THE FAIR IMPOSTOR.

CHAPTER XX. Over the Toast and Tea. (Continued.) Dame Hester laughed. 'Where did she come from? Who is she?' she echoed. 'There now, Master Harold, you've posed me; sit down and be comfortable again, or she'll be put out, for she's only a young thing, and shy. I don't know where she came from—London, I think; her name's Ethel North, and she plays the organ at the church.'

And she, on her part, glanced now and again at him. Harold was at his best, in this little cottage, with his long limbs stretched out, unaffectedly taking his ease, and not at all shamed, as most men would have been by the loving, little attentions which the old nurse lavished on him. 'Another cup, Master Harold? It is just worth drinking; come, you used to be fond of tea, before you were old enough to take to French kickshaws. Give me his cup, Miss Ethel!' Ethel stretched out her hand, and touched it with her finger tips, and Harold laughingly held fast, and protested. 'Never mind him, Miss Ethel,' said the dame, smiling happily. 'Take it away from him, my dear.'

JOB PRINTING.

Master Harold, don't you take no notice if she's a bit shy, but let her alone. She's but a young thing.'

'Young indeed,' said Harold, more to himself than the old lady, 'and so beautiful—and all alone in the world. Poor, little thing!'

The light step silenced him, and Ethel North entered. She had smoothed the thick, glossy braids and thrown aside the thin, light blue wrap—which Harold had taken for an angel's wings—and was now in a plain, white dress, with snowy collar and cuffs; more angelic than before, Harold thought.

With becoming modesty, but with nothing of the shyness which Dame Hester had spoken of, she came to the table and took her seat.

Harold stole a glance at her. Yes, she was beautiful—very beautiful; and, as he looked, a strange kind of feeling came over him. He seemed to remember having seen her before, or was it that he fancied he detected a likeness to some one? With a vague sensation of surprise, he found a name for that some one. It was Lillian Woodleigh. She turned to him full face, with her cup of tea, and the resemblance grew stronger. Yes, she reminded him of Lillian.

There was one feature in particular that resembled her, and there was a decided difference between the marked beauty of Lillian's black hair and deep, eloquent eyes, and the dark brown curls, and soft, gentle eyes of this girl; but there was the resemblance, not to be over-looked, though vague and undefinable.

'What a faulciful beggar I am,' thought Harold. 'Dark girls generally are alike; another person might not see it.'

'Well, Miss Ethel, you've been practicing?' 'Yes, dame,' replied the musical voice.

'I can answer for that,' said Harold, 'for I was an unintentional listener, and enjoyed an unexpected treat, Miss North.'

She blushed and glanced at him.

'Was it you whom I saw going up by the side of the church?' she said. 'I did not know anyone had been in until I saw you going down the path.'

'I ought to apologize,' said Harold; 'but you were not playing when I entered, and I'm afraid I saw it the moment you came in.'

Harold laughed. 'I wonder you didn't turn me away for an impostor, nurse,' he said. 'It's late hours and the nasty indigestible things that French cook gives you for dinner; it's a wonder Sir Talbot isn't dead long ago, what with ragoos, and pate this and pate that, and all the made dishes that look so dreadfully brown and greasy. Master Harold, you used to be rosy enough when you lived on Nurse Hester's leg of mutton and porridge!'

Harold laughed, and stretched himself out, in his free and easy way; Ethel looked from one to the other, and smiled softly, thoroughly understanding the relative positions—the loving nurse doting over the great, stalwart young man, and trying to believe that he was still a boy, and reliant on her.

Meanwhile, Harold drank his tea in good, hearty draughts, and not fashionable sips, and made severe attacks on the toast, and—left Miss Ethel alone, as the dame had advised. But though he did not talk to her, he could not keep his eyes off her; and the sweet face, with the soft, brown eyes, seemed to throw a kind of soothing spell over him; it was as if he still heard the organ playing its softest, quietest melody.

A BROKEN-DOWN SYSTEM. This is a condition for which doctors give many names, but which few of them really understand. It is simply weakness—a break-down, an utter loss of the vital forces that sustain the system. No matter what may be its causes (for they are almost numberless), its symptoms are much the same: the more prominent being sleeplessness, sense of prostration or weariness, depression of spirits and want of energy for all the ordinary affairs of life. Now, what alone is absolutely essential in all such cases is increased vitality—vigor.

VITAL STRENGTH & ENERGY

to throw off these morbid feelings, and experience proves that as night succeeds the day this may be more certainly cured by a course of the celebrated life-giving tonic.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

I must tell you of a remark I overheard on the street this morning, writes one of my friends. "A gentleman, evidently a stranger here, remarked to his companion, 'The people in this town don't seem to know how to smile; I haven't seen anybody smiling yet.'"

I don't think that's a pleasant accusation, at all—do you?

Seems as if we needed to take some lessons of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young. At the N. E. A. convention this remarkable woman was telling how, when she had begun to teach, she was appointed to the "bad boy" room that all the other teachers had given up.

"And what did you do with them?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, I succeeded by using the upward curve method," answered Mrs. Young.

If the gentleman's comment is just, we certainly had better try the upward curve method for a while, if we don't want to be known as the sour city.

We have some beautiful public buildings and some splendid schools and other attractions too numerous to mention, to be sure, but if there are a lot of sour looking people going about the streets our visitors won't carry away a very pleasant impression.

Of course you can't go about perpetually smiling to yourself.

If you did you'd probably be considered not quite safe to have at large.

But you can look happy and cheerful all the time, and when you meet people or talk with anyone you can smile all you want without being suspected of anything but a happy disposition.

Or better still, take this advice: So you're way down in the dumps—Blue, you say?

Think you've played out, all your trumps?

Oh, go 'way!

Life's not like a game of poker; In this game you use the joker.

It's the card you hold the longest; It's the one you find the strongest; Laugh, and drive the blues away—

Laugh, I say!

—Jean Dwight Franklin.

I have a friend who can go to town and get through about twice as many errands in an afternoon as most people can do in a day.

I happened to accompany her on a shopping trip the other day, and I discovered the secret.

She always takes a little pad and pencil, and on her way to town jots down just exactly what she is going to buy.

Yes, I know a good many women do that, and that there is nothing remarkable about it.

It's the next step that counts.

Having jotted down all the errands she then proceeds to map out the campaign and numbers the items in the most convenient order.

Then when she gets to town she simply consults the slip and does the errands in the order of their numbering.

The result is that she takes the least number of steps possible and does not have the exasperating experience of getting way up one end of the town and finding she must go back for some measly little errand.

If you think this sounds better in theory than it would prove in practice, please disprove that by trying it.

I have.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. Is a pure glyceric extract of healing, native American roots.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Whitewash will stick better if salt is mixed in it.

Tartaric acid may be used to remove iron rust from fabrics.

An excellent cleanser for tan leather is a little turpentine on a flannel rag.

Olive oil, followed by a brisk after polish, is very good for patent leather shoes.

Fine work that imposes any strain on the eyes should never be done by artificial light.

Salt, placed on the coals when the meat is broiling, prevents the dripping fat from blazing.

Salt water is the best and simplest solution known for cleaning willow-ware and matting.

A green mayonnaise, to be used on a salad of vegetables, may be made by adding chopped parsley.

A porcelain tub or sink may be thoroughly cleaned with a flannel dipped in spirits of turpentine.

Oatmeal should never cook less than hour, and it is much better if left to simmer all night.

Fresh chocolate stains should be soaked in lukewarm water, after which they are easily washed out.

Never stand a broom in a corner; tie a piece of string around the handle and hang it up.

To remove stains and discolorations from tinware, try rubbing with a damp cloth, dipped in soda.

Olives and English walnuts ground together and moistened with mayonnaise make a good picnic sandwich.

Yellow spots on clothing are often due to acid; try immersing them in a weak solution of ammonia and warm water.

Wet shoes should be stuffed with paper, which will absorb the moisture and prevent the shoes from getting hard.

water is not handy, is derived from holding a dry pebble or button in the mouth.

Summer curtains of a cross-stripe are preferable to Swiss, as they keep fresh longer and are easily laundered.

Good black ink, mixed with the white of an egg, is excellent to restore the color of black kid gloves or shoes.

When ironing, have a cake of laundry soap handy. If the iron does not run smoothly, run it lightly over the soap.

For relieving the pain of a sunburn, a paste of talcum and cold cream, mixed well together, will be found helpful.

Cold cereals, like the various flakes, are much improved by the addition of fresh fruit with its natural juices.

A New X-Ray Martyr.

Dr. F. S. Pepperdine, the latest X-rays martyr, whose claims to a civilian pension are now being considered by the Government, is one of the most unassuming of men, in whom a casual observer would not expect to find a hero of science. He was seen at his home in Bexhill-on-Sea last night, sitting beside a large fire warming his amputated left arm, which, he explained, felt as if it were frostbitten. Otherwise Dr. Pepperdine was quite cheerful.

"I commenced lecturing and demonstrating," he said, "in 1897. Since then I have been experimenting with the X-rays. It must have been in the early days of those experiments that I first contracted the disease. It manifested itself by irritation of the skin and a burning sensation. That went on for years. The skin of my left hand began to ulcerate and break down, and the pain was intense. Unhappily I had it off I could not sleep without opiates."

Much of Dr. Pepperdine's work has been gratuitous, and to his devotion towards poor suffering humanity he owes his present misfortune. "I have made it my practice," he said, "never to take a fee for any work unless the patient could afford it."

His anxiety now is that others shall not fall victims to this science. "My own belief," he remarked "is that all the beneficial effects of X-rays can be eliminated now that we understand them. The only danger I see at present is in the effect of the rays on the brain. Large numbers of London school-children are treated with the rays for ring-worm, and it is possible that harm may be in that way done to the brain. I am at present experimenting with a well-known pathologist to see if we can ascertain the real effects of rays impinging on the brain. We can take photographs through the skull to such an extent that we know as a fact that the rays are absorbed by the brain matter."

Dr. Pepperdine's right hand is also now affected, and he has been compelled to give up his practice. He has a wife and five children dependent on him. —Daily Mail, July 27.

R. C. School Report.

We beg to acknowledge a copy of the R. C. School Report for 1909. We notice that the problems which are perplexing Superintendent Burke are fundamental in character for they go to the root of school training for children. He finds too many untrained teachers. Male teachers are scarce. There is a difficulty in keeping good male teachers in the profession. And there are too many school houses unsuitable in construction, poor in equipment, and devoid of proper sanitary convenience. Of these we hope to say more in the near future.

Mayor Gaynor of New York Shot.

Special Evening Telegram.
 New York, Aug. 9th.—Mayor William J. Gaynor, of New York city, was shot, and probably fatally wounded, this morning, aboard the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, as he was about to sail for Europe. The fatal bullet was fired by Jules James Gallagher, of 440 Third Avenue, New York. Gallagher was employed as a watchman in the Department of Docks up to June 1st, but had been discharged. He was immediately arrested. When asked why he shot the Mayor, Gallagher replied, "He deprived me of my bread and butter." The would be assassin was taken to an adjacent police station and arraigned. Mayor Gaynor was carried from the steamer to St. Mary's Hospital, in Willow Avenue, Hoboken. When he reached the hospital he was still conscious. He was immediately taken to the operating room. Three shots were fired, two of which missed, the third entering the head, just behind the ear. The Mayor was bare-headed at the time, and was standing on the fore part of the cabin deck, bidding good bye to his friends. As Mayor Gaynor was being borne away by his friends he remarked simply, "Say good bye to the people." The latest official bulletin tonight says that the Mayor is in no immediate danger.

At the Hague.

Special Evening Telegram.
 The Hague, Aug. 9th.—Continuing his argument today, Senator Root contended that the fishing rights under the Treaty were not simply those of equality, but that the right to fish was to be a liberty in common. He submitted that the makers of the Treaty understood it in accordance with the American contention and that they had no idea whatever that the grant which they were making was to be subject to any power or authority of Britain to restrict, limit, modify or affect by subsequent legislation. He contended that the French had exercised these fishing rights on parts of these coasts under an earlier treaty with Britain, without being subject to local regulations, and American rights were in effect the same rights, and were understood to be the same, before the lawyers began to argue, and to try and find some distinction between the two.

(Daily News Messages.)
 Curling, Aug. 9th.—Advices received by the Home state that His Excellency the Governor was accorded a magnificent reception in the Straits. At Blanc Sablon the entire community was on hand to greet them. Mr. E. G. Grant, M.H.A., spared no effort to make the Governor's visit a memorable one. An old cannon, dating back to the days of the French, was fired, but was blown to pieces by the discharge. Lord Brassey and his friends were also present, and enjoyed the day immensely. Captain Delaney was greatly edified at Lord Brassey swabbing down the deck like an ordinary sailor. Professor Fernald, of Harvard University, and his associates in the scientific expedition, secured a large quantity of floral specimens. While at Blanc Sablon they were the guests of Mr. Grant. Mr. J. F. Downey and wife were given a warm reception at Humbermouth yesterday. They came to Curling to-day, and are staying at Petrie's Hotel.

The Reason That Snowflakes Melt

so quickly is because they are thin—and the warmth of the earth and air quickly "cooks" them. If snow fell in thick lumps it would take much longer to "cook" it.

Same way with Quaker Oats. Being milled in very thin flakes, Quaker Oats is quickly Cooked all through. So different from thick, heavy, pastry porridge!

That's also why Quaker Oats does not overheat the blood--flakes so thin--starch completely cooked--porridge easily digested. Quaker Oats is the brain and muscle food. No waste. Most economical food known.

Some of the Evidence Dr. Crippen Will Have to Face.

Reports of Testimony at Coroner's Inquest— Body of Murdered Woman Dissected in Effort to Destroy Identity.

Some of the damaging evidence which will confront Dr. Crippen on his return to England was revealed at the inquest which was held ten or twelve days ago. It was there that Inspector Dew, who came over to take Crippen back, told the details of the discovery of the Hilldrop Crescent crime and the escape of its alleged perpetrator. As told by Lloyd's Weekly the inquest proceedings were as follows:

A large crowd surrounded the court, a little building in the church yard of St. Mary Magdalene in Holloway road. In the mortuary adjoining the court room all that is supposed to remain of Belle Elmore lay in a sealed coffin.

It was in this cold chamber of death that Dr. Pepper, the famous analyst to the Home Office, has been endeavoring to solve the mystery of the remains. The coroner indicated that to accomplish the task Dr. Pepper must baffle the skill and cunning of the murderer, who, with all the time he needed at his disposal, had endeavored to destroy not only all the means of identifying the victim, but all semblance of humanity, and to defeat even the discovery of sex.

Dr. Pepper had not been able to overcome all these great difficulties in the very short time as yet allowed him, and, therefore, the jury must await his report on the solution of the mystery later.

The First Inking.

First, Mr. John Edward Nash, the atrical manager, of Park Mansions, Vauxhall Park, who said that he and his wife, Miss Lil Hawthorne, were great friends of Belle Elmore, opened the story with a carefully prepared chapter in the strange circumstances that set the revelations moving. When last he saw the Crippens he and his wife dined with them, on January 19.

The Coroner—Did they seem all right?

Mr. Nash—Yes. They had had a meeting at the Music Hall Ladies' Guild that afternoon, and adjourned to our house to have just a little private dinner, and Mr. Crippen accompanied his wife.

The Coroner—Have you come across Mr. Crippen since?

Mr. Nash—Yes. May I tell my story in my own way?

"Certainly," answered the coroner, settling down with the jury to listen, and Mr. Nash, referring to some notes he held in his hand, proceeded:

"On Feb. 2 I heard through my wife that Belle Elmore had resigned from the Music Hall Ladies' Guild. My wife thought it was strange that Belle Elmore should resign so suddenly, and sent her a note on Feb. 5 saying that she would call on Saturday night to try to persuade her from resigning. We called at the house, but could not gain admittance. The place was all closed. To-day we heard that Belle Elmore had left for California.

Suspicion Aroused.

"Miss May, secretary to the Music

Hall Ladies' Guild, told us. Of course it was a big surprise to all. On Feb. 27 there was a dinner of the Benevolent Institution, presided over by Mr. Joe Elvin. We were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Martinetti. I was very much surprised to see Dr. Crippen enter with his lady typist and sit right opposite us.

"Mrs. Martinetti remarked to us that she was sure the typist was wearing one of Belle Elmore's brooches. That made a big impression on me. But that incident passed for the time; my wife and I were on the eve of a visit to America, and on March 23rd we sailed for New York. During the first week in May in America we received a letter from Mrs. Martinetti telling us 'Poor Belle had died.' About the middle of May we met Mrs. Ginnett (President of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild) in New York. She was very much upset, of course, over Belle Elmore's death. She did not like the look of affairs and wrote to the authorities at Los Angeles, and, not receiving any satisfactory reply, got the New Jersey police to write to Los Angeles.

"They received an official reply that no such person as Belle Elmore or Crippen had died in Los Angeles. We thought it was a very curious affair.

Visited Dr. Crippen.

"We sailed from New York for home again on June 15th, and I promised Mrs. Ginnett that as soon as I arrived in London I would interview Crippen. So on June 28th I visited Dr. Crippen at his offices. That was the first time I had seen him since the death of his wife. We went to offer condolence. He seemed very nervous and distressed.

"He had given it out that his wife died in Los Angeles. When I questioned him he said: 'Oh, no; she died in some little town near San Francisco.' He did not know that I had lived at San Francisco for a couple of years and knew the neighbourhood well. I tried to refresh his memory about the name of the town. He said it had a Spanish pronunciation, which he could not remember.

"At last I mentioned Alameda as a name, and he said, 'I think it was that town.' I said, 'Peter, do you mean to say that you don't know where your wife died?' and he answered, 'I think it was that town.'

"I said, 'You have received her ashes from the crematorium?' He answered, 'Yes, I have them in my safe.' 'From what cemetery?' I asked. He answered, 'There are about four near San Francisco, and I cannot tell you which one.'

"Surely," I said, 'you received a certificate of the death?' He answered, 'I have got it somewhere.' He began to get very nervous, and I began to feel that there was something wrong.

Appeal to Police.

The Coroner—His answers were unsatisfactory?
Mr. Nash—Yes; when a man cannot tell where his wife had died, I made up my mind to visit Scotland Yard at once. As a matter of fact, I did so, and saw Superintendent Forest.

After Mr. Nash had concluded, a sentence was interpolated by Mr. H. O. Seyd, solicitor, who appeared for the Music Hall Ladies' Guild. He disposed of anything that might be asked concerning Belle Elmore and her friends by stating that as treasurer Mrs. Crippen did her duty satisfactorily in every way.

Chief Inspector Walter Dew, of New Scotland Yard, was the next witness. He said:

"On June 30th I saw Mr. Nash with Sergt. Mitchell, and he then made a statement to me which was put in writing. With Sergt. Mitchell I then made exhaustive enquiries in various parts of London and other places, and I was not satisfied with my enquiries, and determined to interview Crippen.

"On the early morning of the 8th of this month I called at 29 Hilldrop Crescent with Sergt. Mitchell, and there saw a French girl, who was the servant, and subsequently a young lady named Miss Le Neve, whom I recognized from a description as Crippen's typist. I asked her then who she was, and she said that she was Dr. Crippen's housekeeper, and that he was out. I then observed that she was wearing a brooch which had been described to me as one that had belonged to Mrs. Crippen.

"Miss Le Neve suggested we should call later on, and she would fetch Crippen in the meanwhile. I suggested I should go with her, and after some demur she agreed. I then went with her and Sergt. Mitchell to Albion House, New Oxford Street, where on the third floor Crippen was carrying on some kind of a dentistry business, with others.

Brought to Bay.

"Crippen saw me at once, and I told him information had reached us as to stories set up by him concerning his wife's death, and that I had come to him because I was not satisfied with my enquiries, and would like him to give me some explanation. He said, 'I suppose I had better tell the truth.' I suggested to him that that would, perhaps, be the better course.

"He then made a long statement to me, which I reduced to writing, but I do not propose to put it in at present. The gist of it was that it was all lies he had told me about his wife being dead, and that, so far as he knew, she was not dead; that, on the first—I think—of February, he had given a little party to some friends, including Mr. Paul Martinetti, and through a little incident that occurred during the visit Mrs. Crippen, after the friends had left, created a bother, and then said she had quite enough of it, and was determined to leave him and go away, never to see him again.

"Crippen further said his wife told her she knew someone who wanted her, who was willing to 'keep' her, and find her with all she required. She had often talked like this, and he had taken no notice of it.

"As far as he knew," Crippen stated, 'the man to whom she referred was Mr. Bruce Miller, who, he thought, lived in Chicago, and he thought she had gone to him.'

His Wife's Jewellery.

"I questioned him about his wife's jewellery, and he said she had taken some with her and had left some behind. Crippen added that she had often said she did not want anything he had bought.

"I then asked him about her clothes and he said she had not taken much, but might have taken a basket with her.

"I then saw Miss Le Neve, whose statement I do not propose to give to-day. I also saw Crippen again, and told him that I was not satisfied, and I suggested that I should have to make every effort to find his wife.

"I asked him whether he would mind me coming up to the house at Hilldrop Crescent with him. He said he would be very glad if I did come. We went together to 39 Hilldrop Crescent, and before I went into the house I just walked around the garden, but there was nothing to indicate that there was anything wrong. "We searched the house, and everything seemed to be in perfect order, except that the carpets had been rolled up and some boxes had been packed. It was a well known fact that Crippen meant to go away within a few months.

"I sent Sergt. Mitchell between the rafters of the house, and all over the place, to look for anything suspicious, but he found no papers or any indication of any disturbance.

"I then left, and reported the matter to my superior officer and continued the enquiry. On the following Monday I again called at Albion House and discovered that Crippen and Miss Le Neve had disappeared on the Saturday afternoon, leaving a letter for a man named Long."

The Coroner—What is the date of that?

The Inspector—July 9. It was probably posted in the morning, and Long would receive it the same evening. It suggested that he should wind up Crippen's affairs, and stated that he had to go away.

Hunting a Clue.

The Coroner—Saying what was due to the landlord, and asking him if he would have it paid.

Inspector Dew—Yes. On the same afternoon I went to Hilldrop Crescent again, and there I found a French girl, who had been employed there about a month, and who could give me but little information. She did, however, say that on Saturday Crippen left the house in the usual manner in the morning, taking with him nothing out of the ordinary, and that Miss Le Neve also left about an hour afterwards, also taking nothing with her, with the exception of a small reticule bag. On the same afternoon this girl received a letter from Crippen telling her not to be alarmed, and that they had gone to the theatre. She was a young girl of seventeen, and was taken charge of by the police authorities, and, as she had no friends in London, she was sent back to France the next day. On that day there was nothing wrong so far as I could see from an examination of the house, but in a wardrobe of the bedroom occupied by Crippen and Miss Le Neve I found a fully loaded five-chambered revolver, and later on Sergt. Mitchell found downstairs a box containing cartridges.

Inspected the Cellar.

The Coroner—Now we come to the cellar?

Inspector Dew—I visited the premises on the Tuesday and Wednesday, and on Wednesday, when we were examining the floor in the passage leading to the cellar, we had our suspicions aroused, and we decided to make a most minute examination of the floor of the cellar. Groping about after sweeping the dust off, we found that one or two of the bricks appeared to be looser than others, and I determined to have the floor up. We took some of the bricks up with a spade and other instruments. Then we dug into the ground, and after a short time came upon what I thought to be a piece of human flesh.

The Coroner—Did you see any stain of blood?

The Inspector—No, we came across what appeared to be another piece of flesh, and I at once sent for the divisional surgeon, Dr. Marshall, and then for officers from the nearest police station. I caused the whole of the floor to be dug up, and we found a large quantity of human flesh.

Horrible Discoveries.

The Coroner—Did you find the head?

Inspector Dew—No, we found no head, nor hands, nor feet, but amongst the things we did find on closer examination was a Hindle's hair curler, in which was a piece of hair, and it appeared to be of two colors. There was a smaller portion of hair amongst the fragments of a man's handkerchief, two corners of which had been tied in the reefers fashion. We found no bones whatever, they formed one mass of human flesh. When we had got the remains out each piece was not very much bigger than that bag (pointing to a small bag in front of the coroner). It seemed as if some one had simply carved the flesh to pieces.

The Coroner—How about teeth?

Inspector Dew—There was no sign of teeth or bones there at all, but there was a quantity of what appeared to be quicklime with the mould and clay. The conclusion I draw from this is that whoever committed the crime had the idea of destroying the whole of the identity of the person. He put the quicklime in mixed with a quantity of water, so that the flesh should be destroyed and the bones could have been very easily got rid of elsewhere. There was a piece of coarse string about fifteen inches long, another about eleven inches, two small pieces of cloth and a piece of old brown paper with blood on it. The string and handkerchief might have been used for strangling.

The Coroner—There were no clothes?

Details Too Horrible.

Inspector Dew—I don't want to mention all the horrible details I have down here (indicating a paper of notes in his hand). I would rather leave them to Mr. Pepper. The remains were put together in a coffin; but first of all Mr. Pepper made an examination, and they were removed to Islington Mortuary. I was present afterwards, when Prof. Pepper and Dr. Marshall made another examination. With regard to the clothing we found amongst the remains, they consisted of a portion of a lady's undergarment and a man's shirt or pyjama jacket. Subsequently in this house I discovered a suit of pyjamas in a box upstairs similar to the jacket which was found amongst the remains, and also a pair of pyjama trousers, which had been very much worn. I cannot find any jacket to go with those trousers, so the jacket may be the one which was found with the body.

The Coroner—What do you think was the cause of death?

The Inspector—I would rather leave that to the doctors. The string and handkerchief, as I said, may have been used for the purpose of strangulation, or they may have been used to drag the portions of the body along.

At this point Inspector Dew paused, suggesting that he did not think justice would be served by carrying his evidence any further that day. He added: "We have not lost one moment. We have circulated the description and photograph of the man throughout the whole world.

What the Dr. Saw.

Dr. Thomas Marshall, the divisional police surgeon, was then called, and stated that he was called to see the remains on the afternoon they were collected, and there was not a bone to be found.

The Coroner—Are you prepared to say whether they belonged to a male or female?

Dr. Marshall—The investigation, microscopical and otherwise, is still being proceeded with by Professor Pepper, but personally I have no doubt they are female remains, although I cannot positively assert so on anatomical grounds. Whoever committed the crime certainly endeavored to remove all evidence of identity, and also of sex. If he left anything he certainly made a blunder. I should judge the remains had been there for several months.

The Coroner—You have no doubt that a murder was committed?

Dr. Marshall—No; but there was nothing to tell how she met her death. Many of the internal organs were well preserved. The quicklime may have destroyed some, but a portion of it seemed to have preserved others. The heart, for instance, was in excellent preservation.

The Coroner—Was there any evidence in the house that any foul work had happened there?

Dr. Marshall—The house was very carefully inspected, not only by the police, but by Professor Pepper and myself, and there was no evidence of any such thing. I should suppose that the work of dissection was done in the cellar, and whoever did it evidently had expert knowledge.

Death in M'king Pottery

How to Protect the Pottery Worker Who Faces Death to Give us Glazes and Colours.

In many cases the pottery worker who gives us the exquisite colour and glaze which we like to see upon our pottery faces death in making them. Why should they do so?

To answer that question the Home Office appointed a Departmental Committee to inquire into this dire lead poisoning and other forms of injury to health in the pottery trades. That Committee has made a most complete inquiry and has just issued its report. This report furnishes a complete statement of what really does happen, of the number of people employed in the dangerous part of the pottery trade, of the number who die from lead poisoning, of why lead is used in making pottery and why other methods of making it do not answer. It also contains suggestions of ways in which some of the evils can be abated.

The Number of Potters.

"The inquiry covers 550 pottery works, employing 63,000 persons, and seven lithographic transfer works," says the Times in its summary of the report. "Of the pottery works 329, employing 48,000 persons, are situated in the string of towns in North Staffordshire commonly known as 'The Potteries,' and recently amalgamated into the county borough of Stoke-on-Trent; the remaining 221, employing 15,000 persons, are widely distributed in different parts of England and Scotland. In addition to these 550 works there are in the kingdom some 500 others of a kindred or subsidiary character, employing about 11,000 persons, but not at present under special rules.

Unhealthy Processes in Pottery Making.

"The special dangers to health to which pottery workers are exposed are twofold: (1) lead poisoning; (2) the inhalation of dust without lead. Public attention has hitherto been drawn chiefly to the former, but it appears that the latter affects a much larger number of workers and produces more serious consequences. Out of 63,000 workers only 6,865, or 11 per cent, are brought into contact with lead, whereas 23,000, or 36 per cent, are exposed to the inhalation of dust; the remaining 53 per cent. are not exposed to any particular danger to health.

"Dr. Prid, the Medical Officer of Health for Staffordshire, has worked out the excess of mortality attributable to the two causes respectively, and he finds that the excess among those exposed to special risk from lung disease is 7.0 per 1,000, whereas among the lead workers it is only 0.8 per 1,000; that is to say, between thirty and forty die annually from lung disease to one from lead poisoning, and when the proportion of those exposed to risk is reckoned, the fatality of the former is more than eight times greater than that of the latter. The report adds that there is reason to believe that the suffering caused by lung diseases is also greater at least in the same proportion."

Who is to Blame?

There was a diminution of lead poisoning between 1898 and 1902, but between 1902 and 1909 there was no improvement. "The Committee find that the lack of progress since 1902 is due to imperfect conditions of work and casual observance of the special rules by employers and employed in some potteries. The former are blamed for not providing the safety appliances required by the law; but it seems beyond doubt that a considerable number of cases arise directly from the carelessness and indifference of the workers themselves. Lead is absorbed both by breathing and by swallowing.

Effects of Lead Poisoning.

"The principal effect of lead poisoning, in ascending order of severity, are—colic and gastric disturbance, anaemia, paralysis, and brain affections. Only a small proportion of cases are fatal; the average death rate from plumbism for the last eleven years is 1.0 per 1,000 workers in lead. Classified according to severity, the cases for the five years 1903-1907 were found to yield the following averages: Severe, males, 19.3 per cent.; females, 12.5 per cent.; moderate, males, 44.7 per cent.; females, 34.6 per cent.; slight, males, 35.5 per cent.; females, 51.4 per cent. Short of definite symptoms, the general health is impaired in many operatives, and miscarriages are abnormally frequent among married women working in lead. The occurrence of poisoning in particular cases is governed by individual susceptibility, which varies greatly, and by personal habits. Women are believed to be more susceptible than men, though this is not borne out by the percentages of severity given above, or by the death-rate, which is lower among women.

"Lead is used in pottery in the form of glazes and of colours. The Committee find that the great majority of cases of poisoning are caused by the former. They have paid great attention to the question of leadless glazes, which has been the subject of so much controversy, and they discuss it thoroughly in the report. Evidence was invited from every firm known to make a speciality of leadless ware, and all but one responded; forty-four witnesses in all were heard in the subject. Only two manufacturers told the Committee that they were entirely successful in using 'leadless glaze for the whole of their output—both make a very cheap class of common ware largely exported to the East and to Africa, and do not pretend to compete with the high-grade makers. Other firms have had partial success, but several who have used leadless glaze for some years have abandoned the attempt, and others, after repeated trials, have had no success at all.

What Could be Done.

"Dr. J. W. Mellor, technical instructor in pottery manufacture under the Staffordshire County Council, has been conducting special researches for some time, and is not very sanguine of success in finding a substitute for lead."

"The general conclusion to be drawn from the evidences in respect of the use of leadless glaze is—'That in all classes of pottery ware, whether of the best, medium, or common qualities, a great many articles can be manufactured, in a very high state of perfection, with leadless glaze.'

Novel System of Inspection

In a factory it is the neglect of the multiplicity of small precautions which makes the big danger. The Committee suggests a large number of safeguards to be insisted upon in the interests of the workers. It proposes to make these the basis of regulations. Each manufacturer will then have to appoint some person who will keep a register in which once a week he will enter replies to questions concerning floors, mess-rooms, lavatories, draughts, overalls and head-coverings, and suchlike things.

"The novelty of the plan," says the Westminster Gazette, "is that a copy of the entries made in the register will be posted each week in the factories and mess-rooms, where they will be read by the workers. If the statements made are wrong or false any of those employed will be able to report to the factory inspector. This is the institution of a check which is obviously capable of wide extension. The employer is made responsible for seeing that the regulations are carried out, independently of any suggestions from the factory inspector."
