others. What I would like to know is, who is to fill the position vacated by the controller and by the superintendents? If there be additional appointments, then certainly you have to adopt some other system by which you will carry out your idea of economy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The old system of inspectors, as far as regards the mail service, is to be discontinued. The local post office inspectors are not to deal with the mail service in the future. That I believe is the feeling of all the practical men in the Post Office Department—the postmasters and inspectors and the officers here at Ottawa. I do not know what is to be done with respect to the chief controller, but I know that in the provinces the intention is that, other things being equal, the government take the senior mail clerk.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They may or may not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am only speaking of what has been actually intimated to the officers in my own province. The senior mail clerk is taken, provided he is qualified, and made deputy or local head of the mail service, and there is no increase to the staff. It is not proposed that there shall be any increase to the staff in Nova Scotia ; whether the controller is to be an additional officer or not I do not know, but the local superintendents are not, I understand. This is introducing the system which exists in the United States and which the permanent officers of the department think is the better system.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand it, the bill, as we have it now, met with no opposition in the House of Commons. There was opposition to a clause which undertook to authorize the Postmaster General to make contracts without asking for tenders for the carriage of the mails. That clause was dropped by the Postmaster General, and the bill was then allowed to pass.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman tell me whether the position vacated by the officer who is appointed controller is to be filled or not? I understand the gentleman has already been selected from the service in Toronto, and from what I can learn he is a very good officer. But if his position in Toronto is to be filled, it is one addition to the staff. Are the places of the superintendents who are selected from the mail service to be filled?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then that is an evidence that there are too many in the service now, because they perform certain duties. I am only discussing the economic part. I asked my hon. friend the former Postmaster General, from London (Sir John Carling), his opinion as to this bill, and he thinks it is a good thing that an organization will be effected under this bill by which you can direct from headquarters the operations all over the county, without that friction which arises from the constant bickerings which take place in the different sections. If the Postmaster General can carry out the provisions of that bill without adding to the staff, then I think he will have effected a good reform.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—But it must be the duty of the Postmaster General now to direct all these officers of the department. It is just taking a certain duty away from the Postmaster General, and appointing other officers to assist in carrying it out.

Hon. Mr. COX—I am authorized by the Postmaster General to say that there will be no new appointments at all, and there will be a very substantial saving under this bill, besides much greater efficiency in the service.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think that is all it is for, to create greater efficiency. The main provisions of the bill are in operation at the present time, and are working very well, and I do not think it is intended to cause any increase in the civil service whatever.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Does not the inspector now control all these subordinate inspectors?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think it is his duty to control them. He is a very efficient man, and I have great confidence in him. I think he is the man before all others who would perform that duty remarkably well. That duty might rest in his hands altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the Minister of Justice will inform the Postmaster General that if he brings down an important bill of this kind at so late period, next session, that we will throw it out.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (130) "An Act further to amend the Civil Service Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the bill. He said:—The bill reads:

1. The paragraph substituted by section one of chapter fifteen of the statutes of 1895, for paragraph (b) of section ten of The Civil Service Act, chapter seventeen of the Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"b. No person shall be appointed to any place in the first or inside departmental division of the Civil Service—other than that of a deputy head, or controller of railway mail service or superintendent of railway mail service, or other officer or employee transferred from the outside service to the railway mail service branch—on probation or otherwise, whose age exceeds thirty-five years, or who has not attained the full age of fifteen years, in the case of a porter, messenger, or sorter, or the full age of eighteen years, in other cases."

2. Schedule B to the said Act is hereby amended by inserting before the words "railway mail clerks," the following words:—

"Controller of the rail mail service, salary not exceeding $2,500;

"Superintendents of railway mail service, salary not exceeding $1,500;"

2. The said schedule B is hereby further amended by inserting, under the sub-heading "clerks in city post office," between the words "letter-carriers" and "messengers" the words "Sorters and Stampers."

Mr. Mulock says that as the Civil Service Act now stands, there is no medium grade between $400 and $1,100, and he wants to provide that men who are simply engaged in sorting and stamping letters might be paid at a grade between those two, according to what they are now. The clause providing for the second class clerks has been repealed, and there are no second class clerks now. There is no provision made for officers who might earn a sum between $400 and $1,100, and what he says is there are a number of persons appointed from time to time as sorters and stampers, and it seems unreasonable to give them $1,100.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman tell us there is no power in the Postmaster General or the government to regulate the salaries between $400 and $1,100?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the second class clerk is abolished.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But a man is appointed third class clerk at $400, and under the system he receives his $50 increment every year until he reaches $1,000. Are these a different class, or are these men appointed to do work, who have passed no examination? Who are they?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sorters and stampers, who do no other work but sort and stamp. There are a large number of them, and they are appointed from time to time, and the Postmaster General was quite anxious they should be classed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are they subject to examination?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think they are. Do I understand that this is to give power to the Post master General for the raising of a man's salary who gets only $400 at present? The Secretary of State does not seem to understand that because that is what he implied.

Hon. Mr. COX—It classifies the sorters, stampers and letter carriers all together.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Do they pass the examinations?

Hon. Mr. COX—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the maximum salary they are to be paid, or does this bill give any further power to increase it?

Hon. Mr. COX—$600.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not see that we require to make any change in the present law under those circumstances. If those persons now enter the service and their salary can go up to $600, why should a man, whose duty is only mechanical, stamping letters or anything of that kind, go on having his salary increased and be promoted from third class clerk and so on to a first class clerk, when his work can be performed by any person who receives an ordinary day's pay, and who is not really of any higher qualification than a day labourer? I think there is a very great injustice in the provisions of the Civil Service Act as it has been administered for some time past, and we can go into any of the departmental offices here and find persons receiving a salary over $1,000 whose work is merely clerk's work, mechanical work, which might be done by a young man or by an old man who would be very glad to get that work to perform for one-third of the salary some of these people are receiving. On the other hand, there may be persons who are qualified to fill a much higher office receiving only the salary that a third class clerk is entitled to. These are discrepencies, if I may so term them, in the Civil Service administration, which I think might very well be remedied. I cannot see that there is any benefit, or any beneficial reformation whatever in the bill which is now before us. This is a bill which comes to this House at a time when we have no opportunity of considering its terms properly, or going into its merits; and it is one which, to my mind, it is our duty to oppose at this stage of the session. It would be the duty of every member who stands up for the dignity of the Senate to oppose such a bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill is just to accomplish what it proposes. The present Civil Service Act, which I hold in my hand, is amended by inserting after the words "clerks of the post office" the words "sorters and stampers." It is to bring the sorters and stampers under this clause.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—But a sorter is a higher official than a stamper, because he has to look at the letter, and see where it is going.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the letter carrier must do the same thing.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second and third time and passed.

THE PROROGATION.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I may inform the House that the business before us is now completed and arrangements have been made that prorogation should take place to-night at eight o'clock.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman should have thanked the House for the assiduity with which we have attended to the public business. We will promise him, if we are all here next session, to give just as much attention to the business brought before us. If the hon. gentleman thinks we have not paid sufficient attention during the present session, we will promise him to pay little more attention next session. Possibly there may have been some hard expressions; I never use any myself, but the hon. gentleman who sits opposite me (Sir O. Mowat) often loses his temper, and says that which, upon reflection and in sober moments, he regrets exceedingly, and I would suggest to him the propriety—being about his own age, perhaps a little older, or little whiter—and the necessity of trying to cultivate a feeling of good-will between himself and those who differ from him, and if he will only cultivate those lamb-like propensities which characterize the hon. gentleman, particularly when discussing with one like myself, who has no temper at all, never exhibits any, always mild on every occasion, and fearful of expressing any opinion—if he adopts that lamb-like manner we will get along well next session. This is the end of the session. Perhaps some of us have said harsh things in speaking of each other, but as we are about to part we will try and forget them, and study to be a little more amiable in our dispositions in the future, providing the hon. gentleman does not rile us, and if he does, on occasions of that kind he must expect to get a Roland for an Oliver, and if the Olive is not too green, we will try to digest it in the best possible manner.

Hon. Sir OLIVER MOWAT—I am glad to know that my hon. friend regrets any hard words that he used during the session, and means not to do the same sort of thing in future sessions. I have done my best to have the proceedings of this House conducted with amity and good feeling, and I think to a large extent I have succeeded in that. I do not think any assembly such as this is has ever manifested less bad feeling than the Senate has done during this session. Occasionally some things passed which were not of the most pleasant character, but you cannot expect to be entirely free from that sort of thing in such an assembly, and those occasions were very few. I do not think any of us will leave here with any enmity towards one another. I think we shall all leave here friends, with our friendship strengthened, and if we had any uncomfortable feeling, I think the tendency has been for it to pass away. Next session we hope to have a bill of fare that even hon. gentlemen opposite will be obliged to accept without saying one word against it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—May I ask what has become of that committee that was appointed to investigate matters connected with the Intercolonial Railway and Drummond County Railway Bill? I received a notice to attend to-morrow morning, at half-past ten. Are we dissolved? Am I obliged to obey that summons for to-morrow morning?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the Minister of Justice will tell you that once parliament is prorogued that dissolves the committee, and of course the government take the responsibility.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

7.30 P.M.

His Honour the Speaker informed the House that he had received the following communication :—

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
OTTAWA, 29th June, 1897.

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows :—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bill :—

"'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.'

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Eighth Parliament of the Dominion with the following Speech :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from further attendance in parliament, I desire to thank you for the assiduity with which you have discharged the duties of a fatiguing session, and I congratulate you on the very important legislation which has been the outcome of your deliberations.

The revision of the tariff, which occupied a large part of the session, has been completed in a manner which, I trust, will prove effective in promoting the trade and commerce of the Dominion. It is gratifying to know that this measure has been recognized as one of Imperial importance, and that it has already had a marked effect in strengthening the bonds which unite Canada to the motherland.

The arrangements for establishing a fast steamship line of the highest class between Great Britain and Canada, with the co-operation and assistance of the Imperial and Canadian governments, encourage me to hope that at no distant day we shall see the accomplishment of that very important project.

I am pleased to observe that you have made provision for extending substantial aid to various important railway enterprises, which are designed to develop the vast mineral wealth of Canada, and to improve the facilities for transportation and travel.

The bill to provide an effective system of cold storage on land and sea will promote the interests of our agriculturists by affording means for the transportation of perishable food products and placing them in the best condition in the great markets of the world.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the public services.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The session now closing will be memorable not only on account of the important measures which have been passed, but also because it has been held during the year of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, in which the people of all parts of the empire united in celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of the reign of Her Magesty Queen Victoria. The splendid demonstrations which have taken place throughout the Queen's Dominions testify at once the loyalty and affection of the people towards their sovereign and the unity of the British Empire. I know that you rejoice with me that Canada has worthily performed her part in these great events.

In now taking leave of you, I desire to express my best wishes for your personal happiness and my earnest hope that the work of the session may prove useful in advancing the prosperity of the people whom you represent.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and
Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure that this parliament be prorogued until Wednesday, the eleventh day of August next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until Wednesday, the eleventh day of August next.
