Westward Ho!

Still Westward bound. The swift onward rushing train speeding away, away, through populous cities throbbing with the great activities of this strenuous age. On through the sounding aisles of the forest with here and there the lonely cabin of some venturesome woodman, the eager children, standing wide-eyed to watch the passing of the train as some wonder from a world of which they knew but little.

On and on, through the brightness of the day and the darkness of the night, along the beautiful chain of lakes—great Superior, its pictured rocks rising skyward, flashing like a sea of glass beneath the noonday sun, with never a hint of the wild fury lying beneath its placid bosom when roused by the sudden tempest or the rushing and roaring of the wind's fierce blast. On, still onward—but when the morning of the third day dawned an air of eager expectancy, a careful gathering together of scattered belongings, told that our journey was nearly ended.

Glimpses here and there of the wide rolling prairie stretching away beyond the vision, signs of the busy rush and roar of great commercial activities, and then Winnipeg—queen city of the west—its splendid buildings and tall spires reaching skyward and gleaming in the brightness of the morning sun.

Not many years ago this great city, now attracting distinguished travellers from all countries in the world, who wonder at its rapid growth and development, its unbounded possibilities, only a few scattered settlers made their home—down its lakes the Indian paddled his birch bark canoe, over its plains herds of buffaloes roamed at will.

Now splendid public buildings, beautiful private residences, rival those of the older cities.

In the city the widest streets are to be found. Want of room in the vast country being an unknown quantity.

In this city the headquarters of the famous Hudson's Bay Company, whose charter was obtained in the reign of Charles the Second, is situated, a part of which was sold to the Dominion government in 1869. During my visit Holman Hunt's great enterprise "The Light of the World," was exhibited in the fine art gallery of the city—painted fifty years before by the artist. Though comparatively crude in design and lacking in detail, it even then attracted some attention, but as its wonderful meaning grows his spiritual conception he has given to the world this great masterpiece, painted by his yet skilled hand at the age of eighty years.

Sold for thirty-five thousand dollars with the stipulation that it should be exhibited wherever possible, it has gone about delighting and instructing thousands of people in all the great cities where it has been shown.

The sad, patient, yet majestic figure of the Christ kneeling, waiting at the door of the human heart, clad in Pilate's jeweled robe, with the mocking crown of thorns—the blighted fruit and faded flowers of ignorance and sin beneath his sacred feet—the lighted lantern illuminating the old symbols and barbaric emblems of the superstitions faith that knew not the living God or the revelation of his son, presents a picture of truth that will live long after the hand that painted it is still in death.

A distance of sixty miles from Winnipeg lies the pretty town of Emerson where I spent the long pleasant summer days with those of my own kin, meeting many delightful people, the remembrance of whose kindness and hospitality will brighten many a quiet hour of the future. I had read much of the flat treeless prairie and formed opinions thereof. Great was my surprise to find the sidewalks of the streets in this pretty town lined on either side with great overhanging trees—a cooling shade from the burning sun. The lawns and grounds of the dwellings adorned in the same way.

Away back at the beginning of things in this country, this town had high hopes of becoming a great city even as Winnipeg, and latter flocked thousands full of eager anticipation and enthusiasm, but the changed route of the C. P. R. with other unexpected difficulties was disastrous to its further development, and many discouraged with the prospect left broken in fortune and lighter in pocket. Many, however, remained and struggling with difficulties in the beginning have at last overcome them, and are now enjoying prosperity and refinements of the modern up-to-date town. Beyond the town, far away stretch the vast wheat fields, east, west, north and south, far beyond the keenest vision, the growing wheat lifting its head to the kiss of the sun. Later on the ripening golden grain bending beneath its burden, waving, rolling like the waves of a harvest. Then the great binders passing up and down the long stretches, bark and forth, the strong-limbed horses bending to their task, throwing out as they pass the bound golden sheaves to be gathered in heavy stacks for the threshing, leaving only behind them the coarse dry stubble.

Here it seemed as if I had seen half of the world's bread set down, when it was only a speck compared with the boundless stretches that lie beyond.

Ninety or one hundred million bushels of wheat in the record of the year 1905 in the Canadian Northwest and other grains accordingly.

From the maritime provinces, from Ontario, from everywhere, thousands of harvesters rushed in one section reaching Winnipeg in one day numbering three thousand, quickly forwarded to the wheat fields finding themselves in a few hours shoulder deep in the golden grain.

And the threshing—the puffing panting engines stand in the show fields ready for their work. Hot and dusty, the men ceaselessly thrust the fuel into the red glowing furnace—the hurrying teamsters gather the scattered sticks and thrust them into the wide cavernous jaws of the iron monster that at the rate of five bushels per minute send it forth clean and pure to be—in some instances—stored in granaries on the field or moved at once to the great elevators, or carried by the busy trains to a distant market. Will the railways be able to take care of all the grain that offers? asked a reporter of E. P. Robinson, minister of agriculture. "Yes, I hope so, but to do it they will be obliged to break all records."

Said Sir Gilbert Parker in his speech at a banquet given him in Winnipeg, after his excursion in September through the North-West Territories: "The people of England are already aware of the importance of this country and are justly proud of their connection with it, but I shall make my special business to arouse their enthusiasm, and make them more fully understand its almost unlimited possibilities."

The people in Manitoba are justly proud of their schools and to their credit the remark sometimes made—that Canadian boys and girls know more of every other country than of their own, does not apply, since they are well up in the history, past and present, of their own country, and of the empire as well.

But the days are beginning to shorten—the trees are putting on their autumn robes of russet and scarlet and gold. The flowers bend their heads in the "slippies" evening air—the fields beyond the town are brown and bare. We no longer gather on the lawns beneath the spreading trees for the pleasant afternoon tea. The evening fires are lighted, and longing thoughts of home, its pleasures and cares come to me. With a lingering regret and silent farewell I turn away to carry with me sunny memories of a long, delightful holiday and set my face for the homeward journey via Minneapolis and Chicago.

The wind and the rain were beating heavily against the car window as we steamed into the station at Minneapolis, where in a few minutes the rushing automobile carried me swiftly to shelter and rest, and the welcome greeting of old time familiar faces. Then the sun, as if ashamed of its inhospitality, suddenly gleamed brightly through the branches of the trees—the rain ceased—and, rested and refreshed we rode luxuriantly through the streets of the beautiful city. For Minneapolis is justly celebrated as one of the most beautiful cities of central western America.

On and on, past splendid public buildings, beautiful residences, lawn and park adorned and beautified in a manner indicating wealth and taste—on over the wide smooth boulevards by the margin of the lake sparkling in the sunlight—far away until we reach the famous Falls of Minnehaha—Leaping Water, where they lie gazed by the cold gray crags of the rocky hills—the white veil gleaming silver—star spangled—wide flung to receive the stolen carcases of the sun passing swiftly westward, then, absorbed silently through the beautiful "God's Acre" where rest the city's sleeping dead—on through old St. Pauls across the great river "Father of Waters" that divide it from Minneapolis—everywhere the evidences of wealth and prosperity—everywhere the rush and hustle of commercial traffic—

Jews and Their Destiny.

Mr. Marriott-Watson discusses the present and future position of Jews in the National Review: The rejection of Christ by the Jews was followed by the ostracism of the Jews. This treatment, being continued through hundreds of years, inevitably directed the destinies of the Jewish race. The result was that they shrank into their shell, and from Israelites degenerated rather into Ishmaelites. And with everybody's hand against him, and his hand against everyone, the Jew developed that suspicion, that tenacity, and that ingenuity which characterize him today. For the tenacity of the Jew, so far as I see it, is an acquired property. Shylock was an obvious caricature; he embodied certain distinctive characteristics which exile from the pale of Western civilization naturally bred in the Hebrew. He was through the middle ages a stranger within the gates, subject to the derision and the persecution of his reluctant hosts. At times he was found useful; he hoarded money and was a primitive banker; in Spain he was a physician. But at times his defects outweighed his better qualities, and he was driven from the country as a plague. Through the dark ages of his oppression and segregation, denied access to the callings of ordinary citizens, he pursued a few avocations with ever-increasing zest. He became the money-lender of the towns in which he harbored. He must not fight; he must not follow the liberal professions; but trade was left to him, and usury, which is more powerful than trade. Since he had little or no outlet for his money, so far as personal indulgence and gratification were concerned, money-making became a habit for its own sake. Thus he grew rich. He became the banker of the Gentile world, which has so consistently mal-treated him. The Jew has, thus, it must be considered, an inherited financial genius. It is probable that he did not possess this in Biblical times. At least we find no trace of it in the records. The race emerged from those as rather an imaginative race, with strong mystical leanings and an almost savage sacerdotalism.

The Jew stands by his nationality today closer than he stood by it two thousand years ago, and that not through the force of fear, of jealousy of fanaticism. He has been thrown back upon himself and compelled to remember Zion.

"It was almost all that he had to remember through many centuries. The Jew stands today apart from the race among which he lives. It is notorious that though a Jew may come to be a professing Jew, he will, as a rule, marry within his race. I remember overhearing a conversation between two well-known Jews regarding the contemplated marriage of a Jewess with a Gentile. "I'll never forgive her," said one; "I'll never speak to her. It's an insult to our race." Race, you will observe, not religion. The position of the Jew here, as in other countries of Western Europe, is one of increasing power and authority. As has been already pointed out, he has rendered himself indispensable as a banker, and he is always in the forefront of every big financial adventure. The Jews have no country save that which harbors them—the foster-mother, so to speak, of that founding race. It is at the same time idle to suppose that the feeling of the Jew for his adopted country can be identical with that of the Englishman, Frenchman, or German. When I think of England I am conscious of a land for which my fathers for many centuries have labored and fought and died. There are more than a thousand years of heroic struggle behind most of us in the constitution of modern England. The Jew has no such tradition. The great influence amassed by the modern Jew, then, renders this situation portentous. It is not exaggerating to say that the financial houses today are often arbiters of peace and war. There are Rothschilds in London, in Paris, in Vienna, in the various European centres of finance, and it is well known that these branches of a big international firm work together. The people of Europe are content that a committee of Jews should determine international policy to any extent there is nothing more to be said on the subject."

Something New in Magazine Making

THE SCRAP BOOK is the most elastic thing that ever happened in the way of a magazine—elastic enough to carry anything from a tin whistle to a battleship. Everything that appeals to the human brain and human heart comes within its compass—fiction, which is the backbone of periodical circulation; biography, review, philosophy, science, art, poetry, wit, humor, pathos, satire, the weird, the mystical—everything that can be classified and everything that cannot be classified. A paragraph, a little bit, a saying, an editorial, a joke, a maxim, an epigram.

Nothing Like It in the World

There isn't anything in the world just like THE SCRAP BOOK. It is an idea on which we have been working for several years, and for which we have been gathering materials. We have bought hundreds and hundreds of scrap books from all over the country, some of them a century old, and are still buying them. From these books we are gathering and classifying an enormous number of gems, and facts and figures, and historical and personal bits that are of rare value. Furthermore, we have a corps of people ransacking libraries, reading all the current publications, the leading daily papers, and digging out curious and quaint facts and useful facts and figures from reference books, cyclopedias, etc., etc.

Don't fail to get a copy of this first issue of THE SCRAP BOOK. It sells at the price at which all our other magazines sell—Ten Cents a Copy and One Dollar by the Year.

The extended popularity of DIAMOND DYES induces speculators to introduce weak and worthless imitations.

DIAMOND DYES, true home helpers and money-savers for mothers and wives, are dear to every woman's heart.

Recently, speculators have gone into the package dye trade with the view of gaining a share of the immense and ever-increasing trade held by the manufacturers of the DIAMOND DYES, but all such efforts will, as in the past, result in failures.

The crude and worthless dyes brought out in opposition to the DIAMOND DYES, can never become popular, for the simple reason that they have not the good quality to boast of. The merchants of Canada who were induced to buy these adulterated packages did not find them dead and worthless stock.

The progressive and busy druggists and dealers of Canada sell only the DIAMOND DYES, which have an established reputation of over twenty-five years. The modern merchant has not the time or inclination to encourage the sale of worthless and deceptive goods.

If our Canadian women desire full, brilliant and fast colors, they should at all times ask for the DIAMOND DYES, the only guaranteed package dyes in the world. When buying package dyes, see that the words DIAMOND PACKAGE DYES are on each package handed out by your dealer.

Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, P. Q., will send free to any address their New Dye Book, Card of Dye Samples, and new book in verse entitled "The Lonsdale's Trip to the Klondike." This little book is interesting thousands.

Our Weekly Sermon.

Sermon by Rev. A. J. MacDonald, Pastor of Gordon Memorial Church, Bridgetown.

Galatians II: 20.—I have been crucified with Christ, yet I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me and that life which I now live in faith, the faith which is in the son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

The Judaisers were ever following in the steps of Paul. They had entered the church of Galatia and succeeded in impugning his authority and preventing the fundamental doctrine of the gospel of free grace. The church had departed from its faith. Its error if persisted in would be fatal. Paul therefore declares that his gospel was not in accordance with human notions or conceptions. He had received it direct from God. The gospel which he preached had been known to those in authority in the Jerusalem church, but made concession of no principle. Love might have induced him to concede some minor points, yet whatever subjected him to the false brethren was resisted in order that the gospel in its fullness and purity might be preached among the Gentiles. Of that gospel the observance of the ceremonial law was no part. To insist upon the law was to pervert the truth of the gospel and compel men to return to the weak and beggarly elements from which Christ by his death had forever freed men. The deeds of the law could never justify. Justification comes by faith alone. This has been his experience and theirs. Why then, he asks, should I or any other turn again and rebuild the edifice which had been thrown down. The building is complete and the scaffolding removed. Shall that scaffolding be re-erected? To do so would be to stand convicted as a transgressor of the law. Like many another he had experienced its inability to give life. He therefore turned his back upon it forever as a means of justification before God. "I died to the law. To me it is no more than it is to a dead man. I did this not that I might be free from the law as a rule of life. I did it that I might live the only life worth living—a life consecrated to God. I have been speaking of dying. There is another sense in which I died. I have been crucified with Christ."

Two leading thoughts are presented to us here:

1.—Our crucifixion with Christ.

2.—The power of Christ's risen life in us.

The glorious vision Paul had seen on the way to Damascus revealed to him that the cross of Christ was the end of Judaism. The cross became the basis of his life. This he expresses in the words, "the faith which is in the Son of God—who loved me and gave himself for me." That was the only foundation for a life such as Paul's.

But in this lay the stumbling block to the Judaisers. The thought of faith in a crucified Messiah being sufficient apart from the deeds of the law they could not accept. When Paul came to believe it, it was at the cost of all he formerly esteemed highest. His former life he abandoned. The revolution was complete. The law sought justification by works but only a restless unsatisfied longing for unattained righteousness remained. With Christ he had crucified the law. With him he had been crucified. The meaning of that death upon the cross was borne in upon him. He understood his own relation to it. The way back to the law was forever barred by the cross. Anything that did not conform to the death of Christ he could not accept. With a love greater in intensity than the hatred he exhibited toward the Nazarene he is now bound to him. He realized that by the grace of God he had tasted death for every man that all under the law might be redeemed. No longer are men dealt with under the law. It has passed away and grace reigns. Paul identifies himself with him who died on Calvary. There was accomplished potentially all that afterwards issued in his life and that of all believers. He looked upon himself as nailed to the cross with Christ. He shared his wounds, his shame, his agony, his death. Paul's passionate earnestness in describing his own spiritual change goes far beyond the conception that we were crucified representatively in him. He describes what he endured in his own being. The old life is killed out. The passion, the lusts, the habits, the associations of life in sin, self and worldliness are crucified.

The Christian religion is not merely an education of the self-centred life. A change must take place which goes to the very foundations of a man's being. There must be purging, scouring, crucifying. Who that has experienced this process will say it is a light thing to destroy the life of sin. Who will say it is pleasant to be cut off from the attractions that may have been deeply rooted in our nature?

ILLSLEY & HARVEY, Port Williams

This is indeed crucifixion. The end, however, painful or long the process is death. How many have lifted up their voice with the cry bordering on despair, "Who shall deliver me from the power of my treacherous passions?" Union with Christ necessitates and brings about this death of the old life. When we by faith come to Calvary and reach out to him who was nailed there and enter into his experience the old man receives his death wounds. Then with Paul we can say, "I have been crucified with Christ. But this alone is not all of Paul's thought. Christ's risen life is as necessary to his teaching as Christ crucified. In Paul's mind the two are inseparable. He always looked upon one in the light of the other. The faith of Paul is a faith in the Christ who died but rose again. "Christ now lives and he lives in me," is his thought. It was more than the principles taught by Christ that dwelt in Paul. The abundant life Jesus came to give was in him. He might have said, "In the old days I lived." It is not so now. Christ lives in me. My earthly life is maintained by faith. This shows how closely he believed the believer's life to be identified with the Savior's. He is a sharer in the risen life. From renewed, reanimated with the risen life of Jesus, lives with God. The old life is buried in the past. He is living in the present but not as he lived formerly. He now lives by the power of God and the link that binds him to that life and power is faith. Without this Christ would have died in vain. The life of Christ affects only those who by faith willingly accept it. His life becomes the new impelling force—the spirit—the life. Such faith, not mere intellectual assent. It is a power that manifests itself in every sphere of human action. That that dominated man no longer has dominion. The life lived was in the flesh, but it was not a fleshly life. That which was once the cause of despair now becomes an instrument of righteousness by the Spirit's power. This is an experience which is not peculiar to the apostle. For to the Corinthians he says, "If ye be risen with

Branding Apples.
To the Editor of the Monitor:
Sir,—In a Nova Scotia paper of recent date I notice a letter from a fruit grower complaining very bitterly of being blamed for the bad packing of certain apples which bore his brand. The writer explained that he sold his apples to a packer who sent his men to the grower's orchard, the grower having nothing whatever further to do with the apples and therefore being in no way responsible for the packing. He, however, admits that he lent his stencil to the packer to be used on that fruit. This is a practice that cannot be too strongly condemned. If a man is not prepared to be responsible for the packing he should not allow his stencil to go upon the barrels. It is, therefore, perfectly right and proper that as long as he permits his brand to go upon a barrel he should be held responsible for the packing. It is to be hoped that this will be a warning to growers who carelessly allow their brands to be used by anyone but themselves.

On the other hand it is not an uncommon practice for dealers to brand inferior grades of fruit with a fictitious name. This is a distinct violation of the Fruit Marks Act, and will be severely dealt with. A man must brand all the fruit for which he is responsible for the packing with his own name and address.

Yours truly,
A. McNEILL,

MAKING AND MANAGING HOT-BEDS.

(C. L. Allen, Long Island.)
From the time of Pliny and Columella, the early authorities on garden work, hotbeds have been regarded as necessities. The early vegetables and fruits bring the highest prices and gardeners use every possible effort to push forward their crops to get the best profits. The owner of a home garden has the same interest at stake, and his profits evolve from the satisfaction of having in his own garden choice vegetables when they cannot be obtained in the market. The hotbed was formerly the only means of accomplishing these results. Happily it is no longer regarded a necessity, as the market gardener has found the greenhouse heated by hot water pipes is by far the most economical, hence the most satisfactory.

For the home garden, a greenhouse structure is too elaborate, requiring the services of a gardener, which is not desirable for a small place. Here the hotbed can be made profitable in very many places, but only when there is a stable on the premises to furnish the manure, as the cost and trouble of getting this is more than the satisfaction obtained.

The time set for making a hotbed adapted to this locality is about March 1. This may be early or late as all depends upon weather conditions.

SEED TIME

The experienced farmer has learned that some grains require far different soil than others; some crops need different handling than others. He knows that a great deal depends upon right planting at the right time, and that the soil must be kept enriched. No use of complaining in summer about a mistake made in the spring. Decide before the seed is planted.

The best time to remedy wasting conditions in the human body is before the evil is too deep rooted. At the first evidence of loss of flesh Scott's Emulsion should be taken immediately. There is nothing that will repair wasted tissue more quickly or replace lost flesh more abundantly than Scott's Emulsion. It nourishes and builds up the body when ordinary foods absolutely fail.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture is the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

which are more or less uncertain, consequently the time must be governed by circumstances. Wherever the locality there is every evidence that winter has given way to spring. The first step is to procure a sufficient quantity of fresh horse manure from the stalls and add to this from three-fourths to an equal quantity of leaves. Mix thoroughly, tramping down the mass in successive layers, and form in a mass of about equal dimensions, every way, so that fermentation will commence at once, even though the weather may become severely cold. As soon as fermentation becomes active, which will be known by the escaping steam from the heap, the mass should be turned again, and treated as before. In two or three days the second fermentation will commence, at which time it will be ready for the pit.

The pit of any required size should be 30 inches deep. If a permanent structure is desired it should be walled up all around with brick laid in cement, double thickness, and level with the surface of the ground. The situation should be a dry, sheltered one facing the south, if possible, and protected from the cold, north winds by a tight fence or evergreen hedge. Hotbed sashes are usually 36x feet, the number used to be determined by the amount of vegetables required by the family. Where only plants of cabbage, tomatoes, cauliflowers, celery, peppers, lettuce and egg plants are grown, one sash will be abundant for a family of six. Should the hotbed be used for the growing of lettuce, radishes, cucumbers, as well as for plants to be transferred to the open, a larger number will be required. This point the owner must determine.

Certain it is that the hotbed is a valuable acquisition to any garden. It is the best possible place for the growing of cucumbers or melons, which can be started after the first crop of lettuce and radishes. Vines will do far better and produce more abundantly in a frame than in the open; but it must be understood that the glass must be whitewashed as soon as the sun's rays become powerful, and the sash raised, wherever the temperature will permit, for a circulation of air, an important factor in plant growth. The soil used in the hotbed need not differ from what the garden affords, although a heavy clay is the least desirable.

AMERICAN APPLES IN LIVERPOOL.

Inasmuch as Liverpool receives and distributes most of the apple exports from the United States to the United Kingdom information regarding trade at that market is highly acceptable. This journal is in receipt of a mid-winter review of the Liverpool market, reported by Woodall & Company.

Reports arrive from the first of the season to January 1, 1906, to aggregate 663,300 barrels (including boxes reduced to barrels), which may be compared with 672,500 barrels the same period the preceding winter. The general trade this winter has proved about as many had anticipated, and was the exact reverse of a year ago. Then, it will be remembered, the English crop was heavy, and their local fruits were in abundance. It is doubtless due to the unusually heavy American crop of 1905 and low prices that so large an export trade was noted. Among other things, Woodall & Company say: "The situation this season is made more secure from the sellers' standpoint, owing to the generally satisfactory condition of arrivals. For the most part American apples have been coming in good shape, and show care in packing, etc. The bulk of our season's supplies have arrived from Maine, New Hampshire and Canada; comparatively few apples have been received from the Empire state. Baskets small in size, which has been rather a serious fault. Up to the first of this year, Nova Scotia apples were not offered freely. Receipts of Virginia stock earlier in the season did not prove as attractive as usual in quality.

The shortage of Greenings has been a feature, some Canadians selling up to $5.75 per barrel. Choice Babingtons touched $6.50 for the season. Kings $6.80. The following table shows receipts of United States and Canadian apples at Liverpool from the opening of the season to January 1, during various years:

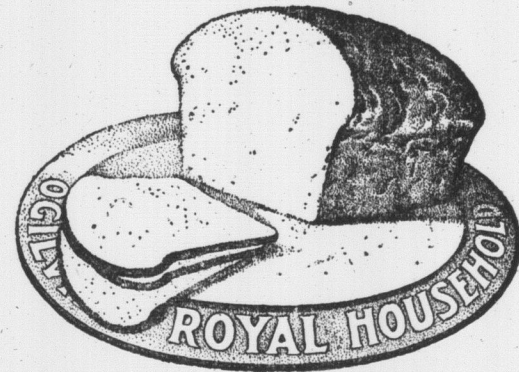

Year.	Barrels.	Year.	Barrels.

Absolutely white flour makes the most beautiful white bread—the kind we all like. But white bread is not necessarily pure because it is white. To be pure it must be made from purified flour.

There is only one method of making flour absolutely pure, and that is by electricity. No impurity can withstand the searching, purifying work of this electrical process.

The electrical method is employed by every big mill in the United States.

In Canada the only flour purified by electricity is

State Attorney General Hadley made a very plain statement of what he thought of John D. Rockefeller, while in Kansas City, Mo., the other day. He was asked what would be the opinion of Rockefeller if he would leave all his standard Oil possessions to be held in trust for the people. Mr. Hadley replied, "He could not atone for the almost incalculable moral wrong he has done for the distinctly dishonorable and commercial immoral and success of Standard Oil methods has given the trading organizations of America." Mr. Hadley said he has found that "every turn that can be adopted to evade the law is used without scruple."

THE PARTY CONVENTIONS

A writ for the election of a member of the House of Assembly to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of the Hon. J. W. Longley to the Supreme Court Bench, having been issued, a convention of the Liberal party of this county was called for last Wednesday, to meet at the court house. A full attendance of delegates from all sections of the county was present.

After the preliminary business of calling the roll of delegates, the chairman of the Liberal Association for the county, O. T. Daniels stated the object of the meeting, which was to select a candidate to contest the county in the interest of the Liberal party, when the delegates having retired to the ante-room, from which after a short time spent in discussion, they emerged, and the chairman, Shipley Spurr, announced that by an unanimous decision they had selected O. T. Daniels to be the standard bearer of the Liberal party in the forthcoming election, and repeated the consent of that gentleman to allow himself to be put in nomination.

Mr. Daniels, in a neat and appropriate speech accepted the nomination and thanked the convention for the confidence manifested in him; that if elected he would do his best to perform worthily the duties incumbent upon a representative, that he had no doubt that the feeling manifested in the county he would on the night of the election be found to lead the poll, that he had not sought the nomination, and would rather some one else had been selected, but as the selection had fallen on him, he would leave no stone unturned to carry the banner of the party to victory.

Shipley Spurr, addressed the meeting for a few moments, in a happy speech, Mr. Daniels, he said, was just the man to fill the bill as a candidate for the party, and he had been looking forward for some time to his being brought out. That Mr. Daniels was just the candidate to suit the temperance people as he was well known to be an out and out strict teetotaler all his life time.

Mr. Bancroft, M. P. P., being present responded to a call, very happily reminding his hearers that Mr. Daniels would have a powerful canvas to put before the people on the splendid forward policy of the local government during their many years of administration of local affairs; specially referring to the expansion of the local revenues, by which increased grants which were given to every worthy public service.

John Irving addressed the meeting, remarking that this was in his experience the best convention he had ever seen assembled in the county. Unanimity was the watchword and the best of feeling prevailed. That to his knowledge Mr. Daniels was making a great sacrifice in submitting to the wishes of the convention in accepting the nomination. That it could be truly said that this was the case of the office seeking the man, and not the man seeking the office. That Mr. Daniels would have a splendid canvass to put before the voters in the many public benefits conferred upon the county, not the least being the great boon conferred upon the people of Granville, as well as the county generally, in the building of the Middleton and Victoria Beach Railway, of which he, (Mr. Irving) had been the humble but indefatigable promoter.

After a few remarks from S. W. W. Pickup, M. P., who received an ovation, and Mr. Daniels having resigned the chairmanship of the Liberal Association, Fred. E. Fay was unanimously chosen to the position. The meeting then adjourned.

Joseph Gaetz is the nominee of the Annapolis County Temperance Alliance to contest this county in the approaching bye-election. This step was decided upon yesterday afternoon at Middleton by the convention called for the purpose of considering what steps should be taken in the interests of provincial prohibition and moral reform. The convention was well attended from the east end of the county. The reverend gentleman was proposed by Rev. J. A. Ramsay and G. M. Moore, but W. E. Outbit and Dr. H. E. Armstrong moved that the convention ask the candidates of the two political parties to pledge themselves to provincial prohibition.

After a lengthy discussion of the motion and amendment the amendment was defeated, and it was decided to nominate Rev. Mr. Gaetz. A number of meetings will be held in his behalf, the first being at Lawrence town tomorrow evening, and another at Paradise on Friday evening.

The Town Council.

A special meeting of the council was held on Monday evening. The mayor and all the councillors were present.

Dr. Jost, chairman of the school board, introduced a resolution which had been passed at a meeting of the board held during the afternoon relating to manual training in the schools.

The council passed a resolution calling a meeting of the ratepayers for Monday evening, March 5th, to consider whether such a department should be added at a cost of about $300 per year.

The following were appointed a committee on Fire Escapes—Honorable Bishop, Lorain Hall and J. W. Peters. A resolution authorizing the clerk to prepare the necessary papers to secure legislation to renew the water left coming due in 1907, passed unanimously.

The mayor introduced a bill of Walter White, amounting to fifty cents for labor in cleaning the crossings of snow. The policeman had had the work done.

Councillor Calder thought it was not right for the policeman to hire men to do work on the streets without authority from the committee.

The mayor thought he (the policeman) had not exceeded his duties, as he had always had an oversight of the streets.

The bill was ordered to be paid. Councillor Harlow thought all matters referring to the streets should be left in the hands of the street committee.

The bill of John Lockett & Son for a suit of clothes for the chief of police was brought up.

Councillor Longmire, as a member of last year's police committee, explained that he had agreed to the purchase thinking it was right. It had been customary in the past to furnish the officer, whoever it may be, with a uniform.

A motion was made by Councillors Chute and Longmire to pay the bill.

The vote stood: For the motion—Councillors Chute, Foster and Longmire; against—Councillors Harlow, Calder and DeWitt. The mayor gave his casting vote in favor of the motion.

Councillor Harlow, as chairman of the committee to secure tenders for the town medical service, reported that the physicians had been asked to tender but had not done so.

Council adjourned until March 6.

A Terrible Dilemma.

A correspondent sends us the following account of an occurrence that took place within his knowledge, which we consider quite interesting enough to place before the readers of the Weekly Monitor.

A wealthy old maiden lady had a favorite nephew, to whom she intended to leave her money. She deferred making her will until she was very ill. Then, when the doctor told her that she could not recover, she sent for her lawyer and made him instantly prepare the document, as she must execute it without delay. The lawyer ran home, drew up the will according to the lady's wishes, and brought it to her house. Here he met the doctor, who said that Miss M. must not be disturbed, as she had fallen asleep.

"But," said the lawyer, "it is most important that she should sign this paper."

"No, she shall not be wakened; it would shorten her life."

"But how much would it shorten her life?"

"Perhaps by half an hour."

"This young man's future depends on the will being signed. It is my duty to waken her and get it signed."

"And it is my duty to keep my patient alive as long as I can."

"Is there any chance of recovery if she remains sleeping?"

"None; in any case it is only a matter of another half-hour."

"Then she shall be roused," cried the lawyer.

"She shall not be roused," cried the doctor.

And so they wrangled, each conscientious in his engerment. The doctor prevailed. Miss M. slept on. Half an hour later she woke. It was too late—she gave a gasp and died!

Was the doctor or was the lawyer right? This question, our correspondent adds, he has never been able to settle to his own satisfaction. We should like to hear what our readers think on the subject.

The splendid mood held secured by George H. Dixon last December has been mounted. The work was done by Emack Bros., of Fredericton, and shows to advantage their excellent workmanship and artistic taste. The magnificent trophy now adorns the walls of Warren's Drug store, and, as the royal monarch of our Canadian forests, it finds an eminently fitting repository in the Royal Pharmacy.

Anthony Munro died very suddenly at his home last Thursday morning, aged 46 years. He had been in poor health for some years, but arose as well as usual that morning, made the fire and a few moments later fell dead upon the floor. He leaves a sorrowing wife and four small children who need the sympathy and help of our citizens. Having been sick a great deal he was only able to provide for the immediate needs of his household and not to lay aside anything for such an emergency. He had been in the employ of Beeler & Peters for about three years, where he will be greatly missed, as he was ever faithful, obliging and ever looking for an opportunity to do some deed of kindness to someone. The funeral was held on Saturday afternoon conducted by Rev. E. E. Daley, interment in Bridgetown cemetery.—Com.

Boni's Extravagance.
Stories of the Wild Extravagance of Count De Castellane—Man Who Marries American Millions Borrowed Large Sum From a Parisian Tailor.

The scandal in the family of Count Boni de Castellane is destined to furnish aristocratic society gossip for another month. An American woman, moving in the exclusive set of Parisian society, said recently:

"I hear the Count's debts aggregate eighteen million francs, of which eight million francs is due to jewelers. Boni is heavily indebted also to money lenders and tradespeople. His extravagance is picturesque and monumental."

"It is stated that he once borrowed from a tailor. He ordered a fur coat costing 100,000 francs. When the coat was delivered there was 90,000 francs in one of the pockets. This method of borrowing from tradespeople is practiced by many aristocrats in Paris."

A Viscountess, whose name is mentioned in connection with the Count's, said before the scandal was disclosed, while praising the Count's amiability:

"Just fancy! Boni dined in my home only a few times, and now sends me a pearl necklace, worth 100,000 francs."

The Count's extravagance rivalled that of the eccentric English Marquis Anglesley, who, in paying his bills, always scorned to accept any change. His generous tips enriched scores of lackeys in Paris.

ADVENTURE WITH A MANIAC ELECTRICIAN.

By David McMillan Muir.
Just as I was leaving my house one wintry afternoon a hansom dashed up to the curb, and almost before it had stopped a tall, military gentleman kept out and approached me, and having assured himself that I was the person he wanted, handed me his card it read:

Sir Anstruther Morley,
Mallinhuig,
Argyllshire.

"Pardon my rather inopportune arrival, Dr. Crichton," he said, after allowing me a moment to glance at the card, "but I should esteem the favor of a short interview. I come at the suggestion of our mutual friend, John Seaton, of the Inn."

I led the way back to my consulting room, and as my visitor threw himself into an armchair near the window, I noticed that his face bore traces of worry, which up to the moment, possibly owing to his natural sternness of expression, had passed my observation. "Could you arrange to travel north with me tonight, Dr. Crichton? I would like your opinion regarding my son, Graham. His behavior recently has been sufficient to warrant the belief that he is being gradually forced upon me, namely, that his reason is affected, and just about an hour ago, when I was in the club smoke room fulfilling an engagement with Seaton, a wire was brought to me from my secretary saying my son was worse, and requesting me to return immediately. I conveyed the news to Seaton, and on learning the nature of the trouble he at once recommended me to drive over and see you, and, if possible, get you to accompany me north, as, having made a special study of mental diseases, he informed me, you would be well qualified to deal with the case. Can you come, Dr. Crichton? The question of fee we need not touch on meantime."

I inwardly thanked Seaton for his compliment to my abilities, which I am afraid he had at times a weakness for over-rating, and then thought over the cases which I had at the moment occupying my attention, and after a little consideration eventually decided to go. Sir Anstruther thanked me, and a little later re-entered his cab and drove off, while I went to make the visit which his call had interrupted.

Shortly before midnight my hansom dropped me at St. Feneca's, and on proceeding to the platform I found Sir Anstruther had already arrived and was at the moment engaged in conversation with the guard. The frock coat and silk hat which he wore when he called on me earlier in the day had been replaced by a heavy harris tweed travelling ulster and cap of similar material. He had engaged a sleeper, and several magazines lay on the cushions along with a box of cigars, and although he had done everything possible to ensure the journey being as comfortable as could be expected at the time of the year. A few minutes after twelve we steamed out of the station. Sir Anstruther having entrusted our tickets to the guard, together with an ample remuneration for the service, so that we might travel undisturbed.

During the journey I learned as a result of my inquiries and partly from voluntary information given by my client, that his son Graham, a young man of twenty-two, had, after leaving Harrow, been placed in the laboratory of one of the leading professors of electrical science, and for the past few years had been studying the subject exhaustively. He acquired the fundamental knowledge in a remarkably short space of time, and it was not long before he began to specialize in certain directions. His attention at the present was centred on the study of the element as a factor in warfare, especially as affecting land and submarine mines; the inventing of new principles and the improvement of those already existing.

The forenoon of the following day had pretty well advanced when we transferred ourselves from the mail to a small local line, which was at that time responsible for the conveyance of passengers to that part of the Highlands in which Sir Anstruther's estate, Mallinhuig, was situated. That gentleman's worry and uneasiness for his son seemed to increase as the distance from our destination decreased, and more than once during the journey he criticised the slow rate of travelling in terms far from complimentary to the train service which he was compelled to put up with.

Eventually, however, we slowed into the little wayside apology for a station, and by Sir Anstruther stepped on to the wooden platform I was evident that he was held in much esteem from the attention he received at the hands of the old stationmaster and his assistant, the only officials the place boasted. A smart pair-horse brougham waited our arrival in the station approach, and when we had taken our seat in it the boys started off along the frosty road at a brisk pace. My companion was rather silent during the drive, but once or twice pointed out parts of the district which he thought might interest me. At one part of the road, the plantation, along the edge of which we had been passing came to an end, disclosing an extensive stretch of moorland over which the eye could reach for several miles. As I surveyed the breadth of country before me I perceived, about two hundred yards away, the tall form of a man, garbed in what appeared to be a rough tweed Norfolk suit, striding stolidly along the side of one of the dykes (i. e., low walls built of rough unhewn stone; very common in the Highlands), which divided the land.

"Why?" exclaimed Sir Anstruther suddenly as he observed this person, "that is Graham; he must be better again, and at work on the installation." He was too far off to hail, so we continued our drive to Mallinhuig to await his return. Sir Anstruther now informed me that his son had recently been engaged on an installation for the electric lighting of Mallinhuig House, their residence, by an improved system on his own plan, and was utilizing the power obtained from the colliery for generating purposes.

The same evening, on going down to dinner, I found Sir Anstruther in conversation with his son. I recognized the latter by his form and bearing as the person I had seen on the moors, although he had doffed his Norfolk suit for the convention evening wear. When Sir Anstruther introduced me as a friend of Seaton's, not in a professional capacity, he received me with marked politeness and cordiality. He was a well-built young fellow, with dark hair and complexion, indicative of rather a morbid temperament. He had a fair breadth of forehead, but the favor in this direction was somewhat spoiled by a rather weak chin. There was nothing, however, which would at first sight lead anyone to believe that he was mentally affected, but when I had been in his company for a short time I observed that he had a habit of contracting his eyebrows every now and again as if trying to concentrate his thoughts, and that his eyes were very changeable in expression, one moment staring vacantly at some inanimate object in the room, and the next lit up by an unnatural enthusiasm hardly reconcilable with perfect sanity, more especially when the conversation dealt with topics bearing on his studies. He broached the subject of the utility and advantages of electricity in warfare, particularly as applied to naval warfare, submarine mines, and such like, and was much interested in some information I was by the nearest chance in a position to give him, having had certain matters in this connection explained to me by a friend in close touch with the Admiralty. Soon however, I thought it unwise to continue the subject of conversation, as I was now becoming convinced that young Morley's trouble was occasioned by over-study in this particular direction, as Sir Anstruther had previously informed me was his opinion. Fortunately, the affection had not gone too far to be remedied, but I concluded that the only hope for the patient's complete recovery was to get him sent away at once on a tour abroad for several months, so that he might have an opportunity to forget all about his study and its connections, and thus permit his mind to regain its normal healthy condition.

Towards eleven o'clock we retired to our respective rooms. I did not find a suitable opportunity for discussing the matter with Sir Anstruther that evening, but decided to put my proposal regarding his son before him on the morrow.

I dropped off to sleep almost as soon as I got into bed, thanks to the combined effects of sixteen hours' travelling and an appreciable drink of wine in the atmosphere. About two o'clock I became aware in a semi-conscious manner, that there was some one tapping at my door. I was soon fully awake, and then the possibility dawned on me that the patient had developed another fit of acute mania, similar to that which had caused Sir Anstruther's secretary to wire, and I sprang out of bed. On opening the door I found, not Sir Anstruther, nor his secretary, but the patient himself, clad in a heavy ulster and a tweed shooting hat. He carried a portable electric lamp, and as he saw by the sight of it my obvious surprise at the holding him, he signed me to be silent.

"Come, dress quickly," he said in tones of suppressed excitement, "you know something about my ideas; and I want you to see this, my greatest, put to a practical test."

"See what?" I asked.

He did not reply but drew from his pocket a red voluante case, and opening it disclosed a long cylindrical instrument, about six inches long by two inches in diameter, constructed of brass and copper.

"Look at it," he said, with glowing eyes, "but don't touch it."

"I was evidently coming to a more marked phrase in the case, so in order to humor him I decided to accompany him. I had learned as much as possible regarding the nature and cause of his trouble. I hurriedly dressed, and, having pulled on a heavy overcoat, prepared to follow. He led the way downstairs, and, having extinguished his lamp, proceeded outside by a door at the back of the house, and soon I found we had gained the road by means of a short cut through the grounds. The weather was frosty, and there was an exhilarating crispness in the air. The clear moon shone down on the hard, white, sparkling roads and frost-covered trees and bushes. Silhouetted against the moonlight was the colliery erection which Sir Anstruther had pointed out to me while driving from the station, and it was towards this that my present companion seemed to be directing his footsteps. All at once I recalled the fact that Sir Anstruther had mentioned to me that his son was presently engaged on making an electric light installation at the house, and utilizing the motive power at the colliery for generating purposes, and I naturally deduced that this work was in some way accountable for our present excursion.

When we arrived at the colliery I saw that there was a light burning in the engine-house at the head of the shaft, and as we approached an old

Slaves to Rheumatism

Freed by "Fruit-a-tives"

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Rheumatism and Rheumatic pains by removing the poisons which cause the disease. Rheumatism means poisoned blood. Too much urea or tissue waste is retained in the blood, owing to defective action of the bowels, kidneys or skin. The retained urea becomes uric acid, which inflames nerves and joints and thus rheumatism is produced.

Max R. H. DENNIS, South St. Marie, Ont., writes: "I think 'Fruit-a-tives' are fine. I am using them for rheumatism, and have not felt it since I started to take them."

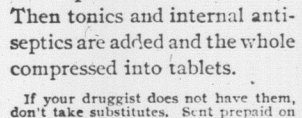

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Rheumatism by greatly stimulating the action of the liver, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-tives" make each of these vital organs do its share of nature's work properly. "Fruit-a-tives" rid the system of excessive urea and uric acid—and so purify and enrich the blood and build up the general health, that there can be no rheumatism.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices, concentrated and combined by our discovered process, which makes them much more powerful medicinally. Then tonics and internal antiseptics are added and the whole compressed into tablets.

If your druggist does not have them, don't take substitutes. Sent prepaid on receipt of price—50c. a box of 6 boxes for $2.50.

Man, evidently the regular engineer, stepped out to review us. He showed no surprise, and therefore I took it that we were expected.

"Well, John, are you ready?" inquired Morley.

"Yes, sir," answered the man, and then I followed Morley into the cage at the mouth of the shaft. In a few minutes I heard the levers click in the engine house, and we commenced to descend. When we reached the bottom, Morley having switched on his portable lamp, I saw the place to be much in common with any other small-sized mine. A short way along one of the cuttings we came to a square piece of wood, fixed to the wall, bearing a piece of mechanism resembling in some respects a rubber electric switch. Morley now removed the instrument from the red vulcanite case in his pocket and screwed it on to this fixture on the wall. I was totally at a loss to understand the unusual proceedings, but rejoiced by the fact that I had been informed that the installation was being effected on an improved principle of his own, and my knowledge of the subject being merely superficial, I was not in a position to question his actions. He looked at his handwork for a moment or two, and then, apparently satisfied with it, led the way back to the cage, and we were handed up to the mouth of the shaft.

"Come along, John," he called to the old engineer, "put out the lights, and accompany us. I may require you."

The old man did as he was requested and soon the trio were proceeding in the direction of Mallinhuig House. When we had gone about three-quarters of the way, or in other words, when we were about five hundred yards away from the colliery, Morley suddenly came to a standstill. Then leaning over the dyke, alongside which we had been walking, he knelt down. On looking over I saw a rough wooden gutter running along the bottom of the dyke, at one part of which Morley had now raised a nap, disclosing a narrow electric cable, which I then surmised to be for the conveyance of the power from the colliery to the house.

"He's a grand hand" at this electric work, is Master Graham, sir," whispered the old engineer to me in his cummy Scotch way, as Morley was busying himself with some sort of instrument on the other side of the dyke. The next moment Morley, with an unnatural laugh, sprang over to my side, and with a strained runner with a pale, almost expressionless face, he said, "In thirty seconds you will hear it—do you understand?" and he clutched my arm convulsively.

"The next moment the earth shook, there was a cloud of blue smoke from the colliery mouth, quickly followed by a terrific explosion. Then I felt breathing becoming difficult, and knew that some deadly fumes were spreading in our direction. I called to the old engineer, and he gripped Morley on either arm, and endeavored to drag him away, but he struggled desperately. "Would you?" he yelled, his blood-shot eyes staring in their sockets; "would you take me away from my work? Leave me where I am," and then he broke into a wild yell. The frail bond between reason and insanity had snapped at last—he was a hopeless maniac! Each moment he struggled, the fumes increased in density, and soon I lost consciousness.

When I came round again I was lying in bed at Mallinhuig House. The old engineer John, had like myself, survived, but so in the case of Sir Anstruther's son, he was dead when they found him beside us on the moor.

A search was made in the young man's study in the hope of ascertaining what position was contained in the brass and copper cylinder, for undoubtedly it was this which had caused such a terrific explosion with such disastrous results, but without success.

The small machine, however, which was found attached to the cable running alongside the dyke at least showed what had conveyed the fatal current to the mine.

Dyspepsia

This disease from which so many suffer gives the average physician a great deal of trouble. The best medical men have endorsed "PSYCHINE," and recommended it in scores of the most obstinate cases. FARM FOR SALE

We are offering for sale that valuable and well known farm belonging to the estate of the late F. E. Miller. It is situated in Granville about two and one half miles below Bridgetown on the Post Road. It is well watered by windmill appliances, has good buildings and has about twenty acres of good marsh. Cuts about seventy-five tons of good hay. The orchard is capable of yielding 400 barrels of good fruit with a number of small trees just coming into bearing. Intending purchasers can apply to Mrs. F. E. Miller, on the premises, or to Oliver S. Miller, Bridgetown. OLIVER S. MILLER, Proprietor of the Estate. Bridgetown, Jan. 6th, 1906.

The Household.

HOMEMADE HOARHOUND CANDY.

Old-fashioned folks considered hoarhound a specific for "coughs, colds and all bronchial affections," as the train boys say. The bad of hoarhound from which the writer gathers, for candy, was planted about 1840. It has cultivated its more fragile sister herbs. And if the season is not too severe, its crumpled leaves defy frost far into the winter.

Children object bitterly to medicine, as medicine. But as candy, that's different. And it takes but a little while to make a cough candy that will please both the little ones and the grown-ups, too. Cover a good handful of the green leaves with boiling water, and put them on the stove to simmer until the liquid is dark brown. Then pour water off, through a tea strainer. There should be a little more than a half a cup. Measure 14 eggs brown sugar into a deep granite saucepan. Pour the liquid over it, and stir until a quick fire, and stir constantly until it begins to boil. Just then add a generous tablespoon of vinegar and stop stirring. Watch it carefully to see that it does not boil over. If it shows symptoms of burning, draw to a cooler part of the stove, but keep boiling. Try, in cold water, until it strings from the spoon, in fine threads. It will take about twenty minutes. Pour into well-buttered tins, score in little squares, and set in a cool place to harden. The children will want you to do it again.

A GUARANTEED CURE FOR PILL Itching, Blind, Bleeding, Protruding Piles. Druggists are authorized to refund money if PAXO OINTMENT fails to cure in 6 to 14 days. 50c.

LEARNED BY EXPERIENCE.

(Susie B. Wright.) Have you ever had your soul tried by seeing the thick lovely meringue slipping and sliding about on the top of your cream pie? Well, next time when you pile it on, take a fork and dig it down lightly into the filling of the pie, and you will find it will stay nicely in place.

Did you ever get out of patience cutting cake papers for half a dozen layers. Next time, instead of having a fresh paper each time, try turning over the one previously used, seeing that it is well greased. This is all right with any cake, and especially with sponge cake.

Did you ever notice how even in the nicest families, a careless servant will allow a yellow stain to gather on the lip side of the cups? Just rub on a bit of cooking soda and see how quickly it will vanish.

Are your rice boilers hard to wash? After your rice is done, pour about two tablespoons of soda (for a large boiler) over its surface, cover it tightly for a moment, and watch it come clear from the bottom, not a grain adhering.

Does the baby get her little underclothes "putty" black, sitting around on the ground, and scrubbing about the dusty veranda. Then make her some gingham rompers, very full and roomy, and see how cute she will look, and feel the difference in the washing and ironing.

Do you sometimes feel that the world is all wrong and that you are slowly but surely going to pieces? Don't imagine that you have heart trouble, or are going to die and leave your brood motherless. Just rest a bit, take a dose of soda, and remember that half the ills of life under present lights are attributable to gas on stomach or in bowels, and that the state is not always brought about by improper dieting; worry will create it, or even fasting will bring it about.

A Habit To Be Encouraged.

The mother who has acquired the habit of keeping on hand a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, saves herself a great amount of uneasiness and anxiety. Coughs, colds and croup, to which children are susceptible are quickly cured by its use. It counteracts any tendency of a cold to result in pneumonia, and if given as soon as the first symptoms of croup appear, it will prevent the attack. This remedy contains nothing injurious and mothers give it to little ones with a feeling of perfect security. Sold by S. N. Weare.

WHEN THE BABY CRIES.

(Mrs. George Gray.) It is my belief that naturally babies are happy and contented and that when they do cry there is a reason for it. Maybe the baby is hungry. Often a child has an abundance of food but it lacks in nourishment, and fails to satisfy hunger. Then it is better to wean the child and feed on nourishing foods. But more likely baby is overfed. For the first three weeks the eating times should be two hours apart, and then gradually lengthened to three. When fed too frequently the little stomach has no time for rest, is overloaded and colic results. For this, apply warm cloths to the stomach and abdomen and give two or three teaspoons of water as hot as can be taken. A few drops of peppermint added to this is beneficial.

Cuts Cured

Another cause of distress is irregularity of the bowels. In such a case do not resort to medicine unless it is really necessary. The "mammae" are "dosed" the better. An injection of warm water and pure castile soap will usually bring about desired results and help to establish regular habits.

The clothing is often responsible for baby's tears. An over-anxious young mother often clothes her child in hot weather with clothing suitable for midwinter and then wonders why the baby is so restless. Consider your own feelings and dress the little one accordingly. Again, if the child cries when lying down, perhaps its clothes have gotten in a bunch and hurt the tender little flesh; or it may have lain too long in one position, or that position may not be comfortable.

Often baby cries because of chafing, resulting from wearing clothing improperly laundered. Nappkins should not be used the second time without being washed and it is better not to blue them. Starch has no place in baby's clothes unless it be in the skirts.

If you can think of no reason for baby's crying watch for symptoms of colic. The little hands will often go to the seat of pain, and sometimes the member will discharge. Hot applications give relief, and nothing quite equals bread and milk poultice to which curd and a few drops of lanolin have been added.

Excitement and lack of rest will greatly effect a small child. It is their positive right to have all the sleep they need and their waking hours quiet and undisturbed. If those rights are infringed upon the mother must expect to pay the penalty by caring for a peevish, nervous baby.

A Favorite Remedy for Babies.

Its pleasant taste and prompt cures have won Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a favorite with the mothers of small children. It quickly cures their coughs, colds and croup, and prevents the danger of pneumonia or other serious consequences. It not only cures croup, but when given as soon as the croupy cough appears will prevent the attack. For sale by S. N. Weare.

Sermon: Hell to Be Poor.

The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Fulton, pastor of the First Baptist church of Syracuse, N. Y., attracted a large crowd to hear him speak upon "Hell to Be Poor?" a motto which he had seen in a concert hall and which impressed him so that he announced it as the subject of a sermon in the hope that some of the generations he saw in the slums might be attracted to hear his message. He said he did not care what some people would say because he chose such a subject.

"It is hell to be poor," said he, "when poverty is such as comes from saloon and concert halls. I wish you could see what I saw in the concert hall where I went. The painted women and men of lost reputation. It is indeed hell to be poor in such a place. Here it is that a bottle of wine costs you a dollar when it is worth only 25 cents; beer costs you 50 cents, though you can get it elsewhere for five, when you buy it with a painted woman."

Westward Ho!

everywhere the inevitable auto hurry-ing on in more than one case, lying wrecked and broken by the way—the result of reckless carelessness.

Minneapolis has no public art gallery, but a splendid collection of rare old paintings, and many more modern—the private property of a gentleman whose pleasure it is to devote his large fortune to the gratification of his fine artistic taste, is thrown open daily for the pleasure of all who care to avail themselves of the privilege.

Time speeds rapidly away. The last day of my visit draws swiftly to its close and when the evening shadows gather again I settle myself in the outgoing train for the all-night journey to Chicago.

Chicago the wonderful! In growth and development—its great buildings towering like far up into the boundless blue. City of unlimited wealth, flaunting itself bejeweled, diamond-decked, gathering its millions in the world's great mart. City of poverty and want and shame, hiding itself in dens and holes, burrowing in darkness, reeking in filth, vice, stalking forth hydra-headed in the midnight hour to pollute, and destroy and slay. City of great philanthropic and religious organizations, caring for its poor, healing its sick, lifting up its fallen, men and women strong of soul, Christ-like in spirit, carrying heaven's evangel to the crime burdened, sin stained in the dens and hiding places, and over all the Eye that slumbers not, nor sleeps—watching—great Chicago!

The Chicago University into which Rockefeller pours his millions, with its thirty imposing buildings representing four million dollars, its beautiful grounds extending far and wide—with an endowment of twenty millions—a faculty of more than three hundred, gathering to itself annually between five and six thousand students from all parts of the world, is almost a city in itself.

And note the master mind—the life and soul of it all has heard the great call, and has gone to a higher service. Who shall finish the work he had set his hand to do?

One of the attractions is the great white city, a remnant of the great world's fair—its massive tower, pure, cold and silent, in the light of day, lifting itself skyward, at night lit up with millions of electric lights, a vast far-reaching column of liquid fire—a beacon for the great city's ceaseless traffic. Within—fair-land, wonderful spectacular display—entertainment and amusement to suit all people with every diversity of taste and intent.

The hours of art in its highest form may spend hours—days, with pleasure and profit, in the well filled rooms of the city's Art Institute, where are some of the finest productions of the painter and sculptor—the finest original work of the modern artist and the perfect copies of old time wonders from the skilled hands of dead sculptors and painters of other lands.

In its well-filled museum the antiquity seeker may feast his eyes with strange old-time wonders gathered from the old world days—ancient treasures hidden by centuries beneath buried and forgotten cities—the ancient mummy dragged from his tomb of ages and exposed to the view of curious eyes. Poor old mummy, why should he be disturbed in his long dreamless slumber.

But my pastor has long passed the limit. There are many fragments to be gathered of its great business centres—its many other public institutions—its magnificent theatre capable of seating six thousand in its vast auditorium, where one may hear on a Sabbath morning the Gospel of Christ from the lips of one of the most evangelical and talented preachers, and in the evening, if so inclined, see a popular play with all the usual stage settings.

On the way homeward bound from Chicago to Montreal, through the beautiful country closed in all its autumn glory, thence down to St. John again across the turbulent Bay, and then home. The day was cold and raw, the sea's were bare and shivering in the eastern wind, the dead leaves lay in heaps beneath my feet, but it was home and "There's no place like home."
