

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

The discussion which took place the other evening over the estimates for the Intercolonial Railway is of more than ordinary interest to the country. The fact that the estimate of expenditure was nearly half a million less than formerly, was as naturally calculated to arouse the jealousy of the Opposition as it is to excite the approbation of the country.

As we pointed out in a previous issue, the Opposition press have been driven to a very singular species of logic in order to discredit the present administration of the Intercolonial Railway. Seeing that the road is being run with far less men and money than before, and that the annual deficit of the Mackenzie régime is being rapidly effaced, they have resorted to a dodge that was as easy as it was natural under the circumstances.

They say, "Yes, you other evening over the estimates for the Intercolonial Railway is of more than ordinary interest to the country. The fact that the estimate of expenditure was nearly half a million less than formerly, was as naturally calculated to arouse the jealousy of the Opposition as it is to excite the approbation of the country."

proved a failure. Since 1877 the income of live animals has increased no less than 80 per cent. So far from discouraging the progress of the industry, the restriction seems to give it an additional stimulus.

Such being the case, it is not strange that the English farmers begin to feel a considerable fear of the "influx" of American cattle. The lesson ought not to be lost in Canada. Our cattle-breeder has for some years past been really "selling some money," but you are doing so as the expense of the condition of the road and the rolling stock, both are rapidly running down, and accidents are disappearing.

It enabled the Minister of Railways to make statements which add to the interest of the public in the operation of the new regulations, and which are singularly encouraging from every possible point of view. In the year 1878-9 there was a decrease in receipts of $84,847; which was due to the reduction in the rate of the Lower Provinces, and the consequent stopping of traffic in coal and iron.

The Halifax Herald would like to see an effort made to collect the vital statistics of the country for one year at least, at the same time as the census is taken. Unfortunately, it says, "We have no proper machinery in Canada for the regular collection of these statistics, but it appears to us that the best way to get the most accurate and complete statistics of the birth, marriage, and death, within their respective districts for one year, would be to have a census of the population, which would form a most valuable addition to our census statistics."

The Montreal Witness notes great activity in the real estate market in and about Glenside. The purchasers, it says, are generally thrifty and industrious mechanics. Purchases of real estate by mechanics during the last year were few and far between.

DOMINION DEPARTMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

MR. LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution: That it is expedient to provide that the amount of Dominion notes issued and outstanding at the end of the year 1889, should not exceed the amount of gold and silver coin and bullion in the Dominion at that time.

and more Dominion notes. That was a dangerous thing, circumscribed as it was. Our position was peculiar. It was a position of a country, a system of money which provided money that would not be sent out of the country to purchase foreign goods was the best system of protection, because it protected people without taxing them. Money that was exported tended to the stability of the institutions of a country, because it would lead men to remain at home and defend their land should a crisis occur. In conclusion, the hon. gentleman gave notice that when the banking resolutions came up he would move an amendment in opposition to the view that the Government should allow the banks the privilege for the next ten years of issuing the currency of money of the country.

MR. CHALMERS contended that the proposals of the Government were fraught with danger to the public interest. He cited authorities opposed to the proposal of the Government. He commented on the remarks of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Wallace), who thought it was expedient not to understand the soft money agitation, which wherever it had been carried, had brought ruin on every nation that had adopted the system. He then quoted authorities, both English and American, against paper currency.

MR. McALLUM held that the object of the Government should be to utilize the confidence bestowed by the people in such a way as to save as much as possible to the people. The resolution was a step in the right direction, and he was compelled to pay a great deal of attention to the demands of the market for bullion and exchange than was necessary or prudent. He would not be a party to any emergency, the hon. gentleman would find the Government of the country held responsible for any serious action which he took in the course of the year.

MR. ANGLIN opposed the proposal to increase the circulation, on the ground that there was just as much money in circulation as the business required. MR. MILLIS denied that the people had a right to share in the profits of circulation, or that they had any right to the profits. MR. JOHN MACDONALD said that the hon. member for Bothwell had attempted to draw a distinction between the public and the Government, but he had always thought that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government, and that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government.

MR. WALLACE (South Norfolk) said that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government, and that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government. He said that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government, and that the hon. gentleman who was the Minister of Finance should be the Government.

MR. ANGLIN—Under that system the Government gets no share of the profits of circulation. MR. WALLACE said it did not, but the Government had an immense amount of currency in circulation, but the United States had a large amount of currency, and put a large tax upon the banks, reducing them from $15,000,000 annually. That was a considerable profit. He was a member of the bank, and he was a member of the bank, and he was a member of the bank.

I love my Health TO YOUR HEALTH

Vegetine

Dr. H. R. Stevens, N.Y., April 30, 1877.

Dear Sir,—Having suffered from a breaking out of the skin for more than three years, caused by an accident of a fractured bone, which fractured my right arm, and have used every medicine that I could think of, and nothing helped me, until I took six bottles of your valuable medicine, which cured me entirely. I have had my blood purified, and my health restored, and I feel as well as ever. I am, Sir, your obedient servant.

LOUISIANA.

BY FRANCIS HODGSON SWANET.

CHAPTER XL.

A BUTT NAIL.

On Monday, Casey and his men came. Louisiana and her father were at breakfast when they struck their blow at the house which was to be renovated first.

The old man, hearing it, started violently—so violently that he almost upset the coffee at his elbow.

He laughed a tremulous sort of laugh. "Why, I'm nervous!" he said. "Now, just to think of me being nervous!"

"I suppose," said Louisiana, "I'm as nervous as well. It made me start to. It had such a strange sound."

"Waal, now," he answered, "come to think on it, it's not so bad. Seems like it wasn't so 'scary' as that."

Neither of them ate much breakfast, and when the meal was over went out together to look at the workmen. They were very busy bearing off weather-boarding and wrenching out nails.

Louisiana watched them with respectful eyes. In secret she was wishing that the well-oiled and painted walls might remain as they were.

She had known them so long. "I'm as nervous as well," she thought. "He does not believe me when I say I don't want it altered. He would never have had it done for himself."

"From New York!" she echoed, trying to show an interest. "I did not know you sent them, father."

"I ain't never done it afore," he answered. "They'll come to-day, an' then you'll see 'em."

She asked no further questions, fancying that he had been buying some ornaments for the new room, and she was surprised for her.

After he had gone away she thought a little sadly of his kind words and his unworldliness of it. At noon he came back and brought his prize with him.

He drove up slowly with it behind him in the wagon—a large, shining, new trunk—quite as big and ponderous as any she had seen at the Springs.

He got down and came up to her as she stood on the porch. He put his hand on her shoulder.

"I'll have 'em took in an' you kin look at 'em," he said. "It's some new things, 'specially a new 'noodle'."

She began to guess dimly at what he meant, but she followed the trunk into the house without speaking.

When they sat down to eat, she stopped crying and looked up at him, wondering if her emotion troubled him.

He was pale, and spoke at first heavily and as if with an effort, but almost instantly he brightened and spoke in a steady voice.

"I've been yer a right smart while, Louisiana," he answered. "You was'n't no more to me, come, and so you didn't see me."
