The Cross in New Granada.

Supporting Cardinal Lavergne in his crusade, and doing all that his power lies to save the children of Africa, we see Cardinal Manning, of England. Tender as is the love of his great heart for the oppressed of every clime, it would be strange if he could bear unmoved the terrible story of the poor negro's wrongs. But it would indeed be stranger far if he could be cold and indifferent in the presence of the woe of another land, the drink-slaves of his native land, and the slaves of the earth there has been Westminster another Cardinal crusader, the leader of a mighty movement for the liberation of England's myriad slaves of drink, and for the overthrow of their oppressors.

In all the wide world no one, perhaps, is better than the Cardinal Manning the power of the terrible demon of drunkenness, none better than he can attempt to number the slaves of the drink monster, or to tell the misery of their bondage. In the presence of evil great and terrible, and seemingly without remedy, Cardinal Manning could not look idly on. Dismayed by no difficulties, deterred by no obstacles, for many years he has struggled for the liberation of a people. To redeem the slaves of their own weaknesses, the slaves of appetite, the slaves of drink and the slaves of the bottle, he has hatched a brand-new scheme in the burning and enlisted as soldiers in the combat; with officers who have served in the ranks of a noble army battling in a noble cause.

Great is the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster in the mire that adorns his venerable brow, in his gallant that hangs upon his temples, in the crimson robe that makes him prince of the church; but greater far is he as father of the poor, the friend of the lowly, the liberator of the drink-enslaved, the head of this sainted priest of the Most High the snows of eighty winters have fallen, but his heart has not grown old nor has his courage abated. With a firm grasp he holds the crusader's banner, and in clear, trumpet tones bids the best and most devoted of England to rally round him. To aid to think that many years have gone by and that the glory of the Church and of humanity must pass away. But in the hour when his Lord shall bid him lay down his arms and prepare for rest eternal, around the dying cross there will come a guardian angel, whose piercing joy and victory, memories of the thousands won, by prayer and example by work and prayer, by his led out of the bondage of the demon of intemperance into the liberty of the redeemed of Christ. In his dying breath his people's prayers and tears will plead for him before the throne of God.

With the broad charity of the burning seal which the spirit of self-sacrifice ever brings with it, Cardinal Manning and his League of the Cross do not content with struggling for the redemption of drink-slaves in England only, look with longing eyes and stretch out helping hands to Ireland, to the United States, to France, to Germany, to those whose courage and resolution all the cruel despotism of England could never subdue, yielding themselves body and soul to the cause of their fellow-slaves of the drink monster, and their Father Matthew lived, labored and died, too many of the people of his love have forgotten his sublime teachings.

Whitely many are battling and fighting a work of strife to free the children of Ireland the chains forged by England, few, very few, alas! are they—and few the plaudits which they receive—and few the laurels which they wear in the Green Isle of the Emerald Isle. Ours is a noble crusade, and strive to free their countrymen from shackles heavier far than England's cruellest gibbet could ever forge. Shackles fashioned by men of their own blood and lineage, and forged in the furnaces of hell. May God in His mercy look upon this long-suffering people and raise up to them of their own race another redeemer, their own greater cross, another liberator of the drink-slaves, another Father Matthew.

It were wearisome indeed to go in spirit to the many other lands where intemperance reigns its horrid reign, and holds its victims in bondage. Yet the story of the "Cross in New Granada" would be but illly told were we to forget the watch-tower of the republic, and tell us what that meant. "I see," answers the watcher, "a goodly land, fairer than which the sun never shone upon it. It is a temple land, Uppa, mast a spee, pointing heavenward. I see the cross, the nation's sign and mine. I see this boy's emblem, too, upon many an abut of velvet sun and ivy-wreath, and upon many a home of innocence, and upon many a temple of learning, of infancy protected and old-age sheltered. I see, too, the glory of the cross lighting up the lives of lovers of every walk of life, and maintaining the path of the lowliest and the noblest. I see a people, purified by law, with none to molest them or make afraid. But this is not all; for, lo! there rises before me another and a dreadful picture. I see a demon in the land; it is the demon of drink. His temple is not the earth, exceeding in number those of the living God. The evil one, too, both his ministers, who keep and serve his temples, and his victims to his altars; and the number of these victims what tongue can tell? I see childhood prematurely withered and grown old in woe, misery, and crime. I see

PUTTNER'S EMULSION.

It is in diseases of this origin that it has achieved, and is from exhaustion, brain weakness or rheumatic attacks will gain speedy relief from the use of Puttner's Emulsion, I feel it a duty to make known to such the remediable effect upon my system." Dr. H. J. Forsyth, St. Peter's, G. B., says: "Judging from the results obtained from Puttner's Emulsion in the course of my practice, I cordially recommend it to possess all the virtues ascribed to it as a medicine."

bright boys and fair young girls tripping blithely down the road to the graves. I see wretched and wretched manhood, once the hope of the nation and the glory of the church. I see once lovely and loving womanhood bartering virtue and happiness for rum, and dying as they die, and dying as they die, and dying as they die.

Look out again, O look out again, I hear the wails of woe, the sobbing of despair, mingled with pleas for help and pity. But the slave-masters only mock and sneer, and cry at the top of their voices: "Drink! drink! and deeper drink! Drink and forget your misery! Drink and be happy! Give us the miser and we will give you the miser's house. Give us your all, it matters not whether it be the fruit of honest toil or the wages of sin and shame. Give us your all, it will give us and adorn our temples, it will feast it will clothe us in the richest and finest, it will buy for us the first places at feasts, and the first chairs in the synagogues and the first benches in the courts of law. It will make us great among the greatest and rulers among the rulers of the people." In answer comes back the bitter, despairing cry: "Lost! lost! lost! In the presence of evil great and terrible, and seemingly without remedy, Cardinal Manning could not look idly on. Dismayed by no difficulties, deterred by no obstacles, for many years he has struggled for the liberation of a people. Alaska Martyr.

As was announced in last week's number of the Catholic Review the remains of the martyr of Alaska,

Archbishop Seghers, arrived in Victoria, British Columbia, the 15th of November, on board the United States steamer Thetis. Bishops

Lemmens and Brondel received the remains. There was a religious service at the residence of the archbishop, and the remains were placed in the cathedral. The archbishop was accompanied by a large number of the clergy in Victoria to pray at the coffin of their dead pastor. The remains were examined in the evening by Dr. J. D. and J. S. Helm-

sted, in the presence of the clergy

and a committee of the congregation.

They were found to be in a good state of preservation and well remarkable. The Archbishop's breviary was found in his left hand, and the fact that the cause of his death

was a bullet wound in the left breast above the heart. Death must have been instantaneous, as the main artery was cut. That disposes of the rumor that the Archbishop was shot

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S LAST MESSAGE.

On the 3rd inst. President Cleveland sent his last message to Congress. It was a review of the national situation before the necessity for tariff reform; deplored the unsatisfactory relations existing between employers and employed, and inveighed against combines and monopolies.

His references to these questions show that Lord Selkirk was not so far astray in saying he believed the President was disposed to be friendly to our country, although for daring to intimate such a thing he was given his passport.

The language certainly indicates that President Cleveland has undergone an extraordinary metamorphosis since he sent his last message to Congress. In the letter case he was not speaking so much in his capacity of responsible executive head of the United States, as in the role of a well polished looking for votes and hardy politician by the political machine.

When the Senate, for political purposes, thought it to reject the treaty, the President, influenced, no doubt, by his most radical advisers, assumed the role of the desperate politician and threatened us with immediate retaliatory measures if we did not unconditionally grant our neighbors those privileges which the same President, a few months before, declared it would be proper to secure for an ample consideration.

Lord Selkirk's opinion was that the treaty was a good one, and that it would be well to accept it. He believed that it would be found to contain a just, honorable, and therefore, patriotic settlement of the difficulties which have clouded our relations with our neighbors on our northern border.

THE NEW SENATORS.

The nominations that have just been made to the Senate of Canada from the Province of Quebec have given very general satisfaction, for the new Senators are all representative men and are well adapted to do good service to the Dominion by taking part in the deliberations of the upper chamber.

MISCELLANEOUS.

There have been in different parts of the Province, in the last few days, several cases of influenza, which is now spreading rapidly.

Some award the honor of inventing clocks to Gurbur, who afterwards became Pope. It is certain that he put up a clock for the Pope in the year 1,000 of our era.

The President was invited by Gulliver to apply the pendulum to the clock, or whether it was done later by Huyghens, a Dutch philosopher.

There is a peculiar mode practised in China of catching wild ducks. Light rafts are first strewed upon the surface of the water to tempt the ducks to land.

Very few can have failed to notice the great number of people who are flocking to the city of Montreal.

IGNORANCE REGARDING CANADA.

The Halifax Herald of the 6th inst. contains the following surprising account of a visit to the United States.
