OFFICIAL REPORT

OF THE DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

FIFTH SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT

---

5 GEORGE V., 1915

VOL. CXXI.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE THIRTY-FIRST DAY OF MARCH TO THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF APRIL, INCLUSIVE.

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY J. DE L. TACHÉ, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY 1915

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—REVISED EDITION.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Speaker: HON. THOMAS SIMPSON SPROULE.

Wednesday March 31, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

THE METRIC SYSTEM.

*Mr. MICHAUD:

1. Is it a fact that the Imperial Government has rendered compulsory in Great Britain since January last the use of the metric system of weights and measures for pharmaceutical preparations?

2. If so, what is the text of the Order in Council putting in force said change?

3. Does the Canadian Government intend to follow the example of the Imperial Government?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. No. The use of the metric system is not compulsory in England, but simply legalized. Recently it has been adopted by the Druggists' Association as the most convenient.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The metric system has the same status in Canada as in England. It is legalized after standards adopted by La Convention Internationale du Metre. The metric standards are kept by the Department of Inland Revenue.

MAPLE SUGAR AND SYRUP.

Mr. KAY:

1. Has the Government taken any steps to enforce the provisions of the Adulteration Act establishing standards for maple sugar and maple syrup, passed in June, 1914?

2. If not, is it the intention of the Government to take immediate action against infringements of this Act?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. The Act passed in June, 1914, came into force only on the 1st January, 1915, and as important amendments were to be made at the present session, it was deemed advisable to wait a little longer before making investigation as to whether it was complied with or not.

2. An amendment to the Adulteration Act is at present before Parliament. When this is sanctioned, steps will at once be taken to ascertain whether the Act is being complied with or not, and proceedings taken against any party violating the law.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—EMPLOYEES AT CHAUDIERE.

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. Is the Government aware that a regulation is reported to have been passed by the management of the Intercolonial railway, to take effect on the 5th March, instant, in virtue of which the employees on the Intercolonial, working at Chaudière, have lost time marked, and are not paid for such lost time, when they arrive after the hour fixed by such regulation, even though such delay is due to the sub-train which carries them from Lévis to Chaudière?

2. Is the Government aware that, in virtue of the same regulation, these same employees are obliged to receive their cheques at the supplies department and to cross several tracks on which locomotives are constantly moving?

3. Does the Government intend to continue the said regulation in force?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. The same regulations are in force at Chaudière Junction as at other engine houses on the system. Employees arriving late on account of the train being delayed are allowed to commence work at once, and paid accordingly; those arriving late through their own fault are not permitted to commence work until the next hour.

2. The time office is in the stores building. There are three tracks between the stores building and the round house which it is necessary for the men to cross. The movement over these tracks is not extensive and is slow, and necessary precautions are being taken to protect the men. This is only a temporary arrangement pending the installation of a time clock in the machine shop.

3. Yes.

TELEGRAPHERS' EMPLOYMENT.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Is the Government aware that on the 1st of January, 1915, the Great North Western Telegraph Company and the Canadian Northern Telegraph Company are said to have been amalgamated and that both lines are now operated under the name of Great North Western Telegraph Company?

2. Is the Government aware that, as alleged, George C. Corman and A. J. Worzel, both employees in the Montreal office of the Great North Western Telegraph Company, were given fifteen days' notice that after the 25th of March instant their services would no longer be required?

3. Is the Minister of Labour aware that these men hold first-class records and ample seniority, and that the action of the said company in this instance is contrary to the provisions of article 5 of the Award of the Board of Conciliation of 1911?

4. Does the Government, or the Department of Labour, intend to take any steps to have this rectified?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Statements on the subject of an apparently authentic character have been observed.

2. Communications received are to the general effect stated.

3. Communications received from the officers of the labour organization affected represent the situation generally to be as stated.

4. The matter has been taken up with the employing company concerned with a view to having what is possible done to have the differences which have arisen amicably arranged.

PRICE OF EXPORT HERRINGS.

Mr. MICHAUD:

Is it the intention of the Government to adopt a regulation under the provisions of the Fisheries Act regulating the price of small fresh herrings caught in Canadian waters and exported fresh to the Untied States?

Mr. HAZEN: No. The Fisheries Act does not give authority to make such a regulation.

RIGAUD WHARF.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Have tenders been called for the work being carried on at present on the Rigaud wharf?

2. If so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of their tenders?

3. If not, who is in charge of such work?

4. What is the name or names of the superintendent or superintendents?

5. What amount did the Government appropriate for such work?

6. What is the scale of salaries paid to those who work on the said wharf?

7. Has it been recommended to the Government by its resident engineer and by others to purchase a piece of land adjacent to that belonging to the Government in order to lessen the incline of the road that is very steep between the wharf and the public highway?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. Paul Paradis, assistant engineer.

4. Hector Chevrier.

5. $2,500.

6. Superintendent, $3.50 per day; foreman-carpenter, $3.50 per day; carpenters, $3 per day; masons, $3 per day; labourers, $2 per day.

7. Yes.

THREE RIVERS PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BUREAU:

1. Why was the work on the public buildings at Three Rivers suspended?

2. Did the Government make any arrangements since the signing of the contract with the contractors for the construction of the said buildings?

3. What is the amount mentioned in the contract for the construction of the wharf at Cap de la Madeleine?

4. How much money has been paid for that wharf since the commencement of construction to date, and to whom, and why were such moneys paid?

5. At whose request were the works on the Three Rivers wharves during the years 1914 and 1915 carried on?

6. Are such works paid for by the Government, or by the Harbour Commissioners of Three Rivers?

7. (a) At what date did the Government authorize such works, and (b) to whom did it confide the undertaking?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Weather was too cold to build stonework. No instructions were given to suspend, the contractors did so themselves, principally because they had no stone ready.

2. Arrangements were made to make the north and south elevations similar to the Notre Dame street elevation.

3. Schedule rates, approximately $56,000.

4. Total cost to 1912-1913, $9,167.56. In 1913-1914 the wharf was enlarged, under contract; paid to date, $57,426.62; total, $66,594.18.

5. Works done during 1914-15 were to complete work already under contract.

6. By the Government.

7. (a) May 18, 1910, March 18, 1912. (b) Collins & Giroux, of Ottawa.

SS. TYRIAN REPAIRS.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Are any repairs now being made on the ss. Tyrian at Halifax?

2. If so, (a) who has the contract for the same, and (b) what is the amount to be expended?

3. Were tenders asked for said work? If so, who were asked to tender, and what were the amounts tendered, respectively?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Halifax Marine Engineering Co. has contract for repairs and renewals to machinery, $16,750, and for new boilers, $9,200; (b) T. Hogan & Co., Halifax, have contract for removal of old boilers, alterations to boiler room and installation of new boilers, $9,841.

3. Yes, tenders were called by public advertisement for new engines and boilers, and the following tenders were received:

Supply of New Engine.

1. Bow Mclachlin Co.	$10,416 00
2. McKie & Baxter	10,610 67
3. Polson Iron Works, Ltd.	12,244 00
4. The Jno. Inglis Co., Ltd.	12,500 00
5. The Halifax Engine Co., Ltd.*	14,300 00
6. Collingwood Shipbuilding Co, Ltd.	14,000 00
7. The Chaudière Machine and Foundry Co.	15,750 00

* Alternative offer to install compound surface condensing engine to be supplied by department and fit propeller to shaft, department to pay for ship hire and dockage, connect piping from boilers, pumps, circulating pump suction and discharge to sea, remove present engine and stow as directed for $13,600.

For repairs to old machinery.

1. The Halifax Marine Eng. Co., Ltd.	16,750 00
2. Burns & Kelleher	17,200 00

Supply of new boilers.

1. The Halifax Marine and Engine Co., Ltd.	9,200 00
2. International Engineering Works, Ltd.	9,500 00
3. The Jenckes Machine Co., Ltd.	9,554 00
4. Collingwood Shipbuilding Co., Ltd.	10,000 00
5. The Jno. Inglis Co., Ltd.	10,200 00
6. Polson Iron Works, Ltd.	10,936 00
7. The Chaudière Machine and Foundry Co.	18,500 00

Installation of new boilers.

1. The T. Hogan & Co.	9,841 00
2. Halifax Marine & Engineering Co.	14,550 00
3. A. A. Webber & Son	14,700 00

ARTHUR GILBERT.

Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. Has Mr. Arthur Gilbert been collector of excise or an employee of the Inland Revenue Department at Victoriaville?

2. When was he appointed to such position?

3. Did he succeed a Mr. J. U. Poirier and was the latter dismissed?

4. What salary did Mr. Gilbert receive during each of the years 1912, 1913 and 1914?

5. Had Mr. Gilbert an assistant at Victoriaville? If so, who was that assistant, and what was his salary?

6. What rent did the Government pay for Mr. Gilbert's office?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. Yes.

2. July 19, 1912.

3. Yes. Mr. J. U. Poirier.

4. 1912, $333.30; 1913, $799.92; 1914, $799.92.

5. No.

6. $20, monthly rent.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all applications received for Fenian raid bounty from residents of the county of Hants; also the names of persons who have been paid the bounty and those who have been refused it in said county; with the reasons for refusal, and showing the number of applications that have yet been dealt with.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of Public Works): I desire to draw the attention of the House to a statement that appeared in the Toronto Globe of yesterday, which, to say the least of it, seems to me rather unfair. It reads as follows:

Early Prorogation to Hush Scandals?

Ottawa, March 29.—It looks as though the Government is now eager and determined to "close shop." It proposes, if possible, to crowd through remaining business and prorogue by the end of the present week. To do this it will be necessary to abandon the Easter adjournment and sit on Saturday. The Government notice providing for the Eastertide adjournment was formally put in, but since has been mysteriously withdrawn. Importance is attached to the new move to end Parliament as soon as possible by reason of the fact that prorogation would bring automatically a termination to the embarrassing investigations of the Public Accounts Committee, the special inquiry on soldier's boots and other investigations which threaten further serious disclosures.

The facts are that the Clerk of the House, following his usual practice, and without any special notification from any member of the Government, placed the usual notice on the Order Paper that when this House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned till next Tuesday. The first intimation I had of that notice being on the Order Paper was when hon. gentlemen opposite requested that it be withdrawn, and that we sit on Saturday, and on Monday and Tuesday of next week, in the hope of being able to conclude the business of the House within that time. Therefore I think it was rather unfair of the Globe to make the statement that Importance is attached to the new move to end Parliament as soon as possible by reason of the fact that prorogation would bring automatically a termination to the embarrassing investigation of the Public Accounts Committee, the special inquiry on soldiers' boots and other investigations which threaten further serious disclosures.

I do not think that the Government, either in this House or in the Public Accounts Committee, have given any evidence of a desire to prevent any matter from coming out that hon. gentlemen desired to be brought to the attention of the House and the country. I claim that the statement of the Globe is a very unfair representation of the facts, by reason of the fact that if the motion mentioned has been withdrawn it has been withdrawn at the request of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have only to say that if this motion was withdrawn at the request of gentlemen on this side of the House, I have no knowledge of it. The attitude of the Opposition this session has been to facilitate business as much as they possibly could; I think everybody will agree that we have had no other desire. For my part, I at one time indulged in the hope that it would be possible to close by Easter, and some time ago, when the Government proposed to take Mondays, I asked what business they had still to bring down. We were told what business they had to bring down, but since that day the Government has been continually bringing down new business of which we had no notice. To-day there is a new Bill on the Order Paper, to amend the Supreme Court Act. We were given no notice of that. The Estimates were brought down only last evening. If, under such circumstances, we are to sit from day to day I have no objection, but I think it would be preferable to have the usual Easter adjournment. If the Government desires otherwise, we on this side of the House are ready to go on.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I gave notice of my motion to the Clerk, and it appears in the Votes and Proceedings this morning. It is in accordance with what I stated two or three days ago, that we should ask the House to adjourn Thursday night and sit again on Saturday and on Monday in order to speed business through as quickly as possible. The Opposition have a perfect right to sufficient time in which to consider all measures that are brought down. Some new measures have been brought down which were rather unexpected, but I am told they are not very serious, and I hope they will not take a very long time to discuss and dispose of. I am quite sure that the opinion which prevails on both sides of the House is that with the exception of Good Friday, we should stick to business until the business of the House is finished.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask if there are any more measures to be brought down by the Government, or is this the last?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There are no more measures to be brought down that I know of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: "I know of" is rather elastic.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: But of course one never knows what may happen.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am afraid that is true.

Mr. DOHERTY: The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has mentioned the Bill to amend the Supreme Court Act. Unless my memory is entirely at fault, when the right hon. gentleman asked the question as to what business might be expected, the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Robert Borden), on my reminding him of it, mentioned that there might possibly be a Bill to amend the Supreme Court Act. It is a very trifling amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think my hon. friend is right in that. But that was ten days ago, and the Bill now appears for the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT.

CORRECTION OF CLERICAL ERRORS.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), the House went into Committee on Bill No. 106, to amend the Representation Act, 1914—Sir Robert Borden; Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—Nipissing:

Mr. DOHERTY: As was explained when this Bill was introduced, its purpose is simply to correct certain errors in the description of some of the constituencies as set forth in the Act of last year providing for the redistribution. As I understand it, there are no substantial changes in any constituency. It is merely the correction of errors in description, and if I am correctly informed, the matter has been looked into by the committee that dealt with redistribution, and the Bill as it now stands represents correctly what was agreed upon as being necessary.

Mr. BUREAU: What are the constituencies affected by these corrections ?

Mr. DOHERTY: Nipissing, London, Quebec West, Jacques Cartier, Wright, Labelle and Hull, Portage la Prairie, Springfield, and some constituencies in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. PARDEE: This was necessary because, as I understand it, one side of the boundary of the city of London had been entirely left out and this describes it.

Mr. DOHERTY: The effect of the description was to include in London sections which it was not intended to include.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In regard to Nipissing, the first amendment simply strikes out the word "Kelly." Kelly should not be there?

Mr. DOHERTY: Kelly should not be there. I understand that Kelly is a township some seven townships to the south of the boundary. It was put in there by error.

On paragraph 4—Quebec West:

Mr. LACHANCE: Some explanation is necessary here. Perhaps the minister has an explanation to give.

Mr. DOHERTY: In the Act that was passed Limoilou was included in Quebec East. Limoilou includes the village of Stadacona, which was intended to be in Quebec West. For the purpose of taking Stadacona from Quebec East I beg to move:

That paragraph 4 be amended by inserting after the figure 6 the words: "(b) The description of the electoral district of Quebec East is amended by adding at the end thereof the following words: 'Exclusive of the village of Stadacona'; and further that clause (c) of the same paragraph 4 be amended by inserting in the third line, after the words 'St. Malo' the words, 'and the village of Stadacona.'"

This will have the effect of placing the village of Stadacona where it was intended to be placed, that is, in Quebec West.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: For the sake of clearness I would suggest that the section be redrafted as it should read, instead of amending it in this way.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think that would be better. There is a change to be made in regard to Hull and Labelle, and it might be understood that these sections will be taken as passed, they to be redrafted and the changes incorporated in them.

On section 5—Jacques Cartier shall not include any portion of St. Denis ward:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This amendment is not clear.

Mr. DOHERTY: St. Denis ward was in Jacques Cartier as it existed at the time of the passing of the Act, and it should have been included in the places that were excluded from Jacques Cartier. It was not mentioned as being excluded, though it is mentioned as forming part of a new electoral district.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is it in Maisonneuve?

Mr. DOHERTY: It is described as the electoral district of St. Denis, and the Act says that that electoral district shall be composed of the whole of St. Denis ward. As the Act stands, St. Denis ward is apparently in this new riding, and also in Jacques Cartier.

Section agreed to.

Mr. PARDEE: As I understand it, the amendment with regard to Hull and Labelle is in conformity with the arrangement made yesterday by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) with Mr. Gisborne, the law clerk.

Mr. DOHERTY: There has been no change that I know of.

Mr. PARDEE: The minister has before him the written amendment with regard to Labelle and Wright.

Mr. DOHERTY: This is sent to me as being the result of the conference.

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is there any change in section 6 with regard to Buckingham?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. In the description of the electoral district of Hull, the townships of Southeast Buckingham and North Templeton, not being named, were left in the electoral districts of Labelle and Wright respectively. It was intended that both those townships should be in Hull. That was the reason of the introduction of subsection 6 into this Bill. I understand that, as a result of the conference of yesterday, there was to be added to subsection 6 these words:

And the municipality of South Hull shall form part of the electoral district of Hull and not part of the electoral district of Wright.

Mr. ROGERS: That is changing the boundaries altogether. It is going too far.

Mr. DOHERTY: That amendment was handed to me as a result of a conference of yesterday. I am not myself sufficiently familiar with the geography of the district to know exactly what the change means.

Mr. ROGERS: If we adopt that amendment, we adopt the principle that we decided not to take into consideration at all, that is, the changing of the boundaries. I understood this Bill was simply to correct errors made in the descriptions of the electoral districts. This opens up a wider field altogether.

12 noon.

Mr. PARDEE: I understood from the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Achim) that a piece had been taken out of the city of Hull which should have been left in. South Hull was really transferred to another riding, although that was not the intention of the original Act at all.

Mr. ROGERS: It may be all right, but I think we had better allow the section to stand.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will have it recast.

Subsection 6 stands.

On subsection 8—Portage la Prairie:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the change here?

Mr. ROGERS: Under the Act as it now stands, the portions mentioned are included both in Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie. They will now be Winnipeg alone.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection 9—Springfield:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In what electoral district will the portions named be included?

Mr. ROGERS: According to the Act as it now stands, they are included in both Winnipeg and Springfield. They will now be in Winnipeg alone.

Subsection agreed to.

Progress reported.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT.

MAPLE SUGAR AND SYRUP.

On motion of Hon. P. E. Blondin (Minister of Inland Revenue) Bill No. 114, to amend the Adulteration Act was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—imitation or compound maple sugar or maple syrup to be labelled:

Mr. ROBB: Last session a deputation of the maple sugar makers of Canada was introduced to the Minister of Inland Revenue, and upon their recommendation a Bill on this subject was passed by Parliament. Will the minister please explain why it is that he comes before Parliament to-day asking for an amendment of that Act of last session? Upon whose demand is this new legislation introduced?

Mr. BLONDIN: As I stated on a previous occasion, it was found that the Act of last session was not workable. This Bill proposes to amend that Act so as to authorize the maker or seller of the imitation article to label the article so as to make the public aware that it is an imitation. I will give the details of these amendments.

Section 29 (a) as appears in section 4 of chapter 19 of the Revised Statutes, 1914, entitled "An Act To Amend the Adulteration Act," is repealed. This repealed section provided that no article of food should be sold as maple sugar or maple syrup unless it was pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, and that every article which did not comply with the standard for maple sugar and maple syrup as provided by statute should be deemed to be adulterated,—that is to say, in case the article represented to be maple sugar or maple syrup was offered for sale and did not comply with the standard, then the vendor would have to prove that it was really pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup.

The second subsection of that section provided that the word "maple" should not be used on a label of any article or on a package containing it unless the article was pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, but, by a clerical error, the words "which is or" were inserted at the end of the fourth line of said subsection and had the effect of prohibiting the use of the word "maple" on the label of even pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, thereby, in a certain sense, defeating the object of the Act.

The amendments provided in subsection 1 are, in effect: that any article of food which has the appearance of maple sugar or which is partly composed of maple sugar and maple syrup must bear a label containing the words "imitation maple sugar" or "imitation maple syrup" or "compound maple sugar" or "compound maple syrup," so that the purchaser of such an article shall receive due notice that what he is buying is in fact a "compound" or an "imitation" of maple sugar or maple syrup and thereby will not be deceived as to what he is purchasing.

Subsection 2 is to the same effect as the latter part of subsection 1 of section 29 (a) of last year's amendment, that is to say, it throws the obligation on the vendor of maple sugar or maple syrup, who does not comply with the standard of proving that the article is really maple sugar or maple syrup.

Subsection 3 is the same as subsection 2 of section 29 (a) of last year's amendment, with the exception that the words "which is or" are struck out.

Section 2 of the Bill amends sections 31 and 32 of the Adulteration of Foods Act. Section 31 is amended by adding the words " and not less than $25 and costs," in subsection (b) after the word " costs " in the third line thereof. In the Act as it stands at present, there is no minimum fine, and it is deemed advisable that a fine of $25 as a minimum should be imposed in cases of violation of the Adulteration Act, covered by this section.

Section 32 is amended for the same reason, the words " and not less than $50 and costs," are added after the word " both " in the fourth line of subsection (a), so that a minimum fine should be imposed in cases of violation of the Act provided for by this subsection.

The words, " and not less than $25 and costs, and for each subsequent offence a penalty not exceeding $200 and costs, or six months in jail, or both and not less than $50 and costs," are added to subsection (b) after the word " then " in the fourth line of said subsection (b). These two sections of the Act (31 and 32) are deemed incomplete as they are at present, and it was thought advisable to amend them in the manner suggested.

Section 37 of the Act is also repealed, and the amendment as suggested in section 3 of the proposed Bill is substituted therefor. The intention of this amendment is to reach the vendor of an article resembling maple syrup, who does not label this article as being an " imitation " or a " compound," and also provides for a higher minimum penalty, also for a penalty for subsequent offences, which section 37 as it is at present, does not provide for.

Subsection 40 of the Act is repealed, and replaced by the section appearing in section 4 of the present Bill. The intention of this amendment is to give the person who gives information or otherwise helps in the detection or violation of the Adulteration Act, one half the penalty. It is expected that this amendment will be a great help to the department in the application of the law and the detection of all violations thereof.

I understand that the most contentious question in regard to this Bill is whether the law should entirely prohibit the sale of compounds of maple syrup or maple sugar, or whether this trade should be allowed to go on provided the public are made aware that they are buying a compound or imitation article, and are not buying pure maple syrup or pure maple sugar. The reason in favour of allowing this trade to go on is that many people cannot afford to buy the pure article, but would like to buy the compound, which is cheaper. I am inclined to believe that there would be no objection to such sale so long as the public are made aware that they are buying the imitation; and I think that is one of the worst evils from which the maple sugar industry is suffering—that to-day the adulterated stuff can be sold on the market without my department being able to interfere to prevent it, even though the purchaser may be under the impression that it is pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup that he is purchasing. Under the present Act dealers may sell adulterated sugar or syrup provided they put no label on the package. The aim of the Act is to force the man who manufactures a compound or makes any adulteration of the sugar or syrup to announce it to the public and put on his package the word " imitation." So long as the maple sugar is pure the dealer is not obliged to use any label. Articles which have no labels on are supposed to be pure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The objection to this legislation, which comes so soon after the Act of last session, is that to some extent it favours adulteration. Adulteration is one of the evils of this modern age. Scarcely anything that comes upon the table is not in some way adulterated by some industrious man who derives a profit from doing so at the expense of the consumer. The manufacturers of maple sugar last year interviewed the Government protesting against the adulteration of maple sugar, and had it made an offence. I think everybody will agree that we should prevent, as far as we can, adulteration of any kind of food. This year those who have been adulterating maple sugar come back and ask permission still to sell adulterated sugar providing that they announce it to the public in a certain way, but they should not be allowed to adulterate it. Adulteration ought not to be encouraged, and the answer that should have been given those who came and asked the privilege of putting adulterated sugar on the market should have been: You must conform to the law, and the law passed last year requires that all maple sugar shall be pure. That should have been the answer instead of saying that they must announce that the sugar is adulterated. I think the objection taken by the hon. gentleman for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) is very serious, and ought to be taken into consideration by the Government, that the Bill which my hon. friend is now amending was introduced last year at the request of the maple sugar makers. They protested against their product being adulterated in any way, and I am surprised that, twelve months after passing that law, those against whom the law was directed are able to come back again and obtain the privilege of doing what was denied them last year.

Mr. BLONDIN: Although this Bill may appear to give more protection to the adulterators, it is, on the contrary, an effort to devise some means to follow them. What has happened under the law of last year? We have had more adulteration of maple sugar than we had before. Why? Because the dealers put on the market maple syrup with all kinds of labels which we cannot control, which did not contain the word "maple," while in many cases they informed their customers verbally that it was maple syrup they were selling.

Mr. BUREAU: How is the labelling of the packages going to help? Supposing a man sells an adulterated package and does not label it, he is liable to a fine. You must first have an inspector analyse the contents of the package to ascertain that it is not pure maple syrup. Under the old Act the man selling such adulterated goods would be subject to a fine. This is only recognizing the compound of maple syrup and helping the man who wishes to cheat the public to put on the market an article not fit for consumption. If you want to prevent that and to prevent compounds going on the market, you ought to make the man who offers the adulterated article subject to a penalty. You have no more guarantee that the man who is going to adulterate maple syrup will put his label on it than that the man who is offering maple syrup will say: This is not the right stuff I am selling you; I have put yellow sugar in it. The minister knows that the man who resorts to that means will not spend money to put labels on his goods telling the public what he is doing.

Mr. BLONDIN: To-day it is left to my department to detect the adulterators; but by this Act we are compelling the adulterators to self-denunciation; every article that is put on the market must be labelled "imitation" if it is not pure.

Mr. BUREAU: Why legalize adulteration by putting that label on the package?

Mr. BLONDIN: We do not.

Mr. BUREAU: You do. I may go on the market with an adulterated package, but the moment I put on the package the words "compound maple syrup," I am within the law.

Mr. BLONDIN: It is more a question of whether our efforts to prevent adulteration is to prevent only for the sake of prevention or to make the public aware that they are buying adulterated goods. If I want to buy this imitation I have the choice of doing so. I do not think that we should prevent a man who wants to buy these imitations from doing so; but I think we must force the dealer to make the public aware that such and such products are compounds.

Mr. ROBB: The position that the minister has just taken is a complete change from the attitude of his predecessor last year, when the farmers and makers of maple syrup were before the Committee on Agriculture, and from the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture who was present at that gathering. Members of the Agricultural Committee may remember that quite a large deputation of maple sugar makers from the province of Quebec and eastern Ontario waited on the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Agriculture and objected to this very practice. They strongly resented the use of the word "maple" in connection with these adulterations that are made up in cellars in Montreal and sent out to the people in the Northwest and British Columbia, branded as maple sugar, or adulterated sugar, if you will. Their point was that the imitators should not be allowed to use the word " maple " at all, and with that view the minister's predecessor and the Minister of Agriculture sided and took very strong ground before the committee. I think the minister should give some better explanation of this change of policy.

Mr. BLONDIN: My hon. friend knows that there are articles on the market which are really not maple syrup, and on which the word " maple " does not appear.

Mr. ROBB: They would not bring the price they would fetch if the word " maple " were on them. It is the word " maple " that gives them value.

Mr. BLONDIN: First of all, if you want to use the word " maple " you have to put it in a conspicuous position. The section says:

> No person shall keep for sale, offer or expose for sale, or sell, any article of food resembling or being an imitation of maple sugar or maple syrup, or which is composed partly of maple sugar or maple syrup and which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, unless the article itself or the package containing it is labelled with the words " imitation maple sugar " or " imitation maple syrup," or " compound maple sugar " or " compound maple syrup," as the case may be, in a conspicuous place on the article itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If my hon. friend reads the whole section he will see that the word " imitation " need not be on it at all. A man might sell a compound, having on one side the words " compound maple syrup " and on the other side " extra pure article," and that would give the impression of being the very best kind of maple syrup. The word " imitation " need not be on it at all under this section.

Mr. TURRIFF: What is the object in allowing adulterated maple sugar and maple syrup to be put on the market at all? We in the West do not produce any maple sugar or maple syrup, but we buy a good deal; and many times we have bought what purported to be maple syrup or maple sugar, but what turned out to be an imitation made of yellow muscovado sugar. Why should manufacturers be permitted to do that? Why does not the minister settle the whole matter by imposing a heavy penalty on any one who sells in any shape or form adulterated maple sugar or maple syrup that purports to be the real article? He should allow the sale of pure maple sugar and maple syrup and nothing else. By this Bill the minister is allowing anybody to sell adulterated maple sugar or maple syrup. This will only make matters much worse. Why does not the minister continue the policy of his predecessor a little further and impose such penalties on the man who is found selling adulterated maple sugar or maple syrup that he will never do it again? That would overcome the whole difficulty.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that I am very well versed in this question, but I should like to know the object that is sought to be attained by insisting that there should be no possible method by which a man might make a compound of maple syrup. Whether or not it is desirable to allow such compounds to be sold I am not prepared to say. But when the word " adulterated " is used, it always gives the idea that the article is being set up for something that it is not. What is not quite clear to my mind is this: Why should we prevent a perfectly honest man from making a syrup of which maple may form one of the component parts, a syrup which is cheaper than the pure maple syrup, and which some persons are desirous of buying? I should like to know what harm is going to be done by allowing that man to put his ware upon the market with the statement staring everybody in the face that it is what it is, that it is not maple syrup, but an imitation. Perhaps some better word than compound could be found. I understand that the purpose of this legislation is to make any man who wants to sell such an article as I have described tell the public that it is what it is, and that it is not maple syrup. If it be an evil to allow people to make a compound of maple syrup, then this course may not be a desirable thing; but if the evil consists simply in a man's selling as maple syrup what really is not maple syrup, it seems to me this Bill will aid in counteracting the evil, and it will not produce a result whereby you would prohibit a man perfectly honest from making an article of which maple syrup might form a component part, and which is cheaper than the pure article.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know whether the minister has received any correspondence on the subject, but I have from parties who strongly object to the Bill. Their objection to it is this. Maple sugar and maple syrup are peculiarly Canadian products, and the makers of these articles are anxious to have maple sugar and maple syrup known on the market; but for years past they have had to suffer from the malignant industry of some people who adulterate these articles. As I stated a moment ago, the adulteration of food is one of the evils of the present day. It is to be found not only in maple sugar and maple syrup, but in almost everything. Now, the object of the law and the object of the Government ought to be to prevent adulteration, and to see that no food comes on the table unless it is what it purports to be. There are parties who make some compound of maple sugar and of maple syrup, but that is not in the interest of public health. It is injurious to health, and certainly injurious to the genuine article. This question came before the House last year, and it has several times been before the House and the country. A delegation of the makers of maple sugar came before the Committee of Agriculture last year, and as a result of their representations and the deliberation of the Government upon them the present Adulteration Act was passed. But steps are now to be taken to make that law ineffective. That is the objection which the makers of maple sugar and maple syrup have to this Bill, and it is an objection worthy of consideration by this Government. The makers have given this matter their very best thought, and decided that there should be no adulteration at all of the articles they produce. That is the sum total of their objection. They object to this legislation because it allows an adulteration which is altogether objectionable.

Mr. MARCIL: As a constant user of maple sugar and maple syrup I must give my own experience. It is the most difficult thing in the world to obtain the genuine article to-day. If you go into any high-class grocery store in Montreal or any other city you have to accept the salesman's word that what you are getting is genuine maple sugar or maple syrup. It has been only within the last ten or fifteen years that the maple groves have been getting scarce in the province of Quebec. I am not so familiar with Ontario, so I will not speak about that. When they began to disappear, it was felt that there was a need for a substitute, and a way was found of getting up an artistic imitation on which the word "compound" was hidden away somewhere, and the word "maple" put in a conspicuous place. It is most difficult to obtain the genuine article to-day.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

The Minister of Justice, who comes from the province of Quebec, knows the high value that is placed upon the industry. It is essentially a national industry, and is unique in this respect. Therefore it should be safeguarded in every possible way. No adulteration of any kind should be permitted.

Mr. MORRIS: This is a question which interests me to a very considerable extent. I think the legislation which was passed last year was very acceptable to the sugar makers of the district from which I come. I do not think that the sugar makers of our district would have any objection to any company manufacturing any syrups they desired to produce; but, as one coming from a district which is very much interested in the manufacture of sugar, I very much object to any company borrowing the name "maple." Maple sugar is one of the best and most wholesome products of our country. The industry is a very important one, and I feel it is the duty of this Government to protect it. The object of the farmers who came here last year was simply to protect that industry. They did not want to borrow anything from any other industry; they simply wanted to protect an honest industry, and I think it is the duty of this Government to do right by these people.

Mr. G. BOYER (Vaudreuil) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I congratulate sincerely the Minister of Inland Revenue for introducing to-day this legislation which has been for a long time expected and the need of which has been felt also for a long time. His predecessor, at the last session, introduced a Bill, on which, if I am not mistaken, this one is an improvement. I take this opportunity also of expressing my thanks to the minister and his officers who have made it easy for me to secure interviews for the purpose of discussing the Bill.

It is not therefore, Mr. Chairman, believe me, with a critical disposition, that I rise now, but only to ask that it be finally retouched so as to be made for the present entirely effective and satisfactory both to those to whom it applies, many of whom are electors of mine, and to myself.

The maple sugar industry, must be placed on the same footing as all the other agricultural industries, and really it is due to the general ignorance of its great possibilities if it has been heretofore neglected. Up to the present time the farmer has manufactured maple syrup and sugar solely for his family's use; it was only as a luxury that the consumer bought yearly a certain quantity for his table. Lately it has been discovered that this industry, heretofore unexploited, could be turned into a gold mine for the farmers; and that, in order to extract this gold which would go to swell the income of the farm, this industry must be given a wider scope and a new direction. The awakening has been general. Here, the late Government distributed to 50,000 owners of maple-bushes a very valuable pamphlet on the manufacture of maple syrup and sugar, and drafted a Bill designed to give protection to the producer. At Quebec, at the same time, the provincial government opened in different parts of the province schools for the practical teaching of this industry. In a word the movement is spreading all over and gives good promises for the future. A society, comprising some of the most notable producers, and persons interested in this industry, and of which I am president, although not myself a producer, was formed two years ago, and apparently has taken upon itself the important as well as patriotic task of acting as intermediary between the mass of the producers and those authorities who see to the making of laws, the protection of rights, the opening of markets, etc. I have always myself taken a deep concern in this industry, although the number of producers to be found in my county is not at all commensurate with its extent. That was my reason, as early as 1906, for rising in this House to speak in favour of this industry. On that occasion I was spokesman for a powerful association of farmers of Vaudreuil.

At that time, already distant, I was given encouragement. And I am glad to say that greater care has since been given to the inspection of adulterated products, but adulterators can never be proceeded against too rigorously. It is only of late that the Government seems to have resolved seriously to enact a law for the protection of that new agricultural industry, and I shall not be sparing in my congratulations.

First of all, before taking up the Bill, we may ask if this industry deserves to be noticed by this House. Is the maple industry, meaning thereby the extraction of the sap to be manufactured into sugar or syrup, profitable to the producers and consequently for the country in general? After a close study of the question, and after comparing it with the other money-crops on the farm, I find that many of these are on the whole less productive than the sugar industry. I am satisfied that it will come as a surprise to many to learn that the sugar industry, until now considered insignificant as a source of income, does, on the contrary, bring to the farmer quite a profit. If we may rely on the last census, the annual production of maple sugar exceeds that of the fruit-growing industry. Our orchards and fruit trees of various species have yielded approximately, in 1911, $1,470,000, that is 14 per cent less than the maple-tree. The value of maple sugar and syrup manufactured in 1911 exceeds the value of sheep sold and killed on the farm in 1910; is almost equal to the value of poultry sold and killed in the same year; amounts to more than the quantity of cream sold and is six times greater than the value of the total yield of honey and wax. Take my own county; according to statistics I myself gathered last year, 128 farmers have together notched 96,465 maple trees, from which 13,740 gallons of syrup and 18,811 pounds of sugar were manufactured, representing a total value of $19,712. The number of producers in the county exceeded 128, but only that number have answered the circular I sent around.

The annual product of the maple-tree reaches about $2,000,000 and if there was provided proper protection, it would in a very few years amount to $6,000,000, the increase going into the pockets of the farmers and those who engage in the sugar industry. If then the Government would give the same care to the development of that industry which it gives to the other farm specialties, enough sugar and syrup could be produced to supply the whole Canadian market. Our sugar and syrup could take the place of all other known sugars and syrups. Now, what is required to rebuild or, if you prefer, to build up, this industry, are the combined efforts of all who are directly or indirectly interested in the development of agriculture. We know from past experience that by a well distributed propaganda, we have almost created the dairy industry and stock-raising. Many other astonishing results have been obtained from a systematic propaganda organized by the various governments, from the laws of these governments and from the combined efforts of the farmers and educated and patriotic persons. The maple industry, during this last decade, instead of expanding, has been steadily declining till it could almost be said to be on the eve of disappearing, when competent and devoted men suddenly decided to come to its rescue and present circumstances seem of a nature to encourage them.

I shall now give figures showing the progress of this industry since 1850, which point to the conclusion that a considerable amount of money has been lost to our farmers, because they neglected to work the maple-tree. I have drawn important information from the annual report of the co-operative society of maple sugar and syrup producers. This information is furnished by Mr. Joseph H. Lefèvre, secretary of the society, John H. Grimm, a Montreal manufacturer and other distinguished men who take an interest in this industry. In looking into these statistics it will be found that the maple region extends throughout Quebec, Ontario, and the maritime provinces, and that about two-thirds of the total production is in Quebec. Canada produced from 1850 to 1860, 135,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar.

1860 to 1870, 175,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar, an increase of 40,000,000.

1870 to 1880, 190,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar, an increase of 15,000,000.

1880 to 1890, 225,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar, an increase of 35,000,000.

1890 to 1900, 212,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar, a decrease of 13,000,000.

1900 to 1910, 196,000,000 of pounds of maple sugar, a decrease of 16,000,000.

Those figures are to be apportioned among the different provinces in about the following proportion: Quebec contributed 65 per cent of the total output of maple sugar and syrup manufactured in Canada; Ontario, 32 per cent, and the maritime provinces, 3 per cent.

But how explain the decrease of 16,000,000 of pounds in the production of maple sugar during the ten years from 1890 to 1900? That decrease is due to the adulterators of all kinds, who, by their unfair competition, have disheartened the farmers On June 6, 1905, out of one hundred samples of syrup tested by the Inland Revenue officers, 76 were found to have been adulterated; which means that one-quarter was pure and three-quarters mixtures. In the second series of tests made, 34 per cent of the samples proved adulterated. On February 16, 1911, Mr. McGill wrote to Mr. Grimm, of Montreal, that out of twelve hundred sample tests only 59 came up to the standard which had been adopted as the legal standard. On the other hand, the sugar-bush has been neglected in certain localities. The small state of Vermont, with an area of only 10,200 square miles, has an annual production of sugar amounting to $1,086,933. This figure is an eloquent answer to those who would say that there is no money in the maple syrup and sugar industry. According to the census of the United States of 1910, which gives the data for 1909, maple sugar is made in nineteen states. The total number of trees notched, 18,899,533; pounds of sugar made, 14,060,206; gallons of syrup made, 4,106,611, corresponding to 43,119,416 pounds of sugar. Out of this total output, Vermont, the smallest of the seventeen states supplied 7,726,817 pounds, that being 700,000 pounds more than all the other states put together.

Apart from its interest as a source of supply of sugar and syrup the maple industry is of importance in connection with the preservation of our maple forests. To-day the economic importance of reforestation is a frequent topic of discussion. Mr. R. H. Campbell, superintendent of forests for the Dominion Government, has expressed the opinion that it would be more profitable to plant maple trees that reach a diameter of eighteen inches in 120 years than yellow pine-trees that would take only 60 years to reach the same size. The value of the maple-tree is not in its sap alone. It is much valued as a hard wood and very useful. Maple wood is used in the manufacture of agricultural implements, for the making of various parts of carriages, for the wood-work of buildings, as flooring, for the keels of sea-going vessels, for shoe-makers' pegs, saddle stocks, etc. Bird's-eye maple is much sought after for the veneering of expensive furniture and the inside finish of railway passenger coaches. Lastly, maple makes excellent fuel, and is used in the preparation of charcoal, wood alcohol and acetic acid. So the maple-tree, besides an ornamental tree of great beauty, is a source of annual revenue to the farmer and to the lumberman when it is no longer useful for sugar-making or when the farmer having an excess of it may dispose of a certain quantity. The planting of maple-trees is then worth while going into. Suppose that every one of the 55,000 sugar-makers grow only ten acres, that would mean 550,000 acres, or about 1,000 square miles of land. Of all the industries, none is so typical of Canada and none yields a larger profit for the money invested and for the care which is given to it, and that without exhausting the soil. Yet, it must be admitted that 75 per cent of Canadian territory is unfit for the cultivation of cereals on account of the large number of stones to be found in it, and that if those lands were left to themselves, they would be unproductive and perhaps abandoned. Now, out of those 55,000 sugar-makers, I am informed that a bare thousand are able to manufacture a first-class product; that is due to the lack of modern methods, with which they have not yet been made sufficiently acquainted.

Mr. Speaker, I have given a brief outline only of the possibilities of our national industry. National it is indeed, because it is carried on almost exclusively in our own country, and the north-eastern American states. All countries in the world grow cereals and raise domestic cattle for consumption, but Canada has a monopoly of the manufacture of maple syrup and sugar. And if the Dominion Government and the provincial legislatures concerned take the least care to promote that industry, the Dominion Government, by practical and even radical enactments, and the local governments by the diffusion of theoretical knowledge, wonderful results may be expected in the near future.

The Bill now before the House is opportune and again I congratulate the minister. The new proposals are for the present embodied in a general Act, but let us look forward to a not far distant time when the sugar industry will have in the statute-books its own special and more elaborate legislation. I am afraid, however, that section 29 of this Bill is not framed to provide for producers and consumers the protection that it is expected to give against adulteration. As it now reads, subsection 1 of section 29 stipulates this:

Section 29A of the Act respecting Adulterations, being chapter 133 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, as enacted by chapter 19 of the statutes of 1914, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

29A. No person will keep for sale, offer or expose for sale, or sell any article of food resembling or being an imitation of maple sugar or maple syrup, or which is composed partly of maple sugar or maple syrup and which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup unless the said article or the package containing the said article is labelled with the words "imitation of maple sugar" or "imitation of maple syrup" or "compound maple sugar" or "compound maple syrup," as the case may be, in a conspicuous place upon the said article or upon the said package and in large letters easily seen, of a different colour from the label or other letters which appear on the label; the said letters to be at least one-quarter of an inch in height, printed on the same line and entirely separate from all other inscription on the label.

That subsection, it is true, takes away from adulterators the privilege enjoyed by them to this day of selling as pure a product which was not pure in the least. It obliges them, it is true, to label their goods, and declare that their product is not pure. But the Bill does not go so far as to provide that they will have to state to what extent the sugar or syrup offered for sale is not pure; and they will still enjoy a dangerous measure of impunity. Elsewhere, however, the Bill requires of the actual producers of the pure article that their products will come up to the standard fixed by the regulations of the Department of Inland Revenue. If a standard has been set for sugar and syrup that will be sold as pure and labelled as such, how shall it be known to what extent the articles labelled "imitation of maple syrup" or "compound maple sugar" are offensive or inoffensive. Those who prepare the adulterated article will not be to blame, except in extreme cases, because they will be authorized by law to sell the adulterated product, provided they put on the required label. That is a door open to adulterators, who are not even now overscrupulous. The last part of subsection 1 of section 29 puts a serious handicap on the unfortunate producer of the pure article and endangers the whole industry. If the Bill were to be adopted as it now reads, it is my opinion and that of competent persons with whom I discussed the matter at length, that it would destroy all that has been done for that industry heretofore, and the total output would continue to decline, as I have shown it to have done by quoting statistics since 1850.

Now, why allow adulterators to set up such a competition so hurtful to honest producers. Such a competition is to a certainty bound to bring about the collapse of the maple sugar and syrup industry. Why also should we make it easy for consumers to buy a syrup made up of 99 per cent ordinary sugar and 1 per cent maple product and be deceived into the belief that he is buying a maple product in whole or in part.

It may be asked how the competition of the adulterated article may be so disastrous to the producers. The question is as easily answered as put. A farmer, for instance, sells his pure maple syrup, say $1 a gallon. Now if a merchant buys a gallon and makes five or ten gallons out of it, which he then retails at the same price as the farmer; is not such a competition ruinous for the farmer? And, on the other hand, is it not an out-and-out theft from the consumer who pays for an imitation of syrup or sugar or for a compound the same price he would pay for the pure article?

Looking at it from another viewpoint, the diffusion of the adulterated articles on the market prevents honest producers from obtaining a fair price for their goods.

The Quebec government, out of the Dominion grant, is helping technical education and will open three practical schools for demonstrating the modern methods of manufacturing maple sugar and maple syrup. A society, with a membership of many hundreds of producers, has been organized in the province of Quebec, and others will soon be formed, to secure better protection for the maple industry and to promote it among our farmers.

I am not opposed to people making a practice of mixing with our maple syrup or sugar other uninjurious substances to make a compound article; it is their right, as it is also the consumer's own business if he cares to buy an adulterated or compound article. But then let those impure products be sold under some designation; let them be labelled "the syrup of Mr. So and So," or distinguished by any other name which may be suitable and appropriate; but let it be declared illegal and liable to severe penalties to couple with these other names the word "maple".

I therefore suggest to the minister and I do move, with his leave, that the following words be omitted from subsection 1 of section 29:

—unless the said article or the package containing the said article is labelled with the words "imitation of maple sugar" or "imitation maple syrup" or "compound maple sugar" or "compound maple syrup," as the case may be, in a conspicuous place upon the said article or upon the said package and in large letters easily seen of a different colour from the label or other letters which appear on the label; the said letters to be at least one-quarter of an inch in height, printed on the same line and entirely separate from all other inscription on the label.

And then I will, on behalf of the Co-operative Society of Producers of Maple Syrup and Sugar, give my assent to the Bill.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BLONDIN: Before recess we had an interesting discussion about the Bill. I have prepared amendments which, I hope, will meet the wishes of all parties. The effect of these amendments will be to leave the law as it was before, not permitting any compound or adulterated maple products to be put on the market. The Bill, then, will only make slight changes in the wording of the law so as to make it enforceable. Section 1 of the Bill amends section 29 of the present law. In the proposed amendment of subsection 1, I would strike out all the words except those prohibiting the manufacture, keeping, offering for sale, or the sale of imitation or compound maple sugar or maple syrup. Subsection 2 defining adulterated maple sugar or maple syrup will stand. In subsection 3, restricting the use of the word "maple" to pure maple sugar or syrup, the words "except as herein otherwise provided" will be dropped. Subsection 3 amends the existing law, in which the words "which is or," in combination with the rest of the subsection, have the effect of prohibiting the use of the word "maple," even on the pure maple sugar or syrup itself.

Mr. DEMERS (Translation.): Mr. Chairman, in order to carry out the purpose of this Bill which is to make sure that the consumer will get an absolutely pure article, subsection 3 of section 29a should also be amended by omitting in lines 6 and 7, page 2 of the Bill, the word "pure." As subsection 3 now reads, it would appear that an article which is not pure might be labelled "maple sugar" or "maple syrup" provided the word "pure" be not used. I think the word "pure" should be omitted out of both lines.

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): Am I to understand that my hon. friend suggests that the section should be read with the words "pure maple", omitted?

Mr. DEMERS (Translation): No, simply with the word "pure" omitted. So, I move that subsection 3 be amended by omitting the word "pure" in lines 6 and 7, so that the end of this subsection may read as follows:

As is likely to make persons believe it is maple sugar or maple syrup.

If we adopted the Bill as it now reads, a manufacturer or other person who would label his articles simply "maple sugar" or "maple syrup" could not be prosecuted because he would have labelled it "pure maple".

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): The purpose of the section is to prevent the use of the word "maple" on syrup compounds as, for instance, "mapling." So this part of the section reads as follows:

Which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup shall be labelled or marked in such manner as is likely to make persons believe it is pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup.

If I understand the Bill, it tends to prevent the use of the word "maple" or "érable" in any shape and seems to cover the point raised by my hon. friend, if I understood him properly.

Mr. DEMERS (Translation): I differ from the minister and am still convinced that if we wish the Bill to attain its object, the word "pure" must be omitted in lines 6 and 7.

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): There is no harm in adopting the amendment of the hon. member from St. John and Iberville, and I move that the word "pure" be omitted as he has indicated.

Mr. BUREAU (Translation): Why?

Mr. BUREAU (Translation): We prohibit the use by the merchant of the word "maple" or "érable" on his articles, unless they be pure, but as the Bill reads, the provision apparently would not apply to the crates; in other words, the Bill does not mention the crate containing the tins the contents of which may be adulterated.

Mr. BUREAU (Translation): In subsection 3, we omit the words, "resembles maple sugar or maple syrup and which." Would it not be better to omit all the words up to "and any article" in the seventh line, because the words contained in the Bill between the second and seventh lines have been put there only in case you should have allowed the sale of certain mixtures or imitations of maple syrup?

Mr. BURNHAM: I do not wish to disturb the hilarity of the meeting; but any one who knows anything about maple syrup knows that maple syrup may be pure yet disgusting. Maple syrup drawn from trees that grow on low ground is simply putrid. If, therefore, the minister wishes to guarantee to the public that the maple syrup shall be good, he will have to adopt some other method than simply to say that it shall be pure.

Mr. BUREAU: Subsection 3 says:

Except as herein otherwise provided, the word "maple" shall not be used, either alone or in combination with any other word or words, or letter or letters, on the label or other mark, illustration or device on a package containing any article of food, or on any article of food itself which resembles maple sugar or maple syrup and which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup.

Why not strike out the words, "resembles maple sugar or maple syrup and which?"

Mr. BLONDIN: I beg to move:

1. That section 1 be amended to read as follows:

1. Section 29a of the Adulteration Act, chapter 133 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, as enacted by chapter 19 of the statutes of 1914, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"29a. No person shall manufacture for sale, keep for sale, offer or expose for sale, or sell, any article of food resembling or being an imitation of maple sugar or maple syrup, or which is composed partly of maple sugar or maple syrup and which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup.

2. Any maple sugar or maple syrup which is not up to the standard prescribed by the sixth schedule to this Act, or, if such standard is changed by the Governor in Council, to such standard as the Governor in Council may from time to time prescribe, shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this Act.

3. The word 'maple' shall not be used, either alone or in combination with any other word or words, or letter or letters, on the label or other mark, illustration or device on a package containing any article of food, or on any article of food itself, which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, and no package containing any article of food, or any article of food itself, which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, shall be labelled or marked in such manner as is likely to make persons believe is is pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup, and any article of food labelled or marked in violation of this subsection shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this Act."

Mr. BRODER: Would the standard referred to permit the use of any other sugar with maple sugar? When maple sugar is analysed, one cannot say whether other sugars are in it or not, because the ingredients are the same in both cases. That is a difficulty that has to be overcome.

Mr. BLONDIN: I have here the standards for maple sugar and maple syrup, which I can hand to my hon. friend.

Mr. BRODER: I shall be glad to have them.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLONDIN: I move that the word "pure" be struck out in the sixth line before the words "maple sugar" and the word "pure" in the seventh line before the words "maple syrup."

Amendment agreed to.

On subsection 3 of section 1—use of word "maple" restricted to pure maple sugar or syrup:

Mr. BLONDIN: I move that the following words in the second line of page 2, after the words "maple syrup," be struck out:

And no package containing any article of food, or any article of food itself, which is not pure maple sugar or pure maple syrup.

Mr. GLASS: I would like to understand this matter a little better. The chief sites of the manufacture of maple products are in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and there is a strong desire amongst the people in the part of the country from which I come that the fullest protection should be given to the honest product of the manufacturer of honest maple sugar. What is the reason for deleting this portion, which primarily the minister considered of sufficient importance to be incorporated in the Bill? It may be all right, but I do not understand it.

Mr. BUREAU: I made the suggestion as a result of the change made in section 29a of the existing Act by striking out that part of the section authorizing the compounding or imitation of syrup. It was necessary to repeat the same words in section 3 of 29a, but, having been struck out where they first occurred the words had no meaning or use in subsection 3. The effect of dropping these words is that it is not permitted to put the word "maple" on anything except on the pure stuff.

On section 2—re-enactment of sections 31 and 32:

Mr. BUREAU: What are the changes in sections 31 and 32, of the old Act?

Mr. BLONDIN: Section 31 is amended by adding the words "and not less than $25 and costs" in subsection b, after the word "costs" in the third line. In the Act as it now stands there is no minimum fine.

On section 3—false label or neglect to label:

Mr. KAY: Does this mean that the manufacturer of maple sugar or syrup must put a label on his article?

Mr. BLONDIN: The intention is to reach the vendor of an article resembling maple syrup and provide for a higher minimum penalty and also for an additional penalty for each subsequent offence, which section 37 as it is at present does not provide for.

[Mr. Blondin.]

Mr. KAY: It does not mean that the farmer must label his sugar or syrup?

Mr. BLONDIN: I do not think it does. I think the words, "neglects or refuses to label or mark any article of food or drug refer to the general law. I do not think there will be any difficulty as it stands at present.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—application of penalties:

Mr. BLONDIN: The intention of this amendment is to give one-half the fine to the person who gives information or otherwise helps in the detection of violations of this Act. It is expected that this will be a great help to the department in the application of the law, and the detection of all violations thereof.

Mr. BUREAU: I see this is to repeal section 40 of the old Act. Was there a similar provision in the old Act? I am not going to enter into an academic discussion of the principle of giving half the fine to an informer, but I do not see why the Act should be changed. There is no department in the whole Administration that has so many inspectors as the Department of Inland Revenue, and I do not see why the minister should need extra assistance from the outside public. I am willing that the producer should be fully protected, but I say that this will give an opportunity to unscrupulous men to attempt blackmail. For instance, under the provincial regulations in regard to liquor licenses there have been cases where complaints have been made by informers, who when the trial came on had no evidence whatever, and the department had incurred a lot of expense for nothing in getting samples and having them analysed. This will just give an opportunity to some men to go around leg-pulling with the merchants and threatening to lay information against them for dealing in a product that is not within the provisions of the Act. Considering that the minister has at his disposal a great number of inspectors who go around the stores every day in the year, and have the privilege of taking any samples off the shelves and forwarding them to the laboratories for analysis, I do not see why this inducement should be given to the blackmailer.

Mr. BRODER: The department cannot have an inspector in every sugar bush, and some of this dishonest work is done in the sugar bush as well as in the shop; that is, dishonest sugar makers will use refined sugar and that sort of thing to increase the quantity of their syrup, and it is a difficult thing to get at that. The officials in all the departments here at Ottawa would not be sufficient to watch all the sugar bushes in the country. We want to protect the honest man.

Mr. BUREAU: If you get an honest man to lay the information, I am with you; but generally it is a scoundrel that does it.

Mr. BRODER: The fact is that with all the inspection we have there is a lot of spurious syrup being sold in the shops of Ottawa to-day. So far, the enforcement of the law has not been effective.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member for Dundas knows very well that it is not the honest, respectable kind of citizen that will turn informer. The only persons who will do this kind of work are those who expect to make a little money out of it. If a man has a grudge against another he may try to get even by laying information and getting the penalty under this section. The honest man who has any complaint to make does not need this inducement. If I know that somebody is cheating the public, I will tell the inspector to go down to So and So and take a sample of his syrup for analysis, because I have reason to believe it is not what it ought to be. But this proposal to give half the fine to the informer will not appeal to the respectable element of the community.

Mr. BLONDIN: I might remind my hon. friend that the information is given to the officers of the department, who ascertain whether the sample is adulterated. I think that is a safeguard against the abuses of which my hon. friend is afraid.

Mr. MARCIL: In cases of prosecution under this law, in whose name is the case made out?

Mr. BLONDIN: I am not quite sure, but in the name of the department, I think.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Might I call the attention of the minister to the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau). This legislation which the minister is introducing of giving power to the informer to prosecute is becoming obsolete. It used to be very common in former days, but in recent legislation it has been eliminated. Only two days ago the Finance Minister struck out a similar provision in the new Taxes Bill.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think that any harm will be done to the honest dealer or manufacturer. It is certainly true that with all the machinery the Government has, it is impossible to put a full check on all the avenues of deception that are possible. I think that this provision is perfectly proper, but I think that the word "may" in the third line should be changed to "shall." I should like to know why the payment of a fine to a man who is entitled to it, should be optional with the department. If it is right that the man should be paid for giving this information, let him have the remuneration to which he is entitled by virtue of this Act.

Mr. BUREAU: If you are going to do that, why not state the exact amount which the informer shall receive, and let us put it in the Bill?

Mr. BOYER (Translation): The provisions of this section contain nothing, to my mind, that is new. There are many acts in existence which impose fines that are either wholly or in part handed over to the informer.

The hon. member for Three-Rivers (Mr. Bureau) fears that it may become an instrument of blackmail. I do not entertain the same fear. The person who is accused of selling an adulterated article will not be sentenced simply on the information being laid, because before anything is done the officers of the Department of Inland Revenue will make a test of the sugar or syrup complained of to find out if the act has really been violated as alleged. I believe the provision is preventive and will have some deterring influence. I am therefore in favour of the section.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to put in a few remarks regarding this Bill. I have listened to what has been said by the minister and it seems to me that the proposal made by him and incorporated in the Bill that it be allowed to put on the market adulterated maple sugar or syrup, is objectionable and should be rejected.

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): Amendments have been adopted and this section was struck out. I believe the hon. member was not present at the time.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation): So much the better. If I understand rightly, it will then be illegal to label the crates with the words "maple syrup" coupled with the word "compound."

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): My hon. friend was absent and I shall for his information summarize the amendments. The new Act does not modify essentially the old Act; it merely changes the wording so as to facilitate the enforcement of the old Act as it now stands. We have omitted only those words which might make the law more difficult of enforcement.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation): I understand that under the Bill now under consideration, the sale of maple syrup or sugar is prohibited unless it be pure.

Mr. BLONDIN (Translation): Strictly pure.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation): Otherwise by allowing the sale of an adulterated product, would have meant the destruction of the maple industry, which is such a source of profit to our farmers, and I, for one, should have objected.

Bill reported.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

PROPOSED GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

On motion of Hon. Frank Cochrane (Minister of Railways and Canals) the House went into committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act and amendments thereto, and to provide that the Minister of Railways and Canals may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, lease or otherwise acquire that portion of the railway of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company known as the Lake Superior branch, extending from Lake Superior Junction to the city of Fort William, in Ontario, including terminal facilities and accommodation works of the said company, or of any other company, and, for all the purposes of section 9 of the said Act, may provide, by purchase, lease or otherwise, rolling stock and equipment, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and such other company, shall each be authorized on its part to deal accordingly with the said line of railway or terminal facilities and accommodation works as the case may be; that subsections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of section 361 of the Railway Act, and section 29 chapter 122 of the statutes of 1903, shall not apply to any such lease or to anything done under the preceding provisions; that the Government Railways Act shall apply to any line of railway including terminal facilities and accommodation works so leased or acquired; and that the expenditures made under the Act to be founded on this resolution, or under chapter 43 of the statutes of 1914, shall be a charge against the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

[Mr. Lafortune.]

Mr. COCHRANE: The object of this resolution is to take authority to operate the Transcontinental railway from Moncton to Winnipeg, providing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company do not enter into a lease to do so, and also to authorize some arrangement for a lease, or running rights, from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William. The chief engineer of the Transcontinental railway has given a certificate that the road is complete for operation. The Government have no desire to operate this road, and we are willing and anxious that the Grand Trunk Pacific shall enter into an arrangement for operating it, but providing they do not do so, we want to take authority to pay the expense of operating it out of the consolidated revenue fund. The reason we have taken this matter up by way of resolution, instead of asking for a vote in the Estimates, is that we have made no estimate of what we would require to operate the road this year. We hope that the Grand Trunk Pacific will enter into a lease, but they have not come to a decision yet, and we do not know what amount of traffic we may have to provide for. If business continues as it is to-day on the Intercolonial railway, we could use some of our rolling stock on the National Transcontinental railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Chairman, this is quite a far-reaching proposal. I am afraid it goes farther in its wording than the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals thinks or has expressed to the House. Under this proposition the Government could expropriate that branch line and all its elevators and the elevators of any other concern at Fort William without their consent. I do not know whether the Government intends to do that or not. Let me read, in order that the committee may see whether I am correct or not:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act and amendments thereto, and to provide that the Minister of Railways and Canals may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, lease or otherwise acquire that portion of the railway of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company known as the Lake Superior branch, extending from Lake Superior Junction to the city of Fort William, in Ontario, including terminal facilities and accommodation works of the said company or of any other company.

Under this resolution the Government is taking the right not only to lease, if the Grand Trunk Pacific is willing to lease, but to expropriate.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think the terminals belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific; they belong to another company.

Mr. GRAHAM: You may expropriate them no matter from whom.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: Those are pretty large powers for the Government to take. Suppose there are reasons why the lease is not entered into by the Grand Trunk Pacific at the present time. The Government now takes power to take the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific away from it in the meantime or to take the terminals belonging to any other company at Fort William for its own purposes. Suppose it should transpire that after the railway is completed, as it is not now, the company would be ready to enter into a lease under the agreement, this Government would own the terminals belonging to some other company, or to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Government would also own that portion of the line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, some 180 miles in length. Would not that complicate the situation? I submit that it would. While I think some arrangement should be entered into for the present by which somebody will operate this road until such time as it is fully completed, it would be a mistake for the Government to go as far as to purchase very expensive property, either by expropriation or otherwise, some of which does not belong to this company at all, because the Government would have this property on its hands at the time when a lease could be legitimately entered into with the Grand Trunk Pacific. The situation would be reversed; the Government would be trying to get the Grand Trunk Pacific to take something from it in the way of purchase or release. It might be that the other companies who own these terminals would be placed in a very peculiar position as well as the Government. The line ought to be operated by somebody, but I think it is clear from the correspondence that the Government is not in a position under the agreement to lease the line at present to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. I do not say, mark you, that the Government is not in a position to make an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to operate on some terms, or with somebody to operate on some terms, or to operate the road itself, but the correspondence clearly shows that the line is not completed as provided for in the agreement between the company and the Government. The fact remains that the terminals at Quebec are not completed and will not be completed for a year or two. The station that was to be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the joint use of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific railway in the city of Quebec, so far from being completed has not yet been started. The small station at Champlain market has only just been commenced. The Government has purchased a line to reach from its main line down to the workshops at the city of Quebec, but that line is not completed because the Government is this session asking for money to put it in a usable condition. The shops, which have been declared by Sir William Whyte and acknowledged by every railway man to be part of the system, are just being started in the city of Quebec, and this road cannot operate its through traffic even if it paid no attention at all to the city of Quebec without having repair shops in that city.

Mr. COCHRANE: How do they run from Winnipeg to the Coast without shops?

Mr. GRAHAM: They have smaller shops at points.

Mr. COCHRANE: So have we.

Mr. GRAHAM: That does not alter the fact that these shops are a part of the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. Sir William Whyte's finding absolutely stated they were part of the road, and if they be not part of the road why is this Government building them under the agreement? Another point is that the Prime Minister said in the city of Quebec, and the plans distinctly show it as presented to the House at one time, that a tunnel was to be constructed in the city of Quebec as part of that scheme, and that tunnel has not been started, and no tenders have been asked for to construct it, and I doubt if there are even plans for it.

The terms of the lease, so far as the payment is concerned, were to be based on the cost of the road, and this road not being completed, how can the rentals be arrived at before the Government knows what the cost of the road is going to be? I had better not put it that way, however—that the road is not completed, the Government admits in this correspondence, and it also admits it in the Estimates before us, because $5,000,000 are asked for to be expended on the Transcontinental railway, and it may be that even that sum will not complete it.

I am pointing this out to show that the Government should hesitate before entering into a permanent arrangement, because nobody knows yet, so far as I can find in the correspondence, that the Grand Trunk Pacific is not ready to take over this road when the Government has completed it and is ready to hand it over to them. To make clear the position taken by the Government, I shall refer to the corespondence. The Chief Engineer of the National Transcontinental Railway, Mr. Gordon Grant, has said the road is completed for operation, but in the same letter in which he states that, he has some strong qualifications. In the correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific it is positively admitted that there are works now under construction for the National Transcontinental railway which are not completed and will not be completed for some time. It is also shown that there are many places along the line where the company does not admit that the work is completed, and the company's engineer asks the Government's engineer to have a joint inspection made, so that they might arrive at just what the real conditions are. To show that I am borne out in my supposition that the road is not completed, I shall refer to the correspondence of the Government with the company. I find on January 13, 1913, this letter to the Minister of Railways from the President of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company:

Dear Sir,—In view of the completion of the National Transcontinental railway, I think it desirable that the necessary con-
4 p.m. ferences should be had, and arrangements made for the drafting and settling of the lease by the Government to the company of the Eastern division, which is stipulated for by the agreement of the 29th July, 1903.

The terms of the instrument are of course provided for and generally determined by the provisions of the agreement, but questions will doubtless arise in the drafting which will require consideration and settlement by the parties, and I think that suitable disposition should be made for taking up this work without delay. Probably it will be well that your legal agents and those of the Government should confer upon the subject, and I shall be glad if you will issue the necessary instructions with the view to getting the lease ready for execution. I shall be pleased to hear from you on this subject at your earliest convenience.

Yours very truly,
F. Cochrane.

E. J. Chamberlin, President,
Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

On January 14, the very next day, the President of the Grand Trunk Pacific replied thus:

[Mr. Graham.]

Dear Mr. Cochrane,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, stating "that in view of the completion of the National Transcontinental railway you think it desirable that the necessary conferences should be had and arrangements made for the drafting and settling of the lease by the Government to the company of the Eastern division, which is stipulated for by the agreement of the 29th July, 1903."

As you further state, questions will doubtless arise in the drafting which will require consideration and settlement by the parties. Apart entirely from the important question as to whether or not the National Transcontinental railway has been completed as contemplated by and in accordance with the agreement to which you refer, it appears to me that before any substantial progress can be made in the direction indicated in your letter, the question as to the sum, which, as representing the cost of construction, the company is to be asked to pay interest on under the agreement, must be considered and determined.

I feel sure that you fully recognize the very great importance of this phase of the question and would therefore respectfully request that you be good enough to furnish me with a statement of such cost at as early a date as reasonably convenient.

Very truly yours,
E. J. Chamberlin.

Hon. F. Cochrane.

In that letter Mr. Chamberlain refers to the sum on which the rental is to be paid, which is the entire cost of the road when completed, and which, I submit, cannot be ascertained until the road is completed Secondly, he refers to the great question whether the road is completed or not. On January 18, Mr. Gordon Grant submitted a letter to the Minister of Railways as to the cost, I presume in pursuance of information asked for in Mr. Chamberlin's letter. The letter is as follows:

January 18, 1915.

Hon. F. Cochrane,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In accordance with your request of the 15th instant, I hand you herewith a statement showing the cost of construction of the National Transcontinental railway from Moncton to Winnipeg. You will note that the total cash expenditure to date amounts to $149,-479,550.02, and that, adding the interest, as per the terms of clause No. 15, National Transcontinental Railway Act of 1903, the total is $170,-123,191.75. Add to this unpaid estimates, approximately $1,900,000. The total to date is $172,023,191.75. The above total does not include anything for contractors' claims, which I now have under consideration, and which may be settled amicably or in the Exchequer Court.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) Gordon Grant,
Chief Engineer.

It will be remembered that that is only the cost of the railway to date. I presume that that would refer to December 31, as the letter is dated January 18?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: That total does not include contractors' claims, which may be referred to the Exchequer Court or which may be settled amicably. It is clear therefore that the actual cost had not been arrived at even at that date.

The Minister of Railways submitted this statement to Mr. Chamberlin on January 23. His letter is merely a submission of the figures, and therefore I need not read it. On January 25, Mr. Chamberlin acknowledged the receipt of that letter. On February 2, Mr. Gordon Grant, Chief Engineer of the Government, writes to Mr. Woods, Acting Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific. His letter clearly explains itself. It is pointed out that the construction and the acceptance of this road is subject to the joint action of the Chief Engineer of the Government and the Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Without this joint acceptance, there can be no real finality as to the completion of the road. The letter is as follows:

February 2, 1915.

H. A. Woods, Esq.,
Chief Engineer or Acting Chief Engineer,
Grand Trunk Pacific railway,
Winnipeg, Man.

Dear Sir,—Under section 7 of the schedule of the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903, it is stipulated that the work to be done on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. The Government is of the opinion that this provision has been complied with in every way; but to put the matter of acceptance into desirable form, I enclose herewith formal acceptance which I have executed as chief engineer for the Government, and I would ask you to kindly sign as chief engineer or acting chief engineer for the company. The enclosure is in duplicate, and you are at liberty to retain one of the copies for the company.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) Gordon Grant,
Chief Engineer.

Accompanying that was a form of joint acceptance for the Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific to sign. He refused to sign that form, as he contended that the road was not completed. I will read his letter a little later on. There is another letter from the Minister of Railways, which I think in fairness to him I should put on Hansard, to make the record fairly complete. It follows up his letter of January 23, in which the figures of the chief engineer were given. The letter is as follows:

February 3, 1915.

E. J. Chamberlin,
General Manager Grand Trunk Pacific Ry.,
Montreal, P.Q.

Dear Mr. Chamberlin:

With further reference to my letter of 23rd January, in which I enclosed the statement of the cost of construction of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway, I beg to point out that it is not intended that the item therein inserted as necessary to cover the completion of certain works shall be included at the present time, in the amount upon which interest should now be calculated. What may be incomplete is not at the present time an essential portion of the National Transcontinental railway, and it is only upon the cost of the work as completed that it is proposed to calculate interest now. This cost the Government is having a report upon by auditors, and the result of the report will be made known to you in due course.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) Frank Cochrane.

That letter, of course, states quite clearly that the amount given in the former letter is not considered the final amount upon which the rental shall be based, because the minister says in so many words: This amount is up to December 31, 1914; but at a later date, when the road is completed—that is the only inference that can be drawn—the total cost of the National Transcontinental will be computed and the interest on that amount will be the rental finally decided upon under the lease and the Act of 1903. That clearly indicates that the minister does not think the road is completed. The chief engineer takes the view that the road can be operated as it is at present, but the minister and all the correspondence admit that the road is not completed under the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE: Is a road ever completed?

Mr. GRAHAM: It might be said that a road is never completed, and I think the minister says so in one of his letters; but it can be completed under an agreement, although it may be everlastingly requiring changes. The minister's letter makes it clear that he thinks the road is completed so that it can be operated.

On February 3, there is another letter in which the minister again urges the company to execute the lease, and he refers to the amount to be expended in rolling stock for the equipment of the eastern division, $5,000,000 being the amount?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister urges that the company prepare to furnish the rolling stock for the equipment of the eastern division. It is quite clear that that is the substance of the letter.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no request in that letter to execute the lease?

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps the request to execute the lease was prior to that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was later.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is another letter in the file under date of February 3, but I think it is merely a duplicate of the letter which I read a few minutes ago. Mr. Chamberlin replies to this correspondence on February 5—merely a formal acknowledgment. On February 9, the Solicitor General writes to the chief engineer, but as this is only in reference to telephone lines, it is not necessary in the argument I am making. On February 10, Mr. Gordon Grant, the chief engineer, replies to the letter of the Solicitor General in reference to telephone lines.

Now I come to the reply of Mr. Woods, the acting chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, to the letter of Mr. Gordon Grant, chief engineer of the Government, in which he enclosed a joint acceptance to be signed by Mr. Woods, and which the latter declines to sign. Here is the reply of Mr. Woods:

Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 11, 1915.

Mr. Gordon Grant.

Dear Sir,—I have yours of February 2, file 12,259, in which it is stated that in the Government's opinion the National Transcontinental railway is now completed, and with which you enclose form of acceptance which you desire me to sign certifying, in fact, that the National Transcontinental railway is completed and satisfactory to this company. This is the first intimation I have ever received that even the Government consider the line fully completed, and that you also consider it completed. Your opinion in regard to this is different from my own, and I have therefore to say that I cannot sign the acceptance committing the Grand Trunk Pacific railway to the agreement proposed in your letter. I think before such an acceptance can be given there will have to be an inspection of the line throughout, and of the many items I think are incomplete an understanding will have to be arrived at as to what shall be capital charge in such cases.

Yours truly,

H. A. Woods.

Thus, Mr. Woods says in so many words that there are many items which the company thinks are incomplete, and that before the company can think of joining in the acceptance, an inspection will have to be made, particularly of those portions which the company say are incomplete, so that a decision may be arrived at as to what capital charges will be allowed—

Mr. BURNHAM: Did the hon. gentleman, when he was in office, provide for ascertaining the meaning of the word "complete"?

Mr. GRAHAM: There is provision made for arbitration and so on, I think. I cannot recall the details at this moment. It was not to be "complete"; a thing cannot be "complete," but it was to be "complete" under a certain agreement.

Mr. BURNHAM: How was that to be ascertained? In what state of affairs would you inform them that it was complete and they be required to take it over?

Mr. GRAHAM: The terms of the agreement say that the road as constructed shall be accepted by the chief engineer of the company and the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and if any difference arises it is to be referred to a board composed of these chief engineers and a third party of their choosing; and if they do not agree as to the third member of the board, the Chief Justice of Canada shall make the appointment.

Mr. BURNHAM: Was the board's decision to be final?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman is in error, and I do not think he wishes it to go on record that way. The agreement makes no such provision as to the question of completion.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does as to acceptance. It must be subject to joint acceptance, and if there be a difference as to the construction—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not as to completion.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not say "completion;" I used the word "construction." If the line is "constructed" it must be "completed." Let me read section 7. We are at a point now where what we do is of national importance. I want to have the case stated with exact fairness. The question raised at this moment has no bearing on the argument I was making, but I will read the clause and hon. members can judge what they are to understand from it as business men:

In order to insure, for the protection of the company as lessees of the eastern division of the said railway, the economical construction thereof in such a manner that it can be operated to the best advantage, it is hereby agreed that the specifications for the construction of the eastern division shall be submitted to and approved of by, the company for the commencement of the work, and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the company, and, in the event of differences as to the specifications, or in case the said engineers shall differ as to the work, the questions in dispute shall be determined by the said engineers and a third arbitrator, to be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

I am not versed in the law, but, speaking as a man who has had a little business experience, I take that to provide explicitly that if the engineers could not agree as to when the work was fully performed they were to refer the matter to arbitration. I do not think any other meaning could be taken out of that clause.

Now, let me go back to the correspondence. Here is a letter to the Solicitor General from Mr. Gordon Grant. It refers to the enclosure sent to Mr. Woods. Some of this correspondence directed by the Chief Engineer to the Solicitor General is merely a repetition of what I have read already. Now I come to the letter of Mr. Chamberlain in reply to the Minister of Railways. I may say so that the committee will understand clearly, that this is a letter in reply to a letter from the Minister of Railways urging the company to make provision of the rolling stock necessary for the operation of this road. Mr. Chamberlin's letter is as follows:

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway,
Montreal, Can., February 15, 1915.

Dear Mr. Cochrane,—I beg to acknowledge your communication of the 3rd instant, in regard to the provisions of the agreement of 29th July, 1903, relative to the providing of equipment for the eastern division. In reply I would call your attention to Clause 20 of the agreement, which as you will see provides that "when completed the said eastern division shall be leased to and operated by the company for a period of fifty years." Clause 22 also indicated—

I take it, that should be "indicates."

—quite clearly that the equipment of the value of $20,000,000 to be provided, of which $5,000,000 worth is to be supplied for the operation of the eastern division, is to be the first equipment for the completed road. I do not understand that the Government claims that the eastern divisions is as yet completed in accordance with the agreement, and your other letter to me of the 3rd instant bears me out in this. That being so, you will, I think, agree that it would be improvident and unwise on the part of the company to proceed to acquire under the present unfavourable conditions, equipment involving the expenditure of so large a sum, and which pending the completion of the line would to a very great extent at least, not only remain idle, but materially decrease in value.

Yours very truly,
E. J. Chamberlin.

Hon. Frank Cochrane,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

The president of the Grand Trunk Pacific formed the same opinion that I have of the letter of the Minister of Railways, because in making the assertion that the road was incomplete he says: "and your other letter to me of the 3rd inst. bears me out in this." He is convinced by the letter of the Minister of Railways—which, I think, must convince anybody—that in the mind of the Government, while the road might be fit for operation in a sense or partially, it was not completed as provided in the agreement with the company.

This is merely a letter from the Solicitor General forwarding a letter of Mr. Woods to the minister, to which I referred. On March 6, the Solicitor General wrote a letter to the chief engineer, which I think ought to be put on record:

March 6, 1915.

Gordon Grant, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, National Transcontinental
Ottawa.

Dear Sir—Referring to your letter of the 23rd February and to the refusal of Mr. H. A. Woods, acting engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to sign the acceptance dated 2nd February, 1915, it is to be noticed that Mr. Woods appears to base his refusal upon the claim that the road cannot be said to be completed within the meaning of section 20 of the agreement schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903. Mr. Woods, I presume, has in mind certain portions of the work which at present, or rather at December 31, 1914, the date up to which the audit is being made, may be said to be under construction. I have always understood, both from yourself and from the commission, that although there are such portions that are still under construction, the same are not essential for the immediate operation of the entire line, and consequently that it would not be reasonable to wait for their completion until the said section 20 was acted upon.

Would you be good enough, therefore, to state if in your opinion the eastern division was on the 31st of December, 1914, completed so far as is essential for the efficient operation of the entire line at that time and now. Also, would you kindly detail with such definiteness as you can, such portions as were on such date still under construction, and in respect of which expenditures had been made chargeable against the cost of construction but which were not said to be taken over as part of the leased premises and enjoyed by the lessees. May I add that the list which you will so kindly give, is to be used for the purpose of determining by audit the cost of such portions with a view to their not being included for the present, in the cost of construction.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) Arthur Meighen.

The Solicitor General surely admits absolutely in that letter that the road is not completed, except, as contended by the Government, sufficiently to be operated, in a measure at least, but not completed under the agreement; because from that letter of the Solicitor General to Mr. Gordon Grant, the inference is clear that there will have to be a later statement of the cost as a basis for the final determination of what the rental is to be. I will read that again, because there is no question that that is the contention—that the road is not completed under the agreement, but is completed so that it may be operated, in a measure at least, which we all want to see. This is the last sentence of the letter of the Solicitor General to the chief engineer:

May I add that the list that you will so kindly give is to be used for the purpose of determining by audit the cost of such portions with a view to their not being included for the present in the cost of construction.

Mr. Gordon Grant replied to that as chief engineer, and it is necessary to give his reply, dated just a few days ago, to the letter I have just read:

Ottawa, March 10, 1915.

Hon. Arthur Meighen,
Solicitor General, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Answering your letter of 6th inst., I may say that I intended the certificate dated February 2, 1915, (which I signed and forwarded in duplicate to Mr. H. A. Woods, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, for him to sign) to be a certificate that in my opinion, as chief engineer of the National Transcontinental railway, it is completed and ready for operation within the meaning and intent of section 20 of the agreement scheduled in the National Transcontinental Act, 1903.

You are aware that Mr. Woods has refused to sign the above acceptance, as he is of the opinion that the line should first be inspected before it is accepted, but otherwise does not mention anything in particular as not being completed.

As you state that Mr. Woods may have in mind any work now under construction, and ask me to give you a detailed list of such work as may not be ready to hand over as part of the leased premises,—

1. I may instance the approaches to the Quebec bridge. They are completed, but will be of no value to the company as part of the main line until the bridge is completed.

2. The Leonard shops, Quebec. They are not completed, but we hope to have them available by the time they are required.

3. The branch lines into the Leonard shops will not be required until the shops are sufficiently completed to be used.

4. Quebec joint terminals are as yet not completed. Should the Government wish to deduct from the total cost of the road up to December 31, 1914, the money expended, with interest thereon, for the above-mentioned items by reason of the fact that the company will not obtain any immediate use of these facilities, I would recommend the following deduction be made:

1. South side approach to Quebec bridge, paid by this commission exclusive of that paid by the Quebec Bridge Company, and not included in the estimated cost of this line (2.4 miles), $530,000.

Cost of north side approach to Quebec bridge, $150,000.

Cost of Leonard shops, land, buildings, etc., $1,138,000.

Cost of branch line to Leonard shops, $200,000.

Quebec terminals, $382,000.

Total, $2,400,000.

This is a liberal estimate and includes an ample allowance for interest charges, so that no additional deduction should be made on that account.

I may also add that it is quite questionable whether a deduction should be made for the north approach to the Quebec bridge ($150,000), as the company will be using this greatly to their profit in bringing in steel, etc., for the erection of the bridge. They will not, however, be using that part of the line on the south side, for which I have deducted $530,000 until the bridge is completed.

I might say that there is a fine distinction here, properly so that Mr. Gordon Grant is only referring in this to the amount already expended on uncompleted work, and he figures the items of cost which should make up the amount that ought to be deducted from the lease now being executed. As this work is not entirely completed, the company would have no use of these works until they were fully completed, but of course they would belong to the company under the lease when fully completed. I agree with Mr. Grant as to the approaches to the Quebec bridge; and I might say, in passing, that I think the Government will find that the company has no ground to complain about the non-completion of the Quebec bridge as part of the line. I think there is correspondence on file in which it is admitted by the late Mr. Hays that a ferry would be considered a completion of the line. Such a letter was written.

Mr. COCHRANE: They deny it now. I agree with my hon. friend that there is enough on file to establish it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I know that such a letter was received, and I cannot conceive of its going astray. It was received in connection with some other correspondence.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember that at the time the letter was received I immediately took it to Council to show that the contention of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company on that particular point had been conceded by them. But, even on this, let me see if my contention is not admitted by the chief engineer. He takes first the Leonard shops as not completed. The Leonard shops are to be part of the work as completed; everybody admits it. If they are not, then the Transcontinental Commission should not be charged with them. It may be possible to operate the line partially without these shops, but they are part of the scheme under the agreement; there can be no question about that. Mr. Grant then says:

> The Leonard shops, Quebec, are not completed, but we ought to have them available by the time they are required.

They are certainly not available now; they will not be available for a month after the shop buildings are completed, as they have to be fully equipped, which is no small task; and no person will contend that these shops will be ready for months and months yet. Mr. Grant admits that this part of the equipment of the line is absolutely uncompleted.

So this is the position. The branch lines of the Leonard shops will not be required until the shops are sufficiently completed to be used. First, the shops are not ready and will not be ready for a good many months; and secondly, the line is not ready, but it will not be needed until the shops are ready. That reminds me of the old story that so many of you have heard about the school board down South that met to discuss the question of erecting a new school-house. First, they resolved to build a new school-house; secondly, they resolved to build a new school-house out of the logs of the old school; and thirdly, they decided to continue to use the old school-house while they were erecting the new one. And so it is with these shops. The shops are not completed, but they will not be needed until the road is ready; and the road is not completed, but it will not be needed till the shops are ready. That of course is not an answer to the question, Is the road completed? I think that is very clear, so far as Mr. Gordon Grant is concerned. He admits this part of the scheme is not complete. Then there is a letter from the Solicitor General just forwarding this correspondence. These accounts were referred for audit to Mr. W. C. King and Mr. Graham Bell. Mr. Bell is head of the auditing branch of the Department of Railways and Canals, and there is not a better man in the service of the Dominion in any department. Let me just read their letter:

> Ottawa, March 23, 1915.
>
> Dear Sir,—Referring to the Order in Council of February 3, 1915, appointing the undersigned to make an audit of the eastern division of the Transcontinental railway.
>
> We beg to call your attention to a letter received from the Solicitor General, a copy of which is hereto attached, from which it appears that the "cost of construction" of the eastern division as completed on the 31st December, 1914, within the meaning of section 20 of the agreement scheduled to the Act of 1903 should not include expenditures made on and in respect of certain works which were still under construction. The result will be that the "cost of construction" as a basis upon which to ascertain the rental to be paid by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company at this date will be very considerably less than the actual cost upon completion of the said additional works now under way.
>
> Is it your desire that our report should include the statement of such actual cost as well as the "cost of construction" as so limited?
>
> Yours respectfully,
> (Sgd.) Graham Bell,
> (Sgd.) W. C. King.
>
> Hon. F. Cochrane,
> Minister of Railways and Canals,
> Ottawa, Ont.

These gentlemen when asked to audit these accounts immediately pointed out that the accounts they were asked to audit did not cover the full cost of the Transcontinental, and that the rental computed upon those accounts would be considerably less than the amount which the country ought to receive on the full cost of the construction of the road when completed. The next is a letter from the Minister of Railways to the Solicitor General enclosing the report prepared, I think, by Messrs. Bell and King. On the 25th of March, just a few days ago, the minister wrote another letter to Mr. Chamberlin in which he urged the railway to action. I believe that no reply has been received to that.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will read the letter, as it is the last one sent to Mr. Chamberlin.

> 25th March, 1915.
>
> Dear Mr. Chamberlin,—As intimated to you in previous correspondence, the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway is completed within the meaning of section 20 of the agreement between His Majesty the King and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, dated 29th day of July, 1903, scheduled to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, chapter 71 of 3 Edward VII, and the said division is ready for operation.

I find a reference in your correspondence to certain additional works still under construction by the Transcontinental Railway Commission, which additional works it was contemplated by the commission and by your company would be ultimately used in connection with the road as now completed. The Government, however, having been advised that the eastern division for purposes of operation, has been reported by the chief engineer of the Transcontinental Railway Commission as completed and ready to be leased, is of the opinion that it is in the public interest that such lease be now entered into. You will readily understand that were any other interpretation as to date of completion to be placed upon the agreement with your company it would mean the postponement for a very considerable length of time of the taking over of this extensive line of railway by the Grand Trunk Pacific, with results that might be incompatible with the public interest. Such a postponement would be to a date very hard, if not impossible to determine, as in one sense a railway can never be said to be complete. The responsibility for such a postponement I must decline on behalf of the Government to take.

The Government have under section 15 of this agreement ascertained the cost of construction, in the manner therein provided, and in so doing have included only such expenditure as has gone into work on the eastern division as now completed and ready to be leased.

I therefore request that the lease referred to in sections 6 and 20 of the above mentioned agreement be entered into. The Government has had prepared a form of lease embodying the provisions required to be included in the same by statute and by agreements between your company and the Government. The rental reserved is based on the cost of construction ascertained as aforesaid. This lease I now hand you on behalf of the Government. You will observe attached to the form of lease is a Schedule B, which schedule should contain a description of the rolling stock marked and assigned by the company to the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway. I trust that such rolling stock as the statute directs has been provided and assigned accordingly, and as particulars of the same are now not in our possession,I would request that the schedule be duly filled in by you.

On behalf of the Government I beg to request that this lease be executed by your company and assuming that the schedule as so filled in will represent rolling stock fulfilling the conditions of the agreement, and provided and assigned as therein set out, I undertake that this lease will be promptly executed on behalf of the Government.

It has been and is my desire that there be nothing contained in the lease as drafted and now presented not strictly provided for by statutory requirements, and nothing omitted directed by statute to be included. This desire I believe is lived up to in the form of lease enclosed. Should however, in your opinion the form contain any feature to which reasonable objection can be taken, or omit any necessary provision, I am prepared on behalf of the Government to confer with your company and to endeavour by every proper means to come to a common basis, and I will make every effort to do so consistent with the requirements imposed on us by statute.

That you may have before you the method by which the cost of construction, and consequently the annual rental, is arrived at, I am enclosing you a copy of the report of our auditors thereon and of the schedules thereto annexed.

Yours very truly,

There is no signature, but I presume the letter was written by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister says in his letter that he is enclosing the report of the auditors. The auditors themselves tell the minister in a letter that the rental based on their audit would not be the full rental which the company ought to pay, as that rental up to December 31, 1914, would be based on the uncompleted cost, the entire work of construction of the line not being completed. I think that is a fair statement of the letter I have read. It is admitted that the rental now arrived at will be for the present only, and that another rental must be arrived at when the works are completed. That is the tenor of the correspondence. If that were not the case the Government would have to meet the railway company and come to an arrangement as to the cost of the completion of the works, the interest on that amount to begin as rental from the time of completion of the now uncompleted work. There is no chance of getting out of putting in all these works as part of the cost of construction. If the Government could make an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific I would hold up both hands for it, but I think that the correspondence indicates that the Government is not prepared to execute a lease under the agreement, as the transcontinental railway is not complete.

Mr. COCHRANE: To relieve my hon. friend's mind on that point, I may say that we have not put it all in; we have only put in what they can use, and other parts will come in afterwards.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is just my point. It is an amicable arrangement. The minister says that he only proposes to put in now so much of the scheme as it is claimed is completed and the balance is to be put in afterwards.

Mr. COCHRANE: Deducting the Quebec bridge and things of that kind which they cannot use at the present time.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will try to make that clear. This letter has reference to the money expended to date, but it has no reference to the money to be expended.

It refers to money already expended on works not complete. The company claim that they have no right to pay interest on works incomplete when they are not in a position to use these works. The situation is very clear—that the Government, under the agreement, is not in a position to execute the lease because they cannot tell the company what the cost of the road is. They can tell what the cost of the road is up to date, but the Quebec station is not completed and that is included in the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific. Shops are being constructed by the Transcontinental Railway Commission, which is the Minister. The Champlain Market station is not completed. A line to connect the shops with the main line at Cap Rouge has been purchased from the Canadian Northern Railway, and there is an amount in the Estimates now to make that road fit for the traffic of the Grand Trunk Pacific. The terminals in Quebec city are not completed; they are scarcely started. They will not be completed for months and months, if not for more than a year; they cannot possibly be. That being the case, should we not approach this matter in another way, instead of saying to the Grand Trunk Pacific: We take it for granted that you are not going to take over this line, and we are going to operate it ourselves? We are not entitled to say that under the agreement, because we are not prepared to hand the road over in the completed state.

Mr. BURNHAM: Why was it not arranged in the first place that it would be amicably taken over?

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot tell my hon. friend why it was not; I am speaking of the agreement as it exists. We are all bound to admit that it is in the interest of the country that this road should be operated. We all agree as to that, but we want to arrive at some way by which it can be operated in a measure, that is with the exception of the uncompleted work, and that finally the company can be asked to take it over under lease. But we are not in a position to do that now and we are not in a position by reason of anything the company have done to expropriate their property, as this resolution proposes to give the Government power from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William. A practicable arrangement ought to be made in some way for the operation of this line until the Government can say to the company: Here is the whole scheme completed; are you going to take it over or are you not? If not, we can run it ourselves and we are going to take over your line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William. But at the present time the Government are not in a position to say to the company: You must take over this line, and if you do not you will violate the agreement, because, I submit, the line is not finished according to the agreement. I am firmly convinced that some arrangement ought to be made for the operation of the road.

Mr. BURNHAM: Would not a practical arrangement of that sort be a surrender?

Mr. GRAHAM: It would not be a surrender because the road is not completed. If the road were completed it would be a surrender. The correspondence shows that it is not completed except for the purpose of operation and it is not available for complete operation in my humble judgment. As to taking over the road finally; I am glad that the correspondence does not indicate that the compar' has declined to take over the road. If the Government go about it in a peaceful manner I think some arrangement could be made for the operation of this line and for the use of the Superior Junction—Fort William line if necessary until such time as the Government have the undoubted right to say to the company: We have fulfilled our part of the agreement; are you going to execute this lease? I would go a little further. Speaking for myself as a private individual I do not know that I would object to seeing this Government operating the Grand Trunk Pacific in connection with the Intercolonial railway. In that I am speaking for myself solely. If the time ever came that there should be a disagreement and the company should decline to take over the road, which I do not think it will do, a worse thing could happen to the Dominion of Canada than that the Intercolonial should be hitched up with the Grand Trunk Pacific and given its own line through to the western provinces. However, that is by the way. The point I was urging on the Government was, first, the necessity of operating the line in some way, and I was cautioning them that they were not going about it in the right way, because I believe the better judgment of the people will lead them to the conclusion, after seeing the correspondence, that under the agreement the line is not completed, and that the Government is not in a position to execute a lease except of a temporary kind even if the company were willing to agree to it.

Mr. BURNHAM: May I ask the hon. gentlemen why it is that this idea of his was not carried out before?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend and I were not in the House at the time or we might have had all these things provided for. Unfortunately, the Dominion was without our services and Parliament seemed to take another view.

Mr. COCHRANE: There are only one or two things in regard to which I desire to take issue with my hon. friend (Mr. Graham). The first is in reference to the entrance into the city of Quebec. The Grand Trunk Pacific could run their trains into the Canadian Pacific railway depot and right down to the docks and use the Canadian Pacific railway terminals at present. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) shakes his head.

Mr. GRAHAM: You are mistaken about what he is shaking it for. I said to my right hon. friend that that had nothing to do with my argument that the road is not completed under the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE: But they might run in there and have all the facilities that the Canadian Pacific railway have to-day for handling the traffic. There is a mistake in Mr. Grant's letter in that respect. I am not finding any fault with my hon. friend for making the statement he did upon reading Mr. Grant's letter. But the actual fact is that the Grand Trunk Pacific could run into the station and go right down into the terminals and docks there. Another point is that I understand the Grand Trunk Pacific take the ground, though not in writing, that the road is not completed until the Quebec bridge is completed. That means that it will not be completed before 1917. I think it should be ready in 1917.

Mr. GRAHAM: If they do they have not a leg to stand on.

Mr. COCHRANE: Perhaps they may not have a leg to stand on but that is the argument they make.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would like to see it in writing that they take that ground.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have gone over the Grand Trunk Pacific in daylight from Moncton to Winnipeg, and if the Grand Trunk Pacific claim that the contracts which they themselves tendered on and got are completed, then I will put up the other contracts alongside of them and say that they are completed also. I am not an engineer but I take a commonsense view of it and I absolutely say that if their contracts are completed then the other contracts for the balance of the road are also completed. Now, I desire to say a word in reference to the shops. Almost any lawyer will tell you that it is a debatable point whether we are required under the Act to build the shops at Transcona or not, but if the Transcona shops had been built somewhere near the centre they would have taken care of a haul of 1,800 miles and would have served a better purpose. There is no question about that, because the shops are large enough in every respect. We have as many miles of road on the Intercolonial, and we have not as good shops at the different divisional points as there are on the Transcontinental railway, which, I may say, are exceptionally good on every division, so that, even if they did not have the shops at Quebec, they could get along far better than they could on their own line from Winnipeg west. I know that the equipment at each of the divisional points of the National Transcontinental is far superior to the equipment of the shops on the other divisions, because I have been over a good portion of that road and went through the shops and saw for myself.

I must take issue with my hon. friend when he says that the chief engineer for the National Transcontinental Railway Commission and the chief engineer for the Grand Trunk Pacific can settle the dispute as to whether the road is completed or not, by calling in a third arbitrator. I do not think he has any ground for interpreting the Act in that way. On the question of construction, the engineers can follow that procedure, but as to the completion of the road, there is no definition in the Act as to what "completion" is. The point I want to make there is that if the chief engineer for the company continued to hold out and to say that this road is not completed, he could find excuses until the end of time, and he would never admit that the road was completed.

Mr. GRAHAM: The third arbitrator would not side with him.

Mr. COCHRANE: Perhaps not, but at all events the procedure referred to by my hon. friend is as to construction, and it has no reference to completion, and there is a big difference between the two. If there is a dispute between the two engineers as to how a piece of road or a bridge is to be constructed, an arbitrator may be called in, but the completion is a different question altogether. On the piece of road from Graham to Lake Superior Junction, which my hon. friend took over from the Grand Trunk Pacific, there are quite a number of wooden trestles, which we have not filled, and when their usefulness is ended it will be up to us to fill them in or to put in steel and concrete.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the two miles of road?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, but again on McArthur's work there are wooden trestles. These are things that must continue for some time, and under the Act, as I understand it, there will be capital charges year after year, so that the House 5 p.m. will be continually voting certain sums for capital charges to improve and extend the Transcontinental. I do not think there is any doubt about that. We might, of course, never get the chief engineer of the Company to say that the road was completed, and so they could carry this contention on forever.

My hon. friend said that we were going about this in the wrong way, but I can assure him that there is no desire on the part of the department or of the Government to go about it in the wrong way. We feel that the road is in shape for operation now. We feel that, even with these other works that are not completed, they have absolute facilities for operating the road to accommodate all the business there will be for years to come. I think it is only fair and just that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company should enter into this agreement and carry out their part of the bargain.

I understood that another submission which they have made is, that they will enter into an agreement to operate a road costing $60,000,000, and they say they do not want to enter into an agreement for a road that has cost $180,000,000, or whatever it may be. That, of course, is a big difference.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not in the correspondence.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not, but I understand that it is one of the contentions they set up, and probably it will be stated when they answer my letter, but perhaps I should not have mentioned it here.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does this sum of $169,061,354.80 include compound interest over the whole period?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the interest as provided for by section 20 of the Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is compound interest capitalized to the end of the year during which the expenditure was made, and then simple interest from that on?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I believe so.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am inclined to think, judging by the figures, that it is compound interest right straight through, which, if it is so, is contrary to the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will find out about that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is simple interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It should be simple interest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood the Minister of Railways to say that the reason he brings this resolution before the House is that the road is now completed and ready to be operated, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company are declining to live up to their agreement and refuse to take the road and operate it.

Mr. COCHRANE: They have not refused yet. This legislation only provides for the contingency of their refusal. If I did not make that clear, I want to make it clear now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood from the minister that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, while not actual ly refusing to operate the road, did not comply with the request made by the Minister of Railways to operate the road. I can very well understand that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are not anxious to operate the road, after the road has been deteriorated and blemished as it has been. A railroad is not complete when the roadbed has been prepared and the rails laid; it must have terminals at each end. As soon as this Government came to office, the question was raised whether or not the terminals of the road were part of the construction, and the question being referred to arbitration, the award went against the contention of the Government.

Mr. COCHRANE: Do you refer to the award of Sir William Whyte?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes. The award of Sir William Whyte settled the principle that the terminals are part of the construction, and, therefore, there must be terminals at Winnipeg, as there are, and also terminals at Quebec, which the Government is now providing. The minister is aware that there has been a total change made in the terminals as proposed at Quebec. The other day the Minister of Railways stated that his object was to administer his department in a businesslike manner and in no other way; that his only consideration was the interest of the country, and that he would not allow politics to enter into his administration. I give full credit to my hon. friend that when he made that statement he meant it; but if it be his object, as I believe he intended it to be, that in the administration of the important department he has in charge he has nothing in view but the interest of the country, the interest of the railway, and the interest of his department, how can he contend that the changes which he made in the terminals at Quebec were in the interest of the country or of the railway?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have no hesitation in saying that I think they were.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend thinks so, and I cannot put my judgment against his, because I do not pretend to be a railway man; but everybody whom I have heard discuss the question has declared that the changes made at Quebec were detrimental to the railroad and to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway which was obliged to operate that road under that agreement.

As to the shops, when the late commission had charge of that road, they bought 300 acres of land for the purpose of erecting shops. Where should the shops of a railway be built? Is it not common sense that they should be built by the side and upon the level of the railway? The site for the shops provided by the late commission was at Cap Rouge, by the side of the railway and near the bridge. My hon. friend tells me now that that site has been discarded altogether, and that the shops are to be located nine miles away from the railway; yet my hon. friend will say that it is in the interest of the road and of the country that that should be done. Although my hon. friend says that, from his experience and on his responsibility as an adviser of the Crown and as a trustee of the people, to remove the shops from Cap Rouge, where they were just on the level of the roadway, by the roadside, and to place them nine miles away, is in the interest of the country, every one will say that it is contrary to common sense. There is no possible excuse for changing the site. My hon. friend has been at Cap Rouge, and he knows that what I am stating now is absolutely true. At Cap Rouge there are 300 acres of good ground on a rock foundation. At St. Malo there is a swamp, and the site is nine miles away from the road. It is not possible to use the shops at St. Malo unless every car which is sent from the railway to the shops passes over a line of something over nine miles. My hon. friend, in order to reach the shops, has had to buy from the Canadian Northern at a cost of $175,000, an old line, which was built in an inferior manner and which will have to be improved very much in order to bring it up to the standard of the rest of the road. That expenditure would have been saved to the country if the old site had been retained. From the date of the changing of the site to this, I have not heard a single explanation from the minister—and I shall be glad to hear one from him in a moment or two—as to how he can justify his action in changing the site of the shops from Cap Rouge to St. Malo. The shops at St. Malo will be at least 150 feet lower than the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific where the former site was. The distance between the site at St. Malo and the railway is so great that when the late Postmaster General, the Hon. Mr. Pelletier, announced it to the people of Quebec, he said that in order to reach the shops a tunnel would be built from the line of railway to the shops. For the benefit of those who do not know Quebec as the minister and I know it, I may say that the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway is in the valley of the St. Lawrence, and that the shops are not in the valley of the St. Lawrence, but in the valley of the St. Charles river. Between the valley of the St. Lawrence river and the valley of the St. Charles river rises Cape Diamond which will have to be tunnelled in order to extend the railway to the shops and to bring the shops within reasonable distance of the main line. My hon. friend says that the site was changed in the interest of the country. I will not dispute that; I will leave the matter to the country to decide. The minister has not brought down a scrap of paper, from the time that he so acted up to this moment, to show that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company has ever agreed to the change. That company, so far as I have been able to find out from all the papers brought down by my hon. friend, has never consented to that change. My hon. friend (Mr. Graham) a moment ago quoted the law that the specifications had to be agreed upon by the engineer of the company and by the engineer of the Government jointly. It was agreed that the shops were to be placed at Cap Rouge beside the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. Therefore the change could not be made legally, and to-day the Government is at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. To-day that company says: This road will not be completed until the contract which we made and the specifications upon which we agreed have been carried out to the letter. My hon. friend, when he acted as he did, may say that he acted with a view to helping the country and the company; but when he did so, whatever may have been his motive, he placed himself in the power of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and he cannot compel them to execute the lease.

There is another point. A railway must have a station. This railway, in order to meet the object for which it was intended, must be brought down to the tidal waters of the St. Lawrence at Quebec, and it is so brought down. Then there must be a station. Every one will admit that. When the question of determining where the station should be came before the late commission, they consulted all the parties interested; they consulted all the railway companies and all the steamship companies which come to the city of Quebec; they consulted the Quebec Central Company, the Intercolonial Railway, the Delaware & Hudson Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and even the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. On a former occasion I quoted the deliberations of all the interested parties. They consulted the Allan line, the Donaldson line, the White Star line and all the other steamship companies which come to Quebec. The decision was then made that the best site on which to place a station was the Champlain market. They proceeded accordingly. They bought from the city of Quebec the Champlain market for $100,000. They started to prepare plans for the station, and they gave a contract for it. When the present Government came into power, they cancelled that contract. The indemnity given to the contractors for the cancelling of the contract for the building of the station at the Champlain market amounted to some $36,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think it was $26,000. I am not sure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Why did they cancel the contract? Why did they not build the station where it was intended to be placed? They said that they wanted to have a union station for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. My hon. friend knows that, between the point of junction of the railway and the tidal waters and the Canadian Pacific railway station, there is a distance of fully three-quarters of a mile, and that again Cape Diamond must be tunnelled in order to reach the station of the Canadian Pacific railway, or the line must go through the busiest part of the city of Quebec. My hon. friend knows—if he does not everybody in the city of Quebec must be of the opinion—that this station is not half so useful for the purpose of the enterprise as the station that was discarded. Moreover, though he cancelled that contract and changed that station, he was compelled to admit later on that he had made a mistake; for last year he had to come back and ask this Parliament for an appropriation for the building of a station at the very spot which he had discarded three years before. Is this in the interest of the country? And who can say that in so acting my hon. friend has acted in the best interest of the road? Will it be said that it was on the question of cost that he so acted? Let us look at that. The land at the market station cost $100,000. The station was to cost $1,000,000—making the total cost of station and site $1,100,000. What will be the cost to the country under the contract which my hon. friend has made wih the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? The papers brought down to-day show that for the Canadian Pacific railway property as it exists to-day a capital charge is admitted of $3,295,000. The expense for the new station will be $2,000,000, and land yet to be acquired will cost $1,075,000. This makes a total cost of $6,370,000, on which the country will have to pay 2½ per cent, or $142,000 a year. So, it cannot be said that it is for reasons of economy that this change was made. Moreover the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that this new Canadian Pacific railway station is of no use whatever to the Grand Trunk Pacific unless a tunnel is provided to go under Cape Diamond from the valley of the St. Charles to the valley of the St. Lawrence. I repeat, these changes of the station were made without the consent of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. If I am wrong, I am ready to be corrected, but certainly there is not a syllable in the papers brought down by the Government to show that I am wrong. I assume, unless I am contradicted, that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company never agreed to the changes made.

Well, Sir, when these changes have been made by the Government regardless of the contract entered into with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, it is not extraordinary that the company do not rush forward to take over the road. Their agreement was based upon certain terms; and the Government ruthlessly and without the consent of the company threw aside the agreement made. Now they tell us that the road is completed to their own satisfaction and therefore the company should take it over. It is no wonder that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company declares that it is not prepared to take over the road.

The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that he understood the Grand Trunk Pacific will not take over the road, but contend that it is not completed because the bridge is not completed. If that is the objection raised by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, I have only to say that nothing of that kind appears in the correspondence. There is not a word of it. He said also that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company refused to take over the road because they thought the cost too heavy. If that is their pretension—and I do not think it is—there is not a word in the correspondence brought down to show it. I know there is one thing in the correspondence that has been brought down, and that is the protest of the company against the degrading of the road.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what letter is that found?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not say that that is in the correspondence brought down to-day; that was in the correspondence to which attention was called a year or more ago.

So I repeat what I have said: the Government have put themselves in the power of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and cannot compel that company to take over the road. Let them go before any court to compel the carrying out of this part of the contract, and the company will say: You have not lived up to your agreement; the road is not completed, and we will not take it.

These are preliminary remarks to the consideration of the merits of the resolution brought forward to-day by my hon. friend. We shall have to deal with that later on. With regard to the observation made by the Solicitor General that the contract was deficient, I have to say that the contract is full and complete, made by the best lawyers we could engage. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick was Minister of Justice when the contract was prepared. Not satisfied with his own efforts, he called in Mr. Gormully, solicitor of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Shepley, of whose reputation I need not speak. These were the parties who prepared the contract. There is enough in the contract, as I stated a moment ago, to force the implementing by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company of their undertaking. But the Government have placed themselves in such a position that they cannot force the company to act.

Mr. COCHRANE: I take issue with my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as to what was laid before the late Sir William Whyte, the arbitrator. As I understand it—and I was there when the agreement was drawn up and read—the Grand Trunk Pacific wanted to use not only the Transcona shops but also the road down to join with their road at Lake Superior; and it was to find out what they should pay for the use of the shops separately and what they were to pay for the use of the railway. He made his award on that and we have carried it out.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not a complete award.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is a complete award so far as my memory carries. I have not it here. They were to pay 2 per cent on the cost of the road down to Lake Superior, 10 per cent on all work done for the use of their rolling stock from Winnipeg to Lake Superior, and 12½ per cent on any rolling stock repaired at these shops of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Now, with reference to the St. Malo shops and the changing of the site. I am confident that the country believes that the change was good not only in the interest of the road but in the interest of the city of Quebec. The shops are five miles outside the terminal in Quebec of the Transcontinental road. He says they are nine miles outside.

Mr. GRAHAM: You run right by them with your road.

Mr. COCHRANE: We run right by them into the city of Quebec, to the Canadian Pacific Railway station.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not the same line, that is away from the bridge.

Mr. COCHRANE: That may be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Away from the bridge and away from the river also.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. We have 200 acres there which was bought at as low a price as the other.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Pardon me.

Mr. COCHRANE: Well, I think in proportion a great deal cheaper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Pardon me.

Mr. COCHRANE: The other was bought at $300 an acre, and this at $1,000 an acre.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The land at Cap Rouge was $300 an acre and the land at St. Malo $1,000 an acre.

Mr. COCHRANE: $200,000; yes, and a good bargain at that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I hope so.

Mr. GRAHAM: For the fellows that sold it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Was the change to St. Malo approved of by the company?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not so sure of that, and that is why I did not answer the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister will find that out?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. I have nothing to hide in this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not suggest that you have.

Mr. COCHRANE: I want to take issue with the right hon. gentleman in reference to the Champlain market. I do not think there is a business man in Quebec who will not agree that the change is in the interest of the city of Quebec, when you consider that you have to go to the Champlain market over those little narrow streets, one with a street railway on it, and not large enough for the existing traffic, and haul your train around by way of the Canadian Pacific railway station. That would certainly not be in the interest of Quebec in any shape or form. There is no room there to have a proper terminal. I think it is in the interest of the country that there should be union stations wherever possible. This may cost a little more, but the terminals are far better. I had a good example to follow, that of the old Commission in making joint terminals in the city of Winnipeg. The Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific there use the one terminal, and the interest charges in Winnipeg will be nearly as high as in the city of Quebec. In reference to the tunnel, is it in the interest of the Transcontinental or of Quebec, or of the country, that we should build a tunnel which would cost probably a million, or a million and a quarter, or a million and a half of dollars, and have the company pay interest on it before the business there calls for it? I make the statement again that the Transcontinental railway, if they started running to-morrow, could run right down to the Canadian Pacific Railway station, use that station in connection with the other line and go right down to the Louise basin and make their terminals there.

The hon. gentleman said that the Canadian Pacific railway agreed that the Champlain market was the best place for a station. A very eminent railway man, Mr. McNicol, told me it was not a fit place for it, and he was at that conference.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I agree that he is a good man to the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: If I understood my right hon. friend, and I do not want to misquote him, he said that the Canadian Pacific railway had agreed that it was the best place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I did not say that. I said all the companies. The Canadian Pacific railway was at the meeting. I did not say that the Canadian Pacific railway agreed, but all the others certainly did agree.

Mr. COCHRANE: He is certainly a good railway man.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: From the Canadian Pacific railway standpoint, no better, and he showed it in the contract he made with my hon. friend.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think so, and I am willing to stand by that, not withstanding my right hon. friend. We have heard a good deal about degrading the road. I have no less an authority than Mr. Chamberlin for the assertion that we took the right position in that, and surely he is interested—he is president of this road.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE: And he said that we could take out the grades, if it was thought in the interest of the road, for one-half what the old commission was paying.

Mr. MARCIL: Who recommended these changes in Quebec?

Mr. COCHRANE: The commission.

Mr. MARCIL: Did a board of railway engineers recommend them or how were they brought about?

Mr. COCHRANE: They were brought about by the commission, just as they were brought about in the first place.

Mr. ARTHUR LACHANCE (Quebec Centre) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the resolution before the House gives authority to the Government to lease or otherwise acquire that part of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway known as Lake Superior Division, between Lake Superior Junction and Fort William, in Ontario, the power to be exercised in case the company refuse to operate the Transcontinental. The contract made in 1903 between the late Government and the company provides that the company has to take over the railway only after its completion. Now, the road is not yet completed according to the terms of the contract, and that is one of the reasons given in the correspondence brought down before the House by the Minister of Railways why the company is withholding its signature to the lease recently submitted to it by the Government. Among other incomplete works on the road, the company mentions the whole of the work on the terminals in Quebec city and harbour. I wish to make a few remarks on this last point. I regret to say that the company seems to have taken a correct stand. Not only the terminals are not completed, but I should even be justified in stating that they are barely started. As a matter of fact, from the information given the House during this session, we find that during the year, as well as during the past three years, no progress has been made in the construction of these terminals in Quebec city and harbour, and that the only activity manifested by the Government since it is in power has tended to destroy rather than build. Its indifference and apathy can neither be explained nor condoned.

A few words on the conditions that existed in 1911. The railway had been built up to the city; the foundations had been started for a station at Champlain market to cost $1,000,000. Many millions of dollars had been voted to construct deep water wharves 1,800 feet in length in the region of Cape Diamond, the terre-plein that would be left to be used for yards, sidings, freight-shed and elevator sites. The interested parties, the city of Quebec, the Transcontinental Railway Commission, the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the Government, had acted jointly to devise this whole scheme that was to take two years to complete, after which time the Transcontinental would itself be ready to operate its trains from the Atlantic to the Pacific. But as soon as the Borden Government came into power, it upset all these arrangements which were both advantageous and logical. They stopped the work between Quebec and Cap Rouge, and in the meantime there has been nothing doing in that region; between Cochrane and Quebec as well everything moves at a snail's pace. For constructing 35 miles of grading and 88 miles of track, which remained to be done in that section in November, 1912, and which required at most a few months, a whole year was spent, the road having been completed only in November, 1913. That premeditated delay was doubtless intended to facilitate the cogitations of the new president of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, Major Leonard, on the problems of slopes and curves; but we realize how as a result of those cogitations the traction power from Cochrane to Quebec and even to Moncton, was impaired. At the beginning of the undertaking in 1905, the engineers had determined the grades over the whole line from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as follows: slopes runnings east, four-tenths of one per cent or 21 feet per mile; slopes running west, five-tenths of one per cent or 26 feet per mile, then later six-tenths of one per cent or 31 feet per mile. It must, however, be stated that slopes were to be avoided except where it would be impossible to obtain an absolute level. By means of these very gradual slopes, a locomotive could pull double the weight that it could draw on any other road now in operation in this country. Now, between Cochrane and Quebec, Mr. Leonard has increased the slopes from 21 feet to 100 feet per mile of road, with the necessary result that a locomotive, having pulled as long a train as its power would allow from Prince Rupert to Cochrane, would not be able to proceed to Quebec without dividing the train into two sections. The objectionable character of such a condition of things need not be pointed out. The efficiency of the road was impaired without any justification.

But as regards Quebec itself and the construction of the terminals, I claim that since October, 1911, the Government's action has been ineffective, and at times even destructive. What about the shops that were to be put up at Cap Rouge for the building and repair of cars? The Government is building them at St. Malo, with only half the capacity first decided on, and only for repairs. The Quebec Board of Trade has entered a protest against these changes in its report for 1914. At page 124 may be found a letter from its president, Mr. Joseph Picard, dated the 5th of December, 1914, to Hon. Thomas Chase Casgrain, the new Postmaster General, which reads partly thus:—

> The construction of the Transcontinental Railway car shops at St. Malo, is progressing satisfactorily; but those car works have no shops for the construction of cars, as were to have the carworks which had been planned at first for Cap Rouge. We were given the assurance that this omission would be rectified, because Mr. Chamberlin has stated that the Transcontinental will require for car construction as extensive facilities as any other transcontinental system.

We ourselves have also during last session entered protests, but in vain, and you will find that the board of trade's representations will likewise have no practical results.

Then, to connect these carworks with the railway, the Government had to purchase from the Great Northern Railway five miles of line at a cost of $175,000 to which three miles had to be added at a cost of ten to twelve thousand dollars. And all that expenditure was made when it would have been so simple and logical to build them at Cap Rouge where they would have been in close touch with the main road and where must pass all the rolling material of the Transcontinental from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

As to the terminals themselves, namely the stations, yards, freight sheds, elevators, they were to be located in the vicinity of Champlain market and Cape Diamond. Thus located close to the deep water wharves, they would have been part of the Transcontinental system and intended first of all for its own service and under its direct control. Now the Government want them built in the valley of the river St. Charles, on the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, where, in all likelihood, they will be of service to and under the control of that company especially. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company had agreed to the first plans; and now refuses to accept the others because, if those plans were carried out, the company would be dependent on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Notwithstanding these objections, the Government persists in its new proposals; but the consent of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is a necessary condition under the contract made in 1903 between it and the late government. However it may be, the consent or refusal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the proposed changes do not in any way justify the Government's apathy for more than three years.

Yet, since October 1911, the citizens of the city of Quebec, particularly through their board of trade, have constantly urged the construction of those terminals; their solicitations were never more pressing and frequent than during 1914, but were always fruitless. Thus at page 69 of the annual report, I find the following to have taken place at a meeting of the board of directors held on the 2nd of June:

> His Honour Mayor Drouin, being invited to report on his recent interview with the members of the Government at Ottawa respecting the work on the Transcontinental, complied willingly. The board was not satisfied with the explanations given by the members of the Dominion Government concerning the delay in the construction of the terminals of the Transcontinental at Quebec, particularly of the freight sheds or stations. It was then decided to send a deputation to Ottawa, and a telegram was sent immediately to the representative of the Quebec district in the Dominion cabinet, Hon. L. P. Pelletier, asking him to name a day and hour for an interview with the deputation.

As I turn over the leaves, I find a minute at page 70 which is an answer to the statement of the minister of Railways that the terminal facilities of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec were sufficient for the traffic on the Transcontinental. Here is the note:

> On the 9th of June, the board sent to the Hon. L. P. Pelletier a letter informing him that the elevator built on the Louise jetty by the Harbour Commissioners will scarcely be of any use for the local trade, because besides the sum of $2 per car charged by the Harbour Commission for the use of the sidings on the Louise jetty, the Canadian Pacific Railway charges the excessive rate of 2½ cents per hundred pounds for the use by the same cars of its own sidings, or rather for the use a few hundred feet in length, that is $15 for every car of 40,000 pounds capacity; there is moreover $1 per car to be paid at the elevator for the loading of each car, which means the excessive total charge of $18 per car.

And that is the elevator which we are asked to believe would according to the new government scheme satisfy for the requirements of the traffic on the Transcontinental, when this very elevator, under its present management and on account of the railways interested in it, can hardly handle the local trade.

To further show the groundlessness of the statement made by the Minister of Railways regarding Quebec's ability to cope with the handling of the freight at that place, I again quote from the report, at page 75, of a meeting of the board of directors held on the 12th of June, 1914:

Mr. Jean Guay points out the delay in the construction at Quebec of the terminals for the Transcontinental Railway. By means of small topographical charts which he distributes among the directors, he shows that there is no general plan of the whole works, that no provision has been made either by means of a tunnel or otherwise for connecting the car works at St. Malo with the Transcontinental Railway; that the new grain elevator of the Harbour Commission could hardly be utilized by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. He adds that a representative delegation should go to Ottawa and interview the Government on this subject, so that precise information may be obtained that could then be communicated to the members of the Board of Trade at a special general meeting that could be held in ten days or so.

The Chairman points out that it is hardly possible to obtain in just a few days precise information and that it would be better to adjourn sine die or else call that meeting whenever it will be necessary.

So, here we are in June, 1914, after three years during which the Government have had under consideration this question of terminals, yet the president of the Board of Trade has yet been unable to obtain precise information. Besides, even we members of this House have never been able to get anything definite in the way of information.

About that time, the Government seems to have been somewhat inclined to revert to the original scheme of elevators and deep water docks at Cape Diamond. Thus, at page 91 of the report, there may be seen a letter, dated the 2nd of July, 1914, written by the president to Hon. L. P. Pelletier, then Postmaster General:

Dear Sir,

I have communicated to the council of the Board of Trade the result of our recent visit to the terminals which are to be constructed at Quebec for the handling of the freight on the Transcontinental and also your decision to press the construction of the docks and of an elevator at Lampson's cove.

The directors wish me to convey to you their thanks and congratulations for this decision and their hope that these works will be pushed rapidly to completion so that Quebec may be able to handle the grain from the Northwest as soon as the Transcontinental begins to remove it to the sea.

* * * * *

We are informed that the contractor intends to construct the 2,000 feet docks which you have authorized, from Lampson's cove in a westerly direction, in the shape of a simple wharf or protecting wall, fronting on the river in a straight line. A wharf of that kind would accommodate only three large vessels and it would become necessary to construct very wide and expensive galleries leading from the elevators; while if docks were constructed on the same plan as those of Halifax, St. John, Montreal and New York, there would be five times times the accommodation for an equal frontage.

On the 11th of August, the president writes another letter giving particulars about the docks at Halifax.

But that scheme of docks and elevators is entering a new phase. I have here two letters explaining the reasons of its failure:

Ottawa, August 15, 1914.

Mr. Jos. Picard,
President of the Board of Trade,
Quebec.

Dear Sir:

In further reference to your letter of the 11th inst., I beg to forward you a copy of the reply received by me from Hon. Mr. Cochrane, relating to the docks intended to afford terminal facilities for the handling of freight on the Transcontinental at Quebec.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) Louis P. Pelletier.

Ottawa, August 14, 1914.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Pelletier:

I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 13th inst. with enclosed a copy of a letter from Mr. Jos. Picard, president of the Quebec Board of Trade, and in reply to state that the harbour at Halifax is under the control of the Intercolonial Railway, and so under the direct control of my department, while the harbour at Quebec is under the control of the Harbour Commissioners, with whom I have nothing to do.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) F. Cochrane.

The stand thus taken by the Minister of Railways seems to me unwarranted. He states: I am concerned with the docks in Halifax harbour, because that harbour is under the management of the Intercolonial the latter being under the control of my department. But the Transcontinental is also under the control of his department, because, for the last two years, the minister has taken over the powers of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. The original plans also provided for the construction of those docks by the Transcontinental Railway Commission. Moreover the Government has constructed the docks at Levis and never claimed that it was for the Quebec harbour commission to see to that work.

The answer of the minister therefore merely evades the question, and justifies our suspicions that the Government is ill-disposed towards the Quebec terminals.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LACHANCE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, just before six o'clock, when you left the chair, I was replying to the claim of the Minister of Railways that the Transcontinental Railway was now ready to start operations, even at Quebec, and that there were in that city sufficient facilities to meet the requirements of both the passenger and freight traffics. I have already quoted from correspondence between the ministers and the city authorities, to prove that such a claim is without foundation; that there are at present at Quebec neither docks, nor elevators that could be made use of by the Transcontinental Railway and that the Minister of Railways has refused to carry on these works but has suggested that it was for the Harbour Commission to see to them.

As a matter of fact, the Board of Trade appealed to the Harbour commission. Alas, a new deception awaited them, as will be seen by the two following letters, one from Mr. Levasseur, secretary of the Board of Trade, to Mr. Renault, the other from Mr. Renault to Mr. Levasseur:

Quebec, September 21, 1914.

Mr. Raoul Renault,
Secretary-Treasurer of the Harbour Commission.

Dear Sir:

On the 11th of August last, we sent to Hon. Mr. Pelletier, the representative of the Quebec district in the Dominion Government, the enclosed letter. I have instructions from the board of directors to communicate to you a copy of this letter, as well as the answers of the Hon. Mr. Pelletier and of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

You will notice that the Minister of Railways and Canals suggests that the works at Lampson's cove, etc., for the Transcontinental Railway terminals are under the direct control of the Quebec Harbour Commission.

M. T. LeVasseur,
Secretary.

Quebec, September 26, 1914.

M. T. LeVasseur, Esq.,
Secretary,
Board of Trade,
Quebec.

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 21st inst. enclosing a letter to Hon. L. P. Pelletier regarding the work which the Harbour Commissioners are now carrying on at Lampson's cove.

In reply, I have instructions to inform you that the improvements now being effected at Lampson's cove are destined only to provide a landing for the railway ferry-boat.

Yours very sincerely,
Raoul Renault,
Secretary,
Quebec Harbour Commission.

So a peculiar situation arises; nobody is willing to take charge of the most indispensable part of the terminals, namely the docks and elevators. The Government do not concern themselves about it; the Harbour Commission will not have anything to do with it, neither will the Minister of Railways.

It would be difficult to find in the past, under any of the administrations, a similar chaos in an undertaking of such importance: no controlling head, no acting body, no definite plan, no responsible authority over the actions of the parties interested; one pulls this way, another that way, to suit personal or political interests.

And what about the famous Union station at the Palace? To reach it a tunnel had been proposed; has the work been started? The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has asked the following question:

1. Has the work been started on the proposed tunnel in connection with the maritime station of the National Transcontinental at Quebec?
2. If so, what amount has been expended on the work up to December 31, 1914?

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals answered as follows:

1. Yes.
2. $372,514.86 have been expended by the land commissioners and $154,293.83 by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the right of way and buildings.

What relation the purchase of that land and the construction of those roads and buildings can have to the tunnelling of the cliff from Sillery to St. Malo, is not easy to see. Then, what generosity has prompted the idea of connecting with the construction of that tunnel the Canadian Pacific Railway? But what can be clearly seen is that the tunnel is not under way, that many years will pass and many millions will be spent before it is completed, if ever the scheme should materialize; and meanwhile the Transcontinental will be without approaches to the station which is planned for it and without any accommodation for the handling of its freight.

To be just, I must say that last spring, the Government started work on the foundations of a freight station at Champlain market; but these foundations were barely out of the ground when the work was stopped about the end of July.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me a question? Does my hon. friend state that the work on the Champlain station was interrupted in July?

Mr. LACHANCE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Not at all. It was carried on until the snow flew.

Mr. LACHANCE (Translation): I beg the Postmaster General's pardon. I am sure of what I say because in the month of October, I happened to go several times in that locality and the work had been stopped. Besides I lately read in a Quebec paper, Le Soleil or L'Evènement, but I rather think it was in Le Soleil although I am not positive about it, that the work was stopped since the beginning of August.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): No, no.

Mr. LACHANCE (Translation): In any case, one thing is certain, and that is that the work has been stopped, for what reason I do not know, long before the snow flew. In any event, winter came; but that was no reason to interrupt the work.

So then, wretched car-works reduced to one-half their capacity at Saint Malo, and the foundation of an insignificant freight station at Champlain market, such were the only results of three years efforts on the part of the Government towards the building of the Transcontinental railway terminals at Quebec, and are what the Minister of Railways wishes us to accept as sufficient accommodation for the traffic on the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Such was the hopeless and confused tangle in which were the terminals when the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) made his exit last fall.

Then a new political star rose on the horizon, and we saluted it with pleasure.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Translation): With enthusiasm.

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Translation): We shall judge him by his works.

Mr. LACHANCE (Translation): We saluted with pleasure and enthusiasm the new Postmaster General who henceforth is to look after the interests of the Quebec district, and despite our many disappointments his coming inspired us with renewed hope, and the Board of Trade made a further effort. I think the Postmaster General will endorse my statement, when I say that the citizens of Quebec and all interested bodies like the Board of Trade, are not satisfied with the present conditions. He is aware how groundless is the statement of the Minister of Railways that present arrangements meet the requirements of the traffic on the Transcontinental. I need only recall that on the 23rd of October last, the president, the two vice-presidents of the Board of Trade, and the Mayor of Quebec had an interview with the Postmaster General at the City Hall. Those gentlemen expressed themselves in the following terms, as shown at pages 116 and 117 of the report:

> In June last, Mr. Pelletier and the officers of the Transcontinental, after inspecting the grounds, had promised that the work would be started immediately on the construction of docks and of a grain elevator near Lampson's Cove. As the Transcontinental is completed, and this work is still in abeyance, Quebec is in a difficult position and requests that this work be started as soon as possible.

I also quote a letter of the 24th of November, 1914, to the Postmaster General, which may satisfy the Minister of Railways that the people of Quebec are not as satisfied as he would have had us believe this afternoon. The letter is addressed by Mr. Levasseur to the Postmaster General.

> Dear Sir:
>
> The construction of the Transcontinental railway is practically completed; we may even expect that next May this great railway will be operated all along the line from Winnipeg to Moncton. Unfortunately, Quebec harbour, which is to become the summer terminal for the Transcontinental, is far from being in a position to handle the enormous traffic which our great national railway will carry from the Canadian West to the Canadian harbours. As yet Quebec can offer no terminal facilities; there are no deep water docks in front of the city, and no elevators. The result will of course be as ever it was, that the western traffic on the Grand Trunk Pacific will take the usual road to American harbours.

I also quote to the same effect from a letter written on the 5th of December, 1914, by the president of the board of trade to the Postmaster General:

> However, the only facilities now in course of construction at Quebec, are those which are being made at the Louise basin, and they provide a dock area barely sufficient to accommodate three large steamers, and a small elevator with a capacity of one million bushels, which may be reached by the Transcontinental only over the tracks of a rival railway by paying a prohibitive rate. And these facilities are not even sufficient for the traffic of the Canadian Northern which is almost completed.
>
> It is therefore evident that no provision practically has been made here for the export traffic of the Transcontinental railway during the season of navigation on the St. Lawrence, and that immediate attention should be given to that question.

All of which goes to prove that the Board of Trade, in so protesting, was voicing the sentiments of the citizens and continues as in the past to ask that terminals be constructed in the neighbourhood of Champlain market and Cape Diamond; it also goes to prove that during the past three years the Government has done nothing effective in that direction but has always evaded the issue.

The least we can now expect is that the new minister of the Quebec District will put an end to this fumbling, that he will sincerely endeavour to fulfil the legitimate anticipations of the Quebec citizens and that he will assist the Board of Trade in its efforts. For unfathomable reasons, the Government persist in their intention to change the plans agreed upon in October 1914 and which had been stated by the most competent engineers, to be the most suitable. We, being in the minority cannot help it; but at any rate the Government might go ahead and carry out the changes they have decided upon. It is urgent, since already the Transcontinental is partly in operation. My right to make that request cannot be questioned; neither is this the first occasion on which I voice these sentiments. Pledges should be kept; and Quebec has secured both from the Laurier and Borden Governments, the promise that terminals, would be built, not mere makeshifts, but suitable terminals fully equipped with all necessary facilities for the handling of the enormous traffic which the Transcontinental railway is bound to bring. So let the work proceed. It will be in the interest of the people at large, throughout the Dominion, while giving a further impetus to the activities of Quebec harbour and of the old city of Champlain.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Solicitor General): I regret I cannot reply to the hon. gentleman in his own language, and I still further regret that I was only able to ascertain very imperfectly the purport of his remarks. Consequently, what I have to say will not, I hope, be considered by him as the whole answer of the Government to whatever he may have charged. I understand, however, that the burden of his remarks has been that the Quebec terminals and other facilities in the city of Quebec and its neighbourhood are not sufficiently completed to warrant the Government calling upon the company to make good their contract and take over the road. I believe he also seconds the assertion of his leader that an error has been made in the choice of the site for the terminals and the Leonard shops. In the first place, I am not able to get the connection between the burden of his remarks and the motion that is before the Chair. The motion before the Chair is that a resolution be passed, concluding that it is in the interests of the country to put the Government in a position to lease the line between Lake Superior Junction and Fort William, or, if necessary, acquire it in another way than by leasing it, and to make whatever may be necessary in the way of expenditure to operate the Transcontinental railway, that line included, a charge against consolidated revenue. Even were all that the hon. gentleman says correct, and all that the right hon. leader of the Opposition says correct, would it not be wise to pass this resolution? Would it not be even more necessary, if such were possible, than it is on the assumption that they are wrong? The resolution simply empowers the Government to lease, should it deem wise, the line between Lake Superior Junction and Fort William, on the assumption that it may for some time be the duty of the Government to operate this road, and that that line will be necessary. If the remarks of the speaker who has just sat down (Mr. Lachance) were correct, if it were true that the portion of the work at Quebec was so far from completion as he says, it would be all the more likely that we should have to operate the line, and operate it for some time, and necessary that we should operate the line between Superior Junction and Fort William.

Were the remarks of the hon. gentlemen opposite confined to the resolution, it appears to me they would be reduced to the one or two preliminary sentences of the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) in which he found cause for complaint in the resolution by reason of the fact that it enabled us to "otherwise acquire" the line. It is not necessary to remind the House that enabling the Government to "otherwise acquire" is not in any sense a direction on the part of the House that anything should be otherwise acquired. The circumstances surrounding the whole transaction, and the circumstances in which we are placed to-day as a result of years of legislation and as a result of the position the work is now in, may make it necessary for us to operate the line, and those circumstances are such that it would appear to a reasonable man that our proper course in the meantime was, if possible, to lease the line between Superior Junction and Fort William. The resolution empowers us to lease it. But would hon. gentlemen opposite contend that with our negotiations with the Grand Trunk Pacific, who are the owners of that line, we should have no alternative whatever, and that there should be no weapon in our hands that would enable us to see that a lease only on reasonable terms was entered into? Unless we have as an alternative the power to expropriate, unless, indeed, we have all the alternatives that we may be empowered to have, we may be hampered in our negotiations with the company and the company would have the advantage of us in those negotiations. It is the desire of the Government that they should have no advantage, and that we should be equipped with as many weapons as Parliament may equip us with, in order that we may enter into such an engagement with the Grand Trunk Pacific as will be fair and reasonable and of advantage to the Dominion of Canada. That is the only reason I know of why the words "or otherwise acquire" are inserted in the resolution.

I remarked a moment ago that, assuming that the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite had something in them, and that we were not in a position at present to compel the Grand Trunk Pacific to make good its engagement and lease the line, they offer no obstacle to the resolution, they offer no argument against it. If those arguments have any effect, they would make the resolution all the more necessary, and if hon. gentlemen opposite appreciate and believe in their own arguments they will be all the more enthusiastically behind the resolution. For myself, I am not behind the resolution for these reasons. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) argued very strenuously this afternoon that the time had not come when we could ask the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to lease this line. I do not know what the object of his argument was. I do not know why it should be his desire or the desire of any hon. gentleman opposite to argue in the House of Commons against the interests of the country in this regard. This is a question of fact. It is a question whether or not the condition of the road required by the terms of the agreement is such that we can ask the company to take the road over. That is a question of fact that must be left for the decision of such tribunal as we may have recourse to. The hon. member for South Renfrew argued—I do not know whether he intended to argue it or not, but I drew that inference from his remarks—that the proper tribunal was an arbitration tribunal under clause 7 of the contract. I do not take that view myself. I do not think my hon. friend took that view when he was Minister of Railways. I do not think his Government took that view of the effect of clause 7. But this Government has retained the engineer in charge who was placed there by the late Government—an engineer in whom they had confidence and in whom, so far as I know, we have no reason not to have confidence ourselves—and on a question of fact, which is a question of engineering, is it not the duty of this Government to take the statement and the certificate of their engineer. The hon. gentleman read some letters, and he repeated his inference from those letters that the road was not complete. We do not contend, we have not argued, we have not asserted that everything associated with that road is complete. That is the fault I find with the agreement. That is the fault I find with the policy of the Government in entering into the engagement they did in 1903. They seemed to contemplate the building of a railway as they would contemplate the building of a suit of clothes. They seemed to contemplate that there was a definite time at which it would commence, and an equally definite time at which all would be completed. They did not take the advice of railway men surely in a matter of this kind. I do not know of any railway in the world and I never heard of any railway in the world that was at any stage of its existence complete. And in their contract the Government did not provide any method at all by which that state of completion is to be determined, or any tribunal to which the question of its completion can be referred.

Consequently, the only tribunals I know of are the courts of the land. While there are works, such as the Quebec terminals, the approaches to the bridge, the Leonard shops and the Quebec bridge itself which are still in process, they will ultimately form a part of the line. These must be in process for years. Is it the fault of this Government that they are in process and not completed? Do hon. gentlemen opposite take the ground that they believed when they were entering into this engagement that we would have the line ready for operation and not be in a position to call on anybody to operate the road? If we assume that I am afraid we must come to the conclusion that they were not looking after the interests of the country when they entered into that agreemen. Then again, did they believe, when they signed the contract in 1903, that we should be in this position, that the road would be ready for operation, but that because certain parts of the works, that ultimately would form part of it and would be operated in connection with it, were not completed at the time, the road should lie idle and we should not be in a position to call upon anybody to operate? Was that their intention? It must have been their intention if their argument to-day is correct.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they made that agreement, must have assumed that the traffic that the line would have to carry the first day it was run would be just the same as it would be four years after it had commenced to run. If not, then they must have had in contemplation just what took place, namely, that certain works would be under way prior to the completion of the line as an operatable line and would still be under way for some years after the line was operated. That is the actual state of affairs, that is the necessary result and that is a result for which there was no provision in the agreement. Consequently we are in the position we are in to-day. We have to choose whether or not the time has come for the company to take over this road, and if we find it has not come we are compelled to do what never was provided for in the agreement in the first place, namely, to operate the road until these outside works are got under way.

Does the hon. member for South Renfrew contend that his opinion on this matter is better than that of the Chief Engineer of the Transcontinental railway? Is it not a question of fact, is it not a question of railway engineering, whether the road is completed within the meaning of the Act or not? Does he contend that the certificate of the chief engineer is not as positive in its terms, is not as complete, as definite and specific as any certificate ever was? When does the time arrive? When can we call upon the company to take over the road?—when, under section 20 of the Act, is the road completed for the purpose of operation? The certificate of the engineer on that point is in these words. I find in his letter of March 10 last, addressed to myself, the following:

Answering your letter of 6th inst., I may say that I intended the certificate, dated February 2, 1915, (which I signed and forwarded in duplicate to Mr. H. A. Woods, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, for him to sign) to be a certificate that in my opinion, as chief engineer of the National Transcontinental railway, it is completed and ready for operation within the meaning and intent of section 20 of the agreement scheduled in the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Did the Solicitor General not ask him to write that opinion? Here is your letter of the 6th.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose that the hon. gentleman contends that I fathered the opinion of the chief engineer of the road?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Undoubtedly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I must congratulate myself on possessing such dominating influence. The hon. gentleman must have great confidence in my engineering ability.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think that is a fair inference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That I asked him to write it? We will read the letter I wrote him:

March 6, 1915.

Gordon Grant, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, National Transcontinental,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 23rd February and to the refusal of Mr. H. A. Woods, acting engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to sign the acceptance dated 2nd February, 1915, it is to be noted that Mr. Woods appears to base his refusal upon the claim that the road at present cannot be said to be completed within the meaning of section 20 of the agreement scheduled to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903. Mr. Woods, I presume has in mind certain portions of the work which at present or rather at 31st December, 1914, the date upon which the audit is being made, may be said to be under construction. I have always understood, both from yourself and from the commission that although there are such portions that are still under construction, the same are not essential for the immediate operation of the entire line, and consequently that it would not be reasonable to wait for their completion until the said section 20 was acted upon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Having so understood from him, and if I had not so understood from him would he not have rebuked that sentence in his reply?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Read on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will read more than my hon. friend wants:

Would you be good enough therefore, to state that in your opinion the Eastern Division was on 31st December, 1914, completed so far as essential for the efficient operation of the entire line at that time and now.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is that not a request?

Mr. MEIGHEN: A request? The chief engineer had sent the certificate to them before I wrote the letter.

Mr. GRAHAM: Why ask him to do it twice?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because at the time I wrote I did not know that his signature had appeared to the certificate. I knew that the certificate had been sent. I have here his actual signature which had been sent to me before my letter was written.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That proves the correctness of what I said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Proves the correctness of what the hon. gentleman said—proves that he signed it at my request when my request was made after he signed it?

Mr. GRAHAM: The dates do not show that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly they do. I would commend the attention of the hon. member for St. John to the discussion we had and the sentence that he uttered, and which is on Hansard, about four days ago, when, after about ten pages of Hansard were consumed with certain assertions that he made, he told the House that he had not the slightest idea whether they were correct or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend does not mean to misquote. If I remember rightly, what I was professing to state to the House, and what I did state, was that I had certain information in regard to important matters concerning the honour of this House. I was not aware whether my information was correct or not, but I urged that the question was of sufficient importance for the Government to give to the House the information which I was informed it had through the agency of its own secret service officers, or else obtain the information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And after so urging for ten pages, the hon. gentleman stated that he himself had not the slightest knowledge whether he was right or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: No. The hon. gentleman is entirely inaccurate in that. I was not professing to make a statement from personal knowledge at all; I was stating information which had been given to me, and I said that I was not aware as to whether or not that information was accurate.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the night is out I will undertake to quote out of Hansard what the hon. gentleman said, or what I have said he said, and if I am not correct I will apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY: You will apologize for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All right. I have no similar request to make to the hon. gentleman. He has admitted himself to be wrong already to-night, and no apology would add anything to his humiliation.

We, Gordon Grant, chief engineer appointed by the Government of Canada for the Eastern Division of the National Transcontinental railway, and H. A. Woods, chief engineer, of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, hereby signify our acceptance to the Government of Canada and to the said company, of the work done in respect of the said eastern division.

Dated at Ottawa, this 2nd day of February, A.D. 1915.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is that signed by anybody?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is signed by Mr. Gordon Grant.

Mr. GRAHAM: The copy that was given me had not his signature.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The original was signed by him.

Mr. GRAHAM: The copy in the return was apparently sent to Mr. Woods without any signature. I feel positive that Mr. Grant's signature was not on the copy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the hon. gentleman refers to is a copy attached to Mr. Grant's letter. The original as returned is signed by Mr. Grant himself and is in the possession of the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then I did not have a correct return.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have a copy here dated 2nd February, which does not profess to be signed by Gordon Grant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The original is signed by Gordon Grant. I will let the hon. member see it, and it was received before my letter was written.

I suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to admit that the certificate of the engineer is definite, specific and complete, and that the engineer is the judge that we are bound to take upon so important a question as this, it being a question of engineering alone. We may be right or we may be wrong; unfortunately there is no summary way of deciding it. But there would have been if hon. gentlemen opposite had done their duty in 1903. There is only one way of deciding it. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company has not so far definitely and finally taken the position that they refuse to sign this lease. They have offered objections, but whether or not they intend to press them to the point of final refusal has yet to be divulged. At all events, whatever be the finding of the court, should the finding of a court unfortunately be necessary, or whatever may be the decision of the company should the company decide the matter without reference to the courts at all, it is undoubtedly the duty of the Government at this time to put themselves in a position to operate the road to the the best possible advantage, and to meanwhile make the very best of the situation.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are not content with arguing the position of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to the effect that they are not bound to take over the road because the road is not completed, but they try to fortify the position of the company in other regards, and they assert that the road has been degraded and that the company will not take this fine line of railway, running from Moncton to Winnipeg, because it is not quite a good enough railway to take care of the traffic that is going to offer in that northern ccuntry. Even were hon. gentlemen opposite correct in that, and even did the Grand Trunk Company take exception on that ground and prosecute the taking of that exception, surely they do not believe that the people of Canada for a minute will think that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company are refusing to take over the road because it is not good enough to take care of the traffic and, because, forsooth, it has not cost quite enough money.

It is asserted also by hon. gentlemen opposite that an error has been made in the city of Quebec, that there has been a change in the site of the terminals there, and that by reason of that change and by reason of the fact, as they assert it—although I do not know it is correct,—that that change has not been assented to by the company, we are not in a position to succeed in our action with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, should there be an action. I do not read clause 7 to the effect, that the direction of the road, and the location of the shops, and the like of that, are subjects upon which we must get the consent of the company, even though that consent, in this instance, may have been refused. On that point I would be glad to hear from the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) or any lawyer, or anybody else. It seems to be the interpretation of hon. gentlemen opposite, that in everything connected with this railroad, in the location of the line, in the location of the terminals, in the character of the curves, in the character of the grades, and everything else, we were completely in the hands of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Well, unfortunately, in some degree, we are in their hands, and if, as the leader of the Opposition says to-night, we are delivered into the hands and at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, he is the deliverer, and he is the man who put us in that position in 1903. He is the man who committed the keys of the treasury of Canada into their hands, and enabled them to say what money we should spend, enabled them to say what the cost should be, enabled them to say that we are to spend a million dollars, if necessary, to get over a mere fanciful difficulty. He is the deliverer of the keys, and he is the man also who, while he delivered us in that degree at least, into the hands of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, failed to insert in his agreement any security that would enable us to enforce judgment against that company to take over the road, if we got judgment. There is no adequate means of enforcement, I repeat again. That is not a criticism of the drafting of the contract; that is not a reflection on the ability of the men, as lawyers, who drafted it, but it is a reflection on the Government, who gave the instructions at the time as to what should be contained in that agreement. A lawyer is not to blame because he does not insert security, when he is not instructed to insert it by his clients, and the clients of Mr. Shepley and Mr. Gormully were the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and his colleagues. And, there is no security there, and even though we got a judgment where would we be to enforce it? That is the criticism of the contract I made the other night, and that is the criticism I repeat to-night.

There are other wounds; there are other defects in this contract, as the right hon. gentleman will not deny. The right hon. gentleman knows that already because of the fact that the meaning which he says was intended was not clearly stated in the contract, we have had to pay $12,000,000 of a penalty. I do not know whether that is testimony to the legal attainments of the men who drew the agreement, or if it is not better testimony to the skill of hon. gentlemen opposite to cover what they really intended to be the ultimate effect of the contract.

But these are not the only wounds. The right hon. gentleman no sooner made the contract than he proceeded year after year to subtract from its effect and to alter it several times to the advantage of the company and against the advantage of the country. There might have been security if we could hold the Grand Trunk Railway Company, but can we hold the Grand Trunk Railway Company; have we recourse against the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the event of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company refusing to take over the line? We did have $5,000,000 in cash as security that they would complete the western section, and that they would equip the whole after they took it over, but we have not that security now. That is a wound inflicted by the right hon. gentleman himself. The right hon. gentleman allowed the company to change the $5,000,000 in cash into substituted securities, and I scarcely think he would value these securities to-day or take them at anything like $5,000,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What are these securities?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not a list of the securities, but I am confident of one thing, and that is that they are not worth $5,000,000 in cash.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What are they?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand they are bonds of some American railways and some other securities, and I understand they are not worth $5,000,000, and that is a wound inflicted by the right hon. gentleman himself. More than that, there was a time when the Grand Trunk Railway Company were themselves compelled to take $25,000,000 of the stock of that company, and by reason of that clause the Minister of Finance at that time stood in his place in the House and said that the Government of the day had seen to it that the Grand Trunk be not partners only, but that they be of it and in it and form the whole thing. They may have formed the whole thing in one sense, but about two years after the hon. gentleman came along and declared, that inasmuch as they had advanced $5,000,000—the security the hon. gentleman has referred to—to the Grand Trunk Pacific, they should get their $5,000,000 of paid-up stock without paying another dollar. And, consequently, we are in the position we are in to-day, where we may have lost whatever advantage we otherwise would have secured from the backing of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

The resolution before the Chair does not involve these questions. They have been raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. When they are raised, we are ready to answer them. The question before the Chair is simply this: Should we not, now that we are faced with at least the possibility of being compelled to operate this road for some length of time, be in a position to take over the line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William in a manner and at a consideration that will be fair and reasonable and of advantage to the country? The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham): says: You should not on any account acquire the line. If we cannot make an agreement to lease, we may be compelled to acquire it; but it is quite plain that if we can make a fair agreement to lease the line, that is the course we should pursue. My hon. friend says: You may be compelled to acquire the line, and if you are compelled to do so, you are going to be in an awkward position later on, because you will be owner of a vital part of the Transcontinental when the Grand Trunk are ready to take over the line and to operate it. It will be awkward, but it will not be so awkward for us as for the Grand Trunk. It will put us in the position where we shall have the upper hand, and I do not think that will be a misfortune. We do not want to take any advantage of the company; we want to make a fair and reasonable bargain with them to operate the line in the event of our being able to do so; but if we cannot do that, then we should be in a position to expropriate the work or a leasehold interest therein in order that we can operate the rest of the line to advantage. The alternative painted as so disastrous by my hon. friend the member for South Renfrew would only put us in the position of having, if anything, the upper hand when later we come to negotiate with the company the leasing of the whole line and of taking over our interest in the Lake Superior branch as part of the system of the Transcontinental railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. gentleman has missed one point that I tried to make, whether I made it or not. This resolution gives the Government power to expropriate not only the Grand Trunk Pacific property, but any other property. I had special reference in my remarks to that other property that might be left on the hands of the Government without any use for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was going to refer to that in my next sentence. It is, I believe, a fact that the terminals at Fort William are owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Terminals Company. I may be wrong in that, but I am informed that that is the fact. The elevators, if they are not owned by the Terminals Company, are owned by some other company; but the Government is under no obligation by virtue of this resolution to take an interest, lease, hold or otherwise, in any property that it does not believe is essential to the proper management and operation of that branch and of the whole line. We do not require to take it; but is it not wise that we be in a position that we shall not have simply the bare line of railway from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, but that we shall be able to get the terminals which the company consider necessary for the operation of the line? They are in the same position and the arguments as to them are analogous to and just as forcible as the arguments referring to the line itself. Our desire certainly is to get the accommodation works and terminals such as may be necessary for the operation of the branch in connection with the whole Transcontinental system, and this resolution gives us power to do that and no more. If we are not able by a friendly arrangement to lease those to advantage, then we want to have the weapon whereby we are not reduced to the one alternative alone, but whereby we shall have another recourse that will leave us in a position to make a bargain on the one basis or the other that will be fair and just and of advantage to the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend the Solicitor General has frequently done to-night what he has so often done in this House in the past, that is, endeavoured very unfairly to throw upon the late Government the responsibility for the disadvantage to Canada which would ensue if the Grand Trunk Pacific did not operate the eastern branch of the National Transcontinental. My hon. friend says that one evidence of that responsibility is found in the fact that the late Government has not provided any machinery by which the company can be compelled to enter upon the operation of the eastern division. When the late Government was making an arrangement for the construction of the Transcontinental line, it took certain obligations from the Grand Trunk and had in view, what I think both companies have kept in view also, that is, that the new line should form a part of the Grand Trunk system. My hon. friend now admits that security was taken to the extent of $5,000,000 for the operation of the whole line and also for the equipment of the eastern division; but he says: The Government released that $5,000,000 and took other securities. When I asked him what those securities were—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that $5,000,000 was security for operation. Unfortunately it is not for that purpose. It is security for the equipment of the line.

Mr. PUGSLEY: $5,000,000 are to be provided for the equipment of the eastern division with rolling stock.

My hon. friend threw out the imputation that the late Government had released that money and had got something of very little value in return. I, not having a personal knowledge of what the securities were and presuming that my hon. friend, before he made that statement to the House, would have informed himself of what those securities were and what their value was, thought it proper to ask him what they were and what their value was. So far from my hon. friend being able to prove that they are of little value, all he has been able to say is that they are not worth $5,000,000. If they are first mortgage bonds of American railroads, paying their interest, it is not unlikely that they will be worth $5,000,000 in value. Their market value might be over $5,000,000. My hon. friend would have done himself more credit if he had informed himself of the facts before suggesting that the late Government had done an injustice to the country in connection with that security.

My hon. friend says there is no means of compelling the company to enter upon the operation of the eastern division. Unquestionably there would be if the Government had carried out its part of the bargain; but where two parties make a bargain, one of the parties cannot enforce it against the other unless he himself has carried out his part of it. That is admitted law. Any law student knows that after he has been three months in a law office. A difficulty about this case is—and no one knows better than my hon. friend—that the Government since it came into power has deliberately and continually violated this contract, and therefore it finds itself to-day not in a position to compel the company to carry out its part of the bargain. If the Government had carried out its part of the bargain and this lease was presented to the Grand Trunk Pacific for execution and that company refused to execute that lease, any court in this country having proper territorial jurisdiction could be applied to for a mandatory injunction, which it would readily issue against the company, compelling it to enter upon the operation of the road, and in that respect to carry out the agreement which it had made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of what value would that be?

Mr. PUGSLEY: This Government is in no position to do that, because it has violated the contract so far as it is concerned. My hon. friend says: Oh, that cannot be so, because Mr. Gordon Grant, the chief engineer, has said that the road is completed. Mr. Gordon Grant has done nothing of the kind. My hon. friend, in his letter of March 6, is careful to let Mr. Gordon Grant know that if he can give a certificate which in some measure would satisfy, not the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company but the people of this country, that if the company did not enter upon the operation of the road they would be in fault and so in some way throw blame and responsibility upon the late Government, the Government would be much obliged to him for such a certificate. See how ingeniously my hon. friend writes:

I have always understood, both from yourself and from the commission—

Impressing upon Mr. Grant what he had given him to understand.

—that although there are such portions that are still under construction—

In other words: Although the road is not completed—because, of course, a road that is under construction cannot be said to be completed.

—the same are not essential for the immediate operation of the entire line, and consequently that it would not be reasonable to wait for their completion until the said section 20 was acted upon. Would you be good enough, therefore, to state that in your opinion the eastern division was, on 31st December, 1914, completed, so far as essential for the efficient operation of the entire line at that time and now?

Not that you will state that the road is completed according to the specifications; not that you will state that the contract has been fulfilled by the Government by carrying out the agreement they made; but: that at the present time, having in view the possible traffic, the road can be efficiently operated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman is assuming that I did not ask Mr. Grant to state that the road was completed within the meaning of the contract, but that it was completed ready for operation.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Quite so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What becomes of the hon. gentleman's argument when he learns that in the letter which Mr. Grant wrote in reply to me, he did state that the road was completed and ready for operation within the meaning and intent of section 20 of the agreement? That must have been more or less voluntary, was it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Solicitor General must not forget that he had conveyed it to Mr. Grant in the strongest way possible that the Government would be delighted to have from him some certificate which would show that the road was ready for efficient operation. But Mr. Grant knew, and my hon. friend knew, and so did the Government, that the road was not completed according to the specifications, and the contract had not been carried out.

My hon. friend says that Mr. Grant had given a certificate before that. But, as the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has said, the copy of that letter given to him does not profess to be signed by Mr. Grant. I have a copy, and there is no signature. Let us see what he says as to justification for his signing that certificate. I would direct your attention and that of the committee to the letter of February 2 to Mr. Woods:

9 p.m.

February 2, 1915.

A. H. Woods, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, or Acting Engineer,
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway,
Winnipeg. Main.

Dear sir,—Under section 7, of the schedule of the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903—

Which is the section my hon. friend from South Renfrew referred to.

—it was stipulated that the work to be done on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Now, mark well what follows:

The Government is of the opinion that this provision has been complied with in every way, but to put the matter of acceptance into desirable form, I enclose herewith formal acceptance which I have executed as chief engineer for the Government, and I would ask you to kindly sign as chief engineer, or acting chief engineer, for the company.

The enclosure is in duplicate, and you are at liberty to retain one of the copies for your company.

Yours truly,

Gordon Grant,
Chief Engineer.

Here you have the extraordinary fact that Mr. Grant excuses himself for this by saying that "the Government is of the opinion" that the contract has been complied with. He does not put it forward, as he dare not, as an engineer, put it forward, that the contract has been completed. He dare not put it forward that the road has been built according to the specifications. He says the Government is of the opinion and therefore encloses a certificate to be signed. But Mr. Grant, if left to himself, I do not think for a moment, would venture to say it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Grant would not say that, when he also says that Mr. Grant has executed a certificate to that effect?

Mr. PUGSLEY: But he gives the reason. He puts it forward that the Government is behind him, and intimates to the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific that that is the stand the Governmnent is going to take and he as an official of the Government signs it.

It does not need any one with engineering skill to determine that this contract was not complied with, that is admitted by the Government in their correspondence with the Grand Trunk Pacific. They admit that the road is not completed, but they say: We can go on and complete it in the future; but in the meantime, having in view the contract, it is not reasonable for you to ask the Government to wait, and you can well enter upon the efficient operation of the road. Now, the Solicitor General has called my attention to section 20, and says that the term there " when completed " means ready for operation. He would almost have you believe that it was so defined in section 20. But is it so defined? You must bear in mind that before section 20 we have section 7, which provides that the work is to be carried out under the joint supervision of the two engineers. They are to pass upon the work from time to time, and to see that it is according to specifications. Then when it comes to section 20 it says " when completed." Surely, that must mean when completed according to the specifications. If I engage a contractor to build a house, to be four stories high, and if he builds the house only three stories high, surely he would not be justified in saying that he had carried out the specifications because the house had been so far completed that it could be comfortably occupied. Yet that is the argument of my hon. friend. If the contractor were to say to me: Money is scarce, and I will put on the fourth story three or four years from now, when it is more convenient for me to do so; but in the meantime, as your family is small, three stories will meet your requirements; move in and you will be very comfortable.

Mr. COCHRANE: But would your architect certify that it was four stories?

Mr. PUGSLEY: According to my hon. friend, he should certify that it was completed.

Mr. COCHRANE: But would he certify?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, because what my hon. friend argues is that completion means that it shall be in such condition that it may be efficiently used. Well if it was three stories it could be efficiently and comfortably occupied. It is too absurd to argue for a single moment. Let any hon. gentleman read section 20 for himself, and I appeal now to fair-minded gentlemen on the other side of the House. Section 20 says:

When completed the said eastern division shall be leased to, and operated by, the company for the period of fifty years, at a rental, payable as follows:

Then it goes on providing for the rental. I think it is beyond question that that means when it is completed according to the specifications. No other interpretation can be put upon the words " when completed " in that section. My hon. friend says that the Government were remiss in another respect, that they had not provided as to when the road should be deemed to be completed. Have they not, sir? When they make a contract as to specifications does not the completion of the road mean when those specifications have been complied with and the road has been constructed according to the specifications? That is the completion of it. What does the minister do when he agrees to give to a company a railway subsidy of which a certain percentage is to be kept back until the road is completed? No one knows better than my hon. friend that the completion of a road according to the specifications which he had laid down would mean that the roadbed would be made, the rails and ties laid, the road ballasted, the turn-tables, telephone and telegraph lines, station houses and section houses built, all water tanks and all terminals provided according to specifications. Supposing a railway company come to the minister and say: Oh, well, now this road is completed. The minister says: It is not completed, you have not got all the water tanks you agreed to put on. You agreed to put on a 65-lb. rail and you have only got a 50-lb. rail. Supposing the company said: In view of the traffic, the few water tanks we have are quite sufficient and a 50-lb. rail is quite sufficient for the present traffic; we propose using light engines until traffic develops, and therefore, Mr. Minister, we want you to be convinced by us that the road is completed because it can be efficiently operated in view of the present traffic. Would not the minister say at once: It is not completed, I have laid down certain specifications and will not pay the balance of the subsidy until you have completed the road according to those specifiations.

Mr. COCHRANE: Would the hon. member let me know in what part of the Act it calls for the building of a shop such as the Leonard shops in Quebec?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is there in the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would like to see it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I shall read it before I am through.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What was done in this case? The late Government were exceedingly careful to appoint a good chief engineer to prepare the plans and specifications jointly with the engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific. It was reasonable that there should be a joint preparation of plans and specifications and joint supervision, because the Grand Trunk Pacific was to operate this line when it was completed. They were to engage upon the operation of it for fifty years and to pay a rental after seven years of 3 per cent upon the cost of it. Therefore it was reasonable that the company should have a joint supervision with the Government. That was the agreement which Parliament ratified in 1903, and which the people of this country ratified at the election of 1904. The late Government was careful to see that in all respects the terms of that contract were carried out and the specifications carefully observed; and in the construction of the road, while the late Government was in power, the engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific was consulted from time to time and everything that was done was done with the approval of the Grand Trunk Pacific. The specifications, as I understand, included the workshops both at Transcona and at Quebec.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman says everything was done with the approval of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Does he mean that word in its absolute sense, including the location of the line, location of shops, location of terminals, such as the right hon. leader of the Opposition says are necessary?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have always understood that. I know that after I came into the Government we were very careful always to see that nothing was done without the approval of the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific. We recognized that that was the contract, and we thought it was the duty of the commissioners of the road to see that this approval was obtained from time to time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Including the location?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Including the location. That would be my reading of it, that it would include the location, grades and curves and all the equipment of the line. It would include station-houses, terminals and workshops and everything else which would go to make a complete railway. My hon. friend makes a point of the location. I do not know whether there was any exception with respect to that, but I would think that location would be included because the plans and specifications must have to do with the location. What does section 7 provide? It provides:

> In order to insure, for the protetcion of the company as lessees of the eastern division of the said railway, the economical construction thereof in such a manner that it can be operated to the best advantage, it is hereby agreed that the specifications for the construction of the eastern division shall be submitted to, and approved of by, the company before the commencement of the work, and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the company.

Therefore you have it as plain as language can be made, in an agreement which was ratified by this Parliament in 1903, that the specifications shall be approved of by the company:

—and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of a chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the company.

Now, Sir, in case of a dispute between the two engineers, what is to happen? My hon. friend says that the late Government did not provide for what was to happen in that case; he says that the only remedy would be an appeal to the courts. I say that the section provides in the clearest possible manner as to what shall happen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In case of a dispute over some things.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As to the completion of the work.

And, in the event of differences as to the specifications, or in case the said engineers shall differ as to the work, the questions in dispute shall be determined by the said engineers and a third arbitrator, to be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

What is meant by the work? It is the work of construction. How could there be a difference unless it was based upon the specifications? Then, as the work went on, from time to time one engineer might say: This work is not up to the specifications. The other engineer might say: It is up to the specifications. Differing, they would have an arbitrator called in, whom they would appoint, and if they failed to agree upon an arbitrator one would be appointed by the Chief Justice of Canada. What difference is there when the work is done? The Government says: Now this road is completed according to the specifications. The chief engineer of the company says: It is not, the work is not up to the specifications. That is a dispute between them, it is a dispute as to the work because the work must be viewed in reference to the specifications which have been provided as to the mode in which this work is to be done. They differ therefore on the question whether the complete work is up to the specifications or not. The Act provides that the questions in dispute —shall be determined by the said engineers and a third arbitrator, to be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

Let me take as an illustration the case of a house that is to be built. A man makes a contract with a contractor for the building of a house. The contractor has an architect; the owner of the house has also an architect. It is agreed that if there is any dispute between the two architects under whose joint supervision the work is to be carried on, it shall be referred to a third party. Now, would any one suggest for a single moment that that would not apply to the work when it was alleged to be completed, just as much as it would apply to the work as it was going on from day to day during the progress of construction? That is exactly the present case. There is no difference at all. The work might be one-half or two-thirds or three-quarters or nine-tenths finished. One party claims that the work is finished according to the contract and specifications. The other claims that it is not. That is a dispute as to whether the work has been done according to and up to the requirements of the specifications. That is a dispute which these parties decide is to be determined by the two engineers, and in case they cannot agree is to be arbitrated upon by the two engineers and a third party to be chosen by the Chief Justice of Canada. Surely no man who is disposed to look at the matter from a fair and reasonable standpoint would say that the Government had not exercised every possible care and provided a tribunal to meet this very case.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: Owing to the fact that the Quebec bridge will not be completed until the latter part of 1917, would the hon. gentleman advise this Government not to urge upon the Grand Trunk Pacific the need of taking over the road as a completed road before that time expires?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would urge the Government to do that. And let me say to my hon. friend that there is one thing that surprises me exceedingly, and that is that this Government did not do what we were about to do before the late Government left office, and that was to arrange for the operation of the various sections of the Transcontinental as they were completed from time to time, pending the completion of the whole line and the entering into of the lease.

Mr. ARTHURS: Did the Government make any arrangement to that effect?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Two sessions ago I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that before the late Government left office a conference was held between a subcommittee of the Council, consisting of the then Prime Minister, the then Finance Minister, the then Minister of Railways, myself, and Mr. Hays, the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Mr. Hays was then desirous of taking over the sections of the line as they were completed from time to time. At that time the road from Moncton to Edmundston was pretty nearly completed. Mr. Hays' proposition was this. He said that if the Government would let the Grand Trunk Pacific take possession of such sections they would put on their rolling stock and operate the line to the best possible advantage, they would keep an account as between the earnings and the expenses, they would have those accounts audited from time to time by a Government auditor, and if any profit was made they would put that into the treasury or give the Government credit for it, and if there was any loss the Government should pay that loss but it should be added to capital account to form a part of the cost of the Transcontinental railway on which the Grand Trunk Pacific would pay interest. I thought, as representing one of the Maritime Provinces—the province of New Brunswick, through the centre of which the Transcontinental passes—that it would be very desirable to make that arrangement, because the result would be that as the sections were completed the Grand Trunk Pacific would get the road in active operation and begin to stimulate industries along the line because they would all inure to the benefit of the company. That was the arrangement which the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific proposed to make. We went out of office before that section of the road was completed, and two years ago I asked the Minister of Railways if he had taken up with the Grand Trunk Pacific the question of making an arrangement such as that which Mr. Hays offered to make to our Government. He said not. I then asked him if he would approach the Grand Trunk Pacific and see whether they were still willing to make that arrangement. He promised to do so. That was two years ago, and my. hon. friend has not yet acquainted this House with the results of his efforts in that direction. I asked if there was any correspondence on the subject, but none has been brought down; and in the correspondence which has been brought down to-night there is a marked absence on the part of the Minister of Railways of evidence of any effort to induce the Grand Trunk Pacific to take up the operation of sections of the line upon those terms. Let me ask if it will not be to the interest of the Government to make that arrangement if the Grand Trunk Pacific is still willing to make it, and let me say to my hon. friend that when I told him of the arrangement which Mr. Hays was willing to make for the operation of the various sections of the line, he promised to take this matter up; and I think it is due to the House, if he has made that effort, to state what the result of it is, and to bring down any correspondence which he has bearing on the subject.

What does it propose to do? Without making any effort, so far as appears from the correspondence, to get the railway company to carry out the arrangement they were willing to carry out when the late Government was in office, this Government proposes itself to engage in the operation of the railway from Moncton to Winnipeg. What does that mean? It means that this Government has got to put this country to an expense of many millions of dollars to provide rolling stock, if they are going to give efficient operation, and to-night in almost the dying days of this session and after the Prime Minister had told my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition that no new legislation of a contentious character would be brought down, this Government brings down a resolution which, from the standpoint of the interest of this country and more especially of the interests of eastern Canada, is of a most contentious character. They bring down a resolution which if adopted would authorize them to spend not only millions of dollars in rolling stock without coming to this Parliament for an appropriation, but to spend at least $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 in acquiring the branch line of 180 miles from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, and in acquiring the branch line of 180 miles from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, and a great many millions of dollars in acquiring the terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific; and I am sure the terminals could not be purchased through the Exchequer Court for $30,000,000, and I doubt whether they could be purchased for less than $40,000,000. And yet they come down in the last days of the session and ask Parliament to vest them with authority to incur this enormous outlay involved in the resolution for which they are asking the assent of the House. Would it not be a thousand times better for this Government to make an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific, who are to operate this line for the future and possibly for all time to come, that they should engage in the operation of the line pending the completion of it and pending the entering into of a formal lease? The accounts should be kept under Government supervision, and if there was any deficiency it should be charged up to capital account on which the company would pay interest. That is the reasonable thing to do. That would not involve this country in any large expenditure. It would involve it, in case there should be any loss, only in the difference between revenue and cost of operating.

And if that were done we would have our hopes realized that the Grand Trunk Pacific would operate this Transcontinental railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. So far as we in the Maritime Provinces are concerned, we have been looking forward with hope to the day when we would see the trains of the Transcontinental railway entering into the cities of the lower provinces, bearing their passengers and freight from the Pacific coast and from the territories and provinces of the West. But we are met to-night with a resolution which, if it carries, and if the Government act upon it, will in all probability destroy forever the hopes that we have had that the Grand Trunk Pacific is going to operate this eastern division as a part of the great transcontinental railway system.

What is back of this resolution? Surely, if it is only intended to temporarily operate the main line between Moncton and Winnipeg, it is not necessary to spend $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 in acquiring this branch from the main line to Fort William and the terminals at Fort William. If the Government operates the main line it can make arrangements with the Grand Trunk Pacific, no doubt, for joint running rights between Winnipeg and Superior Junction, and an exchange of traffic down to the terminals at Fort William. There will be no difficulty about that. Would there be any more difficulty about that than there would be when the Government trains would reach Winnipeg? They would have no through service to the prairies of the West, from which the great traffic is to be drawn. They would have to secure an exchange of traffic with the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific at Winnipeg. Where is the objection to their doing what other railway companies, including the Government railway, are doing to-day—exchanging traffic upon fair and reasonable terms? But, while coming here to-night with the suggestion that all they want is to make a temporary arrangement pending the completion of the line, they are asking Parliament for enormous powers. If it were not so startling a proposition to even suggest it, I would say that this is all in line with the course which this Government entered upon when they came into office of degrading this Transcontinental railway, refusing to consult with the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, refusing to take his advice, abandoning the workshops at Quebec, located on land which already had been bought and which was being laid out under the joint supervision and approval of the chief engineers of the Government and the company respectively, going nine miles away and arranging for the erection of workshops upon a different site altogether, the location of which, so far as I know, never was approved by the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have the word of the president of the road that he approved of everything that was done.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will the hon. gentleman produce that?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have the word of the president, I say.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Where is that? In an important matter of this kind that should be produced.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will back up his word and I will prove that I have it. The word of the president is good and will stand anywhere.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The only men under this contract who can speak as to the work of building this road are the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer appointed by the company.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will take the word of the president for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think that when such an important change as that is made, if it has been approved by the chief engineer, we ought to have the certificate, or a memorandum, of that official. It has not been furnished to this Parliament and, in so far as the alterations in the grades and curves are concerned, we had at last session of Parliament before us letters from the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific distinctly refusing to accept the changes that this Government had made in respect to the building of the road. As far as I know there has never been any withdrawal of the objections that the company has made.

As I have said, if the Government had had in view the bringing about of the time when the company would refuse to enter upon the operation of this road, if they had had that in their minds, if that was the subject closest to their hearts so that they believed that they would be able to say to the people of the country: look what a position the late Government has brought this country into; they have constructed this road and the company of their own creation has refused to operate it—if that had been their purpose, or if they had been actuated by the other purpose of extending the Intercolonial railway and if they had deliberately set about to accomplish that purpose and to prevent the Grand Trunk Pacific from engaging in the operation of this road, they could not have taken a surer course to accomplish that than by degrading the road as they did, altering the grades and putting in these momentum grades, altering the curves, altering the position of the terminals at Quebec and the location of the station and the workshops.

I do not believe that to be in the interest of the country. I quite agree that it would be desirable to have an extension of the Intercolonial westward but let it be done by arranging for running rights over the Grand Trunk Pacific, as provided for in the contract under terms to be agreed upon, and if they cannot be agreed upon to be fixed by the Governor in Council. I quite approve of that being done if terms can be arranged. But to take steps which may lead to the shutting out of the Grand Trunk Pacific from the operation of the eastern section of the road, which seems to be contemplated by the Government in view of the resolution, would be a disastrous step to take in so far as the interests of the country are concerned. It must be borne in mind that the whole traffic, or rather the greater portion of the traffic of the people's road east of Winnipeg, must be derived from our rich prairie provinces and from the Pacific coast. Suppose this Government were to expropriate the line on the Grand Trunk Pacific from Superior Junction down to Fort William and use the Transcontinental for their eastern operations, what would be the result? The Grand Trunk Pacific would still have their line running from Winnipeg to the prairies of the West and on to the Pacific ocean. It is not an insuperable proposition for them to get from Winnipeg to Chicago and when they got to Chicago they would be in connection with the Grand Trunk railway system and they would take the traffic of the West over their American line and down to American ports. They would in that way accomplish the very thing which the late Government wished to prevent when they insisted upon the operation of the eastern division right down to the ports of the Maritime Provinces by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

The matter, to my mind, is one of a most serious character. I wonder that the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) has consented to this resolution. Let me tell him that the people of the city which he is sent here to represent are demanding that the trains of the Grand Trunk Pacific shall be run as soon as possible into the city of St. John and in the other cities of the Maritime Provinces. They would be astonished to learn that he has been a party to a proposition which looks to me, if it looks like anything at all, as a proposal to stop the operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific at Winnipeg and leave it to seek other channels which would naturally be through American territory and through American ports. For these reasons I am entirely opposed to the resolution which has been submitted by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals.

A word with reference to a matter of lesser importance. There has been continually an effort made to magnify the cost of this Transcontinental railway. I asked if in this statement which the Government have sent to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company the interest had not been compounded, and the Solicitor-General said, no. I regret that I am compelled to differ from him, because in the very papers which have been submitted, we find, that up to the 31st December, 1914, the total cost is $172,152,943, and the interest is all included, some $19,000,000, and it is all compounded.

Mr. COCHRANE: If the hon. gentleman will look at clause 15 of the Act, he will find that it says:

> The interest upon such outlay in each year shall be capitalized at the end of such year and interest charged thereon at three per cent per annum until the completion of the work and until the lessees enter into possession on the terms of the said lease.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Quite right, and it means that the interest during that year shall be added to the cost and then that total amount shall bear interest, but not compound interest.

Mr. COCHRANE: The calculation is worked out according to the Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The statement which is attached to the correspondence shows clearly in detail that the interest has been compounded.

Mr. LALOR: Did you ever understand it in any other way?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understood it absolutely the other way, and any man who reads it, with any common sense, will understand it as I understand it. Let me read it again:

The interest upon said outlay in each year—

That is, the outlay in each year:

—shall be capitalized at the end of such year and interest charged thereon at three per cent until the completion of the work.

That does not mean compound interest, and the Solicitor General realized that was so because he told me that only simple interest and not compound interest had been charged. I find in a further statement which the minister was good enough to send over to this side of the House, that the very heading of the statement shows the interest was compounded, because it says:

Statement showing expenditures on the National Transcontinental railway, eastern division, to 31st December, 1914, and compound interest at three per cent per annum.

It is only a matter of a few million dollars in the total, but still it is an extraordinary thing that in the face of the provision in the statute, this statement should be sent to the company as the amount upon which they would be called to pay interest.

It does seem to me that the Government ought to make this temporary arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and I say to the Minister of Railways that from what Mr. Hays told me and told the sub-Committee of Council of the desire of the company, and from what Mr. Chamberlain has told me since this Government came into office, I believe that if that company were approached in a proper spirit—and not in the spirit which is shown in this correspondence, compelling them to accept as completed a road which the Government knows is not completed according to the specifications, compelling them to begin at a specified time to pay interest, which they are not bound, under the law, to begin to pay until a certain period after the road is completed—if instead of acting in this spirit against this company the Government were to approach them and endeavour to have them enter into this agreement, which the president of the company expressed his willingness to enter into when the late Government was in power, there would not be the slightest difficulty in bringing that arrangement about, and it is an arrangement which would be eminently in the interests of the people of the country.

The Solicitor General spoke about the Quebec bridge. The late Government had from the company a declaration in writing that they would not regard the Quebec bridge as an essential factor in connection with the construction and completion of the Transcontinental.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is not in the Act and there is no correspondence with reference to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I know they agreed to it, and I think there is correspondence on the subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There was.

Mr. COCHRANE: It must have been taken away.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am certain that any objection, so far as that was concerned, was positively waived by the company, and in the correspondence which has been brought down there is no intimation, upon the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, that they rely upon the non-completion of the Quebec bridge. If the Government wants the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to enter into the operation of this line, why do they not approach them and ask them if they are willing to carry out the agreement they offered to carry out when the late Government was in power?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have asked them that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will the hon. gentleman produce the correspondence on that subject?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think there is a letter there.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That letter does not say a word about it. What the minister is asking the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to do is to enter into a lease before the road is completed, and he is taking the ground that they are bound to enter into that lease and bound to begin paying rental within the seven years of entering into the lease. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company say: We will not do that, we are not bound to do that because the road is not completed according to the specifications. Has the minister requested the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to engage in the operation of the road pending its completion, and pending their entering into a formal lease? I told him two years ago, and he seemed impressed with it, and he told me he would act upon it, of the terms on which the company were willing to engage in the active operation of the road. It must be borne in mind also, and this is another reason why we should not pass the resolution to-night, that by section 3 of the supplementary agreement of date the 2nd February, 1904, this Parliament provided that pending the completion of the whole line, arrangements might be made between the Government and the company for the operation of various sections. That clause of the supplementary agreement says:

> Pending the completion of the eastern division by the Government, the company shall be entitled to lease from the commissioners, to be appointed under the said Act, and to operate such portions of the said eastern division, as may from time to time be completed, but upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the company and the said commissioners which terms are not to be more onerous than those of the lease of the whole division by the said contract provided for.

Eleven years ago, this Parliament recognizing the importance of having the Grand Trunk Pacific Company enter as quickly as possible upon the operation of the different sections of this road, provided for the operation by the Grand Trunk Pacific of the completed sections from time to time.

Notwithstanding, as I have said, that the late Government had a definite proposition from the Grand Trunk Pacific to carry out their arrangement as provided in the statute of 1904, as far as this Parliament has been informed, the Government has never taken the slightest step to have that arrangement carried out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What section?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Section 3 of the agreement of the 18th of February, 1904, which will be found on page 193 of the statutes of 1904.

Surely some regard ought to be had to what has been the view of this Parliament and of the country in the past. When we find that that view was that the company and the Government should endeavour to come to terms as to the operation of the different sections from time to time, surely the Government is not treating this Parliament or the people of this country rightly.

when, instead of endeavouring to make a fair and reasonable arrangement pending the completion of the whole line of railway under the specifications and pending the arrival of the time when the company will be obliged to enter into a lease under which, after a definite period, they will begin to pay rent, the Government acts here to-night as if it were looking to the company not leasing the line and as if it contemplated taking over the whole system east of Winnipeg and the Grand Trunk Pacific branch and all the terminals at Fort William, which action will involve this country in an expenditure which I do not think will be counted at one dollar less than from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000. That is an enormous expenditure in which to involve the country when there is no necessity whatever for it, when if the company were approached in a proper manner, they would enter into a fair and equitable arrangement to carry out the aspirations of our people to have one company operating the entire system from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we were not so accustomed in this House to the alarmful speeches of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), we might perceive a possible revolution in Canada if this fearful resolution should carry; but we are accustomed to his seeing in every proposal of the Government something dreadful, some awful ghost behind the door, some tremendous debt on the part of Canada, and, last of all and most fearful and most to be dreaded of all, a possible injury to the port of St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY: And Halifax too.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), who was Minister of Railways and a colleague of the hon. member for St. John, openly and frankly stated at the commencement of the discussion that it was in the interest of the people of Canada that provision should be made now for the operation of this line in the event of the company not taking it over. The hon. member for South Renfrew went further than that. He stated that in his judgment it would be a blessing for the people of Canada and nothing to be dreaded if we took over the Transcontinental line permanently and operated it. Yet the very fact that we take power to operate it in the only way in which it can be operated, that is, by securing the line from Fort William to Lake Superior Junction in some way or other, makes the hon. member for St. John afraid that we are going to turn trade by way of Chicago and utterly demoralize the port of St. John. He also criticises us because we have not secured in any form the approval of the engineer of the road. I thought, in my humble judgment, that I had shown that we had the certificate of the engineer in the most emphatic and definite form in which a certificate could be given. If the hon. member for St. John has any clearer or more definite form, I do not think I am going beyond the mark when I say that I will undertake to have it signed by the engineer of the road, because I know the emphatic opinion of that engineer.

The hon. member argues at great length that we have not the consent of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the location of certain lines in Winnipeg; that we have not their consent to certain alterations of the grade, which he says have been made, and he refuses to take the word of the minister that the company are finding no fault on that score at all, so anxious is he, if he can, to build up a case for the Grand Trunk Pacific to justify them in refusing to carry out their part of the agreement. While he is on his feet, he asserts that the Grand Trunk Pacific in all this correspondence have not as yet said that the line is not completed; that they have not found fault with anything that is not completed. If they have not said it, they are getting lots of opportunities to say it; they are getting lots of foundation for doing so out of the mouth of the hon. member for St. John. He says: You have to get their consent.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. member says that I stated that it did not appear that the Grand Trunk Pacific contended that the road was not completed.

Mr. MEIGHEN : That it did not appear in the correspondence.

Mr. PUGSLEY: No. I stated that not only did the Grand Trunk Pacific say that the road was not completed, but the correspondence said it was not completed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend said that the Grand Trunk Pacific said that the road was not completed, and he said the opposite as well. He takes both sides, just whichever side suits the argument he has in hand. He complains of the Government for not following the advice of the engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific. He complains of us for not following the advice of a company that must be adverse to us, if we meet any adversity at all. At the same time he is criticising us because we are following the advice of our own chief engineer, in whom he says he has the utmost confidence himself. The Government of which my hon. friend was a member selected an engineer in whom it had confidence. Now he comes to us and says: You are not justified in following the advice of that engineer as to the completion of the road; you ought to take my opinion, and if you are not satisfied with that, you ought to take the opinion of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I said: If there is a dispute, leave it to arbitration.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If there is a dispute, leave it to arbitration as to whether or not the road is completed. I tried to get the opinion of the hon. member for St. John and he gave it to me; but he did not fortify it by any extended argument. He indulged in a few brief superlatives on the point, and that was all. Section 7 in no way contemplated arbitration as a method of determining when the road was completed. That section gave the right to the Grand Trunk Pacific to say as to the method employed and set out in the specifications and as to the method and manner of the fulfilment of those specifications. That was the view that appealed to me at the time. Whether I am right or not has never been decided by any one. That is what appealed to me, and that does not include and cannot be stretched to include the question of the completion of the road. Does the hon. member argue that the Grand Trunk Pacific has a right to say what shall be built and what not, and that if we cannot agree we must go to arbitration?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Undoubtedly the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific has a voice jointly with the chief engineer of the Government as to whether the road is built or completed according to specifications. If they differ, then it is provided that the question whether the road is completed according to specifications or not shall be left to them and a third arbitrator.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly, says the hon. member for St. John, as regards the question of what the Government shall build, not as to the character of the road and how it fills the specifications, but the extent of it: whether or not it shall include shops here or shops there, whether or not it shall include terminals, whether or not it shall include a branch line into the city of Quebec, the Government has committed the country to the position that the Grand Trunk Pacific have just as much say as has the Government. I venture, on the other hand, not to take such a disparaging view of the work of the late Government as that. I venture to take the view that the late Government had committed into the hands of the Grand Trunk Pacific a say and a determining say as to the character of the construction and of the specifications, but had not committed to them any determining say as to the location or extent of the work. Much less had they committed to them the question as to the completion. The hon. member is very emphatic, as he always is—it seems to be no effort for him to give a legal opinion antagonistic to the opinion of the Government; he is not hampered by anything, even by his own previous opinion. He said that the late Government always acquiesced in that view and always submitted to the Grand Trunk Pacific all these questions including location, and they went ahead with nothing without the consent of the company. Does he know whereof he speaks? I undertake to quote to him the opinion of the Minister of Justice of the Government to which he belonged directly conflicting with the opinion he announces to-night and directly supporting the view I have advanced, that no such powers were committed to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and, in effect, that the opinion expressed by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition that we are powerless now by virtue of the fact that we have not their consent—as he alleges—to the change in location of the terminal at Quebec, we are now in the hands and at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Pacific, is quite a mistaken opinion. The Minister of Justice of that day was confronted with this question, so was the deputy minister, so were the law advisors of the commission; and they with one accord gave the opinion that as to this matter of location of the work the Grand Trunk Pacific Company had no say at all. Does he disagree with that? Will he venture to deny it? I will read the opinion of the Minister of Justice of that day. It is dated 24th of January, 1906, and it is written to the right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), then leader of the Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does the hon. gentleman say that I was then in the Government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member suggests that had he been a member of the Government his opinion would have been different.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That may be very witty on the part of the hon. gentleman—

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is very true.

Mr. PUGSLEY: —but what the Solicitor General said was that the Government of which I was a member took a different view. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I was not a member of the Government until a year after.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the hon. member said that his Government always took the view that this was a matter for co-operation and within the power of the Grand Trunk Pacific to concur in, and had always acted upon that view. And the leader of the Opposition argues to-night that we must get their consent to any change whatever in location—

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: I did not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of location of terminals.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: I say you must adhere to the specifications for the building of the road.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is, we can change no location—

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: I did not say location. I said that the specifications for the buiding of this road had been agreed upon by the engineers of the Government and of the company, and you cannot change it without the consent of the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is, we cannot change the location if the location is set out in the specification.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: I did not speak of the location.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I misunderstood the right hon. gentleman.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: The hon. gentleman cannot say I mentioned the location of the road. I said that when the plans and specifications for the building of the road the building of shops and so on, had been agreed to by the officers of the company and the Government, you cannot change it without consent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood the right hon. gentleman to argue that we had changed the location of the terminals at Quebec, and I understood him to argue just as strongly that the terminals at Quebec were part of the road.

10 p.m.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Consequently he argues that we have changed the location of the road.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: No, that is too thin.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will repeat what the hon. gentleman says is " too thin," and ask him in what he finds fault with it. He argues that we have changed the location of the terminal; he argues that the terminals are part of the road and you have to build them before you build the road, consequently, he argues, we have changed the location of the road itself.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER: No; what I said is, that the shops and the station are part of the road—you cannot run the road without shops and stations—and the shops at Quebec, being part of the road, and having been approved by the engineers of the Government and the company, you cannot change them without the consent of the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Change them in what respect?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: You cannot move them five or ten miles.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, that is location.

Mr. GRAHAM: And the specifications have been changed as well—

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is as to character; and that has been consented to.

Mr. GRAHAM: Where has it been consented to?

Mr. MEIGHEN: At Quebec.

Mr. GRAHAM: I asked for the correspondence, and I went through it very carefully. It showed that a conversation had been held with the Minister of Railways by Mr. Chamberlin, if I remember well; that conversation was referred to, but when the Government attempted to make that out to be a consent, as I remember the correspondence, the solicitors of the Grand Trunk Pacific immediately objected and said they did not give consent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may have been given since.

Mr. COCHRANE: You will take Mr. Chamberlin's word, I suppose?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Parliament of Canada can only know what takes place by the correspondence and returns given to it. We asked the Government to give us the negotiations and correspondence, and surely agreements of this kind would not be taken verbally when so much depends upon them. That correspondence does not show one word as to the acceptance of either a change in the specifications or location, but it states positively that the consent was not given.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may not have been given at the time, but it may have been given since.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where is it?

Mr. GRAHAM: Where is it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Notice the eagerness of hon. gentlemen opposite to get off the point of the location—both crying at once. I am not arguing but that if the specifications, in so far as they cover the method of construction, are agreed to they must be lived up to, unless they are departed from by mutual consent.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not arguing differently from that, but I am arguing that the matter of location is within the power of the Government, at all events in opinion of the gentleman who was the Minister of Justice under the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That opinion completely destroys the position he took here to-night.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Let us hear it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The right hon. gentleman wants me to read the opinion. He may find " location " in it though he dreads it so much. This is the opinion:

Referring to Mr. Parent's letter to you of 22nd instant, enclosing copy of a letter to him of 20th instant, from Mr. Morse, the vice-president of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, in which Mr. Morse states that under section 7 of the agreement between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company of the 29th July, 1903, the company claim the absolute unequivocal right to pass upon the location of the eastern division before it is adopted, I desire to say that I have considered attentively the claim so made, and conferred upon the subject with the Deputy Minister of Justice, and we agree in the following conclusions:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The right hon. gentleman has not heard the conclusions yet:

1. Section 5 of this agreement gives the Government the uncontrolled discretion to determine the location of the eastern division.
2. This discretion is not limited or affected by clause 7.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the clause hon. gentlemen opposite rely upon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear. If that is not limited or affected by clause 7, what does limit or affect it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We can locate the road, and in that location the company has nothing to say, according to that opinion. Does the hon. member pretend that the opinion of the late Minister of Justice says that when the road has been located we can change it again without the consent of the company?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Wherein are we restrained?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: By common sense. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that when we had located the road and placed it at a certain point, after we had spent millions upon it, it was open to the Government to change it and put it ten or fifty miles to one side? That is perfectly absurd. We located the road. According to the Minister of Justice we had the right to locate the road, and we did, and after the road had been located we laid down the specifications. The specifications included the stations and workshops. Those specifications we submitted to the company and their engineers and they were approved by both engineers. I say that when this was done they could not be changed without the consent of the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It would be monstrous to pretend anything else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As to the location of shops, the engineers had nothing to say. Even if the hon. gentleman got their approval of the location of the shops and made a bargain he did not need to do so, according to the opinion of his Minister of Justice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It would be monstrous to pretend that on a road to be leased to a company, upon which they would have to pay a rental, when we had to have their consent as to rails, ties, culverts and everything of that kind, they would have nothing to say as to the location and character of the shops and the location of stations.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would ask my right hon. friend not to mix in the character with the location. The author of that monstrous provision is his own Minister of Justice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not at all; nothing of the kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Section 5 of this agreement gives the Government the uncontrolled discretion to determine the location of the eastern division.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear; to put it here or to put it there

Mr. MEIGHEN: To put it here or to put it there, and it does not require the consent of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Is that not right?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, I submit it to the fair judgment of anybody, that when we had located the road at this point my hon. friend cannot pretend that after we had built it we could say to the Grand Trunk Pacific: We discard all that; we are going to locate another road apart from this.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It might be monstrous when we had built the road to change, but that would be a matter of business judgment. As to the matter of law, our right to locate the road begins at the commencement and ends with the completion of the road.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend is coming all the time to the location of the road. The point is, could you change the character of the road when it had been located?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The character of the road is not under discussion at all; that is only what my right hon. friend wants to get under discussion as soon as possible. It is the location that is under discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That location is determined on without reference to the company; there is no need of reference to them; and if my hon. friend got their consent and made them a party to the contract, he did not have to do so. It is located without reference to them, and, within the discretion of the Government, they could change that location at their will.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not at all. I dispute that point altogether. There is nothing in the letter of the Minister of Justice to justify that interpretation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would like the right hon. gentleman to tell me when their discretion ceases. He says we can locate it; he admits we do not need to get the consent of the company; and, therefore, we locate it. We do not get their consent. Now, up to what time is our discretion free, and when is it restrained? It never is restrained; we have full discretion as to the location at all times, and we are restrained by no legal limitation whatever, but only by our sense of what is in the interest of the road and of the people.

Mr. DEVLIN: What interpretation does the Solicitor General give to the word "work" in the seventh line of section 17, where it says that the work shall be done according to the specifications. Does it mean the undertaking?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It means the Transcontinental railway. But would it not be well for me to finish with this opinion, now that I am in the middle of it, before we get into another section?

This discretion is not limited or affected by clause 7, which provides only for approval by the company of the specifications for construction and joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the work of construction by the chief engineers of the Government and the company.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is only quoting from the Act. But his minister stated what that meant and all it meant, and with that he and the hon. member to his right (Mr. Graham) are entirely in disagreement to-night, because it suits them in order to oppose this resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN (reading):

The agreement is by law to be construed favourable to the Government, but even without invoking this canon of construction it is not thought possible to hold that there are any words or implication in clause 7 entitling the company to a voice in the location of the eastern division. This section refers to specifications for construction and work of construction, which are matters quite distinct from location. A very clear opinion and a very reasonable opinion, I think.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think so, too.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The location precedes the making of the specifications, does it not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, the location is first made by the engineers, and then the specifications are made upon the location.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: He does not know that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it not entirely consistent with the opinion of the late Minister of Justice that while the Government fix the original location, when the specifications are completed there can be no change without joint approval?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. Whatever the Government has uncontrolled determination of, that uncontrolled determination continues from the beginning to the end; what they have not uncontrolled determination of they cannot change once that point in the specifications is agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And the conclusion of my hon. friend on this opinion is that when the line has been located in a certain part, the shops necessary to operate that line can be located nine miles away from that line.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The location of the shops is within the discretion of the Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Exactly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And my right hon. friend exercised that and built the Transcona shops five miles away from the terminal point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: On the road.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But they have to go five miles.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, they do not. They would have if they started from Winnipeg, but they do not all have to go to Winnipeg.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does he mean that cars going to Winnipeg would stop five miles out for repairs? The right hon. leader of the Opposition says that this has all been decided by arbitration—that we had to build the Transcona shops and the Quebec shops. His Government was committed to both shops, at Quebec and at Transcona, by reason of opinions given at the time upon which they relied. There were opinions to the contrary, and that question was never referred to the board of arbitration of which Sir William Whyte was chairman.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Was it not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, the question that was referred to Sir William Whyte—and I am sure the hon. member for Renfrew will bear me out in this—was not whether it was upon the Government of Canada or upon the Grand Trunk Pacific to build those shops. What was referred to him was the matter of the rentals, the terms upon which the Grand Trunk Pacific were to get a lease of the line from Lake Superior junction to Winnipeg, and some other questions also involving cost of construction that were at issue between the company and the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM: Let me put my hon. friend right, because he is altogether wrong. One of the questions referred by the Minister of Railways and Mr. Chamberlin to Sir William Whyte was:

Are the shops at Transcona and repair shops at divisional points or any of them to be regarded as a portion of the eastern division?

There was also a question about rental, but that question about the shops was asked plainly. My hon. friend has asked me a question, so that we had better clear the matter up now. The contention of the Minister of Railways and of the Solicitor General is that the question submitted to Sir William Whyte was not, are the shops a part of the eastern division, but, what rental should be paid if they are not? Let me just put the question as the Minister of Railways put it, and then I will give the award of Sir William Whyte, because it will clear up beyond a peradventure that his award was that these shops at every divisional point are a part of the National Transcontinental railway, and that the road cannot be conveniently operated without the completion of those shops. This is the reference made by the Minister of Railways and Mr. Chamberlin:

Ottawa, Dec. 4, 1912.

Sir William Whyte,
Winnipeg.

Will you act as sole arbitrator between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway to fix the rental to be paid for use of that portion of the Transcontinental railway line between Winnipeg and lake Superior junction pending completion of the entire line through to Moncton? If so, necessary information will be sent you directly and arrangements made with the Grand Trunk Pacific officials at Winnipeg to furnish train so that you can go over the line and make the necessary examination; also any other information.

[Mr. Meighen.]

It was agreed that the following questions should be submitted to Sir William Whyte.

Mr. MEIGHEN: By whom?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Minister of Railways and Mr. Chamberlin. I am going to read the submission as it appeared in the official correspondence placed on the table a year ago:

(1) What is a fair rental for the use of that portion of the eastern division between Winnipeg and Lake Superior junction, exclusive of the shops hereinafter mentioned, until the eastern division is completed, sufficient for operation within the intent and meaning of the agreements and Acts hereinafter mentioned, with a ferry at Quebec?

(2) Are the shops at Transcona and repair shops at divisional points or any of them to be regarded as a portion of the eastern division, within the intent and meaning of the agreements of July 29, 1903, and of February 18, 1904, and Acts confirming the same?

(3) If not, what is a proper rental for the use of such shops, or any of them, by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for any railway purposes they may desire until the eastern division is completed sufficient for operation?

I think it will be agreed that question No. 2 plainly states the case as I stated it: Are the shops at all divisional points a part of the eastern division? Here is the award of Sir William Whyte, who heard everything in connection with the case:

With respect to the shops at Transcona, considering their location and the circumstances under which they were produced and furnished, and the specifications; and interpreting the said agreements and Acts in the light of modern railway practice, and considering the contemplated use of the said eastern division by other railways, I award, order and determine that the said shops are to be regarded as and are a portion of the said eastern division within the intent and meaning of the said agreements of the 29th of July, 1903, and the 18th of February, 1904, and Acts confirming the same.

Further, he did not stop there. The balance of his finding refers to the shops at Quebec and other divisional points. Hon. gentlemen will pay strict attention to what Sir William Whyte says if they wish to hear the decision of one of the greatest railway men America ever had—a man whom the Minister of Railways had such confidence in that he referred this very question to him. What does he say as to the shops at divisional points, and as to their necessity to the operation of the road:

I further award, order and determine that all repair shops at divisional points are to be regarded as and are a portion of said eastern division within the intent and meaning of the said agreements of 29th July, 1903, and of the 18th February, 1904, and of the Acts confirming the same. I consider these are a material part of the railway and necessary convenience for its proper and efficient operation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is as the hon. gentleman said it was referred to him, but that does not contradict what I stated was not referred to him: that is, whether or not it was incumbent to build those shops as a part of the road. If the Government builds them under the Transcontinental Commission the Government by that act admits they are a part of the road, and there could be no other finding. The Government had long before submitted to its own Minister of Justice and Deputy Minister of Justice the question whether or not they should build them, and they had determined to build them. After that, whether right or wrong, they became a part of the road of course. But how does that affect the present discussion?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend made a statement that—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I made the statement that the question whether or not they should be constructed was never referred to him.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were built before that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The question was this. If they were improperly built, then there was no rental on them; but if they were a part of the road and properly built there was rental.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I agree with that, but the very fact that they were built under the commission was an admission that they were part of the road.

Mr. GRAHAM: Several of them were not built.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The work was under way.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Quebec shops had not been started.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was no reference to him about that at all.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a divisional point, and so would be included.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Transcona shops was all that was referred to Sir William Whyte.

Mr. GRAHAM: The shops at all divisional points.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were a part of the road undoubtedly. The Government decided that the shops should be built as part of the road.

Mr. GRAHAM: After this award the Government gave the contract.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the Grand Trunk Pacific took the line over under rental. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has made some other suggestions that he thinks we should act upon. He says if we pass this resolution it involves an expenditure of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000. He is doing the best he can to establish a value for the Grand Trunk Pacific in case they stand solid on the rental and we are bound to expropriate. Anything he can do, he is going to do in order to saddle on the Government as large an expenditure as possible. There is nothing in the resolution compelling us to buy or acquire the road.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why then do you ask for authority?

Mr. MEIGHEN: As I have already explained, in order that we may not be compelled to lease from them at their figures, in order that we may have an alternative, and in order that they will be more likely to be fair and reasonable in deciding on the terms. Those are all the powers asked for. But, says the hon. member for St. John, here is your agreement for 1904. If you just act upon that, that is all you need to do. He says that a way is pointed out in clause 3 of the agreement of 1904, and that if we simply take that up with the Grand Trunk Pacific all our difficulties will be solved. What is that clause 3?

Pending the completion of the eastern division by the Government, the company shall be entitled to lease from the commissioners, to be appointed under the said Act, and to operate such portions of the said eastern division as may from time to time be completed, but upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the company and the said commissioners, which terms are not to be more onerous than those of the lease of the whole division by the said contract provided for, save in so far as may be necessary to give full effect to the paramount right of the said commissioners next hereinafter mentioned, and subject always to the paramount right of the said commissioners to use and operate the same without any payment of tolls or other compensation for such purposes as they may deem necessary or expedient in the execution of their commission.

In other words, that clause gives the Grand Trunk Pacific the right to demand from the Government power to lease any portion of the road as it becomes complete, but upon terms not more onerous than those upon which they could lease the whole line were it complete. We are in this position: the Grand Trunk Pacific have the right to lease the whole line as it is now upon the terms of their contract. They have the right to call upon us to lease the line upon terms not more onerous and my hon. friend says that they now take the position that they would take over this road even were they to rely upon clause 3 because they have a right to demand a lease on terms not more onerous. If they would not take these terms under which they would pay no rent at all how does the hon. gentleman expect us to make a lease and get some rent from them? They are now in a position to take over the road and pay no rental for seven years. We act not at all upon this resolution unless they refuse to do it. Assume that they have refused to take over the line and run it rent free for seven years, what success are we likely to have in asking them to enter into a lease which involves the payment of rent?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Surely the hon. gentleman could not have heard my words else he would not have made that statement. I referred to the arrangement which the late president, Mr. Hays, proposed to make and which I understood, in conversation with Mr. Chamberlin, they were willing to make after this Government came into power—that is, that they would equip the completed sections with proper rolling stock and operate them subject to Government supervision and Government audit.. If there was any surplus the Government would get the benefit of it, and if there was a deficit that should be added to capital account, upon which they should pay interest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I knew that the hon. gentleman referred to that matter. That was the alternative that he proposed, but afterwards he came to section 3 and called upon us to act under section 3.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That was based on section 3.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And section 3 gave the company the right to run the road on certain terms. They now refuse to take it and run it for nothing, and the hon. gentleman expects us to make a bargain with them to run it on terms. If they take the road now, of course this resolution will not be acted upon. Let us take the hon. gentleman's other suggestion. It is this: We ought to make a bargain with the company whereby they would operate the line and if there was a deficit it would be added to capital account upon which they would later pay interest. The hon. gentleman will see that that involves an additional obligation, an additional burden upon the company. It means that the annual deficits will pile up and accumulate, and that the already large rental which the company will be called upon to pay under the agreement will be added to by that means. It involves that obligation, that additional burden, on the back of the company, and a very heavy additional burden it will be.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why do you assume that there will be a deficit?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman assumed that. He said that the annual deficit would be added to capital account and that they would pay interest upon it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I said that if there was any profit it would be handed in, and if there was any deficit it would be added to capital.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If there was any profit the company would get it, and if there was a deficit we would pay it and add it to capital.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Surely the hon. gentleman must be doing that intentionally? Why does he misquote? I did not say that if there was any surplus or profit it should go to the company. I said that if there was any surplus it would go to the treasury, to the country, and that if there was a deficit it would be added to capital.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought the hon. gentleman said that it would be paid to the company. If there is any profit it goes to the country and if there is any deficit it is to be added to capital and the company pay interest upon it. Consequently the company cannot make a dollar out of the proposition and it will be only adding to the burden—

Mr. PUGSLEY: They offered to enter into it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman show me where they offered to do that?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I may say to my hon. friend again, so that there will be no doubt about it, and I am speaking in the presence of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and of the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), that it was at a meeting, where we were considering the whole question of operating the sections. A subcommittee of Council composed of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, who was then Prime Minister, the then Minister of Railways and Canals, the then Minister of Finance and myself met with Mr. Hays, president of the company, and Mr. Hays made that clear and distinct statement. Since that time Mr. Chamberlin has repeated that statement in my presence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he company were in a mood like that when the hon. gentleman was Minister of Public Works, and his Government were in office, and if they were willing to enter into a bargain where they had no chance to make a dollar and a great chance to lose, I wonder why, with a company in that mood, the hon. gentleman did not make a better bargain than he did. Ready to make a bargain whereby, if there is a profit, it goes to the country and whereby if there is a loss they are prepared to pay the interest on it! A business company ready to make a bargain of that kind!

Mr. PUGSLEY: They would get their operating expenses.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is to say they would get the money that they paid and I have no doubt they would appreciate the privilege they had of getting back all the money they had paid out. This resolution becomes operative if they refuse to take the road over. They have the right to run the road now for seven years for nothing and if they have any profit they have a right to take it. We assume that they have refused that proposition to take the profit and run the road for nothing. Having refused that they will be quite ready, the hon. gentleman says, to enter into another bargain, namely, one whereby they would not have any profit at all but would pay the interest on the loss. If the company do not refuse we have no resolution, or the resolution will not go into operation. But the hon. gentleman says that a company that has refused to operate for nothing and take the profits, would be quite ready to operate, give the profits to the public and pay interest on the loss.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why do you not see if they will do that? I venture to say that if you honestly tried to get them to do it they would do it, as the Minister of Railways and Canals assured the committee he would try.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Railways and Canals has not told the committee yet of the way that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company treated the proposal which my hon. friend said they would willingly enter into. Surely the absurdity of it would appeal to any person to suggest that a company that has the right to run the road for nothing and take the profits, and which has refused that, is going to consent to run the road, pay the profits, if any, into the Government and pay the interest on the deficit.

I wish to make an explanation on a point raised by the hon. member for St. John. When he spoke he raised the question of compound interest and asked me about it. I told him that it had been computed by the auditor, and that no instructions had been given to the auditor. At the time I had received an intimation which I understood to imply that it was compound interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That it was simple interest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, that is quite right; I understand the auditor to say that it was computed on the basis of simple interest. I have seen the auditor since, and I find that I misunderstood his intimation to me, and that it is compound interest. There were no instructions given to the auditor at all. The statute was before him when he made the calculation, and the auditor determined upon his own judgment absolutely that the statute called for a compound interest calculation. I do not want to act as judge upon this point, but I wish to say that the hon. member for St. John quite overstated the matter when he said that the statute was very clear that no compound interest should be charged. Certainly, the country has to pay compound interest upon it; certainly the least to be said is that one would have thought that it would be called for. It seems, upon reading the section, that if anything the view of the auditor is better than that of the hon. member for St. John. How does the section read?

The expression "cost of construction," in the case of the eastern division, shall mean and include all the cost of material, supplies, wages, services and transportation, etc.... cost of engineering, maintenance, repairs and replacement of works and material during construction, and superintendence, bookkeeping, legal expenses, and, generally, costs and expenses occasioned by the construction of the said division, whether of the same kind as, or different in kind from, the classes of expenditure specially mentioned, including interest upon the money expended;—

That is to say, that in the outlay of any year, the interest outlay of that year is a part of the cost of construction. I will ask the hon. member to remember that.

—the interest upon such outlay—

Which means the interest upon the annual outlay, including interest—

—the interest upon such outlay in each year shall be capitalized at the end of such year, and interest charged thereon at three per cent per annum until the completion of the work, and until the lessees enter into possession under the terms of the said lease.

It is a question of what the word "outlay" means, and if "outlay" means, as a reasonable interpretation would say, the cost of construction during the year before, then certainly it is compound interest. If it means the same as the "cost of construction" of the year before then it is compound and it can be nothing else, because, in the course of construction, the interest payment of that year is included. So that it would mean the interest upon (x plus y) all payments for other purposes and all payments for interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is added to the outlay in that year, of course, and then at the end of the year that represents the expenditure of that year. The Act says it shall bear interest at three per cent until the completion of the line, but not that that interest shall be compounded each year as has been done here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If interest shall include interest outlay during the year, then it includes the interest upon outlay during the year, and, consequently, interest upon outlay means interest upon interest outlay.

Mr. PUGSLEY: True it is the interest for that year which is added, but then the statute goes on and says that that total outlay for that year including the interest shall only bear interest at three per cent until the road is completed. Suppose a man gives a note of $1,000 payable in ten years at 6 per cent, you cannot compound up that interest every year, but at the end of the period you get your principal amount and the interest at 6 per cent.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: If, on the other hand, it says that interest in each year shall be part of outlay, and that interest shall be capitalized at the end of the year, that means compound interest. However, I am not arguing that there is no other view reasonably tenable; I am only arguing that the auditors had very good ground for their view, and in my humble judgment they have the better ground of the two. The auditors followed this view and took this course upon their reading of the Act, and asked for no opinion upon it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the legal opinion of the Solicitor General?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My own opinion is that the auditors' view is more reasonable than that of the hon. member for St. John. I am not in the habit of deciding things and saying there is no possible other view at all; I am not of that habit especially when I possessed just a few years ago an entirely different opinion, and that is the position the hon. member for St. John is in to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes. He argued to-night that the question of location is as much a matter for the Grand Trunk as for us, when he knows that his Government acted upon the very opposite opinion given by the Minister of Justice of that day.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I know they did not. When the location is once agreed upon and the specifications based on it, that is the end of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The question of location, according to his own Minister of Justice, never had to be agreed upon.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What has placing the workshops nine miles away from the line of the Transcontinental and buying a road from another company, got to do with the location of the line? Is not that changing the whole character of the terminals so far as the workshops are concerned?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is changing the location, that is all; changing that portion of its character, but nothing else, and that is something within the purview of the Government alone, and has always been held to be.

What I am now about to say does not concern the issue, but I promised the hon. member from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that I would call attention to his own words and appeal to the House as to whether I did not properly represent him. To do so, I will read the statement that preceded the remarks of the hon. member. Some discussion ensued between him and the Minister of Militia as to certain allegations which on certain information the hon. gentleman from St. John had made, and this took place:

> Major General Hughes: The hon. gentleman has not the slightest particle of evidence that there is a tittle of fact in what he has stated, and he cannot produce any. He cannot show that the British Government in Britain, in Canada, in the United States, or in any other part of God's green universe, ever was able to get mark vii ammunition at less than $35 a thousand, excepting the one lot that I had the honour of being instrumental in getting for $33 per thousand.
>
> Mr. Pugsley: My hon. friend may be absolutely correct. I have not the slightest idea as to whether I am correct or not. It may be that the gentleman who gave me this information gave me false information.

Is not that just about what I said? And so we see from this that the hon. gentleman took upon himself to impugn the honour of the Government upon information which he had not the slightest idea was correct or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not think the hon. member is right in saying that I impugned the honour of the Government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman said that it involved the honour of the Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I was careful to state that I did not make any charge against the Government. I was careful to state I had received this information in New York from a gentleman in whose word I placed confidence, a gentleman of the highest respectability; but that, so far as I was concerned, I did not know whether the statement were correct. I was careful to say I made no charge against the Government or against the minister.

Mr. DEVLIN: What, in the opinion of the Solicitor General, is the meaning of the word " railway " in line 7 of section 7 of the contract? The hon. gentleman has told us that the word " work " means the whole railway. What would be the definition of the word " railway "; would it be the same definition as is contained in the general Railway Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the general Railway Act applies at all. I say that the word " railway " has no definition in this Act, and that is the complaint I make. What the hon. gentleman asks me to do now is to fill up the blank in the Act, which the Government he supported should have filled up by direct legislation.

Mr. DEVLIN: As a member of the House I was asking the Solicitor General what in his opinion was the meaning of the word " railway."

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that I should be called upon across the floor to give a definition of " railway " or any other thing. What I say is that the definition of " railway " and of " completed railway " should have been made in the Act itself, beyond all peradventure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not made as to " completed railway."

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is the definition?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I will tell you.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no definition of a completed railway or what constitutes the completeness of a railway, and that is the point my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin) has in mind. What constitutes the completion of a railway is not defined in this legislation, and it ought to have been.

Mr. DEVLIN: The point is, what is really the meaning of the word " railway." Section 7 says:

> The work must be under the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the Government and the chief engineer of the company.

The Solicitor General says the word "work" means the whole railway, and I now ask him the definition of the word "railway"?

Mr. MEIGHEN That is to say, is the railway complete until there are shops and the like of that?

Mr. DEVLIN: I am not asking that; I am asking the Solicitor General for a definition of the word "railway" as he understands it in this contract; it must have some meaning.

Mr. MEIGHEN; I do not propose to commit myself to a definition, because, in the first place, it would do no good to do so. There was a time when it would do good, and that time was overlooked by the Government which the hon. gentleman supported. It will now have to be submitted to another tribunal.

Mr. DEVLIN: Would the Solicitor General say, as Solicitor General, that the word "railway" would not mean:

"Any railway which the company had authority to construct or operate, including all branches, sidings, stations, depots, wharves, rolling stock, equipment, stores, property real and personal, and works connected therewith, and also any railways, bridges, tunnels or other structure which the company is authorized to construct."

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is so easy that I really cannot help answering it. In my opinion, "work" does not include rolling stock at all, because we have nothing to do with rolling stock; the company has to supply that. The hon. gentleman's definition is wrong, whatever other definition may be right.

Mr. DEVLIN: Would it mean all the stations of the road?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would mean stations of the railway, of course. It might not mean all the stations.

Mr. DEVLIN: Would not the terminal stations be the stations of the railway?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They might and they might not. That is to be decided.

Mr. COCHRANE: What the hon. gentleman is driving at is this: there is a station for the company to go into at Quebec just as there is at Winnipeg.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I shall be very brief in explaining to my hon. friend why I think the Grand Trunk Pacific were willing, when Mr. Hays was living, and would be willing to-day, to make the arrangement about which I spoke. The result would be, to begin with, that they would get their operating expenses. Then they would be developing traffic which in the future would be for the benefit of the country served by that railway. While operating, they would be at the same time postponing the period when they would be obliged to begin to pay interest. My hon. friend must see that. Therefore it would be very much more favourable for the company to take sections and even the whole line before it was finally completed than it would be to enter into a lease under which their obligations to pay rent would begin at a certain time. The company might be willing to make the arrangement of which I spoke and which they expressed themselves formerly as willing to make, while they would not be willing to enter into a lease for an uncompleted road, under which, as I have said, the term for payment of interest would begin to run. The best way to find out is to ask them if they are now willing to carry out the proposed agreement.

Mr. OLIVER: The discussion so far has been in regard to the eastern end of the Grand Trunk Pacific enterprise. It strikes me that the western end is more important, and I wish to call the attention of the House for a few minutes to the effect of action that may be taken under this resolution. The resolution contemplates the taking over by the Government of the portion of the Grand Trunk Pacific line from Lake Superior junction to Fort William, with the terminals. That piece of line is necessary to give the Grand Trunk Pacific system, measurably grid-ironing the three prairie provinces and British Columbia, a competitive outlet to lake navigation. If the Government takes action under this resolution and deprives the Grand Trunk Pacific of that access to lake navigation, it will be prejudicing in large measure the operations of the company throughout the three prairie provinces and British Columbia.

Mr. COCHRANE: But they would have to get connection from Winnipeg to Lake Superior junction, supposing the arrangement were carried out. They would need to enter into a contract for that.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes. I will reach the point that my hon. friend has in mind a little later on.

At the present time the Grand Trunk Pacific has a railway system in large measure covering the four western provinces, which system is dependent for its commercial success, in larger measure than on any other factor, on having independent access on competitive terms to the navigation of the Great Lakes. They have that connection now under some arrangement—I do not know what it is—with the Government, covering that part of the line from Winnipeg to Lake Superior junction, and then by the use of this branch which is their own. I am compelled to understand, from the terms of this resolution, and more particularly from the expressions of the Solicitor General in regard to it, that it is the deliberate intention of the Government under this legislation to deprive the Grand Trunk Pacific system of that access to lake Superior, which is an absolute necessity to its successful business operation. The Government proposes to take over this section of the line, which is the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific, with its terminals, with the elevators, with all the port facilities which have been established there by the Grand Trunk Pacific at the cost of that railway, to aid in the successful operation of those thousands of miles of line in the Prairie Provinces and the Pacific province. I do not imagine that the House understands the stupendous character of the proposal before it. My hon. friend the Solicitor General, if I heard him correctly, spoke of the necessity, by this legislation, of taking over the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific—of expropriating—

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I did not.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. member used the word "expropriate."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I did; but the hon. member has never been unfair to me before, and he does not mean to be now. What I said was that if we had to operate the road, then we had to lease or acquire, and that we desired the power to acquire, because it might otherwise be impossible for us to make an advantageous lease.

Mr. OLIVER: Exactly. My hon. friend used the word "expropriate" and also the word "weapon." The Government proposes to use this as a weapon in dealing with the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why should it not?

Mr. OLIVER: I understand there is an intention on the part of the Government to use this agreement as a weapon to do what?

Mr. MEIGHEN: To get a fair bargain.

Mr. OLIVER: As a weapon to compel the Grand Trunk Pacific to submit to a rearrangement of their agreement in regard to the eastern division of the Transcontinental.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. OLIVER: That is the only purpose there could be in using this arrangement as a weapon. I am not interested particularly in whether or not the Government takes the Grand Trunk Pacific by the throat and uses this agreement as a weapon to deprive it of the possibility of operating properly its system in the prairie provinces and the Pacific province. That is a matter of Government policy; and, if the Government sees fit to adopt that policy, that is for the Government to consider. What I am interested in is this: the Grand Trunk Pacific project was begun for the especial purpose of giving Western Canada railway development and railway competition, And my hon. friends propose by this means to take into their hands the power to deprive the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia of the possibility of their enjoying that competition in railway facilities that was the purpose of the establishment of the enterprise. If the Government of the day actually does as they have taken power to do, how is the Grand Trunk Pacific to carry on its business as a competitor with the other two railway systems of the West, both of which not only have access to the waters of Lake Superior, but also have, or shortly will have, all-rail connection with the East? If they take the control they have arranged to take here, they break, the Grand Trunk Pacific enterprise; and that, I am bound to believe, is their deliberate intention. As to the use of the Bill to be founded upon this resolution as a weapon to compel the Grand Trunk Pacific to enter into an agreement as to operating the eastern section of the railway on unfair terms—

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not that at all.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend will have to admit that, or he used the word inadvisedly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman is misquoting me. I said not to affect in any way the operating of the eastern division. If they are ready to operate the eastern division, we are only too ready to let them. If they refuse to operate, where is their eastern outlet that my hon. friend is so much afraid of?

Mr. OLIVER: I do not think it would be profitable for my hon. friend and myself to argue about the meaning of the terms he used. There is no question about the use of the term; there is no question about the connection in which he used it. I am, therefore, entitled to put my construction upon the purpose he had in the use of these terms, as he is at liberty to put such construction on what I say.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So long as you quote correctly what I said.

Mr. OLIVER: And the hon. gentleman will not deny—he cannot deny, for Hansard will show it—that he used the word " expropriate," and the word " weapon."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear; but not in the way the hon. gentleman says I did.

Mr. OLIVER: That is the matter that I say it is not profitable for my hon. friend and myself to discuss.

Mr. BURNHAM: Who owns it now?

Mr. OLIVER: Owns what now?

Mr. BURNHAM: The property to be expropriated?

Mr. OLIVER: The Grand Trunk Pacific. It is important that there should be railway competition, and that there should be a competitive outlet for the Grand Trunk Pacific system, not only to the Lakes, but also to tidewater; and it is in regard to the terms upon which the Grand 11 p.m. Trunk Pacific shall secure access to tidewater that this resolution is brought forward—as my hon. friend says—as a "weapon" to compel the Grand Trunk Pacific—he did not use the word "compel"; I am using it—to agree to something that the Government is not entitled, on the merits of the case, to require them to agree to. Now, as to the right of the Government to claim breach of faith on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific—and that is really the burden of my hon. friend's argument—as to the merits of the case between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific concerning the eastern outlet at tidewater, let me give my view of the case concerning where the responsibility rests.

The Grand Trunk Pacific project was finally agreed to in April, 1904. From 1904 until 1911 construction was pushed on that road. In October, 1911, if my memory is correct, a return, placed on the table of the House by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, gave the information that at that time an expenditure of approximately $100,000,000 had been made, and that the road was within, I think, 15 per cent of being completed—it was 85 per cent completed. Details were given showing so much grading, bridging, track laying and other things to be done. The cost had been $100,000,000, approximately, and the time occupied from the very beginning of the enterprise was seven years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have never seen that return.

Mr. OLIVER: The return was laid on the table, and there was a long argument in Parliament about it. The return was brought down and the figures given, for the purpose of affecting the election in South Renfrew, which resulted in the return of my hon. friend (Mr. Graham).

Mr. COCHRANE: I would like to see my hon. friend produce that return.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend surely does not deny that he brought down a return.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think I ever brought down a return showing an expenditure of $100,000,000 at that time.

Mr. OLIVER: Was the expenditure less or more?

Mr. COCHRANE: It was more.

Mr. OLIVER: How much more?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not prepared to say.

Mr. OLIVER: I may be wrong as to the amount. But for the purposes of the argument I am going to make it would be better if the amount were larger than $100,000,000. Now, let me repeat in seven years the road was 85 per cent completed, and the cost was approximately a hundred millions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman say that the return stated that it was 85 per cent completed?

Mr. OLIVER: That is my understanding of the return.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the hon. gentleman will have to revise that understanding.

Mr. OLIVER: Perhaps so. I give the figures as approximate and may be a little in error, but approximately, that was the condition. Now, it is three and a half years since 1911, and the expenditure on the Transcontinental has gone up to something like—should I be wrong if I said, $150,000,000?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER: Has it gone over that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman include interest?

Mr. OLIVER: I include anything the hon. gentleman includes. I take it any way he figures it. How does he figure it out?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That depends on the basis on which the hon. gentleman wishes it figured out. Does he include interest?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, anything the hon. gentleman likes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The expenditure is over $170,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER: We will say it was $170,000,000 at December 31, 1914, and that it was $105,000,000 or $110 000,000 at the 1st of October, 1911—and it was no more than that. The road was 85 per cent completed then, and it is not completed yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not 85 per cent completed then.

Mr. OLIVER: I said it was. I may be a little in error. Will my hon. friend say how much it was?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not nearly that. The hon. gentleman's figures show it was not nearly that.

Mr. HANNA: The hon. member for South Renfrew put it at 55 per cent last year in the discussion of the Transcontinental—55 per cent completed when this Government took office.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know what the hon. member for South Renfrew said.

Mr. GRAHAM: Neither does the hon. member.

Mr. OLIVER: I am taking the return submitted by the Minister of Railways when the hon. member for South Renfrew was not in the House. What I wanted to say was that the railway was certainly more than 75 per cent completed in the fall of 1911, and since that time this Government has spent upon the railroad more than one-half as much as was spent in the seven years previously, and if the railroad is not completed now, it is the fault of this Government, which has squandered money in such stupendous volume without putting it to proper use. If the Goverment of the day had spent the money which they have spent as the Government which preceded them spent the money, that they spent, there would be no dispute to-day as to whether or not the Transcontinental was ready for operation. The Grand Trunk Pacific would not have a leg to stand on in arguing that they were under no obligation to take over the road. My hon. friend would not be in the position that, by an Act of this Parliament, he must take the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific to use it as a weapon to compel the company to agree to take over the road when it has not been completed. There is no reason why this Transcontinental railroad is not completed at this date, except the policy of the Government of the day.

Mr. COCHRANE: Who let the contracts for the road?

Mr. GRAHAM: The late Government did not let any contracts for the changes in Quebec.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know you did not, and you did not do any work there; that is more.

Mr. OLIVER: It does not make any difference who let the contracts. Now that my hon. friend has mentioned it all the contracts were let before the present Government came into power, and if they did not see that these contracts were fulfilled as they ought to have been, it was not the fault of the Government that let the contracts.

Mr. COCHRANE: The contracts in Quebec were let to be finished in 1907, and they were not finished when we came into power.

Mr. OLIVER: That is right, they are not finished yet, so that my hon. friend is not gaining anything in the race at all.

Mr. COCHRANE: That may be your opinion.

Mr. OLIVER: The fact that the road is not completed to-day is not because there has not been time enough or because there has not been money enough spent, but because it has not been the policy of this Government to carry that project to successful and satisfactory completion. It has been the settled and fixed policy of this Government to prevent the realization of the expectations of railroad competition throughout Canada, and particularly throughout Western Canada, as the result of the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific enterprise, that was the very reason for its inception. That is absolutely in line with the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite from the day that the project was first brought into Parliament. They opposed it in 1903 and in 1904 they fought the project until the snow flew in October—from spring until fall. From that day to this they have done everything in season and out of season, by word of mouth but still more by executive action, to prevent the successful completion of this project and the realization of the expectations resulting from it. Here we have the climax. The rails are laid from end to end of the road. There is no reason why the terminals should not have progressed as the building of the road progressed; but we find the road laid and the terminals still to be built and our hon. friends contend that the company should take over the road without the terminals being completed! The Minister of Railways says: Why, they can get down to tide water, they can use the Canadian Pacific railway station, they can transact their business. My friend the Solicitor General was very sarcastic about the amount of business there was for them to transact. Perhaps there is not very much business for them to transact, perhaps they could transact their business under the circumstances that exist at the present time. But I ask my hon. friend if he expects that a company that raises as many millions of dollars of capital for expenditure in this country as the Grand Trunk Pacific has done, is going to enter into an agreement that makes it responsible for large payments in regard to its enterprise, if the terms of the agreement have not been completed in regard to terminals and the company is expected to transact its business with such facilities as are offered to it at Quebec today. I say no, that is not reasonable.

So that there may be no question as to what the condition of the railroad was as to completion on the 31st of December, 1911, I would cite the return submitted to Parliament by the Minister of Railways as follows:

Recapitulation: Length, 1,804.7 miles from Moncton to Winnipeg.
Grading completed, 1,587.7 miles, or 76 per cent in 21 contracts.
Track laid, 1,378.7 miles and 278 miles in sidings.
Telegraph lines, 892 miles.
Bridges, 82 per cent.

That was the condition of construction at that time.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a long way from 85 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER: But it is more than 75 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And that only covers part of the railway.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know. My hon. friend will have to settle that with the Minister of Railways, who saw fit to lay on the table of the House a certain statement in regard to the construction of that railroad. I have given the House the figures, and my argument is that, taking over the road in that state of completion, the Government has not used due diligence in the years that have followed in the matter of the expenditures they have made; and if there is a question to-day as to the Grand Trunk Pacific taking the road over, the fault lies with this Government in carrying on its policy of hostility to the Grand Trunk Pacific project, and hostility to the principle of railway competition in Western Canada.

Mr. COCHRANE: One of the last contracts on the line to be finished was the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend is complaining about what occurred under his own Administration.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh no.

Mr. OLIVER: The Government must shoulder responsibility for its own administration. We are charged with having been responsible for the past expenditure on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Are we to be also charged with the delay in its completion? I say that we are not chargeable either for the large expenditure that has taken place under the hon. minister, or for the delay in the completion of the work. The Government is surely a government that is responsible for what it does. Surely the men who went out of office in 1911 are not responsible for what the Government of the day is doing in 1915. I say that this proposed legislation is simply carrying out the policy that has been uniformly followed by the party now in power from the inception of this enterprise to the present—a policy of hostility to the success of the enterprise and hostility to the principle of railway competition in Western Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In introducing the resolution I understood the Minister of Railways to say that it was introduced for the purpose of authorizing the Government to operate the road from Winnipeg to Quebec. I find nothing at all in this resolution to that effect. This resolution applies simply to the acquisition of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway from Fort William to Superior Junction. There is nothing at all about operating the road.

Mr. COCHRANE: Perhaps I did not express myself very clearly. The object is to operate more effectually the whole system. If we were shut off from operating between Fort Willliam and Superior Junction it would be very bad as we should be shut off from getting to the water and during navigation, we should have to haul the wheat by rail all the way. The idea is to pay for the operation out of consolidated revenue.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I only want to understand exactly where we are. What is the ultimate object of the Government I do not know, but I see that they intend to operate the road. So far so good, or rather so bad. But this resolution is simply to authorize the Government to acquire what now belongs to the Grand Trunk Pacific from Fort William to Superior Junction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The right hon. gentleman will recall that almost exactly a year ago power was given to the Government to operate the Transcontinental. This only enables us more effectually to operate it.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is on the statute book now?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understand where we are now. Do the words " or otherwise acquire " in the resolution cover expropriation if that may be necessary?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think they are wide enough to include that. We might acquire it without expropriation, of course, were it necessary to acquire it at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the meaning of " or of any other company " ?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That applies to "terminal facilities and accommodation works." The words are meant to cover the event of such terminal facilities or accommodation works not being under the direct title of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, but of a subsidiary company.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What works of any other company are intended to be covered by these words?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not quite sure just what works the term "accommodation works" covers, but that is the phrase usually used in connection with a railway. It is necessary to use those words, I think, in order to get the full effect. The words are in the statutes, and consequently have a judicial meaning. They would mean whatever the court has hitherto decided they do mean. That is what they would mean in this legislation. I presume it would include stations.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is very vague. I have been a pretty long time in Parliament, but this is the first time I have heard of "accommodation works."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Probably repair shops would be included.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Belonging to whom?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Either to the Grand Trunk Pacific, or they may have them under the title of a subsidiary company.

Mr. GRAHAM: We want to be all straight, so that the next time we have a discussion of this question we shall have the figures right. The Minister of Railways insisted that over $100,000,000 had been expended up to the time this Government came into power. I have the figures before me, and if the minister will look up the figures down to March 17, 1911, he will see that it is very much under $100,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About $95,000.000, but then there was the expenditure of about eight months more to be added to that.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister said it was much over $100,000,000, but this statement shows that the figures given by my hon. friend Mr. Oliver to-night are approximately correct. After that there was about $50,000,000 expended.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: The statement in Hansard says $113,000,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: We only gave a statement of what was actually paid out. My hon. friend owed a great deal of money.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am taking the figures given to-night. There is a statement here, made by Mr. Bell, I suppose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We figured that proportioned over the year it would be about $113,000,000. As the minister has pointed out we have had to pay off millions that the late Government owed, and there are millions under litigation to-day, which we cannot avoid, but as to the disposal of which or including it in the cost of constitution the agreement is silent.

Mr. GRAHAM: The amounts that you are obligated to pay are not in this statement at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that, but it is surely unfair to argue that we have expended on the road since the difference between that and the amount now expended. The hon. gentlemen became obligated to pay out a certain sum of money but they had not paid it.

Mr. GRAHAM: The same argument would apply to my hon. friend. This Government is obligated to payments that they have not yet paid, and these payments will come in another statement as well.

Mr. COCHRANE: And they do not include interest.

Mr. GRAHAM: We were not discussing interest; that is a small matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) was justified in approximating these figures on the statement which he had in his hand. If we cannot depend on statements coming from the Government, as we found to-night we could not, how are we to make our calculations?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The statements are absolutely right. I thought that what the hon. member for Edmonton was trying to present was so absurd that it would not appeal to the hon. member for Renfrew. The former Government paid out $113,000,000, but they were obligated to pay large sums in addition which were not settled but which were in dispute. The interest was not included, but the hon. member for Edmonton includes interest in one case and forgets to include it in the other.

Mr. GRAHAM: You left it for my hon. friend to put in interest or leave it out, and he put it in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I put it in at one end, but I put it in at the other also, and the hon. gentleman should have done the same.

Mr. GRAHAM: If this statement is correct, it does appeal to the hon. member for Renfrew and substantiates my hon. friend from Edmonton absolutely in what he said.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is meant by this:

> For all the purposes of section 9 of the said Act, may provide, by purchase, lease or otherwise, rolling stock and equipment, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and such other company, shall each be authorized on its part to deal accordingly with the said line of railway or terminal facilities and accommodation works as the case may be.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Section 9 of the old Act reads as follows:

> The construction of the eastern division and the operation thereof until completed and leased to the company pursuant to the provisions of the agreement shall be under the charge and control of three commissioners, to be appointed by the Governor in Council.

[Mr. Meighen.]

It will be observed that the clause gives power to the Commission during construction to operate. Last year section 9 was amended, the amendment giving the minister power to operate the road not only during construction but until actually leased and taken over. That is the condition of section 9 now. Therefore, the resolution reads that to fulfil these requirements he may purchase whatever rolling stock may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

> That subsections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of section 361 of the Railway Act, and section 29, chapter 122 of the statutes of 1903, shall not apply to any such lease or to anything done under the preceding provision.

Mr. GRAHAM: That means that they shall not be referred to the Board of Railway Commissioners or approved by them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it relieves the Government of the necessity, when making this lease with the company, of having the lease approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is a reference to section 29, of chapter 122, of the statutes of 1903.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That means that you cannot amalgamate with another company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Section 29, chapter 122, 3 Edward VII, is the section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company incorporation charter which provides the terms under which they may enter into an amalgamation or lease. This section corresponds to section 361 of the Railway Act, and in order to carry out the effect of the exception as to the applicability of subsections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the section, we have also to except section 29.

Mr. GRAHAM: You give the companies the power to amalgamate under these conditions?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Act does.

Mr. OLIVER: I want to say one further word in line with what I said before. In so far as the operations of the main line of the transcontinental railway from Winnipeg to Quebec is concerned, the Government built that line under an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and if they cannot come to an understanding with the Grand Trunk Pacific as to the operation of it, I would certainly think they had a right to withhold it from the Grand Trunk Pacific and to operate it in any way they please. But I want to point out that the Grand Trunk Pacific have built this section of 150 or 200 miles from Superior junction to Fort William, they have established terminals at Fort William at enormous expense, and they have done this in the full expectation that they were to have the use temporarily of the main line from Winnipeg to Superior junction, so that they could carry on their business until such time as the line from Quebec to Moncton was finished.

Mr. COCHRANE: There is nothing in the Act to say that.

Mr. OLIVER: There is nothing in the Act; I quite appreciate that; but I am talking of this as a business proposition. The Grand Trunk Pacific built that line and went to the expense with that belief and that understanding, and this Government are deliberately undertaking to take from the Grand Trunk Pacific that property which they paid for with the moneys of their bondholders for the purpose of contributing to the success of their main enterprise. There is only one word for that action, and that word is robbery—robbery not in the public interest, but in the interest of the policy of this Government, in the interest of monopoly in transportation.

Mr. ROGERS: I would not speak to-night were it not for the strong language used by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), and used, though in a milder form, by other hon. gentlemen on his side of the House. We were told to-night that the Transcontinental railway was of national interest to the people of Canada when my right hon. friend introduced the Bill for its construction in 1903, and that that national interest has grown day by day from that hour to the present, by reason of the fact that the Government, as representing the people, have invested an enormous sum of money in the construction of this railway. In the judgment of the Government engineer, the railway is now completed, and the time has arrived when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should carry out the terms of the contract it made with the Government in 1904, and operate the railway. I shall not discuss the details of the cost of this railway, nor shall I enter into various other questions which have been raised to-night, but I do want to correct a false impression which seems to exist in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite as to the attitude of this Government towards the Transcontinental railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. I am sure my right hon. friend, and every member on his side of the House, will agree with me that no Government could have adopted a child such as we adopted, in the form of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the National Transcontinental, and have been more loyal to it than we have been since we came to power. We are loyal to it by reason of the fact that the Canadian people, whom we represent in this Parliament, have such a large investment in that great undertaking, and we believe that the day has now come when the company should carry out its bargain and operate the line from Winnipeg to Moncton. We feel that in the interests of the people of Canada we must press upon the company to carry out their contract, which up to the present they have failed to do. The Grand Trunk Pacific line from Superior Junction to Fort William and Port Arthur is an essential link in the chain of the Transcontinental railway from Winnipeg to Moncton, and it is inseparably connected with that enterprise. The purpose of the resolution we are now considering is to take power, so that in the event of the Grand Trunk Pacific failing to carry out its agreement we can operate in some form or other that particular link in the chain, which, as I have said, is so essential to the success of the entire scheme.

Let me say most emphatically that it is not the intention of the Government, nor will it be the policy of the Government, to in any way hamper the trade of Western Canada by any action we may take under this resolution. Neither is it the purpose nor desire of the Government to in any way hamper the operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific or to in any way interfere with any vested right, or with any interest they have, so long as they deal fairly, and I am satisfied from what I know of the President of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, that the company is disposed to deal fairly. In view of all that has taken place, in view of the enormous cost of the railway,—and I shall not enter now into the question as to who is to blame for that,—while consideration should be given to the objections of the Grand Trunk Railway, there can be no question about the advisability of providing for the operation of this particular line at the present time. The purpose of this resolution is only to ensure that if the Government is obliged to operate the whole line as it is now completed, the Government shall have the necessary power to be able to operate the line from Superior Junction to Fort William. In so doing, it is not our desire to injure in any way, or to hamper in any way, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Railway Company. It is not correct for hon. gentlemen to say that we bring forward this resolution with a view to hostile action against the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Grand Trunk. The Government have no such thought, and I can assure the House and the country that the Government will continue in the future as in the past to treat this enterprise the same as it has treated all other enterprises, namely, in a spirit of fairness and generosity, which will be creditable to the Government and satisfactory to the people of the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER: I must congratulate the Government on the statement made by the Minister of Public Works. He will, of course, understand that if we have been led into error it was by reason of the expressions used by his colleague, the Solicitor General, who spoke of this legislation as a weapon which was to be used to compel an agreement by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. But while we are all more than pleased with the conciliatory words of the Minister of Public Works, I want to put it to him and to the House: What is going to happen to the people of the Prairie Provinces and of British Columbia, who depend on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway facilities in these provinces, if and when the Government act under the authority they now take?

Mr. COCHRANE: Do you think any government would be allowed to stay in power ten minutes which would not take all the freight that was offered at Winnipeg, and all the freight offered by the Grand Trunk in the East, and move it over that line. The trouble about operating that line will be to get enough freight for it. There is no government that would be foolish enough to attempt for a minute any other policy.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. member has more faith in governments than I have.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He has more reason to.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. member has more experience than I have had.

Mr. OLIVER: That may be the reason, but I must say that the experience we have had at the hands of this Government would not lead to his conclusion by any means. If we are to have so much faith in the Government which is going to use this legislation as a weapon against the company, how sure are we that the Government will not continue to use this control of the traffic conditions as a weapon also to compel some other concession. We are not interested in the Grand Trunk Pacific, but we are interested in the people of the West; we are interested in their getting railway facilities and under the best possible circumstances. We are interested in the maintenance of effective railway competition, and certainly we look with very great disfavour upon a condition of affairs that will cut off from the thousands of miles of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway in those Prairie Provinces access to lake navigation on their own lines under their own conditions. As a western man, I would certainly, under those circumstances, seeing that we have the competition of two other roads from the prairies to the lakes, rather trust the Grand Trunk Pacific than this Government. I will not suggest this, but I think it will suggest itself to the minds of a great many people that, if this Government has friends among the railway system of Canada, and if it should be particularly well-disposed towards one or the other or both of the other railway systems in the West, it would be a very easy matter for the Government so to handle its control of this connection between lake Superior and Winnipeg to throw the traffic to those other systems. Who thinks the Government would not do that? I certainly do not, and I think there are very few people in the Northwest who would believe the Government would not do it.

Mr. BURNHAM: Would it not be time to complain when the Government does it?

Mr. OLIVER: No, it would be too late then. I am putting my protest in here and now, at the time when the Government is asking for the authority and power. If the Government takes that power, it takes it in the face of the warning that I have given, and it will certainly have to account to the people in the Northwest for the action it proposes to take.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is not this section from Winnipeg to lake Superior Junction still in the hands of the Government?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT: Until that section is taken over by the Grand Trunk Pacific, they cannot run over their own line to lake Superior.

Mr. OLIVER: No.

Mr. WRIGHT: Therefore the piece of road from Winnipeg to lake Superior is practically valueless to the Grand Trunk Pacific until they get their lease. Until such time as they complete the contract, they are certainly in no better position than they will be if the Government keeps control of it.

Mr. OLIVER: That is perfectly true. The Government owns the line from Winnipeg to lake Superior Junction, and the Government can to-day cut the Grand Trunk Pacific off from the operation of that line when the temporary lease that they have at present runs out.

Mr. COCHRANE: They want to give it up now.

Mr. OLIVER: I have very grave doubts.

Mr. COCHRANE: Grave doubts about my statement?

Mr. OLIVER: About their wishing to give it up.

Mr. COCHRANE: I make the emphatic statement that they do wish to give it up. Now contradict my statement.

Mr. OLIVER: I am sorry to have been thought to be discourteous to the minister. Certainly I did not wish to be so, and I wish to accept unqualifiedly any statement he sees fit to make. I do not wish to be thought for a moment as doubting any statement he wishes to make; but as a matter of business operation, there is no doubt that, as long as the Grand Trunk Pacific wishes to operate from Winnipeg to Lake Superior Junction, the Government will be just as ill-advised to prevent them from operating as it will be to expropriate this piece of line. It is not the details of the question about which I am worrying; it is the general question that that company, which has thousands of miles throughout the Prairie Provinces, must have the right of access to lake Superior, or they cannot carry on business on a competitive basis with their competitors, and the people of the Northwest must necessarily suffer in traffic facilities as a consequence.

Mr. WRIGHT: If they wanted to get access all they would require to do would be to take over the line.

Mr. OLIVER: They will take over the line if this Government will complete it. The point is that the Government has not completed the line. The Government does not say that it has completed the line; but it is going to take legislation from this Parliament which it will use as a weapon to compel the Grand Trunk Pacific to take over the line without its being completed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 119, to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Railways and Canals—National Transcontinental railway construction, $5,000,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is that for?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not going back on my statement. We claim it is for construction, and there will be a lot of things to complete five years from now—yes, ten years from now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Thirty years from now.

Mr. COCHRANE: Fifty years from now.

Mr. OLIVER: The Solicitor General will surely be able to give us some explanation of this $5,000,000 for construction on the National Transcontinental railway.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. gentleman does not understand it, I am afraid the case is hopeless for him.

Mr. OLIVER: The Solicitor General is arguing that the road was completed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Solicitor General has the engineers behind him.

Mr. GRAHAM: Quite a way behind him —$5,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHAN: I have been able to quote exactly what the engineer said.

Mr. GRAHAM: Will this $5,000,000 complete the road?

Mr. COCHRANE: It shows the following expenditures: grading, $1,702,750—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is paying for grading under these contracts not settled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Work done?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes; right of way, $575,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where?

Mr. COCHRANE: Well, a portion of it in the city of Winnipeg. We have a lawsuit there. We were sued for nearly $3,000,000 by one company; went to the Exchequer Court and they got judgment for $465,000. Another item is, building, $60,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Building what?

Mr. COCHRANE: The Champlain station —to finish it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will that be finished this year?

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: "Oh, yes"—I have heard that before; I heard it last year.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know, but I tell the right hon. gentleman it will be. There is $10,000 still due on bridges. Then, Quebec terminals, $2,500,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What terminals?

Mr. COCHRANE: Joint terminals with the Canadian Pacific railway. The Transcona shops will take $30,000, and headquarters salaries and expenses, $40,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the road is completed, headquarters expenses ought to stop.

Mr. COCHRANE: There are old disputes to which we fell heir, disputes seven, eight and nine years old, and it takes some time to straighten them out.

Mr. GRAHAM: And do you need all these overhead expenses for that?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is part of it. My hon. friend knows well that we have to keep some of these engineers that supervise the work if we get into a lawsuit. This totals $5,000,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Of this, $2,500,000 goes to the Quebec terminals. Is that to be paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway for land?

Mr. COCHRANE: We take the land in our own right, and enter into a terminal agreement with them on practically the same basis as that on which the Transcontinental and the Grand Trunk Pacific have entered into agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway in Winnipeg.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has the land been bought?

Mr. COCHRANE: Most of it, and that which has not been bought has been filed upon.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

Mr. GRAHAM: Not paid for?

Mr. COCHRANE: No. I think there is some land yet to be paid for along the shore up near the Champlain 12 m. market. And if I wanted to be critical and bring politics into this, in my opinion, we could take a good deal of credit for securing that land at so much lower price than was offered in the Exchequer Court—from Wolfe's Cove up to Champlain market. But I have avoided discussions of that kind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And if I wanted to be critical I would condemn the whole scheme. I understood from the minister's statement that he is buying that land in the right of the Government. My impression of the contract laid on the table last session was that the land was acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the station was to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have to pay 2½ per cent upon the total. If that be so, the land must be acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, they hold a certain quantity, but we buy the balance. I can show the right hon. gentleman the plan of the scheme.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I saw the plans. Evidently my impression is wrong. Upon what is this expenditure of 2½ per cent to the Canadian Pacific railway based?

Mr. COCHRANE: We pay 2½ per cent on their land. Then we have a terminal agreement on a pro rata basis. They pay 2½ per cent on our land, so it is as broad as it is long.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Do I understand the arrangement to be that we pay 2½ per cent on what is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, then we buy the adjacent land and they use it with us? What do they pay?

Mr. COCHRANE: They have land to a certain amount, and on the value of that we pay 2½ per cent. We buy land, and on the price that we pay they pay us 2½ per cent.

Mr. GRAHAM: Can the hon. gentleman tell us now when these works will be completed? Is $5,000,000 sufficient to complete the works on the line which are now incomplete?

Mr. COCHRANE: That will depend to some extent on how the contracts finished are settled. My hon. friend knows that there have been many disputes in the carrying out of these contracts which have never been settled. We may have to go to the Exchequer Court on many of these. If we can settle these contracts for what they claim, we shall be able to complete the road and pay these besides. The right of way through Ontario has never been settled for. There is some right of way in the province of Quebec and some in the province of New Brunswick that is not settled yet. We have made careful estimates of what we think would be just and fair and have based our Estimates on that.

Mr. GRAHAM: There are shops, the station, the line from the Cap Rouge region down, and yards, etc., to be completed at Quebec. Will this amount complete all of these things?

Mr. COCHRANE: My engineer says so, but I put in the proviso that we are assuming we can settle the debts still owing on the old contracts at a fair figure. We have not done that yet.

Mr. GRAHAM: Will the other work that we have been discussing to-night be finished this year?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Prime Minister, at a gathering at Quebec submitted plans for a tunnel and told them it was to be constructed. That is not included in this?

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, no; that will cost from a million to a million and a half dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM: It will cost two million dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE: Well, I know. As soon as the business of the road warrants us to going to that expense we will do it.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not intended this year, for what we may call the completion of these works, to include the tunnel?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, we could not this year.

Hudson Bay railway—construction of railway, terminals and elevators, $5,500,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is for the railway and what for the terminals?

Mr. COCHRANE: For the railway, $4,000,000, and for the terminals, $1,500,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is this year's vote?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, and we have in the Supplementary Estimates a balance that we overran our vote with the contractor for 1914-15.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the condition of the construction of the railway? How many miles of steel and grading, and how many miles of work has been done?

Mr. COCHRANE: The track has been laid to mile 214 from the Pas. The grading is done to mile 293, and the contractor has made arrangements to prosecute the grading between this point and mile 390 during the coming season. There remains the completion of grading to Port Nelson, mile 424, the track-laying from mile 214, and the ballasting, steel bridges and construction of buildings.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the condition of the two bridges across the Nelson river?

Mr. COCHRANE: One is now under contract, the other one is not completely worked out. The engineering difficulties have yet to be settled. They worked on the first bridge across the Nelson river, changed it about and saved a lot of money.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the steel up to the first bridge?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, it is about 24 miles from it, but they are laying it very fast.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the grading beyond the first bridge?

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh yes, the bridge is to be in place by the 15th of September, so that the rails can be laid as far as it is graded next fall, before the snow falls.

Mr. OLIVER: How soon is it expected that the railway will be completed to Port Nelson?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think 1916, but the engineer thinks we will have hard work to do it.

Mr. GRAHAM: He is right.

Mr. OLIVER: In the fall of 1916?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: Have any special difficulties developed in the way of handling the grading work?

Mr. COCHRANE: No. To show you to what extent we have secured a straight line, as the crow flies the distance would be 406 miles, and the length of the railway is 424 miles. For that distance, that is pretty good.

Mr. OLIVER: Would the minister make a statement in regard to the terminals? I asked last year for a plan of the harbour improvements and the estimated cost and time for completion.

Mr. COCHRANE: We have not the plans here. The deepwater channel, about ⅓ mile wide, up the middle of the estuary, is separated from the shore by wide tidal flats over which the water is from one to three feet deep at low water. It is proposed to construct the docks parallel to the deep water channel and distant about 1,000 feet therefrom, the intervening space being dredged about 20 feet at low water. The docks will consist of a cigar-shaped area surrounded with timber cribs and filled in with dredged material. The area will be about 500 feet wide and ¾ (three quarters) mile long, in extreme dimensions. Along the face of the docks the steamer berths will be dredged to 30 feet depth. The elevator will be situated on the above described area, with adequate trackage. The docks will be connected with the shore by a series of crib piers (of large area to resist ice thrust) connected up with steel spans.

They consider this better than a solid pier. The steamer Minto has been up twice to my knowledge right opposite where this dock will be, and that without any dredging. Of course the channel will have to be straightened in some places. The Minto went up, and there were no buoys there, and she got in and out again all right.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the draught of the Minto?

Mr. COCHRANE: Twenty feet. Of course the chief difficulty is that the water from that channel in to the shore is low.

Mr. OLIVER: I understand there is a deep water channel a quarter of a mile wide being dredged.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, it is a natural channel.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the depth of it?

Mr. COCHRANE: The Minto has been up there and she draws twenty feet. I should not think the depth is much more than that.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it the intention to dredge deeper. Ocean steamers draw thirty feet or more.

Mr. COCHRANE: Until the route has been approved I do not think it will be necessary to do more than straighten out the channel. Of course when the route has been settled, most decidedly we shall dredge. The boats can come in there now at high tide, and even at low tide.

Mr. OLIVER: How much dredging has been done up to the present?

Mr. COCHRANE: No dredging has been done. Owing to the long ocean voyage it was necessary to ship the dredge in a more or less "knocked down" condition. That is to say the heavy top hammer of "A" frame, cutterhead ladder, etc., were dismantled and stowed upon the deck. Also consideration of stowage on shipboard made it necessary to ship the pontoons and discharge pipes as separate plates and loose parts (shaped, and punched, with necessary forgings, etc., but not assembled.) It was intended that this assembly work should be done during the winter of 1913-14, so that dredge could be put at work during the summer of 1914. Owing to late arrival at the Bay, desertion of labour and loss of necessary tools in the ship wrecks, this work could not be proceeded with to advantage until the steamers arrived last September, and was not sufficiently advanced to permit of actual work before the close of river operations in the middle of October. The dredge was however tested and the machinery found to be in good working order. She was very late in getting in there last year. She started on July 3, but did not get in until August 14. This year we have our men and plant up there, and hope to make considerable progress.

Mr. OLIVER: Just how much dredging is it intended to do in order to reach deep water?

Mr. COCHRANE: For about 1,000 feet wide, and the length of the dock, which will be about half a mile.

Mr. OLIVER: The Government is undertaking now to dredge and straighten out the channel to deep water.

Mr. COCHRANE: We shall not do the dredging till the last. There will be no trouble in the boats getting in there. A boat drawing twenty feet can get in all right.

Mr. OLIVER: You were rather unfortunate the season before last in the arrival of vessels. How was it last year?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think we were to blame in any sense of the word. We were unfortunate in not having enough lighters up there. I am satisfied that both those boats that were lost were deliberately stranded. That is a strong statement to make, but I am sure I am right.

Mr. OLIVER: How many vessels went up?

Mr. COCHRANE: There were 37 passages through the Strait this last summer, notwithstanding the late season. By passages, I mean going and coming.

Mr. OLIVER: The first passage was through at what time?

Mr. COCHRANE: The first steamer got to Port Nelson on August 14.

Mr. OLIVER: How does that compare with the year before?

Mr. COCHRANE: It was eight days later.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it a fact that it was not usual for vessels to get there before the beginning of August?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have been late two years, but I do not blame the route for that. Of course the great difficulty is when you have ice and fog together. With wireless telegraphy there is no danger from one of these conditions alone, as the boats can keep in touch with one another. The shores are high, and there is deep water right up to the shores. We found it paid last year to buy two sailing ships and load them with coal in England and bring them over. We delivered the coal and paid for the ships at a less cost than we could have taken the coal up. These ships had the largest draft of any of the boats up there—22 feet.

Mr. OLIVER: Those boats got in?

Mr. COCHRANE: They were towed in. The boats anchored just a little way out, and the coal was taken out of them and used on our own boats in the channel.

Mr. OLIVER: You brought it up to where the port is likely to be?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: How many miles of deep water are there inside of what you would call the port, that is, in the mouth of the river?

Mr. COCHRANE: Fifteen miles.

Mr. OLIVER: Does that 20 feet depth hold for that distance?

Mr. COCHRANE: It would be more than that in some cases, but you can count on 20. Of course, if a boat with a 30-foot draft waited for high tide she could get in.

Mr. OLIVER: At Fort William there is a stretch of water seven or eight miles long and the water remains deep.

Mr. COCHRANE: That was dredged.

Mr. OLIVER: It was originally pretty deep. Does the 20-foot depth hold for the 15 miles up at Port Nelson?

Mr. COCHRANE: It is 20 feet or more for the whole 15 miles.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Thursday.

Thursday, April 1, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the following message from His Royal Highness the Governor General:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have received with great pleasure the address that you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of Parliament, and thank you for it sincerely.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

READING ROOM—APPOINTMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have directed the Clerk of the House to lay on the table of the House my recommendation and his report in connection with the appointment of Mr. Stanley Scott Spencer as messenger in the reading room of the House of Commons.

REPORT.

Seventh annual report of the commissioners for the demarcation of that part of the 141st meridian which forms the boundary between Canada and the United States.—Mr. Roche.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Edith Margueritta Lyons.—Mr. Barnard.

Bill No. 118, for the relief of Charles Isaac Alexander.—Mr. McCraney.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

ROYAL PRINT AND LITHOGRAPH CO.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

What sum or sums have been paid by the Government, or any department of Government, since March 3, 1914, to the Royal Print and Lithograph Company, Halifax, and what services were performed for the same?

Mr. CODERRE:

Militia and Defence:

Date of Payment.	Services performed.	Amount
1914.
Nov. 10.	Printing receipt forms, acct. 6-8-14..	$ 1 50
Dec. 29.	Printing 3 time sheets, acct. 30-11-14..	12 00
1915.
Jan. 15.	Printing receipt forms, acct. 3-11-14..	7 50
Feb. 11.	Printing receipt forms, acct. 6-3-15..	84 00
Mar. 5.	Printing 4,500 enrollment forms, acct. 6-2-15..	8 00
		$113 00

Printing Bureau, $19: Printing 100 poster "Recruits," 100 "Proclamation", 4,000 "Medical Certificate" and "Oath."

Railways and Canals:

1914.
Mar. 7.	800	circular, safety first.. ..	$ 3 25
" 9.	300	form, cross sections.	$10 00
	3,500	form, daily force return	37 50
	300	form, progress estimates, sec. 1 & 2.	25 00
" 18.	400	estimate of work done..	44 00
" 27.	3,000	form concrete inspection records..	80 00
	500	progress estimate dock, 1st units..	45 00
			241 50
" 4.	2,000	form materials and temperature.. ..	$25 00
	1,000	form add'l. work and material. ..	12 50
	2,000	weekly report form.	18 00
" 12.	800	progress estimate..	20 00
" 4.	2,000	contractors' equipment forms.. ..	20 00
" 12.	1,000	dredging returns..	12 50
			108 00
Mar. 31.	12	Imperial binders, 8½ 14 at $1.15..	13 80
	6	Imperial binders, 8½ x 27 at $2.25..	13 50
	4	Imperial binders, 8½ x 40 at $3	12 00
			39 30
May. 27.	800	prog. estimate forms (S. L.R. record, ruled, printed and punched..	15 00
July 18.	3,000	labels, safety first, 2 colours; 500 label card.	12 75
	500	ribbon for do.. ..	4 50
			17 25
July 31.	1	copy Halifax City Directory, 1914..	4 50
1915.
Jan. 11.	500	books C.S., No. 256 at 57½c.	287 50
" 20.	4,000	form additional work and materials..	25 00
		Total..	..$747 30

[Mr. McCraney.]

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC AND QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. What amounts have been paid by the Federal Government, before the tenth of October, 1911, for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Quebec bridge?

2. What amounts have been since paid for the same purposes?

Mr. CODERRE:

Railways and Canals:

1. Before October 10, 1911—Quebec bridge expenditure: $8,344,928.09. Before October 10, 1911—Paid under guarantees on Grand Trunk Pacific, $27,691,864.99.

2. Since October 10, 1911 to February 28, 1915, Quebec bridge expenditure: $7,359,675.45. Since October 10, 1911—Paid under guarantees on Grand Trunk Pacific, $43,212.504.71.

MR. T. R. E. McINNES.

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. Is Mr. T. R E. McInnes in the employ of the Trade and Commerce Department or any other department of the Government?

2. If so, in what capacity, and at what salary?

3. For how long has he been in the employ of the Government?

Mr. CODERRE: Not in the employ of the Government.

AMHERST REDSTONE CO.

Mr. COPP:

1. Has any material been purchased by the Government of Canada from the Amherst Redstone Company since October 12, 1911?

2. If so, what department made said purchase, what quantity was purchased, what price was paid, and where delivered?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1

CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUND.

Mr. S. SHARPE:

What is the approximate total amount of money paid or subscribed by provinces, and by cities to the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and its branches, including associations not affiliated with, but whose objects are similar in character to that of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Mr. CODERRE: The head office of the Canadian Patriotic Fund has no complete record of the amounts subscribed or moneys promised throughout Canada for patriotic purposes. Only when cash is transmitted to or placed under the control of the honorary treasurer of the central fund are such moneys taken into account. The contributions received by the honorary treasurer up to and including the 30th March, 1915, amount to $3,379,962.28, and New Brunswick has been credited with $33,637.51, and British Columbia with $83,318.58, on account of moneys expended for relief, making a total of $3,496,918.37.

Allocated to the provinces, the contributions are as follows:

General Contributions.

Canadian Patriotic Fund Association, Ottawa, transferred to Canadian Patriotic Fund	$ 75,972 62
Public service of Canada	60,818 10
	$136,790 72

Provinces.

Ontario (sundry contributions)	$ 1,163,103 06
Quebec (sundry contributions, including Canadian Pacific Railway)	1,399,554 43
Nova Scotia, provincial branch Canadian Patriotic Fund	111,689 80
New Brunswick, county branches	121,978 15
Prince Edward Island branch	25,000 00
Manitoba Patriotic Fund (Contributing Association)	88,720 80
Alberta North branch, $64,-191.39; Alberta South branch, $65,467.23; undivided, $20,-178.40	149,837 02
Saskatchewan, provincial branch	141,628 47
British Columbia	141,763 95
Vancouver branch, not yet reported
Yukon Territory	9,219 95
United States (sundry contritions)	7,632 02
	$3,496,918 37

The National Canadian Patriotic Fund has no means of knowing what sums have been raised or expended for the assistance of soldiers' dependents by local relief committees which have declined to become associated with the National Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Cash sent in by Cities and Towns of Ontario and Quebec up to and including March 22, 1915.

Almonte	$ 14,389 00
Belleville (special)	5,000 00
Berlin	22,756 00
Brantford	11,836 91
Brockville	9,197 56
Buckingham	8,631 90
Cobalt	2,820 00
Copper Cliff (special)	10,023 35
Fraserville, P. Q.	4,011 19
Galt	20,311 23
Granby	4,113 21
Guelph	19,911 70
Hamilton	83,674 65
Hespeler	6,700 00
Kingston	25,000 00
Lachute, P.Q.	2,000 00
Leamington	5,500 00
Montreal (including $50,000 from Canadian Pacific Railway)	1,055,017 04
Oshawa	10,749 68
Ottawa	236,690 15
Owen Sound	6,050 00
Pembroke	10,537 15
Peterboro	21,763 09
Port Arthur	2,000 00
Perth	6,609 00
Prescott	3,979 90
Quebec	148,938 29
Richmond, P.Q.	2,000 00
St. Catharines	17,990 81
St. Thomas and Elgin county	22,500 00
Sault Ste. Marie	9,973 61
Sherbrooke	17,305 68
Smiths Falls	3,812 37
Sudbury	2,000 00
Toronto	466,380 86
Three Rivers	9,843 40
Walkerville (special)	25,000 00
Waterloo	8,565 50
Welland	10,286 52
Windsor Mills	2,143 53

There is at present in press the first report of the National Canadian Patriotic Fund, which it is expected will be ready for general distribution towards the end of the month. This report will contain in detail full information regarding the fund.

CANADIAN PEAT SOCIETY.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Where are the headquarters of the Canadian Peat Society?

2. Who is the president of the society, and where does he reside?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. 22 Castle Building, Ottawa.
2. J. M. Shuttleworth, Brantford, Ontario.

LAUZON DRY DOCK.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. Did the Government take possession of lands belonging to private individuals for the construction of a dry dock or for other purposes at Lauzon, county of Lévis?
2. (a) What are the names of the proprietors of such lands (b) the names of those who have been paid, and the amount paid to each?
3. What are the names of the land owners who have not been paid, the amount due to each, and the reasons why they have not been paid?
4. (a) what is the date of the taking possession of these lands (b) and when will the proprietors be paid?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes, for the construction of a dry dock.
2 and 3. (a) G. T. Davie & Son; Mrs. Judge Isidore Belleau and Mrs. Mrs. J. S. Murphy; (b) Nothing paid.
4. (a) Possession taken of a part on 15th January, 1913, and balance on 16th July, 1913; (b) When the value is established by the Exchequer Court.

MILITARY SUPPLIES—SHEEPSKINS.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. Has the Government or the Militia Department since October, 1911, purchased sheepskins with the wool on?
2. If so, from whom, in what quantity, at what date, and for what price?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Yes.
2. A. R. Clarke, Ltd., Toronto; 600; January 12, 1915; $6 each.

MILITARY SUPPLIES—DRUGS, ETC.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Were any drugs or other materials supplied to the Militia Department or the Canadian expeditionary forces by Act Metropole of Toronto?
2. If so, what was the amount of the order?

Major General HUGHES: Yes, blue prints and tracing papers; $43.20.

ST. THOMAS ARMOURY.

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Have negotiations taken place for the leasing of the armoury in the city of St. Thomas for school purposes?
2. Have there been negotiations for the sale of the present armoury or for its exchange for other property? If so, what is proposed?

Major General HUGHES: No negotiations have taken place. Private conversations have taken place from time to time, but there has been nothing definite whatever.

[Mr. Marcil.]

SHUBENACADIE POST OFFICE.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Have any lands been purchased or bargained for at Shubenacadie, N.S., by the Government for a post office site?
2. (a) If so, from whom was the same purchased, (b) what is the price paid or to be paid, (c) and where is the same located?
3. (a) Does the same lot of land contain any buildings? (b) If so, what will it cost to remove the same before commencing construction of the post office?
4. (a) Were any other lots offered to the Government for a site? (b) If so, who, at what price, (c) and did the Government take the same into consideration, (d) and on what grounds were they declined?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. A site is being acquired.
2. (a) From Mr. J. A. Kirkpatrick; (b) price to be paid, $1,500; (c) fronting on the Halifax and Truro road, opposite the I.R.C. station.
3. (a) Yes; (b) nothing, as the vendor is to remove the buildings at his own expense.
4. (a) Yes; (b) by Mr. W. N. Burris, for $6,500; (c) yes; (d) the departmental purchasing agent reported that he was unable to recommend the purchase of so costly a site.

DREDGE NO. 7.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. What was the cost of maintenance for dredge No. 7 for the calendar year 1914, and approximately for the fiscal year 1914-15?
2. How much was paid the Southern Salvage Company for attending the said dredge, supplying coal, etc.?
3. What are the main divisions and the amounts of the cost of maintenance, supplies, etc., of the said dredge No. 7 for the said calendar year or the said fiscal year?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $34,602.83.
2. $12,550.08.
3. Wages, $6,007.01; provisions, $1,834.98; fuel, $3,297.93; stores and equipment, $1,544.42; contingencies, $36.02; water, $167.85; wharfage, $124.84; rent of tugs, $8,085; repairs, $13,504.78; total, $34,602.83.

STEAMER COAST GUARD.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

What was the amount paid the Southern Salvage Company of Liverpool, N.S., for its steamer Coast Guard in connection with dredging operations for the calendar year 1914?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $2,424.10.

JOHN T. DAGNEAU.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What position does John Dagneau,, of St. Omer, Bonaventure county, Quebec, occupy in the Inland Revenue Department service?

2. (a) When was he appointed, (b) at what salary, (c) and what is his present salary?
3. (a) What amount has been paid him since his appointment for salary, (b) and for travelling expenses (c) or other allowances?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. Mr. John T. Dagneau, assistant inspector of weights and measures.
2. (a) August 25, 1913. (b) $450. (c) $450.
3. (a) As salary $682.30. (b) No travelling expenses. (c) No other allowances.

WRECK OF STEAMER MONTMAGNY.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. Is it true that the wreck of the steamer Montmagny lies at present opposite Ile aux Grues, in the river St. Lawrence, within a few yards of the channel generally followed by the ocean steamers?
2 .If so, does the Government propose to have that wreck removed at once?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The wreck is 600 feet distant from the axis of the channel, marked by the Hospital rock range lights. It is marked by a gas buoy, and therefore forms no obstruction to navigation.
3. The department will consider the question of removal when the wreck has been examined after the opening of navigation.

CHAMPLAIN MARKET STATION.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. When was the work commenced for the construction of the Transcontinental railway station on the site of the Champlain market in Quebec?
2. When was such work suspended, and for what reason?

Mr. COCHRANE:

The following information has been furnished by the Chief Engineer of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission:

1. June 19, 1914.
2. December 20, 1914, for the reason that it was considered inadvisable to carry on the masonry and brick work during the severe winter weather.

REV. W. T. SUCKLING.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Does the Reverend W. T. Suckling hold the appointment of Champlain to the 14th King's Canadian Hussars?
2. Is it a fact that he has risen from the ranks, that he has taken an active interest in all matters pertaining to the militia, has he thoroughly qualified himself to instruct in musketry, and is reckoned one of the crack shots of Nova Scotia?
3. Has he volunteered for overseas service, and has he been recommended for the position of Chaplain to the 6th Canadian Mounted Rifles?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Yes.
2. No information.
3. Yes.

WAR SUPPLIES—HORSES.

Mr. OLIVER moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports or proceedings, and of all other documents relating to the purchase in Canada of horses for army service, by the British and French governments respectively.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This motion has been standing for some time. It is not considered best in the public interest to bring down a return such as is requested.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Can we know what is against the public interest in giving that information?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We will probably have some discussion on that question before we get through.

Mr. OLIVER: Yesterday the Minister of Public Works said that the Prime Minister would make a statement dealing with this question.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Very well; if that statement was made we can allow the motion to stand.

Motion stands.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Lachance: For a copy of all correspondence, calls for tenders and Orders in Council, relating to the deepening of the river St. Charles at the city of Quebec, and the construction of a dam at the same place.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

GOOD FRIDAY ADJOURNMENT.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER moved:

That when this House adjourns on Thursday the 1st of April, it stand adjourned until Saturday, the 3rd of April.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What about Monday, which is also a legal holiday?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is proposed that the House should sit on Monday.

Motion agreed to.

WAR SUPPLIES—AMMUNITION.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Major General HUGHES: I should just like to make a quotation from the report of the Chief of Ordnance to the Secretary of War of the United States Government for the year 1914. On page 48 of the report the following figures are given with reference to ammunition manufactured by the United States Government:

The average total cost of rifle ammunition for the year was $26.24 per thousand, as compared with $27.08 per thousand for the preceding year; both costs being based on the same percentage to provide for the arsenal and War Department burdens. There was, however, an increase in the cost of material of 21 cents per thousand, so that the saving in the manufacturing over last year amounted to $1.11 per thousand, or a total saving of approximately $56,900. The average cost of the rifle ball cartridges procured from private manufacturers during the preceding year was $38.06 per thousand.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT.

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 67, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.—Mr. Roche.

Mr. ROCHE: The Senate has amended the Act to also include those who after enlistment are laid up through wounds or sickness. The Act, of course, is to protect those who have mining claims and have enlisted from having their claims cancelled during their absence.

Mr. KNOWLES: The same principle as to cancellations is involved in regard to homesteads as in regard to mining rights. What is the policy of the department as to the cancellation of homesteads at the present time?

Mr. ROCHE: Those who go to the front after enlisting will be protected. No cancellation will take place during the time they are on active service.

Mr. KNOWLES: With regard to cancellations generally, I have heard that no cancellations will be considered until the first of May.

Mr. ROCHE: There is a general protection up to the 1st of April for all homesteaders.

Amendment read the first and the second time and concurred in.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

TOBACCO, ETC., IN BOND.

On motion of Hon. P. E. Blondin (Minister of Inland Revenue), Bill No. 115, to amend the Inland Revenue Act, was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

[Mr. Sam. Hughes.]

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENTS.

On motion of Hon. P. E. Blondin (Minister of Inland Revenue), the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Inland Revenue may authorize the employment of such temporary or acting officers of Excise in the second or outside division of the Department of Inland Revenue as are required to carry on the work of the department, that no such officer shall receive a higher salary than the salary allowed to permanent officers of the same rank and class, and no such salary shall be paid until voted by Parliament.

Mr. PROULX: Are these officers to do the ordinary work of the department or some new work?

Mr. BLONDIN: This amendment is in order to include in the Inland Revenue Act a clause similar to clause 6 of the Customs Act, regarding the appointment of temporary officials by Order in Council. In the past, and I am referring now to both the late Administration and the present, temporary officers were appointed by the Minister of Inland Revenue, under the impression that Clause 6 of the Customs Act also applied to Inland Revenue appointments. The attention of the department has been drawn to it by the Auditor General, and this is only to give authority to the department for what has been done in the past. It does not refer at all to any new employees; it refers only to the general employees, with whom the department is without power to-day to deal, and to the payment of whom the Auditor General would object in the future if this amendment were not provided.

Mr. PROULX: I would be afraid that the minister proposed to appoint an army of employees. A few days ago, when discussing his Estimates, he said that he intended to appoint some new employees to prevent the adulteration of maple syrup and sugar. I thought that perhaps this legislation was to provide for the appointment of these new employees.

Mr. BLONDIN: Not at all. As for the Bill passed yesterday, I think I gave a satisfactory explanation, I believe that both sides of the House were anxious that I should appoint as many employees as are necessary to see that the law is complied with.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If I understand the resolution properly, it is simply to change the mode of appointing officers. Do I understand that officers are now appointed by Order in Council and that the object is to have them appointed by the minister?

Mr. BLONDIN: No. We have to employ temporary officers in the Inland Revenue Department just as they have to do in the Customs Department. If we need additional help we have to employ temporary officers, some for a month or two, or perhaps some for a year. Most of the officers appointed by the department have to be appointed temporarily in order that they may become used to the service, and after a time, if they prove themselves competent, they are appointed permanently. It was found by the Auditor General that under the present law we had no authority to employ temporary hands. That is the reason of the amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood that the object was to have in the Inland Revenue Department the same law as prevails in the Customs Department. What is the law governing the Customs Department?

Mr. BLONDIN: We have no authority to make these appointments, although they have been made by the minister in the past. Section 6 of the Customs Act provides that:

> The minister may, from time to time, authorize the employment of such temporary or acting officers of custom in the second or outside division of the Department of Customs as are required to carry on the work of the department.
>
> 2. No such officer so employed shall receive a higher salary than he would be allowed if appointed permanently to the same rank and class; nor shall any such salary be paid until voted by Parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Then what you are proposing is the same as this?

Mr. BLONDIN: Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN: Will that include temporary clerks appointed at Ottawa?

Mr. BLONDIN: No, it only applies to temporary employees in the outside service.

Mr. PROULX: Are there many temporary employees in the department?

Mr. BLONDIN: There are not more than the usual number. I understand that there are between 200 and 300 temporary employees all over the Dominion.

Mr. PROULX: Are they employed all the year round or only for a few months?

Mr. BLONDIN: It depends on their employment. Most of them are employed all the year round.

Mr. BUREAU: What particular work are these temporary employees put at?

Mr. BLONDIN: They are employed in the different offices all over the country.

Mr. BUREAU: At what particular work?

Mr. BLONDIN: The usual work. As I explained a few moments ago, when at Montreal, Quebec or elsewhere, we take on new employees we always take them on temporarily, and after a while they may be appointed permanently.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the minister to say that this is only the opening wedge to make men permanent? You say he employs them temporarily and then they are made permanent?

Mr. BLONDIN: No; that is not what I mean. Some of them, if their services are required and if they have been found duly qualified, will be appointed permanently. My hon. friend will understand that it is a great advantage to put a man on and test him before appointing him permanently.

Mr. PROULX: Does this amendment give the minister a means of evading the Civil Service Act?

Mr. BLONDIN: It only applies to the outside service. What we are asking Parliament to do is only to give the Inland Revenue Department the same right as it gave to the Customs Department. Clause 6 exists for the Customs Department but it does not exist for the Inland Revenue Department. In the past, the late Government appointed temporarily officials without any authority and it is to correct this condition that we are bringing in this legislation.

Mr. PROULX: Then these employees will not have to obtain a certificate from the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BLONDIN: They never have to in the outside service.

Mr. DEVLIN: Has the Auditor General paid these men up to the present?

Mr. BLONDIN: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What causes the question to arise now? Is it owing to the great number of men recently employed?

Mr. BLONDIN: I suppose some lawyer in the department has raised the question and it has been brought to my attention.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Department of the Auditor General is a progressive department, but it does not pretend to know everything all at once. It finds out that it has been making payments without proper authorization. It does not want to do wrong any more and it asks you to put it in a position to do right.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I notice that the Auditor General's Department has been progressing very well lately.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Do as we do—turn them out when they do wrong.

Mr. BUREAU: In what particular branch of the outside service are these employees required—weights and measures, gas and electricity inspection, selling stamps, or where?

Mr. BLONDIN: In every branch, mostly in the Excise Department.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there any age limit for appointment to the outside service in the Inland Revenue Department?

Mr. BLONDIN: No.

Mr. MARCIL: You can appoint them as old as you like?

Mr. BUREAU: They appointed one 87 years old in Three Rivers.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: You appointed one after he was dead.

Mr. BUREAU: You let them vote after they are dead.

Mr. MARCIL: When you appoint a man to the outside service do you require that he should qualify or pass an examination for the work that he is to do before you appoint him, or do you appoint him subject to the examination being passed later on?

Mr. BLONDIN: We appoint him subject to examination. We can appoint a man temporarily without an examination but in order to be permanent he has to undergo examination.

Mr. MARCIL: Do you allow him a certain time in which to qualify for his work?

Mr. BLONDIN: No. It all depends on the necessity of making a new permanent appointment for the work that is being done in his locality.

Mr. MARCIL: When you appoint a man and he turns out to be incompetent for the work for which he is appointed, do you keep him on or do you give him a specified time in which he must pass an examination to show his qualification for the work?

Mr. BLONDIN: When we want to make a new permanent appointment, the man is advised that he will have a certain time in which to pass his examination. If his services are not found to be satisfactory, all the department has to do is to turn him out.

Mr. MARCIL: In my constituency we have two employees in the Weights and Measures Branch. One ceased to be an employee, having been dismissed for political partisanship, and he has since become a member of the Quebec Legislature. The other was dismissed on the same ground after an investigation which lasted a couple of years. Three men were appointed to fill their places: one from Gaspé, Mr. Myles; one from Bonaventure, Mr. Dagneau; and one from Rimouski, Mr. Desjardins. Have those three men qualified for the work for which they were appointed, and are they still in the service of the department?

Mr. BLONDIN: They are still in the service of the department; they have not yet qualified for permanent positions.

Mr. MARCIL: Why was it necessary to appoint three men to fill two vacancies?

Mr. BLONDIN: Was the change made by me?

Mr. MARCIL: No, it was made by your predecessor.

Mr. BLONDIN: Would my hon. friend object to my taking some more time to look into the matter?

Mr. MARCIL: Certainly not.

Mr. KNOWLES: Appointments under this proposed legislation are undesirable, because it seems to enlarge the scope of appointments that are not under the guardianship of the Civil Service Commission. The whole trend of better public opinion at present is in the way of revolt against patronage. I say this without a partisan meaning, because both sides may more or less have erred in that regard. What rule does the minister apply to men who are taken on, and who have not over them the guardianship of the commission, in the way of protecting the country against partisans? The other day he laid it down as a principle that the gentleman next to him in position might indulge in free speech, and perhaps become offensive to 45 per cent of the people of Canada, by his abusive utterances against one of the great parties in Canada, but that the minister would in no way interfere with his freedom of speech. I am not going to revive the discussion in reference to the deputy minister, who was the subject of discussion; but as regards those men who are appointed entirely from political recommendations and who are not under the control of the commission, what is the minister's policy with regard to their indulging in controversial partisan disputes in the country, either at election time or at any other time?

Mr. BLONDIN: They have no right whatever to take an active part in politics. If any one of my officials should persist in such a course, I would have to dismiss him.

Mr. KNOWLES: Would the minister apply that principle to his deputy minister?

Mr. BLONDIN: That is another question which I would ask my hon. friend not to bring up on this resolution.

Mr. GRAHAM: One of the difficulties in the making of those temporary appointments is that a great number of officials are called temporary when they really are permanent, although, legally speaking, they are only temporary, because they have never been appointed to permanent positions. As soon as a Government changes, no matter what Government it is, pressure is brought to bear upon it to dispense with the services of such men, and it is said: why, such a man is only a temporary employee anyway; he has not a permanent position. Although he may have worked for ten years in the Government service he is still considered as a temporary employee. There ought to be some change in that respect. When a man or a woman has been in the employ of the Government for a certain length of time, that employee ought to become what is called permanent, so that dismissal could not occur without an Order in Council and without cause. Hundreds of so-called temporary employees are really permanent, although they are called temporary and subject to dismissal for reasons which do not apply to permanent employees. The Department of Customs, the Post Office Department and the Department of Inland Revenue are the departments that have the greatest number of temporary employees while the Department of Interior has also a great many. Such people may be employed for six weeks or for six years; but they have no protection against dismissal although they may be the best employees in in the Government.

Mr. BURNHAM: I should like to emphasize the remarks of the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham). There is a very singular case in Peterborough that illustrates the importance of what my hon. friend says. A fine old gentleman was appointed by the late Government to a position in Peterborough on the temporary list. That man cannot be turned out. He is over eighty years of age. He is ageing and he raises Cain with the customers. Application has been made by the collector to have him dismissed, but I said that I would not consent to have him dismissed. He comes of an excellent family that has survived the evils of Liberalism. The fact of the matter is that the man, if he were dismissed to-morrow, would be out on the street. He has been for many years in the service. If automatically he could have become a permanent clerk, he would be entitled to a retiring allowance; but as it is, he is not. It is impossible in the name of humanity to let that man go, but what are we to do? Is there no remedy for that sort of thing?

Mr. KNOWLES: Let us say that two men who are appointed under this proposed legislation show political partisanship and one of them displays partisanship in favour of the present Government, and the other in favour of the Liberals. Will the minister always use the two of them alike, and always adopt the policy that he has just annunciated? Will he fire a Tory for as little partisanship as he will a Grit?

Mr. BLONDIN: The minister is bound to follow the same line of policy towards all employees.

Mr. BUREAU: Will he do it?

Mr. BLONDIN: Certainly.

Mr. DEVLIN: Has the minister under this proposed legislation power to appoint any of these officers in the city of Hull, which adjoins Ottawa, but which is in another province?

Mr. BLONDIN: We have no other object in proposing this amendment than to correct an irregular procedure under the law.

Mr. DEVLIN: But the minister will have power to appoint Excise and Inland Revenue officers in the city of Hull under this legislation when it is passed?

Mr. BLONDIN: I am not informed that there is any necessity for such appointments.

Mr. DEVLIN: The city of Hull has over 20,000 population. It is true, it borders on the city of Ottawa, but it is divided from Ottawa by the Ottawa river. The minister can see the city of Hull even as he looks from Parliament Hill. It is a very important commercial city, perhaps the greatest manufacturing city along certain lines in the Dominion of Canada. It would be a great convenience to the city of Hull to have these officers appointed. Just prior to going out of power the late Government opened a customs office in Hull, and that office yields great profit to the Government and is of immense advantage to the surrounding section of country. This proposed law will give the Minister of Inland Revenue power to appoint similar officers for his department in the city of Hull, and I ask him if he will not appoint some of these officers for the good of the public service and the general convenience of the people?

Mr. BLONDIN: I will give the remarks of my hon. friend all consideration, and if there is necessity I will make the appointments.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am a little surprised at my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin).

Mr. DEVLIN: Surprised?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, that he would put temptation in the way of the Minister of Inland Revenue and urge it upon him. The minister's answer was that if there were no necessity there would be no appointments. Now the hon. gentleman is trying to induce the minister to appoint officers in Hull simply because Hull can be seen from Ottawa and is the largest manufacturing city in the world. Surely he cannot wish officers appointed, even in Hull, if there is no necessity for them.

Mr. DEVLIN: Perhaps my language was not clear to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I was speaking non-politically.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: As usual.

Mr. DEVLIN: I try to speak non-politically. I was pointing out the importance of the city of Hull and its peculiar situation. Although it is near the city of Ottawa it serves a portion of the country which cannot be conveniently served by the officers in Ottawa city. There was formerly necessity for opening a customs office there, and there is the same necessity for opening an Inland Revenue office. I would not ask the Government to spend a dollar where there is no necessity. I am only sorry the Government is in the habit of spending money where there is no necessity.

Mr. PROULX: I do not understand this measure. Does it mean that the minister is getting power to pay yearly salaries to men who are employed only a few months in the year?

Mr. BLONDIN: No, I am only asking that a privilege enjoyed by every other department of the Government should be extended to the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. PROULX: The resolution says: "No such officer shall receive a higher salary than the salary paid to permanent officers of the same rank and class." Would not that put them in the same rank as the permanent employees?

Mr. BLONDIN: No. It means that they cannot be appointed at a higher salary than that of the permanent officers whom they may be called upon to replace temporarily.

Mr. PROULX: But if the minister already has the power to employ temporary employees what does he need this for?

Mr. BLONDIN: I have not the power, while other departments have.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Does this give the minister any power that he has not previously exercised? I understand not.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Up to this time certain appointments have been made, but the Auditor General has notified the minister and the department that this is not legal and that he cannot any longer pay for that kind of appointment, and that if these officers are to be paid, authority of law must be procured. And I understand the minister is getting the authority under this Bill.

12 noon.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before asking for this legislation the minister ought to furnish the committee with the memorandum from the Auditor General.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Surely, the hon. gentleman is going very far. The responsible minister has risen in his place and stated his reason for proposing this Bill, and that reason is that he has been notified by the Auditor General that this kind of appointment cannot any longer be paid for. Now the hon. gentleman says that before the Bill passes the minister should bring the proof. I do not think he should say that to a minister of the Crown.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not think that is asking too much. The Department of Inland Revenue has been in operation since Confederation—for nearly fifty years. The minister tells us that temporary employees have been appointed from time to time during all that period and no objection has been raised. Now, I cannot think it possible that that has been done contrary to the law. I cannot imagine for a moment that that is the cause of asking for this legislation. It is no reflection upon the judgment of the minister to ask that the memorandum of the Auditor General should be produced. It would be very interesting to the House to know how it comes that this which has been going on for fifty years is now found to be objectionable under the law. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) must forgive me if I am a little suspicious as to the reason for this. We know that when this Government first came into office they wanted to get rid of the commissioners engaged for the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. They did not like to dismiss them, but they passed a law reducing the number of commissioners to one. I remember that in New Brunswick, not long ago, the Government there wanted to get rid of a very valued official. They did not like to dismiss him—to do so would have offended the public very much. But they passed a law fixing an age limit which was just such as to exclude this man, and so he was removed from office by legislation. Now the Minister of Inland Revenue, perhaps, wants to dismiss a lot of temporary employees.

Mr. BLONDIN: Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He wants to declare that they are not legally appointed, and he wants power to make legal appointments. That is, he can quietly let these employees retire from office without incurring the odium of making dismissals. If called upon later to justify this act, he could say, and say truthfully, that Parliament had declared that these gentlemen engaged in temporary work were not legally appointed and therefore were not in the employ of the Government at all. He could say: I did not dismiss them; they passed naturally out of the Government's employ, and I have appointed new officers under the authority Parliament has given me. The hon. gentleman will forgive me, if, in the light of what has taken place in the three years since this Government took office, we on this side, at least I—and I only speak for myself—am a little suspicious as to the reason for the passing of this Bill.

M. BLONDIN: I shall be pleased to give a copy of the memorandum to my hon. friend. He asks under what authority the department has been proceeding for years. The Auditor General did not refer particularly to the present; he referred to the condition under the late Government as well. We are simply making a provision similar to that which applies to the Customs Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister will produce that memorandum?

Mr. BLONDIN: Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN: What is the classification of the officials of the Inland Revenue Department?

Mr. BLONDIN: There are four classes: special excisemen and first, second and third-class excisemen.

Mr. DEVLIN: Are all the officers of the second division in the outside service?

Mr. BLONDIN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister stated a few moments ago that temporary employees should not receive higher salaries than the officials whom they replace. Are these temporary employees appointed simply to replace other officials, or in addition to the regular permanent staff of the department?

Mr. BLONDIN: These temporary officers are employed only when required. The intent of this proposed legislation is to provide for the appointment of temporary employees, who are paid only very small salaries.

Mr. BUREAU: Are they to be appointed only when certain permanent officials are ill or on leave of absence, or are they to be appointed in addition to the regular staff?

Mr. BLONDIN: Most of these temporary officials are employed when the work increases to such an extent that their services are necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Under a provision of the Inland Revenue Act, temporary employees may be appointed by Order in Council. I quote section 12:

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, appoint officers and other persons to carry out this Act and all other Acts relative to the matters and things placed under the control and management of the department, and also all Orders in Council or regulations made thereunder, and the Governor in Council may assign the names of office of such officers and persons, and grant them such salaries or pay for their labour and responsibility as he deems reasonable and necessary, and may appoint the times and manner in which the same shall be paid; but no such officer or person shall receive a higher annual salary than is allowed in his case by the Civil Service Act.

It is clear, therefore, that the Governor in Council has at the present time power to appoint permanent or temporary officers all over the Dominion to positions in the outside service as well as in the inside service. My hon. friend is trying to-day, for some reason which he has not fully explained to the committee, to take that power out of the hands of the Governor in Council and to place it in the hands of the minister. Is that in the public interest? Is there any reason for it? What is to hinder the minister from making his recommendations to council in respect of the appointment of temporary or permanent officers throughout the Dominion, as has been the custom for the last fifty years?

Mr. BLONDIN: The only answer I can give my hon. friend is that we are asking only for such power as is given to the other departments.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does the minister not agree with me that the Governor in Council, on his recommendation, may, under section 12 of the Act which I have just read, appoint temporary officers for work in any part of Canada?

Mr. BLONDIN: I do not see why my hon. friend should wish to deprive my department of a privilege which it was deemed wise to extend to the other departments of Government. That is the only answer that I can give.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Perhaps the necessity for it has not been felt in my hon. friend's department.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and concurred in, and referred to Committee of the Whole on Bill No. 116, to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Bill No. 116, to amend the Inland Revenue Act, founded on the above resolution, read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, together with the resolution reported this day, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—employment of temporary officers:

Mr. BLONDIN: I am informed that there is no possibility of hiring temporary help without passing this measure. I shall have all the details before the third reading.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It seems to me absurd to say that under the section of the existing Act which I have read the Governor in Council has not power to appoint men of the class provided for in the amendment.

Mr. BLONDIN: I shall have all the information from my department.

Bill reported.

SOLDIERS' VOTING BILL.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Sévigny in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to make provision to enable every male British subject of twenty-one years of age or upwards serving in the military forces of Canada in the present war, to exercice his electoral franchise, and that the cost incurred in carrying out the provisions of any Act to be based upon this resolution may be paid by the Governor in Council out of any unappropriated moneys in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. DOHERTY: The Bill to be based upon this resolution makes provision whereby men engaged in the active military service of the country may be enabled to vote in the event of an election occurring while they are still on such service. The Bill in addition provides a method whereby they may be enabled to exercise that franchise. It occurred to me that possibly it might meet the general convenience if the discussion was had on the Bill itself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Bill is of a very extraordinary nature, but I would not care to offer an opinion on it until I had seen its provisions. Therefore, we shall let the resolution pass.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Doherty thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 111, to enable Canadians on active military service during the present war to exercise their electoral franchise.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT AMENDMENT.

On the Order being called:

House in Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners Act by providing that the corporation may make by-laws for the imposition of tolls, rates, fees and dues, other than pilotage dues, sick mariners' dues and steamboat inspectors' fees, and that all tolls, rates, fees, dues and other revenue levied or collected by the corporation under the authority of the said Act, shall be paid to, and be retained by the corporation, and form part of its general revenue.—Mr. Hazen.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I had this Order called, as the Minister of Marine informs me that he was not prepared to go on with it and it may be dropped.

Order dropped.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Sir George Foster, Bill No. 113, to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act, was read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—offences made punishable on summary conviction, and minimum penalties added:

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The purpose of this amendment is simply to provide better means for the enforcing of the Act. There is no change at all in any of the provisions of the Bill. In the first place the amendment is to provide that one who violates the Act shall be liable to summary conviction. Before, it was merely an indictable offence. This makes the procedure more simple and enables prosecutions to be made before the magistrate. Up to the present the supervisor or superintendent of the Act has had great difficulty in enforcing it on account of the delays that took place. The amendment also asks that the minimum fine be $25. The maximum is already fixed at $100. It also provides that the articles in regard to which a conviction is obtained under the Act shall be confiscated to the Crown. This conforms to the legislation in the Customs Act and the Criminal Code. Another amendment makes it possible for the inspector to seize articles which he believes are in contravention of the Act, and to hold the same until the case is disposed of. Hitherto all he was able to do was to make an inspection and report, and then before the courts could take the matter up the articles would mysteriously disappear and the evidence was gone.

Mr. KNOWLES: Could this summary conviction be had before an ordinary justice of the peace?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I think so.

Mr. KNOWLES: In our part of the country we are very far away from any inspector. I have in mind a certain case where a more or less unprincipled jeweller came into the town and imposed upon the people very much. He carried on business quite a long time, selling watches and other things, and made a great deal of money. I remember being waited on by a deputation of the permanent jewellers, but the trouble seemed to be to get any inspector, and it occurred to me then whether the inspectors are conveniently situated geographically. I should like to ask the minister about that.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: When the Act came into force one inspector was appointed, and he does the work for the whole Dominion. He makes periodical trips through different parts of the country, and if there are any cases such as my hon. friend has mentioned he is informed about it. However, it is not necessary for him to be in any particular place in order to enable proceedings to be taken. This Act has been in force only a short time and has worked well, although the machinery for proper prosecution has been inefficient. In some cases offences against the Act have been thoroughly dealt with, but in more cases there was such delay and difficulty in getting evidence that the prosecutions did not turn out satisfactorily. There is probably more need of these amendments and of a better enforcement of the Act at present than heretofore, because the conditions of the country are such as rather to place a premium on the sale of cheap goods, and many people are being grossly imposed upon. They think they are getting fairly good jewellery, when really they are getting nothing but pinchbeck. The department proposes to see that the Act is enforced and, providing the expense is not too great, the proper machinery will be added as it becomes necessary.

Mr. KNOWLES: The clause says "who being a dealer." Would that apply to a clerk? Lots of these people give themselves fancy names, such as the New York Watch Company or the New York Watch Agency.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Act defines a dealer as "any person who is a manufacturer of, or seller of, or dealer in," whether wholesale or retail.

Mr. KNOWLES: It would not apply to clerks?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It would take in any person who sells. But I suppose that a company or firm is responsible for what its employees do.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Department of Indian Affairs—Indians of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—to provide a further amount for seed grain, $18,941; to provide a further amount for relief of destitute Indians, $20,000.

Mr. TURRIFF: What is the particular cause that has led up to the granting of this relief for destitute Indians? There are very few Indians in that part of Saskatchewan where they had a crop failure. There must be some other cause than the failure of crop. I would like some information on the point.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of Interior): This includes the Northwest, but it has largely to do with the outlying Indians. The information I have is that the outbreak of hostilities in Europe has affected the Indians to a considerable extent. The war has interfered with the fur trade, the European market for furs has disappeared for the time being, and the Indians' source of supplies has almost vanished, as they have no market for their furs and cannot get goods in trade for them, as the fur-traders will not accept the furs or make advances to the Indians in the form of supplies to enable them to go to their hunting grounds. The Indians are advised to hunt for food, and many are doing so, but nevertheless they have to be assisted. The department, through trading companies and the Northwest Mounted Police, have organized a system of relief for Indians requiring assistance, and as the vote for such requirements under normal circumstances is proving inadequate to meet the demand under the changed conditions, a supplementary grant becomes necessary.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. OLIVER: What particular localities are likely to receive assistance under this grant?

Mr. ROCHE: It is in the outlying and extreme northerly portions of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. OLIVER: There are no agents in these outlying districts. By what means is the relief to be distributed?

Mr. ROCHE: It is distributed largely through orders of the missionaries.

Mr. OLIVER: Do I understand that it is distributed entirely on the orders of the missionaries, or is there a division of authority?

Mr. ROCHE: It will also be distributed through the Northwest Mounted Police where there are mounted police.

Mr. OLIVER: Either through the mounted police or the missionaries?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: It does not rest with the trading companies?

Mr. ROCHE: No.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any destitution among the Indians of St. Peter's reserve?

Mr. ROCHE: There has been nothing reported to the department. They are doing pretty well, I understand. They have had smallpox there.

Mr. OLIVER: I understand that some days ago an opportunity was taken, while discussing the affairs of the Indian Department, to place before the House certain statements in regard to a transaction in relation to the St. Peter's Indian reserve, which was intended to be a reflection upon the administration of the Indian Department, and a criticism of the transaction by which the surrender of this reserve was secured.

I am sorry I was not present at the time, but I do not think it would be fair to the House or to the country to allow the opportunity to pass without placing before the House in as short a form as possible the present position in regard to this reserve. There is a somewhat complicated series of accusations. One is that the Indians were not properly treated by the Government. In regard to that, I can only say that a treaty was made with the Indians for the surrender of the reserve. They were paid in accordance with the usual practice as to treaty payments, and over and above the price that they received for the reserve, they received in exchange another reserve of greater area and better adapted to their requirements. Therefore the Indians were not mistreated in the transactions between them and the Government.

In regard to the attitude of the department and the circumstances of the surrender; the surrender was taken as other surrenders in Canada have been taken up to the present time. The vote of the majority of the band present decided in favour of the surrender, and in accordance with that vote the surrender was made. After the surrender had been made, after the arrangements had been made for transferring the Indians to the new reserve, the Government of Manitoba stepped in and refused to register under the Land Titles Act of that province the transfers of land from the Indians to the parties who had bought from them. From that time to the present those transfers have not been registered, the responsibility being upon the Government of the province of Manitoba. The Government of the Dominion of Canada had bought the land from the Indians; it had paid the Indians for the land; the transaction was absolutely in accordance with the practice relating to such transactions in the past, and there was no reason or ground for the action of the Government of the province of Manitoba except a desire and intent to use not its right but its power as a means of blackmailing the purchasers of those lands. The Government of Manitoba saw fit to appoint a commission to inquire into the validity of the transaction on the part of the Dominion Government. That inquiry could have no possible effect except as an academic inquiry; but the commission made the inquiry, and the result of it was a finding that the transaction had been regular throughout, except that one part of the commission held the belief that the vote of the Indians for the surrender should have been a vote of an actual majority of the band and not a vote of the majority of those present.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE: Which commission was that?

Mr. OLIVER: A commission appointed by the Government of the province of Manitoba. I do not know which commission; but there was a commission appointed that brought in that report.

As regards the validity of the surrender, if the vote of a majority of the band is necessary to a surrender, there has been no surrender taken from the Indians in Canada which would be valid under that ruling; or if there is such a one, it is an exception. Therefore, if the suggestion that the surrender was illegal is correct, then the titles of land bought from Indian reserves throughout the Dominion of Canada are to-day invalid. Any one knows that if such a condition does exist, this Parliament will of necessity have to pass an Act validating those titles. Therefore there is no foundation in any way, shape or manner for the Government of Manitoba refusing the transfers, except as a means of enforcing blackmail upon the purchasers of those lands.

Without going into details, I may say that the position of this reserve was peculiar in many respects, and that it was necessary to make special arrangements in order to secure a surrender. Many unsuccessful attempts had been made to secure that surrender in times past. We made a further attempt and we were successful. It was believed that, although the terms granted to the Indians were extraordinary—and there is no doubt that they were extraordinary—it was in the interest both of the Indians and of the people who lived in that part of the province of Manitoba that the surrender should be secured and that the Indians should be removed to another reserve. Owing to the action of the Government of that province, owing to the suggestions that have been made to the Indians that under this, that, or the other set of circumstances they would be able to secure a larger payment for their land, all of them have not yet removed to this new reserve, and the reserve is to-day in very much the same position as it was when the surrender took place, the Indians being in a position that is entirely contrary to their welfare, and the surrounding locality including the town of Selkirk, is suffering very seriously and having its development retarded because of the failure of that surrender to be carried out.

On that point I have some information which I wish to place before the House, seeing that the matter has already been before us in so many ways.

I have here a copy of the Selkirk Weekly Record, a Conservative newspaper published in the town of Selkirk. This is the issue of January 22, and I will read from it a short article on the subject of this St. Peter's Indian Reserve:

St. Peter's and Selkirk.

The Record has repeatedly expressed its views on the above subject so vital to this district as a whole, and to Selkirk in particular. For eight years the validity of the surrender of the reserve has been made a political football by both the Liberal and Conservative parties, to the material disadvantage of Selkirk and surrounding country. And the game goes merrily on with apparently no end in sight. Selfish political manipulators, without regard for justice to the territory affected, have through one pretext or another prevented settlement, and this district has suffered with marked patience.

To-day the reserve question is the most important from a material standpoint this community has to consider. Are we to submit indefinitely to the political jugglery which is crippling Selkirk's industrial opportunities, and preventing the development of about 50,000 acres of fertile land? Without regard to political affiliation, it is safe to say ninety per cent of the electors of this district deprecate the deplorable injustice of the methods employed to prevent an equitable adjustment of the matter, and earnestly desire the settlement many years overdue. This sentiment has long been disregarded, and the people have suffered with much patience. In the interest of decency, justice to the Indians, purchasers and the district there should be no further delay in fully, and finally passing upon the points at issue relative to the surrender.

These lands were sold at auction by the government and privately by the Indians in accordance with the terms of the surrender. Final payments on the auction lands were made three years since, at which time the Dominion Government was under moral and legal obligations to issue patents. The purchasers have complied with their obligations to the government and as a reward their interests and the interests of the district have been permitted to suffer in the game of politics.

The Record is heartily in sympathy with the Government jealous in protecting the interests of its wards, but not to the manifold detriment of a large territory and conscientious purchasers. Assuming there are instances in which the Indian was unscrupulously dealt with, there is ample opportunity for redress other than throttling the development of this district by further manipulation of the surrender.

It is high time for the citizens of Selkirk and surrounding territory to unitedly demand immediate and decisive action on this question. We believe we voice the sentiment of practically every resident of the district who has given this question unbiased consideration. The surrender will receive further attention in these columns from time to time with the hope that an imperial presentation of the facts will tend to bring about an equitable settlement.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER: When the committee rose at one o'clock, I was reading an extract from the Selkirk Record of January 22, dealing with the subject of the St. Peter's Reserve. I wish to read another article on the same subject from the Record of January 29. It is headed: "St. Peter's Reserve Question," and is as follows:

[Mr. Oliver.]

The public of this town and district are anxious to know what developments there are in the St. Peter's Reserve case. Several months ago it was officially stated that an action to annul the surrender had been commenced; that the writs were being served, and in twenty days the case would be brought to trial. From information that we have gathered as to this latest phase of the question we are forced to conclude that this announcement was deliberately made to deceive the public. There are over six hundred defendants in the action, all of whom must be served. Each defendant has four weeks from the time he is served to reply. The trial can, therefore, not be reached until the last defendant has been served, and he has had time to reply. We leave it to our readers to figure out, from their knowledge of the speed with which our courts proceed when judgment may be expected.

To the authorities we would say: Stop playing with this question. Confirm the titles. The Indians are satisfied. While they realize that some of them made improvident sales, still the surrender contract was to them highly satisfactory and beneficial. The moral and material advantages that followed the removal of the Indians from the old St. Peter's Reserve have far outweighed any wrong that the Indians may have sustained at the hands of unscrupulous land buyers. It is a well-known fact that Indians and half-breeds are prone to make improvident bargains, and quite frequently get the worst of the deal, and it may be taken for granted that many of the sales made by the St. Peter's Indians were no exception to the rule. Even if such were the case the cancellation of the surrender would instead of righting a wrong, result in a far greater wrong against many who are guilty of no wrong-doing.

The government would be rendering far greater assistance to the Indians if it would engage counsel, for those that have been cheated by individual buyers, to prosecute their case before the court of the province. It is now almost eight years since the surrender was taken. Does the Government now propose to give us another eight years of litigation? The public is long suffering, but the limit has been reached.

I read from the Record of February 5:

It is safe to say that at least seventy-five per cent of the members of the St. Peter's Band of Indians wish the surrender to be confirmed. They realize that they made a good bargain with the Government and received very liberal treatment at its hands. A number of Indians have disposed of their lands at prices satisfactory to them but have not received payment in full because of the unsettled state of affairs now existing, and are suffering for the lack of these funds. The Government owes these a duty to ratify the surrender.

The present reserve is much more suitable for the purposes of the band than the St. Peter's Reserve, because the more isolated they are the easier it is for the chief and council and parents to control and guide the younger generation, and the evils which very often follow the intermingling of whites and Indians are correspondingly decreased.

Many fathers when voting for the surrender did so, no doubt, solely for the reason that they wished to get their children away from the vicinity of the liquor traffic, and to avoid if possible the debauchery which so often follows in its trail, and because they hoped that the moral atmosphere of the new reserve would be more healthful than that of St. Peter's. This, we think, all will admit, is an important factor in the future welfare of the band. Are these fathers not entitled to as much consideration at the hands of the Government as some few members of the band, who imbibed too much whisky and then sold their lands for a song? The duty of the Government to its wards is as a strong in moral matters as in material, if not stronger.

If then the majority of the band wish to remain where they are and to have the surrender confirmed, why should the Government compel them, against their will and judgment, and to their decided disadvantage, to come back to St. Peters?

As has been pointed out in these columns cancellation of the surrender might benefit a few individuals, but would harm a vastly greater number.

In the same issue, under the heading: "Public Meeting Needed," I find the following:

The most important question now being discussed in Selkirk, next to the war, is the settlement of the St. Peter's land dispute. It is felt that the time has arrived for united action on the part of our citizens in demanding a speedy settlement of this long delayed matter, and it has been suggested that the Selkirk board of trade call a public meeting at an early date to discuss this question. The idea is a good one, and The Record hopes it will be carried out. The St. Peter's reserve question has too long been used as a political football to the detriment of our town, and it is high time our citizens made a vigorous protest. The Dominion Parliament is in session, and if a public meeting was held and a strong resolution passed, irrespective of politics, pointing out the great loss sustained by Selkirk, financially and otherwise, owing to the long delay in settlement, and a copy of such resolution forwarded to Premier Borden, some good might be accomplished. Since the surrender of the reserve, time and again we have been told that the matter in reference to the lands would be quickly settled, but the years have come and the years have gone and nothing has yet been done. Is it any wonder that the patience of our citizens is getting exhausted? The whole matter could be equitably adjusted in a short time if politics were not allowed to intervene. This question is not a political one, but a local one of vital interest to the welfare and progress of the town of Selkirk and district, and in this light it should be considered by the government. If any of the Indians have been defrauded there is a remedy. but justice should also be done to those who purchased the lands in good faith and have been deprived of their titles for years. Owing to the non-settlement of this question, some of the best land in the district has been lying idle for years, which, if a settlement had been made, would now have been occupied by good settlers and the town and district greatly benefited. By all means let a public meeting be called, and some definite action taken in an endeavour to have this hindrance to the prosperity and development of our town speedily removed.

Hon. gentlemen will observe that in the article that I have just read, the Record called for a public meeting and asked the Board of Trade to take action. The Record of February 12, under the heading: "Board of Trade, Annual Meeting," has the following:

The annual meeting of the Selkirk Board of Trade was held in the town hall on Thursday evening, February 4th. The report of the retiring council, presented by the President, F. A. Gemmel, dealt with the many matters that had come before the board during the past year, and concluded with a vigorous statement of the Board's portion with respect to the dilatory St. Peter's embroglio, and an arraignment of the political tactics that had held up the settlement for eight years, "eight years" in the language of the report, "of Western Canada's greatest development", eight years lost to Selkirk forever."

Before the annual meeting adjourned, a motion offered by mayor Ross and seconded by Bruce Campbell, was unanimously passed, congratulating The Selkirk Record upon the vigorous and praiseworthy stand it has lately taken upon the St. Peter's question.

There is another article in this issue of the Record that I desire to read. I said that the Record is a Conservative paper. It is not and never was a Liberal paper; it is essentially and always has been a Conservative paper. In the article I am about to read it finds it desirable, in pursuance of its belief that nothing good can come from the Liberal side, to call in question the actions of the Liberal Government and myself, so that I think it is fair that the House should have the benefit of all that the paper has said on the subject, whether it reflects on the Liberal Government and myself or not. The article is a retort to an article appearing in the Manitoba Free Press:

Playing Politics.

The Fress Press convicts the premier, and Mr. Bradbury of "playing politics" on the St. Peter's question.

That refers to the Premier of Manitoba.

The public know the facts. It is up to them now, but what about the Hon. Frank Oliver, who had most to do with this matter? Was he not warned by competent solicitors that there was a legal question demanding the attention of the Government as to whether the statutes required only a majority of the votes of the male members of a band over 21 years at the meeting, or whether it required a majority of all the male members of the band over 21 years of age? His reply was that the St. Peter's Reserve was surrendered the same as all other reserves in Canada, and while this statement stands undisputed it is not a sufficient answer, and leaves a shadow not only on the titles of St. Peter's Reserve, but all other surrendered Indians in reserves in Canada. This was made very plain to him, and he was earnestly entreated to remove this possible technicality, and not hand out the title with a shadow or possible question mark on it But no, he and his party, must be sustained, and instead of giving the relief asked for he proceeded to "play politics," and so the game goes on back, and forth while the interests of Selkirk and district are ground to dust under the feet of politicians. Now we are told with all seriousness that the case is in court. What is there to try? Nothing but the legal quibble just referred to that is common to all surrenders.

Newspapers and politicians may talk glibly with this surrender, but they are just "playing about fraud, and make sinister expressions about the dock doings in connection with this surrender, but they are just "playing politics," and they know it. Ask any of the solicitors who appeared before the St. Peter's Commission which sat so long in Selkirk, and they will tell you, unless they too "play politics," that with this quibble removed, there is not a leg for this long drawn out St. Peter's question to stand on.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is the hon. member reading from an editorial?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is he aware that an editor is paid to write upon one side as a lawyer is paid to advocate one side, and that he can sit down with a clear conscience and write absolutely contrary to what he thinks? As a matter of fact, there is no basis whatever for an argument in this case.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the hon. member a member of the legal profession?

Mr. BURNHAM: I am.

Mr. OLIVER: Then he—

Mr. BURNHAM: I was also an editor.

Mr. OLIVER: Oh, well, that settles it.

Mr. BURNHAM: I know what I am talking about.

Mr. GRAHAM: He has both disqualifications.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. gentleman in making this suggestion speaks whereof he knows—and we will accept him at his own valuation. I wish to point out that this is not a question of what the editor thought, this is a question as to what the facts are; and whether the editor who wrote that was paid or not, the statement that he makes is or is not true irrespective of what he thought. The verity of his statement does not rest on his unsupported statement; he has the formal endorsation of the Selkirk Board of Trade for the position he has taken and the arguments that he has used.

Mr. BRADBURY: What authority has the Selkirk Board of Trade?

[Mr. Oliver]

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend knows better than I do what weight to attach to the opinion of the Board of Trade of Selkirk. The article continues:

If there is a blunder, who made it but the Government, and if the Government should succeed, after keeping the land and Selkirk and district tied up ten or fifteen years, in breaking this surrender over this question, which is their own error, what will it mean? It will mean they have wronged innocent buyers out of the property they were justly, and honorably entitled. To illustrate: Nearly one-half of the reserve was sold at Government auction sale, and citizens of Canada, relying upon the good faith of their Government, bought this land and the last of their money was paid to the Government years ago, both the Liberal and Conservative governments receiving these funds, and long after this question of the legality of the surrender had been fully discussed. Not only have they received these funds, but year after year with the greatest deliberation have paid them over to the Indians. Now with the overshadowing power of the government, and the strong arm of the law they purpose to wrest these lands from these buyers. And why? Simply in the interest of this great "game of politics."

Fellow-citizens of Selkirk, we have stood quietly by in the shadow during about a decade of great progress and opportunity while this game was being played. Just following the close of the present war will doubtless be another era of great opportunity. The court proceedings will probably carry us safely past this, when our griping, and disappointments will be less keen because the spur of opportunity will again be gone. Then the government may win, and bring the Indians back, and then the politicians may be good enough to play this great game all over again. Inspiring, is it not?

My friend from Peterborough and my friend from Selkirk have both made suggestions to discredit the writer of the article.

Mr. BURNHAM: I did not.

Mr. OLIVER: I am glad to give my hon. friend the opportunity to make any further explanation he pleases; but my understanding was that he desired to discredit the writer of the article.

Mr. BURNHAM: Not the writer. A man may be a very eminent writer or a very eminent counsel and a very truthful, honourable man and yet fulfil the requirements of his brief and argue accordingly. I am making no imputation whatever against the writer, I am arguing against the credibility of his editorial and the hon. member is trying to back up the editorial by the personality of the writer.

Mr. OLIVER: No, I am not trying to back it up by the personality of the writer, I am backing up the editorial by the fact that the writer is present in the place, cognizant of the facts and dependent upon public opinion for his continuance in business in that locality.

Mr. BRADBURY: Does the hon. gentleman know the writer of the article?

Mr. OLIVER: No, I do not know who wrote the article, but I know the editor of the Record and have known him since he was a boy and I think that both the man himself and his family connections will compare favourably with those of any ordinary citizen or even with any member of this House in regard to standing and credibility. However, that is not the point I wish to make. The point is that the man who is on the ground and directly responsible to the people living in that locality for his continuance in business makes these statements and uses these arguments, and is supported in doing so by the Board of Trade of the town, and further supported by a public meeting, a report of which I will read to the House. I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of March 30, 1915:

Fully 250 citizens of Selkirk and adjoining municipalities attended a public meeting held last evening in Pearson's hall to consider the situation with respect to the St. Peter's Indian reserve surrender.

It was the largest meeting ever held in Selkirk and for once in the history of the town all differences and dissentions, political and otherwise were sunk in order that one unanimous, supreme effort might be made to induce the government at Ottawa to confirm the surrender and issue titles for the lands purchased from the Indians by private individuals.

J. H. Grisdale president, and speeches strongly condemnatory of the manner in which the matter had been treated by politicians for party purposes were made by Dr. Ross, mayor of Selkirk; Bruce Campbell, secretary of the board of trade; George Frank, reeve of St. Clement's; Councillor Harriott, of St. Andrew's; D. Morrison, Selkirk; Arthur Clair, St. Andrew's; F. A. Campbell Selkirk; G. T. Blakert, president of the board of trade; Ex-Councillor Muckle, St. Andrew's; and B. E. Benson.

Mr. BRADBURY: All first-class Grits.

Mr. OLIVER: It goes on:

All the speakers were enthuiastically applauded.

Mr. Benson moved the following resolution, which was seconded by F. W. Hooker, and carried without a dissenting voice with great enthusiasm:

"That this public meeting of the citizens of Selkirk and district, assembled without personal interest or political affiliation, actuated by the acute realization of the great injury that has been and is still being done in the district through the non-settlement of the St. Peter's reserve surrender over a period of eight years;

"Hereby resolve, that as a body representative of the entire community and district, we are firmly convinced that the common injury and injustice being wrought by the hold-up of these lands from occupation, has created a situation, the continuance of which would be intolerable.

"Further, that the Indians, as a body, are and have always been, satisfied with the surrender and its terms;—

Mr. BRADBURY: That is absolutely untrue.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend can settle that with the 250 of his constituents who supported this resolution. It goes on:

—and finally, as the only solution of the present deadlock without still further delay, loss and expense, we hereby demand of the Government the confirmation of the surrender and the immediate issuance of titles to the lands."

The meeting was closed with a vote of thanks for the chairman and the singing of the national anthem.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman was not there, then.

Mr. OLIVER: Why does my hon. friend make that remark?

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I simply said you were not there.

Mr. OLIVER: Did my hon. friend say it because he wishes to be insulting, or because he is silly.

Mr. BENNETT: I would not for a single moment be insulting, and as to being silly, well, one might really get into the hon. member's class.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend will be well advised not to make such remarks when they are not called for.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought they were.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend will remember that he is not in Calgary in Al Hazar hall.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is a Turkish name, and that they changed it since the war began. I think they call it Belshazzar now.

Mr. OLIVER: I have given the opinion of the newspaper published in the locality which is affected by this transaction, and where live the people who are best informed as to the merits of this transaction. I have given the opinion of the Board of Trade as to this transaction, and I have given the opinion of a public meeting at which their representative men were present. I desire now to give the opinion of the official of the Indian Department in regard to one side of the merits of this transaction. My hon. friend from Selkirk

(Mr. Bradbury), who has taken a very deep interest in the matter of the surrender of the reserve, has from time to time laid great stress upon the injustice that was done the Indians in this transaction. That injustice was in paying them for the land that they had, and giving them in the place of it a greater area of better land. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) shakes his head. He is inclined to deny the latter part of my statement. I propose to read to him the opinion of the Indian agent as to the benefit to the Indians of their removal to the new reserve. In the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ended March 31, 1914, he says:

> The movement of the people from St. Peter's continues, it has not been as rapid as I hoped it would be. Those who are still in residenec at St. Peter's have been advised that the time for receiving assistance from the department for moving and building has about expired, and it has been pointed out to them that the advantage gained in this way is too valuable for them to run any risk of losing it; there is now a pretty definite intention to move, one or two of the leaders have gone, and I hope to see many others arrange to do so during the coming season. Arrangements have been made to assist them in building, when they arrive at Peguis; a sufficient quantity of lumber and other building material has been placed there with Agent Carter, during the past winter, to meet any demands made for this purpose. It is realized by them that they will be acting in their own best interest, if they move, as they find that those who have moved are doing well at Peguis.

I think I may rest the case there for the present. We now have the evidence as to the benefit the white people derive from the taking of this surrender, and it is given by those who are in a measure entitled to speak for the white people. We also have the evidence of the officers of the department as to the benefit to the Indians of their taking advantage of the arrangement that was made. I think under those circumstances my hon. friend from Selkirk will have to consider that he is in a minority on this question.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk): The hon. member for Edmonton, the ex-Minister of the Interior in the late Government (Mr. Oliver), the man responsible for this transaction, speaking before the House rose at one o'clock, made some statements in my absence which I deem it wise to refer to. But before doing so I wish to refer to one or two things that he said just before he resumed his seat. Speaking of the advantage that has accrued to the St. Peter's Indians from the surrender, the hon. gentleman would seek to leave the impression on the people that the surrender was a good thing for the Indians. Let us examine for a moment that feature of the matter. St. Peter's Indian Reserve was adjacent to the town of Selkirk; in fact, it formed a part of that town. It comprised 48,000 acres within 26 miles of Winnipeg. That land is worth to-day $2,500,000 if it is worth a dollar. On the evidence of some men that the hon. gentleman has quoted as being present at that meeting, and asking that these titles should be validated, this land was worth at the time of the surrender on an average of $25 an acre for the 48,000 acres. The hon. gentleman seeks to leave the impression that it was a good bargain for the Indians that this change had taken place. The Government and those who desired the surrender of this 48,000 acres of the most valuable land in Manitoba, selected a site 90 miles farther north, along the west shore of lake Winnipeg, and gave the Indians 70,000 acres of land there in lieu of the 48,000 acres they had taken from them. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that this land compared in value with the 48,000 acres taken from the Indians? Every man who knows anything about wild land in that part of Manitoba knows that from $3 to $4 an acre would be a good value to place upon this 70,000 acres of land. He acquired land from the Indians that was worth at the time it was taken $25 to $50 an acre. He took an estate from the St. Peter's Indians which is worth at least to-day $2,500,000. I ask if that is considered fair treatment of the Indians of this country.

The hon. gentleman says that I have taken a great interest in the Indians. I have. And why? It is not because I have any personal interest in them, not because there was any political kudos to be gained from it; the Indian has no vote, he has no influence, he has no money. I was in the town when this outrageous transaction took place and I would have been less than a man, I would have been unworthy of the position which I occupy in this House if I had not attempted to rectify that shameful transaction and expose it to this country. I thought that when I appealed to the Minister of the Interior of that time, the present hon. member for Edmonton, and, when he became seized of the facts, that I had laid before this House, he would take action and do something to rectify the great wrong which had been perpetrated on the St. Peter's Indians. But the hon. gentleman satisfied himself with taking up three hours of the time of the House in an attempt to dispute the charges which I had made and when he sat down he left every charge unanswered and the charge made by me against the Indian Department just as strong as it was before he rose to his feet. During every session from 1907 to 1911, I appealed to the hon. gentleman across the floor of this House to do something to relieve the situation and to see that a modicum of justice was done to the poor unfortunate Indians, but I appealed in vain. The hon. gentleman made no attempt to settle the question. The late Government should have settled that question immediately, but when their attention was called to the matter in this House the present hon. member for Edmonton, the man who is responsible for this transaction, sat tight in his place and allowed the matter to drift year after year without making any attempt to settle it although he was appealed to time and time again across the floor of this House and appealed to by residents of the town of Selkirk in just as strong articles as he has read from the Record to-day. Yet he made no attempt to settle the matter. He said: What we have done, we have done, the surrender was legal and it must stand. That is the position he took. The statements I made when I opposed the transaction I made after the most thorough investigation, I made with a full knowledge of my responsibility as a member of this House, and six or seven years having elapsed since that time, I have not one word to retract of what I said on that occasion.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Would the hon. gentleman briefly state what were the charges that he made?

Mr. BRADBURY: I will state some of them briefly. It would take too long to recite all of them.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not want the hon. gentleman to take too long.

Mr. BRADBURY: The charges were that the Indians had been fraudulently deprived of their very valuable estate, that the meeting called for the surrender had been manipulated by the Indian agent and by the officers of the Indian Department, that the meeting where this surrender was declared to be carried was advertised for but one day, that twenty-four hours' notice was all the time that was given to the band of Indians to gather and decide as to the surrender.

Mr. BLAIN: What year was that?

Mr. BRADBURY: That was in 1907. This reserve is about ten miles square. Many of the young Indians, at that season of the year, were at lake Winnipeg fishing. There must have been thirty or forty of the young members of the band who never heard of this meeting. I have under my hand now the testimony of men living within a mile of the place where this surrender was voted on, and these men swear that they never knew that the meeting was being held. Another charge was that the Indian Act had been violated, that clause 49 of the Act provided that a majority of the male members of the band of 21 years of age at the meeting must vote in favour of the surrender or the surrender would not be valid. That is a point in regard to which my hon. friend from Edmonton and I differ. I remember that when we were discussing this point, he was arguing in favour of the clause, and I asked him if a meeting was called where there were two hundred and some odd qualified voters, and if only twenty voters attended that meeting, could those twenty Indians legally alienate the interest of all the rest of the Indians? My answer to that question is that they could do it legally but perhaps not morally. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that in the opinion of two of the most reputable judges we have in Manitoba the position that the hon. gentleman had taken is utterly unjustifiable. A report was made by a Royal Commission appointed by the Manitoba Government and composed of three county court judges—Judges Prudhomme, Myers and Locke. Every hon. gentleman who comes from the West knows the reputation of these men. After a thorough examination of the whole case, two reports were brought in, a majority report and a minority report, but Judge Locke, speaking for himself and Judge Prudhomme, says:

> The surrender was not only voidable but void, and could not be ratified and should not be ratified.

That is the decision of those men at that time. Still the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who was responsible for the transaction, for three long years while he was minister of the department that perpetrated this transaction, made no attempt to rectify it. The consequence is that it has been handed down as a heritage to the present Government. I have not argued out of the House and I am not going to argue in the House that the matter has been expedited as it should have been. I claim, and I have always claimed, that the matter should have been settled long ago. The fact that it has not been settled lies largely at the doors of the men who secured the land. They have been attempting to negotiate along a line of settlement by which the Indians would receive some further consideration, presuming that that would justify the Government in allowing the titles to be validated, but up to the present time nothing has been done. The hon. member for Edmonton read from a resolution a statement that the Indians of the St. Peter's reserve were satisfied. That resolution stated an absolute and unqualified falsehood, as the man who penned that statement knew when he put it into that resolution. The St. Peter's Indians, who have been loyal to the Crown, who have fought for this country more than once, feel that they have been defrauded by the Government of Canada. They have cried out for British fair-play ever since this surrender was taken, and they occupy the very same position to-day that they occupied six years ago. The hon. gentleman would like the impression to go abroad that the Indians are satisfied with their new reserve. Since the surrender was taken, and since the new reserve was created, in spite of all the inducements that could be offered by the Indian Department, less than half of the St. Peter's band of Indians have moved to the new reserve. They are at present in destitute circumstances. They are a charge upon the public of Canada to-day because of the rascally conduct of the late Administration in allowing them to be robbed of their inheritance. More than the Indian is involved in this transaction, because if the Indian is destitute, as he is to-day, the taxpayers of Canada have to take care of him. When this valuable estate was taken from the Indians and given to a few particular friends of the late Government, those people were robbing not only the Indians but the people of Canada. The consequence is to-day that the people of Canada have to dig down into their pockets to provide food and shelter for the remnant of the St. Peter's band that is left on the old reserve. At this late date in the session, I do not want to take up too much time, but the charge has been made by my hon. friend, although, frankly speaking, I would have thought that the hon. gentleman who was guilty, who was the man responsible for the transaction, would hardly have had the temerity to rise in his place and read those newspaper articles which he read to-day and make such statements in regard to the St. Peter's Reserve. People in glass houses should not throw stones. He knows as well as any one does that he and his department were guilty in allowing this surrender to be taken as it was. If the surrender had been taken fairly and honestly; if the Indian had been given notice for a week or ten days that surrender was to be taken; if he had been invited to meet the representatives of the department to discuss the arrangement openly and frankly, and if he had then agreed to the surrender, you would never have heard any complaint from any one in the town of Selkirk or anywhere else. I will tell you how the vote was taken. After two days' discussion in a little bit of a room, 18 x 24, where not one-half of the Indians could get in to hear what was taking place, the vote was taken. Indian after Indian swore before the commission that they had never heard the terms of the surrender read or explained to them; and that they did not know what they were voting for. This is how the vote was taken: The men were ordered out of the room into the open. There stood on one side the chief and the councillors who were in favour of this surrender, the men who, it turned out afterwards, had been bribed and purchased by those interested in securing the lands, because some of them got ten or twelve times as much land as the ordinary Indian got. Therefore, I am justified in saying that those men were bribed to secure the consent of the rest of the band. The evidence goes to show that no attempt was made to check the vote. The Indians were passing from one side to the other. A minister of the gospel, Rev. John Semmens, following out his instructions, no doubt, from Mr. Pedley, who was on the ground, when the vote was to be taken got on a box and said to those people: "All you who want $90, come to this side." I have under my hand the evidence of the chief who was in favour of this surrender. He swore that the statement made by Mr. Semmens caused the surrender to carry. Is anything further required to justify my statement as to fraud? Before the Indians left the room to go out to vote, Mr. Pedley, in discussing the matter with the Indians, said to them: "I have $5,000 here in this little black satchel; if the surrender carries, the money will be divided amongst you, and if it does not carry, I will take the money home and you will not get a cent." The Indians thought they were going to get $5,000 for their vote. The Indian agent, Mr. J. O. Lewis, a man who was as guilty as the minister himself in this transaction—and that is saying a good deal—was the one who counted the votes in favour of a surrender. There was no one to check him at all. No one knows whether there was five of a majority in favour of a surrender or ten of a majority against a surrender, but it is claimed that there was nine of a majority in favour of a surrender. There was not nine of a majority of the legal voters of the band, because less than a majority was secured of the young men and old men who were qualified to vote. In other words, the Indian Act was violated as far as securing the votes of the whole band was concerned. The Act says distinctly that the majority of the male members of the band, twenty-one years of age, must be secured. Now, such a majority was not secured; consequently that surrender is illegal.

Mr. MORPHY: Who is Mr. Pedley?

Mr. BRADBURY: He was the Deputy Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORPHY: Is he in office now?

Mr. BRADBURY: No, he has been removed, or he resigned, I understand. I am not going to say that Mr. Pedley was to blame, for that would be taking an unfair advantage of an official of the department. The minister of that time must take the blame and so must the Government of which he was a member. I do not think, for a moment, that the deputy minister went out and negotiated and secured that surrender without the full consent of his minister. Consequently, what was done in securing the surrender, was done, I take it, with the full knowledge of that minister. But I must say that as hon. members who recollect the defence that that gentleman put up for that transaction will know, he displayed such utter ignorance of what had taken place that I should hesitate to believe, even now, that he really did know what was done in this matter, though, as head of the department, he is responsible.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) made the statement that if this surrender was illegal, every other surrender taken up to the present moment, was equally illegal. He is not well informed. The present Government composed of men who, when in Opposition condemned what the late Government did in this connection, took precautions to settle this matter, and not one surrender has been taken since this Government came into power in which the Indian Act has not been lived up to scrupulously. That there may be no misunderstanding let me quote clause 5 which takes the place of clause 49 of the Indian Act:

> A surrender must be assented to by a majority of the Indians whose names appear on the voters' list, who must be present at the meeting or council summoned for the purpose as hereinafter provided.

This makes plain what interpretation should have been placed on section 49. When the hon. gentleman made the statement that if the St. Peter's Indian surrender was illegal every other surrender in Canada was illegal, he is quite in error. Other surrenders taken before this matter was exposed in the House may have been as illegal as this, but I do not believe that there is anything in the records of Canada to show such a brazen attempt made to defraud the Indians as in the case of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve.

As to the matter published in the Selkirk Record and the Winnipeg Free Press, let me say this to the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver): He is proprietor of a newspaper and knows a good deal about editing a newspaper, and a good deal about what reliance can be placed, sometimes, on the actions of a newspaper. There has been, during the last six weeks, a campaign to stampede the present Government into a settlement of this question, not only against the interest of the Indians, but against the interest of the people of Canada and against the interest of the town of Selkirk. For I say now from my place in Parliament, and with all due deference to my friends, some of whom are connected with these resolutions, and with all due deference to the Record, that, so far as the town of Selkirk is concerned, to my mind the greatest crime that could be committed against the town would be to validate the titles of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve and hand this property over to a bunch of grafters, men who will hold the land at exorbitant prices for years to come and prevent the very result that the people want, viz., the settling up of that district. The late Government professed that they were working in the interests of the people, that they held the land in trust for the people and believed in the policy of "the land for the settlers and not for the speculators." Had they lived up to this policy they could have purchased from the Indians at a reasonable figure, and that would have satisfied the Indians, forty-eight thousand acres of the best land in Manitoba. Then we should have had every acre of it settled by bona fide settlers to-day, but instead of that the Government of that day chose to play into the hands of a few speculators and only certain men could purchase these lands. A Conservative in the town of Selkirk at that time was told by the Indian agent that he need not attempt to buy the lands, that the department could give him no protection, and that he would be buying at his own risk. But Mr. Heap, a leading Liberal, Mr. Funk, a brother of Senator Funk of the United States, a very wealthy man, Mr. Frank of Winnipeg, another strong Liberal, and Mr Tracy of Selkirk, another strong Liberal—these were the men who bought from the Indians the lands all the way from one dollar to five dollars and six dollars an acre. God knows how the Indian was paid, for the Indian himself does not know. When he went in to make a payment, he got, perhaps, a ten-dollar bill, and was asked to sign a receipt for it, and that receipt was a deed for the man's property, and nobody knows what he got afterwards. There is a letter on file from the Indian agent himself, who was in this transaction, who told his minister that after the first payment was made it depended entirely upon the honour of the purchaser what the Indian got. That is a sample of what was done and of what the hon. member for Edmonton would urge the Government to legalize. Why, if the Government of Canada were to legalize an action of this kind which has been exposed and proven, all I say is that there is very little justice for the poor unfortunate Indian.

4 p.m.

I do not intend to take up much of the time of the House in dealing with this attempt made by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) to revive this case in the House. His advice to the Government is, practically, to validate these titles. Let us see how that would work out. Does he not know—I am sure he does—that the Registrar General of Manitoba has refused to issue a Torrens title on these patents issued by the Government and that before a Torrens title can issue some action must be taken by Parliament? Now, if that is true is that not evidence that the transaction was illegal in the first place, and if it was illegal why should it be legalized. I want to say, in passing, that I regret as much, and more, than the hon. gentleman from Edmonton, that this case was not settled years ago. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) ought to have settled this question before he went out of office, but he let the matter rest for three years without taking action. It may be said that that does not justify the delay on the part of the present Government. I am not going to argue that it does. This matter ought to have been settled, and those who had been in authority will bear me out when I say that no one has been more persistent than I have been in attempting to secure a settlement of this case year after year. I did not suggest the settlement that the hon. member for Edmonton wishes; I urged that the matter be taken to court and, if the surrender be proved legal, that the registrar general of Manitoba should recognize the patents and settle the matter for all time to come. The case is now, I understand, ready for trial in the Exchequer Court. It is worthy of remark that the very men who have been clamouring for a settlement of this case for the last four years have been making every effort possible to block the proceedings which have been taken to make it possible to secure an early settlement. What have these men to fear? If their conduct has been free from blame, why should they hesitate to allow this matter to go before the Exchequer Court for the opinion of the judge as to its legality? It is like the Irishman who went to an eminent lawyer when he was in trouble, and asked for his assistance. The eminent lawyer assured him that he would secure justice for him. "Well," said Pat, "it is not justice I want; I want to get out of this difficulty." And I think that some of the men who have obtained these lands do not want justice; they want to get the titles to the lands. This question ought to be settled, and the men who have secured these lands—some of which, I have no hesitation in saying, were literally stolen from the Indians—should not be allowed to retain them without recompensating the Indians in some way. Six of these men secured 35,000 acres of lands at less than $5 an acre: land which is the most valuable in the province of Manitoba, and which without any doubt, is worth to-day from $50 to $60 an acre. It is not too much to ask these men, even at this late date, to do justice to the Indians? My hon. friend stated that about half of this land was sold by public auction. That, of course, is in line with many other statements made by the hon. gentleman; it is not quite in accordance with the facts. Only about 15,000 acres out of 48,000 were sold by public auction. And how were they sold? The auction sale was manipulated just as skillfully as the land itself was manipulated. The Department of Indian Affairs advertised the sale in six different issues of the Toronto Globe and the Winnipeg Free Press. The sales took place, I think, on December 16. There was a foot of snow on the ground; the advertisement had been withdrawn eighteen days before the sale took place, so that the public did not know anything about the sale when it did take place. The men who attended the sale were largely the same men who negotiated with the Indians for their little holdings; these are the men who got the land. No attempt was made by the Indian Department to secure a fair price for these lands.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: How many people were at the sale?

Mr. BRADBURY: I did not attend the sale, but I am told that in the morning there were present from five to ten men who represented these big holdings and fifteen or twenty Ruthenians who were anxious to obtain cheap land. These Ruthenians, by their bidding, made the other men bid up, and I understand that some of the land which was sold in the morning realized a price as high as $7 or $8 an acre. At lunch time an arrangement was made whereby a man was paid to take these foreigners into a barroom and keep them there until after the sale was finished. This is history; it is common knowledge in the town of Selkirk.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: What did the department have to do with that?

Mr. BRADBURY: Nothing at all; but the department should not have allowed the sale to take place under the conditions that it did. Imagine the trustee of an estate selling a valuable piece of land in the middle of winter.

Mr. MARTIN: The hon. gentleman referred a few minutes ago to a report of the commission of judges appointed by the local government of the province of Manitoba. As I understand the matter, the two judges based their decision not upon the existence of fraud in connection with the sale of these lands, but upon the question of the interpretation of section 49 of the Indian Act.

Mr. BRADBURY: To some extent that is so, but not altogether. When the case was referred to these judges, the public understood that they were going to investigate not only the question of legality, but the question of alleged fraud as well. Judge Locke and Judge Prudhomme, in making their report, said this:

> One phase at a time. However, we thought it would be desirable to report on the validity of the surrender first and leave it to the Government to decide as to whether or not it is necessary for the commissioners in view of this finding proceed with the other branch of the duties entrusted to them.
>
> All of which is respectfully submitted.

They gave the Indians distinctly to understand that further investigation would be made into the fraudulent transactions between the purchasers and the Indians. This has never taken place. That is where I think the present Government have been entirely too lenient; they should have pushed the matter home more fully than they did.

I realize just as the men in Selkirk and all over the country realize, that this case ought to be settled and I am just as anxious as any man could be that it should be settled. I believe that the proper way is to settle this thing in court. There can be no question that if the surrender is legal the men who have got the land should be willing to allow the matter to go to the Exchequer court where it could be settled in a week. I made an offer five years ago to these men. I had authority to do it from the Registrar General of Manitoba. I was trying to get a settlement then and urged upon him to point out some way of settling it. He said: Get these men to take an action in court to force me to issue a Torrens title to any one of these properties; and if they make good, if they can get a judgment in their favour, I shall issue the title. That was a fair proposition, and if the men who had the land were satisfied that they were right and had nothing to hide or fear, would it not have been easy for them to take the case to court and ask the decision of the Manitoba court, where they had all their friends, Chief Justice Howell, who was a party to securing the surrender, being Chief Justice of Manitoba at the time. They did not dare take it to the courts because they knew that they had not a leg to stand on; and they have been working ever since trying to secure from the Government some legislation that will validate those titles.

During my last election, in 1911, these men spent thousands of dollars trying to defeat me in my county on account of what I had done in this transaction. No man in this House or out of it has ever insinuated or dared to insinuate that I had any personal interest in this matter. My action was dictated entirely in the interest of justice to the Indian who could not defend himself and the best interests of my own town of Selkirk to make it impossible for 48,000 acres adjacent to the town, some of it within the limits of the town, to be tied up in the hands of speculators. I hold yet that I was justified in everything I did in trying to prevent these speculators from getting control of these lands.

The case is now in the hands, as I understand, of the Exchequer Court, and I hope it will come to trial very soon and that it will not stop there. I hope action will be taken to punish the men who have fraudulently dispossessed the Indians of their lands. There are men who have secured these lands as I have said before, who have literally stolen them from the Indians. These men ought to be prosecuted and punished, and it is up to the Indian Department to see that this is done.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: On several occasions when this matter has been discussed in the House I have taken some part in the discussion, and that is my reason for rising to-day. I have no concern about the quarrel the hon. member for Selkirk has with some of his constituents in regard to this question, the only interest I have in the matter is the question of whether or not the administration of the Indian Department under the late Government was properly carried out in connection with the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve. There is no question that for several years prior to the surrender in 1907 the people of Selkirk and the surrounding country were continually asking that this surrender be obtained.

Mr. BRADBURY: That statement was made, I think, by the then Minister of the Interor, now the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). There is not a line of evidence to justify that statement. The people of Selkirk never asked that the surrender should be made, nobody ever asked for it except the late member for Selkirk, Mr. Jackson. That was brought out in evidence.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend may be better informed in that regard than I am, but I always understood that in and around Selkirk, as in the case of the surrender of other reserves in Canada, there was a movement on the part of settlers for the surrender of the reserve. I understood when the matter was discussed previously in the House, four or five years ago, that that was the case, and it was on that basis that I made my statements. The surrender was arranged for in 1907 and, in so far as I have been informed, no objection was taken by any residents of that district to the surrender being made provided it was made properly. I think my hon. friend himself was in favour of the surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY: So far as the town of Selkirk is concerned and myself personally, I agree with what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton, and I think it a good thing that the Indians have been moved; it is a good thing for themselves. But that does not justify robbing them.

Mr. MARTIN: The charges that were made repeatedly by the hon. member for Selkirk and other members on that side of the House some years ago, and the charges repeated by him to-day, are that, first, there was fraud in connection with the surrender of the reserve, either on the part of the department or on the part of men who subsequently bought these lands from the Indians, or on the part of both. A general charge was made that the Indians were fraudulently deprived of a very valuable asset. That is the main charge I have ever heard made, but I have never seen an iota of evidence to support it. It is easy to talk about fraud, but when you come down to the basis of things and get to facts it is difficult to prove the existence of what is really meant by fraud, and I would point out that apart from departmental fraud altogether if my hon. friend refers to fraud on the part of individuals in the province of Manitoba in getting lands from the Indians or from the department in connection with this reserve, they have their remedy. Why does not the Attorney General of Manitoba prosecute these men? Then we will have the question disposed of once and for all. That would not, it is true, dispose of a charge of fraud on the part of the department. As to the charge of fraud on the part of the department or on the part of Mr. Pedley, it all comes down to this, that Mr. Pedley had $5,000 in a little black valise, and said to the Indians: If this surrender goes through to-day I can make a part payment on the purchase price. That is all he meant, he did not pretend to buy the Indians. What benefit would he or any other officer get by bribing the Indians to hand over their land, to give the surrender? That is the whole question.

Mr. BRADBURY: I know the hon. gentleman wants to be fair. The facts are these. The hon. member knows the Indian pretty well, probably as well as I do.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not admit that.

Mr. BRADBURY: And he knows the effect of making a statement such as Mr. Pedley did make to the effect: I have $5,000 here, and if this surrender goes through this will be divided among you, and if it does not go through, you will not get anything. I do not for a minute dispute that the money was supposed to come out of the sale of the Indian lands. I believe that myself, but the poor Indian did not understand it that way. He understood he was getting part of that $5,000.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Everybody who pays any attention to Indian Estimates knows that there is a vote every year for the purpose of obtaining the surrender of Indian reserves. Only the other night there was one for $25,000. I understand that it has always been customary to pay the Indians a small sum of money when the surrender is arranged for. I do not know what words Mr. Pedley used. My hon. friend knows, and I have no doubt he repeated the words correctly this afternoon. But considering the position Mr. Pedley occupied in the Indian Department, and that neither he nor any other Government official profited by this surrender, how could any reasonable man put the interpretation on these words that the hon. member for Selkirk has; namely, that Pedley wanted to bribe these Indians and led them to believe they would get this money, in addition to whatever price they got for their land. I know a little about Indians; I have seen some of them, although I am not so familiar with them as my hon. friend from Selkirk, who is particularly familiar with the St. Peter's Reserve. But the Indian as a rule is a pretty shrewd man, and I have no doubt the Indians knew perfectly well that that $5,000 was a payment on account of the purchase price for the lands being surrendered, and that it was not in addition at all. The hon. member for Selkirk knows that perfectly well. That is the sum and substance of the charge of fraud, in so far as the department is concerned. With the exception of this $5,000, I have never heard of any other charge being brought against the department. I venture to say that not a court in the land would hold the officials of the department guilty of fraud on the evidence that has been produced by the hon. member for Selkirk from time to time. What is the other charge he makes? He says the meeting was only advertised for a very short time.

Mr. BRADBURY: Twenty-four hours.

Mr. MARTIN: I cannot lay my finger upon it, but I understand the provision is that the meeting shall be called in accordance with the regulations of the band. What were the regulations of this band? I do not know, my hon. friend has not told us. In looking over this report I find that the judges expressed the opinion that sufficient notice of the meeting was not given, but they distinctly say that, so far as the evidence was concerned, they could not say that it was not called in accordance with the regulations of the band. Further, to substantiate the belief that the Indians were notified, there is the fact that, at the meeting, out of 223 men who were entitled to vote 205 were present.

Mr. BRADBURY: The hon. gentleman has not got the vote right. There were 289 qualified votes in St. Peter's band at the time, and 205 were present.

Mr. MARTIN: Two hundred and twenty-three are the figures I have but I may be mistaken. At any rate 205 out of 289 is a fairly good representation. In so far as any proceedings in court are concerned, I venture the opinion that the whole matters simmers down, not to a question of fraud at all, but to the question of the interpretation of section 49 of the Indian Act; and in the report that was presented to the Manitoba Government by the commission of judges appointed by that province, one of the three judges puts an altogether different interpretation on that clause from the other two. Two of the judges say that a majority of the whole band must vote at the meeting. The other one says that the proper interpretation is that the vote must be supported by a majority of those present at the meeting. Let me read the clause to the House:

> Except as in this Parliament otherwise provided, no release or surrender of a reserve, or a portion of reserve, held for the use of the Indians of any band, or of any individual Indian, shall be valid or binding, unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of twenty-one years, at a meeting or council thereof summoned for that purpose.

As I said, one of the judges appointed by the province of Manitoba saw fit to interpret the section to this effect: that a majority of those present was all that was required. The other two say that that is not correct. So there we have at least a difference of opinion among judges who are eminently qualified to express an opinion upon the interpretation of that clause. When you consider that every surrender of a reserve has, up to the time of the surrender of the St. Peter's Reserve, always been carried out on that basis, I think we are justified in coming to the conclusion that a proper interpretation was placed upon that clause, especially in view of the fact that three judges of the land disagree on the matter.

Mr. BRADBURY: If that is right, would it not have been a very easy matter for the Indian Departmnt to submit the case to the courts for decision? But they would not do that.

Mr. MARTIN: I am not here to criticise the old Administration, but I would say this to my hon. friend: he has spent, and to my mind wasted, a tremendous amount of the time of this House and of his own time during three or four years. If the interpretation placed upon that Act by the ex-Minister of the Interior was not correct, why did not my hon. friend's friends rectify it as soon as they came into power?

Mr. BRADBURY. They should have done so.

Mr. MARTIN: The matter appears to me to be this way. There are a great many innocent purchasers of this land. My hon. friend does not mean to say that all the men who purchased this land from the Indians were guilty of fraud. No; a large proportion of them are innocent purchasers. That being the case, it is very difficult for me to understand how the Provincial Government can step in to the Land Titles Office and say: You shall not issue patents to the hundreds of men who have purchased the land quite innocently. In order to make political capital out of this matter against the late Government, and in an endeavour to show that the late Governmeent did not deal fairly with the Indians and the natural resources of this country, my hon. friend resorted to the Roblin Government for the purpose of creating a political furore about this particular surrender. And now the chickens are coming home to roost.

Mr. BRADBURY: As I understood it from the Registrar General, the Manitoba Government had absolutely nothing to do with it. It was the Registrar General himself on his own responsibility, because he is responsible to the Government for every title he issues, and my hon. friend as a lawyer knows that.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. BARDBURY: It is absolutely right.

Mr. MARTIN: The Government of Manitoba is responsible.

Mr. BRADBURY: The Government of Manitoba is responsible to the people, and the Registrar General to the Government. The consequence was that when the Rigistrar General refused to issue those titles, the Government in its own defence appointed this commission to demonstrate whether the Registrar General was justified in what he was doing. That explains the situation if I understand it correctly, and I think I do. That is the only attempt the Manitoba Government made to get this matter settled, and if the commission had found out that the patents had been issued properly and the surrender taken legally, there would have been no question about it.

Mr. MARTIN: The Manitoba Government and the hon. member for Selkirk, for the purpose of making political capital out of this question and throwing discredit on the late Government, got the Registrar General to refuse to issue the patents.

Mr. BRADBURY: No man can dictate to Mr. McAra, the Registrar General of Manitoba.

Mr. MARTIN: The Government of the province of Manitoba appointed a commission of three judges for the purpose of seeing what kind of a surrender this was, and to investigate the charges of fraud. The judges all expressed the opinion that there was no fraud at all on the part of the Indian Department. You can read the report from one end to the other and you will not find a word as to fraud on the part of the Indian Department. So it is a question of the interpretation of section 49 of the Indian Act, and that is all there is to it, and that seems to me a very small question to have taken up so much of the time of the House in the last six or seven years. There was a time, when, listening to the remarks of my hon. friend at such extended length, I began to think that there might be something wrong. Having taken occasion to look into the matter I came to the conclusion then, as I believe to-day that section 49 is absolutely the only thing that is at issue in connection with this whole matter. I venture the opinion that in the case that is before the Exchequer Court to-day, unless some fraud can be established against some one or more of these purchasers, every one of them will get his patent.

Now let us consider for a moment what took place in connection with the sale. My hon. friend says that this land is worth $2,500,000. He knows that when he says that he talks rubbish. It means $50 or $60 per acre for ordinary farm land. Does my hon. friend say that that land is as valuable as land on Portage Plains or in the Neepawa district?

Mr. BRADBURY: Yes, I mean to say that no land in Manitoba is as valuable as the St. Peter's Reserve land.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend calls into question the genuineness of the auction sale and casts aspersions upon the conduct of those who had to do with it. It is a difficult matter to carry out an understanding between an auctioneer and 200 or 300 purchasers at an auction sale. My hon. friend says that a great many foreigners went to this sale expecting to be able to get some farm land. How did they expect to get cheap farm land at St. Peter's Indian Reserve when, according to the hon. gentleman, that land was worth $50 or $60 an acre? In any event, in so far as the Indians were concerned, they got 25,000 acres of land. I do not know how many acres were sold; I understand that 25,000 acres were sold, but my hon. friend says that there were only 15,000 acres sold. If there were only 15,000 acres sold then there are 10,000 acres left to the credit of the Indians. At all events they got the benefit of the sale of 15,000 acres of land and the proceeds of that sale go to their credit in the Indian Trust Fund. In addition to that the Indians got 20,000 acres in severalty. At the auction sale 15,000 acres of farm land were sold. There were over a hundred people at that sale, there was open bidding, 15,000 acres of land were purchased and the average price paid was only $5.76 per acre.

Mr. BRADBURY: I would like to correct my hon. friend when he makes the statement that there were over a hundred people at the sale because he is stating something that is absolutely contrary to the fact. There never were more than twenty people at the sale and more than half of them were foreigners.

Mr. MARTIN: The information I have is altogether contrary to that. I was not present, of course, and my hon. friend was not present, and he does not know anything more about it than I do.

Mr. BRADBURY: It took place in my town.

Mr. MARTIN: My information is that the sale was largely attended and my hon. friend's information is that there was a very small attendance. However, we will not delay over that question. As a matter of fact school lands sold in Manitoba in that very same year did not produce any more per acre.

Mr. OLIVER: And the school lands were offered on more favourable terms.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes, under a ten-year term. We know that in the West, where a large quantity of land is put on the market at once, it is not an uncommon thing for ordinary farm land to go fairly cheap at an auction sale. Sometimes cases occur where a piece of land close to a town is offered for sale, a lot of people living in the town want to buy it and the price runs up far beyond the value of farm land. But the fact is that at this auction sale 15,000 acres of land, notwithstanding the fact that every person who dealt in real estate in Winnipeg knew that the sale was going to be held, sold for $5.76 per acre. The people of the town of Selkirk knew that this sale was being held. My hon. friend knew it; why did he not go to the sale with some of his friends and see that the Indians got their just due? In addition to that, the portion of the 20,000 acres that the Indians got in severalty realized from $3 to $20 per acre: It does not appear to me that in connection with this sale the Indians were defrauded. In so far as the question of the Indians being defrauded by purchasers is concerned, if what my hon. friend says is true, it is the duty of the Attorney General's Department of the province of Manitoba to immediately prosecute those men who have defrauded these Indians out of their lands.

Mr. BRADBURY: Do you not think it is the duty of the Indian Department as the guardian of the Indians?

Mr. MARTIN: Well, then my hon. friend has influence with the Indian Department; he might exert it. He has taken three and a half years to get nothing done. The late Government did not do anything on his representations because they did not believe that there was anything whatever in the charges that the hon. gentleman made. When the judgment of the Exchequer Court is given, if these cases ever come to trial, I venture to give my opinion that he will find that there is nothing in them. The Indian will be exactly where he was seven or eight years ago and the town of Selkirk, and the purchasers who have been held up for their patents, will be exactly in the same position as they were in seven or eight years ago. In one of the articles quoted by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) the statement was made that the town of Selkirk has lost seven or eight years of its development by reason of the agitation which has been carried on.

My hon. friend says that the Indians were further defrauded in that they were not given a chance to get their patents direct but that somebody else got them. My information is that there were 400 patents issued for each one of which the Indian Department obtained a receipt and that these receipts are in the Department of Indian Affairs to-day. The department refused to recognize the assignment of an Indian's rights to another and they insisted on forwarding the patent directly to the Indian and getting his receipt. For that purpose the patents were sent to the Indian agent at Selkirk, he got the receipts immediately and the receipts are on file here. What fraud is there in that? In connection with the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve, the only question that has ever come before the committee at any time is the question as to whether or not the word "majority" in section 49 of the Indian Act means a majority of the men present at the meeting or a majority of the men who are entitled to vote in the tribe.

Mr. KYTE: Has the minister had any recent correspondence with the authorities in Sydney relative to the proposal to remove the Indians from the reserve near that city?

Mr. ROCHE: I do not think there is any recent correspondence. The last I remember was received during the last session of Parliament.

Mr. KYTE: No action has been taken?

Mr. ROCHE: No.

British Columbia—to provide a further amount for the relief of destitute Indians, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the present condition of the Indians of the Kitsilano reserve, where are they located and what reports has the minister as to their present financial condition?

[Mr. W. M. Martin.]

Mr. ROCHE: There is no change in the situation as compared with what it was when we were discussing this question a year ago. The Indians were removed from the reserve and they went to other reserves, I understand. I have not heard that there has been any bad effect from the payment to the Indians to secure the surrender any more than there was in the case of the Indians in the neighbourhood of Victoria on the Songhees reserve. The case at the present time is before the Royal Commission. They have not adjudicated yet upon the case and that is the reason why I have nothing further to report than I brought to the attention of the House last session.

Mr. OLIVER: The reason I ask in regard to the condition of these Indians is because of the difference in their situation from that of the Songhees Indians. The Songhees Indians were paid for one reserve and given another. The Kitsilano Indians were paid by the British Columbia Government, and they were not given another reserve. I was anxious to know exactly what had become of them, where they were located now and what their financial circumstances were. The minister will bear in mind that there is a very radical difference between the two conditions. The Songhees have a definite reserve to which they have clear title and which they are now in occupation of, whereas the Kitsilano Indians, so far as I know, have no reserve.

Mr. STEVENS: I think I can explain the matter if the minister will permit me. The hon. member is mistaken in the statement that the Kitsilano Indians have no reserve to go to. There are about half a dozen small reserves around Vancouver to which the Squamish band belongs, and I think that is the general name of the band. Only a very few of the Indians who claimed a right in the Kitsilano reserve, actually live on the reserve, and the rest are nomads so far as that reserve is concerned. Sometimes they go up the north shore of Burrard inlet to the Squamish mission, sometimes to the Kapilano reserve or the Seymour reserve, so that they are not homeless in any sense. They have the other sections of the district to which they go and where they are now living, and they are, as far as I know, living in very good circumstances. I do not know of any evil effects having come to the Indians from the transaction.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. member's explanation is hardly adequate. If all the small reserves belong to the one band, the whole of the band had a right to share in any distribution of money in regard to one part of it.

Mr. STEVENS: That would not follow.

Mr. OLIVER: It does follow then that those of the Kitsilano band who received the money on account of that reserve have no equal rights with the Indians occupying the other parcels of land said to be under the control of the Squamish band. My hon. friend cannot have it both ways. Either the band as a whole should have been paid for that reserve, or those of the band who were paid have not equal rights with the other members of the band in the other reserves, and as a matter of fact they are either trespassers on the other smaller reserves or they are there on suffrance by the members of those bands. It is quite likely that Indians who have received large payments such as they did are very welcome amongst their fellows, and very likely their circumstances are entirely satisfactory; but their condition is not parallel to that of the Indians of the Songhees Reserve. Has there been any assumption of occupation or ownership on the part of the Government of British Columbia in the Kitsilano Reserve?

Mr. ROCHE: No.

Mr. OLIVER: Does the Department of the Interior assert and exercise supervision and control in the matter of necessary protection of property and so on upon that reserve at the present time.

Mr. ROCHE: The position of the Department of the Interior is exactly as it was prior to the surrender of that reserve to the Provincial Governm nt. We have not recognized that surrender in any way, shape, or form. Our position is exactly the same as though the surrender had not taken place.

Mr. OLIVER: That is hardly the answer I wished for, although I do not want to press the matter too strongly. After the Indians vacated the reserve, the public press stated that the buildings and property of the Indians were destroyed by the order of the British Columbia Government without the authority of the Department of Indian affairs for the Dominion. I would think that is a very undesirable condition; and while I do not wish to press too strongly, the question that I wish to ask is: Does the department of my hon. friend simply ignore that reserve and the conditions on it, as it did at the time the negotiations were being made for the transfer of the Indians and at the time of the destruction of the houses or does it give the officers of tthe department instructions to exercise supervision and control upon that property with a view of protecting it until such time as the commission reports?

Mr. ROCHE: As I say, there has been no change. No instructions have been given other than those which the agent received and was exercising prior to the surrender. As the hon. gentleman has stated, what few houses there were have been burned. The Indians have left the reserve. There is practically no jurisdiction to exercise; that is, there are no Indians to supervise; there is no property to protect, and the duty of the agent there would not be of a very onerous character.

Mr. OLIVER: The question that I wanted to ask and that I think I may consider has been answered by the minister is whether the Indian Department of the Federal Government, or the Government of British Columbia exercises proprietary rights in the reserve. I would be bound to conclude that it is the Government of British Columbia which exercises those proprietary rights at the present time, and not the Department of Indian Affairs.

Department of the Interior—Scientific institutions—construction and installation of a large reflecting telescope for the Dominion Astronomical Observatory (Western branch)—Further amounted required, $4,939.80.

Mr. OLIVER: How much is this excursion of ours to the stars going to cost?

Mr. ROCHE: The land on which this telescope is to be erected is to cost rather more than was estimated. The British Columbia Government promised to pay $10,000 towards the purchase as well as build the roads which are estimated to cost over $20,000. The land cost $14,939, and it is this excess of cost that we are now asking for. The telescope itself cost in the neighbourhood of $90,000.

Mr. OLIVER: And how much will the building and installation cost?

Mr. ROCHE: We are not going on except by piecemeal. We are not now building any buildings except such as are absolutely necessary. We estimate that the cost of buildings and telescope will be in the neighbourhood of $100,000.

Dominion lands and parks—to pay the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company, successors to the Canadian Northwest Irrigation Company, compensation for deficiency in area, $43,439.34, and interest at 5 per cent per annum on over-payment of $36,707.43, from 12th June, 1909, to 31st August, 1914, $9,579.13, $53,018.47.

Mr. ROCHE: The Government had made an arrangement with the Canadian Northwest Irrigation Company for the sale of 500,000 acres of land on irrigation conditions at $3 per acre, with a rebate of $2 per acre on the works being completed. Their interests were transferred to the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company, but it was found that in the area set aside the requisite number of acres were not to be had, as they had not taken into consideration that there were school lands which can only be sold by public auction. Therefore, the company got only about 467,000 acres, and they applied to the late Government for permission to select elsewhere, but were refused. They had considerable negotiation both with the late Government and with the present Government for a refund, and this vote is for the refund.

Dominion land and parks—Canadian national parks—further amount required, $32,000.

Mr. ROCHE: This is to pay several items. There is a balance of the amount of extras on the bath-house at Banff. It was estimated at $100,000, but will cost $117,000. The contract was $110,000, and there are extras of $2,219, plus architect's fees, $5,610, or a total cost of $117,829, leaving a balance over the estimate of $17,829. Then we had to provide for expenses in connection with a very large forest fire at Yoho park. We had also to undertake works in connection with the Banff water supply. The Banff hotels have in the past paid on a fixed basis. The use of water has largely increased, and on the expiry of contracts, it has been deemed advisable to install meters in hotels, livery stables, etc., and to charge on the basis of the water used.

Immigration—relief other than seed grain for settlers in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, $1,275,000.

Mr. ROCHE: This is to cover the months that run into the fiscal year 1916. We have provided for relief for April, May and June.

Dominion lands and parks—to pay the balance of expenses connected with the moving of the residences of the people of the town of Frank, Alberta—revote, $13,839.32.

Mr. ROCHE: The Dominion Lands and Park.

[Mr Roche.]

Mr. OLIVER: Has the town been entirely removed?

Mr. ROCHE: Not yet.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it in contemplation to provide for entire removal?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes, I understand so.

Mr. OLIVER: Does the removal progress at the option of the citizens or how?

Mr. ROCHE: Some of the citizens requested the Government to have it removed. The provincial authorities and the owners have been contributing towards the expenses. The total expense has been $69,200, of which the Provincial Government provides $20,000, the owners $19,200 and this Government $30,000.

Progress reported.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

PROPOSED GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

On motion of Hon. Frank Cochrane (Minister of Railways and Canals) Bill No. 119, to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Progress reported.

CHARLES ISAAC ALEXANDER DIVORCE BILL.

Mr. GEORGE McCRANEY (Saskatoon) moved:

That the Bill from the Senate, for the relief of Charles Isaac Alexander, be referred back to the Committee on Private Bills for further consideration.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Would my hon. friend explain why this motion is thought to be necessary?

Mr. McCRANEY: This is a Divorce Bill which stands in my name. The evidence has been taken, it has passed the Senate, and it came before this House this morning and received the first and the second reading. It was referred to the Committee on Private Bills. The Committee on Private Bills considered it this morning, and I understand it was thrown out by a vote of 7 against the Bill to 6 in its favour. On behalf of the petitioner in whose interest the Bill is before the House, I would like the Bill to have some further consideration from the committee, which was small and which might on another occasion come to another conclusion.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The sum of it seems to be that the committee did meet and met properly and did consider the Bill and gave it proper consideration and passed upon it. This action, if it were carried out, would make these committees continuous according to the wishes of members on either side of the House. What I mean is that it seems rather a strong proceeding, just after the committee has met and come to a conclusion and reported, that the matter should be referred back to it. Perhaps my hon. friend would let it lie until Saturday and bring it up then.

Mr. McCRANEY: I am in the hands of the House, because what I ask for must be done with the consent of the House. I did not wish to be here on Saturday.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: If some hon. gentleman would take it up for my hon. friend on Saturday, I think it would be better to leave it over until then.

Motion stands.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 110, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1, section 61—Dominion Elections Act amended:

Mr. PUGSLEY: Perhaps the minister would explain the purpose of the Bill and what the changes are?

Mr. DOHERTY: This is the Bill reported by the committee that was appointed to inquire into the Dominion Elections Act and the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, and to suggest amendments to them. The Bill is the result of the considerations of the committee, and has been unanimously submitted to the House. I do not wish it to be understood that the committee was absolutely wedded to the provisions of this Bill, although those provisions commended themselves to their judgment. We placed the Bill before the House, of course expecting that it will be considered, and we are quite open to receive any suggestions. The first section of the proposed Bill repeals or amends section 61 of the Dominion Elections Act, which is a section which provides the oath to be administered in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, there being special provisions for the method of carrying on an election in these provinces. The substantial effect of this clause is that the provisions of section 62, in so far as the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are concerned, are repealed, and it is the repeal of those sections that leads to the other provisions that are contained in this particular section. Under the section repealed there is a provision whereby a voter presenting himself at the poll, even although his name be not upon the lists that have been prepared by enumerators under the special provisions for those provinces, may be sworn by the deputy returning officer as to his qualifications, and may, upon his swearing to his qualifications, be permitted to vote. The present provision would repeal that, and the consequence of repealing that necessitates an alteration in the oath to be administered to the voter in those provinces, making applicable the oath administered in other provinces where there is no such provision.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It does not repeal this, it only amends it by providing what oath may be administered.

Mr. DOHERTY, So far as the oath is concerned, it is amended by providing that the oath that may be put to these persons by reason of the fact that there was a provision that a man might be allowed to vote on his merely taking an oath of his qualifications, not being on a list at all, being repealed, then, instead of prescribing the oath "x", which is the oath of qualification, the prescription is that he shall take the usual oath as taken in the other provinces; but the provision of the Act under which he may be allowed to vote, although on no list, merely by taking an oath that he is a qualified person, is repealed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What section repeals that?

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 62 is amended by striking out "provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta." Section 62, as it reads now, provides that in the Yukon territory and in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, a man will be allowed to present himself and to vote upon taking the oath of qualification. We repeal it as regards the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta by striking out of that section the words "the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan," leaving the provision standing, but only as applicable to the Yukon territories.

Mr. TURRIFF: In repealing those clauses as they apply to Saskatchewan and Alberta, is it the intention of the Government to adopt the provincial list in connection with Dominion elections?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no provision in the Bill altering the other provisions of the Act as they now stand.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the report of the committee making the recommendations upon which the Bill is founded a unanimous report?

Mr. DOHERTY: As I explained before my colleague came in, while the committee was unanimous in submitting the Bill, we did not wish it to be understood that we were absolutely wedded to these provisions. We present them to the House with perfectly open minds as to any suggestions that may come as to their desirability. While I think the provisions commended themselves to the judgment of the committee, upon such examination as we were able to make and with such information as we had, we shall of course be glad to profit by the possibly greater knowledge of hon. gentlemen from the provinces concerned, who are certainly in a better position to judge of the conditions there than at least I should be.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I was one of the members of the special committee which had under consideration the Controverted Elections Act and the Dominion Elections Act. In considering the Controverted Elections Act it became necessary, of course, to give some consideration to the Dominion Elections Act, and, as the minister has stated, the first three or four clauses were unanimously concurred in for presentation to the House. As the first two clauses of the Bill have occassioned some little comment from hon. members from the Western provinces since being brought down to the House, I might say that these amendments came up accidently and incidentally, and we gave very little consideration to the matter indeed. During our consideration of the several clauses of the Dominion Elections Act, one member of the committee pointed out that in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and the Yukon, additions might be made to the electoral franchise list up to and including the very day of polling. Although I believe that is a provision of the Act, it was a revelation to me. It struck me as being an absurd provision in these days, and particularly as regards the old provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and I still say that it is a misfortune that such a provision should be in the Act. Further, I have since recognized that we failed to give consideration to other sections of the Bill relative to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the Yukon territory. That is Part II of the Bill. Under the system of electoral registration prevailing in those two provinces and the Yukon, provision is made for the registration of electors, but they have to register within a period of eight days. There is a further provision that on election day any person claiming to be an elector may enroll and poll his vote upon taking the oath. When we were considering this Bill in the committee I myself was under the impression that these provisions were supplemental to the provincial electoral lists, or that there was a more comprehensive method of enrolling electors, and I was not sympathetic towards the continuance in the statute of a provision enabling electors to enroll on election day. I would consider that an unfortunate provision in the law of any country, unless there were very good reasons for it. Since my attention has been called to it, it is quite apparent to me that these amendments would be unfair in the circumstances, unless the provincial lists were adopted, or a more comprehensive system of enrolment of electors was contained in the statute. I think that the members of the committee failed to take that into consideration. I should very gladly vote for an amendment to the Dominion Elections Act, if that could be done easily, making the provincial lists applicable for Dominion purposes, or adding further provisions providing for a longer time during which to enroll. But I recognize that in order to make both these amendments or either of them would take a great deal of time, and delay the Bill unduly. I would therefore suggest to the minister the withdrawal of sections 1, 2 and 3 of Bill 110. It is quite true that the committee were unanimous in recommending these sections to the House, and no one more than another was responsible for that. As soon as it was suggested I readily concurred, together with my colleague from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), who was on the same committee. I do trust, however, that in the circumstances it will be agreeable to the minister to withdraw these provisions from the Bill.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I understood it in the committee, these sections were adopted principally by reason of the hearty approval of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean), and I think likewise of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell).

Mr. CARVELL: With a slight reservation.

Mr. DOHERTY: Possibly. Personally I confess I relied largely on their view of the matter. However, if it appears that those who come from the western provinces directly affected, and who are much more familiar with conditions there than I and the majority of the members of the committee pretend to be, look upon these provisions as undesirable, I would not for a moment insist on pressing the suggested amendment. I may point out that I do not think it would be proper to drop entirely the section, because part of its purpose was to amend an error that is evidently in the present statute, in so far as it refers to the oath that is to be taken by persons who are not on the list. Secton 63 of the present Act provides:

Every person whose name is on the voters' list, unless sworn as in the next preceding section provided, shall before being permitted to vote, if required by any candidate, agent or elector, take the oath No. 1 in form Z.

On turning up oath No. 1 in form Z it will appear at once that what it was intended to say was oath No. 2 in form Z, and I think the statute ought to be amended so as to meet that requirement. Oath No. 1 in form Z is the oath that would be required of a person who was not upon the list at all, whereas evidently the oath that is intended is oath No. 2 form Z—the oath against bribery—because it is applicable to a man whose name is on the list. We retain that in any event. We do not interfere with the law which permits a man to swear his qualifications there and then. We are retaining section 62 of the Act, but subsection 2 of the Bill provides that section 62 is to be amended by substituting the word "two" for the word "one" in the fourth line thereof. The rest of that subsection might very well be dropped.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: Would the minister please read the oath of the voter whose name is not on the list?

Mr. DOHERTY: The oath to be taken by the voter whose name is not on the list is as follows:

You do swear that you are of the male sex and a British subject, that you are not an Indian, you are of the full age of twenty-one years, and that you have resided in the province of Saskatchewan or Alberta or the Yukon territory (as the case may be) for at least twelve months, and (in case of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta) in this electoral district for at least three months, immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election, and that you are now resident in this polling division, (the last ten words shall be omitted from the oath in the case of a person voting under section 59 or in Yukon territory.) So help me God.

That oath is intended to be taken by a person who, not being on the list, not having been enumerated, is allowed to vote because he swears that he has the necessary qualifications, whereas section 63 deals with the oath which is intended to be administered to the person whose name is on the voter's list. It is quite evident that it was intended by this section to require the person whose name is on the voter's list to take the oath that he was qualified to vote and that he had not received any money or reward for his vote. That oath, I think we ought to retain.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: Speaking from memory, I think there is something in the general Act which provides that where a person has voted in the name of a voter, and the real voter comes along afterwards, the latter is entitled to vote. In that case the ballots are kept separate. May I ask the minister now how a case of that kind is dealt with in the West? Will the ballots of those persons who tendered their votes under these circumstances be placed in the box with the other ballots or will they be placed in a separate envelope?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think it is possible for that situation to arise. There is a provision under which track can be kept of two men each claiming to be the voter whose name is on the list. However, in this case the question does not arise of one man trying to represent that he is another man and therefore entitled to vote. The man whose name is not on the list simply takes the oath that he is entitled to vote.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: Ten or twenty men might go to a polling place, take the oath and vote whether their names were on the list or not.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: There was at one time such an Act in the unorganized district of Ontario but time proved that it was rather a bad Act and it was elminated from the statutes.

Mr. CARVELL: I would imagine that if the proposed amendment to the Act as applied to Saskatchewan and Alberta were withdrawn section 63a in the new Bill would also have to be either withdrawn or amended. I think that was the question that the minister was speaking to. There is evidently a mistake in the law as it reads. This was all threshed out in the committee but it will be made plain to any hon. gentleman who will follow the section as it is. In the Elections Act there is a particular part called part two which applies to Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Yukon Territory. Sections 31 to 65 apply exclusively to these provinces and this territory. Section 61 provides for the oath which may be administered in these two provinces and reference to form Z is in two parts. Part 1 is the oath that a person must take who claims to have the right to vote because he is a resident. That is the man who was referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) a few moments ago. A man comes up and says I am a resident of Alberta, I have been here for a year, or whatever time may be required, my name is not on the list and I demand the right to vote. Then he would take what is called oath No. 1 in form Z. Then, if some other person wants to challenge him on the ground that he has been guilty of bribery, he takes oath No. 2 in form Z. Oath No. 2 in form Z is practically the same as the general oath in form Y. If you abolished the right of a man to swear in his vote you would abolish the whole of form Z and bring him under the general law by which a man might be called upon to take the bribery oath as prescribed in form Y. If you go back to the original condition of affairs you must leave in form Z. But there is a mistake made in section 63 because it says:

> Every person whose name is on the voters' list, unless sworn as in the next preceding section provided, shall before being permitted to vote, if required by any candidate, agent or elector, take the oath number one in Form Z.

If a man's name is on the list he should not be required to take the oath No. 1 because No. 1 is the oath which the man takes if his name is not on the list. I do not think that is what it was intended to provide for. The man whose name is on the list has the right to vote provided he takes the proper oath which is Form Z 2. You would have to change the word "one" in the fourth line of section 63 to the word "two" and then it would provide that the voter should take oath No. 2 instead of No. 1.

Mr. McCRANEY: Suppose a name is improperly on the enumerator's list as far as qualification goes, may the man not be challenged and may he not be required to take oath No. 1 as well as oath No. 2?

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. CARVELL: That was not our idea.

Mr. TURRIFF: I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) are in error in imagining that there is a mistake in the present Act because there is none. You must remember that the list made in Saskatchewan and Alberta has nothing in common with the list you have in other parts of Canada. This is simply a pen and ink list which is made after the proclamation has been issued and it must be posted up eight days before the election. Any man may go to the enumerator and ask to have his name put on. The enumerator as a rule does not swear that man or make any particular effort to satisfy himself that the man is entitled to vote and the name goes on the list whether the applicant is entitled to vote or not. Many a name is put on these individual lists. There is a special list for each polling division. In my own constituency last election there were 111 enumerators appointed. The idea of the oath is all right. Many names may be put on the list of persons who are not entitled or qualified to vote, men who may not be British subjects, may not have resided a year in the province and may not have resided three months in the electoral district. It is very necessary to keep that oath as it is. If you want to provide further that, in addition to taking that oath of qualification, each voter who is not on the list, should also be sworn as to bribery, there is no objection as to that. That could be done as it is; but if it cannot be done, there will be no objection to having a man whose name is not on the list take both the oaths. I can quite understand my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and other members of the committee who are not from either Saskatchewan or Alberta not realizing what they were doing when they proposed to put in these amendments, which would put the elections simply into the hands of a large number of enumerators who might be good enumerators or who might be bad ones. I do not like the present system of making the lists that we have in Alberta and Saskatchewan. The time has come when there should be a better system. Those provinces are old enough and settled up enough now to have the same system as is followed in the other provinces. It is very awkward for a candidate to come up on the day of an election and have no idea as to who is on the voters' list. If you are to do away with the right of a man to vote by coming up on election day and putting his name on the list, then you must have a proper provision for the making of the list and the revision of the list. There is at present no provision for the revision of the list by the enumerator at each polling division.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Yes, there is.

Mr. TURRIFF: I beg your pardon. Any one can go to an enumerator and ask him to put on or to take off certain names, but he does not need to do so. Until you have a proper list, of which there would be a proper revision, you must leave in the statute that provision by which a bona fide voter, who is perfectly entitled to vote but whose name is left off the pen and ink list inadvertently or by design, may go up on election day take the oath that he is qualified and that he has not been bribed, and register his vote.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is there any provincial list?

Mr. TURRIFF: There is a provincial list in the province of Saskatchewan, but not in the province of Alberta.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The hon. member for Assiniboia contends that under section 62 new names may be added to the voter's lists up to and including election day. Before a vote is registered, the oath must be put to the voter under section 63.

Mr. TURRIFF: Yes.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The proposed change in this Act was probably made by the committee in consequence of certain conditions that I pointed out to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and subsequently to the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean). During all the elections that I have seen in western Canada—and they have all been conducted under the auspices of hon. gentlemen opposite—the conditions now imposed by the statute have tended to two things: first, to a limitation of the exercise of the franchise by those who should exercise it, and, secondly, to corruption of the worst type. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B., was very much impressed with the fact when I went over the Act and showed it to him, and for that matter so was the hon. junior member for Halifax. I then directed the attention of the committee to the matter without having consulted any of my colleagues on this side of the House, and without having discussed it with them in any way, shape or form. I have said frequently in elections that have been held in the West that, if I ever had an opportunity, I would endeavour, so far as I could, to have a list prepared that would be a final list upon which an election might be held. The primary reason for that was that I had observed during all the elections that were held while I was in the West, numbers of men brought in from the outside, in many instances gangs of workmen on railways and in some instances other men, taken to the polls, sworn in and their ballots put into the box, although their names were not on the list. They left immediately after having voted, and to know exactly where they resided would be a somewhat difficult proposition. That condition of affairs grew up in the West, because in the first instance, as in all other unorganized territories, all that was necessary for a man to do to enable him to vote was to go up and swear his vote in. In the early days in the Northwest Territories, all a man had to do was to swear that he had lived twelve months in the Northwest Territories and three months in the particular electoral district, and his ballot was put into the box and he went away. I will give a well-known case. It occurred before I went West, but it has been authenticated. Certain people gathered together a couple of hundred men and they voted them four times at four different polls. This happened before 1896. They put the men on a train and took them to one poll and voted them there. Then they put them on the train again and took them to another poll and voted them there, and so on, so that there were between 700 and 800 votes polled at four different places, but the voters were all the same 200 men. All they had to do was to swear their votes in and drop their ballots into the box. In due time enumerators were appointed. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) is wrong in his statement. The enumerators do sit as a court of revision. Under the law as it now stands, as soon as a writ is issued, the returning officer under certain conditions appoints enumerators; but if he does not do that, prior to the date of the issue of the writ, the Governor in Council may appoint enumerators. An enumerator may sit for one polling division or for three or four. What is his duty? Before commencing to discharge it, he has to take an oath that he will do his duty, and put on the list the name of every person in his polling district who has lived twelve months, say in the province of Alberta and three months in the electoral district. He is then compelled to post up a copy of the list in the post office and to put at the foot of it a notice saying that he will sit two hours a day, naming the time and the place, for the purpose of revising the list. He must certify to that list and send it to the returning officer for the district before the hour of eight o'clock on the morning of the election, in order that it may be completed. I think it was not the immediate predecessor of the present Minister of Justice who put section 65 into the Act. Section 65 reads:

> Every voter shall be entitled to vote, whose name is on the voters' list and has not been erased therefrom, in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Part.

In other words, as the law now stands, the list itself is to be taken as conclusive proof of the voter's right to vote. That section was put upon the Statute Book, I think, about 1903 or 1904. As regards this provision there is no man living in the West, who desires to have a clean, decent election who does not know that it means just the opposite of a clean, decent election. I appeal to my hon. friend for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). Has he not seen many men brought in to a district and kept at a hotel overnight and taken up to a polling station next day and voted? That is a bad thing for the body politic and a bad thing for democracy. I directed the attention of the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. junior member for Halifax to these provisions, and they thought it wrong to have such provisions as those in the Statute Book.

Later, in consequence of what was said to them by their fellow-members from western Canada as to the inadequacy of proper revision of the list by enumerators without right of appeal to a district court or other judge, they felt they were doing an injustice to their friends from the West. So I say, as I said in the committee, I am not pressing it. If it is felt that it will work an injustice, and if it will prevent any man from having a vote who ought to vote, I am content that it should be withdrawn. But I do say this Parliament should not permit a Franchise Act of this kind to stand upon the statute book.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Not any longer than we can help.

Mr. BENNETT: No. The right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has asked whether there is a list. In Saskatchewan they have a provincial list. Alberta ever since the year after it became a province has had provision for a list, but the law was not to come into force until after proclamation issued, and year after year no proclamation has issued. There could not be anything in election processes more disgraceful than that which takes place in a provincial election under the present law. There is an enumerator for each polling place, and members can imagine what takes place in a local or Dominion election. Writs are issued and a returning officer is appointed. That returning officer is immediately surrounded by the hungry seekers for some sort of office, and I am not speaking of one side more than of another. These people want to be appointed enumerators, and each presses his claim. Very often the man appointed is a violent partisan. He is the enumerator for a little district in which there are perhaps two hundred voters. He takes the oath of office, and very often proceeds to put on his list as many Liberals or as many Conservatives, according to his partisan leanings, as he can find. In my last election, by reason of that, I had to employ and pay a very large number of men to go from house to house throughout the city of Calgary to get the names of the whole population, and then go to the enumerators and see that the names that had been left off were put on. When I tell you that my own name was left off you will understand to what extremes this leaving off is carried. That may have been an accident, but I am stating what happened. Then, if in addition, you have a railroad gang brought in from British Columbia, after they have polled their votes there, to come to some particular poll in Alberta and vote there, as has been done—swearing in their votes and next morning being in British Columbia so that any attempt to pursue them for perjury is utterly futile—you will see that conditions are bad.

One word more. In section 63 of the Act it is provided that the electors shall take oath No. 1 under form Z. Having regard to the provisions of 62 and 65—I have read 65—it is apparent that sections 62, 63 and 65 are not consistent with one another. Originally, we started to make that little change, and when the discussion took place we arrived at the conclusion that it would be wise to prevent them from swearing in their votes, a provision which is now not to be proceeded with. We shall never have proper elections in Alberta unless we get a decent election law in the province. I was only seeking to show that in their anxiety to pass section 65, the committee omitted to make the amendments necessary to make sections 62, 63 and 65 consistent. Leave the law as it is and you will have an election on the same conditions as before, much as I regret it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Does the hon. gentleman say that it is necessary to amend section 63 now? I wish to call his attention to the fact that apparently that section is to provide a penalty for refusing to take the oath of qualification when put to the voter.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not say that it is going to make a very great difference. But sections 62, 63 and 65, read with section 61, show some little inconsistency, although I think it can be worked out in practice as it has been in the past.

Mr. TURRIFF: Will the hon. gentleman tell me under which sections he finds provision made for the proper revision of the list?

Mr. BENNETT: There are two. Section 48 reads:

> Each such enumerator shall complete, date at his place of residence, and sign the copies of the voters' list or lists as aforesaid, in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, eight days before the polling day....
>
> In either of the said provinces, one of the places where copies of the lists are to be so posted up shall be the post office nearest to the place appointed as the polling station for the polling subdivision, or, if there is no such post office, a conspicuous place outside and adjoining the main entrance to such polling station.

That is the provision about revision of the lists.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 1—repealing provision to enable person not on list to vote in Saskatchewan and Alberta and making form Y apply to those provinces:

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move that the Bill be amended by striking out section 1.

Motion agreed to.

On section 2—changing list of places in which deferred elections may be held:

Mr. PROULX: I move that this Bill be amended by inserting therein the following as section 1:

> 1. Section 70 of the Dominion Election Act, chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:
>
> (h) Any person during the time he is a director of or holds, either directly or indirectly, a controlling interest in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement, expressed or implied, or any unsatisfied claim arising therefrom, with or for or against the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for or against any of the officers of the Government of Canada for which any public money of Canada is to be paid.

Paragraph (d) of section 70 of the Dominion Elections Act says:

> Every person directly or indirectly, alone or with any other person, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement, express or implied, with or for the Government of Canada, on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, during the time he is so holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing.

Any person, therefore, having a contract with the Government, is ineligible as a candidate for election to the House of Commons, but he may be a shareholder or have a controlling interest in an incorporated company which has a contract with the Government, and still be eligible for election. When the Elections Act was first passed, business was not carried on as it is to-day. There were very few incorporated companies then, but now business is carried on mostly by joint stock companies.

Mr. HENDERSON: Is this proposed amendment part of the Bill which the hon. member introduced a few days ago?

Mr. PROULX: Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON: Then I submit that the hon. gentleman is out of order in moving an amendment which embodies provisions contained in a Bill already on the Order Paper.

Mr. PROULX: If the hon. Minister of Justice wants to adopt my amendment, I shall be glad to hand it over to him, or I can have the order discharged for the second reading of the Bill standing in my name. I do not think the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) should take advantage of a technicality in order to rule out an amendment which I think is a proper one.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the point of order raised by the hon. member for Halton is well taken, because the hon. member for Prescott admits that there is on the Order Paper a measure standing in his name, which is the same as the amendment which he proposes to this Bill.

Mr. PROULX: There is a provision in the Senate and House of Commons Act which secures the independence of members of this House; I think the independence of candidates for elections should be secured also.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not understand that in the Senate and House of Commons Act there is at the present time any provision analogous to the provision which the hon. gentleman wants to introduce into this Bill.

Mr. PROULX: A few days ago I presented the Bill standing in my name, but as hon. gentlemen opposite have control of the proceedings of this House I suppose it will be impossible for my Bill to reach its second reading this session. In order to put this provision into effect, however, the Elections Act could be amended first, and the Senate and House of Commons Act afterwards. I would point out that the hon. Minister of Justice adopted the principle of two Bills, in the names of the hon. member for Guysborough and the hon. member for Saskatoon respectively, having in view an amendment of the Criminal Code, while these Bills were on the Order Paper.

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. member is mistaken in that respect. The two Bills to which he refers were referred to a special committee to consider proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, and they came back inserted in a Bill which that committee reported to the House as the result of their deliberations. In this case we are dealing with a Bill that has been reported by a special committee also, and I do not at the moment quite see how I can come to the assistance of the hon. gentleman in what he is endeavouring to do. If he is out of order in proposing this amendment, I should be equally out of order in supporting it. The other Bill, which he says is the same as the proposed amendment, being on the Order Paper, and the Chairman having ruled that that puts this proposal out of order, I do not very well see how I can remedy the situation.

Mr. PROULX: It could be remedied in this way; before this Bill is read the third time, the order for the second reading of the Bill standing in my name could be discharged.

[The Chairman.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Chairman has ruled that this amendment is out of order. I am not prepared to say that the ruling is wrong, but I suggest to the hon. member for Prescott that he look the matter up and, if he is right, then he can move his amendment on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DOHERTY: Perhaps it might be well for us all to accept the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman and look into it more fully.

Mr. PROULX: Then the hon. minister will not press the third reading of the Bill?

Mr. DOHERTY: No. The second section is rendered necessary by the fact that the Representation Act has changed the designations of certain constituencies. Under the Elections Act as it now stands, the constituencies of Comox-Atlin, Kootenay and Yale-Cariboo are enumerated among those constituencies in which elections may be deferred. These three constituencies have been subdivided so as to each form two constituencies. It is not proposed that in all of these new constituencies deferred elections may be held, but simply in three of them, Skeena, West Kootenay and Cariboo.

Mr. OLIVER: It did not appear to me to be necessary to have a deferred election in the old constituency of Kootenay. Then why is it necessary in West Kootenay?

Mr. STEVENS: West Kootenay includes the Big Bend country, away to the north of Revelstoke and Golden, where it is difficult to get about, and it was probably that part of the old district that made it necessary to have a deferred election in Kootenay. Of course the conditions have not changed in that respect in West Kootenay.

Mr. TURRIFF: Are the three constituencies named the only three in the Dominion in which there may be deferred elections?

Mr. DOHERTY: No; under section 86 there may be deferred elections also in Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and Gaspé, in the province of Quebec.

On Section 3—extending provision re death of candidates to Alberta and Saskatchewan:

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Why is that necessary?

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose is to assimilate the law in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to the law as it prevails throughout the rest of the Dominion, in the event of a candidate dying after nomination and before the close of the polls.

Mr. MARCIL: Did the committee give any consideration to the case of Gaspé? Mr. Monk, the late member for Jacques Cartier in this House, gave many facts in support of bringing Gaspé in line with other constituencies. Gaspé now has railway communication, and for the provincial election of 1897, when I had the honour of being a candidate, the nomination was made a month earlier, but the vote was taken on the same day as in the rest of the province.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have to admit that the question of Gaspé did not come before the committee. As I pointed out, the way in which the question presented itself to us was that we were bound to do something to make the description of the British Columbia constituencies correspond with their new boundaries, and we found it was not necessary to defer the elections in the whole six. It was not suggested to us that there was any change in conditions in Gaspé from those which prevailed when the present law was enacted.

Mr. MARCIL: The conditions are very much changed there. We have a daily train service right down to Gaspé Basin, and there is now telegraphic communication with the Magdalen islands. There is provision in the law for a telegraphic proclamation. But if the committee have not considered the matter I would not be prepared to make a suggestion.

On Section 4—hours of polling extended—8 a.m. to 6 p.m.:

Mr. MARCIL: In so far as the rural constituency of Quebec are concerned, this change is not at all necessary. By five o'clock all the votes have been cast, and I have heard members from Nova Scotia say that election day is the longest day in the year.

Mr. EDWARDS: I want to endorse what has been said by the hon. member (Mr. Marcil). It may be advisable to extend the hours in the cities, but I certainly think they should not be extended in the rural districts. The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has expressed my views precisely.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: In justice to the special committee, I must say that this clause, as printed, is really not the recommendation of the committee. During the sittings of the committee, we were approached by representatives of railway organizations, who asked us to make amendments to the Dominion Elections Act, if it were possible, whereby greater facilities for voting could be afforded to that class of electors. Many suggestions were made and considered, but the committee found difficulties attaching to them all. We did consider last session the propriety of affording railway men an opportunity to vote during 24 or 48 hours preceding the day of polling. The idea was that polling booths should be placed at divisional points, but eventually we considered that impracticable. We also considered the suggestion of having the polling booths in cities open for a greater number of hours than is now provided by statute. There were difficulties connected with that suggestion too, although it might possibly be worked out. Then it was thought that we might meet the requests of a great number of railway voters by extending the hours of voting from eight in the morning until a later hour than five in the afternoon. The committee were not at all agreed upon the matter, and at last we concluded to put this section in the Bill, leaving it open to the House to consider. So this clause is not the recommendation of the committee, but was put in more for the purpose of securing an expression of opinion from the House generally as to what should be done.

Mr. NESBITT: In what way would it assist railway men to extend the hours from eight in the morning until after five in the evening? It is very seldom that any votes to speak of are polled in the small cities after four o'clock. In towns like that in which I live, we generally have the vote all polled before five o'clock.

Mr. PROULX: I think this provision will be a good thing in certain parts of the country. For instance, workingmen may work during the noon hour and get off an hour earlier in the evening. If they got off at five o'clock they would be able to vote between five and six. I think that would accommodate a certain number of people.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL: I was one of those who appeared before the committee and suggested this, or some similar amendment. When we look at our law, we find that in the matter of polling we are very many years behind every other country situated as we are, especially as regards affording facilities to the people who live in cities or urban districts to poll their votes. Our law in that respect has never been changed, and the hours have always been from nine in the morning until five at night. Other countries have responded to the requirements of civilization in congested districts, and extended the polling hours so as to give everybody a fair opportunity to poll his vote. Those who have ample time under the present law to poll their votes, should have regard to other people differently situated in different parts of the country, and should be willing to let the polls remain open an hour or two longer than they themselves need, in order to give their fellow citizens an opportunity of polling. England, in 1872, changed the hours to from eight in the morning until eight at night, and that is still the law in England. I have at some trouble gone through the legislation of all the states of the American Union and I think they are almost uniform in keeping the polls open for about that length of time. Australia, since 1903, has had the polls open from eight in the morning until eight at night. There is not only the difficulty about polling votes, but a more far-reaching difficulty than that. I think one-half of the corruption that takes place during an election in a city district is due to the endeavour to poll the vote between the hours at present assigned. To-day, the polls open at nine in the morning; but long before that hour mechanics and artisans, and all working people in fact, are at their work. The ordinary business man, the clerk in the bank or in the insurance office, all the assistants in the down town offices are at work by nine or thereabouts. We must not forget that to-day the urban population of Canada is very large, and I submit that those who are living in country districts should give their fellow-citizens in the cities an opportunity to poll their votes. Under the usual provincial law, a man votes in the district where he sleeps. In the city of Toronto, for instance—and I do not desire to parade Toronto before this House particularly—the great majority of people reside anywhere from two to four or six miles away from their work, and consequently have to leave their homes, close to which they vote, half an hour before they wish to arrive at their place of work. The result is that when the polls open many people have left their homes and gone to work, for they do not desire to lose part of the day, and those who go to the polls see this spectacle: ten, fifteen or thirty men lined up outside the booth, waiting on the convenience of the deputy returning officer, who does not let them in until nine. Are elections held for the convenience of the people or for the convenience of the deputy returning officer? I think the time has come when the polling booths in cities should be open from eight in the morning until eight at night. The ordinary man does not leave his work before five oclock, the working-man at all events, and at five the polls close. If the man is going to get in his vote, he has to rush back to the neighborhood in which he lives, and that takes some time. That is the condition in Toronto and other cities throughout Canada, and I leave it to the judgment of the House whether I am correct or not. In thickly-congested districts, there is one rush to get the vote out. In large cities there is a line of motor-cars waiting at the factory doors to carry voters to the polls. We can form our own opinion whether these are all volunteers or not, but there they are, waiting to take the voters to the polls, and all sorts of influence is used with the proprietors of factories to get them to let some of their men out and to keep some of them in, according to what their political complexion is supposed to be.

Take the example that was mentioned by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). Railway people, commercial travellers and men of that kind are given no opportunty in the morning to poll their votes because they are put on trains, they have to go outside and make their daily runs, they do not, as a rule, come back until after five o'clock, and then the polls are closed against them. An election only takes place one in three, four or five years. Every civilized country I know of keeps the polls open very much longer than we do here. The present condition is wholly unsuited to cities. It leads to corruption, it leads to the bribing of men to go to the polls or to remain away, and tends very greatly to increase the corruption arising from the employing of teams and vehicles to drive men to the polls. The matter contained in this amendment is a subject that I have introduced in this House on many occasions. I have not succeeded in accomplishing anything as yet, but as the country grows, and as we find city people becoming the higher percentage of the whole, so grows the need of legislation of this kind. It has been asked for by the labouring classes of Canada. I do not want to burden people who do not want the polls kept open until later. It might be arranged by the committee that in rural districts the polls shall remain open during the present hours, but that as far as cities are concerned, and ridings of which cities form a part, the polls should be kept open at least from eight in the morning until six at night. These hours are short enough. In the Old Country they find it necessary to close the polls at eight o'clock at night, but as recently as 1913 an amendment was made in the election law extending the time for closing the polls to nine o'clock at night if either candidate or his agent so asks. It is found there that even eight o'clock is not long enough, and the polls are to remain open from seven a.m. until nine p.m. if either candidate or his agent asks for it.

Mr. CARVELL: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONELL: Chapter 6, Imperial Acts, 1913. Since 1872 they have had the polls open from eight in the morning until eight at night. In 1913 they passed an amendment permitting either candidate to request that the polls be opened at seven o'clock and be kept open until nine o'clock at night, showing the growth and tendency of the present age to offer every facility for a man to poll his vote. I think there is nothing more that I could say that would be new on the subject. The matter is before the committee. As I say, this change is needed in cities. If our friends in the rural districts do not want this amendment to the Act, doubtless the committee might think it well to permit the polls in the rural districts to remain open in accordance with the present hours and to remain open in cities at least from eight to six.

Mr. HAZEN: Would the hon. gentleman tell the committee if in Australia they have plural voting?

Mr. MACDONELL: They have proportional representation and several classes of voting there.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: The riding from which I come has a very large railway vote and the inadequacy of the present law to enable the railway vote to be polled has repeatedly been brought to my attention. I certainly am in favour of the extension of the hours of polling. If I could make a suggestion based on my experience, it would be to open the poll as early as six o'clock in the morning in these districts even if it were closed somewhat earlier in the evening. If the poll were opened in cities at six o'clock in the morning voters could go to the poll before going to the work. Another thing that I think would ease the situation is this: Saturday is becoming more and more a public holiday in this country especially for artisans and those who work in factories. If we had the election on Saturday or Monday the great bulk of the voters made up of commercial travellers would get their votes recorded. Many of them now miss the opportunity of voting. They are very sore about that and they have repeatedly called public attention to the fact that they are deprived of their vote. Another thing that could be done would be for the Railway Commission to take charge of the running of all trains,—perhaps some passenger trains—delay them for an hour at the point of starting, and allow the men who wish to do so to vote. In that way a great many votes might be recorded. We must do something in the way of giving these people who are not able to vote now an opportunity to vote. The selection of Saturday—Saturday preferably—or Monday, as the day of voting would do a great deal to remove the present inconvenience. There is no reason why election day should not be the most sacred day in this country. I admire what the French people do in making the recording of their votes practically a religious duty with the people and they vote on Sunday because every person has an opportunity of voting on that day. It might not suit the genius of our people here to have a law such as that but it would be in the line of progress and in line with what they are doing in other countries if we had at least a half holiday on election day and in cities the most convenient day for that half holiday would be Saturday or Monday. If we laid down the principle that we would have our election day either on Saturday or Monday a great many railway men and commercial travellers would have an opportunity of voting for they could go to the polls early in the morning and record their votes.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would my hon. friend delay trains an hour?

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: Passenger trains?

Mr. MACLEAN: I did not say passenger trains. I said that I would like the railway commission to take charge of divisional points, and the despatch of freight trains from divisional points and delay them probably for an hour or hasten them so that the men would get their votes polled. It is easy to speed up trains, it is often done and the men would get their votes polled in that way. But the biggest relief, without any great widening of the law, would be to open earlier in the morning and have the election on Saturday preferably to any other day in the week. It is now largely a half holiday and if we had the election on Saturday the people could go to the polls and have their votes recorded. It is the desire of a great many people to see a change in the law inasmuch as they now lose their votes. Anybody who has been identified with elections, and who has taken part in them, must see that, especially in the larger cities, there is a substantial grievance among large sections of the voters that they are not able to record their votes because of the limited time in which the polls are open, and also the inconvenience caused by the particular day selected.

Mr. BLAIN: I think it will be a surprise to most of the members of this House that any suggestion should be made to extend the hours of polling in rural districts. For my part, I have had some experience in elections and I do not recollect one suggestion from any voter in a rural district that the time should be extended for the opening or closing of the polls. I think a good deal can be said, and already a good deal has been submitted to the committee for consideration, in favour of the proposition that in the larger cities, such as Montreal, Toronto, and possibly other cities in the Dominion, longer hours for polling would be better but for the great mass of the constituencies, which are rural constituencies. I do not think that there has been any suggestion by any of the rural members in support of a proposal of this kind and I was very glad to learn from the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that this was not the matured judgment of the committee, but rather that they were reporting it to the House for its consideration. I would be disposed to think that if such a change in the law were made universal in Canada, applying it to rural districts as well as to cities, the people would be very much opposed to it and feel that it would be a change for the worse rather than for the better.

Mr. CARVELL: As I was a member of the committee, perhaps it might be wise for me to give this committee some idea of the many propositions brought before us from time to time. Many claims were advocated, especially by railway men. We had representations from, I think, the Trades and Labour Council, or at any rate, some body representing railway men, and they presented this proposition in a very strong light. There was a proposal that we open the divisional points the day before an election. I was very sorry the committee did not see its way clear to accept that proposition and work it out. Possibly my personal experience may have led me to be particularly sympathetic along that line, because I had the unpleasant experience of seeing many men put out of my constituency on election day, so that it was impossible for them to register their vote. Possibly other hon. members here have had a like experience. A large number of railway men are not able to cast their votes on election day. It was suggested that, if a box could be arranged for at each divisional point and kept open from noon of the day prior to the election until the close of the election, 90 per cent of the railway men would have the right to vote. An objection was raised to that. Suppose you had only a dozen railway votes at a particular railway point, and the majority voted one way, you would eliminate the idea of secrecy of the ballot. The railway men themselves, however, did not consider that an objection. They were willing to accept all the burdens provided that they had the right to vote.

In justice to myself I may say that I was not able to be present at the last three or four sittings of the committee, being engaged on other committees. The last time I was present at a meeting of this committee, a suggestion was made that seemed a very reasonable one. It was that there should be a provision that the Governor in Council should have the power to decide whether or not the hour should be extended from six o'clock in the morning until eight o'clock in the evening in all cities of Canada having a population of a given amount, I think 100,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: And railway divisional points.

Mr. CARVELL: I am told that the committee at a later session turned that suggestion down, because they felt that in some way the Governor in Council might be charged with not exercising the best discretion. It was perhaps putting an unfair discretion on the Governor in Council. I could not see any harm in that suggestion, because it would give Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver the right to take advantage of that provision. If 100,000 was thought too great, the minimum might be lowered to 75,000. We also discussed the question of giving the right to towns of 50,000; but there are a great many towns in Canada which have a population of 50,000 and which also have country districts incorporated with the cities. Take the city and county of St. John. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) knows that in his constituency there are voters living very nearly 100 miles away from the city of St. John. In the county of Halifax there are voters living some forty or fifty miles away from the city. Therefore we found difficulties in all those cases. It seems to me that some scheme might be worked out by placing the limit at 75,000, and giving the Governor in Council the right to state the electoral districts in which the hours of polling should be extended. I am very much in sympathy with the statement put forward by my hon. friend the member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell), because from my experience of a little town of 4,000 or 5,000, I can quite realize the difficulty of polling a vote in a large city. I can also realize some of the expense entailed on candidates and committee men in getting people from great distances to the polling stations. That difficulty is obviated to some extent in section 5, which reads as follows:

> Every employer shall on polling day give every voter in his employ at least one additional hour for voting other than the noon hour.

That would get around the difficulty to some extent, but still I realize that it does not obviate the difficulty altogether, and that there is a great rush to try to poll the labour vote in big districts within the prescribed time. We discussed another proposition, that in all the cities of say 25,000 or 30,000 or 40,000 or upwards, we might extend the time of polling in the city portion of the constituency to seven or eight o'clock, and allow the country portion of the constituency to close its polls at five, as at present.

Mr. HENDERSON: Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend says "hear, hear"; but let us argue the other side of the question. Let us take the city of Halifax as an illustration. The poll closes at five o'clock. There are telephones throughout the country. The consequence will be that at six o'clock you will know the results of the polling in the whole county of Halifax, and we shall say it is a tie or practically a tie, and that there is one or two hours left to poll the remainder of the votes. The number of votes left would not be very great, and we were afraid —and it is the experience of every man here, and we have all had experience of elections—that there might be redoubled efforts on the part of committee men to poll the votes in the last hour or two. All these matters were considered very carefully by the committee, and we could see some strong reasons against them all unless we made them general. I quite agree with the decision come to by the committee to make a recommendation to the House in order to bring the matter up for discussion; but, personally, I would like to see something done by which the Governor in Council would have the power to extend the time in big cities and allow the remainder of the districts, both rural and urban, to vote within the prescribed hours as at present provided. Certainly in all rural constituencies from eight o'clock in the morning until five o'clock in the afternoon is ample time. In some cases the people, long before five o'clock, are waiting for the hour to come.

Mr. BURNHAM: My instructions are quite different, and they are to ask for an extension of the hours for polling. I listened to the discussion with a great deal of interest, in fact, I might say, curiosity, because I wished to find out the objections to the great general principle of extending the hours of polling and enlarging the opportunity of exercising the franchise. Surely it is incumbent upon those gentlemen who object to state forcibly and clearly why they wish to restrain the opportunity of the people to exercise the franchise.

We are not discussing an Act for the suppression of corruption, but an Act permitting the exercise of the franchise, and therefore it should be as wide as possible. I am amazed at the suggestion of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). The Saturday holiday is earned by the workingman who works an hour longer each day during the week in order to get it, and I have been told by workingmen that if I thought they were going to give up that half holiday for the purpose of electing any politician, I had another think coming. That seems entirely reasonable to me. I am grieved when I think of the personnel of this committee, that they were not able to hatch up something better than this Bill.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: You are on the committee yourself.

Mr. BURNHAM: No.

Mr. CARVELL: You were called before the committee.

Mr. BURNHAM: That is different. It seems to me that if we are in such a bad state in this country that we cannot allow an extended number of hours to the people —who, so far as I know, want that extension—in order that they may reasonably exercise their franchise, then we are in a bad state indeed, especially if we believe that the demon of corruption is going about like a roaring lion. If the railway people cannot vote because they cannot get to the ballot box, let us provide more ballot boxes, but to hang up these necessary reforms because of all sorts of little tupenny ha'penny objections seems to me inconsistent with the dignity of this House.

Mr. KEMP: In the last elections held in the province of Ontario for the legislative assembly the polls were opened at eight o'clock and closed at five o'clock in the afternoon in cities of two hundred thousand population and over. That amendment was adopted, I understand, because of the growth of Toronto, which is the only city in Ontario having a population of two hundred thousand. In this country, where our cities are growing up so rapidly, and where the desire of the people is to get out into the suburbs where they may have cheaper rentals, a great many people—clerks, labouring people, employers and others—live at a distance from the centre and must spend perhaps three-quarters of an hour or an hour in going from their place of occupation to the poll where their votes must be cast. I think the time has come when an exception ought to be made in respect of cities of say two hundred thousand population or over. I would not think it desirable to extend this to rural places; but in view of the great growth of our cities and of the precedents that have been read by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) of amendments to the election laws in other places, we might very well extend the time of polling in these cities by one hour in the morning. The request was made of me that I should advocate the keeping open of the polls until six o'clock instead of five, But I would not go so far as that even with respect to cities of two hundred thousand population. If a man could vote before he goes to his place of occupation in the morning and get there by, say ten o'clock, it would be a great convenience and many more voters would cast their ballots than under the present system.

Mr. CARVELL: Does the hon. gentleman think that opening the poll at eight o'clock would be a benefit to the labouring man? I can understand how it would help clerks and others, but when it comes to the labouring man, I am afraid it would not be of much use to him.

Mr. KEMP: In the section which follows it is provided that on polling day the employer is obliged to allow the employee an hour without deduction from his wages. For the man who does not start work until eight in the morning in the regular way, it seems to me it would be a great convenience to be able to vote before nine o'clock.

9 p.m.

Mr. GRAY: For many years there was great complaint on the part of the commercial travellers regarding the days chosen for elections. There are in the neighborhood of twenty-five thousand travellers in Canada, and probably twenty per cent of them lose the opportunity to exercise their franchise.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN And they are the keenest politicians in the country.

Mr. GRAY: Yes. It has been suggested to me that if Friday could be set apart as the day of polling it would be acceptable to the travellers. The light-sample men who carry grips leave their homes on Sunday so that they may get upon the territory they have to cover on Monday morning. As to heavy sample-men, with trunks, it does not make so much difference, but they would work a little harder and a little later in order that they might get in on Friday to poll their votes. I am in accord with the hon. member for Toronto that if the polls were open at 7 o'clock, a.m., it would be of advantage to those who want to leave by an early train.

Mr. MACDONALD: I quite agree with the views expressed by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) that there has been no request from any part of the country to change the hours of polling in rural constituencies. I am rather at a loss to appreciate the argument of my hon. friend from South Toronto. It is urged that in large cities railway men and commercial travellers do not have a chance to vote, but I do not see that the proposition contained in this section offers any solution of this problem. If the commercial traveller is away from home the extension of the time of polling by an hour in the morning is of no use to him; if he is at home, he can vote as well between nine and five as he can between eight and six. So we can eliminate their case from those to be considered in this connection. As to the railway men, surely my hon friend from South York will agree that his proposal that trains be stopped to allow railway men to vote is impracticable. You cannot work out a law in regard to the operation of voting that is going to satisfy everybody. There must always be some people who have to work on that day. The idea is to have as few people as possible deprived of their franchise. The proposal of the hon. member would stand in the way of those who desire to use the trains to reach their polling places. A man may have come hundreds of miles to vote in his home constituency only to find that by reason of the dislocation of the train service through delaying trains for an hour in the morning he could not reach the poll at all. During elections the movement of voters in the country is very great, and the prompt arrival and departure of trains is of great importance. By reason of delay or disarrangement of train services, a great many people might be unable to reach the polls before they close.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: My suggestion was with regard to freight trains starting from divisional points, where the bulk of the voters live.

Mr. MACDONALD: After all, the idea is to reduce to the minimum the number of persons who are deprived of the privilege of voting. I do not believe that public sentiment favours a wholesale change in the law. In Nova Scotia—I speak of provincial elections—the polls open at eight o'clock in the morning and close at five in the afternoon; it has never been complained that the polls are not open as long as they should be. There are many railway men whose regular rounds take them from one divisional point to another point perhaps 100 miles distant, and unless the whole system of voting is disarranged, there is no way in which these men can be given an opportunity to vote. Certain people must of necessity, therefore, be debarred from the franchise. I do not say that in the case of cities the conditions could not be improved by lengthened hours of polling, but we must not confuse that phase of the matter with the proposal contained in this section, which, although put forward as a remedy, is really not a remedy for these conditions. Two hundred men can vote at any polling subdivision with the greatest ease, provided they live anywhere within ten miles of the poll. If this is done, and if every employer is required to give his employees an hour to vote, it does seem to me that whatever practical difficulties there are will be obviated. I would not favour extending the hours of polling in rural constituencies past five o'clock. The experience has been that in general elections every vote is polled in rural constituencies long before five o'clock. It is my opinion that if the polls were kept open longer, the door would be opened to drunkenness and corruption. My hon. friend's suggestion about the English election laws is not apropos of the case. In England there is no simultaneous polling.

Mr. MACDONNEL: Practically so.

Mr. MACDONALD: Not at all; a general election in Great Britain occupies a long period of time. Only one or two constituencies vote in the same day. If simultaneous polling is good, then Great Britain is very much behind us in that respect.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I do not quite catch my hon. friend's meaning. What bearing has the question of simultaneous polling upon the hours of voting?

Mr. MACDONALD: I was simply discussing whether we should go to Great Britain for instruction as to how to run elections. I was suggesting that because they have simultaneous polling over there, which most people regard as a rather retrograde condition, they are not ahead of us in this matter. Another consideration is the crowded population of the British Isles, which gives rise to a condition entirely different from that which exists in this country, comprised, as it is, of huge areas of land and a scattered population. Then again, take the conditions that exist in Great Britain in reference to the counting of the votes. Would it be practicable in this country to take all the ballot boxes from the country districts, bring them to a central place, and there count the ballots? They do that in England, and I hardly think it would be suggested that we should do that here. This only goes to show that in matters of this kind the peculiar conditions of the country concerned must be carefully considered. I do submit that there is no crying need for any radical change in the present law. Anomalies do exist, and, perhaps, can be remedied to a certain extent, but the minority must always give way to the majority in the matter of convenience and the public interest. Personally, I would support no change in the law except the proposal to have the polls open at eight o'clock in the morning.

Mr. GLASS: Representing a rural constituency, I am opposed to any further discrimination in the matter of the franchise as between rural and urban municipalities. There is a distinction in the matter of registration in favour of the cities that is, to some extent, objectionable. The difficulty in connection with this whole matter is not so much with reference to the hours for voting, because cities, no matter how large, are subdivided into a certain number of polling subdivisions, just as the rural sections are, and if the employer assumes an attitude of fairness towards his employees and gives them an opportunity to vote, the conditions are quite in favour of their being able to register their vote. I think the best solution of the difficulty would be to provide for a half-holiday, or at least a quarter-holiday, and thus put the voter in a position where he will be absolutely untrammelled by any restrictions in the matter of exercising his franchise. It is my experience that while many employers of labour are willing to allow their employees who are favourable to their views to exercise their franchise, a veiled threat is held out to those who are not favourable to the employer's political views that if they do exercise the franchise they take the consequences upon themselves. The extra hour is absolutely of no use to the workingman where his employer wants to put restrictions on him.

Mr. MACDONELL: Why? It is the law of the land.

Mr. GLASS: I know it is the law of the land, but the man is afraid to go out to exercise his franchise.

Mr. HENDERSON: Oh, no.

Mr. GLASS: I know it, I know it from personal observation. My reason for speaking of this is that I think the section following this is very closely related to the present one. It is not so much the extra hour for polling that is important as to have a fixed time when employees shall have the right to go untrammelled to exercise that franchise. It is suggested that a certain number of men be allowed to go at one hour and a certain number at another hour in order not to inconvenience the management of the factory. I would favour having the hours for voting, if 8 o'clock is too early, from 9 until 6 p.m. I would approve of the extra hour at the latter part of the day. But I think that by closing places of business at 3 o'clock every employee would be given the opportunity to go out and vote, and I think that would overcome the whole difficulty. The hon. member from South York has suggested voting on Saturday, and the hon. member for London (Mr. Gray) has referred to the convenience of commercial men in relation to voting. We know that in municipal elections in London and in Toronto and some other places arrangements were made whereby the vote was taken on New Year's day, and the experience in our city has shown that there has been a smaller percentage of votes cast at the polls since that innovation. Consequently, voting on the holiday has been of no advantage. As to extending the hours in rural constituencies, I agree with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) that there is no demand from rural constituencies to have extended hours; but I do not think there would be any objection to it if it were found necessary. I would much rather see the same hours exist in rural communities as in cities, so as not to have any discrimination between them. Then how are we to determine what is strictly a rural municipality? My own is a rural constituency, but I have 8,000 people from the city of London who live in the township in my constituency, mechanics and employees in the different shops and factories of London. If that were considered a rural constituency and the hours limited, the workingmen who live there would not have the same opportunity of exercising the franchise as men who live in the city. I think it would be very objectionable and I would resent it if any difference were to be made between the hours of voting as between rural and civic municipalities. I think the difficulty would be overcome if a quarter holiday or half holiday were declared and it were made a sacred duty for every man to exercise his franchise on election day.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I would suggest that the chairman read clause 5 so that both clauses may be before the committee.

Section 5 read:

The following section is inserted immediately after section 136:

"136a. Every employer shall on polling day give to every voter in his employ one additional hour for voting other than the noon hour, and shall make no deduction in the pay of such employees nor impose or exact any penalty from any employee by reason of absence during such hour.

Mr. DEVLIN: In connection with section 5, is there any penalty?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no special penalty provided by this Bill. There is, as I have no doubt the hon. member is aware, a penalty provided under a general disposition for a violation of the obligations imposed under any statutes for which no particular penalty is prescribed; and I suppose that the enforcement of this, unless we inserted a special penalty, would have to depend on that clause.

Mr. DEVLIN: Would it not be clearer if there were a penalty attached to that section. I am in favour of section 4 if no better scheme can be devised. I am in favour of giving everybody a chance to vote. I understand that in the cities the labouring classes cannot conveniently vote between the hours of 9 and 5. I would even like to see an hour earlier in the morning if that were possible, but if not I would favour the hours from 9 to 6. I would very much prefer the idea given out by the last speaker of having voting day declared a half holiday. That would serve every constituency, and in default of voting day being declared a half holiday, I would prefer to have section 5 read that instead of one hour every employer shall on voting day give every voter in his employ at least two additional hours. In some cities we know that the factories have many employees voting at one poll and that it would be practically impossible for them all to vote at the one hour.

Mr. TURRIFF: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) to extend the hour by commencing at 8 o'clock in the morning would to my mind be the most objectionable one of all, so far as the rural constituencies of the West are concerned. It must be borne in mind that in the western provinces, during the winter months, at 8 o'clock in the morning the sun is just rising, and in stormy weather it would be dark in many parts of the West at that hour. Then very often the officers of the polling division, the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk and the scrutineers of the various candidates, may have to travel 7 or 8 or 10 miles from their homes to reach the polling booth, and therefore it would be a very great hardship to compel them to open the poll at 8 o'clock in the morning. The present hour, so far as rural constituencies are concerned, is very satisfactory; there is no demand from any part of the country for a change, and a change would be resented.

I think that my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has made out a very good case on behalf of the cities. The suggestion of the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Ross), that there should be a quarter or a half holiday, seems to me the most reasonable one, although I am not prepared to say just which would work out best. Election day comes on an average only once in four years, and it would be no great hardship if workingmen were allowed to go to work at ten in the morning, or to quit at three in the afternoon. It seems to me that as the polls usually cover only about 200 voters, you would in that way get over the difficulty with as little inconvenience as possible. It will be admitted, after the discussion we have had for the last half hour, that there are a great many difficulties in the way, and that it is not easy to make a law that will be absolutely satisfactory. But I think we should leave the rural constituencies alone. Personally, I am in favour of giving the workmen a quarter day's holiday, rather than of extending the time of polling by one hour. I think the holiday would overcome the difficulty with as little friction as possible.

Mr. MARCIL: This was a very live issue in Montreal two years ago. It was taken up by all the labour bodies of the city, and discussed by the city council for several weeks, and finally taken up by the Quebec Legislature, which enacted that during a municipal election in the city of Montreal the polls should open at nine in the morning and remain open until eight in the evening. I think that has given general satisfaction in the city of Montreal.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: Representing as I do a rural constituency, with seven townships and ten towns, I feel I shall be carrying out the wishes of my constituents in supporting this proposition. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) is opposed to the polls opening at eight in the morning, and there may be something in his objection, but certainly no good reason has been given to-night why the polls should not be kept open until six o'clock. It is true that in in the rural districts the vote is largely polled by five o'clock or before, but what serious objection can be made to the suggestion that the deputy returning officer and the clerks should remain at the booths for an extra hour, in order to give workmen and railway men in large cities an opportunity of polling their votes? And it is not only in the large cities that men are not able to poll their votes. Cities like Chatham, or Sarnia, or Windsor, which have a large number of men at work on the railways or in the shops, would be very glad to have this law enacted, so that the men might have an opportunity of polling their votes up to six o'clock at night. I sincerely hope that clauses 4 and 5 will receive the unanimous support of the House.

Mr. KYTE: I do not understand how the suggestion of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. J. E. Armstrong), that the polls be kept open until six o'clock, will enable railway men employed on trains to poll their votes. The trains do not necessarily arrive at divisional points at six o'clock; very often not until midnight. The express trains and the freight trains, particularly arrive at the different stations at different hours, according to the schedule on which they run.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: This would give them an extra hour.

Mr. KYTE: But that extra hour does not necessarily give them an opportunity to vote, because if the trains do not arrive until seven the train hands will have no more opportunity of voting than at present. With regard to the suggestion that a half-holiday be proclaimed on election day, I think it would lead to congesting the voters in the later hours of the afternoon, and this congestion would make it more difficult for them to poll their votes during the afternoon than if they had the whole day in which to vote. It does appear to me that if there is to be a holiday declared on election day, it should be the whole day. Or the holiday should be given in the forenoon, so that the men could record their votes in the morning. There is always a certain number of electors who will not poll their votes in the morning. They prefer to come to the poll in the afternoon, and then they remain at the booth and get the results before they leave for home. If in addition to these men who naturally postpone their vote until the afternoon, we are to have all the labouring-men who are employed in the district where the votes are to be recorded, we shall have a congestion of votes in the afternoon, which will render it quite impossible for them all to record their votes, even before six o'clock. It is quite true that some voters are debarred from the opportunity of voting by reason of the fact that the polls close at five o'clock in the afternoon. Still, I am quite aware of the fact that if the polls remained open until midnight, there would be still some two or three or more voters who would be late in recording their votes. When they have all day to record them they take their time about it, and I do know that in rural polling subdivisions where there is only a small number of votes to be recorded, there are always two or three or more men who come just in time to see the key turned in the lock, and themselves prevented from entering to record their votes.

The committee which had charge of the revision of the Elections Act entered upon their duties with a desire to remove, as far as possible, all the difficulties that stand in the way of a voter recording his vote. In addition to those classes which have been mentioned this evening, there is another class of voters who very frequently are unable to record their votes. But the difficulty which prevents them cannot be met by any legislation that I can conceive of. I refer to the large number of deep-sea fishermen who are engaged in the prosecution of the deep-sea fisheries in Nova Scotia. There are in the county of Lunenburg, I am sure, a thousand voters who are employed in the deep-sea fisheries fleet every year, and when an election takes place at any time between the first of May and the first of November these men have not the privilege of recording their votes. They are an intelligent portion of the voting community in the province of Nova Scotia, and we should all like to see them exercising the franchise with the same regularity as the electors who are otherwise employed. I would not venture to suggest that this committee could think out any feasible scheme by which these men could be permitted to record their votes, unless there was some sort of a roving commission appointed, to go out with ballot boxes to the fishermen so that they could record their votes. But in view of a suggestion in another direction, which we have had from the committee, and which we shall be called upon to deal with before very long, I am still hopeful that perhaps we can arrive at some means by which the fishermen engaged in the deep-sea fisheries may also have an opportunity of recording their votes:

Mr. PARDEE: As long as I have had the opportunity of looking into the various kinds of legislation regarding voting that have been proposed either in this House or in other legislatures, it has appeared to me that very many suggestions have come forward, but that after all you cannot get very much better results than you have under the present Act. Somebody is always bringing forward some new suggestion, like those contained in the present Bill. In regard to this section 4, which says that " the polls shall be opened at the hour of eight of the clock in the forenoon and kept open until six of the clock in the afternoon," I say that, so far as rural districts are concerned, there is absolutely no sense or reason for that amendment and that in so far as urban municipalities are concerned, there is still less sense.

Read section 4 in conjunction with section 5, which says that at least one additional hour for voting, other than the noon hour, shall be given by each employer without any deduction from the employee's wages. If you legislate that there shall be a half-holiday, that if and so shall be done in order to facilitate, and give longer hours for, voting, it simply means, when you get down to the last analysis, that you have less organization for polling your vote, and you do not do any better than if you had the shorter time.

Mr. MACDONELL: That is from the politician's standpoint, not from the public standpoint.

Mr. PARDEE: That is absolutely from the commonsense standpoint, and my hon. friend ought to know that. I think I have been in politics as long as he has and know as much about them.

Mr. MACDONELL: I am paying a tribute to the hon. gentleman's knowledge of politics.

Mr. PARDEE: I was trying to pay a tribute to my hon. friend's commonsense. If you have a half-holiday, what do you find?—men knocked out of work, congestion of voters during the last hour, or half-hour, at the polls, and the very thing that you have tried to guard against you are up against in a worse form than before. To the two hours to be given to employees on voting day I have no objection. If you give employees in the larger cities from 12 to 2, those who work in wards a considerable distance from their own polling subdivisions will have a chance to go to the polls and vote. It is easier to get there in two hours than in one hour. If you extend the hours of voting you simply reach the result that, while more time is given to bring in the vote, less organization takes place, everybody puts off what might be done that minute, votes will be polled during the last hour, or at the last minute, and you will be as far short as you were before. In the rural municipalities there is no call whatever for an extension of the voting hours. In urban municipalities I doubt very much if there is any demand for such an amendment to the law, and I believe that we can get along just as well in the future as we have in the past, and that the time between the hours of nine and five is quite sufficient to poll the votes, provided you have the necessary organization. You would be no better off with the extra hours and with the extra hours you simply have less organization to get the vote to the polls, and there would be as many votes polled at the last minute as there are now. For these reasons, it does appear to me that although this committee has considered this Bill, and I have no doubt considered it very carefully, we might very well leave the hours of voting as they are to-day, but if the House, or the committee sees fit we might set apart the hours from 12 to 2 for voting. Outside of that we had better leave the whole Act as it is, and not bring in these amendments.

Mr. BLAIN: I do not understand the Act to mean what my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) has stated in so far as it requires the employer to give the employee an opportunity to vote. The Bill says:

> Every employer shall on polling day give to every voter in his employ at least one additional hour for voting other than the noon hour, and shall make no deduction in the pay of such employees, nor impose or exact any penalty from any employee by reason of absence during such hour.

I do not understand this, to mean that the employee shall be free from one to two o'clock. I do not think that would be a very good thing. It means that the employer shall give to the employees some time during polling hours an extra hour to go to the polls. It does not mean that the employees shall have the right to the hour between one and two o'clock. We would have the same difficulty from congestion at the polls between one and two o'clock if that were the meaning of the section and that would not be in the public interest nor would it assist in polling the votes.

Mr. PROULX: It means any time of the day?

Mr. BLAIN: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: I think that the hour between five and six o'clock would be a very convenient time for the working man.

Mr. BLAIN: There is no fixed hour whatever; it means whatever hour will suit them.

Mr. BALL: I come from a constituency which is partly rural and partly urban. Personally, and speaking from observation, I think that the hours from nine to five o'clock are very reasonable hours and that they are all right. I think a half holiday would be an improvement where labour is employed. It would be well for the men to be set free from all influences of the employer for at least half a day. In some places the men are let out perhaps in ones and twos and they go to the poll under very peculiar influences. It would be well if they were given a half holiday and allowed to do as they pleased. With regard to the day of the election, it has been the custom for some time past to hold municipal elections on Monday and I think that is a very good day. It would be a good day for Dominion elections also. Commercial travellers are at home over Sunday as a rule and they could remain at home and poll their votes on Monday before leaving. I think that every man in this country who has a vote ought to be obliged to poll that vote. It would get rid of a great deal of difficulty in the matter of canvassing and that kind of work. I therefore would approve of a half holiday on the afternoon of election day and I would suggest that the hours continue to be from nine o'clock to five o'clock which I think are very reasonable and give a long enough time for the purpose of polling the vote. If the Government saw fit it would be well to have Monday set apart as election day.

Mr. MACDONELL: Every hon. gentleman who has risen to oppose this measure admitted before he sat down that it was right in principle. I do not think there is any hon. gentleman who has opposed this Bill who has not at some stage of the discussion suggested something in the way of greater latitude in voting. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ball) goes farther than any of those who spoke before him. He says that he is in favour of a half holiday and of compulsory voting. I commend the hon. gentleman for that opinion. It is my opinion. I have introduced compulsory voting legislation into the House in other days for the sole reason that it would practically obliterate ninety-nine per cent of electoral corruption. If men have to go to the poll they will go and vote without being carried there, or without being paid to go there, and they will not remain away because they are paid to remain away. Nothing would purify the election atmosphere so much as compulsory voting, but I realize that is not a proposal which will find acceptance in this country at the present time. Every hon. gentleman who has opposed this Bill has said something in its favour. I commend the opinion of my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin). I think he is quite right in more senses than one. The hon. gentleman, without mentioning it, quoted the Ontario law which gives two hours during election day to enable employees to vote. He also commended the idea of giving a portion of the day as a holiday. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) did not seem to see any reason for this legislation. It is suggested that he cannot see anything, but sometimes he is pretty wide awake. I want to tell the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who is a very reasonable gentleman, that in the city of Toronto, notwithstanding what my hon. friend would call the herculean efforts of the great Tory party in that city, and notwithstanding the efforts made by both parties, we poll on an average of only from 60 to 65 per cent of the total vote. There are about 50,000 or 60,000 voters in that city. In the last election in the riding of South Toronto, which I have the honour to represent, the vote polled was only a little over 60 per cent of the total vote.

Mr. ROGERS: You had enough?

Mr. MACDONELL: I had enough for the occasion.

Mr. PARDEE: If you had needed the rest, you would have had it polled.

Mr. MACDONELL: You never can tell, until after an election is over, how you stand. Very much the greater portion of that 40 per cent of the vote that is not polled is not polled because there are no sufficient opportunities or facilities given to the people to poll their votes. In the district of Toronto referred to, part of which is represented by my hon. friend the member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), there is a population of three-quarters of a million people, and it is impossible for them, residing as they do at very great distances from their work, to poll their votes during business hours. The section that follows is not sufficient to afford relief, because the one hour that is given is not enough. The experience of the Ontario Government has been that at least two hours are needed in cities to give men an opportunity to get back to their residential districts for the purpose of voting. The legislation has been progressive there; and as pointed out by my hon. friend the member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), the Ontario Government has recently enacted that, in cities of 200,000, the polls shall open at eight o'clock in the morning. Who is hurt in a city, if the polls are opened at eight o'clock in the morning and kept open until six o'clock at night? Even in the country, people would not be hurt.

Mr. MARCIL: What are the hours for polling in municipal elections in Toronto?

Mr. MACDONELL: They were changed recently. I understand the polls are open until six o'clock now.

Mr. MARCIL: In Montreal they are kept open until eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONELL: And that is not too long to keep them open. If men get an opportunity to vote, they will vote, and the expense of taking them to the polls will not be necessary. I appeal to the committee to make reasonable and fair provision for people in the city districts, who number now quite forty per cent of the total population of the Dominion. If section 4 is allowed to pass with a proper amendment so as to exclude the country districts, the committee will be doing justice to all parties.

Section negatived.

Mr. MACDONELL: I beg to move the following amendment to section 4:

Provided that in cities having a population of over 200,000, and in ridings formed in part by a portion or portions of such cities, the polls shall be opened in every polling place at eight o'clock in the forenoon and shall be kept open until five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day and the vote shall be by ballot.

This amendment amounts to practically nothing, and I hope it will be adopted unanimously by the committee. It is simply the Ontario law applied to cities of 200,000 people and upwards. It applies to only two or three cities in Canada, which are very congested districts. Relief will be given, and the polls will close uniformly throughout Canada at five o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. MARCIL: The time is not the same throughout Canada and the results are known in Halifax while voting is going on in the West. It is no relief to the city people to open the polls earlier in the morning. If you want to give them relief, you will have to keep the polls open until later in the evening. That is the mature judgment of the Montreal Labour Council and of all the labour organizations of the cities.

Mr. DEVLIN: Why not say "in the cities of Canada?"

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: If my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) carried that amending clause, a constituency partly rural and partly urban would incur a very serious difficulty. It might happen that 95 per cent of his polling districts within that electoral district would close at five, and the result be known before, say, half-past five or a quarter to six.

Mr. MACDONELL: The hon. gentleman has not grasped the purpose of the amendment. It is that in all cities, or in ridings that are formed in part by city districts the polls shall open at eight o'clock and close at five o'clock.

Mr. MACLEAN: That is what I am speaking about. I am pointing out the serious objection that 95 per cent of the polling stations of one electoral district close at five and the other 5 per cent at six.

Mr. MACDONELL: The same closing hour applies to any riding that includes in part or whole a city of 200,000 or over.

Mr. DOHERTY: In the first place, this amendment is going to make the law in two cities in Canada different from the law for the rest of the country. That is not an insuperable objection, but it is an undesirable thing unless, by the differentiation, you are going to get a very substantial advantage for some class of the people. Speaking for myself, I have very strong sympathy with what was put forward on behalf of the railway and the workingmen, and I believe that we ought to do what we can to make it possible for both these classes to vote absolutely independently, without any question of asking time and taking time and so forth. While my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) says that he regretted that the committee were not disposed to take up and work out the proposition of the railway men, I do not think that exactly describes the action of the committee. The committee were disposed to take the question up, and my memory is that they took it up and that they endeavoured to work it out on a practical basis; but they could not find a method by which the railway men could vote the day previous to election day, which was the suggestion they put forward. It was considered that, failing that, a substantial advantage might come to them by opening the polls at an earlier hour in the morning, and the hour suggested was six o'clock or half-past six o'clock in the morning, so as to enable the men to vote before they went to the stations. This would also have enabled a large number of the labouring classes to vote before they went to their work. The reason given for lengthening the hours does not seem to me the important one. It is not that you want more hours of polling, but you want the polls open at the time when the people are best able to vote. From the point of view of the cities, if you are going to allow the workingman to vote before he goes to work in the morning, you would have to open the polls before seven o'clock. I do not see how it is going to help the workingman to open the polls at eight o'clock.

Mr. PARDEE: But if he has two hours in the middle of the day, would not that do it?

Mr. DOHERTY: That comes under a different section. I was pointing out certain considerations in relation to this particular proposal. I do not know how it is in the rural constituencies, but in Montreal the workingman goes to work at seven o'clock. By opening the poll at eight you might help the clerks and others who go to their offices at nine, but the change would not help the workingman. The great difficulty in the cities is that if a man does not vote before he goes to his business, or finds the poll closed when he returns from his business, he must make a special trip over a long distance from his place of occupation to the place where he polls his vote in the subdivision in which he resides. It will be a great benefit, it seems to me, to provide a time, what we may call a free time, for the voter when he can poll his vote, and thus obviate the necessity of conveying him to the poll.

Mr. PARDEE: It is only once in four years he is called upon to vote and he is not very seriously inconvenienced.

Mr. DOHERTY: I know; but what I am pointing out is that the section as proposed does not fulfil the purpose for which it is intended so far as the cities are concerned.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: It is for you to assume the responsibility of doing that.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is for the House; I cannot impose my power upon the House; it is essentially a matter for Parliament to pronounce upon. I do not think it would be fair for me, even if I could, to impose my will upon the members of the House.

The effect of the suggested amendment of the hon. member for South Toronto is to make a different law for these two cities out of the whole Dominion. It does not seem to me to gain the advantage which we wish to gain. My own constituency is substantially a workingman's constituency, and I have a large railway men's vote. It will not help these voters to give them an hour extra in the morning by making the polls open at eight o'clock. The workingman is at work before eight o'clock, and he will not gain by the extension of an hour. No doubt it would be of some advantage to the class of people who go to their offices at nine, but I do not see that that advantage is sufficient to make it worth while to differentiate between these cities and the rest of the country.

10 p.m.

Mr. MACDONELL: The minister criticises my amendment because it does not put the hour's increase of time at the end of the day. That motion was before the Chair and did not receive support.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am more or less sympathetic with the desire of the hon. member for South Toronto. I do not think that anybody, on the abstract question of whether the polls shall open at seven or eight in the morning and continue open until six in the evening, could make a successful argument against it. It is not an argument against the polls being open from seven o'clock a.m. until six o'clock p.m. that all the votes are polled by five o'clock. On the other hand, I admit there is no apparent necessity for this change, so far as the rural districts are concerned. I am inclined to agree with the Minister of Justice in regard to the amendment of the hon. member for South Toronto; it will accomplish very little if anything to open the polls at eight in the morning. If it were six o'clock—

Mr. MACDONELL: I will change it to six if the hon. member will support it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I have not suggested that. As the amendment would appear to accomplish so little, I think we might as well have the section as it is at present.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonell) negatived.

Mr. MACDONELL moved:

That section 5 be amended by substituting the words "two hours" for "hour."

He said: I am open for any suggestion so long as the facilities for voting are increased, and they have not been increased so far. I desire to call attention to the Ontario Act. This is chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1914, section 112. It is well worded and has worked out well:

A voter entitled to vote within a city or town shall, on the day of polling be entitled to absent himself for the purpose of voting from any service or employment in which he is then engaged or employed, from the hour of noon until the hour of two of the clock next thereafter, and a voter shall not, because of his so absenting himself, be liable to any penalty, or suffer or incur any reduction from the wages or compensation to which but for his absence he would have been entitled, but this section shall not apply where a voter is by his employer permitted or allowed at any other period during the hours of polling, reasonable and sufficient time and opportunity to vote.

This is an exceedingly fair and just provision.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: In what year was that introduced?

Mr. MACDONELL: Seven or eight years ago. It amply protects the voter against unfair discrimination on the part of the employer, and it does not apply if the employer gives the employee ample time at any other time to vote.

Mr. DOHERTY: Is that not the substance of the provision contained in this proposed legislation? We give the employee an hour in addition to the noon hour.

Mr. MACDONELL: Nowadays, as the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) remarked, workmen work an hour more each day in order to get a half-holiday on Saturday, and the consequence is that in many cases they do not get an hour for lunch at noon. The Ontario legislation gives the employee two definite hours; I commend the language of this section to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. DOHERTY: The Ontario legislation gives two definite hours, but only if the employer does not give his employee sufficient time at some other hour of the day. We say simply that the employer shall give these two hours. Suppose I am an employer, and I say to my employee you cannot get from 12 until 2 o'clock, but I will give you an hour at another time, then, if that is a sufficiently long time for him to go to vote, I shall be perfectly right, under the Ontario statute, and no complaint can be made. We are saying in effect, but in shorter form, the same thing, because we say: you shall give the employee an hour besides the noon hour. If the employee does not take the noon hour, that is his own affair. In drawing this provision we had the Ontario section before us, and we thought we had adopted the Ontario section, but in simpler form.

Mr. MACDONELL: Only as to one hour.

Mr. DOHERTY: When you say one hour in addition to the noon hour, that is two hours.

Mr. MACDONELL: That is not what the Bill says.

Mr. DOHERTY: It says that the employer shall give to every voter in his employ at least one additional hour for voting, other than the noon hour. If any other words will make the meaning clearer, I shall be glad to adopt them. If the employee chooses to agree with his employer that he shall not take the noon hour, I do not see that we should be called upon to say that he shall get some other hour than that. He makes his own bargain with his employer about the noon hour. Really I think there may be a question as to the desirability of fixing specific hours, but I only want to point out that the Ontario legislation does not do that any more than this does.

Mr. PARDEE: The object of this legislation is to provide that the voter shall have a chance to vote. I take it that everybody wants to make it just as easy for the voter to vote as it is possible to make it. Taking into consideration the fact that you must have in the first place, the voter's interest, and that it is desired to give the employee a chance to vote, irrespective of what his employer may think, would it not be well to provide that the hours during which the employee may vote on election day shall be from twelve o'clock noon until two p.m.

Mr. DOHERTY: That might create a situation in which many industries would have to close during the remainder of the day, because all employees would go out at the same time.

Mr. OLIVER: Will this hour be chosen by the employer, or by the employee?

Mr. DOHERTY: The obligation of the employer is to give the employee an hour other than the noon hour, and it would seem to be a fair thing that the employer should fix the hour that is most suitable. At all events, that is the effect of the section.

Mr. MACDONELL: My apprehension was that the hour that is mentioned here as the noon hour is referred to only inferentially; the provision is not as clear as the provision of the Ontario Act. The difficulty, which is rather more deep-seated than has been suggested by the minister, is that while the Ontario Act makes provision for a man's having two hours of his employer's time once in every three, four or five years, the hour spoken of in this Bill at the noon hour is a period of time contributed by the employee himself.

That is he is out a part of it; he is paid by the hour usually and he is out the time he is not working; so that all he gets, so far as he gets anything gratis under this Bill, is one hour given to him in addition to his noon hour.

Mr. PARDEE: Would that not be fair after all?

Mr. MACDONELL: I think all he gets by this Bill is the one hour. That seems to be the intention of the committee and of the minister.

Mr. DOHERTY: One hour besides the noon hour.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD: I would suggest an addition to subsection 6. There is a very great employer of labour in eastern Canada to which the section would not apply except by express enactment, and that is the Government railway system. I have hurriedly drafted an amendment:

This section shall apply to the Government railway system and to all employees thereof except to those the performance of whose duties are necessary to the operation of the regular trains.

Mr. COCHRANE: We could not hold up our trains for an hour; in the case of any employees not operating trains there would be no objection.

Mr. MACDONALD: I save that by the proposal here. The law now applies to the company railways and I propose to apply it to the Intercolonial or Government Railway system with the saving clause that it shall not apply to those the performance of whose duties is necessary to the operation of the regular trains.

Mr. FOWLER: Have you a similar clause with reference to the other railways?

Mr. DOHERTY: As our section reads without any exception at all, applying to every employer and employee, I suppose it would so operate that the railways would have to stop their trains and let the men go out and vote and that certainly ought to be provided against.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Inasmuch as no special hour is fixed at which the company railways are to accord an hour to the employees for voting I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand the difficulty to be met is that a railway conductor who goes out on a train at 8 o'clock would be a great many miles away in a very short time.

Mr. J. D. REID: Has there been any difficulty in the past on account of Government railways in this respect?

Mr. MACDONALD: It is proposing an amendment which applies to all railways, and I understand that the minister accepts the proposition, as one that should apply to the Government railways as to the others.

Mr. DOHERTY: We might insert this addition:

This section shall apply to railway companies and to Government railways and their employees with the exception of employees engaged in the running of trains and to whom such time could not be given without interfering with the running of the trains.

Mr. PARDEE: What would be the effect of that amendment?

Mr. DOHERTY: In the first place to make it applicable to Government railways and in the second place to make it clear that with regard to all railways they would not be under obligation to give an hour to men engaged in the running of trains, to whom they could not give an hour without stopping the trains.

Mr. MACDONALD: Could not the minister go a little further and say the running of regular trains?

Mr. FOWLER: The running of a special train might be of much more importance than the running of a regular train.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would the minister's amendment apply to street railways? Because if all men on street railways were entitled to a couple of hours it might disorganize transportation in cities.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does the hon. gentleman think it would? As they would not all have to be given their hour off at the same time it would surely be possible to arrange the schedule so as not to interfere with the working of the system.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Two hours seems a very unnecessary time to give an employee on a street railway to cast his vote.

Mr. DOHERTY: I presume that street railway employees, like others, have a dinner hour. We are not making them give two hours. I assume that these employees already have an hour for their dinner. Personally, I am not in a position to say how it will affect the running of a street railway system in a large city.

Mr. MACDONALD: Do I understand that the minister moves that amendment?

Mr. DOHERTY: To be absolutely frank, I am not perfectly satisfied with it, because when one comes to look at it, we have other systems of transportation besides railways. During the period of summer navigation there may be many voters employed on steamboats.

Mr. MACDONALD: You could not make it apply to vessels unless they were in port.

Mr. FOWLER: Has there been any request for this legislation? I have not heard of a case where an employer refused to let an employee go out and vote, whether he was on the opposite side of politics or not. It seems to me we are passing legislation that has not been asked for, and that there is no public demand or necessity for. It is imposing an obligation which is not at all necessary.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not in the House when we were considering it. A section has been passed as part of the Dominion Elections Act that employers shall on polling day give to the voters in their employ at least one additional hour beyond the noon hour for voting purposes. That was passed some time ago, and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) was simply moving an amendment that it should apply to employees on the Intercolonial who would be exempt from the provision of that section unless it were specifically stated otherwise by Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: So far as the demand for it is concerned, we have had very numerous and clearly representative delegations from workmen's organizations asking that we should give a whole day or a half-day's holiday in order that the men might vote. Since I have had the honour of being in the House I know that the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has on several occasions proposed a measure to that end, and I think a great many of us have received very strong representations on the subject from representatives of organized workmen in the big cities. So whether the demand ought to be met or not, I do not think it can be said that this legislation was not asked for.

Mr. FOWLER: It is imposing a fine on an employer of labour. If a man employs 200 men and lets them off for an hour, he will lose 200 hours' work. If he had 500 men, he would lose 500 hours' work. This will make election day an expense to every employer of labour in Canada, and it does not seem to me to be right.

Mr. ARTHURS: Before this Bill is finally disposed of I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to some very desirable amendments to chapter 26 of the Revised Statutes of 1908. This chapter provides for the preparation of voters' lists in those portions of Ontario that are not under municipal organization. At the time it was passed it was no doubt very carefully thought out, but in practice it does not work out as well as it should. For instance, these lists have always been revised after the proclamation for an election, or within the last thirty or forty days before polling day. During that time the judges have to select the polling subdivisions, and the voter must necessarily be an actual resident within the polling subdivision for which the revision is being made. In other words, a man who has been residing in an unorganized township takes a few steps across the road into an organized township, and he is absolutely debarred from voting. Simply because he was not an actual resident of the unorganized territory he is not allowed to vote in the organized territory. Since the passing of this Act two thousand voters in my district have been deprived of the privilege of voting. The Act is also very cumbersome. For instance, why should it be necessary to have in an unorganized district a board of three judges to consider appeals that might be made against the voters' lists, when in a large township with five or ten times the population the work is done by one county judge. Surely if one county judge is able to do this work in the larger cities he ought to be able to do it in districts where the population is sparse. I am calling these matters to the attention of the minister because they are somewhat important to me. I have forty polls of this nature with probably a voting population of 5,000. I think this state of affairs should be remedied. If it cannot be done on this particular occasion perhaps before the Bill is finally passed some way can be thought out for giving these men the right to vote. Let me point out further that the Ontario law makes matters a lot worse, because the province has separate voters' lists. These lists are posted up in the post office, and a man may see his name on them and not pay sufficient attention to see that it is only a provincial list, not a Dominion list. Then when the Dominion list is printed by the King's Printer he finds he is not in for that section at all.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no doubt there is a great deal in what the hon. member says, and no doubt the question is important. But I am afraid that for us to enter upon an examination of the law with regard to the making of lists with a view to remedying it, would be rather difficult at this stage of the session. However, I do not expect the Bill to have its third reading this evening and before it comes to third reading I will look into what has been said, and see if it is possible for us to deal with the situation.

I beg to move that section 5 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

This section shall apply to railway companies and to the Government railways and their employees with the exception of employees engaged in the running of trains and to whom such time cannot be given without interfering with the running of the trains.

Mr. MACDONALD: What penalty is provided for failure to comply with this section?

Mr. DOHERTY: This particular section does not provide a penalty for failure to comply with it. It was thought that it might be left to the application of the general provision which does provide a penalty for the violation of a statute where no specific penalty is prescribed.

Mr. MURPHY: Section 269 might apply.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Mr. MACDONALD: In regard to the Government railway proposition, we would not want to take proceedings against my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), because that would be a very drastic procedure and probably he would not know anything about the violation of the Act. If there was some local official who transgressed the law there should be some way by which he could be reached.

Mr. KYTE: I nominate Mr. Gutelius.

Mr. ROGERS: I think you had better leave the Act alone unless you know what you are doing.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think that section 269 would apply, but I am quite satisfied that there is a penalty for the violation of any statutory disposition where no specific penalty is prescribed.

Mr. MACDONALD: In the Election Act?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, in the Criminal Code. I have sent for the statutes to find the clause.

Mr. MACDONALD: Perhaps we might let that section stand until the minister looks into it and comes to a conclusion in regard to it.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 7—form of nomination paper amended to require address for service of papers:

Mr. DOHERTY: The only change in the nomination paper is that in the new form the candidate is required to insert his address. That is in view of the provision in the Bill to amend the Controverted Elections Act that service in any contestation shall be validly made if addressed to the candidate at the address mentioned in his nomination paper.

Mr. MACDONALD: That would mean simply his post office address?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, we are suggesting to the House to provide in that Act that mailing to the address would be sufficient service.

Progress reported.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty, Bill No. 109, to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—names of courts:

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of the repealing clauses i and viii of paragraph J of section 2 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, chapter 7, Revised Statutes, 1906, is to make the names of the courts mentioned in the Act correspond with their present names. In Ontario the name of the court has been changed and likewise in Saskatchewan and Alberta they now have the Supreme Court of the province. In the Act as it stands the court is referred to in this way:

In the province of Saskatchewan or Alberta, the Supreme Court of the Northwest territories pending the abolition of that court by the legislature of the province, and thereafter such Superior Court of justice as, in respect of the civil jurisdiction of the said court, is established for the province in lieu thereof.

The court now established is the Supreme Court of the province.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What are subsections 3 and 4 of section 2 which are repealed?

Mr. DOHERTY: Subsection 3 of section 2 of the present Act is as follows:

In respect of proceedings relating to or affecting an election for an electoral district partly in the province of Saskatchewan and partly in the province of Alberta, the court shall be the Supreme Court of the Northwest territories pending the abolition of that court by the legislature of the province of Alberta, and thereafter such Superior Court as, in respect of the civil jurisdiction of that court, is established for that province in lieu thereof.

I understand that there is no constituency now that is partly in each province and there is therefore no need for that provision. Furthermore there is no longor any Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories. Subsection 4 was a provision to cover a transient condition. It was as follows:

Proceedings under this Act which are pending in the Supreme Court of the Northwest territories in the province of Saskatchewan or the province of Alberta at the time of the abolition of the said court in the province may be continued in such Superior Court of justice, as, in respect of the civil jurisdiction of the said court, is established for the province in lieu thereof in all respects as if such proceedings had been instituted in such latter court.

The section ceases to have any operation.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—proof of right to be a petitioner:

Mr. PUGSLEY: This section is very drastic.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is intended to be drastic. In the view of the committee, it was not of material importance who presented the petition. The provisions of the Act with regard to security and so forth were looked upon as a sufficient protection to the party whose election might be attacked. Experience has shown that discussions with regard to the exact proof of the identity of the person who is the petitioner, and that he is a person whose name is upon the list, have been such a productive field for preliminary objections and discussions of no material bearing upon the substantial question as to whether the respondent was illegally or corruptedly elected, that it appeared to us that we would be justified in making the proof sufficient that the petitioner's name appears upon the list that is produced. This will apply to the great majority of cases, because in the bulk of cases there are lists. Where there are no lists, or where the petitioner is petitioning in his quality as candidate and his name might not be on the list, it is thought that an affidavit should be sufficient. There is ample protection in the affidavit, in the great facility with which it would lie within the power of the party whose election was attacked, to ascertain and prosecute for perjury, if any one who was not a candidate, swore that he was a candidate.

Mr. FOWLER: A man, who was a minor and who might not be entitled to vote at an election at all, might be a petitioner; simply because his name appears on the voters' list by fraud or inadvertence. You cannot go beyond the list and have the petition presented by a person who has a right to present a petition.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What is the difference?

Mr. FOWLER: Why not use any one's name? Why say that the petitioner shall be a voter?

Mr. MACLEAN: That is quite true, but you must have designated by the statute some class from which the petitioner can be drawn.

Mr. FOWLER: If you permit any class to come in, then why make any condition at all?

Mr. MACLEAN: The electoral lists practically include every one who is 21 years of age and a British subject within an electoral division. That is pretty wide, and any one who is on that list can be a petitioner.

Mr. FOWLER: He might not be a qualified person, and yet be on the list.

Mr. MACLEAN: As the law stood before, it was open to the respondent to come into court and say that the petitioner, while his name was on the list, was disqualified as a petitioner. It was very anomalous.

Mr. FOWLER: Why?

Mr. MACLEAN: Because the point really at issue should not be affected one way or the other by who the petitioner is.

Mr. FOWLER: Then why have a petitioner at all?

Mr. MACLEAN: If the hon. gentleman can provide some machinery by which he can try out a petition without a petitioner, all very well.

Mr. FOWLER: Who has a right in the ordinary course? There is something due to the candidate as well as to the petitioner. Why should the candidate be harassed by a man of straw? Why should not the petitioner be responsible for costs?

Mr. MACLEAN: He gives security of $1,000.

Mr. FOWLER: And the costs may go to $10,000.

Mr. MACLEAN: When the hon. member sees the remaining provisions of the Bill, he will see that the trials of election petitions are very much expedited, and that there will be less costs because there will be fewer appeals.

Mr. FOWLER: If the remaining provisions are as bad as this, they must be very bad.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—repealing sections 6 and 7:

Mr. FOWLER: Is section 2 passed?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. FOWLER: I wish to register my objection.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is a provision in the Dominion Elections Act by which a man whose name may be on the list becomes disqualified by his own act. Perhaps that provision in the law is repealed somewhere here, but there is a section of the law as it stands to-day which says that any man who hires a team to take an elector to the poll is ipso facto disqualified. That man can not file a petition. There is a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to that effect. Unless that section is repealed, it will be in conflict with this proposed legislation.

Mr. PROULX: This dispenses with the need of an affidavit on the part of the petitioner?

Mr. FOWLER: It dispenses with everything.

Mr. PROULX: The affidavit should remain. If a petitioner alleges charges against a member of this House, he should substantiate them by affidavit.

Mr. FOWLER: The petitioner under this proposed legislation might be a minor; he might be an alien enemy; he might not have a vote at all, his name might be on the list by fraud and misrepresentation; yet he could be a petitioner. He might be even in that delectable institution known as the Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. DOHERTY: He would not have an opportunity to file a petition.

Mr. FOWLER: You might let him sign.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not wish to oppose any strenuous objection against the work of this committee being approved, but I am inclined to think that unless some serious objection can be pointed out to the present statute it would be better to leave it alone. Practitioners have become familiar with the present statute, and they get along pretty well with it. If we change the law, it will take twenty years to have the courts interpret it and find out what it means. There will be more trouble, more litigation and more delay than will take place if we continue to act under the present law. I would leave the Act just as it is. It seems anomalous to declare that the petition shall be presented by a voter and then provide that even if his affidavit is absolutely false, it shall be conclusive evidence that he is a voter.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no doubt about the fact mentioned by the hon. member that the courts have a jurisprudence on the law as it now stands, and that the practitioners have become familiar with it; but what we have become familiar with is the fact that under the law as it now stands, and its practical application under that jurisprudence, and the way in which cases may be conducted, a party petitioned against may sit through the Parliament to which he was not legally elected.

The purpose of this Bill is to remedy in this instance what seems to us a serious evil. As the law operates it practically comes to this: that a party who is protested sits through the greater part of a Parliament without any determination being reached as to whether he is lawfully elected or not. Looking at this section alone, it may appear that the Bill takes up a hostile attitude, if I may use that expression, to the party whose election is attacked, but I think that before we get through the Bill it will be seen that there are provisions that operate also to protect the party rightfully fighting a contestation.

Mr. FOWLER: Why not let this clause stand?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no objection, if hon. gentlemen wish time to consider the provisions of the Bill, to let the whole Bill stand. I may point out that the committee gave a good deal of time to this measure and it seemed to us that it was a desirable measure. Of course, if the House thinks it is not a matter of sufficient importance to call for the attention at this stage of the session, or if the House thinks that it is so important that further time is necessary, I have no objection to allow it to stand.

Mr. FOWLER: I would suggest that the committee go through the Bill now, allowing controversial sections to stand. Surely there are some sections that would meet with the general approval and in going through the Bill we will get a better understanding of the whole measure. To meet my view the Bill would have to be considerably modified. I do not think we should encourage petitions, because usually the sitting member obtains his election in the proper manner.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER: I am surprised at the ribald laughter of some hon. members. They evidently think otherwise.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The matter of improving the Controverted Elections Act has been under discussion in this House for a great number of years, and I am surprised to hear the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Pugsley) say that nothing should be done. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has given the subject consideration or not, but unless he has I think he should not make a suggestion that the Bill should not be considered. It is not a very lengthy measure, and will not take very much time to consider. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) has pointed out, the fact is the Controverted Elections Act is a nullity, and 11 p.m. every member of Parliament should consider himself bound in duty to make that Act a living force. I do not like to hear any hon. member suggest that we should abandon the whole Bill. I would rather entertain the suggestion that we should repeal the whole Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. FOWLER: Is it not attempted by this Bill to make the Controverted Elections Act a living farce instead of a living force?

Mr. MACLEAN: I fancy the hon. gentleman has not read the Bill and cannot tell—

Mr. FOWLER: I have read one section, and that is sufficient.

Mr. MACLEAN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman's reading and understanding of the Bill is not quite complete; perhaps the measure would stand a little further consideration on his part. I do not think there is anything unfair in section 2. The whole purpose of the Bill is to expedite the trial of election petitions. It eliminates preliminary objections and it provides a simpler method for the service of petitions and any process under the Act, and I think that is, in the main, a just provision.

Mr. STEVENS: How does this clause carry out, or assist to carry out, the proposal the hon. gentleman has spoken of?

Mr. MACLEAN: The hon. gentleman knows, I suppose, that a great difficulty of petitioners under the Controverted Elections Act is in effecting service. Respondents leave the country, and when service has been attempted to be made in foreign countries the courts have held it back. Why should not service of the petition be made—

Mr. FOWLER: That has nothing to do with section 2.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on section 3.

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not know that I can say anything further than has been said by the Minister of Justice. Anybody whose name is on an election petition is presumed to be a voter having the right to petition against the person elected. I think that should be prima facie evidence of his ability to petition.

Mr. STEVENS: Does not that make it possible for irresponsible parties through a solicitor to file petitions merely to cause annoyance to a person elected?

Mr. MACLEAN: No more so than to-day—there is no more opportunity for irresponsible persons to be petitioners than to-day.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I was on the committee that considered this Bill. I was not on it originally, but took the place of the former member from Prince Albert, Judge Mackay. I am free to say that these other gentlemen would not say, that the chairman of the committee, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean), and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) gave this matter much more attention than is usually given by committees to the matters referred to them. The sole desire of the committee was to find an expeditious and efficient method whereby elections that had been fraudulently contested should be set aside and those responsible for the wrong-doing in those elections quickly brought to justice. It may be that the legislation is disputatious in the broad sense of the term, but in a still broader sense it is legislation that, if placed upon the statute book, will help to improve public life and possibly do away with some of the stories we read from time to time in the press—not confined to one party but the common heritage of both—with relation to elections. If we can legislate to improve the conditions of public life, to make it possible for elections to be run without having recourse to money and to corrupt practices which are too often had recourse to in Canada, it would be a good thing. Of course, this cannot be done in a day. Walpole, in his time, declared that every man had his price. It took a long time to bring about the conditions that exist in England to-day. I think too much can not be said for the work given to this measure by the chairman of this committee and the junior member for Halifax—to single these gentlemen out among those who were deserving. I think this should be treated as a serious matter by this House. If we can do something to make it a little harder to get away with corruption and corrupt influences and the destroying of the body politic, I think we shall have done a good thing.

Mr. CARVELL: It was thought by every member of the committee that the law in respect of election protests as it now stands is practically a nullity; the only purpose which it serves is that of a club, to be wielded by a political opponent in order to protect himself or to arrange a saw-off. I take it that the hon. member for Kings and Albert does not take kindly to the provisions of this Bill. If the hon. gentleman accepts the principle that a simpler and more concise method of getting after corruption in elections is necessary, then this Bill will commend itself to his judgment. If, on the other hand, he takes the ground that the law is all right as it is, the provisions of the Bill will not appeal to him. It is provided, in the first place, that any person may file a petition so long as he puts up $1,000. The real fact of the matter is that the $1,000, not the personal standing of the petitioner, is the protection to the respondent. The meanest subject of the realm has the right to lay information in the courts of the country if he thinks a crime has been committed. If it is the honest intention of Parliament to provide machinery by which corruption at elections may be put down—my hon. friend and myself could, perhaps, give a good deal of information on this subject.

Mr. FOWLER: Speak for yourself.

Mr. CARVELL: I speak for my hon. friend as well. If any person has the right to lay an information in a court of law, then any person has the right to sign an election petition, provided his name is on the voters' list and he complies with the requirements of the law. I would have gone further and reduced the deposit to $500, but it was thought best to leave it as it is. We all know, too, that one of the great bones of contention in the past has been the matter of the service of election petitions. Let me give the hon. member for Kings and Albert an illustration, one with which he is probably familiar. The law of New Brunswick provides that the service of the writ must be made in a certain way; that it must be published in a newspaper, served on the respondent and posted in the registry office. The officer to whom the paper was given posted it on a bill-board in the lobby of the court house; the registry office was in the court house. I was counsel for the respondent in that case, and I contended that the publication had not been carried out according to law. I took the ground that posting the notice on a bill-board in the lobby of the court house was not posting it in the registry office. It may surprise my hon. friend to know that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick held that I was right.

Mr. FOWLER: It does not surprise me at all.

Mr. CARVELL: This kind of thing has a tendency not to facilitate the trial of election petitions, but to put all kinds of technical objections in the way. The question resolves itself into a consideration of whether we shall have election petitions, or whether we shall not have them. If we are to have them, then it is well to provide simply that a copy of the petition shall be mailed to the address given in the nomination paper.

Mr. FOWLER: I am not finding fault with that, I am in favour of that.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad we have converted my hon. friend to that extent.

Mr. FOWLER: The hon. member for Carleton evidently thinks that he is the only person who desires fairness and purity in elections. I am just as anxious as he is that a man should be properly elected, and that if he is not properly elected he should be punished by the loss of his seat. But I want the Act to be a proper one. I believe in fair-play and protection, both for the man who is elected and for the man who is defeated. One would almost think, from the remarks of the hon. gentleman, that a man has committed a crime because he is elected; that because he happens to be elected, it is his duty to be unseated. I do not look at it that way at all. The man who is elected has a right to the protection of the law; yet everything is done to harass him. Even an alien, it is contended, should have the right to file a petition against him. Let the service be as simple as possible; send the paper, if you will, to his known place of residence. I care not how simple you make the service, but I do say that you should provide that the man who files the petition shall be a duly qualified voter. Why should he not be a duly qualified voter? What right has he to object if he is not?

Mr. BURNHAM: Did the hon. gentleman not say a few moments ago that he would have no objection to the ordinary process of issuing a writ?

Mr. FOWLER: Yes.

Mr. BURNHAM: What about the alien who puts up security?

Mr. FOWLER: The point is that he does not put up sufficient security. If he should put up a bond for the costs, then it would be all right; I would not care who filed the petition. I am sure that every member of this committee is just as desirous as the hon. member for Carleton is that elections shall be properly conducted. The hon. gentleman has said that he knows a great deal about corruption; perhaps in his zeal to be elected he did transgress, but I do not propose that he shall plead guilty for me to that charge. I am always very careful to avoid even the appearance of evil, so anxious am I not to do anything wrong in connection with elections. I do not see why it should not be required that the person who files a petition shall be a legally qualified voter. All he has to do is to prove that he is on the voters' list; that he has the necessary qualifications, that he is a British subject—surely he can prove these things easily enough. Where is there a chance for any preliminary objection in connection with that, if he is really a duly qualified voter, if he has the qualifications and is a British subject?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There have been very serious contests as to the qualification of the petitioner.

Mr. FOWLER: Because the conditions have not been fulfilled. My hon. friend speaks of the case in Carleton county. I do not know why he drags that case in because it has nothing to do with the matter under discussion. The Supreme Court of New Brunswick was absolutely right, in my opinion, in holding that the lobby of the court house was not within the registry office. I do not see how they could have held anything else; I think that is good law. Therefore it has nothing to do with this matter. By changing the Act as is proposed you are not going to avoid questions of that kind occurring; if you do not follow the conditions here, your petition will be set aside. There are certain conditions to be observed and if you do not observe them your petition will be set aside as in the other case. Perhaps you are making the conditions less onerous, but why can you not make this law simple in its action and yet require that a man filing a petition shall have some status in the community, that he shall be a legally qualified voter. That is all I ask.

Mr. MACLEAN: That is hard to determine at times.

Mr. FOWLER: I do not think it is hard to determine. It depends simply on his being a British subject, on his having the residence, being of the proper age and being on the voters' list.

Mr. MACLEAN: That would not prove him a legally qualified voter.

Mr. MARCIL: Suppose he is disqualified.

Mr. FOWLER: But the burden of proof is on the other side to show that he is disqualified. If he has these qualifications he is a qualified voter legally, prima facie.

Mr. CARVELL: Does not my hon. friend see he is getting back to the very condition of affairs that we are trying to eliminate, to the preliminary objections. I know enough about elections to be aware that one of the principal causes of objection is the question of the qualification of the petitioner. In very many election trials the petitioner has been brought up and examined from time to time prior to the trial and the question arises has he been disqualified by bribery, has he committed a corrupt act? If so he would not be qualified. Many petitions have been knocked out on that very matter; you raise a preliminary objection and get into the Supreme Court of Canada and lose a year or two of time. I ask the hon. member if he is not arguing for the continuing of the system of preliminary objections.

Mr. FOWLER: Does my hon. friend think that a man who has violated the election law and disqualified himself is the person to go into court? He should be like the complainant in any other case, the man who goes into court should have clean hands. But he goes in a disqualified person. I do not think that a man who is disqualified should be permitted to file a petition, and the onus of proof of the disqualification is on the respondent because if the petitioner shows he has fulfilled the conditions, that is all he has to show, and it is up to the other side to prove that he is disqualified.

Mr. MACLEAN: But he is petitioning not on account of himself alone, but of a large element of the public.

Mr. FOWLER: But the man who petitions on behalf of a large element of the public must have a right to do so and that right lies in his being a qualified voter; he represents the qualified electors. They are the only ones who can say who should be elected. Does he not belong to that class? There are very few constituencies with less than 4,000 or 5,000 qualified voters, and surely within the half or one-third of that number who support the minority candidate there must be enough duly qualified electors to file the petition. If there are not the petition had better go unfiled. It seems to me that from every standpoint we should require that the man should be a qualified voter. Simplify procedure as much as you like, but let the individuals who are parties to the trial—because, after all, the petitioner is the party, although he represents a considerable portion of the electorate—let these be the proper persons and then simplify your procedure as much as you like, and I am with you, but I am not with you to permit any sort of strawman to be put up for the purpose of annoying and putting to trouble a person who has received, according to the electoral returns, the majority of the votes in any constituency.

Mr. CARVELL: I understand that my hon. friend's principal objection is on the question of the petitioner. When he interrupted some time ago, as he had a right to do, I was pointing out the general purport of the Bill, and I had got over two points. The third principle which we tried to work out in this Bill was that the trial should be brought on almost at once. We all know that under the present law an election trial cannot take place until after all preliminary objections are decided, which sometimes takes two or three years, and it cannot be tried while Parliament is in session. We have tried to eliminate that and bring the practice very nearly to the ordinary practice in a civil suit in court. The petition takes the place of the statement of claim; provision is made that an answer shall be filed, and if it is not filed within fifteen days the clerk of the court files the answer and the petition is immediately at issue and the trial takes place regardless of whether Parliament be in session or not. That practically would be all the principles involved in the Bill that are different from the present law. We have left all the rest of the law as it is, we have left in the provision for preliminary examination of witnesses. We have provided also that a witness can be gathered in very early in the game, in fact you can apply to a judge almost at the time the petition is filed and have an order given that a certain person be examined. That prevents the witnesses getting out of the country.

These are the four cardinal principles involved in the Bill. I am very much in favour of the Bill, although I do not take credit for having originated the idea; I think it came from the Minister of Justice himself. The minister certainly has done all he could in order to make the Bill perfect. I want to say to the credit of the hon. gentleman (who occupies that position (Mr. Doherty) that I have never in my life seen in a deliberative body a gentleman who has more earnestly tried to work out a perfect scheme which would attain the object in view than has the Minister of Justice in working out this scheme. There has not been a move, there has not been a proposition put forward that appealed to his judicial mind as calculated to work out successfully and prevent bribery and corruption, but the Minister of Justice has adopted it. When it appeared to him, from his long experience as otherwise he was not at all afraid to say so. I do not think there has ever been a committee in the House of Commons that has been as thoroughly in harmony over the principles involved in any measure as this Election Committee in reference to this Bill.

To go back to the one point that my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fowler) has taken objection to; I am not wedded to the form of this section. If my hon. friend wants to make any other provisions than that a man must be 21 years of age and a British subject, I have no objection so long as it does not involve the question of preliminary objections.

Mr. FOWLER: He may be the biggest blackleg in the world.

Mr. CARVELL: That may be true, but if he is a British subject and 21 years of age he is entitled to vote.

Mr. PROULX: Suppose there were preliminary objections, but no appeal.

Mr. CARVELL: The preliminary objections would take up months and months of time if there were no appeals. The moment you bring in the principle of preliminary objections you are defeating the object of this Bill. I do not care what amendments you have so long as they do not adopt the principle of preliminary objections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I suggest that as it is nearly 12 o'clock it is pretty far advanced to take up the discussion of such an important measure as this. We had better sleep over it, and then when we come again to study the Bill we shall perhaps be in a better frame of mind.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am quite willing to agree to the suggestion of my right hon. friend. I think we have gained a great deal by this expression of opinion from both sides of the House. But before moving that the committee rise I should like to point out one thing, and that is this. It is required that the man shall be upon the list. Now the fact that he is upon the list shows that the question of his qualification has been tried out once and determined by whatever machinery is provided in the different provinces for ascertatining whether a man ought to be on the list or not.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: In my province we have no voters' lists.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: That is provided for.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: All that is required is an affidavit. A man who was irresponsible could put up $1,000 and the cost of the trial might amount to $5,000 or $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER: Perhaps the minister does not understand how the voters' lists are made up in some of the provinces. In the province of New Brunswick there is no contest whatever in many cases. Names are put down on the list of men who may be disqualified by reason of non-residence, non-age, or something else. Of course there are contests in some districts of New Brunswick, but the practice varies in different provinces. But because a man's name is on the voters' list, it does not necessarily follow that the matter has been tried by some tribunal. His name may have been placed on the list simply because he happens to be on the assessment list, and without any trial whatever. It seems to me that the consideration that should apply is that, before a man can challenge the election of any man who has been chosen as the representative of qualified voters, he should himself be of that class. It seems to me that is a reasonable proposition. I shall probably not be here when the Bill comes up again, but I appeal to the sense of this committee to insist that the man shall be a qualified voter.

Mr. DOHERTY: What I was proceeding to point out was that the fact that a man was on the list shows that at some time it had been decided by somebody, however imperfect the machinery—I do not wish to discuss that—that he was a qualified voter. Under the provisions of the Act he is on the list. That entitles him to vote. He may be called upon to swear that he was not bribed and so forth, but as to his qualification to be a voter he is, as I understand the Act, on the list and qualified to vote.

Mr. FOWLER: Could he not be called upon to swear that he was a British subject and a qualified voter?

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. member will allow me, I did not intend to conclude by saying that he is entirely wrong, or by saying that what he says should not perhaps be acted upon. I was just pointing out that the fact that he is on the list shows this much, that by such machinery as the different provincial legislatures thought was sufficient—and we are proceeding on the basis that we are willing to accept that as our present system of regulating our franchise—that man has been found to be a qualified voter. Now what we propose to do is to take that a step further. It is suggested that many awfully evil things will follow from it. The hon. gentleman says that an irresponsible person may make a petition. That is absolutely true. But I wonder how many of us have ever come across an election petitioner who was a responsible person! I should be glad to meet any hon. member who has met such a one, because he had an exceptional experience, I think.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have known very many responsible petitioners in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. FOWLER: And so have I. Some of them are candidates.

Mr. DOHERTY: It has not been my experience. Those that I have had occasion to come in contact with were so highly irresponsible that they seemed to me to be invisible. I never was able to get in touch with them.

Mr. CARVELL: There are a few like that in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. DOHERTY: At all events it is perfectly possible to happen, and I do know that it does happen in some cases. So that after all the evil may not be so terribly serious. Technically, of course, it looks a very awful thing that a man who is not a voter may make a petition. It is said that blacklegs and scallawags may make a petition. Unfortunately blacklegs and scallawags may vote. Unfortunately there are such people on the voters' lists. I am quite prepared to give consideration to what has been said. I am always prepared to do that. If the hon. gentleman had said that we should have prima facie proof and not conclusive proof, always provided that by that we do not open the door to any preliminary trial on the subject of the man's qualifications, I should be perfectly willing to consider that. That is what we want to get at. It is not so very material whether you have conclusive proof or not, provided you do not interfere with this provision of the Bill that there shall be only one trial, and you will try everything at that trial. So long as we stand to that, I do not know that it is very material whether at that trial you allow the respondent, if he wants to, to start in to prove that that man who was on the list was not qualified. But we must have no two trials. There must be no issue to be separately tried, on the question whether or not the petitioner is qualified. That issue, if there is to be such must be tried simultaneously with the merits of the petition. There must be but one trial, that trial should go on as speedily possible. If we can secure that, for my part I shall be satisfied, and I fancy that my colleagues upon the committee will be satisfied too. I am quite prepared to consider whether making it prima facie proof would not do just as well as making it conclusive proof, as long as whatever the defendant wants to say on qualification is heard at the same time as anything else he wants to say in answer to it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Or that he may be twenty-one years of age and a British subject.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. Now, I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Perhaps we will be better able to deal with this measure after we have slept over it, and therefore I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, the House adjourned at 11.35 p.m., until Saturday, April 3, at 11 a.m.

Saturday, April 3, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. PROULX: I beg to move that Public Bills and Orders be called, and that Order No. 34 be discharged.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What is my hon. friend's idea in making that motion?

Mr. PROULX: The substance of this Bill is an amendment to Bill No. 110, to amend the Dominion Elections Act. When I moved the amendment the other night the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) objected on the ground that there was a Bill on the Order Paper standing in my name embodying the principle of my amendment.

Motion agreed to.

SIR WILLIAM PRICE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: One of the Montreal papers states that on account of a difference between himself and the Government Sir William Price, the Chairman of the Quebec Board of Harbour Commissioners, has sent in his resignation. May I ask if this rumour is correct?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not aware that he has sent in his resignation, but he may have done so. There was an intimation some time ago that he did not propose to continue in that office. The statement that there is any difference between Sir William Price and the Government is absolutely without foundation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

CORRECTION OF CLERICAL ERROR.

The House again in committee, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair, on Bill No. 106, to amend the Representation Act, 1914.—Sir Robert Borden.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill stood for the purpose of further consideration of provisions made with regard to certain changes in the description of constituencies in the province of Quebec. It was then suggested that instead of the form in which the Bill then was, in so far as it modified the description of the constituencies of Quebec East and Quebec West and Jacques Cartier, we should adopt as more desirable the form of repealing the sections and substituting other sections containing the proposed alterations. I have had this done, and I now beg to move that section 4 as it was in the Bill that was presented to the House be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

4. Number 6 (b), the description of the electoral district of Quebec East, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(b) The electoral district of Quebec East which shall consist of the following wards of the city of Quebec to wit: St. John, Jacques Cartier, St. Roch and Limoilou, exclusive of the village of Stadacona."

The change made there is simply the exclusion of the village of Stadacona. Quebec West will now read as follows:

5. Number 6 (c), the description of the electoral district of Quebec West, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(c) The electoral district of Quebec West which shall consist of the following wards of the city of Quebec to wit: St. Sauveur, St. Valier and St. Malo and the village of Stadacona and the municipality of Petite Rivière.

The amendment that is made there consists in the insertion of the village of Stadacona, and the words "the municipality of Petite Rivière." In the Bill sought to be amended it would have appeared that Petite Rivière was a ward instead of a municipality.

I beg also to move an amendment to section 5. The amendment to the existing Act sought to be made is the exclusion from the electoral district of Jacques Cartier of St. Denis ward, which, under the Act passed last year, forms a part of another constituency. The section that dealt with Jacques Cartier in the Bill as introduced was section 5, but it now becomes section 6, because we have taken in two sections to deal with the electoral district of Quebec East and Quebec West. Section 5 has now been struck out, and the following substituted as section 6:

Number 10 (a), the description of the electoral district of Jacques Cartier, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(a) The electoral district of Jacques Cartier which shall be constituted as at present less the town of Verdun, Outremont, any part of St. Denis ward—

It is intended to exclude the whole of St. Denis ward.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If you say "any part," the question would arise "which part"?

Mr. DOHERTY: It would do no harm to exclude the whole of St. Denis ward. We would then say: "less the town of Verdun, Outremont, St. Denis ward." The only change is to exclude St. Denis ward.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The rest is as it is in the Act?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. What was wrong with the Act was that St. Denis ward was not excluded as it should have been. I beg to move that section 6 of the Bill as introduced be struck out, and that the following be substituted as section 7:

Number 14 (a), the description of the electoral district of Hull, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(a) The electoral district of Hull shall consist of Hull city, East and West Hull, the municipality of South Hull, Gatineau Point, East and West Templeton, the town of Buckingham, the township of Buckingham, the township of Southeast Buckingham, the township of North Templeton, L'Ange Gardien, Portland East and West, Derry, Bowman, Villeneuve East and West, Blake, McGill, Bigelow, Wells, Wabassee and Dudley.

The effect of this is to add to the description of Hull, as it stands in the existing law, the townships of South East Buckingham, North Templeton and the municipality of South Hull. As the present Bill was introduced it only provided for the inclusion in Hull of Southeast Buckingham and North Templeton, in addition to those mentioned in the Act as it stood. I understand that it was considered that it properly should include the municipality of South Hull, and I am now moving to include in the description of the electoral district the municipalities of Southeast Buckingham, North Templeton and South Hull. That necesitates amendments in regard to the electoral districts of Labelle and Wright, because these portions which are included in Hull are, under the existing Act, included in Labelle and Wright. Southeast Buckingham is included in Labelle, and North Templeton and South Hull are included in Wright. Therefore, to make the descriptions of Labelle and Wright consistent with these changes, I beg to move that section 8 be as follows:

Number 14 (b), the description of the electoral district of Labelle, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"(b) The electoral district of Labelle which shall be constituted as at present less the town of Buckingham, the township of Buckingham, the township of Southeast Buckingham, L'Ange Gardien,— etc. The amendment consists in excluding those townships and municipalities which have been put into the electoral district of Hull, and the rest of the description remains the same. Then, section 9 is as follows:

Number 14 (c), the description of the electoral district of Wright is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

[Mr. Doherty.]

Then follows the description of the electoral district of Wright as it stands at present in the statute, save that we add to the part excluded North Templeton and the municipality of South Hull. I think that completes the corrections in accordance with the agreement come to with respect to the matter.

In the description of the constituency of Jacques Cartier, the draftsman has put in the wording: "less any part of St. Denis ward." Inasmuch as only a part of St. Denis ward was ever included in Jacques Cartier, and we cannot, therefore, take out the whole, I suggest that perhaps the better way is to make the wording: "less any part of St. Denis ward at present included in said county."

Amendment agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is it the intention of my hon. friend to have a large atlas published showing the different constituencies? In 1903 a very large atlas was issued, and such an atlas is a great help at election time.

Mr. ROGERS: This matter has already received some consideration, and we will take it up again with a view of adopting the suggestion of my right hon. friend, which is a very good one.

Bill reported and amendments read the first and the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Trade and Commerce—Trade commissioners and commercial agents, including expenses in connection with negotiation of treaties or in extension of commercial relations; miscellaneous advertising and printing, or other expenditure connected with the extension of Canadian trade, $150,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not suppose my hon. friend intends to spend very much this year in negotiating commercial treaties, but we shall be glad if he will give us some information as regards the different agencies that we have at the present time. If I am doing him an injustice in stating that I presume he does not intend to negotiate further commercial treaties this year, I shall be pleased to correct my statement.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This vote is the same as that of last year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Have you any new agencies since last year?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: During the past year certain changes have taken place, and I will very briefly state what they are. In the first place, our trade commissioner in Germany, who had his head office at Hamburg, was caught and interned, and, although he had some degree of personal liberty, he was obliged to report at frequent stated intervals and was kept under very close surveillance. He did not succeed in getting out until February, when a transfer was made with a German consul in South Africa, and he arrived at Rotterdam. As throwing a little light on how close the cordon is drawn as regards news in Germany, I may say that, although he had considerable liberty and had conversations with a great many people, on his arrival at Rotterdam in February he received his first knowledge that a single Canadian had left Canada and had reached either Great Britain or the Continent. That throws some light on the extreme diligence with which the Germans keep information from getting to such a city as Hamburg. After a little rest, which he needed, he will proceed to Russia. I have made arrangements with Mr. Just under which he is to proceed to Russia by way of the north and spend a three or four months' mission in Russia. He speaks German well, and German is a good deal spoken in certain parts of Russia. He does not understand Russian, but with the aid of English and German, I think he will get through the preliminary work very well. Mr. Just is one of our best trade commissioners; has been well trained; is very diligent and active; understands thoroughly not only how to get information but also how to put it in an illustrative and attractive form. He will enter by Petrograd, and make a tour of Russia, visiting the chief centres and gathering all the information he possibly can. After visiting the western Russian cities, he will take in some of those on the Black sea. He will then proceed through the country to Siberia, coming out at Vladivostock, and thence come to Canada by way of the Pacific. Having got all the information he can in that time, I propose to have him spend two or three months in Canada visiting the different centres and having conferences with the boards of trade, business men and manufacturers, bringing to them the information he has gained in Russia, and in that way getting the interests of demand and supply close together. He will then be furnished with two assistants, who will be trade commissioners with him, permanently resident in Russia. Although Russia is much perturbed by the war, yet on account of its vast size and immense population, business goes on in great portions of that territory much as it is usually carried on. When the war is over, we think that Russia will afford a very large field for certain manufacturers and productions of Canada. Siberia itself is an immense country, much the analogue of our Northwest—quite as extensive, and producing much the same. Siberia has been rapidly filling up with immigrants from western Russia; about six hundred thousand a year are pouring into that portion of the country; and it is on the plans of the Russian Government to develop that country with railways as rapidly as it can possibly be done. So that, both from the east and from the west of Russia, there opens up, I think, a good prospect for our trade. Already some of our manufactures have found a large place in Russia. Agricultural implements to the amount of well on to two millions of dollars were exported to Russia during last year; and, although that trade is somewhat disturbed at the present time for financial and other reasons, that which has been accomplished shows what there is in the field. Then, a certain section of our manufacturing industries believe that there is a large future there for the marketing of railroad supplies of different kinds, particularly cars, and already some of our manufacturing interests have representatives in Petrograd and are pushing business with their usual diligence.

Mr. Lithgow is still at Rotterdam. I have kept him there because, although there is not a very great deal of commerce possible now between Holland and ourselves, yet that is a very important situation, and Mr. Lithgow gives us valuable information. He is being retained there for the present.

In China, where they have had a very good trade year, although at present and for some months past the country has been a good deal perturbed, I have appointed a trade commissioner, Dr. Ross, formerly of Belleville, or near there. Dr. Ross has been in China for eight or nine years, connected with business operations. He comes highly recommended. He has been at the work for six or seven months, and has proved very satisfactory so far as gathering and sending information is concerned, and bids fair to make one of our best commissioners.

In Japan, a trade commissioner was appointed, Mr. Johnson, who succeeded Mr. Harris, and he remained until four or five months ago, when, being an officer in the British army, he felt it his duty to go to the front, and he is now on leave of absence, and is either in Great Britain or at the front, I am not sure which. In the meantime his duties are being performed, and very efficiently performed, by the commercial attaché of the British embassy at Yokohoma, Mr. Crowe, with whom I had the pleasure of making acquaintance. He has been fifteen or sixteen years in that country, is a thoroughly good commercial man, and, what is more to the purpose, has a very large and sympathetic interest with Canada and its development. For the time being, under an arrangement made with the British Government, he is attending to our work in Japan, and is attending to it in every way satisfactorily.

Two of our young trade commissioners are being trained on the new plan which I explained to the House last year. They were first brought into the department, to be made thoroughly familiar with the methods and purposes of the department, and drilled in all our work, especially in relation to commerce, and also given some training in customs work, so that they might understand the forms and methods of our customs business. Then they are required to visit different places in Canada and gather information and make reports. The two young men to whom I refer have been with us now for eight or nine months. One of these, I have arranged, is to go with Mr. Just to Russia, to be one of the trade commissioners there under him. The other, in due time, will be transferred to some other position as it becomes vacant.

There has been no change in the trade commissionerships in Great Britain, except that our trade commissioner in Leeds resigned and came to Canada to live. Taking his place and doing his work since that time, has been his assistant, Mr. Dwyer, who is thoroughly well versed in the work of his office and has performed his duties fairly well. It is my intention, in time, to combine two or three of the cities in that district and have them under the charge of one of our trade commissioners, with a central office and with assistants in the other two centres. I think that in that way, with team work of three men, one at the head, we shall get better results than with independent commissioners, and shall carry on the work more economically as well.

I think it was stated last year that Mr. Harrison Watson had been appointed trade commissioner in London. He has performed that work satisfactorily. In Australia we have Mr. Ross, who was appointed by the late Government, and who is a thoroughly capable and reliable man—one of the best commissioners we have. In New Zealand Mr. Beddoe is still performing the work. Mr. Poussett is still in South America. Last year, having made a tour of all the states in South America the year before, he came to Canada, went over the country from Victoria to Halifax, and held communications with boards of trade, merchants, and others. He has since returned to his work in South America. Mr. Egan, who was transferred from Manchester, has charge of the work in South Africa, with two assistants. In addition to these services, there is an arrangement by which twenty or thirty British consular establishments are at the service of Canadian trade and correspond regularly with the department, giving information, reports and answers to any inquiries made by ourselves or by merchants or business men of Canada. The service in the British West India Islands is about the same as we had last year. Mr. Watson Griffin was appointed to make a thorough survey of the British West India Islands, Jamaica and Cuba. This he did; his report is now being published in sections in the weekly trade bulletin, and will subsequently be distributed in convenient form. I think that the business community will find his report very interesting and very useful.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The information which has just been given to the committee by my hon. friend is very satisfactory, particularly with regard to Russia and China. There is every reason to believe that soon after the war is over an enormous trade will spring up between Canada and Russia, and I look to the opening up at no distant date of a line of steamers between Prince Rupert and Vladivostock. What my hon. friend has said about Siberia is quite true; we can supply that part of the country with anything they want in the way of agricultural implements. The attention which my hon. friend is giving to the matter ought to bring good fruit in due time.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The lumber industry of the western part of Canada has been in rather a bad way, and it has not been helped very much by the war, which has disorganized freights and financial conditions. I think the lumber situation in eastern Canada is locking up. Inquiries which are being received from France, Great Britain and Belgium, indicate a more satisfactory condition in respect of certain kinds of lumber produced by Canada. The condition of things in the West during the last year and a half or two years has contributed to a diminution of building activities, and naturally this has had a very material effect upon a large number of the British Columbia mills. Boards of trade and others have been in correspondence with me with reference to some special means by which they could be helped. Trade commissioners in all countries were instructed to make special investigations in regard to markets for British Columbia lumber, and a very extensive and useful series of reports was sent in. Although this information has been useful, British Columbia felt that its case ought to be specially considered, and after mature consideration I acceded to that suggestion as being reasonable, under the circumstances. Accordingly, I appointed a special commissioner, who will take up his duties in a day or two. He will go from British Columbia to Japan, spending a little time there, and will then proceed to make investigations in China and India. China is now a large consumer of lumber, and when she begins to open up and develop her vast resources, lumber will form a most important item of import. What strikes one as he goes through China is the extreme bareness of the whole country. In years gone by, when the principles of conservation were not applied, the timber was stripped from the country, and to-day almost every hill in China is bare to the top. In the northern and far western portions of the country they have, of course, a considerable amount of timber, but the greater part of that vast country, having done nothing in the way of afforestation or reforestration, must depend upon outside countries for its timber. From India, the commissioner will go to Australia and New Zealand; thence to South Africa or South America, I am not sure which; thence to Great Britain, where he will conclude his investigations. I asked the lumber and forests interests in British Columbia to recommend to me a proper man for this position, and they recommended a Mr. McMillan, recently connected with the Forestry Department in British Columbia, who was born and educated in Ontario, and who has had a good deal of experience in this line.

12 noon.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I wish to call the minister's attention just for a moment to the difficulties of the Maritime Provinces in regard to freight. It is very difficult at the present time to get steamers to carry lumber. The most convenient class of vessels that we now have in Canada is the larger class of schooners, which might very well be employed in the trade between eastern Canada and British Columbia. At the present time there is quite a demand on the coast of eastern Canada for British Columbia pine. In the town of New Glasgow where I live, large quantities of it are used in the manufacture of cars for our railways; in fact the specifications in some instances do not permit of any other kind of lumber being used for certain parts of the car. This lumber has to come by rail, and in many cases at a very great expense. What I wish to point out to the minister is that it could come for half the cost by water, provided that the vessels were permitted to carry it down the western coast of Canada and through the Panama Canal. But the great difficulty is that the coasting laws do not permit a captain holding a coasting license to go into those waters. The laws are now so restrictive that a captain with a coasting license cannot take a ship from an eastern port in Canada through the Panama Canal to British Columbia, or vice versa; and I suppose that nine-tenths of these large schooners that I have spoken of are manned by captains holding coasting, and not deep sea, licenses. If my hon. friend had enough influence with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to get him to remove this difficulty he could do a great deal towards promoting trade between British Columbia and eastern Canada and I think, the eastern ports of the United States as well. That would be a great relief to the shipping people of the Maritime Provinces, who are hampered in their trade not only with the western coast of America, but with South America as well. We are not able to send our vessels down to the River Plate or to Rio or to any of those ports where there is now a profitable business. There is no reason in the world why they should not go there. I think it would be impossible for anyone to furnish a good reason why a captain holding a coasting license should not be allowed to go anywhere along that coast. Our captains traded there for a hundred years prior to these new restrictive laws being introduced, and they always succeeded in getting back and making profitable voyages. Our captains to-day are just as good men as they were, but owing to the legislation that has been passed here in regard to coasting voyages they are not able to take advantage of that trade.

There is another question to which I should like to draw the minister's attention while I am on my feet. Last autumn, after the war broke out, there was considerable discussion in the papers in regard to the prospects of trade in pit props between the ports of Nova Scotia and Great Britain. It was pointed out that owing to the disturbance in Europe the Baltic trade had been cut out, and that the mine owners in Great Britain required large quantities of pit props, and that these might be supplied from Nova Scotia or some other of our Maritime Provinces. A good many people in the Maritime Provinces were interested in that proposal. I am told that my hon. friend has been making some inquiries in regard to it, and I am sure that any information he could give to the House and the public as to the prospects of developing a trade in pit props between our ports and Great Britain would be very interesting.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The matter was taken up by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and a deal of correspondence ensued. It became a matter of very great moment to the mine owners in Great Britain, and they had some conversations with the British Government in regard to it. The result of it all was that a Commission was appointed, consisting of representatives of the mine owners and a representative of the British Board of Trade. They came to Canada, and we placed at their disposal all the information and facilities we had. They visited different parts of Canada, taking in Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They also made a visit to Newfoundland. After they had gathered all their information they made a report which, in the main, followed along this line: the resources were ample in Newfoundland and in the portions of Canada that they visited. But some difficulties were apparent. One was the difficulty of freightage, which has been a difficulty in every line of enterprise. Another was that it was impossible for them to lay their hands upon any sufficient supply of pit props that were ready for the market. They had then to face this condition: that if contracts were entered into the pit props would have to be cut in Canada during the months of the winter that has just passed, and brought out for spring and summer transport. Difficulties in two ways cropped up there. No one knew how long the war would last or how soon the Baltic supply would again be accessible—and pit props come from other European countries besides Russia. The trouble then was with making contracts for an indefinite period of time. No one here would like to contract unless he could contract for a year or two years' supply, and the mine owners in Britain did not want to make a contract for one or two years' supply because of the uncertainties of the situation. Some business has taken place; and I think some work has been done during the past winter, but on a somewhat limited scale. The commission also made inquiries in British Columbia, and I believe some busines in pit props has resulted from that part of the country. The commission's report shows that the resources of Canada for the kind of timber have been examined into and found ample. I think that is the main information that I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the minister of the opinion that the trade could profitably be carried on in times of peace?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That will depend. It is thought that the price of pit props will never again be as low as in the past, and if the price is permanently raised it may make business on this side possible. I have also heard that some of the mine owners are substituting metal props for timber, but that is just an experiment, and whether it can be done economically or not I do not know.

Mr. MACDONALD: In my county a large number of men are engaged in the coal industry. The difficulty in making contracts was that the gentlemen who came to conduct the business in Nova Scotia insisted that the inspection of the pit props should take place on delivery in England. This wood is in itself not very valuable, and our men reasoned this way: suppose we send a ship load of pit props which, after a rigid inspection, are condemned; it would be impossible for us to sell that timber, as it is not used for other purposes, and the venture would be a total loss. From the way in which the business is carried on in connection with our mines, of necessity there must be quite a number of these pit props rejected from time to time by the local people. The consequence is that men in the business fear to engage in any kind of wholesale way in the delivery of these goods to England. If the parties who are interested in obtaining that trade could arrange for an inspection of timber on this side, I am quite sure that there would be a very much larger supply offered. The business of cutting pit props is not confined simply to the winter season in our province but goes on during all seasons of the year. When there is a good deal of snow it is easy to bring this small wood out on sleds, and the opportunity is therefore taken advantage of, but at the same time the work is going on throughout the year. Having some clients who are engaged in this business, I happen to know that this is their principal difficulty with regard to engaging in this business. If the question of inspection was solved there would be a great deal more of this class of timber offered.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It would be quite possible to solve the question of inspection if other conditions could be made right. My own department would be quite willing to undertake to have the inspecting done on this side, and done under specifications as given on the other side, just as we have done in some other particulars. That could be facilitated if the other conditions could be made right.

Mr. MACDONALD: If there has been any slackness, that has been the cause of it. You can send deals, or any of the other qualities of lumber that have been going to England, and timber of that class that is found defective in some respects can be disposed of for other purposes, but that condition does not arise in regard to pit props.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON: The discussion relating to the development of our trade with Russia and Siberia is very interesting to me. I agree with what my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) and my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) have said in regard to the possibility of that trade. For the information of the committee, I might say that about a year ago I travelled with a gentleman from Paris who told me that he, at that time, was arranging to get the capital to put on the North Pacific a line of steamships trading between Vladivostock particularly and our own British Columbia ports. I have no doubt in my mind that the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific will bring to Canada a very large portion of the trade from Korea, Manchuria and Siberia. It may be of interest to the committee to know that, even if this occurred, it would only be a recrudescence of a state of commerce which existed on that coast and between these countries over a hundred years ago. Long before there was a city on the Pacific coast, in California, in Oregon, in Washington, or in our own British Columbia, there was an emporium of Russian trade in the North Pacific at the ancient capital of Alaska known as Sitka. The city of Sitka was established in 1799, and during the early decades of the last century Sitka was the centre of the Russian trade which supplied the Russian trading posts on the coast and rivers of Alaska and on the Yukon River itself from Behring Sea up the river for a distance of between four hundred and five hundred miles. When the Hudson Bay traders crossed from Hudson bay to the headwaters of the rivers flowing into Behring sea and floated down the Porcupine river on their first trip of discovery, they found, on the lower reaches of the Yukon, the Russian traders there before them. With Alaska, which was then known as Russian America, and with the coast as far down as the place called Fort Ross, which was within 150 miles of the present city of San Francisco, the Russians traded and traded extensively. They bought furs and brought the people engaged in the fur business their supplies. After the transfer of Alaska, or, as it was then called, Russian America, to the United States, which occurred in the same year as our own Confederation, 1867, that trade became practically extinct, and since then there has been very little trade between Alaska, or the North Pacific ports and Russia. However, the trade is there and is capable of being developed in a very extensive way. As a result of the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, the founding of the new city of Prince Rupert, and the establishment of a line of boats from that city to Russian ports, particularly Vladivostock, we shall in a very short time be able to develop a very large and profitable trade.

There is another continent with which I have always felt we have not had as much commerce as we should have had. I refer to the South American continent, and I would like to ask the minister what means we are taking to develop and encourage an interchange of commodities between Canada and that Continent. It is known to the House that to a very large degree the trade of South America is largely in the hands of European countries—England, Germany, Holland and France. The United States have not had that trade intercourse with the South American republics that perhaps they might be considered entitled to. It seems to me that the time is opportune for our Government to take cognizance of this fact, and to do everything possible to cultivate commercial relations between Canada and the South American republics, where I am sure there is a great deal of profitable trade to be secured.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Maybe my hon. friend who has just sat down is expecting a word at least in reference to the latter part of his question. I listened, as the committee did, with a great deal of interest to his remarks in reference to Russian trade. The historical reminiscence is a very valuable one, and I hope we shall be able to reproduce the olden trade in much larger proportions. In reference to South America, I stated that one of our Canadian trade commissioners, Mr. Poussett, was instructed, a year and a half ago, to make a complete tour of all the states of the South American continent. He has spent a little more than a year in making a tour of these countries and making a very thorough, and in some respects, minute examination into the conditions of these different states and the possibilities of trade between these states and Canada. His reports have been published widely and supplemented, as I said to the committee a little while ago, by personal visits to different parts of Canada. Mr. Poussett went through our country, spending about four months in visiting all the larger cities. So it remained, and the war intervened. The war, of course, caused dislocation and difficulties. There is more than simply supplying the demand for the articles to be exchanged in dealing with our trade, or any other country's trade, with South America. There are financial and banking arrangements which seem to be absolutely necessary. At the present time the United States, which has very large resources, which has been very enterprising in reference to South American trade and which has not yet reached a very large measure of success, is up against that difficulty. It is acknowledged now that what is necessary in order that there may be a remunerative trade and extension of trade between such countries as Canada and the United States and South America, is some form of banking and financial arrangement which will put credit and the interchange of money on a fair basis. A great many of these South American states have had to introduce moratoria. They were disappointed in not getting into the European markets, just about the time they were making loans for their own necessities, and they did not get these loans. The state of credit all through South America will take some time to rehabilitate. The Germans had a system of giving long credits to the merchants, running up to a year and even longer, and that disorganized the business of other countries, and in time led to a large decrease in their trade. But long credits have disadvantages as well as advantages, and in the end I think German trade would have gained no very great advantage. That, however, has been cut clean across at the present time, and now the other countries are going in with the idea of not imitating the Germans by giving long credits, and they are trying to arrange banking and financial facilities for trade. If we are going to do a trade with South America we shall want a direct steamship communication, and that we have not had up to the present. When things begin to settle down, I think this is one of the questions Canada will have to take up.

Trade and Commerce—bounties on lead and crude petroleum; to cover expenditure in connection with the administration of the Act, $7,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is the production of petroleum increasing or decreasing?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The bounty paid on lead in 1899, the first year the bounty was operative, was on 449,636,000 pounds, and in 1913, the bounty was paid on 23,985,569 pounds. The bounty, therefore, has largely decreased. The payment of bounty is contingent upon the prices of lead in the market, and the price of lead in late years has been higher so that the bounty paid has been less. On crude petroleum, in 1905, the first year of the bounty, the bounty was paid on 23,336,478 gallons, and in 1914 the bounty was paid on 7,824,219 gallons. The bounty on manilla fibre has lapsed. At present there is a prospect, I do not know how far it may go, of petroleum being found in quantities in the Northwest, and that, of course, would have an effect upon the amount of bounty that may have to be paid.

I found out something which I did not know myself before, and which probably the members of the House did not know, and it is rather an important thing. If you look at the statistics of the production of metals in Canada, you will find that lead, to a certain value, and nickel, to a certain value, are put down as the production of Canada. The fact is, taking nickel for example, if nickel is put down in our returns as having a value of so many millions of dollars, it is the value of the nickel, not as it leaves Canada, but after it has gone out and been refined, and when all the labour and interest on capital, etc., is added to it. It is well for us to have that in mind, and I think it would also be well in future statistics that this shall be thoroughly noted, so that people may not be led away with the idea that the nickel, lead, etc., that is credited to Canada, is really worth that when it leaves the country.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON: How is this bounty fund administered, as to when and where the bounty is paid? I ask this question because at present we have some very promising silver-lead properties in the Yukon, and they are just beginning to ship the ore. I do not know what percentage of lead this ore contains, but I believe it is pretty high. For the information of the people in the Yukon interested in that industry, I would be glad if the minister would tell us how this bounty money is paid, whether at the mine or at the smelter or when the lead is smelted.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The object of the bounty was to encourage silver-lead smelting, and the smelting of other ores than silver and gold in Canada, so that it is not a bounty upon the ore but a bounty upon the products smelted in Canada.

Mr. TURRIFF: Has anything been done by the Government towards prohibiting the export of nickel in its raw state or in the matte? Canada practically controls the nickel supply of the world, and there has been a great deal of agitation in the newspapers of late in regard to this question. It was brought up in the Ontario legislature, and I would like to know if this Government has been dealing in any way with the question.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: If my hon. friend has been interested in nickel and in the controversy that has been going on, he probably knows as much as I do in regard to that question. We have one of the largest, if not the largest, sources of supply of nickel in the world, and we are the principal exporter of nickel ore and in the matte—mostly in the matte; but the refining of the ore, as well as the ultimate refining of the matte, has up to the present time been done in Great Britain or in the United States. On account of the uses to which nickel is put, the subject, since the war has broken out, has come to a prominence in another way rather than by the mere establishment of an industry in Canada. The Canadian Government, as I think the House has been informed, has been acting in close sympathy and co-operation with the British Government with reference to the ultimate destination of nickel, and an arrangement has been made between the two Governments, which is entirely to the satisfaction of the British Government, towards directing the ultimate destination of nickel refined from Canadian matte or ore. It is not advisable to say just what that arangement is.

Mr. TURRIFF: My information is that the amount of labour expended on nickel after it reaches the stage of matte, in refining it further to make it fit for commerce, is much greater than the amount of labour expended in mining, roasting and smelting, and that absolutely none of the further refining is done in Canada. The whole nickel industry of Canada, which is, I understand, about 85 per cent of the nickel industry of the world, nickel being found in only one other place, namely, New Caledonia, in the region of Australia, is in the hands of two companies—the Mond Company of England, and the Canada Copper Company of Sudbury, which refines all its products in the United States. I do not suggest that the minister should say anything definite at the present time, but serious consideration should be given to the question whether something cannot be accomplished by which the nickel can be refined in Canada or at least within the British Empire. If that were done, we would have a much better control over the industry. If nickel cannot be procured, proper armour-plate cannot be manufactured; so that the subject is worthy of consideration, both from the war point of view and from the economic point of view, of having many millions of dollars spent in Canada instead of in the United States and Great Britain, especially when we have the whole matter in our own hands.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What my hon. friend says is in many particulars along my own line of thought. I would think, however, without having made a study of the question, that when you come to the employment of labour, the major part of the labour expended on nickel is done in our country. When you come to the refining of the nickel, a large part of the expenses is on the equipment and machinery; but not being an expert on that matter, I am not certain. My hon. friend is on the same platform with me in this respect, that we are both in favour of made-in-Canada.

Mr. OLIVER: I have received several petitions asking that the export of nickel be restricted. Possibly the form of the petition emanated originally from the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). At any rate the petitions have been received. While possibly it is not formal, I would be very glad, if the minister would on behalf of the Government, give in a sentence what would be a fair answer to the petitioners.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not remember just what the wording of the petition is, but its object is that steps should be taken if possible, by which the nickel, which is found in Canada and the initial processes in regard to which are carried out in Canada, should be further refined in Canada itself, so that the finished article being in Canada might be absolutely under the control of Canada, which it is not now, when it is exported either to the United States or Great Britain. The Government, however, while it has a large interest in that question, has not yet come to any conclusion, either that nickel should be prohibited from going out in the form of matte to another country, or that the Government itself should undertake the operation or refining it. There are a good many factors to be thought of in the establishment of such an industry, and as to the capital and equipment necessary for it in Canada. I do not think I can give any more formal answer than that.

Trade and Commerce—salaries and contingencies under the Inspection and Sale Act, $3,000.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This vote has been reduced by $2,000. I have been economical in it; perhaps I have been too economical. Last year we had a vote of $5,000, and we did not expend within $2,000 of it for the inspection we put on and the expenses we incurred, and on the appeal of the Minister of Finance I reduced the vote. I am sorry I reduced it so much.

Trade and Commerce—salaries and contingencies under the Cullers Act, including an amount of $2,000 for superannuated cullers, $9,400.

[Sir G. E. Foster.]

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The committee will notice the reduction in this item. A reduction occurs each year, because as the old officers who are superannuated pass away, their superannuation allowances do not of course have to be provided for.

Mr. PROULX: Do the cullers contribute to a superannuation fund?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: An arrangement as to the cullers was made some years ago, by which those who were not considered necessary for the carrying on of the work, which is vastly diminished, as my hon. friend knows, and who had been a long while in the service, were put on the superannuation list. I am not quite sure, but I think a slight contribution to the superannuation fund was taken from their salaries.

Census and Statistics, $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER: There is a reduction here. What is the reason for it?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: As the tabulations are finished in the census which was taken in 1911, the help necessary to make these tabulations passes out.

Mr. OLIVER: Then you actually have one department of the Government that dispenses with services that are not needed any longer?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I try to do that, and some times, especially in times like these, it is pretty difficult to do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The hon. gentleman is not much like his colleagues.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: When you have to let temporary employees go after they have been at work for two or three years, and in times like these when many of them have nothing to depend upon, it makes one think carefully and examine closely to see if there is not work to be done. We keep for this work those that are deserving and let the others go. That is what I try to do.

Canada Year Book, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it not possible to bring the publication of the Year Book closer up-to-date? Any issues of the Year Book that I have ever seen have been so far behind that much of their interest and value has been lost. The Year Book is a most valuable compilation, but it loses much of that value by reason of its lateness.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I found that difficulty when I came into office, and I have no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite found it so in their time. The difficulty is not so much in getting the Year Book ready in time, but, after it is ready, getting it printed on account of the congestion of printing at that season. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman speak of it as being a valuable work. I have not heard much of it from members of the House, but I hope all have got copies and have looked into it. I think the Year Book shows a great advance in its make-up and material, and we are trying to make a really good Year Book. This year, several new features were added, and I have had very strong commendation of the work from people in other countries as well as people in Canada.

Mr. MURPHY: Is the material compiled by officers of the hon. gentleman's department?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes. It is only right to say, however, that last year I started a system of having a number of monographs upon certain important features of Canadian history, resources or geography, and for these I levy upon the best men I can get outside my own department. For instance, the article in the current Year Book was contributed by Dr. Doughty, who, of course, has done it very nicely.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the subject?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is on the history of Canada. The idea is to have the geography, the history, and other subjects in relation to the country put into monographs which, while not too long, will yet give the distinctive facts of the subjects treated. Then, the Year Book being a consecutive publication, next year's volume will refer to the articles in the preceding Year Books, and in the course of years we shall get into the publication, and I trust permanently on record, features in regard to Canada that will be of very great value.

Mr. MARCIL: How does the minister arrange about the translation of this book? Is the translation done before the book appears in English, or after?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am not certain, but I think this work is translated in my own department. I have a French translator there, I know.

Mr. MARCIL: The hon. minister knows the value of having the work out as soon as possible?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, and I try to do that.

Dominion's Royal Commissions, $15,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: It is not likely that any of this will be spent this year?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am not so very sure. The Dominion's Royal Commission visited Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia last year and did its work there. It may finish the work in Canada this year. It is under advisement at present, and quite possible—and I think probable—that the Commission will take up their work in Vancouver some time late in summer or early autumn, and will finish the examination of Canada, and then the whole of their work will be finished so far as visiting and examining the countries is concerned.

Mr. MACLEAN: May I remind the hon. minister that he promised the other day to give me information with respect to the steamship service between St. John and Bear River, which was discontinued in 1912? I hope he will be able to tell me that the subsidy will be restored.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Seeing my hon. friend to-day, I was reminded that I was to furnish information on that and on another subject which he mentioned to me. I hope to have the information before the House closes.

Mr. MARCIL: As to the Gaspé service, has anything been done?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is in statu quo.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Salaries, rents, wages and contingencies under the Canada Grain Act, $625,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Will the minister explain the reduction?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The reduction is really a matter of bookkeeping; it is more apparent than real. Out of last year's vote we had to pay, during a certain part of the year, transport charges on the grain that came into the elevators. This year we do not wish to have a vote for that, as it is being paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and re-payments, when made will go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The total expenditure last year under this head was $450,737.57, and the expenditure up to February 28, 1915, was $444,945. The expenditure of this year, therefore, will be larger than that of last year, due to the fact that while last year we had only one elevator at work, the terminal at Port Arthur, this year we will have at work two at Saskatoon and Moosejaw, and, later in the season, one at Calgary, which means that three internal storage elevators have to be provided for this year. The vote includes general expenses of the staff. It takes in salaries of the staff administering the Canada Grain Act, which consists of permanent employees of different grades, and temporary employees who are required for a greater or less portion of the year; internal elevators, in addition to the terminal at Port Arthur; travelling expenses of commissioners; contingencies at the different centres where the officers are working; printing and stationery; general.

Mr. OLIVER: The minister intimated that the Calgary elevator will be in operation some time during the season.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Probably by the first of October.

Mr. OLIVER: What has been the cost respectively of the terminal elevator and the Saskatoon and Moosejaw elevators?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: In round figures: the terminal elevator, $1,300,000; the Saskatoon and Moosejaw elevators, a little more than $1,000,000 each. The terminal elevator has a capacity of 3,250,000 bushels, the Calgary elevator, 2,500,000, and the others 3,500,000.

Mr. OLIVER: This vote will include the Calgary elevator?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: For the portion of the season during which it is operated, yes.

Mr. OLIVER: How much of this vote will be required for the operation of each of these elevators?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: One can scarcely tell as yet; we only know what has been paid out up to date. In the Saskatoon elevator we have a superintendent, a clerk, an electrician, a foreman, a weighman, a cleaner and four temporary labourers. The staff at the Moosejaw elevator is about the same.

Mr. OLIVER: What will be the total cost, approximately?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: So far as salaries are concerned, the superintendent gets $2,500. The salaries of the clerk, electrician, foreman, weighman and cleaner amount to about $475 a month, which, multiplied by twelve, will give approximately the amount paid out for permanent salaries. Then, whatever temporary help is necessary, and there is always more or less, will have to be added to that.

Mr. OLIVER: What amount of business was done respectively by the terminal, the Saskatoon and the Moosejaw elevators last year?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I will just give the information generally. The gross earnings of the Dominion Government elevators amounted to $216,795; the direct expenses were $59,304, leaving a gross profit of $157,491; indirect expenses taken therefrom leave a net profit of $148,684. Then there were some little additions to income amounting to $846, making a net income of $149,530.

Mr. OLIVER: On what turnout of grain?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: A trifle over ten million was handled in and out.

Mr. TURRIFF: After allowing interest on the investment, that shows a fairly good profit?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes. The cost of the elevator was $1,300,000 in round figures. After a reasonable amount for interest and depreciation has been deducted from that, there is still a fair profit. That was our initial year, and we were charging the rates which prevailed with all the other elevators, and which prevailed up to the end of that year. It was a pretty favourable year in many respects, but we will not know just where we are until we have operated the elevator probably for at least three years. Then we shall be able to strike an average for the seasons. For instance, we shall not handle so much grain this year as last, because there was not so much grain raised, and consequently there is not so much to put through.

Mr. OLIVER: About what was the total amount of grain put through the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur last year?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I will first give the figures for the Government terminal elevator: wheat, 5,278,040 bushels; oats, 1,520,892 bushels; barley, 462,148 bushels; flax, 2,886,990 bushels; rejected grains, 109,813 bushels; making a total of 10,257,883 bushels. I do not appear to have the statement of the figures for the other elevators, although it should be here.

Mr. OLIVER: Would it be 100,000,000 bushels?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: More than that; somewhere around 150,000,000 or 160,000,000 bushels.

Mr. OLIVER: I just wish to get a general idea of the total output of the Government elevators as compared with the other elevators.

Mr. TURRIFF: How many terminal elevators are there?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The terminal elevators in the western inspection division have a capacity of 41,050,000 bushels of grain. There is the Canadian Pacific railway elevator at Transcona, the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator "D" at Fort William, and, also at Fort William, the Consolidated Elevator Company, Eastern Terminal Elevator Company, Empire Elevator Company, Fort William Elevator Company, Grand Trunk Pacific Elevator, the Grain Growers' Grain Company, the Ogilvie Flour Mills Company and the elevator of the Western Terminal Elevator Company. These have a capacity of 25,050,000 bushels. At Port Arthur there is the Government elevator, the Port Arthur Elevator Company, Limited, the David Horne elevator, a small elevator, and the Empire elevator, these having a capacity of 15,000,000 bushels, making a total of 41,050,000 bushels. Then there are hospital elevators in the western inspection division with a capacity of 2,130,000 bushels. In the eastern inspection division there are twenty-two elevators with a capacity of 29,850,000 bushels. As showing the number and capacity of country elevators and warehouses, together with the Ontario terminal hospital elevators and public elevators in the eastern division, there are 2,607 elevators, 24 warehouses, 1,207 stations, and the total capacity is 154,765,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: Would the minister make a statement as to the operations of and business done by the Saskatoon elevator?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I can only give my hon. friend a statement up to the time of the last monthly report. That gives a fairly comprehensive view of the operations at Moosejaw and Saskatoon. The Moosejaw elevator started in somewhat handicapped for want of proper power, but it started operations on the 14th October with one engine and about a quarter of the power necessary to run the elevator satisfactorily. On the 1st November the second unit was installed, and these two units, although there has been some little trouble, have been kept in constant operation. The total amount of grain received from the 14th October to the 14th February, 1914, which is as late as I have the statement for, is as follows:

	Bushels.
Wheat	1,642,705
Oats	442,998
Barley	12,525
Flax	580

Shipped out:

	Bushels.
Wheat	437,774
Oats	62,357

Leaving in store:

	Bushels.
Wheat	1,220,928
Oats	340,641

Together with all the barley and flax that was taken in.

Mr. TURRIFF: I suppose a large quantity of that would be wheat which is being held for seed?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: A large portion of that was wheat taken in for seed and purchased through the agency for that purpose. The following is a statement of the grain in store and held by the Government for seed purposes:

	Bushels.
Wheat	800,000
Oats	29,122
Barley	4,030

That compares with the following quantities held on commercial account:

	Bushels.
Wheat	852,705
Oats	373,876
Barley	9,485
Flax	188

Showing that the commercial operations were considerably larger than the operations for seed wheat purposes. The elevators have done the cleaning and sacking of all the wheat that has been brought into them for seed purposes. In addition to that they have cleaned the screenings and put them into shape for sale to the farmers.

Mr. OLIVER: When you speak of screenings being put in shape for the farmers, does that include the foul seed?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, that takes in everything that goes into screenings. The weeds are rendered innocuous as far as germination is concerned by being put through the choppers. The province has a law in reference to that and we have come to an arrangement with the officers of the provincial government. The arrangement as regards that point fills the law and is satisfactory to the provincial authorities.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a local demand for the screenings?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, and we provided these choppers so that they could be made available. We commenced sacking for the seed department on February 1 and the following amounts of grain were cleaned and ready for sacking on the date of this statement:

	Bushels.
Seed wheat	250,000
Seed oats	20,000

The rest of it has been cleaned up since this statement was put in. I think it is now pretty nearly all through the cleaning and sacking process and is being distributed. The elevator is equipped with four automatic baggers with a normal capacity of five bags per minute, equal to an output of 24,000 a day of ten hours. The cleaning is done with Richardson cleaners with a capacity of from 11,000 to 15,000 bushels a day of twenty-four hours. The cleaning machinery has been run night and day on seed wheat in order to get it ready for late winter and early spring delivery.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a drying plant connected with the elevator and, if so, what is its capacity?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, there is drying machinery in connection with it. I do not know what the capacity is but the aim is, as it will be in connection with the others, to have the two elevators absolutely perfect as far as equipment is concerned, so that the treatment, drying, cleaning, bagging and chopping may all be carried on at the central depot.

Mr. OLIVER: In my judgment, probably the most important purpose that the interior elevators could serve would be the drying of damp grain in a season when dampness is the prevailing condition. If my view is correct, it would be necessary that the drying apparatus should be of abnormal capacity as compared with the other functions of the elevator.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That is quite true. Our idea of the use and importance of these internal storage elevators has somewhat changed since the idea was first conceived, and we see now that they have other uses than the mere storage of grain, for which they will prove very advantageous to the West. In an abnormal season such as the year before last, when there were vast quantities of wet and damp grain, and we had to bring in at Port Arthur a large drying plant from the United States, and thereby save a large proportion of the grain that would otherwise have been almost a total loss, the drying of grain becomes very important. Even if one of these abnormal seasons comes in the course of every four years only it will be found that these internal storage elevators will have proved a great boon to the country by preserving, through drying and treatment, what otherwise would have been lost. The drying machinery will be adequate for all ordinary purposes, but it is arranged so that if the season turns out to be very abnormal, which can be told some weeks before the urgency for treatment arises, it will be very easy to add an extra drying plant.

The Saskatoon elevator was completed on the 5th of October, and it is well to say that both these elevators were not only well constructed, but that they were constructed and opened ahead of the time specified in the contract. The amount of grain received in the Saskatoon elevator, from the 13th of October to February 1st was: wheat, 540,698 bushels; oats, 702,445 bushels; barley, 14,157 bushels. Shipments in bulk have been made out, up to this date, of about one-eighth of the amount of wheat and about one-seventh of the amount of oats. A large proportion of the wheat and oats was for seed. The commercial wheat in store and shipments out amounted to 177,303 bushels, and of oats 491,779 bushels, showing commercial operations about one-half of the wheat for seed, and twice as much as seed operations in oats. This elevator is equipped with two automatic baggers of the same capacity as those in Moosejaw, and equalling a total of 12,000 bushels a day of ten hours. They have also cleaning and drying apparatus and are therefore equipped in every way for all the eventualities of grain life in the West.

Mr. OLIVER: Would the minister make a statement with reference to the amendment made to the Grain Act, which I presume was in response to representations made by the lake carriers in regard to weight on receipt and delivery?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: If my hon. friend has not read the report of the conference with the delegates who visited the Government, I shall be glad to send him a copy. The whole question had its rise in the difficult problem of adjusting the shortages in lake carrying. The shipper puts his grain into the hands of the Government at Fort William, and it goes into the Government elevator or into elevators which are supervised by the Government. The shipper has no power inside of these elevators; his grain is delivered in trust to these warehouse men. When the grain is ordered out of the warehouse it is weighed out by the elevator into the boat, and the shipper has nothing to do with that operation, which is under Government supervision, or under Government management. The weight of the grain that is put in the vessel is therefore given by the Government weighman and with that grain and that weight the carrier goes on his journey to the eastern elevator. The grain is then weighed out into the eastern elevator, but it is weighed out without Government weighmen and without Government supervision; it is weighed in by the elevator itself into its elevator. If that weight and the weight given at Fort William should agree, there is no trouble between the carrier and the elevator, but if the weight given by the in-weighing or receiving elevator is 1,000 bushels short, then, under past conditions, the carrier had to make up that shortage. The carrier reasoned in this way: that he received from the Government a certain weight of grain at Fort William, that he did not throw it overboard or lose it in any way; but when it was weighed in at the eastern elevator it was short, although he contends that he delivered to the receiving elevator just as much as he got at the loading elevator. Consequently, he demurred against the payment of the shortage. His ground of attack was, that there must be something wrong with the weighing at the loading elevator, or there must be something wrong with the weighing at the unloading elevator. That is the basis of the dispute. The carriers met in convention and came to the conclusion that in this year particularly, having had some heavy losses, and having had all this trouble for years, they would protect themselves by a bill of lading, the essence of which would be that they would not contract with the shipper to make good the shortage, although they would contract to allow a certain percentage as a donation towards this shortage, and beyond that they would not go. They would not make contracts with the shippers except upon that new or modified bill of lading. The shippers did not accede to that arrangement, and took the ground that they were out of it as far as the lake transit was concerned—that, their grain having been delivered to the Government or Government-supervised elevators, and the grain being weighed out to them, the weight was presumably right, and they should not be held responsible. Therefore they refused to go in with the purpose of that bill of lading. Then, it was thought that if all these people would get together, they might come to some fair arrangement to test out some method by which the shortage could be arranged for each year without the multiplied troubles. It ended in this, that the outloading elevators and the lake carriers were prepared to give contributions towards a shortage fund, to ensure the receiving elevators against losses. If there were any losses greater than this fund made up, then they would stand that part of the shortage themselves. A conference of the carriers and elevatormen was held lately in my office, and it was pretty representative. Those who were represented there came to an agreement practically on that basis, and I had hopes that the whole thing would have been settled for this year. The idea was to try out that arrangement for one year; if it worked well, it could be kept on, and if it did not work satisfactorily some other means could be devised. The long and the short of it was that in getting the different representatives from all parts of the country to sign the agreement—the assent of each one was essential to the carrying out of the scheme—delays took place, and I asked them to come together again to see whether we could not come to a final agreement, sign up, and have the whole matter arranged. A number of them came; but it was not a representative meeting. The result is that the situation is about the same as it was before. The question is now engaging the consideration of the officers of my department and of the Government, and before the session closes I hope to bring in an amendment to the Act which will provide some satisfactory way of disposing of shortages, so as to settle the question, if we possibly can, and not have the perennial disputes and troubles and inconveniences which arise from the condition of things that has existed in the past. The shippers, the outloaders and the carriers are agreeable to having such an amendment; the objection comes from some of the eastern elevators.

Mr. OLIVER: Has the amending Bill not been put through?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No. I introduced two amendments into the Senate, when I had hopes that this arrangement by agreement would be made as to the shortages. That Bill has come to the House; and, if any further legislation is necessary, as I think it will be, it will be brought in as an amendment to that Bill, so that when it comes before the House, the three questions will be before us, and then the result can be submitted to the Senate and the legislation finished.

Mr. OLIVER: As I understood the terms of the Bill that came from the Senate, the question of shortage was put squarely up to the carriers.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There was nothing in the Bill with reference to that directly. The Bill had two amendments, one of which was regarding the certificate of weight at Fort William, as given by the Government weighman. At Fort William you have the shipper and the elevator and the vesselman, and some one has to say what weight is put into a vessel. As the Government system of supervision, if I may so say, seems to be rather better than the system of supervision at other elevators, it was the opinion that the weight ascertained and given by or under the supervision of the Government should be the weight that should be taken as final, and that weight would be put up to the receiving elevator. That would not mean that the receiving elevator would have no recourse after that, but that would settle the weight until, by process of investigation by the grain board, before which the matter could go, or further by the courts, if it went to the courts, an ultimate decision could be had.

Mr. OLIVER: As I read the Bill, it seemed to me that if a carrier, having received a certain amount of grain under the supervision of the Government, did not deliver that amount to the receiving elevator, he was absolutely responsible.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: He read it, and it was his duty to deliver it to the receiving elevator. The whole point is that, the Government having fixed the weight, it is supposed to be the proper weight and the weight which the carrier must deliver. There might be inaccuracies in weighing the grain at the receiving elevator, and they would have to be determined.

Mr. TURRIFF: As I understand the matter, the Government has officials, not only at the Government elevators, but at all the other elevators doing business at the head of the lakes. Does the Government hold itself responsible for the correct or proper delivering of the grain from the time it is weighed in one of the large terminal elevators until it is transmitted into the hold of a vessel? The wheat is weighed in large hoppers; it has then in most cases to be elevated and to go through quite a system of spouts before it gets into the hold of the vessel, and there may be leakage in many ways. When the Government weigher gives a certificate, is he responsible that the amount of grain goes into the vessel, or is he simply giving a certificate that he has weighed a certain amount of grain?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Take the Government elevator first. When grain comes to a Government elevator, it is taken out of the hands of the shipper there. It is weighed out into the elevator, and the Government elevator is responsible for every pound of grain that goes in; it is responsible for delivering an equal quantity of grain both in weight and in grade; if the grain is spirited out of the elevator in any way, that is to the loss of the elevator. The grain remains in the elevator until it is ordered out, and then the Government officials in the elevator weigh it out, spout it out and supervise it as it goes into the hold of the vessel. They have to weigh out just as much as they take in. If they cannot do that, they have to stand that loss. After it once gets into the hold of the vessel the Government is not responsible for what takes place; it is then the carrier's loss.

Mr. TURRIFF: That would not cover the point I want to get at. Take the case of a terminal elevator other than the Government elevator. There is a Government weigher, and he turns, say, 10,000 bushels of wheat on the scales and gives a certificate to that effect. Does the Government hold itself responsible that all of that 10,000 bushels gets to the hold of the vessel? Because, it is quite possible that grain can be switched between the scale hopper and the hold of the vessel.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Then, that would be the loss of the elevator if such loss was due to its negligence.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not quite so sure. The Grain Act as it stands provides that the weight given by the Government is the weight; but the amendment that has been brought before the House says that the weight as given by the Government shall be the weight in law.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What is that?

Mr. OLIVER: I say, I do not think the conclusion of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) as stated is the correct one. The present law says that the weight given by the Government elevator is the weight. That leaves it a matter to be ultimately decided whether that weight was the lawful weight or not. But, under the amending Bill before the House, it is proposed to say, not only that that is the weight but that it is the lawful weight—that is, there is no recourse as against the weight given by the weigher.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It may be that I can save my hon. friend some argument on that score. He is speaking of the amendment as it came to the House?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That amendment does not express the view of the Department or of the Government. It got in a little wrong, and that was not noticed in the Senate. So, when it comes before the House there is to be an amendment.

I think I shall have to ask my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) to repeat his question to which I gave an answer. It may be that I did not quite understand his question, or it may be that he did not understand my answer; or maybe his question is right and my answer is not right, and I want to have it right.

Mr. TURRIFF: From the information I have received on the subject, I am led to infer that weighers may not be always as correct as they might be. Also that information leads me to point out that discrepancies might occur between the time the wheat is weighed and the time it arrives in the vessel.

4 p.m.

I assume that in a Government elevator matters go more nearly correct than in an ordinary commercial elevator. But in an ordinary commercial elevator the Government puts in official weighers. Take the case of such an elevator, and a shipment, say, of 10,000 bushels of wheat, is ordered out. The Government weigher weighs that wheat and it is sent to the hold of the vessel. But what I am asking is: Does the Government hold itself responsible that it is 10,000 bushels of wheat that is weighed out by their own weigher, or does the Government see to it that every bushel of that 10,000 bushels gets to the hold of the vessel? It is shipped as 10,000 bushels; but from the weigh-scale hopper in the elevator to the hold of the vessel that wheat has to be elevated, and lowered, and switched around to a very considerable extent, more particularly in the old elevators built fifteen or twenty years ago. So, I am trying to find out if the Government looks after that wheat from the time it leaves the scale hopper to the time it gets to the hold of the vessel.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Government receives the grain, as I stated before. The grain is ordered out, and they weigh it. They weigh out the exact quantity that is ordered. Now, after it passes the weigh-scale, my hon. friend wants to know whether the Government sees to it that every grain of that is carried into the hold and gets there—

Mr. TURRIFF: Every bushel—yes.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:—and whether, if every bushel does not get into the hold, the Government is responsible for all that does not get in. I have asked that question of Dr. Magill, and have given him the facts, and have asked him to write out a statement, so that there may be no question about it. What he has written is as follows:

1. The inspector drops an electric light into the shipping bin, to see that the bin is emptied into the hold.

That is the first thing that is done.

2. An officer stands on the dock and sees the spouts handled, and shakes them out. The inspectors watch the belts and number the shipping bins for each boat.

These are the precautions which the Government takes in its own elevators with its own men; and these are the precautions which are taken in every elevator that loads out at Fort William. If anything goes wrong and it is between the weighing-scales and the hold of the vessel, and it is possible for this inspection and supervision to spot it, then, of course, the responsibility falls on the elevator, and they would be made to, as we say, "pony up." But with the Government elevator nothing is supposed to go wrong.

Mr. OLIVER: Why is it that while the Government supervise the weighing and delivery of all outgoing grain from the terminal elevators, they do not supervise the transfer of grain from the hold of the vessel to the eastern receiving elevator?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The bent of the department and its administration being towards a proper inspection and certification of grain, as the years have passed by that inspection and certification has been brought to a state of efficiency which, perhaps, we shall not be able to exceed, taking the human element into account. But it is equally important—and, in some cases, more important—that attention should be given to the weighing of the grain, because if the weight is defective the farmer and the shipper may lose large amounts on large transactions. There are difficulties in connection with the weighing of grain. The grain is weighed in, we will say, at a country elevator; then it goes to Winnipeg, and, ultimately, to Fort William, where it comes under the supervision of government weighmen. The scales in all country elevators are under the control of the Inland Revenue Department, and inspection of them, is, therefore, carried out by that department. Up to the present time inspection has been made about once a year, and my hon. friend knows how easy it is for scales to get out of order.

Mr. OLIVER: When the Estimates of the Minister of Inland Revenue were under consideration, I drew his attention pointedly to that condition.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That has been taken up, to a certain extent, by the two departments concerned. I have no hesitation in saying that it would conduce to the efficiency of the service if both these operations were under the control of one department, that department naturally being the one which has the most to do with the grain. So far, we have not decided to do that, but certain steps have been taken in the matter. In the first place, the Inland Revenue Department has arranged for more frequent and more thorough inspections of the scales in the western division, including the elevators at the terminals. In the second place, we have ourselves obtained from the Inland Revenue Department authority to inspect and supervise the scales in the terminals at Fort William. The chief weighmaster at this terminal—he is a scalemaker, knows all about scales, and is a very energetic and efficient man—has supervision of all scales at Fort William. The weighing at Fort William has been greatly improved within the last year or two, and, I dare say, is susceptible of still further improvement. At first attention was directed chiefly to the West, the centre and source of the grain, but gradually it became apparent that something would have to be done in the East as well in order to make the system continuously efficient. Eastern inspection and weighing, particularly the weighing, has not been under the supervision of the Government to the extent that it ought to have been. There is no Government weighing-out from the vessels into the receiving elevator; we do employ weighmen in some eastern elevators who supervise the weighing-out from the receiving elevators into the cars. An Order in Council was passed last year which looked towards bringing the eastern system, in respect of weights particularly, into conformity with the western system. The matter is complicated a little by the fact that the elevator systems of the East differ from those of the West; the Harbour Commissioners have their elevators and manage them, and it takes a little time to get all these interests in agreement and in accord, so that the system shall be made to work smoothly and efficiently all the way through. I hope, however, that before another session of Parliament is held, our efforts in that direction will have resulted in the securing of a more uniform and efficient system.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: I cannot understand why there should be many shortages at the eastern elevators. If a vessel has 100,000 bushels of grain for an eastern elevator, exactly that amount is bound to be delivered, and the mate goes up to the weigh scales and checks the amount very closely in order to establish that the requisite amount of grain has been delivered. You have, therefore, that first check on the part of the vessel owner. In order to avoid dispute between the owner of the vessel and himself, the owner of the elevator also has a man there to check the incoming quantity of grain; that is check No. 2. These elevators contain a great many bins, the capacity of each bin being from 20,000 to 50,000 bushels of grain, and a cargo of say 100,000 bushels of grain can be placed in two or three bins.

There is in the office—and I know this from living where there are elevators—a model so to speak which shows exactly the grain of each vessel, and the numbers of the bins in which it is distribued. We will assume that John Brown of Peterborough owns a hundred thousand bushels that came on the steamer Rosedale. That grain is deposited in bins 1, 2, 3 and 4, we will suppose. The bins may not all be full, but each contains part of the grain. Now when the order comes in to ship that grain it is drawn from the elevator in cars, and it is there that the Government weighman comes in to see that the right quantity goes into the cars. The grain drops out of all elevators from the bottom, and when the four bins are empty that proves that all the grain of John Brown, or whoever it is, has has gone out. If there is not enough grain to fill John Brown's order, the vendor can very speedily get an inquiry into the matter, and unless the grain has been there for a considerable length of time the shortage, if any, is easily ascertained. I live where there are elevators, but I do not think there are a great many shortages after all, and some that I have heard of were—say 500 bushels out. That meant that the tallyman had forgotten one tally. Of course the shortage might be only 200 bushels; that depends on the scale. But the grain is very well watched both by the owner of the vessel and the owner of the elevator.

Mr. TURRIFF: The discussion so far has been largely, I imagine, on the outgoing weighing from the terminal elevators. The efforts that have been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are in the right direction, and I think the system is being gradually improved, and that before long it ought to be very complete. There is, however, a considerable amount of complaint about the weighing of wheat at the original elevator where the farmer places it, and at the terminal elevators at the head of the lakes, and possibly the present will be as good a time to discuss this matter as on the amending Bill that my hon. friend is bringing in. I do not know that I can do better than read a letter on the subject that I have just received, and that seems to me very much to the point. It shows what the difficulties and the losses are, and gives the writer's opinion how they could best be avoided. The letter is from Mr. D. D. Campbell, Room 246, Grain Exchange, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and is dated January 13, 1915:

J. G. Turriff, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:

I see that it is expected that the Dominion House will soon open for business, and I understand that there are likely to be some changes made in the Grain Act, and it is possible that the Board of Grain Commissioners may be asking for more power to be given them in dealing with matters that may be all right in some cases, but if I had an hour's talk with you I think I could convince you that there never was a time when more definite action is necessary in securing redress from the errors that are continually occurring, especially in weights, both of car lots, and also in cargo lots.

The farmers and dealers in the West have far more reason to start a rebellion over the weights they are receiving for their grain than there was for the war which is now raging in Europe. You may say we have the Grain Commission to apply to, and in reply I say we have applied to them, but without results, as the facts which I will state will go to prove. I say without fear of successful contradiction, that conditions never were so bad as they are at the present time, and I have been closely in touch with the grain handling for the past thirty years.

A little over a year ago I took up the work of collecting claims for different grain firms, and also for farmers that desired my assistance, and in that time I have secured adjustments in weight for the following amounts of grain, by proving to the satisfaction of those in charge that the weights as issued were not correct.

I secured 20,000 pounds of wheat, 10,000 pounds of wheat, 404 bushels of flax, 466.28 bushels of oats, 234 bushels of oats, 95 bushels of flax, 136 bushels of wheat, 100 bushels of wheat, 1[illegible]3.40 bushels of wheat, 55 bushels of wheat; and I could name a good many more on which I have received adjustments. But some of the terminals refuse to make any adjustment, even though the facts are very clear that an error has occurred, but shield themselves behind the so-called Government weight. And the recent investigations that have been held in regard to cargo lots show that some cargoes had thousands of bushels over in weight, and others were found to be short to a large extent.

In fact conditions have got so bad that the railway companies are taking the stand that terminal weights cannot be relied on, and refuse to pay claims for shortages in weight, even where weights have been sworn to as the car was loaded—unless the car has been seen leaking in transit. As an example, I have seven cars which were all handled in about ten days. The grain was weighed in by Government weight at St. Boniface, and weighed off at Fort William by Government weight; and the shortage on the seven cars is 14,330 pounds. This occurred nearly a year ago, but the claims are not paid yet.

I think the foregoing will clearly show that there is something wrong. What is the remedy? I am prepared to admit that J. G. White, the chief weighmaster at Fort William, is one of the best scale experts in Canada, but I think the facts which I have given show clearly that it is not the scales that cause the errors, but the connections getting the grain to and from the scales, by the men in charge. You know from practical experience that there is not much to be gained in having good hooks on a chain, unless every link is capable of standing the strain; as the strength of any chain is its weakest link. I claim that we are not paying salaries enough to get men of the right type to take up this work. I claim that there is not a bank manager in Fort William that has any more responsible position than the weighman in one of the large terminal elevators. Note the conditions under which they work and the salaries paid. Is it any wonder that we are not securing accurate weights?

We require a Dominion Utilities Commissioner, with full power to inquire into all troubles arising between the railways and the terminal elevators, who would have full power to give a ruling as to where the responsibility rests, and order an adjustment of same. For the average shipper cannot afford to stand a suit in court with a large corporation. I will state a few cases as an example:

A farmer loads 1,100 bushels into a car, and has kept correct record of his weights. The record taken in passing Winnipeg by the Inspection Department goes to show that the car contained the amount claimed. When the car is placed at the elevator for unloading, the record shows that one of the seals on the door of the car is gone, and the outturn of the car is over 100 bushels short. The railway company refuse to pay the claim on the ground that their records show sign of leak or damage in transit, and they claim the car was sealed when placed on the elevator siding. Who is responsible for the loss?

A car is loaded with oats, in Alberta, and consigned to Montreal. This car was first handled by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, as far as Fort William, and taken to Montreal by the Canadian Pacific railway. The outturn shows a loss of nearly $200. Both railways decline any responsibility for the loss on the ground that there was no record of leak while the car was in their possession.

At the time that this car was handled, there was a clause in the Grain Act, as follows: "No grain shall leave a public terminal point without being officially weighed, unless the owner or his agent orders otherwise."

This car was not weighed, and the Grand Trunk Pacific claim that if it was to be weighed it would be the Canadian Pacific railway that should attend to the weighing, and the Canadian Pacific railway claim that the weighing should have been done by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. This car was handled in 1913 and is not settled yet.

A car of flax loaded in Saskatchewan and consigned to Fort William was noted on arrival at Winnipeg to have been loaded to the wheat line, which is 65 inches high (or supposed to be). On arrival at Fort William the record was taken on two occasions as being 67 inches deep, which is slightly more than the record taken at Winnipeg. The record shows that this car arrived at destination with one of the doors unsealed. The car was unloaded, and the weight given as 61,800 pounds, which is altogether too light a weight for either 65 or 67 inches of flax, and the record of depth is changed to 47 inches by writing a four over the six. The weight sheet shows this car to have been loaded 67 inches deep, and the Canadian Pacific railway refuse to pay the loss claimed on the ground that the record of the car shows that they delivered the flax to the elevator, and the Elevator Company refuse to make good the loss, on the plea that the record of 47 inches which was arrived at after the car was unloaded is correct. Loss claimed is $429.70.

It is possible that the Board of Grain Commissioners may ask for authority to give a ruling in cases of this kind, but I do not think that it will be consistent, as they would be simply giving a decision on the work done by their own employees, and the last case stated here occurred at the Government elevator, which is operated by the Board of Grain Commissioners. So I think you will see that we require an independent party to decide where the responsibility rests, and whose decision would be final and binding on all concerned.

If it is necessary to secure redress, raise the weighing and inspection charges to $1 for each. That will amount to less than a quarter of a cent per bushel, and if we can secure accuracy by doing so, by all means let us have it.

I presume that will be $1 for each car.

While acting as shippers' agent, I took the ground that we were not paying sufficient salaries to secure the best men. There is twice as much work and three times the responsibility in weighing and inspecting a car as there is in selling it on commission, and at present we pay for weighing 30 cents per car, and 50 cents for inspecting it, and we pay our commission firm, say from $10 to $20, and no one begrudges the commission firm their charge if they look well after the selling of same.

There is no reason why this matter cannot be overcome if it is gone after in the proper manner.

You will see that this has reference more particularly to the case of dealers and farmers. Dealers are in a much better position than farmers to secure redress for anything that is wrong. In the first place, the railway companies are much more likely to make a fair settlement with a large firm of dealers, or the big millers, than with the individual farmer. In the second place, the dealers and millers are wealthy corporations as a rule, and they are in shape to put up a big fight in the courts if they do not get a fair settlement. On the other hand, a farmer who has suffered a loss of $100, or $400 or $500, is bandied about from one railway company to another, from one elevator company to another, or from an elevator company to a railway company, and under these circumstances, what possible chance has he to get a fair settlement of his claim? He cannot possibly get a settlement unless he takes the case into court, and there is not one farmer in a hundred who would want to do that. There are very few farmers who would be in a position to do it. It might cost a good deal more to collect $100 or $200 than the amount collected. This writer suggests that there should be an independent authority appointed to deal with these matters. It seems to me that there is something in his contention. He mentions cases, and he is prepared to supply the necessary proof in every case, where claims have been outstanding since 1913 and are not settled yet. It seems to me that this is not fair, and if my hon. friend would take this matter up, even now before his amended Bill goes through, something might be done to overcome the difficulties. You will notice that the writer of this letter thinks that it is not the Board of Grain Commissioners who should deal with these matters. There is a good deal of reason in what he says; they would simply be siting in judgment on their own employees. That should not perhaps be given too much weight to, but at the same time there is something in it. A man who would be absolutely independent after all would probably be better able to arrive at what is fair and right than anybody else. I have known the writer of this letter for the last thirty-six years. We settled on adjoining sections in the year 1878, some thirty-six years ago. I have known him intimately ever since, and I am sure my hon. friend the member for Lisgar (Mr. W. H. Sharpe) will bear me out when I say that D. D. Campbell is as straightforward and as reliable a man as there is in Canada. He is thoroughly well posted in this business, and I would ask the minister to give every possible consideration to the suggestion he makes, and that if possible, when he comes to take up his Bill to amend the Grain Act, he shall do something along the lines suggested, more particularly in the interest of the farmer and of the individual shipper, as he is not in as good a position to look after his own interest as is the grain dealer or miller.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The hon. member who has just spoken was good enough to allow me to see the letter yesterday, and I had an opportunity of reading it over. He has read it to the committee, and it will go upon the record and will be there for further reference and consideration. There are two remarks in the letter which would lead me to think that as good a man as Mr. Campbell is, he is carried away a little by his fervour, wherein he says that conditions were never as bad as now, and also that they are so bad that they would be as much a justification for a rebellion in the West as are the grounds on which the present war is being waged by the Allies against their enemies. This is more, I think, for the purpose of attracting attention than to be regarded as a statement of fact. My officers on the ground and the members of the commission, I think, have at heart the best interests of the farmers of the West in respect to all these things.

Mr. TURRIFF: There is no doubt about that at all.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: They have very carefully watched the matter and have improved methods in every possible way. Their statement to me is that last year showed less grievances and complaints than any preceding year, not only with reference to leakages and weights and certificates and loading platforms and car shortage, but also in regard to every other thing that comes up as a difficulty in this great transportation system. I should be inclined to take the testimony of men who are every day looking over the whole field, rather than that of my friend who wrote the letter, and who sees, as it were, just a confined area, and has his eye particularly upon his own line of redress of grievances. Consider the human element that enters into it: you have railway systems of tens of thousands of miles stretching from the Rocky Mountains to the Lakes, and on every one of these systems are cars which carry grain, and the cars may be of wood and other perishable material, and there are good cars and cars that are not so good, and there will be accidents, leakages, and times when the man who breaks the seal and makes inspection forgets to put the seal on again. All these things occur, and so long as the human element enters into it, they will occur. It is for us to see that there is the necessary efficient supervision, and we can strengthen the supervision and method by which grievances are to be met and complaints are to be investigated, and we can come to greater perfection, but I do not expect that we will ever arrive at a time in the transportation of grain when everybody will be bereft of a grievance. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) would live in the West fifteen minutes if he did not have some little grievance he could get hold of now and then, in order to keep him alive and quicken his activities.

Mr. TURRIFF: We do not have to look far for grievances.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I am not finding fault. The Grain Commission, with the full approval of the department, has been bending its energies to the improvement of the weighing system and to the status of the weighmen. The inspecting system has been brought to a very good standard, and now the weighmen have to be looked after. We found the weighmen all temporary employees, with no certainty of how long they would be employed. We found that when the number of men who offered themselves were all combed over to get the best of them for inspectors, the remainder were thought good enough to be weighmen. We have changed that and we are making the weighman a permanent rather than a temporary officer.

Mr. TURRIFF: That is good.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The salaries we pay them may not be high, but we have fixed a minimum and a maximum, the minimum being $75 a month and the maximum $100 a month, and if they prove satisfactory their salaries are gradually increased from the minimum to the maximum. They are therefore very much better off than they were before, and we are getting every year a better class of weighmen. Again the human element comes in and mistakes will be made. With reference to these seven cars that went from St. Boniface down to Fort William, I can tell my hon. friend that we might possibly avoid any mistake if at St. Boniface we could see that every grain went into the cars, and if we put a man at the head of the car and another at the tail of the car, and got them to keep track and watch the sides of the car until it got to Fort William, and then saw that every grain of that get into the elevator was weighed at Fort William. In that way you would have supervision all the way through and you might come near perfection, but of course that process is impossible. I do not know that the time will ever come when a corporation will pay all claims until it is compelled to, and no man likes to pay until he makes certain that he ought to pay. To remedy these difficulties the writer of the letter says that a man should be appointed who would be an autocrat and a czar, and that when he investigates, the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the elevators, have got to do just as he says and make restitution as he declares. It goes a long way to say that the one man shall investigate and pass sentence, and leave no recourse to the other party for appeal or for courts of law. We have to be pretty careful as to how far we should go in that direction. Our commission could have these complaints made to them and they could investigate and they could report, but they have no power to enforce, and it is a pretty grave question as to whether you should give any man or any body of men the absolute right just of themselves to say to other parties what they should do in certain cases, without leaving the other parties any recourse of appeal. I would be glad if it could be made possible that none of these difficulties would occur, but after all we can only take a comparative view. These are the points that the writer of the letter passes upon, that came within his experience, but count them all up and how few they are in comparison with the innumerable transactions that take place in grain every year in Canada. That does not say that there may be a good many claims that are not brought to the surface, and which would swell that number. It is always a right thing for a minister to say that he will look into the circumstances and that he will take into consideration whatever view is placed before him, and he ought to do it and to do it honestly. If he finds there is anything in a suggestion which can be practically carried out, it is his duty to try and do it, and he must exercise his judgment in that respect. I know that Mr. Campbell was once in the employ of the Government in this class of business, and his work came under my notice, and so far as his work is concerned I think it was done conscientiously and with a desire to do his whole duty.

Mr. TURRIFF: If the recommendations which Mr. Campbell makes were carried out, it would cut away his business, so that he cannot be making them from any personal motive. I have every confidence in the way in which the minister is endeavouring to help matters along in that respect, and I have every confidence that he is doing his best to get the law into good shape so that if the farmers do make a loss they will have their remedy. I still think that in the case of the seven cars there ought to be a decision one way or the other long before this.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I quite agree. Of course, as to the management of the interior terminal elevators it is so far an experiment. These elevators have a capacity of 3,500,000 bushels of grain storage, and the object is to get the farmers of that part of the country interested in these elevators so as to study out what possible advantage they may be to them. In order to facilitate that, one of our travelling inspectors, who as regards grain has little to do in the winter months, has been making a tour of the Northwest provinces. He has a nice set of lantern slides which show the construction of the elevators and their workings and give general representations of the mechanical conditions of the transport system. He calls meetings and exhibits the lantern slides and gives the farmers present an address upon the storage elevators—what they are designed for, what it is proposed to do with them, and in what way the farmers may make use of them to their own advantage. I am informed that these meetings are attended with very great interest by large numbers of the farmers. We are also sending out little illustrated pamphlets about the working of our elevators, with the terms, etc., to the farmers of the West, all with the idea of getting the farmers to focus their attention upon the Government elevators to see of what use they may be to them. The management is arranging the fees and charges in such a way as to make it an inducement to the farmer to send his grain to the Government elevators. In the arranging of the fees and charges we are for the present absorbing the stop-over charge in the transport system; and, when you take our line of charges, it is possible for the western farmer to put his grain into the storage elevator and have it remain there for 45 days, and then send it forward to our elevator at Fort William and have it transferred to that elevator, all at a total charge which is less than it will cost him to send his grain through the elevators directly to a terminal elevator at Fort William. We think, when that is fully understood, it will have two results. In the first place, it will have this best result: it will give an opportunity to the farmer to avail himself of a space of time for the storage of his grain and prevent him from throwing it absolutely and quickly upon the market when it is threshed, because he has no opportunity for storing it. It will thus conduce gradually to the conservation of grain from being rushed on to the market too quickly and sold, thus diminishing the prices which are offered. It offers this inducement also to the farmer, that he can have his grain cleaned and treated and, if it is out of condition, put into condition, all at a comparatively low rate. These are some of the advantages which we are offering to the farmers in connection with the internal storage elevators.

Mr. OLIVER: There is nothing to be said in condemnation of the idea of the minister to give all publicity possible to whatever advantages there may be in the existence of these internal storage elevators; but the condition remains as it was in the beginning that in the exceptional year the elevators will be used largely, and in the ordinary years they will be used very little, as in the case of the present year as shown by the returns that my hon. friend has given. With three railroad systems operating four tracks to Lake Superior during the summer and three tracks to tide-water during the winter, the conditions which existed some years ago and which were made the original basis of the idea of establishing interior terminal elevators, will have been radically changed; so that whatever reasons there may have been some years ago for the establishment of these storage elevators for storage purposes, those reasons are not now so strong to-day as they were then. I am not finding fault with the Government for establishing the elevators. They will be found to be of use in the exceptional year, but they are not a substitution, nor can they ever be made a substitution in any sense for the original demand made on behalf of the farmers for Government-ownership of all the terminal elevators at Lake Superior.

I wish to say a word in regard to the matter brought up by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). While I want to join the hon. member in what he said as to the minister's good faith in his effort to improve the conditions of the grain trade and of grain transport under the administration of his department, and while I have every confidence in the good intentions of the minister, at the same time I am bound to say that, as I followed his argument, I was reminded of the argument made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) when dealing with the grievances of the lake-carriers and the difficulties of weighing at the receiving elevators. The conditions complained of in the letter that my hon. friend from Assiniboia read is exactly parallel to that complained of by the lake carriers, which has been the cause of serious disputes between the elevator people and the grain shippers, and which is to be made the basis of legislation by the Government during this session. The difference is that in the cases brought to the attention of the Government by the hon. member for Assiniboia, the complainant or victim is the individual farmer or the small shipper, whereas in the case of the grain carriers, the complainant is a large organization which has capital and means of bringing what grievances it has to the attention of the Government or indeed of forcing them upon the attention of any government. Some people say that because it is the individual farmer or small grain shipper who suffers a loss because of leakage or shortage between the interior elevator and the terminals, it is a small matter; but I maintain that, for the success of the Government policy in regard to elevators, it is a more important question than that of the dispute between the carriers and the elevators. If the Government has any purpose in operating the elevator at Fort William, it is to encourage the individual farmer to ship his grain direct, and to give the farmer all the profit that it is possible for him to receive out of the production and marketing of his grain. If the farmer who ships from his local siding either through a local elevator or from an elevated platform, is liable to be robbed of his grain in transit without recourse, then he is certainly going to be deterred from shipping. And the purpose of the terminal elevator at Fort William is not going to be served. It is not possible to prevent leakages, but it is possible to make the railway company absolutely responsible for any leakages that occur; just as the legislation which is not to be passed, but which is now before Parliament, makes the lake carrier absolutely responsible for any leakage that may occur. When the railway company receives so much grain from the loading platform or the elevator they should turn out that amount of grain at the terminal elevator; and if they lose the grain it should be their loss and not that of the farmer. If the grain is loaded from the platform into the cars, the weight taken at that place, if it is possible to take it, should govern as to the outturn at the other end. That is the object to be achieved, and if it cannot be achieved under present legislation then I think legislation should be provided under which it could be achieved.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he would determine the weight that goes into the car that is loaded, not at the local elevator but over the platform?

Mr. OLIVER: I understand that there is no particular difficulty in weighing the grain into the car from the elevator.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. gentleman was pointing out the difficulty of determining the loss to the farmer who might ship from the local elevator or from the loading platform. If the farmer ships his wheat through the local elevator, he has his weights taken, and has his records. These absolutely determine what he has put through the elevator. But if he ships it over the loading platform, there is no way that I know of to determine the weight. I do not know of any way of determining that weight before it gets to the Government weigher at the terminal elevator. That is one of the difficulties the farmer is up against. Loading over the platform, there is no way by which the farmer can determine the weight unless he takes it to a local scale and has each load weighed separately. He has those weights to guide in determining the weight of the whole load in the car, and that might determine it with some measure of accuracy.

I did not quite understand the minister, and while I am on my feet I would like to ask him with regard to a statement he made that a certain time was given to the farmer free who put his grain through the elevators erected at Saskatoon or Moosejaw. But a great deal of the grain of the West is produced at points east of these elevators, and so many of the producers of grain could not make use of them. Would the same length of time be allowed free to the farmer who ships his grain direct to the terminal elevator at Fort William?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The charge for elevating into the elevators in the West is made low, and the elevating charge covers storage for a certain number of days.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does that apply to the terminal elevator as well as the interior elevators?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: For grain that is taken out of the interior elevator and transferred to the elevator at Fort William the charge is a lower charge, and that carries with it free storage for a certain number of days.

5 p.m.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. gentleman has not quite answered my question. If the farmer ships direct to the terminal elevator at Fort William, what time would he have?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Fifteen days—exactly the same as in the other case.

Mr. OLIVER: In regard to the point raised by my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright), certainly if the farmer cannot have a definite weight or measure on shipment, he cannot expect a definite recourse on outturn. But if he can get such a definite weight on shipment, then I say he should have a definite weight on outturn and if he cannot get weight he certainly can get measure. For, when the car is loaded from the loading platform and levelled off, and a chalk line is drawn all around the car at the level of the grain, if, when the car gets to Fort William it is not up to that measure —that is, allowing for a certain amount of shrinkage— that is proof that there has been leakage. So, the farmer could have a weight, or he could have a measure, beyond any question. There is an instance mentioned by the writer of this letter, of grain actually weighed by the Government weigher at Winnipeg and weighed again by the Government weigher at Fort William, and the shipper had to stand the loss for leakage on the way.

Mr. WRIGHT: It could not be weighed at Winnipeg. The only way would be to weigh the loads and take what tare may happen to be written on the outside of the car. But the only place where it can be weighed definitely is at Fort William, or wherever it is unloaded. If the grain were unloaded at Winnipeg, going to a local mill or something of that kind, then the weight at Winnipeg could be accurately ascertained. But the average man shipping his grain to Fort William would have no means of determining the weight of his grain at Winnipeg, outside of taking the cars at their actual tare and deducting that from the gross weight. The weight of the grain is always determined at Fort William; the inspection is done at Winnipeg and Fort William. But there is no way of determining the weight of the grain at Winnipeg.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not shipping the grain, nor am I handling the elevator; I am simply saying that Mr. Campbell mentioned a certain instance. If I remember his letter correctly, he said that a certain amount of grain, having been weighed at Fort William—

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: St. Boniface.

Mr. OLIVER: St. Boniface—showed a loss in transit, and that loss had not been made good by the railway company up to date, though the shipment was made nearly a year ago. He urged that there should be some officer appointed by the Government with arbitrary power to make an order in regard to such shortage and enforce the order. Now, I am not going to argue that the Grain Commission itself should not have that power—that this should not be one part of the responsibilities of the Grain Commission. I think the idea of the writer of the letter was that the Grain Commission, being itself in the grain business, so to speak, was not, in all cases, the proper party to render such a decision.

That may be a very fine point, but I think that for the time being most of us would be very glad to give the Grain Commission authority to inquire into and enforce awards in regard to shortages in transit. Above everything else, let the decision be without appeal. In no department of the administration of the law is there greater denial of justice than there is in the unlimited right of appeal. There is no reason why the decision given in the first place should not stand; it is a decision of the human mind anyway, and the chances are that the human mind which had first knowledge of the transaction is the one best qualified to give final decision. So I say that the minister will be well advised if he takes seriously into consideration the complaint voiced by Mr. Campbell, asking for protection to the small shipper in the matter of grain shortages in transit, and that authority be vested in the Grain Commission or in some other body to inquire into and to enforce decisions in regard to the responsibility for these losses. The loss of 100 bushels may, perhaps, be a small thing in a shipment of 150,000,000 bushels of grain, but to the farmer it may mean the loss of his profit on the whole year's work. It is a small thing in the aggregate, but it is a tremendously big thing to him, and his experience will affect the action of a large number of his neighbours. The matter, therefore, has more importance than that assigned to it by the minister. While I give him every credit for good faith in the desire to administer his department well, he will pardon me, as more directly representing the people who are affected by this condition, for pressing their views upon him perhaps somewhat pointedly.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There is no objection to the matter being pressed, but

I desire to place another view alongside that which has been put forward by my hon. friend. Your man in the West ships a crate of eggs to Winnipeg. He entrusts that shipment to the railway, gets his bill of lading, and the railway has to deliver the goods at the other end. He has a shipment of poultry or crockeryware coming from the east; to all these shipments is applied the common law that regulates the carrying system of this country. All shipments, whether large or small, must be delivered at their destination by the carrier, and if they are not delivered in good form or not delivered at all, recourse is had by the shipper against the carrier. The farmer who deals in grain or in anything else is subject to the same law; he entrusts his shipment to the carrier; the carrier undertakes to deliver that shipment at its destination, and if he does not deliver it he has to account to the man who ships. It is always the case that the man who ships a dozen eggs is not in as good a position to press his claim as the man who ships a million dozen; the big trader will always have the advantage in making terms or in enforcing his claims against the carrier. That is the common lot of all of us, in every condition of life.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE: I think that the conditions affecting the grain trade are just a little different from those which apply to the things that the hon. minister has just mentioned. We have a grain commission to handle the grain trade of Western Canada, and if that grain commission are going to handle part of the grain, I think they should handle all of it. If, as Mr. Campbell states, grain was weighed in St. Boniface and again at Fort William or Port Arthur, and a loss of three or four hundred bushels was disclosed, it seems to me that it is plain that the railway company should make good that loss.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We all agree on that.

Mr. SHARPE: I do not see why all these cases should not be put in the hands of the Grain Commission; as a matter of fact, I think I remember instances in which the Grain Commission interfered in cases of this kind and succeeded in getting the railway companies to make good the losses that had been sustained. I think that the whole of the grain trade, not merely part of it, should be put in the hands of the Grain Commission.

[Sir G. E. Foster.]

Mr. McKENZIE: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the addresses delivered this afternoon; particularly am I interested in the paternal solicitude which is exercised by the Government and by the minister over the farmers of the West. Great care is taken that everything is done for the western farmer; with the eaestern farmer it is quite different. I should like to know what is the quid pro quo for the miner and the fisherman and the lumberman in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island who pay their fair share of all this money that is being expended in the West? I remember that as far back as 1881 we started to put our money into the West for the development of the land and of railways, and so forth, and we have been continually doing it ever since. And now we are spending our money in paying commissioners and other officials to see that the farmer of the West is protected. The story in the East has always been that we should give for the purpose of developing the West, so that it might become the granary of the world, that foodstuffs would become cheaper by reason of the enormous amount of money we were spending in the West, and that flour, which thirty years ago was dear in the Maritime Provinces, would certainly become cheaper. But after twenty-five or thirty years' experience we find that flour instead of getting cheaper is getting dearer. In fact, I do not remember any time when flour was as dear in Eastern Canada as it is to-day. If any miner in my part of the country who is paying $9 or $9.50 a barrel for flour asks me what has become of all the money that he contributed in the way of duties on flour and woollen goods and almost everything that he and his family uses, I am not in a position to tell him. But we pay commissioners and ministers and others to get this information, and I hope the minister this afternoon will be able to put on Hansard something that I can tell the lumbermen and miners of Nova Scotia when they ask me what has become of their money and how it is that flour is getting dearer instead of cheaper. I wish the minister and the Government would show some solicitude and following care, if I may so call it, over the grain till it becomes flour, and after it becomes flour till it gets into the store and is sold to the miner and the fisherman who has no middleman at all, but has to depend on his own capacity to make the best bargain possible. It looks to me as if there was some combination of millers or flour merchants who are putting up unnecessarily the price of flour. This discussion came up in the House a few weeks ago on a motion of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) that there should be some control over these prices. It is a difficult matter of course. But we have a Railway Commission in this country, and the origin and the principle of the formation of that commission was to have some control over freight rates. That Commission became necessary after twenty or thirty years of experience in this country. Why, then, should there not be some control over the price of flour? There may be a difficulty in doing it, but all the greater necessity for dealing with it; and I believe the day will come when it will be necessary to have a Commission in this country to deal with the question of the prices of flour and all the other commodities that the people must have.

Mr. BLAIN: May I ask whether there was any complaint about the high price of flour before the war? My impression is that the price of flour was not very high in Canada before the war began.

Mr. McKENZIE: Oh, yes. For the last two years in our part of the country the price of flour has been gradually rising, and for at least nine months or a year before the war there was a very strong cry in our part of the country that the price of flour was inordinately high. Yet we are told here that there is an abundance of wheat in the country, more than we can hope to sell to the people who are very much affected by the war. And that being the case, I am afraid that this cry of the war is simply made the occasion for millers and others to put up the price. If we have more wheat than we can export, if we have plenty of mills and plenty of wheat, I do not see that the mere fact of war should be an excuse or a reason for inordinatly putting up the prices. What I wanted to submit to the minister was that when the fisherman in Nova Scotia has fish to sell he must look after it himself. He must find a market for himself, and if any of it is lost in transit he has to find his way through the courts as best he can. There is no commission or machinery of any kind whatever to help the fisherman in selling his goods, and the same with the lumberman and the miner. They have contributed money in large amounts towards the development of the West, but they have to look out for themselves the best way they can. We are all glad that the West is developing, but I am not making a far-fetched argument when I say that the contention in Eastern Canada always was, as the minister knows, that the day would come when the enormous development of the West would give us cheap flour, cheap foodstuffs, and so forth. I say that there should be strong oversight at all events, over the grain from the time it leaves the farmer until it is put in the flour barrel, and after it is put in the flour barrel, until it is sold to the miner or the lumberman or the fisherman, who must buy it at the price it is offered. If the machinery of the minister's department is not sufficient to supervise these matters, the people are willing to pay for any further instruments that he may bring to his aid in keeping these things right. At all events we hope and expect him to be in a position to tell the people of this country that the prices are too high. Even if he does not interfere with any machinery, by way of a commission or otherwise, he should tell the people that the prices are too high, and then it would be time to see whether or not there was a combination and the proper remedy to apply.

Mr. MORPHY: Do the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia use western flour in the pure state, without blending?

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes, there is no other flour for them to buy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not propose to follow up by way of answer the sectional appeal made by the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). I do not propose to follow up his complaint that this Government is too solicitous of the good of the western farmer. I am very proud to say they have been solicitous, but I refer his complaint to better hands. I leave it to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and to the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), and I know they will reply to it in much more forceful language than I could use. I am also hopeful that their appeal to him will have more effect than any I could make. Perhaps I could suggest to the hon. member that we pay out annual bounties from the treasury to the fishermen, about one-half of whom I think are in the hon. gentleman's own province. We are very glad to pay those bounties, and none of us grudge them in the least. but there is no corresponding bounty in connection with any other industry in our country.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does the hon. gentleman know the origin of those bounties?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am quite aware that they are paid out of the revenue from an award which was made by a tribunal.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is Yankee money.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That award, when it was made, was the property of the whole Canadian people, and if any had a particular interest in it, it would be the fishermen of earlier days, and not the fishermen of subsequent times. However, that question does not arise, because no one for the purposes of this debate questions the propriety of it at all. What I rose to say was this: The hon. member for Edmonton has offered some observations on the advisability of the Grain Commission having the control and disposition of shortages and overages arising chiefly through carriage by water, and to some extent also through carriage on land.

He has argued that it would be well were the grain commission given power to fix responsibility and assess the proportion in which the shortages should be borne. On the other hand, my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce argues that that would be departing from the general scheme of fixing responsibilities, and that dealers in western grain have no more right to appeal to another tribunal in respect to grain than they would have in respect to other commodities or than citizens in other parts of Canada would have in respect to articles they shipped. I wish to offer another suggestion to lay alongside of the two. It is, I must admit, in support in some degree of what has been advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton. The question of a tribunal to which any traffic must be referred is after all simply a question of which tribunal is best. If it were possible, for any other class of damages, or any other class of difficulties, in regard to civil rights, or the regulation of the trade, to establish a tribunal other than the courts which would give better results than the courts, in my opinion the people engaged in that trade would have the right were the class large enough to that tribunal. The whole question amounts to this: is the class of cases of such extent, and do these cases involve such special matters of investigation and difficulty, that a special tribunal can best deal with them? It is well known that very many problems are now referred not to the courts but to commissioners. The province of Ontario now presents a most pronounced example in connection with the administration of a very large area of cases—cases in connection with workmen's compensation. They have relieved the courts entirely of the disposition of these cases and committed them without recourse to a workmen's compensation commission. The question as to whether in this case reference to a commission would be the better method I would think, would be this: is that commission in a better position than any court to dispose of questions of shortage and overage and to make regulations in the main governing the disposition of shortage and overage? Is it in a better position to do that? If it is, it appears to me that the question is settled. If it is able better to get at the evidence, if it is composed of men more familiar with the trade, if it is provided with the means of getting the evidence and doing substantial justice, to a greater degree than the courts, then, it appears to me, we have the answer to the problem, and such a tribunal should be clothed with the necessary powers. May I put it again? The question before us is not: are the people entitled to any better remedy than any other? They are entitled to the best they can get. If the Grain Commission is the best tribunal, then we should give them the Grain Commission. It appears to me that it is the best tribunal because it appears to me that in the long run likely more justice can be done than by recourse to the courts. The main reason is that in this matter of the regulation of the traffic in grain there might in the courts be great delay. Delay is exceptionally dangerous, and delay is inseparably incident to court procedure. It might be better that the usual rules of evidence should be departed from, and perhaps injury done in some cases, than that we should be compelled to resort to the protracted proceedings of the courts. I offer this only alongside of the views put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton.

Mr. BURNHAM: It seems to me that this discussion is founded upon what may be called the fallibility of the human race in regard to its own affairs. The various sufferings which people endure by reason of their incapacity are made up for as nearly as possible by what is known as a system of insurance. It is possible, therefore, where people cannot have recourse to law, or because the facts are such that they cannot be reasonably ascertained, to institute a system of insurance so that there will not really be any injustice done to anybody, and this system might reasonably be extended to all Canada. Perhaps we could go a little further and extend it to every branch of that trade. We have had the same principle worked out after a great struggle during a long course of years in the Workmen's Compensation Act; let us have it also here. I do not think it is quite fair to say, as the hon. member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie) has said, that we are spoon-feeding the West all the time and that we get no return. I must confess that I am a little frightened at the present time, considering that the farmers of Ontario, by reason of the decrease in the price of their farms through the competition of the West, have lost not less than $500,000,000 for the benefit of the West. But I wish to emphasize it, and I believe I am right when I say, that this difficulty could be overcome by means of the institution of an insurance policy. It seems to be quite reasonable and proper that the Government should institute it. They might possibly assess the shipper and the producer everywhere a very small amount for that purpose. There is no real reason why the state, which undertakes to control and administer the affairs of the people, should not provide in every particular for the efficient carrying out of the same.

To provide for the construction, acquisition, leasing or expropriation of terminal elevators, revote, $3,000,000.

Mr. MARCIL: I would like to ask the minister if he would give the committee any explanation of the increase in the price of flour. The minister has described the care that is taken of the farmer's wheat from the time it leaves the wheat fields until it arrives at Port Arthur. After the grain has reached that point, what action, if any, does the Government take? Does the Government's action cease at Port Arthur and does the minister know why the price of flour has increased during the last few years? What happens after the wheat has reached Port Arthur and is put on board the boat there? Is there any other control exercised over the shipper, the carrier, the miller or the middleman before the flour finally gets to the consumer?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is somewhat cruel of my hon. friend, when my attention is centered on this great elevator and grain business, to call me back to a problem which we could discuss for a long, long while. I might at least give my hon. friend one reason why flour is higher to-day than it was two years ago: it is because the price of the grain out of which the flour is manufactured is a good deal higher than it was.

I remember that three years ago good merchantable wheat out of which good flour could be made, could be bought in the West at from 55 cents to 65 cents per bushel, but at present you cannot buy that same wheat for less than from $1.35 to $1.50 per bushel. The fundamental cause of the increase in price is the war and the conditions that have arisen from the war. I think you will find it true if you take all commercial transactions into account, that the moment there is one very predominating cause that makes for a rise in the price of an article, there is a tendency to give that a boost by everybody who has something to do with the handling of that article. I think myself that in the stores of Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, we are paying to-day higher prices than are warranted by intrinsic conditions, simply because of the rise that has taken place in the staple commodities because of the war, and, in sympathy with that there is a tendency for everything to go a little higher. That is somewhat unphilosophical, but I think it may explain a little bit of the rise. The main reason is due to the fact that the material out of which flour is made has almost doubled in value, and there is beyond this a period when no man knows to what prices may go, and under such circumstances there is a tendency not to reduce prices, but to hold on and keep the prices up. I hope my hon. friend will excuse me for not going further into this.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister has expressed the view generally held and I am thankful to him. What supervision is exercised after the grain leaves Port Arthur?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There is supervision in the eastern elevators to a certain extent. The grain having received its final certificate at Fort William, it carries this final certificate clear through to the point of shipment. I did say we might have more supervision over the weighing in and out through the eastern elevators along the Georgian bay and down to Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. GERMAN: Was the $4,700,000 voted last year all used?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No.

Mr. GERMAN: This is practically a revote of a portion of that money?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. GERMAN: Is it the intention of the minister to adopt the policy of taking over the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No.

Mr. GERMAN: Then, what terminal elevators are referred to in the vote?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We are taking over none, but there was power given to us in the Grain Act to expropriate, take over, or construct; and, while this vote is entirely for construction, we had to follow the wording of the Act in the vote. Nothing will be taken over so far as we have the least idea at the present time, but there is a transfer elevator to be built at Vancouver for the Pacific coast as a complement to the terminal elevator at Calgary, and there is also a terminal elevator to be built in due time at Hudson bay to act as a transfer for the Saskatoon and Moosejaw elevators, when the route to the Hudson bay is prepared to carry grain.

Mr. GERMAN: When will that be?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I could not say to within a week.

Department of Public Works—civil Government, $569,835.

Mr. ROGERS: In our civil government we have a clean bill of health; there are no increases except the ordinary statutory increases.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Do I understand that Mr. Ewart, chief architect, has been superannuated?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who succeeds Mr. Ewart?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Horwood.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has he been appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Why?

Mr. ROGERS: We asked the Civil Service Commission to make the appointment, and in their judgment they did not think it was wise to do so. They gave it some consideration, I believe, but they did not approve of the appointment. We have to have a chief architect, and Mr. Horwood was the man who, in the judgment of the department, was the best available to take the position.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Am I to understand that Mr. Horwood has been taken on without the approval of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. ROGERS: That is right.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is he not a technical officer?

Mr. ROGERS: The office of chief architect is really not a technical position; it is a position of great importance, and one that is entitled to consideration beyond the scope of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GERMAN: I had it in my mind that Mr. Ewart was to be retained as a consulting architect.

Mr. ROGERS: He is.

Mr. GERMAN: That is right; he is an excellent man.

Mr. PROULX: Does Mr. Horwood come from Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: No, he comes from Ottawa.

Mr. PROULX: Is he the gentleman who designed the plans for the new Parliament buildings in Manitoba?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. PROULX: Is there not a Mr. Horwood in Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: Another gentleman?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. TURRIFF: What relation is Mr. Horwood of Ottawa to the architect in Winnipeg of the same name who, in connection with the foundation for the parliament buildings there, cancelled the written contract for $64,000 and afterwards put in other foundations that cost $778,000?

Mr. ROGERS: I am responsible for the figures which my hon. friend has quoted in regard to the buildings at Winnipeg, and I do not know anything about them. I have never seen any figures to show that the state of affairs is such as my hon. friend suggests. Mr. Horwood here is, I believe, a brother of Mr. Horwood in the city of Winnipeg. He is an architect of long standing in the city of Ottawa, and is well known here as an excellent architect.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is there any correspondence between the department and the Civil Service Commission as to the appointment of Mr. Horwood?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, I believe there is.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will my hon. friend be kind enough to bring it down later on?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: What was the salary of Mr. Ewart, as chief architect?

Mr. ROGERS: $4,000.

Mr. PROULX: $3,000 is a large increase in these hard times.

Mr. ROGERS: It is impossible to get a man capable to fill the post of chief architect in the department at the present time unless such a salary is given. This salary was voted last year by this House for this purpose.

Mr. PROULX: What is the salary of the chief engineer of the Public Works Department?

Mr. ROGERS: It has been $4,000 up to date, but it should be increased; and if I can possibly do so, I hope to ask the House to increase it before we get through.

Mr. PROULX: The salary of the deputy minister is only $5,000, and he has more responsibility than the chief architect has.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the policy followed by the minister in regard to promotions in the inside service? Every time a member comes to Ottawa, he meets a large number of officials who complain that although they have been many years in the service, new men are brought in and promotions given right and left, and that they are overlooked unless they are recommended by some one in particular. When a man has reached the maximum of his class, what happens to him? Does he remain there for life, or is there any hope of promotion for him? What has to be done to get him into a higher class?

Mr. ROGERS: A man employed in the department makes application himself to the head of his particular branch, and that head reports the matter to the minister. His application is considered, and if approved it is transferred to the Civil Service Commission for consideration. If the Civil Service Commission approves, the promotion takes place.

Mr. MARCIL: There must be a vacancy in another branch, before he can be promoted to that branch?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: Did the minister ask for applications for the position of chief architect, or did he ask only this particular man to fill the position?

Mr. ROGERS: We had been looking for some months to get a man to take this position, before we decided upon Mr. Horwood.

Mr. PROULX: Did the Civil Service Commission advertise for a chief architect?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. PROULX: Why was not the appointment made through the Civil Service Commission? I understand that all the appointments in the different departments are filled through the Civil Service Commission; that is, a department asks the Civil Service Commission to recommend a man, and the commission advertises in the Canada Gazette and posts up advertisements in the different post offices throughout the country. The minister does not know whether or not he could have got a man for less than $7,000. If Mr. Ewart's salary was $4,000, there is an increase of $3,000, although the cost of living has not increased in that proportion. I find fault that in the different departments the ministers are too prone to pay very large salaries to the chief officials and to let the poor messengers starve on $500 a year. A messenger came to me the other day and said that he had been in the hospital. He had to go into the public ward; and when the bill was sent to the city, the city would not pay it, the city treasurer claiming that the Government should pay their men sufficient salaries to enable them to pay their hospital bills. This man said that his wife had been sick, and that he could not afford to call in a doctor. Rents are very high and the cost of living has increased. The minister goes on increasing the salaries of the higher officials from $5,000 to $6,000 or $7,000; in fact, the salary of the Deputy Minister of Justice was increased to $10,000; yet poor messengers who have families to support receive only $500 per year.

Mr. ROGERS: It is one of the weaknesses of the Civil Service Act that the minimum salary to start with is $500 a year. We cannot pay more.

Mr. PROULX: The minister should be solicitous for those poor people, and not too solicitous for those who have high salaries.

Mr. ROGERS: I quite agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. PROULX: The minister might have been able to get a good architect for the salary that Mr. Ewart was receiving, or at least for $6,000 a year. It is an important position, and the minister should have asked for applications and not have selected only one particular man, because he happened to have connections in Winnipeg and to be a friend of my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER: I suppose I will not be accused of being disposed with undue favour towards the members of the ministry or towards the Minister of Public Works; but it strikes me as hardly seemly that an officer of the department should be on the same basis as regards salary as the minister who is in charge of the department and whose responsibility must necessarily be very much greater. Either the minister should have more or the employee should have less. In the present time of stringency, it would appear that the alternative would be that in no case should an officer be at as high a salary as the minister. If a special technical employee must receive a high salary, surely the man who is responsible for the discharge by that official of his duty should in common sense receive proportionately more or at least enough to make a distinction between the two positions.

Mr. ROGERS: I quite agree with my hon. friend. Of course, the salaries of the ministers should be much higher than they are. At the same time, my hon. friend will understand it is impossible to get a chief architect or a chief engineer to-day who is not already in the department at any salary below the amount named. There is no respectable architect in business in any part of Canada that does not earn more than $7,000 in his own office. It would be impossible to get any architect suitable for the important position of chief architect of the Department of Public Works at any less salary than $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It seems to me there is great objection from another standpoint—that the minister has gone outside of his department to select a chief architect. For the proper encouragement of the men in the different departments, the principle of promotion should be acted upon. In the department, I know—I do not think I can possibly be mistaken—there are men, or were when I was minister, who are thoroughly qualified to take the position of chief architect. I have not a shadow of doubt about that. I think it is very objectionable to go outside and bring in a man and place him over the heads of those who have been for a long time in the department, and give him a greatly increased salary. This Government seems to be trying to break the Civil Service Act all to pieces, and I do not know of any more glaring case than the present. Take the chief engineer: he is well qualified to discharge his duty, and yet he receives a salary of only $4,000. That, I think, was fixed by the Civil Service Act by unanimous consent of this House. His duties are more onerous than those of the chief architect. They certainly require as great ability and as good judgment for their proper discharge. The chief engineer has been for a long time in the department, and, as I have said, he receives a salary of $4,000, in accordance with the terms of the Civil Service Act. Yet a new man is brought in and placed over the heads of all others, at a salary nearly double that which the chief engineer receives. It does seem to me that my hon. friend is making a great mistake in doing this. He is taking a step calculated to create discontent in the department, and is violating in the strongest way, not only the terms but the spirit of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. ROGERS: I agree with a great deal of what my hon. friend has said; but we had to deal with the case on practical considerations. The occasion for the appointment of the new chief architect was that Mr. Ewart asked to be relieved of the heavy responsibilities. The only other man that I know of who was in the department and who could have taken the place of Mr. Ewart as chief architect, was Mr. Wright. But Mr. Wright conceived the idea that he could do a much better business for himself outside the department, and resigned a short time before Mr. Ewart did. Had Mr. Wright still been in the department, he would undoubtedly have got the position of chief architect, because he is a really good man. But, after Mr. Wright, there was no one in the department who aspired to the position of chief.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What was Mr. Wrights salary when he resigned?

Mr. ROGERS: It was $3,800. He was a very good man; he had the material in him for a chief architect had he not resigned. It was necessary in the public interest to engage a good chief architect, and it is impossible—or was at that time—to secure one who would fill the position at less salary. This salary was approved by the House and voted last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The salary of $7,000 was not voted?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why is the vote of $3,000 in the Supplementary Estimates this year?

Mr. ROGERS: Because the chief architect was not appointed until six months ago. We had to put his name in the Estimates by reason of the fact that he has not passed the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It being in violation of the Civil Service Act, he has to be named?

Mr. KYTE: When the minister next has his Estimates before the committee he will be expected to give information with respect to the work that Mr. Gobeil, late Deputy Minister of Public Works, has been engaged in for the department.

At six o'clock, the House resumed, and then took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—PROGRESS REPORTED.

Bill No. 107, respecting a patent of John Millen & Son, Limited.—Mr. Webster.

THIRD READING.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Edith Marguerita Lyons.—Mr. Barnard.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Department of Public Works—contingencies, $85,000.

Mr. PROULX: The Minister of Public Works has stated that if Mr. Wright, assistant to Mr. Ewart, had not resigned, he would have promoted him. Did the minister give Mr. Wright to understand that he would be promoted upon Mr. Ewart's retirement? I believe that Mr. Wright resigned because he knew that he was not going to get the promotion.

Mr. ROGERS: I am quite satisfied that Mr. Wright did not resign because he knew that he was not going to get the promotion. If my memory serves me rightly, I discussed the matter with Mr. Wright. He had in view what appeared to be very bright prospects when he resigned to take up the position which he eventually did take up, and while the business has not succeeded as he expected it would, I understand that he is doing very well. I should be very glad to have Mr. Wright back in the department in any position that I could get him to fill.

Mr. PROULX: Did the minister hold before him the bright prospect of promotion?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly I did.

Mr. PROULX: Was that before Mr. Ewart resigned?

Mr. ROGERS: No, after.

Mr. PROULX: How long was the position vacant?

Mr. ROGERS: It really was not vacant at all. Mr. Ewart expressed a desire to be relieved of his duties, but he did the work until it was possible for us to find some one to take his place.

Mr. PROULX: Was Mr. Wright offered the position then?

Mr. ROGERS: I cannot recall that definitely; I know that the matter was discussed with him.

Mr. KNOWLES: Did he ask for it?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: Did he say he would take it if he got it?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not remember that; I think he was really anxious to take up this new work. Mr. Wright is a good man, and we would have been glad to have him in the department.

Mr. PROULX: I do not suppose Mr. Wright expected to get $7,000, even if he did get the position.

Mr. ROGERS: Well, he was worth it.

Public Works—Ottawa Archives building, extension, $50,000.

Mr. PROULX: Will this extension be built this year?

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend knows that we are not going on with any buildings which it is possible to do without. Whether this particular building is a necessity this year or not, I am not in a position to say; if it proves to be a necessity, we will go on with it.

Mr. KYTE: On March 5, I asked the following questions of the Minister of Public Works:

1. When did A. Gobeil retire from the position of Deputy Minister of Public Works?
2. How long was he in that office?
3. What was the amount of his retiring allowance under the statute?
4. Is he employed by any department of the Government at the present time, and what is the nature of such employment?
5. What is the total amount he receives from the Government at the present time?

The following answers were given:

1. 1st July, 1908.
2. Appointed deputy minister on 1st January, 1891.
3. $2,160.
4. No.
5. $2,160.

I felt that there was something which the Minister of Public Works had not given out in his reply to these questions, so subsequently I addressed the following questions to him:

1. Was A. Gobeil, former Deputy Minister of Public Works, employed by any department of the Government since October 10, 1911?
2. If so, what was the nature of such employment?
3. What was the salary or remuneration paid him in respect of such employment?
4. When did such employment cease?

And this is the answer I got:

1. Yes, from 15th June, 1912.
2. To prepare a complete history of the port of Quebec, in relation to the St. Lawrence trade; to investigate titles of ownership of lands required in connection with St. Charles river improvements, and compile other information required by the department.
3. The difference between his superannuation allowance, $2,160, and $5,000, the salary of a deputy minister.
4. January 31, 1915.

These replies reveal a most extraordinary condition of affairs. Mr. Gobeil retired in 1908, after having discharged the duties of deputy minister since 1891. On the 15th of June his salary was restored to $5,000, the salary pertaining to the office of Deputy Minister. When I addressed the question to the Minister of Public Works on the 5th day of March, it anticipated by a few days the date upon which Mr. Gobeil's salary cheque for the month of February would have gone out; for I understand it is the rule in the departments—I am familiar at all events with the Department of Railways and Canals—that the salary cheques go out on the 10th of each month. When I asked the question of the minister on the 5th of March, the February cheque had not gone out, and would not have gone out for a few days in the ordinary course of events. Then Mr. Gobeil's employment with the Government suddenly terminated. The employment given to him was of an extremely indefinite character. According to the information given by the Minister of Public Works it would appear that on the 15th of June or some time previous Mr. Gobeil came to the department and saw the then Acting Minister of Public Works, and that as a result of their interview it was decided that Mr. Gobeil's salary would be restored to $5,000. Mr. Gobeil's services commenced on the 15th of June, 1912. Between that date and January 31, 1915, he has drawn, in addition to his superannuation allowance of $2,160, no less a sum than $7,457. I should like the Minister of Public Works to be good enough to say whether or not the work entrusted to Mr. Gobeil, as indicated by his reply to my question, is complete.

Mr. ROGERS: In answer to my hon. friend, I would say that what he states is correct. In view of the fact that Mr. Gobeil had such a general knowledge of the public works of this country, and in view of the necessity for an examination in connection with the contemplated work at the harbour of Quebec and in the St. Lawrence river, it was evidently thought by my predecessor in office that Mr. Gobeil would be a suitable person to make a report on the situation. He was therefore employed and he carried on the work with a great deal of vigour. On the 31st of January last we felt that the services he had rendered were such as to complete the work he had in hand, and he was therefore relieved of any further duties in connection with reporting on the matter of the development of the harbour at Quebec and St. Lawrence river. These are the facts as closely as I can carry them in my mind. It is true that Mr. Gobeil was employed for the time mentioned by my hon. friend, but, as I said, he is no longer an employee of the department.

Mr. KYTE: Has the minister a copy of this opus magnum to which Mr. Gobeil has been devoting his time since the 15th of June, 1912?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not a copy here. I shall be glad to find out whether there is a copy in the department and let my hon. friend see it if he wishes.

Mr. KYTE: Has the book been published yet?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet. It is a report, not a book.

Mr. KYTE: It says that he was employed to prepare a complete history of the port of Quebec. Has the copy reached the hands of the publishers yet?

Mr. ROGERS: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. KYTE: Who is to pay for publishing this work ?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know that it will be published at all. It will be simply a history of the port of Quebec, for the information of the department.

Mr. KYTE: Has the department the history yet?

Mr. ROGERS: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. KYTE: Then the department has nothing yet for this $7,457?

Mr. ROGERS: We have the benefit of all the information that Mr. Gobeil has in connection with that work. I understand the report is being prepared.

Mr. KYTE: The minister has not the benefit of all the knowledge Mr. Gobeil has, because he has not received the report yet. When does the minister expect to receive it?

Mr. ROGERS: Very shortly.

Mr. KYTE: Is this course being pursued with regard to the Harbour Commissioners in other parts of Canada?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Gobeil had nothing at all to do with the Harbour Commissioners in the city of Quebec

Mr. KYTE: Has the Government undertaken the preparation of a history of any of the other harbours of Canada?

Mr. ROGERS: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. KYTE: So this special employment that was given to Mr. Gobeil was without a precedent?

Mr. ROGERS: The work was given to him by my predecessor because he was specially qualified for it. Mr. Gobeil had a very good knowledge of all such undertakings, and was well qualified to prepare such a report, and to give undoubtedly valuable information to the department and the country in respect to the great port of the city of Quebec.

Mr. KYTE: Is it intended that this work shall be distributed throughout Canada, or is it just for the benefit of the department?

Mr. ROGERS: Wherever there is a necessity for it.

Mr. KYTE: What were the terms upon which Mr. Gobeil was employed?

Mr. ROGERS: All the information the department has is in the answer given to my hon. friend's question.

Mr. KYTE: Well, the department has not very much information. It is rather an extraordinary coincidence that when Mr. Gobeil was employed to do this work there was no remuneration fixed except that he was to enjoy a salary, in addition to his superannuation allowance, which would bring his income up to the sum of $5,000. It is perfectly clear from the statement made by the minister that there was no agreement or contract under which any special work was to be done, but that Mr. Gobeil was for all time, so far as the present Government is concerned, to get around the Superannuation Act and enjoy the salary of $5,000 just as if he were a deputy minister. The minister says that on January 31, Mr. Gobeil's work having been completed, his services were discontinued. Now the minister does not know whether his work has been completed or not, because he has not a copy of the manuscript that Mr. Gobeil prepared, if he prepared anything at all. I should think that if Mr. Gobeil had any legitimate or proper employment it should not cease until his work was in the hands of the minister, and the minister would be able to pass upon the question whether that work fairly represented the amount of money that was paid. I am bound to say that the sum of $7,457 is a pretty tidy sum to be paid to Mr. Gobeil in addition to his superannuation allowance for the preparation of a history of the port of Quebec. If the question had not been put upon the Order Paper I venture to say that Mr. Gobeil would still be enjoying the emoluments pertaining to the employment given to him by the late Minister of Public Works. The fact that this employment was given to him by the late minister does not exonerate the present minister from some responsibility. I say that under the circumstances there is no justification for this expenditure of money. The minister admits himself that he knows nothing about the work or the manner in which it was carried on, and he does not know at the present moment whether the work has been completed. I stated before that it was only after my question had been placed on the order paper that Mr. Gobeil's employment terminated. If I had not put the question when I did the presumption is that Mr. Gobeil would have continued to enjoy the emoluments pertaining to the particular employment in which he was engaged.

It is a significant fact that no special compensation was allowed to Mr. Gobeil, but he was to get such a sum as would make up the difference between his superannuation allowance of $2,160 and $5,000. This is only another way of getting around the Superannuation Act by which a friend of the Government was able to draw from the treasury of this country the sum of $7,457 for services of the value of which to the Department of Public Works there is no evidence.

Mr. PARDEE: What was really the object of this gentleman going down there and writing the history of the port of Quebec? Is the information not really contained in other histories? How has the Government or the country been able to benefit from a history of the port of Quebec? Was it to help to promote any trade interest or development? Along what line was it necessary that this man should be sent down to do such a thing as that? Was it absolutely necessary to write a history of the port of Quebec to promote any material interest in connection with that port?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is the report published?

Mr. ROGERS: No; we have not received it yet. I might say in answer to my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) that the port of Quebec is an especially important port and one that requires a great deal of consideration at the hands of the Government. My predecessor, Mr. Monk, was very wise indeed in employing the services of one so capable to deal with the work of research which Mr. Gobeil undertook to do in connection with the port of Quebec. It was contemplated at that time, as is evidenced from the amount of money that has been spent during the past three years, that great development should take place in that particular port. It was undoubtedly advisable in the public interest that we should have all the information for our use which it was possible to obtain and which we have had both by personal correspondence and conversation with Mr. Gobeil from that time on. Now that he has succeeded in gathering all the information at that port, he is no longer in the employ of the department and his report is expected daily. When it comes I am sure that the report will be of great value and great interest not only to the people of Quebec but to the people in different parts of Canada generally who take an interest in the development of our national ports. There are few, if any, ports that are more important than the port of Quebec, especially in view of the fact that we are about to establish a large dry dock in that port, that large docks are to be constructed and that the harbour commissioners are about to expend large sums of money in the erection of an elevator and other important works. In view of these things it was in the public interest that my predecessor should get the best information and with that object in view he evidently employed Mr. Gobeil.

Mr. PARDEE: I do not understand just what the minister means by his statement in answer to my question. The port of Quebec is to be an important port, a dry dock is to be established, elevators are to be built, many other things are to be done, but the mill does not grind with the water that has gone through. To me, an ordinary onlooker, it would certainly seem unnecessary that Mr. Gobeil should go to Quebec and report on what the port of Quebec was one hundred years ago. It would not help to build elevators or dry docks or show what ought to be done in the future. I quite sympathize with the minister in doing the best he can for his predecessor, but I believe that if he looks this matter squarely in the face, as he and I, ordinary business men, would, he will agree with me when I say that we would not waste more than a couple of hours in reading about what the port of Quebec was a hundred years ago, for the purpose of helping us to do something in connection with that port to-day. I am still at a loss to understand why Mr. Monk should have sent Mr. Gobeil down to make a report on the history of Quebec. Take the very important and flourishing port of Sarnia; we might have a history of that port written for the last hundred years, and possibly if we were real good, and wrote and published the history of Sarnia, we might have elevators, a drydock and other things there. I doubt very much if the minister would accede to a request to send a man to write a history of the port of Sarnia. In all seriousness, I quite appreciate what the minister has said, but again I ask, wherein do the people of Canada benefit by the fact that he has got an unpublished history of Quebec for the past seventy or eighty years.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend uses the word "history" of Quebec. That may be the term that was used in some of the correspondence, and he may be correct from that point of view, but, as I understand Mr. Gobeil's appointment, it was in connection with the practical work about to be undertaken in that port. The unhappy phrase "history" of Quebec might have been used, but it was not intended that he should write a history of Quebec in the ordinary sense of that word.

Mr. PROULX: Has not the harbour commission of the port of Quebec an engineer to look after its work?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Gobeil was appointed before the harbour commissioners were appointed.

Mr. PROULX: Is there an engineer in the employ of the harbour commission?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it a fact that Sir William Price, chairman of the harbour commission, has resigned?

Mr. ROGERS: We were so informed to-day.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has the resignation of Sir William Price been accepted by the ministers?

Mr. ROGERS: It has not been accepted yet.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to ask the minister if Mr. Gobeil has not been employed also in making valuations of land on the St. Charles river in connection with the locks to be constructed at the mouth of that river? Is there a report in the hands of the hon. gentleman as regards the cost of the locks, and also the cost of the expropriation in connection with the riparian rights?

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is quite right, and I overlooked the point in referring to the matter that Mr. Gobeil had made reports to the department in connection with the proposed works now under way on the St. Charles. We have these reports, and I will be glad to bring them down to the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the approximate cost of the proposed expropriations on the St. Charles river, as reported on by Mr. Gobeil?

Mr. ROGERS: As far as my memory serves me, the value placed by Mr. Gobeil upon the land to be expropriated is something like $600,000. The price at which the land was valued was 23 cents a foot, and the value of another portion was fixed at a higher figure than that. The smaller portion, which was at the higher price, we refused to accept, but last year the owners came down to the price of 23 cents for the piece at the higher valuation, and we accepted it.

As I understand it, the owners are now prepared to accept the twenty-three cents, but as the result of a further valuation we think our previous offer was too high, and it will likely go to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish the minister would submit to us at the next sitting of the House, a copy of Mr. Gobeil's report on the expropriation of those riparian lands on the river St. Charles, and also a copy of the plan showing where the expropriations will take place.

Mr. ROGERS: We have such a plan and report and I shall bring it down.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will Mr. Gobeil receive any remuneration for the work to which my hon. friend has referred?

Mr. ROGERS: No, that was part of the work to be done for his salary.

Mr. KYTE: Has the minister correspondence with Mr. Gobeil, defining the work he is to do for this salary and giving the terms of his engagement?

Mr. ROGERS: My deputy informs me that there is simply a letter written in 1912 from the chief engineer to Mr. Gobeil.

Mr. KYTE: Will the minister bring that down?

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. KYTE: How does the minister explain that Mr. Gobeil's remuneration was fixed at the difference between $2,140 and $5,000? Is that the usual terms upon which legal or other services are engaged by the department?

Mr. ROGERS: The remuneration was fixed at the sum which the then minister thought fair and reasonable. The Superannuation Act provides for a man being brought back at the same salary he had previously received, and probably that was in the mind of the minister when he fixed the sum at $5,000.

Mr. KYTE: Is there anything in the correspondence to indicate when Mr. Gobeil's work was to be finished, or was it to be a continuous engagement during the life of Mr. Gobeil?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not read the correspondence, but I will bring it down and the hon. member can read it. Mr. Gobeil is not in the service of the Government at the present time.

Mr. KYTE: I understand that, but it might be well for the minister himself to read the correspondence.

The CHAIRMAN: Personally I have no objection to this discussion continuing, but it is out of order as not pertaining to the item under discussion.

Mr. KYTE: I understood that all expenditures in the Public Works Department might be discussed now.

The CHAIRMAN: If it is the desire of the committee, I have no objection, but the rule is that the discussion must be strictly relevant to the item before the House.

Mr. ROGERS: It is quite all right; I shall be very glad to give any information to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend has stated that Sir William Price has resigned what are the reasons given by Sir William Price for his resignation.

Mr. ROGERS: Sir William Price is in no way connected with the Public Works Department; his duties are under the Department of Marine, and I am sure the minister will be pleased to give the information.

Mr. HAZEN: The only reason why Sir William Price handed in his resignation is, that he being a man with large interests finds it difficult to give to the discharge of the duties of his office the time and attention required. The relations of the Department of Marine and Fisheries with Sir William Price and the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec have been of the most agreeable and pleasant character.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. LEMIEUX: I may say that I regret, as the minister regrets, and as everybody does, the resignation of Sir William Price.

Mr. PROULX: It took Mr. Gobeil a long time to write his report on the Quebec harbour; was his time exclusively given to the work?

Mr. ROGERS: I am informed that he had no other employment and that he devoted all his time to the work.

Mr. PROULX: Mr. Gobeil is an advocate, practising his profession, and it may be that he did not give his whole time to the work of the department. I do not hold the present minister responsible, because he says his predecessor requested him to employ Mr. Gobeil, but although my hon. friend has tried to cover the matter as cleverly as possible, I believe that Mr. Gobeil, having been the Conservative candidate in Montmorency in 1908, this job was given to him as a reward, and the people of the country have to pay for it.

Mr. KYTE: Has the minister any communication from Mr. Gobeil stating that the work is completed?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Gobeil has been sending in reports in connection with the different works at the port of Quebec, such as the special work we are doing in connection with the development of the St. Charles river, which is a very large, a very necessary, and a very important work. These reports will be brought down to the House.

Mr. KNOWLES: I suppose the minister will get these reports printed and send each member of the House a complimentary copy?

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. KNOWLES: What was the salary paid Mr. Ewart, the former chief architect?

Mr. ROGERS: $4,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: When was the salary raised to $7,000 per annum?

Mr. ROGERS: When Mr. Ewart decided he desired to be relieved from the responsible duties of chief architect, which were growing from year to year, and a new architect had to be secured.

Mr. KNOWLES: How long has the new architect been appointed?

Mr. ROGERS: About six months.

Mr. KNOWLES: If we voted only $4,000 for the salary last year, how has he been paid $7,000? Has Mr. Horwood been paid?

Mr. ROGERS: He cannot be paid until this vote is passed.

Mr. KNOWLES: Why cannot he be paid like any otner person who is appointed to office?

Mr. ROGERS: Because his name has to be put in the Estimates.

Mr. KNOWLES: Why?

Mr. ROGERS: Because he has not a certificate from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. KNOWLES: Has the minister asked the Civil Service Commissioners or either of them to o.k. Mr. Horwood?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: What did they say?

Mr. ROGERS: They refused to do it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Was there much correspondence about it?

Mr. ROGERS: Some.

Mr. KNOWLES: Was it not on account of that that the minister expressed such virtuous indignation against Mr. Shortt?

Mr. ROGERS: I can assure my hon. friend it was not; I never thought of it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the minister tell me why he was so angry?

Mr. ROGERS: I told the House before, while the hon. member was absent.

Mr. KNOWLES: I read the report in Hansard very carefully, and I could not see any reasonable explanation for such indignation.

Mr. ROGERS: The matter was discussed quite shortly.

Mr. KNOWLES: You are a little short on explanation.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is no doubt that the development of the port of Quebec is important, and that the harbour of Quebec historically is well known in Canada as being one of the most magnificent ports in this great country of ours. The peculiarity about this report is that to the ordinary man it is a question of engineering, such a report as the minister would get from an engineer. There is some dredging to be done, and it is a question of measurements, of estimating how much earth is to be removed and what concrete and supports will be necessary for the piers that are to be constructed at the port. We have a very excellent development of that kind going on in the harbour of Halifax and in the harbour of St. John, but I am not aware that any lawyer has to be engaged to write a history of the harbour of Halifax or of the harbour of St John. I want to bring this matter to the notice of the ministers generally that, while we have very excellent men in the different departments—and I would be sorry to think that we have not good officials capable of discharging the various duties devolving upon them and of furnishing any information that the different departments require—whenever any thing special is to be done under this Administration an outsider must be obtained. In some inquiries that are going on not one thousand miles from this place, it has developed that when anything has to be bought, or anything to be done or any information to be secured, an outsider has always to be secured, and that there is no one in the departments capable of doing the work. That is a sad state of affairs, if it is true. I do not believe it is true; I believe we have capable officials, and I must bring the blame home to the minister and his brother ministers that this policy is adopted only for the purpose of giving employment to their friends outside. The officials of the different departments are there for the purpose of doing the work pertaining to those departments; but the ministers, in order to widen their sphere of employment, when it is a question of buying binoculars or truck wagons, must employ men of large salary and high education, in the legal profession particularly, to do that kind of work. I would be sorry to say a word that would reflect anything but the highest credit upon Mr. Gobeil. I knew him well; he was in the Department of Public Works when I came here first, and a better officer I never came across. He is a good lawyer, and I could understand his being employed by the Minister of Public Works to secure a law library for his department or to write a treatise on titles for land in the province of Quebec—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Or the McGreevy case.

Mr. McKENZIE: Perhaps it was because he knew too much about the McGreevy case that he was employed; but to employ a lawyer like himself to make an engineering report is something that I do not quite understand.

Mr. ROGERS: Although I think my hon. friend has answered himself, I may say that in so far as Mr. Gobeil's standing as a lawyer is concerned, he has never practised his profession at all. He was in the Department of Public Works for over thirty years; he was for ten or twelve years secretary of the department, and he was for seventeen years Deputy Minister of Public Works. Therefore, Mr. Gobeil was the man in Canada who would be most likely to have a proper knowledge where special work was required and who would be capable of making a report or of giving information to the department that would be valuable and sound, in view of his long and thorough understanding of the conditions and of the manner in which the department carried on its business. As I understand it, he has made very valuable reports in connection with the different works at Quebec; and, while I have not time to read them, I will see that they are all brought down and laid on the table of the House, so that hon. gentlemen who are interested will have an opportunity of reading them.

Ottawa Parliament Buildings — additions, $100,000.

Mr. PARDEE: What is that?

Mr. ROGERS: That is an addition to this building. This vote is the same one as we had last year, but we did not go on with the work.

Mr. McCRANEY: Are those votes included in the sum of $50,000,000 for special expenditure other than the war, mentioned in the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. McCRANEY: The minister has not thought it desirable to drop some of the items for the present year so that the amount necessary to be realised may be reduced?

Mr. ROGERS: When the Estimates were prepared this year, we dropped a number of items as they were printed last year. We have included in the Estimates only such items as we are hopeful, if the war should cease and conditions improve, we shall be able to go on with.

Mr. PROULX: I find in the Auditor General's Report that a quantity of furniture has been purchased by the Department of Public Works for the different offices in the public buildings. Since the Government came into power, what have they done with the furniture that was there when they came in? $900 was spent to furnish the office of the Minister of Justice, and about $800 to furnish the office of the Secretary of State. There must have been some furniture there when the present Government came in.

Mr. HENDERSON: Goodness knows; perhaps it was all gone.

Mr. PROULX: What was done with it? Was it thrown out or was it given to my hon. friend's friends?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. PROULX: The Department of Public Works bought a rug for the Secretary of State's office valued at $350.

Mr. ROGERS: It must be a mistake.

Mr. HENDERSON: How big was it?

Mr. PROULX: I do not know. I would like to see that rug. There was purchased from Murray-Kay, Limited, three rugs, one at $385. I said $350; I undervalued it. There is a rug at $85, and another at $49.50. I would like to know the size of that rug valued at $385?

Mr. KYTE: Was it made in Canada?

Mr. PROULX: I do not know whether there is as expensive a rug in Windsor Palace. In the Justice Department there is an item for furniture for the minister's room, $805.

Mr. HENDERSON: No justice about that.

Mr. PROULX: There is a bookcase, $54; three chairs, $78.50; clock, $10; davenport, $63; covering davenport with leather, $35; desk, $135. You can buy a good desk for $50—in fact, for $25. I bought one the other day from the Office Specialty Company, for the office of the school inspector of my county, and I paid only $25.

Mr. ROGERS: Was it delivered for that?

Mr. PROULX: The freight from their establishment in Newmarket cost only about a dollar. But this $135 is not all. There is a glass desk-top, $32.85. And the furniture for the minister's room cost $805—two leather chairs, $16.50; three mahogany dinners, $38.85. Does the minister give dinners in his office? For a waste-paper basket we paid $9—you can get one anywhere for half a dollar. When the Liberals were in power we heard about the middleman. But turn to the Auditor General's Report and you will see that under this Government articles to furnish the departments are not bought directly from the manufacturers but from the middlemen. The Government could save 25 per cent or 30 per cent if they dealt with the wholesale men or manufacturers. If it were not that I dislike to take up the time of the committee, I could go through the record of these departments and show that thousands and thousands of dollars have been spent on furniture since this Government come into office. Surely the old furniture was all right. When the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Pugsley) was Minister of Public Works, if a colleague of his had had come and asked him to pay $385 for a rug, I think he would have thought that colleague was out of his mind. We see now the greatest extravagance that has ever reigned under any Government in this country. Fortunately the Government will have to render an account to the people very soon, and I shall be very much surprised if the voters do not hold them to a very strict account. I can well understand why my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), when he spoke on the Budget said this Government is spending the money of the people like a lot of drunken sailors. I have been struck with the truth of that expression since I commenced to look into the Auditor General's Report. On reading these figures I was astounded and disgusted at the extravagance they reveal.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sorry that my hon. friend has been so shocked, astounded and pained. I do not know that a fair examination of the accounts will show that the furniture for the Department of Justice or the Department of the Secretary of State was too expensive. The furniture from those offices, no doubt, was used in other offices in the different buildings. That is always the practice; furniture that is old and worn to some extent in the offices of the ministers is removed, and is cleaned up and placed in some other offices with a view to saving as much as we possibly can on this item of furniture.

Mr. PROULX: But I cannot see where they put all the furniture. They have not been opening so many offices as that. Go through the Auditor General's Report for 1914, and you will see the record
9 p.m. of the purchase of many, many articles—desks, chairs, couches; they seem to have a great liking for couches; apparently they have a great disposition to sleep. Even, they have "diners." Do they get their meals brought to their offices? I do not suppose that they are so busy that they could not go to a boarding-house.

Mr. KNOWLES: What does the term "dinners" mean?

Mr. ROGERS: I could not tell my hon. friend. It must be a clerical error.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the minister get the information?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: The Minister of Public Works seems more saving for himself than for his colleagues.

Mr. ROGERS: Thank you.

Mr. KNOWLES: He does not sleep.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Perhaps he is not in his office.

Mr. PROULX: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) has been more saving than the Secretary of State (Mr. Coderre), but I find that in his case the Office Specialty Manufacturing Company sold quite a number of articles for a total of $581.50—mostly office furniture.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How about couches?

Mr. PROULX: I do not find any couches. He does not seem disposed to sleep.

Public Buildings—Ottawa Victoria Memorial Museum, $200,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is that for the tower?

Mr. ROGERS: Hon. gentlemen are familiar with the conditions there: the foundation has been sinking and it is necessary to support it. We have a report from Mr. Monserrat, a copy of which, I believe, has been laid on the table. It is necessary that this work should be taken up immediately, and it is estimated that it will cost $200,000. That is why the estimate is increased to this amount.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it intended to take the tower over?

Mr. ROGERS: No, they think they can get along without that. The tower is rather breaking away from the main building. It is suggested by some that it is dangerous, but Mr. Monserrat thinks there is no immediate danger, and that if the work is undertaken this summer it will be all right.

Public Buildings—Toronto—new Dominion buildings, $225,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is this for the new customs house?

Mr. ROGERS: No, for the general post office.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What will you do with the old building?

Mr. ROGERS: It is to be removed.

Mr. KNOWLES: Are the plans prepared for this Toronto building?

Mr. ROGERS: Only sketch plans.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is there any estimate of final cost?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think that before we are called upon to pass the preliminary vote we should have some idea of what the Government has in mind. It is hardly right to vote a hundred thousand and not know how many millions we shall have to spend before we stop.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think it will be necessary to go to the millions.

Mr. KNOWLES: But the principle still holds. Before the Government asks us to launch out on a contract, they ought to give us at least some rough estimate of the expenditure that will be involved.

Mr. ROGERS: We are not yet in possession of information that I could give my hon. friend; pending the receipt of reports from the architect and from others in charge of the work, we do not know exactly what the cost will be. We are only going to put up such a building as will meet the requirements of the public interest. I do not think the cost will be more than a million dollars.

Mr. PROULX: I observe that the Government supply the residences of deputy ministers, secretaries and other officers of the various departments with free telephone service. Is it customary to pay for telephones at the residences of these officials?

Mr. ROGERS: It has always been the practice.

Mr. PROULX: On what principle does the Government pay for these telephones?

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: On the principle that the deputy ministers find it necessary and in the public interest to have telephones at their residences, to be used in connection with their departmental work. It was thought a good many years ago that this would be an advisable extension of the departmental telephone service, and the same practice is carried on to-day.

Mr. PROULX: There might be occasion for a telephone at the residence of a deputy minister, but the other officers of the department are employed only during the day, and I do not see why their telephones should be paid for.

Harbours and rivers—Esquimalt dry dock, $250,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What has been done in connection with this work?

Mr. ROGERS: We have purchased a site alongside the old dock at Lang's cove. The plans are not yet complete, but when they are ready they will be transmitted to the Admiralty for approval. Only $250,000, therefore, is put in at present for this proposed work.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the size of the proposed dry dock?

Mr. ROGERS: 1,150 feet by 110 feet. The plan of the dock at Quebec is followed as closely as possible.

French river waterway improvements, $500,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it proposed to go ahead with this work during the present year?

Mr. ROGERS: This is one of the works that may well, I think, stand for the present year. It is not the intention to press it this year.

Mr. McCRANEY: I understand that the Minister of Finance looks forward to an expenditure in the neighbourhood of $50,000,000 on capital account for public buildings and that sort of thing. If I understood the Finance Minister's Budget aright, he expects to raise $30,000,000; about $10,000,000 from the special taxation and about $20,000,000 from the increased duties. If the whole sum of $50,000,000 were expended, the $30,000,000 which I have mentioned would be entirely exhausted, and it would be necessary to borrow besides another $20,000,000. The Minister of Public Works has certain items in the Estimates, the works connected with which he does not intend to proceed with this year. Has the minister made any estimate as to the amount of these items?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not made any such statement as my hon. friend suggests. Our whole estimate of expenditure, including capital account, is only $32,000,000.

Port Arthur and Fort William harbour and river improvements, $1,500,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How much has been spent on harbour improvements at Port Arthur and Fort William?

Mr. ROGERS: The total expenditure up to March last was $8,500,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the harbour owned altogether by the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, entirely.

Mr. DEVLIN: With reference to the French river waterway improvements, why is it that the whole of the amount voted last year was not expended?

Mr. ROGERS: We were only able to proceed with the dam at Chaudière last year.

Mr. DEVLIN: I understood that the vote was for the construction of the Georgian Bay canal.

Mr. ROGERS: To some extent that was the purpose of the vote. Practically my hon. friend is right, but all the work we were able to do was the dam.

Public Works—Quebec harbour—dry-dock at Lauzon, $700,000.

Mr. MARCIL: When will this dock be ready?

Mr. ROGERS: We did hope that it would be ready this summer. We are now pressing the contractor to get it ready by this fall.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has the excavation work been started?

Mr. ROGERS: It is well under way.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the old dry-dock in use at present?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Public Works—Quebec harbour—deep water wharf at Lévis, $34,200.

Mr. MARCIL: Is that work under way?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. This is to finish it.

Public Works—Quebec harbour—improvements, $500,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What work is going on under this vote?

Mr. ROGERS: This is for the wharf that was proposed near Champlain Market. The item was originally in the Railway Estimates as part of the Transcontinental scheme, but it has been transferred to the Public Works Department. The railway part of the scheme has been completed, and we are asking for the money because the wharf is considered necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it intended to go on with that work?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think we shall do much at it this year, but with the money we shall be in a position to go on with the contract if necessary.

Mr. MARCIL: Has any contract been awarded for this work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. The contract was awarded a few years ago by the late Govenment.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the work been proceeding all this time?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract included the construction of a wharf, and the building of a railway from where the railway crosses the river. Some diversion was made in the contract with the result that the railway end of it was carried out, but not the dock end of it. This item is to enable us to go on with the wharf if necessary.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the name of the contractor?

Mr. ROGERS: Davis had the contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If I remember rightly it was intended to erect the terminal of the Transcontinental at the Champlain market, but after a consultation with the engineers we thought that would be a very desirable place for piers for some of the ocean steamers. That is why that amount was provided at that time. I suppose that the changing of the site of the terminal station has modified the views of the Government as to where the improvements should be made?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Public Works—Quebec harbour—River St. Charles—improvements to navigation, $500,000.

Mr. KYTE: I would ask the minister to let this item stand until we get the information in regard to Mr. Gobeil's report.

Mr. ROGERS: All right.

Item stands.

Public Works—St. John harbour, N.B.—improvements, $1,500,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would the minister state how the $3,000,000 that was spent last year was divided? What portion was spent on dredging on the west side, how many cubic yards of dredging were done, what was the price per cubic yard, what amount of wharf building was done, what was the cost of the temporary warehouses, and how much was spent on the breakwater and on dredging in Courtenay bay?

Mr. ROGERS: I have the reports of the officers of the department here, but they are very lengthy. I shall be glad to send them over to my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Perhaps the minister would hand it to Hansard.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Had Michael Connolly the contract for any of this work at St. John?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, for the wharves on the west side.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the amount of the contract?

Mr. ROGERS: Something like $1,250,000. The contract was afterwards transferred to the Maritime Dredging Company, who were able to complete the contract in time, and, I think, to the satisfaction of the people of St. John.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the reason for transferring the contract, and how much did Mr. Connolly get for the work he did?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Connolly received $605,000 for the portion of the work he did. The department thought he was not likely to complete the contract in time, and so it was handed over to the Maritime Dredging Company, as they were able to carry on the work more speedily.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does Mr. Connolly claim any extra payment?

Mr. ROGERS: No, he was quite satisfied, I think.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think that after the contract was given to the Maritime Dredging Company a change was made in the specifications to permit of substitution of southern timber for Canadian timber, and also change as to the mode in which the crib should be built. I should like to ask whether that is correct, and whether the new contractors were permitted to substitute a good deal of dredging material in place of rock. I understand that that was permitted.

Mr. ROGERS: A change was made in the specifications in regard to timber in order to get the work completed within the time limit. It meant an additional cost of something like $40,000. As to filling, dredged material was used for back filling.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am told that dredged material was used for filling in the cribs.

Mr. ROGERS: No, for back filling only.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What was the cost of the warehouses?

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the cost of the temporary warehouse?

Mr. HAZEN: The engineer tells me that the whole cost of the warehouse is $27,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to ask the minister if the work performed by Mr. Michael Connolly was accepted by the department as satisfactory? I understand that it was only the question of the delay which caused the transference of the work from Mr. Connolly to the Maritime Dredging Company. I understand that Mr. Connolly is a good contractor.

Mr. ROGERS: The principal difficulty was that Mr. Connolly was not proceeding with the work as rapidly as it was thought it should be proceeded with. There was great pressure for the earliest possible completion of this dock in the city of St. John. We were bound to have it completed last fall before the business started and, owing to the reports of the engineers who were sent to examine it, we thought it was going to be impossible, at the rate at which he was carrying on the work, to have it completed in time. That was the reason it was taken from him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In order to enable the new contractors to hasten the work and finish it in the required time they were allowed, at an extra cost to the department, to substitute southern timber for Canadian timber. Was such a proposal as that ever made to Mr. Connolly to enable him to hurry on the work?

Mr. ROGERS: It was impossible to get the local timber in any case and Mr. Connolly would have had that same right if he had been able to go on and complete the work

Mr. PUGSLEY: Was there any proposal to that effect ever made to Mr. Connolly?

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer says that before we reached that point it had been taken out of Mr. Connolly's hands because he was not getting on as fast as he should have.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does not the minister see that Mr. Connolly was treated unjustly, because, according to the minister's own statement, it was impossible to get the matter settled in time to get the timber which was required by the specifications? Without suggesting to Mr. Connolly that he would be allowed to use southern pine, the contract was taken out of his hands because he was not proceeding with sufficient rapidity and it was given to the Maritime Dredging Company and, concurrently with that, the class of timber to be used was changed and they were allowed $40,000 more than Mr. Connolly was to get. Does the minister not think that was something of an injustice to Mr. Connolly?

Mr. ROGERS: The position was simply this, that we had repeatedly impressed upon Mr. Connolly the necessity of making more rapid progress than he was making with this contract and when the engineers reported that there was no chance of him having it completed in the time prescribed by the contract, an arrangement was made with him by which his work was taken over. He had arranged with others for a local timber but it was discovered that it was utterly impossible to get delivery of the timber and it was absolutely necessary on the part of the new contractor to go on and get the timber in order to have the work completed in time for last year's business. It was a matter that was entirely beyond the control of the department. We could not do anything else to have the work completed and if we had not secured this timber the contract would not have been completed in time.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Was not Mr. Connolly doing the very best possible to get the timber required by the specifications when the contract was taken out of his hands?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know; he may have been doing that, but he was not getting on with the work as fast as the department thought he should.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What happened? It was taken out of his hands, given to new contractors, and they were at once told that they need not carry out the specifications, that they could get timber different from that which Mr. Connolly was obliged to get. When they got the timber that they could get more easily than the timber required by the specifications, the department allowed the new contractors an extra sum of $40,000. They allowed him to get timber which it was easier to get, and they paid him $40,000 more.

Mr. ROGERS: That was not exactly the case. The representations which prompted the department to make the change in the timber came from the city of St. John itself. The city of St. John pressed this upon the Government. Understanding the local conditions, they brought to the attention of the department the fact that the only hope of having the contract completed was by getting the class of timber that we did get in order to carry on the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have understood that Mr. Connolly's complaint—and he makes a very strong complaint—is that he was not given the same chance as the new contractors were given. If he had been allowed to substitute southern timber he could have got along just as rapidly as the new contractors did. However, I suppose the minister has said all he can upon it. I would like to ask as to the depth of the dredging which has been done upon the west side.

Mr. ROGERS: Thirty-two feet.

Mr. PUGSLEY: And for the crib site?

Mr. ROGERS: Thirty-five feet.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has there been no dredging done outside of the crib site to thirty-five feet?

Mr. ROGERS: The engineer says that he has no knowledge of such.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would like to mention this fact for the minister's information: Other gentlemen were formerly interested in the Maritime Dredging Company who were the previous contractors. They conferred with me about going to a depth of thirty-five feet. I thought that, not only for the crib site but for the basin, it was desirable to dredge to a depth of thirty-five feet, and I so authorized the engineer, Mr. Scammell. I expected to have an Order in Council passed giving authority for this work. I understand that the dredging to a depth of thirty-five feet was done, but it has not been paid for by reason of it being alleged that the company went below depth.

My own view is that as there is considerable silting in the harbour it would be desirable to go to a sufficient depth to avoid the necessity of dredging again in the near future. Has the minister's attention been called to that claim?

Mr. ROGERS: I have no recollection of ever having had my attention called to that particular matter. I quite appreciate what my hon. friend says in regard to the matter of silting in the harbour of St. John, and in my judgment care should be taken to see that the depth should be great enough. At all events, I shall be very glad to look into the matter that the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. HAZEN: Has any claim been put in?

Mr. PUGSLEY: There has been a claim put in. Mr. James A. Bulyea was in Ottawa and saw me in reference to the matter.

Mr. HAZEN: He did not see me. I have never heard anything about any claim being made.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He was here for some days and endeavoured to get the matter settled.

Mr. HAZEN: I never saw him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I thought he would have seen the minister.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad to look into it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am pleased to hear the minister say that. I feel a certain amount of responsibility in connection with it, for the reason that perhaps I ought to have expedited it before the late Government went out of office and had the Order in Council passed. Mr. Scammell held the opinion that it was very desirable to dredge to that depth in the basin. Has it been arranged that the drydock should be of the same dimensions as those which will be built at Quebec and Esquimalt?

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is familiar with the original conditions under which a dry dock of 900 feet was proposed, but the department suggested a dry dock of 1,150 feet similar to those at Halifax and Quebec. This has been brought to the attention of the Norton Griffiths Company, the contractors, but they have not yet signified their willingness to carry it out. The matter is now under consideration, and I believe will be adjusted. I am free to acknowledge that undoubtedly the port of St. John ought to have and must have a dry dock of similar size to those at Halifax and Quebec.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am very glad indeed to hear the statement of the minister, because I think it would be desirable to build a dry dock of 1,150 feet at St. John, not merely that it may be as large as those at Quebec and Esquimalt and Halifax, but because of the convenience of dividing it into sections so that vessels of different sizes can be taken care of to advantage. A great deal of shipping comes to the port of St. John, and the business is increasing every year. I think the minister will make no mistake if he arranges for a dry dock of a larger size.

Mr. ROGERS: My idea was that I did not regard it as fair that the port of St. John should have a smaller dry dock than that in Quebec or in Halifax, because I felt that ships which require the largest possible dry dock should have the same opportunity of coming to St. John as they would have to Halifax and Quebec. I thought, therefore, in fairness to the port of St. John, that it should have a dry dock of the same size.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When the late Government laid down the policy of assisting in the construction of dry docks by giving an annual subsidy for a period of years, the different ports were placed in the same position and it was anticipated that dry docks should be built by companies. With this understanding, the different ports had the same opportunity, through private enterprise, of securing the construction of dry docks, but now that the Government is determined to build dry docks as Government works at Quebec and Halifax, which are, of course, competing ports with St. John, the minister can easily see that a difficulty would be thrown in the way of a dry dock being constructed at St. John by private enterprise. Of course, Government dry docks have the advantages of cheap rates which the Government necessarily feels called upon to give to those using the docks, and a dock owned by a private company is not nearly so likely to be a successful enterprise, as it would if it were in competition only with company-owned docks. I would like the minister to consider that circumstance, and perhaps he may decide that it would be desirable to construct the dry dock at St. John as a Government work, as the dry docks at Halifax, Quebec and Esquimalt are being constructed.

Mr. ROGERS: There is a good deal of force in the suggestion of my hon. friend, but at the same time I find myself in the position of having a contract with a reputable company for the carrying out of the construction of this particular dry dock at St. John, and I do not know that it would be possible to make any change. However, the matter will be fully considered.

Toronto harbour improvements, $1,000,000.

Mr. PROULX: I understood they were to dredge in the bay there, and deposit the material taken out on the shore.

Mr. ROGERS: That is quite right.

Mr. PROULX: Have they done much of that work?

Mr. ROGERS: They are building their dredges, and will get started very shortly.

Vancouver harbour improvements, $1,000,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is this vote for?

Mr. ROGERS: It is for a very important public wharf between Salisbury and Commercial streets.

Mr. PUGSLEY: We voted $1,000,000 last year, and there is this year $1,000,000, which seems a great deal of money for a wharf where there is no dredging to be done. What is the length of the wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: 800 feet long and 300 feet wide.

Mr. PUGSLEY: 800 feet out in the water?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, and the vote includes dredging at False creek as well.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it a concrete wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Any British Columbia pine in it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, there is some in the foundations.

Mr. McKENZIE: Has the Halifax drydock been taken over by the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: The proposed new dry dock has nothing to do with the old dry dock.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is it near where the old dry dock was?

Mr. ROGERS: It is across the river on the Dartmouth side, which was selected by the engineers as the most suitable.

Public buildings—Nova Scotia, $365,000.

Mr. ROGERS: These are just the same Estimates as were passed last year; there is nothing new in them.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I wish to ask a question about the Amherst post office. What was the cost of the site?

Mr. ROGERS: $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the size of the lot?

Mr. ROGERS: 93 by 95.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is only fair to say to the minister that my information is that that land was purchased by some parties not very long ago, before it was acquired by the Government, for $15,000, and the Government decided to take the property and build a new post office. Expropriation proceedings were commenced; but when the case was about to come to trial, the Crown settled with the owners at $30,000, the price which the minister named. That was double what the property cost the purchasers a comparatively short time before and after there was an agitation for the erection of a new post office. $30,000 seems a very high price for the property.

Mr. RHODES: Inasmuch as the matter refers to my constituency and has been brought up by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) perhaps I may be permitted to say a word or two. There is nothing in the record of the department to show the price paid for the land by the vendor to the Government. As a matter of fact, there is no secret about it. I think the price is somewhat in the neighbourhood of $$16,000 to $17,000. That is what it represented to the vendor in his outlay plus interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The party purchased for $16,000 or $17,000 the property for which the Crown paid $30,000. That would represent a profit to the vendor of some $13,000. What is the name of the gentleman who made the profit of $13,000?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. H. G. Hagen. This information is, I believe, accurate. The whole point is whether or not the Government paid a fair price for the land, and speaking for myself, I have absolutely no doubt that the Government got the land at a fair and reasonable price. The site is in the heart of the town of Amherst, which has a population of about 11,000, and which, if it continues to grow at the rate at which it was growing two years ago, will in 1920 have a population of about 20,000. The price paid for the land represents $325 per front foot, with a depth of 93 feet. There is also in the rear a right of way 12 feet wide, which practically means that the lot is 105 feet in depth for the purpose of the post office. Land immediately in front of this site has been purchased by people for their own use as a business site. In one instance a lot 75 feet in depth was purchased a year before by a merchant who paid $525 per front foot. In another case, within nine months of the purchase of this piece of land by the Government, a lot 50 feet in depth, without any right of way at the rear opposite this lot and not more than 75 feet down the street, was bought by a merchant for $450 per front foot for his own private use. Perhaps land upon the side of the street on which this lot is situated is not quite as valuable as it is on the other side; but for the purpose of a post office site to the Government, it is quite as valuable and possibly more so, inasmuch at it is hoped to use the old post office building for a customs house and the new post office is to be used for the post office, and both being upon the same side of the street, it will enable a more advantageous exchange of parcels between the post office and the customs house and vice versa. With respect to the question whether a post office ought to be built or not, I think that matter was gone into last year. The Post Office Department itself felt, even before the parcel post system was installed, which called for additional room, that the business of the town was growing so rapidly that the post office was crowded, and it asked the Public Works Department for an increase in facilities. An engineer was sent down, through no effort of my own, but as a matter of departmental routine, and he prepared a plan which, according to his own estimate, called for the expenditure of $40,000, although it meant simply an addition to the existing building and only a makeshift which would provide for the needs of the town for only a short time and which would not be sufficient for the accommodation which the growth would call for in a few years. Therefore, it was felt that, instead of spending $40,000 and having post office accommodation which would last only a few years, and inferior accommodation for the customs house, it would be better to spend a few more thousand dollars and have first-class accommodation for both the post office and the customs. Therefore it is in the public interest that the department has decided upon the erection of a new post office.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. PUGSLEY: How long before the Government expropriated this property was it that Mr. Hazen bought the site for $16,000?

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps six or nine months. I am speaking from memory, and I have had no occasion to refresh my memory.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Some six or nine months before the Government expropriated the property, it had been bought by this gentleman for an amount which my hon. friend says with interest would reach $16,000 or $17,000, and the Government paid this gentleman something over $30,000 for it. Before I left office, there was an order, which I feel sure is on record in the department, that all examiners must state any recent transfers of property which had been purchased.

Mr. RHODES: That was carried out.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend said there was no record in the department of the cost. Therefore it could not have been carried out.

Mr. RHODES: I had not that in mind at the time I was speaking, but I am inclined to think it will be found that the report of the inspector will disclose the cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I gave a general order to the inspector that all examiners must state any recent transfers of property which had been purchased. Will the minister be good enough to produce the report of the examiner at a convenient time before these Estimates finally pass?

Mr. ROGERS: We shall be glad to produce any reports we have, but an error appears to have crept in here. This particular property was expropriated by the department. The matter was referred to the Exchequer Court, and the price of $385 per foot was fixed by the judge of the Exchequer Court, not by the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My information is that the price was settled by agreement.

Mr. ROGERS: My information is that it was fixed by the Exchequer Court.

Mr. MACDONALD: The order was passed by consent. I remember seeing it at the time the court was sitting in Halifax.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is a pretty big profit.

Mr. ROGERS: When the department referred the matter to the Exchequer Court and the order came back placing a value of $30,000 on the property we had not any more to say.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Surely the counsel for the Crown would not consent to have a valuation without consulting the minister.

Mr. ROGERS: When this property was valued by the officers of the Public Works Department, they set a value of $325 a foot. It was referred to the Exchequer Court, and after the judge had given it consideration, he came to the conclusion that the price suggested by the officer of $325 a foot was fair and reasonable, and that was his finding.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think the minister is misinformed. My information is that the judge passed no judgment, but the counsel for the Crown accepted this price.

Mr. RHODES: I know something of the circumstances of this case. As a matter of fact, the Government inspectors and valuators were convinced that the price was fair and reasonable, as I was and am. But I found out, when the purchase was proposed to be made, that the price which had been paid by the vendor was a good deal different from the price which he was about to receive from the Government, and I suggested that the matter be sent to the Exchequer Court. My letter will probably be found on the files. I said, that while I had no doubt as to the value of the land, yet, in order to avoid all suspicion, I should like to see the question go to the Exchequer Court. At the sittings of the court held in Halifax last autumn, the case was called and a number of witnesses were there ready to proceed. Judge Cassels was presiding. He asked what was the point in the case; and the counsel for the Government—who was not the man it had been proposed should represent the Government, but, I believe, had been called in a very short time before the case was heard—said that the Government had offered $325 a front foot, but the vendor was asking something like $400 a foot. The judge said: "I think that $325 a foot is a reasonable price," or something of that kind, and suggested that the vendor should accept it. There was a conference, and the vendor agreed to accept the price, and judgment went on that ground.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Without evidence?

Mr. RHODES: One witness was called as a matter of fact. So far as I am concerned, I welcome any inquiry with regard to this land; there is no mystery about it. I have no hesitation in going on record as saying that I believe the Government got good value for its money.

10 p.m.

Mr. PARDEE: What is the population?

Mr. RHODES: Eleven thousand, and growing rapidly.

Mr. MARCIL: The population is not growing just now.

Mr. RHODES: No, for the same reason that other towns are not growing—for the same reason that the city of Montreal is not growing. And I want to say, what hon. members know full well, that many towns in other parts of Canada, especially towns in the West, having only half the population of Amherst, would think that land was going ridiculously cheap if as good sites as this were bought within their borders for $325 a foot.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is an unfortunate thing, when hon. gentlemen wanted to go to the Exchequer Court to allay suspicion, that they did not allow evidence in the matter.

Mr. ROGERS: That was for the judge to say.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The counsel for the Crown consented to pay $325 a foot. Will the minister please bring down the information that has been asked for?

Mr. MARCIL: Is the post office going to cost $70,000 besides the cost of the land?

Mr. ROGERS: It will cost $63,000 besides the land.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does that include the fittings?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It will probably run over $70,000.

Amherst—drill hall, $10,000.

Mr. PARDEE: Seventy thousand dollars was voted last year. Will this drill hall cost more than $70,000?

Mr. ROGERS: It will cost altogether $108,000.

Mr. MARCIL: How many regiments are there there?

Mr. RHODES: There is one regiment for the county—the 93rd Battalion. And at the time the Government agreed to construct the drill hall, I put in an application for the formation of a city regiment for the town of Amherst and have been pressing upon the minister for weeks and weeks to get the Order in Council passed necessary to form this regiment. We have the list of officers complete and are ready to go ahead and complete the establishment. When that is done there will be two regiments.

Mr. DEVLIN: Does that mean that $105,000 is to be spent for a drill hall for a regiment in Amherst before that regiment is formed?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is no regiment in Amherst. There is the 93rd Battalion, a regiment for the county, with headquarters at Springhill, where there is an armoury.

Mr. RHODES: That armoury cost about $2,000, and there ought to be a better building there. If I am spared to represent the county for a few years to come, I will make every effort to see that a first-class drill hall is put up in Springhill. I may add that there is no county in Canada in which this expenditure would be more warranted than in Cumberland, for I do not know of any county that, in proportion to its population, has contributed as many men for the overseas contingent. In the last recruiting for the third contingent, the town of Amherst recruited about as many men as either Halifax or St. John—at all events, within one or two of as many as Halifax.

Mr. KYTE: Not as many as the county of Cape Breton, where there is no armoury.

Mr. RHODES: The county of Cape Breton has three times our population.

Mr. DEVLIN: I do not wish to delay the minister's Estimates, but it does seem objectionable that $70,000 has already been spent, and more is to be spent, on a drill shed for a regiment, which, as I understand, the minister has not yet been authorized.

Mr. RHODES: The drill hall is in use to-day.

Mr. DEVLIN: That is what I want to know.

Mr. RHODES: It has been used for weeks past as an instructional school for officers for overseas contingents. Every day it is being used in connection with the mobilization of troops. We have the honour to have in the town of Amherst at the present time the 22nd French Canadian regiment, and perhaps I may be permitted to say, for the benefit of our friends from the province of Quebec, that the people of Amherst are delighted with the physique and the appearance of the men of this regiment. Every letter I receive is loud in its praises of the men, not only as soldiers, but as men; their conduct has been exemplary in every respect.

Mr. DEVLIN: I thank the hon. member for his kind comment. It is natural that the men from the province of Quebec—I except, of course, present company—should be men of fine physique. We are glad to know that the French Canadians have visited the town of Amherst. Can the hon. gentleman tell me how many officers use that drill hall?

Mr. RHODES: There are probably 150 officers in the town at the present time. The 22nd French Canadian regiment, which is composed almost entirely of Roman Catholics, has not had a building sufficiently large for the purposes of worship, and they have been using the building on Sundays for church purposes. It has been used also for quartermaster's stores; I believe that every inch of space in the building has been used for weeks past in connection with the presence in the town of the 22nd French Canadian regiment.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Minister of Militia informed the House that a portion of the factory buildings had been rented by the Government for the purposes of the troops.

Mr. RHODES: The minister did not inform the House any such thing. A portion of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company's buildings there is being used as quarters for the men; the drill hall would not accommodate one quarter of the regiments which consist of nearly 2,000 men. No rent is being paid; no one has been asked for the payment of rent, and no one is expected to pay it. There will be, I presume, small payments for such damage as has been done to the building and any expense to which the company has been put by reason of the occupation, but this compensation will be small.

Mr. McKENZIE: Why were these men taken from large centres like Montreal and Quebec and sent to a comparatively small place like Amherst?

Mr. ROGERS: That is a matter which comes under the control of the Militia Department.

Mr. RHODES: The move was made at the request of the colonel in command of the regiment. It was felt that these men, who were in St. John, were rather too near their homes to enable the best discipline to be enforced and the best training to be obtained. They had to be moved some distance away, and there was no better place to take them to than the town of Amherst. I am very glad to have been instrumental in pointing out to the minister the advantages of the town of Amherst in this respect.

Bridgetown, post office, $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it intended to go on with this work during the present year?

Mr. ROGERS: It is hoped that we may be able to do so later.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Have the plans been prepared?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the land been purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is a revote?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Canning public building, $15,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has any progress been made with this work?

Mr. ROGERS: I understand that expropriation proceedings are being taken, but nothing has been settled up to date.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has anything been done towards erecting the building?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The minister will remember that a rather interesting story was told, I think by the hon. member for Richmond, in regard to this matter last session. He pointed out that Sir Frederick Borden had offered a free site which, if I remember the story correctly, was in a suitable place in the town of Canning. This site was approved at a public meeting held in the town; Sir Frederick Borden was thanked for his generous offer and a description of the site was sent to the minister, who acknowledged receipt of the offer. It appears, however, that certain political friends of one Mr. Eaton were anxious that a site should be purchased from him, and I understand that the department was pressed to conclude a bargain with Mr. Eaton for the purchase from him of a piece of land which many of the inhabitants thought was entirely unsuitable for the purpose. Mr. Eaton was to receive $2,000 for this site. When the land was measured it was found to be not large enough, and it became necessary to incorporate with Mr. Eaton's land a piece of land adjoining, which also belonged tor Sir Frederick Borden. The department offered Sir Frederick Borden $1,100 for the strip of land which was to be added to Mr. Eaton's land, but Sir Frederick said that $1,100 was altogether too much. He refused the offer, and I understand that a suit as to the value of the land was brought by the department and defended by Sir Frederick Borden. Evidently the reason why the department was pushing the $1,100 on Sir Frederick was, as they said in the correspondence, to take the curse off the Eaton lot. As they had estimated the lot adjoining Sir Frederick's at $2,000, they thought Sir Frederick should be paid proportionally $1,100 for his strip. I understand Sir Frederick resisted the offer and went to law about it with the department. It would be interesting to know the result of that trial. Has it been settled yet?

Mr. ROGERS: It has not been settled at all. I am not acquainted with the details, but I know that no suit has been brought in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I should like to know what the policy of the department is in regard to post office buildings. I understand that Canning is a village of only 500 or 600 people, yet here is an appropriation for a public building there costing $15,000. Prior to 1911 a site was purchased by the late Government for a post office in the town of Camrose in my own constituency. It is a very thriving little place with a population of 2,000, and with all the modern facilities that are to be found in our western towns. I have repeatedly asked the Minister of Public Works for a building suitable to the requirements of the town, but I can get no satisfaction whatever. Camrose has seven railways radiating from it, and yet the post office is located in a rented building, although the Government has had a site purchased ever since 1910. It looks to me as if the erection of public buildings was merely a political move, and this is rather a glaring case. Without any reason or justification whatever, the demands of the progressive people of a flourishing little town like Camrose are ignored and places with one-tenth the population, Bear River for instance, are getting public buildings.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is in error in respect to Canning. I see the population is 1,000.

Mr. KYTE: That is the whole polling subdivision.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend says he has been pressing upon me the erection of a public building at Camrose. I must confess I have no recollection of it at the moment.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I am sorry I have to refresh the minister's memory, but the minister faithfully promised me two years ago that a building would be put up there.

Mr. ROGERS: If I did, it must be done.

Public Buildings, N.S.—Chester public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the population of Chester?

Mr. ROGERS: It is a summer resort. I see its population in summer is 1,096.

Mr. KYTE: Chester is not an incorporated town. It is a village with a population of about 400. The figures given by the minister are the census returns for the polling subdivision.

Mr. ROGERS: The information I have here is that it is a town of 1,096. It is noted for its beautiful scenery, making it one of the most delightful summer resorts, nine miles distance from the finest views the country affords. The town has five churches, express and telegraph offices, saw-mills, three hotels and twenty-one stores. It is quite an important place.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is it intended to do anything with this money this year?

Mr. ROGERS: We hope to.

Halifax customs examining warehouse, $100,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is that a new building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, it has not been started yet. The plans are not prepared, but we hope to erect the building within this amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I presume nothing will be done this year.

Mr. ROGERS: The plans have not been prepared.

Halifax drill hall for 63rd Regiment, $45,000.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is this a second drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: Apparently. Nothing has been done yet in connection with the work.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is it intended to have a drill hall for each regiment?

Mr. ROGERS: Halifax is quite a military city.

Mr. DEVLIN: What will be the total cost of the drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: I have no idea. The plans are not prepared yet.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the site been purpurchased?

Mr. ROGERS: The proposal is that the regiment should contribute the site.

Hantsport public building, $9,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I see that is a revote. Will anything be done this year? Has the land been bought?

Mr. ROGERS: The site has been purchased, but the plans have not been prepared.

Mahone Bay public building, $2,000.

Mr. KYTE: What is the population of Mahone Bay?

Mr. ROGERS: 951.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the total amount to be expended there?

Mr. ROGERS: This $2,000 is for the site. Plans have not been drawn up for the building. We shall give careful consideration to the price and spend no more than is necessary in the public interest. Mahone Bay is in the constituency of Lunenburg.

Mr. MARCIL: Are there any public buildings in that constituency at present?

Mr. ROGERS: I am not acquainted with the different towns.

Mr. KYTE: There is one in the town of Lunenburg and one in the town of Bridgewater.

Mr. MARCIL: I have heard at least two or three of the minister's predecessors say that every constituency in Canada should have at least one public building. I know some constituencies that have none. Votes were put in the Estimates for some of these places, but afterwards struck out. I see other constituencies are getting two or three public buildings.

Mr. KYTE: This is the same constituency Chester is in; so this will make four public buildings for the constituency of Lunenburg.

Middleton public building, $15,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What constituency is that in?

Mr. ROGERS: Annapolis.

Mr. MARCIL: Is that the total amount to be expended there?

Mr. ROGERS: I think this amount should be sufficient for a public building in a town of that size.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has land been purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

North Sydney public building—improvements, $5,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: What improvements do you propose to make in North Sydney?

Mr. ROGERS: An addition to examining warehouse, front porch, additional windows and tower clock.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am glad the minister is putting in the tower clock. There were three clocks in prospect; one was put in at Baddeck and it was intended to put one in at North Sydney and Sydney. It is about time that the minister was making an extension to the building at North Sydney. He is paying a pretty high rent there for the building that is now being used as an examining warehouse. They refused to rent the building from the real owner because he was not of the right stripe or colour. The owner had to rent his place to a middleman at $15 a monh, and the middleman immediately rented it to the department at $30 a month. The minister will find that to be the case from the records in the Department of Public Works. That is the way the Government business is being done at the present time.

Port Hawkesbury public building, $3,000.

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM: Has the site been purchased for this building?

Mr. ROGERS: No, nothing has been done.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Has there been any attempt to purchase a site?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes; we have some correspondence and reports, but nothing has been concluded.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is it the intention of the minister to proceed with the erection of this building?

Mr. ROGERS: We shall proceed as fast as we do with any of the others.

Mr. CHISHOLM: The erection of this building has been in contemplation for the last four years. This item is quite old. It was in the Estimates in 1911, it remained in 1912, it was dropped in 1913, and now it comes back again. I understand an effort has been made to purchase the site.

Mr. ROGERS: If we have been working at it as long as that it is about time we got under way.

Shubenacadie public building, $2,000.

Mr. KYTE: How much is it intended to expend on this building?

Mr. ROGERS: The population is 1,516. The site has not been purchased yet. This amount is only to purchase the site.

Sydney Mines public building—improvements, repairs, etc., $2,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does that include the cost of the tower?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, that is for the cost of the tower.

Mr. McKENZIE: I hope the minister will put in both of these clocks during the coming summer.

Mr. ROGERS: We have a number of clocks on the way from England and they are expected very shortly. We have given an order for thirty or forty clocks and they are on the way.

Mr. MARCIL: Where do these clocks come from?

Mr. ROGERS: We buy them from three English firms—Evans & Co., Joyce & Co., and Smith & Co.

Buctouche building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the site been purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is anything to be done this year—any plans prepared?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are prepared for some of these buildings in New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I see that a good many of these votes for New Brunswick public buildings are revotes.

Mr. ROGERS: We are going ahead with the preparation of the plans in the department.

Chatham public building, addition, $12,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: Are the plans ready for this building and has anything been done? When will the contract be called for? This item has been in the Estimates for a number of years, the land lying idle and the minister encouraged the belief last year that the work would be undertaken. People in my town would be glad to know what the prospects are for the present year in that regard.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will remember that this item was under discussion last June a year ago and he is quite right as to his statement as to what I said then. The plans were given out to be prepared by an outside architect, there was some delay and the work had not been making progress up to the time when the war broke out, since which time very few contracts have been let. That explains why the delay has occurred in carrying out this work. It will go on as soon as possible.

Mr. LOGGIE: Can we hope for the work going on this year?

Mr. ROGERS: You will be entitled to have the same hope as all others in connection with any works as soon as conditions clear.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I thought that the Minister of Finance had cleared all the conditions in connection with his new taxes.

Mr. ROGERS: They will always help.

St. John, N.B.—custom house improvements, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What are these improvements?

Mr. HAZEN: Electric lighting.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand that tenders were recently called for electric lighting?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand that the lowest tenderer has been urging that changes ought to be made which would make his work less expensive, and I am sure the minister will agree with me that it would not be fair to make any changes without calling for new tenders. I think the contractor ought to be compelled to adhere to the original specifications on which he tendered, and if changes are to be made then tenders should be called for again. I mention this especially to the minister so that his attention may be called to it.

Mr. ROGERS: Tenders were called for and the contract has been let to the lowest tenderer and a certain amount of work has been done by the contractor. He now represents that the specifications were not what they should be and he came to Ottawa and I looked into the matter myself with the result that I have sent the chief electrician to St. John to make a report on the conditions, so that we can decide what is best to be done in the public interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am sure the minister will agree with me that if a contractor cannot perform his contract the work should be taken from him and new tenders called. There should be no encouragement given to men to tender below what they think the work is worth, in the hope that they may be able to induce the department to make it easier for them later. That apparently is what the contractor is seeking in this case. The others tendered on the understanding that they would be compelled to carry out the specifications to the letter. When I was minister the rule I adopted was that if any changes were to be made the contract should be cancelled and the work let out again to tender, and given to the lowest.

Mr. HAZEN: The gentleman to whom this contract was awarded was very much lower than any other who tendered, and while I naturally would like to see the work go to a St. John firm, I could not find fault with the minister for accepting the lowest tender, which was sent in by a reputable firm in Montreal. I am informed that the contractor is willing to carry out the work according to specifications, and he says that in doing so he will have a reasonable margin of profit, but when he went to St. John to do the work, it was represented to him in writing by the collector of customs, the agent of the Marine Department, the agent of the Inland Revenue Department, and others who used the building, that the plan for lighting the building was not in the public interest, and that important changes ought to be made. The allegation is that the official who drew the plan had before him the plan of the customs house as it was before the serious fire which occurred some years ago. The specifications required that all the gas pipes in the building should be taken out, and it is represented by the collector of customs that both in the inland revenue and customs offices they require gas in order that certain tests may be made. I understand that the contractor has no objection whatever to fulfil his contract at the price at which he undertook it, but, because of the representations made to him by these officials, he thought it necessary to place the matter before the department. I entirely agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) that when a contractor enters into a contract he should carry it out according to the specifications, but in this case, as I understand it, the Minister of Public Works has instructed the official charged with the superintendence of electric lighting in the different public buildings throughout the Dominion, to go to St. John and make a report.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My information is that there would be a very marked difference in the cost of doing the work if these changes are made which are asked for by the gentleman who was the lowest tenderer. I am also informed that other tenderers inquired of the chief architect as to whether any changes would be allowed, and pointing out the changes which they thought desirable to make, and which could be made without disadvantage, and the chief architect informed one or more of them by wire that no changes would be permitted, and that the work must be done strictly in accordance with the specifications. These gentlemen tendered accordingly. The Minister of Marine must see how unfair it would be to the others who tendered if these changes were allowed to be made to the advantage of the lowest tenderer. If any changes are to be made the work should again be put up to competition.

Mr. HAZEN: I am simply telling my hon. friend the statements which have been made to me in regard to the matter. The price of the lowest tenderer was just about one-half of that of most of the other tenderers. There was another company which tendered from the city of Ottawa, which was just a few hundred dollars higher than the lowest tenderer which was selected. The gentleman who was awarded the contract states that he is perfectly prepared to carry on the work according to the specifications and that he has no desire to be relieved of the contract, because he will make a fair margin of profit on it. But, he thinks in view of the strong representations made to him by the officials in St. John, he ought to report the matter to the Department of Public Works before proceeding.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If the minister decides to make these changes, in all fairness the work should be put up to tender again and the present contractor paid for what work he has done.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will admit that I have taken the proper course by sending the chief electrician to St. John, and when I get his report I will give it my best consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is all I ask of the minister.

St. George public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If I recollect aright, there was an appropriation made for this work when I was minister, and certainly it seems a long time to keep the amount in the Estimates. Is there any reason why this work was not commenced before? It is now upwards of three years since the change of Government, and while it seems as if the Government is desirous of erecting the building by keeping the amount in the Estimates, there should not be such a long delay in taking steps towards the erection of the building.

Mr. ROGERS: We have taken steps in connection with it. Tenders have been called for; but the tenders received were thought by the chief architect to be too high, and the matter is under consideration with a view of calling for new tenders to bring the price down to a reasonable figure.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What were the tenders?

Mr. ROGERS: One for $36,000 and one for $42,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is a pity the member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) does not represent St. George. I am sure he would have no difficulty in getting that tender accepted.

St. John new post office, $75,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this expenditure finish the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Beauport public building, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has this work been started?

Mr. ROGERS: No. We have secured the site.

Mr. MARCIL: Was this appropriation voted last year for the first time?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not remember whether it was voted before last year or not.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population of Beauport? It is a country village outside of Quebec.

Mr. ROGERS: The parish has a population of 3,456.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister has not the limits of that parish. It is a pretty large parish.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Who represents the constituency in which Beauport is situated?

Mr. ROGERS: The Postmaster General.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How much is the building to cost?

Mr. ROGERS: Between $25,000 and $30,000. Tenders were called for; the lowest tender received was $33,000 and the highest $49,000. It was thought by the architect that we could get a building at a little less cost than that.

Bedford public building, $10,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has any work been done on this building?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MARCIL: Has a site been secured?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Berthier new public building, $10,000.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Has the site been secured?

Mr. ROGERS (Translation): No.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): In the estimates of 1912-1913, there was an item of $10,000 for a public building at Saint Lin, a town in the Laurentian country. The population of Saint Lin is larger by a few hundred than that of Berthier. It was thought advisable to omit the amount which had been put in the Estimates for the Saint Lin, while an amount was put in for Berthier. I have no objection to an appropriation being made for Berthier, but I protest against the omission of the item for Saint Lin. I fail to see why the latter place should be discriminated against and its appropriation dropped from the Estimates, while the item for Berthier is retained.

Mr. ROGERS: I am glad that my hon. friend approved the site to the appropriation for the town of Berthier, which is an important town of about 1,500 people. I do not know the population of the town to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): The population using the post-office at Saint Lin is a few hundred more than that at Berthier. In any case, I do not wish to rest my complaint on these figures. I do not wish in the least to annoy the department regarding its good treatment of Berthier; on the contrary I am quite gratified at the news that Berthier is getting a public building. But I must protest loudly because the constituency of L'Assomption is not on the part of the Minister of Public Works the object of the same treatment as the constituency of Berthier. I fail to understand why St. Lin should be discriminated against. The minister is not unaware that an Order-in-Council had been passed for the purchase of the site; the plans and specifications had been prepared. I will ask the minister if he intends one day or another to include once more in the Estimates that item which has been omitted, and thus ensure to this Laurentian town the treatment it is entitled to.

Mr. ROGERS: While the case of Berthier has been pressed upon me, I am afraid my hon. friend has never pressed for the construction of a public building at St. Lin.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): The minister states that I have not pressed my request. The opposite is the truth. I have never forgotten to bring up the matter at session after session, so much so that last year I was told that there were more important and more pressing public works than this post office still in abeyance; but I expected at this session to see this item again in the Estimates. I had as a matter of fact asked if it were the minister's intention to carry on this work, and he replied that such was his intention. I therefore conclude that since there are new grants for Nova Scotia and the other provinces, the same treatment should be meted out to the province of Quebec and particularly St. Lin.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend says that the population of St. Lin is about 400 more than the population of Berthier.

Mr. ROGERS: The hon. member has not pressed for the erection of a public building at St. Lin. I can appreciate my hon. friend pressing his claim for his town. He will observe, however, that in the present Estimates there are no new items this year; they are all simply revotes.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I am quite aware that the amount for the Berthier post office was put in the Estimates last year; but when it was put in, the amount for St.

Lin was struck out, and this year the vote for St. Lin was not renewed.

Mr. ROGERS: When the time comes when we are asking for new votes, we shall be glad to give consideration to the recommendation of my hon. friend.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): As I do not wish to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, I shall not insist further. I stand by my protest and am thankful to the minister for the hope he holds out for the future.

Coaticook—armoury, $21,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Does this complete the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: Forty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there a regiment in Coaticook?

Mr. ROGERS: I will have to get that information from the Minister of Militia. Surely they would not recommend an armoury if there was no use for it.

Mr. MARCIL: I can tell the hon. minister that there is no regiment there. There may be one or two militia companies.

Gaspé public buillding, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has nothing been done in Gaspé?

Mr. ROGERS: No; we called for tenders, but on account of the expense we could not go on.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the site been acquired?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: From whom?

Mr. ROGERS: Under an Order in Council passed in September, 1912, the purchase of a site was authorized from the Rev. Father Gauthier, parish priest of Douglastown and Mr. Isidore Morin, of Gaspé, for $500 and $300 respectively.

Mr. MARCIL: I might as well bring in my complaint here, I suppose, and I hope the minister will listen to me. In 1910 I had an estimate put in for a public building in New Carlisle, the county seat of Bonaventure, going on the principle laid down by several Ministers of Public Works that in each constituency there should be a public building. I thought that in New Carlisle, the county seat, with a postal revenue from $1,500 to $1,800 and a population of about a thousand more or less, there ought to be a public building. But something happened and it was struck out. And later another item appeared for a public building for Gaspé Basin. I do not know why the vote for the shire town should be left out and a vote put in for Gaspé, for it is a small place of less than three hundred people. I think an injustice is done to New Carlisle, for we had a fair claim to that public building.

11 p.m.

Mr. ROGERS: I appreciate what the hon. gentleman has said, and apparently from his statement he has a good case. While I cannot promise him that anything will be done immediately, the matter will certainly have consideration later on.

Grand'Mère public building, inclusive of 5 per cent interest on balance due on site, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Will that complete?

Mr. ROGERS: No. I move that the words "inclusive of 5 per cent interest on balance due on site" be struck out. It was put in by some mistake.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Nothing has been done there, apparently.

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Amendment agreed to.

Gross Isle quarantine station—new buildings, $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is a very large amount.

Mr. ROGERS: It is very necessary for work in connection with the Department of Agriculture.

Hull post office—repairs to fence, levelling and sodding grounds, etc., $1,000.

Mr. DEVLIN: What has been the delay in this work? It is very necessary.

Mr. ROGERS: There has been some difference of opinion as to the cost of the work. We do not appear to be able to get value for what we are prepared to spend. But we will make another effort and see if we can get the work carried out.

Mr. DEVLIN: Hull is a city of twenty thousand people and—

Mr. ROGERS: Oh, this is a work that will have to be carried out.

Mr. DEVLIN: It is absolutely necessary; and I think the time has come when the Government should increase the size of the Hull post office to suit the increased popudation. The place is really too small for the needs of the people; the waiting hall should be enlarged.

Mr. ROGERS: The post office in Hull is a very neat little building but probably too small.

Mr. DEVLIN: It is a good building, but it should be increased in size.

Mr. ROGERS: We should be glad to have that looked into.

Jonquières public building, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has anything been done there?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. This completes the contract.

Mr. MARCIL: How much is the total cost of the building?

Mr. ROGERS: Thirty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population?

Mr. ROGERS: It is 2,354.

Mr. MARCIL: That many using this post office? I never heard of it.

Mr. ROGERS: That is the record before me—that according to the census of 1911, the population was 2,354.

Montreal Postal Station A, St. James street, $160,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is that the Carslake property, so-called?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In the Montreal Herald of this evening there are some very serious statements with regard to this property. If these statements are true, it appears that an effort has been made to induce the Government to pay a much larger sum for this property than it is worth. I shall not go into the matter to-night, but I should like the minister to let this item stand, as some gentlemen from Montreal may wish to discuss it.

Mr. ROGERS: There is no objection to letting the item stand. I should like to say that we have placed all the correspondence with regard to this matter on the table of the House, and I suggest that every hon. gentleman who is interested should read that correspondence. There never was a grosser misrepresentation than that which has appeared in the press from time to time in connection with this property. The best valuators that we could find in Montreal valued the property at $400,000, and our officers valued it at the same amount. We made an offer of $325,000, which was refused, and the matter is now before Judge Cassels. We have retained two of the best lawyers in Montreal to see that our evidence is properly presented, and that a fair and proper value is placed upon the property.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This paper states that three Montreal real estate dealers have stated in writing that the property is dear at $190,000.

Mr. ROGERS: Three of the best real estate men in Montreal valued the property at from $300,000 to $400,000. The hon. gentleman will find full information in the report which has been laid upon the table of the House.

Item stands.

Quebec post office, enlargements and alterations, $200,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the total amount to be expended there?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract was $385,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Does the postal business at that office warrant this outlay? I believe that the business has been falling off.

Mr. ROGERS: Quebec is an important place, and I take it that the post office business is increasing rather than falling off.

Mr. MARCIL: There might be need of additional postal facilities in the outskirts of Quebec, but I do not think that any are required in this locality, which, as the hon. gentleman probably knows, is not growing.

Mr. ROGERS: The revenue for 1912-13 was $185,844, and for 1913-14 $184,362.20.

Mr. MARCIL: I have given some little attention to the postal situation in Montreal. A central post office is good in many ways in Montreal, but what is far more useful is sub-stations distributed throughout the district. A central station in the heart of the city is used practically only by those people living or working near it, and I think it would be good policy for the minister to remember in future that if he wants to give real postal facilities to the people he should distribute the stations as much as possible, instead of having one big station in the heart of the city.

Mr. ROGERS: I think my hon. friend is right in that.

Ste. Agathe des Monts public building, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has anything been done in connection with that?

Mr. ROGERS: We have been going ahead with the work for some time.

Stanstead Plain public building, $10,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What would be the total cost of that building?

Mr. ROGERS: $34,000.

St. Gabriel de Brandon public building, $7,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will be the total cost of that building, and what was the cost of the site?

Mr. ROGERS The site cost $2,000. The contract was for $21,000, exclusive of the site.

St. Jacques de l'Achigan public building, $15,000.

Mr. PROULX: Does the minister intend to go on with this work this year? The hon. member for Montcalm has urged several times that this building be started.

Mr. ROGERS: We have bought the site.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That site was bought in 1908. Seven years is a long time to wait for the building.

St. Laurent public building, $5,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is that to complete the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

St. Ours public building, $15,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will be the total cost there?

Mr. ROGERS: We hope to keep within the estimate.

Westmount drill hall and armoury, $30,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the site been purchased, or any location decided on?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READING.

Bill No. 120, for the relief of Cecil Howard Lambert.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, the House adjourned at 11.23 p.m.

Monday, April 5, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

CHARLES ISAAC ALEXANDER DIVORCE BILL.

Mr. McCRANEY: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I gave notice that when motions were called I would move that Bill 118, letter E of the Senate, for the relief of Charles Isaac Alexander, be referred back to the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee. My reason for asking that the Bill be referred back to the committee is this: The Bill went through the Senate Committee unanimously and came down to this House, and went before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills of this House. That committee required a quorum of ten members. There were 13 who took part in the vote, 7 against the preamble and 6 in favour of it. In view of the small number present, and in view of the history of the Bill up to the present time, I would ask that it be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. BURNHAM: Surely it would be most objectionable to adopt this proceeding. I was a member of that committee. That Bill was considered and considered carefully; there was a great deal of discussion. There is absolutely no use of putting members on committees if their findings are not going to be adopted, and if Bills are going to be thrown back on them. I protest against this procedure.

Mr. OLIVER: On the other hand, I have not yet heard that this House exists for the purpose of handing over its authority to any of the committees. The committee is a convenient means of bringing out evidence, but it is the House that renders its decision. As a member of the House, not a member of the committee, I do not wish to be held responsible for the decision of the committee.

Mr. W. A. CLARKE: As a member of that committee and one who listened carefully to the discussion by counsel representing the parties, and who voted against the Bill, I feel that this proposition is a reflection upon the members of the committee. Some hon. members who have voted against the Bill have gone home and intend to remain. Consequently, if the Bill is referred back, we have no chance to get another expression of opinion by the committee. I think the motion should stand over.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My attention was directed to this case by Mr. Lougheed, the Chairman of the Divorce Committee in the Senate, and by my hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney). I read over the evidence, and, if it is to be believed, there is absolutely no question that a divorce ought to be granted. The question of the credibility of witnesses is usually left to those who have had the opportunity of observing their demeanour and judging by that as to whether or not they are telling the truth. The Senate committee which heard the witnesses in this case seem to have believed those who were called on behalf of the petitioner. The circumstances put forth by respondent, who was the only witness called in her own behalf, are corroborative to some extent of what was alleged by witnesses for the petitioner. I think the result of this case indicates the absolute necessity of some reform in the methods by which Bills for divorce are considered, because it is manifestly incongruous that a case which depends upon the credibility of witnesses should be decided in favour of the credibility of those witnesses by a committee which heard them and should be decided against the credibility of those witnesses by a committee which did not hear them. There is much in the result to indicate the necessity of some effective reform in the methods by which these Bills are heard. When the case was brought to my attention I took the opportunity of reading the evidence very carefully. It is no reflection whatever upon the members of the Private Bills Committee that any one in this House might entertain an opinion of the result of that evidence different from that which they entertained. The evidence seemed to me to indicate circumstances as strong as any I have ever seen brought forward in this Parliament in favour of a divorce, unless we are absolutely to disbelieve the two witnesses who were called for the petitioner. The evidence was most direct and circumstantial. In so far as I am personally concerned, and with every possible respect for and deference to the opinions of those who entertain a different view, I would be disposed to think that the case might very well be referred again to the Committee on Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

THE WAR—PROTEST OF BELGIAN GOVERNMENT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I beg to lay on the table of the House a communication under date of the 25th March, 1915, from the Consul-General for Belgium, setting forth the protest of the Government of Belgium against the contention on the part of the German Chancellary that as far back as 1906 Belgium had broken her neutrality by the conclusion of an agreement with Great Britain.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 121, to amend the Supreme Court Act. He said: The purpose of this Bill is to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court to hear and determine appeals from judgments in connection with the contestation of provincial elections in cases where the provincial authorities have provided for such an appeal. One or more of the provinces has provided that there shall be an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. Of course, the provincial legislation cannot give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court but inasmuch as some of the provinces have by their legislation provided for such an appeal, thereby expressing their desire that there should be such an appeal, the purpose of the present Bill is to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to hear such appeals.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Which of the provinces is concerned?

Mr. DOHERTY: Manitoba is one, and it is possible that one or two of the other two western provinces has similar legislation.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

RECRUITS' ATTESTATION PAPERS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Sir JAMES AIKINS (Brandon): I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to an anachronism or perhaps a blunder that has occurred in the attestation papers required to be signed by recruits previous to enlistment in the overseas expeditionary force, and also in the permanent force of Canada. This error has caused some discussion and perhaps a little irritation on the part of a large body of our citizens. In the particulars which are required to be given in these papers, the recruit has to state the religious denomination to which he belongs, and the religious denominations set out are: Church of England, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregationalist, other Protestants, Roman Catholic, Jewish. There is no mention in this list of the Methodists.

That may be accounted for, perhaps, by the fact that the theological section of the Department of Militia has been, like Rip Van Winkle, asleep for about forty years. There was in Canada, over forty years ago, a religious denomination called Wesleyans, but it has ceased to be, and I am quite sure that the Methodists, who are as large a body in Canada as those of the other Protestant denominations specified, are quite as loyal and quite as deserving of being mentioned. I call the attention of the Minister of Militia to this in order that the error and its consequences may hereafter be obviated.

Major General HUGHES: It is quite evident that my good friend (Sir James Aikins) has been asleep himself. It is true that the attestation paper does not contain the word "Methodists," but every one knows that the Methodists are always to the front in every loyal and patriotic cause. No one would suspect that either my good friend or myself, both of whom occupy front seats among the orthodox Methodists at least once a year, would intentionally cast any reflection on the Methodist body. The mistake has been made through our following the English attestation sheet. When I asked for an explanation of it some weeks ago, I was told that our men here simply copied the English sheet, and I, being the head of the theological branch of the Militia Department, was not consulted, or I would have noticed it. The other officers in the department, being only military men, did not observe the effect of the mistake. I may, however, inform my hon. friend that the Wesleyans are not dead, because there are in England hundreds of thousands of the very best citizens who still bear the name of Wesleyans. As I say, we followed the English form, but I can promise my hon. friend that the word "Methodist" will be found in the papers in future. I may say also that there is nothing in the world to prevent a man writing in the word "Methodist," as many of them do, if he wishes to.

CANADIAN AVIATION SCHOOL.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon): I draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the following despatch, which appears in the newspapers of this morning:

Toronto, April 4.—The first aviation school in Canada will be opened at Lawrence Park on Tuesday. It will be under the direction of Captain E. L. Janney, squadron commander of the Royal Flying Corps. Lieutenant Harley Smith, of Toronto, will look after the military end of the training and some other instructors will soon arrive from England and the United States. Lieutenant Bernard F. Hale, of the Royal Flying Corps, who accompanied Captain Janney to the front, is now on his way to Canada, and will act as adjutant of the school. When completed, the staff of instructors will number six.

The school will open with twelve or fifteen picked pupils, and more will be added as facilities improve. Two hangars are to be started at once, and will be completed in ten days .

The course will extend over four months, and in order to familiarize the pupils with the parts of the machine a complete new machine will be built on the premises. It will embody the latest improvements, and will be a very powerful machine.

In addition to Lawrence Park, the Edgecombe estate of over 200 acres has been placed at the disposal of the school.

I wish to ask if this school is or will be under the direction of the Minister of Militia.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Canadian Government has not instituted or organized any aviation schools up to the present time. If the Admiralty or the War Office should desire us to co-operate in work of that kind, our assistance will be cheerfully afforded by every means in our power. I believe that some representations have been made from certain quarters to the Minister of Militia and Defence, who, being more familiar with the facts, will be better able to speak of them than I.

Major General HUGHES: In regard to the particular instance referred to by the hon. member for the Yukon, I may say that this aviation school has no connection whatever with the Militia Department. Thus far the Militia Department has not had anything to do with aviation corps, either directly or indirectly, and the officers who are advertising themselves in this connection are doing so on their own responsibility. It is purely a private organization and not under the auspices, direction or pay of the Militia Department.

PRIVATE BILL.

The House in committee on Bill No. 107, respecting the patent of John Millen and Son, Limited—Mr. Webster; Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER: As this Bill necessarily affects private rights, an explanation should be given as to its nature and purpose, and as to how far private rights may be affected by it.

Mr. CARROLL: The affidavits in connection with this Bill were placed in my hands, in the absence of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Webster). I will read a copy of the affidavit on which the Bill went through the Senate.

I, Frank Dean Lyman, of the city and district of Montreal, being duly sworn do solemnly depose and say, that

1. I am a director of John Millen and Son, Limited.

2. On or about September 15, 1914, and for some time previously, I alone had full charge of the negotiations, the purchase, and all matters appertaining to the purchase of letters patent No. 114,110, for an improvement in trolley wheels, issued under the seal of the Patent Office of Canada and dated the 15th day of September, 1908, the full right, title and interest in and to which was vested in the Lumen Bearing Company, of the city of Buffalo, in the state of New York, U.S.A., and transferred by the said purchase to the said John Millen and Son, Limited.

3. During the said negotiations no mention whatsoever was made to me of any payments due or to be due of Government fees to maintain the said letters patent of Canada in full force and effect.

4. During the negotiations and for some time previously it was believed by me that the said letters patent of Canada were fully paid up and that no payment of Government fees was required to maintain the patent in full force and effect.

5. During the time from September 1, 1914, to September 14, 1914, I was absent from Montreal on a vacation and could not be reached for instructions before my return to Montreal.

6. During my absence from Montreal there was a large accumulation of matters requiring or believed to require my personal attention, all of which matters were allowed to remain in abeyance until my return on September 14, 1914.

7. On my return on September 14, 1914, I immediately gave the accumulated matters attention and proceeded to dispose of the same with diligence, and on September 15, 1914, I found amongst the said accumulated matters a notice from the said Lumen Bearing Company that a Government fee had to be paid to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of the term of duration of the said letters patent of Canada, on or before September 15, 1914.

8. On the same day (September 15, 1914,) I mailed a cheque for twenty dollars ($20) to the Commissionr of Patents, Ottawa, to cover an extension of the term of duration of the said letters patent of Canada, believing the said payment would be accepted.

9. The said payment arriving in Ottawa on the night of September 15, 1914, reached the Commissioner of Patents on September 16, 1914.

10. The Patent Office in due time notified the said John Millen and Son, Limited, that the payment was made too late and that the patent had lapsed.

Frank Dean Lyman.

Sworn before me at the city of Montreal, this third day of Februaury, 1915.

Joseph E. Lemire,
Notary Public.

This Bill is very similar to Bills that have passed during the present session, for example, the Bill respecting the patent of the National Wood Distilling Company. It is simply a case where the payment of the fee was overlooked by the gentleman in charge of the company controlling this patent. Such renewals have been granted before by this House, and I understand that two similar Bills have been passed by this House during the present session. I know that many similar Bills have been passed by this House while I have been a member.

With reference to the question raised by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), section 2 of the Bill will safeguard any rights that have accrued from the time that this patent lapsed until the present time, as there is the usual saving clause in the Bill.

On section 2—certain rights saved:

Hon. J. D. REID: How long a time had expired between the date on which the fee should have been paid and the date on which it was paid?

Mr. CARROLL: I think about thirteen days.

Mr. REID: So far no patents have been renewed this session, although there is one before the committee now, unless the fees were remitted on the day of the expiry of the patent; that is, unless they were mailed at the post office to the department and arrived on the evening of the day that they should have been paid to the department.

Mr. CARROLL: That is the case here.

Mr. REID: In this case, the hon. member states that the payment was thirteen days overdue.

Mr. CARROLL: I made a mistake.

Mr. REID: I would like to know exactly when the fee was paid. If it were paid after it should have been paid, I certainly must object to this Bill. There is no case this session where a patent has been renewed unless the money was actually in the possession of the Government on the day it should have been paid; that is, although it was not in the possession of the Department of Agriculture, it was in the post office or in a department of the Government on the day the patent would expire.

Mr. CARROLL: That is the case here. When I had reference to the thirteen days, I had reference to the time the gentleman was absent from his business. The fee was payable on the 15th of September, 1914, and it was mailed that day; but it did not reach the Patent Office until the 16th of September, the following day. That is what the affidavit sets forth.

Mr. REID: Does the evidence of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture show that to be a fact?

Mr. CARROLL: I do not know, as I am not on the Private Bills Committee. This affidavit was simply placed in my hands.

Mr. REID: I have been attending the Private Bills Committee during the whole session, and I have not seen this Bill before. If any members here who are on that committee will say that the Deputy Minister of Agriculture stated that the money had been remitted on the day that the fee was due, then this would be a case similar to the one I referred to a few minutes ago.

Mr. CARROLL: Has this Bill been before the Private Bills Committee?

Mr. REID: I do not think so. If it has not been before that committee, it should go there, and the evidence of the deputy minister should be taken to show that the facts as stated in the affidavit are correct.

The CHAIRMAN: The Bill is reported by the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills without any amendment. That statement on the face of the Bill is signed by Walter Todd, Clerk of the Private Bills Committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There must be some misunderstanding as to the matter. I would suggest that the committee report progress.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was going to suggest that.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

EDMONTON OFFICE, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. DOUGLAS:

Is there an employee named Nice in the Interior Department at Edmonton?
2. If so, what are his duties?
3. What is his salary?
4. When was he appointed?

Mr. CROTHERS (for Mr. Roche): No.

RECRUITING AT NORTH BAY.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. What is the name of the recruiting officer at North Bay, Ontario, and what rate is he being paid?
2. What premises have been leased for his convenience in North Bay, what rental is being paid therefor, to whom is it being paid, and from what date?
3. Was an effort made to secure any other premises? If so, what were the rentals asked, and by whom?

Major General HUGHES:

1. No recruiting officer has been appointed at North Bay.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

FRENCH RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. How much work has been done on the French River improvements since January 1, 1913?
2. Who are the contractors for the work, and how much has been paid them?

Mr. ROGERS: 1. Construction of the Little Chaudière dam; rock excavation, camp equipment and surveys have cost $101,067.34.

2. Contractor Jennings & Ross have been paid $3,460 for work on the substructure of the Big Chaudière dam. The contract for superstructure has not yet been awarded.

COOKSHIRE POST OFFICE REPAIRS.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Have any repairs been done to the post office at Cookshire since 1911?
2. If so, by whom, at what price, and were tenders called for same?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, in September, 1912, the tender of Ayton Cromwell was accepted to dig drain, lay pipe, build parapet wall above roof, lay cement walk and platform, lay concrete floor in basement, paint wood work, etc., for $1,300 which was considered fair and reasonable by the Chief Architect. In October, 1912, repairs were made to the furnaces by George Bushey at a cost of $22. In September, 1913, additional radiators were installed and repairs made to the heating apparatus by Gauthier & Co., at a cost of $108.33. Quotations were received from other contractors, for the larger repairs, but were not so satisfactory.

VEZINA'S CORNERS POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Has Mr. Alfred Coulumbe, postmaster at Vezina's Corners, been dismissed from the office?

2. If so, what reasons have been given for his dismissal?

3. Who was the complainant, and who recommended his dismissal??

4. Who has he been replaced by, and by whom recommended?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Yes, on the 13th January, 1914.

2. He was dismissed for political partisanship.

3. The matter was brought to the attention of the department by Dr. John Hayes, and an investigation having been held, the evidence showed that the postmaster had taken an active part in politics.

4. Mr. Joseph Groleau, on recommendation.

DREDGE PONTOONS IN NEW GLASGOW.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. What was the cost of hauling the dredge pontoons in New Glasgow in the Department of Public Works in the years 1912, 1913 and 1914?

2. To whom was the money paid for this work in each of these years?

Mr. HAZEN: 1912: John Stewart—hauling out pontoons, $410.62; launching, $8.75; towing, launching, cleaning, etc., $541.28; extending launchways, scraping, painting, $541.04; total, $1,501.69.

1913: John Stewart, launching, $81.31; Daniel Chisholm, rent of land, $100; Gammon Weir, hauling up, painting, scraping and landing, $500; total, $681.31.

1914: Gammon & Weir—Hauling out pontoons; $200, hauling up, painting, scrapping and launching, $1,100. Daniel Chisholm; rent of land, $200. Picton Co., Con. Supply Co., towing, $130. SS. Hiawatha, $45. Total, $1,675.

MR. P. A. MOUSSEAU.

*Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Since Mr. P. A. Mousseau ceased to be superintendent of construction for the Louisville post office, has he been in the employ of the Government?

2. If so, in what capacity?

3. What are his duties?

4. What salary is he paid?

Mr. ROGERS:

1, 2, 3. Yes, he has been temporarily employed, supervising construction of fire escapes and hand rails, and in purchasing and installing furniture, safe, etc.

4. $4 per day.

HAWKESBURY-GRENVILLE BRIDGE.

Mr. PROULX:

1. Has the Department of Public Works acquired from the Hawkesbury Lumber Company a right of way over their mill property in the town of Hawkesbury for the purpose of the proposed interprovincial bridge between Hawkesbury and Grenville?

2. If so, what was the amount of compensation paid?

3. If not, has the company offered to sell, and for what price?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. A right of way was expropriated.

2. Compensation has not been paid to the company.

3. The company has not made any offer to sell.

WAR SUPPLIES—OLIVER EQUIPMENT.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. How many Oliver equipments were sent with the first contingent to England?

2. From whom were they bought, and what was paid for them?

3. Were they discarded in England as unnecessary or useless?

Major General HUGHES.

1. 13,920 sets Oliver pattern valise equipment.

2. The greater part of this equipment was taken from stock in ordnance stores, and prices and names of contractors for this portion are not now available. The balance of the equipment sent was bought from Messrs. H. Carson, Ltd., of Ottawa, and Adams Bros. Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, at $6.75 per set.

3. It is reported that the Oliver equipment was withdrawn, and the division completed with Web equipment from the British ordnance.

PORT DANIEL WEST MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Who is the contractor for the mail service between Port Daniel West post office and the railway station?

2. (a) When was the contract awarded, and (b) at what price?

3. Were any tenders called for? If not, why not?

4. Who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of their respective tenders?

5. Who was the previous contractor, and did he offer to renew his contract, and what price was paid him?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. E. Bisson.

2. (a) 15th March, 1911, the contract dated from 1st July, 1911. (b) 21 cents per trip, amounting to $131.46 per annum.

3. Yes.

4. Edmund Bisson, $131.46; William Bisson, $156.50; E. Saint Meux, $174.

5. W. Bisson. He was paid 16 cents per trip and did not offer to renew his contract.

MR. D. CARDIN.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. D. Cardin, of St. Anselme, county of Dorchester, in the employ of the Government as customs officer, or otherwise?
2. If so, what is his salary, and when was he appointed?
3. Where does he have his office, and what rent is paid by the Customs Department for that office?
4. What have been the revenues of that office for the past twelve months?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Yes.
2. $700 per year. First employed Nov. 14, 1913; permanently appointed Aug. 15, 1914.
3. In building owned by J. E. Audet; $12.50 per month.
4. $2,554.91.

EUGENE FUROIS.

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Is Eugène Furois an employee of the Quebec post office?
2. If so, what is his employment, what salary does he receive, and by whom was he recommended?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. No; he is in the Inspector's office at Quebec.
2. First-class clerk, Grade B, at $1,500 a year. He was appointed on the recommendation of the late Postmaster General, on the 29th March, 1912.

MR. ANSELME JALBERT.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Anselme Jalbert, labourer, of St. Anselme, in the employ of the Post Office Department at Montreal?
2. If so, what is his position, what salary has he, and what examination did he pass before appointment?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Yes.
2. Temporary helper; salary, $2 a day. He has not passed the Civil Service examination, as temporary employees are not required to do so.

MR. JOSEPH EDMOND AUDETTE.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Joseph Edmond Audette, carter, of St. Anselme, county of Dorchester, employed by the Government as inspector of food-stuffs?
2. If so, what is his salary, and when was he appointed?
3. Did he pass any examination prior to appointment?
4. (a) How many reports has he made of the work done by himself, and (b) what are the dates of such reports?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. Yes.
2. $200 per annum; April 1, 1914.
3. None required.
4. (a) Six, on 173 samples collected; (b) June, September, October, November and December, 1914, January, 1915.

MODEL FARM, TOWNSHIP OF STANFOLD.

Mr. BROUILLARD:

1. Does the Government intend to establish a model farm in the township of Stanfold?
2. If so, does the Government intend to purchase the farm belonging to Arthur Gilbert?
3. What is the price asked by Arthur Gilbert?
4. What is the size of that farm, and what is the quality of the soil?
5. Are there rocks and boulders on the land, and is it all under cultivation?

Mr. BURRELL: So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned:

1 and 2. No.

3, 4 and 5. The department has no information.

WAR SUPPLIES.

Mr. OLIVER moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports or proceedings, and of all other documents relating to the purchase in Canada of horses for army service, by the British and French Governments respectively.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The documents relating to such matters, so far as we have knowledge of them, are of a confidential character. If the hon. gentleman will speak to me privately and will let me know just what information he requires, perhaps I shall be able to give it to him.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Ernest Lapointe: For a copy of all documents, papers, correspondence, reports, pay-lists, accounts, etc., relating to the work on the dam at the place known as Grande Décharge in lake St. John.

Mr. Ernest Lapointe: For a copy of all documents, letters, correspondence, messages, reports, etc., relating to the calls for tenders for the carrying of the mails between the post office at St. François de Montmagny and the Intercolonial station during the years 1914 and 1915, as well as a copy of the tenders that have been sent in relating to the said mail service.

Mr. Turriff: For a return showing the names of all the individuals, firms, companies and corporations to whom contracts have been given for supplies, by the Department of Militia and Defence, or by any other department of the Government, or by any parties acting on behalf of the Government since 1st August last.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 114, to amend the Adulteration Act.—Mr. Blondin.

Bill No. 116, to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—Mr. Blondin.

HOUSE OF COMMONS REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

CORRECTION OF CLERICAL ERRORS.

On the Order being called:

Third reading of Bill 106, to amend the Representation Act, 1914.—Sir Robert Borden.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am informed by the Minister of Justice, who has had charge of this Bill, that some very slight corrections are necessary, and as they can only be made in Committee of the Whole, I beg to move:

That the order for the third reading of Bill No. 106, to amend the Representation Act, 1914, be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—Nipissing:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a suggestion, which I received this morning from British Columbia, that the name of the electoral district of Yale be changed to Okanagan. Section 12 of the Representation Act, 1914, is as follows:

The electoral district of Cariboo, comprising the provincial electoral districts of Cariboo, Lillooet, Kamloops and Yale excepting that portion of Yale contained in the electoral district of Westminster district, as the same is above described, and including the whole city, and district municipality of Salmon Arm.

The electoral division of Cariboo includes the provincial electoral district of Yale. Section 13 of the Act is as follows:

The electoral district of Yale, comprising the provincial electoral district of Okanagan, excepting any portion of the city or district municipality of Salmon Arm which may be contained therein, and the provincial electoral districts of Similkameen, Greenwood and Grand Forks.

The district of Okanagan is included in what is called Yale by our Act, and it is suggested that instead of being called Yale the district should be called Okanagan, to avoid confusion.

Mr. BURRELL: It is true that there is a provincial electoral district called Yale in what is now known as the northern riding of Cariboo, the constituency being formerly named Yale-Cariboo. It was thought by some of the people there to be undesirable to designate the new riding in the south by the name of any provincial constituency. The four provincial constituencies in the southern riding of the district of Yale are Okanagan, Similkameen, Greenwood and Grand Forks. The district of Yale still covers for judicial purposes the whole of that southern country, while Cariboo is associated more directly with the northern country, including the provincial riding of Yale. I have heard no complaints from the people there in this matter. Yale, which is an old historic name, embraces the whole southern judicial district, and I am inclined to think that the Minister of Public Works had these things in view when the matter was under consideration.

[Mr. Blondin.]

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Quebec East:

Mr. DOHERTY moved:

That section 4 be amended by inserting after the words "the village of Stadacona" in the last line thereof, the words "the territory which formerly constituted."

There is now no longer any village of Stadacona. What was formerly the village of Stadcona is included in Limoilou ward of the city of Quebec.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 5—Quebec West:

Mr. DOHERTY moved:

That section 5 be amended by inserting the words "the territory which formerly included" before the words "the village of Stadacona," in lines 6 and 7.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in committee, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair, on Bill No. 109, to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.—Mr. Doherty.

On section 2—proof of right to be a petitioner:

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What change does this make?

Mr. DOHERTY: The change made is the provision that the production of a copy of the voters' list used in the election containing the name of the petitioner shall be conclusive evidence that the petitioner could lawfully present the petition.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is designed to prevent controversy as to the status of the petitioner, which sometimes causes delay. I should think it is a very proper amendment.

Mr. MARCIL: Do you require from the petitioner an affidavit that he is the person whose name appears on the voters' list?

Mr. DOHERTY: The production of a voters' list certified by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to be a true copy, containing the name of the person presenting the petition, is conclusive evidence as to his status. There is no requirement of an affidavit by him if his name is on the voters' list. It may be that under that provision the court would consider it necessary for the petitioner to prove that he was the same man whose name appeared on the list.

Mr. MARCIL: The point is important because, for instance, in my constituency there are many men of exactly the same name who would have to go back to the third or fourth generation to be identified. There might be a dozen Jean Antoines in my constituency.

Mr. DOHERTY: My impression is that the court would require proof to be made before it that the petitioner was the man whose name appeared on the voters' list. That would be a better protection than merely making an affidavit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Does my hon. friend know if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is bound to give a certified copy of the voters' list to anybody who asks for it, say by letter?

12 noon.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be well to put in a line, "who, upon request, shall supply the same."

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Where a public official is authorized to do a particular act, the court considers him as being under the duty to perform that particular act. Therefore, if he has power to certify a list, it would be his duty to certify a list when called upon to do so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Under this Bill any party may ask the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for a copy of the list. I should imagine that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would be bound to give a copy to anybody asking for it the moment the request was made.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was endeavouring to meet the point the hon. gentleman has made. If the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is authorized to deliver a certified copy of a document, of which he is the legal custodian, it seems to me to follow as a matter of course that it is his duty to furnish this certified list when so required. While I have no objection to inserting any words to make that plain, I do not think they are really necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Neither do I; I assume that is understood.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes, I would suggest that after the word "petitioner" in the second line of subsection 2 words should be inserted in order to make it read:

> The production of the voters' list containing the name of the petitioner, as set forth in the petition or of a copy thereof certified—

Mr. PARDEE: Should it not be absolutely mandatory on the part of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to deliver this certified copy of the voters' list fortwith? If a petition should be filed, and if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should refuse to deliver the certified copy of the list, the object of the petitioner might be defeated because the time for taking proceedings might expire.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The only objection is that, if you make a special provision in this case that he has to deliver a certified copy, it might alter the law in other cases. If there is to be any provision, it should be a general provision that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is bound to furnish copies of all documents of which he is the lawful custodian. I do not think it is necessary, because, without any special provision, I understand that is his duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I assume that it is the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If I am a petitioner in a case and I want a copy of that list he is bound to deliver it?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes, that is my understanding of it.

Mr. PARDEE: Would it not be well to provide that a copy of the voters' list " shall forthwith be delivered by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?" Although the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is bound to deliver the list on demand, yet should he not do so, does it not strike the right hon. the leader of the Government that there should be something further in the Act to compel him forthwith, upon application for a certified copy, to deliver the same to whomever might apply for it? It would appear to me that that ought to be done.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I really do not think there is any danger, but might I suggest a change that would place the matter beyond question? Suppose the section should read in this way:

> The production of the voters'list containing the name of the petitioner, as set forth in the petition, or of a copy thereof, certified by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to be a true copy of the voters' list used at the election in the electoral district to which the petitioner relates shall be conclusive evidence that the petitioner could lawfully present the petition.

Then you have the opportunity of bringing the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery there with the voters' list, or on the other hand you have the opportunity to get a certified copy, and if you run any danger in one way certainly any court upon his default in furnishing a copy would order him to produce the voters' list. I therefore beg to move that:

> Section 2 be amended by adding in the second line, between the words "petition and "certified," the following words: "or of a copy thereof" and striking out the words, "or of a copy thereof" where they were inserted before.

Mr. DOHERTY: The fact that you call for a copy of the voters' list would not exclude the production of the original. There is no harm in making it perfectly clear that you permit the production of the voters' list.

Mr. MURPHY: Does the amendment make it clear as to who is to produce the voters' list? What is the alternative?

Mr. DOHERTY: It would certainly be for the petitioner to produce proof of his qualification, and if he wanted to produce the original it would be open to him to ask the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to appear and produce it.

Mr. MURPHY: I gathered from the remarks of the right hon. the Prime Minister that it was in his mind that the effect of the amendment was that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was to perform one of two duties—either to appear in person and produce the voters' list or to furnish a certified copy of it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I thought the amendment proposed by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was amply sufficient. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side had some doubt about it. Therefore, I proposed my amendment with a view of giving the petitioner the right to have the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery either to go through with the original list or produce a copy certified by him to be a true copy. My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) had some doubt as to the absolute duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to furnish such certified copy. I have no doubt, but in order to put the matter beyond question, it seems to me that the amendment that I proposed will meet every possible contingency that could be suggested.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—sections 6 and 7 repealed:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the object of the repeal of these sections?

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 6 required the production of an affidavit by the petitioner that he has good reason to believe, and verily believes, that certain allegations contained in the petition are true and it also required that if any other person was substituted for the petitioner the person so substituted should make an affidavit to the same effect. Section 7 provided for preliminary objection by the sitting member. The purpose of this amendment is to do away with what appear to be unnecessary formalities that only encumber the proceedings and which have been a prolific source of delay in the past.

On section 4—form of petition:

Mr. DOHERTY: The object of this section is to give the respondent the protection of requiring that the party complaining should set forth the grounds of his complaint with sufficient particularity. The law, as it now stands, permits the petitioners to set forth in the most absolute general terms charges of violation of every section of the statute, and the practice, as I understand it, has been to recite the statute and make the preliminary allegation that the respondent has violated all of its provisions. That was considered by the committee to be absolutely unfair towards the respondent. On the other hand, it seems perfectly proper that where a man takes the responsibility of making charges of grave violation of a law so important as this, he should not be allowed to rush into court unless he knows substantially what it is which he wants to charge the respondent with. It was considered only a matter of fairness that the respondent should have before him sufficient particulars to enable him to substantially know and answer the charges that are brought against him. Furthermore, it is considered that this amendment would contribute materially to making it possible to expedite the trial.

Mr. GERMAN: Under the law as it is at present, the petitioner is obliged to give particulars after he has filed his petition, and he has to prove the petition or to pay costs. What more can you do by this change?

Mr. DOHERTY: This says to the petitioner at the outset that he shall tell the respondent what he complains of, so that the respondent can properly meet the charges, and so that there can be a prompt trial.

Mr. GERMAN: It will be a change theoretically but not practically.

Mr. DOHERTY: It will make a very material and practical change. It may be open to discussion whether it is a desirable change. I myself think it is highly desirable, but there is no question about it being a material change. The court, with the issue before it from the outset, can fix the trial within a limited period, whereas, as it is now, months and even years elapse, and the petitioner then comes in with particulars that he has dug up in these years to try to support his petition. The considerations which moved the committee to suggest this amendment were, that in the first place it was a matter of ordinary fairness to the respondent, and that in the second place it afforded a means of expediting the trial, which is the great object of this legislation. It seemed to the committee that there is ample law now, but that the principal difficulty was the proper method of promptly enforcing the law. It seemed to us that this amendment is absolutely essential, if we are going to attain the object of a speedy trial, which we have in view.

Mr. PROULX: Would the petitioner be barred from going outside the specified charges made in the petition?

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose is that a man should get as fair an opportunity to make a defence as he gets in an ordinary action before the courts. It will be for the court to determine whether the particular petition is sufficiently particularized to meet the purpose. The intention of the amendment is to prevent surprise and unnecessary expense to the respondents, and to assure a fair and speedy trial. I should think it would be within the power of the court to make rules, under which further particulars may be ordered, if asked for. I would take it that the court would not allow a petitioner to proceed to prove allegations which are not particularized, to the extent required by the present law.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am very much afraid that instead of leading to a speedy trial and having the member who is elected by corrupt practices unseated, the section is going to give him a splendid opportunity to avail himself of technicalities and to delay the trial for a long time, or probably to have the petition thrown out. It says:

> The petition presented under this Act may be in form "A" in the schedule of this Act. It must complain of the undue election or return of a member, or that no return has been made, or that a double return has been made or of a matter contained in any special return made, or of some unlawful or corrupt act or acts, and shall contain such particulars of the complaint set out in the petition as may be necessary to prevent surprise or unnecessary expense to the respondent and to insure a fair and effectual trial; and it must be signed by the petitioner, or all the petitioners if there are more than one.

Who is to determine as to whether there are sufficient particulars to prevent surprise, and what should happen if the judge should think there are not sufficient particulars? In an election petition you cannot set out the offence with particularity. The offence is usually committed in secret, and while the petitioner and his friends may see corrupt practices all around them, they could not within the time fixed set them out with particularity. But it is difficult to give particulars with exactness, and one cannot do it in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. It is only by making general allegations and relying upon the evidence that one can contest an election. If you require particulars given in such a manner as will appeal to the judgment of the judge and allow him very great discretion, my impression is that in a great many cases petitions which may be founded upon justice will be defeated entirely by reason of the requirements of this section.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think I understand clearly what the committee had in mind in framing this section. It would be quite possible that it would work out in the way in which they expected. As my hon. friend knows, the difficulty with petitions in the past has been that, notwithstanding the provision as to the necessity of an affidavit, the practice has always been that the solicitor framing the petition takes practically every section of the Dominion Elections Act and alleges in the terms of those sections that its provisions have been violated by the respondent. In fact, the petition ordinarily has given no more information to the respondent than if the petitioner had said in a few words that the respondent had violated every section of the Dominion Elections Act, and had let it go at that. I remember many years ago arguing before the Supreme Court that a petition in that form was not in compliance with the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. The court reserved judgment upon the appeal; but as it appeared that the petition was in the form that had been ordinarily adopted in the province of Nova Scotia, the court held that it was in compliance with the Act. That judgment was delivered by the late Mr. Justice King. I suppose it was the intention of the committee to make it necessary that there should be some more definite statement than that which is embodied in the mere assertion that every section of the Dominion Elections Act has been controverted. I do not know the precise idea of the committee, but I suppose that in view of the abolition of the affidavit which hitherto has been required they have thought it desirable that some more definite statement of the grounds upon which the petition is presented should be set forth therein. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has raised a difficulty which of course strikes one immediately, that is to say, the extent of the particulars made necessary by this amendment, and he desires to know how that will be determined. I suppose that would be a question for the court or for the judge trying the petition to determine. For that purpose it would be necessary for him to construe the Act and the amendment and to come to a conclusion in regard to the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is what I had in mind—that the man, say John Jones, must be named, and that the particulars must be given of the corrupt act which was committed; that is, that so-and-so was driven to the poll, the name being given. If on the trial the petitioner should fail to prove that particular act, the petition would be thrown out.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Although I may be in error, I do not quite understand that the committee intend by this amendment to necessitate the giving of particulars of the character which are required before the trial begins. The practice, as we all know, is that when a case is to be set down for trial, the respondent comes with a motion asking that particulars shall be given before a certain day in order that he may prepare his defence. I would not suppose it was the intention of the committee that particulars of that character should be set out in the petition.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is what section 5 says.

Mr. DOHERTY: You are to give such particulars as are required by section 11. The court will have to determine in each case the extent of the particulars required to prevent surprise and to ensure a fair and effectual trial. The section does not say that the petitioner shall give the name in every instance. There are circumstances where, perhaps, the name may be necessary to prevent surprise and ensure a fair and effectual trial; there are circumstances where it will not be necessary. The court will appreciate that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In regard to the form, section 3 of schedule A says:

Here state the grounds on which the petitioner relies, and, in case illegal or corrupt acts are alleged, the particulars of each of such acts as prescribed by section 11.

Surely that must mean the particular person who has been bribed, or the particular person who has been brought to the poll.

Mr. DOHERTY: It says the particulars as prescribed by section 11.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Of each of such acts.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. What particulars are prescribed by section 11? That the petitioner shall give sufficient particulars to prevent surprise and ensure a fair and effectual trial. The judge will determine that point. He may determine it upon a motion for further particulars, if the respondent chooses to take that course. If the respondent chooses to meet the petition and go to trial, then it will be for the judge, when evidence of a particular thing is offered, to determine whether proof of that particular action would under the petition as drafted be a surprise to the respondent—something which he would not be called upon to expect—and would prevent there being a fair trial. I do not dispute that the enactment of this provision may prevent the making of a certain number of petitions. The situation to-day, as I think the hon. member for St. John correctly describes it, is that, because people think there is corruption in the air, because they think there was a great deal of corruption, although they do not actually know that there was any, and because the law requires the petition to be filed within forty days, they put in their petition with nothing that one can call knowledge of corrupt acts. Let the law be honest with itself and the people to whom it applies. If the law means as it says, that you must file your petition within forty days, surely it does not mean to say: On condition that on a petition when you know nothing, we shall give you a year or two years to hunt up and find whether you can discover anything. If that is the state of the law, then we ought to repeal that law and say that a man may, whenever he finds out any corruption at any time within the Parliament for which a member is elected, bring in a petition. I believe that the law as it stands to-day is, on the face of it, an invitation—I do not want to say to perjury—but to the very loosest kind of swearing. Requiring an affidavit has proven absolutely nugatory as a protection for the innocent respondent—and there are some innocent respondents. The other evening we were seriously attacked because it was said we were throwing every member of Parliament to the wolves and facilitating his being unseated.

Mr. PUGSLEY: You are certainly taking him from the wolves by this section.

Mr. DOHERTY: We are trying to create a situation different from that which exists under the law to-day. To-day a man is an object of suspicion and prima facie guilty of every sort of corruption. And why? Because he has allowed himself to be nominated for Parliament and a majority of the voters, apparently at all events, have voted for him. And yet this law, apparently so severe against candidates, affords such opportunities for delay that the one thing manifest under our system is that you can sit through a whole Parliament in the face of a protestation, whether you are innocent or whether you are guilty. If under the provisions proposed a few guilty men escape being petitioned against, and yet, on the other hand those petitioned against are brought to a speedy trial, and the result is actually attained of convicting those who deserve to be convicted, the amendment will be a good thing. Looking at it from the point of view of enforcement of the law, I think it is worth while to create conditions which shall assure the respondent that his case will be tried out promptly, and to actually secure prompt trial in a certain number of cases even though the law should operate to prevent the institution of a certain number of petitions upon which the petitioner gets a year or two to prove that the respondent, or somebody on his behalf, had hired a couple of cabs. As I say, the conception of the committee was that the great thing to be desired was that where there was actual guilt there should be prompt trial and also that measures should be enacted to prevent people, by collusion or combination, spinning out the contestation for a long period of time. It will be seen by the sections that follow that within fifteen days after service of that petition the respondent may file his answer, a copy of which is to be served upon the petitioner. Then, after a short delay, the parties ask for fixing the trial, and the court shall fix the time. If the parties do not so ask, then the court itself on the clerk's application shall fix the time. If the parties do not go on at that time, that will end the trial. So, every man will have to understand that in making a contestation, he has entered upon something which he must see through promptly if he is to secure his rights. To achieve that end, the respondent must be given notice promptly of what he is to meet, and it must be given in such form as will avoid surprise and ensure a fair trial. This is a point which the courts have to decide in a large number of cases. Under the election law as it stands the bill of particulars must be put in, and if the party objects that the allegations are not sufficiently particular or definite, the court must decide the point.

Mr. MACDONALD: If the court decides that the statement in the information is too vague, can the court void the proceedings upon that?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no provision here for a preliminary objection. As I understand it, this is the way the law would work out now—

Mr. MACDONALD: But could the respondent move to set aside the petition on account of the delay involved?

Mr. DOHERTY: To my mind he would not need to do that. The respondent asks for particulars. The court, let us say, decides that he is entitled to them. The petitioner does not give them. Then the court would naturally dismiss the petition. But suppose that the respondent says the charges are not particularized sufficiently to prevent surprise and secure a fair trial, and the court decides that the particulars in the petition are sufficient, then the case will go on. If the court is of opinion that the particulars are not sufficient, it may well refuse the evidence.

Mr. GERMAN: Does the minister intend that the matters included in the petition shall be the only matters intended for trial?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. GERMAN: Then, he must put a clause in this Bill forbidding the court to allow it to go further. Because these gentlemen who are put upon the Bench become exceedingly virtuous—though they may have been politicians before—and they will go far beyond what the minister expects and will allow the amendment of the petition until the trial comes on. That is the experience of every one of us. The petitioner comes forward and says: We have found new cases of corruption; broad, wide, strong cases; and we want to have an opportunity to prove them and to that end we wish to amend our petition. The court will allow that unless you put it into this Bill that they shall not allow it. And if you put that in the Bill you practically prevent petitions, for you cannot get the particulars of corruption in forty days as a rule, particularly against the shrewd politicians of the West.

Mr. DOHERTY: There might still be a fairly wide field of operation. There is no doubt that it is intended that the action shall set forth the causes upon which it rests.

Mr. GERMAN: And the court is supposed to stop at that?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think it is the habit of courts to allow amendments for the purpose of setting forth distinct new causes of action. In order that there shall be an "amendment" there must be something "amended." It does not "amend" a cause of action, to bring in a new cause of action. And you have to remember that we have here a law—and personally I do not think it is an objectionable law—which provides that these proceedings must be instituted within forty days. I hardly think that any court would conceive it to be within its rights or within its power of amendment to allow a party to come in and allege some absolutely new cause of action, any right of action based upon which is actually extinguished by prescription. I cannot conceive that a court would say to a petitioner: I am going to allow you to come in a year after the election and make your petition all over again, basing it on a new cause of action, though the law says that your petition should have been brought within forty days. I quite conceive that the courts may exercise much latitude with regard to amending things that are alleged, but I do not apprehend that they would allow the petition to be entirely remade or an entirely new cause to be alleged. I think that, at the very least, we can wait until the apprehensions of the hon. member in that regard have been justified by the results of the operation of this Act.

Mr. GERMAN: There would not be many petitions filed under the Controverted Elections Act if this were decided by the law.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think it would be better to have fewer petitions and more judgments. I think one may fairly say—let the blame be generally shared—that the large number of petitions, when we have contrasted with the number of judgments, when we do have any judgments at all, is in the nature of a public scandal, and is the best justification for trying to bring the law into a condition where a man will only be enabled to make a petition when he has distinct and concrete grounds for doing so.

Mr. FOWLER: Why should the hon. minister assume that the large number of persons charged with these election offences are guilty?

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not say the number of convictions; I said the number of judgments or decisions, favourable or unfavourable. What I point out as being the scandal is not that the persons against whom petitions are made are necessarily guilty, but that when we do have a large number of petitions we do have almost no decisions, in one sense or the other. When a petition is made it should imply that the man who makes it has some grounds for doing so. When the petition and the grounds upon which it is made are put forth, we should provide, as we endeavour to provide by the following sections, that a trial shall be brought on, and that if the parties will not bring on a trial, that shall be the end of the petition.

Mr. PROULX: Suppose that at the trial the respondent objects that the particulars given by the petitioner are insufficient, will the court have power to adjourn the hearing of the petition in order to enable the petitioner to give fuller particulars?

Mr. DOHERTY: That brings up a very large and very wide question. We are proposing now to make a law, and that law will, of course, have to be applied by the courts in accordance with the general rule that governs the power of the courts to allow an amendment of the petition or to allow an adjournment. The only answer that I can give is that the court would determine, according to the circumstances put before it, whether the justice of the case required that that should be done. The hon. gentleman has really asked me to place myself in the position of the court and to give one judgment to be applied to all possible cases; that I would not venture to do. It seems to me that the court would, in each particular case, have to determine whether the justice of the case required that the court should permit the adjournment, or permit, possibly, an amendment within the limits which I have just endeavoured to indicate to the hon. member for Welland. There would be cases, I presume, in which the court would think that while it would be a fair thing to give the defendant a more clear definition of what was to be anticipated, at the same time it could not properly be said the defendant was absolutely taken by surprise and that a fair trial was prevented by reason of the vagueness of the allegations of the petition. The necessity for determination of the result of this provision would arise accordingly as a petitioner offered evidence of particular acts on which he based his petition. The respondent would naturally, I suppose, if he saw any ground for it, urge that what was sought to be proved was not sufficiently particularized to lead him to expect evidence of facts of that kind.

Mr. PARDEE: Let us suppose that in the petition, bribery, impersonation, treating, and so on, are alleged. Was it the opinion of the committee that it would be sufficient for the petition to state that one or more of these things had been illegally committed by the candidate or his agent, or would it be necessary to say that the candidate or his agent treated John Brown or bribed William Smith, and so on? Would it be sufficient to make the general charge, as was formerly done in election petitions?

Mr. DOHERTY: In my judgment, the general charge of bribery would certainly not be sufficient. How far you would have to go in the matter of giving particulars would depend largely on the circumstances of each case. I do not think that you could lay it down as a general rule that because I am required by law sufficiently to particularize in order to prevent surprise, that necessarily means that I must name each particular voter to whom I allege that bribes were offered.

Mr. PARDEE: Why this change?

Mr. DOHERTY: This change is to provide that when I allege bribery, I shall give such circumstances surrounding it as in the judgment of the judge will prepare the respondent fairly to meet evidence of the facts as that evidence is offered to the court.

Mr. PARDEE: Only of specific facts under the petition.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: No others could go in.

Mr. DOHERTY: No others could go in, certainly. It is the ordinary rule, as I understand it, of every legal proceeding, that you are entitled to prove what you have alleged, and what you have alleged with sufficient particularity to enable your defendant, the man against whom you make your allegations, to go to the court called upon to expect proof of matters of that kind. But it certainly does not imply that in every case you must give the name of the man bribed.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Or the man who gave the bribe.

Mr. DOHERTY: Or the man who gave the bribe. To ask any man to stand up here and lay down a general rule saying what are sufficient particulars to enable a man not to be taken by surprise and to have a fair trial, is asking the impossible. But I may say that for a great number of years, day after day, I have heard men determining that question in particular cases and determining it, as it seemed to me, reasonably and fairly to both parties. I have heard instances where it was considered that names of people were necessary and others where it was not. In my own province we have worked out a perfectly rational method of dealing with these questions, still complying with the elementary rule that a man must state the grounds of his complaint with sufficient particularity to enable another man to have a fair trial upon it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: It might be wise, however, to go back to the old section, inasmuch as we have provided for facilitating the trial, that is in connection with the present provisions of the Act. Perhaps there would not be any great objection to restoring the old clause.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: You cannot do that if you stick to the first clause, that there is conclusive evidence.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On section 4—form of petition:

Mr. DOHERTY: It occurred to me that after the discussion on section 4, and having regard to the somewhat sharp division of opinion in regard to it, possibly it would not be an unwise course that we should let this section stand in the meantime and go on with the other sections of the Bill. I think that further examination may throw some light on this section. The same thing will really apply to section 5, as section 5 merely makes for a cross petition the same provision that section 4 makes for the petition itself. The questions involved would be substantially the same.

Sections 4 and 5 stand.

On section 6—how security deposit shall be made:

Mr. PROULX: Why would not an accepted cheque on a chartered bank be accepted as it would be accepted for the deposit in an election?

Mr. DOHERTY: The difference that is made by this amendment is to substitute the permissive for the imperative form that was contained in that section as it stood, and then, that being done and combining the effect of that with the effect of the next following clause, which I would ask my hon. friend to read, it produces the result that the receipt of the clerk of the court is made conclusive. He is permitted to accept the deposit in the different methods specified but his receipt is conclusive in any event as to the making of the deposit and as to its sufficiency. The hon. gentleman suggests the acceptance of an accepted cheque and there might be something to be said pro and con in that regard but at all events if the officer gave the receipt that the deposit had been made when he was merely taking an accepted cheque, although he would not be taking what is permitted to be taken, it would be conclusive, he having taken the responsibility. Whether the Act should expressly include an accepted cheque is perhaps open to some question because you may reduce it down then to the mere matter of a man being able to arrange with a bank to get a cheque accepted where he does not actually have the money. It might be that the party against whom the proceedings are undertaken would have the responsibility of the bank but there are some advantages in not expressly permitting a method that involves anything except the actual money.

Mr. PROULX: I thought it would be more convenient to submit an accepted cheque than the money. In Ontario we have to enter the protest with the registrar of the Court of Appeal in Toronto and we have to send the money there.

On section 9—sections 17, 18, 19 and 20 repealed; service and preliminary objections:

Mr. MACDONALD: With reference to section 19 providing that within fifteen days after service of a petition, the respondent may file with the clerk of the court a written answer to the petition, I would say that this clause is very general in regard to the nature of the answer to be filed. Is there any special provision giving to the judges power to make regulations as to the nature of the answer or as to what shall be deemed a sufficient answer? Suppose an answer was not sufficiently definite, or suppose counsel for petitioners said: This is no answer at all, it is not a denial with sufficient particularity of the acts which are alleged. They might say that the denial is too indefinite just as the answers in civil cases are frequently ruled out where counsel on the other side attack the pleadings on account of their not complying with some precedent which it is necessary they should comply with. What is the standard as to what a sufficient answer would be?

Mr. DOHERTY: The provision here is permissive to the party attacked to file a written answer if deemed proper. Assuming the clauses which stand to have been adopted, it would be open, as I understand it, to the respondent in a written answer to raise any question that he thought it was desirable to raise whether as to the sufficiency of the proceedings or the actual truth of the statements of fact. He is by this section permitted to file an answer and no restriction is placed upon the ground which he may invoke as against the petition, the idea of the Act being to reduce the whole thing to one trial. My hon. friend will observe that in the following section. 19a, the provision is that:

After the expiration of fifteen days after the service of the petition, whether an answer is filed or served or not, the petition shall be held at issue and the court may at any time thereafter, upon the application of either party, fix some convenient time and place for the trial of the petition.

Taking the two sections together, the purpose and effect is that within fifteen days it shall be optional with the party attacked to file such written answers as he may desire to the petition thus filed. Failing his doing that, it shall be assumed that issue is joined generally upon the petition. Assuming that the respondent wants to rest upon the ground of the insufficiency of the petition itself, either as not setting up something that amounts to an offence or as not sufficiently particularizing, he would be, as I understand it, at liberty to raise these grounds in that answer without prejudice to his making an answer also upon the statement of alleged facts as made in the petition. The idea is to reduce it down so that upon all the matters that may be raised there shall be just one trial, and that that trial shall be as expeditious as possible.

Mr. MACDONALD: Then there is no advantage in the respondent filing an answer for any purpose whatever, because he would have available to him at the trial all matters of defence which he might assert whether he files an answer or not. His objections as to the insufficiency of the petition or any irregularities can be raised at the trial to the same effect, whether he has filed an answer or whether he has not.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think that would be the practical result, but we give him the option if he sees any advantage in it.

Mr. PROULX: I suppose in his answer he could admit some of the allegations of the petition, and if he did the petitioner need not bring his witnesses to court.

Mr. DOHERTY: He could make admissions if he chose. We have a provision of the law later dealing with the effect of admissions when they are made.

Mr. MORPHY: Do I understand the effect of the answer of the minister to be that, where a man did not answer, he could at the trial set out anything he might set out upon the preliminary objections?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, because under this Act there is no provision made for the preliminary objections.

Mr. MORPHY: It seems to me that this legislation will have the effect of bringing into play a series of objections at the trial, when the judges on the rota are there to hear the action, when probably one hundred witnesses are gathered, and when possibly counsel may be brought from a distance, so that we are out of the frying-pan into the fire. The air will not be cleared by preliminary objections, and the expense will be enormous of having to fight out at the trial what otherwise would have been settled on a chamber application. This would possibly cause witnesses and counsel and judges to be detained from day to day. The value of this change looks to me to be very doubtful.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no doubt there might be a situation, under certain circumstances, in which the inconveniences which the hon. gentleman suggests might arise. But what we are to ask ourselves is, whether the danger of that and the inconveniences which might result in some cases from that, are greater or less than the undesirable consequences which experience has demonstrated to result from the present provisions of the law, which expressly provide for the making of preliminary exceptions. I might point out that where the party would feel that he had statutory grounds to meet the petition, grounds of insufficiency in one respect or another, he might, in the exercise of his own judgment, make up his mind to rely upon that and avoid the necessity of bringing witnesses, or, the court might order an adjournment. I fancy that is a power which the court would probably feel justified in exercising, in the event of objections in the nature of preliminary objections being taken, which have upon their face the appearance of substantiality sufficient to justify the party who raised them seriously relying upon them. The court might, under these circumstances, if it considered that justice required it, order adjournment to more sufficiently deal with the matter on its merits. We have to rely upon the court for that. As to the expense which the petitioner might go to in bringing witnesses who might prove useless because the petition failed upon some ground of objection as to its sufficiency, it is true that would be an unfortunate thing for him, but it was for him to see to it that he made a sufficient petition. If the court determines it is not entitled to go into the merits of the case because of insufficiency, then what the petitioner suffers is the result of his own fault. No doubt, if we could obviate the substantial failures of justice which have resulted from the system of providing specially for preliminary objections, and also avoid the possibility of the suggested inconveniences that would be the better system. The members of the committee were not blind to the inconveniences which have been suggested, but they considered that the number of cases in which these inconveniences would arise, and the gravity of these inconveniences even assuming that they did arise, did not compensate for the very serious obstacles towards doing substantial justice which practice has proved to result from the system under which provision is specially made for the making of preliminary objections and of special trials on these objections.

On new section 20—notice of admission:

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does that give the court power to say it will not hear witnesses? I would be somewhat reluctant to give the court that power, because with the highest respect for the judiciary, I think there are some judges who would be very glad to exercise it, and who would refuse to hear witnesses.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: They have that power now.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think there have been occasions when the courts have decided that once they have before them, by admission or otherwise, sufficient evidence to justify a judgment maintaining the petition, they have even questioned whether they have any right to go on and make further inquiries. The purpose of this section is not to extend any power on the part of the court to curtail evidence, but to make it quite clear that, notwithstanding the making of admissions, the court may decline to adjudicate simply upon the record constituted by the allegations and the admissions, and may require further inquiry. The purpose is to make it perfectly clear that the court shall have jurisdiction to go on to further inquiries, although the matter before it would justify a judgment.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is another phase of the situation to be considered. Suppose a party comes in and admits bribery by agents or some other contravention of the law which would make the election void, and the petitioner says, "I am perfectly satisfied;" all that is wanted is the determination of the court upon the matter, so that the costs may be apportioned. Suppose the court decides to go on, can it impose costs upon the unfortunate petitioner, if the result of the further inquiry should be valueless?

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The question of costs is dealt with.

Mr. MACDONALD: I know that the respondent is not liable for costs if he files the admissions. What I am pointing out is this: supposing the judges should take it into their heads to go on and say: "We are going to have a roving commission," such as my hon. friend from St. John suggests, and supposing the petitioner says: "I am satisfied with the acknowledgement of the respondent," it is questionable whether under this Bill it should be left in the hands of judges further to impose costs upon a petitioner if no particular advantage is to be gained by that inquiry.

Mr. DOHERTY: So far as the respondent is concerned, if he has made admissions under the first paragraph of section 20, and if any evidence is taken in regard to the matters admitted he shall not be held liable for any costs incurred on account of that evidence, unless the result is to produce a conviction against himself of some corrupt act, in which case the court has power to order him to pay costs. As regards the petitioner who says that he is satisfied and will not proceed, we have no special provision in this Bill with regard to the costs; but I might point out, as I said a moment ago in answer to the hon. member for St. John, that the purpose of this enactment is to make it perfectly clear that the court has jurisdiction to go on, notwithstanding admissions sufficient to justify the maintenance of the petition. As regards the case where both the petitioner and the respondent decline to provide any further material upon which the court can go on, we gave a good deal of consideration to the question whether we should provide machinery by which the court could further go on, and, after a great deal of consideration and of different suggestions, we did not find that we could work out any practical method of doing that. So that I think the effect of this section in practice, as in its intention, goes really no further than to make it quite clear that, notwithstanding there being sufficient upon the record, the courts ought to have jurisdiction to go on with a further inquiry. In order that that should be effectually carried out in practice, it would be necessary that one of the parties should concern himself with having it carried out.

Mr. MACDONALD: This question of amending the Controverted Dominion Elections Act along the line of preparing for an independent investigation into all the circumstances surrounding a particular election has been under consideration on previous occasions. I recall some years ago, when I was a young member of this House, that a special committee considered the question of providing for the appointment of an independent tribunal to hold an investigation in any event at the request of a certain number of people in the constituency.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: A public prosecutor.

Mr. MACDONALD: Yes, something of that kind. We must not forget the power of dealing with controverted elections by the judiciary of this country is a power delegated by this House. Not a great number of years ago both in England and Canada the task of determining the validity of an election of a member to the House was a matter to be determined by a committee of the House. We determined to commit that task to the judiciary, and we have followed that course so far. The task which the judge assumed was the task of reporting to the Speaker of the House whether or not the validity of the election of a certain hon. member which had been called in question had been determined in one way or the other. The giving of this extra jurisdiction to the judge, over and above the determination of the simple issue whether or not a member has been validly returned, opens the door to pretty wide responsibility, as suggested by my hon. friend. It seems to me that the Bill should go further and provide for some person assuming the responsibility, because the man who may be a petitioner against any hon. member may have only one object in view, that is, the unseating of the hon. member. Once his task is fulfilled, that is all he is interested in, and we can well conceive of cases in which a petitioner through his counsel will intimate to the judge that he is perfectly satisfied. We all know the developments of human nature in regard to these matters, and we cannot eliminate the human element in considering the way in which these things work out. If the judges are to have power over and above the attitude of either of the contesting parties to hold an independent investigation, there ought to be some rule to limit that power.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: It is limited to the allegations to the judge.

Mr. DOHERTY: As my hon. friend says, it is limited to the allegations before the judge, and moreover it is well to bear in mind that the petitioner, when he institutes the proceeding, although he may set it in motion for reasons of his own, for example, perhaps, to bring it to a particular end, sets in motion a proceeding in which at least the people of the constituency concerned have a direct and material interest. He is so little the master of the proceeding that under conditions already existing, if he drops it, some one else may come in and take it up. He has set on foot a proceeding in which the general public are interested, and he has done so because he has taken the responsibility of alleging certain things to be facts. I do not think he has any very serious ground of complaint if at the time he says, I do not want to go on any more, the court says to him: But you have undertaken to make these very serious statements which the public is interested in having cleared up. You have got the court here, you have got the respondent here, you have the proceedings in motion; and I, the court, am not going to shut my eyes to these things; if these things are true—and you have taken the responsibility of saying that they are true—then it is important that their truth should be established. I do not see what ground of complaint a petitioner could have that he is not allowed to take into his own hands absolutely the extent to which this inquiry, in which the whole public is interested, shall be carried. He might complain if it were suggested that the judge should go outside the things he, the petitioner, has alleged; but so long as the judge keeps himself, as he is bound to do within the things alleged, I cannot see that the petitioner has any serious ground of complaint.

I think I ought to add to the observation I made a few moments ago. I did not quite accurately describe the effect of the section. It is not so absolutely restricted as my expression would convey. As will be noticed power is given to require the summoning of such witnesses, the taking of such evidence and the production of such papers as to the court may seem requisite or desirable. If the petitioner has taken the responsibility of making the most grave accusations, I think there should be power such as is given under this section to go into the matter even to the extent provided for. I do not think it unfair or unjust to the petitioner that if the court deems the matters as brought before it sufficiently serious for carefuly inquiry, those matters should be gone into.

Mr. MACDONALD: Then the minister ought to add some supplementary words empowering the court to make direction as to the distribution of the costs of the proceedings, otherwise how is the matter to be determined? Suppose the additional inquiry be futile, ought the costs of it to fall upon the petitioner?

Mr. DOHERTY: There would be power to deal with that as with the question of costs generally. If the result shows that the respondent is guilty of other corrupt acts than those admitted, that fact would naturally be a determining factor in the question of costs. But if the result is that the petitioner fails to make good his statements—which I assume to be serious, because the court would not investigate other than serious statements—I think there would be no injustice if the court laid the costs upon him. That is a power, which, I have no doubt, judges will exercise with great discretion. The real purpose, as I have said, is to put it within the power of the court, where facts are alleged and are apparently being suppressed, to inquire into those matters.

On section 10:

Section 22 is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"2. If at any time, upon an ex parte application of either the petitioner or the respondent, it appears to the court that, in the interests of justice, it is desirable that the examination of any witness should be proceeded with forthwith, the court may grant an order for the examination of such witness, and the provisions of sections twenty-three, to thirty, both inclusive, shall, so far as applicable, apply to such witness, his examination and evidence."

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This is a very wide expression. Does this provide for cases of absence?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, possibly cases of absence. There are special considerations, it seemed to the committee, which justified giving the court a wide power for the examination of witnesses. What we have in mind is to make a provision under which it would be possible for the court to order the immediate examination of any person believed to be able to give testimony bearing upon the petition. We have perhaps, specially in mind the case that might occur because of the fact that we require particulars to be given in the petition. It was suggested as an objection to our requiring particulars to be given that the respondent, being made aware of the particular things that were in view, might cause to be spirited away witnesses in a position to establish the facts. This clause was intended in a special way to protect the petitioner against that condition of affairs. Since the petitioner has the obligation imposed upon him by section 4, if that be adopted, to set forth in an intelligible manner the ground on which he relies, if he can satisfy the judge that there is danger that immediately upon that knowledge becoming available, efforts will be made to get witnesses out of the way, he should be enabled to have the witnesses summoned and examined. And it seemed to us that not only in that instance, but speaking generally, wherever circumstances satisfy the judge that the interests of justice require an immediate examination of witnesses, he should have authority to make that examination. There are sections in the present law which deal in a specific way with cases of absent witnesses. There are section 21 which deals with the parties to the petition; section 22 which deals with the person who was the candidate; and sections 23 and 24 which deal with the form of examining the classes of persons referred to. These sections are made applicable to the class of cases we are now dealing with. There is also another provision, section 45, with regard to special examination during the trial. What we are trying to do is to generalize these provisions with regard to particular persons and particular cases and to create a power in the judge under which, if either party can satisfy him that the interests of justice require it, immediate examination may be ordered of any person able to give testimony bearing upon the petition. And, as I have stated, we had especially in mind the consequence that might result from our provision requiring particulars in the petition. We thought that this would be an effective method of obviating one very serious objection that might be made to the requirements proposed to be made by section 4.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The right hon. leader of the Opposition has stated that "in the interests of justice" is a very broad term, in regard to which judges may differ. Why not provide that where it is made to appear to the court by affidavit that the evidence of a witness materially affecting the trial may be obtained, an examination may be ordered, so that where a party takes the responsibility of swearing that, according to his belief, a witness may be able to discover material evidence, an examination of that witness may take place.

Mr. DOHERTY: The suggestion made tends to restrict, not to enlarge the conditions respecting such examinations. We did consider trying to specify the particular reasons, but the conclusion reached was that while by doing that we might make it perfectly clear that under certain conditions this might be done, if we failed to foresee all the conditions in which the interests of justice might require it, we would leave an uncovered case. I cannot quite grasp the idea that any judge would suppose that the interests of justice should require the examination of a witness unless it were shown to him that there was ground to believe that that witness could give testimony material to the matter alleged, or unless it were shown to him that there was reason to apprehend that that witness might not be available at the trial or that there was danger of the witness being tampered with. It seemed to us that the wisest course was to give to the judge power to provide for the examination of a witness wherever the interests of justice require it, and we felt confident that the court would take that to mean the interests of justice in connection with the particular case under consideration. I do not know whether the hon. member apprehends that under this provision any judge may take unto himself power to have a witness examined with regard to some matter outside of the case. If he thinks there is any danger of that, it may be well to put in appropriate words to make the provision clear, but I think that it is wiser for us not to try to put down in black and white all the possible combinations of circumstances under which the interests of justice may require that examination.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What relation has this proposed provision to section 45, subsection 1, of the Act, which provides that a witness intending to leave Canada may be examined by order of the court, made on notice of the parties? This proposed section provides that any witness may be examined at any time under order of the court, made upon ex parte application. What I desire to suggest is, that if a witness desires to leave Canada, under this section an ex parte application may be made to the court for his examination, if it is thought to be in the interests of justice that he should be examined in order that his testimony may be available at the trial.

Mr. DOHERTY: It seemed to the committee that the provisions of section 45 are applicable only to examination during the trial.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I would hardly have supposed that, because it would hardly be presumed that a witness who had been duly subpoenaed would leave Canada during the course of a trial. I would be inclined, subject to the view of the committee, to interpret section 45 as having general application. Of course, if the view which the committee takes is correct, there is no inconsistency or over-lapping, but if the view should prevail that section 45 is of general effect, there would be an inconsistency between it and the proposed provision of this section.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to the fact that the words "in the interests of justice" are very wide, not only in respect of election trials, but of other trials as well. If there is reason to believe that a material witness will not be present at the trial, application can be made to have that witness examined; that is a matter of common law. But, in inserting the words "in the interests of common justice," what case did the committee have in contemplation? If a witness is to be present at the trial, I cannot conceive how justice can be served by his being examined before the trial takes place.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was considering the same question myself, and I assumed that the committee must have had in mind the idea of discovery.

Mr. DOHERTY: It was represented that our requirement of giving particulars was putting the party making the allegation in the unfair position that his opponent would know from the outset just what he was relying upon and would have full opportunity, between the filing of the petition and the coming on of the trial, of resorting to whatever means his conscience might permit to influence or to get at the people who could give the testimony. That seemed to us to be an objection certainly deserving of consideration. We thought that this provision would enable the judge, wherever either of the parties could satisfy him that there was danger of anything of that kind, that the interest of justice required an immediate examination to prevent it, to order that examination. There are other methods by which a man may be deprived of his testimony than the absence of the witnesses upon whom he relies. I may say in that connection that as a result of the observations that have been made I think it probably would be a wise provision to require that where any witness had been so examined under an order of this kind, if procurable, he should again be brought forward at the trial and offered for further examination if that was desired. But the real purpose of this provision was to create a situation where at any stage, even a day after the lodging of the petition, if the petitioner can make it clear to the court that there is great danger that once his petition becomes known to the adversary means may be found to deprive him of his evidence by any method, that he may be authorized at once to examine such people as he can show, prima facie, can give material evidence upon the petition. That is what we had in view in using these general expressions, going beyond the provision which had regard to people who may be absent from Canada. As regards the time within which this may be done, I do not think we want to be too absolute in saying that the provision in section 45 applies only to the time of the trial. But there seemed to us, at all events as regards time, that there might be a possible argument made in support of that proposition. In the first place, we find in sections 21 and 22, the sections that deal with the examination of parties to the petition or of the person who may be a candidate, that that examination can only be made after issue is joined. Then we have section 45, which is placed in the subdivision of the statute which is headed " Trial of Petition;" and I think I would be correct in saying that all of the other provisions deal with proceedings at the trial. The section provides:

> If it is made to appear to the court or trial judges that any witness intends to leave Canada and will not attend the trial—

Then, on application to the court, the court may grant an order for the examination of such witness. I am not prepared to say nor do I think the committee meant to commit itself to the proposition that this section only applies during the trial; but at all events it seems susceptible to argument that this section applies only to the trial and that it further limits the rights to examination after issue joined. It seemed to us that there was no provision in the statute which could clearly be interpreted as entitling one to have an examination at any time after the filing of the petition; and, with regard to the time, we thought, if we were to make this an effective method of meeting the circumstances that might arise, that it should be made clear that the examination could be at any time and further that it might be an examination of persons other than the parties to the petition and other than a person who was about to leave Canada.

4 p.m.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If I correctly apprehend my hon. friend, the reason for the amendment of the existing rule is that at present there is the ordinary provision for the examination of a witness who may possibly not be present at the trial. I understand the new provision amounts to this, that either party to the suit may go to the judge and represent to him that there is, for instance, a charge of bribery and that unless the party who ought to have the benefit of this witness, either for or against the petition, has the privilege of at once examining him, he has reason to fear that the witness may be tampered with or that for some other reason his evidence at the trial would not be as unbiased and as genuine as it would be if it were at once taken. I do not undertake to say that the provision should not be adopted, but it is certainly a novel proposition and requires reflection. If we want to have fair and speedy trials, I am not prepared to say that the provision should not be found in the Bill, but my hon. friend will agree that it will be absolutely novel, contrary to anything that we know of, and I think it requires more consideration than we have been able to give it up to the present time.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why not make the section broad enough to allow either party to bring up a witness for examination before the trial, either before or after issue is joined? We profess—and I trust we are all sincere—that we want to bring out the truth in these election petitions, to secure speedy judgment and to unseat or disqualify any candidate who has been guilty, by himself or his agents, of corrupt practices. Why not give the fullest opportunity to get at all the facts, and why not provide that at any time after the petition is served, upon ex parte application, the petitioner or respondent, upon affidavit stating that in the belief of the deponent material facts may be disclosed by an examination of such and such a party, the deponent shall be entitled to have the party brought up and examined?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is what we meant to do.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend does not do it. He throws the burden upon the petitioner or respondent of satisfying the judge that it is in the interest of justice that he should do that. In 99 cases out of 100 the judges would fail to apprehend how it would be in the interest of justice to examine a witness before the trial; they would fail to apprehend that the mere fact that there is danger of a witness being tampered with is a reason for examining him and disclosing what he knows. The judge might think he would be more apt to be tampered with after he had disclosed under oath what he had to say than before. He would be more apt to be removed out of the country. Why not make it broad enough so that upon affidavit any man can be examined?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Ordinary discovery.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: There is an obvious and very fair answer to the hon. member for St. John. He knows better than I that the first consideration which affects the mind of a judge is the conduct of a witness in the witness box. In drawing this section in the committee we did not desire to deprive the court of the benefit of seeing the witnesses except in extreme cases, and these extreme cases I think are met by the further amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice, namely, that if and when the trial comes on the witness that has been examined is still in the country and can be examined, he should, notwithstanding the fact that he has given his testimony, be brought before the court and give his testimony in the presence of the judges, who are thus able to see his demeanour and derive the advantage that one always gets from observing the actual manner in which the witness has given his testimony.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My suggestion would not alter that principle at all; it would be rather an examination for discovery.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend knows better than I do that it is at variance with well recognized principles of procedure that all witnesses should be examined for discovery. All witnesses should be examined in court except in the case of the plaintiff and defendant, or as in this case, the petitioner and respondent who may be examined for discovery, or except in the case of a witness who may want to leave the country and who may be examined de bene esse. My hon. friend is aware of the fact that many difficulties have been experienced in cases of this kind. Men get out of the country as soon as they find their names in an election petition. They take enforced vacations at the expense of their friends. Sometimes they go to Europe and sometimes they have been known to go to the neighbouring republic and stay away for six months. We have no election petitions in our country, and therefore I can speak on this subject with all the more freedom.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Nor in the county from which the hon. gentleman comes.

Mr. BENNETT: They always had a protest, but no trial.

Mr. PUGSLEY: They never have any protest in Northumberland.

Mr. BENNETT: I fancy that is because of the extreme purity with which elections are conducted there, or it may be the facility with which men change sides, having regard to the history of that county. There is something called the Northumberland deal that my hon. friend remembers and that possibly illustrates the point. What influenced the committee was solely this, that in order if possible to perpetuate the testimony of a necessary witness up to the time of the trial when he himself could not be there to give his evidence, an opportunity should be afforded of taking his testimony, and I agree with the Minister of Justice that this should be done. We should at once permit an ex parte application to be made to the judge, have a subpoena issued and have the witness' testimony taken down, due notice being given to the respondent, or the petitioner, as the case may be, and thus have the evidence perpetuated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is the application to the judge to be made as a matter of course or for cause?

Mr. BENNETT: That brings up a question that engaged the attention of the committee: what are the reasons for providing an extraordinary procedure of this kind? About that we had many a discussion. One hon. gentleman urged this and another urged that, but the final conclusion we came to was that the words that now appear in the section, "in the interests of justice," should be inserted. Instead of adopting the old language of the Judicature Act, namely, "for the proper conduct of the trial," we have said, "in the interests of justice". That means that the party making the application to the judge or court will do so believing that it is in the interests of justice, using that word in its broad sense, that the testimony of a particular witness should be taken at once. You cannot define all the cases and, since you cannot define them, what words are you going to use which will cover all of the cases better than the words "in the interest of justice"? The expression, "the proper conduct of the trial," does not comprehend all the cases which would come within the term, "in the interest of justice". The determination of the question as to which particular case comes within the definition is left to judicial discretion. I think we can fairly trust the exercise of so extraordinary a power to the discretion of the court as is done under the English Judicature Act which has almost a similar provision. You can take immediate proceedings for the purpose of obtaining the testimony of a witness but the testimony cannot be used at the trial unless it appears that the witness is dead or is out of the country. This whole code approximates closely to the civil code. Examination for discovery, examination de bene esse, examination of witnesses about to leave the country and all that sort of thing are provided for. The committee were not particularly wedded to the words "in the interest of justice" but no other words were suggested which were sufficiently comprehensive to meet every condition that might arise.

Mr. GERMAN: My hon. friend the Minister of Justice can see—and I apprehend that is the principle or rule of this subsection—that this examination can take place even before the petition is served or filed?

Mr. DOHERTY: Not before it is filed, for then there is no proceeding.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

Mr. GERMAN: Well, then, before it is served. There is no solicitor on the record to appear on behalf of the respondent.

Mr. DOHERTY: The application may be made at once. There is a provision that this examination must be had after notice to the party or his counsel. The application would be made at once so that the order could issue for the examination of the witness.

Mr. GERMAN: The order is issued for the examination, but who is to take the responsibility of appearing on the examination? There is no respondent to serve, and there is no solicitor on the record to appear for the respondent. The petitioner can file his petition, he makes an ex parte application, and gets an order for one witness—not one, but fifty, perhaps. It may be a personal charge of corruption, it may be a charge of tampering with an election, of exercising undue influence upon an elector; and suppose you have fifty charges of that kind the petitioner could make application for the subpoenaing of fifty men, get an order, examine the whole fifty, and you have the whole case ready for trial before the respondent has been served or has had an opportunity of taking any action in the matter.

Mr. DOHERTY: The applicant might make his application, but he could not get this order without giving notice to the party, and he and his counsel would be entitled to be present at the examination. All he can do is to get his order, but he cannot proceed with it without notifying the other party—either himself or his solicitor.

Mr. GERMAN: Would it not be easy to spirit away a witness just as soon as the respondent knows which witnesses are to be examined? The witnesses are not notified. Application is made for the examination of ten or twenty witnesses, and the applicant gets his order. Is it a very difficult matter for these witnesses to be spirited away before they can be served? How are you going to advance the interests of justice there?

Mr. DOHERTY: The order may be made and at once served on the witness.

Mr. GERMAN: It cannot be served the same day.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will admit that we do not pretend that we have been able to devise a cast iron arrangement which will absolutely prevent the possibility of it being evaded, but we think we have provided a method which, while it may not reach some cases, will reach a great many. What the hon. gentleman has said is precisely what demonstrates the wisdom of our making a provision that this order should be made only when the judge thinks it is desirable. I understand the objection from the hon. gentleman to be that this is not restricted enough, whereas, the objection of the right hon. leader of the Opposition is that it is too wide. I am quite ready to admit that it is an innovation in the wide scope it gives for this sort of exceptional examination, but just because it is that I fail to see the force of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, which is in reality that we ought to throw it wide open without any reference as to whether anybody can satisfy any judge that there is occasion for it, and that we should allow them to subpœna everybody of their own motion and examine them for discovery. I cannot quite grasp the necessity of doing that. I share the apprehension of the right hon. gentleman that this would be extending the thing too far, and from that point of view I believe we should retain the check of requiring the judge to be satisfied that there is occasion for resorting to this exceptional procedure. If we could find words which would more closely define occasions when this power should be exercised, and not unduly restrict the power of the judge, I should be very happy to incorporate them in the section. The committee did not put this forward as being an infallible conclusion or one that is not open to consideration, but after having threshed out a great many of the objections which have been raised here, we thought that the words in the Bill expressed the idea as well as we were capable of expressing it. It certainly did not occur to us that it would be desirable to provide for a general examination on discovery of everybody, at the instance of either party.

Mr. GERMAN: This examination cannot certainly take place before a judge, because the witnesses could not be taken to Osgoode Hall to be examined. They would be examined in the county in which they reside, before the local registrar of the court. The first thing that would have to be done after the order was issued, would be to file the order with the local registrar where the trial would take place, and then there would have to be an appointment to examine one witness, or as many witnesses as the petitioner or respondent saw fit to examine. That would take some days, and then there would have to be a number of days before the witnesses could be subpœnaed. How are you therefore to prevent the spiriting away of witnesses and the instruction of witnesses? I have no serious objection to the section, because what will be sauce for the goose will be sauce for the gander, but I submit that the minister is placing on the statute book a law which eventually will be found to be unworkable. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) said it corresponds with the English procedure but it does not correspond with the English procedure any more closely than it corresponds with the Canadian procedure in the examination of witnesses de bene esse. I believe that under the present Controverted Elections Act you can do all that is sought to be done here.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: No.

Mr. GERMAN: I think that under section 45, if you can convince a judge that it is necessary to perpetuate the evidence of a witness for use at the trial, you can get an order for the examination of that witness, but you are going beyond that in this case. I am strongly of the opinion that you are doing something which will be regretted even by the members of the committee who reported this Bill to the House. I do not care particularly one way or the other; if the minister is prepared to take the responsibility, he can do so.

Mr. BURNHAM: Has the minister in any way taken into consideration what I ventured to urge before the members of the committee when they required me to appear before them? The misconduct of people during an election is like any other misconduct, and public opinion is the eventual arbiter in all these things. If a man gets drunk, you arrest him, and you give the evidence and the case is disposed of; and people come to the conclusion either that the man is a disorderly character or that an injustice has been done him, because, being more or less familiar with the evidence, they are capable of forming an opinion. If misconduct in the conduct of an election takes place, the culprit should be brought up in court for conspiring with others against the public weal, by giving or accepting a bribe, and on evidence being given, the magistrate should dispose of the case. That would not of itself void any election, but it would have a tremendous effect upon the election; and if, in the course of time, some of these people were brought into the police court, and it were found that this sort of thing was going on, by the finding of the magistrate, the effect on the public would be so tremendous—assuming that the public care about it at all—that the candidate whose agents were acting in that way would stop it all, or else the candidate would certainly be defeated at the polls. I am thoroughly convinced, from bitter experience, that the colossal undertaking of an election petition is so serious and expensive a business, and so likely to go off, that it is almost impossible to proceed with a protest. At the trial of the election petition your expenses are about $300 or possibly $500 a day, putting it mildly. You say So-and-so is to be called as a witness at two o'clock, and two o'clock comes and he is not there. It is said, "Oh, he is ill," and a doctor gives a certificate to the effect that he cannot appear. What are you going to do? You stop the trial. The next day the same thing occurs—he cannot appear. There is an important witness gone, perhaps important witnesses gone. The bottom is knocked out of the whole case; whereas if you could arrest the culprits during the course of an election, if you could watch them and take them by the scruff of the neck to the police court and say: "Here is a man corrupting the people," and you prove it, you can have him fined a dollar or sent down for ten days, if you like. As long as the people know that corrupt practices are going on, they will hold that candidate more or less responsible. It is quite possible that the candidate is not the man really liable for the conduct of his agent; but the general tenor of the whole election contest is made quite plain. The people know the history of these men quite well, because men are not picked up at a moment's notice for the purpose of carrying out all sorts of wrong-doing at an election. They are well known; they are usually experienced; and if they are properly watched and the opportunity is given, you can break up any system of corruption in a very few days; but if such men can sail around and have their headquarters at hotels and live like prize-fighters, and enjoy themselves thoroughly and be absolutely free while they are perpetrating all sorts of wrongs of this description, all they need to do is to clear out immediately after the election is over; and where they are no one knows: the deed is done, the public is defied. In the other case, that is not so. If they had the opportunity, policemen would simply say to these men: "You are wanted in here; give an account of yourself; what are you doing?" You do that with all sorts of fakirs; you do it with people who cannot give an account of themselves; you do it with drunkards and people who commit misdemeanours of various sorts; but in the conduct of an election, which concerns the public weal more than anything else, you omit it; you do not allow it. Surely some simple device of this description might be added to the other machinery which would enable people desirous of breaking corrupt practices to do it in time, and not have to spend thousands and tens of thousands of dollars on a trial which consists partly of a contest between lawyers to defeat the ends of justice and of witnesses who desire to escape giving testimony.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There are no doubt many crudities, apparent or real, in the Bill now before the committee. The truth is that no committee can within a limited period of time draft amendments to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act which will not be found imperfect. It should be the work of capable men for many months, perhaps a year or more, to revise this Act successfully. As a matter of fact, the committee engaged in revising the Dominion Controverted Elections Act practically gets no assistance whatever from the officers of the Crown or the Department of Justice. We have the assistance of parliamentary counsel, but their time is divided up on account of their being engaged in other duties, and the result is that any drafting is very liable to be imperfect. I am very much impressed with the objection made to this section by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). I do not think that any member of the committee ever expected that this section would not meet with some very substantial opposition from members of the House when placed before it for consideration and review.

Section 45 of the Bill was intended to enable the examination of a witness upon notice, where it was abundantly clear that he intended to leave Canada, and that either the respondent or the petitioner were desirous of having his evidence taken. It may be remembered that in section 3 of the Bill, which defines the form of the petition, it is provided that the complaint shall be set out with some particularity. Just how far that should go, we are not at all clear, and we are agreed that that section of the Bill should remain over for the present.

Section 10, which we are now considering, was inserted just because there was an amendment provided by section 4 in respect to the form of the petition. Some of the members of the committee thought that, inasmuch as the petitioner was compelled to set forth in his petition with some particularity the details of his complaint, he ought to have some opportunity in some way or other of examining the witnesses before the trial so as to circumvent the very usual practice of having witnesses leave the jurisdiction of the court. Inasmuch as we have passed over section 4 for consideration, I would suggest that we let this section stand, because if section 4 is changed we may find it quite easy to remove the objections which have been urged against this section. I must admit the objections are fairly substantial, and I am not sure that they have been well answered so far.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: The great difficulty in proceeding with an election trial is to get the material witnesses. They are spirited away by some means or other, and the ends of justice are thwarted. How to prevent that is a matter for the lawyers to decide, but tnere is worse than that. At election times there are brought in from other countries, for example from the United States, men who have been Canadian citizens or who are perhaps still Canadian citizens, but who are employed in the United States and who can leave conveniently a day or two after the election is over. They come to Canada for the purpose of doing an illegal or highly improper act. How can such men be detained in the country and brought to trial? I cannot suggest any method; that will be for judicial minds to decide. If an application could be made under oath to a judge by some responsible, reputable citizen or by one of the candidates who is aware of conduct of that kind being done, whereby those men could be detained in the country or their evidence got in some way much good would result. That in my judgment would add very materially to having justice done.

Mr. DOHERTY: As regards what the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., says, this section possibly does not go very far to detain such a witness; but it would give some assistance in so far as it would at least make it possible for any person to make a petition at as early a date as he pleased, and thereupon to obtain an order to make such witness appear on some day, so that if the witness did not do so, he could be punished for contempt of court. But unless the proposition itself will meet with the approval of the House, there would be no useful purpose in our pressing for more effective means to enforce it.

With regard to the observation of my hon. friend from West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), I would point out that he is under a false impression if he supposes that there is at present no method of punishing unlawful practices at elections other than by election petition. If he refers to the Dominion Elections Act, he will find quite a number of provisions providing penalties either by actions instituted to recover them, by indictment before the criminal court or by summary prosecution. I have not all these before me, but I might refer to some of them. For instance, power is conferred upon the deputy returning officer to constitute constables with authority to arrest people who are guilty of unlawful practices. I admit that in these matters our law is susceptible of improvement, but it is not correct to say that there is no provision for prosecution before the criminal courts for unlawful practices at elections. The committee dealing with these two items were strongly impressed with the view that what was a lacking in the Dominion Elections Act was not so much the creation of offences and the imposing of penalties, but rather an effective instrument of enforcement. What we are trying now to deal with is a measure providing a method by which you can rectify the wrong done in the return of the wrong man. But in the Dominion Elections Act there are provisions for the punishment in the manner I have indicated of those guilty of unlawful acts at elections.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is there anything other than by indictment?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is provision for action for penalties and also for trial for summary conviction. It would take a long time to read all these provisions, but I might give my hon. friend some references. Under the heading " Corrupt practices and other illegal acts," sections 265 and following define the corrupt practices and prescribe penalties; and under 284 and following are provisions for the enforcement of these penalties. These are in addition to the provision respecting indictable offences and offences made punishable on summary conviction. The particular sections dealing with indictable offences, I have not under my hand, but I know that there are such provisions. As to the suggestion of the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean), there is no doubt that this section is affected very much by what is done with regard to sections 4 and 5. We of the committee regarded this Bill as one whose sections completed each other and provided a more effective method of trying election petitions. No doubt most of the sections are so interdependent that one can hardly be considered apart from the rest. Yet there is more immediate connection between this section and sections 4 and 5 than between the others. Therefore, I have no objection to adopt the hon. member's suggestion and allow this section to stand until we come to deal finally with sections 4 and 5.

On section 11—place of trial; trial to proceed until all evidence taken:

Mr. GERMAN: The suggestion was made before lunch: if the respondent admits liability and the petitioner is content with that, who will supply the witnesses to go on with other cases?

Mr. DOHERTY: The section does not purport to provide a method by which they can supply them. But it does provide:

> The trial judges shall proceed with the trial until all the evidence relevant to the particulars filed in the case has been heard, notwithstanding any admission on the part of the respondent of corrupt or illegal practices sufficient to void the election, and notwithstanding that in the opinion of the court enough evidence has been heard to void the election.

This is another provision inserted to meet the possible suggestion that the court is without power to go on after enough has been established by admission or evidence to void the election.

Mr. GERMAN: Why not say that the court "may" proceed, instead of "shall" proceed?

Mr. DOHERTY: We make it the court's duty. If, notwithstanding the admission of the respondent, notwithstanding there being enough proof to void the election, the petitioner wants to go on to ventilate other cases of bribery, we want it to be made the duty of the judge to go on and deal with these matters, if they are covered by the petition.

Mr. GERMAN: Suppose he does not want to go on?

Mr. DOHERTY: All we have said is that the judge shall proceed with the trial until all the evidence relative to the particulars filed in the case has been heard. If everybody stopped bringing in evidence, the court would not be able to hear any more; we have said that they shall go on until all the evidence is heard.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I had a good deal of experience in the trial of election petitions many years ago, and the course usually adopted was this: after the petitioner had put in his evidence and the judges had come to the conclusion, upon that evidence and upon any that the respondent had adduced in regard to the several charges made, that enough evidence had been submitted to justify the voidance of the election, he usually asked the petitioner whether or not he desired to proceed with the personal charges. The petitioner had to answer yes or no, the judges usually intimating that if the petitioner proceeded with the personal charges against the respondent and did not succeed, he would be visited with the costs of his unsuccessful attempt.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: In recent years the practice in Nova Scotia has been that even if the respondent admitted sufficient corrupt and illegal practices to void the election, the court nevertheless proceeded with the case. This proposed provision is putting into statutory form the effect of the practice of the courts in recent years.

Mr. GERMAN: The opinion expressed in the newspapers of Ontario is that the trial of a petition should not be dropped simply because the respondent admits his guilt. This section provides that the court shall go on with the case, but if the petitioner does not wish to go on, he cannot be compelled to bring witnesses to the court and to produce evidence. How, then, will the court proceed? There is no procedure under this Act, so far as I can see, which will secure the attendance of witnesses in such cases to establish personal charges against the respondent. The object of the trial of election petitions, aside from the proving of charges which would disqualify the person elected, is to ascertain whether or not corruption existed in the constituency during the election.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: In all our provinces, the consent of the court or judge must be obtained before an action can be discontinued.

Mr. GERMAN: In Ontario a party may discontinue the suit by filing discontinuance papers and paying costs.

Mr. BENNETT: The English precedent is that you have to have the consent of the court or judge. But if judgment against the defendant is obtained by the plaintiff on consent, the judge may say: I am not satisfied that the matter shall be settled merely by consent; I am going to examine witnesses.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think I understand the motive of this section. In the trial of an election petition, one hundred witnesses having been heard, or one witness having been heard whose evidence proves one charge sufficient to void the election, the respondent may say: I confess judgment; I am willing that the seat shall be declared vacant. In this case, the objection is that the taking of further evidence might establish that a general system of bribery and corruption had been in operation throughout the district. I believe it is wise, therefore, that under such circumstances the court shall be directed to proceed with the case and to make a report to Parliament as to whether or not there was in the district concerned a general system of bribery and corruption. I think the section is a wise one.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: My observation of election trials during the last ten years has been that the solicitor really makes little effort to secure the disqualification of the respondent. The purpose of an election trial to-day is to ascertain whether or not a general system of bribery has prevailed. No solicitor conducting an election case will accept an admission of corrupt and illegal practices on the part of the respondent and a final order unseating the candidate. What I mean is that if a trial is conducted on that basis, the solicitor does not perform his whole duty, because the whole purpose of an election trial is, as I have said, to disclose any system of bribery and corruption which may have prevailed. It should be remembered also that the hearing of an election petition is really not a trial, in the ordinary sense of the word; it is an inquiry. Parliament, having delegated to the courts the duty of inquiring into alleged illegal practices in connection with elections, must give to the courts power to go beyond the desires and requests of counsel engaged in the case. I think the distinction must be held clearly in mind that the hearing of an election petition is not a trial, but an inquiry.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I entirely agree with the view that the court should have power to proceed in such cases, if the circumstances of the case make it, in their judgment, desirable that they should do so. But if witnesses have not been subpœnaed, is the petitioner to be directed to subpœna them? What means will the judge have of proceeding with the trial if the petitioner does not desire to take the responsibility of doing so? I do not object to the purpose of the section at all; I think it is a very good one, and I think that the judge should have the power which is assigned to him under its provisions, but I am not desirous of putting something on the statute book which may appear to fulfil certain objects, and which will not, in the end, fulfil them at all.

Mr. PROULX: If counsel do not wish to put witnesses in the box, can the judge force them to do so, or hold them guilty of contempt of court if they do not do so?

Mr. DOHERTY: Three conditions may arise. In the first place, in the case where the defendant has admitted enough to void the election or where there is proof enough to void the election, and the petitioner wants to proceed with the case, we say to the judge: You shall go on. We do not say: You may if you want to; we say: You shall, because we want to have brought out whatever can be brought out that is in the public interest.

Mr. GERMAN: The judge may say: Prove all these charges.

Mr. DOHERTY: I may be quite mistaken, but if that is already the law perhaps the hon. gentleman would show me the text. If that is the law but if there is no express text, what harm can be done by saying perfectly clearly in this statute what the hon. gentleman believes to be the law now?

To me there are three combinations of circumstances that may arise. That is the first. Under these circumstances, in my judgment, the law ought to be imperative; it should not be in the power of the judge to say: no, I have enough evidence and I am going to render judgment. Then, there is, secondly, the case suggested by the right hon leader of the Opposition, where both parties say that they have enough evidence; perhaps the respondent has got in the box and has said: "I admit that by an agent or without my knowledge enough corruption was perpetrated to void this election," and there are sitting there a whole host of witnesses, and the petitioner says, "under these circumstances I am willing to accept that." Surely that will be quite a clear case of duty to the judge to examine the people who are there. They have been brought there to prove allegations which we presume are specific and which upon their face are allegations of corruption and bribery that ought to be exposed. It seems to me in that case we should make it imperative for the judge to continue the inquiry. That is the second case.

Then, there is the case where it may be impossible for the judges to go any further. I do not understand that our imperative section would alter the fact that if neither party would adduce evidence and there were no available witnesses there, then the court would be in the position of having heard all the evidence. We might use the word "available" in that case, because the court would not be able to go on, but would be in the position of having heard all the available evidence. What I think the committee had in mind was that he could go ahead as far as there was available evidence. If there is no evidence there to be heard, the judge cannot hear it, and he may take it that that is a condition where he has heard all the evidence. I do not think we would meet the purpose of the committee by saying that the judge may do that. We want to create a situation where, as far as possible, it would be the judge's duty, within the limit of the charges made, to hear all available evidence upon them, even although it might go beyond what was necessary to void the election. What was necessary to void the election may have been established by admissions.

Mr GERMAN: My hon. friend perhaps misunderstood what I had in mind. I do not think the Controverted Elections Act in express terms says that a judge shall go on and hear all the evidence the petitioner chooses to present to the court. My belief is that the judge is morally bound, perhaps not by express terms, to hear all the evidence which the petitioner will adduce to establish the charges which were alleged in the petition; because it is not one issue of fact as to whether or not this man is entitled to the seat. A petition comprises several issues of fact; in fact, every section of the petition raises an issue of facts in itself. So that the one fact that the man is not entitled to hold the seat by reason of bribery and corruption proved voids the seat, but that does not dispose of all the issues raised by the petition or pleadings. I understand that a court would simply say: We are bound to hear all the evidence which the petitioner brings before us to establish the case as alleged in the pleadings which are before the court. To that extent I think the trial judges are bound to hear all the evidence the petitioner presents. When the petitioner is satisfied, saying, "I do not care to go any further," the seat is voided. Then you say by this section that the judge shall go on and further investigate. So far as my observations have shown, the practice is that the witnesses are not all subpoenaed for the first day; probably only one or two will be subpoenaed for the first day. Generally the strongest case the petitioner can make is taken up first. When you say here that the trial judge shall further investigate, you do not provide any means for having him do so unless you say that the witnesses shall be subpoenaed, and then you do not provide any means for furnishing them or say who is to pay the costs. If you say that he "may" go on, he may do so now. If you use the word "shall," it makes it compulsory on the trial judge to go on and subpoena witnesses of his own volition.

5 p.m.

Mr. DOHERTY: The objection would be met if you put in the word "available" before the words "and relevant." Then we would not place any obligation on the judge to go out on the highways and byways and look for witnesses. We would simply say to him: It shall be your duty to go on with the available and relevant witnesses.

Mr. MORPHY: Would it do to add the word "then" and make it then available as applicable to the witnesses then present at the trial?

Mr. DOHERTY: That might be very well where neither party wants to go on; but if the petitioner wants to go on, we should make it the judges' duty to hear the evidence he will adduce, and he should be entitled to make evidence available by subpoenaing more people for the next day if they are not there that day.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would it not be better to use the word "may," because we know that in actual practice if the parties agree that there has been enough evidence, that the admission is sufficient, that the election is going to be voided, they will take care to have the witnesses beyond the control of the judges. What is the use of putting it in if it is to become a mere farce? If you gave permission to the judges to continue the hearing, it would be very much better. In ordinary practice no judge would go on unless one or other of the parties wanted him to do so.

Mr. DOHERTY: The intention of this legislation is that the judge shall go on. I have heard it said repeatedly in civil courts by judges that they had heard all the evidence they required, that the case was proved, and they were prepared to give judgment and would not waste time hearing more evidence. It is by no means clear to me that a judge in an election case is not, under our statute as it now stands, free to say the same thing.

Most of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken seem to think that under the law at the present time the judge would be bound to go on. I do not think we would disagree as to the desirability of his being bound to go on if the petitioner desired it. I have not been able to find any provision in the statutes under which the judge would not be at liberty if he thought proper, to say that for the purposes of the petition he did not propose to go on even if the petitioner wanted to go on. I think that we should have the word " shall " in the section. I do not see what harm would come from requiring the judge to go on with the case where there is available evidence to substantiate the charge. The public interest demands that where there is available evidence the matter should be gone into. Of course, as the hon. member for St. John says, the parties could put themselves in a position where there would not be available evidence. No great injury will come to anybody from requiring the judge to proceed with the available evidence.

Mr. MARCIL: The Minister of Justice is very familiar with everything that has taken place in the province of Quebec. Without referring to the legal side of this question, the minister knows that in the last thirty years in the province of Quebec the two parties have agreed as to whether or not the evidence is to be produced, the case allowed to go to court and an attempt made to have the election voided. There are not half a dozen cases in the last thirty years where the issue was pressed and disqualification asked for. The belief is present in the minds of those who have discussed the question that we will never be able to get at the bottom of these political cases unless they are taken out of the hands of the political parties and it is suggested that the only way to sift the matter to the bottom is to have a public prosecutor appointed for that purpose. Has the committee given this phase of the question any consideration at all?

Mr. DOHERTY: We did consider the question, but we did not hope to be able to devise a plan for the appointment of such an official which would be satisfactory and which would pass this House. We are trying to do it in a more modest way than the procedure which the hon. gentleman suggests. I quite welcome the criticism we have had, but I think it shows that we cannot hope to do everything at once in the direction of improvement, and more particularly in the direction of securing an inquiry when the parties to the proceedings may not be over anxious to have the matter probed. I think, however, that what we did is a considerable step in advance if the House accepts it. Something in the direction of what the hon. gentleman suggests, if it met with general acceptance, would also be desirable but the committee have no proposition of that kind to present on that subject.

Mr. PROULX: Has the minister added the word " available"?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think that the section would be altered by putting in the word " available." Nobody, not even a judge, is bound by law to do the impossible. If he is told that he shall hear all the relevant evidence it must mean all the relevant evidence within his hearing.

On section 12—after thirty days clerk of court to apply, and court to fix day for trial:

Mr. PUGSLEY: Section 12 having been adopted, I wish to suggest for the consideration of the committee an amendment which would come in very properly at this point because it would be in addition to section 57 which is the last dealing with trials for corrupt practices. I think the committee will agree with me that the law relating to elections is to-day very strict indeed. As the Minister of Justice has remarked, we have plenty of law on the subject, ample, one would suppose, to secure purity of elections, but unfortunately it has not had that result. There is more corruption at elections to-day notwithstanding the stricter provisions of the law than there ever was in the history of our country. Everybody will admit that the corruption which takes place at elections is only limited by the means of the representatives of the parties and their ability to spend it.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: No, their ability to get it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, ability to get it. Unfortunately, that is the case. The agents of the two parties vie with each other in getting the greatest number of votes and they do not seem to have any fear of the law or any fear of election petitions. They do not fear anything, either on earth below or in heaven above, and they all do their very best to win the election. Then they have in their minds that in the majority of cases there will be saw-offs in connection with these petitions, and they will get rid of any difficulty in that way. They have the expectation that no election will be voided for corrupt practices, perhaps by common consent, and therefore one side can rely upon the other to either abandon proceedings or not to take any proceedings.

Every person who has had to do with controverted election petitions will admit that the law has been an absolute failure. We have provisions now that any person taking a bribe shall be subject to imprisonment and shall be disqualified for a term of years from voting, but that does not deter people from taking bribes. We have a provision in the law now that if a person bribes an elector he is liable to imprisonment for a term of years and is disqualified from voting at an election or sitting in Parliament, and that law has proved to be entirely ineffective. This Bill is a very good one because it facilitates the trial of election petitions, but in my opinion it will be just as ineffective as the present law for the prevention of electoral corruption.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I suppose that cannot, by any possible chance, be called an expert opinion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My own view is that it is better to be frank about the matter than to pretend that a state of affairs exists which does not exist. Every one will admit that, either with or without the knowledge or approval of candidates, the agents, the workers, the party friends of the candidates do all they can to win. If a man is of a high moral tone he justifies his spending money with the statement that you must fight the devil with his own weapons. I have heard very excellent men say that, as an excuse for their going behind the barn and paying something to an elector to vote for their candidate. My own judgment is that this Bill is not going to be any more effective than the present law, and the question is, what can be done? I have always had the idea that if you could hold out to a candidate the expectation that if he and his friends run an absolutely pure election, so that they would be able to satisfy the judges that the election was pure, and that if a sitting member has by himself or his agent been guilty of corrupt acts so that his seat shall become null and void, that the defeated candidate should get the seat. I believe in that way you will accomplish the object we all have in view. I would suggest for the consideration of the Minister of Justice and the committee a section like this:

57. On the trial of a petition under this Act complaining of an undue return, and claiming the seat for any candidate, if the trial judges decide that the election of the sitting member is void, by reason of the commission of corrupt practices on the part of such sitting member or his agent or agents, and the judges are also satisfied that no offence was committed at such election by the candidate on whose behalf the seat is claimed, or by his agent or agents, which would have been sufficient to render his election void in case he had been declared elected, the trial judges shall declare the election of the sitting member null and void and shall declare such candidate, on behalf of whom the seat is claimed, to have been duly elected.

In case the seat is claimed for more than one candidate, two or more of whom the trial judges find have not, either by themselves or their agents, committed an offence which would have been sufficient to render their election void in case they had been declared elected, the trial judges shall, in declaring the election of of the sitting member null and void, also declare such one of the candidates on behalf of whom the seat is claimed, having the majority of the votes cast for such two or more of the candidates on behalf of whom the seat is claimed to have been duly elected.

I would ask the Minister of Justice to look this over and to consider it.

Mr. DOHERTY: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman puts this forward as supplying something which does not exist at all in the present Act?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, there is a provision in the present law that you may have certain ballots struck off from the successful candidate.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: That is a scrutiny of the votes?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, but that is not like my amendment. This suggested amendment holds out to the man an opportunity of being given the seat by the judges, who says: I am going to run an absolutely pure election, there is no money to be spent, there is to be no violation of the law permitted which would unseat me if I had been returned, and who being able to prove the purity of his own election can prove that the sitting member by himself or his agents, has violated the law.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Regardless of what majority the elected candidate may have had?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Regardless of the majority.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: It would be a reward for merit to the candidate and penalty on the constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Not necessarily. It may be said that this might be hard upon the constituency, and to a certain extent that is true, but it surely is better to secure purity of elections, even though the constituency might be deprived of the services of the man who violated the law, by himself or his agents.

Mr. BOYCE: Would that be regardless of the finding on a cross-petition against the defeated candidate?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Oh, no. On cross-petition, the defeated candidate's conduct may be inquired into, and the burden would be cast upon him of satisfying the judges that he had run an absolutely pure election, before he could obtain the seat. We have been trying for forty years in this country to secure purity of elections. We have passed most stringent laws providing for putting people in the penitentiary, and providing heavy penalties and disqualifications, but all these laws in the past have been wholly ineffective until to-day electoral corruption prevails to a greater extent than ever, and there is more money spent in elections than ever before in the history of Canada, which perhaps is owing to the country being wealthier than it was in former years. Unless there is some great injustice which would be done to a constituency, I believe that this plan which I venture to suggest would prove most effective in securing electoral purity. Whether it is worth while to subject constituencies to what might be some disadvantage or some injury by not getting the candidate they would prefer, is, of course, another question. But it does seem to me that it is worthy of consideration, because the object aimed at will commend itself to this House and to the people of this country. I believe there would be no more effective mode of securing purity of elections than a law like this, which would give to the man who runs an absolutely pure election an opportunity of getting the seat, and which would deprive the man, who by himself and his agents violated the law, from sitting in Parliament.

Mr. PROULX: Would my hon. friend from St. John make it apply to the candidate, when corruption had been committed without his knowledge?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: Would it not be a great hardship to make him the victim of acts committed by agents, when he had not countenanced such acts at all? I would favour the hon. member's amendment if it applied only to candidates who had been themselves guilty of corrupt acts, or who had knowledge of such acts being committed by their agents; but in cases where they were the victims of zealous friends, it would be a great hardship on such candidates to make the amendment apply.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend knows that the law now compels a member elect to lose his seat by reason of corrupt acts on the part of his agents. It may be a hardship, but the question is: Is the securing of purity of an election of so great importance that the advantage will overcome the disadvantage of a man being held responsible for the actions of his agents? In the running of elections, candidates do have their agents; that is, as a rule the candidates are put up by the parties, and the parties have their agents to manage the elections, and there is no great difficulty in a party securing an absolutely pure election if they make up their minds to do so. The difficulty is to get them to make up their minds to have a pure election. If there were a provision that, if there should be a violation of the law on the part of the candidate or his friends, his opponent might get the seat, it would be very effective in securing purity of elections.

Mr. PROULX: The candidate might be the victim of conspiracy. A man might pose as an agent of the candidate and commit corrupt acts, and then go to court and admit that he had committed corrupt acts for that candidate. In that way he would secure the election for his friend, the other candidate.

Mr. DOHERTY: The law as it stands at present seems to contemplate upon the petition that the seat may be claimed for the other candidate. While I cannot find any special provision for that—

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is provided for in the present law.

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 22 provides for the examination of a candidate, although he is not a party to the petition. It says:

Whenever a petition has been filed claiming the seat for a candidate, such candidate, although not a party to the petition, may be orally examined as if he was a petitioner.

Section 49 provides that:

On the trial of a petition under this Act complaining of an undue return and claiming the seat for any person, the respondent may give evidence to show that the election of such person was undue in the same manner as if he had presented a petition complaining of such election.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Section 50 provides for striking off names.

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 50 says:

If, on the trial of an election petition, claiming the seat for any person, a candidate is proved to have been guilty, by himself or by any person on his behalf of bribery, treating, or undue influence with respect to any person who voted at such election, or if any person retained or employed for reward by or on behalf of such candidate, for all or any or the purposes of such election, as agent, clerk, or messenger, or in any other employment, is proved on such trial to have voted at such election, there shall, on the trial of such election petition, be struck off from the number of votes appearing to have been given to such candidate, one vote for every person who voted at such election, and who is proved to have been so bribed, treated or unduly influenced or so retained or employed for reward as aforesaid.

Then there is also the admission as to what may be done or proved in that particular case, and then the judges are to report.

Section 58 provides that:

At the conclusion of the trial, the trial judges shall determine whether the member whose election or return is complained of or any and what other person was duly returned or elected, or whether the election was void, and other matters arising out of the petition, and requiring their determination.

And so on. I was under the impression —it may be quite a mistake—that there was some form of petition for the claiming of a seat for the respondent. There are certainly provisions under which the seat may be claimed for a candidate. I felt, however, it would be wise, before saying anything as to the desirability of this amendment, to consider the matter more fully.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is perfectly true that the petition very often claims the seat for the respondent. The seat may be so claimed on various grounds: for example, the petition might set up the contention that the person who is declared elected was not a person competent to be declared elected; that he did not fulfil the requisites of the statutes; that he was not a British subject, that he was not of the age of twenty-one years, or something of that kind.

Mr. PROULX: There is no requirement that he should be 21 years of age.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Then there is the result of the contest, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John. For example, if the majority is not a very large one, it may be possible for the respondent to show that a certain number of persons have been bribed or unduly influenced—and for every person so shown to have been bribed or unduly influenced a vote is struck off from the votes of the successful candidate, and that may so reduce his vote that the respondent will have the majority. In that case he is, of course, entitled to claim the seat, and the provisions of the statute with regard to claiming the seat have in contemplation such a condition.

The first difficulty about the proposal of the hon. member for St. John strikes one is this, that as pointed out by the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Proulx), it might contain within it the inducement for a definite and very insidious form of bribery, that is to say, the bribing of persons acting as agents for the successful candidate to commit some improper acts, which will void the seat and thus give it to the other candidate, who cannot be proved guilty of any such offence.

The suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is also a very important one. Suppose, for example, that a candidate has polled 4,000 votes, and that the candidate opposed to him has polled only 1,000 votes, and that upon a very careful and full inquiry it may be proved that half a dozen or eight men have been bribed or unduly influenced to vote for the candidate who has received the great majority of votes. The question under these circumstances is whether justice would be done to the constituency by pursuing the course which the hon. member for St. John suggests. According to the premise which he has laid down, the candidate who has been elected may have earnestly determined to conduct the election without offending in any way against the election law, yet through the misdeeds of his agents for which he is not morally although legally responsible, the election is declared void.

The hon. gentleman proposes that for the action of some one person committed without the knowledge or consent of the candidate, and without any desire or intention on the part of the great majority of the electors that those acts should have been committed, the choice of the constituency in the selection of the candidate is put to one side and the man who represents only one-fifth or one-sixth of the people of that constituency is declared elected.

That would seem to be a very anomalous and very incongruous result. While one is inclined to sympathize with every reasonable effort to bring about reformation in the conditions under which elections are held, I think it would require a great deal of consideration before any such proposal as that could be adopted.

So far as elections are concerned, it seems to me, a great deal depends, in every constituency, upon the condition of public opinion. I have seen elections conducted, within very recent years and in large constituencies in this country, where, I am absolutely sure, the provisions of the election law were well observed on both sides. I believe that was the case in the election held in Halifax in 1908. Public opinion had been aroused very much by some events to which I need not do more than allude, and I think that both sides were resolved that there should be—and at all events, public opinion compelled—a very strict observance of the election law. And there was a strict observance of the election law, I am very sure of that. Very strict measures were taken on one side, and I have no doubt on both sides, to see that the law should be observed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Did the same thing continue in 1911?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: So far as I know. I have no doubt it did. I did not speak of 1911, because I was not in the constituency except for a very short time in that election. In reference to what my hon. friend from West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) has said, the provisions to which attention is called by the Minister of Justice were in the minds of the people on that occasion as they should be on all occasions. Very great precautions were taken to put these provisions in effect in case any attempt should be made to violate any provision of the Election Act, and with very good results. And I think where public opinion is aroused, as it ought to be aroused in regard to these matters, in any constituency, similar good results will be obtained. The hon. member for St. John city has made a very true statement, that we have plenty of law in this country if it is only properly used. And it seems to me that, in the absence of some such provision as that suggested here to-day—which I myself have spoken of in the past and have advocated—the appointment of a public prosecutor to see that election petitions are prosecuted to the end, it depends largely upon the condition of public opinion in the constituency how strictly the election law is observed. I would have been very glad if the committee had brought forward some feasible measure to provide for the appointment of a public officer who would discharge in the matter of election petitions such duties as are discharged by the public prosecutor in Great Britain. But I have not been insensible to the fact that in a country like this, with our population spread over so enormous an area, it would be a much more difficult task to make provision of that kind than in the case of Great Britain. The committee has made an attempt, a very earnest and I think a somewhat successful attempt, to provide otherwise for the bringing about of such results as have been had, at least in Great Britain, by the functions discharged by the public prosecutor, and I am certainly disposed to support their efforts in that regard to the utmost possible extent.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The amendment suggested by my hon. friend from St. John City (Mr. Pugsley) seems to be a drastic one, but it does not involve a new principle; it is simply carrying further the principle which is already in the law. Suppose the case of an election petition. The sitting member—taking the comparison just made by my right hon. friend (Sir Robert Borden)—has 4,000 votes and his opponent only 1,000 votes, showing that the overwhelming sentiment of the constituency is in favour of the successful candidate. If a single agent of that candidate has committed one single act of corruption, the election is voided and so the will of the people is set aside. This was enacted in order to promote purity of election. But is it straining the spirit of the Act, or proposing anything new, or extravagant, or that will not be accepted, to provide that the defeated candidate who has done his best to have a pure election should be given the seat? As the hon. member for St. John city has stated, very truly, we have been trying for more than forty years to promote purity of elections by laws such as this: If my memory serves me, our first Controverted Elections Act was passed in 1874. We have been trying ever since by these means to promote purity of elections. The present Bill is a testimonial of the fact that our efforts have not been successful. Is it not, then, right and proper that we should try a further remedy? The punishment we have inflicted against bribery in elections—not necessarily bribery committed by the member, but by any person on his behalf, is to have the election voided. That remedy has signally failed. My hon. friend suggests that in view of our experience we should give the seat to the man who has attempted to have a pure election.

Under the law as it is at present, there are two parties to consider, the successful candidate and the constituency itself—the people. If a man is guilty of an act of corruption his seat is voided. He may have been the overwhelming choice of the people, yet because of one act of imprudence—we will call it merely an act of imprudence—the law steps in and says that his election shall be voided, and not only that but he may be debarred from sitting and disqualified for years. So far as that is concerned the will of the people is defeated, but defeated to a great extent by his own imprudence. But if the candidate is not guilty of personal corruption, but if the corruption has been committed by one of his friends, it seems rather hard that he should have to suffer the penalty of having his elections voided and lose his seat for an act for which certainly, he could not be responsible. Still, the law has not hesitated, either here or in Great Britain, to inflict that injustice upon a candidate, with the single object that we may have, at any cost, purity of elections. We have tried this for forty years, with the very indifferent result we see at the present time. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman is right in spirit when he goes so far as to say that when there is a contest between two men, if upon the side of the successful one there has been corruption either by the candidate or by his friends, and if on the other side there has been a pure election, then the seat ought to go by favour of the law to the other candidate. I would direct the attention of my hon. friend to the case of John Wilkes, whose election as representative of the electoral district of Westminster was set aside three or four times by the British Parliament. At last, after Mr. Wilkes had been repeatedly elected and after his election had been repeatedly set aside, Parliament declared his opponent to be the representative for the constituency, although he was the minority candidate. It thus happened that the representative of the district was not the man who was the choice of the people, but the minority candidate. I give this instance to show to the committee that the suggestion of my hon. friend is not without precedent. As to the suggestion of the hon. member for Prescott that there may be conspiracy on the part of friends of one of the candidates to establish bribery in order that his adversary may loose his seat, this objection applies to the law as it exists to-day with just as much force as it may apply to the provisions suggested by my hon. friend. There is every reason why serious consideration should be given to the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I wish to point out that the law as it stands at present is not precisely as my right hon. friend suggests. In 1882 the election law was amended by a provision which is now embodied in section 56 of the Act, and which provides that if no corrupt practice was committed at the election by the candidate personally; if the candidate took all reasonable means for preventing the commission of corrupt practices; if the offences were of a trivial, unimportant and limited character, and if in other respects the election seemed to have been fairly conducted in accordance with the provisions of the law, then the seat shall not be vacated. I should like to point out also that it is in the interests of the purity of elections that an election may be declared void by reason of offences committed without the candidate's knowledge by agents of the candidate. But in all these cases the rights of the people are regarded, and it is permitted to them again to make a choice, by another election, of the man who shall represent them in Parliament. Probably at the time to which my hon. friend referred—the occasion on which the seat was given to the opponent of Mr. Wilkes—the rights of the people in that regard to their representation in Parliament were not so strictly regarded as they are at the present time.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is true that section 56 provides that the elected candidate shall not be unseated for the commission of trivial or slight offences for which he was not personally responsible, or if he took all reasonable means to prevent the commission of corrupt practices. But it is also true, as my right hon. friend has said, that while the sitting member may have a majority of votes which cannot be challenged, yet, by reason of the commission of corrupt acts by agents, he may be unseated, and in that respect an injustice may be done. That result, however, has been brought about by the operation of the law in the interests of the purity of elections.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: As I said, however, the people in that case are given the right to choose another representative.

Mr. MARCIL: If a provision such as this is to be put into the law, I think that the candidate for election should be responsible only for the actions of the men whom he himself appoints as his agents. If in a constituency of 30,000 or 40,000 people, who perhaps become highly excited around election time, the candidate is to be responsible for everything that is done on his behalf, he will be helpless. Does the minister, in this proposed legislation, describe what constitutes an agent, or is everybody who supports the candidate an agent?

Mr. DOHERTY: The courts have devoted a good deal of time and attention to the question of what constitutes agency under the Election Act, and I think that they have arrived at a fairly settled jurisprudence. I must say that I would not venture myself to give an adequate definition, which could be so compressed as to be inserted in the statute, to cover all the conditions under which a man may be held to be the agent of another. It has been pointed out that there is this very substantial objection to the amendment suggested: It is true that we have gone very far, in the interests of the purity of elections, in depriving the candidate elected of the honour and the right of retaining the seat in the operation of electing him to which there has been any material degree of corruption. So far, we deprive him of the seat and set aside the choice of the people to that extent. What the hon. member for St. John suggests is that we should now go a step further and foist upon the people for the future, as their representative, a man whom, as by their votes they have made perfectly clear, they do not want. The effect of the amendment would be to penalize the people of the constituency because by some accident the election of the man for whom they voted in preponderating majority is declared void. The people, as a whole, are not responsible for that. As I understand it, in the cases where a man is entitled to claim the seat because his adversary was not qualified to be a candidate, so careful are the courts of the right of the people not to have somebody put upon them whom they have declared that they do not want, that they require that it shall be shown that the voters, when they went to vote for the unqualified man, knew that they were voting for an unqualified man, and were intentionally and deliberately throwing their votes away. If I am not mistaken, where you claim a seat because your adversary was not qualified to be nominated, you are not entitled to get more than an annulment of election, unless in addition to showing that he was not qualified to be a candidate, you establish that the people generally knew, or ought to have known, that you had called it to their attention so that it may be said that they ought to have known and must have known that they were voting for an unqualified person, and then you get the seat because the court says the people of the constituency, with their eyes open, chose to throw away their votes. But I am not aware of a case under our Dominion Elections Act of this kind. I do know a case, not by virtue of specific statutes but in the contestation of a municipal election, of something of this kind. I had occasion to deal with one myself in the course of my judicial experience, and there I decided, and the judgment was confirmed, that though it was perfectly apparent that the candidate for whom the majority voted was not qualified to be a candidate for the office at all, and though the seat was claimed by his adversary, the minority candidate, who was perfectly qualified, the court, before it would be entitled to adjudge the seat to the minority candidate, should be able to say something more than that the elected man was not qualified—should be able to say that the electors, with their eyes open, threw their votes away when they voted for him.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would call the minister's attention to the case of Baird and King in Queens county, in which the returning officer declared that the receipt for the $200 deposit required from the candidate was not in proper form. The election was run, the people were perfectly innocent of any irregularity; there was a majority for Mr. King; yet the returning officer declared Mr. Baird elected and this House sustained the election of Mr. Baird, because, rightly or wrongly, they decided that there never was any other candidate.

Mr. DOHERTY: It was not a question of whether the candidate was qualified or wheather two men had or had not been nominated. I am not called upon to discuss that, as I understand the decision of the House went on the ground that only one man was legally nominated, who could be voted for. The case I was dealing with was the case of an unqualified person, and I only refer to it as showing the care with which the law proceeds before undertaking to say not only that the people shall not have a man for whom a majority voted, unless they choose him again, but also that they shall have a man with regard to whom it is absolutely manifest that they did not want him, that they had voted by an overwhelming majority that they did not want him. Are we going to impose such a man on the people because it happens that the other candidate or some agent or some other person who by a forced construction may be held to be the agent of the other candidate, was guilty of corrupt practice? While there is much to be said in favour of the view that an election is a fight between two candidates, we must bear in mind always the paramount right of the people to have in the first place the man they choose, and above all not to have forced on them a man whom they have repudiated. For these reasons it would be impossible to accept the amendment.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I was going to say one or two words in reply to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and also in reply to the remarks made by the right hon. the Prime Minister, and in doing so I want to admit fully that I realize the force of the objection that is made from the standpoint of the constituency. But the question is whether the evil that is sought to be remedied is such as to warrant Parliament in making the provision I propose. As I said before, we must all admit that no remedy has been found so far for electoral corruption. Notwithstanding all the severe measures which have been passed during the last forty years there has been no change in that practice. Corruption in elections prevails to an extent as great as, if not greater, than ever before. If we think that this amendment would have the effect of inducing purity of elections, then the question fairly arises as to whether or not the benefits that would result would more than counteract any evil which might ensue with regard to the representation of the constituency in Parliament. The objection is made, with a great deal of force in it, that there may not be very extensive corruption by the friends and supporters of the elected candidate. If that is a real, substantial objection it might be got over by providing that the result which my amendment aims to accomplish would only be achieved in case of the judges finding that there had been a pretty general system of corruption, using the language contained in another part of the statute, in the interest of the elected candidate. I think everybody would admit that if the finding was to that extent it would not be a very great evil to return a man who had run a pure election free from all corrupt practices whatever.

Mr. TURGEON: I wish to say a word in approval of the amendment brought in by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley). It is not quite as drastic a measure as I would like to see adopted by this Parliament. I would rather accept the suggestion of the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) that the agent of corruption should be brought into court immediately and punished, if found guilty on the evidence of a few honest witnesses. Meanwhile the amendment of my hon. friend from St. John will certainly have a tendency to raise the political morals of our people and to create a certain terror in the minds of those men who so flagrantly violate the law at election times. It is not only on election day or at the polls that unlawful acts are committed, but they are committed, particularly in the rural districts, as everybody knows, the night and day before election. These men will ride in automobiles during the night in the back settlements, and strangers will go in to interview the voter while the local man who has taken them remains in the automobile. He is not a witness of what takes place between the strangers and the voters. When the voters who have been subjected to this influence come down to the polls next morning it is found that they have changed their political views. I think that this amendment will have a great effect upon the morals of our people, and that these political agents will not be as presumptious as they have been in the past.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I listened with a great deal of interest to the observations of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) this afternoon. Assuming, as we will, that we are all desirous of doing something to counteract the evils that are so prevalent, it does not appear to me that the amendment proposed will accomplish that object. We in Western Canada are situated in a very peculiar way. We have no lists in Alberta and in addition to that we propose to swear votes in on election day. That has been done for the last fifteen years. If we are going to lessen corruption we must start at the beginning and ask first: What is the object of an election? The whole idea of an election is to ascertain the will of democracy. To ascertain the will of the democracy the electors must not be fettered, corrupted or restrained. There must be a free expression of the opinion of the electors. How can that be accomplished? We know there is corruption, we know that the electors are corrupted, we know it, we believe it. Two plans were proposed in days gone by; one was compulsory voting and the other was the disfranchisement of the constituency. In addition to that we have had punishment of the individual by the unseating of the successful candidate if the election has been won by fraudulent means. My old preceptor, than whom no abler man ever sat in this Parliament, I venture to say, Dean Weldon, of Dalhousie University, introduced legislation looking to a solution of the same problems as those which have been referred to by the hon. member for St. John. His Bill was finally passed and incorporated into the statutes. We have made certain provisions for disfranchising individuals who have been guilty of corrupt acts. I do not think that at the present time we are prepared for the disfranchisement of constituencies. Compulsory voting has not been adopted in this country and we have never been successful in enforcing the statute as it is. I think we might do something in the way of disfranchising constituencies. If the judges were to report to Parliament that a general system of corruption pervaded an election and prevailed through a constituency I do believe that the best way for you to deal with it would be by disfranchising that constituency for the rest of the term of Parliament and holding it up to the people of Canada as an example of what corruption might accomplish. That would do something. Many years ago I entertained the idea, and I think I entertain it now more strongly than ever, that we must have a public prosecutor if we are going to accomplish any great amount of good under the present election law. In the different provinces there must be some such officers as a supervisor of elections and a public prosecutor. Electoral corruption is practised on such a scale that an individual cannot accomplish any good. I remember a general election in the West in which they were paying half-breed scrip. There was only one candidate for the whole province of Alberta, and the entire machinery of the Federal Government was at work paying scrip to thousands of individuals on election day. I remember that a telegraphic message was sent out something like this: "Majority large enough; stop the voting." That sort of thing cannot be overcome by single individuals. You require to have something more. You must have a public prosecutor who will make it his business, untrammelled by any consideration other than the public weal and the public good, to see that the laws are enforced. We do not need any new laws. The laws now in some respects are too drastic. Take the horse-hiring provision. That feature of the election law has become ridiculous because every one knows that horses are hired in every constituency from one end of Canada to the other. These trivial things are magnified into important things that have the effect of minimizing the advantages of the law as a whole. The amendment proposes what? Take the constituency of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), which that hon. gentleman represents here by a majority of something like 2,500 votes. Let us assume that the election was not run as an absolutely clean election and that three or four, half a dozen or a dozen of his agents, had been guilty of wrong doing and had violated the provisions of the election law; do you mean to say that it would be an advantage to this democracy to have that seat given to Col. Griesbach rather than a fresh appeal to the electors?

Will that make for any improvement? Is it not a very thwarting of the will of the people? One-half the electors and twenty-five hundred more decided that they desired to support the principles of the Liberal party, and that one-half the electors and twenty-five hundred more are to be represented in Parliament by an opponent of the Liberal party and their principles because twenty-five men were guilty of corruption. Would that be right, or just, or fair? Is it not doing the very thing you should not do, namely, thwarting the very will of democracy? Is it not interposing against the will of democracy the corrupt views of twenty-five men? That is what it gets down to in the ultimate analysis. Why should twenty-five or one hundred corrupt men send to this Parliament a representative opposed to the wishes of the majority of the democracy in that constituency? I am certain that the proposal of the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) is not going to accomplish any good, and I think my hon. friend, with his large experience, will admit that. It is, as a gentleman in the Press Gallery said to me this evening, an endeavour to utilize the political machinery rather than the legal machinery to accomplish good, and there is a good deal to be said for that. What you cannot accomplish by the enforcement of law, sometimes you can accomplish by political considerations, and that is what this amendment would mean. In other words, as I apprehend the amendment, you would say to the people of the constituency of St. John, for example: If you are corrupt and take bribes for the purpose of electing the hon. gentleman who now represents that constituency, you will find yourselves represented in the next Parliament by an opponent of the Liberal Government—the constituency will be represented by an opponent of the Liberal Government in any event—and that is what it would mean. That cannot be a sound principle.

The endeavour of the committee was not to make new law, but to make effective the provisions of the law as they stand. The subject was too large to be dealt with in a week, or a month, or in several months. It would involve going over the old well-marked path, dealing with the question of compulsory voting, supervision of elections, public prosecutors, proper franchise, and matters of that kind. We simply had to deal with the situation as best we could, and the chairman of the committee outlined what the committee should undertake, and the committee has undertaken to suggest legislation that will make the existing laws more effective. Every hon. gentleman who has spoken on the other side of the House has admitted that probably to some extent the committee has succeeded in that. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) were strongly in favour of certain changes which they conceived would bring about certain well-desired results, and these are incorporated in the Bill. The committee has decided that if you will remove preliminary objections, and if you will make it impossible to tie up proceedings for a length of time by technical objections and delays in the courts, you will have accomplished much good. That, this legislation will do.

I very much fear that the hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) is desiring to make light of this whole endeavour of the committee to improve conditions, and that he really does not seriously believe in his amendment, because he must see that its effect would be to nullify and destroy such good as we are endeavouring to accomplish by the Bill submitted. I think it will be found that simplicity, effectiveness, and efficiency, will be secured by the proposal now submitted to the House, and which has met with very general approval. It will, we believe, be a distinct improvement on existing conditions, and in addition, it will be found that instead of endeavouring to make new laws and create new offences we have simply taken advantage of existing conditions in the law as it now stands, to introduce simpler machinery into the statute-book for the purpose of making it more effective. I think we have succeeded in doing that.

If one were to generalize and philosophize on the question of corruption in the broader sense, how corruption is brought about and why, and whether the publication of contributions to election funds might not accomplish much good, one could do so, but these questions have engaged the attention of the House on former occasions, and we could not accomplish much good by discussing them now. We in the province of Alberta must first of all have a Franchise Act, and we must have some finality to our lists. We must endeavour in that new country to pass laws which will charge some one individual with responsibility for the enforcement of the law regardless of cost and regardless of consequences. I would point out that in my province, forty men who cannot speak the English or the French languages, who are foreign in every sense to our traditions and who know nothing of our history and nothing of the subjects under consideration, absolutely controlled the representation of at least one constituency, and that a similar number of such men controlled the representation of two or three other constituencies in the local legislature in the two new provinces. I think that our new Naturalization Act will do something to prevent that evil, but corruption can only be killed by making those who practise it pay the penalty of it. I do think that the legislation which is submitted in this Bill will do a little towards that end.

We all know that some corruption is practised in the election of the very best of men. As my hon. friend was speaking this afternoon, I was thinking of what John Morley tells of Gladstone's first election in Newark, that when he found the enormous expense of that election he was so disconcerted about it that he, for a time, contemplated the possibility of giving up his seat. Times have changed in England, and I doubt not that the right hon. gentleman opposite, who has seen so many parliaments come and go, and who spoke this afternoon about the changes wrought in the law about the time he came into this House would be able to tell us, were he in a philosophic frame of mind, that there has been at least an improvement in public opinion, as reflected in this House in its attitude towards corruption. The body politic may not have made as much improvement, for the simple reason that on account of large operations being carried on in this new country there is a tendency on the part, not of the people themselves, but on the part of those who have benefits to derive from governments to bring about corruption. Were this the proper time I might a tale unfold, by discussing that. I do not think that the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, anxious though he may be to see some improvement, will bring about good; I do not think that any such measure as will thwart the will of the majority, and place the well-being of the people as a whole in the several constituencies in the hands of twenty-five or thirty corrupt electors, by sending to Parliament a man who is not the choice of the electors, can, in any sense, be said to be a remedy for something for which we must find a remedy, and which can only be found in clean, decent franchise, well-settled lists, a public prosecutor, and supervision of elections by some responsible authority, so that no financial considerations will prevent the law, as it now stands, from being rigorously and vigorously enforced. Beyond that I think we must look to the future and go slowly, being willing to make a little progress from day to day, realizing that such improvements as they have made in England, and in the republic to the south of us, have come slowly but have come surely and inevitably.

Mr. McCRANEY: I would like to believe that the proposed amendments or any other amendments to the election law would result in any very great change in the conduct of elections and in the purifying of the public life of this country. Twenty-five or thirty years ago election petitions used to be fought out. They are not fought out to-day; they are traded away, the reason for that being that there has come a feeling of complacency over the public. The public feel that it is an even fight; that the chances of election are as good on the one side as on the other; that when an election is over at five o'clock on election night, they had better get the result and go home, and that it is unsportsmanlike to challenge the other fellow's seat and try to get one's own candidate in. I think I am expressing a view that is very generally held.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Especially in the West.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The West is not an exception to the rule.

Mr. McCRANEY: I have lived in the East and I have noticed that view quite as much in the East as in the West; in fact, I have seen more evidences of tampering with the voter in the East than I have in the West. My experience of elections in the West is that the voter, as a rule, is not corrupt, although immense sums of money are expended. We have a provision that a candidate for Parliament shall publish an account of his election expenses within a certain time after the date of the poll, and we all publish those statements. Those statements are asked for with a view of obtaining the amount expended by each candidate and of curtailing the amount, it being felt that by the public knowledge which is gained there may be less corruption carried on. I am quite safe, however, in saying that the statement published by a candidate, either successful or unsuccessful, contains no information of the character which is intended; that it gives a person who reads the statement no idea whatsoever of the moneys used in the conduct of the election, and that for any purposes of that kind we might abolish the statement altogether and realize at once that by that means at any rate no information can be arrived at.

My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) spoke of the desirability of having a public prosecutor, and he has gone along the right line. The law as it stands is good enough if it is enforced. I am not objecting to having amendments; I am only saying that the same practice will continue whether you amend the law or not. When I was living in eastern Canada, I resided in the county of my hon. friend the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). In the provincial election of 1898, Mr. John R. Barber was the successful candidate against Mr. William Kerns. An election petition was filed and the protest came for trial. Before the trial it was decided by Mr. Barber's friends that he should give up the seat, and that sufficient admissions should be made to void his election. There were two judges as the election trial judges; and when the attempt was made to throw the seat open in that way by admissions, the judges said: "No, we will not let you do it in that way; you are bound to prove that there was general corruption throughout the constituency; we are not going to throw open the constituency by consent; you must bring your evidence." Therefore evidence was put in on behalf of the petitioners showing that in many polling divisions corruption had been carried on; in fact I recall that the information in some cases was supplied by the respondent, because it was a consent arrangement, but it had to be gone through with and the election was voided. On the report of the judges, the late Mr. William Lount, who was afterwards one of the High Court judges of Ontario, was appointed public prosecutor. The fact that Mr. Lount's political sympathies were those of the respondent made no difference whatever. He came to the county of Halton; he made his investigations; he made his prosecutions, and quite a number of those who were reported by the election trial judges were subsequently prosecuted by Mr. Lount and fined. Whoever paid the fines I do not know; but the prosecutions carried on at that time by Mr. Lount as public prosecutor under the direction of the Attorney General had a very salutary effect in the county of Halton, and I think if such a suggestion as that made by my hon. friend from Calgary were carried out and in each province some counsel were appointed—he would have to have very high standing so as to command public confidence—there would be such a shaking-up that perhaps corruption might be limited in some degree. I am not disposed to think that all the corruption is amongst the foreign element or the poorer classes of the people; very often it is high up. One of the reasons that we have corruption in our public life is the penalty which we put upon the man who is a candidate for Parliament or who is a member of Parliament or a member of the Cabinet, if he loses his seat. In the Old Country if a man loses his seat, he can get another seat; but he cannot do that here; if he loses his seat, he is down and out. There are very strong temptations in this country for a man who wishes to remain in public life to let those things be done which will ensure his success.

Amendment (Mr. Pugsley) negatived

On section 13—right to appeal on preliminary objections, etc., omitted:

Mr. DOHERTY: The only change effected by this amendment is eliminating from the provisions of the law as they now stand references to appeal on preliminary objections.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—substitution of new petitioner:

Mr. DOHERTY: The change under this section is that instead of its being necessary for the applicant for substitution as petitioner to make his application to the court for leave to be substituted in the case of the withdrawal of the petitioner, provision is now made simply for the publication of an advertisement, and that a new petitioner may be substituted by filing in the court within one month from the last publication of the advertisement, or within such longer period as the court may prescribe, a notice of substitution in the form C in the schedule of this Act. Whereas under the old law it was provided that such party coming in to be substituted should give security as the original one did, and that in cases where there was reason to suspect any fraudulent connivance in connection with the withdrawal, the original deposit should remain as security, the provision here is that in all cases the original deposit shall remain as security.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In cases where an elected member had reason to believe that his election would be protested, it has been known to happen that the elected member got a friend to issue the petition, and, the matter then being practically in the hands of the elected member, the petition was not proceeded with and the matter became a dead letter at once. I do not know whether there is in the law as it is to-day a provision under which any elector may interfere in such cases by asking to be made a party to the suit in order that the petition may be brought to trial.

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 37 of the Act is as follows:

When, under this Act, more petitions than one are presented relating to the same election or return, all such petitions shall, in the election list, be bracketed together, and shall be dealt with, as far as may be, as one petition; but such petitions shall stand in the election list in the place where the last presented of them would have stood if it had been the only one presented, as to such election or return, unless the court otherwise orders.

So that all petitions filed are combined and tried together as though they were one, coming in the order of the last one on the list.

Mr. PROULX: Is it not possible, because of the fact that no time is fixed within which the clerk shall advertise, that there may be some delay in the proceedings?

Mr. DOHERTY: The provision is that upon any petitioner dying, becoming incompetent or being authorized to withdraw, notice shall be given by the clerk of the court. Immediately upon any of these things taking place, notice shall be given.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister made any estimate of how long it will take under this procedure to bring an election petition to trial?

Mr. DOHERTY: The respondent has 15 days within which to file his answer to the petition, and, if he does not file that answer, he is taken to have denied everything. Then, within 15 days after that, either party may apply to the court to fix a date for the trial. If at the expiry of the thirty days neither party has done so, it will be the duty of the clerk to call the attention of the court to that fact, and it will be the duty of the court, after giving notice to the parties, to fix a proper time and place for the trial. I should say, therefore, that within six weeks after the forty days—two months, at all events—the petition ought to be brought to trial.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there an appeal on the merits of the case from the decision of the judges?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, there is provision for an appeal from the final judgment.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—witnesses to be summoned, and by whom:

Mr. DOHERTY: This provision has relation to the summary trial of corrupt practices at elections. The officer charged with the prosecution is, under the present law, bound to summon such witnesses as gave material evidence at the trial, and, in addition such witnesses as he deems requisite. Under this present provision there is imposed upon the prosecuting officer the obligation to summon such witnesses who deposed to any fact material to the charge as the trial judges may deem necessary or desirable to have subpœnaed, and such other witnesses as he thinks requisite to prove the charges. The only change, therefore, is that the prosecuting officer, in addition to his obligation to subpœna such witnesses as he may deem necessary, is bound to subpœna any witnesses that the judge at the trial may indicate as being desirable witnesses.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—punishment of convicted offenders:

Mr. DOHERTY: The only change is a provision making it clear that the penalty provided in this section is in addition to the disqualification provided for by section 282 of the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there anything in this law or in the proposed amendment to prevent a railway company from carrying liquor at election time into a county where its sale is entirely prohibited?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is not in this Bill any special provision with regard to their carrying liquor at election time.

Mr. MARCIL: For a distance of 500 miles along the shore of the St. Lawrence, from Lévis to Gaspé basin, there are no licensed saloons. What I want to know is whether the Government railway or any other railway may carry any quantity of liquor into these districts, to be distributed and used for election purposes.

Mr. DOHERTY: It seems to me that a railway company distributing liquor in a prohibition county would be violating the law just as anybody else would. Of course, the Government railway would not do this; in any case, I do not see that there is any difference between the man travelling on the railway and distributing liquor in a prohibition town, and any other man doing the same thing.

Mr. MARCIL: In ten or twelve counties in the district which I have mentioned there are no licensed saloons, and if there is no provision to prevent a railway company from carrying liquor into these districts as ordinary freight at election times, and distributing it to be used by either political party for election purposes, I suggest that the minister give the matter consideration. There is a law now to prohibit the carrying of liquor in Scott Act counties, and I know that prosecutions under that law have taken place in the province of New Brunswick.

An hon. MEMBER: But the law is not enforced.

Mr. HAZEN: Any law may be evaded, but the penalty is there.

Mr. MARCIL: These are not Scott Act counties. The people simply refuse to have licenses.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are counties where an individual would be free to give away liquor. The question is whether a railway company should be subject to some special prohibition that would not apply to an individual.

Mr. MARCIL: But do you not think it would be wise to prohibit the carrying of liquor to these constituencies for a month before and a fortnight after the election?

Mr. DOHERTY: That would be a subject for amendment of the Dominion Elections Act rather than the Controverted Elections Act.

I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Why should we rise and report progress without some statement of when we are to meet again?

Mr. DOHERTY: I thought it was desired that further consideration should be given to sections 4, 5 and 10.

Mr. MACLEAN: I wanted that explanation.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Doherty.]

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill No. 112, to amend the Canada Grain Act—Sir George Foster—was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1:

Section 27 of the Canada Grain Act, chapter 27 of the statute of 1912, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"2. Such certicate shall be in all cases prima facie evidence of the facts therein contained."

Mr. OLIVER: I understood from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) that the Bill coming from the Senate was not to be proceeded with.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister intends to proceed with the Bill; I am aware of that. He waited all afternoon with the hope of being able to proceed. It is his desire that it should go through to-night. The section read so far is in the form in which the minister wishes it to pass.

Mr. OLIVER: There is a misunderstanding somewhere. I understood from the minister that he was not going to proceed with this Bill, and to-day he handed me a typewritten copy which I understood him to say was to be substituted for the Bill coming from the Senate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman misunderstood. The Bill coming from the Senate is to be proceeded with. What he has is a typewritten copy of two clauses which are to be added by way of amendment to the Bill as it comes from the Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Would the Solicitor General say what is the effect of this clause?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The certificate referred to in this clause is the inspecting officer's certificate as to grade. Hitherto, the Act has stood in this form, that the waymaster's certificate as to weight is prima facie evidence, but there has been no clause giving evidential value to the certificate of the grade. This gives it evidential value—makes it prima facie evidence as to grade.

On section 2—official certificate of weight:

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has a typewritten copy of the proposed amendment. I move that section 2 be amended so as to read:

No grain shall leave a terminal elevator without being officialy weighed, and the official certificate of weight shall be final, subject to the provisions of section 120 of this Act.

The effect will be to make the official weight certificate—not the certificate as to grade, but that as to weight—final, subject to re-investigation, which re-investigation is provided for by section 120 of the Grain Act. This will make the weigh-9 p.m. master's certificate conclusive evidence of the weight of the grain, but it may be reviewed by the Grain Commissioner, but not by any other tribunal.

Mr. ROBB: Does this apply to harbour elevators in Montreal?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member will look at section 118—I speak from memory—he will see that it provides that Part II of the Act shall apply only to elevators in the western division and to public elevators in the eastern division in so far as they carry western grain. By a subsequent clause public elevators include terminal elevators. Consequently, strictly speaking, this would apply to eastern elevators in so far as they carry western grain. But as a matter of practice it has never been made so to apply, because it has not been the practice to have weighmasters under the Grain Commission in these eastern elevators as in the others. Consequently it cannot take effect unless weighmasters are appointed.

Mr. ROBB: The point I want to make is that the weighmaster appointed by the Harbour Commission of Montreal would, under the section proposed, naturally come under the supervision of the Grain Commission, who have nothing to do with engaging him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the weighmaster appointed by the Harbour Commission of Montreal would not be such a "weighmaster" as is contemplated in the section. The "weighmasters" herein referred to are appointed by the Grain Commission; and until the Grain Commission appoints "weighmasters" for the eastern elevators, which I understand is not intended, this section can have no application.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I beg to move the following amendment on section 3:

Section 118 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following words: "and to all water-carriers other than ocean carriers."

Section 118 is the section which I quoted to the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb); it is the definition section. The effect of adding those words to it is to make clear that part 2 is applicable to carriers between the western elevators and the eastern elevators, in so far as they carry western grain only.

Mr. GERMAN: That would cover United States ships going from Port Arthur to Buffalo?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No; the vessels to which the hon. gentleman refers do not carry grain from the western division to the eastern elevators.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I beg to move that the following be added as section 4:

The said Act is further amended by adding after section 120, the following sections:

120a. The board shall also receive and investigate all complaints in writing under oath, of any shortage in grain upon the delivery of same from an elevator to a vessel or from a vessel to an elevator, and shall have power to assess or apportion the loss arising from such shortage, amongst the elevator operators, water-carriers, and shippers, having to do with the said grain, and the finding of the board and such assessment or apportionment certified over the hand of a majority of the board, shall be delivered or sent to all persons concerned in such finding, assessment or apportionment, and shall be final and shall be enforceable in any court of competent jurisdiction.

120b. The board may make regulations governing the responsibility for and the disposition of shortages and overages of grain upon delivery of same from an elevator to a vessel or from a vessel to an elevator, and may assess in such manner and in such amount as it may deem just and proper, contributions from elevator operators, water-carriers and shippers, or from any of them, in favour of the board or otherwise, for the purpose of providing against such responsibility.

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall limit the powers of the board under the preceding section.

This is undoubtedly important legislation. I believe the minister has already reviewed in the House the circumstances that have given rise to it. A conflict has arisen between the lake carriers and the western shippers the lake carriers endeavouring to put into effect a form of bill of lading which would have turned back upon the shippers the entire responsibility for any shortages that might occur during transit from the western elevators to the eastern elevators. Heretofore there has been no special regulation governing it. Some of the companies have found themselves at the end of the year loaded with considerable loss by reason of shortages, the shortage arising by virtue of lesser weight being given to the carrier when he went to deliver this grain to the eastern elevator for transhipment to ocean steamers or to elevators at Kingston for transference to barges and thence to ocean steamers, than the weight given him by the Government certificate out of the western elevator. Similarly other carriers had what are called overages by the reverse process, that is the eastern weight was greater than the western weight. The result has been that a very determined effort has been made to get from under this responsibility and a conflict of interests has arisen. An effort has been made to bring the parties together, but I understand without final success. The intention of this legislation is to enable the board to provide against two classes of cases, the only cases that can arise. The first one is the class of cases where it is possible for the board, by investigation of the facts, to fix the responsibility for the shortage, to say to the western elevator operator: You have made an error, we have power under section 120a to investigate particularly questions of shortages and overages and we find that the error is on your part and therefore we say to you you must be responsible for the error, you must pay. Similarly they would have power to fix the responsibiliy on the lake carrier wherever the evidence was on hand which convinced them that the lake carrier was at fault; and likewise they would have power to fix the responsibility on the eastern elevator. Another class of cases also arises, that is where there is no evidence available to enable the tribunal, which will be the Grain Commission, to fix responsibility anywhere. That, I understand, is a very frequent occurrence. Cases arise very often where it is a matter of utter impossibility to bring home responsibility to the western weighmaster or to the eastern weighmaster or to the lake carrier. What is to be done with such cases as that? Obviously a solution can be found only along the line of a permanent regulation which may fix the responsibility always upon one party and fix a scale of contributions by which the other two parties also interested in the same grain, and who perhaps may be responsible, shall in every case contribute to a fund that shall be used by way of assurance against the loss which the class who are fixed with permanent responsibility in such cases will have to bear. It will be observed that 120a provides that they may and must investigate the facts upon any complaint of shortage or overage. They have the power, if the facts brought before the commission are sufficient to justify its exercise, to determine who shall stand the loss of the shortage and who shall get the benefit of the overage. But they have also power under 120b to make such regulations as may be required for governing the disposition of these shortages and overages. They may make regulations assessing against any one of the three, or indeed the four parties, for the shippers are the fourth parties, any scale of contribution, that scale of contribution being made to the board or to any one of the parties. The words used are: "Being made to the board or otherwise," and that scale is fixed as against the party by whom the contribution is to be made and against the party who is to be held to consistent responsibility for the loss.

Mr. ROBB: While the Solicitor General says that the board will have power to investigate under oath all complaints in writing of shortages in grain, will he tell us what is to be done about overages? I will give him a case. Early in October last there was a vessel loaded at three different elevators at Fort William. When the ship reached port at the Georgian Bay end of the route there was an overage of 10,000 bushels reported. Word was sent back to Fort William, and immediately one of the men said: That is my grain; I made the mistake. But as they traced it along a little farther it was found that the overage was not in the hold loaded at that particular elevator, but in another hold. How will they trace that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not see how an overage could occur at one point unless there was a shortage at another. It seems that it will be necessary to complain as to a shortage.

Mr. ROBB: The shortage would perhaps only be discovered in the elevator at the end of the season.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but before it is discovered there has to be a complaint as to the shortage. No man is going to complain of an overage. The man to whom the overage accrues is the man who benefits. Unless somebody complains of a shortage there could scarcely be any call upon the board to interfere. The case that my hon. friend referred to would arise and come before the board only if a shortage had existed causing the ultimate overage and was complained of. If the word "overage" were to be inserted, it would mean the recasting of the whole clause, and I do not see that the clause would be improved thereby, or that it would cover any real case that is not covered by the clause as it is.

Mr. ROBB: I am not a lawyer, and I do not know anything about that. What I want to find out is how they are going to take evidence under oath. That case actually happened last fall, and there were three different elevators interested.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They might take evidence under oath on any complaint, but they cannot assess as for overage because there is no loss. Somebody will have to lose before there will be a complaint. This empowers them to assess against loss. They cannot do that unless there is a loss. I think if my hon. friend would agree to leave the clause as it is, he will find that there is no case that can arise that will not be covered by it.

Mr. OLIVER: Would section 120b make provision for the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb)? It says that:

The board may make regulations governing the responsibility for and the disposition of shortage and overages of grain upon the delivery of grain from an elevator to a vessel or from a vessel to an elevator.

Mr. ROBB: Could they take evidence under oath?

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. member asks could the evidence under section 120b be taken under oath.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Section 120 provides, subclause 2, that "for the purpose of such investigation the board shall have power to summon witnesses." It strikes me that to make certain they can summon witnesses and investigate under oath for the purposes of these two clauses, which certainly they must have power to do, it might be well to add after the words "such investigation" in subclause 2 of section 120, the words, "or any investigation authorized under this Act." It may be that they have a general power, but if they had there would be no reason for putting in subclause 2 of section 120. Subclause 2 has stood in that way since the Act was passed.

Mr. OLIVER: Do I understand the Solicitor General to make the suggestion that there should be such a provision added?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I think it should be added to subsection 2 of section 120.

Mr. OLIVER: That would cover the point raised by my hon. friend from Huntingdon?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I think the point is covered by section 120b. In an investigation under both clauses they could take the evidence under oath. They have power to investigate overages under section 120b. They cannot investigate complaints of overages, because there could be no complaints; consequently it would not do to include overages in 120a.

New sections 120a and 120b agreed to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I beg to move that a clause be added reading as follows:

Subsection 2 of section 120 of the said Act is amended by adding, after the word "investigation," in the first line thereof, the words, "or of any investigation authorized under this Act."

Mr. OLIVER: While I do not offer objection to these amendments, because I have no doubt they are the best that can be put forward at the present time, I would like to point out that in their nature they are very indefinite as to where the responsibility is to rest amongst the different parties who handle the grain. The authority and the responsibility is placed upon the Board of Grain Commissioners to find out the particulars if a certain occurrence takes place, and probably that is the best that can be done at the moment, but my opinion is that there should have been a more thorough examination into the conditions surrounding the shipment of grain, and that the amendment to the Act should be so framed as to, so far as possible, place the responsibility directly upon the parties to the transaction. It seems to me that the tendency of his declaration is to say to the shipper, the carrier, the receiver, and the dealer: if you can get by with a shortage you are welcome to do so, it is up to the Board to adjust the matter amongst all the parties concerned. That seems to me to be hardly a satisfactory principle, but I understand the difficulties of the situation and I do not find fault with the proposal now made to remedy these difficulties. The principle is hardly the best principle, according to my judgment, and probably with the experience that may come through the exercise of the authority now vested in the Board of Grain Commissioners, at a later date it may be possible to embody the other principle which I think is very much to be preferred.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This is a very technical Bill and before it is submitted for a third reading I think it should be reprinted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Public Works—Brantford new public building, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will be the cost of this new building?

Mr. ROGERS: $225,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population of Brantford?

Mr. ROGERS: 30,000.

Mr. MARCIL: For what purpose is the building to be used?

Mr. ROGERS: Post office, customs, inland revenue.

Mr. MARCIL: Does the $225,000 include the site?

Mr. ROGERS: No, this is for the building alone.

Brussels public building, $22,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the population of Brussels?

Mr. ROGERS: 1,100.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the cost of the building?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract is not let yet. We will keep the cost within the Estimate.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: About $20,000, outside of the site.

Burford public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Where is Burford situated, and what is the population?

Mr. ROGERS: In Brant. The population of the district to be served by this public building is 4,000.

Cannington public building, $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the population? I thought I had put public buildings in all the important towns in Ontario.

Mr. ROGERS: You evidently overlooked Cannington. It is a place of over 1,000 population. It is an important town.

[Mr. Oliver.]

Eganville public building, $10,000.

Mr. PROULX: Is it the intention of the minister to go on with this work this year?

Mr. ROGERS: This appropriation finished the building.

Mr. PROULX: On which side of the river is this building?

Mr. ROGERS: On the south side.

Mr. PROULX: Then it is in North Renfrew?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know.

Mr. PROULX: The main portion of the village is in South Renfrew.

Mr. G. V. WHITE: My hon. friend should look at the last census.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The fact about this building is that the appropriation was put in by me for a building in the constituency of South Renfrew, and the building was switched off to the other side of the river and put into the other constituency after this Government came into power.

Mr. G. V. WHITE: I am afraid my hon. friend did not even purchase the site.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He provided the money.

Mr. WHITE: He simply said that the building was for Eganville; he did not state on which side of the river it was to be situated.

Exeter public building, $15,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Where is Exeter situated?

Mr. ROGERS: In South Huron.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population?

Mr. ROGERS: 1,792.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the cost of this public building?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not started it yet; the plans have not been made. We will endeavour to keep it within the estimate.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Many of these items are re-votes.

Mr. ROGERS: All re-votes.

Galt drill hall, $30,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the cost of that?

Mr. ROGERS: Fifty-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. PARDEE: Are they at work on it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister a statement of the number of drill halls being erected in Ontario?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not.

Mr. McCRANEY: On Saturday evening I asked if the minister had an estimate of the votes included here which he intended to go on with this year. He had not such a statement then; has he got it now?

Mr. ROGERS: That would be very difficult to arrive at, for I am not in a position to know what votes will be expended during the present year. I cannot give such a statement off-hand, and I doubt if I could give it even if I had time to consider the matter.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the minister waiting for in order to arrive at a decision?

Mr. ROGERS: Partly for the termination of the war.

Mr. MARCIL: There are certain places where the work is commenced. Is the minister waiting for more revenue, or what?

Mr. ROGERS: That is one thing; we are waiting for more revenue.

Mr. ROBB: The question was asked by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) about drill halls in Ontario. I may, perhaps, enlighten him a little. I checked over the list, and I find that this year the minister is providing for 183 public buildings and 41 new drill halls throughout Canada. Of that number 63 public buildings and 15 drill halls are in Ontario.

Mr. ROGERS: Thank you.

Mr. MARCIL: Are these drill halls built at the request of the Militia Department?

Mr. ROGERS: Entirely.

Mr. MARCIL: The Department of Public Works exercises no control—simply complies with the request of the Militia Department?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. We have our architects make the plans, and we give some supervision to the cost and size.

Mr. PARDEE: Does the Militia Department decide on the cost of the drill halls?

Mr. ROGERS: Largely they do.

Mr. PARDEE: Then, it would be a good plan, while Estimates such as these are going through, that the Minister of Militia should be here to tell us why so many drill halls are necessary. I have taken a strong stand on this drill hall question, and I take it yet. In many cases this is a sheer waste of money. I believe we might save 90 per cent of what is spent on drill halls. That has been up in the House before, but, judging by the evidence now before us, the drill hall industry is still a flourishing one in Ontario. So far as I am concerned, I object to it most strenuously. These drill halls are put in places where the soldiers they are intended to accommodate are very few, not at all commensurate with the expense the country is put to in maintaining the drill hall.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sorry the Minister of Militia is not here at the moment. But my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) will remember that he raised this same point last year and the Estimates were delayed until the arrival of the Minister of Militia, who then gave a statement with respect to the various drill halls. There is no new item for a drill hall in the Estimates this year.

Mr. PARDEE: Well, the cure would likely be worse than the disease. Better let it go through as it is.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is to be borne in mind by the committee that the item for drill halls in the Estimates of the Minister of Public Works do not include all the drill halls, because in the Militia Department there were a number to be constructed at less than $50,000, if I remember the figures.

Mr. ROGERS: There is no such item, as I understand it, in the Militia Estimates this year.

Mr. L. A. LAPOINTE: Will the minister please inform us what he intends to do about the vote of $100,000 for new barracks in Montreal? I have seen that $100,000 voted many, many times, but I have not seen the commencement of the work, nor have I seen any indication of an intention to build a new barracks. What is the use of voting money every year only to keep it locked up in the treasury?

Mr. ROGERS: We have got the site; we have made that much progress with respect to the barracks at Montreal.

Mr. MARCIL: I would remind the committee of what happened last Saturday night. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) said that he had appealed strongly for the organization of a militia battalion for the town of Amherst. There is already a county battalion in existence.

But $108,000 is to be spent on a drill shed in Amherst. I can understand that in a town or city where there are to two or three regiments there must be a drill shed; but in a case like that of Amherst, where the application is merely pending, to spend $108,000 before the regiment is brought into existence is a rather reckless waste of public money.

Huntsville public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is quite an amount for Huntsville, is it not? What is its population? It is only a summer resort, as I understand.

Mr. ROGERS: No; the population according to the last census was 2,358. It is a thriving town. We pass through it on our way to Winnipeg going from Toronto, and judging by its looks it is quite an important town.

Ingersoll drill hall, $25,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: When the Estimates of the Department of Militia were under consideration last year, the Minister of Militia said that several of these drill halls were not used for military purposes. I think he made the statement that some of them were not intended to be used for military purposes, but that, in his estimation, they served a very useful purpose in enabling the young people—"youth and beauty" were his words, I think—of the country to gather together there in the evenings and have a social time. The minister seemed to think that these purposes were quite sufficient to justify the construction of buildings of this kind, and that, even if not used for military purposes, they were quite useful along these other lines. It is a question which the committee might consider at this time, whether under present circumstances money should be voted for these purposes, and whether it is intended to carry out this proposed expenditure. In fact, it was suggested at that time that kissing bees were held in these places.

Mr. ROGERS: Was that suggested in the committee?

Mr. HUGHES: Somebody in the committee used that expression, and it was not objected to. The Minister of Militia and Defence really gave that impression.

Mr. ROGERS: I wish my hon. friend would let us know where to find that in Hansard.

Mr. HUGHES: Many things are stated in committee that do not subsequently appear in Hansard. I remember the occasion quite distinctly, and I will look it up for my hon. friend. It was not put just in that way, but I remember the Minister of Militia making a statement and giving an explanation in regard to the matter, and expressing the opinion that it was quite right.

Mr. PROULX: I remember well that the minister said that these buildings were good places for the young boys and girls to meet, under proper control.

Public Works—London armoury, to enlarge site, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is a good deal of money for the enlargement of a site.

Mr. ROGERS: A very comprehensive plan is being arranged jointly with the city of London, which is a very important centre. This amount is in connection with the share of the Government towards the purchase of an additional site.

Mr. PARDEE: Will it be alongside the old site?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Millbrook public building, $10,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population of Millbrook, and what is the total amount to be expended?

Mr. ROGERS: The population is about 1,000, and the cost of the building will be within the estimate of $20,000.

Milton public building, $20,000.

Mr. HENDERSON: Milton is the shire town of Halton, and a very important place of 2,000 odd population. The building is almost completed.

Napanee drill hall, $36,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will this drill hall cost?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract was for $42,500, I believe. We have not spent all of the money.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the population of Napanee?

Mr. ROGERS: 2,807.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does not the Minister think that $61,000 is a good deal for a drill hall for a town of 2,800 people? However, the building is under construction and we cannot do much now to stop it.

Mr. MARCIL: I presume the minister knows that there is no regiment there, only one or two companies of a county battalion.

Mr. ROGERS: This is the headquarters of the 47th Regiment.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister cannot say how many of them belong to Napanee?

Mr. ROGERS: It is the headquarters for the regiment, and they take advantage of the drill hall.

Mr. MARCIL: They meet there once a year, yes. I would have no objection if the regiment used it; but if there are only one or two companies who use a drill hall which costs $61,000, in hard times like this it seems extravagant.

Ottawa—Customs buildings, $600,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the same contractor the contract for the building proper as for the foundation?

Mr. ROGERS: No, the foundations were built by the Foundation Company of Montreal. The ironwork is being done by the Toronto Structural Steel Company.

Mr. MARCIL: Who has the contract for the building?

Mr. ROGERS: Lyall and Company.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the $600,000 be the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: No, we will probably require something next year.

Mr. PROULX: Will that be used only for the Customs Examining Warehouse.

Mr. PUGSLEY: For Customs Examining Warehouse and for the offices of the whole Department of Customs.

Mr. PROULX: There will be no other department there.

Mr. ROGERS: That will depend on the amount of room available.

Ottawa—new drill hall, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has a site been acquired yet?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is that a second drill hall for Ottawa?

Mr. ROGERS: They have a very old one here on Cartier square that is about played out.

Ottawa — Parliament and departmental buildings—re-wiring, etc., $70,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is anything to be done for the library this year?

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid not. If we are delaying any particular work, I think that will have to stand for the present year.

Own Sound—drill hall, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: How much will this cost?

Mr. ROGERS: About $50,000.

Palmerston public building, $38,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the population of Palmerston?

Mr. ROGERS: 1,850.

Mr. PARDEE: What is this public building to be used for?

Mr. ROGERS: Post office, customs and inland revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What will be the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract is for $30,770.

Mr. PUGSLEY: You have gone over that, with last year's expenditure it is $43,000.

Mr. ROGERS: That includes the fittings and sidewalks, etc.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is a pretty expensive building for a place of 1,800 people. I think myself, as the minister said last year, in case of small towns we ought to get public buildings for a great deal less than is being paid. I have in mind a small village where the minister was induced to put up a public building costing well on to $40,000. What I had in view when I obtained an appropriation for it was a building of one story, built in the colonial style, which would be quite attractive and which probably would have cost $5,000 or $6,000 where the post office could be kept; but instead of that a large three-story building has been put up with a residence for the caretaker, involving all the expense of heating the entire building and adding very greatly to the cost. Here we have an instance of a village or town of 1,800 population with a public building costing over $40,000. I think the minister will agree with me that it is desirable to modify the plans and specifications and try and get these buildings at a lower cost.

10 p.m.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will no doubt recollect that when we were on these Estimates a year ago I made the statement that we were getting out, standard plans providing a building at very moderate cost for a town of 1,500 people, a little better one for a town of 2,000 or 2,500 people making the cost much less than appears in the Estimates to-day. These plans have now been completed.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the estimated cost for the town of the size mentioned by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. ROGERS: $12,000 to $14,000.

Mr. MARCIL: In my own constituency in 1910 $5,000 was voted for a public building in the shire town that was to cost $15,000 and we were very well satisfied. Unfortunately the item was struck out and we are without our public building. If the people in my constituency knew that buildings were being erected in towns in Ontario at a cost of $$40,000 or $50,000 they would open their eyes.

Pembrooke—drill hall, $26,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will this cost?

Mr. ROGERS: About $$60,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there a regiment in Pembroke?

Mr. ROGERS: I could not say.

Mr. G. V. WHITE: There is no regiment in Pembroke at the present time but from Pembroke and the surrounding country we have sent from 125 to 150 men to the front.

Mr. MARCIL: They will not be using the drill hall?

Mr. WHITE: When they come back probably they will. The idea is to establish a half company battalion in Pembroke. I have taken the matter up with the minister on several occasions. Pembroke is within 12 miles of Petewawa military camp and it is the most important town in the Ottawa valley. It has a population of 8,000.

Peterborough—new public building, $47,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the cost of this building?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract has not yet been let.

Mr. MARCIL: What amount is it expected to spend?

Mr. ROGERS: Nothing definite is settled.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I suppose the site has been bought?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Port Arthur—drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has any amount been fixed for this drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: This finishes it.

Mr. MARCIL: What will the total cost be there?

Mr. ROGERS: About $215,000.

Mr. MARCIL: That is a pretty good price. How many regiments are stationed at Port Arthur?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know. It is a great military centre.

Mr. MARCIL: I thought it was a grain centre.

Mr. ROGERS: A military centre too.

Mr. MARCIL: The Government have spent many millions of dollars at Port Arthur on useful purposes. I hope the money spent in this case is as useful to the people.

Port Arthur—custom house and examining warehouse, $175,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this finish?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Preston—public building, $25,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why does that item appear in the Estimates so often? We voted it in 1913-14 and 1914-15 and now we are voting it again in 1915-16. Why is the building not proceeded with?

Mr. ROGERS: It is under contract now.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will this finish it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $44,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How large a place is Preston?

Mr. ROGERS: 3,383.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is a pretty good town.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Sault Ste. Marie—drill hall, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the cost of this?

Mr. ROGERS: Nothing has been done there yet.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there any estimate of the cost of this drill hall ?

Mr. ROGERS: No estimate.

Shelburne—public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this finish the building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Smith's Falls public building—enlargement and improvements, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will that complete it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Steelton—public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will that complete?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Stratford — public building — addition to, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has that been commenced yet?

Mr. ROGERS: Not started yet.

Sudbury—public building, $35,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is to be the cost of this building?

Mr. ROGERS: This finishes it.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the cost of the building?

Mr. ROGERS: $98,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is it to be used for?

Mr. ROGERS: The usual public building—post office, customs and inland revenue.

Mr. MARCIL: Inland revenue purposes in a place like Sudbury would not require more than two or three rooms, as there would only be one or two officers there.

Mr. ROGERS: The customs takes a lot of room.

Mr. MARCIL: And the rest is given up to the post office?

Mr. ROGERS: Sudbury is a very important centre.

Mr. MARCIL: Well, this is a large sum of money.

Mr. ROGERS: It is an important place.

Mr. MARCIL: In one of the most populous districts of Westmount the Dominion Government carries on its business in a ramshackle old building not worth more than $300. This is a good Tory stronghold and yet there is no $100,000 building there.

Mr. ROGERS: The fact of its being a good Tory stronghold would not apply at all.

Toronto—customs examining warehouse, and postal station "A," $500,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What is this going to cost?

Mr. ROGERS: It is not started yet.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has the minister no idea what they are going to spend on that building?

Mr. ROGERS: We have nothing very definite on the subject. It is a very large work and the plans are not prepared as yet. They are under consideration, but nothing has been decided in so far as the total cost is concerned.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is very unusual. I have been in this House for a good many years and it is only recently that we have heard a minister make statements like that. Does he want us to embark upon the erection of a building when he has no plans and when he does not know what the ultimate cost is going to be? We are asked to vote $500,000 without knowing what we are going to embark on. Such a proposition cannot be intelligently placed before the committee, and it is something new in my experience in this House. It is only this year that we have been asked to pass vote after vote without the minister being able to tell us what the plans are.

Mr. J. D. REID: The revenue from the Toronto customs office last year was $20,000,000 and from the Montreal office, $25,000,000, so that Toronto is the second largest revenue office in the Dominion. It is absolutely necessary to have a fireproof examining warehouse, and one sufficiently large to accommodate the great business done there, so that the building will be an expensive one.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What will the ultimate cost be?

Mr. REID: I should think it would cost half a million dollars anyway.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the site been bought?

Mr. REID: Yes, we purchased part of the property from the city of Toronto. The work has not been proceeded with for the reason that the railway companies intend erecting a new station, and as they need to take a piece of the property purchased from the city, we could not get plans prepared until it was decided how much of the property would be taken by the railway companies. That question was settled a short time ago, and the department will be in a position to have the plans prepared immediately.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There were $170,000 spent last year.

Mr. REID: That was for the site. The property was purchased from the city at a very reasonble price; a price lower than it would have been sold to an outsider.

Mr. VERVILLE: I would like it to be well understood that the working people throughout this country will derive no benefit from the moneys we are now voting because the minister tells us that in respect to the great majority of these buildings the plans have not yet been prepared, and that in some cases the sites have not been purchased. Therefore, the money we are now voting cannot be expended during the present fiscal year to relieve the distress which exists in the country. I do not want the Minister of Public Works and his friends to try to make the working people believe that they are going to derive benefit from any of these works, to provide the money for which we are being taxed so heavily.

Walkervile public building, $70,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How much will this building cost?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract price is $78,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population of Walkerville?

Mr. ROGERS: 3,302.

Public buildings, Manitoba—Altamount drill hall, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the site of this place?

Mr. ROGERS: It is not a large place, but it is the centre for several places immediately surrounding, and $10,000 is to be the total cost of the building.

Carberry public building, $27,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I suppose the site has been purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $21,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why is the minister asking for $27,000?

Mr. ROGERS: The $6,000 is for fittings and improvements. The contract for the building is $21,000.

[Mr. J. D. Reid.]

Carman public building, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Carman seems to be getting on a good deal faster than some of the other towns.

Mr. MARCIL: In what constituency is it?

Mr. ROGERS: In Macdonald. It is a large town of 3,000 people.

Elkhorn public building, $19,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is this building under way yet?

Mr. ROGERS: We have tenders in. The estimated cost is $12,000.

Gretna public building, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population of Gretna?

Mr. ROGERS: About 700. It is a very important town on the international boundary.

Mr. MARCIL: What amount is proposed to be spent at Gretna?

Mr. ROGERS: This will be the total expenditure.

Mr. MARCIL: $25,000 for 700 people?

Mr. J. D. REID: The population has increased very much since the last census. It is a growing place.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the building to be used for?

Mr. ROGERS: Gretna is a very important centre for customs. It is situated where the railway crosses the boundary, and all the baggage is examined there.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the minister satisfied that this money is being properly expended?

Mr. ROGERS: In this case there is no doubt that it is being properly expended.

Minitonas public building, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is any progress being made on this building?

Mr. ROGERS: It has not been started yet.

Mr. OLIVER: Has a site been purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Morden public building, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There was a vote of $20,000 last year, and the revote is only $3,000, so that $17,000 must have been spent last year on this building. What is the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: This $3,000 will finish the building.

Portage la Prairie drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. MARCIL: How much will this building cost?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans have not been prepared yet.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister has no idea whether it will cost $50,000 or $75,000 or $100,000?

Mr. ROGERS: We will make it as low as we possibly can.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there any regiment at Portage la Prairie?

Mr. ROGERS: It is quite a military centre. I would like my hon. friend to go out West and see some of the towns there.

Mr. MARCIL: I have no objection to the proper use of money for public buildings, but to put up drill halls in towns where there are only two or three companies is a sheer waste of public money.

Mr. ROGERS: I can assure my hon. friend that Portage la Prairie is a very important centre and very deserving from a military point of view.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister ought to know whether there is a regiment there or not.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know.

Rivers public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Where is Rivers situated, and what is its population?

Mr. ROGERS: It is the divisional point on the Grand Trunk Pacific, immediately north of Brandon. It is a very important place.

St. James drill hall, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the population?

Mr. ROGERS St. James is quite a large section of the western part of Winnipeg. The population is about 4,500.

Mr. MARCIL: It is a suburb of Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Stonewall public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is this building going to cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $31,000.

Virden public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this $10,000 complete this building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Winnipeg barracks, $150,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is this a new building?

Mr. ROGERS: The barracks have not been started yet. We had a barracks at Winnipeg that this Government sold to the local Government. These barracks are to take the place of the old ones.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not made an estimate yet.

Winnipeg new drill hall, $170,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is this drill hall independent of the barracks?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is its total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $540,000. This completes it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is this a second drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: This is a large drill hall. There are two others.

Winnipeg new immigration building, $40,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Where is this new immigration building situated?

Mr. ROGERS: We are buying a lot not very far from the present building which was unsuitable on account of its being too close to the tracks, and which is required for a postal station. It was recommended that the old building should be turned into a postal station as it is very convenient for the mails arriving at the station, and that a more desirable location could be had for an immigration building. The new building will be about one block from the old one. It will be at the corner of Maple and Macdonald streets.

Mr. OLIVER: North of the tracks?

Mr. ROGERS: South of the tracks.

Mr. OLIVER: But further east?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the total estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: We have just bought the site; we have not the plans yet. We thought on account of immigration falling off we would delay the construction of the building.

Winnipeg new drill hall, $170,000.

Mr. PARDEE: Three drill halls for Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: We are building a drill hall at St. James, at a suburb of Winnipeg, and we are putting up one in North Winnipeg, which has a very large population composed almost entirely of foreigners, a great number of whom have taken to military drill in a very creditable manner. We are encouraging them by building this drill hall. It is very desirable under the circumstances.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: The cost is $103,000. In North Winnipeg we have one squadron of the 34th Regiment, one battery C.F.A., one troop C.E., eight companies of the 78th Battalion, eight companies of the 90th Battalion, eight companies of the 100th Battalion, eight companies of the 106th Battalion, one section of the Signalling Corps, two sections of the A.S.C., one section of the C.A.V.C., and one corps of Guides.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Do these belong to the contingent now formed?

Mr. ROGERS: Some of them do.

Mr. McCRANEY: In how many cities have we more than one drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: Montreal and Halifax.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is there a drill hall already in Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: No, except the one just completed.

Mr. MARCIL: There is more in building and enlarging drill halls just now than in immigration buildings.

Mr. ROGERS: Drill halls are more occupied at the moment.

Mr. MARCIL: No great immigration is expected this year?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, we are looking for very good immigration this year; the prospects are very good, I understand.

Battleford public building—improvements, $4,500.

Mr. McCRANEY: What is this for?

Mr. ROGERS: This is for an additional 15½ by 42 feet, for the purposes of a land office.

Mr. OLIVER: This is the old Battleford building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Canora public building, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Has anything been done in Canora?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. OLIVER: No land bought? No plans prepared?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Kindersley public building, $20,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: Have any plans been made for this building?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. McCRANEY: Will the minister spend the money this year?

Mr. ROGERS: It is just like the others—I will spend it if I can get to it.

Moosejaw customs examining warehouse, $90,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that making progress?

Mr. ROGERS: We have bought the site.

Mr. OLIVER: Are you going on with the building? Will progress be made with the building this year?

Mr. ROGERS: We will have to try it; this building is being pressed very much.

Moosejaw immigration hall, $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the progress with that?

Mr. ROGERS: Not making any progress. I think that can afford to stand.

Moosejaw new public building, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that the new post office?

Mr. ROGERS: We are putting an addition to the old building. It has been going on for a couple or three years. This finishes the work.

Regina customs examining warehouse, $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is anything being done on that building?

Mr. ROGERS: Just the purchase of the site.

Mr. OLIVER: Will progress be made this year?

Mr. ROGERS: I think we will have to do it, because the department is pressing.

Mr. OLIVER: What will be the total cost of the building?

Mr. ROGERS: A year ago, when the estimate was made, it was about $200,000.

Regina—accommodation for Asst. Receiver General, $75,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the hon. minister building a separate building for the Assistant Receiver General?

Mr. ROGERS: Every capital city in the Dominion has an Assistant Receiver General's building except Saskatchewan and Alberta, and they are being provided for.

Rosthern public building, $10,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: Has the site been bought?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. McCRANEY: What is the estimate for this building?

Mr. ROGERS: The population of the town is 1,172. The cost will come within the range of $15,000 or $20,000.

Saskatoon—customs examining warehouse, $50,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: Has the site been bought?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. McCRANEY: What is the estimate for the building?

Mr. ROGERS: About $150,000.

Saskatoon drill hall, $30,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: How about the property used for militia purposes and purchased in 1911? I think the Minister of Militia said it was too small and there were some negotiations in progress to exchange it. Can the Minister of Public Works inform us as to that?

Mr. ROGERS: The negotiations to which my hon. friend refers have taken place in the Militia Department.

Saskatoon new public buillding, $75,000.

Mr. McCRANEY: I understand this new public building is to be erected some distance away from the business centre. It is in a part of the city that very few of us pass as we are going to business. It is two blocks at least from the main street, and the department, I understand, have paid $1,000 a foot for the property. I want to tell the minister that of all the wildcat boom schemes, for some of which we blame the banks, the Government of this country is more blameable in this than in any other that I know of. I am not complaining merely that the minister paid too much; for that would mean that it would be all right if it had been got cheaper. But I think the property would be most unsuitable for a post office site if the minister got it for nothing. I hope that before he spends more money from this appropriation, he will ask his own friends in Saskatoon about this proposed post office. It is to be at a place that will be inconvenient for many years to come. It should never have been selected, and would never have been selected had not half a dozen of the leading members of the Conservative Association bought adjoining property, and they thought this would help them out. I understand that some money has been expended during this winter; dynamite was used and excavation was made in order to provide labour. I do not object to that, because the necessity is great to relieve some of the destitution. But every man who wanted work had to seek the recommendation of the Conservative candidate, and every man who got work had to undertake to become a member of the Conservative Association. I do not know whether that was under the minister's instruction or not. The earth taken out was put on the bank of the river in a dump. There is only one further expenditure I would like to see with regard to that property, and that is to take the dump back from where it is and put it into the hole again, and then let the minister get rid of that property as fast as he can.

Mr. ROGERS: I am surprised at the statement which my hon. friend makes, especially in view of the fact that I myself had the pleasure of visiting Saskatoon, of meeting a large number of people there, and of examining this site, together with others suggested at that time. In my humble judgment, the site selected is one of the very best in the city for the purposes of a post office, and, so far as I have ever heard, is satisfactory to practically the entire population of Saskatoon. In regard to the excavation, we were pressed this year to find employment for many unemployed persons, and we undertook to excavate for the foundation of the proposed building. I am sorry that my hon. friend is opposed to our putting up a public building of this magnitude in an important centre like Saskatoon, but we believe it to be in the public interest, and will, therefore, proceed with the work as rapidly as possible.

Mr. McCRANEY: The hon. minister is not justified in suggesting that I am opposed to the erection of a public building in Saskatoon. I want to see a public building in Saskatoon, but in the place where a building of the kind proposed ought to be.

The site selected may be suitable for the construction of an armoury or something of that nature, but for a building which must be in a convenient position for the public, it is not at all suitable.

Athabaska Landing—new public building, $5,000.

Mr. OLIVER: I notice that the sum of $5,000 for this purpose appeared in the Estimates last year, and that it is being revoted this year. I discussed this Estimate with the minister on two previous occasions, and urged the erection of this building. It is a very modest amount, and I take this opportunity of repeating what I have said on former occasions: that there is very great need for accommodation at Athabaska Landing for the Government business there, postal, telegraphic, and land business. This business is very seriously handicapped by the lack of reasonable and suitable accommodation, and I urge upon the minister once more that this expenditure be made, not for the sake of spending the money at all, but to meet the absolute necessity for accommodation at that place.

Mr. ROGERS: I appreciate what my hon. friend has said, and realize that there is great necessity for a building of this kind at Athabaska Landing. We have just finished the immigration hall there, and, now that that is out of the way, we will endeavour to go on with the other public building.

Bassano public building, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the situation with regard to this building?

Mr. ROGERS: This completes it.

Mr. OLIVER: What will be the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $23,400.

Calgary new post office site and building, $110,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has an estimate been made of the cost of this work?

Mr. ROGERS: The cost is estimated at $800,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will the drill hall cost?

Mr. ROGERS: Probably $300,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the size of Calgary now?

Mr. ROGERS: About 100,000.

[Mr. McCraney.]

Mr. OLIVER: Where is the new post office site?

Mr. ROGERS: It is the same site, with an extension of 90 feet.

Castor public building, $16,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the situation with regard to this building?

Mr. ROGERS: We have the site.

Mr. OLIVER: Will any progress be made this year?

Mr. ROGERS: It is like all the rest; we will try.

Edmonton post office, addition, $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the intention with regard to this addition to the Edmonton post office? I imagine that it will involve the purchase of additional land; has that been taken into consideration?

Mr. ROGERS: We have had reports and valuations, one respecting an addition to the rear of the present building, and another respecting an addition to the side, but we have not arrived at any conclusion as to which is the more desirable and the cheaper.

Mr. OLIVER: What frontage on the side was it the intention to add?

Mr. ROGERS: My deputy has not that information, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend. The present property has a frontage of 90 feet and a depth of 150 feet. That, of course, does not include the proposed addition.

Mr. OLIVER: What was the estimated total cost of that addition to the building, exclusive of the land?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not made that up because we are arranging to get the site and until that is secured an estimate cannot be made. We are proposing the addition simply because of the congested conditions in the Edmonton post office.

Mr. OLIVER: I suppose that the addition will conform in architectural design to the building already there.

Mr. ROGERS: Oh yes, that is a very neat building. that is there.

Edmonton customs examining warehouse, $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is anything being done in regard to that?

Mr. ROGERS: We have bought the site, at the corner of Third and Pease avenue.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any intention of going on this summer?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know, it depends on how hard I am pressed by the Minister of Customs.

Mr. REID: I will press hard, I promised the member for Edmonton.

Edmonton new drill hall, $200,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is expected to be the total cost of this drill hall?

Mr. ROGERS: $350,000.

Mr. OLIVER: And when will it likely be completed?

Mr. ROGERS: This year, this amount completes it.

Grande Prairie immigration hall, $3,000.

Mr. OLIVER: I am requested to ask how it was that this vote was not expended. It will be observed that it was voted last year and no expenditure was made.

Mr. ROGERS: We have prepared plans under this item and have forwarded them to the Interior Department for approval, but they have not been returned yet. I understand there is some question about the location or something of that kind.

Mr. OLIVER: It is not a large amount, but there is a very large movement of people into that country. If it will ever be wanted it is wanted now.

Mr. ROGERS: It is undoubtedly a pressing necessity for the place.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it likely to go forward this summer?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, I think it is almost sure to.

Mr. OLIVER: How many buildings are rented by the Government at Grande Prairie from A. Patterson and John Patterson and what amounts of rent are paid?

Mr. ROGERS: I am unable to give a very accurate answer. I am told by the deputy that we rent the post office, but I do not know any more at the moment. I will be very glad to look up the information.

High River public building, $20,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that going forward?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are prepared, but we have not started the work yet.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the site purchased?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Macleod public building, $25,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the position there?

Mr. ROGERS: There is difficulty about the site; the site is not settled.

Vegreville public building, $25,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the position there?

Mr. ROGERS: We have the site.

Mr. OLIVER: Will anything be done this summer?

Mr. ROGERS: We will try. The plans are partly prepared.

Vermilion public building, $20,000.

Mr. OLIVER: I would ask the same questions.

Mr. ROGERS We have the site and the plans, but nothing further has been done. I would not to like to say whether it will go forward this summer.

Wainwright public building, $20,000.

Mr. OLIVER: I would make the same inquiry.

Mr. ROGERS: We have the plans, we have the site and are ready to call for tenders in that case. It will likely go forward this summer.

Kamloops drill hall, $29,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the situation there?

Mr. ROGERS: This is required for the erection of a drill hall situated 11 p.m. at the corner of Columbia street and Sixth avenue, 100 feet by 250 feet.

Victoria new drill hall, $150,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What will this cost?

Mr. ROGERS: About $300,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is that a second drill hall in Victoria?

Mr. ROGERS: No, this is the first one.

Victoria observatory, $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What will be the total cost of the observatory and the land?

Mr. ROGERS: The total cost will be $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER: There is a vote of $75,000 for the present year and there was a vote of $15,000 for the past year.

Mr. ROGERS: It was started with a vote of $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: $75,000 and $15,000 make $90,000.

Mr. ROGERS: That must be an error. My deputy says that the $15,000 was for the meteorological part of it, another building altogether.

Mr. OLIVER: I have been trying to track down the cost of this observatory and the telescope.

Mr. ROGERS: $55,000 will be spent on the dome and building.

Mr. OLIVER: I understood from the Minister of the Interior—of course I was mistaken—that the total cost would be $90,000 for the telescope and building. I find from the Minister of Public Works that the cost is somewhere between $75,000 and $90,000 which does not include any part of the instruments or the fittings, I suppose?

Mr. ROGERS: Just the dome. It includes $12,000 for the residence that we are not building this year.

Mr. OLIVER: So that we are investing $90,000 under the Public Works Estimates and whatever we invested under the Interior Department Estimates for the instrument is additional?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before passing from the British Columbia items, would the minister state what is to be the cost of the detention building at Vancouver?

Mr. ROGERS: The total cost is $343,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why is a new building necessary? There was a detention building erected at Vancouver not very long ago and I remember a good deal of criticism from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House as to the needless expense of that building. Apparently that building is being abandoned and a new one is being erected at a cost three or four times as much as that one cost.

Mr. ROGERS: I confess that when I was there a year ago I was very much surprised at this old building. I regarded it as a very poor building and I thought it was not in keeping with the importance of a city such as Vancouver.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There is not a large immigration at Vancouver from the sea. It was argued that no very great accommodation was required for the purpose of detaining immigrants at that city.

Mr. ROGERS: Things have changed very much in the last three or four years.

[Mr. Oliver.]

Mr. PUGSLEY: What department has pressed for this new building?

Mr. ROGERS: The immigration department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the minister any report?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not have it here.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Perhaps the minister would kindly produce that because I remember distinctly that my department was quite severely criticised by reason of the erection of what was alleged to be too expensive a building although the minister says that it is a very cheap building compared with the magnificent building he is now erecting.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken, because the building now occupied as an immigration shed is a part of the Canadian Pacific freight shed, belongs to the Canadian Pacific Railway and is used by the Government under sufferance simply as a convenience. It is convenient to the landing place of the ships. The hon. gentleman apparently refers to the criticism of some other building.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I might have had another building in mind, but I feel quite sure that it was the detention building. It was not a very expensive one.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not be criticised for the building I saw there.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Some of the members from British Columbia on the other side of the House criticised the expenditure.

Mr. STEVENS: Possibly it was at Victoria, not at Vancouver. The Government never owned an immigration building in Vancouver.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) may be right; it may have been at Victoria.

Mr. OLIVER: While the figures for public buildings of the four western provinces are quite imposing, when the re-votes are deducted they are not quite so imposing. I would call the attention of the minister to these figures:

Public buildings.	Vote.	Revote.
Manitoba..	$1,850,000	$752,500
Saskatchewan ...	806,500	711,500
Alberta	921,000	638,000
British Columbia.	1,546,500	995,500

While the figures are quite imposing, the actual expenditure is not nearly so imposing; in fact, it is only about 25 per cent of the total vote.

Mr. ROGERS: I would like to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the Estimates of which these are revotes were only passed by this House in June of last year, and the Department of Public Works did not have a very great opportunity of carrying out these works before the first of August. From that time on, as my hon. friend is well aware, we have not been pressing, as we previously did, the construction of public buildings generally. The same thing applies to all the other provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister might also call our attention to the fact that instead of bringing his Estimates on earlier so that they could be passed and, if it suited the convenience of His Royal Highness assent-to, he could get on with the work, the minister, with his usual adroitness, waits until we are wearied out at the last of the session—

Mr. ROGERS: I never credited my hon. friend with being wearied.

Mr. PUGSLEY: —when we have not the courage nor the energy to examine into these Estimates. There is a good deal o cleverness shown in that; but after all the minister should bring down his estimates early in the session and get to work expeditiously on them.

Mr. J. D. REID: If I remember aright, when my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) was minister he always brought down his Estimates at the end of the session.

Mr. PUGSLEY: No. Does not the Minister of Customs remember how he used to fight me from the beginning to end of the session, day after day, and night after night.

Mr. ROGERS: We will take advantage of an early session next year to bring down the Estimates.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The total amount asked for public works in 1912-13 was $7,601,800, and the total number asked for this year is $14,891,300, so that the increase in the past few years is alarming. The erection of public buildings is not a productive expenditure, and with a decreasing revenue it shows gross extravagance to ask close on fifteen million dollars, in a year like this when the Government finds it necessary to increase the postage, and to tax patent medicines, and to levy unusual taxes on the people. I venture to say that the erection of buildings represented by three-fourths of this fifteen million dollars could be delayed, without any loss to the country. It is a nice thing to have public buildings when you can afford it, and the total amount asked for this year is to have them, but I do not think we can afford these public buildings just now. The minister will find it difficult to defend his policy.

Mr. ROGERS: The principal expenditure has been on the harbours and rivers.

Experimental Farms—new buildings and improvements; tobacco-curing station, renewals and repairs, etc., in connection with existing buildings, fences, etc., $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How much of this is to be expended on the so-called experimental farm near Fredericton?

Mr. ROGERS: $5,858.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I say "so-called" because I am told the farm is utterly unadapted for the purposes for which it was purchased.

Mr. ROGERS: You will have to take that up with the Minister of Agriculture.

Ottawa public buildings—repairs, including ventilation and lighting, furniture, etc., $415,000.

Mr. PROULX: I hope that no more furniture will be bought for the ministers' offices, because, judging by the Auditor General's Report, enough was bought last year. I referred to this question last Saturday night.

Mr. ROGERS: You only spoke of two last Saturday night.

Mr. PROULX: I referred particularly to two, but there was new furniture for all the ministers' offices, and I hope there will not be any more purchased.

Mr. J. D. REID: There was none purchased for my office.

Mr. PROULX: You have very good furniture there already.

Dominion public buildings—rents, $675,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How much is being paid by the Government for rental in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to get that information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It has been stated by the minister, in reply to a question, that $44,000 per annum is paid by the Government for the rental of a portion of the Rea building. Is that entirely for the accommodation of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Naval Service?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: So that the very large sum of $44,000 per annum is paid as rental for the accommodation simply of one department.

Mr. ROGERS: There are really two departments.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There are two departments, but under the one minister. That $44,000 per year amounts to 4·4 per cent on a capitalization of $1,000,000, and does not the minister think it is an enormous rental to pay?

Mr. ROGERS: The space rented in the Rea building for the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Naval Service is rented at the lowest price we have paid in the city of Ottawa for years.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In considering whether rent is low or not, one must have regard to the part of a building which is occupied. I understand these are three flats which are above the store of the A. E. Rea Company, Limited, so that whether the rent is cheaper than the rent paid in other places depends somewhat upon the relative value of the upper stories as compared with the lower stories of the building.

Mr. ROGERS: My deputy minister informs me that all the space is used on the three flats.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When I was minister, there seemed to be plenty of accommodation for the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Naval Service in the western block. I realized, of course, that some additional accommodation may be needed in the near future; but we were all looking forward to the erection of new public buildings. I was astonished that it was found necessary to go outside and pay such large rents in order to give that accommodation which only three years ago was found in the western block for the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of the Naval Service. I do not understand why the demand should grow so suddenly that it is found necessary to go to this large additional expenditure.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend appears to have overlooked the fact that, while the Marine and Fisheries Department was in the western block, it had four or five other offices in other parts of the city of Ottawa, in the Corry building on Sussex street, the Birks building and the Canadian building, all of which have been vacated by that department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the Canadian building been vacated?

Mr. ROGERS: The tidal service is still there.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Canadian building is still being occupied by the Government and the rent is still being paid by the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: We assembled the whole department under the one roof.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What department is occupying the buildings vacated by the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. ROGERS: The Customs Department in the western block; the Printing Bureau took the Sussex street block, and the Department of the Interior took the Canadian building. The Corry building has been given up.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, with the exception of the Corry building, all the other buildings rented three years ago are still occupied by departments of the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Take the Customs Department. There seemed to be plenty of room in the western block for that department. I never heard there was any overcrowding, and there has not been any large increase in the number of clerks to cause them to want one more room. I really find it difficult to believe that it has become necessary to rent all these additional buildings during the last three years.

Mr. J. D. REID: Some of the branches of the Customs Department were in outside buildings. I think the cheque branch and part of the statistics branch were moved into the western block when the Department of Marine and Fisheries vacated it. It is more convenient to have the cheque branch and the statistics branch, in fact that Department of Customs generally altogether. The statistics branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce also took part of the offices vacated by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the western block.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand it is more convenient to have larger accommodation so that the clerks can move around without being too near each other, but the expenditure to which the Public Works Department has gone during the last three years is simply appalling.

Mr. ROGERS: You mean with regard to rent; you do not mean our department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I mean the general expenditure. One expenditure is in harmony with another. It is a case of increasing expenditure all around. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has drawn attention to it. I would like the Minister of Customs to take for a moment the figures of the last three years. It was he who told the people of St. John that if they wanted larger accommodation the expenditure of more millions of dollars, all they had to do was to come to the Customs Department and get all the money they wanted. It is such extravagance as that, which he has been holding out to his colleague the Minister of Public Works, that has led him astray and kept him from keeping a tight rein on expenditure. In the three years ended the 31st of March, 1912, the total expenditure on account of both capital and income, of the Department of Public Works, amounted to $36,000,000, whereas in the three years ended the 31st of March, 1915, taking the Estimates of last year as the basis of expenditure, the total expenditure amounted to $86,000,000, a difference very close to $50,000,000.

Mr. BURNHAM: How many millions would a fleet have cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY: If we had had a fleet to-day of light cruisers and destroyers, no doubt they would have been able ten times over to have paid what they would have cost, in capturing ships of the enemy while this war was on, and those vessels sailing upon the Atlantic.

Mr. BURNHAM: They would have been a floating liability.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does not the Minister of Customs think those figures are calculated to startle the public of this country? Yet, with all this enormous expenditure the Minister of Customs rejoices that he has been able to get more accommodation. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) is not here to-night; but it certainly seems astonishing that to give accommodation to one department alone the enormous rent of $44,000 is being paid for three upper stories of a building, the lower stories of which are occupied as a departmental store. Those upper stories, of course, would not be necessary for the business of a departmental store, and it must be very profitable to the owners of this building to have them rented. I should think $1,000,000 or $1,100,000 would be a very good price for the whole building. As a matter of fact, three or four years ago $900,000 was regarded as a good price for that building, and I believe the owners of the building said that they would be willing to sell it to the Government at that price.

Mr. J. D. REID: That was before they put the other three stories on top.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There were not three new stories.

Mr. REID: Two or three.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think only one.

Mr. REID: The deputy minister informs me that two new stories were built.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Two extra stories on a building of that size would not cost a very large amount of money. I venture to say that they would not cost over $50,000 or $100,000.

Mr. EDWARDS: Did the A. E. Rea Company, Limited, not build an addition to the building as well as build the two new stories?

Mr. PUGSLEY: If they did, that would be for the benefit of the business as well.

Mr. REID: They have built the north end from the ground up.

Mr. EDWARDS: That would materially affect your calculations.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It would to that extent; but you can put up a very good addition to a building at from $50,000 to $100,000. It does strike me as a very large rental.

Mr. MARCIL: Do officials of the Canadian Navy occupy this building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: How many officers employed in the Canadian Navy are in this building?

Mr. ROGERS: The hon. member will have to get that information from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Minister of Customs (Mr. J. D. Reid), I notice, is in his place. About three weeks ago he promised to bring down information about the rental of a building for his department in North Sydney. I called attention to the fact that he had refused to do business directly with the owner of the building who would have rented it for $15 a month, and thought it necessary to bring in a middleman and give him twice the money. The minister said he could not believe that such a transaction had taken place. But I put a question on the Order Paper since, and the answer confirms what I said. The middleman's name is given and double the amount of the rent at which the owner would have rented the building. Perhaps the minister has looked into my statement and found it to be correct.

Mr. J. D. REID: The rental of the building in North Sydney was arranged by officials of the department. I inquired of them, and they tell me that the rental is fair. If I remember rightly, part of he building is occupied by the person from whom we have rented it, and we have only part of it.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is what I said.

Mr. REID: We could not deal with the owner if another person had the whole building under rental. I do not know about the matter, but I have confidence in the officials that they would secure the place at a reasonable rental. If there is any further information in the department I will bring it down.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is a small matter but the minister is not going to slide out of it a second time. There is no question about the facts. The owner of the building told me personally that he would have been glad to rent the building to the Customs Department at $15 a month and tried to do so, but they would not do business with him—that is the straight talk. But a stranger who had nothing to do with the building came and said: I will rent the building from you for three years. The owner rented it to him at $15 a month, and he immediately turned it over to the department at $30 a month. Pure graft on a small scale.

Mr. REID: It is a strange thing, if he wanted to rent the building to the Department of Customs, that he would not write to the department or to myself as minister. It is all very well for a man to make a statement after the building is rented; he can make any kind of a statement then, when it is too late. The Commissioner of Customs tells me that the building was rented at a fair and reasonable rate.

Mr. McKENZIE: The party who rented it from the owner had no use for the building except to rent it again. The owner tried to do business with the department before the third man came in, but they would not do business with him, but did rent it from the other party at double the price.

Mr. REID: To what officer did he want to rent it?

Mr. McKENZIE: I understand it was Mr. Cameron, the appraiser, who wanted a room.

Mr. REID: The appraiser would have nothing to do with renting a building. The collector is the one to be seen in such a matter. Why did not he go to the collector, who is an appointee of the hon. member himself.

Mr. McKENZIE: It does not make any difference; there are the facts. There is no mistake about it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The hon. gentleman says he has the facts. Will he let us know who is the officer of the Government who could have rented this place at $15? If the hon. gentleman will let us know, we will make inquiries.

Mr. McKENZIE: The building is owned by Mr. Charles Millar, who told me himself what I have stated. I did not solicit the information, and know nothing about it of my own knowledge. He told me that he wanted to rent the building to the Government, but they would not do business with him.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is very important to know what officer of the Government undertook to do that; and now that my hon. friend has gone so far with it, I think it is his duty to let us know what officer of the Government declined to take this place at $15 a month, and afterwards rented it from another party at $30 a month.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN: The same thing happened in Montreal, in the case of a building in Maisonneuve occupied as a post office. It is No. 116 Letourneau street. The building is owned by a Madame De Bellefeuille, who is a tenant of my own. The building was rented by a man at $15 a month, and he received from the Government $30 a month. She heard about it and put in a claim for the rental that the other party had been receiving . I have the name of the man in my office, and I will give it to you.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Who is the officer?

Mr. MARTIN: I have not the name of the man here, but I have it at home.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If the hon. gentleman will give us the names of officers conducting business in that way, we will attend to it.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not know whether the Prime Minister thinks it my business to inquire for the department into the rental of buildings. But that is a matter entirely within the department itself. They can find out who made the bargain; and I have not the means of doing so.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The only reason I made the inquiry was that the hon. gentleman said that he was seized of the facts. He made the statement, as I understood him, that some officer of the Government had declined to do business in respect of this building at $15 a month and had afterwards done business at $30 a month under different conditions. If that is true, very strict inquiry should be made into it. I asked the name of the officer because I understood the hon. gentleman knew it.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not. I am perfectly honest in the matter. I would give the name of the party who negotiated the business, but I do not know it. I am relying on the statement made to me by the owner of the building; and I am supported by the statement which the minister himself brought down showing that the Government is paying $30 a month for the building, while the owner says he is receiving $15.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—Advocate, widening and repairing wharf, $2,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Some hon. gentlemen who are not present this evening may wish to ask some questions with regard to these items.

Mr. ROGERS: Any hon. gentleman on the other side may ask any question he likes while these Estimates are under consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It may be well to have it understood that under items affecting New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, we may ask as to Nova Scotia, and vice versa.

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As to the dredging plant at Fort Lawrence in Nova Scotia; I should like the minister to let me know later, if he has not the information before him, what that plant is and what it cost the Government.

Cape Dauphin—boat harbour, $1,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is a sort of breakwater, I understand, to afford shelter to boats. Has anything been done in connection with it, or is it the intention of the minister to go on with it during the coming summer?

Mr. ROGERS: Nothing has been done so far. The estimated cost of the whole work is about $8,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was rather surprised to find that such a small amount had been put in for this work.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a revote from last year.

Cole harbour—wharf, $8,300.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This work was first projected by the late Government in 1911, and it has appeared in the Estimates each year ever since. I should like to know what the minister intends to do with regard to it. Does he intend to go ahead with the work, or is it put in the Estimates to tantalize the people? This is the only item of expenditure in my constituency, which has a seacoast of 150 miles. A good many small improvements, along the coast, were asked for by the fishermen, and were all refused by the minister. Some of the most important items were struck out of the Estimates as provided in 1911, including an extension to the New Harbour breakwater, which was a very important local work. New Harbour is an exposed harbour on the Atlantic coast. It was with great difficulty that the fishing population in that vicinity carried on their business at all, and when the breakwater was built about ten years ago it was so useful that a village grew up there and the place became a flourishing fishing station. The boats became so numerous that the shelter constructed at that time was not sufficient, and the late Government, acting upon the advice of the chief engineer, decided to extend the breakwater so as to give shelter to the increasing number of boats operating in that vicinity. The present minister, for some reason which I do not understand, took this $10,000 out of the Estimates, and it has not been put in since. This is an important matter to the people of that vicinity.

Mr. ROGERS: I am not acquainted with all the details of the matters to which my hon. friend has referred, but so far as this vote is concerned, it is the intention of the department to go on with the work as soon as possible. There has been some difficulty in the way of securing a proper title, by reason of the fact that it has to be obtained from certain heirs of an estate. It is largely owing to this condition that the delay has occurred.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There is a small expenditure; what is that for?

Mr. ROGERS: For a survey.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Have any proceedings been taken to settle the title?

Mr. ROGERS: We have been hoping from time to time to succeed in getting it, and if we do not get it in the near future, we propose to expropriate.

Cribbin's point—new wharf and removal of old pier, $17,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: It is a revote of $17,000, required for the purpose of strengthening the wharf with native and creosote timber and brickwork, removing the old pier and building a new retaining wall. Estimated cost, $17,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How often has that been revoted?

Mr. ROGERS: I could not say; I have only the record here that it was revoted last year.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will it be built this year?

Mr. ROGERS: I really would not like to assure my hon. friend that it will be. We will try if we possibly can get to it. It seems to be a pressing work.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There is no difficulty about the site there?

Mr. ROGERS: There is nothing in the memorandum about any difficulty.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why is my hon. friend doubtful about getting to it?

Mr. ROGERS: It will depend on our being able to get to it. My hon. friend is anxious that we should cut down the expenditure and we are anxious to please him as far as we can.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am not anxious to cut down this expenditure.

East River—improvements, $100,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is in Pictou?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, that is under contract and this is to complete it.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. SINCLAIR: You hope to get it finished this year?

Mr. ROGERS: They are at work there now.

French River—extension of breakwater pier, $2,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Which French river is that?

Mr. ROGERS: This is in Victoria county.

Mr. McKENZIE: The wharf at French river is new. Is it the intention of the minister to extend it and make it longer?

Mr. ROGERS: This is towards the construction of an extension of 100 feet, and the cost is placed at $4,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: The first section of the breakwater or wharf is only a year or so old. Can the minister tell what depth of water they will have at the outer end of the extension?

Mr. ROGERS: This is to increase the depth from four to nine feet at low water.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am sorry that it is not being extended a little farther. It will be of no service to increase it to that depth, except as a shelter. The only boat which can give a service there has a draft of 12 feet. If it could be extended out to a depth of 12 feet it would be very much more serviceable.

Mr. ROGERS: We will try to extend that further another year.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is not an isolated case. The minister built a wharf in my constituency for a boat to call at, but the depth of water is not enough for the boat to call.

Mr. ROGERS: We will have to try and correct that.

Inverness—harbour improvements, $15,000.

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM: What was done here last year?

Mr. ROGERS: Nothing was done here last year.

Mr. CHISHOLM: There was some expenditure last year. It may have been taken out of the general vote.

Mr. ROGERS: That may be. This is simply a revote of $15,000 voted last year.

Mr. CHISHOLM: How much was expended there the year before last?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not that information here, but I can get it from the department.

Mr. CHISHOLM: The minister has no knowledge of the work done there a few years ago and how it has stood the storms and whether it is in a satisfactory condition now. I would suggest that he ascertain these facts and also how the money has been expended. There was considerable money expended on the work, and very substantial work was done up to two years ago. Since then my information is that the work has been rather slipshod, and I would suggest that the minister look into it and see just what is being done. Is it the intention to spend this money this year?

12 m.

Mr. ROGERS: We will have it looked into and if it is very pressing we will be glad to give it as favourable consideration as possible, along with other public works.

Mr. CHISHOLM: It is very pressing, I can assure the minister. This is a work which was commenced four or five years ago and which is very important.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, the House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. Tuesday.

Tuesday, April 6, 1915.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. D. C. ROSS (West Middlesex): I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question in reference to the compensation to be paid in respect of animals infected with foot and mouth disease which may be destroyed. As the Prime Minister has told us, the old Compensation Act was passed nine or ten years ago, and the rate of compensation stipulated for in that Act is not commensurate with the price of cattle at the present time. If this disease should spread in Ontario the graziers and farmers will consequently not receive proper compensation for slaughtered animals. In my opinion the Government should this session amend the Act, so that those whose cattle are destroyed in the public interest may be adequately recompensed.

Hon. MARTIN BURRELL (Minister of Agriculture): I would prefer if my hon. friend would raise the question when my Estimates come up, but in the meantime I may say that there is no Act dealing with the foot and mouth disease.

Mr. ROSS: I understand that.

Mr. BURRELL: If the disease should spread in this country, and I do not think it likely, speaking off-hand, I do not think the Act would govern; I think we should have to deal with it in a different manner. I will get the information later and let my hon. friend know.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), the House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 74, to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. DOHERTY: I hardly think that the Bill is improved by the amendments made by the Senate, but nevertheless I am prepared to accept them. Section 1 as it left the House made it an indictable offence to incite or assist any subject of any foreign state or country at war with His Majesty to leave Canada, and section 1 contained these words:

> If the circumstances of the case do not exclude the possibility that assistance to the enemy is an intended object in his so leaving Canada, and if such inciting or assisting do not amount to treason.

The Senate struck out these words and inserted in lieu thereof:

> Without the consent of the Crown, unless the person accused shall prove that assistance to the enemy was not intended, and providing, that such inciting or assisting does not amount to treason.

The difference is not very material. Another amendment consists simply in modifying the provisions constituting infringement of copyright a criminal offence, by making it applicable only in express terms to copyrights which subsist in Canada. I think in any event without these words our law could only apply to Canada. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Amendments concurred in.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 121, to amend the Supreme Court Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 1—appeal in election cases, where appeal is given by local legislature:

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill is introduced in view of the fact that the province of Manitoba, by its Controverted Elections Act of 1913, has provided that there shall be an appeal in controverted election cases to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Provincial Legislature, of course, has no power to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of Canada, which is a Dominion court; but, inasmuch as by its legislation the legislature of that province has in effect declared that it is desirable that there should be an appeal, and so far as is in its power has created that appeal, it would seem that this Parliament, which alone has power to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to hear and determine such an appeal, should give that jurisdiction. This legislation creates no appeal of itself; it merely confers upon the Supreme Court of Canada jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeals, wherever a Provincial Legislature determines that such an appeal is desirable and ought to be had.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have no intention of opposing this legislation; but in my opinion it is rather dangerous. It was only yesterday that we had a long discussion upon the difficulty of getting a final decision in controverted election cases, and we are this session in this Parliament passing new legislation to expedite as much as possible the hearing and determining of such cases under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. If I have a fault to find with our judicial system, it is that in the province to which my hon. friend and I belong there is an appeal in such cases to the Supreme Court of Canada. In Manitoba there is an appeal from the trial judge to the Court of King's Bench sitting as a court of review, and another appeal from that court to the Court of Appeal. Under this legislation there would be still another appeal; so that I think we are not conferring a favour upon the province of Manitoba by passing this legislation. I understand that it is the wish of the legislature of Manitoba; but, even so, I would not be disposed to mix up federal matters with provincial matters. If I had an amendment to move to this legislation, I would move that provincial laws should be administered by provincial courts, and federal laws by federal courts. My hon. friend has, however, thought differently, and I merely wish to call his attention to the point I have mentioned, which I believe he will find worthy of consideration.

Mr. DOHERTY: In so far as the desirability of creating such an appeal is concerned, I share in very large measure, if not entirely, the views which the right hon. gentleman has just expressed. If it were a matter of considering the legislation of the legislature of the province of Manitoba in this regard, I would probably concur in the view that he has expressed, and I think there is also very much to be said for the view that we should have these matters speedily settled. The reason which leads me to propose this legislation is that it seems to me that questions concerning the composition of the legislature of a province are in a peculiar manner questions which that legislature itself should determine, and it is therefore a fair thing that, when the legislature of a province has itself determined that it is desirable that upon questions concerning controverted elections there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, we should make it possible for that to be carried out. In fact, the motive that leads me to move this legislation is the recognition which I think ought to be given to the absolute right of the legislature of a province itseslf to determine the best process or means by which elections to that legislature should be determined.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Have any of the provinces asked for this legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: The province of Manitoba has legislated providing for such an appeal, and has, following upon that, asked that we make it possible for such an appeal to be entertained. As I said at the outset, this legislation does not give an appeal; it merely provides that, where the legislature of a province sees proper to create such a right of appeal, then the Supreme Court of Canada shall have jurisdiction to hear that appeal.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I concur entirely in the observations of the right hon. gentleman opposite in regard to this matter. I do not believe in an appeal from the supreme court of a province to the Supreme Court of Canada regarding controverted elections in that province, and I never have done so. From a logical standpoint, such an appeal should not be entertained, because the legislature itself should determine who should sit in the legislature. It has delegated that power to the supreme court of the province, and I believe no power beyond the territorial limits of that province should in reason have a right to determine or consider who shall sit in its legislature. In the province of Alberta, where we have legislation by which an election petition is regarded as a suit in a court, an attempt was made two years ago to bring an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada; but that court rejected it, saying it was outside of its jurisdiction. This will enable provincial appeals to be entertained, with the resultant delay in having an appeal heard so many miles away from the place where the case arose; but other provinces have this right and provide for it in their Controverted Election Acts, so that if we desire to have the law uniform I suppose we must pass this legislation, but I am very strongly opposed to the principle of it.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. member thinks that this legislation would give the right to appeal a case such as is referred to from the province of Alberta, I venture to think his idea is unfounded, because we have carefully provided that the jurisdiction to hear and determine shall exist only where the legislature has given an appeal from the provincial courts in a proceeding under any provincial Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I know.

Mr. DOHERTY: Unless the Legislature of Alberta has expressly provided that there should be an appeal in election cases, this legislation will not give an appeal.

Mr. BENNETT: But in the province they say an election case shall be treated as a case in the Supreme Court, and so, inferentially, this legislation may be construed to authorize an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We are simply giving effect to the desire of the Legislature of Manitoba, which is a very respectable reason. I do not know the circumstances which have led the Legislature of Manitoba to enact this legislation, but I should be very much surprised if that reason were not that they were dissatisfied with some decision of the court. That is always the case; a certain law is passed to affect a certain case, and we violate the principle which should be inviolate—that provincial laws shall be interpreted by provincial courts and federal laws by federal courts. This section reads:

> The Supreme Court of Canada shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any appeal from the judgment of any provincial court in any proceeding under any provincial controverted election Act, whereby such an appeal is given.

Are these words sufficient to restrict the appeal to those cases in which appeal is allowed under provincial legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think so. That was the intention in adopting that wording. I may say that the wording of the original draft did not make reference to a Controverted Elections Act in express terms. For the purpose of making it quite clear that we were merely conferring power to hear and determine where the Controverted Election Act of the province allows an appeal, I adopted this wording. If there is any wording that will make it clearer I shall be glad to adopt it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Civil Government—Department of Agriculture—salaries, $439,637.50.

Mr. PARDEE: There is an increase here of $26,000; how does that arise?

Hon. MARTIN BURRELL (Minister of Agriculture): There are no special increases in our Civil Service vote—only the statutory increases and the few additions that naturally come with the increase of the work.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Last year the hon. minister had 319 employees in his department, and this year he is making provision for 335, an increase of 16.

Mr. BURRELL: A good many increases are necessitated by the fact that, whereas we have been in the habit of engaging a great many temporary employees, which is often very unsatisfactory, we are arranging to put on the permanent list those that we know we shall require permanently. Most of the classes are exactly the same as last year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There may be a good reason for the increase; but the hon. minister rather boasted that there were no increases in his department, and this takes away from his claim. This vote for salaries is increased from $413,637.50 last year to $439,637.50 this year, an increase of $26,000.

Mr. BURRELL: There are no increases, the right hon. gentleman will see, down to the second division, subdivision B. In that subdivision we have an increase of 12. The first of these appointments is that of Mr. Fixter, who is connected with the Central Experimental Farm. He has been hitherto in the outside service. As nearly all the employees of the Central Experimental Farm are in the permanent inside service, it was thought desirable that Mr. Fixter also should be transferred to the inside service.

Provision has been made for a stenographer for the poultry branch, French and English stenographers for the translation office, another clerk for the meat and canned foods office, a clerk for the dairying branch, and another patent examiner. Provision is made also for five vacancies. As my right hon. friend knows, the work of the Agricultural Department cannot expand as it has been expanding without a natural increase in the clerical staff. We have kept it down as much as possible consistent with the expansion of the work of the department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We will vote the money without further discussion if you will promise to provide us with a better crop this year than we had last year.

Arts and Agriculture—Experimental farms—maintenance of central farm and establishing and maintaining of additional branch stations, $785,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has my hon. friend made provision for an experimental farm in the clay belt district of the Transcontinental railway?

Mr. BURRELL: We have not done that, except in this way: Under the provisions of the war vote last year it was thought desirable to employ the interned Austrian and German prisoners in clearing the land in some portion of northern Ontario and northern Quebec, so that the land could ultimately be used for the demonstration of the possibilities of agriculture in those districts. An arrangement was accordingly made with the governments of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario to give so much land for this purpose, and I think 1,000 acres in the clay belt were given by each province. I have not the exact particulars of the work up to date, but I know that some of the land has been cleared, and the timber which has been cut is to be used for the erection of the necessary buildings. So far as our department goes, we are trying to direct that work so as to make it most useful for demonstration purposes in order to induce settlement in these northern districts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: So far as it goes, the work may be useful, but I suggest to my hon. friend that it would be advisable to establish an experimental farm in this northern district as soon as possible.

[Mr. Burrell.]

Climate has a great deal to do with the nature of soil; I understand that the soil is extremely fertile in that district. I have seen vegetables which were grown in that country and which were not surpassed by anything I have seen anywhere. The crop last year was not favourable, for some reason. There is no question about the fact that it would be advisable to have an experimental farm there in order to demonstrate the best method of cultivating that particular soil.

Mr. BURRELL: I can assure my hon. friend that that is my desire; our efforts along that line are in that direction.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: How many prisoners are there in the detention camps there?

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot give my right hon. friend the exact number; I think there are some hundreds in each. That does not come under this department, except in so far as we are making suggestions as to the direction of the work in order to make it useful from the agricultural standpoint.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: I wish to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in some of the experimental farms the poultry which the government has is of a very poor class. I do not think that any farmer would have on his farm the kind of poultry which they have on the experimental farm at Charlottetown. They have the Leghorn hens there, which lay a very small egg—it is not even a first-class Leghorn. I do not believe in experimenting with poultry; it takes too long to bring results. The Government can get in Canada to-day better poultry than can be obtained elsewhere in the world, but they do not see fit to obtain such poultry and to put them on the experimental farms. Private persons in Canada have a much better class of poultry than they have at the experimental farms. In the experimental farms they have not the Barred Plymouth Rocks or the Rhode Island Reds, the very best breeds which can be found in Canada. The birds which the experimental farms are raising are poor birds. They lay eggs during the winter months, better, perhaps, than the birds which I have mentioned, but they are not utility birds, and they should not be put before the people of Canada as an example or how to get the best results from poultry. I think the minister should investigate this matter. The men who are in charge of these farms have been educated at the universities; they may be very good men from the theoretical standpoint, but they do not know as much about the practical part of the work as the men who have obtained their information from practical experience. In many cases they refuse to take the advice of men who have been in this business and who know it from the ground up. They dictate to the practical man; they tell him what he should do—and they put upon the experimental farms a class of poultry which no farmer would have on his farm and which is absolutely useless for utility purposes.

Mr. BURRELL: I appreciate what my hon. friend said, and if there is anything in his criticism which is based on fact, I need hardly assure him that I shall have it looked into and remedied. I do not need to assure the committee or my hon. friend that the desire of myself and of the department is to put this work in such shape as to make it of most benefit, from a practical standpoint, to the farmers of the country. Our poultry work during the last two or three years has enormously expanded, to the general satisfaction, I think, of the practical poultrymen of the country. As to the officers whom we have employed in connection with the Central Experimental Farm, I think I ought to reply to my hon. friend by pointing out that in Mr. Elford, the chief of the poultry division, the poultrymen of Canada have one of the best-posted men in the whole country. Mr. Fortier, who has been there a good many years, is a thoroughly practical man, as is Mr. Robertson, who is thoroughly well acquainted with all phases of poultry work in Canada. If there is anything that these officers are not doing that they should do to promote the special interest of the poultrymen, I can only assure my hon. friend that I shall be glad to take it up and see that the grievance is remedied.

Mr. KNOWLES: There is one point in connection with experimental farms which I wish to impress upon the minister. The largest development of immigration that there has been in western Canada has been into southwestern Saskatchewan. I do not say that the immigration there has been larger than all the rest put together, but the greatest manifestation of immigration has been in the country south of Moosejaw, Gull Lake, Maple Creek, etc. The reason that that country has been the geographical scene of that activity is that for so many years it was considered to be a dry belt, and was for that reason disregarded and rejected by the homesteaders. I think that a district that has been the centre of immigration activity should receive a great deal of the minister's attention at the same time. The very fact that the land in this so-called dry belt was left to the very last must be evidence that it is a different kind of land from the larger part of Saskatchewan and, of course, those of us who know the West know that that is true. It requires a different kind of farming. If the experimental farms are for anything it is to teach the people a kind of farming that is not the ordinary farming in the province or in the whole country. In that whole district, into which have gone tens of thousands of people, there has not been the slightest attention paid by the present Government to the question of establishing an experimental farm. I cannot impress this on the minister too emphatically. The country is one that requires teaching. The same kind of farming will not do there as is employed around Regina or Calgary or Lethbridge or Edmonton. It is a country all by itself. In years when we have lots of rain and the crops turn out favourably the people are well off, but they need to be taught how to farm under other conditions. In southwest Saskatchewan, for twenty years, while the rest of Saskatchewan was being settled, that country was looked on as a purely ranching district. But now the railways have gone in there, towns have sprung up and it is becoming thickly settled. The minister may say that he has established a farm in Alberta. That does not fill the bill. In the first place I do not think the establishment of that farm is a serious attempt to solve the problem. The Lethbridge country, where that farm is situated, is largely an irrigation district, in fact the experimental farm there is partly an irrigation farm. True, at that farm there is some kind of lecturing on dry farming, but, in the first place, it is too far away from us; it is altogether out of our line of travel; our homesteaders have no chance or purpose to take them into south Alberta; and, apart from that, it is a different kind of farming from what is required in southern Saskatchewan.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE: Is it not a demonstration farm that you want?

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not familiar with the technical terms used in the department. What I want is a demonstration farm all right. We want a farm that will demonstrate how to farm under the circumstances.

Mr. SHARPE: Like the one at Indian Head.

Mr. KNOWLES: That would be splendid; even a smaller one would do. The late Government when it went out was on the point of purchasing a farm in the district I speak of. Perhaps the minister does not even know that the establishment of an experimental farm 75 miles southwest of Moosejaw was authorized by the late minister.

Mr. BURRELL: I am not aware of that.

Mr. KNOWLES: The money was not voted and the arrangement did not go through. If the minister had taken enough interest to investigate he would have found out that the late Government had even arranged to secure a farm southwest of Moosejaw to demonstrate, as well as the Government could demonstrate, the method of farming which would be most profitable in that country. I feel that I need offer no apology for taking up time to discuss this subject, which is of tremendous importance not only to that province but to the whole of Canada. If the new homesteaders do not learn a successful method of farming they will be in a terrible state. With the markets closed against them and the taxes piled on them that this Government has put on, why I feel sorry for them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is all right to laugh. There was not a foot of that country surveyed when I became a member, and it was on my recommendation that it was surveyed. So I feel that I have a special interest in those settlers, every one of whom has gone in there while I was the representative of that district, and I would feel a small representative if I did nothing but sit here and laugh when their wants are mentioned in this House. With markets closed against them, with the taxes piled on them, with the banks and implement firms grinding them under their heels, it is a terrible condition and the least I can do is to ask that the minister should establish without any delay a good demonstration farm in that new country to the southwest of Moosejaw and, if possible, show the most profitable use to which that land can be put and the most favourable method of farming in that district. I make this suggestion in all friendliness to my hon. friend the minister and would be glad to have him to take it up.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: I think the great difficulty was that the land should never have been opened for homesteading at all, and that the fault lies entirely with the late Government. There is a section of country there that formerly was occupied by ranchers, and I think experience will prove that the land should not have been opened for homesteading.

Mr. KNOWLES: You might say that all of Saskatchewan, Moosejaw and Souris, and all that country, was formerly occupied by Indians and should be kept by them.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: I understood the hon. member to say that there was a difference in the conditions in southwestern Saskatchewan and that that was why an experimental farm was needed to demonstrate how that section of country should be farmed. Everybody knows why settlers did not go into that country. Why was it necessary to give a purchased homestead or an extra pre-emption? Because it was clearly manifest that they considered the land was not like the other land in the three western provinces. There is no question about that, and it is being proven to-day that that section of country should never have been opened for homesteaders.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I remember the day when there were pamphlets circulated by high authority stating that wheat could not be grown in the valley of the Red river above Fort Garry. All these theories have been proved to be untrue. The same may be true also of the section of country referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not think the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) need apologize for bringing this matter to the attention of the House or to my own notice. I may say that all of these things are being attended to. Although I am not a representative of a constituency on the western prairie, I am fairly familiar with the conditions all through that district, and I have as warm a sympathy as any man can have with the settlers there, as I have been closely identified with agriculture in a practical way for many years. I am strongly desirous, as the Government is, of relieving the conditions as far as the Government can do so. There are now three experimental farms in Saskatchewan: one at Indian Head, which has rendered excellent service to the country, under the direction of Mr. McKay, another at Scott, and a third at Rosthern. The last two have been extended in order to do more experimental work with stock. I quite admit that they have not quite fulfilled the needs of the southern country to which my hon. friend alludes. Every part of the country naturally would like to see a demonstration or experimental farm established in a particular county. We have hesitated for some time because we have always had the feeling that with the Federal Government lies particularly the duty of carrying on experimental work for the whole country, whereas showing by object lesson, in a practical way, how to carry out the results of these experiments is more the part of the provinces. It is purely for that reason that we have hesitated from year to year about invading that field. Manitoba, British Columbia, Ontario, and I think some of the other provinces have done a certain amount of work in that direction. Last year I was asked by the Prime Minister to interview both the Alberta and the Saskatchewan governments, and to investigate as far as I could the conditions in the drouth-stricken area. That investigation brought home to my mind the fact that conditions there were extraordinary, and that something would have to be done. I am not going into the question raised by my hon. friend whether it was wise or not to open up that large district. That is a debatable point. But it has been opened up, and is now largely settled. They have schools and all kinds of municipal activities, and I hardly see how any government could abandon the country. We have, therefore, to do the best we can to develop it, and I think we were thoroughly justified in taking up this demonstration work. My hon. friend suggests that I have not given any attention to that kind of work, but I want to assure him that we have given it our most sympathetic and earnest attention. I went into the question very fully during the five or six weeks prior to going to California, and made up my mind to establish twenty or thirty demonstration stations all through that dry belt in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta. Our Director of Farms has been out there, together with two very capable young graduates of Manitoba College who are to assist him in the work. We expect these twenty or thirty stations to be thoroughly organized and in work this year, our object being simply to prove to the farmers of that country that if proper methods of rotation are followed they will, even in a dry season, be able to get at least some crop. In that connection, I may say that when I was looking over the drouth-stricken district, I saw right next to farms that had not a single spear of grain other farms, which having been properly summer-fallowed, had as much as fifteen or twenty bushels to the acre. I quite appreciate the fact that a great many of the farmers who have gone out there know little about the conditions of the country, and that it is up to us to do something; and I sincerely hope that the work which we have already started will be of some practical value to these people, and enable them to hold on to what they have got and make better use of it.

Mr. KNOWLES: I thank the minister for what he has stated. I should like to ask if this vote will include the organizing of these farms?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: As this is certainly a new departure, I think the minister should have told us something about it on the introduction of his Estimates.

Mr. BURRELL: This is the introduction of my Estimates.

Mr. KNOWLES: The introduction is getting pretty near the end. Perhaps the minister would tell us where these farms will be, who is going to buy them, and whether they will be operated this year?

Mr. BURRELL: I have been away for the last six weeks, and so am not very familiar with the details. But before I went to California I had outlined the whole work. This demonstration work is in one sense a new policy, but in another it is not. The experimental farm system, even under the late Government, has always included a certain amount of demonstration as well as experimental work; so that really it is not a new principle, but an extension of a principle that has always been recognized. We do not propose to buy any of these farms, but to select forty or fifty acres in a thoroughly typical section of each of these districts. We shall choose stations that will be get-at-able by all the farmers in the district, and put in charge the man who already owns that land, and who will be a practical, sound farmer. He will have to carry out our instructions as regards the routine of crops, and we shall keep a complete record of the work. The expense will be small; about $400 or $500 for each plot. I am hopeful that this policy will benefit the people of the whole country, and that we shall get the work thoroughly started this year.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the land be rented, and the Government own the crop; will the work be done by day labour, and will these college boys have charge of it?

Mr. BURRELL: I said that we were sending out two graduates of Manitoba College to assist in the work. The director, who knows the conditions out there pretty well, will of course be at the head of the work, and under him will be Mr. John Fixter, who is a thoroughly practical and reliable man, and who for the last few years has been with the Conservation Commission. He will be largely responsible for the work. I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend all the details, but I think my hon. friend from Calgary, who has been out there lately, may have more recent information than I have and may be able to enlighten my hon. friend.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: With the observations made by the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) I think most of us who live in the West are very heartily in accord. We realize that in order to get successful results we must have two things: first, good seed; and, second, proper cultivation. Dr. Rutherford, who is in charge of the agricultural work in connection with the Canadian Pacific's undertaking near Calgary, pointed out only recently that while those farmers in the drouth-stricken area who had not properly cultivated their soil had failed with their crops twice, other farmers in that same district who had properly cultivated their soil and done the necessary summer-fallowing, had been able to obtain a crop under the most adverse conditions. Many of us have pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture and the Government the necessity of establishing some demonstration plots throughout the territory; not experimental farms, as the hon. gentleman has just suggested, not a utilization in the first instance of what the hon. member for Kings has described as college and academic men, but rather the utilization of the good farmer in every district. For there is always in every district a good farmer, some man who is a better husbandman than his neighbour, who cultivates his soil more properly, who selects his seed with care, who estimates weeds, and whose crop gives better results. We all know this kind of farmer; and the idea of the department, so far as I understand it, is to use the farm of such a man for the demonstration station. Mr. Grisdale, who is well known to us all, and Mr. Fixter, who was with the Conservation Commission, have been sent out to look over the drouth-stricken area, and select 40 acres at points that will be visible to every person passing along the main travelled highway. They will pay the farmer who owns that 40 acres a small sum, for he has to plant the seed and cultivate the ground in the manner that is indicated as best by the men who are supervising the work for the Department of Agriculture. The Government will buy the seed, under certain conditions, and the crop will belong to the farmer. The idea is to show what good seed and good cultivation will do. It is to be an ocular demonstration, which, after all, is the best kind of demonstration, of what good seed and good farming will accomplish in any locality. I was out West only a few days ago, and I understand that Mr. Grisdale has been going over the territory and selecting twenty-five or thirty points at which to establish these demonstration plots. These plots will be in charge, not of college men, as has been suggested, but of the farmers who have been getting the best results in their own particular locality. This kind of farmer is to be asked to permit the use of 40 acres of his land for a visible demonstration of what good farming will do. That is how I understand the matter from my discussions with the director, who is now out West.

Of course, there would be none of them in my particular locality. They are all south of that in the drouth-stricken area because it was decided by the Government that in the area east of Calgary the Canadian Pacific railway was carrying on that class of work, and that the Government need not duplicate it in these places. Neither will this work be carried on at points where the local government has small demonstration plots, such as that at Medicine Hat. In the territory of my hon. friend from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) there are two or three such plots, and I think the director told me that he was arranging to establish one or two in the locality to which the hon. member from Moosejaw has referred, but the difficulty was, having started the plans last fall, to find a particular piece of land that was in such a state of cultivation that it might be used to afford an accurate demonstration to the rest of the community, of what may be done by proper cultivation and good seed.

I think the real value of these demonstration plots cannot be overestimated. If

I had my way in western Canada, I would see a thousand of them established in the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan within a very short time. That sounds very extreme, but when you come to think of the enormous area of these two provinces and when you come to think of the kind of settlers we are bringing in, my idea is not far wrong. We are bringing men to our land who are not used to cultivation of that particular kind of soil; men who have not been able to understand the true value of good seed and who are not themselves able to make those experiments which are necessary to get the best results. The Government has placed at the disposal of the settlers a seed-germinating laboratory, and they have given that supervision and instruction which is essential for the purpose of obtaining the best results. We provide for these settlers small demonstration plots—as I have said, I hope there will be a thousand of them in the two western provinces before many years—which afford visible evidence, which is the best evidence, to the farmers of the locality of what may be accomplished by good husbandry, proper cultivation, and good seed, and this will cost the country little or nothing.

Mr. KNOWLES: The arrangement is only for one year at a time.

Mr. BENNETT: That was what was originally proposed, but I understand it is to be extended for a period of three years.

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, for three years.

Mr. BENNETT: Three years was the period mentioned for the purpose of establishing what would be the best system of rotation of crops, it being felt that if you merely took a piece of land for one year and took a crop off it, you would not be able to indicate to the settlers of that locality what would be the best rotation of crops to secure the best results in the cultivation of the land there. I feel very sanguine as to the results which will come from this. I am very hopeful that in northern Alberta, where there are very large numbers of Galician settlers, the establishment of such demonstration plots will do the very greatest amount of good, because these men are really ambitious to make good farmers. I have observed that a large proportion of our foreign population shows perhaps the greatest ambition to become good farmers, but the difficulty they experience is to understand exactly what is the best rotation of crops, how best to summer fallow, and how to get the best results from proper cultivation. I think this experiment will teach them that. This experiment, small though it is, and only involving twenty-five or thirty demonstration plots, is in my judgment a move in the right direction and one that will do incalculable benefit to our western country.

I am satisfied that if we are to continue a wild system of settlement in the West we will not obtain any commensurate results for the money we expend. The day of people settling far remote from railways where neighbours are ten miles apart, must pass, and the only hope we have is to bring about a system of settlement in the West which will be based upon a scientific principle, whereby townships will be settled with proper settlers and demonstration plots will be established throughout those townships, so that there will be a real incentive to men to do the very best that is in them, and to obtain the very best possible results from the cultivation of the soil. It will also, in my judgment, lead to the establishment of a sort of social centre in these townships whereby the loneliness incident to the system of settlement followed up to the present time will pass away, and so that there will be happiness and comfort to those who are homesteading in these townships. Without some broad, comprehensive, and far-reaching settlement scheme in western Canada. I look for no great progress along the line of increase of population of a permanent and staple nature. I welcome this experiment, and I think everybody in the West does, as being a move that must inevitably result in a better and more comprehensive scheme of settlement, the introduction of a better system of husbandry, and, more content, more happiness, and what perhaps is of more value still, greater wealth to the state.

Mr. KNOWLES: I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) for giving us this information, but I think the minister should be possessed of the details of this a little better, because he has been back from California quite a while and he has his deputy beside him to give him the information. I think the minister shows a little absence of that tense interest he should have in such a serious problem, but no doubt he has been busy with other things. I am not going to say I am against this scheme; in fact I would like to see the minister do a great deal more than this. I was sorry to hear the minister say: I do not see how we could abandon that country and these people. The very suggestion of abandoning that country is a joke. It is a grand country; there is no need of the minister saying: We would think of abandoning it but we do not dare to.

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot allow that statement of the hon. member to go unchallenged. I have made no suggestion about abandoning that country. What I stated was that the Prime Minister asked me to interview the people in the West when the suggestion was made here and there that the country might better not have been settled, and when it was an open question with some as to whether it would pay to go on developing it. My view was that such an idea could not be entertained for one moment, and that we should go on with our work in that district. I never thought of suggesting that it should be abandoned.

Mr. KNOWLES: I took the minister's words down and he certainly referred to a suggestion about abandoning the country.

Mr. BURRELL: I am sure my hon. friend does not want to do me an injustice.

Mr. KNOWLES: Absolutely no, and I do not think the minister ever thought of abandoning it, but he should not speak as if he thought of such a thing because it will give a wrong impression. As for the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) saying that the country should not have been settled, I say it is as good a district as the average district in the West, and it will do itself credit in a few years when the people really get on their feet. They went in there poor people, they have met with great hardships and reverses, they have been away from railways, they have had to haul their flax and wheat seventy or eighty miles, but in spite of it all they have stood up four-square to every wind that blew, and to-day they are doing well there, despite everything else except the drouth which came on this year, when they expected to pay off their debts. The idea of saying it is a debatable point whether the country ever should have been opened up is too absurd to be mentioned in this House. It is a splendid country. South of Moosejaw fifty miles and southwest of Gravelbourg they had this year very good crops and there is no relief work there. But further west the rains did not come this year, and if you are going to lay that down as a reason for abandoning them or saying that the country should never have been opened up, then there is an enormous part of Canada which has towns, and railways, and churches, and everything else that the people may well clear out of. Surely we are not going to say, because we have had the worst year for fifteen or sixteen years, that a district so stricken is to be deserted.

I do not understand the scheme well enough to be able to approve of it or to criticise it. It seems a kind of buckshot proposition, a little scattering here and there. I do not think many of my constituents will go to see how another farmer twenty or thirty miles away, is going to cultivate a small plot, and I think the Government would have been better advised had they established real experimental farms situated near a railway, which the people would think it worth while to visit.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: That would be too academic. They want to have the farmer himself do this work under proper supervision.

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not think it would be too academic. The minister was once a very fine lecturer on agriculture, and see what a fine robust man he is to-day—a typical farmer, every inch of him. I do not think that, because a man has been through an agricultural college, he is any worse a farmer.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The fact that a man has been through a university does not make him a lawyer.

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not think it keeps him from being a lawyer either; and if it does not help him, it certainly does not hurt him. These demonstration plots will be such little, picayune affairs—I hope they will not be, but if you are going to scatter about twenty of them over the prairies, you are going to have something which perhaps one or two neighbours will look at, but which it will not be worth any one leaving his work and going far to see.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: A farmer will have to pass one of these plots every day he goes to market. It is going to be situated on a highway and usually at a corner, so that as he goes to market, even if he does not want to see it, he will have to see it willy-nilly.

Mr. KNOWLES: I understand the whole matter. In my district, which is about 200 miles long by 200 miles wide, there will be two of these plots.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I was speaking only from very hazy knowledge.

Mr. KNOWLES: Well, suppose there are half-a-dozen stuck in my district. The number of people, who will pass a certain corner and see the plot there willy-nilly will be a very small proportion of the people in my large constituency.

Mr. EDWARDS: A still smaller proportion would see the thoroughly-equipped experimental farms that my hon. friend advocates.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend has a right to his own opinions, but I do not entertain that view. Thousands of people go to our Indian Head experimental farm every year.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The difficulty that I have found in the West is this: The Canadian Pacific have been carrying on large experiments; and as that company has a great deal of money, the average farmer has said to me: "They are absolutely no good to me, Mr. Bennett, because the Canadian Pacific has lots of money; I want something demonstrated that I can do with the limited capital that I have." That is what has brought me down to the position I now occupy of advocating demonstration plots, so that the man of small capital and limited means may be able to see what his neighbour similarly situated has been able to accomplish with good seed under proper supervision.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend is begging the question. I do not think it follows, that because money is spent on a farm on a large scale, the education derived from that farm is any the less.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the farmer sometimes thinks.

Mr. KNOWLES: I must take exception to that. As regards my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), I think people will go to experimental farms. In my district we have special excursions to the Indian Head experimental farm from all parts of the compass. Husbands and their wives and children come to the experimental farm in large numbers; and the women look at the things that interest them, such as shade trees, poultry, dairy produce, etc., and the men at anything that interests them, until it is time to return. It is idle to say that men will not go to experimental farms. If that is the custom in Ontario, perhaps the people there are so dashed wise that they will not learn anything; but while the people in my district are willing to go to experimental farms, I am sure they will not go very much out of their way to see this little bit of a plot which the hon. member for Calgary says they must see willy or nilly when they go to market.

Mr. BENNETT: Not willy, nor nilly-willy-nilly.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sorry I had not the gentleman's name right, but the Hansard man will get it correct.

Mr. EDWARDS: It seems to me the hon. member has concerned himself more with the question whether the Department of Agriculture of the Government is going to do something that will be a credit to the Government than he has about the farmers.

Mr. KNOWLES: I did not catch that.

Mr. EDWARDS: You will see it in Hansard to-morrow.

Mr. KNOWLES: I thank the hon. gentleman for his courtesy. I will not be bothered looking, because I know it is no good anyway.

Mr. EDWARDS: It will, of course, be in the judgment of the House whether it is or not. I was referring to something that the hon. member said, and of course it is quite possible it was not of much value.

The right hon. leader of the Opposition, in advocating a farm for the clay-belt, touched a very important point in connection with this whole question; that is, he referred to the climate and the general conditions in that part of the country as being so different, for instance, from what they are at Ottawa or at Guelph, that an experimental farm at Guelph or at Ottawa is really of very little use to that part of the country. We have a very large country with a comparatively small population, and we are far behind other countries in regard to experimental work along agricultural lines; perhaps not so far behind them when you compare this country with others on the basis of population; but we have to consider the vast areas and the differences of climate and of soil. I am entirely in sympathy with this move on the part of the Minister of Agriculture. I suggested something along the same line, I think, two or three years ago, in speaking of this very subject. It seems to me that our whole agricultural education should be systematized in something the same way as our general education is; that is to say, that as the primary school is a step to the high school or the collegiate institute, and the high school a step to the university, so our education along agricultural lines should work out in the same manner; that is, the fully-equipped experimental farm should be the university for agriculture. If you are going to reach the mass of the people with information that will be of benefit to them, you are not going to do it by sending out agricultural bulletins, no matter how valuable the information in them may be, because hardly one out of five hundred farmers reads those bulletins. It is also absolutely true beyond a shadow of a doubt that the general farmer looks upon an experimental farm as something beyond him. He says: "Lots of money is spent on that farm, and I cannot hope with my limited means to do as the experimental farm is doing." In the province of Ontario in recent years the Government has done a great deal of good by sending men out to do experimental work, such as demonstrating in this neighbourhood and that neighbourhood, fifteen or twenty or thirty miles apart, how to preserve their orchards by spraying, how to get rid of certain weeds by spraying at certain seasons, and so on. Such things are educating the pepole; the farmers have an opportunity of seeing them, and they feel that they can imitate them. The general farmer does not feel that he has the means at his disposal to imitate the work carried on at experimental farms. It is true that occasionally, say once or twice a year, an excursion may be got up to visit an experimental farm, and some of the farmers, who perhaps have the means and want a holiday, will take in that excursion. They see a great many things in a few hours, and they go away confirmed in the idea that it is impossible for them to imitate what tney have seen at that farm. I would like to see this work carried on in the manner the minister has indicated that he intends to carry it on in the West. He wants to have some twenty or thirty stations; but I would like to see that system spread throughout the Dominion of Canada. I would not stop at 1,000 or at 2,000 of those small experimental plots. If you had 10,000 of them scattered throughout this country, in every constituency, you would get splendid value for every dollar that was spent.

In various European countries they have carried their work on agricultural lines very much further than we have in this country. The result is shown in the statistics of crop returns, not only in grain but in roots as well. It seems to me we acted wisely in establishing experimental farms here and there in the country to carry on experiments and give the people the benefit of the knowledge they gained. But the people ought also to have the benefit of these little demonstration stations, and these stations should be as numerous as possible. I think the money would bring a big return in the form of a larger yield and in the encouragement it would give to the agricultural population. And that is another element that should be considered. If the minister can succeed in demonstrating in the West that crops can be raised in that drouth district by proper cultivation, it will not be merely one or two or a dozen men going by who will learn and benefit. It is not going to stop there, because, say what you will of the farmer, he is always ready to impart his information to his neighbour. If he has made a success in cultivating his fields in a certain way, he will tell his neighbour; he does not try to keep the information to himself. So, if at these demonstration farms a hundred farmers see and learn the proper course to follow, the information will not benefit these people alone, but they will carry it to hundreds of others. I am heartily in sympathy with this plan, and I hope the minister will carry it out and will establish these smaller demonstration stations throughout the East as well as throughout the West.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris): I do not wish to take up much of the time of the committee, but as this is a subject on which I have had something to say in other sessions, I desire to say a few words now. The late Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Fisher, and I used to have a friendly combat every time his Estimates came up as to the utility of experimental farms and the best way of getting to the people the benefits those experimental farms could give.

The plan outlined by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett) is not exactly an experiment. I have not a word to say against the general and large experimental farms that have been established in various parts of this country; I believe they have been of great service to the agriculturists of Canada. But we have had these great experimental farms for many years—at Ottawa, at Brandon, at Indian Head, and elsewhere. It did not seem to me that we were getting value, at any rate in western Canada—I say nothing about eastern Canada—for the money expended on these experimental farms. One suggestion has been made to which we have referred before. The experimental farm in Manitoba is situated on the bank of a river, on soil different from any other in the province except, perhaps, in one locality.

Now, I am not taking any credit to myself for the adoption of the plan outlined this morning; nevertheless, in justice to myself—and the proof of what I say will be found in Hansard—this plan is identical with or very similar to a plan which I outlined and tried to influence the late Minister of Agriculture to adopt. Soil varies, as my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) has said. And that gentleman may say what he likes, he may be as flippant as he pleases about that country to which we have been referring, but the fact is that climatic conditions and soil conditions there are different, perhaps from those of any other place in western Canada. That being so, a different system of farming must be adopted in order to attain success. And that is exactly why we should have these demonstration farms. One experimental farm in the province of Manitoba, situated on a peculiar soil—a splendid soil, none better in the world—would not give to the farmers who live on a different soil, one with more gravel, if you like, or different in some other way, the example and information that they should have in working their land. I used to say to Mr. Fisher, in the kind way in which I always speak, that I thought he should establish demonstration farms.

It has been said here this morning that you can have excursions to your experimental farms. So you can; and it is a good thing and is being adopted more and more. But, nevertheless, here is the experience—and experience is what you can depend upon—both at Brandon and at Indian Head, that very few farmers avail themselves of the excursions to the experimental farms. I have had conversations with Mr. Grisdale about it. I said: "If you cannot get the farmers to come to the experimental farm, you must take the experimental or demonstration farm to the farmers." They are doing that in Manitoba. But who is doing it? The local government. The provincial Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. George Lawrence, has established within the last year or two something like twenty-five of these demonstration farms. They are exactly as outlined by the hon. member for Calgary. Each farm is forty acres in extent. The land is not bought, but is leased by one of the best farmers within a mile or two of the town. The Government fences it and also supplies the seed in order to be assured that that seed is the very best; and the Government has supervision. The farmer who operates the farm gets no pay, but I think is permitted to have the crop raised on the forty-acre plot.

Now, the farmers in our country, of whatever political party, recognize the importance of that demonstration plot. I have never heard one adverse criticism of it. They think it is the best policy that has yet been launched in the interest of the farmer. But it comes from that progressive province in which I have the honour to live, and which has given so many progressive ideas and policies to the western provinces. Take the railway policy, and the telephone policy, and now the demonstration farm policy—they all originated in the province of Manitoba; and I am glad to say, in the interests of western Canada, that they have all been successful.

We have another idea which, I dare say, has been adopted in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and which with us has proven very successful. We have an agricultural college in Winnipeg, just as you have an agricultural college in Guelph, of whose work we hear glowing accounts. But there was the same difficulty that I have been speaking about in the other case: you could not get the people to this agricultural college, it was too expensive. But in Manitoba—and I do not know but what the same is done in Ontario—they take the agricultural college to the farmers. A train is supplied free by the different railways, and is fitted up practically like the college at Winnipeg or Guelph. That train goes from town to town, its arrival being advertised ahead. So far as my town of Boissevain is concerned, I never knew that train to come in but there were from two hundred to four hundred people, men, women and children, who came to Boissevain to see the results attained by the agricultural college in Winnipeg, and these people have always gone away well pleased with what they saw and convinced that this policy of the touring agricultural college was one eminently in the interest of the people at large.

If a municipality in Manitoba wants to establish one of these agricultural plots—and our municipalities are, on the average, about 18 miles square—they have only to make application to the provincial Minister of Agriculture. I believe that this plan is identical with the plan outlined by the hon. member for Calgary. I am glad that the Minister of Agriculture has seen fit to adopt this plan, and I believe it will prove entirely successful.

Mr. BRADBURY: So far as the northern part of the province of Manitoba is concerned, experimental farms are of very little use, but demonstration farms are of the utmost importance. I believe that if we could induce this Government to clear dozens of tracts of land in the northern part of Manitoba and to start demonstration farms there, the work would prove of very great value to the people in that district. Some of the land in that part of the province is very difficult of cultivation. Much of it is covered with scrub timber. The settlers who have gone in there, while they are first-class men, are not always in good financial circumstances, and, without encouragement, it is almost impossible for them to make headway. I have advocated time after time that some comprehensive scheme should be adopted by the Government with a view to assisting these people to acquire and settle these lands. It has been said that I have advocated a paternal government, but I think the time is coming when the Government of Canada should be more paternal than it has been in respect of the farmers. The land in the northern part of Manitoba is, I believe, destined to become the most valuable land in the northwest country, but, owing to the nature of the soil, it cannot be successfully worked unless the Government comes to the assistance of the people. I would not advocate the 40-acre plots in my own district, but I would advocate the Government's taking up 10-acre plots in different parts of the northern portion of the province, clearing them and putting them under cultivation in order to show these people the possibilities of the land. If this were done, I am sure that the Government would be amply repaid in a very short time, and that the settlers in that part of the country would very soon become a thoroughly independent and prosperous community. I would call the attention of the minister also to the fact that the northern portion of the province is well adapted to dairying, but the people in the district being poor, they require some assistance in order that their efforts along this line may become productive. I have advocated, and I advocate now, that the Government of the country should make it possible for these men to secure sufficient stock to start them in the dairying business. If this were done, in a short time these non-productive districts would become productive, and every dollar of the money expended by the Government in the way of stock and the clearing of the land would be repaid. I would strongly urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the advisability of his devoting some little attention to assisting the farmers in this part of the province. I agree with what the hon. member for Souris has said with regard to the efforts of the Manitoba Government in establishing these demonstration farms. Some of them have been established in my own county, and in every case they have proved to be of great value. But the finances of the provincial government are limited, and I believe that the Dominion Government ought to come to the assistance of the people and do some of the work that the provincial government is not able to do. In my own county we have brought in some 30,000 or 40,000 foreigners. These people deserve encouragement and assistance in order that they may become self-sustaining and prosperous. I wish to impress upon the committee the fact that these people are industrious and thrifty; they are doing all that men can do to become good citizens and prosperous farmers, and this they will do if they receive encouragement and assistance from the Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN: We have discussed this session many matters concerning the district known as the drouth district in Saskatchewan and Alberta, but I question whether any matter that we have taken up in that connection is of as much importance as the question which we have under consideration at the present time. Personally I am in favour of experimental farms, but I am also inclined to believe in the demonstration plot idea which the minister has in view. As to the experimental farm at Lethbridge I would not say that the conditions which exist at Lethbridge are exactly similar to those which exist from that point to the Saskatchewan boundary and thence on towards Moosejaw. I have had this complaint from the farmers about the experimental farms. You may tell the farmer that the experimental farm had a good crop while in his own district there was a failure. His argument is that at the experimental farm they have all the facilities for practising farming on a proper scale, they can afford the labour and can put in the crops at the proper seasons and test them all the way through, and so are bound to get a crop of some kind. A a matter of fact, in that drouth district this year there were farmers who had crops because they happened to get their land in shape, they had summer-fallowed it and got it seeded in the proper time and were able to have crops of 15 bushels to the acre in a district where farmers for miles around did not have a crop of any kind. The experimental plot idea is necessary in my particular district for the reason that the climatic and soil conditions are so varied all through that country, within 100 miles of Lethbridge. In the district of Macleod there were crops this year towards the foothills, in the Pincher Creek country and also along the Calgary and Edmonton line. They had not very large crops, but at the same time they had something. In my own district around Cardston, near Lethbridge, they had crops, and north and west along the Carmangay line of the Canadian Pacific railway they had crops which in some cases were very good. Yet there were instances in that district where farmers did not have anything whatever. I think that the experimental plot idea has a good deal to commend it. At the same time I believe in the experimental farm, I believe it is helpful in giving the farmers directions as to the proper method to follow in their particular district.

As to what has been said by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), I can understand people losing hope about the future of that country owing to the crop failure this year. I have discussed that matter in the House this session and have instanced other sections of Canada and sections of the United States, where similar conditions was met in the early days and overcome. I have hope and I believe that much can be done by proper education of the farmer ; if the farmer, for instance, had had the proper idea about farming methods in that country when he went in there in the beginning he would not have required relief this year. I have been told that by farmers that if they had known how to farm properly when they went in they would have made enough out of their operations during the time they had been there prior to last year to have put themselves in a safe position to carry them through such a crisis. I have known in that district good yields from seeding on stubble. For a few years farmers there thought they could raise a crop of grain by throwing seed helter skelter over the land because they had ideal conditions, and farmers in many cases seeded on stubble. I have even known volunteer crops of 12 to 15 bushels to the acre, and that made the farmers think they could do anything with the land there and it would yield a crop. But they have met with adverse conditions and these adverse conditions are driving them to adopt a system of farming which I am satisfied will be successful in that district. These very adverse conditions are going to be helpful to farmers, in southern Alberta at any rate. The summer-fallowing idea has only been adopted within the last year or two, and where it was adopted last year there were in a great many cases crops of some kind. I believe that that idea, properly practised and followed out, will result in a great deal of success in farming in that part of the country. As for the future of the district, I would mention that in Saskatchewan, in what is known as the Qu'Appelle valley, I have been told that people left the country in the early 80's and on towards the early 90's, because they had to face adverse conditions, thought the country was not any good; and yet today that country is considered the most fertile district in Saskatchewan. In Manitoba exactly the same conditions were faced by the farmers in the early days of farming in that province. These conditions are being faced in southern Alberta and in southern Saskatchewan. I believe that history will prove that the opening of the country was warranted and that as soon as the farmers acquire the proper knowledge of how to farm in those sections of Alberta and Saskatchewan they will meet with success in their operations. I believe that we should have an experimental farm in the heart of the affected country, and also that the establishment of experimental plots throughout that particular country or for that matter in any part of Canada will be helpful to agriculture.

Mr. McCRANEY: The minister referred to the fact that some additional land had been purchased for the farm at Rosthern. Would he give the House the particulars of that purchase? He announced last summer that a quarter-section or a half-section had been bought.

Mr. BURRELL: I will give it at three o'clock. I have not the exact details now.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the minister give a brief summary of what is being done in the province of Quebec by his department especially with regard to Ste. Anne de la Pocatière?

Mr. BURRELL: We are carrying on the work at Cap Rouge and at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière and at Lennoxville in the Eastern Townships, where we have recently established a farm. We are increasing the work at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière. We are carrying on the work on the usual lines of experimental work at all these stations and are endeavouring to extend the work and help those sections of the country more than before.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the work at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière confined to the farm itself or is it extended to the surrounding country?

Mr. BURRELL: A good deal of the work is confined, as always, to the experimental farm; but in so far as our officers can make known the results that they are achieving to the farmers of the neighbouring district it is their business to do so, and if hon. members say that this is not being done, that every effort is not being made to render that farm beneficial to the country, I will be only too glad to take the matter up.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister give an idea of the chief experiments being made at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière?

Mr. BURRELL: I think there as at the other farms, they have carried on the various branches of animal husbandry, live stock raising, soil fertilization, rotation of crops and everything that in common parlance is known as advanced agricultural methods. I do not know that we are carrying out any particular lines of work there that we are not carrying out at most of our experimental stations in other districts.

Mr. MARCIL: How are the results communicated to the farmers in the district?

Mr. BURRELL: The chief way we have of reaching the farmers generally who cannot visit the farm is by our farm report. This, in the case of Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, is a special report from the superintendent giving the result of all the experimental work, giving the exact conditions on the farm. That report every farmer who is at all interested is entitled to receive, he is put on the mailing list and gets complete copies of the whole work. If he requires any special bulletins we are only too happy to put him on the list and give him every bulletin in which he is interested.

Mr. MARCIL: Have the farmers to apply to the farm?

Mr. BURRELL: Either to the farm there or to the central farm here. The farmer can apply to be put on the list for all reports or for any special reports in which he is interested.

Mr. MARCIL: I have always contended that as there is a great difference in climate and geographical situation between the two constituencies of Gaspé and Bonaventure and the place on the St. Lawrence where the experimental farm is, Bonaventure and Gaspé being much further south and nearer to the Maritime Provinces, there should be a demonstration farm of some kind either in Bonaventure or Gaspé. Some years ago New Carlisle was suggested as a suitable location for such a farm. Perhaps the minister may see his way clear to giving us such a farm. I must say a good word of the department for what it has done in my province in assisting the dairying industry, which is becoming quite an important one down there. The department sent down the Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, and he has been of considerable assistance to the various butter factories that have recently been established in my constituency; and other butter factories are being started this year. A number of lecturers have also been sent down to deliver lectures in the parishes of Gaspé and Bonaventure, and I should like to know whether the minister intends to follow up the good seed that has been thus sown, or are the department's efforts to end with the lectures?

Mr. BURRELL: I know my hon. friend takes a very lively interest in that part of the country. But he understands that owing to the financial condition of this country at the present time we hesitate to plunge in large expenditures, even for agriculture; although I must cordially acknowledge that the Minister of Finance and my other colleagues have not held up their hands in regard to this department. But we felt that there was at this moment a special need for this kind of work in the West, that no matter how strained the finances might be the Government was absolutely warranted in doing something for those particular districts in the West. Later on I hope we may be able to do this sort of work in other parts of the country, including those portions of Quebec where the settlers are in considerable need of more advanced methods. I can assure my hon. friend that the matter will not be forgotten.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Experimental farms—maintenance of Central Farm, and establishment and maintaining of additional branch stations, $785,000.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND: I doubt if there is a single vote in all these Estimates that is of greater importance to the people of Canada than that which we are now discussing. While to-day there has been a good deal of discussion on this vote by the representatives from various provinces, very little has been said so far by hon. gentlemen who represent Ontario constituencies. I wish to emphasize what has already been said as to the importance of experimental and demonstration farms. I believe that the Minister of Agriculture has acted wisely in providing for the extension of agricultural instruction in this direction, and I feel quite sure that no expenditure of public money in Canada will give better results than will the expenditure of this $785,000. I may say that personally I would like to see a much larger appropriation for this purpose. We have heard a great deal in recent years about educating the farmer in the science of their industry, and I am satisfied that these small demonstration farms or plots will accomplish better results than possibly any other scheme, because through them you bring directly under the eyes of the farms what can be done by the study and practice of advanced agricultural methods.

I was amused at the remarks of the hon. member from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that agricultural education of this kind was probably a custom in the province of Ontario, where the people were so "dashed" wise, as he said. I do not think the people of Ontario deserve that sneering remark from the hon. member. They have been the pioneers in agricultural education in this country, and shortly after Confederation, John Carling, afterwards Sir John Carling, then Commissioner of Agriculture in the Government of John Sanfield Macdonald, established the Ontario Agricultural College, the reputation of which has always stood high in Ontario, in Canada, and, I may say, throughout the world. From the day of its establishment to the present hour, the province of Ontario has paid cheerfully all the expenses in connection with that institution, which has trained more men in the science of agriculture than probably any other institution in the world. And yet the hon. member for Moosejaw finds it not beneath him to sneer at the people of Ontario. When Sir John Carling was Minister of Agriculture in the Government of Sir John Macdonald, he established the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and shortly afterwards there were established experimental farms at Nappan, for the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, it being situated near the boundary of these two provinces; at Indian Head, for the Northwest Territories; and at Agassiz, for British Columbia. For twenty-five years afterwards not an experimental or a demonstration farm was established in the whole of Canada, until in 1911, when several others were brought into being. Let me call attention to the fact that from that time down to the past year not one experimental farm was established in the great province of Ontario. Session after session I have taken this matter up, and I have urged on the Government the necessity of doing justice to the province of Ontario in this respect. I am glad to see that since last session the Minister of Agriculture has made arrangements to establish a demonstration farm in Northern Ontario, along the line of the Transcontinental railway. That part of our province suffered severely through a report that was made by a man who was sent out by the Conservation Commission a few years ago, who went along the line of the Transcontinental railway in a motor car, and made a report which was most damaging to all that northern territory. I commend the minister for establishing this experimental farm in Northern Ontario.

In view of all the circumstances, it is indeed ungrateful on the part of the hon. member for Moosejaw to sneer at the people of Ontario, forgetting the sacrifices made by them to develop the West. In past years the people of Ontario realized that we had a great heritage in our western country, which needed development and settlement, and to-day we do not complain that the Government is bearing the expense of these agricultural stations throughout the West. But the time has come when Ontario must look to herself to see that she also gets fair treatment. In the matter of immigration, for years past, Ontario has been discriminated against, and the flow of immigration has been diverted to the western provinces, with the result that by the Redistribution Bill, that wealthy province loses six of her representatives in this House. That may please some hon. gentlemen opposite, but to me it is evidence of the fact that in the future these western provinces must look to themselves and depend on their own resources, without seeking the aid of the other provinces to help them out of their difficulties. We are told by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House that the farmers of the West were not going to see these demonstration stations when they were driving their wheat to the market, thus implying that taking wheat to the market is the only thing that brings a western farmer from his home, which, of course, is an absurd view to take. In my opinion, the sooner demonstration farms are established throughout Canada, in order that our farmers may be taught to practise what is preached, the better it will be for the people of Canada. We have no mean province in Ontario; we have an energetic, an enterprising and an educated people, and they have learned to do for themselves what some of the people in the western provinces think the Government ought to do for them. The dairy products of Ontario last year represented a value of $125,000,000, the live stock of Ontario had a value of $510,000,000; the exports of Ontario last year were $186,000,000, and the imports of Ontario $290,000,000, the latter figures not including interprovincial trade. But that does not represent all the wealth developed by the people of Ontario.

So far as fruit growing is concerned, 80 per cent of the fruit of Canada is grown in the province of Ontario; yet there is not a fruit station nor an experimental station maintained in that province by the Dominion Government. Ninety-seven per cent of the grapes and peaches grown in Canada are grown in the province of Ontario; yet you find that, although stations are established in other provinces, such as British Columbia and the Maritime Provinces, the people of Ontario have to do all their experimental work for themselves. A number of experimental farms were established in 1911; but with the exception of a tobacco-growing farm of forty acres in the county of Essex, not one was established in the whole province of Ontario. This should not be a contentious matter; and I would not have made any reference to it, had it not been for the manner in which the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) referred to the people of the province of Ontario. The sooner the people of the western provinces depend upon their own resources and do not come to the Dominion Parliament looking for special favours, the better it will be for all concerned.

The hon. member referred to the necessity of supplying with wheat the farmers in a certain area who unfortunately lost their crops last year. In some of the older districts of Ontario where land is very valuable, if the people farmed in the manner in which the people farm in Western Canada, they would not grow very much. In my own county immense numbers of live stock are shipped from western Canada, and are fattened up and placed on the market. Food is brought in from western Canada and fed to live stock in the East; in fact, two dealers in foodstuffs for live stock, two feed stores at one shipping point in the county of Oxford during the present winter handled no less than nineteen carloads of cottonseed meal averaging about 22 tons to the car; and other feed in large quantities is being brought in. The Government of this country for many years past pursued one of the most reckless policies—yes, I will say a criminal policy—with regard to the importation of foodstuffs from western Canada. When a Government permits the screenings of grain from the elevators to be shipped out and distributed through some of the older provinces, such as the province of Ontario, it is doing something for which it ought to be held accountable. Hon. gentlemen here have stated that the western farmer who summer-fallows his land is practically assured of a crop. I remember in the old days in Ontario, when nearly every farmer summer-fallowed his land, but afterwards with a better system of farming he found that it was not necessary. To-day, however, he has to go back to the summer-fallowing system again by reason of the foul seeds that have been distributed over the province of Ontario and that came largely from western Canada. Later on in the Estimates the question will be brought up whether the Government of this country should see that all grain shipped to Government elevators is screened and that the screenings from that grain are destroyed and not distributed over the country.

I have taken longer than I intended in regard to this matter, but I want to emphasize the fact that Ontario is no mean province; that outside of the province of Quebec it is the largest province in Canada, and that not 15 per cent of its area is under cultivation. I commend the minister for his action in establishing an experimental farm in northern Ontario, and I believe he has adopted a splendid method in order to clear that by having interned prisoners do the work, because it will undoubtedly reflect great credit on the northern country. Notwithstanding Professor Fernow's report, in which he stated that that country is not fit for settlement, geographically it is not located as far north as the city of Winnipeg, and it is to-day rich and fertile, although mostly covered with timber; and I am satisfied that the experimental station established there by the hon. Minister of Agriculture will do work that will call the attention of the people of this country to the advantages of location and the capability of the soil of northern Ontario to raise as good crops as are grown in other parts of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have no argument with my hon. friend in regard to the importance of the province of Ontario in many ways, and I think he has rather misunderstood my remarks. Surely the hon. gentleman does not wish to put me in an unfair light, because I did not make any remarks derogatory to the province of Ontario, as I think he ought to have known if he had been in the chamber at the time. I was advocating that we should have experimental farms to which the people would go in great numbers. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) stated, as I understood him, that men would not go to experimental farms, and I said that, if it be that the people of Ontario know so dashed much that they do not have to go, the people in the West are different: we do not think we are the whole shooting match; we do not think we know everything. True, we do not live in the delectable province of Ontario; but my hon. friend will have to account for having lived in such a godly place as Ontario, and inasmuch as the favours bestowed on him are so much greater, he will have to be so much more careful of the way he walks. My hon. friend has told us many times that Ontario is such a wonderful country, and he has scolded us because some weeds have gone from the West into that province. I do not want my hon. friend to run away with the idea that Ontario is altogether ready for the next world. I do not think we send our weeds to the East; I think large numbers of weeds came to us from Ontario at the start, because I cannot imagine any other places that they came from than Bruce and Huron and Oxford, where we got our seed from originally—and some very bad, devilish weeds they were too. My hon. friend should not say the West is under any favour to Ontario, because that is a played-out statement. We are not under any favours— far from it. True, the policy of the country at present is dictated largely by Ontario and the protectionist spirit. While Ontario has sent us some of its vile weeds, thank Heaven, it has not yet sent us its vile protectionist spirit. We have not the protectionist spirit brooding over us; we do not believe in it yet; but the protectionist spirit controls our politics and we are suffering. We are not, however, under any obligation to Ontario because we are under the heel of Ontario so far as the present Government is concerned. I say that to my hon. friend in all kindness.

My hon. friend speaks about the good land in Ontario. There is a great deal of good land in Ontario and it was here long before my hon. friend and I were born, and much of it was under cultivation; but my hon. friend should for a while take a whack at farming along the Canadian Pacific railway line between North Bay and Fort William and see how much Marquis wheat he can grow in that beautiful part of the province of Ontario. I am more pleased than I can tell my hon. friend to see that to-day, from his seat in the House—I will not say he has given the lie; I speak in all good humour, but he has repudiated the argument of his friends who said that the agricultural belt of the National Transcontinental was no good, because my hon. friend says it is a good country and is going to support a great population. We are pleased to have heard the truth from the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), that this district, through which the late Government built the National Transcontinental, is one of such fertile land that even the very good province of Ontario is proud to have it within its boundaries.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would like to take up the time of the committee for a few minutes in raising my voice in protest against this attempt once again to set the East against the West and the West against the East. It seems to me that the farmers of the Dominion of Canada do not require to be put in hostile camps of that kind, nor will their best interests be served in that way. The West has its own peculiar problems and difficulties, and these have been looked upon with a great deal of consideration by the representatives from other parts of the country. Everything has been done that we could reasonably do—those of us who represent the East—to change conditions in favour of the farmer of the West. I trust that the best representatives from the West look upon the farmers of the East with the same measure of consideration. Our problems are one, after all. Now, we have some difficulties in the East. I would ask the minister to take into consideration the interests of that large tract of the province of Ontario lying between the agricultural and fruit-growing portion of Ontario to the south and the great clay belt to the north. There is there a great stretch of country not quite so favourable for agricultural production, but admirably adapted for a great many things. Our people in the section of country from which I come do not know exactly what can be produced in that country, and we would like very much to see an experimental farm established there. The country of which I speak takes in such districts as Muskoka, Parry Sound, Nipissing and Haliburton and other constituencies further to the east whose conditions are somewhat similar. We believe there are a great many kinds of fruit that can be grown in that country. We believe it is admirably adapted for the production of a great many kinds of vegetables and roots. True, we produce great numbers of cattle and also no inconsiderable quantity of grain and vegetables. But we are not working under the best conditions. With a view to demonstrating the possibilities of that country, our people have approached the local Government at Toronto and pressed their claim time after time. But we have been met of late with the reply that the lack of funds has made it impossible for the local Government to take part in carrying out our wishes. So, I bring the subject before the Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion and ask his assistance so that we may have some kind of demonstration farm established in that country to show our farmers there what our particular part of this great Dominion is capable of producing. We have been able to come down to the city of Ottawa for two or three years and, at your great annual exhibition, carry off first prize with our display of potatoes. We have been able to do the same in the city of Toronto for eight or ten years handrunning. Our people were able to go to the town of Brockville and take some of the prizes in grain last winter. But our farmers are not educated in a general way to take advantage of the peculiar qualities of our soil. These cases that I mention are the result of individual effort. There is no general effort to demonstrate to our farmers the benefit of certain kinds of cultivation and to show them for what line of production our conditions are best suited. Therefore I ask the Minister of Agriculture to give to our section of the country the consideration to which we think it is entitled.

Mr. BURRELL: My hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) asked me what land had been bought in connection with the Rosthern farm. A strip of land lying between the station and the right of way of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company, containing approximately 15 acres, was bought at the price of $1,000. Another plot of 440 acres was bought from Jacob Janzen. It forms the NE. ¼ and S. ½ of section 26, tp. 42, range 3, west of the 3rd meridian.

I desire to say just a word in answer to the remarks of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) and the remarks of my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright). As to these farms and the work of the Agricultural Department generally, I hope that hon. members understand that there is no East and no West in what we are doing. I happen to be a western man myself, my home being much farther west than that of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) or other hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken. I was also an Ontario man. I think that everybody in this House will agree that what is done for agriculture should be done, so far as possible, equitably throughout the country. It is true, we are making this initial step in demonstration work in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta. But that does not mean that northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan, Ontario and other parts will be left out, as the work develops and the opportunities warrant. I shall be glad to keep in mind what my hon. friends have said.

M. H. ACHIM (Labelle) (Translation): Mr Chairman, it was not my intention to take much of the time of the minister to air my views on this question, but the prolonged debate on this subject participated in by my hon. friends from the west and from Ontario does away with any hesitation I may have had. In view of that lengthy discussion, I cannot be accused of loquacity if I devote two or three minutes to the province of Quebec. It is not out of place to recall in this House, as elsewhere, that there still exists such a province, which has played an historic and important part in this country.

From the viewpoint of agriculture, it needs envy very little either of the western provinces or the province of Ontario. The complaints that I bring to the minister from my constituency are very much similar to those laid before him by the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles). In his reply, the Minister of Agriculture freed me from certain misgivings which have been worrying me for the last two or three years. When I became a member of this House, I received numerous petitions from the district of Labelle, requesting from the Government the establishment of an experimental farm or rather of an agricultural station in that part of the province of Quebec. Heretofore, and more especially during the last few years, new districts such as the Abbitibi, the Temiskaming and New Ontario have engrossed public attention; but it has been too readily forgotten that for some fifty years past the region of Labelle has been opened to settlers by a distinguished and zealous priest, Mgr. Labelle, whom the federal and the provincial governments encouraged in his task and that the new district has helped to alleviate the congestion of some of our cities. And the fact must be kept in mind that in the district of Labelle the soil is not as fertile as in the valleys of the St. Lawrence and of the Ottawa. The settlers of Labelle have migrated for the most part from the valleys of those two rivers and are of course prone to apply the same methods of cultivation with which they had become familiar in those places where the rich clay is very different from the soil of the northern regions. Moreover I must add that many of the settlers had never been on a farm; most of them are workmen who have been snatched away by this enthusiastic apostle from the dangers of cities and under his guidance have pitched their tents in that region and set themselves to the task of bringing up their children. To-day the influx of settlers has slackened and I must be within the truth when I say that colonization is best brought about by the family. When a father has settled upon a lot and has thrived, he seeks to settle his numerous children around him. Up to the present time, the almost exclusive means of livelihood in those parts was the lumber trade. The forest was the principal source of revenue. Now, unfortunately, lumber is beginning to get scarce; the land is clear and the settler must resort to its cultivation to find his living and the sustenance of his family.

The soil with the exception of a few more fertile localities, is generally poor, and requires for its cultivation appropriate methods. We have here at Ottawa, it is true, an experimental farm with a splendid equipment, but the settlers cannot be expected to take frequent trips of two or three hundred miles to Ottawa at a cost of twenty-five to thirty dollars each for the purpose of obtaining information on the best agricultural methods. My idea is that the settler should not have to come to the experimental farm, but the farm should go to the settler. In this connection, I take pleasure in congratulating the Minister of Agriculture upon his scheme by which those new farms will be made centres of distribution; over those centres, the Ottawa experimental farm will spread its sheltering branches as far as my constituency, to which it would certainly be beneficial.

As regards the measure under consideration, I fully agree with the minister. I heard him state in the course of his reply to the hon. member for Moosejaw that he intended to set up some twenty stations of that type in the West. Without the least thought of harming the West, I may, on behalf of my electors, ask the minister if he could not reduce to nineteen the number of western stations and give my county the twentieth. Those districts where a fertile soil yields hay, oats and other grain a-plenty are not those whose farmers have most need of scientific model farms. But in our country, where the soil being lighter is of course less fertile, and where climatic disturbances are more frequent and dangerous, I venture to say that agricultural stations are a necessity, because there the land is not made to produce as much as it could, that is, proportionately to the area under cultivation, it should yield one-third more than its present production. The farmers are not acquainted with the scientific methods of cultivation which are best adapted to the nature of the soil and its geological formation.

I may be allowed to express my thanks to the minister for inaugurating such a progressive system that will solve a problem of great importance and for a long time agitated. I hope he will not forget the settlers of the district of Labelle and that he will do as much for them as for the farmers of Ontario and of the Great West.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the condition of my throat does not allow me to make a lengthy speech, but I deem it my duty to express my views in a few words

I listened with keen interest to the remarks that have been made on this most important topic, agriculture, and my congratulations are due the hon. members from western constituencies for the convincing arguments they have brought to support their contentions. It was also a pleasure to hear the explanations given by the minister during the debate; his efficient work is praiseworthy and his initiative in the furtherance of agricultural interests commendable. The item now before us relates to experimental farms. I can see that the subject absorbs the attention of all members, but especially of those from the western prairies, and also that in the more northern districts, the farmers, through their representatives, attach much importance to this question, which, in fact, is for us of the most vital consequence. I realize that in the particular circumstances in which Canada is placed, the minister cannot easily satisfy the demands made upon him from all parts of the country. To get over the present difficulty it has been suggested that demonstration farms or stations be established on a much smaller scale than the branches of the experimental farm. Doubtless the scheme is practical and under the circumstances will be very beneficial. But the minister's solicitude must not extend exclusively to the western provinces. Every session for the last few years, the Canadian Parliament has been called upon to provide aid for the settlers of the new provinces. This year we are asked to vote the large sum of ten millions to provide seed for those farmers who have settled on the Government lands. That grant is not a gift but will have to be repaid by all those who have been helped. The Dominion Government had to take such a course because, at the time the new provinces were erected, it kept to itself the control of the public lands; but in view of the obligations which that reservation entails, had we not better amend the law and put those provinces on the same footing as the older provinces, transfer to them the full control of their own lands and let them shift for themselves. Does it not seem anomalous that next spring the farmers of the province of Quebec as well as those from the eastern provinces, will have, as they have been doing, every year, to purchase large quantities of seed grain from the west itself. Is it not an oddity that we easterners are buying our seed from the west while at the same time we are asked to advance millions of dollars to the very people who supply us with what we want. On account of the nefarious war which shakes all Europe and even the whole world, Canada is placed in a peculiar position; its evident duty and interest lie in increasing to its limits its agricultural production, so as to enable Europe, by supplying it with the necessaries of life, to stave off starvation. With this in view, the Minister of Agriculture has organized throughout the country a series of patriotic lectures, as they are called, having for their object to awaken the farmers to the necessities that have arisen and still more to those that will arise in the future; and also to point out to the farming community that now is the time to go to work and take the necessary steps to meet the needs I have just mentioned by an unprecedented excess of production. There has been generally a happy selection of lecturers. The farmers attended the meetings in large numbers and listened with deep interest to the important discussions carried on. The scheme is a patriotic one and its beginning as a means of theoretical education bodes well for its success; but as was pointed out in to-day's debate, it must necessarily be supplemented by object lessons, by an increase in the number of experimental farms and by the establishment of agricultural stations. I desire at this juncture to warn the minister that it is of the utmost importance that these lectures on agriculture should be kept free from all party politics. At one of the meetings which have been successfully carried out by Hon. Mr. Burrell in the province of Quebec, after two officers of his department, Messrs. Fortier and Gingras had delivered their lectures, which they always manage to render practical, a man by the name of Gareau, lecturer for the Quebec Government got up to speak. In an outburst of vituperation, he warned the audience against the movement organized by the Dominion Department of Agriculture to awaken the farmer to the necessity of improving his stock, and against their taking advantage of the offer of the department, who lends choice bulls to those farmers who wish to improve their methods and who apply to the minister at Ottawa. This man Gareau went so for as to denounce the Minister of Agriculture as the agent of certain cattle-breeders of Ontario and of the eastern townships, who desire to get rid of old worn-out animals. How can practical results be secured when such partisan wrangling is carried on before the farmers who have attended the lectures in good faith and are put at a loss to know what to do when the Minister of Agriculture hands over to the Quebec Government a special subsidy of $190,000 a year as a help to agriculture in that province, it seems to me that the only proper thing to do for the Provincial Government is to employ none but men of judgment and discretion, and not mere election agents, who, disregarding all propriety, and callous to the public interest, drag the Dominion Minister in the mire for no purpose but to disparage the good work he is doing.

In past years, I spoke in this House of the question now before the House in so far as my constituency was concerned. I am aware that in this forum, our own separate local interests must not monopolize our attention, but the interest of every locality must be considered as those of the one great Canadian family. But if I revert to the discussion that has taken place here to-day, the most serious complaints and the most forcible arguments that have been heard have come from the representatives of the most northern districts. It has been shown how, even in the West there is found, with a difference in latitude, great differences in geological formations and climatic influences, that create, in the more northern regions, even on the best farms, special difficulties of cultivation. If on the western plains, which are so fertile, the higher latitudes present special problems to the agriculturist, the same endures in the eastern provinces. In the East, there are localities favoured with mild winters; others where it is colder and others still are found, as my county, where a severe winter lasts for six or seven months and where climatic conditions differ radically from those of the province of Quebec, because the atmospheric currents are different and so the chances of successful cultivation are lessened. The soil is fertile, the farmers live comfortably, and from the railway records we see that the agricultural population, which numbers 30,000 in the districts of Chicoutimi and Lake St. John, has secured from the cheese and live stock industries more than two million dollars of revenue. But such a revenue can be obtained under such special circumstances only by harder labour, and a better grasp of the underlying principles of good farming than what is required in other more favoured sections of the province, on account of the more strenuous efforts exacted from the tiller of the soil by a less bountiful Providence, so to speak, and the continued climatic disturbances.

To the north and south of the Laurentians, the Dominion Government has established branches of the experimental farm at Compton, in the eastern townships, at Cap Rouge and at Sainte Anne de la Pocatière. Moreover, a philanthrophic Canadian millionaire has erected in the vicinity at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, the famous Macdonald agricultural college, which is after all an experimental farm, perhaps the best equipped in this country. We also have in that part of the province agricultural schools at Oka and at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, which are in their way experimental farms on a smaller scale. Here then in the province of Quebec we find six very important practical institutions, of which two, under the control of the Dominion authorities, are situated in the same district and subject to absolutely the same climate.

Excursions of farmers to the experimental farms have been suggested. Of course, such trips have a certain educative value, but others have stated here before me that they cannot be of much help especially when the visitors come from a region subject to a different climate and having a different geological formation. I have myself at different times organized similar excursions to the central experimental farm at Ottawa. Coming from such a distance, the excursionists found little time to appreciate the methods used and so different were the nature of the soil and the climatic conditions, that, after their return home, they found they had brought back very little that could avail them on their farms.

We now hear on a sudden of a great agricultural movement along the Transcontinental railway, around Lake Abitibi, a new region about whose geology and climate nothing is known. Why such a leap in the dark, and why overlook the province of Quebec, especially those localities where settlement has already been shown to be possible, where agriculture can be carried on with success and where there are still left, as in the Matapedia valley, especially in my constituency, lands of great fertility, on which numerous parishes could be established, but wherein farmers hesitate to settle through fear of unfavourable geographical conditions. It seems to me more rational to take all possible means to maintain and increase a country's population in well known districts rather than let those regions shift for themselves and confine our efforts to those localities in which success is quite uncertain. That policy explains why I take it to be my duty to state anew in this House the needs of my electors, and to insist on the minister and the Government doing immediately what is fair by us.

During the last few years, I have maintained with the department an active correspondence on this subject. I have forwarded numerous petitions, and our position has been put before the minister in a clear light. The answers were never unfavourable, but a definite asquiescence is yet to come. Other places more favourably located have received attention while the department, without any ill-will, I know, has been neglecting that part of the province wherein the first experimental farm ought to have been established. The minister, I hope, accepts my remarks in the same spirit in which I make them. I advocate now the claims of justice and common sense, and of course common sense, as ever, is bound to triumph, and the long expected answer will come in due course.

On behalf of my electors, I must express publicly to the Minister of Agriculture our appreciation of all he has been doing to promote the welfare of the farming community of which I am a representative. He also deserves the thanks of that community for the practical assistance given to the improvement of cattle, especially of milch cows. The farmers greatly appreciate the help he has given them, and I deem it my duty to tell him so in this House.

As regards the educational work to be continued, I believe that the minister would do well to take advantage of the rights which accrue to him from the federal subsidies to the different provinces to be devoted to the promotion of agriculture, and introduce in this country the system followed in Germany, France, Sweden, Norway and Denmark, where experimental stations, agricultural colleges and lyceums have been established in large numbers in every section of their respective territories. To put the final touch to the education of farmers' sons and daughters, the Government, at its own expense sends them to visit the best colleges and the most practical farms, so that, by this comparative study, they may become better farmers and develop a greater love for the calling of their parents. That course will, better than all else, help to make agriculture more congenial to them and to keep on the soil the children who would forsake it for the cities.

We are now in the throes of a financial crisis; everybody must make sacrifices; economy is the watch-word. But an expenditure which cannot be cut down or delayed, is that which aims at stirring up the farmers' apathy, awakening them to the needs and obligations of their profession, and making agriculture as prosperous as lies in the power of a Government. If there is on the surface of the earth an industry which more than another has not remained stationary, it is assuredly agriculture, so, whatever may be the actual stress, I respectfully submit that the Government cannot devote too much of our revenue to its upbuilding and prosperity, and it is the duty of public men who understand the true interests of the country to help the efforts of the Government in that direction.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, it was a pleasure for me to be able to listen from the beginning to this debate participated in by both English and French speakers, and I must say that I fully concur in the remarks which have been made by the hon. members for Labelle (Mr. Achim) and for Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard): I submit that the climatic conditions which prevail in the county of Rimouski and the eastern portion of the province of Quebec, call for greater assistance from the Government than the old part of Ontario and even the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which all enjoy the benefit of a most favourable climate. The farmers of the eastern districts of the province of Quebec have to cope with inclement weather conditions. Seeding cannot take place before the month of June; and very often early frosts blast the hopes of an abundant harvest; to that the inhabitants of those regions, with a winter season lasting generally all of seven months, show greater courage and endurance that the farmers of Ontario and the other provinces in which winter lasts but three or four months. Those districts especially have a right to look to the paternal solicitude of the Government. In Ontario, fruits grow abundantly and grain ripens easily. Once the land is sowed; the farmer has only to wait for the crops to ripen; he has no fears of frost.

The representatives of the western provinces are anxious for the Government help that will enable them to purchase seed grain. They are indeed fortunate in having secured a law which favours them to the exclusion of certain other parts of this country who need such assistance a good deal more than they. I fail to see, as also the hon. member for Chicoutimi, why we grant millions to the farmers of the west to help them in procuring seed grain, when, in the eastern part of Quebec, where I have my residence, we often have to purchase our own seed grain from the western farmers. It seems to me that those farmers could bear certain inconveniences and obtain their seed from their neighbours without continually appealing for assistance from the Government.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure) : Will the hon. member allow me to call his attention to the fact that, after asking this explanation from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche), I was made to understand that the seed thus furnished to the western farmer is not given but sold to him, and as security the Government takes a lien on his harvest. It is a mere loan.

Mr. BOULAY: I am thankful for the information, but I can say that the farmers of the province of Quebec would be glad to enjoy the same privilege. If the same course were followed for such districts as Temiscouata, Bonaventure, Chicoutimi, and Gaspé, which often find themselves in distress, I believe that the farmers would be glad to take advantage of such loans, because quite often at spring-time, they have not the money to buy their seed grain and they could easily in the fall repay out of their harvest the money that would have been advanced to them by the Government.

I have already pleaded for an experimental farm in the county of Rimouski. There is one already in the county of Kamouraska, et Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, but on account of the distance, our farmers cannot easily visit it. The Gaspé peninsula, comprising the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure, is so to speak, a small province in itself, and there especially the farmers require to be helped along. If an experimental farm cannot be established in the county of Matane, for instance, the least that could be done would be the establishment of agricultural stations, which would be of great usefulness to the farmers. If an experimental farm were erected in the Matapedia valley, where the land is of the best to be found in that country for farming, it would render great services to Bonaventure and Rimouski, where good results could be expected at an early date. I entertain the fervent hope that the Minister of Agriculture will not henceforth overlook those districts which have a greater call on his attention than other parts of the country. Our farmers show such courage and struggle so bravely against an adverse climate that they should be given more encouragement than elsewhere. We would think ourselves fortunate if we lived in a country like the province of Ontario or even the western part of Quebec or New Brunswick, where the climate is a great deal milder than ours, but there we are and there we must stay, and the Government is in duty bound to extend to us its solicitude.

Now I may be allowed a slight criticism of the staff of the Department of Agriculture. I find that in that department, especially among the higher officers it is impossible for a French-speaking person who does not speak English to make himself understood. Those higher officers who are frequently in communication with the farmers of Quebec, ought to understand French. We go to their offices, and no matter how important the information we desire, it cannot be given us. These officers, moreover, go into the English speaking sections of the country and deliver lectures for the benefit of the English-speaking farmers, while the province of Quebec, whose population does not speak English cannot derive any advantage from such visits, because those officers do not speak French. I claim that all higher officers should speak French so as to be able to meet every elector and every farmer of Canada. For the most part, they are competent men and qualified for their position. It would be a great advantage for the province of Quebec to meet them and hear them expound the best agricultural methods; but we are deprived of that opportunity. When we call at the department, we have to pick up an interpreter among the young clerks or stenographers. I myself speak English with a certain fluency, but when I have to discuss technical questions I cannot express myself with as much freedom in English as I do in French. The other day I ventured into a room where nine employees were at work and not one of them could understand me. This state of things is the same in all the departments and the Department of Agriculture is not an exception. The staff of the Department of Agriculture, according to the Civil Service List of 1913, comprises 31 French Canadians and 237 English-speaking employees. It seems to me that such a condition is unfair and that there should be a larger number of French Canadians, more in keeping with the importance of the French-speaking population of this country.

Hon. Mr. BURRELL (Translation): I appreciate the remarks made by my hon. friends from the province of Quebec and I take note of them. The requirements of the province of Quebec will be dealt with in the same spirit as those of the other provinces.

I understood my hon. friend to say that a great many of the officials of the department are unable to speak the French language. I may say that the director of the experimental farm speaks French fluently, and a great many of our other officers are familiar with the French language.

Mr. ROCHON (Translation): As I rise for the first time to address this House, I take a great deal of pleasure in seconding the remarks made by the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Girard) in his denunciation of those officers of the provincial government who take advantage of their position to throw discredit on the officers of the Dominion Government.

I also agree with what was said by the member for Labelle (Mr. Achim), in his plea for equal justice for the beautiful district, through which flow the rivers Gatineau, La Rouge, and Du Nord, a land which some years ago the late Father Labelle opened in the north and, with prophetic insight pointed out to the settler.

Arts and Agriculture—for the administration and enforcement of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, $100,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I wish to direct the attention of the minister to the regulations regarding the shipment of potatoes from areas affected with powdery scab to foreign countries. In the case of Prince Edward Island, these shipments would be made to the islands of Newfoundland, St. Pierre and Miquelon. The regulations affecting the shipments of potatoes under these conditions are such that, if enforced, we could not ship at all. Shipments made from our province are made very largely by water, and it would be quite impossible to comply with the regulations as I find them in the Royal Gazette. I understand that the department permits shipments to be made without regard to these regulations, and I should like to have it definitely understood whether or not that is the case.

Mr. BURRELL: Regulation B, section 2, which has regard to shipments from infected areas, is in accord with the Destructive Insects and Pest Act. Our regulations say that within the infected area you can move the products concerned virtually without inspection, but when you come to ship to another province which is not infected, you would have to have an inspection.

[Mr. Burrell.]

There is nothing to stop you from shipping your potatoes to Newfoundland except any objection which might be made by those to whom you ship. We do not have any inspection of shipments of potatoes going to Newfoundland; if the Newfoundland people say to you that your potatoes are infected, the onus is on you.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: There is a good deal of doubt as to whether the potatoes in our province are really affected by powdery scab. When the potatoes are loaded into the ship the shipper has no means of knowing whether they are affected with powdery scab or not, and if some fussy official comes along who, perhaps, does not know a great deal about powdery scab, he can give the shipper a great deal of inconvenience under the present regulations. It is to provide against a condition of that kind that I should like to have the matters cleared up.

Mr. BURRELL: None of our inspectors are concerned with shipments to a foreign country; they would be concerned only with shipments to other provinces of Canada which are free from powdery scab. I quite admit that in all these things there is a good deal of inconvenience to potato growers, and I can only assure my hon. friend that the feeling which I have always held very strongly is that it is unfortunate that the United States should have taken the drastic action which they did take in this matter. The action that we have taken in this country has been entirely owing to the stand taken by the United States authorities. I have always firmly believed that this disease is not anything like as injurious in its nature as potato canker, and perhaps not more serious than the ordinary scab. However, we were face to face with an embargo upon our potatoes on the part of the United States, and, in order to accede to the request of the shippers to give them as good a market as we could, these regulations were made. The people of the eastern provinces thought that it was better that these regulations should be put into effect and that they should get some kind of a market than that they should have no market at all in the United States. A short while ago a shipment of potatoes was refused at Boston on the ground that they were infected with powdery scab, and the embargo was replaced on the whole country. I am informed by my inspectors, however, that the officials, after searching for seven hours, found but two potatoes which were infected with powdery scab. I cannot speak with authority, but I am inclined to think that the United States authorities will gradually come to the conclusion that this disease is not as serious as they at first thought it was, and that the whole embargo will be wiped out. It has done good, however, in calling the attention of the potato growers of the country to the necessity for wiping out any serious disease of potatoes. I can only tell my hon. friend that so far as we are concerned we are simply making these regulations to try and give shippers a market under the best possible conditions.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I am quite pleased to have the assurance of the minister that there will be no trouble so far as shipments from our province are concerned. I agree, too, that the United States was not justified in putting into force such drastic regulations. I think that we ourselves were somewhat to blame, because in the autumn of 1913 we sent a man to Washington who told the American authorities that our potatoes were diseased. We could hardly expect them to take any other course than to take us at our word, and so they imposed very stringent regulations against the exportation of our potatoes.

Mr. BURRELL: I know that my hon. friend would not wish to be misleading. We could not deny that we had powdery scab; and as for our officer saying that we had it, he was only stating what they already knew. They had their men in the country, and they knew absolutely, as we knew absolutely, that we had powdery scab. I do not personally attach the importance to the disease that some people do; but you cannot conceal the fact that the disease is in the country. We have it to-day, but I do not believe that it is of the serious nature that many people believe.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: In my province there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BURRELL: We have not any doubt; we know.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: Some few years ago two officials of the department from Ottawa visited our province and visited the premises of one particular man who was a representative potato grower. They informed this man that he had powdery scab, and told him he must not on any account use his potatoes for seed purposes, that he must get potatoes from some other person where he would be sure that they would be free from disease. This particular person attached no importance to the instruction, and went on using his potatoes for seed purposes. He had two crops, and this autumn two other officials came along, visited his farm, and gave him a clean bill of health as having no powdery scab on his place, while some other farmers had it. A thing of that kind becomes well known in the surrounding neighbourhood, and it leaves everybody in doubt. I think the first officials must have been mistaken. The scab they saw must have been the old scab that was not at all dangerous.

Last autumn two gentlemen came to the province to lecture on this subject, Mr. Adams and Mr. Holmden. Mr. Adams, who was supposed to know a good deal about this disease, came from Ireland, where they have it very extensively. He lectured on the causes of the disease and the method of propagation. He told us that a moist climate was favourable to its production, and also a soil in which lime naturally occurred. In the province of Prince Edward Island we have a moist climate; that would be against us; but our soil contains no lime. The other gentleman followed him the same night, and lectured on the prevention of the disease. He advised the farmers to spray their cellars or potato warehouses with a solution of formaldehyde or, in the absence of that, with a preparation of lime, which would kill the spores. We asked him to tell us why lime in the soil would propagate the spores and in the cellar would kill them—and we did not get an answer. I presume there is an answer. These are the things that lead farmers to believe that these men do not know much about their subjects, after all. It would be better for the men sent out in that way to be thoroughly posted on their subjects before going to lecture people, because questions are sure to be asked. For my own information and for the information of others, I would be glad to know how lime in the soil will propagate that disease and lime in the cellar will cure it.

Mr. BURRELL: I could not attempt to answer all the expert or technical questions my hon. friend puts. I may say, however, that occasionally a good dose of whisky will save a man's life and perhaps if you give a dose of whisky to the next fellow it will kill him. It depends on the condition of the man.

Mr. GRAHAM: And something on the quality of the whisky, too.

Mr. BURRELL: Yes. I think that what my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has said does not contradict anything I have advanced, and I hope that conditions will become more favourable very soon.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I notice that some of the members of the House are very anxious to have lecturers sent into their respective districts to instruct the farmers in the best methods of farming. I do not ask the minister to send any lecturers into our district. Our experience is that these gentlemen do not know much about farming. They may have spent a year or two perhaps in college and learned the names of vegetables and plants, but beyond that our experience is that those who come to our province know very little about practical farming. The consequence is that the farmers do not, in any number, go to hear them. The minister can save that expenditure so far as our province is concerned. Some few years ago a lecturer came to our province who advocated deep ploughing. He told the farmers that they had a second farm under the one they were using and that they could obtain access to it by deep ploughing and thus get virgin soil and much better crops. A year or two after that another man came along and condemned that absolutely. He opposed deep ploughing or much ploughing of any kind. He advocated surface cultivation.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE: What do you think about it?

Mr. HUGHES: I am addressing my remarks to the chairman and the minister, who know what I am talking about. Another lecturer came to our province, I think last year, and a number of farmers went to listen to him. One man asked him what he would do to bring in a worn-out field, or worn-out land, and the prompt answer was: Sow clover on it. The minister knows well enough that that was no answer to give to a practical farmer, that the land would have to be well cultivated and in good condition before you could get a catch of clover. You might as well sow the clover on the sea shore as on a worn-out field. Consequently practical farmers go away from meetings of that kind and doubt everything they have heard. I would therefore ask the minister to send a better class of men to our province, if he has any at all, and if he has not any of a better class, not to send any, and save that much expense. These are practical questions, and upon them I am sure the minister will agree with me.

[Mr. Graham.]

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister given up all hope of having the embargo on our potatoes removed? This matter came up when the minister was away. The Minister of Customs stated in the House that the shipment came from New Brunswick, but the hon. member from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), who took part in the debate, was most positive that there was no powdery scab in that shipment at all; and what the minister now says confirms that statement. Have the American authorities extended that embargo to the whole of Canada?

Mr. BURRELL: Apparently they have, and apparently they are within their rights, because they explicitly stated that if any powdery scab was found they would restore the embargo. They find powdery scab undoubtedly, although in exceedingly small quantities, and after a great deal of trouble. I do not say that there is no hope of getting that embargo removed. On the contrary I am inclined to believe that in the course of not a very long time the attitude of the United States authorities, especially of the technical officers, will be entirely changed, and that they will come to the conclusion that the situation does not warrant such drastic action.

For the development of the dairying industries, and the improvement in transportation, sale and trade in food and other agricultural products, $150,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the minister going to give the same facilities as last year for the transportation of butter from eastern Quebec to the Montreal market? Quite a number of butter factories have been started on the Gaspè peninsula, and the people there are much interested in this question.

Mr. BURRELL: We expect to give the same facilities.

Mr. TOBIN: I would like to call the attention of the minister to a letter that I received from the president of the Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade. The letter, which encloses a resolution, is as follows:

Sherbrooke, Que., April 1, 1915.

E. W. Tobin, Esq., M.P.,
House of Parliament,
Ottawa, Ont..

Dear Sir:

We have the honour to transmit herewith copy of resolution adopted at the recent annual meeting of the Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade.

We may say that delegates from the various Farmers' Clubs joined with the Associated Boards at that meeting and were most emphatic in their expressions with regard to the serious condition which has been created through the increased prices of feed. It was pointed out that unless something was done to prevent the inflation of prices by speculators the consequences would be disastrous in the matter of agricultural production, and that the output of many of our farms would be lessened.

Yours very truly,
Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade,
V. E. Morrill,
President.

Has the minister received a copy of that letter?

Mr. BURRELL: I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend any information about that, as I only got back a few days ago and have not yet had time to look over my correspondence.

Mr. TOBIN: I will read the resolution which the letter encloses:

Extract from minutes of annual meeting of the Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade, held at Sherbooke, March 16, 1915:

It was moved by J. A. Watson, seconded by Geo. W. A. Reburn, and resolved:

That whereas the Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade have learned from the delegates to this meeting from Farmers' Clubs that the production of our farmers cannot well be increased until the price of feed for our cattle and food for our population be reduced to within a measureable distance of where these prices were before the outbreak of hostilities;

Whereas the milling companies are obliging dealers in the Eastern Townships to accept, in each shipment of feed, many bags of flour which they do not actually require, at the excessive, increased prevailing price, which is unreasonable when the present price of wheat is considered, thus loading ordinary dealers with high-priced flour;

Whereas it is evident that the present price of grain is not increased sufficiently to warrant the excessive and increased price now charged for flour, bran, shorts, etc., by the milling companies of the Dominion;

Whereas this is certainly done in restraint of trade;

Now, therefore, be it resolved that these Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade protest against such increased price of food stuffs, in so far as this increase is not absolutely justifiable;

That this protest be rendered effective by forwarding copy of this resolution to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to the Minister of Agriculture, and to the members of Parliament representing the Eastern Townships at Ottawa, with a request that it be handed for action to the commission which has already been appointed to investigate the high cost of living.

And furthermore that these Eastern Townships Associated Boards of Trade severely deprecate the idea of any persons or companies using present war conditions to enrich themselves.

Certified true copy.

W. M. Hillhouse,
Acting Secretary.

I hope the minister will take this matter into his consideration, and lay the letter and resolution before the High Cost of Living Commission.

Mr. BURRELL: The deputy informs me that he thinks the letter was received and transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce, with which it had more to do. It would probably be placed before the High Cost of Living Commission, whose report I am informed is in the hands of the printer.

Mr. GRAHAM: This item covers a multitude of things. What does the minister propose to do for the development of the dairying industry?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, it covers quite a lot of items. We propose to carry on the activities we have been engaged in for the last two or three years. One very important item is the carrying on of the work of the record centres. Speaking from memory, I think we have thirty-two centres at the present time; quite a large number of them are in Ontario. The animals tested in each centre run from 700 to 1,000. At the end of the year the farmers associated with the centre are able to see how profitable their animals are, what is the percentage of butter fat and so on, and whether or not the animals are paying their board bill. It is a very valuable work. Then there other items such as the model cheese factory, model creamery, refrigerator car service and cold storage for fruit. It is practically the same work as was carried on last year, there being very little increase this year on any of the lines I have mentioned.

Mr. GRAHAM: How does the quality of our cheese compare with that of other years, and with that of other countries? Are we maintaining our high reputation?

Mr. BURRELL: My impression is that we are. As my hon. friend can understand, I have not had any late word about it, as I have not had time to see any of the officials. I shall be very glad to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. GRAHAM: How do our butter exports compare this year with last? Are we consuming all our butter? Are we making as much?

Mr. BURRELL: There was none exported last year, and I imagine it will be the same this year. I think we are making as much. I shall be very glad to take a note of what my hon. friend says and hand it to the dairy commissioner.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps one of the officials could hand me the information, for members are often asked these questions, even when going along on the train. Some of us who are interested in agricultural societies give special prizes to encourage the raising of various kinds of stock, milch cows, for instance, and dairy herds. Has the department any suggestion to make as to the best use that can be made of these prize distributions? For instance, I know of one member that gives two prizes for the best dairy herd. The idea in giving a prize is to stimulate competition between the ordinary farmers as well as between the producers of the very finest stock, but we find that the same people get the prizes every year, no matter how you change it around, and they are, of course, entitled to them because they exhibit the best herds. Is there any suggestion by which a prize can be given that would be a stimulus outside of those who produce pure-breds?

Mr. BURRELL: The only thing you could do would be to offer prizes to those who never got a prize before.

Mr. GRAHAM: I thought of that, but I had reference more to what we would exclude in a prize of that kind.

Mr. BURRELL: It is a pretty wide subject and I would be very glad to get suggestions with reference to it.

Mr. MARCIL: Dairying is becoming an important industry in my constituency, and I would like to know from the minister if he has had an application from Bonaventure for one of these cow-testing machines?

Mr. BURRELL: What we usually do is to try to find some district where the dairying industry is not quite up to the mark, where there are a sufficient number of cows, and where the people are anxious to bring their dairying up to the highest standard. We have now thirty or forty of these stations, and this year I do not think we can do any more than carry them on, although we hope to extend the work later. For the last year or two we have been reaching out to all districts possible, including many in Quebec, and in Ontario, and in the West. It does not follow that because there is an application for a dairy-record district that we establish one, because it means a great deal of expense and we have to cut our coat according to our cloth. A great many applications have come in with which we have not been able to deal.

[Mr. Burrell.]

Mr. MARCIL: The farmers in a county like that which I represent have a great many hardships to encounter which are not the lot of other farmers in Canada. The summer lasts for five months and the farmer has seven months of winter to face. In Bonaventure, ten or twelve butter factories have sprung up in recent years, and some are coming into existence in Gaspé county. The farmers are far removed from the markets; they have to depend on an out-of-date railway, the climatic conditions are severe in that part of the country, and the people are most certainly deserving of help from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BURRELL: I will bear that in mind.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I have before me a number of pamphlets issued by the Department of Agriculture, dealing with the dairying industry, cold storage, cow tests, ice on the farm, butter-making on the farm, and so on, and all these pamphlets contain most valuable information for the farmer. I find on inquiry at the department that the supply of this literature is very limited and that the system of distribution is, to my mind, inadequate. The members representing rural constituencies would, I believe, value most highly a generous supply of literature of this description. We do get a certain number of copies of the evidence taken before the Agricultural Committee of this House, but to my mind it is of little value from the educational point of view and only useful as an attestation of the fact that certain members attended that committee. I should like to have 400 or 500 copies of each of the publications I have referred to for distribution throughout my constituency, but I have been informed by the department that some of them are out of print, and that the supply is not equal to the demand. Does not the minister think it would be in the interests of agriculture and of the country generally to spend a little more money in distributing a liberal supply of this literature, and possibly to economize on the printing and distribution of certain blue books which are worthless?

Mr. McCRANEY: I endorse the suggestion of my hon. friend that money spent by the Government in the publication and distribution of such pamphlets as he has mentioned would be far better spent than on a number of publications which are of no use whatever. Many of the blue books I receive go to the waste-paper basket; I do not want to read them, and I have no place to put them, and the two copies of each being sent simply doubles the nuisance. The British Government print and distribute certain publications, such as the correspondence in connection with the war, which are issued at a mere nominal fee, and that is not a bad idea. For example, the white papers of the French Government, which is quite a large volume, has been issued at the price of one penny. The members of this House receive a bound edition of the sessional papers. Since I have been a member I have sent my copy to the University library where I can have access to it, and where the public can have access to it as well. I have let it be known in the public library and other places that these books are available there. I believe that if some of our libraries were supplied with the sessional papers, and if the members of Parliament were not supplied with so many, it would be an improvement. The publications of the Department of Agriculture are, as a rule, very valuable, and I should like to see a wider distribution of them.

Mr. HUGH CLARK: I believe that a great deal of public money is wasted in publishing and distributing Government reports that are not read by anybody. I and others have studied the matter, and I think it can be safely said that a saving of half a million dollars per annum could easily be made if more regard for economy were displayed in the distribution of these parliamentary publications. Only a few short days ago a report went through here, perhaps unnoticed, by which the usual allotment of the copies per member has been reduced to one. Henceforth for a year my hon. friend will not be burdened with more than one copy of each parliamentary publication. Apart from that a great saving can be effected, because there go to members of Parliament, newspaper offices and elsewhere a great many publications that they do not need and that are simply a burden to them. The Department of Trade and Commerce have a system by which they ascertain by means of return postcards whether their publications are desired or not, and the same rule could be applied to all parliamentary publications, so that no publications would go to those who did not desire them and had no use for them. I rose simply to tell my hon. friend that he will not be burdened as much as he was before, although, even after this, he may be burdened more than he wants to be.

Mr. BURRELL: Some of the remarks which have been made are absolutely true, although I think they apply more to the other departments than to the Department of Agriculture. The rule in the Department of Agriculture is that every farmer in Canada, if he applies, can get all our literature; or if any member wants to give a list of the farmers to whom he would like to have it sent, they are put on our list and receive our publications. We find that is the only method to pursue, because if hon. members had to distribute our publications themselves, there would be a duplication and a lot of unnecessary work On our experimental farm list we have more than 80,000 names, and we issue more than 2,000,000 publications every year, and a lot of this matter is very highly appreciated and is doing a lot of good. If the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Douglas) or the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Hugh Clark) know of any people to whom they want us to send this literature we shall be only too glad to send it. We do not charge for doing so, because there is a feeling in Canada against paying for Government publications, and we have made a charge only in the case of some expensive publications, of which there is quite a limited issue.

Mr. McCRANEY: My observations did not apply in any sense to the publications of the Department of Agriculture, because I have always found them excellent, and they are the class of publication for which I would like to see the money provided.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Would the minister give me some information as to the scarcity of these pamphlets at present? I understand from one of the officers of the department that the supply has been practically exhausted, and that is why I wish the minister would have more of them published.

Mr. BURRELL: As a matter of fact, there is not a great call for many of the bulletins and they have been allowed to go out of print. This year, in consequence of the campaign we have been carrying on in connection with our agricultural work, there has been such an enormous demand for a number of the bulletins and pamphlets that the supply has been practically exhausted; but we are putting in fresh orders to have them issued again, so that, although in some cases there may be a scarcity, we shall soon be able to remedy that.

Mr. BRODER: One thing that should not be overlooked is that the same bulletin will not suit all sections of the country. Why not get those that will suit the different sections and publish more of them, and economize in that way? As far as blue books are concerned, the local newspapers which are supplied with all these documents, make very little use of them, and it would be better to have them sent by request. A great saving could be made in that way, and what was saved might be expended in increasing the issue of the agricultural bulletin which is so much desired by the people throughout the country.

Mr. McCREA: I understand the hon. member has in the employment of his department a Mr. Giard, who is thoroughbred live-stock commissioner. What are his duties and what is his remuneration? I understand that he has opened an office in Sherbrooke, and I would like to know the names of his employees, their salaries and their duties. I am asking for this not for the sake of criticism, but simply to know what has been done. My contention is that neither this Government nor any other Government has done what it should have done for the cause of agriculture; and any money legitimately and wisely spent for agricultural purposes will never have any criticism from me, because agriculture is one of the things that have been seriously neglected. If the minister cannot give me the information off-hand, if he will give it to me befor the end of the session, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. BURRELL: I can give it to my hon. friend when we come to the live-stock vote. Mr. A. W. Giard is representative of the live-stock branch for Quebec.

Mr. ROBB: Can the minister tell us if any progress has been made in the manufacture of butter and cheese in the Eastern Townships, or is there an increased exportation of cream to the United States from the Eastern Townships?

Mr. BURRELL: I am sorry I cannot tell my hon. friend that off-hand, but I will try to get the information before I get through with my Estimates.

Mr. ROBB: In the Montreal Gazette the statement is made that cream all the way from Stanstead through to Richmond was exported to the United States and that the farmers of that particular district proposed to ask the department to establish butter and cheese factories to off-set that exportation. The minister might also have that looked up.

Towards the encouragement of cold storage warehouses for the better preservation and handling of perishable food products, $200,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How is this work progressing?

Mr. BURRELL: This is exactly the same vote that we have always put in. It is paid in six instalments for the encouragement of cold storage industries under our control; that is, we have control of the rates and give for each warehouse a grant based on 30 per cent of the cost of construction, the plant having to conform to our specifications and the warehouse having to be a public utility. This work has been in operation for a great many years, and we are carrying it on along the same lines.

Mr. GRAHAM: How many plants have you?

Mr. BURRELL: About twenty-six or twenty-seven scattered throughout the country. The practice has been followed not to establish or encourage them in districts where they will conflict with cold storage plants that are serving a public purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is there one at Brockville?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, it has had its fifth instalment. It was built at a total cost of $52,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the name of this company?

Mr. BURRELL: I have not the exact name. I will give my hon. friend the information this evening. I see that the fifth instalment is due in 1915, so they must have been established about five years ago.

Mr. LOGGIE: What is the cost of the cold storage at Port Hawkesbury, and how many instalments are still due?

Mr. BURRELL: The cost is $200,000, and the third instalment is due in February, 1916.

Mr. LOGGIE: What provision is there for the control of rates of cold storage plants after the instalments have been paid?

Mr. BURRELL: I do not think there is any provision of that kind, for it is practically impossible to carry it out. Of course, we have control during the time the instalments are being paid, because we can refuse to pay if they do not carry out the conditions on which the subsidy is paid. It has had to be a question largely of good faith.

Mr. LOGGIE: After the instalments are all paid, I fancy the Government has not much real control over the rates or operation of the plants.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not know that we have. Of course, we never had.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the position in regard to the cold storage establishment at Edmonton?

Mr. BURRELL: The third instalment is due in February, 1916, so, apparently, two instalments have been paid.

Mr. OLIVER: Are there reports as to the operations of the establishment?

Mr. BURRELL: I presume that the cold storage commissioner would have that. We always send a man out before instalments are paid to see that everything is according to conditions.

Mr. KYTE: What is the amount of subsidy paid to the cold storage plant at Port Hawkesbury?

Mr. BURRELL: It is 30 per cent on the cost, the cost being $200,000. It is at the same rate as the subsidy paid to others.

Mr. KYTE: Will the payment of the balance depend on any inspection?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, we do not pay unless they conform to the requirements of the department.

Exhibitions, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister is not lacking in information on this subject, for he has it at first hand. He will be able to inform not only the House but the department about these exhibits, particularly the big one.

Mr. BURRELL: If my hon. friend has any special questions to ask, I would like to direct what I have to say to answering those questions.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am willing to leave it to the minister to give us such information as he thinks best about the Canadian exhibit and how it sizes up with those of other countries. Also, he might tell us what benefit we shall derive as Canadians from the expenditure of this money. We should be glad to know about those who are in charge of this work, and any other points about our exhibit that deserve special mention. I think it would be very interesting to the country to have a report of that kind from the minister on his return from California.

5 p.m.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not wish to take up more of the time of the committee than is necessary, but I am glad to speak a word on this subject, as it is one in which I am interested and I know that that interest is shared by all. The man in charge of this work is Colonel Hutchison, the commissioner, who has been in the service of the department for about fifteen years. The long experience he has had in connection with other exhibitions has served him splendidly in this case. Two years ago, when the subject of a Panama-Pacific exposition was first spoken of, we had two deputations, one from San Diego and one from San Francisco, asking Canada to take part. We came to the conclusion that it would be impossible to take part in more than one exhibition, and, after consideration, we decided that the San Francisco exposition would be the most important. At that time I suggested to the Prime Minister that if Canada took part in the exhibition there, especially in view of the colossal scale on which the exhibition was to be carried out, we must make a first-class exhibition or not exhibit at all. I got the consent of the Prime Minister and of my colleagues, and later on the support of the House, to a vote that amounts practically to twice what we have ever spent in an international exhibition before. I have just had the pleasure and responsibility of going to assist in the dedication of the Canadian building and have had the advantage of seeing what they were doing. I can only say that the exhibition is an extraordinarily important one. And, although the war is undoubtedly doing some injury to it in preventing attendance from Europe, they are getting a tremendous attendance from all over their own country and from South America and Canada; and perhaps on the whole, the attendance will justify the expectations of the promoters. The prime minister has just suggested to me that I should say something about the general character of the exposition. It is pretty hard to describe in a word an affair so big as this, for they have spent $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 in connection with the various buildings. Nearly every state of the Union has a separate building, some of them very expensive and very beautiful. Practically all the nations in the world, all the leading nations with the exception, I think, of Germany and Austria, have buildings of their own and very large exhibits. The French, the Italian and the Argentine exhibits are not quite ready; these nations are just completing their buildings. The other states and nations have their buildings practically completed and the exhibits installed.

So far as our own work is concerned, I have no hesitation in saying that not only has Canada the best exhibit it ever had at any exhibition, but it is quite evident we have been made the centre of attraction of the whole exhibition among the nations. We have the best exhibit and the best building, I think, of the whole exhibition.

Some hon members: Hear, hear.

Mr. BURRELL: If I felt justified in taking up the time of the committee, I could give any amount of testimony to this, because Californians have been most generous in their praise. I do not think I can do better than read a couple of very short extracts from newspapers published in prominent counties in California devoted to fruit-growing. The Merced California Sun, in the course of an editorial article entitled "The Feature of the Fair," says:

> The one thing on the exposition grounds that is attracting most attention and causing the most talk is the Canadian building and its contents. Wherever you go you hear people talking about it and advising others to see it. ... The Sun will not attempt a description of Canada's offering, further than to say that all of the vast resources of that great country are shown in a manner so original, so unique, so attractive that there is nothing else on the exposition grounds to compare with it. The Canadian building and its contents are in a class by themselves, and our advice to Merced visitors to the fair is to "See Canada First," and then see it again as often as your time will permit.

I wish to read a portion of another article from the Fresno, California, Republican, as follows:

> Every local booster in California ought to visit the Canadian building at the exposition, if for nothing but a visible demonstration that the best local advertising, is that which does not advertise the locality at all. Simply as an exploitation of the country and its resources, this Canadian building is incomparably the most skillfully presented exhibit on the grounds. The thing presented is not Nova Scotia, or Quebec, or Alberta or British Columbia, but Canada. After going through the building one feels that he has made a tour of Canada itself. Direct exploitation or promotion is tactfully kept in the background. The impression given is that the Canadian people, proud of their country, wish to share with all the world this enjoyment of its beauty and riches. The commerical suggestion is nowhere directly made, and yet almost unconsciously the impulsive comment of every visitor is "Let's go to Canada and buy a farm."

I could give dozens of similar quotations, but I shall not weary the committee by reading them. Colonel Hutchison and the members of the permanent staff who have been doing this work for a great many years, deserve great credit for the work which they have accomplished in the face of tremendous competition. Colonel Hutchison has given the most loyal service. He has marked abilities for this special kind of work, and, to use a phrase that is understood by all men, he has made a killing, so far as this particular undertaking goes. The Canadian building was the only one in the grounds which was completed and ready on the very day the Fair opened. It was crowded on that day, and has been crowded every day since. The people of California and all visitors have been absolutely generous in their appreciation of Canada's exhibit. It appeals to the American imagination that at a time when a small country like this has had the task of sending 50,000 of its citizens across the seas to fight the Empire's battles, it has also had the energy to take part in this great exposition, to put up one of the best buildings and to show the finest exhibit among all the exhibits of other nations of the world. I should like to add my appreciation of the hospitality and kindness that was extended to me as a Canadian during my visit to the exposition and my attendance at the dedication ceremonies. Nothing could exceed the warm and cordial feeling shown by the people of California towards Canada and Canadians and their warm appreciation of Canada's participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: A gentleman who is a former Canadian wrote me a few days ago saying that he was present at the exposition in San Francisco, and he asked me to tell the minister that as a former Canadian he was proud of the exhibit which Canada is making at that exposition. He sent me a copy of a leading newspaper published in the State of Washington, which gives an account of the exhibit made by that State. It says that the Washington State exhibit is a very poor one. The article says:

> That the Washington State exhibit at San Francisco is not a success is the preliminary report submitted to the Chamber of Commerce by L. Roy Slater who was asked by manager Gordon C. Corbaley to make an investigation and report.

The report is a lengthy one, but at the end of it the following reference to the Canadian exhibit is made:

> The Canadians have beaten everything in sight. They have the greatest exhibit, and better than all the rest of them combined. They have been shrewd enough to take advantage of our exposition to make their own exhibit the feature of the whole show, and it not only reflects great credit upon their country but upon the men who have charge of it.

So that we ought to congratulate the hon. minister on the splendid manner in which Canada's exhibit has been put before the people of the world.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am in a position to know that what the minister has said with regard to Canada's participation in this exposition is not at all exaggerated. I was in 'Frisco on Christmas Day and the day previous, and it was general talk then that Canada's exhibit was the only one ready for the opening of the fair. I had the opportunity of meeting a score or more of persons who had seen the exhibit, and I am sure that the newspaper reports which the minister has read are not at all exaggerated. The reports which I have had from Canadians and others is to the effect that the tastefulness of Canada's exhibit, the manner in which it was handled by Colonel Hutchison and the general management of it by the Department of Agriculture reflects great credit upon our country. In Los Angeles I met some persons who had been present at the opening of the exposition, and they were of the opinion that our representative there made himself persona grata. I do not wish to make the minister blush, but I believe that Colonel Hutchison and the department have produced in a difficult year a Canadian exhibit that, it is nothing more than fair to say, does very great credit to Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: In view of Canada's superior exhibit, is there any suggestion of having a Canadian day or a Canadian week? I have received a number of communications from former Canadians who say that they have been endeavouring to have the directors appoint a special period as a Canadian period, for one or two days or longer. If that were done, Canada would like to know about it, so that if they have any idea of attending the exposition they may be there on Canadian day or Canadian week, as the case may be.

Mr. BURRELL: We have been in the habit of doing something like that in connection with nearly all expositions in which we participate. We did have, in a sense, a special Canadian day when the dedication of the Canadian building took place. When I went there to deliver the formal dedication speech, the president of the exposition was present, together with the Governor of the state, the National commissioner and the mayor of the city. These officials gave speeches in particular honour of Canada and of the fact that Canada was participating in the Exposition. After that a reception was held upstairs for all Canadians who were present. This function was very widely advertised. At the same time, I do not think that the suggestion of a Canadian day is at all a bad idea. We have had in mind the idea of having later a Canadian day, and it would be well if this were done, to give Canadians an opportunity of singling out that special period for visiting the exposition.

Health of animals, $540,000.

Mr. D. C. ROSS (Middlesex West): I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a matter to which I referred this morning, and to which some weeks ago I called the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister. It is a matter of great importance to the province of Ontario, old Ontario particularly. The principle has been accepted by both parties that farmers and grazers whose animals must be slaughtered for the public good to prevent the spread of any contagious disease shall be compensated. The Act is, however, an old one, and the compensation that the Government is allowed to give by Order in Council under the Act is not at present in keeping with the prices of cattle and hogs. Insurance companies and railway companies have raised the maximum amounts that they will pay in case of the death of cattle, and I think the Government should not lag behind at this time, especially as we are to-day threatened in Ontario with a very terrible disease. At present all a farmer can get for a grade animal that has been slaughtered in the public interest is $40. The minister well knows that that is no compensation in that case. All he can get for the killing of a grade hog is $15, which is a wholly inadequate compensation. I made the suggestion to the Prime Minister some time ago that the Government might introduce an amendment to the Act, because I do not see that anything else can bring about the result I desire to attain. I do not think it is too late yet for the Minister of Agriculture to bring in such an amendment.

He could easily raise the limit of $60 to $110, and the limit of $15 to what he thinks proper. It may be that the Government will not have to pay these prices, because the foot and mouth disease may not get into the country; but at present there is alarm in regard to it, and I think the Government ought to take the necessary precautions before the disease reaches the country. I should judge from what the minister has said to me in conversation that his idea would be that if the disease should come into Ontario, compensation should be made to the farmers by a measure which would be made retroactive. If the session is so far advanced that it is impossible to amend the Act, the minister's statement to me is some solace; but I think that my suggestion would be a much better solution, and I would submit it to the consideration of the minister and the Government.

I wish to say a word also about the publications of the department. They are issuing some splendid publications. The only trouble I see about them is that the members are not able to get as many copies of those publications as they would like to distribute. On making application, I was told that I could get six. There are publications in regard to the growth of small fruit, butter making, the preservation of cream for butter making, the culture of cabbage and asparagus and vegetables in general, which certainly would be very useful to all farmers and market gardeners. These pamphlets are exeellent. I think the minister should make a regulation that each member should be allowed to have at least 50 or 100 copies of these pamphlets instead of six.

Mr.. BURRELL: Referring to my hon. friend's conversation with me, while I did say that if the foot and mouth disease should unfortunately come into this country, necessitating the killing of cattle and the Act were altered, it would be made retroactive, I would not like to make any positive statement as to what alteration there might be. I do not fear that we shall have the foot and mouth disease. Of course, no man can say it is impossible, because there are at the present time, in spite of all efforts that have been made in the United States, 20 states under quarantine. The United States have killed about 100,000 animals, about 50,000 head of cattle and roughly about 50,000 hogs. Roughly speaking they have spent about $1,000,000 in compensation. That compensation is not fixed along the same line as ours because there the State bears one-half the expense and the federal authorities the other half, and the State has usually fixed the appraisement of the value. Speaking offhand I think that for pure bred animals their maximum valuation has been placed at about $125, where we have fixed the maximum at $150. We are, of course, not relaxing any precautions that we have taken. This is the fifth outbreak that has occurred in the United States since 1870, which was the year of the first outbreak, the last being in 1908. The present outbreak, of course, is by far the most severe they have ever had. They say they are getting it largely under control. I understand there is no outbreak in the country west of Illinois, but we do not feel justified in relaxing our restrictions although they have fallen rather harshly on certain interests. We felt, however, that the interests of the farmers were paramount and that we could not run the risk of getting foot and mouth disease in this country. As regards compensation, although I have a good deal of sympathy with what my hon. friend has said, it must be always borne in mind that while the principle of compensation has been accepted by this House and by the department, nearly every country in the world in its compensation has fixed its values at lower amounts than we have fixed in Canada. We did recognize some few years ago that the value of horses had increased so tremendously since the Act was first put on the Statute book that we should raise it from $150 to $200. I am not sure that it should not be raised on hogs as well. As to cattle, as a matter of fact, we have not had any disease scheduled which has entailed the killing of cattle so that that question has not been under consideration except in so far as it arises owing to the possibility of the foot and mouth disease getting into the country. The subject is a big one and a debatable one, and I question whether it would be wise at this late hour of the session to enter upon it. I will, however, promise my hon. friend that everything he has said will be given the most serious consideration by the department. I will be glad to bring the subject to the attention of my colleagues and I believe that something ought to be done. If the foot and mouth disease comes here I shall certainly give the suggestion of my hon. friend the most sympathetic consideration and endeavour to arrange compensation in such a way that there shall be no hardship or unfair loss coming on those whose herds happen to be affected.

Mr. OLIVER: The time to take care of a situation is before it arises rather than afterwards. If we are in imminent danger, as we must be—

Mr. BURRELL: I do not think we are.

Mr. OLIVER: —as we must be in imminent danger of the spread of this terrible disease, it seems to me the minister and the House would do well to make such preparation as would seem to be necessary so that when it comes we will be in the very best position to deal with it. The principle of compensation to farmers for animals slaughtered in the public interest is, I fancy, something like this: If the owner of the diseased cattle is going to suffer the loss of his cattle because of the disease, he is impelled by the ordinary instincts of self-preservation to try to shove that loss off on to his neighbour, that is to say, he will try to dispose of the diseased animal. Compensation is granted so that he will not have that inducement; but, if the compensation is far below the valuation, the inducement still remains. As a matter of fact, the compensation has, measurably, if not actually, to be brought up to the valuation of the animal, or else the purpose of the compensation is in a large measure lost. But after all, the amount of the compensation is only a small part of the transaction. The great object is the prevention of the spread of the disease, and the tremendously greater losses that might follow because of it. I speak somewhat feelingly on this question of compensation, because in our part of the country tremendous losses have been suffered through diseased hogs; and I know whereof I speak when I say that the owner who suspects disease in his herd is inclined to escape from the loss by disposing of the animals to other parties. I am not prepared to say what should be done as to valuation in the case of hogs or cattle. But I am prepared to say this: that in view of the imminent danger to Canada of this terrible foot and mouth disease, this Parliament could not better spend its time than in making whatever preparations are adequate and possible to meet that contingency.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not regard the danger as imminent because, since the outbreak of the disease last October, the United States authorities have been working at it practically all the time, and every month has seen them in a much stronger position to prevent the spread of the disease. Our restrictions are not relaxed at all: we are watching the matter very closely. I am glad to have heard my hon. friend speak as he has, because some people do not hold these views on compensation. It is a very big subject, and very debatable. As far as any reasonable compensation will assist in stamping out the disease, I am in favour of it; and we have to make the compensation reasonable, otherwise the owner of diseased stock would spread the disease.

Mr. OLIVER: I might bring to the notice of the minister a case at Edmonton, where the owner of some hogs that had to be destroyed had not yet received compensation when I left there. I brought the matter to the attention of the department and of the minister last session, I think.

Mr. BURRELL: I understand that on account of the large amount of hog cholera the vote was exhausted.

Mr. OLIVER: I hope that compensation will be given in this case, because the destruction of these hogs means ruin to the owner, and even the maximum compensation that the law allows will not be adequate to prevent his ruin. I certainly think this man should be compensated.

Mr. BURRELL: I quite appreciate that.

Mr. ROBB: Is there still an embargo against all animals coming into Canada from the United States?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: Does it apply to remounts bought in the United States for shipment to England or France?

Mr. BURRELL: As I understand it, the special arrangements that were made some time ago for transport through the country of remounts, still obtain. I have not had an opportunity since my return of discussing the matter with the Veterinary Director-General, but I do not think there has been any change in the arrangements.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is there any provision for compensation for animals slaughtered on account of tuberculosis?

Mr. BURRELL: Some time ago an Order in Council was passed by which assistance in stamping out the disease could be given to municipalities of over 5,000 population. The regulations of this Order in Council provide for compensation a little more liberal, I think, than the compensation provided in the Act as it stands at present.

One or two municipalities, Ottawa and Winnipeg for instance, have had this matter under consideration with a view to taking advantage of the regulations.

Mr. BRODER: If an animal is really diseased, the owner does not get compensation at all.

Mr. BURRELL: Oh, yes.

Mr. BRODER: That is not generally done.

Mr. BURRELL: Oh, yes.

Mr. BRODER: He gets very little compensation if the animal is diseased.

Mr. EDWARDS: He does not get compensation until the disease is diagnosed by the Government inspector?

Mr. BURRELL: No; the fact of disease must be established.

Mr. ROSS: I should like to know why the Order in Council limits this compensation to towns and cities of over 5,000 population. I notice that subsection 3 of section 5 of the Order in Council says:

> Valuation shall be made by the inspector, and shall not exceed the maximum valuation for cattle as specified in section 6 of the Act.

So the valuation is just the same as in the Act.

Mr. BURRELL: We had a great deal of discussion about that. We have been urged again and again to do something to help in stamping out bovine tuberculosis, which, as my hon. friend knows, is a very great menace to the cattle of Ontario. At the same time, every government has always more or less shied from the subject, because of its magnitude and the extraordinary expenditure that would be involved if you were to introduce wholesale compensation. Of course, we have authority to deal with it, and so have the provinces; but only one, British Columbia, has taken up the matter itself. It has passed an Act providing for compensation for animals that are destroyed on account of disease. On account of the menace to the health of human life we came to the conclusion that we might perhaps do something to assist in stamping out the disease, and the reason why we finally dealt with cities and towns of over 5,000 population was because it was chiefly in the large cities and towns that the poor children were most exposed to the danger of impure milk. In the more scattered districts of the country people can look out for themselves a little better than those in the towns.

[Mr. Burrell.]

Again, in municipalities there is generally some system of control by licensing, but that very seldom prevails in the rural districts. Of course it might be said that it is not very logical to draw the line as we have done, but we thought we should first deal with cities of over 5,000 population for the reasons I have indicated.

> For the administration and enforcement of the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $275,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What work is done under this vote?

Mr. BURRELL: This is to pay for the inspection and control of all the abattoirs in the country. As my hon. friend knows, under the Meat and Canned Foods Act no one in Canada can ship meat from one province to another or out of the country unless from an establishment which is under Government control and inspection. We maintain a staff of inspectors who see the animals killed and the distribution of the carcase, who in fact watch the meat at every stage. Every diseased animal is condemned, and sometimes certain diseased parts only are condemned. This system of inspection ensures that nothing can be shipped from one province to another or out of the country unless it has been pronounced by the Government inspectors absolutely free from disease.

Mr. OLIVER: That does not apply to animals slaughtered for local sale?

Mr. BURRELL: No.

Mr. OLIVER: Even in the abattoirs?

Mr. BURRELL: At the abattoirs it would include everything. The legislation was enacted principally to protect our export trade, and it was then concluded that within its own boundaries a province might very well look after its own health and the inspection of meat. Some of the provinces have done so and some have not. If a firm like the Matthews Company or the Davies Company were killing and selling even in their own province, nothing could come out of their establishments that was not inspected.

Mr. OLIVER: Then there is nothing to prohibit any person else from killing and selling without inspection?

Mr. BURRELL: No.

Mr. EDWARDS: There is one difficulty in connection with this inspection which I wish to bring before the attention of the minister. Recently, I understand, the Militia Department has advertised for a supply of meat for the barracks and military college at Kingston, and it is stipulated that the meat to be supplied requires Government inspection. It seems to me that this is another way of saying that the only meat that can be supplied will be meat from Toronto or Montreal or places where these large abattoirs are, and, as a result, the people of the locality surrounding Kingston are excluded from tendering, unless, of course, they get their supplies from these large firms. In that way this inspection has a tendency towards creating a monopoly or centralization, which I do not think is fair. Government inspection was designed to protect our export trade, but if Government inspection is required for the supply of meat to Government institutions then there would appear to be no alternative but to get that meat from the large meat packers whose products are inspected. I think the Government should carry this inspection system further, and that inspectors should be appointed in different centres. In Kingston is located the Royal Military College, the barracks, the Kingston penitentiary, the Rockwood Asylum, and it seems to me that in all fairness to the people of the district they should have an equal show with the big companies to tender to supply meat to these institutions. Why could not the Government appoint competent men to inspect the meat in these centres, so that the farmers of the district might be able to sell to Government institutions.

Mr. DOUGLAS: In the province of Alberta the question of monopoly comes up in another way. Under the provincial Act all meat killed at the abattoirs of the Swift Packing Company or P. Burns & Company has to bear the Government inspection stamp, and the city of Edmonton has made a regulation that no farmer is permitted to sell slaughtered meat unless it is killed at these abattoirs where, of course, it necessarily must bear the Government stamp. The farmers claim that this has a tendency to create a monopoly and to prevent competition in the sale of meat. The provincial Act requires that the animal shall be slaughtered in these abattoirs and inspected by the officers of the Agriculture Department.

Mr. BURRELL: You will have to get after your provincial Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The point is whether it is wise to have the regulations in connection with the sale of meat so stringent as to create a monopoly. The complaint of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) is that there are not enough meat inspectors and that a monopoly is in consequence created, but in Alberta the monopoly is created by having too many inspectors.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: The way out of it is to follow the example of the city of Toronto, which owns a municipal abattoir, from which the meat is supplied to all the local butchers. The city of Toronto has absolutely the best abattoir in Canada, and it has been a great success. There is no reason why the smaller towns should not follow that example and have all the local cattle killed in a well-regulated local abattoir. The people are entitled to protection even more than trade is entitled to protection, and while I agree with the member for Frontenac that there ought to be local inspectors, I see no means of remedying the difficulty other than by establishing municipal abattoirs.

Mr. BURRELL: The meat packers have often complained that the Militia Department does not buy from inspected plants because the Government makes the inspected plants live up to rather a rigid inspection. On the other hand, the view is expressed, as my hon. friend from Frontenac says, that this would create a monopoly. The Militia Department has refused to comply with the representations made to it, that the meat should be Government inspected, and what they do is to buy the meat themselves and make their own inspection. I rather think that when my friend from Frontenac says that this meat for the barracks in Kingston is subject to Government inspection, the meaning is that the inspection is by a departmental officer of the Militia Department and not by our inspectors in the abattoirs.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND: It seems most peculiar that all the meats for export are inspected by Government inspectors, while a large proportion of the meats which are consumed by the people at home are not inspected at all. As I understand it, the meats that are supplied to the soldiers in the London camp are not Government inspected, and I do not think that is right. I contend that it is an absolute impossibility for an inspector, no matter how efficient he may be, to detect from the dressed carcase whether the animal was diseased or not. When you come to look into the matter and find how many animals are really diseased and how many parts of these animals are diseased, it is quite a revelation. The percentage of meat killed in an abattoir that finds its way into the fertilizing plant is astonishingly large. I believe that Canadian live stock are becoming more subject to disease from year to year, and I think the day is not far distant, when in order to protect the health of our people the Government will find it necessary to adopt still more stringent regulations.

In order to protect the health of the people, a more reasonable compensation should be paid to those who suffer loss through having their animals destroyed for the purpose of eradicating such diseases. I do not like the idea of our own people being supplied with uninspected meats, whereas we have to have government inspection of all meats exported from Canada. The quicker this matter is remedied the better it will be for all concerned.

Arts and Agriculture—publication branch, $15,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is this new item?

Mr. BURRELL: Hitherto the separate branches have dealt with their own publications—they do so to some extent now—and up to last year and this year the vote was confined to the vote for the International Institute of Agriculture. We have separated that vote and are allowing that branch to deal only with the International Institute. The work of publication is increasing so rapidly that we are making a separate branch out of it, with Mr. Spencer at the head.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: You will only have one publication now?

Mr. BURRELL: All our publications now except that of the International Institute will be under this branch. Probably the word "distribution" would be better than the word "publications," because it is a distribution of the publications of all the branches.

Mr. ROSS: Will the minister consider favourably or seriously my suggestion of giving each member the option of asking the department to supply him with 50 or 100 copies instead of 6 of any pamphlet published?

Mr. BURRELL: I have of course pointed out to my hon. friend the difficulty that arises in giving each member many copies of each publication, that practice leading to endless complications. As I have stated, however, we are going to consider the whole matter carefully, and I shall be glad to bear in mind what my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. EDWARDS: There is one publication published recently by the department, called the War Issue of the Department of Agriculture. I read that through very carefully and secured as many copies of it as I could—less than half a dozen—and I think there is so much information in that bulletin in regard to the various countries engaged in this great war that the minister would be well advised to get out a number of them and give to each member at least 100 copies. I am sure the general public would be very glad to have it in their possession.

For the development of the live stock industry, $550,000.

Mr. NEELY: What is the reason for this increase of $150,000?

Mr. BURRELL: We are carrying on the same work practically that we have been for the last year or two, but this particular increase has special reference to the encouragement of live stock in connection with the various large exhibitions of the country. My hon. friend may know—some hon. members do know—that there was an agitation some time ago to establish a western national live stock show somewhat along the lines of the one in Chicago There was very great difficulty in working it out; and although I had a great deal of sympathy with the idea, it seemed to me it was no good carrying it out unless all parts of the country were united, and it was apparently impossible to work out a scheme. The different live stock interests of the country, east and west, seemed to have a good many differences, and I could not see that they were getting very much further forward with the scheme. Therefore, I suggested to them that I would ask the Government and the House to approve a vote which would be quite a new departure as far as we were concerned, that is, which would give direct assistance on the live stock side to all exhibitions in the country that came up to a certain standard. It was for that purpose that this vote of $150,000 was put in. It is of course impossible for the Federal Government to assist all the smaller exhibitions; but what we had in mind was that those exhibitions which came up to a certain standard in the way of live stock should be assisted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What standard?

Mr. BURRELL: What we have laid down with regard to assistance is that there must be an expenditure on the part of the exhibition of at least $5,000 in prize money for the various classes of live stock before we can assist them with any financial grant. That would practically include all the greater shows of the country, both winter shows and fall exhibitions, which made live stock a really important feature. We had to draw the line somewhere, and I asked the officers of our live stock branch to get into contact with all the leading members of the industry, and to try to get a fair idea as to the best way of assisting them. The conditions governing this assistance may be briefly stated as follows:

Fair associations, whose shows are open in all classes to the whole of Canada, and which have paid out in the utility classes of live stock and poultry at their last preceding show the sum of $5,000 or over, will be given a grant equal to 50 per cent of the actual amount paid out, the maximum grant to any show not to exceed the sum of $5,000. Fair boards, when making application to the Live Stock Branch for this grant, must forward a certified and properly subscribed statement of the auditor's report of all prize money paid out at the last show in the classes previously referred to; also a copy of the proposed prize list for the succeeding year. The revising of the prize list shall be subject to the approval of the Live Stock Commissioner. That was with the idea that we should have some control really useful in the assisting and development of the industry. All pure-bred live stock exhibited at shows which receive the benefit of this grant must be registered, in the name of the exhibitor, in the Canadian National Live Stock Records. In all questions of policy or matters of dispute, the decision of the live stock commissioner shall be final.

There may be details to work out; but I think the live stock men of the country felt generally that some assistance of that kind was absolutely necessary to prevent some of the shows from going under, and it, also, according to them, would prove a tremendous stimulus in this particular industry to the perpetuation of a better class of stock and to increasing the stock, which is somewhat below par in this country as it is in the United States. I think some assistance of this kind is necessary, although it means considerable increase in this time of financial stringency, and will have the support of those members of this House who believe that the live stock industry is of extraordinary importance in our general scheme of agriculture.

Mr. ROBB: Will the minister tell us how many exhibitions in Canada come up to the standard he has named?

Mr. BURRELL: It would be very hard to give my hon. friend the exact information; but I remember going over the question before I left for California, and I should think twenty-five or thirty would come under that rule.

Mr. GRAHAM: Do I understand from the minister that the standard would have to be $5,000 or more expended at the last preceding exhibition for pure bred stock only?

Mr. BURRELL: No, not necessarily for pure-bred cattle—for all utility stock.

Mr. NEELY: It is almost six o'clock, but I would ask the minister, when he resumes with his Estimates, if he will be good enough to give the committee a statement of the number of pure-bred animals that have been purchased under this department in the various provinces of Canada in the past year, and where these animals have been placed.

Mr. BURRELL: I think I can give my hon. friend that information.

At six o'clock, the House resumed and then took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 107, respecting a patent of John Millen & Son, Limited.—Mr. Webster.

Bill No. 120, for the relief of Cecil Howard Lambert.—Mr. Sam. Sharpe.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Arts and Agriculture—for the development of the live stock industry, $550,000.

Mr. BURRELL: The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) asked me for a list of animals purchased. It is as follows: Stallions: Prince Edward Island, 2; Nova Scotia, 3; New Brunswick, 2; Quebec, 35; Ontario, 6; Manitoba, 6; Saskatchewan, 18; Alberta, 25. Bulls: Maritime Provinces, 39; Quebec, 110; Ontario, 32; Manitoba, 30; Saskatchewan, 127; Alberta, 70; British Columbia, 6. Boars: Prince Edward Island, 3; Nova Scotia, 9; New Brunswick, 5; Quebec, 71; Ontario, 9; Manitoba,9; Saskatchewan, 50; Alberta, 28; British Columbia, 1. Rams: Prince Edward Island, 55; Nova Scotia, 86; New Brunswick, 18; Quebec, 206; Ontario, 27; Manitoba, 7; Saskatchewan, 5; Alberta, 12.

Mr. NEELY: Were these animals purchased and distributed in the same province?

Mr. BURRELL: Occasionally they are taken from one province to another, but the general rule is that where we can get satisfactory animals, they are purchased and distributed as far as possible in the same province.

Mr. NEELY: So far as this item is concerned, and the somewhat considerable increase of $150,000 over the vote of last year, I have nothing to offer but the most entire approval.

The vitalizing of this department by the minister seems to me to be one of the best things that he has done since assuming the responsibility of the position which he now occupies. The live stock industry of Canada is a most important branch of agriculture and, speaking for a comparatively new district in Western Canada, I must say that the development of this policy of supplying pure-bred male animals in districts where the conditions made this necessary is in my judgment a splendid move on the part of the Minister of Agriculture. In my own constituency a number of these animals have been placed and the improvement in the quality and standard of the live stock has become more and more marked as this policy has become more and more developed.

If I have any fault to find with the expenditure under the head of agriculture by the present Administration and the preceding Administration, it would be the paucity of money, the smallness of the amount asked for the development of the agricultural industry throughout Canada as compared with the amounts that are spent in the other departments of the Government. We all recognize, more to-day than ever before, that agriculture is the basic industry of this country. We spend large sums on the development of our transportation facilities. Why do we require these large expenditures on transportation facilities? Is it not that we may take the products of the farm to the ultimate consumer and bring back to the farmers the products of the factories of our towns and cities in the various parts of Canada? We spend enormous sums on transportation facilities. We have to spend enormous sums on public works throughout the country; on the improvement of harbours and ports and in other developments which are not so profitable even as the development of our transportation facilities and our ports and harbours. Let us take the total vote under the head of agriculture. We find that the Government are asking this year for something like $3,300,000. That, of course, does not cover the vote for civil government, for the administration of departmental affairs. In my judgment if any fault can be found with the amount we are voting under the head of agriculture, it is that in comparison with other departments of Government the farmer of this country is not getting his due and proper share. It is only—and I must give this credit to the present minister—it is only within the past two or three years that Canada has devoted any particular or special attention to the development of that great branch of agriculture, namely, the live stock industry. We appreciate to-day what that industry means to us. We are anxious to see the breeders of Canada using every measure possible to keep up the number and quality of animals necessary not only for the feeding of our own people but for the supplying of meat products to the outside world. I have been watching the development of this policy of the distribution of male animals since its inauguration, and I must say that, as far as my observation goes, in Western Canada and particularly in Saskatchewan, I find nothing but approval and praise for the manner in which the policy is being carried out under the present Live Stock Commissioner who I believe is a man who understands his business, a thoroughly practical man, who has spent his life in the development of the live stock industry on his own behalf as well as on behalf of his fellow stock breeders throughout Canada. In the development of the policy of the department, in the matter of meeting the views and requirements of many districts in Saskatchewan, I have no fault to find. I believe that the Commissioner is fulfilling his duty in a way worthy of approval and praise. For the benefit of the minister I would say that in my judgment there is no item of expenditure in his department which brings such definite, practical results to the farmers of the country through aid given to the live stock industry, as this item of $400,000 or $500,000 which is devoted to the promotion of the policy of furnishing pure-bred male animals in the districts throughout Canada where those animals are necessary because of local conditions.

I have been told the policy of the Government in buying these animals and putting them in new districts is an injury to the stock breeders who have similar animals for sale. I fail to see that there is any strength in that contention. It is true that the policy of organizing in localities companies to whom these animals are furnished may to some extent limit the number of sales by private individuals because of the fact that one of these animals furnished by the Government will take the place of a number of animals that would be required if private individuals had to furnish them for themselves.

On the other hand, the injury that might be done to the stock breeder who has animals for sale would be far outweighed by the benefit to the large districts in the newer provinces of Canada where the people are quite unable to furnish themselves with pure-bred stock. For my part I would say that the minister instead of shortening sail, should crowd on sail; he should add to the amount yearly, and give the man at the head of the department the freest possible hand in developing this policy. He should encourage him in every possible way.

While I am on my feet I wish to bring another matter in connection with this item to the attention of the minister and of the Government and of the House and of the country. We are spending a certain amount of money for the purpose of improving the quality of the live stock of this country. Now, there is one branch of the live stock industry that in my judgment has, on account of the war, the greatest opportunity it has had for years, or probably will have for many years to come. I refer to the horse industry. I will not presume to speak for the East, but I am expressing a very widespread feeling throughout Western Canada when I say that there seems to be a very strong suspicion that the number of horses being purchased at the present time from horse breeders in the West is far and away below the number they might naturally expect to sell under present conditions. In other words, although this Government have appointed men in Western Canada for the purpose of buying horses for war purposes, we have felt up to the present and we feel now that only a very very small number of horses have been purchased compared with the number that might have been purchased if the Government had been earnest in its efforts to secure as many horses for military purposes as the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta could furnish. I understand that a considerable number of horses have been purchased in the eastern provinces, but as I said before I do not presume to speak for Quebec or the Maritime Provinces, nor for Ontario, for which the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) can speak very well. The Minister of Agriculture need not come back at me and say that I am discussing something outside of his department; for I will not accept that as an answer, and for this reason. The Minister of Agriculture is the member of this Government who is responsible for looking after the agricultural interests of this country. He has in the Estimates this item of $550,000 for the promotion of the live stock industry. Now what does he mean by spending $550,000 for the promotion of the live stock industry if he will not enable the horse breeders of the country to take advantage of the greatest opportunity they ever had of selling horses? Whether or not the responsibility for purchase lies with some other member of the Government, and I presume it lies with the Militia Department. The Minister of Agriculture is responsible for seeing that the stock breeders of the country get a square deal at the present time. I repeat that there is a widespread feeling that the horse breeders have not been able to sell as many horses as they might reasonably have expected to sell. I do not want to give this to the House as mere hearsay. I am told by a member on this side of the House—and he is prepared to back up what I say; I am prepared to give his name—that not only has no special assistance been given by the Government in securing markets for our horses outside of Canada, but on the contrary buyers of horses for foreign countries have actually been warned off Canadian soil by this Government. I am told that purchasers for the British Government have been requested by those acting in authority for this Government to leave Canadian soil, and to confine their purchases of horses to the United States and other countries. They were told to leave the Canadian horse market alone until the Canadian Government had secured all the horses they required, so that the price should not be advanced against this Government. I do not know how far this statement is true, but I know that the purchasing agent of the British Government stated to a member of this House that that was the condition of affairs. If there is any truth in the statement, then this Government is guilty of malicious, almost criminal, injury to the horse breeders of this country. What is the use of spending money for the purpose of improving the live stock business of this country if the Government do not assist our stock breeders to secure a market when that market is available? There was an opportunity for our stock breeders to get rid of a surplus of animals, many of which were unfitted for farm work, but the Government did not help them to secure that opportunity. So far from helping them, according to this statement they put obstacles in the way of our stock breeders availing themselves of a market which was brought to their door. The opportunity was turned away by the action of this Government. I want to be fair, but I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture and the Government that that is the feeling throughout a large part of this country both in the East and in the West. For some reason or other, while French and English buyers are plentiful in the United States and down as far as Texas, in Canada there is a woeful dearth in the demand for cavalry and artillery horses. If there is such an embargo placed on purchases from outside by this Government, it is up to this Government to take that embargo off at once; it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture on whose shoulders rests responsibility to protect the interests of the agriculturist, the stock-breeder, and the farmer, to see that the embargo is lifted. The number of horses purchased or likely to be purchased by the Canadian Government is only a very small percentage of the number of horses which are for sale at present. Surely the stock-breeder and the farmer are not to be deprived of this opportunity to get a good price for their surplus stock, simply because the Canadian Government wishes to monopolize this market for themselves, so that they may purchase horses cheaper than they otherwise could. We all believe that our agricultural industry is the most important in Canada; we believe that Canada is playing to-day its greatest part in the world's drama by the food supplies which it is able to furnish to the allied armies in Europe. If it be important, as it is important, and as the members of the Government tell us, it is important, that production should be stimulated in every possible way, then we must carry that proposition one step further and we must see that the necessary markets are found for this increased production. If this suspicion of which I have spoken is not well founded, then it is only fair and just to the Government that they should have an opportunity to make a full denial. We would like to know the truth about this.

We in the West have no fault to find with the price we have received for our grain, but we know that up to date the horses we have sold have been sold at a very moderate and reasonable price. I believe that in Western Canada we have furnished horses for military purposes at a lower price than they have been secured for anywhere else in Canada or anywhere else in the United States. I know that the minister has been absent on foreign soil from his department for some weeks, and it is possible this has not been brought to his attention, but I tell him now that if he wishes to assist the live stock industry in this country—and he evidently is trying to do it under this vote for the improvement and development of the live stock industry—he must take the responsibility of seeing to it that any farmer in Canada, who has a horse suitable for military purposes which he wants to place on the market, be not deprived of the opportunity to do so. I trust the minister will see to it that the Government will encourage foreign horse buyers to come to Canada even though it means that when the Canadian Government comes to buy the horses they require they may have to pay a few dollars more to the farmer who is entitled to this extra profit if he raises the right kind of horse.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: As the representative of a horse-growing province, I have had occasion to bring the matter referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Neely) to the attention of the Government on more than one occasion. If my hon. friend from Humboldt were as anxious to obtain first-hand information as he apparently is to create some sort of prejudice in the minds of the people against the Government, he would have learned that the Administration has been acting in this matter absolutely along the line that one would expect, having regard to our responsibilities as a part of the British Empire. I ventured to bring the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister himself on two or three occasions, and I found that there were many aspects of the case which, because of certain imperial responsibilities and international complications in connection with the matter, he could not even discuss with a member of Parliament, much less with Parliament itself. I was content that the matter should be left entirely in his hands, and I know that other members of the House who are conscious of the enormous responsibilities that the Government of Canada has to carry at this time, were content that the matter should be dealt with by the Prime Minister as best he could.

I am sure that no farmer in Western Canada and no citizen of Canada will believe that the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) is any more anxious that the farmers of Western Canada should sell their horses, than is the Government of Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) said that the Government maliciously did this.

Mr. NEELY: I said if they did it, it was a malicious thing to do.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well, and in the very next sentence the hon. gentleman referred to the proud place that Canada is taking in this war. If Canada is taking a proud place in this war, it is because those who are responsible for the Government of Canada are acting in accord and in unison with the Imperial Government at Westminster. So far as I have been able to ascertain, having brought the matter to the attention of the Government on behalf of the horse-breeders of Alberta, the action which the Government has taken is in harmony with the imperial responsibilites of Canada.

Mr. NEELY: Will the hon. gentleman tell me what he means by the action which the Government has taken? What action did the Government take?

Mr. BENNETT: The Government, so far as I could ascertain from the inquiries I have made, was not in a position to disclose to me or to this House everything that might be connected with military operations. I was advised, as other members of this House who inquired were advised, that the Imperial Government thought that it was not an opportune time to purchase horses in Western Canada, but that because of certain international possibilities horses were being purchased elsewhere for the present. I was assured, not only by the Government but by a British officer whom I met, that we who live in Western Canada need not have the slightest fear but that every possible facility will be afforded us in due course to sell every horse we have that is suitable for military purposes or for any other purpose. That I believe to be so, and I accepted it because I believe that the Government is as well seized with a sense of its responsibility as is any private member of this House. The Government being possessed of large information which we could not ask it to furnish us with, and which in the ordinary course of events it could not very well furnish to us, I conveyed to my constituents and to the people of the province in which I reside the information that everything that could be done by this Government, in view of the position we occupy, would be done in due course to give them an opportunity to sell their horses. That I believe to be the case. Perhaps Alberta is the greatest horse-producing part of Canada; but I have ascertained from inquiries I have made that the horses we now have upon the ranges are not fitted without a great deal of training for either artillery, transport or cavalry purposes, and our ranchers are now training their horses, because an untrained horse that will shy at an automobile is not exactly the kind of horse to place near the firing line beside big guns. In the ordinary course of events, a transport horse is not a very good transport animal if, coming into a city, he is afraid of an automobile. What would he do when he would be close beside the operations that are being carried on on the plains of Belgium or France? It requires months and years of training to make a cavalry horse. As regards the number of horses purchased, the hon. gentleman must have been misinformed, because horses have recently been purchased, not in hundreds but in thousands, in the western provinces. The number of horses assembled at Brandon at one time was 1,800, and more are about to be purchased for the third contingent. The first thing we have to do in Western Canada to find a market for our horses is to have them trained for transport, cavalry and artillery purposes, and my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Warnock) will bear me out that the range horse is not very well adapted for the purposes that I have mentioned. I am also informed that as the war progresses, the class of horses we have on our plains will be in the greatest demand, although just now that it is not the class that is required. In due course, if we faint not, our horses will command the highest possible price, and there will be no reason for us to have any complaint because of lack of opportunity to sell. The farmers that I have met in Western Canada, when they have understood the situation, have not ventured to complain in the terms in which the hon. gentleman has; but they have been content to accept the assurance of the Government that every possible effort is being made to assure a ready sale for our horses consistent with the demands upon us by reason of the military operations of the Empire and its Allies.

Mr. NEELY: I am sure I am very gratified to the hon. member for Calgary for his explanation—

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to say a few words before he goes on. He will realize that the allied powers, in regard to horses, as to which the wastage is enormous, had to look pretty far ahead in the early months of the war, and certain arrangements were made, which I am not at the moment free to disclose to the House, but which I would have no objection to mention privately to my hon. friend or to any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House; indeed, I have already communicated them to the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who desired some information on the subject. Not only was that the case, but it came to our attention some two or three months ago that the horses required by the various allied powers were not always horses of the same type or class; that one power, for example, might find use for horses which would not be required in the service of another power. Arrangements had to be made, as I understand, between the powers, as to where the provision of horses that would be required could be obtained, and with those arrangements, which were arrived at under a very distinct understanding, we could not very well presume to interfere. We did, however, make the suggestion some four or five weeks ago that there was a certain class of horses in Canada which were not required by one of the powers, but which might be found very useful for the purposes of another power, and that notwithstanding the arrangements first entered into to which I have no more than alluded, we hoped it might be possible that an opportunity might be given for the purchase in Canada of horses of that type by the power to which I have last referred. The arrangements and conditions which have been brought to our attention are not only of a confidential, but to a certain extent of a very complicated character, and I hope my hon. friend will do us the justice of believing that it has been our greatest desire to bring about a condition of affairs under which the farmers of Canada, whether in the East or in the West, will have an opportunity to dispose of their horses at remunerative prices. I would be very glad to supplement what I have said in a private interview with my hon. friend, if he will be good enough to give me an opportunity.

Mr. NEELY: I am sure I am very gratified for the trouble the right hon. the Prime Minister has taken to give us some explanation in regard to the situation, and I quite understand that there may be conditions surrounding this matter that cannot very well be given to the public or even to this House; but the information which was given to me and on which I based my remarks a few moments ago was not along the lines of the information given by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and just now by the Prime Minister. My information was that the British Government actually sent their agent to Canada to purchase horses, and that the Canadian Government, wishing to retain the Canadian horses for itself, had requested the British buyers not to pursue the purchasing of horses on Canadian soil until the Canadian Government had itself secured at fair and reasonable prices a sufficient number with which to equip the Canadian contingents. If the Government says that there is no truth in that report, that settles the matter so far as I am concerned, and I am certainly quite ready and prepared to take the word of the Prime Minister to that effect. The Prime Minister was not here when I referred to the widespread impression that the Government of Canada was responsible for the withdrawal from Canada of British horse buyers, because of the necessity of the Canadian Government to secure a sufficient quantity of horses at a reasonable price, which price of course, would be enhanced if this Governhad to compete with the purchasers for the British and French Governments. If the Prime Minister will tell us whether that information is right or wrong, that will clear up the matter so far as I am concerned.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There is no doubt whatever that persons who have been commissioned to purchase horses for the expeditionary forces wished to be in a position in which they could be absolutely certain of securing a sufficient number of the requisite type, not only to supply the first needs of the forces but also to make good the enormous wastage that must necessarily take place as soon as these forces arrived at the front. But I can, I think, explain to my hon. friend that there was another predominating cause which led to the withdrawal, temporarily, from Canada of the British buyers. I should not feel free to enter into the reason for it tonight, but at some future day I may be able to explain it to the House. It would not be proper to do so at the moment, though I should have no objection to communicating it privately to my hon. friend, if he desires to know it.

Mr. ROBB: Would the Prime Minister say if the Government has prohibited the exportation of Canadian horses to the United States?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: With respect to horses and also with respect to other animals and commodities that were of a certain character, such as might make them useful to an enemy if they came into their possession, or the exportation of which might weaken the resources of the Empire for the purpose of carrying on the war, we received suggestions early in the succession of events after the outbreak of hostilities, and have received such suggestions from time to time since, from the Imperial Government; and with few exceptions —I think with no exceptions, but sometimes after a discussion by cable—we have carried out the view which they thought would be essential for the welfare of the Empire and the maintenance of our strength for the great conflict in which we are engaged. My recollection is that the exportation of horses, and other articles as well, was prohibited except to British possessions. There is an enormous list of articles embraced in the different orders in council. The same course was pursued here as was pursued in Great Britain. Recently, in Great Britain, all these Orders in Council have been consolidated into a general Order in Council for the purpose of convenience.

9 p.m. We have been engaged during the last three or four weeks in consolidating our various Orders in Council, and the work is now practically done, so that we hope at a very early day to pass an Order in Council which will give a complete list of the articles the exportation of which is prohibited, whether to all countries other than British dominions or to specified countries. I might explain that arrangements have been made with the Imperial Government by which a certain discretion is to be exercised by the Governor in Council or a minister of the Crown, with regard to the exportation of certain articles—or the importation of certain articles, for that matter. If it should appear that the exportation of certain articles generally prohibited, is important for certain reasons to a particular country for a stated period or for some particular purpose, the Governor in Council or the minister may have the right to issue a license for that exportation. On the other hand, it has been found sometimes essential to permit the importation from German or Austrian sources of certain articles essentially necessary for some institution in this country, for instance, an agricultural college, or for the purposes of some industry in Canada, the maintainance of which is important in the public interest. These instances, however, are only occasional occurrences, and for the most part, the Orders in Council passed have been strictly observed and have not been departed from except with the general or special sanction of the Imperial authority.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) was in good company when he found fault with the Government for sending British buyers to the United States. I have here a copy of the Winnipeg Telegram which also finds fault because the British buyers were sent to Chicago to buy horses. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett) apparently did not quite know what sort of horses were required for cavalry purposes, or what sort were bought in the United States. He made the statement that the Alberta horses were not suitable, nor trained, for cavalry purposes. He is in conflict with the Winnipeg Telegram, for they make a statement that the horses bought in Chicago are wild horses from the southwestern prairies and that the stock men there have secured cowboys to train them.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: I did not say the horses were not fit; I said they had not been trained off the range, and it is the range horse untrained that is unfit. But those in the United States, anticipating the market, have taken the trouble to have them trained, as I ascertained from personal inquiry in the United States a short time ago. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Warnock) knows about it.

Mr. ROBB: They train them in the yard after taking them from the prairie.

Mr. BENNETT: Not always.

Mr. ROBB: That is the statement in the Winnipeg Telegram. Accepting the statements from the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) that they are responsible for comparatively few horses having been purchased by these British buyers in Canada so far, would it not be fair to the Canadian farmer, especially as he has carried his horses through the winter, at a time when oats were higher than they have been for many years in Canada, and hay also high and scarce, to advance the price for the horses bought hereafter in Canada? The price paid for the military horses that were bought is an arbitrary price fixed by the buyer, and the farmer was simply told he might take it or leave it. I do not now find fault with that, for perhaps that is the only way it could be done. But would not the Government take it into consideration that the farmer has carried that horse through the winter though he could have sold his oats at a profit, and that he is entitled to a profit on the horse.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think there is force in what the hon. member suggests. I am not sure that the price is arbitrarily fixed at the present time. My recollection does not agree with the statement of the hon. gentleman though I do not wish to speak with certainty, because it is only an impression, though a distinct impression. Of course, my hon. friend will understand that a Government buying a large number of horses over a great stretch of territory such as is comprised within Canada must endeavour to be pretty careful to get value for the money. It is said—I am not very familiar with the subject myself—that one may not always get good value unless he keeps his eyes open. I do not think that buyers have gone elsewhere, solely for the reason which the hon. gentleman suggests; indeed, I know to the contrary. But inasmuch as, owing to causes upon which I shall not dwell at the moment and to which it is not desirable that I should refer, our farmers have kept and fed their horses during the winter, I really agree with the hon. gentleman that this is a circumstance which may fairly be taken into consideration, and I think it will be taken into consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN: Would it not be wise, now that the farmers are promised a market for their horses, for the Department of Agriculture to establish some sort of bureau by which the Government would have information as to the approximate number of horses there are available in Canada at the present time for war purposes? I understand that three weeks after the outbreak of war there was not a horse for sale in England, for the reason that a bureau had been established and upon the outbreak of the war men were sent in every direction and all available horses in the whole country were picked up.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The hon. member means that they took a census of the horses.

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, the facts concerning marketable horses are kept on record, as I understand it. I think that a somewhat similar system should be adopted in this country. I had occasion to go to Montreal to satisfy myself as to the situation with regard to horses, and I had the privilege of looking over 1,030 horses which were turned into two large yards. As many of these horses had come from my own county, I asked the gentleman in charge what the cost of the horses was to the British Government, and I was amazed to hear that they were paying $185 plus $5 for every horse in these yards. Horses may be taken from Glengarry to Montreal at a cost of $1, and the amount paid the Glengarry man for one of these horses was only $110 or $115, by reason of the fact that there was no competition. The matter was entirely in the hands of the gentlemen who came into the county to buy the horses. As hay and grain were scarce, the farmers were obliged to let the horses go at whatever they could get for them. The result was that for good, sound, young horses, suitable for military purposes, the farmers obtained only $110 or $115. If you place the purchase of horses in the hands of any one man, he will take advantage of the situation and pay the farmers whatever he thinks fit. If the farmers had received the amount paid by the British Government for the horses delivered in Montreal, they would be perfectly satisfied, but there was a difference of $65 in respect of every horse that left my county between the price paid to the person selling and the price paid in Montreal. While I was there I asked this gentleman also why he and his associates were leaving Canada—they were leaving next week—and I was informed that they were leaving at the request of the Canadian Government, who had asked them to discontinue purchasing horses in Canada. He explained to me, when I asked him why this should be, that the Dominion Government required horses for their own military purposes in Canada, and that it would be unwise for the British Government to go into competition with them until such time as the Canadian Government should secure what horses they themselves required. It was pointed out that the price of horses would naturally be increased by competition. I do not propose to make any charges; I am willing to accept the statement of the Prime Minister that there was good reason for doing that, but if that is the situation, it is a serious matter, and one to which the Government should give their immediate attention. The price of horses should be allowed to advance, because at the present time an opportunity is offered by which we can restore this important industry to its proper standing. Unless you allow the British and French Governments to come into the market and buy up the surplus horses in Canada, after the war is over the price of horses will drop too low to make their sale profitable to the Canadian farmers.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not absolutely clear as to the average price that has been paid for horses in Canada by the Canadian Government, but I am quite sure that it is much higher than the price mentioned by my hon. friend; I think it runs up to $170. I can assure my hon. friend that we have really had a great many complaints from various sources in the country because the Government insisted upon buying direct from the farmer instead of from dealers. I myself have been assailed with a great many complaints in this respect. It has been the policy of the Government to buy horses direct from the farmer, and if any different practice has been pursued in my hon. friend's county, I should like to know of it and to make inquiry. Sir Adam Beck has had charge of the purchasing of horses in Ontario, and I have seen him three or four times in regard to the matter. He assures me that the policy of the department has been carried out throughout the province of Ontario.

Mr. McMILLAN: I was referring to the purchase of horses by the British Government, and to the fact that there was a large difference between the price the farmer received and the price the British Government paid. I was suggesting that the Government should look into this matter.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was under the impression that my hon. friend was referring to horses purchased by the Canadian Government. I do not deny that the persons who have been commissioned to buy horses for the Canadian Government were very anxious indeed that they should have an opportunity of obtaining a sufficient supply for the Canadian expeditionary force and of making some provision for wastage. The idea was that the horses for our own expeditionary forces should be purchased in Canada and that a condition should not be brought about under which we would have to go to some other country to obtain horses of the requisite type. So far as the purchase of horses by British buyers in the United States is concerned, three causes for this were operating. To these I have already alluded; I should be very glad to explain them to my hon. friend, and I am sure that he would recognize the force of them.

I have had several communications with purchasers of horses for the Canadian Government, more especially with Sir Adam Beck, as to having the British and French Governments come into this country and purchase horses, and I have endeavoured, to the best of my ability, to bring about an arrangement under which that could be done, so that the Canadian owner of horses should have the best possible opportunity to dispose of his animals at a remunerative price. While everything in that connection may not have been perfectly satisfactory in the past, for reasons which I have not fully stated, but to which I have alluded, I am strongly in hopes that in the future the conditions may be improved and that we may give to the Canadian farmer opportunities even more abundant than in the past of disposing of his animals.

Mr. PROULX: Does my right hon. friend think that the department bought directly from the farmers after the appointment of Sir Adam Beck or before? I think since his appointment they have done so, but not before.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not speaking of the horses for the first contingent. I am not absolutely sure of that, but as soon as it was possible for us to make arrangements, after the strain and hurry and confusion of the early part of the war, the policy was proposed by the Minister of Militia to myself and the other members of the Government that the purchases should be made direct from the farmers. We all acquiesced in that and that policy has been carried out ever since.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The horses bought in Nova Scotia were not bought directly from the farmers. It has been proven in the Public Accounts Committee that middlemen were employed in Nova Scotia and when the middleman had collected a certain number of horses he turned them over to the Government and a cheque was issued to him for a large amount of money to pay for the horses. It does not seem that the money that was paid to the middleman was the same as was paid to the farmer. There is no evidence of that before the committee. The evidence, in fact, is the other way.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think my hon. friend must be alluding to some horses purchased in the early weeks of the war for the first contingent. The purchase of horses in the Maritime Provinces has been under the direction of Sir Adam Beck and has been carried on by persons selected by him. I am quite sure that the arrangement to which I have alluded has been carried out in Nova Scotia as elsewhere.

Mr. OLIVER: This matter is one of very great importance and it is evident that there is a condition whereby the farmers of Canada have not profited by the sale of horses to the extent they might reasonably have expected. The responsibility for this fact seems to be somewhat difficult to fix. Whether it was the policy of the Government of Canada, or whether the Government of Canada was merely carrying out the policy imposed on it by the Imperial Government, does not seem to be altogether clear. I would have understood from the statement of the Premier a few minutes ago that it was the policy of the Government of Canada that other buyers should not buy horses in Canada until the needs of the Canadian Government had been supplied. That was a matter of Canadian policy, not a matter of Imperial policy. Whatever the policy of the Imperial Government which was imposed upon the Government of Canada might be, we are quite willing to accept the judgment of the Imperial Government in that matter, provided due representations were made to the Imperial Government as to the conditions which existed and which were to be met in Canada by the Government of Canada. There being a superabundance of horses in Canada and an underabundance of money, it was desirable that there should be an exchange of horses for money wherever that could be satisactorily accomplished, and it was, I take it, the business of the Government of Canada to place that Canadian situation emphatically before the Imperial authorities, so that it would be only in case the greater and more pressing needs of the Empire had to be met that the Canadian farmer would be forced to hold his horses through an expensive winter, with the probability of not being able to get better prices in the spring. We appreciate the necessity and the propriety of regulations being framed to the end that supplies or materials of any kind that might be of use to an enemy country should not be acquired by that country from Canada by indirect means. To that end regulations have been framed which apply to horses. But why should regulations be framed to apply to horses when such regulations are not framed to apply to nickel, which is just as much a necessity of war as horses, and is not only as much a product of Canada, but is very much more exclusively a product of Canada than are horses. While I do not wish to unduly criticise the Government at this time, I do not think I would be acting fairly by the people whom I represent if I did not say here and now that, as the case has been placed before the House this evening, it does not appear to me that the Government has acted with the consideration towards the interests of the farmers of Canada that might reasonably have been expected.

Mr. BARKER: I wish to say a few words on this subject, because the various gentlemen who have spoken have confused four or five different episodes or occasions. It happens that I was here when a general officer of the British Empire was sent out first in connection with the purchase of horses. I know him very well, he has been many years in the British army, but he is a Canadian born, and I fancy there are thousands of people in this country who know him. The gentleman who opened this argument charged the Government here with some neglect in connection with his visit. The gentleman to whom I refer did not come out to act for the Canadian Government; he was sent out by the British Government to see how far horses could be procured here for the British army. He went to Toronto, and, as he is a Canadian, he knows all about our part of the country. I was asked by a member of the Government if I would go to Toronto and see this general officer and offer him any assistance I could afford him in the way of directing him to people he should see, or anything of that kind. I did see him. He had opened an office in Toronto, and had a small staff of junior officers with him, and was getting ready to buy horses. He was not asking this Government what he should pay for horses or anything of that kind; he knew all about that, I fancy, a great deal better than this Government or any member of this House. He is a thorough soldier, acquainted with his business. I had an interview with him. He was very thankful to the Government for having asked me to go to him and give him any assistance I could in the way of directions about seeing people, and I had a talk with him. He asked me to come and see him again. I saw him a few days afterwards, but I found that his orders had been countermanded.

They did not ask permission from this Government to countermand the orders, they simply changed their directions, and very much because of some change in the sale of horses in the United States, with which this Government had nothing to do and nothing to say. The gentleman at once found that his object in coming was cancelled, and he went home. If any one wants to know his name I can give it. It is a well-known name in Canada. The gentleman is not in any sense a Canadian officer or a Canadian official, but an officer in the British army. That is all there is to that part of the story, and all the rest of the story has been built on that. The horses that have been spoken of were not the horses that that officer of the British army was sent out to buy. All that came long after he went home.

Mr. OLIVER: We are discussing an item of $550,000—an increase of $150,000 over last year—for the development of the live stock industry. The Government is asking for this large amount of money and for this large increase for the purpose of developing the live stock industry. I do not know how you are going to develop the live stock industry unless you provide a market for the sale of the live stock after it has been produced. What is the use of producing live stock unless you can dispose of it, and dispose of it profitably? I do not wish to criticise the Government unduly, but, since my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has rushed to their rescue so valiantly, let me point out to him that if the British buyer came to Canada to get horses for the British army and afterwards was instructed by the Imperial authorities not to buy horses in Canada, it was certainly up to the Government of Canada to make strong and urgent representations to the Imperial Government that we had for sale in Canada horses that would be suitable for war purposes and which we would be very glad to sell.

Mr. BARKER: Does the hon. gentleman not see that he has overlooked what I have said? Because of what happened in the United States, this officer got instructions from home not to buy horses in Canada. Having received those instructions his duty as an officer of the British army was to go home, and he did so.

Mr. OLIVER: This Government has agents for the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the British Isles, and we have a Department of Agriculture whose business it is to promote the live stock industry. If we have any purpose at all in promoting that industry, surely it was the duty of the Government, with all this multitude of councillors and means of publicity and argument, to represent to the Imperial Government that when they wanted to buy horses Canada certainly had horses that she wanted to sell. Does the hon. member for Hamilton wish us to conclude that the Government of Canada did not make any such representation?

Mr. BARKER: I wish you to conclude that an officer of the British army came out here to buy certain horses. He had orders from home not to buy, and he went home. I cannot say any more than that.

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps the minister could give us some information about federal assistance to the horse breeding industry. I notice that the regulations fix the minimum service fee at not less than $12. Is that a misprint? Should minimum read maximum?

Mr. BURRELL: I will refer to that in a moment. Just before dinner I promised to get some information for the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) in regard to the butter and cheese industries. He asked me if our cheese was sustaining its reputation, and what was the condition in regard to exports. The report of our Commissioner is that the production is as it was a year ago. The exports of cheese for the nine months ending December, 1914, were 134,108,000 pounds. The home consumption is increasing. Our cheese never stood higher than it does at present. It is in a class by itself, so far as the export trade is concerned. Canadian butter, speaking generally, is improving in quality. Our exports are more than they were a year ago. Up to December, 1914, we exported 2,283,197 pounds, as against 1,011,653 pounds the previous year.

Mr. GRAHAM: An increase of 100 per cent.

Mr. BURRELL: The percentage is very gratifying. Our imports are heavier than our exports, but not quite so heavy as they were the previous year. My hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) asked me a question about the exports of cream. In the nine months ending December, 1914, we exported 1,776,000 gallons. This question is more or less related to the butter question, and my hon. friend will no doubt draw his own conclusions. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. McCrea) asked me a question about Mr. Giard. Mr. Giard is not exactly the Live Stock Commissioner for Quebec. He is a representative of the Live Stock Branch in the province of Quebec, and performs such duties as are assigned to him by the Live Stock Commissioner at Ottawa. He is principally engaged in the distribution of live stock to associations. He inspects the various associations, and also the animals that have been purchased and sent to them. He has recently been assisting in the organization of our lecture work in connection with the Patriotism-and-Production campaign in the province of Quebec. His headquarters are at Sherbrooke. His salary is $1,800 a year. He has no office, and no assistants. The hon. member for Renfrew also asked me a question about a cold storage company in Brockville. The contract was entered into with the St. Lawrence Produce Company, which has been reorganized and is now known as the Whyte Packing Company. In reply to my hon. friend from Huntingdon, the minimum service fee is not less than $12. I presume that he is familiar with the general scheme as outlined in this little pamphlet.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, I have one of those. My objection is that the Government are practically raising the service fee by $2. I understand that the general fee throughout the country, at all events in our section, is $10 except where there is an extra good horse.

Mr. BURRELL: My hon. friend's district is much more fortunate than the West as regards really high-class animals.

Mr. ROBB: We produce high-class animals in that part of the country. The objection I have to this is that the Government are giving a preference to the breeding of remounts. They are paying only $4 towards encouraging the breeding of draught horses that will sell anywhere from $200 to $250, while they are paying $4.80 to encourage the breeding of remounts that, as has been proved here to-night, will sell for from $110 to $175. It seems to me that the minister might very well revise that policy.

Mr. BURRELL: I discussed that matter very thoroughly with the Live Stock Commissioner last year and I am perfectly certain that it was after consultation with the men interested in the stimulation of the horse industry throughout the country that this scheme was finally adopted. It is a little on the lines of the English scheme. The 40 per cent for thoroughbred mares was partly a concession to the fact that remounts might be necessary. There was a great deal of criticism, some of it is possibly harsh and some of it possibly deserved, of the system which was in vogue before we took office, and as the feeling of the House seemed to be against it we adopted this modified form of assistance in regard to remounts which, in view of existing circumstances, was warranted. As to the general merits of the scheme I frankly admit that I cannot discuss it as intelligently as I should like to because it is some time since I have had an opportunity of looking into it. It was my earnest desire that the Commissioner of the Live Stock Branch should consult the horse people of the country, to get the best information he could, with the idea of giving that assistance which was most needed and most likely to improve the breed of horses. There may be some demerits, and I shall bear in mind the suggestions of my hon. friend and take them up with the Live Stock Commissioner.

Mr. ROBB: Will the minister explain why a minimum service fee is fixed?

Mr. BURRELL: The chief object of that was to encourage the finest type of sires.

I do not know how it is in Quebec, but I know that in British Columbia, to get anything like a valuable sire, the service would be twenty-five dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM: Has the minister any suggestion to offer as to the establishment of a bureau for taking the census of available horses in the country?

Mr. BURRELL: That is done in Great Britain by the War Office, and you can understand how in a small country like England which is not larger territorially than one of our western constituencies, the War Office, with its splendid machinery, can get accurate information. For Canada, so enormous in extent and with divided jurisdiction, there would, I think, be great difficulty in getting an adequate census of the available horses, but I shall have our officers look into it.

Mr. GRAHAM: It might be done through some machinery in the different counties.

Mr. BURRELL: It might.

Mr. GRAHAM: One of the members of the Horse Breeders' Association spent an hour impressing on me the idea of having a bureau for a census of horses, but I got more light to-night on the subject from the few remarks made by the hon. member for Glengarry than ever I had before.

Mr. NEELY: If application is made to the department for a bull, does the department take any steps to see what kind of animal is sent?

Mr. BURRELL: That is left to the association; usually we send whatever breed they ask for.

Mr. NEELY: Is that wise?

Mr. BURRELL: I think so. If we started to dictate to the association what kind of animal should be sent, we would run up against serious criticism.

Mr. NEELY: It should conform to the type of animal in the locality.

Mr. BURRELL: There are a great many localities in which they have not developed along special lines, and usually we send them the particular breed they prefer.

Mr. GRAHAM: Generally speaking, is the quality of horses in Canada improving?

Mr. BURRELL: I think it is.

Mr. GRAHAM: In some parts of Ontario we have a splendid type of horse, while in others there does not seem to be any interest taken in the horse-breeding industry. I remember that some years ago I was interested in exhibitions and I declined to allow prizes to be given in certain classes, for the reason that the judges allowed a horse that was not a carriage horse to be entered in that class because there were no other entries, but the Provincial Government which controls the exhibitions, has restricted that kind of thing in later years. I know two or three of our enterprising horsemen who lost a good deal of money in importing horses in an endeavour to improve the stock, and I look with a good deal of favour on any aid that can be given to bring about a general improvement of the standard of different classes of horses. I am glad to see the Government moving along the line of improving horse-flesh, because I am very fond of a good horse and it is very important that it should be impressed on those who raise horses that it is easier to feed a good horse than a scrub, and a good deal more interesting, because the good horse shows some return for the care you give him. I have been very much interested, having attended some of the gatherings with the minister at different times and listened to the discussions. That is one of the reasons why I referred to the question about the bureau, because I heard it discussed and it impressed itself upon me. As I understand it, we have in Canada—I am speaking more particularly of the province in which I live—different associations. There is the association of breeders of Clydesdales and Percherons, and there are associations of the breeders of the other different standard-bred horses. Have they each a different grant?

Mr. BURRELL: They all belong to the Canadian Live Stock Record.

Mr. GRAHAM: Approximately how much does the horse industry get from the Dominion treasury every year?

Mr. BURRELL: I would not say that offhand, because as a matter of fact we give a lump sum to the Canadian Live Stock Record for the purpose of assisting the Record in keeping the breeds pure.

Mr. NEELY: Does the department do anything in the way of education along the line of this new policy of supplying pure-bred animals; that is to say, does the department contemplate doing anything in the way of sending out men from the department to size up the situation through Canada generally? How far does the minister propose to go with this policy?

Mr. BURRELL: We have officers who are following up this work in every province. As my hon. friend can understand—and I very much appreciate what he has said in connection with that work—the forming of these associations is an educational work in itself, and by following it up and inspecting the animals and answering continual questions in regard to the policy, we find it is educational work from the top to the bottom. We have such a tremendous response from all parts of the country, especially from the more newly settled portions, that it is pretty hard to keep up with the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What proportion of male animals are purchased in the province in which they are distributed?

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot give the figures offhand. I can get it from the Live Stock Branch for the hon. member.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have heard for some time past that a large proportion of the animals distributed in each province is purchased in that province.

Mr. BURRELL: So far as possible we have adopted that principle.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Prices in some provinces are much higher than in others; in fact in the western provinces they are considerably higher than in Ontario or Quebec. From the figures that the minister has just given us, I find that the percentage of male animals distributed throughout the various provinces is not so much in keeping with the requirements of those provinces as I would imagine in view of the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite as to the large number of horses that are for sale in Western Canada. I notice that the minister has distributed out of 101 stallions, 25 in the province of Quebec, 49 in the three western provinces, and 6 in the province of Ontario. That would mean nearly 50 per cent in Western Canada as against 6 per cent in the province of Ontario, and the distribution of the other animals is in pretty much the same proportion. There is no doubt that in the older provinces the breeders of pure bred stock went into the business many years ago, and naturally have many more animals for sale than the breeders in the western provinces have. The work that the department is doing along this line is splendid, but in the older provinces, so far as possible, the breeders should be entitled to some consideration, and they should be enabled to sell their stock to improve the stock in the other provinces, in view of the fact that so few pure bred horses are distributed in the province of Ontario, to which I have particular reference.

Mr. BURRELL: I think my hon. friend is quite right, and the policy will work out in that way. We have adopted the principle of trying to encourage the breeders in the various provinces by buying their horses. Where we cannot do so, we generally have to fall back on the province of Ontario, which is so celebrated for its live-stock production. If we buy in the other provinces, it simply means the stimulus of the breeding trade in Ontario, which goes out to the other provinces the more animals that are distributed. I think Ontario will reap some benefit indirectly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Am I correct in stating that the prices in the other provinces are higher than in Ontario?

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot speak positively about that, because I have not the figures.

Arts and Agriculture—to enforce the Seed Act, to test seeds for farmers and seed merchants, to encourage the production and use of superior seeds, and to encourage the production of farm and garden crop, $140,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the increase?

Mr. BURRELL: The amount is practically the same as that of last year, except that there is a little increase in the maintenance of seed laboratories for purity and germination tests. The work is increasing all the time; we are testing a very large number of samples sent from all parts of the country, and it is doing such a tremendous amount of good that we want to increase the strength of our laboratories. Then for seed inspection and enforcement of the Seed Control Act, including salaries and expenses of temporary inspectors, there is an increase from $12,000 to $15,000, and there is also an increase in the subventions to growers of field roots and certain garden seeds. We are doing something in the way of encouraging the production of high class seeds, so that we shall not have to depend so much upon supplies from outside. Otherwise, the work is practically the same. We are carrying on the same system of assistance, giving subventions to seed fairs and so on; that is giving a proportion of the prize money that is given by the various provinces. We base the subventions on the acreage under crop and the number of fairs held, and we also give supplementary assistance. The subventions have been immensely appreciated by the provinces.

Mr. GRAHAM: The provinces hold the seed exhibitions?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, and we give them the subventions.

Mr. ROBB: Has the minister's attention been drawn to the possibility of a scarcity of small seeds owing to the war in countries from which we have been importing seeds?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, we have been looking into that matter, and it is for that reason a good thing that we have been giving subventions and assistance for the production amongst our own growers of such seeds, and we are getting very encouraging results.

Arts and Agriculture—for the administration and carrying out of the provisions of the Agricultural Instruction Act, $25,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is this?

Mr. BURRELL: This is in connection with the Agricultural Instruction Act, the agreements with all the provinces and the work connected with it or inspection of the agreements and following up the work that is done.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no friction between the Government and the provinces?

Mr. BURRELL: No, the work is going along satisfactorily.

Mr. MORPHY: Would the minister kindly put on Hansard the details relating to the Agricultural Act as applied to Ontario?

Mr. BURRELL: These are the appropriations for the fiscal year 1914-15:

Ontario.

District representatives	$100,000 00
O. A. C. short courses, travelling and living expenses of winners of acre profit and live stock competitions	1,500 00
To encourage agriculture in the public and high schools, to be available for grants and for travelling and living expenses of teachers and others in attendance at short courses or other educational gatherings, in addition to services, expenses and equipment and to be paid out on recommendation of the Department of Education	13,000 00
Educational work in connection with marketing of farm products, including organization of co-operative societies, collection, printing and distribution of information on current prices and systems of marketing	1,000 00
Building at Ontario Agricultural College, including completion of buildings under construction	72,000 00
Stock and seed judging short courses and Institute lecture work	7,500 00
Women's Institute work, including courses in cooking, sewing, etc.	7,500 00
Short courses for fall fair and field crop judges, including travelling and living expenses	1,500 00
Drainage work	4,000 00
Demonstrations and instruction in vegetable growing	2,500 00
Demonstration work on soils	5,000 00
Demonstration work in spraying, pruning and packing of fruits	7,500 00
Demonstrations and instructions on live stock and poultry	4,500 00
Work on bee-keeping	1,000 00
Lectures on horticulture	500 00
Miscellaneous	1,868 83
Total	$230,868 83

Grant to Dominion Exposition, $50,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Who gets this $50,000 this year?

Mr. BURRELL: Last year that vote came by rotation to British Columbia. They were advanced one-third of the amount, something less than $17,000. But afterwards the Militia Department took possession of their exhibition building, and on account of the breaking out of the war they found it hopeless to attempt an exhibition. So they asked if I would let it stand over and give them the balance of the money this year. This year, by rights, it would have gone to Nova Scotia—Halifax has put in a strong plea for it. It has been practically arranged, subject to the vote of the House; but there is a little doubt whether British Columbia or Nova Scotia would go on with it this year or next year. I think it will have to depend upon the developments of the war. As the vote is here, I think we had better leave it and see how it works out.

Mr. GRAHAM: What has become of the proposition for a Winnipeg World's exhibition?

Mr. BURRELL: I have not heard anything about that.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts, $225,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What relation has the medical department to the Conservation Commission? Can the minister tell me what work the Commission of Conservation is doing in connection with public health?

Mr. BURRELL: I am afraid I cannot. Their work is generally of an investigative kind, with a view to use educationally and in the activities of the several departments. They carried on certain work with illustration farms, but they will drop that, feeling that it is better to leave it with the department. I suppose their medical work has nothing to do with the quarantine, but is rather work of investigation and education.

Mr. GRAHAM: Has the Government made up its mind as to the establishment of a health department with a medical man at its head? That has been discussed for a long time. Occasionally we see in the press that changes are to be made in the Cabinet, that a member of the Government is to be shifted to the head of a new health department and another gentleman appointed in his place. The country is anxious about this. Can the minister give us any information?

Mr. BURRELL: Not any definite information. The matter has been under advisement. But, under the pressure of work, which seems to have been the lot of this Administration for the last year or two, these reorganizing matters have been left in abeyance. In Heaven's good time, I suppose, we shall be able to consider the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose we can take it for granted that a gentleman could be found willing to accept the management of that department?

Mr. BURRELL: Possibly.

Mr. GRAHAM: I desire to speak of a matter which was brought forcefully to my attention a few weeks ago. The health of the people, whether conserved by Governments, by commissions or by 10 p.m. their own good common sense, is intimately bound up with the life insurance business. At a recent meeting I attended, one of the most interesting papers I have ever heard was read by a lady. She had entitled that paper "Live a little longer." I have brought it to the attention of the Commission of Conservation, and I think the ideas put forward in that paper are worthy of consideration by the Government. The young lady who read the paper is from Berlin, Ont., and is now a resident of Rochester. In that city, it seems, they have adopted the plan of having instruction given periodically—I think once a week—to all classes, not only to young people, but adults as well, in the treatment of sudden illness until the physician can be summoned; how to prevent certain diseases, and generally how to care for health. These lectures are given by qualified physicians and nurses, and practical illustrations are given of attending to patients.

Mr. BURRELL: The St. John Ambulance Association is doing work of the same kind, and we give them a vote.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, they work along that line. In Rochester, this instruction is very general. In this propagandist movement they use the school buildings, which are unused half the time, and could be put to no better use. The results, as indicated by the paper to which I have referred, are very marked. The people in all sections of that city, the poor as well as the wealthy, are taking an interest in the work. While the results do not interfere in any way with professional practice, a knowledge is cultivated among ordinary people of how to treat diseases, from some of which the patents would die if they were left without this attention.

I would advise the Government to get in touch with that organization in Rochester and see if this test could not be made in some of our large or even in some of our smaller centres. Thousands die in this and every other country through absolute ignorance of how to treat disease in its first stages, or before a physician can be secured.

Quarantine—Tracadie and D'Arcy island lazaretto, and leprosy generally, $11,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How many physicians have you there?

Mr. BURRELL: At Tracadie, only one. At D'Arcy island, we have only a caretaker.

Quarantine—Public Works Health Act.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the Public Works Health Act?

Mr. BURRELL: It is in connection with the sanitary condition of railway camps, and so on. We have two inspectors, and there is provision for another if the railway situation advises a readjustment.

Mr. GRAHAM: Who are the inspectors?

Mr. BURRELL: Dr. Clendenan in the West and Dr. Fisher in the East.

Arts and Agriculture—health of animals—further amount required, $65,000.

Mr. BURRELL: This was necessitated by the unusual and very large expenditure which was made chiefly in connection with the outbreak of hog cholera, and partly in connection with durine. There were serious outbreaks of hog cholera with which we had to deal, the expenditures are covered by this supplementary vote.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the valuation upon which remuneration is paid in respect of hogs?

Mr. BURRELL: $15 is the maximum valuation for ordinary hogs; upon that valuation two-thirds is paid, $10.

Arts and Agriculture—to provide a further amount for the administration and enforcement of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, Governor General's warrant, $20,000.

Mr. BURRELL: Upon the declaration of the embargo by the United States it was absolutely necessary that we should appoint inspectors to see that their requirements were complied with. We had no provision in the Estimates for this, and we had to proceed by Governor General's warrant.

Arts and Agriculture, exhibitions—further amount required, $30,000.

Mr. BURRELL: I move that this item be struck out. The amount is unnecessary, and we can get along very well without it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Has any decision been reached as to where the next Dominion exhibition shall be held?

Mr. BURRELL: I have already answered that question by pointing out that the matter as it now stands was left for the purpose of giving the exhibition to British Columbia. British Columbia had it last year, but owing to the fact that the Militia Department took over their buildings after the war broke out, they did not hold it. The understanding is that they may hold it this year, and Nova Scotia will get it the following year. If British Columbia does not hold it this year, they will hold it next year, and Halifax will get it the year following.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I think representations have been made by the Halifax Board of Trade that the holding of the exhibition in Nova Scotia should be postponed until 1916.

Motion agreed to, and item struck out.

Legislation—House of Commons—salaries, etc., $490,662.50.

Mr. SPEAKER: I move that this resolution be amended by reducing the amount of the second item—salaries—from $209,350 to $207,350, and by inserting after the words "Serjeant-at-Arms" in the last item —Estimates of the Serjeant-at-Arms—the words: "including salary of Stanley S. Spencer at $700."

Mr. GRAHAM: Is the item large enough to cover that amount?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I suppose the attention of many hon. gentlemen has been called to the fact that for attendance at the August session of Parliament some of the employees of the House of Commons, chiefly messengers, received a per diem allowance as usual, but the total amount received was comparatively so small that in some cases, I understand, after paying disbursements for travelling expenses, these employees returned home out of pocket. I have not made any particular investigation into the matter, but it has been called to my attention by two or three persons on behalf of these employees.

I daresay it has also been called to the attention of Mr. Speaker. I am inclined to think that if the facts are as I state them, some little consideration should be given to their request, because if their disbursements exceeded the payment received for the August session it would be only fair that some allowance should be made. It may be quite true that some members of the House of Commons suffered in the same way in that session, but, of course, there is no objection on the part of hon. gentlemen. I mention this particularly to inquire of the Speaker if any request has been made to him concerning this matter and what his decision was.

Mr. SPEAKER: An application was made by the sessional employees of the House on the understanding that the session would only last for about two months. Their claim was that the amount received when the travelling and other expenses were deducted would leave a very small balance coming to them. As it was not known at that time how long the House would sit, it was thought well to defer decision for some time until we would have better knowledge of the duration of the session. I submitted their request to the Internal Economy Commission and after looking into it carefully it was decided that it could not be taken up and their request granted. To grant their request at the time would have involved a very considerable expenditure. The daily payment to the sessional staff is $627.24. They desired to be paid for 100 days whether the session lasted that long or not. If the session lasted 100 days they would not ask any additional payment, but they did ask that 100 days should be the minimum. That would call for an expenditure of $62,724 for the session. Up to April 1, the session had lasted 56 days. That would give them $35,125, and the balance to make up the 100 days would be $27,598. The commission thought, in view of the fact that if this was taken up and the request granted it would certainly result in a great many more applications being made to deal with other employees, it would not be well to grant the request at that stage of the session, if done at all. Of course it was not then known how long the session would last. It has already lasted some days past the 1st of April, and we do not know just when it will close. The decision was that the request could not be entertained, although it was admitted that many of the employees would have very little over their expenses, providing the session closed about the 1st of April.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I intended to say that my remarks would also apply to the Hansard amanuenses. There may be some objection to making an extra allowance calculating on the basis of a session of 100 days. That might be a bad precedent to establish. I should think that some allowance might have been made in connection with the August session at least.

Mr. SPEAKER: This included the debates amanuenses, 9 at $5 a day; 19 sessional clerks at $5 a day and 16 at $4 a day; four committee amanuenses at $5 a day; the stenographers, doorkeepers, bookkeepers, servants and charwomen. Of course if it is the wish of the House to grant their request or any portion of it we would have to do so.

Mr. MARCIL: How were the Hansard staff and translators paid for the August session?

Mr. SPEAKER: The Hansard staff and translators are paid by the year.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: The clerks who came here for the August session in some cases had to travel quite long distances and some of them did not receive enough to pay their expenses. I would suggest that they be remunerated in some way for that short session. The clerks who came from northern Ontario and from the Maritime Provinces were out of pocket. A Maritime Province clerk would have to pay railway fare and expenses of $25 or $30 and receiving $4 a day for seven days he would get $28. The messengers who would have the same expenses received only $22.75 for the seven days. They lost their time and were some of them out of pocket. I would suggest that something be done for these men. Those who receive higher wages perhaps need not receive the same consideration as these men on small salaries. I would also suggest that as this is a short session they should be granted remuneration for at least 100 days.

Mr. SPEAKER: With reference to the short session, knowing it was likely to be a very short session, I instructed those whose duty it was to notify the employees that we were likely to have a short session and that it was optional with them to come or not, so they were not exactly taken unawares. Of course, if anything was done it could not be done by enlarging this vote as we have not power to do that; but it might be paid in another way.

Mr. EDWARDS: I do not think it would be advisable to fix a certain number of days like 100; but I do think, in all fairness, that some consideration should be given to these men for their services during the short session in August. It does not seem to be dealing squarely with men to ask them to come down here when we need their services and pay them less than it costs them to come here. I think the country is big enough to at least give them something for their services over and above their expenses. Some consideration should be given to these officials for the session in August.

Mr. McCRANEY: What is the practice with regard to the employment of messengers and members of the sessional staff? I gather from the remarks of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island that members of the staff are selected from points distant from the capital and that this is largely a grievance over travelling expenses. When I came down in August I was surprised, having in view the fact that we were to have a session of five or six days only, that the House was as fully manned as it was. As there was a great deal of expense going on I wondered if there was anything to justify their being here for such a short session. Perhaps the Speaker can tell us whether the whole staff was on at the opening of the session in August.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think they were all here with the exception of two or three. The great bulk of the staff are located within a reasonable distance of Ottawa, but some come from Prince Edward Island, and others from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or the West.

Mr. ROGERS: There is a great deal of reason in what has been said as to the small amount paid to the officers of the House during the short session we had in August. Of course we cannot very well correct that matter at the present moment, but I am sure that no member of the House would desire to see the staff come here and go home out of pocket, whether the session was long or short. I have never heard any complaint myself, but perhaps some other members of the Government have. I will bring it to the attention of the Government, and if anything can be done we shall be glad to do it.

Legislation—Library of Parliament—salaries, $33,850.

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to move that this item of $33,850 be reduced to $31,550. There is one position that we did not think it necessary to fill, and I thought it would only be a temptation to leave the amount there.

Motion agreed to.

Legislation—general—contingent expenses in connection with the voters' lists, $6,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What does it cost to print the voters' lists for the whole of Canada?

Mr. ROGERS: I have no idea; it is not connected with my department.

Mr. MACLEAN: Perhaps the minister can tell us when it is expected that the next voters' lists will be used?

Mr. ROGERS: It takes a very long time to print the lists.

Mr. PROULX: I have been told that at the Printing Bureau they are working day and night on the voters' lists. They worked until midnight last Saturday.

Mr. ROGERS: This is the first time I have heard of it.

Public Works—harbours and rivers, N.S.—Jamesville—to complete breakwater, $3,400.

Mr. MACKENZIE: How much work has been done on that breakwater?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is for repairs, and to complete the work.

Mr. McKENZIE: It would not be for repairs, because the work is new, I understand.

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is asked for by the district engineer to complete the construction of the breakwater commenced last year. The works when completed will consist of an isolated crib-work breakwater with creosoted timber substructure, 170 feet long and 16 feet wide, connected with shore by a creosoted timber pile approach 152 feet in length. The chief engineer informs me that this is not for repairs, but to complete the work.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is in my riding, but I was not aware that the work had been commenced at all.

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer informs me that it has.

Mr. McKENZIE: By tender and contract?

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer says no.

Mr. McKENZIE: What was the cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $1,800 has been spent, and we are asking for $3,400 to complete the work.

Mr. McKENZIE: Was it during last winter that this work was being done? I am always on the alert if anything is being done in my riding, but I never heard anything about this.

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer says that the work was done in 1914-15. I shall be glad to get any particulars that my hon. friend wants.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the size of the breakwater?

Mr. ROGERS: 115 feet long and 16 feet wide, connected with the shore by timber piles 152 feet in length.

Mr. McKENZIE: What depth of water?

Mr. ROGERS: I have no information as to that.

Mr. McKENZIE: Who has charge of the construction?

Mr. ROGERS: I cannot give that information at the moment.

Mr. McKENZIE: Will the minister bring down information as to who had charge of the work, the number of days occupied in it, the material used, and generally speaking, how it was constructed?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: It looks as if there had been nothing done with regard to a number of these works for which we are now voting money.

Mr. ROGERS: These votes are almost entirely re-votes and they are for works we were not able to undertake before August last. There is really nothing new in these Estimates that has not been passed upon by the House before. What items are in for repairs and maintenance have all been inserted on the recommendation of the district engineers.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose all these works will be done this year?

Mr. ROGERS: We will undertake as many of them as we can.

Lunenburg harbour improvements, $35,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I suppose this is for dredging?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: Have tenders been asked for?

Mr. ROGERS: Not up to date.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If the minister decides to go on with the work will he ask for tenders?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mill Cove—extension of breakwater, $10,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will tenders be asked for this work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, for everything over $5,000.

McKay's Point—repairs to wharf, $900.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is McKay's point in my county, is this work to be done there?

Mr. ROGERS: It is in Cape Breton North.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is this vote for?

Mr. ROGERS: The covering of the wharf is in such a dangerous condition that teams dare not go on it, and this vote is for repairs.

North West Cove (Tancook island, breakwater), $42,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is this vote to replace the old breakwater which has been in existence there for a long time?

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. The timber was asked for last year. Tenders were called for on August 17, 1914, and three tenders were received.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why was a contract not awarded?

Mr. ROGERS: The tenders were called for on the 17th of August, and we did not award the contract.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will it be awarded now?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know. The work does not seem to have been pressed very much since that time. If we can get out of doing it, we will.

Mr. MACLEAN: Was any objection made to award the contract to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. ROGERS: None whatever. We invariably award the contract to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is this a new work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. It is not new in the Estimates this year.

Plaster mines wharf, $1,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is Plaster Mines in North Cape Breton?

Mr. ROGERS: In Victoria county.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the estimated cost of the wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: $7,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Have you called for tenders?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet. We will call for tenders.

Porter's lake—boat channel to Three Fathoms harbour, $10,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will this money be expended this year?

Mr. ROGERS: We shall have to spend something for the re-opening of the outlet.

South bay, Ingonish, to complete wharf extension, $2,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is a very important piece of work, and I wish to call the minister's attention to it. The $2,500 that he has in the Estimates is not going to be of much service. The wharf was put in the wrong place. It is so short that steamers cannot come alongside at all, and the water is so deep that, if the department is going to extend the wharf, it will find it an extremely expensive matter. This $2,500 will be a mere drop in the bucket for any useful extension of a wharf at that place. The hon. minister will find the early history in the department that the wharf that should have been utilized was known as the Corson wharf, and in 1911 there was money in the Estimates to buy that wharf and to put it into first-class shape. Instead of that—I do not know on whose advice—the department built this wharf on a rocky bar where it is almost impossible to haul anything to or from it. The Corson wharf, which was the one formerly in use, should have been bought. Mr. Corson, who is a wealthy American living in that part of the country, built this wharf for himself; he built a good road to it, and he is willing to sell the wharf to the Government for what it cost him. He is not looking for any profit, and his price will be found most reasonable. Any one who has seen Corson wharf will say it is pretty cheap at the price he is asking for it, and it would be better to abandon what has been done on the old wharf and buy this one.

Mr. ROGERS: I am not familiar with the earlier history of the conditions and of the wharf to which my hon. friend refers. I have before me only the information in respect to this particular vote with which my hon. friend is apparently familiar. I am not in a position to say whether his judgment is better than that of the engineer who made the recommendation or not, but I shall have the matter looked into and see what can be done.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am anxious that the people should have the best service that the money can afford, and that the Government should have the best possible value for its expenditure; and as one who is very familiar with the conditions and who was aboard the steamer several times when she attempted to come to this wharf, I am afraid it would be a very expensive piece of business to try to make a proper wharf at the place where a start has been made, whereas Mr. Corson's wharf is a first-class one and cheap at the price asked.

Tracadie harbour improvements, $12,300.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Apparently there has been some expenditure; what is the state of the work now?

Mr. ROGERS: There has been a very small expenditure for emergency repairs.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This item has stood for a long time, I understand. It has been there ever since the by-election in Antigonish, two or three years ago. It is time that something should be done. Does the minister purpose spending the money during the present season?

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to take the advice of my hon. friend and endeavour to advance the work if I possibly can.

Yarmouth harbour—improvements, $82,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is this for dredging?

Mr. ROGERS: It is to provide a better entrance to the harbour, to remove obstructions, and also for an extension of the breakwater and dredging.

Mr. MACLEAN: This vote was in last year. Was any work done last season?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not see here any memorandum of what was done last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: We voted $87,000 last year. It would seem that $5,000 was expended.

Mr. ROGERS: That is probably what we expected to spend when the Estimates were made, but the chief engineer tells me that it was not expended.

Mr. MACLEAN: No expenditure made last year?

Mr. ROGERS: Apparently not.

Mr. MACLEAN: Were tenders asked for?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MACLEAN: Why not?

Mr. ROGERS: This sum was only voted in June, and we did not get to it.

Mr. MACLEAN: That does not seem a sufficient excuse for not proceeding with the work. I am sorry the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Law) is not present.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sure that if that hon. gentleman were present he would not complain very much, for we have spent a large sum on Yarmouth harbour.

Mr. MACLEAN: I think that if the hon. member were here he would complain, and justly, of the failure of the department to proceed with the expenditure last year to some extent at least. Yarmouth is a very important harbour and shipping point. A line of steamers plies between Boston and Yarmouth, and from Yarmouth a great deal of trade is carried on between Nova Scotia and American ports. It is also the route of a great deal of summer tourist travel. It is a tidal harbour, and to my own knowledge it requires a great deal of work. The money having been voted, I submit that the department should proceed with the work. At least tenders might have been 11 p.m. called for, so that the contractor would have been ready to proceed with the work this spring. Does the minister propose asking for tenders?

Mr. ROGERS: We have spent a good deal of money in Yarmouth harbour. In 1911-12, we spent $60,000; in 1912-13, $33,000. There is no doubt that this is a harbour that will entail a heavy expenditure yet before it is completed. We have spent a good deal in addition in dredging. As my hon. friend has stated, this is a very important harbour, and the Government are disposed to make an expenditure there at the earliest possible moment, because of the present necessity of work of that kind as shown by the amount that is asked for.

Mr. MACLEAN: I understand that the department will proceed to ask for tenders?

Mr. ROGERS: As soon as possible.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Before we pass from the Nova Scotia items, I want to call the attention of the minister to the necessity of making some repairs on the public wharf at Country Harbour. That wharf is in a dilapidated state and should be repaired. It is a wharf of considerable importance, and I do not think the costs of the repairs would be very great. No doubt the engineer has the information in his office. If the minister will make a note of it and see that attention is paid to it, I shall be much obliged.

Mr. ROGERS: I will make a note of it.

Public Works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers, P.E.I.—Brudenell, wharf reconstruction, $4,500.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: What does reconstruction mean in this case?

Mr. ROGERS: The old wharf at Brudenell, which is the only wharf in the vicinity, has become impassable, and reconstruction is desired.

Mr. HUGHES: By whom was the old wharf owned?

Mr. ROGERS: This wharf, which was built many years ago, is owned by the local Government. It is 305 feet long, with an approach twenty feet wide and a pier head of thirty feet. Its rebuilding will give shipping facilities to a rich agricultural district of about two hundred inhabitants.

Mr. HUGHES: What depth of water is there at that wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid I cannot supply that information. The site of the old wharf is near the head of navigation of the Brudenell river, three and a half miles west of Georgetown and two miles southward from the Cardigan station and the Georgetown branch line of the Prince Edward Island railway.

Mr. HUGHES: Is it intended to proceed with the work this coming summer?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. HUGHES: My information is that there is not enough water there to accommodate vessels. Has the minister any information to that effect?

Mr. ROGERS: There may be information in the department; I will make a note of it.

Charlottetown harbour, $28,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: How is that amount to be expended?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required to complete the dredging under contract in connection with the construction of a marine slip in Charlottetown harbour near Southport. The slip is required for the accommodation of the class of vessels frequenting the waters in the vicinity of this harbour, and of the ships of the Marine Department and of the Dominion Government. The capacity of the proposed slip will be 3,000 tons, and it will accommodate vessels 350 feet long.

North lake—boat harbour, $24,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: This item has been voted every year since the present Government came into power. What is the object of voting it every year and not doing anything with the money?

Mr. ROGERS: We are practising economy, on the advice of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HUGHES: That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: I think I can answer the question. The reason is that the hon. member for Kings opposes the expenditure. He has got his friends to claim that their land will be over-run by water if this breakwater is constructed. I do not think there is any valid reason for the objection of the hon. member or the contention of his friends. If this breakwater is built, it will be a great benefit to the fishermen in my hon. friend's constituency, and the only reason for its not being built is perverseness on the part of my hon. friend and his friends because the Conservative Government is giving this great boon to the people on the north side of the island, who have no other harbour in that vicinity for shelter. That is the reason given to me even by some friends of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: The hon. gentleman's imagination is very strong; he is at sea, without rudder or compass. Surely he knows that I have not enough influence with this Government to prevent them from doing a good thing if they were determined to do it. Any person who gave information of that kind to my hon. friend was simply playing with him. I never opposed this project. I am quite in favour of having a boat harbour on that part of the coast, and I realize that it would be a very great advantage to the fishermen of that part of our province. That is the reason why I am asking the Government why they have this vote in the Estimates from year to year and still do not proceed to expend it. I do not like to see the Government fool the people in that part of the country, and I should like to have a definite statement from the minister as to what he intends to do during the coming summer. The hon. member for Queens need not be afraid of any opposition on my part; I will not oppose the construction of a boat harbour there if the Government intends to go ahead with the the work, but I do not like to see the Government pretend that they are going to do something when really they have no intention of doing it.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is very much mistaken in saying that the Government are trying to fool the people. If there is any cause for delay, the responsibility rests upon the people themselves. We have endeavoured to get the title to the necessary land for this work; it has been impossible to get it, and the engineers of the department recommend that we should not start the work until we secure a proper title. If my hon. friend can help us to get that title we are prepared to go on with the work at any time. If there has been delay, it is chargeable to the people of the vicinity where this work is to be carried on, not to the Government.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: The minister is either not familiar with conditions in that part of the country, or he has been misinformed, because there is no question of a title to this land at all. If a boat harbour were constructed, it would be on land that belongs to the Crown. The minister has made a statement not in accordance with the facts. The facts are that some persons in the neighbourhood were under the impression that their farms might be affected by the construction of this boat harbour, and the Department of Public Works sent an emissary to these people to get them to sign a document that if their lands were injured they would not ask the department for any compensation. The minister told me that himseslf last year, and consequently I am on firm ground in making that statement. I venture the assertion that such a proposition was never made to any persons in Canada before, the private individual whose land might be injured by the construction of a public work asked to sign a document that in the event of his property being injured he would not ask for compensation, thus ruling himself out of court. The department must surely have known that nobody in his senses would sign such a document as that. The people refused, as anybody would have done under similar circumstances. That is the title to the land on which the minister is a little astray. So far as the boat harbour itself is concerned, there is no title in question, as the place where the harbour would be constructed belongs to the Crown and the question of title could not arise. I had nothing to do with that, notwithstanding the statement of my hon. friend from Queens county (Mr. McLean). I want to know the facts in connection with the matter.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: I think my hon. friend knows very well that this boat harbour would have been built a year ago, or would have been commenced, if he himself had not deliberately put his political friends up to claiming damages.

Mr. HUGHES: I must emphatically contradict that statement; there is not a word of truth in it. It is absolutely untrue, absolutely, and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. McLEAN: I will not withdraw a statement which is correct.

Mr. HUGHES: I say the statement is absolutely untrue.

Mr. McLEAN: The hon. gentleman himself a few days ago in this House charged against Mr. J. D. Hegan, a gentleman who was engineer—

Mr. HUGHES: That is getting away from the facts, this is another thing.

Mr. McLEAN: No, I am not getting away from it.

Mr. HUGHES: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has made the statement that I went to my political friends and asked them to make a claim for damages in connection with this work and to object to the construction of it. That statement is absolutely untrue, absolutely, there is not one word of truth in it.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think my hon. friend is quoting the words of my hon. friend from Queens county correctly. I do not think he made the statement that the hon. member went to his political friends to get them to make a claim.

Mr. HUGHES: What statement did he make?

Mr. ROGERS: He said the friends of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES: The friends? Even that statement is not true.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: The hon. gentleman is very apt to make statements of the character of that which he has just made, that statements are not true. The other night in this House he made a statement that the consulting engineer, Mr. J. B. Hegan, was dismissed and superannuated by this Government.

Mr. HUGHES: No, I did not.

Mr. McLEAN: It is in Hansard and I can read it to the House. As a matter of fact Mr. Hegan was never superannuated. He made the statement further that Mr. Hegan was approached by Liberal Conservatives in Prince Edward Island and that he was forced out of his office, that he was approached for graft on contracts. I want to tell the hon. gentleman and the committee that that statement has no foundation whatever in fact. Mr. Hegan was never approached by any person. Any one would be led to believe from the hon. gentleman's statement that Mr. Hegan had informed the hon. member that he had been so approached, that Mr. Hegan states emphatically that he never made such a statement to the hon. gentleman, and that his statement in this House is absolutely untrue and false, and I have in my hand an affidavit made by Mr. Hegan to that effect.

Mr. McKENZIE: I rise to a point of order. We had a very explicit ruling from the Chairman of this committee that discussions in committee must be germane to the matter before the committee. We might as well know whether these rulings are to be observed or not. The vote before the House has nothing to do with whether a certain gentleman was superannuated or not.

Mr. McLEAN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton is just as big a transgressor as any man in this House. He should be the last man to make the statement he has just made because he is always transgressing the rule, if such a rule exists. I am going to read Mr. Hegan's affidavit.

Mr. McKENZIE: I want the ruling of the Chair. I take the point of order that the discussion, according to the ruling of the Chair, must be germane to the vote under consideration. It is well within the memory of every man in this House that the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) who had the floor was called to order by the Chair and this ruling was announced, that the discussion must be germane to the question before the Chair. If the Chairman will say that is not the rule and that a member can switch off to anything he thinks proper, let us understand it that way; but if the ruling is to be observed, I submit that the hon. member at this moment cannot speak upon the subject that he is bringing up.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Blain): I think it is well understood by the committee and by all members that the item under discussion must be spoken to, and I am sure the hon. member will abide by that rule.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: The only thing I can do under the circumstances, as a charge of graft was made against an official of this country, which the official denies, is to take another opportunity to place the matter before the House to show that the statements made by the hon. member for Kings are not always correct.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: In justice to myself I state most emphatically that I never made any charge against Mr. Hegan, an official of the Public Works Department, never at any time.

Mr. McLEAN: It is in Hansard.

Mr. HUGHES: Does the minister intend to proceed with the work during the coming summer?

Mr. ROGERS: As soon as we get this famous question of damages settled we will be glad to go on, but we cannot go on until it is settled.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Can you not expropriate?

Mr. ROGERS: We could not expropriate on the question of damages.

Mr. HUGHES: The title is not under consideration at all. Does the minister expect that it would be reasonable to ask men owning property that might be injured by the construction of a work, to sign a document in advance that if their property was injured they would not ask for any compensation? Has that ever been done under similar circumstances in the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. ROGERS: It has been done very, very frequently in the Public Works Department, in various portions of Canada; and I can say further that unless we can get a favourable arrangement with the people there we cannot go on with the work. But the moment we do get a favourable arrangement we will be glad to go on immediately.

Mr. HUGHES: That is equivalent to saying that unless the men in the neighbourhood who own land sign a document of that character you will not proceed with the work?

Mr. ROGERS: There are a large number of people there who have already agreed to the conditions which have been imposed, and simply a few are holding out with a view to blocking the work, as I understand it.

Mr. HUGHES: There would not be a large number affected. A man who owned property that could not by any possibility be affected would of course sign a document of that kind, because there would be no danger to him in signing it. I repeat it is most unreasonable to ask these people to sign an agreement of that character. It has certainly never been done before in our province. The object is of course apparent.

Mr. ROGERS: I understand they have all signed but two.

Mr. HUGHES: These two might be the ones whose property would be most affected. It is most unjust to ask these men to sign a document of that kind.

Public Works—harbours and rivers, P.E.I.—Souris—extension of breakwater, $40,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I beg to move that this item be reduced to $6,000. The contract is completed, and $6,000 is all that is required.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: Will any repairs be necessary to the work during the coming summer?

Mr. ROGERS: We have of course the general vote, out of which we could make any necessary repairs.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Was there not some dispute about injuries to the breakwater last fall?

Mr. ROGERS: There was some difficulty, but it had been settled.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: Before we pass this item I should like to ask the minister if any extension or repairs will be made to Little Sand breakwater this year. I do not see any item for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS: We have nothing in the Estimates for it.

Mr. HUGHES: I have information here to the effect that when the breakwater was built at that place a space was left between the breakwater and the shore, and that the contractor or somebody else put a little clay on the rocks in order to bring them level with the breakwater. The next high tide, or certainly the next storm, washed the clay away. I should like to know if the end of the breakwater was really built in this flimsy way, and if any steps will be taken during the coming summer to complete the breakwater.

Mr. ROGERS: I have nothing before me to supply the information my hon. friend asks for. We shall have a sufficient amount in the general vote to make any repairs that are necessary.

Public Works—harbours and rivers, N.B.—Bathurst—harbour improvements, $100,000.

Mr. TURGEON: Is this to be done by contract?

Mr. ROGERS: An Order in Council was passed on October 23, 1914, recommending that authority be given to arrange with the Northern Dredging and Construction Company, Limited, for the dredging during the balance of the season of 1914, of a quantity of 100,000 cubic yards, place measure, at 30 cents per cubic yard, meaning an over-expenditure of $30,000 of the appropriation of $100,000; the company to wait for payment of this work until Parliament shall have granted an additional appropriation at its next session.

Campbellton—deep water wharf accommodation, $50,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is this for?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required for widening and extending deep water wharves and dredging berths at Campbellton. The proposed extension will be 600 feet long and 55 feet wide, built on a foundation dredged to 25 feet at L.W.O.S.T. In addition the present wharves are to be widened to 55 feet by the construction of a cribwork, 20 feet wide, for a length of 883 feet along the inner face.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the work under way?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MARCIL: Will it be proceeded with this year?

Mr. ROGERS: I am not sure. During the present year some repairs will be necessary. Campbellton, which is now the second largest shipping port of New Brunswick, shipped in 1913, 54,351,943 feet of lumber. It is a divisional point on the Intercolonial railway and the terminus of the International railway. In addition to the lumber shipments a large business is done in coal, and there is considerable traffic with points in Bonaventure and Gaspé counties, Que., a steamer making bi-weekly trips on this route. The present deep water wharves have a length on the outer face of 1,188 feet. The approach is about 175 feet in average width and 350 feet long. The Shives wharf was purchased in 1902-3 and forms part of the deep water wharf. The total expenditure to March 31, 1914, was $287,169.36.

Mr. MARCIL: I understand that $287,000 has been spent, and that $280,000 is to be expended.

Mr. ROGERS: That estimate covers a period of years.

Dalhousie—repairs to deep water wharf, $2,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What amount has been expended up to date?

Mr. ROGERS: $53,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it intended to do any dredging this year on the Restigouche river between Dalhousie and Campbellton?

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: We have a general dredging vote. Is there necessity for dredging there?

Mr. MARCIL: There has been dredging done in the past, and if half a million dollars is to be expended for a wharf at Campbellton, you will have to dredge to enable the boats to reach it.

Green Point (Beresford)—breakwater, $10,000.

Mr. TURGEON: This amount has been voted and re-voted since 1911, and last year the minister promised me the work would be done. Until then I placed the onus on the shoulders of the Minister of Marine, because I thought he was interfering. May I expect to have that work done this year?

Mr. ROGERS: It is like a number of other works that we have not been able to carry on during the past year, but we hope for better things this season.

Mr. TURGEON: When does the minister intend to have this work done?

Mr. ROGERS: As soon as we possibly can.

Mr. TURGEON: When will that be?

Mr. ROGERS: I would not like to be definite about it.

River St. John and tributaries—construction of wharves in tidal waters, $34,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: This seems to be an irregular way of wording a vote. You could build several wharves, not costing more than $5,000 each, over nearly a hundred miles, under this wording.

Mr. ROGERS: We have been following the wording of this particular vote for a number of years.

Mr. MACLEAN: It does not look right.

Mr. ROGERS: It does not.

Tracadie—to construct breakwater and breastworks, $5,000.

Mr. TURGEON: This vote has been in the Estimates for the last three or four years. Does the minister intend to do any work this year?

Mr. ROGERS: The amount of the estimate is very small compared with the importance of the work, and until we can ask Parliament to vote a much larger sum it is difficult for me to assure my hon. friend that we can go on with the work. The estimate for this work is $70,000.

Mr. TURGEON: I admit that the amount in the Estimates is very small, but I expected it would be larger and that the work would be commenced.

Sackville—approach to new wharf, $800.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Copp) urged on the Minister of Railways the building of this approach to the wharf at Sackville. It seems to be an urgent work for the Sackville people, as they cannot get to the wharf unless it is built, and I would ask the minister if he intends to proceed with it this year?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount will provide the approach to the wharf, and that will be done immediately.

Batiscan—wharf, $3,000.

Mr. BUREAU: There was $18,000 voted last year; will this vote finish the work?

Mr. ROGERS: There apparently is some error in the amount named here.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the proper amount?

Mr. ROGERS: It will require $8,000 more to complete the work.

Bersimis—wharf, $2,000.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in the Estimates now before the House, both for the province of Quebec and for the other provinces, there appear a number of items for the construction of wharves, from which I conclude that the Government's policy is not antagonistic to the building of wharves in this country, and by which is deepened my regret at the minister's omitting to include in the Estimates of this session the amount necessary for the construction of a wharf at L'Assomption. I am not raising a new question. As early as 1911, the late Government had had plans prepared and had provided for this work, which is indispensable not only to the town of L'Assomption, but also to that whole district. The necessary amount was to be found in the Estimates of 1911-12 and 1912-13; but later was cut off, and the legitimate demands of L'Assomption were denied. The work had been started under the late Government, and a quantity of material had been brought on the ground; but with the coming into power of the present administration the work was discontinued notwithstanding that the money was again voted in 1912-13, and the material is still on the shore where it is going to waste. The other day, when I advocated in this House the right of the town of St. Lin to a post office and taunted the minister for his indifference in the matter, the reply came, quite undeserved, that possibly I had not pressed my request sufficiently. In this particular case of a wharf for L'Assomption, I did repeatedly call the attention of the minister to it, and I know that representations have come to the Government from more welcome sources; I deem it my duty to warn the minister and this House that the Government's best friends at L'Assomption are disappointed to find that their claims have been heeded so very little by him. Joseph Edouard Faribault, K.C., perhaps the most prominent Conservative at L'Assomption, urged his leaders to action, but, only a few days ago, he confessed to me his vexation at having had to go a-begging to the dispensers of government patronage with no better result.

It is no matter of great surprise to me that the minister should show preferences to and be more favourably inclined towards his Tory supporters; but how comes it that he is so callous to the requests of his best friends at L'Assomption. All good movements for the betterment of conditions in my county find in me a staunch supporter; and the minister may feel sure that, unless he heed the claims of his good friends of L'Assomption, I shall not fail to take advantage of his indifference, and I shall succeed in proving to those good people that they need not expect fair dealing at the hands of the present Administration. Be fair towards all the citizens of the town of L'Assomption and of that whole section and, more especially, listen to your best friends, if you do not want to provoke their just resentment.

In taking my seat, I would ask the minister if he intends to carry on this work?

Mr. ROGERS: I am very pleased to know that my hon. friend notes with such satisfaction the large sums of money we are spending in the various public works that we are undertaking in the different counties of the province of Quebec. I regret that he apparently is not satisfied with the amount being spent in the county of L'Assomption.

Mr. MARCIL: He complains that the item has been struck out altogether.

Mr. ROGERS: It is true that in 1910-11 a small item was put in the Estimates and some little work was done by day labour just immediately previous to the election of that year, and it is evident that that work has not been considered of such a pressing necessity as to warrant the Government in going on with that particular wharf. There is a certain reason why a wharf should be built at the point named by my hon. friend, but I think he will agree with me that there is no very pressing necessity for that particular piece of work.

I do not suppose it will be necessary to go into the details of the public buildings in so far as the river improvements on the wharf in the constituency of L'Assomption to which my hon. friend has referred; but I can assure my hon. friend that we will give it that consideration that its importance deserves, and while we have no amount in the Estimates this year, let us hope that we shall have to put one in next year, if the conditions demand it.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I must acknowledge to the minister that he shows some willingness for the future. However, I must report that this work is of more immediate import than, judging from his statements, he seems to think. This wharf is urgently needed, and in this year's Estimates I see that many small towns of less importance than L'Assomption are granted appropriations for wharves. Again I say the requirements of L'Assomption are more pressing than those of many other towns which are provided for in this year's Estimates.

Cap Chat—extension of training pier, $7,500.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the total cost of this work?

Mr. ROGERS: $30,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the work under way now?

Mr. ROGERS: Not yet.

Mr. MARCIL: Has a contract been awarded?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the depth of water at Cap Chat?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the information here.

Cap de la Madeleine—enlargement of wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Will this $4,000 complete the work?

Mr. ROGERS: No. If my hon. friend will look at the Supplementary Estimates he will find something else in there for this work.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. BUREAU: Was this work given by contract, and if so, to whom.

Mr. ROGERS: Charles Pagé.

Mr. BUREAU: Of Three Rivers?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Were tenders called for this work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, F. A. Barette, $64,000, and Charles Pagé, $49,000.

Mr. BUREAU: The other day I asked the following question:

What is the amount mentioned in the contract for the construction of the wharf at Cap de la Madeleine?

The answer was:

Schedule rates, approximately, $56,000.

If a contract is given for $49,000, how can the cost be $56,000.

Mr. ROGERS: An extra expenditure of $6,694.20 was entailed over the approximate contract price of $49,461.92, making a total of $56,156.12. Authority was given to substitute British Columbia fir for white pine, pitch pine and tamarack specified for the upper section from low water line to the wharf extension under contract.

Mr. BUREAU: That hardly answers my question. There was a change made in the contract, British Columbia fir being called for instead of pine and spruce. Was Mr. Pagé given his price for fir, or were tenders called for?

Mr. ROGERS: No tenders were called for; the price was named by the department, I fancy.

Mr. BUREAU: What was the reason for the change?

Mr. ROGERS: It was impossible to find the required length of timber in the native wood, and it was necessary to substitute British Columbia fir.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the size of the wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: It is 150 feet long by 20 feet wide.

Mr. BUREAU: With a slip in the centre.

Mr. ROGERS: The other section is 200 by 40 feet.

Mr. BUREAU: Are there data in the department as to the number of boats that docked at that pier last year, or for the last four or five years?

Mr. ROGERS: Nothing has been docked there, because the work was under construction.

Mr. BUREAU: But this is the enlargement of a wharf that already existed there. Was it on account of the traffic that the enlargement had to be made?

Mr. ROGERS: I am not sufficiently familiar with local conditions to give my hon. friend that information.

Mr. BUREAU: I want the House to get the information, and I can give it if you like. This is a little wharf situated at the mouth of the St. Maurice river in the county of Champlain. I do not think two steamers ever docked there, and it is easy to see from the length of the dock, 150 feet, that they could not be very large steamers. In the old days, when the wharf was first built, there used to be pilgrimages there, as there was a shrine. There was a little boat called L'Etoile, that used to dock there, carrying pilgrims to the shrine. But I understand that Cap de la Madelaine was a very expensive parish in elections. The hon. minister (Mr. Rogers) speaks of L'Assomption being expensive, but that was before the elections. In this case, this was done after the elections, and was done to square the present member's election accounts. That is my information; if the minister can give better, I hope he will supply it.

Cap St. Ignace—repairs to wharf, $1,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is that work started?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. MARCIL: Will tenders be called for? What is the amount proposed to be expended?

Mr. ROGERS: We have nothing very definite as to the amount. We are going to have another survey made.

Mr. MARCIL: Do you propose to make a deep water wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes; twenty-five feet at low water.

Disraeli—repairs to wharf—$2,200.

Mr. TOBIN: May I ask where this wharf is situated?

Mr. ROGERS: This is in Beauce county at the end of lake Aylmer on the Quebec Central railway, 52 miles east of Sherbrooke.

Mr. TOBIN: Is there any water there?

Mr. ROGERS: I presume there is; I hope there is.

Mr. TOBIN: I would like to know. A few years ago statements were made by members of this House, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) being one, that there was no water in this lake and that this work was not useful. The hon. gentleman went down on an excursion with 12 m. the late hon. member for Lennox, and some other gentleman, and had a photograph taken there, and returned with the statement that there was no water. What repairs is the minister going to make to this wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: The amount is required to replace the present wooden flooring 50 feet long by 36 feet wide with gravel and stone, and to effect other repairs, the estimated cost of which is $2,000.

Mr. TOBIN: I am sure the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) will be scandalized when he hears that the hon. minister is going on with these repairs. It was a useful work when the late Government took it up, and I approve the action of this Government in going ahead with it.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m., Wednesday.

Wednesday, April 7, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 122, to amend the Winding-Up Act, was introduced and read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

MR. E. A. BOUILTON.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Is Mr. E. A. Bouilton, of Paspebiac, Que, employed in any capacity by the Department of Marine and Fisheries or of the Naval Service, or in any other department of the Government?
2. If so, what are his duties, what is his salary, and since when has he been so employed?

Mr. CODERRE: Mr. Bouilton is not in the employ of the Government.

MR. P. A. MOUSSEAU.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Did Mr. P. A. Mousseau, who had been employed as overseer of works for the building of the Louisville post office, formerly occupy any position in any of the departments, or under the Government?

2 If so, what was the position?

3. What is the total amount that he has received as overseer in the building of the said Louisville post office?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. $2,136.

QUEBEC COUNTY TELEPHONE SERVICE.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Has the Government built a telephone line in the county of Quebec?

2. If so, (a) what did it cost, and (b) what is the revenue from it?

3. Does that line extend beyond the county of Quebec?

4. Does it compete with other lines already existing and for a long time back giving local and interurban service?

5. What is the quality of the materials used in the construction of that line?

6. Have all the workmen been paid?

7. Who constructed the line for the Government?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Cost $22,000, of which $13,798.91 has been paid; (b) approximately $1,000 a year.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No. 6 wire, 25 foot poles, etc., according to Government standard.

6. No representations have been made to the department that workmen have not been paid.

7. A. Martineau & Co. constructed 128 miles of line and have been paid for 88½ miles.

GRAHAM PEAT PROCESS.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Is the report made by Dr. Porter, of McGill University, on the Graham peat process, final, or is it subject to revision?

2. Does the Government intend applying any funds voted for peat investigation to a demonstration test of the Graham process?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Dr. Porter has revised his report and in the revision states categorically: "The process as outlined and submitted to me by Mr. Graham cannot under any conditions which I foresee in this country for a number of years produce carbonized briquettes in competition with coal at present Montreal prices."

[Mr. Coderre.]

2. In view of the very unfavourable report made by the officers of the department some time ago on the Graham process and of the present adverse report by Dr. Porter, the department cannot recommend an application for funds to make a demonstration test.

DEPORTATION OF FOREIGNERS.

Mr. LACHANCE:

1. Does the Government intend authorizing the deportation of the foreigners who are out of work in the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Victoria and Vancouver?

2. If so, what department will control such deportation, and on what conditions are foreigners exempt therefrom?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: This subject has not been under consideration.

CANADIAN WAR CONTINGENT ASSOCIATION.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Canadian War Contingent Association, of which Sir George Perley, M.P., is president, any connection with the Canadian Field Comforts Commission?

2. Has the attention of the Government been drawn to an appeal for $50,000 addressed to various organized societies of women in Canada by two persons representing themselves to be members of the executive of the association of which Sir George Perley is president, and contained in a circular letter dated 69 Grosvenor street, London, England, October 27, 1914?

3. Do the persons issuing the appeal occupy official positions recognized by the Government? If so, has the Government authorized or approved the appeal?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. The Government has no information on the subject.

2. The attention of the Government has not been drawn to the appeal in question.

3. Answered by No. 2.

MR. LOUIS AUDETTE.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Louis Audette, day labourer of St. Anselme, county of Dorchester, in the employ of the Government?

2. If so, what is his position, and what salary does he receive?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.

2. Caretaker and pumpman at St. Anselme on the National Transcontinental railway. His salary is one dollar per day.

VALCARTIER CAMP LUMBER SUPPLY.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE:

1. Did the Gravel Lumber Company, of St. Romuald, county of Lévis, sell wood or other materials for the Valcartier camp?

2. If so, what quantity, at what price, and were tenders called for prior to such sale?

3. During the past three years did the Gravel

Lumber Company sell wood or other materials to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners?

4. If so, what quantity, and at what price?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Yes; lumber.

2. 460,624 ft. spruce; $10,603.09. Prices were obtained.

3 and 4. To be answered by Department of Marine and Fisheries.

VALCARTIER CAMP LIGHTING.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE:

1. To whom was the contract for the lighting of the Valcartier camp given?

2. What amount was paid by the Government for that lighting?

Major General HUGHES:

1. The Quebec Railway Light, Heat and Power Co., Quebec.

2. $2,535.50.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE:

1. Have contracts been awarded for the supply of electrical power for the grain elevators of the Quebec Harbour Commission?

2. If so, to whom were such contracts awarded, and what were the amounts of them?

Mr. HAZEN: The following information is furnished by the Quebec Harbour Commission:

"Commissioners generate own electric power for elevator, but have also connection with Q.R.L.H. and P. Company for lights and passenger elevator used when elevator steam plant is not operating.

"Prices are the contract prices for which company supply lights and power to commission as required namely for light 10 cents per K.W.H. less 30 per cent discount. Power for 200 to 400 K.W. horses per months 200 at 3 cents 200 excess at 2.75 400 to 600 K.W. horses per month 400 K.W. at 2.75 excess 200 at 2.3 cents and in addition $1 per H.P. per month on H.P. of motor."

MEDICINE HAT HOMESTEAD INSPECTOR.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

Did Willian Switzer, homestead inspector in the Medicine Hat land district, receive his full salary for the months of March, April and May, 1913?

Mr. CROTHERS: No.

GRANTS TO FISHERMEN.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What amounts, if any, were paid fishermen of Bonaventure and Gaspé counties, respectively, for damages sustained by them in the storm of June 5, 1914?

2. How many fishermen belonged to Gaspé, and how many to Bonaventure county?

3. What are their names, residences, and the amount received by each?

4. How many claims were not entertained?

Mr. HAZEN: No amount was paid to fishermen of any county in the Dominion for material damages sustained by them in the storm of June 5, 1914.

PICTOU COUNTY RURAL MAIL.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has any petition been received asking for a rural mail delivery service from Meadowville to Sundridge via Dufferin Road, county of Pictou?

2. If so, what action has been taken in regard to said petition?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Yes.

2. The matter is still under inquiry. The inspector states that he has received a petition from the residents between Pictou and Cariboo River which covers a portion of the district included in the petition from Meadowville Station to Sundridge, as they believe they will get a better service from Pictou than from Meadowville, and that, therefore, he considers it advisable to withhold all action on these petitions until a satisfactory arrangement can be arrived at so as to give all the districts the best service possible.

MR. T. C. WOODWORTH.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Did any one recommend the employment of T. C. Woodworth in the business of purchasing horses for war purposes in Nova Scotia?

2. If so, who recommended him, and what was the address and occupation stated to be?

Major General HUGHES: There is no record in the department of any such matter.

W. V. PETTET.

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. When, and for what reason was W. V. Pettet dismissed from the office of postmaster at Pictou, Ontario?

2. When was his successor, Samuel G. Smith, appointed?

3. Has the Government been informed that, as alleged, he took an active and aggressive part in the last Ontario provincial election held in 1914?

4. If so, is it the intention of the Government to dismiss him from office for having done so?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. On the 12th March, 1913, for political partisanship.

2. On the 13th March, 1913.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 3.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Lachance: For a return showing how many Royal Commissions were appointed by the Government since October, 1911, the subjects of investigation and report for each of such commissions; on what dates such commissions were appointed, and on what dates they respectively closed; what persons composed the said commissions, what amount was paid to each of such persons, either as salary or indemnity, and what sums were paid for expenses to each of them; the total amount of the cost for each of such commissions.

Mr. E. Lapointe: For a return showing who are the mail carriers for the rural mail in the counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay; the salary of each such mail carrier, and the trip that each has to make; who are the mail carriers for the rural mails in the parishes of St. Prime and St. Louis de Metabetchouan, and their respective salaries.

SHOOTING BY SENTRIES.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The morning newspapers announce that there has been another case at Cornwall of shooting by a sentry of some innocent people. Has any news reached the department about it?

Major General HUGHES: I suppose that it is on the strength of the newspaper despatch that the right hon. gentleman speaks of these people as innnocent. It is always well to wait before reaching a conclusion. I have seen the item, just as the right hon. gentleman has seen it, but I have no further information on the subject. The people in the locality have been instructed when challenged to halt; also to obey the orders of the soldiers; otherwise, the soldiers cannot carry on their work. It must be remembered that the sentry has no easy job.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And it is stated that the sentries are instructed to shoot to kill.

Major General HUGHES: They were instructed, and are instructed, when any one attacks a soldier, or attempts to disarm him, or to destroy property, to shoot, and when they shoot, to see to it that there is no missing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In this case, a woman and three children tried to pass the sentries.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. Frank Cochrane (Minister of Railways and Canals), the House went into committee on Bill No. 119, to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

[Mr. Lachance.]

On the preamble:

Mr. GRAHAM: This matter was pretty thoroughly discussed on the resolution, but, for the sake of clearness, I wish to state my position again. In the first place, some arrangement should be made for the operation of the Transcontinental until such time as it is completed. The duty of the Government, in my humble judgment, is not to pass this measure to expropriate the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific or of any other company that it desires to expropriate; but immediately, with all possible speed, to complete the eastern division of the Transcontinental, which is not at present completed according to the agreement with the company.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: When is it completed according to the agreement?

Mr. GRAHAM: When the agreement is fulfilled; it certainly is not completed when the terminals at Quebec are not constructed—leaving other matters out of consideration for the time. The award of Sir William Whyte was that all the shops are necessary for the operation of the road.

I was pointing out the duty of the Government to complete the National Transcontinental, so far as the Quebec terminals at least are concerned, and so to be in a position to tell the company: we have fulfilled our part of the agreement, now take over the line or certain proceedings will be taken. Until such time as the project is completed, the step proposed under this legislation is premature.

I do not know that I can add much more. I discussed the matter at some length when the House was in committee on the resolution. It does seem to me that the Government is altogether in advance of the situation which has been created by itself in not completing the work. In the city of Quebec, a line has been purchased from the Canadian Northern Railway for the standardizing of which a grant is now asked in the Estimates. The station in Quebec is not begun; the shops are just started; the small station at Champlain market is only nicely begun. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in Quebec to take care of the Quebec traffic under this agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. It has been stated that the fact that the Quebec bridge is not completed may be suggested by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company as a reason for their not taking over the road.

That contention will not stand for a moment before any tribunal when the documents are produced.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: To what documents does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. GRAHAM: I refer to a letter sent to the Railway Department by Mr. Hays himself, in which he admitted that the company would consider the operation of a ferry at Quebec as fulfilment of the contract providing for a continuous line. That letter was received by the Railway Department and was left by me in that department.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not there now.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not my fault; it ought to be there.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot say at this time. I remember distinctly receiving the letter, taking it to Council, showing it to the Prime Minister and having it filed in the department.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: About what date?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was some time before Mr. Hays' death. It was written by Mr. Hays in connection with some other correspondence, and I think a careful search will result in its being found in the department. I am prepared to say that such a letter was received. As I have pointed out, I think the Government should complete the project so that the company will have no reasonable grounds for objection on that score, and then, if the company do not proceed to fulfil their contract, that will be the proper time to take such steps as may be deemed necessary. At the present time, however, I think it is inopportune for the Government to pass legislation giving them powers which, to my mind, they are not in a position to act upon without violating the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, because the Government, in my humble judgment, has not completed the project according to the agreement.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Government already has a substantial portion of the powers set forth in this amendment, inasmuch as last year it was provided by an Act then passed that, until the Grand Trunk Pacific railway should accept a lease and undertake operation, the Minister of Railways and Canals might himself operate the road. The present legislation carries that further, in this respect; that it gives to the Minister of Railways, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, authority to lease a branch line which would be an essential portion of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental railway. It supplies that which was left unprovided for in the Act of last year, and it thoroughly subserves the purpose which was intended to be accomplished by that Act. That Act, if I remember correctly, received the unanimous assent of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is all right, but this proposed legislation goes farther than that.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In what way?

Mr. GRAHAM: It takes power otherwise to acquire—that means, to expropriate—that line from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company; to expropriate its terminals or terminals belonging to any other company. One of the points I endeavoured to raise was that if the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company then proposed to take over the line, the Government would find itself the owner of all these terminals, and the line as well.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: As a matter of fact, it was contended—and I thought it was a well-founded contention—that so important a branch as the Lake Superior branch might very well belong to the Government, assuming that the Government were to have ownership, as it has ownership, of the whole of the eastern division from Moncton to Winnipeg. The objection that my hon. friend makes is based, I understand, on the suggestion that the Government may expropriate. I am not at all sure that the word "acquire" would have that meaning.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is the construction that was put upon it by the Solicitor General.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is possible that it might bear that construction, but I should rather think that if power to expropriate were to be conferred, some words of a more definite character would be used. I was not here during the discussion, and was not aware that my hon. friend the Solicitor General had expressed that opinion. The authority to take away, against his will, the common law property or rights of any citizen in this or any other country, even at the instance of the Crown, must be couched in very express terms. Further than that, it is a very familiar principle that even if compensation is not provided for in the act of expropriation, the courts will always construe any such statute as contemplating compensation to the extent of the value of the property and ten per cent additional. My hon. friend says that this legislation is inopportune. There is something that would be very much more inopportune and unfortunate, namely, that this road being in effect complete for all practical purposes, although it may not be technically completed within the meaning of the Act, should remain unoperated. That is the reason why the Government introduced last year, and has introduced again this year, legislation to prevent that particular condition being brought about. Any hon. gentleman would find it exceedingly difficult to look at the legislation and the contracts of 1903-4 and come to a conclusion as to what the completion of that road meant, within the meaning of that legislation and those contracts. As a matter of fact, a railway, in one sense, is never complete. There has not been a year since the Canadian Pacific railway has been completed that work of an important character has not been done upon it; particularly is this true of the last twenty years. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway has been operated in the West for three or four years; it has been handling large passenger and freight traffic, although as yet it is not technically completed—a long way from it. Would my hon. friend suggest that under those circumstances a railway, although not absolutely technically completed, ought to remain unoperated? Does he suggest that it is in the interests of the people of the country that it should remain unoperated? We have taken the responsibility of deciding that any such condition would be most unfortunate, and detrimental to the public interest. We are not looking forward to any controversy with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in regard to this matter, but it is necessary to make provision for that which might possibly occur. Suppose it were suggested to the company: this road is as complete as the road which has been operated in the West for three or four years; while it may not be technically complete, nevertheless it is for all practical purposes complete within the meaning of this Act, and it is your duty to proceed to take a lease and to operate. If the company raised the contention that they are not bound to operate that road until such and such absolute conditions have been complied with, we find that the contract and the statutes of 1903-4, unfortunately, contain no provisions definitely determining the matter. I am not quite sure that if such a question arose it might be determined by arbitration; otherwise it would have to be determined by the courts. In either case there would be very considerable delay. In the case of a determination by the courts, two or three years might be involved. We want to avoid all that. We have no desire or intention of having any controversy or difficulty with the company, and we do not propose to look forward to anything of the kind. My own attitude—and this has been the attitude of the Government as well since we came into power—has been to deal with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company in respect of this enterprise precisely in the same way and to extend to them precisely the same consideration in every respect as if the enterprise had been initiated by the party which is now charged with the responsibilities of office, and I venture to state that no instance can be found in which that policy has been departed from.

With respect to what my hon. friend suggests about the Quebec bridge, I do not desire to apprehend that any unfair or unreasonable difficulty will be caused by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. I am not going to apprehend anything of the kind until it actually occurs. But we must not be blind to the consideration that a contract formally executed under the authority of the board of directors and sanctioned by a vote of the shareholders cannot legally be set aside or modified by a letter from Mr. Hays as president of that road; at least that is my present impression. The contract of 1903-4 was executed under the authority of the board of directors of the company. The board of directors of the company, if I remember correctly, were required to place the contract before the shareholders. That contract, made in that way, with these legal formalities, might not be changed, so far as its legal effect is concerned, by the mere letter of the president of the road, however important his position or however extensive his authority. We have to take into account considerations of that kind. We discussed the matter in a very friendly way with the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway company, and, unless I am mistaken, the legislation was submitted to them either in the exact form in which it is now presented to the House or in a form substantially the same; and, as far as my knowledge of the attitude of the company goes, they have not any desire to oppose it, nor, as far as I understand, do they oppose it in any way. It is a reasonable precaution which we are taking for the purpose of preventing the road from remaining without operation during a period in which some question might reasonably be raised by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway company as to its duty to take over the road for operation and as to the right of the Government to enforce that operation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The only correspondence which has been submitted to the House is simply to show that there is a disagreement between the company and the Government, now representing the commission of construction, as to whether or not the road is completed according to the terms of the contract. That is all the information that we have before us. My right hon. friend stated a moment ago that the company does not offer any objection to this legislation. That may be. In his absence the other day the Minister of Railways stated that the company were anxious to hand over this road to the Government—that they did not desire to operate it. That also may be true. But of this we have no information, and my hon. friend knows that is not the way to deal with Parliament—to give word of mouth. We should have correspondence and written documents and evidence upon that point. I do not question the word of the Minister of Railways at all; I am not prepared to say that Mr. Chamberlin, the president of the company, did not say what was attributed to him; but I would like to know the circumstances under which Mr. Chamberlin made that suggestion. As to this we have no evidence. The only thing we have before us is that there is a disagreement between the engineers of the company and the engineers of the Government as to the completion of the road.

I shall not go over the discussion we had the other day; but in our judgment, which I think is fully sustained by the statute in that behalf, whenever a question of this kind arises the method of settlement provided by the statute is arbitration. My hon. friend stated a moment ago that the road, while completed in a sense, may never be completed. I know the Canadian Pacific railway may be truly said not to be completed, because it is a matter of notoriety that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been building and rebuilding its line again and again. But my hon. friend knows that the intention of the engineers charged with the work was to build this railway once for all. And now my hon. friend asks, how are we going to determine that? There is an easy way of determining it. The plans and specifications were prepared by the company and the Government together, they were joint specifications, and everything was done under the signatures of both engineers. The question now is whether or not the work contemplated by those specifications is completed. If the work is completed, then the company can be compelled to take over the road. If there is a disagreement between the engineers, I repeat, we can go to arbitration. I can understand that the company is not anxious to take over the road. I gave reasons the other day. The company has been treated most contemptuously in this matter. My hon. friend says the company has been treated with every consideration possible. That may be. I know, of course, that the Government has advanced aid to the company by way of loans on more than one occasion; but as to the construction of the road, and the terminals at Quebec especially, while I do not know what issue they take with the Government, the company cannot but feel that they have been treated with great contempt and in defiance of their legitimate rights and aspirations. My hon. friend knows the details, but I do not suppose that it is disputed that shops and terminals are essential to a railway, and the company cannot be asked to take over the railway and operate it unless it has been provided with terminals. Terminals are just as essential for the operating of the road as the road bed itself. The Quebec terminals, which were provided for by the company and the commission of that day on a joint agreement satisfactory to both, have been simply discarded by the present Administration and another agreement substituted.

The Minister of Railways stated the other day that they have provided for joint terminals at Quebec, with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I take issue with him and say that such a union station, placed in the valley of the St. Charles river and not in the valley of the St. Lawrence, cannot be as useful to the company as the station which we had provided for. Let that stand for the time being. I refreshed my memory by reading the contract with the Canadian Pacific railway, as brought down by the Government itself, and what do I find? I find that the agreement between the Government and the Canadian Pacific railway for the union station contemplates and provides only for a terminal for the Grand Trunk Pacific railroad, and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company itself, the parent company of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, is excluded from that agreement. Can anybody imagine that the Grand Trunk Pacific will accept as satisfactory an agreement for joint terminals for the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and not for the Grand Trunk railway itself? It cannot agree to that. Up to the present time, so far as I know, it has refused to accept that agreement, because not a tittle of evidence has been produced to show that the company ever acceded to the demand made by the Minister of Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for these joint terminals. It is not surprising, therefore, that under the circumstances the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should say: the contract has not been lived up to, and we are not in a position to take over the road. I would think that the best way to settle the matter would be by arbitration; but that may take some time. Whether the position of the company is well founded or not, there is a disagreement between the company and the Government. So far so good —or so bad. My hon. friend says that the road must be operated. Certainly; we agree that the road must be operated. Last year when the Government asked for legislation to operate the road, pending the settlement of these difficulties, we offered not a word of objection, but agreed that the road must be operated; and to-day we say that the road must be operated.

But I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that this legislation which he is submitting is not of a temporary but of a permanent character. Let me read the legislation which we are now asked to sanction, and then ask whether it has not altogether the appearance of permanent legislation so designed that the Government can take possession of the road and operate it itself. If such be the intent of the Government, we should like to know it. I did not draw that conclusion from the remarks made by my right hon. friend a moment ago. No other interpretation can be placed upon this legislation than that it is intended to enable the Government to take over the ownership of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Let me read the section:

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

The Minister of Railways and Canals may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, lease or otherwise acquire—

We discussed these words " or otherwise acquire " with the Solicitor General the other day, and in his opinion they were broad enough to cover the case of expropriation, if that were necessary. Of course, an agreement may be entered into which would render expropriation proceedings unnecessary.

The Minister of Railways and Canals may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, lease or otherwise acquire that portion of the railway of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company known as the Lake Superior branch, extending from Lake Superior Junction to the city of Fort William in Ontario, including terminal facilities and accommodation works of the said company or of any other company, and for all the purposes of this section may provide, by purchase, lease or otherwise, rolling stock and equipment; and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and such other company is each hereby authorized on its part to deal accordingly with the said line of railway or terminal facilities and accommodation works as the case may be.

I say that no interpretation can be placed on these words other than that the Government intends to acquire the Grand Trunk Pacific, either by expropriation, purchase or otherwise, and to operate the enterprise itself.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): In the debate the other day I think we discussed pretty fully the question of the non-completion of the road. I must take exception to the statement of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), that there is ample provision in Quebec for all the traffic. As I stated the other day, we have entered into an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which we cannot only use the Canadian Pacific railway terminals, station, yards and so on, but also run right down to the docks built by the Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Government has built no docks there.

Mr. COCHRANE: The docks were built by the Harbour Commissioners, who are practically the Government. Whoever operates the road has to get down to the docks, and if we had not made this arrangement we should have had to expropriate a tremendous amount of valuable property in order to get down to the docks. I take issue with the statement of the leader of the Opposition that the Act provides that the question of the completion of the road shall be settled by arbitration. The only thing it says about arbitration is that the engineers can be called in to arbitrate on the construction of any portion of the line. Nothing at all is said about arbitrating on the completion of the road. Take the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton. They have no route through Edmonton now, and no facilities, yet they are operating there, and most successfully, I think. They are running one of the best trains between Edmonton and Winnipeg that there is in Canada to-day.

Mr. OLIVER: The Grand Trunk Pacific have made arrangements at Edmonton. They have freight arrangements of their own.

Mr. COCHRANE: They have no through arrangements in Edmonton, and have never pretended that they have.

Mr. OLIVER: I beg to correct the minister. They have freight arrangements of their own.

Mr. COCHRANE: Where is their passenger station in Edmonton for their terminals? Where do they get through Edmonton?

Mr. OLIVER: They get through by an arrangement with the Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: We do not know anything about that arrangement. It has never been brought before Parliament or before the Department of Railways or before the Railway Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has the agrement with the Canadian Pacific railway at Quebec been brought before Parliament?

Mr. COCHRANE: No. But they do not want to get out of it, or intend to get out of it. As far as the Lake Superior branch is concerned, I claim that as a matter of policy it should never belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific. It should belong to the owners of the Transcontinental. It is the key to the West. As I stated in a previous debate we are not desirous of operating the Transcontinental. We want the company to take it over. Year by year we shall have to work on capital account to improve the road. On the portion of the road between lake Superior and Winnipeg, which was completed by the late Government, there are wooden trestles that will have to be strengthened in some way or filled. That will be a capital charge. The ex-Minister of Railways has made a point in regard to Mr. Hay's letter in reference to the Quebec bridge. But the leader of the Government says that a letter is no good because it is not a document.

Mr. GRAHAM: A letter is a document.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not a legal document. As has been stated by the leader of the Government, it would not commit the company if we were to take a legal opinion on it. The right hon. leader of the Opposition has also referred to the specifications. Now there are hundreds of classes in those specifications, as to which half a dozen different opinions could be held. The engineers themselves cannot agree as to the meaning of some parts of the specifications. If we were to say that the contract had been completed according to specifications, I think we should have a hard time to substantiate that before a court. The terminals at Fort William are not owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific; they are owned by a separate company. I am not so sure whether the elevator is owned by another company or not, but the terminals are. That is the reason they are mentioned in this way in the Bill. I am sure that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, or the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, will admit that we would be very foolish to attempt to operate this road without having the right to the use of the branch down to Fort William. I made the statement the other day, and I know it will not be denied, that Mr. Chamberlin, now the president of the road, told me—I will take his word for it and I will get a document from him for it—that he would agree to any terms that we might arrange with the Canadian Pacific Railway and others. He said that he would accept those terms, and he will not go back on that. I should say in fairness to him though, that, while he does not approve of the arrangement, still he will not go back on the agreement. I claim the road is fully completed for operation. We have provided in Quebec for every part of the operation there. As for the suggestion that the shops have not been completed, let me tell the committee that they have not a shop on the whole 1,800 miles from Winnipeg to Prince Rupert except small shops which they have at the divisional points. I made the statement the other day, and I repeat it now, that at every divisional point from Winnipeg to Moncton we have shops far superior to any that they have on their part of the road; yet they have operated more than half of that road now for four years.

On the mountain section they have only four divisional points with very few stations or yards equipped, and yet they are operating to probably as great an extent as we will operate in the East unless business improves during the next year. My hon. friend takes the ground that the terminals at Quebec will not be equal to the terminals formerly proposed. I am satisfied that, both in the interest of the railway and of the business community at Quebec, the change in the terminals will prove to be a desirable one. We are building down into the city of Quebec for the purpose of taking care of the business there. We believe that the harbour of Quebec will be much more important than it has ever been in the past. In order to be able to participate in the business at Quebec, and to compete with the Canadian Pacific railway and other roads, it was necessary for us to get down to the Louise Basin.

12 noon.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals is very inconsistent in so far as his dealing with the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific is concerned, because in connection with the Quebec bridge he says that the country is not safe in taking the letter of the president.

Mr. COCHRANE: I only referred to that in connection with the statement of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals and my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. They said that the president was doubtless morally bound to stand by that letter of the former president.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As far as the bridge is concerned, I understand that the question came up when the late Government was in office and that the president of the company, acting for the company and speaking in the name of the company, expressly waived the matter of the completion of the Quebec bridge as essential to the completion of the contract. The minister seems doubtful as to whether that would be binding. The way to ascertain whether it would be binding or not is to request the president of the company to have the board of directors, or shareholders, ratify it and put it in the form of a contract. I cannot see why that has not been done by this Government. One would think that during the nearly four years that they have been in office, in a matter of such vast importance as this, if they had any doubt as to the company being bound by the letter of the president, they would have taken steps to have that matter confirmed and the letter put in proper legal form. But while the minister says there is doubt as to the binding character of that letter, when it comes to another question, the question of the changes in the terminals, the changes in the location of the workshops at Quebec and the changes in the grades of the road, the minister says that the president has told him so and so and that he will take his word for it, showing that when the minister wants to rely upon the word of the president he is quite willing to take his word, but when he does not want to rely on an assurance of the president he does not want to take his letter.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. gentleman is unfair to me in that respect.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In what respect?

Mr. COCHRANE: In what the hon. gentleman has just said. I was only making a comparison.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I accept the minister's statement, but after all is it not all nonsense for the Government to keep the country and Parliament in doubt as to these verbal statements and as to these statements by letter? Why have they not put the matter in writing? The minister knows perfectly well that the road must be built according to the specifications which were agreed upon. It is of enormous importance in connection with a road that is going to cost this country, according to the hon. gentleman, something like $50,000,000—

An hon. MEMBER: How many?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Something like $50,000,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: What?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Something like $50,000,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: Fifty million?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, making allowance for interest for seven years, and assuming, of course, that the road will be self-sustaining after that. It is of very great importance and one would have thought that the Government would have taken steps to have had the waiver condition as to the Quebec bridge put in proper form.

Mr. COCHRANE: That only came up quite recently.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That only came up quite recently? How could it help coming up? It must have been in the mind of the minister from the time he took office. Here is the gap of the Quebec bridge not completed, and it will not be completed for a number of years, across which the traffic will be carried by ferry. It never came up, says the minister, and yet he asked this Parliament for an appropriation to establish a car ferry at Quebec. One would have thought that it would have come to the minister's mind at once. When he was asking Parliament for authority to engage in an expenditure of $1,000,000 or more, one would have thought that the question of making an agreement in writing in order to carry out the assurance of the president that the establishment of a ferry would be regarded as a completion of the line would have been uppermost in his mind.

My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has stated that so far as he knows the company has no objection to this legislation. Surely there is another question involved besides what may be the wishes of the company. This committee knows very well that when it was proposed to construct the Transcontinental railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific wanted to stop at North Bay and did not want to have anything to do with a line east of North Bay. They recognized that it was the prairie section, the section between the foothills of the Rocky mountains and the head of the Great Lakes, which would be the profitable portion of the line, and they felt that if, in the summer season, they could bring their freight and a great many of their passengers to Fort William and carry them down over the lakes to their connection with the Grand Trunk railway at Sarnia, it would be much more profitable to them, and that if they could get a connection at North Bay so as to bring their all-rail traffic down to the junction with the Grand Trunk there, and in this way carry the produce of the West over the Grand Trunk to the Grand Trunk ports, it would be more advantageous to the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific. But the Government, led by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), insisted from the very commencement that the road must be carried right through to Moncton, where it would join the Intercolonial and over which the traffic could be distributed to the ports of the Maritime Provinces. That was regarded as onerous by the Grand Trunk Pacific, but the Government insisted, and rightly insisted, upon it.

One could very well understand that, if the Grand Trunk Pacific could be let out of this bargain as far as the line east of Winnipeg is concerned, if they could get many millions of dollars under expropriation for their terminals at Fort William and still be allowed to use the line as far east as Fort William and to abandon all idea of operating the main line between Winnipeg and Moncton, that proposition might commend itself to the Grand Trunk Pacific and enable them to carry out the ideas which they entertained at the commencement, but which the late Government prevented them from carrying into effect. Therefore, apart from the Grand Trunk Pacific, there is involved the important question of having a transcontinental line operated by one company carrying the traffic between the East and the West, between the Atlantic and the Pacific, that company operating all parts of that line and developing, as a great transcontinental railway company can develop, the country through which it passes. Speaking for the Maritime Provinces, I desire to enter my most earnest protest against any proposition that will lead the Grand Trunk Pacific to believe that it may be released from the operation of the eastern section of the Transcontinental. That is what this proposition is looking to, that is, for the Government to expropriate the line between Lake Superior Junction and Fort William, to become the owner of it, and then with what justice, with what reason—

Mr. COCHRANE: Should we not be the owner of it when we own the other line?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Not at all.

Mr. COCHRANE: I am glad the country knows that.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There is not the slightest reason why we should be the owner of it. The Government does not own a single branch of the Transcontinental railway anywhere; it owns no branch betweeen Ottawa and the Transcontinental, between Montreal and the Transcontinental, nor between St. John and the Transcontinental. The idea which the late Government had in view was to construct one main line that was to be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific for a period of fifty years. That company were to become the operators of the line, and an Act passed at the time gave them power to construct branch lines and also provided what should be done with the branch lines in case at the end of the fifty years the Government should take over the operation of the main line. That was all clearly provided for; but let the Government under the power granted by this legislation take over the line between Superior Junction and Fort William, and, I ask, with what justice or reason could the Grand Trunk Pacific be compelled to enter upon the operation of the main line?

My hon. friend says that there is no power conveyed in the Act to determine when the line is completed. I must confess that I have heard many extraordinary statements made in this House, although not by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, who says so few things that he is not apt to say anything extraordinary. He is careful and uses good judgment; but he is led astray to-day, and he makes a most extraordinary statement when he says that the provision in section 7 of the Act of 1903, which says that any question as to the work—

Mr. COCHRANE: As to the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes—that any question as to the work in regard to which the engineers differ shall be left to arbitration, applies to all matters during construction, but has no application to the question of the completion of the line. In other words, up to fifteen minutes before the last bit of ballast is put in, the engineers have everything to do with the question whether the line is built right up to the specifications or not; but at the last minute, when the last shovelful or the last carload of ballast is put in, the jurisdiction of the engineers and the third arbitrator, whom they are to appoint, absolutely ceases, and they have no power to say whether the road has been built according to the specifications or not. I would not have thought it possible, but for the respect that I have for the good judgment of my hon. friend the minister, for me to believe that any gentleman of good judgment would make a statement like that in this House. As I said the other day, take the case of a man building a house, which is a matter of large importance, the owner has his architect, and the contractor has his architect to look after the work. It is provided that the house must be built according to the specifications agreed upon; that the work must be done under the joint supervision of the two architects and upon their joint inspection and joint acceptance, and that if there shall arise between the two architects any question as to the work upon which they cannot agree, they shall choose a third arbitrator, and if they fail to choose one, he shall be chosen by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Surely, if the question arose between the two architects whether the house were entirely completed according to the specifications or not, that would be a case for calling in a third arbitrator to determine that question.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Is there not a very well-decided case on record in Hudson on building contracts, that the power given to arbitrators to determine whether or not work done is done in accordance with the specifications does not cover the power to determine whether or not it is completed? There is a very clear distinction between the work and the completion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not think so, and I doubt very much if my hon. friend can produce authority to that effect.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There are some legal men in this country who probably would be almost if not quite as capable of forming an opinion upon this as even my hon. friend, and who do not entertain the same view as he does.

Mr. PUGSLEY: During my professional career, I have always had great respect for the opinion of others, and I have often found that their opinions have prevailed; but still all that I can do is to state my own view—that is what I have always endeavoured to do in discussing legal propositions—and then leave it to the court to determine whether my view is correct or not. I would be surprised to find that any court or any lawyer of high standing would determine that, where a question of having the work done according to the specifications arises, and all authority is given to the engineers as to supervision, inspection and acceptance and the provision as to what shall be done in case of a difference shall have to do with everything in connection with the work up to the completion of it, and yet have nothing to do with the completion. That which has led the Minister of Railways astray, I think, is that he thinks of a railway as different from an ordinary work. For instance, a house, he would say, is completed when it is built according to the specifications, and nothing further need be done; but a railway is constantly expanding and new work will be required, and therefore, according to his view, a railway can never be said to be "completed" in the sense in which a house is "completed." But you must read the word in connection with the specifications. When the work is done according to the specifications, that work is "completed" under the terms of the contract. Suppose that the specifications did not provide for water-tanks. If the Government builds the road according to the specifications and without water-tanks, that road is "completed" under the contract, and if the company wants water-tanks they must put them in themselves. The word "completed" in section 20 of the Act means completed in accordance with the specifications.

Now, the Act provides that when the road is completed the company shall be called upon to enter into the lease. That means, it seems to me, as clearly as words can make it, when the contract is completed according to specifications.

Mr. COCHRANE: Where is the clause authorizing the building of the shops at all?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand that the specifications provide for the building of the shops.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, if that is the case, I think the hon. gentleman should show that everything required by the specifications has been done—that the grades, the curves, the workshops, the terminals, are made according to the specifications—and his engineer would be able to say that the road is "completed."

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If the specifications left out a bridge, would the same result follow?

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is putting a very extreme case.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: You have to test the argument by these extreme cases.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It would not be a railway if the bridge were left out. In a case like that, I think the course would be to dismiss both engineers and try to get out of the difficulty as best you could. But the point I have sought to make, and it may be that I am entirely wrong through being very stupid—is that it seems absolutely clear to me that under the statute "completion" of the line, means completion according to the specifications. Let me use again the illustration I gave the other day: Suppose the Minister of Railways had given the company a subsidy to be paid on the completion of its line of railway, specifications being provided. Surely, if the road is not perfect, yet, when the specifications are complied with the minister could not refuse to pay that subsidy. He pays the subsidy when his engineer reports that the specifications have been complied with. That is what is meant by the "completion" of the railway.

Let me add just a word before I resume my seat, to emphasize in the strongest way possible, the mistake that this Government, in my opinion, is making, in not asking the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to enter upon the temporary operation of this line pending the completion of the entire road in accordance with the specifications. I charge the Minister of Railways with not treating this House fairly, with not treating the country fairly. Two years ago I brought this matter up and called his attention, and the attention of the Prime Minister, to the fact that the late president of the road, Mr. Hays, had made an offer to the Government to take over the road as the different portions were completed and to operate the line, providing the necessary rolling stock, upon a basis of which no one could complain. Let me repeat it again, in view of this extraordinary legislation, so that no one can forget it. The offer was that they would put on their own rolling stock; they would operate the line under Government supervision; the whole business should be subject to the audit of the Government, and if there was any profit from the operation that profit should be handed over to the treasury of the country, and if there was a deficit, the amount should be added to the capital account on which the company would pay interest as it was to pay interest on the whole cost of the line. I called the attention of the minister to this offer, and he stated in this House that he would take the matter up with the Grand Trunk Pacific and see if they were still willing to enter into an agreement of that kind, and inform the House at a later date. Up to this moment he has not made any statement to this House that the Grand Trunk Pacific had been approached with a view to entering upon the operation of the completed portions of the line upon these terms. And, though this committee has no information that there has been any effort to get the Grand Trunk Pacific to enter upon the temporary operation of the line, pending its entire completion, when they will be obliged to enter into the formal lease, the minister comes here to-day and asks authority to involve this country in an expenditure of many millions for rolling stock to enable the Government to operate the line, and to incur an expenditure of many millions further to acquire the road between Superior Junction and Fort William, with all the vast works connected with it, including the great elevators which the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company have constructed at Fort William. The proposition is entirely indefensible, and I think the country will not approve of it when an opportunity is given them to express their opinion.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not going to enter into the legal phases of this case; I should get lost if I tried it; for when the lawyers themselves disagree, a layman would get hopelessly muddled in the argument. But I do say that any business man reading this section will say that there was provision for the settlement of difficulties as to construction, not only during the progress of the work, but as to completion as well. The question whether the road is "completed" or not, is simply a question whether it is completed under the agreement. On that we have a difference of opinion. I contend the road is not completed under the agreement. The Prime Minister takes a different view from that which, in his absence, was presented to the House the other day. If it were simply a lease for temporary operation by the Government of this branch line in connection with the through line, I do not know that I should object. But we were told the other day, or the House was led to believe, that the expropriation was to be used as a weapon against the Grand Trunk Pacific to compel them to do certain things. That is the wrong attitude in which to approach the company on this great question; for this is not a small question, but one affecting the whole nation. The Minister of Railways to-day rather gives intimation that it is the intention of the Government to buy this road.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, I said it was not in the interest of the country. I want to treat my hon. friend fairly, and I hope he will accept what I say.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Mr. GRAHAM: I am going to put my own construction on what the hon. minister said. I am not changing his statement, but only giving what I infer from his statement. The Minister of Railways says that it would be in the interests of the country if the Government owned this branch line as well as the through line; I infer, therefore, that he is in favour of purchasing it. According to my understanding of what the Solicitor General has said, this proposed legislation gives the Government the power to do what the Minister of Railways says it would be a good thing to do. This would seem to embrace a much larger power than that referred to by my right hon. friend, which includes merely the operation by the Government for a time of the whole line, including that branch line. The investment of perhaps $30,000,000 in the purchase of this line, and of an enormous sum in the taking over of terminals, certainly should not be made until the approval of Parliament is obtained, and some provision to this effect should be inserted in this proposed legislation.

Mr. COCHRANE: Supposing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company would not accept a lease, and the wheat crop were ready to be carried, would it be in the interests of the country that there should be no way of overcoming that difficulty? I do not think that there will be any trouble, but if there should be when Parliament is not in session, we would have no power to take action.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Prime Minister rather takes the view that power to expropriate is not conferred under this Act, and if that view should prevail I would not have any objection to make. But there seems to be a possibility that the Government may exercise that power by buying out the entire line and all terminals, and investing a large amount of additional capital in this great enterprise; then they will be compelled to operate or to make some arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. If it is made clear that under this statute power to expropriate is not given, I shall have no objection to the proposed legislation, but I do seriously object if the Government is to be given power to invest another $30,000,000 or $50,000,000 in property which includes terminal elevators belonging to another company.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think it would be reasonable to suppose that, having in view the present condition of the money markets of the world, the Government would not be very much disposed to incur an expenditure of $30,000,000 or $50,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring this line. It is not necessary to go into the question of what would have been wise in the first instance, although there is a great deal to be said in favour of the view that the line should have been owned by the Government, inasmuch as the Government owned the line from Winnipeg to Moncton. There has been a good deal of discussion in regard to the operation of the branch lines of the Intercolonial by the same company, and possibly some of those considerations might have forcible application to what has been urged here. It is not worth while to enter into a discussion of a legal question which this committee cannot settle. My hon. friend the member for St. John city (Mr. Pugsley), whose opinion on any legal subject is entitled to a great deal of respect, has expressed an opinion, but we are not advised that the view which he has expressed is correct. I would point out to him that one cannot afford to be too sure of these things. I have no doubt that my hon. friend was equally cocksure with regard to the effect of the implementing clause; but the Privy Council told him that he was wrong.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I venture to say that my hon. friend will not find anywhere an expression of opinion on my part contrary to the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend was a member of the Government of that day.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Not when the contract was entered into.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, but when the contract was being acted on, and when the Government put the case before the Privy Council for decision. It is with some surprise that I learn that the hon. gentleman differed from his colleagues in his view of what that contract meant. If that is what he intends to convey, I was never aware of it before. The late Administration were very sure of their ground, but they found that they were mistaken, and their mistake has cost the country a great many millions of dollars. We want to avoid mistakes of that kind, so far as possible; therefore we do not profess to be so cocksure on these questions of legal construction as my hon. friend the member for St. John City professes to be. What the Government desires is that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company shall fulfil the conditions of the contract and statutes made and passed in 1903-4. We have urged and will urge that upon them, and I have no reason to believe at the present time that any serious controversy will arise. If any controversy does arise, we will endeavour to come to Parliament with any proposals that the public interest demand. After all, there is very little of this legislation that was not contained in the legislation of last year, which provided for the operation of this road by the Governmeent until the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should accept a lease and undertake its operation. That Act was passed without dissent, and we are now asking that in case it should become necessary to operate the road during any such period as has been suggested, we should also have power to make suitable arrangements for the operation by the Government of the branch line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: You are asking much more than that.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What else?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: To acquire.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: To lease, or otherwise acquire. I have not yet had impressed upon me the detriment to the public interest which would result from that. The hon. member for St. John City has alluded to the interests of the Maritime Provinces. I suppose those interests would appeal to me as much as they would to him, and I fail to see why the interests of the maritime provinces would not be thoroughly safeguarded if the Government should also acquire the line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William. In what way would the public interest of any part of this country be detrimentally affected by the carrying out of even that proposal? We have not that proposal in mind; we desire simply to make provision for temporary operation of the whole eastern division, including this branch line, until the Grand Trunk Pacific, under the terms of its contract and agreement shall accept the lease and take over the operation of the road. We think this legislation is necessary because it would be manifestly to the utter detriment of the public interest that a road upon which nearly $200,000,000 has been expended should remain idle for any considerable period of time after it is clearly capable of operation in the interest of the public. That is all that we desire; to guard against that is all that this legislation is intended for.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But we want to know exactly what is meant. We were told a moment ago by the Minister of Railways – and it is repeated by the Prime Minister —that the object of this legislation is simply to enable the Government to operate the road pending the negotiation with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the Government's taking over the operation. If that be the object, we know where we are. But what I point out to my hon. friend is that he is asking much more than this power to operate; he is asking the power to acquire. If the object of the legislation is simply to permit an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company providing for the operation of the road pending the settlement of their difficulty, this Bill may be sufficient. But if the ultimate object —I will not use the word " concealed," but I might—is to permit the Government to acquire the road permanently under the plea that it would be better for the country to do so, then this Bill would be insufficient. In the first place, we might say that the object is to have a temporary arrangement for the leasing of the road for a limited period. There would be no question of coming back to Parliament for ratification in that case. But if the object be to acquire the road and acquire it permanently, then I contend that this ought to be supplemented by the necessity of the Government coming to Parliament for ratification of such an agreement. That is a question not of policy but of how this statute is to be drafted.

Mr. OLIVER: As I read this Bill and as I have listened to the remarks upon it and the various explanations that have been given regarding it, I can only conclude that it is a Bill to ask Parliament to give the Government authority to do as it pleases in regard to a matter of the highest and greatest importance to the welfare of this country. I do not think that the circumstances are such that it would be to the benefit of the country that that authority should be given. I do not think it is in the best interests of the country that the authority has been asked. If the explanation given by the Prime Minister a few moments ago is correct, the Bill is then most unfortunately worded. If the intention was that this Bill should give the Government power to operate the road to lake Superior until a permanent arrangement is made with the Grand Trunk Pacific to operate it, the Bill should have said so. But it says the direct opposite, it provides absolutely for the leasing of the branch or that it be otherwise acquired. And, as has been fully and very definitely explained to us by the Solicitor General, that meant the right to expropriate. He went on to speak of expropriating the lease as well as expropriating the road, so there can be no question whatever as to the explanation given to us by the Solicitor General.

Mr. COCHRANE: Expropriate what lease?

Mr. OLIVER: He said we are taking power so that if there is a lease we can expropriate that lease as well as expropriate the road.

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine that applies to terminals.

Mr. OLIVER: What ever it applies to I remember he used those words. Therefore the explanation given us by the Solicitor General is that the intention of the Government is to take power to own this road if it so pleases, whereas the explanation given by the Prime Minister is that that is not the intention of the Government, but merely that the Government shall have authority to operate the road during a certain intervening period.

Mr. COCHRANE: You will admit that if we are to run the balance of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg we should not be in a position that we could not run to Fort William, especially when the wheat is being moved.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We are perfectly willing to meet the wishes of my right hon. friend. We have no such ulterior motive as he seems to have in his mind, and we are willing to make it clear that if we should acquire the road by purchase or expropriation we must come back to Parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I suppose my right hon. friend's idea is that the word " expenditure " might include the purchase price of the road.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The word " acquire " certainly means purchase.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It would depend not on that, but on the word "expenditure" in subsection 7. I suppose my hon. friend's argument is that under subsection 4 we might acquire and under subsection 7 we might pay. We did not intend that, and I am willing to make that plain.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why not leave out the expression " or by other means acquire " ?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I would be willing to make the change suggested by my hon. friend, and to say plainly that if we do anything else we must come back to Parliament.

Mr. OLIVER: I had in mind the query of the Prime Minister as to what public interest is going to be affected by the action the Government proposes to take. In the present condition of finances throughout the world, where immense amounts of money have been invested in various enterprises, any legislation that has in it an element of uncertainty as to its ultimate effect, which interferes in any direct or indirect manner with any such enterprise, must have a serious and detrimental effect on the financial situation generally, but more particularly on that particular enterprise. If it is the intention of the Government of Canada to take over this road, even in the manner proposed by the Prime Minister, it still remains the intention of the Government of Canada to take over the operation of the line of railway between Winnipeg and lake Superior, to take that portion out of the hands of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. No such declaration can be made, no such statement can go forward, without having a most seriously detrimental effect upon the securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific, because it is thoroughly known that the successful operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific system depends in large measure upon the control by that company of its outlet to lake Superior by reason of its ownership of the terminals and of the line, and of its arrangement for traffic over the part of the line that belongs to the Government. So I say that when we put on our statute-book legislation which, even as amended by the Prime Minister, declares the exclusion of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company from the operation of that section of their system, or of their system and ours, we thereby discredit their enterprise; and by interfering with the successful operation of that enterprise we discredit it not only with those who have invested their money in it but with investors in Canadian securities generally. Because if this Government of Canada and this Parliament of Canada are able and minded to so interfere with the operations of one great enterprise in Canada so they may be minded at some other time or on some other occasion to interfere with some other great enterprise in Canada. I submit that this is a feature of the case that should be given greater consideration than it has been given up to the present time.

I repeat for the purpose of emphasizing it, that the whole Grand Trunk Pacific Railway system, from the Red river to the Pacific ocean, depends for its successful operation upon the control by that system of the outlet to lake Superior.

Mr. COCHRANE: How could they get through without running over the Transcontinental?

Mr. OLIVER: And this Government proposes to put legislation through this House to give the Government authority to exclude the Grand Trunk Pacific from the operation of that section of the road. In answer to my hon. friend's question, " how can the Grand Trunk Pacific get to lake Superior without running over the Transcontinental?" I agree that they cannot get to lake Superior unless they run over that road. But let me call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that an essential part of the arrangement in regard to the construction of the road from Winnipeg to Moncton is that any railroad company is entitled to claim running rights over that road, or any part of it, on terms the limitations of which are laid down in the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE: That was only in case the Grand Trunk Pacific took a lease, under the Act, to run the road.

Mr. OLIVER: I quite appreciate that.

Mr. COCHRANE: Then there would be no dispute. If they take that, we are quite willing.

Mr. PUGSLEY: They have the right to take that under the Act of 1903-4. The Act gives them the power to take temporarily the completed portions.

Mr. COCHRANE: They must take the bitter with the sweet.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not learned in the law and am not prepared to give an opinion as to this or that section, but I know and everybody knows that it was an essential consideration put forward at the time of the passing of the Grand Trunk Pacific Act that the railway to be constructed under that Act should be for the use of any railroad company that saw fit to use it. And I say that for this Government to ignore that fundamental principle and say: Because we have the authority to ignore it we will ignore it, would be just the same as the proposal to expropriate the property from lake Superior Junction to the lake front, and would be so considered by those who have invested their money in the enterprise and by other investors as well; and would be properly so considered. It would be an absolute breach of faith on the part of the Government in dealing with a great enterprise with which the welfare and prosperity of this country is so essentially bound up. There is no necessity at all for the terms of this Bill as it stands or as it is proposed to be amended by the Prime Minister. If the object to be achieved is merely that the Government shall have a fair opportunity to operate the Transcontinental between Winnipeg and Moncton, and needs this piece of road in order to facilitate that operation, the very foundation of the agreement between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific as to the operation of the Transcontinental contemplated the joint use of those tracks, in case of necessity, by more than one railway company. All that the Government requires to do is to take power to lease running rights from the Grand Trunk Pacific or, if you like, to take power to expropriate running rights over that road so that they would have the same opportunity as the Grand Trunk Pacific itself of using those tracks to get to the lake front for such business as they have to handle.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Suppose the Grand Trunk Pacific was not operating the Superior Junction branch at all and that it became necessary for the Crown to operate the road from Winnipeg to the head of the lakes. Does not this give them that power?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. But the suggestion I have made also gives them the same opportunity, and does not interfere with the Grand Trunk's continuing the operation that it is now carrying on.

Mr. BENNETT: This does not interfere with their present operation.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, it does. If I read the English language correctly this gives the Government the right to acquire, and if it gives them the right to acquire it also gives them the right to exclude the company from whom it acquires that right. It gives the Government the right to exclude the Grand Trunk Pacific from the profitable and useful operation of this branch line, which is their property, and from the profitable and useful operation of the road between Lake Superior Junction and Winnipeg. It is against this evident intention to exclude the Grand Trunk Pacific from that operation that I protest most. I have no fault to find with the Government for undertaking to operate the Transcontinental between Winnipeg and Quebec during the intermediate period. I have no fault to find with the Government for taking authority to expropriate, if they like, those rights and to operate this branch jointly with the Grand Trunk Pacific. But I take every objection to this Government's taking such action as will exclude the Grand Trunk Pacific from the profitable operation of the line between lake Superior and Fort William, which is the Grand Trunk Pacific's own property. I can only repeat that it is an interference with the operation of a great railway system upon whose successful operation depends in a large measure the welfare and prosperity of our whole western country. I cannot think that the Government is well informed in undertaking to put such legislation on the statute book.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think my hon. friend is unnecessarily alarmed. The Government is just as anxious to preserve the stability of Grand Trunk Pacific securities and the credit of the country generally as the hon. gentleman or anybody else could possibly be. We shall have all those considerations thoroughly in mind in connection with any arrangements that we make with the company. Further than that, we have given very careful consideration to the interests of the western provinces of Canada with which this railway system is so closely concerned, and the House may be assured that in any arrangements we may make we shall have the most careful regard for the interests of those provinces.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No one supposes that the Government has any sinister intention against the company; far from it. But the fact pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), that this legislation may have the effect of injuriously affecting the credit of the Grand Trunk Pacific securities, and the arguments that he has brought forward in support of his contention, are certainly entitled to some consideration. It seems to me that there is great force in the views he has presented and in the manner in which he has presented them. If this Bill were simply to say that the Government, pending negotiations with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, shall have power to operate the road, there would be no objection at all. But unfortunately the language which was used the other day led one to believe that there was something beyond that. We have the word of the Solicitor General that the Government wanted a weapon—and he used the word two or three times—when they came to deal with the company. Now, if the Government want a weapon, it is because they want to compel the company to do something it does not want to do. Again, the Government is seeking not only power to operate the road, but power to lease the road permanently or temporarily.

My right hon. friend has submitted an amendment which does not altogether satisfy me. I have one which I shall submit to him and which, if it does not prove acceptable, he can take into consideration. I would suggest that a further clause be added to the Bill to the following effect:

Any contract for a permanent lease of the said line, or the acquisition of the same, shall be subject to the ratification of Parliament.

If there is a contract providing only for a temporary arrangement, there is no necessity for coming to Parliament; but if it is in the nature of a permanent acquisition, I think it should be submitted to Parliament for ratification.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There is no objection to the idea of ratification by Parliament. But the expression "a permanent lease" is not a legal expression, nor do I know precisely what construction would be placed upon it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If you had a lease for fifty years it would be a permanent lease.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Suppose it were for ten years? I would like to know just what that means. If my right hon. friend will send it to me I will consider it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Say a lease pending the completion of the line.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If my right hon. friend will send his amendment to me I will endeavour to work it out.

At one o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

135½

Mr. COCHRANE: In reference to the Bill that we were discussing when the House rose, I beg to move:

That the Bill be amended by adding thereto subsection 8, as follows:

8. Any contract for the lease of the said Lake Superior branch for a term of four or five years or for the acquisition of the same shall be subject to the ratification of Parliament.

Mr. GRAHAM: That meets my views.

Mr. OLIVER: The amendment as worded still leaves the idea that the Grand Trunk Pacific is to be excluded from the operation of this branch. I think that the purpose of the Government would be served quite as well if such words were used as would not seem to exclude or would not be intended to exclude the Grand Trunk Pacific from the operation of the branch. I would urge that the operation be one of joint operation instead of one of exclusive operation as against the present proprietor of the road.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: That would be covered by the conditions of the lease. I have been comparing this section with other similar sections, and I think it is in terms such as are used in cases of that kind. I think the expression "lease or acquire" will meet the idea that the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. OLIVER: That will be entirely satisfactory to me, but I would like to have a word from the Minister of Railways or from the Prime Minister that that was what the Government had in mind.

Mr. COCHRANE: If we wanted to block the Grand Trunk Pacific from going down to lake Superior, we could do so, because we could make unreasonable terms and block the company in many ways; but that is not the desire of the Government. We want to work in harmony with the Grand Trunk Pacific in order to get business.

Mr. GRAHAM: You want their business in the West?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This amendment suits me.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported as amended and amendments concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in committee on Bill No. 110, to amend the Dominion Elections Act—Mr. Doherty; Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

On section 4—hours of polling extended —8 a.m. to 6 p.m.:

Mr. PROULX: I beg to move:

That this Bill be amended by adding as section 1 the following, and by changing the numbering of section 1 and the following sections accordingly:

1. Section 70 of the Dominion Elections Act, chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(h) Any person during the time he is a director of or holds, either directly or indirectly, a controlling interest in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement, expressed or implied, or any unsatisfied claim arising therefrom, with or for or against the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for or against any of the officers of the Government of Canada for which any public money of Canada is to be paid."

Clause (d) of section 70 of the Dominion Elections Act says:

Every person directly or indirectly, alone or with any other person, by himself or by interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing any contract or agreement expressed or implied with or for the Government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, during the time he is so holding, or enjoying, undertaking or executing.

When this Act was passed, business was not carried on as extensively by means of joint stock companies as it is now. This Act was passed for the purpose of securing as much as possible the independence of candidates from the Administration of the day. There is an Act on the statute-book to secure the independence of members of the Senate and of this House; but a person, by putting his business in the form of an corporated company and getting a few nominal directors appointed, although he still owns the majority of the stock, can contract with and sell extensively to the Government, as has been done since the beginning of this war. If a private person cannot have a contract expressed or implied with the Government for the smallest amount, why should a person who holds the majority of the stock of a company and who gets big contracts from the Government, be eligible as a candidate for membership in this House? If we want to secure the independence of the candidate, we must amend the Act in the way which I have indicated by my amendment. I presented a Bill to this House some time ago to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons, and I hope it will become law later on; but the first requisite will be to secure the independence of the candidate. I have taken advantage of the Bill presented by the minister to move as an amendment my Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act. I hope the Government will accept my amendment. It is only fair, I think—especially at this time when the Government is purchasing, sometimes without tender, such great supplies of goods—that the independence of candidates, as well as the public interest, should be protected. I do not wish to dilate on this matter; the amendment speaks for itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have great pleasure in supporting the amendment. Unless we are to wipe out the Independence of Parliament Act altogether, I think this amendment is desirable. A leading shareholder in an incorporated company, that has a contract with the Government, may be in exactly the same position to all intents and purposes, so far as his interest is concerned, as if that contract were with him individually.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The amendment as proposed operates against any director.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand it is against any shareholder holding a controlling interest.

Mr. BENNETT: And any director also. There are in this House, and have been ever since 1867, many men who are directors of companies having contracts with the Government. The hon. gentleman surely does not intend it to apply against all these men?

Mr. PUGSLEY: If he is a director of the company, I think he should be regarded as the same as one having a controlling interest. The fact of his being a director implies that he has something to do with the management of the company.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Take the case of the Senate and the banks.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: But this applies to one who is a candidate only.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is a singular provision that under the Independence of Parliament Act the disqualification applies if the company has a contract for the construction of a public work. I do not know that this is generally known for it is a well-known fact that there are members of this Parliament who are large shareholders in, officers of, and, in at least one case, I believe, president of companies which have contracts with the Government for the construction of public works. It is a singular thing that when Parliament passed the Independence of Parliament Act it provided that shareholders in companies having ordinary contracts with the Government should not be disqualified, but that this should not apply to shareholders of companies having contracts for the construction of public works. To-day a member of this House who is a shareholder in an incorporated company having a contract for the construction of a public work is disqualified, while a senator who is in that position is liable to a penalty of $200 a day. Yet we know there are gentlemen in this House and in the Senate—at least such is my information—who are in that position.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What is the position?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Senator Curry is one.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was not asking for the names, but what is the position?

Mr. PUGSLEY: If a man is a shareholder in a company having a contract for the construction of a public work he is disqualified from holding a seat in this House, or if he sits in the Senate he is liable to a penalty of $200 a day. In my own constituency, the firm of Rhodes, Curry & Company, of which, I believe, Senator Curry, a most worthy man, an honour to the whole country, is president, has a contract in my own constituency for the erection of a post office involving a sum of perhaps $300,000 or $400,000. I do not suppose he is aware of the fact that there is such a provision in the statute. It is certainly anomalous.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What statute?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: The effect of the proposed amendment would be very far-reaching. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), for instance, is director of a newspaper. I do not know that it is very profitable. If that newspaper gets a little advertising from the Government, that would disqualify him for being a candidate.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That would not be a contract for the construction of a public work.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but I speak of the effect of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY: But suppose the hon. gentleman owned the newspaper in his own right, his position probably would not be very different from what it is—I am assuming that he owns the company; but of course, he can speak for himself as to that. I call attention to section 19 of the Act:

> This Act shall not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons by reason of his being,—
>
> (a) a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement with the Government of Canada, except any company which undertakes a contract for the building of any public work.

Now, with regard to the Senate, section 20 provides:

> If any person, who is a member of the Senate, knowingly and wilfully becomes a party to or concerned in any such contract, he shall forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars for each and every day during which he continues to be such party or so concerned.

Then, subsection 4:

> This section shall not render any senator liable for such penalties, by reason of this being a shareholder in any incorporated company, having a contract or agreement with the Government of Canada, except any company which undertakes a contract for the building of any public work.

I do not suppose that ten per cent of the people—I venture to say, not ten per cent of the members of this House or of the Senate—are aware of that exception. I am sure that the gentlemen whom I suppose we all have in mind, and who occupy high positions, would not knowingly do anything contrary to the law. But I am confident that unwittingly they are violating the law.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think that was inserted in the statute when the Canadian Pacific railway was first in contemplation, with a view to preventing any person interested in that company being a member of Parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY: But it is made general in its application.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes, but I think that was the occasion of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think the amendment of my hon. friend from Prescott ought to carry, or else we ought to amend the Act in another particular and make it uniform. It seems absurd, for instance, that a man like my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) whose company might have a contract for hundreds of thousands of dollars for supplies—

Mr. STANFIELD: All through now.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, the hon. gentleman can take a more disinterested view. I say it is absurd that the company of which a member of Parliament is a member should be disqualified because his company has a contract for $10,000, $20,000 or $100,000 to build a public work, yet he would not be disqualified if the contract were for supplying the Government with lumber or any kind of material, even though the amount might be very much greater.

I think we should make the statute uniform; either adopt the amendment of my hon. friend, or strike out the whole section. I think it would be wise to adopt the amendment; certainly such a provision is desirable in the case of a shareholder who has a large, substantial or controlling interest in the company.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Would you make it apply to every director?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not see why not.

Mr. BENNETT: Many of us are directors representing absent shareholders in an old company; it is merely a nominal position.

Mr. PROULX: A director usually has large interests in the company; even if he has not a controlling interest, he may be induced to come to Parliament to act in the interests of his company. I do not want to reach the ordinary shareholder by this legislation, but I think that a company in which a member of Parliament has a controlling interest should be debarred from contracting with the Government, and that if such company does contract with the Government, no director or person having a controlling interest in it should be enabled to become a member of this House. In the Bill which I presented to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, I added to the exception respecting the building of a public work, the following:

And except any company of which he is a director or in which he holds, directly or indirectly, a controlling interest.

I hope that the Government will adopt this Bill after they have accepted the amendment which I have proposed to the Dominion Elections Act. I agree with the hon. member for St. John city that if the Government do not want to accept my amendment, they should wipe out the section at present on the statute book with respect to the standing of a person who is interested in a company which undertakes a contract for the building of a public work. There is not as great danger of abuse in permitting a company in which a member of the Senate or of the House of Commons is a shareholder to contract with the Government for a public work, because most of these contracts are obtained by calling for tenders, whilst many ordinary contracts are obtained without calling for tenders, as was the case during the first months of the war. I think the hon. member for Colchester can corroborate what I have said in this respect; he was concerned in a large contract with the Government.

Mr. STANFIELD: And gave good value, too.

Mr. PROULX: I do not doubt it, but I think that all persons should be on an equal footing. If the Government would like to have a certain man as candidate in a certain county, they might offer a large contract to the company of which he is a shareholder, and the candidate might make enough out of that contract to pay his election expenses. If elected, he would not be independent; he would be tied to the Government. The law which is on the statute book to-day was passed to prevent this, but it does not go far enough, and the object of the proposed amendment is to secure the independence of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate.

Mr. STANFIELD: The company of which I am president, and which bears my own name—a company of which I am proud—during last year sold goods to the Militia Department. The first order was given while I was in England, and I knew nothing about it until I arrived home. If this Bill becomes law, I as president of that company cannot be a candidate for election to the House of Commons, and I have several good friends on the other side of the House who would be very sorry not to see me here. Any amendment of this kind would apply to the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. Loggie); his company sold goods to the late Government, and if his party returns to power he will expect to do a little more business with the Government. I appeal to the good judgment of the committee, therefore, not to pass this proposed amendment; perhaps the law could be amended in some other way that would be just as good.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If the Government had received as good value from all the contractors as they received from the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield), we would be in a better condition than we are at the present time. I am sure that my hon. friend gave good value, but unforé tunately the same cannot be said of all contractors. But these arguments are not to the point. I am one of those who would be very sorry not to see my hon. friend in the House; if the Tories are successful in electing a candidate in Colchester, I do not want to see any other Tory than my hon. friend; but I hope that a Grit will be in his place next time. The law of the independence of Parliament is a very strict one: men have been disqualified here, because unknowingly and unwittingly, they had a contract with the Government which was a mere bagatelle. I remember the case of Mr. Harry Corby, who in 1891 found that he was disqualified to sit in the House because, unknown to himself, he had been a contractor with the Government. In this country, as in England, the law of the independence of Parliament has been very strictly carried out. The hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Proulx) very properly says that if a man can be disqualified for having with the Government a contract which is a mere bagatelle, surely a man who has a controlling interest in a large company ought to be disqualified also.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The proposal of the hon member for Prescott has certain merits which the committee ought to consider very carefully. The extreme case which he very properly puts before the committee is where a man who is interested in a certain business which he has been carrying on in his own name sees fit to incorporate himself, as it were, and to change his status in that way. The hon. member very properly argues that contracts between such a company and the Government are very much the same as contracts between the Government and the person who thus puts himself in the form of an incorporated company. But there is something to be said for the other side of the case. Every one realizes that during the past twenty-five or thirty years there has been a tendency more and more to carry on the business of the country by means of incorporated companies. The best business ability and the best enterprise of the country are frequently represented by persons who have considerable interest in such companies and who, on account of their ability, may be selected to be members of the board of directors.

The question would be whether or not it is desirable in the public interest that all persons of that type and possessing that interest, which might not be a very great one, in an incorporated company, should be excluded from representing the people in this House, or from becoming members of the Senate. I think that side of the case would demand the consideration of Parliament; and therefore I would suggest that the amendment be allowed to stand until it has received a little more attention on the part of the Minister of Justice and his colleagues in the Government, and that we should proceed in the meantime to consider the other sections of the Bill.

Mr. MARCIL: I think it is my duty to call attention to a case that happened in my own experience. One of my opponents was nominated against me while he had a contract with the Intercolonial. I produced the contract to the returning officer and filed a protest. But I was put to the whole trouble of an election campaign while the man had a running contract with the Intercolonial Railway for the supply of ties. I think there should be something in the law that when a man is actually a contractor and the contract can be produced, some means should be taken to prevent that man from being nominated. In my case there seemed to be a loophole of some kind, and we had all the trouble of a campaign, although the man was not competent to be elected.

Mr. DOHERTY: No doubt it would be desirable if that matter could be determined then and there. But the difficulty that would arise is that in order to obtain that end the returning officer would have to be empowered to determine the question whether a man nominated was a qualified candidate. There might be such absolutely simple cases as the hon. gentleman suggests, but in many cases the determination of the eligibility of a candidate would involve very considerable investigating.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Might not an oath be required of the candidate that he was qualified to be a candidate? For instance, if he were a postmaster he would not be able to take the oath.

Mr. DOHERTY: That suggestion, no doubt, has merit; but I would point out that an affidavit by any person that he was a qualified candidate would involve his swearing not only to questions of fact but to questions of law. If he simply swore to his interpretation of the law he could not be convicted of perjury. Of course, if all of the causes for disqualification were set out in the affidavit and he had to swear only to questions of fact, then if he made a misstatement in his affidavit he could be subsequently proceeded against for perjury.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think in the New Brunswick statute they have such a provision.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Has the hon. member for Prescott looked up legislation in other countries to see if there is any of the character which he proposes?

Mr. PROULX: No, I have not searched the legislation of any other country; but it struck me that if the purpose of the Act was to secure the independence of members of this House and of the Senate, and of all candidates, as business is carried on nowadays very largely by means of companies, we should make some effort to reach those who control an interest in ary company having a contract with the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose the object of the Independence of Parliament Act is to make it secure that any dealing a member may have with the Government will not influence him as a member of the House. Under modern conditions it is possible that the entire Act should be revised. As has been pointed out, the business of the country is largely carried on by companies. Men group themselves together instead of acting singly as in years gone by. If this suggestion were carried out to its ultimate conclusion it would exclude every man who is a director or owns a large number of shares in a company. This would exclude some of the very best men in Canada from taking any part in public life. Ten men would be excluded under present business conditions to one who was excluded under former conditions when business was carried on individually. Let us take an example. My hon. friend fom Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was mentioned. There are others who are in the same position. The reading room would not be complete without certain newspapers; that is admitted by every person; yet not a single copy of a newspaper could be subscribed for if the proprietor of that paper or a man holding stock in the company happened to sit in the House. Now, that is not the intention of this legislation. That would be absurd.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: These things are so complex that it is difficult to get legislation that will accomplish the object.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, without going to absurd lengths. The question is of such magnitude that it cannot be decided in an hour or two. It should be considered very maturely, not for an hour, but perhaps for a year, in order to find out how present conditions may be met by legislation that will be up to date; for certainly the old legislation does not apply to present conditions.

Mr. PROULX: If my hon. friend objects very much to the directors being reached, I can forego that portion of the Bill and include the words "one who has a controlling interest" so as to prevent a man from evading the law by putting his business in the form of a company.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think that could be very easily got around. I am not taking strong ground one way or the other. I am simply pointing out that the matter is far more complex than might appear on the surface. As to directors, it is a well known fact that many men are willing to put a large amount of money in a certain business, provided John Smith will become a director. There are many men who will take stock in a company if a certain man in whom they have confidence is made a director. This director might only hold one share, or just what was sufficient to qualify him as a director. This legislation would exclude that director from being a member of this House, although the only interest he had in the business was his salary and this one share.

Mr. LOGGIE: A man might hold 49 per cent of the stock of a company and sell goods to the Government, while the man who held 51 per cent could not sell the Government a box of matches.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It occurred to me while the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) was speaking that there might be a good many cases that this would not cover. For instance, the general manager of an important company might be paid partly by salary, and partly by a percentage of the profits. That man would be just as directly interested in the company as any one of the directors, perhaps much more so, and yet the legislation of my hon. friend would permit him to be a member of Parliament, while a director having an insignificant interest in the company could not become a member of Parliament.

Mr. PROULX: I suppose that the general manager is nearly always a director too.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Not always.

Mr. PROULX: We can add the words "general manager, secretary, or any officer or employee of the company."

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would my hon. friend define what he means by controlling interest? Is that defined in his amendment? I know of companies in Montreal where the controlling power is held by one man who apparently does not own more than one or two shares; but nothing can be done in that company without his consent and participation. What they do is to nominate their employees to be shareholders or directors of the company. These employees hold the shares, but their employers of course have the controlling power. How are you going to get over that difficulty? I agree with the hon. member for South Renfrew that it is a very complex question and one that cannot properly be discussed across the floor of the House. I think it should be debated in a small committee. Before deciding what should be done I think we should examine the legislation of other countries. This question must have come up in England for instance, but I am not aware that in England anybody who is a member of a company or a shareholder or even a director cannot be a member of the House of Commons. I am aware that when such a man becomes a minister, the Prime Minister, generally speaking, asks him to resign his directorate or whatever position he holds in the company. That would lead me to believe that in England, where they have a very good system as every one will admit, even the director of a company is not prevented from becoming a member of Parliament.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I understand that in the United States in connection with the larger corporations, such as railway companies, they have had in recent years a system that is called a voting trust, whereby certain persons accept the beneficial ownership in the shares upon condition that the voting power shall reside elsewhere. It would not be a very difficult thing to apply a system of that kind to companies in this or any other country. Then you would have the result that persons having not the beneficial interest, but the voting power, could be members of Parliament, while persons having the beneficial interest but no voting power would be excluded from Parliament; and that would defeat the object which the hon. member for Prescott has in view and which I agree is a very laudable object. All these considerations seem to indicate, as the hon. member for South Renfrew has said, that this is not a matter to be disposed of hastily. It should receive very careful consideration, and, as my colleague the Postmaster General (Mr. Casgrain) has said, we should also examine any legislation on the same subject in other countries enjoying similar institutions.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Ontario Legislature amended their Act a few years ago to exclude certain classes of business, and they limited the amendment. I forget the details, but an amendment of that kind was passed some years ago.

Mr. OLIVER: I should like to ask if, after all, it is really a crime to be a member of Parliament or to be engaged in business? From the trend of the discussion that has taken place, it would almost seem that there was a crime more or less concealed in one or the other of these vocations. Unfortunately in this country almost everybody is engaged in business. We have no class of people who are altogether dissociated from business, and can give their time and attention solely to political affairs. We are a country of men engaged in active business life, and a very large majority of our people are struggling with difficulties. But we have to take the country as we find it, and it is from these people that we have to pick the men who will manage our political affairs. Are we going to pass legislation that will render that practically impossible? I take it that the first essential is that, for service in a legislative capacity, we should get the most capable men that the country affords. While I quite agree that there must be restrictions, I submit that it is not in the interests of the country in any degree to prevent the best brain we have and the highest character and the greatest experience, from entering the field of public service in a legislative capacity.

Mr. DOHERTY: As this Bill is the product of the committee, I may say that we had before us a very large number of suggested amendments to the Dominion Elections Act. I think that, without at all minimizing the importance of this suggestion many of those were more important and more pressing than this present suggested amendment can be. After giving these different matters our consideration, I think I will speak correctly on behalf of the committee when I say that in view of the many things that might properly be dealt with in the Dominion Elections Act, and in view of the fact that what seemed to us more urgent and more pressing was that we should get better machinery to enforce the law than we have, we rather reached the conclusion only to suggest the few simple things in regard to the Dominion Elections Act which we have submitted and to look to Parliament this session, at all events, for an improvement in the law mainly in the direction of improving the machinery for enforcing the law we have. I quite agree in what has been said about the necessity of careful consideration being given to the present suggested amendment. Its effects might be very far-reaching and you might reach one class of people and allow to escape another class of people against whom the very same argument might be made. I notice that this proposed amendment is limited to people who have a controlling interest. If I understand it correctly this amendment was introduced for the purpose of making the law consistent, the argument being that, inasmuch as we deal with the individual and exclude him if he has a contract, we ought to exclude people who are interested in companies which have contracts and who are directors or who have the controlling interest. In many companies you may have shareholders who have by no means a controlling interest, but who might have their entire fortune invested in the stocks of these companies. A man in that position has his all at stake in that company and it seems to me that he has just as direct an interest—perhaps more direct an interest—than the man who may have the controlling interest, but who also may have other interests and other sources of income. At first glance it would appear to me that if it is desirable to do this we ought to draw the line somewhere else than between the man who has fifty-one per cent of the shares and the man who has only forty-nine per cent of the shares. If it is desirable it ought to go further. As to its desirability, I must confess that there is room for a little reflection and I think there is no pressing necessity at the present time for dealing with this question in the manner in which it would have to be dealt with under the circumstances.

Mr. PROULX: I thought we might have an election before another session, and I thought this was an opportune time to present this amendment.

Mr. DOHERTY: Great foresight.

Mr. PROULX: If I withdraw this amendment will the Government promise that there will be no election?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand this matter will be allowed to stand for the present. Speaking with regard to the question of requiring an affidavit of qualification, and with regard to the objection raised by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) who cites a case wherein he says it is quite a grievance, I find that I was right as to the province of New Brunswick. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) will probably remember that we have in New Brunswick a provision of the law which is in accordance with what was suggested to the Minister of Justice. The law is in these words:

4 p.m.

> If the qualification of any candidate is questioned, it must be done on or before two o'clock of the day of opening the election, and the sheriff shall give the candidate or his agent, or some one of the persons signing his nomination paper, immediate notice thereof, and unless the necessary declaration of qualification, as in the form (H) in the schedule, is made by the candidate or an elector for him before the sheriff, and filed with the sheriff by two o'clock of that day, he shall not enter his name in the general poll-book.

That would in all probability meet the difficulty which my hon. friend from Bonaventure referred to.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think the question was ever raised in New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, I have known a declaration to be required. I know that in the case of one of the postmasters who was disqualified the objection was raised.

Mr. PROULX: I see a provision in the Ontario Election Act that no person shall be ineligible as member of the Assembly—

> By reason of his being a surety or contractor or liable for the payment of money for or on account of the maintenance or tuition of an inmate or pupil of any Government institution;
>
> By reason of his being a postmaster elsewhere than in a city, town or incorporated village, or interested in a contract for carrying the mail between two or more post offices neither of which is in a city, town or incorporated village or of his being the surety of any such postmaster or contractor;
>
> By reason of his being a surety for a public officer or Ontario land surveyor or other person required by the law to furnish security to the Crown.

But there is also this provision:

A person elected a member of the Assembly, who is at the time of his election a surety as aforesaid, shall, before he sits or votes therein take and complete such action as may be requisite to relieve him from any thereafter accruing liability in respect of his suretyship, and no person who is liable as such surety in respect of any accruing matter shall sit or vote in the Assembly.

If a person were elected to this House, and there was a disability or disqualification existing, he would have to remove this disqualification before taking his seat.

On the question being put: Shall the amendment be agreed to?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood it was to stand.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is nothing else in the Bill to stand. I do not want to unduly press the matter, but if the committee were ready to deal with it now there would be some advantage in doing so.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I did suggest that it should stand for consideration, and I am perfectly willing that it should stand if my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) thinks it desirable. Since the discussion has taken place, and particularly in view of some of the considerations which my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has put forward as to the complexity of the question and the difficulty of determining it in so short a time, I would be perfectly willing to have it dealt with now, but on the other hand I do not object to have it stand.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If the Government is not going to accept the amendment there is no use of pressing it, and we might as well dispose of it now. My hon. friend (Mr. Proulx) knows that if the Government does not accept it, there is no use of pressing it.

Mr. PROULX: No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If the Government will not accept it let us dispose of it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have a great deal of sympathy with the purpose which the hon. gentleman has in view, but I see a good deal of difficulty in framing legislation to accomplish that object without going so far as to bring about inconveniences and difficulties which might outweigh any advantage which might be derived from any such amendment.

Mr A. K. MACLEAN: If in the meantime the Government see that the legislation proposed is justifiable or wise, they might attach it to the Bill when it goes to the Senate.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I would be very glad to bring it to the attention of the leader of the Government in the Senate, and also to confer with the Minister of Justice in the meantime to see whether he could prepare a draft which would satisfy to some extent at least the purpose which the hon. member for Prescott has in view, and at the same time not raise the difficulties which have been pointed out in this debate.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister considered the suggestion I made in regard to the county of Gaspé? The reason no longer exists for deferred elections in that county.

Mr. DOHERTY: When the hon. member spoke to me before, I had hoped to be able to gather some further information. I placed reliance upon the information furnished me by the hon. member, but I hoped to be able to communicate with other gentlemen in the county. I regret that I have not succeeded in doing so since the hon. member raised the question, and at present I am not much more prepared to go on with the subject than I was at that time. I am quite prepared to say that the more we can reduce the number of deferred elections the better it will be. If this matter of Gaspé had come to the attention of the committee we would have looked into it; but, as I explained before, the way this clause with regard to deferred elections came before us was upon a representation that there had been changes made in certain of the counties in which deferred elections were provided for, and that those changes would necessitate the changing of the designations of those particular counties. When we came to make those changes, we reached the conclusion that it would be quite possible as regarded portions of those counties which became new constituencies not to re-enact the provision for deferred elections; but the question of deferred elections in other constituencies was not brought before the committee at all.

Mr. MARCIL: The late member for Jacques Cartier spoke of the case of Gaspé and strongly urged that it should be brought into line with other counties. Formerly Gaspé was a very remote part of the province of Quebec, but now Gaspé Basin is reached by train daily and I think the general consensus of opinion of the whole county would be to have the voting on the same day. In the provincial elections, sometimes the nomination is fixed for an earlier date, but the voting is all done on the same day. It is too late, however, to do anything this year.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, amendments concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in Committee on Bill No. 109, to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act—Mr. Doherty; Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill stood for further consideration of sections 4, 5 and 10. The questions that arose with regard to sections 4 and 5 are practically the same. Section 4 prescribes the form of the petition and what shall be required to be contained in the petition protesting the election, and section 5 makes similar provision for the form and what shall be required to be contained in the counter petition. The matter, with regard to which there was some difference of opinion in connection with these two clauses and which gave rise to a desire that they should stand, was that the petition contained in them required that the petitioner should give such particulars as might be necessary to prevent surprise or unnecessary expense to the respondent and insure a fair and effectual trial. Objections were made to the sections as they were proposed; and although we have not been able to have a complete meeting of the committee which submitted the Bill, those of us who could gather together have considered the objections and endeavoured to find a course to meet them. I am afraid I cannot say that we are quite agreed as to the proper method of meeting the objections. I would like to suggest this as being an improvement and, it would seem to me, going far enough to obviate the inconveniences that it was suggested might result from this requirement. If I understood it rightly, the objection most insisted upon to the requirement was the difficulty of defining just what would be covered by such particulars as are necessary to prevent surprise and insure a fair and effectual trial, and more particularly the difficult position that might be created, if the parties, in the absence of special provision for obtaining further particulars or otherwise modifying the petition, found themselves in a situation where the question of the sufficiency of the particulars would arise only at the trial. To obviate that, I think these two provisions should be amended so as to provide in substance, that within a limited delay—I would suggest five days after the service of the petition—either of the parties might make application to the judge to summarily determine the sufficiency or insufficiency of the particulars set forth in the petition. And in the event of finding the particulars insufficient, the judge should have power to order such further particulars as he might prescribe and if the judge arrives at the conclusion that the particulars in the petition are not sufficient, the furtner particulars that he prescribes shall be furnished within a further delay of five days from the making of his order. In that way you have a delay, at the outside, of ten days from the service of the petition.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Sections 4 and 5 of this Bill present many difficulties. If it were possible to frame an amendment to attain the end which the committee had in mind, and which the Minister of Justice also has in mind, I am sure it would meet with the approval of the House. But I must confess that upon reflection, I see objections to section 4, and difficulties in its language, which did not strike me as forcibly when we were considering the Bill in committee as they do now in view of the criticisms that have been made. Perhaps it would be well that the committee should understand clearly just what the purpose and effect of section 4 of the Bill is. Let me call attention to section 11 of the Controverted Elections Act as it is now on the statute book:

> The petition presented under this Act may be in any prescribed form; but, if or in so far as no form is prescribed, it need not be in any particular form, but it must complain of the undue election or return of a member, or that no return has been made, or that a double return has been made, or of matter contained in any special return made, or of some such unlawful act as aforesaid by a candidate not returned, and it must be signed by the petitioner, or all the petitioners if there are more than one.

Under the practice that has grown up in the trial of petitions under the Controverted Elections Act, the petitioners make general charges against the respondent, and as was stated by the Minister of Justice, the petition recites the language of the several prohibitory sections of the Dominion Election Act—those sections which make certain acts corrupt acts. This is open to objection. It is unfair, in a certain sense, that the petitioner may file a petition charging the respondent with the violation of every section of the Elections Act, though, perhaps, he has at the time no evidence of the actual violation of these provisions. Further, it is obviously irritating to the respondent and to his friends to be charged with the violation of practically every feature of the Elections Act when possibly the petitioner had in mind only the violation of one or two sections. These are the objections to section 11 of the Act which the committee had in mind when it attempted to modify the same, and it was to overcome these that section 4 of the Bill was drafted. Let me read section 4:

4. Section 11 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"11. The petition presented under this Act may be in form "A" in the schedule to this Act. It must complain of the undue election or return of a member, or that no return has been made, or that a double return has been made or of matter contained in any special return made, or of some unlawful or corrupt act or acts, and shall contain such particulars of the complaint set out in the petition as may be necessary to prevent surprise or unnecessary expense to the respondent and to insure a fair and effectual trial; and it must be signed by the petitioner, or all the petitioners if there are more than one.

Thus, the amendment requires that the petition shall contain particulars of the complaint, whereas under the present section of the Act the complaint is set forth in general terms only. Now the word "particulars" in the law respecting election trials has a meaning that has been fixed by the rules of the election courts in Canada and in England. It is well to know what "particular" means, and how comprehensive the term is according to the decisions of the courts. The draftsman of section 4 used in the latter part of it the phraseology of the definition of particulars under the Controverted Elections Act as contained in the English petition rules. Rule 6 is as follows:

Evidence need not be stated in the petition, but the court or a judge may order such particulars as may be necessary to prevent surprise and unnecessary expense and to insure a fair and effectual trial in the same way as in ordinary proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas, and upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as may be ordered.

Therefore we have incorporated in section 4 the English definition of particulars, according to the rules followed in controverted election cases in England. Hon. gentlemen know that particulars in election cases are exceedingly minute and definite. I have in my hand a textbook on the English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Acts, by Jelf, and, in a form to be used in the giving of particulars, I find that the following particulars are required where the plaintiff alleges payment of expenses by the respondent: number of particulars, charge, date, name of voter, registered number of voter, district, particulars, by whom alleged to have been paid, and so on. It will be seen, therefore, that in Canadian election courts, as in England, "particulars" has a certain significance as a well-settled term, and if we pass clause four as it is, its effect will be that the petitioner will be required to put in his petition the smallest details in connection with the several complaints which are made. I do not think that the committee had this in mind, and in that view I think I shall in this be supported by the Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick. We had in mind the formulating of some enactment which would compel the granting of more particulars than are required by section 11 of the Act, but I do not think it was the intention of members of the committee that we should go so far as to say that the petition should contain particulars which, as understood in practice would be practically pleading evidence. I think the members of the committee will all agree that it was never intended that we should in our election petitions plead particulars, as is done in controverted election cases. A person might decide at the last moment to file a petition, and it would hardly be fair to require that evidence should be pleaded, or that the complaint should set forth all particulars. I am afraid that if that were the case, the Act would become almost a greater nullity than it is to-day. The trial of an election petition is not like the trial of an ordinary issue in court. The jurisdiction to try election cases, as was pointed out the other night, originally rested with Parliament, and that jurisdiction was handed over to the courts. The trial of an election petition, therefore, is more in the nature of an inquiry or investigation, and I think that it would be hardly proper to insist upon particulars in the petition. I am of the opinion that it would be better to drop this section, and either restore the old section or make it perfectly clear that it is not intended that the petitioner must set forth what is really evidence. If there is any amendment which we could frame which would make that sure, I should be content. The hon. member for Calgary suggested to me privately to-day that his sense of that section is that the petitioner may allege that in a certain district the respondent or his agent committed certain offences at certain times. While it is possible to give it that interpretation, it is extremely doubtful whether that is the whole scope of the section. I am sorry that I do not see my way clear just at the moment to accept this section as it is; I am afraid that it does not express what was really the intention of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What was the intention of the committee?

Mr. MACLEAN: The intention of the committee was, in some way or other, to compel the giving of further particulars than are now required, but it was not the intention to require the pleading of evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What objection is there to leaving the present provision as it is, which gives the judge power to order particulars?

Mr. MACLEAN: I am rather of opinion that it would be bettter to restore the old section. It would create less difficulty than might arise from an attempt to amend it, for the time being at least.

Mr. DOHERTY: The objection to the provision as it stands now is that whereas you require a man to file his petition within forty days, you allow him to do that by a document that conveys no idea to the respondent of what the grounds are upon which he is attacked. What he does know is simply that an election petition has been filed against him. Then, as it works out in practice, the petitioner is enabled, under the present proceedings for the furnishing of particulars, to make his real case six months or perhaps a year later, after he has endeavoured to find out whether he had any reason at all for filing a petition. To me that seems radically unfair. I quite agree with the hon. member for Halifax that the committee did not have in mind that we should require particulars in the sense that we should require the name of every man who may have done an act, and so on, but I am disposed to insist, so far as I reasonably may, upon this section, or upon such modification of it as may meet the serious objection which has been suggested by the hon. gentleman; because I think that this is the one section of this Bill that seeks to remedy a present condition in the law which is very unfair to the respondent. The other provisions of this Bill all tend to deprive the respondent of means of defence available to him under the present law, means of defence which we think he ought to be deprived of, because they lead to great delay, which delay ultimately operates to defeat the practical operation of the law. But we felt that we were the more justified in depriving the respondent of these means of thwarting the petition that the present law now gives to him, if we did at the same time remedy that law where it seemed to us to be unfair to him. The result of that view of this Bill would be that if these clauses be dropped, then our Bill would be one that would operate entirely to further facilitate the petitioner, to place the respondent in a more difficult position. That seems to be unfair to the respondent. Speaking for myself individually, I would almost feel that if we cannot pass these clauses, or something analogous to or approaching them, something more closely attaining the idea of the committee, as the hon. member for Halifax expressed it to have been, then perhaps the whole Bill ought to be dropped. I realize the force of what the hon. member for Halifax has said with regard to the possible interpretation that may be put upon the word "particular," as used in this section, by reason of the established practice regarding the requirement of particulars; and the section will overshoot the mark, I am prepared to admit, if it should be interpreted as requiring in a petition all these things which in practice appear to be required in a bill of particulars. If I correctly apprehend the present condition of jurisprudence, the courts in effect require every detail of each particular act committed, including the individuals who were parties to it, either as bribers or as bribees, or in any other capacity. It occurred to me, while the hon. member for Halifax was speaking, that possibly we might obviate that better if we adopted some form of expression that would not involve the use of the word "particulars," and at the same time would require something more specific in the setting forth of the grounds alleged in the petition. I tried to put this into words, and it seems to me that possibly the objection raised by the hon. member for Halifax might be met if, instead of demanding, as the section now does, such particulars of the complaints set out in the petition as may be necessary to prevent surprise and unnecessary expense on the respondent, and insure a fair and effectual trial, we should say:

And shall specify the grounds of such complaint sufficiently in detail to prevent surprise or unnecessary expense to the respondent and to insure a fair and effectual trial.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will it be possible to specify grounds of complaint in such a way as to afford no assistance whatever to the respondent? Is there any way of specifying the grounds of complaint, other than in the usual way of furnishing particulars, which will be of any use to him? That is the gist of the whole question?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am disposed to think that one might have considered that the furnishing of particulars did not require as minute details as appear to be required, in practice at all events, in the giving of a bill of particulars. What struck me in the argument of the hon. member for Halifax was that as we are using the word "particulars" and requiring particulars there may be serious ground to apprehend, as he suggested, that the courts may take that up and say: Well, that now means precisely what we have been holding to be required in a bill of particulars; it is the very same word. It seems to me that we would obviate that argument anyway, our requirements would be something else than that. I do not pretend now to be able to define just what extent of specification would attain the desired end. We have to put upon the courts the burden of determining what degree of particularity would be necessary. I think we sufficiently indicate that we do not mean to require a bill of particulars in the petition, and we would have to leave the courts to determine what degree of specification would be sufficient to prevent surprise.

Mr. CARVELL: I have not had the privilege of listening to the discussion so far this afternoon, but it does seem to me that the Minister of Justice has described things exactly as they occurred in the committee. The committee certainly did not intend to recommend words to the House which would entirely obviate the necessity of going to a judge and demanding particulars, as is done under the present practice of the courts; we specifically did nothing to repeal the section. The practice regarding particulars is established by the rules of the courts, and I presume is pretty well known all over Canada. The rules are provided for under sections 85 and 86. I remember that I suggested in the committee that we should put in the word "general" between the words "such" and "particulars" in the tenth line. If I remember correctly, it was the understanding of the committee that we should take somewhat the same position as is taken in regard to a statement of claim in an ordinary suit in court. That is, you must acquaint the respondent generally with the case you are bringing against him, so that he may be in a position to file a general answer. If further particulars are required the present rules allow a respondent to apply for them and get them. Personally, I think the suggestion made by the minister is a good one. There would then be no necessity for using the word "particulars" which has a legal meaning at the present time. Like the minister, I cannot say how the court would interpret the word "particulars". I certainly think that a respondent should have a pretty general knowledge of the complaint that is being made against him. I am anxious to see the Bill go through, and personally I have not very much fault to find with what the minister has suggested.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I also want to see the Bill go through, but if we enact the provision which requires the particulars to form a part of the petition, then if the judge should be of the opinion that the particulars are not sufficient the whole petition would go by the board, and the whole proceeding would be void. Why not leave the present section as it is, and provide for a further time, say five or ten days after the service, in which the particulars can be furnished? Then you do not make the particulars an essential part of the petition. What I am afraid of is that if the judge decided the particulars were not sufficient he would simply dismiss the petition. The minister says that it is unfair to allow a petitioner to get information after he has decided to file a petition, but I am not quite sure whether that is reasonable. The man who buys votes does not do it openly; he goes quietly and in secret to the men whom he wants to influence, and makes an arrangement with them. As a rule, it is not until two or three weeks or a month after the election is over that the information begins to leak out which will enable the petitioner and his agents to support the petition. We should not be too strict in reference to the petition. If the respondent is guilty of a corrupt act, you are doing no injustice if you allow the petitioner a reasonable opportunity of establishing these corrupt acts. I think we had better leave the section as to petitions just as it is.

Mr. DOHERTY: Perhaps the suggestion of the hon. member might meet what is required, but we should have to make it imperative that the particulars should be given within the time. If we go back to the old provision and require a petitioner to give particulars within five or six days, we shall not be very much improving what the Bill does. It would mean that he would have five or six days longer to give particulars in, than he would have under the Bill as now drafted. If the suggestion of the hon. member would bring about the same results as the provision in its present form, I should be disposed to accept it. I do not know what the views of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr, A. K. Maclean) are on the subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am satisfied with the Bill as it is.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: So am I.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The object of this Bill is to expedite the trial of petitions. The defendant must be informed as to what he has to answer to. If you do not put that in the petition, you have to give it at a subsequent time. If the particulars are not in the petition, the defendant is entitled to move for them and that means delay. Therefore, I say that the petition should contain everything that the defendant has to answer to. If the petition contains only general terms, so that the defendant cannot prepare a proper defence, that means more delay. I am satisfied with the Bill as it is drafted.

Mr. GERMAN: I notice that the Bill is satisfactory to the leaders of both parties. It is also satisfactory to me, with this exception: If you confine the petitioner to forty days within which he must give particulars of the offences which he intends to prove, you will have mighty few petitions. My observation has led me to believe that particulars cannot be obtained in forty days, especially as regards the large outlying districts, such as the constituency of Nipissing or any constituency in Ontario or Quebec that is spread over a large area. As the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has said, you have to delve to get the particulars on which a petitioner bases his right to an action. I firmly believe that if particulars have to be given, the filing of petitions will be greatly curtailed; and, so far as my reading of criticisms of the Elections Act goes, that is not what the public desire.

They desire that when the petition is filed it shall be tried out, and not traded off against some other petition. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice put in the Bill a clause which says that the judge shall go on. I objected to that because, unless you provide some proper means for the judge going on after the petitioner or respondent has abandoned the case, the word "shall" is inoperative. Unless you provide some means through a public prosecutor, or some other means of procuring the evidence in order that the trial may go on, the provision will be found inoperative. By limiting the time to forty days for the giving of all particulars upon which the petitioner relies you will do away with the filing of petitions altogether.

Mr. PROULX: If the time were lengthened from forty days to sixty days the petitioner would then have more opportunity of looking for particulars.

On section 4—form of petition:

Mr. CARVELL: Before this passes, I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to the fact that in the committee there was some discussion about form A. If the minister will read over form A he will come to the conclusion that it does not cover the real intention of the committee. I think he will find that the form goes very much farther than the section does. The form mentioned would compel the petitioner to give all the particulars and it would render practically nugatory any provision which might exist for the furnishing of further particulars. Form A contains the following:

Here state the grounds on which the petitioner relies, and, in case illegal or corrupt acts are alleged, the particulars of each of such acts are prescribed by section 11.

I would like the minister to consider that for a moment.

Mr. DOHERTY: Would the hon. gentleman's objection be met by striking out the word "each?"

Mr. CARVELL: That would go a long way towards it.

Mr. DOHERTY: "The particulars of each of such acts."

Mr. CARVELL: I very much prefer the suggestion which came from the minister a few moments ago to change the section and change the form to correspond with it.

Mr. DOHERTY: Personally I like the Bill as it was originally drafted. I have been trying to meet the suggestions that have been made, but if we could have agreed upon the Bill as originally drafted I would have preferred it to stand in that way. But I do think that if the section is to be passed as it is drafted, we should add to it something in the nature of what I mentioned at the opening of this discussion this afternoon. I think that we should make provision which would entail a very brief delay but which will afford an opportunity for the determination of the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the particulars and one further very brief delay for the petitioner to complete these particulars if they are found insufficient.

Mr. CARVELL: That might cover it.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would move to amend section 11 by adding as subsection 2 the following:

The judge may, on the application of either of the parties made within five days of the service of the petition, summarily determine the sufficiency of the particulars given in the petition, and may, if the same be found insufficient, order the production by the petitioner, within a further delay of five days, of such additional particulars as the judge may in such order prescribe and define; the delays prescribed in sections 19 and 19a shall run only from the date of the decision upon such application, or the date upon which the further particulars ordered are produced, or the delay for their production has expired.

Mr. PARDEE: I suggest that, instead of a further delay of five days, you leave it in the discretion of the judge.

5 p.m. If we put these delays in the discretion of the judge he can grant another delay if the parties consent to it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: As a matter of fact, in the practice of any person, have election petitions been delayed for want of particulars? I have never heard of the delivery or non-delivery of particulars being a cause of delay in the trial of an election petition. It is always due to preliminary objections and other delays.

Mr. DOHERTY: If preliminary objections and delays are all wiped out and there are no longer the means of getting delays, then people will reach out to find what other means there are and we will have this question of particulars if we leave it open. We will come back to the preliminary objections and people will be fighting about particulars for months unless we tie it down to a definite time.

Mr. PARDEE: The petitioner might find on the thirty-ninth day that there were certain particulars which were necessary to validate his petition and it might be physically impossible to get these within the succeeding five days. Why should not the judge be given a discretion in the matter just as you do in any other court of procedure where you ask for an enlargement and where the question is left in the discretion of the judge? Why not do the same thing in this case? I think that, as in all other civil cases, it might be left to the discretion of the judge to determine whether or not a longer term than five days should be given. In bringing on an action for trial, if you do not serve your notice within the specified time, you have the right to make a summary application to the judge to go on. If there is no surprise, no prejudice to the other party, it is allowed. Why should you not do just the same in the case of a petitioner who is furnishing particulars in support of his petition?

Mr. DOHERTY: In an ordinary proceeding you are dealing with a fight between two individuals about their own affairs and if they choose to delay indefinitely nobody is hurt. Here we are legislating to correct an evil which is an evil from the public point of view and that is the undue dragging out of election proceedings. If we are going to leave it in the hands of the parties we will get no correction. It is in the hands of the parties now and the result is that these proceedings do not go forward at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would the minister be willing to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may" after the words "given in the petition and"? What I would like made clear is that the judge shall not dismiss the petition because he thinks the particulars are insufficient. The amendment would then read as follows:

The judge may, upon application of either of the parties made within five days of the service of the petition, summarily determine the sufficiency of the particulars given in the petition, and shall, if the same be found insufficient, order the production by the petitioner—

That would mean that the judge cannot dismiss the petition, but must make an order for particulars. That would meet any objection I have.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no objection to making that change.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: As regards the observations of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) in respect to section 4, would his view be met if the words "of each" were struck out, or does his view go further than that with regard to the form?

Mr. CARVELL: That would meet my view.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move:

That section 3 of Schedule A be amended by striking out in the seventh line thereof the words "of each" after the word "particulars."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Would not the minister require a similar amendment in section 5?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

On section 5—cross-petition:

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move:

That the following words be added to section 5:

"The judge may on application of either of the parties made within five days of the service of the cross-petition, summarily determine the sufficiency of the particulars given in the cross-petition, and shall, if the same be found insufficient, order the production by the cross-petitioner within a further delay of five days of such additional particulars as the judge may in such order prescribe and define."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move:

That section 3 of Schedule B be amended by striking out in the eight line the words "of each" after the word "particulars."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 10—examination of witnesses.

Mr. DOHERTY: This section gave rise to considerable discussion. It was suggested, among other things, that to some extent it overlapped section 45. I beg to move:

That section 10 be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:

Subsection 1 of section 45 is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"If at any time after the presentation of an election petition it is made to appear to the court or the trial judges that any witness intends to leave Canada and cannot attend the trial of an election petition, or that for any other reason it is desirable in the interests of justice that the examination of a witness be proceeded with forthwith, then an application to the court on notice to the parties to the petition, the court may grant an order for the examination of such witness at a time and place and before a person to be named in such order, and the witness may thereupon be examined touching the matter complained of in the petition, due notice of such time and place being given to the parties to the petition, who may, by their respective counsel, attend such examination, and examine and cross-examine such witness; and such examination shall be reduced to writing and signed by such witness, and when duly returned by the examiner, and purporting to be certified by the examiner, may be used by either party to the petition on the trial thereof."

The only changes in the Act made by this amendment are the following: first, it is made clear that the application for the examination of a witness may be made at any time after the presentation of the petition, instead of, as at present, only after issue is joined or at the trial; second, that the application may be granted not only when the witness is absent from Canada, or may be absent from Canada, but when from any other cause it is made to appear to the judge that in the interest of justice the witness should be examined forthwith; third, that whereas under section 10 as proposed the application for examination might be made ex parte, under the amendment, the application will be on notice to the other party.

Amendment agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I desire to call the attention of the committee to a possible further amendment, though I do not propose to submit it as a motion. If the Minister of Justice thinks well, it might be handed to the leader of the Senate. Under the British Corrupt Practices Act there is a provision by which if, by any act or omission by a candidate or his agent, such act or omission not arising from want of good faith, the election law is violated, the party concerned may go to the court and get absolution from the effects of his act or omission. I was engaged in an election in Nova Scotia a few years ago in which the committee—and I myself was a party to it—were responsible for the issuance of a button, a very simple violation of the Act, but a violation nevertheless. Now, under the British Act, in such circumstances, the party responsible for the violation of the Act might go to the court and be relieved of the effect of his action. I think that is a good provision, but I do not propose to move to-day.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Public Works, chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—Quebec—Grosse Isle quarantine station—extension to wharf, $90,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is under contract, is it not?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $75,000.

Mr. BUREAU: The other day I asked the minister a question which was misunderstood. Some work is being done on the old docks in the harbour of Three Rivers, and I asked if the cost of this work was being borne by the Department of Public Works or by the Harbour Commissioners. The Minister of Public Works answered that the docks at Three Rivers were under contract and that the work was being done by Collins and Giroux. That is a coal dock. I wish to know whether any part of this appropriation goes towards paying for such repairs as are now being made in the harbour of Three Rivers, or whether the amount expended by the Commissioners is taken from the revenue of the harbour itself?

Mr. ROGERS: The explanation which I have of this item is that the money is required to make provision for general repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works in the province of Quebec which are under the control of the Public Works Department. A long list of items follows; the item for Three Rivers is $52.

Mr. BUREAU: What is that $52 for?

Mr. ROGERS: That information is not given.

Mr. BUREAU: If the Harbour Commissioners want to carry out any improvements or do any work in the harbour, I understand that they have to get the assent of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. ROGERS: That may be so, for the reason that every board of harbour commissioners is incorporated under a different act. So far as I know, I have never done any business with the Three Rivers Harbour Commission.

Mr. BUREAU: This new coal dock is being built by the Department of Public Works. The Government lease the dock to the Harbour Commissioners for a nominal sum, and the Harbour Commissioners have the management and control of it, but when they want to make any repairs or spend any money on the dock, they have to submit specifications to and obtain the approval of the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council, I am not quite sure which. The object of my question the other day was to find out whether such approval had been obtained by the Commissioners of the harbour of Three Rivers for the work that was done last December and January, and what was the nature of the request that was made.

Mr. ROGERS: I will get the information for my hon. friend.

Ile Perrot South—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Has this work been commenced?

Mr. ROGERS: No, apparently not.

Mr. BUREAU: Is it the intention of the department to start pretty soon?

Mr. ROGERS: We have good intentions with regard to all these works.

Mr. BUREAU: Will the good intentions materialize in anything definite in the shape of work?

Mr. ROGERS: I hope that they will.

Mr. BUREAU: Is the hope based on fact, or on mere surmise?

Mr. ROGERS: On fact

Kamouraska—addition to wharf ,$7,000.

Mr. BUREAU: This is a revote; is it the intention to begin the work soon?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are ready, and we are in a position to call for tenders.

Mr. BUREAU: Will tenders be called for soon?

Mr. ROGERS: I hope so.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. minister's "hopes" are rather vague information for the people who live in that vicinity. The plans are ready and the money voted, and the minister ought to know whether he intends to go on with the work, or whether any future progress depends upon whether or not we have an election.

Mr. ROGERS: The matter of an election will not bear upon it at all.

Mr. MICHAUD: Why was the work not started last year?

Mr. ROGERS: A great many items were passed last June in respect of which the work has not yet been started. We propose to start this year as soon as conditions permit.

Laprairie—protection works, $20,000.

Mr. LANCTOT (Laprairie and Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on this item, I wish to make a few remarks concerning the expenditure since 1912 on those protection works at Laprairie. During the session of 1911-12, $15,750 were voted, this amount being seven-twelfths of the full $27,000 which had been placed in the Estimates by the late Government. That vote was frittered away on work by the day during the summer of 1912. During the session of 1912-13, $45,000 were appropriated to the same purpose, namely, the carrying on those improvements during the recess of 1913. In the month of August, 1913, tenders were called for in 38 newspapers of the province of Quebec. That goes to show that the Department of Public Works was not remiss in advertising for tenders towards carrying on those works. Three tenders were put in, one by Mr. E. J. Rainboth, for $70,051.60; another by H. Duranceau and N. Poupart for $72,676.73, and still another by F. C. Jackson for $110,326.23. The minister did not award the contract to the lowest tenderer. Why was that? His reply to my question during the session of 1914 was that Mr. Rainboth was not in a position to meet the wishes of the Department of Public Works, who wanted 1,400 feet of that road to be completed immediately—I should explain that these 1,400 feet had to be completed during the fall of 1913, so as to connect that piece of road with the King Edward boulevard. The minister stated that as Mr. Rainboth was unable to comply with the request of the department and build those 1,400 feet of road immediately, while the next lowest tenderer was ready to go on, he, Mr. Rainboth, on that account, asked leave to withdraw his tender. That was a scheme for the purpose of putting aside Rainboth, and entering later into a private agreement with Duranceau and Poupart. Now, what are the actual facts as they come out to-day? Have Messrs. Duranceau and Poupart signed their contract? No, Mr. Chairman. Have they constructed that piece of road, as requested of Mr. Rainboth, by the minister? No, Mr. Chairman, I know that every one in Laprairie and Napierville would have been glad if that piece of road had been completed in the fall of 1913. Unfortunately, we have been deceived; the second lowest tenderers could not carry on the works any more than Mr. Rainboth could have done himself. Now, the Minister of Public Works will allaw me to inquire whether he has a letter dated the 23rd of October, 1913, from Hon. Mr. Caron, Minister of Public Roads for the province of Quebec, in which it is pointed out that the Dominion Government has still a good deal of work to do on that piece of road which is in the extension of the King Edward boulevard; that nothing has been done during the summer and that the writer could not see how that piece of road could be opened in the spring of 1914. Was it not further stated in that letter of Hon. Mr. Caron that the Provincial Government would complete its part of the work in a couple of weeks if the temperature proved favourable. The Provincial Government spent a good deal of money on that road, and is anxious that the whole road should be ready by next spring, so that it may be an attraction for American tourists, and a convenience for the farmers of the South shore, whom it will enable to proceed to Montreal at all times of the year. In that same letter, the Hon. Mr. Caron made the proposal to the Minister of Public Works that he, Mr. Caron should have the whole road built himself, according to the Estimates of his own engineer for the district of Montreal. The Provincial Minister further stated that he was in a position to construct the dam, the raising of the road with earth and the rip-rap revetment on each side, and complete the whole by the end of June, 1914. And lastly, he put himself at the minister's disposal to make arrangements to determine the cost of this piece of road. How was this offer received by the Minister of Public Works? The reply was in effect that the letter of the 21st of the same month (1913) had been duly received, which dealt with the construction of the King Edward boulevard in the parish of Laprairie; that the department had only lately invited tenders for the work and that there was at the time before Council, a recommendation to award the contract; that the contractor agreed to do the work by the ensuing fall; that, were it not that so much had already been done with a view to let out the contract, the minister would have been pleased to discuss the matter with Mr. Caron.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the actual situation to-day? Messrs. Duranceau and Poupart have not signed any contract pursuant to their tender of $72,678.73; they have not gone on with the work in the fall of 1913; but a new contract was prepared which was more advantageous to the contractors, in that it was a private contract calling for the work to be done by the yard, and not, as was stipulated in the first contract, at a certain fixed price for the whole work. My proof of that fact is to be found in the answer made to a question which I asked in this House on the 20th April, 1914, whether Messrs. Poupart and Duranceau had signed their contract for $72,678.73, the minister, among other things, replied by this statement:

	A cubic yard.
Earth filling	$ 40
Reinforced concrete	10 00
	A square yard.
Stone rip-rap	1 50
Bed road, stone foundation	1 00
Roadway, broken stone	25
Roadway, gravel	25

It was therefore obvious that the contract was awarded to Messrs. Duranceau and Poupart at so much a yard and not for a lump sum, as set out in the tender. Will you believe it, Mr. Chairman, after a year and a half, that work has not made any progress. And what is the cause? Patronage, pure and simple. Why was the contract not awarded to the lowest tenderer? Mr. Rainboth is a distinguished civil engineer, well acquainted with that kind of work, while Messrs. Duranceau and Poupart, two good fellows doubtless, are one a tinsmith, and the other an independent gentleman; but neither has any practical knowledge of work of that sort. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Government will have to pay double the amount which it would have had to spend had Mr. Rainboth's tender of $70,057.60 been accepted. An amount at least equal to that sum, if not greater, has already been expended, and everything will have to be done over again this spring. The protection wall which was to be twelve inches thick and bound together with cement, was built of dry stone, field or cobble stone, without any binding; after it was completed, a thin coat of cement was spread over it. Then came the autumn rains of 1914; from night to night some part of the wall crumbled to the ground, sometimes over a length of five hundred, six hundred and even fifteen hundred feet; the farmer and passers-by used to say that the Germans had crept up during the night and effectively bombarded the wall. I am quite aware that the minister and his friends, in order to shield themselves, will put the blame on the district engineer. I am quite aware that some Conservative politicians demanded the dismissal of Mr. Michaud, the district engineer, and put their foot to his throat to prevent him from doing his duty. Those Tories were in no way backward in crying out: Our turn has come to rule; the Liberals have no more anything to do; and as for you, Mr. Michaud, you toe the mark or you will lose your position. Mr. Michaud, as I stated before, should have performed his duty, and even take his dismissal if the Government had gone that far. Very likely we would not see that which now is going on at Laprairie. At the present time, one cannot proceed to Montreal with an ordinary load, and in few days this elevated road will be absolutely impracticable.

I now wish to take up the subject of the temporary road. How much has the Department of Public Works paid for this temporary road at Laprairie?

Hon. Mr. ROGERS: (Translation): $4,000.

Mr. LANCTOT: I may say to the minister that that work could be done for $300. If he paid $4,000 for it he paid just $3,700 too much.

(Translation): I will ask the minister if he intends to make a temporary road this spring and whether it would not be better instead of making a temporary road to make a good macadamized road with a small wooden bridge. That temporary road which has cost the Government $4,000, has not cost the contractors $300; I assert that fact in all sincerity, and the engineer who has recommended the expenditure deserves to be superannuated and given a pension.

I wonder how long such a course will be pursued in respect of public works in our constituencies and how long the people will be deprived of the improvements which ought to be made with the moneys wasted for party ends. I am familiar with what has taken place in my county and the same things holds good for other parts. The politicians it is who see to the distribution of Government patronage and who hold back the works so as to obtain more money for election purposes. Work is undertaken, not for the benefit of the people, but in contemplation of election results. If the minister has to pay as high for public works elsewhere as for the famous temporary road at Laprairie, we may expect to hear of interesting doings from now to election time.

I will ask the minister how much will be required to complete the works? I am informed that the department intends to widen the road and make the wall 36 feet instead of 24. Does the minister intend to comply with that request? I would like to know also whether Mr. Arthur Duford is still an employee of the Government, and whether he has been employed during the winter as foreman to supervise the work? Has he made any report to the Government, and has he seen to it that the work was carried on according to the plans and specifications?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not a great deal of fault to find with what my hon. friend has said respecting this very important work, because it is undoubtedly a work of great importance, in view of the fact that it is the connecting link of such an important highway to the city of Montreal, and therefore deserves very careful and sound consideration. In respect to the conditions of the contract to which my hon. friend has referred, when we first called for tenders we made it a condition that 1,400 feet of the walls should be finished during that present session. Mr. Rainboth tendered at $70,000, but he refused to accept those conditions, and the next lowest tenderers, who were $2,000 higher, accepted the contract at $70,000, the amount of Mr. Rainboth's tender. It is true that they have not carried out their contract as well as we would have liked and that some delay has taken place and some difficulties have arisen. Mr. Paradis, the engineer in charge, has given the matter a great deal of consideration and he has had difficulties in respect to the engineering problems, just as the contractors have had in respect to their contracts. My hon. friend mentioned the fact that we spent $4,000 for a temporary road last year to make conditions passable there, and he complains that this amount has been altogether too extravagant. That is the statement of my hon. friend; but as against that, with all due respect to him, I may say that in the opinion of the engineers of my department this amount of $4,000 was very well spent and was cheap for the work that we secured for the purpose of making the temporary road. I am giving my hon. friend the report of the engineers of the department, who have had an opportunity of examining the work. In respect to the width of the road which my hon. friend has referred to, I may say that the road as at present laid out is only 24 feet wide, and I do not think it would be possible to change it at present. We are anxious to get the road completed as quickly as we can, and I quite agree that we must have a temporary road that will be satisfactory to the travelling public for the coming year. This will be taken up at once by the department, and I am satisfied we will be able to provide a temporary road immediately that will meet with the requirements of the public that travel from Montreal. I do not know that it will be possible to build a macadamized road as the hon. gentleman suggests, but we will make a road of a temporary character that will be entirely satisfactory and will proceed with the contract as fast as we can. I am going to have a very thorough investigation made of this particular work, because I recognize its importance; and if it turns out that the present contractors are not carrying on the contract in the workmanlike manner they should, I will be prepared to recommend that it be taken out of their hands and to see that the work is built under the direction of the officers of the department, with a view of having it completed at the earliest possible moment. But in the meantime I will make provision for a temporary road that will meet all requirements for the travel in that district.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): I understand from the minister's answer that the contract was not awarded at the bulk sum of $72,000, but at so much a yard. The contractors receive $1.50 per yard for the revetment wall. That easily explains the indifference of the contractors as to whether the wall crumbles to the ground or not. If it does crumble, they only have to put it up again at the same price, and that means a further profit for them. Mr. Duranceau went about saying to all comers: that revetment wall will not stand, but we will rebuild it and be paid for the work. Will the minister stand for this sort of thing very long and allow those gentlemen to plunder the public treasury in that manner? Of course, the public treasury is pretty well drained as it is.

Mr. ROGERS: The conditions my hon. friend has referred to will not occur again.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister stated just now that the contract was let for $70,000. The hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) states that last April he put a question on the Order Paper asking how this work was being paid for. The answer was that so much was being paid for concrete, so much for reinforced concrete, so much for rip-rap, so much for gravel, and so on. He wants to know whether the contract price was based on the quantity of these different materials, or whether the contract was let for the fixed sum of $70,000.

Mr. ROGERS: The contract price was $70,000. We arrived at that figure by calculating the quantity of the material and the price per cubic yard.

Mr. BUREAU: The contract was not actually let for $72,000? I suppose the engineers figured out the amount of material that would go into the road at the prices mentioned in the answer given to my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville.

Mr. ROGERS: The contract price was $70,000, not $72,000.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): What strikes me as most remarkable in this connection, is that $60,000 have been spent and nothing has been done as yet. That is as clear as crystal. The minister told me, a few days ago, that $49,600 had been spent to date; the farmers, however, have not yet been paid for the stone they have drawn all winter, and that item alone amounts to $15,000. As everything will have to be done over again, I say that the work will cost beyond $70,000.

The minister has not told me whether Mr. Arthur Duford was still in the Government's employ, what was his salary, and how much he has received to date?

Mr. ROGERS: I understand that the inspector is still in the employ of the department, and that he has been on the work during the winter receiving material.

Mr. LANCTOT: How much is Arthur Poupart, the carter, paid a day?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the information here, but it would not be more than $3.

Mr. LANCTOT: Does the minister know that this man Poupart has been working for himself all the year round, and been getting $3 a day from the Government as well?

Mr. ROGERS: I will take that up with our engineers.

Mr. VERVILLE: This road is not in my constituency, but I have had a little experience of it. If the Government are going to spend $4,000 on this road, as the minister has stated, they ought to get a great deal of work done for that money. I am sorry the Government has been fooled so badly over this road. My hon. friend has said that it could not have cost more than $300. I do not know how much it cost myself, but I could have made quite as good a job of it for $300, and made money. I should like the minister to take a drive over that road on a wet day. I saw as many as eighteen automobiles stuck there one Sunday last summer. If the minister goes, though, he should have a team of horses or a truck in front of him, for he is sure to get stuck. I have heard several American tourists, who have come to Montreal over that road complain about it. Some tourists, after getting within a few miles of Montreal, have turned back altogether, thinking that if that was a sample of the roads in the province of Quebec they did not want any more of them. This summer, on account of the disturbance abroad, we expect to get a lot of tourists in Montreal, and we should not like anything to interfere with their coming to our city. I think it would be in the interests not only of the city of Montreal, but of the department and of the whole country, if the minister would take a look at that road on a wet day. He certainly should not let the road be rebuilt by the same contractor.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Laprairie protection works, $20,000.

Mr. LANCTOT: What is the amount required to finish the work.

Mr. ROGERS: I am not in a position to give my hon. friend definite information. It will be something more than the estimate provides.

Mr. LANCTOT: It will cost three times as much.

Mr. ROGERS: No, not as much as that, I hope.

Mr. LANCTOT: Unless you change the contractor.

Mr. ROGERS: We will give you a good road, anyway.

Mr. LANCTOT: I hope so.

Mr. BUREAU: I would like to ask the minister if any definite plan has been agreed upon to make this temporary road complete next season and when the work is going to be done.

Mr. ROGERS: We will start work as soon as possible on the temporary road. We must get that in order immediately. There is no special plan as yet, but the engineer has instructions to get the work done promptly. Representations came from the automobile club in Montreal the other day.

Malbaie—to complete pier, $17,000.

Mr. BUREAU: How far apart are these two wharves mentioned in the items: Malbaie, to complete pier, $17,000; and "Murray Bay—wharf improvement and repairs, $4,400"?

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Malbaie is the French translation of Murray Bay.

Mr. ROGERS: This is Malbaie in Gaspé county; it is not the same.

Mr. BUREAU: Is this to complete the work at Malbaie?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

New Carlisle—repairs to wharf, $1,500.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required to rebuild the slip and repair the mooring posts and planking of the wharf at New Carlisle. The work is necessary in order to put the wharf in a serviceable condition, as it is now in a very dilapidated condition and dangerous to travel. It was asked for by the district engineer, Mr. Taché.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the work be done this year?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Nominingue—wharf, $1,700.

Mr. BUREAU: I see no item in these Estimates for Nicolet. May I ask the minister if the wharf that was being constructed at Nicolet is finished?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, the work is finished, and the final Estimate paid.

Mr. BUREAU: Has the land been paid for? I see in the Auditor General's Report that there is the following item:

Purchase price of right of way, Corporation Episcopal Catholique Romaine, $450.

I understand that there is a lawsuit pending before the Exchequer Court, that proceedings have been taken to expropriate this land and that the amount offered has been refused.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend will be pleased to know that his Lordship the Bishop has accepted our price of $450 without the excommunication of anybody.

Mr. BUREAU: I am glad that my mind has been relieved. I see by a copy of the defence, wherein excommunication was threatened, that there is also another condition placed upon the acceptance of the $450 and that is the construction of a retaining wall.

Mr. ROGERS: We had to do that anyway. That is going on.

Mr. BUREAU: What depth of water will you have at this particular wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: The engineer thinks about nine or ten feet.

North Temiskaming—wharf, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is this to complete the wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: No, the contract and plans are not ready yet.

Paspebiac—wharf repairs, $2,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount of $2,000 is required to renew the planking and place some of the stringers and fenders of the Robin, Jones & Co. wharf. The work is necessary in the interest of trade and navigation as the wharf under existing circumstances does not provide the necessary accommodation. It will be gone on with this year.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the department acquired the Robin Jones wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: No, we are not the owners of the wharf; we are just repairing it for the public benefit.

Mr. MARCIL: There is a public wharf already. Why is that not used?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know. The district engineer, Mr. Taché, in his report of Dec. 27, 1912, states that:

There are two wharves, one belonging to Robin, Jones, Whitman and Company and the other to the Government. This wharf is the most useful on account of its situation and facility of access and the Government wharf, more used as a breakwater, is a great protection against the accumulation of sand and makes the harbour at this point a perfect shelter.

The work is entirely departmental and is done under the recommendation of Mr. Taché.

Mr. MARCIL: Why does the Government spend money on a private wharf or a wharf that belongs to Robin, Jones & Company? That is something new?

Mr. ROGERS: That has been a very common practice of the department for many long years in a very limited way. Where the expenditure of a small amount will be of advantage to the travelling public, repairs are made but not with the view of building a new wharf.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the department been asked to acquire this wharf or has it been offered at any price?

Mr. ROGERS: The wharf has been offered to us but we have not purchased it.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the minister have any objection to stating the price that was asked?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not that information here; I can get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. MARCIL: Will wharfage fees be charged on this wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: No, it has not been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MARCIL: Then it remains a private wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: It would until we bought it, but still there will be no charges to the public for using it.

Mr. MARCIL: This wharf has been built right in front of the property of Robin, Jones & Co., a large fishing firm, and has been used by them as a private wharf for a long time. The people of Paspebiac wanted a public wharf, a public wharf was built and now the department seems to have abandoned that wharf and is spending money on private property. That is rather an ususual departure. Will the work be done this year?

Mr. ROGERS: That is the present intention.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the whole amount to be expended on the wharf?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: I might as well call the minister's attention to the breakwater at Paspebiac which was started some years ago and which was not extended far enough for the use of the fishermen. Paspebiac is the most important shipping point on the Baie des Chaleurs and it is the headquarters of this large fishing firm of Robin, Jones & Co., or, as it used to be called, Robin, Colas & Co. The fishermen look to this breakwater for the protection of their boats. We made a start there and spent, I think, $15,000 under the old Administration. The extension of this breakwater is very badly needed. I do not know whether a request has been made for an extension or not

Mr. ROGERS: We have had no request for an extension.

Petite Rivière Est breakwater, $21,400.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: This is required for the construction of an open-face crib-breakwater 100 feet long, which is required for the protection of the fishermen from western gales. Several requests were received by letter from private individuals on May last. It is all a revote; nothing has been expended.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it intended to go on with the work this year?

Mr. ROGERS: This is like most of the other public works.

Rimouski harbour improvements, $50,000.

Mr. BUREAU: What improvements are to be made?

Mr. ROGERS: The work is under contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this complete the work ?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the total cost?

Mr. ROGERS: $355,000. There is a stipulation in the contract that we are to spend so much a year until the work is completed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The improvements include dredging?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it intended to have a deep-water wharf for steamers?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, for all ocean ships.

Mr. MARCIL: I understand the main wharf is at Father point and that this wharf at Rimouski is of very little use.

Mr. ROGERS: The Rimouski wharf is the only one used for ocean ships.

Mr. MARCIL: What about Father Point? Is it not there where the pilots and mails are landed?

Mr. ROGERS: The wharf at Father Point is used only for the pilots' ships.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is this to make improvements up the Rimouski river towards Price's mill?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Rimouski wharf renewals and repairs, $3,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the total amount spent on the Rimouski harbour?

Mr. ROGERS: $332,000 has already been expended.

Mr. MARCIL: Is that in addition to the $355,000?

Mr. ROGERS: No, part of that is in this amount.

Mr. MARCIL: Does the minister expect there will be big business at Rimouski?

Mr. ROGERS: There is a good deal of lumbering and trade of that kind.

Mr. MARCIL: I hope the expenditure is justified.

Rivière du Loup (Fraserville) harbour improvement, $50,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What is this work?

Mr. ROGERS: This is a very important work, and one that requires a great deal of consideration. When we first considered the idea of making the improvements in this harbour, we did not estimate that its cost would be anything like what it appeared on the report that it was likely to be, and we are having another examination made to see if we cannot get the cost down to a reasonable figure. The present report seems to be altogether too high.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it contemplated to dredge the harbour as well as to increase the wharf accommodation?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. If we go on with the work, it will be absolutely necessary to do some dredging.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: The department does not intend to proceed with the work during the present year?

Mr. ROGERS: We are making a further examination, and I do not expect we shall proceed this year.

Rivière du Loup (en haut) lock and dam, $10,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Is this in the county of Maskinongé?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Where is this dam to be located, and what is the object of building the lock?

Mr. ROGERS: The work is with a view of preventing the continual dredging that has been going on there year after year. By this vote we hope to be able to have a finality and avoid the necessity of continual dredging.

Mr. BUREAU: Where will the dam be located?

Mr. ROGERS: At the mouth of the river.

Mr. BUREAU: Below Tourville's mill?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Rivière Laguerre improvements, $15,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Is this situated in Chateauguay county?

Mr. ROGERS: It is in Huntingdon county.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the work for?

Mr. ROGERS: For a canal ten miles long, from Rivière Laguerre to River St. Louis. The improvements are necessary to prevent the flooding of 20,000 acres of land. The public works erected at the foot of Lake St. Francis near Valleyfield caused the lake to maintain a higher level and overflow into Rivière Laguerre, causing the river to flood about 20,000 acres of land. The work consists of excavating a canal over 10 miles long and 20 feet wide at the bottom, with slopes of one in one on both sides, from Rivière Laguerre through the marshy lands southeast of St. Anicet, south of Port Lewis and west of Ste. Barbe and St. Stanislas to River St. Louis north of St. Stanislas. It is applied for on behalf of the people of that district.

Mr. MARCIL: Will this amount cover all the work in the district?

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid it will not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When I was Minister of Public Works this work was very strongly urged by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb). It seemed by reason of the vast area which would be reclaimed that it would be a desirable vote. Why was this work not undertaken before? There was a vote last year of $15,000 for it, no part of which was spent.

Mr. ROGERS: We did not seem to have the same amount of freshet last year that we usually have, and as the work was not pressed for so energetically, it was overlooked, but it is very possible it will have to be done this year.

Stratford, Quebec—repairs to wharf, $2,500.

Mr. TOBIN: What are these repairs?

Mr. ROGERS: The amount is required to reinforce the approach to the wharf by filling three spans with solid stone cribs. The work is necessary to avoid the total destruction of the bridge by the moving of the ice in the spring. The approach which was originally constructed is too weak to stand the heavy ice pressure. The repairs have been recommended by the district engineer.

Mr. TOBIN: Will this work be done by day labour or by contract?

Mr. ROGERS: By day labour, I fancy.

Mr. TOBIN: Has anybody been recommended to take charge of the work?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. TOBIN: Does the hon. minister expect to go on with the work this coming season?

Mr. ROGERS: I think we will have to, because of the damage which the ice has been doing to the wharf.

Ste. Anne des Monts—landing pier, $95,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required to build a landing pier, which is necessary to provide additional landing accommodation for traffic in the neighbourhood. During the present fiscal year, $20,000 was expended in constructing 150 feet of the shore portion of the pier. Contract price, $112,000.

Mr. MARCIL: What depth of water is there at that place?

Mr. ROGERS: About 25 feet.

Ste. Anne de la Pocatière—wharf extension, $6,700.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: This item has been in the Estimates for the last four years. Will the minister tell me whether anything has been done?

Mr. ROGERS: This item has been in the Estimates for five years. Tenders were called for in 1912; apparently nothing has been done up to date. The lowest tender was $4,185. The wharf at that place was built in 1884. I shall be glad to look into this matter; it has not been brought to my attention. It looks as if this work should go on, after waiting five years.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Is it the intention of the minister to call for tenders this year?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Ste. Anne du Saguenay—repairs to wharf, $10,500.

Mr. MARCIL: There are two items for improvements to the wharf at Ste. Anne du Saguenay. Are there two wharves at this place?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the information here, but I will have it to-morrow. We will not duplicate the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That will be all right if the hon. minister sees that only one vote is spent.

St. Germain de Kamouraska—wharf, $10,000.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: This item has been in the Estimates for the last four years. Has anything been done to carry on the work?

Mr. ROGERS: The contract plans are ready; that is all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: During the provincial elections in Quebec in 1912 a certain gentleman in the vicinity of St. Germain de Kamouraska sold a quantity of timber for that wharf to the Department of Public Works. At the following session I asked the minister whether the wharf would be built by the Government, and the minister told me that he would call for tenders and arrange for a contract. He told me also that the contractor would have to buy that timber from the Government. That is four years ago; I should like to know what has been done with that timber.

Mr. ROGERS: I have no information with regard to the timber purchased in 1912.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have the papers; the return was laid on the table last session.

Mr. ROGERS: I have no information that I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would like to know what became of that timber.

Mr. ROGERS: If we purchased any, we would like to know too.

St. Irenée—addition to wharf, $10,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ROGERS: The amount is necessary to provide proper shelter for vessels, particularly during the winter season. The addition when completed will offer a winter berth for the ferry steamer Champlain and for the icebreakers that go below Quebec. St. Irènèe is one of the few safe winter ports on the north shore of the St. Lawrence below Quebec. When this addition is constructed it will be used by a great number of schooners which find it difficult to get winter quarters elsewhere.

Mr. MARCIL Before we leave the Quebec Estimates, I desire to call attention to two pretty large items, both revotes and both for the Island of Orleans—two new wharves authorized. Nothing seems to have been done there. Would the minister please explain?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are not ready yet, and nothing has been done in either case.

Ontario—Brockville harbour improvements, $40,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this finish the work? I see that $50,000 was spent last year.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, I was at Belleville the other day and was looking at this wharf. It is very satisfactory. This amount will finish it and will build a shed as well.

Burlington—to repay Hutcheson and Latimer the security deposited in connection with their contract for revetment wall, $2,180.

Mr. MARCIL: Is this revetment wall to prevent damage by the wash of the waters of the lake?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why is this vote required if the contractors finished their work?

Mr. ROGERS: The security deposited by the contractors was forfeited. But they come forward and make a very strong case that we should not have forfeited their deposit cheque. It is a matter of long standing.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is a very unusual thing to return a cheque that has been forfeited. The minister ought to give the committee more information than merely to say that the contractors made out a strong case. In such a case as this, I think, it is usual to give the committee particulars.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know that I have any particulars that I can give. I remember that when I visited Hamilton about a year ago, the matter was taken up by the city council and the people of Hamilton generally. It was an open question that injustice had been done in some form to the contractors, and it was claimed that they were entitled to the return of their deposit.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. PUGSLEY: They failed to carry out their work, I suppose?

Fighting island, Detroit river—improving the channel, $57,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will the minister kindly explain this?

Mr. ROGERS: District Engineer Lamb states that the object is to double-track the existing ship canal in the Detroit river by widening and deepening certain parts on the Canadian side of Fighting island, to relieve the congestion of traffic in the American channel. The result will be a channel of a minimum width of 300 feet and a minimum depth of 21 feet. It will be of great benefit and assistance to the traffic passing at this point.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ROGERS: Some $300,000.

Goderich harbour, $200,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will this finish the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, this is expected to finish the work there.

Kingston harbour—improvements, $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is quite a large item. Would the minister please explain?

Mr. ROGERS: These improvements were originally asked for by the city council, by the Dominion Marine Association and by the Kingston Board of Trade. The improvements consist of a combined roadway and wharf to replace the existing Cataraqui bridge. Such parts of the bridge as shall be directed are to be removed, retaining walls built, three timber cribs, two at the open for the proposed lift-bridge, and one in the western approach, piers and abutments for two highway bridges and one lift-bridge, etc. When these improvements are finished, the department intends to construct a steel bridge. Kingston is a transhipping point for grain brought down from the Great Lakes and owing to the enlargement of the Welland canal the facilities there now are inadequate and this work is necessary in view of the change in conditions.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does part of this work include the building of a highway bridge at Yarmouth?

Mr. ROGERS: I believe it does.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does that take the place of the toll bridge that has existed there for a long time?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. This has been under way for two or three years.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The question came up when I was minister and I was under the impression that some other arrangements were to be made by the city for the building of the bridge. What was the justification for the building of a highway bridge by the department?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the exact details of the reasons at hand. This contract has been under way for some years, it has already passed the House several times and I shall be glad to look it up and bring to the House the statements made when it was originally introduced.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think the minister should inform the committee about this matter as if this principle were adopted the demands on the Federal treasury would be very great. Some few cases of this kind have occurred in the past where highway bridges have been built by the Federal Government when the circumstances have been peculiar. For instance in Manitoba a bridge was built on the ground that was on the boundary line between two provinces, but there was a good deal of criticism even of that. It is a very important subject having reference to the fact that the provinces heretofore have constructed all highway bridges.

Mr. ROGERS: I quite appreciate what my hon. friend has said. I remember when my predecessor brought in this vote there was an explanation that appeared to be satisfactory to members on both sides.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The item might pass and the information be laid on the table.

Peterborough dry dock, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Do the Government propose to build this as a Government work?

Mr. ROGERS: The work is not yet commenced. It is for use in connection with vessels on the Trent Valley canal, a very small dock.

Port Dover harbour improvements, $50,000.

Mr. NESBITT: Has any work been done there?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are not yet ready and nothing has been done.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Port Dover, I think, has been a private harbour. Has it been taken over by the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: I believe we have taken over the harbour. This is to make improvements.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How much was paid for that harbour?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the information here.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I make no objection to the Government taking it over. I am glad they are doing so. Years ago, probably before Confederation, many of the harbours on the Great Lakes were vested in private corporations. I think that was a mistake. It has proved a detriment to the ports and navigation and the interests of the people and I am very glad that the Government is taking these harbours over. The late Government took over several of them and it is a policy that might be carried out to great advantage with respect to all harbours on the Great Lakes.

Mr. NESBITT: Have the Government as a matter of fact taken it over? The Grand Trunk have control there yet, have they not?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not the information here.

Rainy River—survey and maintenance of gauges, $17,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is that?

Mr. ROGERS: This is an international river and it is a necessary expenditure under our arrangement for the operations at that point.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does the minister not think it would be advisable to have all expenditures which come under the jurisdiction of the International Waterways Commission put under head? We have some items, I think, in connection with the Lake of the Woods which seems to be for a similar purpose as that river enters the lake of the Woods and they are really one water so far as international questions are concerned. My criticism is not so much of the amount as of the placing of these items under the Public Works Department.

Mr. ROGERS: This item is due to the necessity of surveys and arrangements in connection with the booming privileges at the mouth of the river. These items do not really come under the heading to which my hon. friend has referred.

Richard's Landing—wharf reconstruction and warehouse, $9,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I beg to move that this item be reduced to $6,000, which is all that is required to finish the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is on Manitoulin island, is it not?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

Sault Ste. Marie—wharf repairs, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will that finish the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PROULX: Could the minister tell me on this item what is intended to be done this year on the Nation river?

Mr. ROGERS: We are asking for $10,000 to complete the improvements on Nation river. It appears that the most satisfactory manner of proceeding with this work will be with teams and scrapers. We cannot use a large plant there of any description.

Mr. PROULX: At what place are they doing any work?

Mr. ROGERS: At Forks, in Dundas county.

Manitoba—Le Pas—wharf, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How much is the wharf to cost? I see there was a vote for $30,000 last year. This year the vote is for $15,000.

Mr. ROGERS: We have revised the plans, and we shall now be able to build the wharf for $15,000.

Red river—improvements, $30,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Are these improvements below the locks or above?

Mr. ROGERS: This work is for the purpose of strengthening the protection work at the new entrance of the mouth of the Red river. This will be accomplished by driving sheet piles over 1,855 lineal feet on the west side, and 1,200 lineal feet on the east side, and placing in the work 1,200 cords of ballast stone. The work is necessary in order to make the protection work of a permanent character. This channel is the only one for traffic between Red river and lake Winnipeg

Red river—St. Andrew's lock and dam—improvements, $22,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the matter with the dam. I understand that the St. Andrew's dam is as bad as the Transcontinental.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: This is to provide for an extension of the north lock wall at a cost of $14,000. Then grading, seeding, sodding and fencing has to be done at a cost of $8,000. The work proposed is the 9 p.m. extension of the north lock wall for a distance of 220 feet, with a return wing of 20 feet.

Mr. OLIVER: These are outside improvements?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Was the bridge ever built?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Selkirk—harbour improvements and repair to plants, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What harbour improvements are there at Selkirk? I see there was a vote last year for $100,000.

Mr. ROGERS: We have to provide a harbour for the different steamers on the lakes. A considerable amount of work in that direction was done last year, and I understand it was much appreciated.

Mr. OLIVER: Was the $100,000 spent last year? Will this $10,000 complete the work?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Winnipeg Harbour—wharves, $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What new work is being done at Winnipeg harbour?

Mr. ROGERS: We are having two or three wharves built at Winnipeg to accommodate the traffic that has developed on the Red river owing to the advantages of the St. Andrew's lock and dam, which have made the Red river very navigable. We had an estimate in last year for $200,000, but did not spend very much of it.

Mr. BUREAU: Where are the wharves located?

Mr. ROGERS: At the foot of Notre Dame street, right in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Do I understand the minister to say that there has been a very satisfactory increase in traffic between points on lake Winnipeg and the city of Winnipeg as a result of the building of the St. Andrew's lock?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, a wonderful development has taken place there.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am very glad to hear that because there has been a great deal of doubt as to the desirability of spending so much money there. Greater wharf accommodation at Winnipeg would necessarily result from an increase in traffic.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is quite right. Hon. gentlemen can expect that when I come here next year I shall ask Parliament for a considerable sum for the development of harbours and wharves in the city of Winnipeg, which will be necessary on account of the increased traffic on the Red river.

Mr. BUREAU: Has that traffic developed only below Winnipeg, or above as well?

Mr. ROGERS: It has developed all the way up the river.

Mr. BUREAU: What kind of boats have they there?

Mr. ROGERS: Some are flat-bottomed and some are not.

Mr. BUREAU: Do they go up as far as Emerson?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. BUREAU: How much of a draught is there above Winnipeg?

Mr. ROGERS: About 14 feet.

Mr. BUREAU: Is that due to the lock at St. Andrews?

Mr. ROGERS: The water backs up the Assiniboine river for five or six miles.

Mr. OLIVER: It has been stated that bad sanitary results to the city of Winnipeg and vicinity have followed from the holding back of the water by the St. Andrew's lock. Have there been any bad results and, if so, has any action been taken to relieve the situation?

Mr. ROGERS: We have had no special evidence of very bad effects. The backing up of the water causes a good deal of the silt to fall in, and that necessitates a certain amount of dredging between Winnipeg and St. Andrew's lock. Apparently the river remaining at the high level is washing in the banks to some extent. I have not heard much about the sanitary conditions or any objection in connection with that side of the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Having reference to the sanitary conditions by reason of the curtain in the lock gates, if that be the correct expression, there is always a splendid opportunity for drainage; at all events in the spring the whole river flows right out.

Mr. ROGERS: But you inflict very serious damage if you open the locks and let the water rush out. It affects the bank of the river through the city of Winnipeg and people complain very bitterly about that condition. We have to exercise great care in opening the locks in that way so that the water will go down at a very gradual speed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Still the curtains are an essential feature in making a success of it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: If the river only falls gradually it will not flush the undesirable element out very satisfactorily?

Mr. ROGERS: The river has to be flushed out at a very slow rate.

Mr. OLIVER: Well, if it is not really flushing, it is not doing very much. Everybody in the West is interested in the city of Winnipeg. I would like to say that there is liable to be serious consequences from emptying the sewage of Winnipeg into that water, made dead water, by the dam at the locks. Probably the only remedy would be to carry the sewage down past the locks so that it would drop into the water, if sewage has to be emptied into the river, below the part where the water is held still by the dam. There must be a very serious sanitary problem involved which ought to receive attention before the terrible results that might occur have occurred. At some time, if there is a terrible outbreak of disease in the city of Winnipeg, the people will be very much interested and it will take very stringent measures to remedy the condition. I think the time to apply the remedy is before the catastrophe occurs. When we know that there is a condition which in the nature of things must tend to very undesirable results.

Mr. ROGERS: We have had no complaints up to date.

Public Works, Saskatchewan and Alberta—Pigeon lake—improvements, $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the nature of the improvements at Pigeon lake and what is the purpose?

Mr. ROGERS: Pigeon creek traverses 15 miles of low lying land between Pigeon lake and the Battle river and it is proposed to straighten the creek at several bars and to clear the creek of dams and dead wood. The estimated cost is $2,500. A very large area of hay land bordering on the creek is subject to overflow. The purpose of straightening the creek is to improve the flow and let the water drain out of the hay land. This is for the continuation of work done last year and the building of a dam in some clearing which has been of immense service to the district. We require this amount to complete the drainage of about 20 square miles thereby allowing a large number of settlers to procure hay for stock.

Mr. OLIVER: What the minister has said to indicate dealing with the stream that flows out of Pigeon lake, I would like to know if the action that is being taken in connection with the straightening of that stream is with the intention, or is likely to have the result, of lowering the level of Pigeon lake?

Mr. ROGERS: It is just the removal of certain obstructions. I could not give my hon. friend a very definite answer on that point, because I have not the information before me at the moment, but if my hon. friend is specially interested, I will be glad to have it looked up in the department and get the report of our engineer dealing fully with the matter.

Mr. OLIVER: I would be very much interested in getting the information as to what the Government has in view. Although Pigeon lake is not in the constituency which I represent, it is in the immediately adjoining constituency, and there are certain reasons why it is of particular interest to the people of Edmonton. While I have no criticism to offer of the attempt to straighten the creek, which is the outlet of Pigeon lake, I would like to say that I have very great objection to such action being taken as would tend to lower the level of the lake. I would think it would be very much more in the interest of the country at large if means were taken to hold the water of the lake at such a level as would conserve the spring freshets and would allow a more permanent flow of water down the creek than occurs now in a dry season. I would suggest that, if anything is being done with Pigeon lake, such works should be constructed as would constitute it a reservoir rather than that any action should be taken that would decrease the water in the lake.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: How large is Pigeon lake?

Mr. OLIVER: It is about 8 miles long by 6 wide.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Is there a stream running right through?

[Mr Rogers.]

Mr. OLIVER: It is the source of a stream which, with another similar stream, forms the Battle river. Pigeon lake is a very remarkable body of water; it occupies the crest of a height of land and is one of the sources of the Battle river. It is a lake that is very remarkably prolific in whitefish, contains very good water and has sometimes been looked to as a possible means of water supply for the city of Edmonton.

Mr. ROGERS: You have some navigation?

Mr. OLIVER: The lake itself would be navigable but it has no source of supply except springs. It occupies practically the height of land. The flow from the lake is practically nil at certain periods in some seasons and the little stream is practically dried up. I think it would be quite in order to make provision against that condition by holding the waters of the lake when there is a surplus and allowing them to pass out in such quantity only as to maintain a continuous supply of water in the stream.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Is the lake drying up at all?

Mr. OLIVER: Like all the lakes in the West it rises and falls, and we cannot tell exactly why it does so. It may not fall in a dry season; it may not rise very much in a wet season; it rises and falls by some rule of its own; but at any rate it does rise and fall, and while it may be for a succession of years the stream coming out of it will fall continually, at other times it will rise.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Is there as much water in it at any season of the year as there was four or five years ago?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, there is no permanent depletion.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Nearly all our lakes in Manitoba, except lake Winnipeg and similar lakes, are apparently drying up, although they were formerly good lakes.

Mr. OLIVER: That is not the case with this particular lake, but it is in a very remarkable position. While most of the lakes in Manitoba and the prairies generally occupy depressions and have other waters flowing into them, this lake is on the crest of the height of land.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: We also have a lake on the top of Turtle mountain, lake Max. During the last two or three years the water in that lake has been getting less, although for twenty-eight years or so previous to that it contained each year about the same quantity of water.

Mr. ROGERS: In answer to what my hon. friend has said, I find the following words in the report made by Chief Engineer Elliott:

This work will be a great public service in holding the water rights of the lake.

Whatever he means by that, perhaps my hon. friend will understand.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to send my hon. friend the chief engineer's full report on the matter.

Mr. OLIVER: Notwithstanding what the report may be, I hope the minister will keep in mind that my judgment is that the water of the lake should be conserved.

Mr. ROGERS: That is evidently what the chief engineer says this work will do.

Prince Albert protection works, $9,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the nature of these protection works?

Mr. ROGERS: This vote is required for the construction of 504 feet of bank protection work for the completion of the work on the wharf at Prince Albert. This work was asked for by the district engineer in order to protect the river bank from being carried away.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I suppose that is the same wharf that was undertaken while I was minister?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: In this connection I wish to draw the minister's attention to the fact that for a number of years there has been before the Government application for assistance or action looking to the protection of the river bank in front of the city of Edmonton. In many respects the two conditions are similar. The city of Edmonton is located along the river bank; and if the bank falls away the ground supporting the buildings also falls away and the streets and buildings in the city are destroyed. About 500 yards of the river bank, in front of a very thickly inhabited part of the city, where the main street runs close to the edge of the bank, has fallen away so much that some houses and a part of what at one time was the main street have sunk into the valley. The damage occurs from time to time. Very many representations have been made to the Government asking for assistance in protecting the bank, and several surveys have been made by the department. I think delegations have come here urging the Government to take means to protect the bank; and there has been a suggestion that if the Government would make the plans, the city would be willing to put up half the cost to show its good faith and willingness to help itself. The conditions are so different from what they are at Prince Albert, the bank of the river being 200 feet high at Edmonton, that it is absolutely beyond the financial ability of the city to protect the property interests on its own account. At the same time we feel that the Government has the same responsibility in regard to the protection of the bank at the front of the city of Edmonton as it has in regard to the front of the city of Prince Albert. If the minister has any information he can give in regard to the intentions of the Government towards Edmonton, I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. ROGERS: I have some knowledge of the conditions at Edmonton which my hon. friend has described. In regard to the small item in the Estimates for Prince Albert, it is not altogether for the protection of the bank; it is for the protection of the wharf and probably of the bank to some extent at the same time. The two cases are probably not parallel; but I fancy the case in the city of Edmonton is parallel to some extent to the case we have in the city of Winnipeg in respect to the outflow of the water through the St. Andrew's lock, causing a great deal of damage to the banks as to which very serious complaint is made from time to time by the owners of lots on the river. This complaint has always been transmitted from the city council to the Government, and we are held blamable to that extent. In view of the fact that no new or special items of any account are in the Estimates for this year, nothing has been suggested in the way of providing protection for the banks either in Winnipeg or in Edmonton; but I believe when we are here next year, we shall have to get together and see if we cannot get Parliament to vote an amount for each place with a view of protecting the banks at both cities. The work in both Winnipeg and Edmonton is very necessary, and it probably belongs to this Parliament to render certain assistance. The city of Winnipeg, like the city of Edmonton, is very willing to contribute its share; but it does not deem it its duty to pay the whole cost of protection of its banks. This matter will come up at a later date.

Mr. OLIVER: Several surveys of the bank at Edmonton have been made by officers of the Government. The problem is possibly complicated or difficult; and, while I would not wish to throw any aspersions on the abilities of any officers who have already made examinations, I think the Government would be acting wisely if it secured the best talent that could be got on this continent to make an expert examination of the ground with the information that the surveyors have already collected.

The gentlemen who have made the surveys are no doubt expert engineers, but I doubt if they have any expert knowledge of the peculiar conditions which have resulted in that sliding bank. If there are any parties who have expert knowledge of these conditions, I would urge upon the Government the desirability of getting their advice, based on an examination on the ground and with the advantage of the surveys that have actually been made, so that when Parliament meets again the Government would have that information before it on which to base any consideration it might see fit to give to the matter.

Mr. ROGERS: I will have that looked into.

Sturgeon river improvements, $9,500.

Mr. OLIVER: This is a matter in regard to which I have had some correspondence with the department. In that correspondence I said that while I had no doubt the Government had the best intentions in entering upon these improvements, they apparently have incurred the opposition of a number of the settlers who occupy lands along this river. I would urge upon the minister that however desirable it may be to constitute this large creek or small river into a measurably navigable stream, there are certain property rights of the people owning the land on both sides of the stream that are entitled to be regarded. Apparently, the officers of the Government, in dealing with the matter, have proceeded without any regard to these rights, having torn down fences and blown up bridges which were, as I understand it, actually on the property of these owners, and built at their expense and for their convenience. In the first place, I do not think the Government had the right to do this, and if it had the right, I do not think they should have done it, at any rate without due consideration, or without compensation to the people so injuriously affected. I do not know how far the minister is aware of these facts, but I have taken some trouble to bring them to the attention of the department by correspondence, and I take this opportunity of bringing them to the minister's own notice.

Mr. ROGERS: The matter is an important one, evidently. However, I must confess I do not remember having had it under my personal observation. But I shall be glad to make a personal matter of it and to look into the facts. If conditions are as my hon. friend suggests, they should be corrected, and will be corrected.

Mr. OLIVER: I cannot help but say, from the information I have received, that the officers of the Government have acted very reprehensibly in ignoring what was thoroughly understood to be the absolute property rights of the people who owned the land along the stream. I have no fault to find if the Government sees fit to spend the money to make this stream navigable for motor-boats,—that is the most that can be hoped for. The stream will make a pleasant connection between two lakes, and it runs through a nice tract of country. I have nothing but commendation for the Government for undertaking this work, but in carrying it out they have certainly run counter to the rights of the people occupying the land and have incurred a great deal of enmity. I am not saying that I am particularly sorry for that.

Mr. ROGERS: We shall have to correct that.

Mr. OLIVER: I should like to see it corrected.

Harbours and rivers, B.C.—Fraser river improvements, $300,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Is this to improve the navigation between Westminster and the gulf of Georgia?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, to continue the jetty and to carry on dredging as well.

Fraser river (upper) and tributaries—improvements, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What is it proposed to do on the Upper Fraser?

Mr. ROGERS: To remove obstructions to navigation on the Upper Fraser, Nechaco, Stuart and Tachi rivers which drain a large area tributary to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. There are small towns, mining camps and farming settlements that will be afforded access to the railway by the improvement of navigation conditions.

Mr. OLIVER: When the track was being laid down the Upper Fraser valley, the question whether the two bridges to be built above and below the canyon were to have draws in them was raised. The bridges have been built without any such draws and of course they prevent steamboat navigation in that part of the river. What is the attitude of the Government in regard to that? Is it the intention to leave the bridges as they are, or has the Government any authority to compel the putting in of draws?

Mr. ROGERS: When such plans as the hon. gentleman refers to are approved, there is a condition attached that in the event of a request for navigation, the railway company is obliged on request to provide an opening suitable for the navigation of the locality.

Okanagan river—protecting and improving of navigable channel, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is this for?

Mr. ROGERS: This is for the maintenance of protection works constructed during the past several years, to continue bank protection and erect controlling weirs. The Okanagan river has been navigable for small power-boats, and this is meant to maintain a uniform water flow. The improvements were originally asked for by petition of the people of the Okanagan district.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does the Okanagan river connect the upper and lower Okanagan lakes?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When I was minister an experiment was made in the way of connecting those two lakes; has that experiment been successful?

Mr. ROGERS: The report indicates that it has been successful.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This vote is to do some further work in connection with it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the North Thompson river navigable at Kamloops?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; large, flat-bottomed river boats run up the river for a distance of about 80 miles.

Williams Head quarantine station—improvements and repairs, $3,000.

Mr. OLIVER: A gentleman in British Columbia has done me the honour of asking me to bring to the attention of the minister a matter relating to a wharf at Kootenay bay, in the riding represented by the hon. member for Kootenay. The information given me is that the district engineer, F. W. Aylmer, reported favourably, on March 14, 1912, on the construction of a wharf for which an appropriation of $7,500 had been made. His successor, J. P. Ford, re-surveyed the site, and the writer assumed that he also reported favourably. He says that although this engineer told him that he would recommend the same wharf as his predecessor had recommended, as a matter of fact he recommended a floating wharf, pile-protected, which would cost about $5,000. There actually has been constructed only a comparatively inexpensive floating wharf, which, the writer complains, is not adequate for the business, and is not in accordance with the understanding had with the Government. This gentleman has asked me to bring the matter to the attention of the Government and to urge that the original intention be carried out.

Mr. ROGERS: A wharf costing a large sum of money did not appear to be necessary; only one man was very specially interested in it, and it was thought that a floating wharf would be sufficient. In view of the fact that, on the recommendation of the engineer, we have carried out the construction of that floating wharf instead of a wharf costing $7,500. I am afraid that it would be impossible for us to make any change in our plans during the present year.

Dredging—new dredging plant, Maritime Provinces, $46,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister explain that item?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required for the construction of new plant to carry on dredging in the Maritime Provinces. It includes: Dredge No. 2, St. Lawrence, new boiler, $9,000; No. 3, Restigouche, new boiler, $10,000; No. 9, Montague, new bucket one cubic yard larger, but lighter than old one, $900; Prince Edward, new independent swinging engine, 8 by 8, $800.

Mr. PUGSLEY: A few days ago I asked the Minister of Public Works to give me some information with regard to dredging plants purchased by the department in the Maritime Provinces, and I mentioned particularly the plant at Fort Lawrence.

Mr. ROGERS: I am sorry that I have not the information here, but the chief engineer will see that it reaches the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. McKENZIE: What Government dredges were operating in Nova Scotia last summer?

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid that I cannot give that information now, but we can get it.

Mr. McKENZIE: Can the minister give me any information as to where the dredge Cape Breton was engaged last summer, and what she did? It was brought to my attention that she was rather poorly handled, and did not do very much work. There was lots of work to do, but she was late in getting to work and knocked off early. While she was supposed to be working she was not very successful. If the minister has any record of her operations it would be very interesting to a Cape Breton representative to know something about them.

Mr. ROGERS: I have taken a memorandum and I will see if we can get the information.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Does the minister intend building a new dredge? He has spoken only so far of repairs to existing dredges.

Mr. ROGERS: The items are all repairs.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is not a new dredging plant that is proposed?

Mr. ROGERS: Oh no.

Dredging—Maritime provinces, $600,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: In the last year some very useful and necessary dredging was being done at a place called Little Bras d'Or, opening up a channel which makes a proper entrance in to the Bras d'Or lakes. There is little more to be done, but it is very necessary that it should be finished this year in order to make what has been done available for use.

Mr. ROGERS: We will take a memorandum and will see that it is finished.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What dredging is proposed in the Maritime Provinces this season?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Dufresne, who has the dredging under his control, has not yet completed his programme for the coming year and is at present out of the city, so I cannot give details.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, $600,000.

Mr. ROGERS: There is a material reduction here: it is $300,000 less than last year.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it intended to do that work or will the item merely stand in the Estimates?

Mr. ROGERS: The dredging is generally all done, the vote is usually exhausted.

Mr. MARCIL: The dredging I am interested in is in the Restigouche river. Some $30,000 has been spent at that mouth of that river around the property of the Bay de Chaleur Mill Company. I do not know whether the minister intends to continue that work. It is merely adding to the value of private property. I have heard former Ministers of Public Works advocate more dredging in Bonaventure and Gaspé; but they always told us that the dredges were very scarce but would come in the future. I have heard that promise for the last fourteen or fifteen years. Very little dredging has been done in that district. In the Baie de Chaleur they build breakwaters and wharves, but very few of them can be reached by a steamer. Some of them might be made very useful if dredging were done by the department. The chief engineer, who is very familiar with the district, could inform the minister where some very useful dredging could be done. At the Bonaventure river, which is the outlet for important timber limits, dredging was started in 1908 or 1909, but the dredge was taken away before the work was completed. A breakwater was built to keep open the mouth of the river at the entrance to the harbour, and the idea was to dredge out the entrance so that boats could go in and load at the wharf. The work was not completed. The dredge, which was owned by Mr. Lemoine, was removed to another place. Some useful dredging could also be done at Maria, where a wharf has been made and at New Richmond and Ruisseau Leblanc and other places on the coast. The minister would be well advised to have his officers report to him the work that might be done in that respect. Mr. Taché, district engineer for Bonaventure, is an experienced official who used to be on the north shore. He is familiar with all the conditions in the Baie de Chaleur. I am sorry to say that although the late Mr. Monk, when Minister of Public Works, asked Mr. Taché to report fully on all the works required there, and I understand that Mr. Taché did so. The Department of Public Works carried out but very few of his recommendations. If economy has not been practised generally throughout the Dominion in public works it has been in Bonaventure. We have only two items this year, one for $1,500 at Paspebiac and one for $2,000 at New Carlisle on a coast line of 1,500 miles where people live largely by fishing and have a hard time to get along. Many works which have been commenced on the coast have remained uncompleted. I do not want to give the list because I might frighten the Minister of Public Works, but seeing that the constituency has this long shore line, with a wharf or breakwater about every ten miles. Only about four or five of these wharves are accessible to steamers. The others are practically only commenced. An extension would make these wharves much more useful to the fishermen, and to the people of the locality generally. As the minister knows, practically only the fringe of the Gaspé peninsula has been touched so far. The interior of the country has not been opened up to navigation at all. It is an immense pulp country, and a great country for agriculture, though the season is shorter than in the rest of the province of Quebec. The fisheries in the Baie des Chaleurs are about as good as any in Eastern Canada. Railway communication is very poor, but now the Minister of Railways has his law on the Statute Book, I hope he will remedy this state of affairs. I know the Minister of Public Works is a progressive man, and I hope he will do something for the Gaspé peninsula too. I do not expect to get anything to-night, but I am just doing a little proselytizing. I want to call his attention to the fact that at Chandler, in the township of Pabos, in the county of Gaspé, quite close to Bonaventure, a large pulp industry has been established. Unfortunately it is the case that it sometimes takes Americans to realize the value of some of the resources of this country. A syndicate from Philadelphia has opened up this pulp business with a capitalization of between two and three million dollars, and in the spot which was a wilderness five or six years ago there is now a thriving town, with all 10 p.m. that is necessary to give employment to the people. This syndicate is going to utilize the Gaspé railway, and the deep water wharf that the department has constructed at Gaspé basin, and they intend to carry on a large business. I want to point out to the minister that if the department extended proper facilities, industries of this kind of work could be started all along the coast. We not only want wharves extended, but some dredging done, so that the boats can get in and out all along the coast. I hope the minister will pardon me for having gone into this matter at such length, and I hope that at the next session of Parliament he will remember Gaspé peninsula, which has been overlooked this year.

Mr. ROGERS: I am quite sure that my hon. friend will appreciate the fact that it is very difficult for me to be familiar with the local conditions which he has so well described to us. I will promise him that I will present his statement to Mr. Dufresne, who has not yet completed his dredging plans for the coming year, and who I am sure will carefully consider what the hon. member has said.

Mr. TOBIN: I notice by the Auditor General's Report of last year that several thousands of dollars were spent in the county of Rimouski, in dredging a small brook at St. Mathieu. I should like to ask the minister on whose recommendation the work was done and for whose benefit it was?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the information here, but I can get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I can give my hon. friend the information. The Auditor General's Report shows that $4,869.15 was spent in making a navigable channel from lake St. Simon to St. Fabien. Here are some of the items taken from the Auditor General's Report: Foremen at $2.50 a day; carters, 30 days at $1.25; labourers, 1,931 days at $1.75; J. Audette, St. Mathieu, 24 pair rubber boots at $5.80 a pair; sundries, $2.28; C. Gagnon, 6 pair rubber boots at $9 a pair; A. Belzile, St. Mathieu, 8,485 feet boards at $13; cartage, $13; sundries, $35.97; D. Theberge, St. Michieu, 18 shovels at $1.255 each, and 49 at $1.10 each.

Mr. BUREAU: That was for hand dredging.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The shovels are less expensive than those the Minister of Militia got. They have no holes in them. You would suppose, Mr. Chairman, that a new highway of transportation was being opened up from lake St. Simon to St. Fabien. You can almost see large merchant ships plying between St. Mathieu and St. Fabien. I think it will be suffiicent for me to quote the report of the Minister of Public Works for the year 1913-14, page 218:

St. Mathieu—Dredging.

Saint Mathieu, in the county of Rimouski, is situated four miles south of the station of St. Simon, and is an important parish with a population of about 1,500. Farming and lumbering are the principal industries of the locality. There are two saw-mills, one of the best butter factories of the district and one butter box factory.

There are, at St. Mathieu, two lakes separated by a strip of marshy land; the upper or west lake is about 4 miles long, and the lower lake 1½ mile. The discharge of the two lakes is what is called River St. Simon, and passes by St. Fabien, near the station of the Intercolonial railway. By dredging between the two lakes and a portion of the river, it will permit of navigation to a depth of 3 feet sufficient for the driving of logs and timber.

Mr. ROGERS: Very useful work.

Mr. LAPOINTE (reading):

During the fiscal year 1913-14, the strip of land between the two lakes was dredged for a length of 400 feet by a width of 30 feet, and an average depth of 4 feet, containing an area of 13,200 feet or 1,955 yards. The entrance of the river was also dredged for a length of 900 feet by a width of 35 feet, and and average depth of 4 feet, containing an area of 31,500 feet, or 4,666 cubic yards.

Amount expended, $4,804.89.

Mr. BUREAU: Who owns the lake?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin). The Minister of Public Works has just stated that this log driving was a very useful work. Well, this is the first time I have heard of the Federal Government giving money to help the lumber operators in driving their logs. I know that under the provincial law, lumber operators have certain rights of expropriation, but they have to pay for those rights. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe is the owner of this lake. The timber limits in the vicinity are owned by the Trois Pistoles Pulp and Lumber Co., of which the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe is president; and I think he can bear me witness that no lumbering is done there now. I think this was only a scheme to get money out of the treasury of Canada.

When we see in the Auditor General's Report the words "making a navigable channel from lake St. Simon to St. Fabien," we must conclude that it is a very fine title for a very small thing. I really think that this work should not have been done and that the money of the country should not have been spent there. I know that river and lake very well. I have been there on a couple of fishing trips and there is very good trout fishing. A friend of mine at Rivière du Loup said it would be very easy to go and fish in lake St. Mathieu. "Why?" I asked. "Because," he replied, "we can go there by motor boat from the station at St. Fabien; we have dredged the river to such an extent as to permit motoring." I do not think the department spent that money for the purpose of giving sportsmen a chance to go fishing in lake St. Mathieu but I do think there is no other purpose served.

Mr. ROGERS: I am always generous to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and especially so to my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. TOBIN: The hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. E. Lapointe) said that the lake belonged to myself. I will say that it is a private lake. I have owned it for years although the lumber further up belongs to the Trois Pistoles Pulp and Lumber Company, of which I am president. We have never asked for any work to be done in that part of the country and certainly no dredging. It was a surprise to me and my company when we were informed that there were people at work dredging that small brook. It is only a small brook that you could jump across at places,—eight or ten feet wide. No lumber is floated down it. Probably, as my hon. friend from Kamouraska said, this improvement will be very useful for fishing purposes but in the public interest it was not called for and I think the money of the country could have been spent on more profitable work than dredging this small brook which will enable you to sail down from lake St. Mathieu to St. Fabien.

An hon. MEMBER: Did they need rubber boots for it?

Mr. TOBIN: How much water is there in this brook when they required rubber boots to do the work. For shovels that cost about $8 a dozen they charged $15 a dozen. These items do not amount to very much money but the purchase of rubber boots for working in a small stream like this is simply putting the country to unnecessary expense. I do not know who asked for the work. I would like to find out from the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. ROGERS: I will look it up.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Will the minister let us know who got the rubber boots?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. TURRIFF: Is it customary for the department to buy boots for men who are doing work for the department and who are receiving the ordinary wages? Do they buy clothing as well?

Mr. ROGERS: That has been a common practice for many long years.

Mr. BUREAU: I understand from the minister that Mr. Dufresne, who has charge of the dredging in his department, has not yet finished his programme?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. BUREAU: I would ask him to take into consideration the necessity of dredging the St. Lawrence opposite Three Rivers. The Grand Trunk comes in on the south side of the St. Lawrence opposite Three Rivers and the only communication between the Grand Trunk wharf at Three Rivers and that at Doucet's Landing, is by way of ferry. Last year the city of Three Rivers went to a good deal of expense in getting a modern steel steamer to perform the service between these two points. Two or three times during the summer the service was interrupted on account of boulders and shallow water. I would ask the minister to have an inquiry made and see if it would not be possible to dredge this channel. It is a great inconvenience to have the boat put out of commission. The propellor is often broken by these boulders and we are without communication with the Grand Trunk sometimes three, four and five days. There is no dock where we can repair the boat except at Sorel. It takes one day each to go to Sorel, dock the boat and bring it back. It would be a very small item. Five or six days' dredging with a Government dredge would be sufficient to enable the traffic to go on uninterruptedly during the summer months and even during the winter. It is very seldom that the river freezes opposite Three Rivers during the winter but sometimes the water gets low in the winter, as it does in summer, and it would be a very material help if we could have this work done.

Mr. ROGERS: I will see that my hon. friend's statement is brought to the attention of Mr. Dufresne to-morrow.

Dredging—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $95,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is any of this dredging to take place in Alberta, and, if so, where?

Mr. ROGERS: This is like the other dredging; we have not Mr. Dufresne's programme for the work ready yet. This is just for the maintenance of our own departmental dredges that we have in existence there. We have them at Anderson's Creek, Mackey river, Labelle, Oak point, Gimli, Poplar Park, Fort Qu'Appelle, Last Mountain, Cumberland lake and Grouard.

Mr. OLIVER: What is proposed to be done at Grouard?

Mr. ROGERS: We have nothing proposed for the present year, but we have a dredge there apparently.

Mr. McCRANEY: When the minister gives more information I wish he would let me know the programme of dredging in the province of Saskatchewan as well. I spoke to the minister before dinner and asked for some information in regard to the price paid for the Saskatoon post office site and the amount paid and when the minister gives his answer I hope he will give it so that it will go into Hansard.

Mr. ROGERS: I have a note of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. OLIVER: In some years past there have been river improvements on the Athabasca at Grand Rapids. There does not appear to be anything in this section of the Estimates regarding the Athabasca river. Is there any provision anywhere for the continuation of those improvements?

Mr. ROGERS: We have no provision made up at the present time as the programme has not been completed for the dredging work but if there is necessity for any work in that locality it can be provided for out of this vote. I will bring the remarks of the hon. gentleman to the attention of Mr. Dufresne.

Mr. OLIVER: The work at Grand Rapids on the Athabasca has claimed the attention of the Government for several seasons. It is a very difficult piece of work and perhaps some mistakes may have been made in the method in which the work has been done; but it is of very great importance to carrying on the trade of the north country until the Waterways railway is completed. Therefore, I would urge upon the minister that with the opening of spring it would be right and proper that an examination should be made of the condition of the rapids and the result of the previous work, and that if there is anything that can be done to better the conditions for the business of the coming season, it should be done. There is a period of low water after the ice goes out; that is, as soon as spring opens, there is low water for a short time when work can be done to better advantage than it can be done at any time until the late fall of when winter sets in. My impression is that while some betterment has been created by the work done, some difficulties have also been created that it may be well to have removed.

Mr. ROGERS: We will have the matter looked into.

Mr. OLIVER: Grouard is a town situated on Buffalo bay, partly an arm and partly a separate lake from Lesser Slave lake. The original intention was to have the shallows, which to a certain extent separate Buffalo bay from the lake, dredged so that lake steamers could pass freely up to Grouard settlement. Now that the railroad has gone into that country and there is a railroad station at Sucker creek on the south side of the lake about ten or twelve miles from Grouard, it is just as necessary as it ever was, if the people of Grouard are to have the best advantage from the nearness of the railroad, that there should be free navigation from the railroad station at Sucker creek to Grouard town on Buffalo bay, and that the shallows intervening between the bay and the lake should be dredged so that the lake steamers could pass freely. I would like to bring that very strongly to the attention of the minister.

Mr. ROGERS: I will take the matter up with the department.

Roads and bridges—Banff—new bridge, $20,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Where is this bridge to be situated?

Mr. ROGERS: On the old site.

Mr. OLIVER: Has anything been done yet?

Mr. ROGERS: The plans are not finished yet.

Mr. OLIVER: The old bridge is becoming somewhat insecure.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, we will have to get at this work very soon.

Mr. OLIVER: I wish to inform the minister that the bridge is pretty old and is becoming insecure and it should be repaired.

Dominion bridges generally, including approaches, $5,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Are they all old bridges?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

[Mr. Oliver.]

Mr. MARCIL: Is the approach of the Dominion bridge at Matapedia completed?

Mr. ROGERS: The engineer informs me that it is completed.

Interprovincial bridge across Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, the Ontario and Quebec governments each to contribute $15,000, $80,000.

Mr. PROULX: Last summer the department called for tenders, and I thought the contract had been awarded because a certain contractor from Montreal brought some machinery to Grenville, which is opposite Hawkesbury; but I was informed the other day by the minister in answer to a question that I put on the Order Paper that no contract had been awarded. Has the lowest tenderer been notified that his tender has been acccpted?

Mr. ROGERS: No tender has been accepted as yet.

Mr. PROULX: How is it that the contractor came to Grenville with machinery expecting to start on the work? In fact, he urged upon the town council of Hawkesbury and the town council of Grenville to press the matter upon the Government and they cabled Sir George Perley, who represents Argenteuil, to urge upon the Government to award the contract.

Mr. ROGERS: Sir George Perley has been cabling urging us to start the work. We will get at it this spring.

Mr. PROULX: Has a certain gentleman in Montreal been notified that his tender has been accepted?

Mr. ROGERS: No person has been notified yet.

Mr. PROULX: Then I cannot understand how this contractor brought some tools and machinery to Grenville and expected to start on the work. I thought he had been notified that his tender had been accepted, but that the contract had not been signed.

Mr. ROGERS: The contract is not signed yet.

Mr. PROULX: As to the right of way, before the election of 1911, a certain right of way through the mill property of the Hawkesbury Lumber Company had been expropriated. After the change of Government, the right of way was changed, and I understand that the other right of way, which the company now wish the Government to take, will be just as convenient for the public, but I would like to know whether this new right of way has been deeded over to the Government or expropriated?

Mr. ROGERS: A new set of plans has recently been made for a new right of way. I do not know whether it covers a portion of what my hon. friend has in mind or not.

Mr. PROULX: I know that the engineers of the department either last summer or the summer before surveyed a new right of way. Has it been acquired by the Government or expropriated?

Mr. ROGERS: We will look up the information for my hon. friend. I am not clear on the point.

Mr. PROULX: I would like to know also what compensation the company is asking for the other right of way. In 1911, the Government offered $5,000.

Mr. ROGERS: Was that not considered enough?

Mr. PROULX: The company was not objecting so much to the amount, but it had objected to the location of the right of way, and the matter has not yet been decided by the Exchequer Court. After September, 1911, I understand, the company prevailed upon the Government to change the right of way. I put a question on the Order Paper to ascertain what compensation was paid by the Government, and the answer was that no compensation was paid, that the right of way had been expropriated. I do not understand how it could have been expropriated without compensation.

Mr. ROGERS: Probably it has not been settled by the Exchequer Court up to date.

Mr. PROULX: I suppose the department would say that the survey had been registered, and the Exchequer Court had not yet settled the amount. What amount does the department offer the company?

Mr. ROGERS: Somewhere about $5,000.

Mr. PROULX: Do they refuse to accept that?

Mr. ROGERS: Evidently, or we should not have gone to the court.

Mr. PROULX: I hope my hon. friend will get the information.

Mr. MARCIL: I desire to call the attention of the minister to the request repeatedly made by the people of Campbellton and Bonaventure opposite for a bridge across the Restigouche river. Seven or eight years ago a Bill was passed to erect a joint highway and railway bridge at this point to connect the Gaspé system of railways and the Intercolonial. Fifty thousand dollars was voted as a subsidy. But this was deemed insufficient, and it was not found possible to float the securities necessary for the work. Meantime, the change of Administration took place. Since that time, the people on both sides, apparently assuming that the prospect of the joint highway and railway bridge was rather remote, organized a crusade in favour of a purely highway bridge. Deputations have come to Ottawa, and I understand that the Campbellton Board of Trade and all the municipal councils concerned have joined in this request. I understand that the last move made by the minister or the department, in answer to the deputation, was to instruct Mr. Stead, the department engineer for New Brunswick, to report upon this project of a highway bridge. Has any progress been made in ascertaining the cost? Has the department abandoned the policy of a joint railway and highway bridge and decided to limit itself to the highway bridge? The time will come when a railway bridge will be needed at this point to connect the Intercolonial with the Transcontinental and other railways.

Mr. ROGERS: We had a deputation here about a month ago of the different councils interested in this work. They pressed for a highway bridge. The information we have goes to show that this is a very, very expensive undertaking, much more expensive than was at first anticipated. After going into the facts with the deputation, it was decided that we should have a re-survey by Mr. Stead, who is supposed to be a first-class engineer, and Mr. Stead has undertaken that service. We shall not have his report for some considerable time. We thought it would be a good time to make a more extensive survey, in order to get at the facts in a detailed manner and to judge what is best in the public interest.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the department come to a conclusion as to building merely a highway bridge? Has the project to build a combined railway and highway bridge been abandoned?

Mr. ROGERS: We have not come to any decision, and cannot arrive at a decision until we get the report of Mr. Stead showing the difference in the estimated cost of the two.

Mr. MARCIL: If a combined railway and highway bridge were built, it is calculated that Gaspé Basin, with a railway connection, would be brought into close communication with New England cities, especially with Boston, the great fish market for the United States. Gaspé and the whole Baie des Chaleurs district would be within twenty-four hours of Boston.

Mr. PROULX: How many tenders were there for the substructure of the bridge at Hawkesbury?

Mr. ROGERS: Six.

Mr. PROULX: What was the lowest?

Mr. ROGERS: I will give the hon. gentleman the list: R. E. Sutherland, Lindsay, $70,000; Galbraith, $78,000; Kennedy Construction Company, Montreal, $78,000; Jones Company, Limited, Ottawa, $90,000; Doney & McDonald, Alexandria, $90,000; Thomas & Wood, $90,000.

Mr. PROULX: The tender of Mr. Galbraith is $78,000, and there is one for $70,000. Which one is that?

Mr. ROGERS: Sutherland.

Mr. PROULX: Is he the one who will get this contract?

Mr. ROGERS: If he is capable of doing the work, certainly.

Mr. PROULX: Have the tenderers been notified that their tender is accepted?

Mr. ROGERS: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. PROULX: Is it the intention to go on with the work?

Mr. ROGERS: We have been urged very strongly to go on with it. Sir George Perley has been cabling about it, and we have promised to do it if possible.

Mr. PROULX: I hope the minister will carry out this work, for it has been under way for quite a few years and is very much needed.

Matapedia road—repairs and improvements, $2,500.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister give some explanation of this item?

Mr. ROGERS: This is to repair and improve seven miles of this highway. This road was built as a military road and has always been considered as Federal property, and the Government has authorized repairs several times. It is in good condition, and is under the control of the municipalities, except for nineteen miles, where there is no municipality.

Mr. MARCIL: I understand this work was done in the unorganized territory along the Intercolonial. This was the road along the line of railway. I would call the minister's attention to the fact that between Millstream and Matapedia in the municipalities of St. André de Restigouche and St. Laurent de Matapedia, ninety-five per cent of the population live on the high land, while down along the line of railway there are very few residents, indeed. They have to pass through there to reach Matapedia and Campbellton, where they do most of their business. The work is not yet completed, and I think the minister might as well see that the work is completed right through, especially through that portion beyond Millstream which is known as St. André de Restigouche. It would be unfortunate if the usefulness of the road, which is now being put into first-class condition, should be destroyed by the last two or three miles being left in an impassable condition.

Mr. BOULAY (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I am in perfect harmony with the few remarks made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), regarding the road in Matapedia. I myself last year called the attention of the Government engineer to the necessity of having the road between Millstream and Matapedia repaired at the Government's expense, because those who are charged with the maintenance of that part of the road are settlers who reside at a long distance from it and who are of rather limited means.

The Bellechasse Telephone Company, in constructing its line, has erected its poles in the middle of the road, and notwithstanding the repeated request of the Government engineer, has left them there. That road is now fit for carriages and I urge upon the department that the necessary steps be taken as soon as possible to have these poles removed as they constitute a public nuisance.

Miniota—bridge to Indian reserve, $8,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How does it happen that the Government is building this bridge?

Mr. ROGERS: This amount is required for the construction of a steel bridge across the Assiniboine river at Miniota, at an estimated cost of $25,000. A request for its construction was made on behalf of the Miniota municipality by letter dated March 17. I am informed that the settlers are very anxious that the bridge shall be ready so that the spring crop may be carried over it. I do not know why we should be building a bridge there; this is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. OLIVER: If this were established as a precedent, there would be a rather heavy demand upon the department for bridges throughout the West.

Mr. ROGERS: The only reason for the Government's share in its construction is probably its connection with the Indian reserve. The Dominion Government is asked to pay $8,000 of the cost, the balance to be paid by the Provincial Government and the two municipalities concerned.

Mr. OLIVER: I know several places in the Edmonton district where bridges are needed.

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid it is a bad precedent.

Athabaska Landing to lake la Biche telegraph line, $1,000.

Mr. OLIVER: To what point on lake la Biche does this line run?

Mr. ROGERS: My information is that the line to be followed is from Plamondonville to the Roman Catholic mission, a distance of ten miles. It was originally asked for by petition of the residents of lake la Biche and Plamondonville.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the line completed to the mission?

Mr. ROGERS: It is completed to Plamondonville.

Mr. OLIVER: I would say that this line should run to the Hudson bay establishment, which is some little distance beyond the Roman Catholic mission. The Hudson bay establishment is the point on the lake to which the railway has been constructed, and has been and naturally will continue to be the business centre of that district. I would urge upon the minister that this line be carried to the Hudson bay establishment, so that it will connect with the railway line.

Battleford—Isle la Crosse line to complete, $7,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How far is that line completed now?

Mr. ROGERS: My information is that it has been completed to a point forty miles north of Green lake. The work had to be stopped for the season owing to the non-delivery of poles by the contractors, who promised to deliver the balance during the winter, too late to enable the work to be completed during the last fiscal year.

Mr. OLIVER It will be completed to Isle la Cross this year, will it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Construction of telegraph line from Athabaska Landing to Fort McMurray—to complete, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER: In what position is that line? I think when the late Government went out there was a sum in the Estimates to complete this line to Fort McMurray.

Mr. ROGERS: I understand the line is completed and this vote is to provide stables, offices, etc.

Mr. OLIVER: I would again impress on the minister the desirability of having a loop line connection from House river, where this line leaves the Athabaska to follow the portage over to Fort McMurray, about 8 or 10 miles down to the head of the Grand Rapids, where the great difficulty in navigation on the Athabaska occurs. There will be an operator at House river and a telephone from there to Grand Rapids would be of very great use to navigation on the river. With the reasonably efficient management the minister now has in connection with the construction of that line it should be possible to do that this summer.

Mr. ROGERS: We will take it up and see.

Peace river telegraph line—offices and dwellings to Saskatoon lake and Grande Prairie, $5,000.

Mr. OLIVER: The other night the minister promised to give me information about the rental of certain buildings at Grande Prairie.

Mr. ROGERS: We rent just the one building, the immigration building, at $65 a month from Mr. A. Patterson.

Mr. OLIVER: What accommodation has the telegraph office now?

Mr. ROGERS: The deputy has no information about that here, but he thinks we have our own office.

Mr. OLIVER: Will these buildings be erected during the coming summer?

Mr. ROGERS: We expect to establish them this summer.

Peace river telegraph line—erection of office at Dunvegan, $3,500.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that to go on this summer?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, we have promised that for this summer.

Peace river Grande Prairie telegraph line—extension from lake Saskatoon to Hudson's Hope, B.C., $12,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How far has that line been completed?

Mr. ROGERS: This is required to complete the construction from lake Saskatoon to Hudson's Hope and a telephone line from Port St. John to Hudson's Hope, an approximate distance of 50 miles at an estimated cost of $12,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the line completed to Fort St. John?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: And it will be completed to Hudson's Hope this summer?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, we are to go on with that.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the work being done by contract?

Mr. ROGERS: The poles are being got out by contract, but the stringing of the wires is being done by our own men.

Mr. OLIVER: I am given information that there has been some mismanagement of affairs there which resulted in a number of teams going from Grande Prairie to Grouard for wire and coming back empty. If that were done by a contractor it would not make any difference, but if it were done under the Government I think that the department ought to be aware that that is the way their business is being managed, as there will certainly be a serious and unnecessary addition to the cost of construction if very much of that sort of thing is being done. The trip would be about 125 miles.

Telegraph and telephone lines generally, $7,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Under this item I would ask for some information about the telephone system in Nova Scotia, particularly in the island of Cape Breton. In 1911 provision was made for the building of a line—indeed, I think it was pretty well under way—between Baddeck and the northeast of Margaree and also from Baddeck to Little Narrows and from Little Narrows to McKay Point. I think the line has been completed from Baddeck to northeast of Margaree and from Baddeck to the Little Narrows. What has been done towards completing the line from Little Narrows to McKay's Point? There is a section of country there which is rather isolated from the rest of the country by an arm of the sea, and it is exceedingly difficult in some seasons of the year to communicate with the towns without a telephone or telegraph line. The intention was to give the people along that section of the country the benefit of a telephone line. The poles were got out, I think in 1911 or before, and I understand that the wire has been put on the ground. Has anything been done towards the erection of a line from Little Narrows to McKay's Point which is right opposite the shire town of Baddeck on the other side of that arm of Bras d'Or lake?

Mr. ROGERS: We do not appear to have any information about that with us to-night. I have asked the deputy to write to my hon. friend to-morrow and give him the particulars of the conditions.

Mr. McKENZIE: The county of Victoria which I represent has not the benefit of competing telegraph lines like other counties in Cape Breton and all the counties in Nova Scotia. Most of them have the services of the Government line, the Western Union and the Canadian Pacific railway, all competing lines, giving a good service. But in Victoria we have only the one lone, solitary Government line and we have an extension of something over 100 miles from the shire town across to the extreme north end of the county with no means of communication except the Government telegraph line. Of course, we have the mails, but we have no telephone and no other telegraph system.

It is at the northern end of the county that the cable connects with the Magdalen Islands. Considerable business goes over that line. The minister will understand that, as we are dependent for rapid communication upon this one line, it is exceedingly important to the people of the county that the service should be well conducted. But I regret to say that it is not managed with that business style and acumen that I think should be shown in connection with so important a service. I am sorry that in this connection I have to bring to the notice of the minister something that is political in its character. I brought it to the attention of the minister last year, but I do not think anything has been done about it. I am not bringing this matter up for the purpose of asking the minister to dismiss any of his officials. For one thing I would not expect him to appoint in the place of a dismissed official any friend of mine. But what I ask the minister to do is to discipline his officials so that there will be a proper management of the Government business. Without mentioning names, I submit to the minister that a message sent from Baddeck over this line to any part of the county is not regarded as private. The facilities furnished in connection with the office at Baddeck are of such a character that the service is not private. Perhaps the man in charge of the office does not get enough pay to keep it private, or to conduct it as business of this character should be conducted. I have already brought to the notice of the minister that, during a local election that was conducted in the county a year ago last February, this whole system—the only system in the county—was absolutely commandeered by the managers of that campaign; they took it entirely under their own control, and for the month or so that the campaign was in progress they used the line for their own purposes without paying one cent to the Government for the service. I am rather sorry to find that as far as I can learn nothing has been done or said about this matter since I last brought it to the notice of the minister. We had a trial in the town of Baddeck in connection with that election, and the man whom the minister has in charge of that work went on the stand, and of his own volition told under oath how he took the responsibility of taking over that line as a piece of electioneering machinery while the campaign was on, and he swore that he did not charge any one of his friends one cent, and that he made no return to the Government. That evidence was given on oath before the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. That is the condition of affairs in connection with the only telegraph service we have in the county; and I appeal to the minister whether that is satisfactory and as it ought to be. As a sound, progressive business people we have a right to expect better things. We have a right to expect that not only the office at Baddeck but every office on the line shall be well conducted, and that the minister shall give strict orders that such a thing as commandeering such an important piece of public property for the use of any party—I care not which—shall not be tolerated for one moment. I trust it will never occur again.

11 p.m.

Mr. ROGERS: I remember that the hon. member brought this matter up last year. I do not think he has had any reason to complain of irregularities during the last year. I can assure my hon. friend that I gave strict instructions that such a state of affairs would not be tolerated. The telegraph service should be kept absolutely private for every citizen of the country, and I shall endeavour to see that it is kept private.

Public Works—Engineering Branch—salaries of engineers, inspectors, superintendents, draughtsmen, clerks and messengers of outside service, $435,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: About how many people does this include?

Mr. ROGERS: Over 200 people, the whole engineering staff of the Public Works Department.

Mr. GRAHAM: Both inside and outside service?

Mr. ROGERS: Not the inside service at Ottawa, but apart from that it includes both inside and outside.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is this increase accounted for by additions to the staff or by salary increases?

Mr. ROGERS: Additions to the staff.

Miscellaneous—monument of His Late Majesty King Edward VII, $10,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is that monument completed?

Mr. ROGERS: It is in the hands of the sculptor. It is to be erected in Ottawa.

Mr. MARCIL: Did the Dominion Government subscribe anything to the Montreal monument?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think so.

Miscellaneous—construction and operation of water storage dams on the Ottawa river and tributaries, surveys in connection therewith and settlement of land damages, $200,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Would the minister tell us briefly what is being done? Are the land damages very heavy? I believe that the Provincial Government had to pay more in land damages than the cost of the dams.

Mr. ROGERS: This amount of $200,000 is required to provide for the construction and operation of dams and sluiceways at points on the Ottawa river and its tributaries. The object is to store the spring floods and augment the low water flow, thus equalizing the run-off of the Ottawa valley throughout the year. This also necessitates the purchase of lands damaged by maintaining reservoir surfaces at high stage during summer and autumn.

The appropriation now applied for is apportioned as follows:

Timiskaming Dam.
Stone riprap to protect river bottom from scouring	$40,000
Sluice opening machine	30,000
Dam tenders and extra labour operating	3,000
Damage claims inundated lands.	25,000
Quinze Dam.
Sluice opening machine	30,000
Dam tenders and extra labour operating	3,000
Booms and cribwork passing timber	5,000
Kipawa Dam.
Repairs, booms and cribwork	2,000
Dam tenders and extra labour operating	3,000
Salaries, supplies and travelling.	10,000
		$151,000
Ottawa Storage Dams—General Surveys.
Salaries of office staff	$25,000
Travel and supplies	5,000
Survey, metering, labour and supplies	20,000
		50,000
		$201,000
Say		$200,000

Mr. GRAHAM: This is to be expended this year?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. G. V. WHITE: Does this include repairs to the dam that was carried away some time ago?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: I understand the dam was built for the purpose of regulating the flow of the Ottawa river. Is it the intention of the department to do anything towards the construction of a dam at lake La Loutre having the same object; that is to regulate the flow of the St. Maurice river, which is a navigable river and is under the control of the Federal Parliament?

Mr. ROGERS: No, we have had no request to contribute to it that I know of.

International Commission, river St. John, N.B., $12,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Are they still busy?

Mr. ROGERS: Apparently.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know who they are. They may be still drawing their pay and not be busy.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. McKENZIE: Who compose this commission? It has been recently reconstructed, I presume, since the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Casgrain) was appointed.

Mr. ROGERS: That is the International Commission; it has nothing to do with this.

The National Gallery of Canada, including the purchase of paintings by the board of trustees, $25,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Last year we had an item of $100,000. Could the minister tell us what purchases of works of art have been made out of that $100,000 and what it is proposed to purchase with this $25,000?

Mr. ROGERS: A large number of important and valuable works of art, both Canadian and foreign, have been purchased. The expenditure upon foreign pictures, which totals $79,579, includes the acquisition of such well-known and interesting works of art as the following:

Oil Paintings.
Francecco Goya, A Governor of Cadiz	$15,000
J. F. Millet, Oedipus taken from the tree	20,000
Claude Monet, Waterloo Bridge	6,000
Bart. de Bruyn, Christian von Conersheim and his wife, 16th Century	8,500
French Primitive, Christ carrying the Cross, 15th Century	1,000
Frans Floris, The Five Senses	2,700
Spanish School, The Slave, 17th Century	1,500
J. B. C. Corot, Street at Anvers	3,500
Frantin-Latour, Bouquet de Roses	3,250
W. McTaggart, Through the Corn	2,500
A. Monticelli, Don Quixote	2,000
Allan Ramsay, Countess of Guilford	3,250
Etchings, drawings, lithographs, etc.	3,879
Bronzes: Antoine Barye, 9 bronzes of animal studies	7,500

Mr. MARCIL: Are these Canadian paintings?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Mr. BOULAY (Translation): Will the minister tell me the names of the members of this commission?

Mr. ROGERS: Sir Edmund Walker, Senator Boyer and Dr. Sheppard of Montreal.

Monument to the memory of the late Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee, $8,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the contract been awarded for this monument?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: How is the work progressing?

Mr. ROGERS: It is completed, but it has not been put in place yet.

Mr. MARCIL:: Has a site been chosen on Parliament Hill?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Who has the contract?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Alward, of Toronto.

Georgian Bay Ship Canal, Royal Commission, $25,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Quite an amount has been expended on this Royal Commission—apparently $15,000. Have they given us any report of what they have done? We ought to have something before the House for $15,000. Have they given the minister a verbal report as to what they are doing and where they are sitting?

Mr. ROGERS: They are sitting in the Bryson building on Queen street, Ottawa. I would invite hon. gentlemen, if they have the time to spare, to go down and inspect the work they are doing. I do not think there is any more creditable work being carried on in any branch of any department of the Government than that which they are carrying on in obtaining the information in connection with the proposed canal. It would interest any hon. member of the House, if he has a moment to spare, to go in there, meet Mr. Evans and see the plans they are preparing, and the information they are collecting. It will be very valuable to the House and the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Who compose the commission?

Mr. ROGERS: Sandford Evans.

Mr. G. V. WHITE: Has the minister any idea when the report will be completed?

Mr. ROGERS: As soon as they get the information that they are collecting now they will hold public hearings in different parts.

Mr. McKENZIE: I suppose it can be indefinitely extended to suit the convenience of the Government?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not know that there is any convenience to the Government. We are anxious to go ahead with it.

Mr. GRAHAM: How long does the minister imagine it will take?

Mr. ROGERS: I think—at least this year.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is a matter that should not be dragged out any longer than necessary in order that the country may be seized with the information. It would have been a good idea if Parliament had been given an interim report to show what they have been doing. I do not mean that they should give away any information that they are not ready to give to the public, but we would like to know what methods they are adopting to get the information. It would be of great interest to many people who are watching for some report from this commission. I quite understand that if they do their work well they could not rush it, but it would have been a good idea if the Government had given us an interim report showing what progres had been made.

Mr. ROGERS: That might have been done, but I hope my hon. friend will take the trouble to go down and see the commission some day.

To pay Western Drydock and Shipbuilding Co., Limited, of Port Arthur, a portion of the second payment of subsidy due them upon their completion of the work covered by the agreement ratified by chapter 57, 3-4 George V, 1913, notwithstanding the work is not completed, $35,641.50.

Mr. ROGERS: This is under the Act.

Mr. GRAHAM: Are you going to make them a progress estimate, a payment on account.

Mr. ROGERS: This is the second payment.

Mr. McKENZIE: What size of vessels will this dry dock at Port Arthur accommodate?

Mr. ROGERS: It is 400 and some odd feet in length.

Mr. GRAHAM: What class of dry dock is it?

Mr. ROGERS: Third class. It will accommodate boats for the lake trade, and is doing very satisfactory work.

Public Works—for operation and maintenance of inspection boats, $60,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How many inspection boats have you in the service, and where are they?

Mr. ROGERS: 21 steamboats and gasoline launches. I will send over the list to my hon. friend, if he cares to see where the inspection boats are.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the nature of their work?

Mr. ROGERS: They inspect the public works, such as dredging and so on, that is going on in the different districts.

Mr. McKENZIE: We have no such luxury in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. ROGERS: There is an inspection boat at Halifax and one at St. John. They do not go up the very small rivers.

Public Works—chargeable to collection of revenue—slides and booms, $95,100.

Mr. BUREAU: I find in the Auditor General's Report that over 2,000,000 feet of British Columbia fir was supplied for slides and booms on the St. Maurice river between Shawenegan Falls and Three Rivers, the price paid being $43 per M. feet. Were any tenders asked for this timber and who supplied it?

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer does not seem to have that information.

Mr. BUREAU: My reason for asking the question is this. Before the late Government went out of power, whenever any quantity of timber of that character was supplied, prices were asked for from lumbermen or from men handling that line of business. The gentleman who supplied the 2,000,000 feet of lumber and who got $9,000 for it is an undertaker. I have known him for a number of years and the only knowledge he has of the lumber business is in the handling of caskets and coffins. I was wondering how he came to supply this Government with British Columbia fir, when he is not in the business at all.

Mr. ROGERS: We will have to have this matter looked into. It looks a bad case.

Mr. BUREAU: It is rather a bad case. I do not see how it can be that this gentleman, who has been doing nothing but performing the very painful duty of carrying people to their last resting-place, should all of a sudden bob up in Three Rivers and have the supplying of this lumber there. If the old practice had been followed and prices asked from the lumbermen at Three Rivers, which is an important lumbering centre, better prices could have been obtained, and in fact the transaction would not have looked as shady as it looks now. If I could get some explanation, I would be satisfied.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: I told my hon. friend that we have not the information here.

Mr. BUREAU: Can I get it later on?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. McKENZIE: I asked the minister last night if he would be good enough to give me the report of the engineer upon the construction of the breakwater at Jamesville, Victoria county.

Mr. ROGERS: The chief engineer will send you a copy.

Department of Public Works—to appoint E. L. Horwood chief architect at $7,000 per annum from October 1, 1914, $3,500.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose this item is inserted in this particular manner because Mr. Horwood was not appointed under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. ROGERS: That is correct.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know the gentleman at all or how the appointment came to be made outside of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Horwood is a prominent architect in Ottawa; and when Mr. Ewart asked to be relieved of the duties of his office, we had to find a suitable man to take his place. Mr. Horwood, in the judgment of the department, is the most available man for that particular position. It is evident that the chairman of the Civil Service Commission did not think so, though he was not very definite about it. He wrote a letter, which I forwarded to the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), at his request, and I would ask that hon. gentleman to be good enough to give his friends that letter, which explains the position taken by Mr. Shortt in this matter. We have to have a chief architect, and we could not find a person more suitable for that position, in our judgment, than Mr. Horwood. He had all the qualifications, and Mr. Shortt was not able to supply the name of anybody whom he would recommend.

Mr. GRAHAM: Has Mr. Horwood proven satisfactory to the department?

Mr. ROGERS: He has only been there a few months, but he has done good work.

Mr. GRAHAM: You cannot tell the result of his work yet?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Harbours and rivers—Port Arthur and Fort William—harbour and river improvements—further amount required, $500,000; Vancouver harbour, B.C.—improvements—further amount required, $350,000—$875,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How does it come that we have to put in nearly a million dollars after the Estimates are made out?

Mr. ROGERS: In the original Estimates the amount for the harbour at Fort William was very much cut down, and it was found we had not sufficient to carry out the contracts we had let there. The same applies to Vancouver harbour.

Brockville public building—alterations and improvements, $2,400.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is this work on the post office building?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, alterations and improvements.

Mr. GRAHAM: You are not changing the system of letter boxes?

Mr. ROGERS: No.

Kemptville public building—additional land required, $1,500.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is to enlarge the site?

Mr. J. D. REID: At Kemptville, the store of Mundell & Purcell, which was right up against the public building, was burned down, and it has been suggested that it would be well to get that land which is now vacant and add it to the site upon which the public building stands. No other building would then be up against the public building, and it will be quite an improvement.

London fair grounds—rebuilding grand stand, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is this for?

Mr. ROGERS: Last year when the troops were mobilized at London, the owners of the fair grounds put their buildings at the disposal of the Department of Militia. Unfortunately, a fire took place and destroyed the grand stand. It is estimated that it will take $15,000 to make good the loss sustained.

Quebec—Cap de la Madeleine—enlargement of wharf, $6,300.

Mr. BUREAU: This is the famous wharf which is 100 feet long, and for which timber of sufficient length could not be obtained in the district of Three Rivers, which is one of the most important lumber districts in the province of Quebec. The lumber was obtained in British Columbia. This wharf was to be built for the sum of $49,000, and the cost has now run up to $66,000, although not a boat has docked there, and there is no prospect of any boat docking there within the next ten years. I should like to know whether or not this is the end of it.

Mr. ROGERS: This finishes the work.

Ste. Anne de Beaupré—to repair wharf, $19,000.

Mr. BUREAU: What kind of repairs are being made in this case?

Mr. ROGERS: This is for reconstruction.

Mr. McCREA: Has the minister anything in his Estimates for repairs to the wharf at Barachois, Gaspé county? The breakwater there was more or less damaged by ice and water and should be repaired. I have looked through the Estimates, but find no item for it.

Mr. ROGERS: There is apparently nothing in the Estimates.

Mr. McCREA: I think it should be repaired. Repairs are necessary if the breakwater is not to be washed away altogether.

Mr. ROGERS: We will take a memorandum of it.

Hamilton harbour improvements, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the minister doing at Hamilton?

Mr. ROGERS: This is simply a revote from last year which was omitted by mistake from our Estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: Only $90,000 is a revote. Is it dredging or building of docks or what?

Mr. ROGERS: A revetment wall and dredging in Stype's inlet.

Quebec harbour—river St. Charles—improvements to navigation, $500,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose this vote is for improving the St. Charles river to make it an ocean terminus in connection with the National Transcontinental railway?

Mr. ROGERS: No, the vote has nothing to do with that.

Mr. GRAHAM: The National Transcontinental railway is getting down into the valley of the St. Charles, and, if I remember correctly, one of the reasons for this increased development in the St. Charles is to make it an ocean port for the Transcontinental road instead of having the docks along between Cap Rouge and Champlain market.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is not quite correct. The St. Charles river is a separate and distinct work in itself. It is for the development of the river for the advantage of Quebec in providing additional accommodation. The harbour is very short and limited, and it is necessary to develop the St. Charles river in order to give additional space for the number of ships coming in.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is it not nevertheless true that this important work is more costly as they expect to take care of the ocean traffic of the Grand Trunk Pacific at that point rather than in the neighbourhood of the Champlain market?

Mr. ROGERS: No, we have an item for that too.

Mr. GRAHAM: For docks west of the Champlain market?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. A contract was given under the late Government.

Mr. GRAHAM: If I remember correctly certain land was purchased, but I think that under the new scheme there was a proposition to take care of part of the traffic in the St. Charles river rather than at the Champlain market.

Mr. ROGERS: I think that is correct.

Montreal postal station "A," St. James street, $160,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is what is called the Carslake property, is it?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: Certain discussion has taken place about this and I think the minister brought down a return concerning it the other day.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes, all the information is contained in that return; and I would like my hon. friend to read it and then send it on to his newspaper in Montreal so that the people there would understand it.

Mr. GRAHAM: People are accused of owning things they do not; and, as the hon. member for Edmonton said to-day, sometimes they are very expensive luxuries and even unwelcome attachments. I see no reason for having the item held any longer.

Mr. BUREAU: Before the committee rises I should like to ask the minister what he has decided to do about those two items for Ste. Anne du Saguenay: one is $10,000 for a wharf extension, and the other $10,500 for repairs to wharf. The minister stated that this was a duplicate item, and that he would look into it.

Mr. ROGERS: We have looked into it, and after discussing the matter with the hon. member for St. John, have decided to let both items remain in the Estimates. They were passed some time ago.

Mr. BUREAU: I hope the minister will not forget to bring down to-morrow the explanation he promised me about the lumber that was supplied to D. Larivière, the undertaker.

Mr. ROGERS: I will ask the deputy minister to get the information.

Supplementary Estimates, 1914-1915—Department of Justice, including Penitentiary Branch —contingencies—further amount required, including payment of $400 to Miss Georgie Avery, for temporary services from October 31, 1915, $8,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose this is in violation of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. DOHERTY: This young lady was born in the United States. Her father was naturalized after he and his family had lived for a long period in Canada. The young lady passed her examinations and was accepted by the Civil Service Commission as a British subject, but they afterwards discovered that she was of age when her father became naturalized. She is now taking the regular steps to become naturalized.

Department of Justice—Penitentiaries—Kingston, further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. DOHERTY: I might explain this item. It was found that in view of the increased cost of provisions, supplies, etc., our main Estimate was not sufficient to carry us through the year 1914-15, so these Supplementary Estimates were made last fall. It may be consoling to hon. gentlemen to know that we think we may possibly have made an over-estimate now.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER read a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that the Hon. Sir Louis H. Davies, acting as deputy of His Royal Highness the Governor General, would proceed to the Senate Chamber on Thursday, the 8th instant, at 4 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

On motion of Mr. Rogers the House adjourned at 12.03 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Speaker: HON. THOMAS SIMPSON SPROULE.

Thursday, April 8, 1915.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

THE ALEXANDER DIVORCE BILL.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY moved:

That Bill No. 118 for the relief of Charles Isaac Alexander be placed on the Order Paper for consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill was considered in the Senate and passed. It was considered by the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills of the House, and the preamble was rejected by a vote of 7 to 6 on Thursday last. On Monday of this week, I moved to refer the Bill back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, which was agreed to and the preamble of the Bill was rejected on a vote of 11 to 9. In view of the narrow difference of opinion in the Private Bills Committee, and in view of the fact that the conclusion appears to be at variance with the evidence, I think the Bill should have the attention of the whole House.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Twice this matter has been before the Committee on Private Bills and has been rejected. I, for one, object to its being brought before the House. And, I raise the point of order, as I think I am entitled to do, that the motion cannot be brought forward at this time. If any case clearly indicates the necessity of provision being made by Parliament for the creation of a proper tribunal to consider divorces, it is this. It is the kind of case that should not be thrust upon this House for consideration. I am not a member of the committee, but at this stage of the session I am not disposed to question the conclusion of the committee which twice considered the matter.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I supported the motion to refer the case back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, for reasons which I then stated and to which I still adhere. At that time, I said that the very anomalous result which had been reached, indicated, as has just been pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett), the necessity for some change in the method by which such cases are disposed of. It occurs to me that the method which has been suggested more than once, that of having these Bills referred to a joint committee of both Houses, so that members of the committee having the Bill under consideration shall hear the witnesses, might be a better method than that which is now in vogue. The Bill was referred back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, and that committee has again decided against reporting the Bill. In the circumstances, while personally, had I been a member of the committee I should have voted to report the Bill, I do not think it is our duty to further deal with the question in this House. The rule has been in the past that the report of a committee upon a Bill should command the approval of the House unless there are very cogent and convincing reasons to the contrary, and notwithstanding that rule, I supported the motion to refer the Bill back. But now that it has been twice considered by the committee, it seems to me that the Bill must be dealt with in accordance with the views of the majority of the committee, and that no good purpose would be served, under present conditions, by asking the House to undertake consideration of a question which, although it is within the judgment of the House, is nevertheless primarily within the judgment of the committee to whom the Bill has been twice confided. I regret therefore that I cannot support the motion of my hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney).

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF: If this Bill is knocked out it will be in my opinion a travesty on justice and it shows the absurdity of the Parliament of Canada dealing with divorces at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member, it seems to me, is exceeding his rights when he reflects upon Parliament in that way.

Mr. TURRIFF: If Parliament throws out this Bill it will deserve to be reflected upon. There would be absolutely no justice in such procedure, because probably not more than a third or a fourth of the membership of the committee was present. If this is to be the final judgment of Parliament on a Bill of this kind, then the sooner Parliament appoints a court to deal with divorce cases, the better it will be for the honour of the Dominion of Canada.

Motion negatived.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

THE STEAMER NOREEN.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Is the steamer Noreen chartered by any department of the Government for service at Halifax?

2. If so, (a) who is the owner, (b) from whom is the said steamer chartered, (c) what services does the boat perform, (d) what is the price paid per day, (e) what is the number and the names of the crew, and what wages do they receive?

3. If he provides coal, oil and supplies?

4. (a) On what date was this steamer first chartered, (b) what is the total sum so far paid to date for such charter, (c) and how much money has been expended by the Government since then in the repair and maintenance of the said steamer?

5. Does the charterer or the Government pay wharfage charges?

6. (a) Was the Noreen formerly called the Lily? (b) If so, was she then condemned by the Government steamboat inspector?

7. Did the Government sell the Lily? If so, when, and to whom, and for what price?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Owner, A. B. Crosby. (b) Charterer, A. B. Crosby. (c) Is employed transporting Marine Department employees between Halifax and Dartmouth. (d) Price, $20 per day. (e) Charterer supplies crew of three men. No information as to names or wages. Government provides one man to handle moorings, gangway and freight.

3. The Government provides coal and water; the charterer oil and supplies.

4. (a) 18th September, 1914. (b) 14th September to 28th February, $2,800. (c) Coal and water, $506. This vessel was employed from August 31 to September 5, 1914, 6 days at $25 per day, transporting equipment from dockyard to Dartmouth. Owner provided crew and all supplies.

5. There are no wharfage charges.

6. (a) Yes. (b) No.

7. Yes; 31st January, 1912; to Messrs. A. B. Crosby Co. for $900. The steamer has since been re-built by the purchaser.

PURCHASE OF LAND FROM J. A. WESTMAN.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. Has the Government bought any land from J. A. Westman, in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. If so, where is the land, and what price was paid for it?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) At Regina, Sask., the rear parts of lots Nos. 40, 39, 38 and 37, block 306, southwest corner of Hamilton street and 11th avenue. (b) The land was expropriated on the 23rd February, 1914, and an advance of $50,000 has been paid, without prejudice, to Mr. Westman, who is asking $90,000 for the land; according to information filed with the Exchequer Court; the Crown is prepared to pay $75,000.

CANADIAN WHEATLANDS COMPANY—SEED GRAIN.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Did the Government supply any seed grain for the farming land owned by the Canadian Wheatlands Company at Suffield, Alta., and leased to other parties for operation this year?

2. If so, how much seed was advanced, and how many acres are to be placed under crop?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

PICTOU COUNTY RURAL MAIL ROUTES.

Mr. McCURDY:

1. How many rural mail delivery routes have been established in Pictou county?

2. What are their names, the length of each, and the date when each was put into operation?

3. What is the name and length of each proposed route reported on, apart from above, but not yet put into operation?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. 17.

2. Beaver Bank No. 1, 8 miles, July 1, 1911; Eureka No. 1, 26 miles, Jan. 1, 1915; Glengarry station No. 1, 9 miles, May 19, 1913; Glengarry station No. 2, 19 miles, Oct. 16, 1913; Hopewell No. 1, 18 miles, May 19, 1913; Hopewell No. 2, 12 miles, Oct. 16, 1913; Meadowville station No. 1, 15 miles, Oct. 1, 1913; Merigonish No. 1, 24 miles, Feb. 11, 1914; New Glasgow No. 1, 7½ miles, Aug. 1, 1910; New Glasgow No. 2, 21½ miles, April 16, 1913; New Glasgow No. 3, 18 miles, Jan. 1, 1915; Pictou No. 1, 20 miles, Jan. 1, 1915; Salt Springs No. 1, 11 miles, May 1, 1913; Scotsburn station No. 1, 30 miles, Jan. 1, 1913; Stellarton No. 1, 10½ miles, Nov. 17, 1913; West Branch River John, No. 1 (in part), 11 miles, Aug. 19, 1913; West River station No. 1, 16 miles, May 1, 1913.

3. Alma No. 1, mileage, 16; Little Harbour No. 1, mileage, 8; New Glasgow No. 4, mileage, 22; Pictou No. 2, mileage, 21; River John No. 1, mileage, 17; River John No. 2, mileage, 14; River John No. 3, mileage, 14; Salt Springs No. 2, 13; Scotsburn station No. 2, mileage, 14; Scotsburn station No. 3, mileage, 21; Scotsburn station No. 4, mileage, 11½; Westville No. 1, mileage, 24; Westville No. 2, mileage, 19.

The contracts have been awarded for these routes, but service is not yet in operation.

WAR SUPPLIES—BINOCULARS.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Regarding the purchase of binoculars for the Canadian forces, did the Minister of Militia, in appointing P. W. Ellis and Company as purchasing agents, receive any recommendation, verbal or otherwise, in favour of that firm from W. K. MacNaught, of Toronto?

2. If not, did the minister receive any recommendation from any other person? If so, from whom?

Major General HUGHES:

1. No.

2. No recommendation was needed. The members of the firm are known throughout the Empire for their high and honourable dealing. The minister has known them personally and intimately since boyhood.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Bureau: For a return showing the number of employees connected with the administration of the Three Rivers post office on the 21st September, 1911, and the annual amount paid in salaries at that date for such service.

2. The number of employees connected with the administration of the Three Rivers post office at the present date, and the amount of the annual salaries paid for such service.

3. The number of employees in the Customs Department for Three Rivers on the 21st September, 1911, and the amount of the annual salaries paid for such service.

4. The number of employees in the Customs Department for Three Rivers at the present date, and the annual amount of the salaries paid for such service.

5. The number of employees in the Inland Revenue Department for the district of Three Rivers on the 21st September, 1911, and the annual amount of salaries paid for such service.

6. The number of employees at the present date in the Inland Revenue Department for the district of Three Rivers, and the amount of the annual salaries paid for such service.

7. The number of employees, and the amount paid in salaries for the works on the St. Maurice, in the county of Champlain, during the year 1911-1912.

8. The number of employees, and the amount of salaries paid per year for the works on the St. Maurice, in the county of Champlain, since 1911-1912.

9. Whether the employees whose names follow were dismissed on the 26th and 27th November, 1914, and the 4th and 5th January, 1915: Wildé Lavallée, Pierre Thivierge, Joseph Paquin, sr., Joseph Paquin, jr., Athanase Gélinas, clerk.

10. If so, at whose request, and for what reasons.

11. Whether those days were taken off the salaries of such employees.

Mr. Boulay: For a return showing the names of the persons who have successfully passed the Civil Service examinations in the province of Quebec since the establishment of the Civil Service Commission. 2. How many such persons have been called upon to enter the Civil Service. 3. The number in each grade of those who have passed such examinations with success.

WAR SUPPLIES—CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. GRAHAM moved:

For a copy of all correspondence that has taken place since August 4th last, between any official of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Prime Minister, the acting Prime Minister, or any member of the Government, concerning the purchase of war supplies by the Government or any department thereof.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend referred to this matter during my absence, and I observe that he made a further reference to it last evening. A communication was received from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which, according to their view, was of a confidential character, I asked particularly as to that in a later letter. I have no objection to bring the correspondence down, but as the correspondence has apparently been communicated to the hon. member for South Renfrew, although it was represented to me as confidential, I shall certainly ask the Association for leave to have it brought down. It would have been more appropriate, perhaps, if the persons concerned had given me their permission in the first instance.

Mr. GRAHAM: I can assure my right hon. friend that I have not the correspondence, and have never seen it. If my right hon. friend will bring it down, that will answer the purpose.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will bring it down after communicating with them, and if there is no objection.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I rise to a question of privilege. A leaflet has been placed in my hands which purports on the face of it to be published by the Federal Press Agency, 47 Slater Street, Ottawa, Canada, the central publication and distribution office of the Conservative party of Canada. The leaflet reads:

Laurier and Quebec.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier once declared that if the Empire was ever in peril he would be "the first to stump Quebec.' Well, the Empire was in peril—the greatest peril it has ever faced. Did he stump Quebec? Did he call for French Canadian recruits? Not a bit of it. His lips were sealed in so far as any appeal to his fellow-countrymen was concerned. Why? Because Laurier, now as ever, cares not a whit for the Empire. Vote Conservative, for Borden backs Britain.

It is very seldom, Mr. Speaker, that I trouble the House with anything which concerns myself personally, with anything relating to opinions, speeches, actions, or omissions on my part, but the statement contained in this leaflet is so absolutely contrary to the facts that I think I am justified in calling the attention of the House and of the country to it. The question is asked:

Did he call for French-Canadian recruits? Not a bit of it.

As to my action in that regard, I have only to call to witness my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Casgrain). I attended a meeting in the city of Montreal with my hon. friend, who was then a private citizen, but who, I understand, came, directed by the Government, just for the purpose of asking French-Canadians to recruit. I addressed other public meetings in Montreal on the same line, and on every occasion I gave evidence that my heart was very much in this fight in which England is now engaged. I have addressed meetings wherever there was occasion to do so and I would have done more if more had been needed; but I had the testimony of the Prime Minister himself and of the Minister of Militia that French Canadians had answered nobly to the appeal, and that they had done as much as any of their fellow countrymen of English or of other origin. This morning I have a letter stating that French Canadians are crowding the recruiting offices and are being refused because for some reason no more are needed. In the face of this I characterize this leaflet as a falsehood and a malignant libel and slander.

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to say from the Chair that, while I would not regard this as a matter of privilege according to my understanding of privilege, it is quite proper that the right hon. gentleman should draw attention to this leaflet as he has done and deny it if he wishes to do so.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The leaflet to which the right hon. gentleman alludes did not come to my attention, but I would like to inform him that he is not the only person upon whom animadversions have been made. I recollect that last autumn, when I was working at my duties from 16 to 18 hours a day, and remaining at my post against the advice of my physician, organs of the Liberal party, or some of them, in the province of Ontario, were attacking me because they said that not one single patriotic word had emanated from the lazy lips of Sir Robert Borden since the outbreak of the war.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Was that in a newspaper?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes, from a very well recognized organ of hon. gentlemen opposite and during a period when they claimed to be observing a truce. Further than that, afterwards, when I did go forth to deliver certain addresses in this country which contained, in the judgment of every man in this country, not one controversial word, the same organs which had denounced me for holding my peace charged me with conducting a political compaign.

INQUIRIES FOR PAPERS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. MACDONALD: At an earlier period of the session I called the attention of the Minister of Labour to the necessity of sending a fair-wage officer to New Glasgow in connection with certain contracts. I understand an officer has been there. Would the minister be good enough to bring down his report?

Mr. CROTHERS: One of my officers has been in the Maritime Provinces for three or four weeks and I understand that he is preparing his report now. I have had a talk with him about what he saw in the different factories there, but I have not yet received his report. I will be very glad to bring it down when I receive it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: During the session I moved for the following returns: On March 29, for papers in respect to the dismissal of Joseph C. Lavers and John Connolly, of the Customs Service, Halifax; on March 24, for a return of papers in relation to lands expropriated by the Halifax and Eastern Railway; on March 17, for a return of papers in reference to the Atlantic ocean freight rates on subsidized steamers; on the same date for papers referring to the leasing of the Windsor branch of the Intercolonial Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway; on the same date for papers relating to amounts paid for Fenian Raid bounties to persons in Halifax county; on the 26th February, for papers relative to the dismissal from the post office of John Thomas, of English Corner, Halifax county. I would ask that these returns be brought down before the close of the session.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Do they all relate to one department?

Mr. MACLEAN: No, to different departments, and that is why I wish to have my request on Hansard.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If the hon. gentleman would send a memorandum to each of the ministers involved it would probably expedite the production of the papers.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER moved the third reading of Bill No. 112, to amend the Canada Grain Act:

Mr. TURRIFF: I notice that in the amendment submitted by the minister there is no provision for settling cases of shortages of grain from one elevator to another, that is from an elevator in the West to a terminal elevator at the head of the lakes. I would ask if the minister proposes to make such a provision later on?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The legislation which is here proposed has been suggested, and in my opinion is rendered necessary because of a particular phase of the grain transport business having to do with shortages which occur between the elevators at Fort William or Port Arthur and elevators in the East, on the lake carrying route. All parties to this controversy have been heard by the Government or by my department, and they have all had their opportunity to make their representations. At the close of a session it is not advisable to bring in very important legislation affecting large interests and to pass it through the House. My warrant for asking the House to pass this is, as I have stated, that all parties have presented their cases and we have full information. The other suggestion of my hon. friend which would involve the settlement of all shortages from the place of production to the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur is a very much larger question in its way, and, if anything, a more important question. We are taking this step at this time on a very important section, involving somewhat the same principle as his suggestion. We will see how that works out during the year and then be in a better position to decide what measures may be taken in that or some other direction in a succeeding year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am in receipt this morning of a letter coming from a prominent gentleman connected with lake navigation and the carrying of grain. He represents to me that this legislation has been hasty and is not fair to the navigation interests. I shall read the concluding portion of the letter:

> Apparently the unloading elevators have taken the position, which I assumed they would take, and I understand now that on Saturday the minister gave some explanation to the House stating that the shippers, outloaders, and the carriers are agreeable to having the amendment to the Grain Act put through and that only some of the eastern elevators object.
>
> I feel it only right that I should explain the situation to you and point out that as a vessel manager I do not agree with this proposed amendment at all, as it is no way to remedy one evil by creating another, or correcting the evil unfairly at the expense of every one interested.

I have no opinion of my own to express on this matter, for it is a very technical subject, and I am sure that only a few of us can understand it; but I thought it well to bring to the attention of the minister this protest from a man who is very prominently connected with the lake commerce.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Of course it is very difficult for all parties to see eye to eye on a question of this kind. The correspondent of my right hon. friend is probably objecting to the compromise arrangement which it is proposed to make, and in reference to which representatives of all the different interests were called together. My right hon. friend will see that this legislation gives the Grain Commission power to take what measures seem to them right in order to settle the shortages. So far as this letter is a protest, it is a protest against something which has fallen through and not a protest against handing over this matter to the responsible management of the Grain Commission who really know more about this than any of us, and whose interests in the question are, I think, not only very intelligent but very sympathetic.

Mr. OLIVER: I desire to move an amendment to the motion for the third reading of this Bill, not for the purpose of dividing the House, but for the purpose of getting an expression of opinion. I beg to move:

> That the Bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amendment by striking out the word "shipper" where it occurs in the sixth line of section 120 (a).

The purpose of the Bill is to authorize the Grain Commission to examine into any question of shortage; to make a finding in regard to that shortage and to enforce that finding. Now the only parties who can be responsible for the shortage are, first, the elevator operators at the western lake terminal; secondly, the elevator operators at the eastern lake terminal, and thirdly, the carriers between those two points. One of those three must be responsible for the shortage. So far as I understand the matter, there is no way in which the shipper can be responsible for the shortage; and if the shipper cannot be responsible for the shortage, power should not be placed in the hands of the Grain Commission to hold him responsible. I do not imagine that the Grain Commission would give a decision laying the responsibility on the shipper when it did not rest there, but I think it very undesirable that the legislation should contain the suggestion that the shipper may be held responsible when he cannot possibly protect himself against that responsibility. The shipper, whether he ships from an interior point or from a terminal elevator, ships subject to the weighing in and to the weighing out of the terminal, by officials of this Government over whom a shipper has not and cannot have any control. Neither has he any control over the carrier nor over the eastern receiving elevator. Therefore the shipper cannot be held responsible in any degree for the shortage in shipments through Fort William. When his grain is received into the elevator he gets credit only for the grain that is weighed in by the Government weighmaster, and from the time that the grain is taken in hand by the Government weighmaster the shipper has no control whatever over it. Therefore, the shipper should not be placed on the list of those responsible for a possible shortage in the weight between the shipping elevator and the eastern port of delivery.

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to point out that this amendment is hardly in the proper form. It asks that the Bill be referred back for the purpose of striking out certain words instead of asking that the Bill be referred back for further consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) is dealing with something that does not come within the scope of this Bill. The original shipper does not ship through the terminal elevators but to them and he is left entirely out of the question after the grain has been weighed in. From that point forward the shipment is by an entirely different party. There must be some method I apprehend of determining the amount of grain that goes into a vessel at Fort William for instance, and I do not know any very good reason why the man who loads the vessel with grain there should not be held accountable for the amount of grain he claims to put into that vessel. If he does not put in the number of bushels that he charges up to the buyer, there ought to be some method of determining that the proper amount has not gone into the vessels. If there is a shortage when the grain arrives at the eastern port, whether Montreal, Midland, Port Colborne, Goderich, or any of the other numerous places in the east to which grain is shipped, it does not necessarily follow that it is the fault of the lake carriers or even of those who have control of the grain at the eastern port. The shortage might be accounted for by the fact that the proper amount of grain was not put into the vessel at Fort William or whatever the shipping point was. The people in the Prairie provinces and further west would have no concern in that shortage at all. They are entirely through with the grain as soon as it lands at the elevator at the head of the Lakes. I may be mistaken, but I think the idea the hon. member for Edmonton had in mind was that these people would still be responsible if a shortage was found at the eastern point of delivery. That is entirely distinct from the object of the Bill. This legislation is not intended to touch the question of any shortage that might arise between the loading by the farmer or by the small elevator man in the West and the large elevator at the head of the Lakes.

Mr. ROBB: When this Bill was in committee additions were made to section 4, and I notice that in both 120a and 120b, which were added to section 4 the word " shippers" appears. In answer to my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) who is a grain grower in the West, let me point out this. He ships down from his farm in Saskatchewan to Fort William 10,000 bushels of wheat; when it reaches Fort William the elevator man takes it in and gives him a certificate for 9,900 bushels, which is 100 bushels short; he sends down that certificate and the bills of lading to the elevator man who took it in at Fort William, and says: Ship this wheat to James Richardson & Son at Kingston; they weigh it into the boat and ship it to Goderich for account of James Richardson & Sons, and when it reaches Goderich they say that there are only 9,800 bushels—does the hon. gentleman think that he as a shipper should be held responsible for the loss of that second hundred bushels?

Mr. WRIGHT : The hon. gentleman is conjuring up a thoroughly imaginary proposition.

Mr. NEELY: That is exactly what is done.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is exactly what is not done.

Mr. NEELY: It happens very frequently.

Mr. WRIGHT: I beg to differ from my hon. friend. Everybody knows that the farmer of the West does not ship to the terminal elevators and does not load a vessel with grain going down to the big elevators on the lakes. There are not many farmers in the West who can load a quarter of a million bushels of grain through the elevator. The weight of the grain is finally determined when it goes into the terminal elevator at the head of the lakes unless it may be that he is shipping a carload of grain direct all rail and it goes down to a mill in the East. But if it is the intention to provide some kind of a remedy for the farmer of the West who might be subject to shortage, I think the question will have to be dealt with separately. It should not be mixed up with the question of the transportation of grain in the Great Lake carriers. The grain loses its distinctive individuality and there is no method of identifying the farmer's grain after it has gone into the lake vessel. It is all put in the hold of the vessel and it would be almost impossible to trace it through the terminal elevators at Fort William and away back to the loading platform of the farmer who originally shipped it.

Mr. SPEAKER: As the hon. gentleman has already spoken he could not properly go beyond an explanation in reference to the question raised by the hon. member on this side of the House.

Mr. WRIGHT: I was only trying to touch the point raised by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb). I had no intention of going into the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: While I see some force in the argument of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that in the general course of events it could not be that the shipper entered into the question as to the responsibility for shortage, still, one can conceive of a case where possibly he might do so. I do not look upon it as a case between the Western farmer and the elevator companies or lake carriers. The shipper is in another category altogether. He is not an exporter on the one hand or a farmer on the other. He is a grain dealer usually operating on the grain exchange at Winnipeg. However, the question comes in here: the lake carrier seems to be of the view that the shipper is the man who should in general be responsible. Whether they are correct in that view or not, they take that view and they press it very strongly. Consequently, if we are to relegate to the Grain Commission we should relegate the whole question and let them decide it. Although we feel that the shipper should in general be exempt from the question, still it is evident that when we are relegating to the commission we should let the commission decide that as well as the rest. We give them no directions at all. We simply say that if in any specific case you will find the shipper has gained an advantage where the grain has been overweighed out of the elevator you have a right to adjust it accordingly. If they agree with the hon. member for Edmonton that in any case he should not be responsible, they will not hold him responsible. Surely it is the duty of the House, when we are submitting the question to a tribunal, because we cannot bring the parties to the question together, not to tie the hands of the tribunal but to submit to such tribunal the whole question and not a part alone.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not know that I can say anything to reinforce what has been already said, and particularly what has been said by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Meighen), but there are two main facts in connection with it. In the first place, it is not, I think, pertinent to try to confuse the original producer of the grain, in the guise of the small farmer, or even of the comparatively large farmer, with the shipper. He is largely the shipper of the grain from the locality but very often sells to the street buyer or the track buyer and so he has no interest in the grain thereafter. In many cases he ships from the loading platform and in many other cases he sends in quantities through the local elevator. He is the shipper in these cases, but the facts of the case are that when you come to ship out from the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, the original farmer is almost entirely eliminated. The grain at that point has got into the hands of the intermediate and large buyers and they are the people who are the shippers from that point on. The farmer, away back in the producing centre, has very little interest as far as this legislation is concerned. The other fact is this: We have in this measure worked out an arrangement. If this measure is thought to be wise, we are handing over the matter of the adjustment of this much vexed question to a body which has more experience than we have, and it is only right that we should give to them broad powers to make the adjustment between all concerned. It is true in a sense that the shipper has no mechanical interest in, or power over, his grain after it has been weighed out of the Government elevator and the weight has been adduced. That is true, but he is still the owner of the grain and he has chief interest in it. In the case of the overweighing of grain, where it would be to the advantage of the shipper he should not be eliminated from the adjustment. The third fact is that it must be borne in mind that we are simply relegating this question to the board which understands the matter and will take every one of these interests into consideration. If the shipper has no interest, and it will so appear to them, he does not come into the adjustment at all, but if there is an interest and it so appears to them, why should we limit their power to spread the adjustment over all the parties to the transaction? I trust that my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) will not press his motion. This is a small piece of legislation which has been very carefully thought over and discussed with the Board of Grain Commissioners, and we have put it in about the best possible way we could. I should be disposed to think that the House would be well advised to just let it go through without proposing further amendments. At the same time it is quite open to any one to press his views.

Mr. OLIVER: Have I the right to say a word now in conclusion?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There is no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is with the consent of the House.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not wish to trespass on the House, but I thought it was my prerogative.

Mr. SPEAKER: Not on a substantive motion.

Mr. OLIVER: Well, then, I will not say anything.

[Sir George E. Foster.]

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There is no objection.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not wish to prolong the discussion at all. I wish to correct the impression that seems to have occurred to the mind of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright), and to that of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), that I was particularly advocating the case of the rural producer and outside shipper. He was not the person I had in mind at all; I was dealing with the shipper as he is generally understood, and on representations made to me which seemed to be concurred in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the Solicitor General, that it being perfectly clear that the shipper was not and could not be in any degree responsible for the shortages, he certainly should not be, so to speak, on the Indian list, subject to the discretion of the Board of Grain Commissioners. I am quite satisfied with the good faith of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and of their readiness to do what is right; but we are supposed to have responsibility and to exercise it in this House of Commons, and if we are satisfied that two and two actually make four, I do not think we are entitled to put in our legislation a suggestion that on the opinion of some one else two and two may make five. This is a question of absolute fact as to the lack of responsibility on the part of the shipper, and that being an absolute and established fact, I cannot agree that it is wise legislation to turn over to the Board of Grain Commissioners the authority to say differently. Let the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he wishes, put it this way, that if the Board of Grain Commissioners on their examining into the question find that in a possible case the shipper may have responsibility, then they can make representations to this House and we can amend our legislation accordingly. I think that would be the fairer way to deal with the matter.

The principal purpose that I had in moving the amendment on the first new section was in its relation to the second section which I will deal with when this amendment has been disposed of. The matter comes up much more directly on the second section than on the first, but in order to have the case in line in both sections, it was necessary to make this amendment in regard to the first section.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member will not have the right to move another amendment, because he has now exhausted his right to speak on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER: Then might I add what I wish to say in regard to the second section? I was under the impression that I could move an amendment to each section and speak on each amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think I reminded the hon. member that his original motion was not in proper form—that it should be that the Bill be referred back to the committee for further consideration, but not on any one section. That I understood was done.

Amendment (Mr. Oliver) negatived.

Mr. KNOWLES: I desire to move in amendent:

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration for the purpose of amendment by striking out the words "and shippers" where they occur in the seventh line of section 120 (b) and by inserting the word "and" between the words "operators" and "water-carriers," where they occur in the sixth line of the said section.

Mr. SPEAKER: This amendment in my judgment is out of order. When a Bill is referred to a committee, it is in order to give instructions to that committee to do certain things that otherwise it has not the power to do. The Committee of the Whole has the power to do, without instructions from the House, what the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) desires done, when the Bill has been referred back for further consideration, and as that amendment has been negatived already this amendment is out of order.

12 noon.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

PROPOSED GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

On motion of Hon. Frank Cochrane (Minister of Railways and Canals), Bill No. 119, to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, was read the third time, and passed.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 122, to amend the Winding-Up Act, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS' VOTING BILL.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 111, to enable Canadians on active military service during the present war to exercise their electoral franchise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will the hon. gentleman please explain this Bill, we have had no information so far.

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of this Bill is to enable Canadians on active military service, whether in this country or outside of Canada, to exercise their electoral franchise. Under the provisions of this Bill, every soldier, twenty-one years of age and a British subject, will be entitled to vote in the event of occasion arising for him to exercise that right. That vote he will be entitled to have recorded within the electoral district wherein he has resided for thirty days preceding his enlistment or enrolment. That is the general rule proposed with regard to the locality as to which this right to vote shall be exercised. There is, however, a proviso that where any soldier has a right to vote, irrespective of this Bill, in any particular electoral district, he shall vote in that electoral district, and, of course in that electoral district only.

To provide means to enable the soldier upon active service to register his vote is the purpose of the great bulk of the provisions of the Bill. The system may be summarized as follows: It is proposed that upon this law being enacted, ballots should be prepared sufficient in number for the number of men who may be entitled to exercise the right under this Bill.

Mr. MARCIL: Prepared by whom?

Mr. DOHERTY: Printed as we would print ballots for any ordinary election. There would be prepared also a form of affidavit to be made by the soldier who votes under this Bill, and a form of certificate to be given by the officer, who, under the Act would receive the ballots. These ballots being printed, a sufficient quantity would be sent to the different officers commanding at the military bases in Canada, to the officer commanding the Canadian troops in Bermuda, and to the office of the High Commissioner in London, whose secretary is constituted the custodian of these ballots. In the event of a writ being issued for an election, the fact would be at once communicated to the different officers commanding both in Canada and in Bermuda, and to the secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London. In the two latter cases, it would probably have to be done by telegraph, and provision is made for it being so done. On the receipt of this information, it becomes the duty of the custodians of these ballots to make a distribution of them to the persons entitled to receive them. As regards the commanding officers in Canada and Bermuda, that distribution would be made directly to the soldiers under their command. With regard to the ballot for the soldiers overseas, on receipt of information of the issue of an election writ, it would become the duty of the secretary of the High Commissioner to see that these ballots are forwarded to the different officers commanding the several units wherever they may be found. The method provided whereby the soldier is to vote is that being furnished with a ballot, he shall mark the ballot in the presence of a commissioned officer, but shall so mark it that while the officer shall be in a position to know that it is the soldier himself who marks the ballot, he will not be able to know in what way he marks it; that is, he will not be able to know how the soldier votes.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the officer be sworn?

Mr. DOHERTY: As the power is conferred on commissioned officers, the Bill does not propose to require an oath from the officer in regard to the matter. It was considered that we might entrust that duty to the officer in his official capacity. If, on consideration of the Bill, the sense of the House should be that it would be desirable that the officer be sworn particularly for the purpose, I do not know that there would be any material objection to that being done. The ballots having been marked in the presence of the officer, the soldier also would make an affidavit as to his qualifications and as to the place in which he had resided before his enlistment or his address in any electoral district in which he may have had a vote irrespective of this Bill. The affidavit is to be sworn before the officer and attested by the officer. The ballot and the affidavit will be enclosed in an envelope and sealed by the officer who will also endorse upon the back of it a certificate that the person who made the enclosed affidavit is known to him as a member of his company, platoon, or whatever the subdivision may be and as the person whose name appears, and that, to the best of the officer's knowledge, the statements in the affidavit made by the soldier are true, these envelopes will be addressed and forwarded by mail to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It will become the duty of that officer, upon receipt of these ballots, to distribute them among the different electoral districts in which the votes are to be registered. In what electoral district the vote contained in a given envelope is to be cast will appear, of course, by the attestation on the exterior of the envelope made by the officer. On the face of that will appear the address given by the soldier. It was suggested that the soldier should state the electoral district; but it was pointed out that, particularly in view of our recent redistribution, there might be confusion as to the exact title of the district. With the address given it will be a simple matter for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to distribute the ballots to the several districts in which they should be registered.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has the Government a complete list of the names, post office addresses and residences of all the men who have enlisted?

Mr. DOHERTY: No; I do not think we have in our possession a list that would show the residences of all the men who have gone to the front. My right hon. friend suggests that we should, because of this, withdraw this Bill, but I do not think that that is a reason why we should do so. The committee had knowledge of that fact when they were considering the Bill, and I do not myself see that the absence of a list, showing the former residences of those at the front is an insuperable obstacle to the carrying out of this proposed legislation. Only the other day Parliament went on record in support of the maintenance of the law providing that in one or more of the provinces of this Dominion a man presenting himself to a returning officer and swearing to his qualifications was entitled to have his vote recorded.

Mr. TURRIFF: But representatives of both candidates are present at the time.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand that, and before I have finished my explanation it will be seen that representatives of both candidates will control, to some extent at least, these declarations of the soldiers. In principle, if the soldier swears to his qualifications, I think that we may at least give to him the same credence that we give to voters in certain of the provinces of this Dominion. It is not considered an insuperable obstacle to their voting that there is not in existence an exact list showing where their residences have been in the past or what their qualifications are. I do not quite see that we should refuse to the soldier whose name is not on a list what we are willing to give to the citizen who is in the same position. It will appear on the certificate on the exterior of the envelope where the ballot ought to be deposited, and it will be the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having received this envelope sealed, to affix his own seal to it, and, putting together in one parcel all the envelopes that belong to a particular electoral district, to forward the bundle, properly sealed by himself, to the returning officer for that electoral district. Upon the receipt of such parcel containing ballots of this kind, it will become the duty of the returning officer to notify the candidates or their representatives that he has received such a parcel of ballots and that he will proceed, upon the day fixed for the election, at a certain hour after the close of the polls, to open this parcel and to deposit the ballots contained therein. In that way the candidates or their representatives will be enabled to control the operations of the returning officers in regard to these ballots. The ballot, when marked by the soldier, is to be folded, as all ballots are, in such manner that it will not appear on the exterior how he has voted. The returning officer, having given the notice mentioned, is on the polling day to proceed to open the parcel in the presence of the candidates or their representatives, and, having submitted the exterior of the envelopes to the examination of the parties interested, if there be no objection, it is his duty to open the envelopes, withdraw the affidavits and submit them to the candidates and their representatives. These being found regular and satisfactory, he is to take the ballot from the envelope and drop them in the ballot box, just as the deputy returnng officer takes the ballot from any voter who presents himself at the poll and drops it into the ballot box. These ballots so dropped into the box will be counted and credited to the representatives of the parties for whom these votes have been cast.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What safeguards are there that the ballots marked by the soldiers will be the ballots returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?

Mr. DOHERTY: The safeguards are, that that ballot is, in the presence of the soldier, inserted in an envelope sealed by his officer.

Mr. GERMAN: The Bill does not say "sealed."

Mr. DOHERTY: If it does not say "sealed," but we can provide for that. Certainly the intention was that it should.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What puzzles me is what absolute safeguard there will be.

Mr. DOHERTY: If we are looking for absolute safeguards, I do not think that we can find them. We have to trust men in respect to the voting that is done at home; and notwithstanding all the precautions that we take, a dishonest officer can act dishonestly and defeat the purpose of the law.

Mr. GERMAN: When there are scrutineers at his elbow, acting on behalf of both parties, he cannot very well act wrongly, but there are no scrutineers at the front.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are no scrutineers at the front, nor will the ballot be deposited in the box at the front. What we have at the front is the commissioned officer of the men who are voting. We are, therefore, confiding to the commissioned officers of our troops the confidence that we give to the deputy returning officers in this country; and if that is a risk that we should not take, we have to admit that we are taking it. But I do not think that it can be suggested that we cannot place the same confidence in our officers who are at the front that we put in the deputy returning officers who are selected by the returning officers to preside over the operations that take place at the polls.

Mr. KNOWLES: Does the minister mean that the only difference in the way of safeguards is that the commissioned officer is substituted for the deputy returning officer, and that in all other respects the safeguards are as great in the one case as in the other.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is not the presence or representatives of candidates; that is true.

Mr. MARCIL: And the officers are not sworn.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I said to the hon. member, if it is considered necessary that we should swear these officers for this particular duty, personally I would see no objection to its being done. It is not provided in the Bill. As the matter presented itself to the minds of those who submitted the Bill to the House, it did not appear to be necessary. It seemed to us that the honest performance of this duty might have been entrusted to an officer in his capacity of officer, relying upon the traditional honour of one who is an officer and a gentleman.

Mr. MARCIL: We swear our own returning officers.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, and I am not suggesting that it might not be advisable to swear the officers.

Mr. TURRIFF: Would the minister think it perfectly safe to leave the handing of the vote to deputy returning officers without scrutineers of either party being present?

Mr. DOHERTY: I wish to state frankly now that if the view put forward is that before the soldier votes we must surround his vote with all of the protections which surround the vote of a man in this country, this Bill does not attain that object. Those who submitted this Bill thought, however, that the right in the exercise of which this Bill seeks to protect the soldier was of such importance that we should be willing, providing we had reasonable precautions, to waive some of the details of the operations that surround the voting at home.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The minister has stated that some certain provision was recommended by somebody in the committee. I would like to have it understood that this Bill has not been recommended by the committee. It was opposed by the minority of the committee and was not even recommended by anybody on the committee. Probably there is no difference between us on that.

Mr. DOHERTY: Absolutely none. I said when the Bill was laid before the House that the committee was not making a recommendation, was not unanimous in submitting it to the House, that the minority of the committee did not approve either of the measure in principle or of the method provided in the Bill for giving it effect; and I did not say that the committee had recommended this. I said that those who did recommend it took this responsibility. I do not hesitate to say that, so far as I am personally concerned—and I think I speak in that regard for a majority of the committee—we do recommend this Bill to the favourable consideration of the House.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: You do not do it very strongly.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do it just as I do everything that I do, I do it sincerely. The strength with which I may do it depends on the force that my representations may exercise upon the judgment of the House, but I am prepared to say that I put this measure forward with all the sincerity with which I have ever put forward any measure. I am prepared to admit that it may be open to criticism in its details, and I am of course prepared to admit that there may be gentlemen in this House who can suggest a better method of carrying out what is proposed to be carried out; but in so far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, I would be surprised to find that there was not a general consensus that if this thing can be, and I believe it can be, properly carried out, we should see to it that the soldier who has sacrificed so much in order to do our work and to carry Canada's honour through this struggle, should not be asked in addition to all his other sacrifices to make the sacrifice of his right to have his voice heard in the determination of the public questions of this country. I did not think it was necessary for me to endeavour to make any extra evidence of the strength of my convictions, because I fancied that was a conviction that was shared by everybody.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister gives the votes to those who are voters as well as to those who are not voters.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes; we endeavour to secure to the man who is a voter a manner by which he can exercise his vote. But we say that the man who is a soldier and a British subject engaged actively in the service of this country and of the Empire shall have a vote for that reason, even if there be no other reason why he should have a vote. Somebody has said that the men who are good enough to do our fighting are good enough to do some of our voting.

Mr. MARCIL: Why do you not leave out those who are under 21 years of age?

Mr. DOHERTY: In that regard I think it might be fair that we should make that requirement of a man being of age. I would not very strongly resist a suggestion in this connection.

Mr. GERMAN: Why leave out the men serving in the navy?

Mr. DOHERTY: Because as far as we could ascertain, their number is very few. However, if hon. gentlemen's only objection to the Bill is that we have left out the men who are serving in the navy, I am sure, speaking for the majority of the committee, we shall be most happy to include the men serving in the navy. The Bill was originally drafted in that way, but two things were pointed out: In the first place, that the number of men serving in the navy who were properly speaking Canadians was very small, and, in the second place, that the sea is very wide and whatever means we may have to make the ballot reach the man who is on land wherever he may be, we have not the same means of making these ballots reach the men who are in the navy, and may be at sea where they cannot be reached.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: They would be more easily reached than the soldiers.

Mr. DOHERTY: If that is the only difficulty in the way we shall be most happy to extend this provision so as to make it apply to the navy.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Have the Government been in communication with the military authorities of Great Britain as to how far they will be prepared to give facilities for carrying out this Act?

Mr. DOHERTY: No. If there is one thing that never occurred to my mind as a thing concerning which we should consult any outside authority, even the Imperial authorities, it is the question of how far we should extend the Canadian franchise. That is a matter that I think belongs to this Parliament to determine

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: We should have to get permission before the soldiers could vote.

Mr. DOHERTY: We are providing that under the law of Canada there shall be a right, and we are providing a method by which that right can be exercised. We have absolute confidence that if the exercise of that right would interfere with the proper performance of the military duties of any Canadian soldier, he would, in the face of the major duty that was incumbent upon him as a soldier, sacrifice the right that we are securing to him. We have no doubt that the Imperial authorities to whom we have handed over our soldiers will see to it that the exercise of this right on the part of our soldiers is not allowed to interfere—even if we concede that there is a danger that our soldiers might allow it to interfere—with the due performance of their military duties. In this country, all of us sometimes find ourselves in situations where the performance of a duty, very much less important than the performance of the military duty of a soldier, makes it impossible for us to vote. But because that may happen, are we going to refuse to provide a method whereby the soldier who, at the time he is called upon to vote, finds himself in a position to exercise that right without interference with the performance of his military duties—are we going to say that that soldier shall not have an opportunity of exercising that right? We are not seeking to impose anything upon the War Office; we are not seeking to interfere with the control of the soldiers that Canada has given into the hands of the War Office. But we are saying that those soldiers are Canadians, and that as they are Canadians they shall have the right to register a vote; and we are taking pains to provide a means for the exercise of that right. How that can be an interference with the control of their military superiors, I must confess I am at a loss to see. Undoubtedly the military authorities will see to it that these men perform their military duties, and undoubtedly not one of our soldiers would for a single moment dream of dropping his military duty, if that were necessary, to avail himself of the opportunity of exercising the right that this Bill seeks to give him. But his right will be recognized. We are simply proproviding means whereby he may exercise that right. But if paramount and superior duties interfere with the exercise of that right, he will be in the unfortunate position of not being able to avail himself of the right that we are recognizing to him; just the same as many of us in this country are sometimes prevented from voting by some duty, although that duty may not be so important as the military duty of a soldier. I am at a loss to see how the idea arises that, in recognizing to this man a right, and providing a method for its exercise, we are in any manner whatever interfering with the military control of the War Office and its officers.

Mr. KNOWLES: Several British subjects in my riding are French reservists, and are now fighting with the armies of France. Will the minister approach the French Government in order to let these men vote?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is a somewhat exceptional case, to which our attention has not been previously called.

Mr. GRAHAM: Quite a lot of French reservists from Montreal are with the French army.

Mr. PROULX: Will the minister give votes to British subjects who are prisoners of war in Germany?

Mr. DOHERTY: We are giving them the right to vote, the same as we are giving that right to every other Canadian soldier. If they are detained by the enemy I am afraid that will prevent their availing themselves of the right to exercise their vote. The hon. gentleman seems to think that if it can be shown that any soldier will not be able to vote under this Act, we should in consequence not let any other soldier vote. It would be just as reasonable if somebody got up and said: We have our General Elections Act, but there may be a man sick in hospital who may be unable to rise from his bed to vote; what are you doing for him?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Arrangements could be made whereby the man in the hospital could vote. The ballots might be sent to the nurses.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does the hon. gentleman propose that that should be done?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not know, it is a very difficult question.

Mr. DOHERTY: Then he ought to condemn the existing election law.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If it be possible, I am in favour of giving our soldiers the right to vote, but the difficulty is as to the means. Let me ask a question. A soldier who wants to vote conscientiously would want to be informed of the issues, but the ballot that it is proposed to send to him says nothing about the issues. The soldier has to vote for or against the Government, or for an Independent. Does the minister propose any method whereby campaign literature issued by both sides shall be forwarded to the soldiers, so that they may be informed on the questions at issue?

Mr. DOHERTY: The idea of providing for electioneering among the soldiers never occurred to the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister will find several of the officers engaged in electioneering.

Mr. DOHERTY: We were not looking at this matter from the point of view of an electioneering device.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Qui s'excuse s'accuse.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. DOHERTY: The first suggestion of electioneering came from the hon. gentleman himself, and it is not surprising that I should repudiate it at once. He did not give me time to accuse myself, but went forward to suggest the accusation. I was going on to say that if the doctrine is laid down that, unless you can get an arrangement under which every soldier will be able to register his vote, you should not let any soldier vote, then the Bill might as well be dropped. We have an election law in this country under whose enactments large numbers of people who have the right to vote find themselves, by reason of certain circumstances, in a position where they cannot avail themselves of this right, and there will be some soldiers who will not be in a position to exercise this right—the prisoners of war in Germany, for instance.

Mr. TURRIFF: Get the German commanding officers to assist you. That will be just as reasonable as this proposal.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. member was drafting the Bill, perhaps he would think the German commanding officer a suitable person for an election officer; but the majority of us do not think so.

Mr. DEMERS: Has the hon. Minister thought of a different kind of ballot form, than that provided for in Schedule A of this Bill? Because the ballot form provided for in the Bill cannot most certainly meet all the different cases which may happen to occur. Let us imagine for instance a case where there will be three independent candidates.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Might I suggest to my hon. friend and the House generally, that the purpose of the Minister of Justice in rising was to give an explanation of the Bill. The discussion, however, has gone on very much as if we were in committee. When the Bill gets into committee a great many of the questions which relate to the particular provisions of the Bill will be very proper. I would suggest that the inquiries which have been made, and to which no objection has been hitherto taken, might very well be reserved until we get into the committee stage. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice might be permitted to make the explanation for which he was asked by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. DOHERTY: As regards the details, when we go into committee, I think hon. members will find that I have a perfectly open mind and that I am quite prepared to accept any suggestions which will improve the machinery by which the purpose sought to be attained by this Act is carried out. The thing that is important is the purpose in view, and while we suggest this method of doing it, we do it realizing that it no doubt would be possible to improve it and we will be only too anxious to accept any suggestions in that direction.

Mr. PROULX: Does the Minister of Justice know whether the Imperial Parliament is providing any such means to enable the English soldiers to cast their votes? It may be that they will have to hold an election in England before it is necessary to hold one in Canada.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not aware that the Imperial Parliament is legislating upon this subject. As I said a little while ago, in regard to the other matter, I would be disposed to let the Parliament of Canada take the responsibility of determining what is best from the point of view of the exercise of the franchise in Canada, and leave it to the Parliament of the United Kingdom to exercise its own judgment as to what may be a desirable course for itself.

Mr. NESBITT: Has there been any demand from the soldiers for this Bill?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would like to say, in regard to many of the questions, that while I am very reluctant to interfere, they do not seem to me to be exactly in order at this stage. The second reading of the Bill is simply the stage in which the principle of the Bill is discussed.

Mr. NESBITT: This is the principle, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is asking a question in regard to what is taking place in another part of the world. The principle of the Bill is on the right of the soldiers to vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Surely it is important to consider what is being done in the mother of parliaments?

Mr. SPEAKER: I know, but the asking of questions which would be more appropriate in the committee stage does not seem to me to be exactly in order. I have been reluctant to interfere or to interrupt hon. members in putting these questions. I think hon. gentlemen should remember that we are simply discussing the principle of the Bill and that these details may be considered when the House is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NESBITT: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, if you consider my question out of order?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would regard the question as rather out of order.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: With every disposition to regard as important the suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minister, may I ask a supplementary question in regard to what I have already said? Would not the minister consider it very unfortunate if a different view should be found to prevail in the mind of Lord Kitchener in regard to the facilities for voting at the front from that which seems to animate this Government? Would not my hon. friend think that it would be an unfortunate contingency should it arise?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not quite grasp the seriousness of the risk. I am not supposing for a moment that Lord Kitchener, or any other British military authority, would want to interfere with the exercise of this right merely because in his opinion Canadian soldiers ought not to vote in Canada.

Mr. CLARK: The military authorities are in absolute control of everything going on at the front.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, they are in absolute control and I was going on to say that I have no doubt that they will so exercise that absolute control as to see that anything that interferes with the soldier's paramount duty does not take place.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What is his paramount duty?

Mr. DOHERTY: His paramount duty—

Mr. MACLEAN: It is to fight, is it not?

Mr. DOHERTY: His paramount duty is at the front, and his paramount duty is to bear himself like a man in the great struggle in which he is engaged, but I cannot see that it is inconsistent with the perfect performance of that duty, assuming that the conditions and circumstances permit of it, that he should give some thought to what may be good for Canada here at home and what may be good for her from the point of view of the determination of how she is to be governed. It seems to me that the two things ought to go hand in hand. The same spirit which animates the soldier to his duty in the fighting line should animate the citizen to do his duty in expressing conscientiously and honestly what he believes to be best upon the great question of the control of the affairs of his country and the great question of the preservation of her interests all of which are involved in any general election. I cannot see that there is any inconsistency between the performance of these two duties. I have difficulty in quite seizing whence comes the suggestion that in voting there is something that involves a departure from the highest principles and the highest ideals. I put fighting and voting on the same level. They are both of them duties to one's country and I cannot conceive why it should be suggested that there is something derogatory in making it possible for a man to perform both of these duties at the same time. I cannot conceive why it should be suggested that we have to apprehend that Lord Kitchener will intervene to prohibit this and create an unpleasant situation. I have no doubt that Lord Kitchener and the military authorities will see that the opportunity we are giving the soldier to exercise this right is not allowed to interfere with the performance of his paramount duty. It is not our idea that the soldier himself would wish it to be so. We are willing to trust him with this right without fear that, because he has it and we have given him the means of exercising it, he will, for the sake of exercising it, forget the great purpose for which he is where he is. But if the military authorities in one portion of the seat of war, or in another portion, or perhaps throughout the entire front, find that conditions make it necessary that the men should be placed in such a position as they will not be able to avail themselves of this right, I do not see that any unfortunate situation is created or that it will be unfortunate if they cannot, by reason of the call of a higher duty, avail themselves of the opportunity that we are putting before them. What we are doing is this: We are recognizing the right of the soldier to vote; we are endeavouring to prevent him from being called upon to sacrifice that right because he has gone forward to the front, and with all respect, I think there is no body in this world other than this Parliament that has any right to express any opinion upon the question whether that ought to be done or not. Whether it is consistent with the performance of military duty properly under given circumstances that a man should get time or opportunity to vote, is a question for the War Office, and one which I have no doubt it will properly decide; but I cannot for one moment suppose that Lord Kitchener or any other of the British authorities is going to take upon himself to determine merely as an abstract question whether or not we in Canada should so legislate that our Canadian soldiers shall have recognized to them their rights as citizens; and provide a means whereby they may exercise that right.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: To clear up this point and to give the minister an opportunity to clear it up, I may say that I have been told by a man who has been a soldier for years that it would be contrary to military discipline as practised in the British army for a soldier at the front to vote. If that is so, would it not have been wise for the Government to solicit that information before putting Parliament and the country to a political discussion upon the question?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The soldiers in the garrison at Halifax have always voted, provided they had the right to vote.

Mr. CLARK: At the front.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not aware whether there is such a rule as the hon member has suggested, but assuming that there is such a rule, I do not know that that would be a conclusive reason why we should say that a soldier shall have no right to vote, and that we shall provide no means by which he may do so. With all respect, I would think that under such circumstances it might perhaps be for those who made that rule of military discipline to consider whether they had not a duty in the premises, but that is a matter for their consideration. As I said before, it is for us to determine who shall have the franchise in this country, and to provide a method for those who should have it whereby, in conformity with the law of this country, they may exercise that right. If they be subject to other duties of military discipline which prevent their exercising that right, we at all events have done our part; the people of Canada have shown to the men who have gone forward to the front to fight for them that, so far as it depends upon the people of Canada speaking through their parliamentary representatives, every right which those men might otherwise have shall be guaranteed to them, and that in so far as the people of Canada can furnish them a means to exercise that right, they shall have that means. The responsibility for the rules of military discipline will rest with those who make them, and we do not undertake to over-ride them. We have done our full duty when we provide under our law for the recognition and protection of the soldier's rights as a citizen, when we make it clear to him that we do not force him to add to all his other sacrifices the sacrifice of his right of franchise as a citizen. What may be the proper rule of discipline is for the military authorities to determine, and whether that rule of discipline should interfere with the exercise of the right of the soldier as a citizen, must of course, by force of circumstances and in the nature of things, be determined by the military authorities.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DOHERTY: Before the House rose I had endeavoured to set forth the principle of the measure and to give its outlines. I was led quite willingly into more detail than was strictly necessary by questions which I am very happy to answer. I would like to point out that the idea of soldiers on active service voting in an election, or a method being provided whereby persons who are not able, as soldiers are not able, to be in their own electoral districts at the time of polling, may be enabled to vote, is not new. They are both new, I think, in this country; but as long ago as the Civil War in the United States, we saw the right to the franchise of the soldier in the field recognized and an effective method provided whereby he could exercise that franchise. It is quite true that the circumstances were not identical with those surrounding our soldiers to-day, but it is also true that those circumstances offered greater difficulties to the exercise of the franchise than our own soldiers would labour under so long as they remain within Canada. In the course of the American Civil War no less than thirteen states of the Union provided a system whereby the soldiers in the field were enabled to vote, and under these provisions 150,000 votes were cast in the election of 1864. The method by which these votes were taken differs from that which this Bill proposes to provide. It was possible there to provide differently, because the conditions were different. An arrangement was made whereby the different units chose election officers, and these election officers held the polls and took the ballots in the ordinary way and these ballots were forwarded. In some of the states provision was made that a soldier was entitled to register his vote in any electoral district in which he had resided for a period of ten days anterior to his enlistment. As the House is aware, the elections in the United States, even for the presidency or other federal office, are under the laws of the different states, each of these states electing a certain number of men to represent it in the Electoral College. As between states provisions differ in detail, but, generally, the vote was taken in the way I have indicated, and these votes were gathered by commissioners or electoral officers. These electoral officers or commissioners, as is provided here, wrote certificates on the back of the ballots, and the ballots were then sent to the judge of the electoral district in which the vote was to be cast, and it was then cast and counted practically in the manner which the Bill suggests the votes of our soldiers should be cast and counted. There was also provision, as in our Bill, for qualified electors establishing their qualification by means of affidavit. Many of the states of the Union have provision whereby persons absent for other reasons than the fact that they may be engaged in military service are enabled to vote. One of the states makes this provision with regard to soldiers in particular as a permanent law, but other states provide means by which any absentee can record his vote. I need not go into the matter further than to say that these measures do not differ, I believe, materially, from the system we propose. Provision is made for the enclosure of the ballot in the envelope and for its being forwarded; and, of course, where it is essential, in order to vote, that a person should be registered upon the list, provision is made for the establishment of the fact that he is so registered. In Australia, there is provision for a vote by absentees, and similar provision is made in New Zealand, Queensland, Victoria, and Tasmania. I may refer especially to the Tasmania law, where the machinery for the transmission of the vote is almost identical with that suggested here. Of course, it does not involve the intervention of military officers, because it is a law of general application under whose operation all persons who are absent from their electoral districts may exercise their franchise.

That vote is taken before such officers very much in the same way as we propose that the votes of our soldiers shall be taken; it is forwarded by mail to a general commissioner who receives and distributes those votes to the officer who fulfils the duties which are performed in this country by the returning officer. So far as I am aware, no evil effects have resulted from this kind of voting in any of these countries. I have been assured on what I believe to be reliable authority that in Tasmania the system has been found to work very satisfactorily. Even in England the idea is not absolutely new. I am not in a position to say that any law providing the means for such voting has been adopted, but in 1901 a Bill was introduced in the English House of Commons by Mr. McDonough and some eight other members, including Sir Christopher Furness, the purpose of which was to enable officers and seamen of the Royal and mercantile navies and fishermen to vote when absent. True, the Bill did not become law, but the principle of the Bill was adopted, and the second reading was carried by a vote of 150 to 47. So far as I have been able to see, for no reason other than the pressure of business then before the Imperial Parliament, the Bill failed to go through. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House think we are very daring when we venture to do anything which the United Kingdom has not done. Here we have the fact that the House of Commons of the United Kingdom in 1901 endorsed the principle of providing a method of voting for certain persons prevented, by what were considered to be sufficient reasons, from being present in their electoral districts to deposit their votes. Further than that, in connection with the present war, New Zealand passed a law for the precise purpose of enabling soldiers who had left the country to exercise their franchise in the election which at the time of the passing of the law was approaching, and which has since taken place. Under that law, soldiers absent from New Zealand were enabled to vote in the presence of officers specially appointed to act outside of New Zealand, and who were described as electoral commissioners. That vote was recorded upon a voting paper practically identical with the ballot form proposed by this Bill, and was forwarded to the chief electoral officer at the capital, as we propose to have the votes forwarded. They were transmitted by him to the different returning officers, opened in a manner very similar to that which we propose, and duly counted. That legislation was enacted specially for soldiers who had left New Zealand. With regard to details beyond what I have given, that Act left to the Governor in Council to settle by regulations the manner in which effect should be given to the Act. We have endeavoured to include in our Bill all the provisions governing the method of voting. It seems to those of us who do commend this Bill that it is more desirable that Parliament itself should fix the method of voting than that it should be left in the hands of the Government of the day.

Mr. MURPHY: Owing to my attendance at another committee. I was unable to attend all the meetings of the committee over which my hon. friend presided, but at the last meeting of that committee I raised a question as to this Bill alleged to have been passed by the Parliament of New Zealand, and also as to an election alleged to have been held after the passing of the Bill, in which the voting of soldiers is alleged to have taken place under the provisions of that Act. My hon. friend will recall that the committee asked its clerk to cable New Zealand and obtain particulars both as to the Bill and as to the alleged election. If these particulars have been obtained, I should be grateful to my hon. friend if he would give them to the committee.

Mr. DOHERTY: I was just about to add that the Bill had been acted upon. As the hon. member points out, the committee did suggest that a cablegram be sent to New Zealand inquiring as to the actual operation of the Act, and such cablegram was sent. The message was sent by the parliamentary counsel, through the clerk of this House. It was dated March 27, 1915, addressed to the Prime Minister of New Zealand and reads as follows:

> Was proposed Bill giving absent soldiers vote passed? Was vote taken? If yes, how many votes were cast? Please cable answer.

The answer received from the Prime Minister of New Zealand was as follows:

> In reply cable 28 your clerk House of Commons. Bill referred to passed and votes of all soldiers who left before general election recorded. Total votes, 10,000.

Mr. MURPHY: Were the votes of the soldiers taken before they left New Zealand?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, this Bill applied only to the soldiers who had left New Zealand. The law in New Zealand to which I refer, and which is referred to in these messages, was passed exclusively for the purpose of enabling soldiers who had left New Zealand to record their votes. Section 2 of that Act is:

> Every member of any expeditionary force sent from New Zealand to serve in the war in which His Majesty is at present engaged, shall be entitled to vote in the manner hereinafter prescribed.

Then, in dealing with the appointment of electoral officers this point is further made clear:

> Electoral officers may be appointed out of New Zealand for the purpose of enabling any person to record his vote under this Act who is a member of any expeditionary force sent out of New Zealand before the passing of this Act.

The soldiers who had not left New Zealand could vote under the general law providing for absentee voting.

Mr. MURPHY: Is the minister able to state where the soldiers cast their votes?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have not that information, but wherever they were, they were outside of New Zealand, and wherever they were, they would have been entitled to vote under that Act. As long ago as 1864 provision was made in the neighbouring republic to enable soldiers in the field to vote. The Government and the Congress of the United States in that day did not fear that a soldier would fight less well because he also voted in the elections upon which the fate of his country might depend just as fully as on the result of a war. We have the further fact that in all the different states of the Union, and the different dominions of this Empire that I have mentioned, a system for the registering of the votes of people who were absent from their own electoral district has been in force and in operation, and, as I am informed, has given rise to no ground for complaint. We are after all not in the face of any very novel proposition. Large and important parts of the world, where the ballot is looked upon as of as great sacredness and of as great importance as we look upon it, have found it possible to devise a method by which to get an honest and a safe vote of persons who were not actually at home. Some of these countries have gone so far as to extend the advantages of such a method to people who were absent on their own private and personal business only, and I am not prepared to say that they did not do properly. But I do ask the House, should we hesitate to take the risk in respect to our soldiers that they have been willing to take in the interest of persons whose absence was attributable only to their attention to their proper affairs. Should we not take the risk when it is a question of endeavouring to protect in the exercise of their right of franchise men who are absent from their homes and their country, for Canada's affairs, for the affairs of this Empire, and when their absence involves the risking of their very lives. New Zealand has solved the problem under practically the identical circumstances in which we are confronted with it. I may say that it is not the first time that New Zealand has set a good example to the other countries of the world, and I fancy we would make no mistake in following her lead.

I think I have said all that I can say with usefulness or advantage in moving the second reading of this Bill and commending it to the House for adoption. Some query has been made as to the strength of my commendation. As I said in answer to that question the House must judge as to the strength with which I have presented it. For my own part I pretend to nothing more than to commend it with all earnestness and all sincerity. I believe that it is impossible to justify the questioning of the soundness of the principle. I have seen a good deal of criticism of it, but it has seemed to me that the criticism rested upon the assumption that everything that surrounded the exercise of the franchise necessarily involved ignoble and unworthy dispute and strife. I cannot recognize the truth of that proposition. I cannot for one moment conceive that you are going to throw disorder and disunion into the ranks of our troops because you merely afford to each man, at his own option and in the exercise of his own liberty, an opportunity of recording his voice upon the question of how his country ought to be governed. I commend this Bill with all the sincerity and all the earnestness of which I am capable. I shall certainly be very glad of any suggestions that may serve to make it more workable, and to make it more effectually and safely attain the purpose in view. I commend it personally in no partisan spirit, and I have every confidence that it will be received and dealt with in no partisan spirit. I am satisfied that we ought to be able to all get together in a common endeavour to give to the men who are carrying to-day Canada's honour in their hands—the men who have possibly put many of us who are at home and will have every facility to vote, to the blush when we compare our conduct with theirs—the opportunity which Canada extends practically to all her sons, to have each his say, and to make his voice heard in the determination of the great issues upon which the future of Canada depends. To my mind everything that tends to facilitate the exercise of his franchise by every man entitled to vote, ought to be encouraged. There is no doubt that, looking at this from the point of view of the right of the soldier, the question is one of very great importance, and I do not think we need look further than to the fact that it is intended to afford him protection in the exercise of his rights, to find ample justification for making an effort to enable him to exercise that right. But over and above the rights of the soldier, or of any individual, is Canada's right to have her people vote. The country has the right to see that every honest man within her boundaries should give to her the advantage of his advice and his opinion as to the manner in which her affairs should be governed and directed. We count that 50,000 of Canada's sons will be absent from us before this war is over. We are ready to look forward to the possibility of twice 50,000 men being absent from our borders before this war is over. Is it fair to ask Canada to lose the advantage of having those 50,000 or 100,000, or other thousands that may be added to that number, cast their vote and give their views as to what is best for her? Is it not presumable that these thousands of men are among the best that Canada has to give, and shall we lightly sacrifice the advantage to Canada of their participation in decisions that may be as fraught with importance to her future as anything that possibly is involved in this war? I say from the point of view of this country that we should strain every nerve to secure to her the advantage of the participation in any election that may take place of these, her noblest and her best sons.

In conclusion, I simply want again to say that I ask ultimately the acceptance of this measure, and that as to the details, they ought to be given the best consideration of which we are capable. I am satisfied that there are hon. gentlemen in this House who can suggest methods of working this plan out that will be an improvement on those that the members of the committee who do commend the Bill have been able to find. I would in a very special manner welcome the aid and co-operation of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), who said this morning that with the principle of the Bill he was quite in agreement. I know no man in this House who can give more valuable aid towards the solution of such difficulties as the giving effect to the important principle involves, than that very hon. gentleman. This morning it seemed to me that there was on the part of some members a disposition to laugh at this measure. I would be sorry to suppose that that disposition, if it did exist, would persist. I should not like to make any reference to the class of people of whom it has been said: They came to laugh but remained to pray. Still less would I flatter myself that any words of mine could influence the state of mind of any hon. gentleman. But I have absolute confidence that if hon. gentlemen of this House will give serious thought to the principle involved, they will realize that the matter is a serious one, and that it calls for our most earnest consideration. I have confidence that if this House gives to this Bill the serious consideration that it deserves, the Bill, whether it be perfect now or not, will leave this House a fairly perfect measure. I do not question that there are difficulties in the way of providing a suitable method, but I believe we have found a solution. I do not question that there may be a better solution. I recognized at the very outset that there were difficulties in the way, but I was surprised to see that because I had said there were difficulties, some people inferred that it was impossible to find a solution. When it is a question of doing a thing that ought to be done, difficulties only exist in order that they may be overcome, and I am satisfied that with the earnest co-operation of the members of this House, without distinction of party, we shall triumphantly overcome the obstacles that stand in the way of the realization of the proposal of this Bill; and that the Parliament of Canada shall not separate until it has seen to it that should occasion arise our soldiers shall have their right to their vote protected, and Canada shall have the assurance of the benefit of their participation in any election that may take place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has expressed the hope that all those who had anything to do with this measure would approach it in a spirit of candour. Speaking for myself, I will say very candidly—and I hope my hon. friend will believe me, for I am speaking as sincerely as he has spoken—that I shall approach this measure in no other spirit than that which he has prayed for. There is no one in this House, I am sure, who would be disposed to question this measure, if the object of it could be attained consistently with the spirit and letter of our constitution. But I have to observe at once to my hon. friend that this measure is, I will not say revolutionary, but certainly very much more extensive than any we have to-day upon the statute book. This proposed legislation creates a new franchise. I am fairly familiar, though perhaps not so familiar as he, with the legislation of 1864 in the United States during the Civil War. I am aware that on that occasion several of the States of the Union passed laws to allow their soldiers in the field to cast their votes at the presidential election. I think I am correct in stating, however, that on no such occasion did any of those States create a new franchise. They simply provided that those who were electors in the States should be enabled to cast their votes in the field. But my hon. friend knows that the very first disposition of the Bill which he has brought down for our consideration is the creation of a franchise which does not exist to-day. My hon. friend gave the very inspiration of this legislation when, in the course of his observations, he stated that one who is good enough to take a share in the fight which is now going on, not only for the Empire, but for the whole of civilization, is good enough to take a share in the administration of this country. Let me observe at once that while these are glittering words they are, after all, nothing but words. They do not stand analysis, and the falsity of that phrasing of words is shown by the very first line of the first disposition of this Bill:

> Every male British subject of twenty-one years of age or upwards serving in the military forces of Canada in the present war. . . who, when he was appointed to or enlisted or enrolled in such forces, . . . shall be entitled to vote.

My hon. friend stated that any man who takes a share in this fight ought to be allowed to cast a vote in the impending election, and to be given a share in the administration of the country, but my hon. friend is aware—the statement has been made on the floor of this House—that there are within the Canadian forces hundreds, nay, perhaps thousands, of Americans who crossed over to this country for the purpose of enlisting and who are to-day taking a share in the fight. It is a matter of history that when the war broke out in August last, thousands of Americans who were in Paris, impelled by the sacredness of the cause for which France was fighting, at once gave up their life of luxury and took up the life of the soldier; and to-day these men are in the trenches doing their share in the fight for France, for England, for civilization. According to the dictum of the Minister of Justice, it is not only those who are British subjects who are entitled to take a share in the administration of this country, but all of our soldiers who are in the fight. If you maintain this principle, then, by a parity of reasoning, these Americans should also be given a share in the administration of the country. But no one would think of that, because it is inconsistent with responsible government as we understand it that those who are not subjects of the Realm should have the franchise, and so that class has to be eliminated. Again, hundreds of our fellow citizens, boys of our own flesh and blood of 16 or 17 or 18 years of age, have cast aside their prospects in life and risked everything in order to take a share in the fight which is going on. These young men did not wait until they were 21 years of age. My hon. friend does not contemplate giving them the right of suffrage, because the law is universal that the right of suffrage shall not be entrusted to those who are not of age. Therefore, it is not a truism to say, as was said by my hon. friend this morning, that he who is good enough to share in the fight is good enough to share in the administration of this country. We have laws and regulations, the result of the wisdom and experience of ages, which have determined that we may expect the blood and the sacrifice of the soldier, and yet that the soldier is not entitled to cast a vote in the administration of the country. That is so in this country; it is so in Great Britain; it is so in the United States. There are uniform laws governing the exercise of civil and political rights which no nation has yet contravened.

The first blemish I find in the measure of my hon. friend is that it creates a new franchise. If my hon. friend had been content with proposing a measure which would enable the soldier who is an elector to give his vote, it would have been less objectionable than this measure is. Sir, I need not recall to you the fact that in this country we have no Dominion franchise; we take the franchises of the provinces, but to-day we are creating a Dominion franchise for a certain purpose. The very example which my hon. friend has given of the American legislation of 1864, does not prove his case, but is rather against it, because the law of 1864 was not passed by Congress. The several states of the Union which had the right to legislate with reference to the franchise passed the laws, and if such a law is to be passed in this country, it ought to be left to the provinces which have the right to legislate with reference to the franchise.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does the right hon. gentleman contend that Congress had any constitutional power whatever to pass such a law? We have.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No doubt we have the power; the only question is whether we should exercise the power. It is not a question of power. I grant that we have the power to a certain extent, but I will show later on that we have no power to pass such a law as this. We have the power to pass a law which confers the franchise. We can discard to-morrow the provincial franchises upon which our elections have been carried on from 1867 to 1882 and from 1900 to the present day. But my hon. friend adds to the franchises of the provinces a new franchise especially for one class of His Majesty's subjects. The object of the Bill is to give to soldiers who are not in the country the right to vote. My hon. friend know as well as I do that there is in this country, and there will always be, a certain class of subjects who cannot exercise the franchise on election day. It was only a few days ago, when we were discussing a Bill—I think it was one of the electoral Bills—that the statement was made on one side and not contradicted on the other, that railway men—conductors, firemen and men of that class—cannot on election day cast their votes. The trains of the country must go on; certain duties have to be performed and the man who has to perform these duties cannot vote. Is there any difference in this respect between the railway man and the soldier? The railway man is not alone. The sailor, the fisherman, and the lumberman are very often not able to cast their votes. Within my own remembrance we have had three elections in winter time—in 1874, 1887 and 1891—and those whose memories go back to those days must recall that in many a constituency men who were voters could not register their votes because they were away in the bush doing their work as lumbermen. Between the soldier, the lumberman, the fisherman, the farmer and any other class, there is no difference whatever in this respect; all are subject to the same laws and all are equal before the law. We all certainly are proud of the soldier. But the soldier, in our economy, is no more entitled to favour than any other class of the community. The man who digs in the trenches of a railway is just as much entitled to favour as the man who digs in the trenches in France. The man who farms, who fishes, or who lumbers has just as much right to his vote as the soldier. But we make a special provision for the soldier. What do we give him? We recognize the duties which he performs for the country, we recognize the sacrifices which he makes, we recognize the dangers to which he is exposed and, therefore, if he is disabled, we provide to keep him for the rest of his days, and if he loses his life we provide for those who are dependent upon him. But when it comes to the matter of the franchise, all subjects of the King are on a footing of absolute equality.

There are in the Bill of my hon. friend provisions for the soldier who is at home and provisions for the soldier who is out of the country fighting in Europe. As to the soldier who is at home, there can be no necessity for any law. If he is in the country he can easily be allowed to vote where he is registered, and the military authorities would certainly give him leave to go wherever he had to go to record his vote. Therefore the measure applies only to the man who is serving out of the country—the man who has enlisted, and is no longer in Canada, but is in Bermuda or in Europe. This man is no longer under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament. Every one of the 50,000 men who have left the country, or who will leave the country, is no longer under the control and jurisdiction of this Parliament; he is a part of the British Army; he is under the control of British authority; he is under the jurisdiction of the War Office, and the War Office alone has the right to pass legislation for him or against him. My hon. friend gives power under such circumstances, but to whom does he give the power? Who is to exercise the authority? My hon. friend is trying by an Act of this Parliament to impose a duty upon the officers of the British army. Let me say to my hon. friend at once that every line of his Bill, even after it has been sanctioned by the Senate, even after it has been assented to by His Royal Highness the Governor General, is so much waste paper. This Parliament has no right to pass any legislation to impose any duty upon the officers of the British army, and my hon. friend has to some extent recognized this.

Before I proceed further let me go back to another radical disposition of this Bill by which the man who is going to vote is not going to vote as any man in Canada is going to vote: he is not going to vote for a candidate, he is not going to vote for a man, but he is going to vote for a party. This is the first time in British legislation, as far as my poor knowledge goes, that we have ever seen such a provision of law. We live under party government, but up to this time we have never carried party so far as to make it the object of an election. This is the first time, I repeat, as far as my information goes, and I believe that my information is absolutely accurate, that a voter in a British country will have been called upon to express his opinion, not upon a candidate but upon a party. Is that in accordance with the principle of British legislation? Although we believe in party, we respect the intelligence of the voter so much that we allow him to exercise his free judgment in voting upon the candidate rather than upon the party. It is impossible to separate the party from the candidate and the candidate from the party; and in every election there are men who belong to one party who refuse to cast their vote in favour of the candidate of that party, because they are not in sympathy with him. I will give a case in point. In the election of 1911, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister carried the city of Halifax, but a political opponent was elected at the same time with him. There was a dual contest: two candidates on each side and two to be elected, but it was not the ticket of one party or the ticket of the other that was elected, because while my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was at the head of the poll, his chief political opponent was next to him. What conclusion are we to draw from that? That a large proportion of the Conservative electorate did not believe in the other candidate and preferred to give their votes to the candidate of the other party. But why does my hon. friend not allow the ordinary machinery to be used, and why does he not permit the soldier at the front to vote for the candidate? The answer is that it is impossible to do so. For my part, I am not willing to create a new franchise, because I think that is absolutely wrong; but I am quite willing that the soldier who is a voter to-day should be allowed to vote if it is possible to provide means to enable him to vote. As I said before, however—and I come back to this idea—the whole Bill is radically wrong in this, that you are trying to exercise legislative authority over those over whom you have no authority at all.

There is a curious provision in the Bill as to those who are to be the registering officers. The ballots are to be sent to the Secretary of the High Commissioner in London and he is to send them—where? This is where the impossibility of the thing is disclosed. Let me call the attention of my hon. friend to section 3, subsection 2:

> If the corps is in Europe, the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall notify by telegraph cable the secretary of the High Commissioner for Canada of the issuing of the writ, and the secretary shall thereupon send a sufficient number of ballot papers, affidavits and envelopes to the proper officer or officers, and such officer or officers shall give each volunteer entitled to vote a ballot paper, affidavit and envelope.

Where do you find any definition in this Bill as to who is to be the proper officer or officers? There are now over 30,000 of our soldiers in Europe, who are part of the British army, and the units which existed when they left Canada are no longer the units in Great Britain or France. Those 30,000 men may be found in 30 different regiments, in 300 different companies. Who, therefore, is the proper officer or officers to become the returning officer?

The difficulty is so great that my hon. friend has not tried to solve it; he has left this vague disposition in the Bill. When you have a permanent organization which is running its ordinary course every day, you can refer certain duties to the proper officers; but this is not a permanent organization. It is not even a temporary organization; it is no organization at all; it has to be made for the occasion, and there is no disposition in this Bill to say where the ballots are to go. How can the Secretary of the High Commissioner, who is entrusted with the duty, know where the ballots are to go, and how will he be informed as to where the 30,000 or 50,000 men are? He does not know unless he can know by the grace of the War Office, and he does not know to whom he should address the envelopes and documents mentioned in this subsection. Is the proper officer to be the general of the division or the colonel of the regiment or the captain of the company? Who is to have authority over there? The weak point in the Bill, to which my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) referred when he questioned the minister upon it, is that you are imposing upon 20 or 30 or 40 officers of the British army duties in regard to which they have received no information and as to which they know nothing at all. This consideration, it seems to me, should show very forcibly to my hon. friend that, apart from the fact that we have no authority to give any instructions to officers of the British army, it is impossible to say where and how this Bill is to be carried out if it becomes law.

4 p.m.

All the points in this Bill are more or less technical, but I come now to a consideration which is very practical and as to which the minister, when he was questioned, did not in my opinion give any satisfactory answer. Elections are elections, whether they are at the front or elsewhere. They mean passion in the voter and in those who are inspiring the voter. The right of election presupposes the right of selection; and, if you give to the soldiers who are now at the front the right to vote, you also thereby give to the Government or to the Opposition the right to canvass. You cannot expect that the soldiers are going to perform their duty as electors unless they are instructed upon the issues. There is in this country not only the broad issue of the war—the issue of the war is of course the supreme issue—but many other considerations which will and must influence the judgment of the electors, and the soldier has a right to be instructed upon them. If you give to the soldier who is today in the trenches the right to vote, you sanction also the possibility of canvassing him; you sanction also the introduction into the army of the canvasser. I do not know how canvassers would be received in the British army; but there is another more insidious means of canvassing which is possible: you can canvass by mail, and who knows that the trenches will not be flooded with the kind of literature of which I gave the House a sample this morning? This is not a vain idea on my part, because this literature is issued by a great party, and it can go wherever there is a vote to be reached; and according to this Bill, if it becomes law, there is a vote to be reached in the trenches of France as there is in this country.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was delivered by Major Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Deputy of His Royal Highness the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate.

And having returned,

Mr. Speaker informed the House that His Honour the Deputy of his Royal Highness the Governor General had been pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act to amend the Canadian Patriotic Fund Act, 1914.

An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

An Act respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Athabaska and Grand Prairie Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Brantford and Hamilton Electric Railway Company.

An Act respecting the British Columbia and White River Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.

An Act respecting the James Bay and Eastern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Southern Central Pacific Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Independent Order of Foresters Consolidated Act.

An Act respecting the Title and Trust Company, and to change its name to Chartered Trust and Executor Company.

An Act respecting the Canada Preferred Insurance Company.

An Act respecting the Vancouver Life Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate Marcil Trust Company.

An Act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.

An Act respecting the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Toronto Eastern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Brulé, Grand Prairie and Peace River Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Manitoba and North Western Railway Company of Canada.

An Act respecting Pacific, Peace River and Athabaska Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.

An Act respecting the Athabaska Northern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Empire Life Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company, and to change its name to "The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation."

An Act respecting the Casualty Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Bank of Alberta.

An Act to incorporate Colonial Bank (Canada).

An Act to incorporate Alberta Permanent Trust Company.

An Act respecting the Western Dominion Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Western Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.

An Act respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate Entwistle and Alberta Southern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Simcoe, Grey and Bruce Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Kettle Valley Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate Fraser Valley Terminal Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

An Act respecting certain patents of the Lohmann Company.

An Act respecting the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.

An Act to amend the Bank Act.

An Act respecting the Van Buren Bridge Company.

An Act to incorporate Northern Pacific and British Columbia Railway Company.

An Act for the relief of William Ewart New.

An Act for the relief of Helene Suzette Baxter Douglas.

An Act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.

An Act respecting the patent of the National Wood Distilling Company.

An Act for the relief of Lottie Thorndike.

An Act respecting the Grain Growers' Grain Company, Limited.

An Act for the relief of Adam Clarke Anderson.

An Act for the relief of Alexander McIntyre.

An Act for the relief of Violet Burnett Delmege.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.

An Act for the relief of Arthur Ernest Birdsell.

An Act for the relief of Thomas Jefferson Moore.

An Act for the relief of Alice Beckett.

An Act for the relief of Austin McPhail Bothwell.

An Act for the relief of Agnès Gravelle.

An Act for the relief of Clara Elizabeth Darnell.

An Act for the relief of Thomas Batin Harries.

An Act for the relief of William John Owen Delaney.

An Act for the relief of Edith May Webster Boydell.

An Act for the relief of William Robert Delaney.

An Act respecting the Premier Trust Company.

An Act respecting the North West Life Assurance Company.

An Act respecting the Moncton and Northumberland Strait Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Judges Act.

An Act to supplement the Revenue required to meet War Expenditures.

An Act to authorize certain extensions of time to Insurance Companies.

An Act respecting certain issues of Dominion Notes.

SOLDIERS' VOTING BILL.

The House resumed, consideration of the motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) for the second reading of Bill, No. 111, to enable Canadians on active military service during the present war to exercise their electoral franchise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (resuming): It would be a mere truism for me to remind hon. gentlemen that the exercise of the franchise has always been surrounded with safeguards, not only to secure a correct expression of the opinion of the electors, but also to insure the due performance of their duties by the election officers and to establish a measure of absolute fair play between party and party. Our system of Government is a complicated one, but the supreme end that we should have in view is that there should be an honest expression of the opinions of the electorate, and that the will of the people should prevail. I do not means to say that the will of the people is always on the right side; but we must take the bad with the good. Though wrong may sometimes triumph; after all, the best system of Government that has yet been devised is that under which we live. The blemish, the fatal blemish, it seems to me, in the measure of my hon. friend is that it does not provide any of the safeguards which exist in this country when the people are called upon to give their verdict upon public questions, and which assure a correct expression of the will of the electors. There are in this Bill no such safeguards; and, if such safeguards are not provided, it is not because my hon. friend has been oblivious to the need of them. I am sure that he must have given more than one anxious hour to the consideration of this matter, and he must have found that it was not possible to provide for registering the votes in the trenches with the same attention and security as prevail in this country. If the Bill is silent upon this point, if it is a dead letter so far as this is concerned, it is only because it is not possible for the hon. gentleman to find safeguards which would afford a satisfactory solution of his problem.

What safeguards can we have? I need not enlarge upon the formalities which are required in our elections to provide that we shall have a minimum of fraud. Our law goes far to prevent fraud and to get an honest expression of public opinion. For instance, the law provides that scrutineers may be present, and very few frauds can be committed when they are present. The returning officer may be a partisan; in fact, returning officers have been accused more than once in this House of being partisans. There may be partisanship even at the front. It is well known to us all that in the heat of elections men who are in ordinary affairs honest and respectable citizens will take liberties with the law which they would never take in the prosecution of their own private business. The passion for party, the passion to win, makes men more or less callous upon such occasions. Is there anything which can justify my hon. friend in supposing that the same passions which rule on our side of the Atlantic will be powerless on the other side? Is there reason to believe that the instinct which moves a man on this side of the Atlantic to do the best he can, and even to go beyond the law, to obtain a triumph for the cause in which he believes, will not make its influence felt because the elections will be held under khaki instead of under worsted?

The only safeguard of which the Minister of Justice spoke this morning is that he trusts to the honour of the British officer. Sir, no man goes farther in his confidence in the British officer than I do. Everybody knows that nowhere in the world is honour more supreme than in the ranks of the British army, especially among the officers. But, Sir, the British army is composed of men like other men, and even among them it is possible to find men who are not quite infallible. It will not do for us to believe that they are of different flesh from ourselves. Their education may be better than ours and their accent more refined, but after all they are of the human race, and we must presume that human frailty affects them as it affects others. So we must assume that there will be offences. What provisions are made in respect to this matter? Let us see how the Bill provides that the vote is to be taken:

> The volunteer may thereupon make the affidavit in form B before any commissioned officer in the Canadian military forces, and, after making the affidavit, mark the ballot paper as a vote for the Government or the Opposition or for the independent candidate, in the presence of the said commissioned officer, but in such a manner as not to disclose to the officer how he is voting, and shall fold the ballot paper so that it cannot be read and shall then place the same, together with the affidavit, in an envelope upon the back of which shall be endorsed a certificate in form C.

Then that is to be transmitted to the returning officer. These are all the precautions taken, and they are no precautions at all. I submit to the consideration of the hon. minister himself that, taking the vote in this way, there and then you open a wide door for violation of the law and for fraud against the electors. Who is going to insure that the vote of the elector which is put in the envelope shall be the vote that comes to the returning officer? Who is going to insure that the envelope shall not be tampered with—that the vote shall not be tampered with? Such things have been known before. The law guards against such things now, but there is no such safeguard in the Bill. Let this Bill become law, and, I repeat, it opens the door wide for fraud and violation of the law.

My hon. friend suggests that we must trust the honour of the British officers; but he himself does not altogether trust the honour of the British officers, because, foreseeing a violation of the law, he has imposed penalties upon wrong doers. I direct attention to section 9 of the Bill:

> 9. Any person who wilfully and without lawful excuse:
>
> (a) causes any delay in the transmission or delivery to the returning officer of any envelope with the certificate endorsed in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or
>
> (b) opens any such envelope, or
>
> (c) shall attempt to obtain or communicate any information as to the party or person for whom any vote is given in any particular ballot paper used under the provisions of this Act, or
>
> (d) prevents or endeavours to prevent any volunteer entitled to vote hereunder from voting, or
>
> (e) makes any untrue statement as to his name or corps for insertion in a certificate, or
>
> (f) signs a certificate containing any untrue statement, shall be liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

The hon. gentleman who fathers this Bill has foreseen that offences of this kind might be committed under the operation of this proposed legislation, and, by providing for a violation of the law, he gives answer to his own assertion that he would trust the honour of the British officers. What is the worth of this enactment of penalties? How will the commission of such offences as are contemplated be prevented? My hon. friend knows that these penalties cannot be enforced. The offenders cannot be tried in this country, and in all probability they would not be tried in Great Britain. They will be tried, perhaps, in France, perhaps in Belgium, perhaps in Germany, because it is possible that when elections take place our troops may be in Germany. This provision with regard to penalties is there only for show; it is not there to serve its professed purpose.

There is another objection to which the attention of my hon. friend was called this morning, and to which I think he did not give a satisfactory answer. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) asked my hon. friend whether the Government had communicated with the War Office with regard to this measure. What was my hon. friend's answer? He said that the Government had not communicated with the War Office; he presumed that it would be a matter of indifference to Lord Kitchener whether the Canadian soldiers were or were not allowed to vote, or what were the issues between the Government and the Opposition in this country. It is true that to Lord Kitchener and the War Office it would be a matter of indifference as to what the issues were between the Government and the Opposition in Canada, but what is not a matter of indifference to Lord Kitchener and to the War Office is the discipline of the army over which Lord Kitchener presides. Does my hon. friend suggest that it is a matter of indifference to the army that one section of it should be allowed to vote on a certain question, and that the rest of the army should not be allowed to vote? Is it a matter of indifference to the War Office and to the British authorities that such an example should be set in the army? If the Canadian soldier were allowed to vote, would the commander of the army be indifferent to the spirit manifested in the portion of the army which was not allowed to vote. That is a democratic age, and while I am a strong democrat, nevertheless, I think, that democracy must be subject to the law. The principle of manhood suffrage is far more extended in this country than it is in many other countries, perhaps more so even than in Great Britain, and if this proposed Bill becomes law there will be introduced into the army a new spirit which has not yet been found to be consistent with public opinion in Great Britain. This is a very important consideration, and it is one in regard to which, I venture to say, the commander of the army may have an opinion to express. Certainly it was the first duty of the Government, when they contemplated such legislation as this, to confer with the British authorities and to ascertain whether or not they would sanction it.

But the matter of discipline is not the only consideration. How would the operation of such a law affect the movements of the army? Spring is advancing, and we have reason to believe that as spring advances the allied armies will pounce upon the German army and drive it from France and Belgium to the Rhine, and from the Rhine to the very heart of Germany. We know too well that this cannot be accomplished in a day, in a month, or perhaps in one season. Battles are imminent, and in these modern times battles are not fought in one day or two days or three days, as they were in the time of Napoleon; under modern conditions battles last for weeks. Yet it is proposed that the Secretary of the High Commissioner shall send his ballots and his envelopes to the commanders or officers in charge, in order to obtain the votes of the Canadian soldiers. It is possible that this might be done when an important movement of the army would be taking place. Perhaps the Canadian forces would be engaged in battle, and one section of the army would have a vote and the other would not. This is not a vague supposition; it is a supposition which is quite within the bounds of possibility, and it is in respect to this that the Government would have been wise if they had consulted the British War Office before thrusting upon them the responsibility which will be imposed upon them if this Bill becomes law. Looking upon this measure dispassionately and without prejudice; looking upon it from the standpoint of duty not only to ourselves, but to the great cause in which we are engaged, we must come to the conclusion that it is ill-conceived in its principle, ill-conceived in its practice, and, still more, ill-conceived in its dispositions.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am somewhat surprised at the tone of the right hon. gentleman's remarks, because, when this matter was first broached in the House, I heard, if I am not mistaken, a strong expression of opinion from his chief lieutenant in favour of the principle of the resolution placed on the Order Paper by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Fripp): that the men serving abroad in the expeditionary forces of Canada ought not to be denied the right and opportunity to vote. The right hon. gentleman has taken very strong ground against the measure. I did not underestimate the difficulties of working out a proposal which on the one hand would provide proper safeguards and on the other hand would not deny to the soldier the right which he would have possessed if he had remained in Canada; and therefore I moved that the resolution which had been placed upon the Order Paper by the hon. member for Ottawa should be referred to a committee then engaged in the work of considering amendments to the Controverted Elections Act. They have since had this subject under consideration and have made the report to the House which is embodied in this Bill.

I take very strongly the ground that men who are risking their lives in order that the liberties and institutions of this land shall be preserved ought not to be penalized by being deprived of the right and opportunity to vote. My right hon. friend does not seem to have much regard for that principle and he urges upon our attention arguments and illustrations of a somewhat singular character. I am not absolutely sure, comparing one part of his speech with another, as to whether he objects to the Bill in its entirety or whether he is prepared to support a measure which will give to those men who would be entitled to vote if they were in Canada the right and opportunity to vote although they are at the front. From one part of his speech I would gather that he was in favour of that measure of justice; but from another part I would gather that he was absolutely opposed to it. Will my right hon. friend inform me as to what I am to understand in that regard?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I certainly am in favour of no extension of the present franchise; but I would give those who have the right to vote an opportunity to do so if it were possible to provide the machinery for it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: A great deal of my right hon. friend's speech goes by the board because his argument tended to destroy that position altogether. He argues that any such measure must be absolutely unworkable, that you cannot provide proper safeguards, that the men would be so engaged in military duties that they could not vote. He says that Lord Kitchener will not permit them to vote. But having made these arguments intended to destroy the Bill, he then changes front and admits that men who are on voters' lists in Canada and who could therefore vote if they were here ought to be entitled to vote although they are at the front. It is difficult to understand just what is my hon. friend's position. I maintain that the gallant men who have gone to the front and who have thus shown their willingness and determination to risk and if necessary to sacrifice their lives for their country are entitled to vote whether they are on the list or not; and I say further that according to my apprehension they are entitled to vote, whether they have arrived at the age of 21 years or not. We all know that an arbitrary age must be fixed in our statute, and the age of 21 years is fixed; but we also know that some men at the age of 17 or 18 are as well developed physically and mentally as other men when they attain the age of 25 years. Those men under the age of 21 who have gone to the front to fight for their country have shown the possession of a mental and physical development which ought justly to entitle them to vote if any man is entitled to vote while absent from Canada on the patriotic duty of fighting for his country.

My right hon. friend further argues—and this goes absolutely against his contention in reply to a question from me a moment ago—that our soldiers at the front ought not to be permitted to vote because there are men in Canada carrying on their ordinary avocations who, owing to the conditions under which they earn their livelihood cannot vote. He puts that forward as an argument in the hearing of every hon. gentleman in this House. That argument, if it means anything at all, confounds the very admission he made to me not five minutes ago, because it would exclude those whose names are on the electoral lists as well as all others. I venture to believe that there is a distinction to be found between men engaged properly and legitimately, in their own interest, in ordinary business avocations in Canada and those who have abandoned all considerations of business and of interest and have gone to the front to sacrifice their lives if necessary for the preservation of our institutions and liberties. I venture also to believe that the fathers and the mothers, the brothers and the sisters of these men fighting and risking their lives at the front will not consider the question in the cold-blooded way in which my right hon. friend regards it.

My right hon. friend goes on further—and I will only touch very lightly the points that he made, because most of them are matters of detail which can be better discussed in committee than on the second reading of the Bill—he goes on to say that our soldiers in France, being beyond the limits of this Dominion, cannot properly be authorized to vote under any law passed by this Parliament. Again he used an argument which confounds the admission made by himself only a few minutes ago, that the men upon the lists in Canada should be permitted to vote if at the front and that we should make some provision for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I said if you could find the provisions, but I am not able to see yet how it can be done.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It would have been better in that case for my right hon. friend to have given us his assistance in framing the measure rather than to have devoted something like an hour to arguing that no such provision was possible. I venture to think that the men in the trenches in France, if we authorize them to vote under a provision made by the Parliament of Canada, are entitled to have their votes cast at a general election in this country; and I know of no constitutional or other reason which would forbid them. Therefore, I pass by that argument of my right hon. friend, because he adduced no reason which commends itself to my judgment in support of it.

Then he argues that it is absolutely and entirely improper and objectionable to permit the men at the front a vote not for a particular candidate but for a particular party, and he declares that in no British country, so far as he was aware, had any legislation of the kind ever been proposed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Except New Zealand.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend, did not, I think, except New Zealand.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I excepted it a moment ago.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The principle which the hon. leader of the Opposition condemns has been acted on in New Zealand; and it is well to place on the Hansard the exact provisions of the New Zealand Act as they have been furnished to me by the Minister of Justice, in order that the country may be informed of what has been done in another progressive British dominion along the lines we are proposing to-day. The New Zealand Act is in these words:

An Act to enable the members of the expeditionary forces to exercise their votes at the next general election of members of the House of Representatives and licensing poll.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of New Zealand in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as the Expeditionary Forces Voting Act, 1914.

2. Every member of any expeditionary force sent from New Zealand to serve in the war in which His Majesty is at present engaged shall be entitled to vote in the manner hereinafter prescribed at the next general election of members of the House of Representatives, and also at the licensing poll taken simultaneously with such election.

3. (1) With respect to the votes to be given by members of any such force at the next general election of members of the House of Representatives the following provisions shall apply:

(a) The vote of each such member shall be recorded on a voting paper in the form in the schedule hereto by striking out the words indicating the parties for whom he does not wish to vote.

(b) Every vote given as aforesaid for any party shall be counted as a vote for the candidate who has been selected in the manner hereinafter prescribed as the candidate representing that party in the electoral district in which the voter resided immediately before joining the expeditionary force.

(c) Such selection shall be made—

(i) In the case of the Government party, by the Prime Minister;

(ii) In the case of the Opposition party, by the leader of the Opposition; and

(iii) In the case of the Labour party, by two members of the House of Representatives (as now constituted) who shall be appointed as selectors by resolution of the said House on the recommendation of a majority of the Labour members of the said House.

(d) If there is no candidate selected as aforesaid as representing the party for which the vote is given, the vote shall not be counted.

(e) Every selection made under paragraphs (b) and (c) hereof shall be gazetted not later than five days after nomination day, and shall be given effect to by returning officers at the election.

(f) A voting paper in the form in the schedule hereto shall be supplied by an electoral officer appointed for the purpose by the chief electoral officer to every member of the said forces who applies for the same.

(g) When the voter has marked his voting paper as aforesaid he shall enclose it in an envelope addressed to the returning officer of the electoral district in which he resided immediately before he joined the force, and having sealed the envolope, shall deliver the same to the electoral officer, who shall forthwith forward it to the chief electoral officer at Wellington.

(2) For the purposes of this section "Government" and "Opposition" mean respectively the Government and Opposition in office on the passing of this Act.

4. With respect to the votes to be given at the licensing poll taken simultaneously with the said general election, the following provisions shall apply:

(a) The vote of each member shall be recorded on the voting papers and in the manner prescribed by the Licensing Act, 1908.

(b) A voting paper on each of the issues submitted at the licensing poll in the forms prescribed as aforesaid shall be supplied by the electoral officer aforesaid to every member who applies to vote under the last preceding section, and shall be dealt with in the manner provided by paragraph (g) of that section.

(c) In the event of the form of the voting paper prescribed for the taking of the licensing poll on the issue of national prohibition being altered during the present session of Parliament, then the votes at the licensing poll under this Act on that issue against national prohibition and for national prohibition respectively, shall be counted as if they had been given for national continuance or for national prohibition or otherwise in accordance with the tenor of the altered form of the voting paper in which the issue is submitted for the determination of the electors at the general election.

5. Not later than seven days before the day fixed for the general election the chief electoral officer shall forward to the returning officer of each electoral district and to the returning officer of each licensing district all envelopes addressed as aforesaid to that returning officer.

6. At the counting of the votes at the said general election and licensing poll the returning officer shall open all envelopes so sent to him, and shall, subject to the foregoing provisions of this Act, deal with the voting papers contained therein as if they had been issued pursuant to an absent voter's permit.

7. No person who has exercised his vote under this Act shall be entitled to vote again at the general election or licensing poll.

8. Electoral officers may be appointed out of New Zealand for the purpose of enabling any person to record his vote under this Act who is a member of any expeditionary force sent out of New Zealand before the passing of this Act.

9. The Governor may, from time to time, by Order in Council, make regulations prescribing anything necessary for carrying this Act into effect.

10. The validity of the election at the said general election in any electoral district or of the licensing poll taken in any licensing district shall not be questioned on the ground that anything has been done irregularly or omitted to be done under this Act, or that for any reason whatever it is found impracticable for any member of any expeditionary force aforesaid to record his vote.

11. This Act shall be deemed to be repealed on the completion of the said general election:

Provided that such repeal shall not affect any proceeding in relation to the said election or to the said licensing poll.

Schedule.

Form of Voting Paper.

Electoral district of Government

Opposition

Labour

Direction to voter.

The voter must leave untouched the name of the party for which he desires to vote and must strike out the names of all other parties.

I venture to submit that in that Act the legislature of New Zealand has made provision for a more complicated condition of affairs than that for which we are endeavouring to provide in this Act. They have empowered the members of the expeditionary forces of New Zealand sent overseas to vote not only at the parliamentary election, but also upon other issues of a very special character. I venture also to think that in the provisions of the New Zealand Act there are not to be found any greater safeguards than those which we have provided. But if, in addition to the safeguards which already appear in this Bill, there are any other safeguards which can be suggested by any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, we shall be very glad to consider and, if reasonable, to accept them. The very fact that under the New Zealand Act 10,000 men, as I am informed, have cast their votes overseas indicates that legislation of this character is not only effective, but has been found to be thoroughly practicable in actual operation.

My right hon. friend has called attention to the possibility of canvassing, and of inflammatory literature, if one may so term it, being circulated among the men in the trenches, and of passion being thus aroused. Whatever else Lord Kitchener is likely to do, I should think it exceedingly likely that he would put his foot down on anything of this nature. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice went very fully into these matters this morning, and pointed out that there are two duties for the soldier, one of which, the duty to vote, he will be entitled to perform under the provisions of this Act, and the other his military duty, which it is incumbent upon him to perform under the engagement that he took when he volunteered to fight and if necessary to die for his country. He stated most clearly and distinctly that under the conditions which confront the Empire, the military duty must take precedence. But he argued that, if opportunity could be afforded, the men at the front should also be permitted to give their voice in the determination of questions which will affect the Government of this country in the future.

So in respect of all that has been urged in regard to the control of the War Office, we are perfectly willing, and I think the country will be willing, to let the matter be determined in that way.

Then my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) went on to argue, and he did argue, that we must anticipate all kinds of fraud and attempted fraud and corruption among the men at the front. I for one dissent from that view in the strongest possible terms. I venture to think that the men and officers who, at this juncture, are risking their lives for their country may well be trusted by the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada to vote honestly and without any attempt at fraud or deception. And it did not seen to me at all desirable or appropriate that my right hon. friend should dwell so much on the possibility of fraud in this connection. I believe that these men who have gone to the front have been actuated by a sense of duty, and I decline to believe that a man who to-morrow may have to risk his life in facing the foe, the sternest of all the duties that a soldier has to perform, will to-day have his mind intent on practising electoral corruption and violating the provisions of this Act. These men, I think, can be trusted to vote honestly, and I believe that the officers can be trusted to record their votes honestly. Those in this country whose kinsmen are facing the foe in the trenches will not be inclined to join in the belief and expectation of my right hon. friend, that the just recognition proposed by this Bill, and the refusal to penalize soldiers who are fighting for their country will result in attempted fraud and dishonesty by the gallant men so engaged in that great patriotic duty.

Why, although we have had the most elaborate provisions in our election laws, they have proven insufficient repeatedly in this country whenever they have not been backed up by the honesty of the men who were constituted and appointed to enforce them. Even in Canada we have known that no legislative enactment can be so carried out as to prevent fraud unless we appoint men who are honest; and if we have men who are honest we need no legislative enactment to ensure that an honest result shall be obtained. I recall that with all our safeguards and legislative provisions, a deputy returning officer and a poll clerk went forth in one of our western provinces, pretended to journey into the north 100 or 120 miles, but went in reality only 20 or 30 miles, where they sat down under a tree, filled in 150 names, deposited as many ballots, and came back with the story of a unanimous Liberal vote in that remote part of the constituency. It is impossible to prevent fraud absolutely by legislative enactment. It must depend in the final analysis upon the honesty and integrity of the men who are to carry out the law. I differ from my right hon. friend because I have sufficient confidence in the officers and men who are willing to sacrifice their lives at the front to believe that if this Act is passed its provisions will be carried out honestly and as Parliament intended.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words upon this matter as dispassionately as I know how. I should be glad personally if no words I uttered evoked the slightest applause. I would rather speak to the calm and deliberate judgment of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I have a very strong opinion, which I think I can put with great brevity, about this measure as well as the grounds upon which I found that opinion. I think it is contrary to the spirit of the British army and almost of the British Constitution itself. I regret extremely that a measure of so provocative a nature should be brought in by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), and should have been supported by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden). I recall no case in seven years' experience of Parliament where a minister introducing a measure has had his measure so completely turned inside out as it was by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and I recall no case in seven years' experience of Parliament where the feeble effort of the minister were so lightly supported by what I almost thought the unpalatable effort of the right hon. the Prime Minister. I was brought up in a school of politicians who told me that it was dangerous to impute motives and I have always tried to follow the instruction, but it is extremely difficult in this case not to suspect a motive anyway. I think I could prove a motive, if I might do so, on the part of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Fripp), who has occupied the boards in connection with this measure. When he was speaking I addressed to him the question: Has my hon. friend in his mind any machinery by which he 5 p.m. hopes to have the soldiers at the front seized of the issues upon which the election will be fought? My hon. friend is a somewhat young Parliamentarian and his answer gave his whole case away. He said that there is one issue in regard to which the soldiers will be seized. My hon. friend spoke with the approbation, and under the smiling countenance, of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers), whom I suspect very strongly as being the originator of this measure and, if my hon. friend's words had any meaning at all, they meant that there was one issue upon which he wished the soldier to vote, and he was persuaded that the soldier would vote upon his side of the issue. I give that for what it is worth as lending colour to the suspicion which I confess I myself entertain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was that issue?

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend will forego his right of cross-examination for a moment. There is nothing that surprise me more in this House than the eagerness with which hon. gentlemen opposite go to the United States, New Zealand, or anywhere but Britain for an argument to support a bad case. They are the British party—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK: They are the upholders of British institutions—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK: They say they are the British party—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, but nothing that is done in Britain meets with their approval. In the last election they were the anti-American party, but when they want to justify a procedure in regard to voting which is anti-British they immediately go south for the approval of the United States, and if they have that they think the whole thing is settled. Failing to settle it by the United States, the Prime Minister reads a whole Act that has been introduced in the little colony of New Zealand with less than a million people. I do not want to detract from what is done in New Zealand, but I venture to think there is not a man in this House who would have a more acute difference with nine-tenths of the legislation that is passed in New Zealand than the Prime Minister. Why, New Zealand is the hot bed of socialism. Just imagine the leader of the great Conservative party, supported by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) who, if he has one point stronger than another it is opposition to socialism, going to New Zealand to get support for a nostrum like this. The Minister of Justice, in reply to a question I put to him, said that he thought the last thing we should do would be to go to the War Office in Britain to find out what legislation we should enact in Canada upon such a subject as this. He and I just differ one hundred per cent upon that conclusion and I will tell him why. Having regard to this particular measure, it was the first thing he should have done and for a very practical reason. If the war authorities in Great Britain, who have been admitted to be the supreme court in this matter, both by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister should proceed to overrule the measure, in the name of goodness, what is the use of passing the measure at a time when we all want to get home and when the session has lasted too long now in the peculiar circumstances in which the British Empire finds itself? The best that can be said for the Government is that they are introducing a measure which is going to be useless because it will I should suppose be overruled by the military authorities in Great Britain. That is a very strong reason why the Government should have known exactly the attitude of the militray authorities of Great Britain before they proceeded to introduce a measure which I have already described as of an exceedingly provocative nature.

Mr. WILCOX: Why did they not overrule the Parliament of New Zealand?

Mr. CLARK: Perhaps my hon. friend is better able to speak in regard to the Parliament of New Zealand than I am. I cannot discover as yet where the New Zealand soldiers voted. Does my hon. friend know if they voted in the trenches?

Mr. WILCOX: I am satisfied when I know they voted.

Mr. CLARK: I personally would oppose this measure because when men are gathered under arms for the purpose of war, they are and have always been recognized in the old country as men apart, and there has always been the most acute distinction drawn between the civilian population and the army. The army has been kept from interference in politics; the civilian population has been kept supreme just because it is the master, and the army is not allowed to interfere. The army is the executive arm of the civilian authority for certain specific purposes. I think that is a distinction which goes to the very root of British practice, British thought, and the British constitution itself. It is on the surface of things that the moment men are gathered under arms for the specific purpose of war, their minds ought to be left intent upon the supreme duty of saving the country, because they have no less duty on hand, and the Government or the politician who puts anything in the way of their full discharge of that duty is guilty—perhaps unwittingly—of putting an obstruction in the way of the prosecution of that war in which we are all engaged. So much for the principle.

To dream of men voting at the front is to dream of men having their discipline upset and having their minds taken away from the only work on hand for them—and so they recognize it as I have the very best reason for knowing. It is the only work they think of day or night—the only work they care for. I supposed, however, that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice would have done what I thought was the first thing he should have done—and tried to find out the mind of Lord Kitchener on the subject. Need any one of us be in any doubt what his mind is? We all read at the time—although the Government had evidently forgotten it, the speech which that extraordinary man delivered in the House of Lords, after he accepted the position of War Minister. In that speech he was most careful to guard himself from being suspected of being concerned in the general politics of the Government which he had joined. He explained that he had taken up his duties for three years or for the term of the war, and that he had taken those duties upon him as a soldier. Then he used the sentence, which if the Government gives it the consideration which is due to the utterances that proceed from Lord Kitchener at the present moment, ought to lead them at once to withdraw this measure. He said: "As a soldier I have no politics." That is his attitude without a doubt, because Lord Kitchener always uses language that is full of meaning and very easily understood. He emphatically divested himself of political beliefs and of any desire to interfere in politics. My objections to this measure of the Government is that it proposes to place the duty upon all the Canadian soldiers who are under the command of that great man, of taking a course of conduct and following a rule of conduct diametrically opposed to the rule which he has laid down for himself. Is it necessary to argue this any further? When he said: "as a soldier, I have no politics," it is recorded that the House of Lords, a body which is usually very calm in its expression of approval, applauded vociferously, and his attitude was at once endorsed by the applause of a body which I suppose some hon. gentlemen opposite almost worship, or did worship until it was curtailed so mightily of its power a few years ago.

The Minister of Justice asked us to suggest a better method than that proposed and I am going, in all seriousness, to suggest a better method of dealing with this question. The idea of having the soldiers vote while they are assembled for the purpose of war has behind it another idea, and the Government should entertain neither the one idea nor the other. The soldiers can vote only if there is an election, and I want to tell the Government something very plainly, without the slightest passion—and I think I shall find some endorsement in remarks which I regret very much not to have heard. I was absent from the city at the time my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce delivered his very moderate and able speech on the Budget; I was absent when he delivered that patriotic peroration, in which he told the House and the country that we should have only one thought. The Government ought not to have any thought of an election while the soldiers are assembled for purposes of war. I say this, if the House will believe me, without the slightest thought of what is going to happen to my party, and still less of what is going to happen to myself. I suppose there is not a man in this House who, so far as personal ambition goes, attaches less interest than I do to the question whether or not he will ever be back here again after the next general election. From the point of view of the best interest of Canada, from the point of view of the best interest of the Empire, and from the point of view of the successful prosecution of the greatest fight for the greatest object that ever engaged the highest civilizations of the world against what we believe to be lower and despotic civilizations, the Government have enough on hand to do what I have given them credit for doing in the main—seeing this fight through to a finish, without thinking of elections. That, however, is a matter between them and their consciences. What I have said I have said upon the point, and I do not think the moderate men of this country will view the measure before us with favour. They will not view it with favour upon its merits, and they will view it with still greater disfavour because of the consideration upon which I have now dealt for a moment, that is, that the Government are wondering, if we can judge appearances, when it is going to be a good time to spring an election.

I do not want to make a contrast between this Government and the Government of Great Britain. But everybody knows that the thought has seriously occurred to that Government that they should extend their term so that they can do as the soldiers are doing—stick to their job and see it through. I rather think my right hon. friend (Sir Robert Borden), judging from his general constitution, would want to stick to his job and have a voice in the settlement of affairs after the war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He will be there.

Mr. CLARK: I could not enter into that without differing in opinion and giving good reasons for it, and I do not want to do that. I have the best reasons for knowing, and for stating, that the soldiers at the front are not thinking about votes, and not thinking about elections in Canada. I had, only yesterday, correspondence which informs me that men of our own first troops to go into the fight are feeling, to the last man amongst them, the strain of the campaign, and that not one of them feels himself as good a man physically as when he went into the trenches. I have had this information further, that the horror and the suffering which they are looking upon are leading them to wonder whether there is such a thing as Christianity in the world and what the end of all this business is to be. I can imagine this Government—I do not want to touch upon anything controversial—going to these soldiers at the front and saying: Some of our friends did not take good care to give you boots, but we are coming to give you votes. What do you think would be the attitude of these men, devoted to what they believe a holy cause of warfare, animated by the thoughts I have mentioned? I can imagine no man among them worthy of admiration—and I believe they are all such men—who would not turn to the Government and say: We are devoted to the sacred cause of repatriating the Belgians; we are devoted to the sacred cause of human freedom; we are going through untold sufferings and untold horrors to prosecute that cause to a successful issue—in the name of God and of all goodness do not add to these horrors and these sufferings the horrors of the Public Accounts Committee.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Solicitor General): I had not the honour of being a member of the committee to which was submitted the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Fripp), and as a result of whose deliberations the Bill now before the House comes up for consideration. I do not feel competent to discuss, nor do I think it would be proper to discuss at this stage, the several clauses and the various provisions of the Bill; but it is a circumstance of happy augury that those who on the floor of Parliament so far in this debate have opposed it, have opposed it not because of any defects in the machinery, but firstly, lastly and all the time, on the ground that the very principle of the Bill is wrong. They are opposed to soldiers being given the right to vote, and opposed to the right of citizenship being vouchsafed to them as well as the rights they enjoy as soldiers. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) is very deeply grieved that any such Bill, involving, as he says, a controversial principle, should be launched on Parliament this session. What reason had we to believe that this Bill involved a controversial principle? The principle of this Bill was under discussion on the 22nd of February last, on the motion of the hon. member ruary last, on the motion of the hon. member opposite spoke on that motion, and neither of them opposed the principle of the Bill. The Opposition was represented on that occasion chiefly by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham). Did he take up the cry of the hon. member for Red Deer this afternoon, that it was a sacrilege to have a soldier vote; or that a soldier, because he is a soldier, must not vote, because to vote is to be a politician? Was that his attitude? No. Speaking for the Opposition he said he believed in soldiers voting, and he hoped that machinery to that end could be provided. "I agree with all that has been said," said the hon. gentleman, "as to the wisdom of having our volunteers exercise their franchise"; and I quote from page 364 of Hansard of the 22nd of February. Later in his speech he elaborated that in these words:

> I do not wish to be too emphatic in the matter, but I see almost unsurmountable difficulties in the way of our trying to apply this principle to our volunteers, particularly to those outside our own country. As to those who are in Canada. I think the modus operandi might be worked out without very much difficulty.

The attitude of the Opposition then was: There will be difficulties to be surmounted in hedging about the method of voting sufficient safeguards, and the machinery will not be easily evolved; but we are one with you in extending the franchise to the soldier, and in giving the soldier all the rights of citizenship and not a part of them. Why, then, had we any reason to anticipate that this Bill involved a controversial principle? This principle was acceded to by hon. gentlemen opposite before it was submitted to the committee. As to the efficiency of the machinery provided, as to the different clauses of the Bill, these may well await discussion until we get into Committee of the Whole.

The hon. member for Red Deer is exceedingly exercised because he claims it is against the fundamental principle, which is acknowledged by British statesmen; that the soldier must have no politics. And he quotes the words of Lord Kitchener, that as a soldier, he has no politics. But does that mean that because he is a soldier he is no longer a citizen? While he has no politics as a soldier, is he to have no political rights as a citizen?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: The hon. gentleman will not dispute that I carefully spoke of soldiers assembled for the purpose of war, exactly as I understood Lord Kitchener to speak, when he spoke of having taken special duties upon himself for the time of the war.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman says he referred to soldiers assembled for the purposes of war on the battlefield; but the very man who used these words was not on the battlefield. Lord Kitchener, who gave that dictum was at that very time a member of the Cabinet of Great Britain. He assumed that position as a soldier, and he stated, that as a soldier, he had no politics. Did he wish to give the doctrine to the country that no soldier under his command, whether at home or in the foreign field, was to have the right to vote, or to give expression to his views on politics? Does the hon. member for Red Deer think he meant that? If so, where does his leader stand, who, to-day, in this House, said he was in favour of a soldier voting on the battlefield, providing he had the right to vote at home.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Lord Kitchener is my leader, and good enough for my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In matters of war, Lord Kitchener is good enough for me, but in the House of Commons I acknowledge the leadership of the leader of the Government. I am glad to see that, at last, the hon. member for Red Deer repudiates his leader.

We have no use, the hon. member says, for anything British; the actions of the British Government do not satisfy us. He has never seen us, he said, accord with anything done in Britain. I remember one occasion upon which the opinion of the British Government was given on a matter of which they should know something; on a matter upon which they should be to us the highest authority; on a matter in respect of which they gave their opinion to this Parliament in the most explicit and decided manner. I remember that their authority was repudiated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and in the most violent language by the hon. member for Red Deer himself. The hon. gentleman spurns the example of New Zealand. The example of that little country which, he says, is socialistically mad, which has a population of less than one million—he has no use for. But it is only a year since he stood up in the House and castigated hon. gentlemen on this side of the House because they did not follow, in the most pitifully copying manner, the example of New Zealand. Not that there was anything to criticise adversely in the action of New Zealand on that occasion; we do not and never did say that, from their standpoint, they did anything wrong. But it was an example which did not come into question then at all, and, even though it did not come into question, the hon. member for Red Deer proposed that we should follow that example against the advice of the Admiralty of Britain. The hon. gentleman says that the British example is not good enough. When did the action taken by New Zealand cease to be a British example? Is New Zealand not a member of the family of Britain? Is New Zealand not the first British country to which this question ever appealed, the first British country to decide the issue and to determine whether or not the soldiers have a right to vote? The British nation was on a previous occasion at war during election time. One hundred years ago, when Pitt fought against Fox in the British House of Commons, it was necessary to hold elections in time of war. But at that time they did not have manhood suffrage, as they have to-day, and I doubt really whether at that time very many of the men who were fighting the battles of Great Britain across the English channel would have had the right to vote had they been at home. The question which we are now considering did not present itself to Britain then, nor has it presented itself to Britain since. No election was held during the South African war, which occurred about fifteen years ago, and there is no British example as against the position taken by this Government.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: The hon. member, I presume, does not want to misrepresent the facts. The South African war lasted fully a year after the election of 1900, which took place during that war.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I accept the correction of the hon. memebr for Red Deer; I understood that the election was held after the war was over. But if he is correct, let him never more stand in the House of Commons and plead the example of Great Britain against an election being held in time of war.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: There were different stages of that war; the guerilla warfare lasted for a year and a half. It is perfectly true that Mr. Chamberlain went to the country in the year 1900 with the cry "the war is over"; so that to have an election he had to contend that the war was over. John Burns remarked at the time that the war was over—it was all over the shop.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have tried to get the exact viewpoint of the hon. member for Red Deer, and if I have caught it in this case, it is this: that it is all right to have an election during the progress of guerilla warfare, but if you can apply any other adjective to the war, then it is wrong to have an election. There were stages of the war, and the British election was held a year before the end of the war. That is the reason why the hon. gentleman objects to an election now.

Mr. CLARK: Before the signing of peace.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The British election was held a year before the signing of peace, according to the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. CLARK: Something like a year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Something like a year before, so that if the hon. gentleman is loyal to British example, and if he believes that we are within a year of the termination of the war, he will cease to oppose an election.

It is an historic principle of British jurisprudence that the civilians must rule, not the soldiers; that the civilian must be supreme and not the military authorities. In this respect British institutions differ radically from those of Germany, and in the expression of that principle I agree with the hon. member. But is it to be argued that upon that ground soldiers should be deprived of the franchise? Is that the interpretation put upon that principle by the British Government?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If soldiers must not be deprived of the franchise, then why not vote for this Bill?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Does not my hon. friend see the distinction between the soldier fighting in the trenches and the soldier who becomes a civilian after the war is over and he is at his own home?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see it very clearly, and will explain to the hon. member for Red Deer where that puts him. The civilian must be supreme, not the soldier, and the hon. gentleman means the soldier at home. The hon. gentleman is quite content that the soldier at home, the parade soldier, who is not fighting, shall be supreme and shall dominate the civilian, but he is determined that the soldier who fights shall have nothing to say at all. What is at the bottom of the theory in Britain that the civilian must control the affairs of state and that the soldier must not gain ascendancy over him? It is this: The ascendancy of the soldier means a military autocracy such as they have in Germany, and that is what is to be feared. But is there any reason why the ascendancy of the soldier who is not at war should be any more dangerous than the ascendancy of the soldier who is at war? What is the difference? What have we to fear from the vote of a man on the battlefield because he is a soldier, any more than we have to fear from the vote of the man at home, who is a soldier and who refuses to go to the battlefield? It must be plain to the right hon. leader of the Opposition—because I am sure that he struggled hard to keep within the pale of reason in the speech that he delivered—that all that has been advanced in favour of his position by his lieutenant from Red Deer is so much vapour.

It is argued also that we should have asked the advice of Lork Kitchener before we adopted the principle that in so far as we can give power to the soldiers on the battlefield to vote. We should do so. Lord Kitchener or Sir John French as head of the service, has the command for the time being of our soldiers on the battlefield, and I do not dispute the truth of the assertion that, if he wishes, he can prevent the operation of any provision for carrying out this proposed legislation. He can refuse to the soldiers authority to vote, even though we, in so far as we are able to give it, are ready to extend to them that authority. But is the fact that Lord Kitchener has the right to exercise his jurisdiction any reason why we should refuse, within our province, to exercise ours? If, as the hon. member for Red Deer says, this legislation will be vetoed by Lord Kitchener, let me ask him why he takes up the time of the House in an attempt to defeat it here? He does not know what the attitude of Lord Kitchener will be, any more than I do. I assume that Lord Kitchener will extend to this country the same courtesy that he extended to New Zealand; I know of no reason why he should show less respect for the opinion of the Parliament of Canada than he shows for the opinion of the Parliament of New Zealand. If the hon. member for Red Deer knows of any reason why he should, I shall be pleased to have him give it to me.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Where did the New Zealanders vote?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The New Zealanders voted while under the jurisdiction of Lord Kitchener, and while away from their own country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Where?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They voted in a foreign land.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Name it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Name the country? Would it be any different if they voted in Belgium or France or Egypt?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: They did not vote in either Belgium or France. Are any of them there?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman tell me? I do not know where they voted.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend ought to know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know enough for the purposes of my argument, that they voted outside the jurisdiction of the New Zealand authorities and within the jurisdiction of Lord Kitchener. Will the hon. member for Red Deer tell me where they voted? They voted on whatever battlefield or at whatever other place they were at the time the election was on, and that is where the soldiers of Canada would vote should there be an election that would demand the exercise of the franchise while they are at the front.

The right hon. leader of the Opposition has the greatest dread of election campaign literature getting into the trenches. No vote could be taken when there would be less to fear from the invasion of campaign literature than such as is contemplated by this Bill. The men are under the command of the British authorities and to their wisdom and to their good sense we can safely leave such questions as that, feeling certain that nothing will be permitted by the British authorities that will interfere with the efficiency of a soldier as a soldier on the battlefield.

Mr. PUGSLEY: In regard to section 4, my hon. friend says that the voting, the marking of the ballot, is to be under the supervision of a British officer. What is meant by those words?

> The volunteer may thereupon make affidavit in form B before any commissioned officer in the Canadian military forces.

Does that mean a British officer?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are all British officers.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is limited to a Canadian officer, a commissioned officer in the Canadian military forces. Does that not mean a Canadian officer?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It means a Canadian officer who by service abroad becomes a British officer.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. gentleman said a British officer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He undoubtedly would be a British officer. What I referred to was the paramount jurisdiction of the war authorities to control in every way the admission of any kind of literature to the men at the front. They have that control in the war office and they will exercise it by such officers as they select. We may safely trust to them that the soldier would be protected from any undue influence in the exercise of his franchise. The hon. member for Red Deer was careful not to be cross-examined. He was willing to give his evidence so long as he was subjected to no cross-examination. He quoted from the speech of the hon. member for Ottawa, endeavouring to assign to his words some motive which he said was behind the Government in introducing this legislation. He asked the hon. member for Ottawa if the soldiers at the front would know about the issues. He refused to tell the House what the hon. member for Ottawa answered. The hon. member for Ottawa answered that there was one thing about which the soldier at the front would know and that was how they were equipped by the people of Canada and the Government of Canada for the purposes of war. If we are to follow hon. gentlemen opposite, if we are to take seriously their activities within the last few weeks, we must come to the conclusion that the question of the adequacy of the equipment is going to be one of the foremost questions in any campaign that may be waged, so that on one issue launched by hon. gentlemen opposite they should surely not be afraid to take the opinion of those who would best know the facts and who would not have to be bombarded by literature from one side or the other. The right hon. leader of the Opposition is afraid that campaign literature will get in. His lieutenant from Red Deer is afraid they will not know the issues. The one fears the subject for one reason and the other fears it for an exactly opposite reason. I apprehend that there is no reason to fear it for either reason. Should there be an election it is well that the soldier, while he exercises his functions as a soldier, should not be deprived of the exercise of his functions as a citizen. That is the purpose of the Bill and that only; and it has at all times been a cardinal feature of British parliamentary and political life that a soldier or a citizen had the same right, and that a soldier, by becoming a soldier, has not in any way his functions or his rights as a citizen reduced.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: A difference arose on a point of fact with regard to where the New Zealand soldiers voted. I have consulted with some military members of the House, and my hon. friend asserted that they were under the jurisdiction of Lord Kitchener. These military members inform me that their impression is—they have no documentary evidence—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friends who laugh do not believe in any impressions. They have the impression that they voted in Wellington before leaving New Zealand.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: My authority was the cablegram read by the Minister of Justice, which the member should have heard.

Mr. MURPHY: Which did not say where they voted.

Mr. DOHERTY: The statement of the Prime Minister was that the men voted under the Bill that was read, and the Bill has no application except to the soldiers outside of New Zealand.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Has the Minister of Justice a copy of the Act as it finally passed or simply a copy of the Bill that was introduced in the New Zealand Parliament?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have a copy of the proposed Bill. The question asked of the Prime Minister of New Zealand was whether the proposed Bill giving the soldiers a vote had been passed, and the answer was to that question:

> Bill referred to passed and votes of soldiers who left before general election recorded. Total votes, 10,000.

So, while I have only a copy of the proposed Bill, the question asked of the Prime Minister of New Zealand was whether the proposed Bill was passed and he said yes, the proposed Bill was passed.

Mr. CLARK: Does my hon. friend think that language contains the meaning that the vote was recorded after they left?

Mr. DOHERTY (reading):

> And votes of all soldiers who left before general election recorded.

So that they left before the general election and the Bill itself recognized that they had then left, because it is a Bill to enable the soldiers who had left to vote.

Mr. MURPHY: If they had not, the vote could be recorded anyway.

Mr. DOHERTY: Those who stayed at home would have their votes recorded under a totally different Bill. This was a Bill exclusively passed for men who when the Bill was passed had already left New Zealand. The Prime Minister of New Zealand was asked if that proposed Bill passed, and he said yes. He was asked if the vote was taken, and he said: Votes of all soldiers who left before the general election recorded.

Mr. MURPHY: It does not say when.

Mr. DOHERTY: Certainly, unless it is assumed that, being asked a perfectly clear question, the Prime Minister of New Zealand chose to give an ambiguous or misleading answer. It seems to me that it is perfectly clear that when he was asked whether a proposed Bill which only had application to soldiers who had already left the country when the Bill was proposed, had passed and whether the vote was taken, and he answered that the Bill had passed and that the votes of soldiers who left before the general election had been recorded—

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: My own impression is that they voted before they left, otherwise they voted by marconigram. When he gets the facts, my hon. friend will find that they voted before they left New Zealand. I would assert that.

Mr. NESBITT: Is it not a fact that the Bill that the hon. member speaks of was passed authorizing these men to vote previous to leaving New Zealand?

Mr. DOHERTY: Absolutely the contrary.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Times, that I took for my authority, certainly so stated.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know what The Times stated. But I do know that the Bill was applicable only to soldiers who had already left the country; for any soldier who was still in New Zealand at the time of the election did not need that Bill at all in order to vote; he could vote under the ordinary law. The Prime Minister of New Zealand was asked whether the New Zealand Parliament had passed the proposed Bill to enable men who had left to vote. He answered, Yes. He was then asked, was the vote taken? By that I cannot conceive that the Prime Minister understood anything except, was the vote provided for in that Bill taken? If the question does not mean that, it has no meaning at all. He answered, Yes; and further stated that 10,000 votes had been recorded.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would my hon. friend allow me to see the telegram that was sent to the Prime Minister of New Zealand, and the answer. I think it was most unfortunate that my hon. friend did not impress upon the Parliamentary Counsel to find out in his cable to New Zealand whether the Bill was passed as introduced. Many Bills are introduced in this Parliament and every other parliament in the world in regard to which it would be quite correct to say that they had passed, even though they had been amended. What I would assume might be correct, from the cablegram of the Prime Minister of New Zealand, is that the Bill as it finally passed allowed those soldiers who were to leave New Zealand to register their votes for or against the Government. That might well be the case, for the Government expected a general election. Then when the election came on the votes would be counted by the returning officers.

Mr. DOHERTY: It would be possible to conceive of all these things were it not for the fact that so far as the soldiers still in New Zealand were concerned, no Bill was required at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Oh, no.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The Bill had absolutely nothing to do with any soldiers except those who had left New Zealand when the Bill was introduced, and for the simple reason that under the general law the soldiers still in New Zealand were already entitled to vote. I have asked the question, was the Bill that was introduced passed? The question that I did ask was, was the proposed Bill passed? What distinction does the hon gentleman make between the proposed Bill and the introduced Bill? I think my question was perfectly clear, and the answer to that question was, yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am sorry that I cannot think the minister has made it absolutely clear that soldiers' votes were taken after the soldiers had left New Zealand. My hon. friend says that it would have been of no advantage to have the enactments which I say might have been made, for he says the existing law allowed votes of soldiers to be taken if the soldiers were in New Zealand at the time of the election.

Mr. DOHERTY: The votes of anybody.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Now it is entirely possible that this New Zealand Bill may have provided that soldiers going abroad could, before they left, mark their ballots either for or against the Government, and that when the election came on the returning officers entered the votes accordingly. My hon. friend who sits behind me says that he is satisfied from a statement in the Times that that was done. It might very easily have been done. In New Zealand they were expecting a general election. The soldiers were going to leave the country, and the Government might very well have provided that before the soldiers left they should be given an opportunity to register their votes.

Mr. DOHERTY: Why did they make the Bill applicable only to soldiers who had left?

Mr. PUGSLEY: We do not know that the Bill passed in that form. My hon. friend may be guessing with absolute accuracy, but it is not always safe to guess that a Parliament has passed a Bill in the form in which it was introduced. My hon. friend has often seen himself amending his own Bills. That is not at all an unlikely thing to happen to any Bill.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I was about to make some reference to the provisions of the Bill which I think should properly be considered on the motion for the second reading, and in that connection I might express my thanks to the Minister of Justice for suggesting that I might be able to give some assistance in amending the Bill in case its principle should be approved of. Let me say to the minister that like my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), I am in favour of giving soldiers the right to vote providing it can be done in such a way as not to interfere with the proper performance of their duties and also provided that it can be surrounded with the proper safeguards. In speaking of this Bill, I am inclined to think that it has not been prepared with sufficient care to merit the respectful consideration of this House. I cannot think that the Minister of Justice has had his heart in this measure at all. He protested, Mr. Speaker, with eloquence and in the most sincere tones, that he was sincere about the measure. He protested three or four times and each time with a little more strength. I rather thought that the hon. gentleman was seeking to convince himself as well as to convince this House of his sincerity, else why did he protest so much?

Mr. DOHERTY: My sincerity was questioned.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend has heard the story of the maiden who, when she protested so much it excited a considerable degree of suspicion. Just let me call my hon. friend's attention to section 4:

> 4. The volunteer may thereupon make the affidavit in form B before any commissioned officer in the Canadian military forces, and, after making the affidavit, mark the ballot paper as a vote for the Government or the Opposition or for the independent candidate, in the presence of the said commissioned officer, but in such a manner as not to disclose to the officer how he is voting, and shall fold the ballot paper so that it cannot be read and shall then place the same, together with the affidavit, in an envelope upon the back of which shall be endorsed a certificate in form C, which certificate shall be signed by such officer.

Now, let me read the certificate:

> I hereby certify that the document contained in this envelope was written in my presence by (here insert name and rank and name of corps in which voter is serving), and according to the best information at my disposal I believe that the statements made in the affidavits are true.

That is the whole of the endorsement that is to be upon the envelope. The envelope is sealed. What then is to be done?

> The envelopes containing the ballot papers and affidavits shall then be sent by post to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who shall keep a record of them, place them in a package carefully sealed and marked on the outside "Soldiers Votes" and forward them by registered post to the returning officer of the electoral district in which such election is to be held.

That is the whole direction. Would my hon. friend just pay attention to the language of this section? I would like my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to consider it also and see whether there is any meaning in it or whether it does not indicate the preparation of the Bill in the most slovenly way possible and in a manner which indicates that the Minister of Justice has really not had his heart in the measure and has really not given any attention to it. There is to be nothing endorsed upon the envelope except the certificate of the officer that the envelope contains the affidavit, etc., of so and so, simply giving the name of the corps in which he is serving, not giving his residence, not giving the electoral district in which he has the right to vote. Then the officer has to send all these envelopes to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has to keep a record of them, he is not to open them, he does not know to which district any one of these voters belongs, he has to endorse on the outside "soldiers' vote" and he has to forward these envelopes by registered post to the returning officer in the electoral district in which such election is to be held.

Mr. DOHERTY: Who has to do that?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Where is the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery going to send them?

Mr. DOHERTY: That is manifestly an error in the printing of the form. I plead guilty to not seeing to the correction of the printed form, but it was intended that on the back of the envelope there should be endorsed, in addition to the name and the corps, the address given by the soldier in the affidavit.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Possibly that should be on the certificate?

Mr. DOHERTY: On the certificate, so that from the certificate the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery might know where to send the envelope of the man who claims to be entitled to vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, then, the section is wrong, because it says that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery "shall forward them by registered post to the returning officer of the electoral district in which such election is to be held."

