Mr. Churchill was then the Secretary of the Home Department. In his discussion he indicated that an Act should be passed by all the colonies and also by the mother country as a result of which an imperial status—the word is an apt one—or an imperial citizenship should be created and which could be conferred under the legislation thus passed. He laid down as the first essential element under which that imperial citizenship should be obtained, that there should be a residence of five years within the colony. It was mooted that while the right of each colony to maintain its own naturalization laws and confer the right within the colony as a British subject upon persons who comply with the local laws, yet a supplementary period of residence and any other qualifications insisted upon as the condition of the imperial law should be necessary to the supplementary or imperial citizenship.

At the conclusion of the conference, Premier Asquith, who was chairman, said:

May I take it that we are agreed to the general propositions on which the Home Office and the Law Office will proceed to frame a Bill to be submitted and discussed at the earliest moment.

Mr. Churchill proposed:

That this conference approves the scheme of Imperial citizenship, based on the following five propositions: 1. Imperial nationality should be world-wide and uniform, each Dominion being left free to grant local nationality on such terms as its legislature thinks fit. 2. The mother country finds it necessary to maintain five years as a qualifying period. This is a safeguard to the Dominion as well as to us, but five years anywhere in the empire should be as good as five years in the United Kingdom. 3. The grant of nationality is in every case discretionary, and this discretion should be exercised by those responsible in the area in which the applicant has spent the last twelve months. 4. The Imperial Act should be so framed as to enable each self-governing Dominion to adopt it. 5. Nothing now proposed would affect the validity and effectiveness of local law regulating immigration and the like or differentiating between the classes of British subjects.

Those conditions were to form the basis of a Bill which the Home Secretary was to draw up to be submitted to each one of the colonies, and I assume also the Imperial parliament. So far as one can gather from the official documents, that has been the last word upon the subject. The direct object of my motion was to ascertain whether there had been any correspondence between the home authorities and this government in regard to legislation such as was outlined in the proceedings of the conference. I desired also to call the attention of the government to the situation, and to press upon them the wisdom and necessity of actively dealing with the question, in conjunction with the home authorities, along the lines proposed in the conference report. I need not further supplement my remarks. The subject is one which has engaged attention in the past. I have ventured to trespass so long upon the time of the House by reason of the fact that this is the first session of a new parliament. To my mind, the necessity of dealing early with this question is so apparent to every one who believes in the unity of the empire, and who recognizes the advantages of British citizenship, that I do not need to elaborate the matter. In a new country like ours where we are receiving men from all portions of the globe, who are speedily, fortunately for us and for the empire, complying with our laws and becoming Canadian and British citizens, I say the importance of this subject is one to which I need not apologize to the House for directing their attention. I ask the government to take the matter up with the home authorities, if it has not already been dealt with, so that we may have passed at an early date in Canada, and possibly our example will be followed by all the other nations of the empire, legislation of such a nature that a man who is a British subject in any one part of the empire will be a British subject everywhere.

Mr. BORDEN. The observations which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald), has addressed to the House are very pertinent, and I am glad he has brought the matter to our attention. The situation at the present time is certainly anomalous, and very unsatisfactory. My own personal view is that the goal to be aimed at is the one which has been mentioned by the hon. member, and which I think was expressed officially by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, namely, that any one who is a British subject in one part of the empire should be a British subject in all other parts of the empire. As I understand the law at present, while an alien naturalized in Canada is not a British subject within the British Islands, on the other hand, an alien naturalized in the British Islands is not a British subject in Canada. I understand that that result is brought about by the restrictive terms in which, not only the Naturalization Act of Canada but that of the British Islands, are couched. I observed in a recent article upon the subject that a circular was addressed by the Colonial Secretary to the Governor in Council on the 10th of September, 1874, in which allusion is made to the enactments then in force in the British Islands, and which I think, were substantially the same as those now in force. That circular was in these words :

> Her Majesty's government are advised that the operation of the above enactments is confined to the United Kingdom, that a certificate of naturalization granted under the authority of the Acts of 1844 or 1870 confers upon an alien no rights or privileges in a British colony.

So the situation is very unsatisfactory from our standpoint, and it is also unsatisfactory from the standpoint of those who are naturalized in the British Islands. Now it is true in one sense that the Canadian parliament, or the British parliament for that matter, has no right to legislate beyond its own territorial limits; but, nevertheless, if the British parliament should legislate in general and unequivocal terms, the status so created would, by the comity of nations, undoubtedly be observed throughout the world. But if the British parliament or the Canadian parliament sees fit in terms to restrict the rights which it grants to an alien under naturalization, and to say that those rights, by the very terms of the statute, should not extend beyond certain territorial limits, it is perfectly obvious to any of us that such statute will have no operation, and the rights created would have no validity beyond the territorial limits so defined. I have not given the same attention to the various enactments as has been bestowed upon them by my hon. friend, but I would gather that in all the Dominions of the empire, including the mother country herself at the present time, Naturalization Acts are framed in these somewhat limited terms. The subject has not been brought to the attention of the present government since it took office. I can assure my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), that we shall give it the best possible consideration and very careful attention when it does come before us.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is recognized by everybody, it was recognized at the conference, that the present condition of things with regard to naturalization which exists within the British Empire, is not only anomalous, but may be dangerous also. The Imperial government has conferred upon all the self-governing Dominions the power of naturalization. Evidently those powers when exercised and framed can only apply to the territory covered by the charter of each Dominion. In Canada we are authorized to naturalize, but under our present charter our naturalization has no force and effect beyond the territory of Canada. At the present time we naturalize many thousands of people every year. These men so naturalized by us are British subjects in Canada, but the moment they leave the territory of Canada they are no longer British subjects, but they resume the nationality of the country from which they came. So if one of our numerous fellow-citizens now coming from the United States goes to Europe, the moment he leaves Canada he is no longer a British subject, but he is an American citizen.

The situation is certainly anomalous and it is conceivable that under the present circumstances it might produce very serious complications. The matter was brought to our attention at the last conference, and it was recognized by everybody to be one that required consideration and legislation. It was agreed, I think, by everybody that the principle should be admitted, that when a man is a British subject in any part of the British Empire he should be regarded as a British subject everywhere. The naturalization which is given in the United Kingdom, I believe, is of that character. If a man becomes a British subject by naturalization in Great Britain he is a British subject to all intents and purposes everywhere. That is a consequence of the Imperial jurisdiction of of the United Kingdom. Not so, however, in Canada. While the principle was admitted that the naturalization conferred by any of the self-governing dominions should be co-equal with the naturalization given by the United Kingdom, there are great difficulties in the way and the chief difficulty is the reluctance of the United Kingdom to give naturalization as easily as we give it in the new countries of the empire. Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, all new nations with vast territories and sparse populations, are eager to attract population and facilitate naturalization. The United Kingdom, on the contrary, is not seeking more population than it has at the present time, it is not eager to attract more immigration and it is far more stingy, if I may use that expression, in the facilities for granting naturalization than the new nations of the empire. That was the stumbling block which we found at the conference. Whilst all acknowledged that it becomes imperative that a British subject, for instance, in Canada, should be a British subject everywhere the United Kingdom was not prepared to go as far as those of us who represented the new nations would have been willing to go. Canada, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa were willing to accept the principle that a man who was naturalized in any one of these countries should be a British subject in any of the others, that a man naturalized in New Zealand should be a British subject in Canada when he came to Canada, and vice versa. But, the British government were not prepared to go as far as that. We would have been willing to have had a law passed by all the self-governing dominions to the effect that naturalization granted by one should be granted by all, and that if a man had obtained naturalization in Canada he could present himself in any part of the British Empire, claim to be a British subject and be recognized as such. But the United Kingdom would not go as far as that and Mr. Churchill, who represented the British government at the conference, insisted that they could not depart from the period of probation which they now require, that they must insist upon a period of probation of five years, and that after that time naturalization was given, not as a right, but to be obtained after going through certain formalities in Great Britain. I would have preferred that our certificates should be accepted in the United Kingdom but they would not have it so, and there the matter rests. I think my hon. friend will see that it will be necessary to have a new Bill prepared to give effect to that principle.

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to continue discussion on this subject and I feel satisfied that the House will unanimously agree with the motion. However, there is one phase of this question, which, it appears to me, has been overlooked entirely in the discussions even at the Imperial Conference, and that is that there was a distinct pre-confederation promise made by the British government that this principle would be carried out, and that almost immediately. I find, Mr. Speaker, that in 1865, confederation had been agreed to and all that remained was to bring the maritime provinces into the union, and have them vote on the question. Four of the ablest men of that day were sent to Great Britain—I refer to Macdonald, Cartier, Brown and Galt—to ascertain the views of the imperial government on various subjects which had come up in the confederation discussion. I find in the journals of the House of Upper and Lower Canada of 1865, a report made by these four men of their interviews with the British government. There was Canada on one side and Great Britain on the other, and they were entering into a confederation compact with the mother country. In this report it is distinctly stated that the British government had agreed to grant this request and they did not mix the question up with the affairs of any other colony or dependency. These gentlemen were entrusted to discuss confederation with Great Britain and the following is a paragraph from the report which they made to His Excellency the Right Hon. Viscount Monck, Governor General of British North America:

> Although the subject was not specially referred to us, we did not fail to call the attention of the colonial minister to the anomalous position of foreigners who have settled in Canada and become naturalized subjects under our provincial statutes. Mr. Cardwell at once admitted the hardship of the case, and stated that it was the desire of Her Majesty's government to remedy it, and that with that view he had referred the subject to the law officers of the Crown for their opinion as to the best mode of doing so.

That was a distinct contract entered into between Canada and the mother country as a part of the confederation compact which has never been carried out by the home government, and which has apparently been overlooked by the statesmen who discussed this question at the Imperial Conference.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA AND ONTARIO.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved:

> For a copy of all papers, letters, telegrams, memoranda or correspondence of any kind had between the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba, or with the government of Ontario, as to the settlement of the boundaries of said respective provinces; and also of any agreement or memorandum containing any terms of settlement of the questions relating to the boundaries of said provinces or any part thereof; and also, of any documents, letters or representations made to the federal government by any person or persons relative to said settlement or the question involved therein.

He said: I move this in order to get some accurate information as to the terms of the agreement arrived at between the government of the Dominion and the government of Manitoba. We have had in the public press statements from various gentlemen as to what has been agreed upon, and then in turn we have had denials. Sir James Whitney charges my right hon. leader—who has been out of power unfortunately for this country for almost three months—with having done something terrible against the interests of Ontario, and he makes that a basis of his campaign speeches. But how my right hon. friend could have been guilty of so much intrigue against Ontario while a Conservative Prime Minister is in power is one of those things which so far I have not been able to understand. I put some questions on the Order Paper to elicit information from the Prime Minister, but, with that delightful indefiniteness which enables him to dodge Ne Temere questions, and all other questions that are supposed to be of special interest to a certain section of his supporters, he has so far been able to accomplish a complete evasion. Outside of telling us there were some financial arrangements made with Manitoba along the basis of the existing arrangements with Alberta and Saskatchewan the Prime Minister would not go. I thought it would be in the interests of all that that full information which the House likes upon all questions, in the interests of the country should be given and that before we adjourn for the festive Christmas season the Prime Minister would tell us what he really did do about this matter. I do not think it a due recognition of the rights of this parliament that the government should make arrangements of a most important character with provincial governments without giving the parliament in session immediate information as to the facts. Representatives of these provincial governments go abroad through the land, their newspapers glorify their achievements, and statements are made with more or less responsibility as to what has been done, while we the representatives of the people who ought to be the first to know, find it most difficult to extract any information from the gentlemen on the treasury benches. There are three branches of this subject: First, the question of the boundaries; whether Manitoba is longer to remain a mere postage stamp on the map is something that the members from that province would like to be satisfied about, and if in extending the boundaries of that postage stamp it is going to take something that belongs to Ontario, then Sir James Whitney wants to know. If for no other reason than personal friendship for his former leader, I am sure the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) would not sit silent at the Council Board—especially as he belongs to the north country which looks forward some day to having an outlet at Hudson bay—without protecting the interests of Ontario. Surely the hon. gentleman would be the watch-dog who would stand by to prevent spoliation, and to stay the traitor's hand before it got in any effective work on Ontario's throat. I am at a loss to understand how the Minister of Railways could stand by and permit the right hon. the leader of the opposition—notwithstanding that the right hon. gentleman happens to be out of power—to take this port on the Hudson bay from the province of Ontario, a proceeding which seems to have so much displeased Sir James Whitney. Was the Minister of Railways derelict in his duty? Is it possible he could have been present when this settlement was made, which deprived Ontario of her right to a port on the Hudson bay, and handed it over to the Hon. Mr. Rogers for the province of Manitoba? And as to financial terms; will the Prime Minister take this opportunity which has come to him to give the people of Manitoba control over the lands of their province; I have heard in former times the present Prime Minister speak eloquently about the necessity for the people of these western provinces having full control over the lands within their own boundaries. Does the Prime Minister now purpose saying to the people of Manitoba: We will pursue this policy which I have been accustomed to denounce; we will give you the money, but we will keep the land. I would gather from the answer given by the hon. gentleman this afternoon that that was now his policy, and whether it is or not he should take the House and the country into his confidence and state what he is going to do in that respect. And then, of course we remember that the Minister of Public Works has risen to his feet to denounce my right hon. leader and to tell us that the people of Quebec were not satisfied with Sir Wilfrid Laurier because forsooth, with regard to certain privileges of the province of Manitoba his confreres and co-religionists did not receive at his hands what they expected from him. We know that Archbishop Langevin is reported as having said during the last election that when the present Prime Minister came to power he and his co-religionists were going to get justice. I feel quite certain that a great number of hon. gentlemen who sit behind the Prime Minister are anxious to know what are the terms of this settlement made with Premier Roblin and Mr. Campbell that is going to wipe out all differences between the Dominion and the province, and which necessarily involves the determination of the civil rights of the people living in that northern country. No doubt, some of the supporters of the Prime Minister are anxious to learn at the earliest moment whether any understanding has been arrived at in reference to the settlement of that once famous school question in the light of the rights of the people who live in this new territory. I have moved this motion for the purpose of eliciting all that information which I am quite sure the Prime Minister will be delighted to give us, and if there is anything that the leader of the government overlooks in his statement no doubt the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) will be very glad to supplement it.

Mr. SPEAKER. This motion is made in the form of an order of the House, but seeing that it calls for papers between the Dominion government and another government, it will require to be in the form of an address to His Royal Highness. With the permission of the hon. mover I will amend it in that direction.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that on this side of this House we are all very much touched at the pleasing confidence which my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has displayed with regard to the action of the government on this question. In the course of his remarks my hon. friend has undertaken a somewhat varied task. He has first undertaken the championship of the rights of Manitoba, and then he has felt impelled to defend the rights and privileges of the province of Ontario, which as he fears are likely to be invaded. He refers to the fact that on some occasions in the past I have addressed this House on the subject of handing over to the prairie provinces their lands and other natural resources. He was good enough to say that my speeches were sometimes of great force. I can only say that they never were of sufficient force to influence my hon. friend, because he always consistently voted against every motion in that direction that I presented. But if even at this date he recognizes their force. I am sure I am deeply grateful that even at this belated period they are having some effect on the mind of my hon. friend, and I regard it as due entirely to my own defects that they did not produce that good result at times when it would have been of some importance. So far as the information that has been given to the House in answer to questions is concerned, I think my hon. friend will find when that information comes down that it is exactly accurate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. I am glad that my right hon. friend is so convinced of that at the moment that he says, 'hear hear'. I said that a basis had been arrived at with regard to the financial terms, and that the principle adopted as a basis was equality of treatment as between Manitoba and the other prairie provinces. I also said that the details were being worked out. My right hon. friend will realize at once the impossibility of our giving information to the House with respect to details which have not yet been worked out by the application of the principle that has been arrived at. We have no objection whatever to bringing down the papers. We will bring them down at the earliest possible opportunity, but I do not know that we will bring them down before those details have been worked out, because my hon. friend, the mover of the resolution will understand at once that while in the application of this principle the details are being dealt with by the two governments concerned, it would be exceedingly inadvisable from a public standpoint that papers should be brought down before the negotiations have been made absolutely complete. My hon. friend is also very much concerned with regard to the attitude of the government with respect to the Manitoba school question. I would like to remind him that if he will refer to the speech from the Throne delivered to parliament in 1897, and prepared no doubt by the right hon. gentleman who is his leader at the present time in this House, he will find therein an assurance that the Manitoba school question had been settled.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is not good enough. What do you say about it?

Mr. BORDEN. All I can say is that if the word of my hon. friend's leader is not good enough for him, I would despair of convincing him by any word of mine.

Mr. MACDONALD. Perhaps my hon. friend will tell us what he is going to do with the increased territory.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend will find exactly what we are going to do with the increased territory when the measure is submitted for the consideration of this House. He and every other hon. member will then have an opportunity to make criticism of the proposal, and we will be prepared to meet it; but I for one do not intend to discuss that measure before it is here for the consideration of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is kind enough to tell us that when he brings down his measure it will be accurate, and that we shall be free to discuss it.

Mr. BORDEN. I did not say that the measure would be accurate; I said that the information was accurate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no doubt that the information which my hon. friend has given us is accurate, because he has given us none at all. He has been asked what is the nature of the agreement made by the government with the province of Manitoba, because Mr. Roblin said a few days ago that at last the government of Canada was disposed to do justice to Manitoba and went away quite satisfied. My hon. friend has told us to-day that they have agreed upon a settlement of the financial terms. I have no doubt that when he comes with his measure, we shall find that his statement is accurate, but he has gone all around the question in so far as it concerns the boundaries of the province. What are the boundaries which have been agreed to by my hon. friend with Manitoba? Are they such boundaries as will satisfy the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) for instance, or that will satisfy the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), for instance, or such boundaries as will satisfy Sir James Whitney? Because it so happens that at the present time the ranks of the Conservative party, which are divided upon the question of the navy, are also divided on the question of the boundaries of Manitoba.

Mr. BORDEN. I think they will satisfy every one except my right hon. friend.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is too thin altogether. Sir James Whitney, and the Minister of the Interior cannot both be satisfied, according to the language of the one, and the language of the other. The hon. gentleman can satisfy the one or the other, but he cannot satisfy both, because on this question they are at the very antithesis—they cannot agree. We had a conference four or five years ago to try to get them to agree, because they are of the same party, and I said to them: 'Will you not agree on some boundary'? But they could not, and I said to them: 'Well, gentlemen, if you cannot agree, I do not know what can be done'. We brought a resolution fixing the boundary of Manitoba, and my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior agreed to it, but Sir James Whitney did not.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) somewhat demurred, but he at last was reasonable and agreed also to the boundaries. But now Sir James Whitney is parading and cavorting through the province of Ontario, blaming this wicked man Laurier because Laurier would not give to Ontario what belonged to Ontario, but gave it to Manitoba. That is the statement made by Sir James Whitney all over Ontario to-day, and if I were in any way to characterize his conduct I should say it is not at all patriotic on his part to undertake to create bad feeling between Ontario and Manitoba, because these provinces are both members of the confederation, and what is given to one cannot be given to the detriment of the country; whether one province or another should have a harbour on Hudson bay is, after all, a matter of little consequence so far as Canada is concerned, because the harbour will be in Canada anyway. However, Sir James attaches some importance to that, and my hon. friend does likewise, because he has been questioned four or five times upon this very matter, but up to the present he would not give an answer. Let me tell him what the answer is. The question is settled, my hon. friend has settled it with Mr. Roblin, and he has settled it along the lines agreed on by the Laurier government. Let him deny that if he can. He cannot do it. That settlement is the grievance which Sir James Whitney has against the Laurier government and upon it he is trying to catch some votes in Ontario.

As to the financial or land terms, I shall reserve what I have to say until we see the terms which have been agreed upon by my hon. friend. We have been endeavouring to give fair terms to Manitoba but I am sorry to say we could not satisfy the appetite of Manitoba on this question. It may be that my hon. friend has been more fortunate than we were, but we shall reserve judgment until we know the terms.

With regard to the school question my hon. friend was good enough to say that I stated in 1897 that the school question had been settled. I said so. I say so now. But there is a man not far from my hon. friend who says that it is not settled, and that man is my hon. friend's neighbour, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). There is another, the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) and a third behind him, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Nantel). They have all stated that the question has not been settled, but that it is to be settled by this government.

Mr. PELLETIER. When did I say that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. All the time. In your public speeches.

Mr. PELLETIER. What I said was that the matter had been settled, but not settled justly for the Catholic minority in Manitoba, that the present leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had violated one of his sacred engagements taken in the election campaign of 1896.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To make his statement complete the hon. member should have stated that he said it was to be settled by the present government.

Mr. PELLETIER. I deny that completely. I take it that the Manitoba School question was once in the hands of the Federal government to be settled——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER——that my hon. friend had it in his own hands to be settled, and that he had not settled it according to his own promises made all over the country—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I said.

Mr. PELLETIER—That he had not settled it according to what I considered a just principle; but a settlement has been made and, whether or not it is now in the power of the Federal government to take it up is quite a different question which I will discuss later.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PELLETIER. That is what I said all along and I say it still.

Mr. TURRIFF. Before the motion is carried I would like to amend it in a slight degree so as to include the correspondence with the government of Saskatchewan. While Manitoba and Ontario are fighting for a port on Hudson Bay they are both claiming what does not belong to either of them as it is on territory which at one time belonged to the district of Saskatchewan which now largely forms the province of Saskatchewan; so if any province has a just claim to have Fort Churchill or Port Nelson included within its boundaries that province is Saskatchewan, simply because possession is usually nine points out of ten in law, and we had possession of that territory for many years. I would therefore move to add after the word Manitoba the words 'and Saskatchewan.'

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (St. John). I wish to take time by the forelock on behalf of one of the smaller provinces of Canada, and to enter my protest against any settlement being made with Manitoba or any other province which includes an enlargement of the boundaries of that province based upon the theory that such province is entitled to any portion of the public lands of Canada which now form a part of the territories. It is proposed, as I understand, to enlarge the boundaries of Manitoba and instead of the Dominion giving away a vast tract of land in that province, it is proposed to give her money in lieu of land. That implies that the province is entitled to the land. My own view, and I respectfully submit it to the attention of my hon. friends opposite, is that Prince Rupert's Land was purchased by the Dominion of Canada. It was purchased by the provinces then constituting the Dominion and became the property of the Dominion of Canada. It is not the property of any one province; it is no more the property of Manitoba than it is the property of New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia or Quebec or Ontario, and I think the government is proceeding upon an entirely wrong principle when it recognizes that the province is entitled to the land. This proposes to give the province a large sum of money in lieu of land. I can well understand that by reason of adding an additional territory to a province, involving greater expense in carrying on the government of that province, an allowance might be made to the provincial government which would be regarded as sufficient to cover that increased expense of government, but that is an entirely different thing from starting out in the first instance and recognizing that the province is entitled to that additional land, that it has some claim to it, legally or equitably, and that in lieu of transferring the land to the province, a large sum of money is to be granted to it.

Mr. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman think that we should modify the provisions in the Acts constituting the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be a different principle applicable where an entirely new province is being created. In that case these provinces formed a part of the territories and all that was done was to carve out a portion of these territories and to make provinces. I was not in this parliament when the arrangement was made as to Saskatchewan and Alberta. Whether a wrong principle was then acted on or not I am not prepared to say nor is it necessary for my argument that I should express an opinion, but here is an old province created many years ago, brought into being under the provisions of the British North America Act and financial terms were settled between the province and the Dominion which apparently were then satisfactory to the province of Manitoba.

Manitoba became, then, a province of the Dominion, having a certain territory and having, as I say, no more right to the land to the north of its boundary than New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island had. Now, it is proposed in some way to recognize Manitoba's rights to that land, and this government propose to ask parliament to say that by reason of Manitoba not insisting on that land, which does not belong to her more than to the other provinces, a large sum of money should be given to Manitoba. I should be prepared to give Manitoba a most liberal allowance for increased cost of government that it might be necessary to incur; and, that, as I understand it, was the view of the late government. It was proposed to be liberal with Manitoba. It was not proposed to open the question of the land, but, in view of the added territory and the added cost of government, it was proposed to make Manitoba a liberal allowance. I would add also that by the terms of the statute which provides for the enlargement of the boundaries of any province it is expressly provided that in case of such enlargement provision shall be made for the rights of other provinces. And I submit that if there is to be any enlarging of boundaries of a province or if any amount of money is to be paid in lieu of the land, consideration must be taken under the same statute of the rights of the other provinces and there must be a readjustment satisfactory to these other provinces of the terms of the union, and they should receive a proportionate share of the moneys that are being conferred upon the province whose territories are being enlarged.

I am not prepared to-night—and I suppose it is not necessary—to discuss the matter at length. But I might call attention to the fact that when the United States government made the Louisiana purchase a very large proportion of the lands obtained in that purchase was reserved for the original states and they received the benefit of it. The principle was that lands bought with the money of the federal government belonged to the federal government and to the states as a whole. And so, Prince Rupert's land, having been bought from the Hudson Bay Company with money belonging to the federal government, became the property of the people of the entire country as represented by the federal government, and no part of that land, I take it, belongs to any one province more than to any other.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I raise my voice on behalf of the province of Quebec. My hon. friend the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) remembers that when this question was brought up before the House some years ago by the right hon gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who now leads the opposition, the question of the enlargement of the Quebec boundary was also brought up. It was then decided that if the arrangement went through the province of Quebec should receive as additional territory that portion of Canada known as Ungava. It was agreed that if the respective provinces accepted the arrangement the boundaries would be fixed accordingly. Might I remind the Prime Minister that at the session of the Quebec legislature which followed the federal session during which this matter came up, the legislature of Quebec unanimously passed a resolution accepting the terms offered then by the Dominion government. I hope that in the settlement of this question of the boundaries of Manitoba and Ontario, my hon. friend will not lose sight of the fact that the terms were that the province of Quebec should be seized, as additional territory, of the area known as Ungava.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I wish to express myself as in accord with the timely protest of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I think he put the case very fairly on behalf of the people of the maritime provinces. If these extensions are made as the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) pointed out, Quebec will have a right to an extension of its territory. Then, when Quebec is extended and the population increases, as will necessarily follow, what will happen to Nova Scotia at the next and the succeeding decennial census? We know what happened in the census just taken. Our population has fallen off as compared to that of Quebec and we are liable to lose two or three of our representatives. If you extend the territory of Quebec, as you will be bound in justice to expand it, as you are going to expand both Ontario and Manitoba, we in Nova Scotia, will be wiped off the map, just about, so far as our representation is concerned. As it is well known, the unit of representation is found by dividing the population of Quebec by 65. And, as the unit becomes larger, we lose more of our representatives, so we may look to the time when we shall not have thirteen members, but only five. At the time of confederation, I believe, it was never anticipated that our representation would be reduced below what it was then. On that account, I join in the protest of the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. It is somewhat amusing to observe the cool way in which the representatives of the western provinces carve up the territory still remaining within federal control without gaining the assent in the first place of those provinces that do not lie contiguous to that territory. I was very glad to hear my hon. friend the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) take the stand he did on this question and insist that the rights of the maritime provinces should be protected, if additional territory were to be given to these western provinces. If I understand it, it was in the session of 1908 or 1909 that a tentative arrangement was made by the government with these various provinces which would have gone through if it had been possible to arrive at a satisfactory understanding between Ontario and Manitoba with regard to the Hudson Bay port. So far as the federal government was concerned everything was done that could be done and needed to be done to make this arrangement binding, and it was only the disagreement which existed between these two provinces which prevented that arrangement being carried out, and these various portions of territory added to these several provinces. The ex-Minister of Public Works was a prominent member of that administration, and, according to the statement of the ex-Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that was the whole policy of the government, and we heard no dissent—at least publicly—on the part of the ex-Minister of Public Works, in regard to the matter. But a change has come over the spirit of his dream, and he is in a different position——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) will pardon me, if I remind him that one point in the proposed arrangement was that it was not proposed, as I understand the arrangement, to give to Manitoba any land or any money in lieu of land.

Mr. FOWLER. So much the worse for the hon. gentleman's position. They were giving lands to the other provinces and leaving Manitoba out, leaving it in the same position in which we were. That was clearly unjust.

That was clearly unjust for the rest of the western provinces, for if the rest of the western provinces were allowed grants of land Manitoba should be allowed grants as well. No provision is made for the eastern provinces. Why, during the time my hon. friend was Attorney General of New Brunswick, he was asked to place before the Privy Council at London the question of the loss of representation suffered by the province of New Brunswick by reason of her population not being able to keep pace with the growth of the population of Quebec, and one of the strong points in the argument he made before that court was that, by reason of the fact of the boundaries of Quebec having been increased, we in the maritime provinces should have a readjustment of the British North America Act, so that we would not lose our comparative representation, the added territory of Quebec allowing her to have an increased population. That was one of the arguments. That same argument would apply in the case of Ungava being added to Quebec, as was proposed under this agreement. My right hon. friend shakes his head. Why? I suppose because Ungava is such an inhospitable country that it would not be populated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am under the impression that any increase of population in Quebec by the addition of Ungava was not to be counted part of the population to be the basis of representation.

Mr. BORDEN. The resolutions were introduced at the same time with regard to Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. A considerable debate arose upon the point which my hon. friend has just mentioned, and the resolution with regard to Quebec was amended by saying that the representation of the other provinces should not be affected by such addition of territory to Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. That was done by the members of this House. But I submit that this House would have no power to do that; I submit that the British North America Act was not confined to the boundaries of Quebec granted in 1867, but it provided that as the population of Quebec is, or the population of whatever other provinces is in question, so is the population of Quebec to the representation of that province. By no Act of this House could the British North America Act be affected in that way, that can only be done by Act of the Imperial parliament. But the point I am making is this, that my hon. friend should have taken the same ground three years ago, or two years ago, when this matter was before the House, that he has taken to-day. However,

> While the lamp holds out to burn,
> The vilest sinner may return.

So there is a chance for my hon. friend to repent. I am glad to see he is repenting, and I welcome him again to the fold of those loyal and patriotic men in the maritime provinces who are always prepared to stand up for the interest of those provinces. Although I am a supporter of the government, I shall oppose any resolutions that come down here giving territory to the western provinces which do not make ample provision for the rights of the maritime provinces.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Let me call attention to the fact that the property which we are now asked to give to the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba is the joint property of all the provinces of Canada, and is not the property of Ontario and Manitoba, as some seem to think it is. Before this parliament is called upon to give this property to the province of Manitoba, some provision should be made for the other provinces of Canada, including the large province of Ontario. It is true that the province of Ontario got what is called New Ontario, and to-day we find, according to statements made by an hon. member who has just spoken, that the province of Quebec seeks to have a great expanse of territory added to its bounds. If this parliament should add that territory to Quebec, some provision should be made for the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island which, owing to their situation, cannot enlarge their territory. We cannot add to our territory any part of Keewatin, or any part of the territory lying on the Hudson bay; but we can ask this parliament to grant us something in lieu of any addition which may be made to any other province. Before this House passes an Act to grant this territory in question to the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, I think some provision should be made for the maritime provinces, by reason of the impossibility of adding to their territory. Now, Sir, I agree with the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler), that the members of the maritime provinces should not consent to any addition to the territory of Manitoba unless some quid pro quo is given to the maritime provinces.

Mr. ROGERS. I would not have spoken on this subject were it not for certain statements made by my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I do not regard the statements made by other hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this discussion as being of great importance, recognizing as I do the conditions and the circumstances, and the motive which has prompted the introduction of the resolution by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). I was indeed surprised to find the hon. member for St. John rising in his place and undertaking to discuss this important question from the point of view which he has chosen to take to-night. I am sure the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition will bear me out in the statement I am about to make. He will remember the time when he was good enough to invite representatives from the province of Manitoba to come here a few months ago, and discuss the terms and conditions upon which Manitoba should secure that extension of her territory for which she has been battling for so many long years. My right hon. friend and his colleague, the then Minister of Finance, suggested to Mr. Roblin and myself that in all probability it would be necessary to have an interprovincial conference before it would be possible to do for Manitoba that which we were asking.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear. Hear.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite who say, hear, hear, that we were able upon that occasion, as we are able to-night, as we are able at all times, to defend the interests and rights of the little province of Manitoba, which has been penalized as no other province of this Dominion has ever been. When we were invited to an interprovincial conference that took place in this city of Ottawa a few years ago, we accepted the invitation on the distinct understanding, by a formal order in council of the government of Manitoba, that our attendance at that conference should not prejudice our rights nor the claims we were making on behalf of the province in which we lived. Now, Sir, when the First Minister of Manitoba entered that conference he presented this resolution and that order in council to the members and premiers from the other provinces, and my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was then representing New Brunswick as premier of that province.

Now, Sir, the leader of the opposition will bear me out in this statement, that upon that occasion I was able to present the sessional papers of this House, which showed that my hon. friend from St. John accepted the statement made by the premier of Manitoba that the questions at issue between Manitoba and the Federal government were questions to be settled entirely between the government of that province and the government of this Dominion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend say that there is any record of the action taken by the representatives of the different governments, or was the memorandum submitted simply, filed and no action taken upon it? That is my recollection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Roblin presented the order in council of the province of Manitoba, and my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition will bear me out in saying that when Mr. Roblin presented that resolution and that order in council, the hon. member for St. John, as premier of one of the provinces of this Dominion, signed a memorandum, which is a matter of record in the sessional papers of this House, setting forth that the questions at issue between Manitoba and this government were matters to be settled entirely between the two governments. Yet, Sir, for political purposes, or for any other purpose you may choose to call it, we find hon. gentlemen standing up here to-day and giving evidence of such short memories as that of the hon. member for St. John here to-night.

The province of Manitoba has never asked for anything more than common justice, equality and fair-play with the other provinces in the confederation. We had appealed to the new leader of the opposition for seven long years in order that we might secure that position of equality and one reason after another was set up during that period of time why we should not be granted the request which we made, with the result that we were unable to secure any justice at his hands. The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues undertook, during that period of time, to try to cause difficulties between the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba with respect to our boundaries. They are undertaking to do the same thing to-day, but I want to tell the right hon. gentleman and those who sit behind him in this parliament that they failed then and they will fail now in any such attempt. We are ready to be just one with the other, we are ready to be just to all the other provinces of this Dominion and, as has been stated by my leader here, a settlement has been effected and agreed to which means that the leader of the opposition well understands that we are to secure a position of equality in the family of provinces that form this confederation. We never asked for anything more and we do not ask for anything more now. It is true that we were asking for fair terms and that we pointed to the resolution which I have quoted, signed by my hon. friend from St. John, but the Finance Minister agreed in that conference, as the right hon. gentleman well knows, that it was time for the government of this Dominion to offer some settlement and they did, but not what Manitoba would be entitled to, with the result that a proposition was made to our province that we should receive $200,000 from the government of Canada in settlement of our claims. This proposition as made by the government of that day was presented to the legislature of Manitoba and was unanimously rejected by Liberals and Conservatives in that legislature as representing the unanimous opinion of the people of that province because we did not feel that justice and fair-play were being done. Now, the position, as stated by the leader of the government here, is clear and complete. All we have asked for is a position of equality and he has acknowledged the principle. As the right hon. leader of the opposition well knows, it takes time to work out the details. We in Manitoba have had a swamp-lands account with the government of Canada, and if we are to have a position of equality it simply means the employment of an actuary to work out what that position really will be. As soon as that position is worked out I am sure that I am not saying too much when I say that we will come down to this parliament with a proposition giving to that province in which I live that position of equality for which we have been battling and which was refused by hon. gentlemen opposite for the past seven years.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, my resolution has been barren of its original intention so far as results or any important information that the Prime Minister has vouchsafed to the House are concerned. I am very glad to know, however, that it has been the means of stirring up the interest of the House upon a very important question and my hon. friend from King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) and my hon. friend from Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. McLean), while alive to the interests of the various provinces, will perhaps feel themselves well within their rights—and I would like to be associated with them in their efforts in that matter — in saying that these maritime provinces should have something to say about things these days. The master of the administration who has just sat down has told us that he is settling this whole business without any regard to this nasty province of Ontario, which my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has been trying to get him to fight with for the last six or seven years. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), could have gone a little further. All he wanted, he said, was that his province should be on terms of equality with every other province. Equality in what ?—equality in territory, equality in finance, equality in civil rights ? What does he mean ? I think the people of Manitoba fancy themselves about as good people as there are in any other province of the Dominion. They may not have all the territory they would like, but the only reason they do not have it is because they would not take it in the manner in which it was offered to them by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. Now then, the Minister of the Interior tells us the reason that they did not take it was because this nasty province of Ontario was fighting with them. Just fancy what a wonderful man my right hon. friend must have been if he was able to manipulate Sir James Whitney and the hon. Minister of the Interior for the last six or seven years and keep them fighting with one another, forsooth, so that they could not get together and settle their differences, and because the hon. gentleman and Sir James Whitney were fighting, Manitoba was not able to secure that equality, in some fanciful respect—I do not know in what regard—which the hon. gentleman says he is getting.

Mr. ROGERS. The hon. gentleman is putting words in my mouth that I never used at all.

Mr. MACDONALD. What did you say then ?

Mr. ROGERS. I think I was clear in what I did say. I certainly did not say that the right hon. leader of the opposition had kept the governments of Manitoba and Ontario fighting. I said nothing of that kind ; I said that although he was trying to do that he did not succeed.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend distinctly stated that my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition had undertaken to keep the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario fighting over this question for the last seven years. I took note of his words. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us then that he and the Ontario government were not fighting over this question ? If they were not fighting during the last six or seven years over this question what did the words of Sir James Whitney mean a week or two ago in the local election campaign ? Everyone in Canada thought that when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), came down here the interests of Ontario with regard to the boundaries were going to be looked after, but apparently, according to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, he has got away with the whole thing. The province of Manitoba has got everything that it has been fighting for for the last seven years, and the Minister of Railways and Canals is not in it. The real master of the administration is the Minister of the Interior, who has got what he wants, and Sir James Whitney does not know what he is talking about with regard to this matter. The man he should be fighting with when he is discussing this question is the Minister of the Interior, and I think that in the week that is left of the campaign it will be seen that Sir James Whitney has at last discovered the villain who is responsible for all this trouble, and will show what he thinks of him in that plain Anglo-Saxon that is so characteristic of the Conservative leader in Ontario. While my hon. friend has been remaking one of his campaign speeches on this great question of the boundaries of Manitoba, and apparently has vouchsafed to give us a little light about the thing, we are still in the dark, just as much in the dark as we were when I had the honour to move this resolution a little over an hour ago, and after two of the front bench members of this government have spoken with regard to this subject, I ask the House if we really know what we are doing in regard to this matter.

We are not to suppose that the Prime Minister spoke for the purpose of beclouding our minds. He did berate me that I, so late in the day, paid tribute to the force with which he advocated the claims of the northwest provinces to their lands, but even though it is late in the day he might very well have accepted my compliment with some grace. However, I did have the feeling that I began to doubt my hon. friend's sincerity and although he appeared to be forcible in his contentions about the ownership of the land of these provinces he possibly was not sincere. Now, that the opportunity has come to put in force his views he fails to carry out his promises, and it appears the Minister of the Interior has induced him to set actuaries at work to discover just how much he can manage to wheedle out of the federal treasury. Evidently the Minister of the Interior is not a federal minister, but is here as the Minister of Public Works of the Manitoba government. He appears not to have caught the spirit of a Dominion minister, and to have succeeded in turning aside the avowed policy of the Prime Minister in favour of a proposition under which actuaries can figure out for him how much money he can get for Manitoba. This debate would indicate that possibly that is all the government is going to do. If such a good settlement has been made for all parties concerned, why does not the Prime Minister take us into his confidence, and tell us what it is. We are about to adjourn for the Christmas holidays and the Prime Minister's friends from Manitoba will be able to go home and tell their people what a great Christmas present they are bringing to the province in removing its postage stamp character from the map. After Christmas parliament will be told what further is in this Santa Claus stocking, and in the meantime Sir James Whitney can continue to go about denouncing the nasty Grits. At all events I hope we will have the papers before the Prime Minister brings down his legislation on the subject. Of course the Postmaster General tells us that to-day he is not so much interested in the question as to whether or not the people of this new territory to be added to Manitoba are to have Separate schools. Apparently he does not come here pledged to see that anything of that kind is done. I do not know whether I understood the Postmaster General correctly in that.

Mr. PELLETIER. Any one can understand me, because I speak clearly.

Mr. MACDONALD. Seeing that the Postmaster General has only been in the House two or three weeks he might not become so vain-glorious all at once as to think that this House can understand so readily everything he says.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am sure my hon. friend understood me.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am not imputing to the Postmaster General any inability to speak either of the languages which may be officially used in this House so as to make every hon. member understand what he means, but if the hon. gentleman intended to let the House know where he stood on the question he was singularly unfortunate in the language he used. The hon. gentleman took the cue from his leader and he did not propose to tell us whether he wanted separate schools such as Archbishop Langevin wants. I suppose we will have to wait until after the Christmas season to learn about that also. Of course, if there were not elections in Ontario, which will come off after the House rises, I am quite sure these gentlemen on the treasury benches would be more candid, and we would really have some satisfactory announcement about it. That they have not been candid is evidence of the fact that there is something they want to conceal. If they have come to an understanding in regard to the financial terms, in regard to the boundaries, and in regard to the civil rights of the people in the new territory to be added to Manitoba why should they not make a frank statement to the House as to what the arrangement is. There is some reason for this failure to be frank with the House and the country; there is some reason why they desire to conceal the real situation. At all events I trust that the Prime Minister who is consenting to this motion will see that the papers are brought down in ample time for their study before he submits his Bill to give effect to the terms of the settlement.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BROTHERHOOD UNIONS.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) moved:

For a copy of all agreements between the Minister of Railways of Canada and any of the Brotherhood Unions or organizations of the employees of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman wish this motion to go unrestricted as to date?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I want the information since 1898.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), I desire to move that the House resolve itself into a committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to consolidate and revise the Manitoba Grain Act, chapter 83 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and Part II. of the Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of the Revised Statutes, 1906; to establish a Board of Commissioners to administer the grain trade of Canada, and to provide for expenses in connection therewith, and to charge the board with the operation and management of such terminal elevators as may be constructed, leased or acquired by the government of Canada.

I may say that this measure follows the lines of the old Bill which I understand was agreed to by both sides of the House during the last parliament, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has asked me to push it forward a stage in order that the Bill may be printed so that the members will have an opportunity of reading and studying it before the House reassembles after the Christmas holidays.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Borden, House adjourned at 10.00 p.m.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 13) to incorporate the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Co.—Mr. Bickerdike.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MACDONALD moved that Bill (No. 20), respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company be read the second time, and that the rules of the House be suspended in reference thereto. He said: 'I make this motion in order to facilitate the passage of this Bill through the House for reasons which were explained by the hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), yesterday.

Mr. BORDEN.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood from the motion which was made yesterday that the rule in reference to this Bill had already been suspended.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of the Bill?

Mr. BORDEN. The object was explained yesterday. The time limit for the completion of the work expired on the 1st December and the company ceased to have any power to proceed with the uncompleted portion of its work. This Bill is designed to enable the company to go on and complete its work, and the time for completion is to be fixed under another Bill which will be before the House in a little while. The time for completion of the prairie section is to be limited to a period of one year, and, within such period, for such time as shall be fixed by the Governor in Council. The time for completion of the mountain section shall not exceed three years from the 1st of December, and, within such period, such time as the Governor in Council may appoint.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand how this Bill will give an extension if it is to be completed in a future Bill which gives force to an order in council.

Mr. BORDEN. There were two distinct things to be dealt with. The company under its charter, had until the 1st December, 1911, to complete its works. In case its works were not completed within that period its charter ceased in respect of everything that had not been finished at that time, and it could not proceed further. But, there was something besides that, namely, the contract of the company with the Crown and under the company's contract with the Crown, the same date, December 1st, 1911, had been fixed. They are two distinct things and it is proposed to deal with them by two distinct Bills. As far as the company's charter is concerned, it is to be extended so that the work may go on in the meantime and the company may not lose its statutory power. So far as the contract with the government is concerned, the period for the completion of the prairie section is not to exceed one year from the 1st December, 1912, but so far as the government is concerned, it may be bound to a period of shorter duration, that is to say it may be declared by order in council that the contract shall only be modified to the extent of giving the company to the 31st day of July next for the purpose of fulfilling that contract. So far as the mountain section is concerned, the outside limit is three years from the 1st December, 1911, but in respect of the contract with the government it is proposed to reserve to the Crown the power to fix a date within that period. In other words, the modification of the contract between the company and the government with respect to the extension of time is to be left to the discretion of the government. Probably a new contract will have to be entered into for the purpose of modifying the former contract in that respect. The urgency of these Bills is due to the circumstance that without some provision of this kind the company loses its power of proceeding with the work during the winter if the statutes were strictly enforced.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not clearly understand it. A charter never lapses. A charter always exists. The powers under the charter have expired and you are going to renew under a future Bill. I cannot see the object of this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. It was thought desirable that the extension of time for the purpose of the charter should be the same as that fixed by the government with respect to the modification of the contract. For that reason it is provided in this Bill that the extension shall not exceed one year in respect to the prairie section, and shall not exceed three years with respect to the mountain section, and shall be for such shorter period as the Governor in Council may see fit to fix with respect to the fulfilment of the contract. I do not know whether I have made myself clear to my hon. friend.

Mr. HAGGART. I can understand quite clearly that you give power to the Governor in Council to do this, but if you get that power what is the use of the subsequent Bill?

Mr. BORDEN. For the reason I have endeavoured to explain; for example a company may have an extension of time under its charter, but that extension would not in any way affect its contract with the Crown, and, therefore, it seemed necessary not only to introduce a Bill extending the time in the company's charter, but also to introduce a Bill for the purpose of permitting the Crown to grant a certain extension by order in council of the contract which was entered into in 1904.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

On motion of the Hon. Frank Cochrane (Minister of Railways) Bill (No. 21) respecting the National Transcontinental railway was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

THE NE TEMERE DECREE.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to call the attention of the House and particularly that of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and the hon. the First Minister to the answer given to a question I asked yesterday relating to the powers of parliament to deal with the subject of marriage more especially in view of what is known as the Ne Temere decree. I do so because the matter is one of great importance. It is a matter in which the public take a very deep interest, and it is more especially important because it is the subject matter of a Bill standing on the Order Paper introduced by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). I think the hon. Minister of Justice will agree with me that the question is one upon which the House is entitled to be advised as to what are the powers of parliament. I coincide in the view expressed by Mr. Speaker that there is no means of compelling the government to answer a question, but at the same time hon. gentlemen opposite must recognize that members of the opposition have rights in this House, and are entitled to receive answers to proper questions. I submit that we are entitled to receive an answer to the question to which I refer from the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) who is the legal adviser of the government and practically the legal adviser of parliament on legal questions, and to whose opinion parliament always pays the greatest possible attention. The question I put was as follows:

> Is the government of the opinion that either it or the parliament of Canada has power to deal with such decrees?

To this question the right hon. the First Minister answered:

> The question raised as to the respective powers of parliament and of provincial legislatures is one of legal interpretation upon which eminent lawyers may differ.

Anybody would know that, but what we want to know is what is the opinion of the Minister of Justice on this question. We want to know that opinion because the matter is one of great concern to the country, because it was made a very important issue in the province of Ontario, during the last election as was stated in this House by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) and because a Bill is now standing before this House in respect of which we shall be called on to act. I submit, therefore, that with regard to this very important question, the House is fairly entitled to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I might remind the hon. member for St. John that in the last parliament I asked a question of a like character, and received, in almost the very words, the same answer from the then Minister of Justice, Sir Allen Aylesworth.

Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I may say that the answer which is given is one which would receive ample justification from a great many answers given by the late administration. As a matter of fact the question put by the hon. member comes within the rule as laid down by Bourinot at page 435 of his work on Parliamentary Procedure:

Nor are questions usually put on matters which are at the time the subject of proceedings in the court, or which involve a question of law.

I would imagine, therefore, that, under this rule, an answer might have been declined altogether. I suppose the proper course would be to make a motion, or to take steps of some kind in the House to have the opinion of the law officers of the Crown communicated to the House, or to have the question referred for opinion in some other way. However, that course was not adopted in this instance.

The answer given is, it seems to me, the only one that under all circumstances could very well be given. My hon. friend says very truly that the question relates to a Bill on the Order Paper, and that, I may add, would be another reason for not answering it because it is not the practice to put question relating to measures that are on the Order Paper in advance of the time when these measures may be reached. The answer was not at all given by way of discourtesy. It was a reference to the opinion of the late Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), coupled with an expression of opinion that the matter submitted would involve a difficult question as to the interpretation of the British North America Act.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—EXPENDITURE ON RIDEAU HALL.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a question of privilege. In the Toronto 'Mail-Empire' of November 3, 1911, there appeared what purports to be a report of a Conservative meeting in the city of Toronto addressed by my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) in which he is reported to have said:

Although $100,000 was appropriated last year to remodel and redecorate Rideau Hall, prior to the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, it was doubtful, according to one man, if more than $20,000 had been spent. Where the balance had gone had not been discovered.

When I saw that statement, I regarded it as a charge of a most serious character not only against the officials of my department, but also against myself as the minister who, until October last, presided over that department. I was thoroughly satisfied that the statement was entirely without foundation, but I thought I would put a question in the House to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works as to the appropriation which had been made for this purpose, and also as to the expenditure actually made on Rideau Hall up to the 1st of November, a few days before my hon. friend was reported to have made that speech. The answer given by the Minister of Public Works is to be found on pages 562 and 563 of 'Hansard.' That answer gives in detail the items of expenditure. It shows that the appropriation, instead of being $100,000, was $50,000, and that the amount of expenditure up to the 1st of November was $46,441.84, leaving an unexpended balance at that date of $3,558.16.

Having received that answer from the Minister of Public Works, I placed a question upon the Order Paper as follows:

Did the Hon. A. E. Kemp, a member of the government, when addressing a meeting in Toronto recently, make the following statement, as reported in the 'Mail-Empire' on November 3, 1911?

Then I quoted the statement just as I have read it to the House. The answer to that question was as follows:

The general statement was made that Government House, upon the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses, was in a state of unpreparedness, and that such a condition was inexplicable.

That does not answer in so many words the question which I put to the government. My question was as to whether the hon. member had made the statement as reported in the 'Mail-Empire,' that the appropriation was $100,000, that a man had informed him that only $20,000 had been expended, and that they were unable to discover what had become of the remainder. However, I would prefer to take the answer of the hon. Minister of Public Works as a denial that my hon. friend from East Toronto had made that statement. I am very glad to believe that he did not make it. I would be very sorry to believe that a member of this House, without going to the proper department, without going to the responsible minister of that department, and asking for the information, would deliberately make a statement which would lead the people of this country to believe that there had been a misappropriation, because that is the effect of it, of the enormous amount of $80,000 or any amount in connection with the expenses of Rideau Hall.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. member that he is travelling a little wide of the mark in speaking on a question of privilege. He can give a categorical denial of the statement without discussing it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am accepting this as being a denial, though not a clear and explicit denial, of my hon. friend. But, Mr. Speaker, accepting it as a denial, I desire to say that the conduct of the reporter of the 'Mail—Empire,' and of the 'Mail-Empire,' in publishing the statement without authority, in distorting the language of my hon. friend from East Toronto, in reporting him as saying what he did not say, in conveying to the people of this country false and injurious information, and making a most unjust aspersion against the Department of Public Works, and intended to be an aspersion against myself as Minister of Public Works, is utterly indefensible; and it seems to me that it is due, not to myself or the Department of Public Works alone, but to the public, that that newspaper should apologize for the libellous statement which it made, and should take the necessary steps to do justice.

PRIVILEGE—THE MANITOBA BOUNDARIES.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to another question of privilege. In the report in 'Hansard' of the proceedings of yesterday, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) in discussing the question of the Manitoba boundaries and the agreement which it is alleged has been come to between the government of Manitoba and the Federal government, is reported to have made this statement:

> Now, Sir, when the First Minister of Manitoba entered that conference he presented this resolution and that order in council to the members and premiers from the other provinces, and my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was then representing New Brunswick as premier of that province. Now, Sir, the leader of the opposition will bear me out in the statement, that upon that occasion I was able to present the Sessional Papers of this House, which showed that my hon. friend from St. John accepted the statement made by the premier of Manitoba that the questions at issue between Manitoba and the Federal government were questions to be settled entirely between the government of that province and the government of this Dominion.

The hon. member proceeds further and reiterates the statement that in the Sessional Papers will be found a memorandum signed by me, in which I concurred in the view that settlement of further claims on the part of Manitoba was a matter entirely between the Federal government and the government of Manitoba. Now, I desire to say that I have examined carefully the Sessional Papers, for the year 1906-7, and I find in them the return of the proceedings of the conference, but I find no such document as that to which my hon. friend refers. I am sorry he is not in his place, as he might perhaps be able to point out some other return of which I am not aware. The only memorandum I can find which might possibly have some bearing on the subject is one on page 4 of the return. It is not applicable specially to Manitoba, but has reference to any claim which any province might make, and it does not state that it is a matter which would rest entirely between the Federal government and the government of the province interested. The only paragraph which I find bearing on the subject is contained in the resolution of the conference, and is as follows:

> Resolved—1. That the sub-matter of the resolutions adopted by the conference and representatives of the different provinces, held at Quebec in December, 1902, and which were shortly thereafter presented to the government of the Dominion and which were ratified by the legislatures of the then existing provinces, except that of British Columbia, be now pressed upon the government of the Dominion for immediate and favourable action, under reserve of the right of any province to now submit to such government memoranda in writing concerning any claims it may have to larger sums than those set out in the said resolutions, or to additional consideration or recognition.

As I stated yesterday, I have no recollection of having signed any memorandum, and if the hon. gentleman is able to produce it, it would of course show that I am in error as to that. This resolution does not at all bear out the statement which my hon. friend has made. It does not profess to assert that the settlement of any further claims would be a matter entirely between the Federal government and the government of any province. All it does is to reserve to any province the right to submit any further claims. Of course, if any further claims were submitted which affected the rights of any other province of Canada, it would be entirely open to that other province to present its views thereon to the government of Canada in order that its rights might not be prejudiced in any settlement that might be made. I thought it due to myself to make this statement, because my hon. friend gave to the House the positive assurance that I, as Premier of the province of New Brunswick—which I did not happen to be at the time, being simply Attorney General—had signed such a memorandum. I make this statement because my hon. friend so far as I have been able to ascertain was entirely in error in giving the House the assurance that he did.

CAR SHORTAGE IN WEST.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I desire to call the attention of the government to the fact that in western Canada to-day great difficulty is being experienced by the people in getting cars to ship their grain to the market. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I may say that I have read a number of articles in the newspapers and especially one in the 'Journal' of Ottawa of December 1, which set forth the situation very clearly. I have also had an opportunity of seeing the western local papers, and I have found that almost without exception the complaint of the farmers in that country is that they cannot get the cars to ship their grain. It is actually stated in some of their papers that grain has been drawn to market and that not being able to get into the elevators it has been dumped on the track and is rotting. I would ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) to the matter, and to see if something cannot be done to relieve the difficulties under which these people labour at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN. I will bring the matter to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) and of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), and if there is anything that can be done by the government in connection with it I assure my hon. friend that we will be prepared to do it without the slightest delay.

CAPTAIN PETER DECOSTE.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) to the fact that he has failed to answer some questions that I put on the Order Paper some days ago. The questions were in reference to the dismissal of Captain Peter DeCoste, and the answers which the minister gave will be found on page 563 of 'Hansard.' Three of the questions asked were answered. The ones that were not answered were as follows:

3. Who succeeded him, why was he dismissed, and on whose recommendation or advice?

The first part of this question is answered. The answer being:

3. (a) Captain Daniel Gillis.

The questions:

Why was he dismissed, and on whose recommendation or advice?

are not answered at all. I submit that these are fair and legitimate questions to put, and I think it would only be courteous to the House that the minister should answer them. Then, again, the question was asked:

Were there any charges made against him? If so, by whom, and what were they?

The answer to that is 'minister.' That is the only answer that is given. It may perhaps have been a mistake on the part of the clerk who prepared the answer, but I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that these questions are left unanswered, and I would ask him to furnish the answers. I submit these are proper questions to put and that we have a right to have them answered. Then the question was put:

Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to dismiss all officers and men appointed to positions on the government dredges and tugs by the late government?

I do not know whether that is a proper question or not, but it seems to me that it is. What do you suppose is the answer? The 'minister' again.

Mr. MONK. I am sorry to say that I have not been able to catch all that my hon. friend has stated, but I understand that his remarks have reference to the dismissal of some official.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Just so.

Mr MONK. If my hon. friend would renew his question I shall endeavour to give him all the information he requires, although it seems to me that the questions already put in that connection have been fully answered. If my hon. friend prefers to move for the papers they will be brought down at once.

SUPPLY — DELAY IN RECEIPT OF DAILY PAPERS AT GLACE BAY, SYDNEY, ETC.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) to a grievance existing in the town of Glace Bay and other towns in the county of Cape Breton in reference to getting the western mail. This matter has been brought to my attention by certain news dealers. For example, the Montreal 'Star,' the Toronto 'Globe' and other papers from Ontario and Quebec come down there only every second day. I would like if the hon. Postmaster General would take this matter into his consideration and see if this grievance cannot be remedied in a short time. I wrote to the department some days ago in reference to it, but up to the present I have not received any reply to my communication.

Mr. PELLETIER. I could not venture to answer the hon. gentleman's question, as I have not been able to hear him.

Mr. CARROLL. The grievance is this: Certain newsdealers in the town of Glace Bay, and, I understand, in the city of Sydney, get their Montreal and Toronto papers, say, on Monday, and they do not receive these daily papers again until Wednesday or Thursday. They come in every second day. The daily papers should arrive there every day and I would be glad if the Postmaster General would take these things into his consideration and see if the grievance cannot be remedied in a short time.

Mr. PELLETIER. I will inquire into it and try to give satisfaction to my hon. friend.

PUBLIC WORKS IN CAPE BRETON COUNTY.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) to certain matters in the county which I have the honour to represent. Last summer and last fall four or five public works were ready for tender and tenders have been called for some of them, I understand. The whole of the money was not voted until the other day. Now, all the moneys for these different works are voted, and I want to bring to the notice of the Minister of Public Works that this is the very best time of the year to call for tenders for these works in the part of the country from which I come.

They are breakwaters and piers, and works that require a lot of timber and stone, and the minister will readily understand that it is easier to get that material out at this time, in the winter, than any other time, it is easier to fell the timber and to take it out of the woods. Now, if the minister will inquire into the different works in the county of North Cape Breton and Victoria he will find they have been ready some time for construction. I hope he will see that these tenders are called for, and that the successful tenderer may be in a position to go on and get the material.

Mr. MONK. I would say to my hon. friend that I will be glad to take into consideration any suggestions he may make in regard to these works. I would add that when I came into office there were certain works in the position mentioned by my hon. friend; parliament seems to have sanctioned the works. The money was voted, not a sufficient sum in most cases, but money was voted and the principle of the work seemed to be approved. Where there was no objection offered, nothing to create the impression that possibly those works were too considerable or not perhaps necessary, and perceiving that tenders were called for, and where everything was in order, the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. But where objections were raised, and it was discovered upon further reference to the district engineer that those objections were in part well founded, it became necessary to consider whether we should enter upon the work at all without being fortified by further information. That explains the delay in some cases. Some of those works are quite considerable, and although the money was voted to begin them, it became evident that it would take a very large amount to complete them; and when their urgency or necessity was called in question it became incumbent on me to look further into the matter. That has been one reason for delay in some cases. In the part of the country my hon. friend comes from there are several such works. I am anxious that they should be prosecuted, if they are really necessary, and if all the conditions are complied with. I will be glad to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The answer which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) makes to my hon. friend from Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) will hardly be sufficient to satisfy the people, at least in the province of Nova Scotia. A few days ago I asked the government the following question:

Has the work on the canal at Chester, N.S., been discontinued? If so, for what reason, and on whose recommendation was such work discontinued?

Yesterday the following answer was given?

1. Yes.
2. That inquiries may be made as to the necessity of the work.

This is a public work that is here called a canal, but in the strict sense of the term it is not so, as it is simply an artificial waterway connecting what is locally termed a front harbour and a back harbour. It is really a ditch to enable small boats to pass from one harbour to the other at this place in Chester. I think the total amount of money voted for this purpose was about $2,000, and it was all expended with the exception of about $300. About the middle of November a provincial election was taking place in the county of Lunenburg, in which Chester is situated, and a week or so before polling day the work was discontinued. Now I wish to submit to the Minister of Public Works that there was no justification whatever for stopping the work, and he can find nobody, even among his own political friends and supporters at Chester, to justify the cessation of the work, unless it was for purely political purposes, and locally this was the reason assigned. It is very difficult to complete the work now at this season of the year, and it is difficult for anybody to understand upon what ground the work should have been prevented from proceeding to completion. I mention this merely for the purpose of calling the attention of the House that the reason assigned by the minister, in answer to the statement made by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, is not altogether sufficient, and does not explain the discontinuance of the work, in certain cases at least, in the province of Nova Scotia. I trust my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will be just a little more candid in making his explanations concerning these matters.

Mr. MONK. I can assure my hon. friend that the work he mentions was certainly not suspended for political motives, it was not merely a question of $300. There were serious reasons for suspending the work, if it was suspended; and if my hon. friend will make clear to me what he has just said to the House, I will make an effort to have the work terminated at once.

THE COCKSHUTT PLOUGH COMPANY.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). I ask the indulgence of the House to make a few observations on a matter considered by some to be of special public interest. I refer to a matter that is going the round of the western press, and that was also referred to in this House during the debate on the speech from the Throne. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) the other day, made reference to the firm called The Cockshutt Plough Company; and my name being connected with it, some of my friends thought I should at once reply to the hon. gentleman in so far as his remarks referred to that firm. I may say at the outset that, personally, I have nothing whatever to do with the management of the Cockshutt Plough Company of Brantford, nor have I had for twenty years past. I may say at the same time, however, for the benefit of my hon. friend who made the reflections, that the firm is in the hands of thoroughly honest and honourable men, who I think, will compare very favourably with the hon. gentleman who lays the charges against the Cockshutt Plough Company, of not dealing squarely with the west.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman is referring to a statement of mine, I want to say that I made no allegation or suggestion that the Cockshutt Plough Company was not dealing squarely with the people of the west.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman's words are in 'Hansard' of Tuesday, November 28, but I suppose the rules of the House will not permit me to read them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. A past debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is a question of privilege, I think the hon. member would have a right to read them; otherwise he could not properly refer to a past debate.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as I am concerned, I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would read them.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. With the permission of the House, I will read what he said, to be found on page 463 of the 'Hansard' of November 28:

> I said something about monopolies, trusts and combines. I have given the House the result of the triumph of the monopolies, trusts and combines on one end of the farmers' transactions. Let me give a little light on the other end, that is to say, on the buying end of the farmers' necessities. It is given on good authority that the Cockshutt Plough Company of Brantford, which makes an eight-furrow engine gang plough, sells that plough at Brantford for $600. They sell the same plough in Winnipeg at $680, in Saskatoon the same plough costs $705. But this infant industry which requires a protection of some 17½ per cent tariff to prevent those villainous Yankees from selling ploughs in Canada, it appears, is able to pay a 15 per cent duty and sell their ploughs in the United States. The remarkable thing is that after paying the 15 per cent tariff duty, they sell their plough at Peoria, Illinois, at $525, and at Minneapolis at $502. The same plough that is sold in Brantford at $600 is sold in Minneapolis at $502, after paying a 15 per cent duty besides the freight. There is no manner of doubt that interests such as the Cockshutt Plough Company did feel a stupendous relief as a result of the election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is able to applaud his own words, but I think he will find that the examples in these statements are not intended as complimentary references to the manner in which the Cockshutt Plough Company do business.

Mr. OLIVER. I can quite admit that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman quite admits that. Perhaps he will admit something else before I get through. He has made certain statements there which he says are given on good authority. The hon. gentleman did not see fit to quote what he considered good authority nor to tell us where he got his authority from. It may be that he is following a blind guide, as did the right hon. leader of the opposition of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he followed the Grain Growers' Association who came down here and led him astray before the country at the last election. It may be that this same blind guide has led the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) to make a statement that the facts do not justify. If the hon. gentleman had any proof I think he should have produced that proof at the time he made the statement, but he has not seen fit to do so. He says the statement is given on good authority.

Mr. OLIVER. We are waiting for the hon. member to give us the facts.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. But the hon. gentleman has given the facts and then he asks me to give them.

Mr. BUREAU. Do you deny them?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Wait until I get through, and you will see what I say. I say that the hon. gentleman has given us facts founded merely on his own statement and that he did not take the precaution as we have had to do to see whether there was really any truth in the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made in regard to these prices. At considerable expense we have found it necessary, in order to meet the charge that the hon. gentleman has made, to send a representative to Minneapolis and also one to Peoria. This has been done at considerable cost to the company, because this charge that the hon. gentleman makes, if correct, must be considered as a most serious one. He makes a statement that after paying thirteen per cent duty on these goods and entering them in the United States we are selling them away below what we sell them at the point of manufacture in Canada. The hon. gentleman has done what has been done throughout this reciprocity campaign, and he has got it so badly into his head that he cannot get it out. He is doing what is palpably designed to mislead the public; that is he is quoting a wholesale price against a retail one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. A wholesale price against a retail price is what the hon. gentleman has quoted there. If he is prepared to buy as many Cockshutt ploughs as one customer in the United States he will be able to get the same price from the company also, but he cannot expect that we are going to sell a farmer a plough at the same price as we sell $100,000 worth in one order. The hon. gentleman did not take any precaution to find out these facts and he sends out broadcast the statement that the Cockshutt Plough Company are robbing the farmers of the west. I have here a sheet printed in Winnipeg containing this statement, and it has been published in the 'Grain Growers' Guide' as well. The Cockshutt Plough Company have something else to do than answer all the charges which may be trumped up against it in regard to these matters in the west. But when such a charge is made as that which the hon. gentleman has made that we are taking hundreds of dollars out of the farmers and giving the American farmer a plough at a hundred dollars less I think we are entitled to produce some facts and figures to controvert that charge, and to ascertain whether the circumstances and the ploughs are the same. Let me draw your attention to what the character of this plough is because there are ploughs and ploughs. Our company—I call it ' our company '—because I am one of the humble shareholders——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. A small shareholder —make about 80 varieties of ploughs, and this is one of the varieties that the hon. gentleman is referring to. This is a steam plough or what is known as an engine gang plough. It costs in the west, as he says, about $600, but that is a very small portion of the outlay. After a man has made that outlay he will require an engine to drive the plough, and the engine costs about $4,000. These are the facts with regard to the original cost of the engine and gang plough. These ploughs are not in common use in Canada. If a gentleman says in this House that he has bought a vehicle your understanding would be that he had bought anything from a small apple cart to an automobile costing from $10 up to $10,000. The engine and gang plough, with the complete equipment, stand in about the same position with relation to the ordinary plough that the up to date motor car does to the small apple cart. Who are these gentlemen that the hon. member is asking sympathy for on this ground? Let us see whether they require so much sympathy as the hon. gentleman states. I respect very highly the farmers of Canada, we have a great many of them in Ontario, but the farmer who uses this engine gang plough is a man who conducts operations on a most gigantic scale. No man who ploughs 100 or 200 acres will ever buy one of these steam engine outfits unless he is going to take contracts from his neighbours. He is going into this thing with no small operation in view. The man who buys the engine gang steam plough is the owner probably of 10,000 acres. Let me explain how these ploughs are used in order that this House may understand thoroughly the position of this matter, because I charge here again that this is an endeavour to set the farmer of the west against the manufacturer of the east. That is what the whole argument is designed to do, and what has characterized the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is the desire of these hon. gentlemen to set the farmer of the west against the manufacturer and the working man of the east. This plough that the hon. gentleman refers to will turn twenty-eight acres of new land per day. Let us see to what use this plough is put by the man who buys it. He takes a contract from his neighbour, who is not fortunate enough to have one of these ploughs, and he charges him from $4 to $4.50 per acre for turning the land. I have known of a case in the west where a man during a season has ploughed 30 acres per day at $4.25 an acre making in all $138 per day. This is not bad business. We should consider that a very fair profit in the plough business. A man who would make that profit per day would probably have 100 days in the season in which he could do it, and after allowing $53 for labour and working expenses of the plough, he would have $75 as a profit on his day's work. If he had 100 days in a season this would give him $7,500 for the operation of his plough for a season of 100 days. So that I do not think the hon. gentleman has made out his case that this man is worthy of such an immense amount of sympathy. If he is deserving of the sympathy of all men let him have it. I have here a telegram from a representative in Minneapolis who states that the figures are the wholesale and not the retail price and further that this agent in the United States, even if he ordered a plough, would not deliver the goods in Canada. It is one thing to quote cheaply, it is quite another thing to deliver the goods, and this man, even if he quotes cheaply, could not deliver the goods. Further, the same authority that controls the plough in Peoria also controls that plough in Minneapolis as we have only the one representative in the whole of the United States, so that if the hon. gentleman states that a man is selling at the more remote point at the cheaper price that is further evidence that the hon. gentleman's figures must be a long way out.

I know that the question of agricultural implements is a burning one in the west, but I can truly say that if there is one industry in Canada of which we have more reason to be proud than another it is that very industry, and the development that has taken place in it. Thirty years ago there was scarcely an implement factory of any size in Canada, and to-day, outside of the United States, there is no country in the world where implements are sold as cheaply as they are here. That does not look as if the farmer was suffering very much. Take even free trade England, whence the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) comes, and I make the statement on my responsibility as a member of this House that farm implements are sold in protectionist Canada cheaper than in free trade England. Furthermore, so far as agricultural implements are concerned, we would not care if there was free trade with England to-morrow. It is only the high protectionist United States that can beat Canada, but give us time and they will not beat us. We are getting there, but we want a little more time. The hon. gentleman has attempted to make the House believe that the plough companies of Brantford and other centres are overcharging the farmers of Canada, but if there is such a great fortune in the manufacture of ploughs why does he not start in the business. Indeed it may be that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is about to start in that line, because I hear that a company called the Oliver Plough Company is coming to the city of Hamilton. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will soon be in the same position as I am now in; he will have to stand for all the sins of the Oliver Plough Company, and no matter how often he denies that he is a member of the company he will still be held liable, as I have been, because of my name.

Mr. OLIVER. If I had as many shares in the Oliver Plough Company as my hon. friend admits he has in the Cockshutt Company, I would stand the blame all right.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Oh, it is only a matter of money with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) but I put my principles on a higher plane than that. I am pointing out to the hon. gentleman that there is plenty of competition in Canada to see to it that the farmers in the west are not overcharged.

Mr. OLIVER. The Oliver Company evidently does not think so.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman has a good many interruptions to make, and I expect to give him further reason to interrupt before I finish. He has alleged that the plough companies of Canada are making tremendous profits at the expense of the farmers, and are unjustly charging them high prices compared with what farmers in other countries pay. Well, I can tell the hon. gentleman that any man who makes money out of ploughs or other agricultural implements to-day, has got to get up early in the morning, work hard, and stay up late at night. I make that statement with the authority of one who knows something about the business, though not engaged in it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has mentioned the Cockshutt Plough Company, but he might have mentioned other plough companies which have not been so successful. He might, for instance, have referred to the Wilkinson Plough Company of Toronto. When the Cockshutt Plough Company was established in Brantford thirty years ago the Wilkinson Plough Company was supreme in the field, and it turned out more ploughs than any other plough company in Canada at that time. It has had the same protection, it has had the same field as other companies, but it has gone down, and down and down until it has gone out this year, and is in the receiver's hands. And, in the newspapers the management of that company gave as a reason, among others, for its failure, in the first place the fierceness of home competition—don't forget that, my hon. friend from Strathcona.

Mr. OLIVER. At the risk of interrupting my hon. friend again, I would ask him to remember that I am the member for Edmonton.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Well, I won't forget that again. I was going on to say that the first reason given by the management of the Wilkinson Company for its failure was the severity of home competition, and, in the second place, it said that the proposal of reciprocity was the last straw. Let the hon. gentleman take hold of that fact; not the operation of reciprocity, but the very proposal of reciprocity was the last straw. And why? Because, he said, as soon as the bankers thought reciprocity was coming, they said: Wilkinson Company, we will finance you no longer. And so there you are. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) leads us to suppose that you can make money hand over fist by manufacturing ploughs and charging the farmers too high a price. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has taken for his example the most expensive plough on the whole list and the one that is least generally used. I have here a Winnipeg paper which states that it will take at least 1,700 bushels of barley to buy a Cochshutt plough, but let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) that in Ontario the farmer's wife can walk into any ordinary town or city of Ontario to-day and carry more than enough eggs at their present price to take home a Cockshutt plough with her. That is a side of the question that the hon. gentleman forgot to mention. I can tell him further that the farm implement industry is prepared to have its values criticised by any fair tribunal and I believe the judgment will be that this industry gives just as good value, one hundred cents on the dollar, as any other industry in Canada. I repeat that the ordinary plough used in the ordinary fields of Canada to-day can be bought with as many eggs as a woman can carry to market. This plough that the hon. gentleman has referred to, is practically unknown in the east, where we still do a little bit of farming. I think I am within the mark when I say that there are not six steam ploughs in use in the great agricultural province of Ontario to-day, and so far as Quebec and the maritime provinces are concerned, I do not think there is a single steam plough in all that territory. But, the hon. gentleman has brought up this question for a purpose, and the purpose is that he wants the cleavage between the west and the east to become more marked. We, Sir, want a united country; we want a country the inhabitants of which will have respect for the principle of live and let live. So far as the prices of agricultural implements are concerned, I believe there is no just cause of complaint in this country to-day against the manufacturers of these implements.

The facts are well known to the public. It is well known that since 1878 the prices of agricultural implements have decreased. I gave the House full exemplification of that statement five years ago when I quoted the prices and showed how they had been reduced from time to time, while at the same time the prices of farm products had been raised to a very considerable extent. I do not wish to take up the time of the House further and would not have taken it up at all were it not for the fact that the hon. gentleman has forced it upon me by making the charge that we were taking too much out of the pockets of the west.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understand the explanation given by my hon. friend why the price is more in one place than another is because in the one it is a wholesale price and in the other a retail. In Minneapolis ploughs are sold at $23 less than in Peoria. Why this difference?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. As regards Peoria, our agent has not yet reported. The other prices quoted, in Brantford, Winnipeg and Saskatoon, are retail prices whereas the price quoted at Minneapolis is a wholesale price. I would like also to draw attention to the fact that the freight to Peoria is only 20½ cents per 100 pounds, while the freight to Saskatoon is $1 per 100 pounds. As one of these steam ploughs weighs 5,500 pounds, the difference in freight alone is about $45 between Peoria and Saskatoon. If any hon. gentleman opposite wants to question me regarding any matter, I am only too anxious to give what information I have, but I do not care to take up the time of the House in discussing the matter. I felt bound, however, in justice to myself, when the hon. gentleman cast the reflection he did on the firm in question to show that we were dealing honourably and fairly with the people of Canada; and when a tariff commission is formed and holds an investigation the agricultural industry will, I am confident, be able to prove that it is not exacting from Canadian consumers any extravagant prices and is giving them fair value for their money. If we cannot show that, then let the tariff be cut down, but let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite, who talk about the possibilities of totally removing the duty, that it cannot be done without completely destroying the fabric of protection in this Dominion. Why? Because every subsidiary industry which supplies raw material to the agricultural implement industry will be affected. Paint, iron and steel, malleable iron, everything that goes into the construction of those implements, will be affected, and you cannot remove the duty from agricultural implements without removing it from the raw material that goes into their construction; and in some cases these duties are from 30 to 35 per cent. I have had this matter thrust on me this afternoon just as I have come into the House, and consequently may not have been able to deal with it as effectively as I should, but I thank the House for its attention. If the hon. gentleman is going back to Edmonton for his Christmas holidays, let him carry back the good message to his constituency that the Cockshutt ploughs are good value, that they are worth one hundred cents on the dollar and that if his constituents have only the good sense to use the Cockshutt gang plough in the district around Edmonton, there is a very strong probability that they will raise 50 bushels of wheat to the acre.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure that the House is more than indebted to my hon. friend for the information he has given us with regard to the Cockshutt gang ploughs. But if he is under the impression that I, at any time, wished to say anything derogatory to the quality of that plough or to the business ability of the men who make it, he is labouring under an entirely wrong impression. The very statement he objects to so much is the best evidence that the plough is a good one. It must be a good one since the firm are able to sell it in the United States in competition with the best ploughs made there and pay the duty as well. I would not accuse my hon. friend for a moment of taking advantage of his presence in this House for the purpose of giving a business advertisement, but I would point out to him that if he had that purpose, his method of advertising the Cuckshutt gang plough is very expensive to this country; and that he has no warrant whatever for the suggestion that I made any attack on that implement. I only used the name of the Cockshutt Plough Company and the instance in which that company sold its ploughs in the United States in competition with American ploughs because that statement is in general circulation throughout the west, and not because he happens to bear the same name as the company which makes it and, therefore, he had no right to suggest that I had in any way made an improper personal reference to him. I was not dealing with the question of ploughs, but with the question of reciprocity. I was dealing with the policy of my hon. friends opposite which prevents the western farmer from selling his goods across the line where he will get a better price, while at the same time the manufacturers were selling their goods across the same line at a less price. That was the point I was trying to make. I say again that it is most creditable that the Cockshutt Plough Company or any other manufacturing industry in Ontario should find a market wherever it can and sell its goods across the line against American competition. That they have a perfect right to do, but not to line up their employees before their doors a day or two before the election and tell them that if reciprocity carries their works are going to shut down.

I say that when such tyrannical methods as that are used my hon. friend can only expect some kind of a protest from the people who are so injuriously affected by the results of those methods.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that that was done by the Cockshutt Plough Company?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. I want my hon. friend to disassociate the personal element from anything that I say. I said at the beginning of my remarks that I did not wish to make any particular reference to the Cockshutt Plough Company or to the fact that my hon. friend bore the same name as that company. I used an incident which my hon. friend knows was circulated through the public press of the west.

Mr. HAZEN. The same thing was done in New Brunswick.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understood the hon. gentleman to say just now that he knew of a firm that had lined up its men in front of its works, and I understood him to say that it was ours.

Mr. OLIVER. I want my hon. friend to understand that I did not refer to the Cockshutt Plough Company, and if it is necessary further to emphasize it, so far as my knowledge and information goes, the Cockshutt Plough Company is in all respects a reputable institution, that is a credit to Canada, and is doing good work as a manufacturing industry. But I read in the columns of the 'Ottawa Free Press' that the E. B Eddy Company and the J. R. Booth Company, right within the precincts of this city, or adjoining it, did so line up their employees and did so address them, and it is a simple matter of fact that they were not the only manufacturers who did so. I am quite willing to believe that the Cockshutt Plough Company did not do so, and I repeat that it is a most reputable company. But a very large number of the manufacturing enterprises of eastern Canada did that very thing, and if so many of my hon. friend's friends are sitting in this House to-day, it is actually because of such acts of outrageous tyranny in what is supposed to be a free country.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company did exactly the same thing in both the last election and the previous election?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I am aware that there were more Grand Trunk Pacific men working in my constituency during the election than in any other constituency in the Dominion of Canada, and I am absolutely aware that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company did not do any such thing or anything approaching it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It was done in Portage la Prairie in both elections.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I will say to my hon. friend that there is a legend current in the politics of Manitoba that when my hon. friend had the privilege of coming to this House first, it was as the result of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company lining up their men on his behalf in Portage la Prairie.

That has nothing to do with the case, however. My argument was that the men who thus exercise their undoubted and proper right to sell their products across the line in the face of a low tariff are not dealing fairly by their fellow citizens in preventing them from selling their surplus products across the same line without any tariff; and, to emphasize my point, I pointed out that whereas in the case of the farmer, by selling his products across the line he got a better price, they sold their products across the line at a less price, and still they denied to the farmer that right which they themselves exercised. I did not challenge them in the exercise of their right. Every time a Canadian manufacturer can sell a Canadian product in a foreign market I am ready to hold up my hands for the energy, enterprise and business ability of the man who can do it, so long as it is done on fair terms. But I say live and let live, and if the manufacturer has special privileges and tariffs in his favour, if he has rebates and drawbacks to assist him to enter a foreign market, which he has, then it is unfair on his part to line up his employees to vote against the western farmer being allowed the same privilege. To-day the western farmer has to face a tariff framed absolutely to prevent and prohibit access of his product to the United States market, whereas the Canadian manufacturer has the advantage of a low tariff in sending his products across the line.

Mr. BEATTIE. Why did not the hon. gentleman's government arrange these matters during the 15 years that they were in power?

Mr. OLIVER. The late government was not vested with authority to do away with the United States tariff; but as soon as the opportunity came to secure the doing away with the United States tariff and at the same time to reduce the Canadian tariff, that government seized the opportunity, and went down to defeat—went down, Mr. Speaker, proudly to defeat—in the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. BEATTIE. I would like to know what the United States tariff has to do with the tariff of Canada or with the lining up of men at our workshops.

Mr. OLIVER. I am astonished that a gentleman who has occupied the position of a member of this House for so many years, and is honoured with the representation of one of our leading cities, should ask such a question. Does he not know that the late government was defeated because——

Mr. BEATTIE. That is all nonsense. The government of which the hon. gentleman was a member was in power for 15 years, and they never reduced the tariff, though they had promised many times to do so, and they were kicked out of office because they had not kept their promises.

Mr. OLIVER. The late government had made an arrangement whereby the United States tariff would be taken off, and it was because it had made that arrangement that it was defeated by my hon. friend and his friends and the friends of my hon. friend from Brantford, who, as I say again, and it has not been denied, lined up their employees, and by an act of tyranny which should be abhorrent to a free country, secured the control which these hon. gentlemen boast of so greatly to-day.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the late government was not pressed, during the last parliament, by resolutions offered in this House, to take the duty entirely off farming implements?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, they were not.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Or even to reduce it. If my memory serves me, there was a motion on the Order Paper by one of their own members to that effect in order to prevent any one else making such a motion and he left it there without taking action.

Mr. OLIVER. The late government is to-day defeated because it undertook to reduce the duties on agricultural implements and thereby secure the free entry of our farm products into the markets of the United States. I do not wish to bring into question the business arrangements or methods of the Cockshutt Plough Company. I have nothing to say against that company except to use it as a sample of the kind of business that is being done by our manufacturers. I do not find any fault with them, but I do find fault with their arguments. While they are able to do business in the United States in competition with their competitors on the other side of the line, they still demand protection at the hands of the people of Canada on the plea that such protection is necessary in order to enable them to do business at all. I am entitled, in all fairness, to show that the manufacturers are using arguments that are not justified. If they can pay a 15 per cent duty and enter the United States and compete in the United States with the manufacturers of that country there is no reason why they cannot compete with the United States manufacturers in this country with a duty of 15 per cent in their favour.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is the point, why did the government not take the duty off?

ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was delivered by Ernest John Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

His Honour the Deputy of His Royal Highness, the Governor General, desires the immediate presence of this honourable body in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate.

And the House being returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that his Honour, the Deputy of His Royal Highness the Governor General, had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name, the Royal assent to the following Bills:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the year ending 31st March, 1912.

An Act respecting the National Transcontinental railway.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

SUPPLY—THE COCKSHUTT PLOUGH COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds), moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the motion is agreed to, I wish to continue the remarks I was making when the message from His Royal Highness was received.

Mr. CURRIE. I wish to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), is making two speeches in succession on the same subject, and now he is going to continue with a third. I think it is time the rules of the House were enforced. When an hon. gentleman rises in his place and speaks as often as he has done, I think he should confine himself to the one subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. The speech which the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was making was upon another motion, which was withdrawn. This motion being a fresh one, he is in order.

Mr. CURRIE. I do not think the same motion can be made twice.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I must remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie) that the ruling of the Speaker cannot be questioned, except by an appeal to the House.

Mr. OLIVER. I merely wish to conclude the remarks I had in view at the time proceedings were interrupted. I want to say that the appeal which my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) made for a united Canada, for a Canada in which the interests of the east and the west should be consulted, for a policy under which the east and west should find a common interest, is a principle that I entirely agree with, and I beg to assure this House, on behalf of the western country, that that principle is one they have always stood for, and will continue to stand for, as long as they are permitted to do so. But I must again say, Mr. Speaker, that the policy which refuses to the western farmer that privilege which the eastern manufacturer claims for himself, and which claim he is able to turn to advantage by reason of special legislation, and special administrative acts, is not the way to build up a united Canada. Let the manufacturers of eastern Canada play fair, let them give to other parts of Canada what they themselves claim and there will be no trouble about a united Canada. But if they, by reason of having the bulk of votes in their locality, are able to control the destinies of Canada, and to produce economic conditions at their pleasure whereby other sections of Canada are penalized, as the prairie west of Canada to-day is penalized, to the extent of $12,000,000 on the crop of this year, I beg to assure them that there are serious difficulties in the way of building up a Canadian national sentiment, or a united Canada under these circumstances.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I do not quite understand his argument, I want information. What is the law that the manufacturers have succeeded in getting passed by which they are depriving the farmers of a similar law, and want to prevent the farmers shipping their stuff to the United States with a tariff against them, any more than the farmers wish to prevent the manufacturers from shipping their stuff into the United States? What is the unfairness?

Mr. OLIVER. The manufacturer has access to the United States market under a minimum tariff with special advantages.

Mr. LANCASTER. What special advantages?

Mr. OLIVER. Special legislation in the matter of drawbacks and rebates on the duties on his raw material, on manufactured articles which he exports. And it is the boast of my hon. friends on the other side of the House that the manufacturing interests of the province of Ontario have been able, by their votes, and by the votes they controlled during the recent elections, to prevent the going into effect of an arrangement whereby the prohibitive tariff now existing against farm products going into the States would be removed, thereby preventing the western farmer from getting the benefit which the eastern manufacturer to-day enjoys, and which I want to say, the western farmer has no objection to his enjoying, and is willing to support him in that enjoyment.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is all the row about?

Mr. OLIVER. The row is because the western farmer, the prairie west to-day, is penalized to the extent of $12,000,000 on the crop of this year, by the result of the action of those interests.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the nature of the penalty?

Mr. CURRIE. What is the proof?

Mr. OLIVER. The proof has already been given to the House, and my hon. friend, who has already objected to my repeating what I said on the previous occasion, has only to read 'Hansard,' and he can get the proof. I want to say again that the statement put upon 'Hansard' has not been denied and cannot be denied.

Mr. LANCASTER. What statement is it the hon. gentleman means? I am here to deny the statement. If the hon. gentleman means that the farmers of this country are penalized, he is talking absolute nonsense.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman is not able to make an intelligent denial, because he does not know the facts.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is no penalty on the farmers of this country, never has been.

Mr. OLIVER. The facts are on 'Hansard,' and they have never been denied, and cannot be denied.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have been denied.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend denies without knowledge which is not an effective denial. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) challenged the figures I gave the House on a previous occasion. I did not give them as authoritative, I said I got them on what I believed to be good authority. I said that this particular variety of plough was sold in Brantford at $600, and was sold in Minneapolis at $502, after paying 15 per cent duty and the freight. My hon. friend or his company has sent a commission to Minneapolis, and they have found out that the figures I gave to the House are absolutely correct.

But he says that the Minneapolis figure was a wholesale figure, and the Brantford figure a retail figure, and that that accounted for the difference. Accepting the hon. member's statement that the figure of $502 at Minneapolis is a wholesale and not a retail figure, I still submit that the spread is entirely too great to allow the Brantford factory to remain in a position to claim the need of protection in order to enable it to compete with American manufacturers. In order to land their plough at Minneapolis the Brantford manufacturers have to pay an American duty of 15 per cent. If they have put in their plough at a fair valuation that duty will be not less than $60; therefore their plough at Minneapolis stands them not more than $442 against, not $600 at Brantford, but against $680 at Winnipeg, the point to which the same freight rate will prevail or ought to prevail as to Minneapolis. So that there is a spread as between the retail price at Winnipeg and the wholesale price at Minneapolis of the difference between $442 and $680, $238 on an article that sells in Minneapolis for $442. The conclusion is irresistible, taking the hon. member's own figures, that the Canadian company must in all fairness be able to compete within Canada against United States manufacturers at a lower rate of duty than that by which they are protected at present, and that when they say they cannot compete in Canada against United States manufacturers, the figures are here on record, the figures that my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) himself has agreed to as correct, as showing that there is absolutely no warrant for the statement. My hon. friend made the suggestion that if I thought there was money in the manufacture of ploughs I had better go into the business myself in order to compete. I am not a plough manufacturer and I have not the capital and I do not know that if I had I would put it into plough making, but I shall tell you what I did, what I tried to do, what the party with which I am allied tried to do: We tried to secure effective competition with the Canadian plough factories from institutions and organizations that could efficiently compete.

Mr. CURRIE. When?

Mr. OLIVER. By the agreement for reciprocity.

Mr. CURRIE. May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I think the hon. gentleman is through asking questions. We did not ask them to compete free of duty, we did not say that the duty should be taken off agricultural implements. All that we asked was that the duty should be made equal on both sides of the line. That was all we asked and they refused the request, they brought into play every argument of passion or prejudice, lying, disloyal arguments and then lined up the men who were under their control, who depended on them for their daily bread and told them: If reciprocity carries you will be out of work.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. And these men talk about Canadian national sentiment and the union of east and west! I have before me a statement that may bring into a vivid light the condition as respects the western farmer and the eastern implement manufacturer at this moment. I find it in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of Wednesday, November 29. It is headed: The Purchasing Power of Barley. In that Mr. Mackenzie writes as follows:

While in St. John, a small town in Dakota, three or four miles from the Canadian border, inquiring into the prices paid for grain, I saw a farmer being paid 92 cents per bushel for barley in the grain elevator there.

If that barley was brought to a grain elevator in Brandon, Manitoba, it would realize 40 cents a bushel.

An eight-foot McCormick binder sells at St. John for $150.

In Brandon, the same machine costs $175.

A little figuring will show that in St. John, 163 bushels of barley will pay for an eight-foot McCormick binder.

In Brandon, 437 bushels of the same class of barley would be required.

Eighty-one bushels of barley will buy a farmers' wagon in Dakota.

It takes 212 bushels to buy the same kind of a wagon in Brandon.

The Dakota farmer gets eight gallons of coal oil in exchange for one bushel of barley.

A Manitoban must be satisfied with slightly over one gallon for the same quantity.

Had reciprocity carried, the price of barley would be the same in Brandon and St. John, freight rates to terminals being the same from both places.

It is said that the Cockshutt Plough Company of Brantford, Ont., sell their eight-bottom power gang ploughs in Minneapolis around $500, where barley sells from $1 to $1.15.

In Manitoba they charge $680.

In other words, the Minnesota farmer can draw 500 bushels of barley to an elevator and bring home a Cockshutt plough fully paid for.

But the Manitoba farmer would have to haul 1,700 bushels to an elevator in this province to get the same plough.

The Minnesota farmer can get a Cockshutt two-furrow plough for 81 bushels of barley.

The Manitoba farmer exchanges 212 bushels for the same article.

Truly the Manitoba farmer pays dearly for that brand of loyalty and patriotism which is represented by the Canadian manufacturer.

These facts and this condition are known only too well throughout western Canada by the people who are affected by them, and I take this opportunity of drawing the attention of the people of eastern Canada and the representatives of the people of eastern Canada and, if you like, the representatives of the manufacturing interests of eastern Canada, to those conditions which prevail in the west, and to ask them in the name of Canadian patriotism, in the name of loyalty to our country, to raise the heavy hand they have laid on this country and to allow the western farmer fair and equal opportunity to secure the advantage proper to the conditions which surround him. I ask that as a means of establishing in this country a Canadian patriotism. But I say to these gentlemen that it is not the way to establish patriotism to tell the population of by far the larger area of this country that they must submit to conditions that are essentially unfair even though they are exhorted to do it in the name of loyalty and patriotism. If there are to be sacrifices for loyalty and patriotism—and every one should be willing to make these sacrifices—let the sacrifices be on both sides; let them be in the east as well as in the west. We are willing to bear our share of the burden of the nation or of the burden of the empire, but we do not like to have to bear the burden of the nation and of the empire and the burden of the tyranny of the Manufacturers' Association—that association of mergers, trusts, combines and monopolies in this eastern country—in addition to the proper and reasonable burdens of the state and of the empire.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt). This is a very interesting discussion and it is of vital importance to the people I represent. I feel that I would not be doing justice to my constituents, to the people of the west or to the farmers of all Canada, were I to permit this opportunity to pass without notice. I had not the pleasure of being in the House when the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) introduced the discussion, and as far as the manufacturing concern with which he is associated in a business way goes, I think the discussion may result in giving the product of that concern a very valuable advertisement. I am willing to take the hon. gentleman's word as to what his intentions were in introducing the discussion, but I am not so sure that possibly my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) had not an eye to that when he introduced the subject. I hope to show before I finish that another effect of the discussion will be to absolutely prove that so far as the Canadian farmer is concerned he is not getting a square deal from the Canadian manufacturer. Seeing, that the price charged by the Cockshutt Plough Company to the Canadian farmer is the illustration of that fact under discussion, I shall confine my remarks to that particular illustration. I notice that when my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) was concluding his remarks some gentleman on the other side of the House seemed very happy when he read from the columns of a western newspaper the penalty that the western farmer is paying as the result of the defeat of reciprocity. I wonder what these gentlemen opposite were smiling at.

Mr. LANCASTER. The excellence of the joke.

Mr. NEELY. That remark from my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) shows just how much sympathy he has with the people of this country who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. I believe, Sir, that the estimate made by the member for Edmonton as to the loss sustained by the western Canadian farmer on this year's crop as the result of the defeat of reciprocity is a very conservative estimate. I can tell my hon. friend from North Simcoe that this Mr. Roderick McKenzie to whom reference has been made, is a responsible person, and even though not a member of this House he is equally responsible with my hon. friend from North Simcoe. He is the editor of the 'Grain Growers' Guide' which is published in the interests of the farmers of the west, and he is a gentleman who operates a farm in the vicinity of Brandon. A short time ago Mr. Roderick McKenzie shipped two car loads of barley across the line to the United States. On that barley he paid $764 duty, and he realized over and above that $614 more for his barley on the American market than he could in his own market in the city of Brandon. So you see that so far as this particular farmer is concerned he at least lost a very considerable amount, as the result of the defeat of reciprocity. My hon. friend from Brantford undertook to give an explanation of the charges which have been again and again repeated in the columns of western newspapers and especially in the columns of the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' that the Cockshutt Plough Company was actually paying 15 per cent duty on ploughs which they sent to the United States and were selling these ploughs a great deal cheaper to the American farmer than they were sold in Canada to the Canadian farmer. I came into the Chamber when the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) was undertaking to explain that the price the ploughs were sold for at Minneapolis, as quoted by the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) was the wholesale price. I want to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) that it appears to me to be a very strange thing that the company which has had this charge laid at their doors for months past has not thought fit to refute it. It was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister on his western tour, because at a certain meeting he promised a farmer that he would look into that condition at the earliest possible opportunity. It is a strange thing that the member for Brantford is not able to furnish a better defence to that charge which has been laid at the doors of his company for months past than he has this afternoon. As incidental to the reading of the documents I have in this matter I may say that a year ago this month when the farmers' deputation came from the west, on the way back I discussed matters of interest with a young farmer who originally came from across the line and settled somewhere west of Saskatoon and he was complaining very bitterly of the treatment the western Canadian farmer was getting from the agricultural implement manufacturers of this country.

I took his address and he told me he would send me some figures in this connection. He did so. He sent me the original letters, of which I read two copies this afternoon. Both these letters give quotations of the Cockshutt ploughs. One was sent from the branch office at Saskatoon, and the other from the branch office of Avery and Company, Peoria, Illinois, at Minneapolis, although their head office is at Peoria. These letters are in response to requests from two farmers—the one living in Saskatchewan, and the other in the state of Minnesota. Both ask for prices on the Cockshutt plough, and the quotations cannot be in each instance wholesale prices. The first letter is written from the Saskatoon office:

Saskatoon, Sask., March 13, 1911.

Mr. F. J. Sandmeyer,
Coblenz, Sask.

Dear Sir,—Your favour of 8th inst. addressed to our Winnipeg office has been referred to us for our attention as your district comes under the supervision of this branch, and as requested now wish to quote you on an 8-furrow engine gang fitted with breaker bottoms and fin cutters, and which would cost you f.o.b. Saskatoon, $740, on the following terms:

$175 cash on delivery of plough.
$200 payable July 1st next.
$365 payable October 1st next.

Or one cash payment of $705 on delivery of plough.

You will note that we make a special inducement to our customers who can pay cash. We are mailing you under separate cover, a copy of our engine gang catalogue in the event of your not being already supplied with one of those and will be pleased to hear from you further with regard to your requirements in an engine gang and also to receive your valued order for same.

We may just add that we are represented at Coblenz by Mr. A. Bell, who will no doubt be pleased to give you any further information you may require and also receive your valued order which we will be glad to give prompt attention.

Thanking you in the meantime for the inquiry and trusting to be favoured with your valued order.

Yours very truly,
COCKSHUTT PLOUGH CO., LTD.,
Per Jno. Adams,
Manager, Saskatoon Branch.

That is the cash price at which a farmer in Saskatoon can get a Cockshutt engine gang plough for, $705. What is the price at which the farmer in Minnesota can get it:

Avery Company,
Minneapolis, Minn., March 14, 1911.
Mr. F. F. Sandmeyer,
St. James, Minn.

Dear Sir,—We have received yours of March 13 in regard to the Cockshutt plough and are mailing you the Cockshutt plough price list herewith. We wish to call your further attention that on the inside of your contract, you will find the Cockshutt ploughs listed. If you will take the discount mentioned in the contract, you can very easily figure up any combination that you want. We are afraid that you have not looked the contract over to get the prices on those goods.

Now, an 8-bottom gang, either stubble or breaker, is listed at $700. If you want extra lays with either one, they are $4.50 apiece. If you want rolling coulters with either one, they are $2.50 apiece. The fin cutters are 50 cents apiece. Now, take it on an 8-bottom, either stubble or breaker, the list is $700. Eight extra breaker shares, if the party wanted them, would be $36 more. If he wanted rolling coulters, it would be $20——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understand you to say that this is a retail purchase?

Mr. NEELY. Exactly.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. He is evidently a contract agent since he refers to a contract. He is a contract agent and is getting a wholesale price.

Mr. NEELY. He is a young farmer.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. And a contract agent.

Mr. NEELY. He was only buying one plough, as the letter explains:

—or $756 in all. At 30 per cent off the list cash, it would be $529.20, plus Peoria freight to Minneapolis in carload rate, which would be about $12. Add the $12 and it would be $541.20 for that kind of a plough f.o.b Minneapolis. We believe with this price list before you, you would be able to figure out any combination.

The last paragraph will explain whether or not the price was a retail or wholesale price:

Now, we are not selling these ploughs to any one, unless we are getting cash right down for them, or one-half cash and the balance June 1; for the reason that we are unable to get them fast enough to take care of the orders. We have three coming which will undoubtedly be here inside of the next two weeks. If you want one, you will place your order at once, or we would be unable to get it for you. It is not a matter of selling them——

If my hon. friend wants an advertisement, I am doing him a good favour for I am giving him a little better one than the one he gave himself:

—it is simply a matter of getting them from the factory. It does seem as though everybody wanted Cockshutt ploughs. When they can't get them, then they turn to some other kind as second or third choice.

It is just the same as the children with castoria—

When they cannot get them, then they turn to some other kind as second or third choice.

Yours truly,
AVERY COMPANY,
J. M. Orton, Mgr.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I may inform the hon. gentleman that an agent is not required to take more than one of them, that is, a contract agent. I have had a wire from a Winnipeg representative who is in Minneapolis, stating that this price was quoted to an agent, not a farmer.

Mr. NEELY. I may tell my hon. friend that I have met farmer after farmer in the west who has priced these ploughs in Minneapolis, and they say that these figures are correct. I want to say further that the gentleman who gave me these letters told me that this man who writes to the office at Minneapolis, was, like himself, a young farmer farming in the state of Minnesota. So that I do not think there can be any doubt as to the contention of the western farmer that it would pay him to go across the line into the United States if he wanted to buy his agricultural implements in the cheapest market. Now, Sir, 15 per cent on the price of this plough must be paid before it crosses the line, on a valuation of $400 this amounts to $60.

Mr. THOBURN. Are we to understand from the statement that the hon. gentleman makes, that the manufacturer of agricultural implements pays the duty in sending them into the United States?

Mr. NEELY. I am not making any statement as to who pays the duty, because it has no point so far as this argument is concerned. The point is that this plough is manufactured in the city of Brantford, Ontario, and that 15 per cent duty is paid on it when it goes into the United States.

Mr. THOBURN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the manufacturer had to pay the duty.

Mr. NEELY. I said nothing about that. I said that $60 duty is paid on it. The manufacturer on this side of the line has his profit on the sale that he makes to the company across the line that handles the plough, and still the farmer in the vicinity of Minneapolis can get it for $165 less than the farmer who goes into Saskatoon and plunks down his hard cash. Now, I think that is a perfectly fair statement, because I do not want to be unfair. I do not think there is a man on this side of the House who wants to make an unfair statement against the manufacturers of this country.

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), has stated that to his knowledge the price stated by the hon. gentleman is a price to the agent in the United States, not a price to the ordinary retailer. I think the hon. gentleman must accept that statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood that the hon. member who is debating accepted the statement of the hon. member for Brantford, but he endeavours to present arguments to show that it may not be absolutely correct.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I do not mind a sensible interruption, but when my hon. friend from North Simcoe undertakes to place in the mouth of another member of this House a statement which he did not make, then I object to that sort of interruption. The hon. member for Brantford did not say as a member of this House that he was satisfied that was simply a contract price to agents. He said he had a wire or some information to that effect from some of his agents across the line. But I say that the information that I have is absolutely authentic, and I am satisfied, ought to demonstrate the point I am making to the House. I was going on to say that no member on this side of the House wants to make an unfair statement against the manufacturers of this country or against any industry of this country. We do not want to have any schism, east, west, north or south; but what we do want and what we have tried to obtain for the farmers is the right and the privilege now enjoyed by the manufacturers of selling their goods in any market where they can get a good price.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock I had almost concluded my argument, giving evidence of the well established fact stated by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that the price for which a certain plough manufactured in this country is sold in Canada is very much higher than the price for which the same plough is sold in the United States, after a duty of 15 per cent has been paid on it. I overlooked one point in the explanation given by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who said that the company who handle their ploughs in the United States, their sole agents, were also engaged in the sale of engines which they sold in conjunction with these ploughs, and because of the high price they received for the engines they were able to sell the ploughs practically at cost. But in the quotation I gave with reference to the price at which these ploughs are sold in the United States, there was no reference to an engine being sold as part of the outfit, it was simply a question of the sale of a plough by itself, so that this argument of the hon. member for Brantford does not justify this great disparity of price in favour of the American farmer who wishes to purchase a Cockshutt plough. The letter I read from the agency of the Cockshutt Plough Company at Minneapolis referred to the sale of one individual plough and this demonstrates that this is a retail price to any individual purchaser of a plough in the United States of America. Further, my own information obtained from the gentleman who got the quotation on a Cockshutt plough sold at Saskatoon was that the man who had obtained the information from the Minneapolis agent of the Cockshutt Plough Company was an actual farmer and that the quotation to him was as an actual farmer. As we have said, we have no desire to be unfair. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) opened this discussion himself and since he has brought it up it seems to me it would be just as well to clear the atmosphere as far as we can, and allow the House to see the viewpoint of the farmer of western Canada in connection with these questions. As evidence that the manufacturers of ploughs and other agricultural implements do not enjoy too much protection under the present tariff, the member for Brantford pointed out that a great plough company, the Wilkinson Plough Company, which had existed for many years in Ontario had recently gone to the wall. The last straw that broke the camel's back was not the passing of reciprocity, but the bare prospect of the passing of reciprocity. That was the statement made by the hon. member for Brantford. The banks refused to come further to the assistance of the Wilkinson Plough Company just because there was the bare prospect of the passing of reciprocity. That seems a strange thing. Does the hon. member undertake to say that the proposed reduction in the duty on ploughs entering Canada from 20 per cent to 15 per cent was sufficient to put out of business one of the oldest manufacturing concerns in Ontario? Does he undertake to say that the 15 per cent protection which was still afforded by the reciprocity agreement on the item of ploughs was not a sufficient burden for the taxpayer of this country to bear in order to protect the manufacturing industries of this country? It seems a strange corollary to that argument that the company with which my hon. friend is associated can sell its ploughs in the United States of America, that somebody can pay 15 per cent duty on these ploughs and yet they can be sold there much more cheaply than they are actually sold to the Canadian farmer. It is a strange argument that this proposed reduction of 5 per cent on the item of ploughs was sufficient to lead the banking institutions of this country to say: We will no longer lend support to the Wilkinson Plough Company. My hon. friend's argument was very inconclusive. Many industries have gone to the wall in this country from time to time, but that was not necessarily due to lack of sufficient protection in the tariff. My friend knows well that the question of the management of a company has a great deal to do with its success or failure. So I repeat the hon. member will have to give us some further evidence that the 15 per cent on ploughs entering Canada from the United States is not sufficient protection for the plough manufacturer in this country. If I have any fault to find with the manufacturers of eastern Canada it is that in the proposed reciprocity pact the reduction of duties on manufactured articles, confined as it was very largely to agricultural implements, was so inconsiderable that I can find no justification for the attitude assumed by the majority of manufacturers in their opposition to this agreement.

My hon. friend has accused the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) of undertaking to stir up strife between the east and the west. If there is any feeling of bitterness in the hearts of the farmers in the west over the defeat of the reciprocity agreement it is due to the attitude of the financial interests, and the manufacturers of Canada. If there is any division it is due to the fact that these interests and these gentlemen took a position in opposition to the reciprocity agreement which was not justified by the contents of the agreement itself. There is evidence on every hand, and the evidence continues to multiply from day to day, that there was a conspiracy on the part of the financial interests of the east, the manufacturers and others, to defeat the reciprocity agreement and prevent the Canadian farmer from getting what these gentlemen claim for themselves, the right to sell their goods in the best possible market.

My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) gave us an evidence of that conspiracy when he told us that the banks refused further to go to the assistance of the Wilkinson Plough Company, at the mere prospect of the passing of reciprocity. Is that not evidence of conspiracy on the part of the financial institutions of this country when the banks—a fine spectacular effect, a splendid dramatic effect, this—when the banks say: 'We will not come to the aid of this Wilkinson Plough Company because there is a prospect of the duty on ploughs coming in from the United States being reduced from 20 to 15 per cent. Now, Sir, that that is the case, that there was such a conspiracy, that it was well conceived and well carried out, the results of the election on the 21st of September absolutely demonstrate. That there was such a conspiracy there is evidence accumulating on every hand, and some of the methods that were adopted by some of the manufacturers of this country were of a very subtle character indeed. I want to say that so far as this particular manufacturing company is concerned, I am not finding any more fault with it than with any other manufacturing concern. The manufacturers of Canada naturally take advantage of the tariff, they would hardly be human if they did not. The fault I have to find is with the condition which permits them to take such an unfair advantage, as I claim they are taking, of the consumers of agricultural implements at the present time; the fault I have to find with them is this, that they exerted their enormous influence in eastern Canada for the defeat of a proposition which, as regards duties on manufactured articles affected them but slightly, but which certainly gave to the farmers of this country free access to the splendid market which we may never again have an opportunity to give to those farmers.

I have said that the methods adopted by these manufacturing concerns and other interests to defeat reciprocity, were of a subtle character. I do not know what part the Cockshutt Plough Company took in the elections, and I am not concerned about it. But there is another big concern that manufactures another kind of agricultural implement for the benefit of the farmers of this country, and more especially for their own benefit, that is the Massey-Harris Company, which manufactures binders, mowers and other machinery of that kind. Now I believe that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen)—I do not see him in his seat—in his resolution of a year or two ago dealing with the question of the reduction of duty on agricultural implements, twitted the late government on the fact that some of the manufacturers at least were friends of the late government. Now, Sir, I want to say right here and now that in my judgment the events of the last three months have made the fact absolutely clear, that in this Dominion of Canada we have certain interests that, when it comes to a question of their own pockets, have no friends, have no patriotism, have no citizenship and have no country. Now what are the facts in that connection? As an association, probably the Manufacturers' Association will tell the farmers that they did not take a part in the recent election. But what are the facts in regard to that matter? I have in my possession copies of two letters which were sent from the branch office of the Massey-Harris Company in the city of Saskatoon, to one of their agents—I am not at liberty to give the name of the agent who gave me these papers, but any member of the House may assure himself of the authenticity of the documents. One of these letters was dated the 11th of September, just ten days before the election. The letter reads as follows, addressed to the agent, of course:

Dear Sir,—Gasolene Engine Trade—Following up our advices of a few days since we are mailing under separate cover latest catalogue giving full particulars in a descriptive and illustrated way, and of which a supply is going to your agency under separate mail for judicious use in connection with your canvassing work. The catalogue is well prepared and well written up, and supplies a deal of useful data, and will be effective in closing business.

You will notice that in these documents there is absolutely no reference to the election, none whatever. But we can draw our own conclusions.

Prices.—Now that we are about the 1st October (the date upon which our last schedule for maturities was based) we are enclosing revised schedule from which to work with the trade now to be booked. Some of our staff have been asking a retail 'spot-cash-price.' You will notice from the schedule that this has been embodied. These prices, both the spot-cash and the time term prices, are 'rock-bottom'——

So you see there is such a thing as a rock-bottom price in the trade in agricultural implements.

—and should enable you to get a good safe trade. We draw your attention to the schedule so that it may be fully understood and trade booked in accordance with the same. Acknowledge, please, receipt of catalogue and schedule, that we may know same has safely reached your hands.

(Signed) MASSEY-HARRIS CO., LTD.,
By their agent

Now that was on the 11th of September, ten days before the election.

Mr. CURRIE. Will the hon. gentleman put that document on the table now, having read it?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I am not obliged to accede to the dictation of my hon. friend. It is not a public document, it is a private document. That letter was written, these catalogues were sent out, these rock-bottom prices were sent out, on the 11th of September, ten days before the election.

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, I again claim that the hon. gentleman having read that document and made it public, should lay it on the table.

Mr. NEELY. I leave the hon. gentleman in your charge.

Mr. SPEAKER. If a minister of the Crown were quoting from a public document he would be obliged to leave it on the table. But that rule does not apply to private letters, it is not necessary to table them.

Mr. NEELY. Now on the 23rd of September, two days after the elections, when it was absolutely demonstrated to all the people of Canada that the late government had been defeated, and that the reciprocity pact was no more, the same agent receives the following letter, from the same agent at Saskatoon:

We issued last week a schedule of new prices and terms on these. Please cancel same and do not act upon them until further advices authorized you. Meantime, this is to advise that trade in engines will require to be booked and cared for upon the basis of the schedule advised to you last spring under date of March 1. Kindly acknowledge receipt of this correction and return with your acknowledgement of schedule issued last week that there may be no misunderstanding and oblige.

Yours truly,
MASSEY-HARRIS CO.

Now, there was no electioneering in that—none whatever. It was simply a little catalogue sent out on the 11th September bringing the prices of binders, mowers and other farm machinery down to rock bottom. But these catalogues were short lived, and on the 23rd September another circular was issued calling them in and the price is again put up to the place where it was before. I am told that since the defeat of reciprocity on the 21st of September, while the price of the binder in its entirety has not been raised, a large increase has taken place in the price of the parts of the binder. That is a considerable item so far as the farmer is concerned because he has breakages, and must have repairs and the prices for repairs have gone up from 50 to 150 per cent. I ask this House if this is not an intolerable situation in so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned. They have absolutely no quarrel with the manufacturer of the east excepting that they want a square deal from the government. Does the manufacturer not know that when the western farmer prospers he must share in that prosperity? Does he not know that if the western farmer gets more for his barley, his wheat and his live stock he is going to have more money with which to purchase agricultural implements in the east, Cockshutt ploughs and Massey Harris binders, if you please? The story was told by many of the employers of labour in eastern Canada during the recent contest that if this reciprocity pact went into effect the result would be to throw a great many employees out of work, whereas the fact is that the increased business that would have come to the manufacturers in eastern Canada would have given more employment to the working men of these eastern provinces. Let me show you what was the main argument that was used against giving to the farmer the same privilege that the manufacturer already enjoys in this country. If the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) were in his seat he could tell us something about the reason why reciprocity was defeated on the 21st of September. He could tell us about that manifesto that was signed by eighteen Liberals in the city of Toronto, in which number he himself was included, in which the strong argument was the effect that the agreement might have upon our Canadian nationality in that it would cause trade to pass north and south instead of in the present channel east and west, between Canada and the mother country. I said a moment ago that when it comes to a question of dollars and cents there are certain interests in this country that have neither patriotism nor citizenship. Has not that been absolutely demonstrated in the course of events? What was one of the first things that took place after the election of the 21st of September? The manufacturers of Ontario assembled in a body and passed a resolution, which they knew would get a sympathetic reception from the new government, that it would be injurious to the interests of Canada at the present time to increase the British preference. Yet these very same people helped to defend the late government by raising the cry of loyalty. Just as soon as the elections were over they take advantage of the very first opportunity to put a block in the way of making it possible for this country to buy more than it does at the present time from the British manufacturer instead of the American manufacturer. These are facts that no hon. gentleman can refute and I want to express my gratitude to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) for having brought this question before the House. It is a question that is important enough to occupy some of the time of this House. It means dollars and cents and a great many of them to the pockets of the great mass of the farmers of this country. I could not allow this opportunity to pass without raising my voice on behalf of the men of the west who have absolutely no desire to injure any industry in this country, but who resent, and will continue to resent, the attitude taken by certain interests who have prevented them for the present at least, from obtaining free access to the great market of the United States.

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to waste the time of the House in discussing a subject that seems to have been on the brain of hon. gentlemen opposite ever since they came back to this parliament. Hon. gentlemen have been wasting the time of the House discussing this subject which was brought up by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). He made a fair statement to the House. He stated that there is a plough made in Brantford by the Cockshutt Plough Company, and sold in the United States by an agent who sells it as an accessory to a steam traction engine. By the way, one of the chief officers of that company, as many hon. members on the other side of the House from Ontario know, Mr. Frank Cockshutt, is a very good Liberal. That is something that the House should know and, what is more about this cry about the agricultural implement manufacturers is this, that almost every manufacturer of agricultural implements in Canada is a hide bound Grit and nearly every one of them has been put in the Senate by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Frost & Woods firm, has given a member to the Senate, so has the Massey Harris firm and, I suppose, if the right hon. gentleman had won the election, the Cockshutt firm would have had a member in the Senate. That is the strangest part of the whole proceeding. We have been listening patiently to all this talk and we have been endeavouring to temper the wind to the shorn lambs on the other side of the House. Hon. gentleman opposite have been endeavouring to find some consolation for themselves by explaining how they happened to get into the cold shades of opposition. One member says that it was nationalism in Quebec, another member says that it was the cry of loyalty, another member, the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), says it was due to Father Vaughan, then the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) spent four or five hours talking about this question and he assumes that it was the Ne Temere decree that did the harm. Has anybody opposite mentioned anything about the Oliver charges playing a part in this election?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has made some mention of the Oliver charges. I would like to say that there are no Oliver charges up to date, neither made inside this House nor outside this House. And if my hon. friend has any charge to make or if any of his hon. friends behind him——

An hon. MEMBER. Or in front of him.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, either in front of him or behind him, have any charge to make, now is the time for them to make it. I ask Mr. Speaker that my hon. friend withdraw the suggestion he has made to the effect that charges have been made against me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. CURRIE. I simply ask if anybody in the House has heard any of the Liberals state that what happened to them in the elections was due partly to the Oliver charges. I did not make any charges against a gentleman named Oliver, but I have a distinct recollection that there was a committee of this House named last session to investigate certain charges against a certain gentleman of the name of Oliver.

Mr, OLIVER. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the reference made by the hon. member (Mr. Currie) is unparliamentary.

Mr. CURRIE. All right, Sir, I will go on. Then there was the Fielding subscription list, and nobody told us that hurt the Liberal party in the last election. The people of Canada were heartily tired of the Liberal party and a great many things conspired to destroy that party. The country had lost all faith in the leader of that party. They had lost faith in the great idol that had been set up and worshipped until it fell off its pedestal on the 21st of September. Now they are endeavouring to roll it back on that pedestal to see if the people will worship it again, but let me tell the right hon. gentleman that the greater portion of his own party will no longer bind phylacteries around their brows—I think those were the words used by the right hon. gentleman on an historic occasion—and worship longer at the great Laurier shrine. Since this session opened hon. members from the west have endeavoured to raise the cry of the western farmers against the eastern farmers, but I can not say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely), who has just spoken, is a very true representative of the farmers. If the embattled farmers of the west are so anxious to have a voice in parliament, they should send some of their own kind down here, as the farmers of Ontario have done, rather than doctors and lawyers. The hon. member from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), day after day is trying to bring grist to his own mill by setting up the west against the east, and especially against the province of Ontario. One would think that in the province of Ontario nothing grew but factories, but it may be a surprise to some of these gentlemen opposite to know that the province of Ontario produced last year forty-seven million dollars worth of field products more than the whole of the west combined. And, I can tell these hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who come from the west, that the farmers of Ontario voted almost to a man against reciprocity, and they did so because they found that the American farmers had been sending into the Canadian market over thirty million dollars worth of farm products which should be grown in Canada. If a man wants to grow food for the Canadian people he should grow it in Canada, and if a man wants to manufacture agricultural implements for the Canadian farmer he should manufacture them in Canada, all of which is good, sound, national and loyal doctrine. That is the idea that permeates the people of Ontario ; that is the idea of the old National Policy, and that is the idea that triumphed on the 21st of September. For many years when the Liberals were in power and the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) sat in the government, that government did not take one step to improve the condition of the western farmer. I have here a copy of the Payne tariff passed by the Congress in 1909, and item 476 reads :

476. Ploughs, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, threshing machines, and cotton gins, fifteen per centum ad valorem: Provided, that any of the foregoing, when imported from any country, dependency, province, or colony, which imposes no tax or duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be imported free of duty.

That means that the Americans offered reciprocity in these very ploughs that we hear so much about, when the Canadian government placed ploughs on the free list, and yet the Liberals who were in power then, never availed themselves of that offer. Does not that take all the point out of the argument made by hon. gentlemen opposite ? They will find it hard to explain to the farmers of the west why they did not take advantage of that offer without waiting for the reciprocity treaty. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), is a great believer in reciprocity and I hope he will keep on believing in it and attacking Ontario, because so long as he does—and his own leader will confirm me in this —he and his party will remain in opposition. Now, I will ask the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) if he believes, like all the rest of his free trade friends, that the consumer pays the duty ?

Mr. OLIVER. Sometimes he does and sometimes he does not ; it all depends on circumstances.

Mr. CURRIE. Well, that's no answer. During the campaign the farmers would come and say to me : ' Mr. Currie, can you tell us how it is that according to the Liberals we are going to get more for our products if we have reciprocity, and that the people who buy these products will pay less for them.'

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. member like me to answer that question ?

Mr. CURRIE. Sure.

Mr. OLIVER. I will answer it by reading an item from the ' Ottawa Citizen,' which I clipped out this morning.

Mr. CURRIE. We don't want a speech.

Mr. OLIVER. It will be an answer to your question. It reads :

MATTHEWS-LAING ISSUE.

A public issue of the Matthews-Laing Packing Company's 6 per cent bonds will shortly be made by C. Meredith and Company, Limited, of Montreal, who purchased $1,200,000 worth of these securities. It is understood that most of the bonds have already been placed with financial houses, who are attracted to them by the splendid earnings of the companies. For the past three years the earnings have been more than four times the bond interest. The bonds are being issued against 60 per cent of the assets of the combined companies.

It is in the profits of companies such as this that the answer to my hon. friend's question is found.

Mr. CURRIE. That is no answer to my question. I asked the hon. gentleman a simple question as to whether he believed the consumer paid the duty, and as a free trader he should answer.

I want an answer one way or the other, but instead of giving an answer the hon. gentleman reads a lot of papers. We in the east are not so ignorant of western conditions as the hon. gentleman and some of his friends think we are. We are told that if we go west and take up land and farm, we can make a profit of fifty per cent on our money. A great many farmers of the west farm under conditions which are dissimilar to those which obtain on the smaller farms of Ontario. The average farm in the west is 1,000 acres of land which, taking the average value at $25 an acre amounts to $25,000, and the men who work those lands make from $12,000 to $15,000 a year net profit. There is no better paying industry in Canada than farming in the west. Those great farmers surely are not the men who are crying out for government assistance. If the hon. gentleman would ask the government to look after some of the poor and unfortunate homestead settlers who have just gone into the country and are now suffering owing to the sudden snowfall, if he would ask this government to give them some aid, instead of making long harangues against the National Policy or the eastern manufacturers, he would also do far more for the settlers who are thus suffering, many of whom have written to me complaining of the crop conditions than in crying out against a policy which the late government, of which he was a member, carried out during many years—the old Conservative policy. That government just continued the old Conservative policy. True they made great and many promises, but that government never kept a single promise they ever made. The strangest thing of all is that the one promise, namely, that they would give our people reciprocity, which they did make and they tried to implement and keep, defeated them in the last election. The present government has only been in office a short time, and it is quite true that it has received large support in the east. Well, what the people of the east mainly desire is to have industrial and commercial peace. They do not want when they go to bed at night to dread waking up the next morning bankrupt by some act of the government, but they want to feel that their business interests and property are protected and secure. They want to get rid for ever of those continual cries of sectionalism, raised by hon. gentlemen opposite, exciting the manufacturers against the farmers, and vice versa, and the working men against both, and they emphatically decided to put an end to those cries on the 21st of September last. They wanted to put an end to the inciting of race against race, raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. They wanted to end the policy of sacrificing the interests of the country either to Great Britain or the United States. There came a time when there was not one member among members opposite to say a word on behalf of Canada. Was it any wonder that they lost the confidence of the Canadian people and were defeated on the 21st of September last?

The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) asked if we had forgotten that there has been an election. Well, no, but we feel a great deal of sympathy for him and those behind him. We feel a great deal of sympathy for men like Mr. McKenzie of the Grain Growers' Association who was to be grain commissioner under the Bill which the late government had in contemplation, and we sympathize very much with the Grain Growers' executive and members of the opposition, whose leader was so unfortunate as to be compelled to turn over to our party the plum tree, as one of them has said, with the plums on it. I am very sorry indeed that these hon. gentlemen opposite have not been able to pluck all those plums. Day after day we find the journals of the United States offering the highest offices in the gifts of the government to the right hon. the leader of the opposition and his followers. The New York 'American,' which is the great family journal of the leader of the opposition, stated the other day that he was to be the Lord High Commissioner from Canada to London. That journal evidently forgot that there was an election on the 21st of September.

As regards this question of ploughs, my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has explained the circumstances. There is a plough made in Brantford called the 'Cockshutt' plough, which is the best plough made in Canada or the United States. It is covered by a patent and is sold not only in Canada and the United States, but in Australia, New Zealand, the Argentine Republic, Great Britain and Ireland, Germany and France. That is an enterprise which is a credit to Canada, and Canadians if they are allowed to work out their own salvation without the interference of the government can always succeed. These ploughs sell around $600 a piece, and an American firm has the agency for selling them in the United States. That firm, I understand, makes the best traction engine in that country, and combines its engine with the Cockshutt plough. The price of the engine is from $4,000 to $5,000, whereas that of the plough made in Canada is $600. The profit on the plough bears no comparison with that on the engine. Any one who knows anything about the manufacture of engines will know that the manufacturer will reap fully $1,000 profit on each one he sells, and that there cannot be any such profit on the plough. The plough is merely an accessory of the engine, and for that reason the American manufacturer could give the Cockshutt plough away at a reduced price or even free and still have a good profit on both combined. As a matter of fact he has a monopoly to sell the combined plough and engine in the United States and they cannot be bought from any other firm as both are covered by royalty and patent.

As I have said the late government, of which the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was a member, had from the United States an offer of reciprocity in ploughs before it during two years and it never took any action. What did the defeat of reciprocity mean as regards the price of ploughs? To hear hon. gentlemen opposite one would think it meant thousands of dollars. Well, all it meant was a difference of $12 in the price of the plough, that being the difference if we had reciprocity. And as a plough lasts 12 years, all that the farmers of the west can possibly lose is one dollar per annum on every Cockshutt plough.

The people of the east and all over the country are getting tired of those cries. The farmers of the west desire to be on good terms with the manufacturers of the east, and the people of the west hope some day to manufacture these implements in that country themselves. That is the desire which all those who believe in Canada would like to see realized. We are anxious to see the west manufacture for itself. What we on this side desire is that if a man wants to grow or manufacture for Canada, he should do so in Canada.

Mr. TURRIFF. My hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Currie) has taken hon. gentlemen on this side somewhat to task for having brought up this discussion. But what I would like to point out to him is that the discussion was not brought forward by any member on this side, but by one of his own colleagues. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr Cockshutt)

This matter has been so well and ably discussed from the farmers' standpoint on this side of the House that there is not very much that I need say. But one thing I want to take exception to as strongly as I can, and that is the argument that is being put forward on the other side of the House that it is the people of the west who are trying to make a cleavage between the people of the west and the people of the east. It is nothing of the kind. The western farmer has no desire to do anything to separate the east from the west; nor has any western representative on this side of the House. It is the action of our hon. friends opposite and their supporters who are making the cleavage between the east and the west, if there is any cleavage. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), who is not in the House at the present time, made the statement in the city of Montreal just before he took his seat in this House that there was great danger of a cleavage taking place between the east and the west. Why did he say so? As a western man he knows perfectly well that if the manufacturers, the financiers, the combines, the mergers and the monopolies of the east continue to do in the future as they have been doing in the past, they are bound to force a cleavage between the people of the east and the people of the west. It is not our doing or our desire. We do not want to see anything of the kind, and all we are doing is to point out to this House and to the people of the country that it is the action of certain interests in eastern Canada that is going to bring this about if it is brought about at all. I do not think it is possible to make the people of the west disloyal to Canada. I have never seen anything to make me think otherwise in all the years that I have spent in that western country. At the same time, I wish to point out that if you want to have a contented, happy and prosperous people throughout the Dominion of Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there must be a spirit of fair-play from one end of the country to the other. You cannot have one condition of things for the manufacturer in the east and another condition of things for the farmer of the west or the farmer of the east. If you want to have a contented and prosperous people, you must have fair-play; equalize the burden; do not put all the taxes on one class of the community, which is pretty nearly what is being done at the present time. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) tried to make out, in the few minutes that he devoted to the question before the House, namely, the question of the different prices for the Cockshutt plough in Canada and in the United States, that it was a mere trifle, only about a dollar a year on a steam plough; and he tried to make this House believe that a steam gang plough that would cost $500 or $600 would take a $5,000 or $6,000 engine to draw it, and he told us that he among others in the east knew something about conditions in the west. Well, if his general knowledge of conditions in the west is no more accurate than his knowledge on that point, he does not know as much as he imagines; and I imagine that his own friends on the other side of the House do not think he knows as much as he imagines he knows, or if they did, he would now be directing the affairs of the Militia Department instead of somebody else. My hon. friend has a good deal to learn before he undertakes to lecture people from other parts of the country.

Now, I have not a word to say against the Cockshutt plough. I have seen them in the west, they are good ploughs, and it is a credit to Canada that we have such a factory as that of the Cockshutt Plough Company. But I do say that when the Cockshutt Plough Company can make the ploughs in Canada, ship them to the United States, and either themselves or their agents there, pay 15 per cent duty on them, and in addition pay 45 per cent duty on all the repairs that go into the United States to keep the ploughs running, then why in the name of common sense cannot they sell them in the Dominion of Canada at as low a price as they do in the United States? It is all very well for the hon. member for Brantford to say that the farmer to whom my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) refers was an agent. That is all nonsense, and I venture to say that the hon. member cannot substantiate the statement that every plough sold in the United States is sold to an agent. They are sold to the farmers. My hon. friend from Simcoe spoke as if it were something wonderful to see a Cockshutt plough or any other kind of gang plough. Well, it may be in that part of Ontario from which he comes, because I can understand that where there is not a great deal of grain grown and the farms are not exceptionally large a steam gang plough would not be advantageous. But I could take my hon. friend to a section in the Northwest and show him 40 or 50 steam or gasolene gang ploughs at work at one time, and I know agents who have sold 70 or 75 complete outfits in a season. Even if my hon. friend could show that in the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Humboldt it was an agent, though it was a farmer, who bought the plough I can give him a case in which it was not an agent. I can give him the case of a man in my own constituency who a few years ago was a farmer in the United States, and who bought a Cockshutt plough while there. If the statement of the hon. member for North Simcoe is true, that the company in the United States that sells these ploughs has an absolute monopoly through patents and royalties on them, why is it necessary for them to quote a price in the United States below the price in Canada? That statement will not bear investigation, nor will the statement of my hon. friend from Brantford that it was the wholesale price to agents that he quoted.

I can give him the case of a farmer in the United States who bought a Cockshutt plough for $500, a gang plough for a steam engine. A year or so after buying the plough in the United States he came into Canada and settled near Weyburn in Saskatchewan. He started farming on a large scale. He said the Cockshutt plough was a good plough and when he wanted another steam plough he thought he could not do better than get another Cockshutt. You know it is an advantage to a farmer to have two implements of the same make owing to the greater convenience of repairs. My hon. friend went to the Cockshutt office and asked about another plough. What was he told? For the very same plough for which he paid in the United States, $500, the same make, the same number of bottoms, the same size, in every way identical, the same plough manufactured by the Cockshutt Plough Company of Brantford, he was asked over $700. Does any hon.

gentleman imagine that that sort of thing can continue and that the people of the west will remain satisfied? I claim that when the Cockshutt Plough Company or any other plough company can manufacture goods in Canada, pay the duty and send them into the United States and sell them at 20 per cent less than they are sold at home, the farmer of the west is being robbed in broad daylight. There is no other name for it.

Mr. STAPLES. In what year did that transaction take place?

Mr. TURRIFF. The price was quoted in Weyburn this summer.

Mr. STAPLES. When did he purchase the other plough?

Mr. TURRIFF. I could not give the exact year but it was within the last three years. So I say it is absurd to think that the people of the west will remain satisfied with that condition of affairs. What are the people of the west dissatisfied about? You have not heard them complaining very much about the prices of manufactured goods. Under this reciprocity agreement they were not asking for the duties to be touched practically on manufactured goods, they were asking for the American market, they were asking for exactly the same rights and privileges that every manufacturer in Canada insists on having for himself, that is the right to sell his goods in the best market and to buy his material in the best market also; but they were not asking for a general reduction on duties in manufactured goods. They felt that if they got the American market, the finest market in the world for the products of the western farmer, they were getting, to a large extent, what they had been wanting all these years, and that it would have enabled them to prosper even if they did pay a somewhat high price for much of their manufactured goods. We on this side of the House were defeated on this question of reciprocity largely by the combined eflorts of the manufacturers, Liberals and Conservatives alike.

An hon. MEMBER. And by the votes of the farmers.

Mr. TURRIFF. My hon. friend says by the votes of the farmers. Some farmers may have voted against it in the east and some possibly in the west, but I think it will keep my hon. friends very busy in Ontario to make the Ontario farmer believe for very long that he was not fooled——

An hon. MEMBER. Don't you believe yourself.

Mr. TURRIFF—that he was not bribed with his own money. I think it will give my hon. friends from Ontario some trouble, after a little, to make the farmers of Ontario believe that they were not fooled in reference to this question, that they were not led away by the cry of disloyalty, a cry that my hon. friends on the other side of the House always put up when it is going to do them any good. The interests represented by my hon. friends on the other side of the House are very prone to talk about their loyalty. They are always loyal as long as they are allowed by law to put their hands in the pockets of the consumer and extract a little more than they are entitled to. They are always loyal then, but when it comes to a fair deal between themselves and the farmers, their loyalty does not amount to much. They talk about their loyalty to Great Britain and that it would be a disloyal action on the part of Canada to sell our products to the United States if we could get a better price. But the moment the election is over these same interests get together and pass resolutions saying that we do not want any increased preference to Great Britain. Every one of these same interests did their utmost against the preferential tariff to Great Britain when it was passed, and I will venture to say that if the government of my hon. friends opposite proposed to increase that preference to Great Britain, you would see every one of these manufacturers Liberals and Conservatives alike, coming out flatfooted against any further preference to Great Britain. That is the way they show their loyalty. They are loyal to Great Britain as long as it pays them; as they put it in one of their resolutions a few years ago: Make the preferential tariff high enough to keep out all British goods and then put the general tariff up double as high. That is the class of loyalty that these big interests have. The western farmer is not asking to buy his material in the United States, he is only asking for the privilege of selling the product of his farm where he can sell it to the best advantage. My hon. friend the member for Brantford stated that when this tariff commission was appointed the whole matter would be investigated. That is just another piece of the fine work of the manufacturers. The manufacturers of Canada have been for many years past clamouring for a tariff commission. I quite understand that it is not intended that the tariff commission should have the power to pass laws, that their recommendations would have to be submitted and passed upon by this House, but I would point out that when you have a tariff commission altogether in sympathy with the manufacturers of Canada, spending their whole time in gathering information to lay before this House and before the people of Canada——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We won't have that kind.

Mr. TURRIFF. My hon. friend from Souris says they won't have that kind. I imagine my hon. friend will not be very much consulted as to the nature of the commission that will be appointed to consider this question. At all events, I can point out to my hon. friend that it is what the manufacturers have been asking for all these years. It is not what the farmers have been asking for. They want reductions, they want markets; it is the manufacturers who have been clamouring for a commission to deal with these questions.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the hon. gentleman aware that his leader in Montreal promised the manufacturers that he would appoint a tariff commission if they desired it.

Mr. TURRIFF. My hon. friend is pointing out something of which I am thoroughly aware, and it just shows that the manufacturing interests in the east, Liberal and Conservative, have very strong influences on both sides of the House.

The fact that a tariff commission would be appointed by either one side or the other does not necessarily make it the proper way to deal with the question. I am not going to say that a tariff commission could not get a great deal of useful information, but what I am afraid of is that, under the present government, a tariff commission will be appointed so absolutely in sympathy with the manufacturing interests who have done so much to put my hon. friends opposite where they are, that the farmers will not have an even chance with the manufacturers under that commission, no more than they have now in the markets of the world. My hon. friend tried to make a great point by saying that if the duties were taken off agricultural implements the manufacturers of steel, and paints, and canvas, and other materials that go into the manufacture of implements, would all suffer. But I venture the assertion that neither the company with which my hon. friend is connected, or any other manufacturing concern, will pay the Canadian maker of these goods one-tenth of one-per cent more than they can buy the same goods for in Great Britain, Germany, France, United States or any other country in the world. I think they are perfectly right in that, it is quite right that they should have a free market in which to buy their goods. But the House should bear this in mind also that not only on the goods they export do they get a rebate of all the duties paid on the material used in those implements, but they also get a rebate on the implements sold to the consumer in Canada, they get a rebate of the duties that were paid on the raw material that goes into these implements. So the implement manufacturer is in a splendid position to supply the people of Canada with implements just as cheaply as they supply them to the farmers of the United States. When the farmer of the United States can buy Canadian implements so much cheaper than the Canadian farmer can buy them, don't you think, Mr. Speaker, it would be reasonable to allow that same Canadian farmer who has to pay the extra price on the implements that produce his wheat, to sell his wheat in the American market if he can get a better price for it there? If he cannot get a better price for it there, he won't send it there. But I venture the assertion that there is not one day in the month, year in and year out, that the western farmer cannot get a better price for the products of his farm in the United States than he can get at home; I make that assertion without any fear of successful contradiction, simply because it has been proven time and again. There are numbers of my constituents who never sell a bushel of wheat, or of grain, in Canada, who never sell one head of cattle in Canada, who never sell a pig in Canada, who draw it all across the line and pay the duty, and sell every dollar's worth of goods there.

Mr. CURRIE. Who pays the duty?

Mr. TURRIFF. The people who buy them pay the duty.

Mr. CURRIE. How does the Canadian farmer lose in sending his stuff to the states?

Mr. TURRIFF. These farmers in my constituency draw their wheat over, they drive their cattle over, they draw their hogs over, and the buyers over there pay a higher price than the farmer can get at home, and pay the duty, and the farmer gets a much better price after paying the duty. Imagine the difference it would make if they could send those goods across without paying the duty. I have letters from my constituency at the present time, pointing out that, owing to the damaged condition of the wheat, the poor quality of the wheat, there is a lot of wheat in my constituency for which farmers can get only forty cents a bushel, whereas if they could send that wheat across to the United States they could get almost double price for it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What do they use it for over there?

Mr. TURRIFF. It is a low grade of wheat that they grind to make flour. The farmers could get almost double the price for it in the United States, but owing to the reciprocity agreement being defeated, they cannot get that market, and it was defeated by the very interests that we are discussing to-night, among others the agricultural interests. Throughout my whole constituency during the campaign, the Massey-

Harris Company sent out circulars to their employees, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sent out circulars, at least they were sent from the Canadian Pacific Railway offices to their employees throughout that country; the Ogilvie Milling Company sent out circulars to their employees, and a special circular to the farmers, pointing out what they would lose. At the same time it has been proven clearly that for years back the Ogilvie people and all the big milling companies, have bought their wheat for at least ten cents a bushel less than the Minneapolis millers pay for their wheat.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Has the hon. gentleman got these circulars?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to see one.

Mr. TURRIFF. I imagine my hon. friend saw those circulars during the election.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I did not.

Mr. TURRIFF. At all events, they were circulated through the agents of the companies, I have a copy in my possession, not here, but down at my house. So you see it was these interests who were so active in bringing about the defeat of reciprocity. The Canadian Pacific railway circular pointed out what would become of the Canadian Pacific railway if trade went north and south instead of east and west. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), whom I see now in his seat, in the political address he gave us a few days ago, also told us what would become of the railways if the traffic went north and south. Well, all I can say is that I do not think anybody need worry about the Canadian Pacific railway, or any other railway company. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is in about the best condition of any railway on earth, I imagine. My hon. friend from Brandon said the cost of the road fixed the price, and he referred to the high cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and said the freight rates would be excessive. If that is the case, the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific railway should be exceptionally low, because they got in cash from the government of Canada, and in land that they have sold for tens of millions and scores of millions——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You people said it was no good.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Canadian Pacific railway offered to the government that my hon. friend supported at the time the whole land grant for a dollar an acre, and they would not take it. So my hon. friend's friends of those days did not have a very high opinion of the same land. But that land to-day, the portion that is not sold, at the prices they are holding it at now, and at the prices they are getting for it, will bring in $200,000,000. Therefore, if the cost of the railway is to fix the price, then surely the Canadian Pacific railway ought to be able to carry freight at a very low rate from the prairie provinces down to this part of the country.

The Canadian Pacific railway built a road through my constituency into the United States. Who asked them to build that road? Not the people of Canada. They built the road to carry traffic north and south between Canada and the United States and make money for themselves. The Canadian Pacific railway have half a dozen roads running from the prairie provinces and British Columbia into the United States. The Canadian Pacific railway got a large cash subsidy from the Dominion of Canada to build that part of the Soo line between North Portal on the boundary line and Moosejaw where it connects with the mainland. They built hundreds of miles in the United States right south of the line. But they did not get a single dollar of subsidy, or an acre of land, or any exemption, or any bonus, for that portion of the line south of the international boundary. At the same time the Canadian Pacific railway to-day are carrying freight for the farmer in Dakota where they built the road themselves for from 35 to 40 per cent less than they are carrying freight for the people in western Canada where the government and the people of Canada granted a large bonus to them.

Mr. STAPLES. Why did not my hon. friend air all these grievances during the last fourteen or fifteen years? Why has there been a change of heart?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have on more than one occasion pointed out in this House the condition of Canadian railways and the way they were acting, and I have on more than one occasion taken the matter up with my own friends who are now on this side of the House. I noticed, however, that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), did not propose to do anything in the way of reducing the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific railway. They are now paying 10 per cent on their common stock, a great deal of it watered, and every now and then they cut up a melon and distribute millions of dollars' worth of common stock among the shareholders of the company at very much less than the market price. My hon. friend, knowing all about this, being one of the ablest and most prominent members on that side of the House, being a representative from the west where the people are suffering over these high freight rates, and especially as with his assistance they have been denied the right to sell their product in the United States, I take it for granted that he will take an early opportunity to bring pressure to bear on the government for the purpose of having freight rates reduced in that western country.

The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) made the statement that the western farmer farms about 1,000 acres. There are odd men in the west who farm 1,000 acres, there are odd men in the west who farm 10,000 acres, but the great bulk of the farmers have only a half section. They would average about 320 acres. A great many have only 160 acres, some 480 acres, others 640 acres, but I imagine the average size would be something like a half section, or 320 acres. It is all very well for my hon. friend to say how much money they make, but if he would take a trip out through the country to-day where they have, although a large crop, a crop that is poor in quality and an expensive crop to harvest, he would find that the western farmer feels bitterly sore at having his market cramped. In a year like this the grain buyers are very careful when buying grain. I am not going to put so much blame on the grain buyer because it is a pretty serious matter for a grain buyer to load himself up with a large amount of wheat when he is not certain that he will be able to get it out before the close of navigation. They have to protect themselves and they cut the price down. In a year like this the large milling companies reap their harvest. They crowd the price down as the grain is lowered by wet and snow a couple of grades in appearance, but in reality is not hurt very much for milling purposes. That has been proven time and again. When navigation is about to close at the head of the lakes the price is crowded down, and as my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) pointed out to-day the farmers of the west are losing $12,000,000 on account of not having the American market in which to market their crop. When they are losing so much in that respect, do you not think there should be some redress in the matter of what they have to purchase? It is fair that these agricultural implement concerns, in spite of a duty of 15 per cent on their main product and of 45 per cent on repair parts, should be put in a position to sell their goods to farmers in the United States competing with our farmers at a price 20 per cent less than that which they exact from the farmers of Canada? I think it is a most unfair proposition, and it is just this sort of thing that is going to make an agitation throughout the whole country for agricultural implements to be put on the free list altogether instead of there just being a reduction in the duty as was proposed. If such an agitation arises it will simply be because the manufacturers are not willing to be fair to the consumer, are not willing to play the game in a fair manner. Take one of these concerns that my hon. friend from Edmonton mentioned to-day—the E. B. Eddy Co.; a day or two before the election they marshalled their men and told them that if reciprocity carried they would be out of business. Yet that same company with a million dollars worth of insurance to place would not deal with any Canadian concern but placed every dollar of it in the United States. If they are entitled to do that, and I claim they are, because it is a business matter, why should not the farmer who buys their product have the right to sell his goods in the United States if he can better his position by doing so?

Take the financial interests. We have never had a better exhibition of what the financial interests are prepared to do than that which was given by the hon. member for Brantford when he said that the banks refused to protect the Wilkinson Plough Company because it was thought that possibly there would be a reduction of five per cent in the duty on ploughs and because there was a probability of reciprocity going into force. That just shows that the manufacturers and financiers behind them joined together hand-in-hand to prevent reciprocity passing, to prevent the western farmer and the eastern farmer from getting the advantage of the market that was right beside his door, and they did that in order to keep themselves in the position which they occupy to-day of being able to put their hands into the farmers' pockets and extracting more than they are entitled to extract. There is a combination among them all for that very purpose. It is quite possible that my hon. friends may take the result of the 21st September as a justification for them to raise the tariff.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well, they have started in to do it already. During the campaign in the west the lumber manufacturers made the statement time and again that if the government were defeated a duty would be put on the rough lumber that was coming in free from the United States, they would prevent the competition which the Canadian mills have to-day in the western portion of Canada.

But, since this government has come to power the lumber manufacturers of British Columbia have waited on them, and as a result they have been able to report to the press that they were going home jubilant because the government had promised that the law would be so interpreted that a class of lumber which formerly came in free would now have to pay duty. The Liberal government wanting to help the farmers interpreted the law to mean that this lumber would pay no duty, but under the present administration we get in this the first dose of higher protection.

Mr. STEVENS. Did the farmers of the Northwest purchase the lumber that was dressed at the same figure that they purchased rough lumber from the manufacturers of British Columbia?

Mr. TURRIFF. My information is that they were purchasing that lumber chiefly from the State of Oregon and were getting it for $2 per thousand less than they were getting exactly the same lumber from British Columbia, but this $2 per thousand duty being put on it would make the Oregon lumber the same price as the other lumber, and the Canadian buyer in the west will naturally buy Canadian lumber, and owing to the ruling of the Minister of Customs he will pay $2 a thousand more for it. And so we are beginning to see the effect of the manufacturers having come into power on the 21st September last. The farmers of the west are not getting a square deal from this government, and they don't intend to give them a square deal if they can help it. We can judge that by their action so far. I can tell this government that they may be able to go on in their policy for some time, but at the rate the west is growing, and Liberal and Conservative alike in the prairie provinces being in favour of lower duties and lower tariff, the end will soon come.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman think that lumber that is clearly dutiable under the law should be allowed to come in free?

Mr. TURRIFF. If it was clearly dutiable the law ought to be amended, but it cannot be clearly dutiable in this case, because the Board of Customs Commissioners have had this matter up time and again, and under the late administration they ruled that this lumber was not dutiable and so no duty was collected hitherto.

Mr. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is clearly in error; the matter was never considered before the present administration took office.

Mr. TURRIFF. No matter what hon. gentlemen opposite may say the fact is that under the late administration, in order to help the farmers, that class of lumber was allowed to come in free of duty, but under the present administration that same class of lumber under the same law is charged $2 per thousand.

Mr. WRIGHT. In other words the late government winked at the violation of the law.

Mr. TURRIFF. There was no violation of the law.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. gentleman say that the late administration allowed lumber planed on more than one side to come in free of duty?

Mr. TURRIFF. I was told by lumber dealers in the west that lumber dressed on two sides by a fine saw—building lumber, scantlings, joists and dimension lumber—this lumber dressed by a fine saw which left a rough surface came in free of duty under the late administration, and that the lumbermen came down here and interviewed the government and arranged with the government that in future such lumber would pay $2 per thousand duty.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is not a fact. The lumber that they complained of coming in was lumber that was planed on two sides. Lumber, such as the hon. member refers to, comes in free. But if the lumber is planed on two sides and the planing is shown, of course there is a duty on it. If the hon. member says that the late government allowed this lumber planed on two sides to come in free, it means that they allowed it to be smuggled in contrary to the provisions of the tariff law made by themselves.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Minister of Customs is in error, the late government did not allow any lumber to be smuggled in. Every carload of lumber was entered through customs and there was no trying to evade the law in any way. This is lumber that was dressed on two sides by a saw.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) does not understand the matter. Let me ask him, was it not an inspector of customs who first discovered this evasion of the law and reported it to the government. In the second place, is it not a fact that this fine saw is used to rough the planed edge in order to evade the law and not to dress the lumber.

Mr. TURRIFF. Taking what the hon. member has said at its face value, the fact remains that under the late administration the farmers got that class of lumber free of duty, and under this present administration the farmers of the west pay two dollars per thousand more.

You cannot get away from that fact, argue as long as you like. You cannot get away from the fact that, under the late government, the farmers of the west got that lumber free of duty and now they pay $2 duty per 1,000 feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is not the case.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) made the statement that the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has been coming to this government humbly asking it to do something for the people of the west for charity's sake. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I, at all events, am not here to ask for any charity whatever for the people I represent. All we ask is a fair deal, such as is given to the manufacturers of the east. All we ask is the right to sell our products in the best markets and to buy our goods where we can do so to the best advantage, Let not my hon. friends from Ontario run away with the idea that the people of the west are looking for charity in any shape or form. All we want is the fair treatment which the manufacturers of the east are asking for, owing to whose subscriptions and energies the late elections were carried. Our farmers are beginning to see the fruits of that election, in the one article I have pointed out, and no doubt they will still more bitterly realize, the results to their loss in other respects before the present administration is much older.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon). It is said that when a machine expends its steam in whistling it has no power to turn its wheels, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) is an example of such a machine. The works in his head were not moving. The hon. gentleman said that the people of the west are just now reaping the fruits of the decision on the 21st of September. But he does not appear to understand that the seed cannot be sown and the harvest reaped so rapidly as that. He seems moreover to have forgotten when the seed was sown which has produced all the difficulties of which he complains. It has been truly said that 'in the field of destiny we reap as we have sown,' and when the hon. gentleman complains that in Canada to-day there are mergers which scorpion like, are injuring the farmer, let me ask him who was it that hatched the egg which produced that scorpion, whose was the sowing that produced combines. For 16 years the Liberals were in power, when they came to power in 1896 there was no complaint that there were mergers in Canada. If mergers have since arisen, under what administration were they born? If the Liberal government had been true to the country and just in their administration, would these mergers have arisen? It is stated that combines have been nurtured, well, who nurtured them? The hon. gentleman says that the combines and manufacturers established in Canada have been putting their hands into the pockets of the consumers to their detriment. But who was it that originated these combines? Who fostered these manufacturers? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the present administration is so all powerful that since the 21st of September their policy could have given birth to such mergers and combines? Surely there is no logic in his argument. The right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has told us that by virtue of his administration the country had prospered. That was a splendid conceit. Does any one think that the country prospered by virtue of his administration? Was it so mighty that it made the sun to shine and the rain to fall and the dews to come? Was it the Laurier administration that created the industry in our population that produced the prosperity? The right hon. gentleman almost claims that the Liberal administration did produce all these results. Surely, he must also claim that the Liberals for 16 years nurtured, as well, these mergers and combines, if such exist, and aided the manufacturers to produce the detrimental results which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) declares have been produced. Let their chickens rest on their own roosts; let their progeny be kept at the home of its parent and not transferred to this side. Of their changelings, we want none. Let me take another illustration of the style of argument of the hon. gentlemen opposite. He refers to this lumber question. As I understand it, there is a statute which declares that certain lumber is to come in free and certain other lumber has to pay duty. The recent decision, with regard to this lumber, as I understand it, was based upon the finding of the customs board established by the late administration to decide upon these very questions of a technical character which might be submitted to them. I do not know that under the late government that question was submitted to the board, but the present government did properly obtain their decision and enforced the law accordingly. It is one thing for parliament to legislate and another thing for the government to administer the law as they find it; and if in defiance of that law, lumber is admitted into Canada without paying duty, it is no excuse and no palliation of that offence to say that the government, which was appointed by the people to enforce the law, acted in complicity with those who were smuggling the lumber. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) has further said that by virtue of the defeat of reciprocity, injury has been done the farming community. There are farmers in eastern Canada as well as in western Canada, and the farmers of eastern Canada and very many of the farmers of western Canada, possessing just as good judgment as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff), have decided that they will not have reciprocity. I had thought that after the debate on the speech from the Throne that the funeral obsequies of reciprocity were over, and so far as this side of the House is concerned, they were very pleasant obsequies, but it appears that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) thinks that the wake is not yet finished and like a good Irishman he wishes to continue the fight. There is one thing we must not forget, one question to be considered : Would the reciprocity agreement have protected the farmer, for whom he is so solicitous, against the combines and the mergers which he so strongly condemns ?

The effect of reciprocity was to take away protection for the farmer, but it did not in almost any respect take away the protection of the manufacturers—why? Because the recent administration had nurtured those mergers which they say exist, had fostered the combines they talk about, had helped to establish the manufacturers they now condemn, and were apparently solicitous about the mergers, combines and manufacturers and wished to retain them while delivering the farmers over to the competition of the United States and other favoured nations

The hon. gentleman referred to freight rates, saying that the member for Brandon had suggested that they might be increased because of the large cost of the National Transcontinental railway under the late administration. Although the hon. gentleman practically admits the enormous cost of the construction of that railway and the statement that it will prevent a reduction of rates, he says that does not prevent the Canadian Pacific railway from reducing its rates. Look at that for a moment. Assuming that the Grand Trunk Pacific cannot reduce their rates, and that under some system or arrangement the Canadian Pacific railway or the Canadian Northern railway do reduce their rates, then what would happen? We know that the Grand Trunk Pacific is operating in western Canada as well as the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern railways. Then there would be one rate for the Grand Trunk Pacific, a lower rate for the Canadian Northern, and perhaps a still lower rate for the Canadian Pacific railways. So that (unless there is an equality of rates on all the railways) the person desiring to ship his goods would send them by the railway having the lower rate. Then what would happen to the Grand Trunk Pacific? It would go to the place where it might have gone under the late administration, into liquidation or bankruptcy, a thing not to be desired for any large railway company. I say there has been fastened or may be fastened eternally on Canada, by virtue of the action of the recent administration, a burden of freight rates which the people of the west, and the people of the east too, may have to bear, because they were not careful enough about the cost of construction of the Transcontinental railway. But I do not intend to continue on this subject it is not at present necessary. It seems to me that any person listening to the argument of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down would see that he is self-condemned. You cannot expect to gather figs from the thistles, nor grapes from the thorns. Hon. gentlemen opposite have sown thistles and thorns and as they have sown Canada must reap, and we must let the country understand that the present administration is not responsible for their sowing or for the objectionable results it has produced on the country.

Now, with regard to differences between the east and the west. Do I understand from the hon. gentleman that he desires the trade of the west to go south and not to come east? That is practically what he is arguing for. Am I mistaken? No. Then, if that be so, how can the hon. gentleman reasonably say that between the east and the west there should be no division. Certainly burdens should not rest on the west that do not rest on the east. In the east there are great factories and industrial establishments, providing home markets which the farmers of Ontario and of eastern Canada generally appreciate, and it is to be hoped that we shall have in western Canada, as I believe we shall have under the policy of the present administration, similar industries established, providing home markets for the farmers of the west. Thus there will be a similarity of trade conditions in the east and in the west. Then, by means of the interchange of trade between them the east and the west will understand each other. It is only by becoming acquainted with each other that the east and the west shall have confidence in each other, and when one hears such speeches as that which has just been delivered about the oppression from the east and burdens on the west, one is astonished; for, instead of trying to bring the east to understand the west, and the west to understand the east, hon. gentlemen opposite show a disposition to irritate and keep them separate. There is an east and there is a west, we cannot close our eyes to the fact:

> For the East is the East and the West is the West,
> And neither the twain shall meet,
> Till earth and sky stand presently
> At the great judgment seat.
> But there is neither East nor West,
> Border, nor breed, nor birth,
> When one strong man meets another strong man,
> Though they come from the ends of the earth.

So I say that by an interchange of business and the establishment of similar conditions there as here the west will understand the east and the east will understand the west, and if they become acquainted with and have confidence in each other, there will be neither, east nor west in Canada. I am not afraid of the east or of the west they will be truly Canadian. It is true, we should have a reduction of the duties on agricultural implements, and I hope that will come soon. Hon. gentlemen opposite have opposed a reduction of the duties on agricultural implements.

Mr. TURRIFF. Might I ask the hon. member who proposed the reduction? Did the Conservative party propose it?

Mr. STAPLES. Yes, Dr. Schaffner, the member for Souris.

Mr. AIKINS. I have no doubt that the present administration, recognizing the failure of the recent administration to give relief to the farming community, particularly in the west, by the reduction of the duties on agricultural implements, will now do what they think should be done for the agriculturists, both east and west, in some reduction of duties. I know not what those reductions will be, but I have confidence in the administration, and I believe that the people of the west and the people of the east have confidence, that there will be a reduction of the duties on ploughs, harrows, rakes, mowers and reapers generally, which are the staple implements of the agriculturists of the west. A reasonable reduction of these duties will, in that respect, I think, create a greater confidence of the west in the east and of the east in the west. I have no doubt that the time will come when there will be such a close approximation of the views between the east and the west, that we shall no longer hear hon. gentlemen opposite attempting to create disunion between different parts of Canada by such remarks and such an endeavour to shift responsibilities as those made by the hon. gentleman who has preceded me.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that I am forced to oppose a statement made this evening by an hon. gentleman who sits on this side of the House, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

The hon. member said that the E. B. Eddy Company marshalled their men to the polls. I rise in protest. The E. B. Eddy Company is a company which I greatly admire. Its seat of business is in the county which I have the honour to represent. It has gone on increasing its capital from year to year and I want it clearly understood that the E. B. Eddy Company did not marshall their men to the polls to vote against me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am glad to see hon. gentlemen applaud, but I have not quite finished. They did not marshall their men to the polls to vote against me—but they tried just as hard as a company ever did to do so. I must apologize to the electors of the county of Wright for the statement of the member of Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) when he says that the electors of the county of Wright were marshalled to the polls. Mr. Speaker, the electors of the county of Wright are amongst the most independent electors of the Dominion of Canada, they are not men who can be marshalled to the polls by the E. B. Eddy company, by the J. R. Booth Company by the Matthews Pork Packing establishment, or by any other manufacturing establishment to vote against reciprocity when they believe reciprocity to be in the interests of the country.

Having said this much and not wishing to follow in the furrow of the Cockshutt gang plough, with which I am not very familiar, I would like to say a word about the manufacturers of the county of Wright who were mentioned during the course of the remarks of different speakers to-day. The E. B. Eddy Company opposed reciprocity. They had a perfect right to oppose reciprocity. The E. B. Eddy Company are engaged in the manufacture of paper, and they do not want competition in the manufacture of paper. They knew full well that under reciprocity new industries would grow up in the Dominion of Canada and there would be competition in the manufacture of paper. Why would the E. B. Eddy Company vote against their own interests for the sake of the farmers of Canada? We on this side of the House should imagine they should do so in the interest of Canada, but they, in the interest of their pocket, did not think they ought to do so. I might make the same remark respecting the J. R. Booth Company. Now a word about the pork packers. We have in the county of Wright, and some hon. gentlemen representing western constituencies may not be aware of this, one of the largest pork packing establishments in the Dominion of Canada known as the Matthews Pork Packing establishment. They opposed reciprocity and they were right in opposing reciprocity according to their views. They did not want competition in meat, they wanted to form a merger in this country in order to command the price that they would give to the farmer for his meat and to command the price that they would sell meat to the labourer in the cities. Immediately after September 21, this association of which I am presently speaking, formed one of the greatest meat mergers in Canada. They were perfectly within their right in doing so and I am sorry that any hon. member on this side would gainsay that right; it was in the interest of their pockets.

Having answered the arguments of my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) I do not think I would be justified in continuing to advertise the Cockshutt gang plough at the expense of the country by placing upon 'Hansard' remarks to show that it is better than any other plough and that it can be sold to the Americans at a cheaper rate than it is sold to Canadian farmers. I feel that this is not the duty for which we were called together at this session of parliament. I could not resume my seat without assuring the farmers of western Canada that they have the sympathy of the farmers of eastern Canada in connection with the efforts made by the manufacturers of Canada to become rich at the expense of the farmers of both the west and the east. I understand that in the great development of Canada we must have a revenue, but as a member representing a constituency composed in part of farmers, I want to protest against this revenue being raised at the expense of the farmers for the benefit of the manufacturers.

Mr. W. WRIGHT (Muskoka). I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, but I wish to protest against the very evident intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to start a race war in this country. Those of us who are acquainted with the political history of Canada will remember that soon after the passing of the National Policy in 1878 that old knight of blue ruin, the late Minister of Trade and Commerce, associated with the right hon. gentleman who is now leading the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and their followers started out on a rule or ruin policy for this country, their policy being that if the people would not allow them to rule they would do their best to ruin the country. So they went up and down the side lines and concessions trying to make the farmers believe that the manufacturers were scoundrels, that they were robbers great and robbers small, thieves, every name in the vocabulary of hon. gentlemen opposite was used. I do not believe that the manufacturers of this country are thieves or robbers or any worse than any other class of the community. Let us suppose an ordinary farmer with three or four children. He brings them up in the best way he can. One becomes a doctor, a lawyer, or a professional man and another becomes a merchant. One of them stays at home on the farm, but one has a mechanical turn and he becomes a manufacturer after a while. They are all brought up on the one mother's knee, all taught the same code of morality. Does the fact that one of them becomes a manufacturer prove that he is a scoundrel and is trying to rob his neighbours? I do not think it does.

I represent a riding partly rural and partly manufacturing. There are some of the largest manufacturers of Canada in my county, and it rather amuses me when I hear hon. gentlemen opposite telling fairy tales about how all the manufacturers of Canada got together and conspired to do something that would damage the farmers of the country, shut them out of some market, keep some goods from their reach. Why, Sir, every large manufacturer in my riding not only went against me, but came out in the press over their signatures and stated that they were positively in favour of reciprocity. In discussing the question with one of these gentlemen I said: 'How is it going to help the farmers? He gave his shoulders a shrug and said: 'I think the farmers have been getting pretty good prices for a while, and they can sell their stuff for a little less now.' So they voted for the reciprocity pact, not to help the farmer, but to make the farmer take a little less for what he had to sell. If they honestly thought the farmer was going to get less prices, they should have got up in this House and said so, then we would have known that they were introducing this pact with the object of making the farmer sell his stuff for a little less, so that the consumer would be able to live a little cheaper in the cities. After all, that would have been possibly the logical outcome of the proposition. What I am objecting to was the dishonesty lying behind the agitation. How it was going to help the farmers of this country to let in American competition, with every advantage on their side, was one of the things I could never understand. Situated as they are down below the boundary line, everything coming in a little earlier, why, they would get the cream of all our market, as they have been doing to some extent under present conditions. They have been able, under conditions that have existed in this country, to sell over $32,000,000 worth of agricultural produce in Canada, whereas we have only been able to sell them less than $14,000,000 per annum. Would not the same disparity continue if you made all the articles free? They have been able to come into Canada and under-sell our farmers to the extent of $2 worth of agricultural produce for every dollar's worth we have been able to sell them.

Now we have heard a good deal about certain conditions in the west. Hon. gentlemen from that portion of Canada have told us that the western farmer would have profited by this pact, even if it did damage the farmer in the east. I do not believe it would have profited the farmer in the west, and I know something about the conditions in the west, perhaps quite as much as any hon. gentleman opposite who has spoken on this matter. We are told that the farmer out there is being taxed too much for the implements that he purchases. There may be something in that contention. When the late government was introducing their tariff measure in 1907 this matter was up for discussion. The then Finance Minister proposed to reduce the duties on certain agricultural implements by two and a half per cent, and he promised great things to the farmers by enabling them to buy their machinery at two and a half per cent less than they were paying before I took it upon myself to point out to him on that occasion that the reduction of two and a half per cent would be absolutely of no value to the farmers, either in the west or in the east, and I think I knew something of what I was talking about.

The outcome proved conclusively that I was right, for I want to say that there is not a farmer in Canada who has profited one cent by that two and a half per cent reduction, not one. I hold the wholesale price list, and can substantiate what I state here now. I believe it would have taken a reduction of at least ten per cent to have produced any appreciable effect upon the prices the farmer would have to pay in Canada for his agricultural machinery. Looking at it from that standpoint, I joined with others who were then sitting in opposition in asking that the reduction be made ten per cent instead of two and a half. But those gentlemen who are now shedding crocodile tears over the farmer left the House, and those of them who did not go out voted against the proposition and said: We are going to leave the farmer just where he was before. That is how much their sympathy was worth on that occasion. Let us look back a little to 1896, when they had not such a strong feeling against the manufacturers of this country. Leaders of the Reform party, went to some of the largest manufacturers of this country and entered into a secret agreement with them, whereby these manufacturers were to get certain privileges in the way of cheaper rates upon certain things that enter into the manufacture of their machinery, and certain drawbacks. Some of those manufacturers had become a little sore with the Conservative party because they didn't get privileges enough, and they said, We are going to make a bargain with the Grits, and they did. That agreement was carried out, and when they came into power in 1896 they gave these pet manufacturers these privileges, and they left the poor farmer they had been shedding barrels of tears over just exactly where he was, and they left him there for ten long years. That shows how much sympathy they had for the farmers of this country. It is amusing, Mr. Speaker, the cheek of some people.

Mr. WRIGHT (Muskoka).

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure we will all agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. To see men stand up in this House and profess so much sympathy for the farmer, and then sneak out and not dare to vote for a reduction of ten per cent, is cheek of the first quality. How much did they care about the farmer? All they want is his vote. They say now: If we cannot get it this way, we will try and get it some other way, if we cannot humbug him in this way we will humbug him in some other way. That is just how much sympathy some hon. gentlemen opposite have for the farmer. God help the farmer of Canada if he has not better friends than are to be found on that side of the House. There are some men who know what will benefit the farmer, what will really help him, and I venture to say that before many months are passed, or before many years are passed, we will be able to adopt a policy that will really help the farmer, that will bring him something substantial instead of fake sympathy, leaving him on the rocks as these hon. gentlemen have done.

Now some reference to lumber has been made in this debate, and I simply wanted to say that in reference to lumber there has been a similar course of conduct towards the farmer of the west. There has been an attempt to show that he has been getting lumber apparently cheap under hon. gentlemen opposite. But they have a different story to tell me when I go out to the west, they tell me that for ten long years they have been paying enormous prices for lumber under the policy that was inaugurated in 1896 to help the farmer. It does not seem to have done very much for the farmers. In fact, the men who have profited by any lumber arrangements that have been made out in that western country are men of a different calibre to the farmers of that country. They were men who sat in this House on the back benches, and some of the front benches, on the government side during the régime of the late government.

These are the men who profited by the lumber manipulation out there while the poor farmer was made pay the piper and he has been paying the piper ever since. There is a claim made with regard to the benefits which accrued to the farmer from some particular arrangement whereby the Minister of Customs would allow certain lumber to come into this country without paying duty. We are told that the tariff authorities in Canada made a certain ruling upon lumber whereby the farmers benefited. I know that the farmers did not benefit a five cent piece by that ruling. There was a class of men who did benefit and these were the big American lumber combines who were thereby enabled to bring into Canada a class of lumber that they could not otherwise have brought in. These are the men that put the profits in their pockets. Some suggestions have been made that it was a source of a certain amount of revenue to help some hon. gentlemen out in that western country in the last election. After all we cannot so much wonder at their having a great deal of sympathy for the big lumber combines of the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend made a suggestion; would he put it in definite words?

Mr. WRIGHT. I would point out that I tried upon one occasion to ask the hon. gentleman a question when he was making a speech and he flatly refused to allow me to ask it as he did not wish to be interrupted, so that if I answer the question of the hon. gentleman on some other occasion I think he will be satisfied. I am treating him exactly as he treated me and that ought to be fair. I want to point out that wheat can go over to the United States from the Canadian side partly duty-free as long as that wheat is ground up over there and sent out of the United States in the form of flour or even in the form of wheat. There is practically no duty. While the duty may be collected at the border, ninety-nine per cent of it is refunded when the product is shipped abroad, so that all the difference that free wheat would have made to the farmers of the west would have been with respect to that portion of the wheat that they might grind up and use for American consumption. The American people shipped out of the United States last year, either in the form of wheat or flour, 120 million bushels. It ought to be plain to any man who has given it a little thought that if wheat goes over from Canada into the United States it will displace just that much wheat which must be sent abroad, and that wheat will be consumed in eastern Canada, in England or in some other part of Europe. The price will be fixed by the world's price and therefore such an exportation of wheat to the United States could have no other effect. I have read all the speeches that were delivered in the United States congress on the question of reciprocity and one of the best speeches on the wheat question that was made either in this House or in Congress of the United States was that made by the Senator from North Dakota, who went into the question thoroughly. In his address before the United States Senate he pointed out that very little Canadian wheat would cross the line, but he said the very fact that it is there and can come in, will lower the price of wheat to the American farmer, because the price will come down to the figure at which wheat sells on the Canadian side. That would be the whole effect of reciprocity. The farmers of Canada would get nothing out of it and the United States farmers would lose. So, on the whole there was nothing in it for the Canadian farmer, possibly a loss to the American farmer, and it is hard to see where the gain would come in to anybody except it might be to the American millers on the small amount of Canadian wheat that they would get extra to grind and to the American railways on the small amount they would get for hauling that wheat to the great American centres. If the Americans were not producing enough wheat to satisfy their market then I would say let us try and get into that market, but when they are producing more wheat by 120,000,000 bushels annually than they can consume it is hard to see how we can go into that country with any quantity of wheat and dispose of it.

I want to say a word with regard to ploughs. I have some little knowledge of that article of machinery, and I think there is a good deal of want of knowledge of the technicalities of the business, because when men get up and discuss a question like this I think it would be well that they should have some little knowledge of the trade. One gentleman opposite—I forget which one—a little while ago made some comparisons of the prices of ploughs at certain places in Canada, and the prices at a certain spot in the United States. He took the retail price, I think, at Saskatoon and compared that with the wholesale price at a certain spot in the United States. From the knowledge I have of the business and from what he read out to substantiate his position, I know that he was quoting the wholesale price of the article because the list that he read from specially referred to the contract. There was an attempt made to show that because only one plough was ordered it must have been an individual buying a plough for his own use. I will confidently deny that statement. Any man acquainted with the business knows that a retail agent does not keep a stock of these very large and expensive ploughs, but only one at a time. These ploughs are made in various sizes running from five furrows to a dozen furrows and each farmer who buys a plough will buy according to what he needs; therefore, the agent who would stock himself up with a large number of these ploughs would be very foolish because he might not have the one that the farmer wanted although he had a dozen ploughs on hand. As a rule an agent only keeps one plough in stock, and many of them would not do that were it not for the fact that the wholesale dealers or manufacturers compel them to buy one plough. There are different methods of handling the machinery. Some manufacturers handle it direct with the consumer; that is they send an agent or their own to some particular spot, if there is a large amount of business there, they pay him a salary and he goes on retailing these implements over the country. That is pretty largely done away with in the west to-day and the great bulk of the business is handled through agents. The agent has a fixed price quoted to him, he has to settle with the company, either with farmers' paper, or otherwise, for the article at that price and the company becomes responsible for the collection of the notes. Over on the other side of the line a great deal of the business to-day is done through wholesalers. The manufacturers at Milwaukee, Chicago, Batavia, Moline, or any of the other great centres of manufacture in the United States, sell this machinery to some firm or company, say, in Minneapolis, who buy it right out and become responsible for the sale and collection of the money. These articles are sold by these manufacturers at very short dates, and they are enabled to sell them for a great deal less because the agents assume the responsibility of collecting the notes.

In discussing with the representative of one of the big companies in Winnipeg, the question of the price on the American side which is generally speaking ten per cent less than on the Canadian side, he pointed out that the Canadian goods had to come from eastern Canada and had to pay nearly ten per cent more in freight rates than the American goods which came the shorter haul from Chicago. He also pointed out that the Canadian manufacturers had to become responsible for the collection of the notes while on the other side the farmers were paying cash. I was informed that in the month of May last, in Manitoba, they had only been able to collect 58 per cent of the notes due on the 1st of October of the previous year, in Saskatchewan 48 per cent, and in Alberta 49 per cent, so that an enormous capital had to be carried to do business in this way. I told this gentleman that I thought they were charging a pretty high rate to the farmers for carrying these notes, and his answer was that they would much prefer to get the cash because in many instances they had to repossess the articles after 2 or 3 years at very great loss. Any one who considers the question will at once see that the method of selling must cause a vast difference in the price of the article sold. However, this is a question which should be thoroughly gone into. I have very great sympathy with the farmers of the west and the farmers of the east as well, and I believe we should have a board which would go into these questions thoroughly, make thorough inquiries at all the factories in the country, and see whether they are selling their goods to the consumer at a reasonable rate. The creation of such a board is now under the consideration of the government, and if they deal with it in a tangible way they are entitled to our sympathy and our support. I for one will not stand for the manufacturers of Canada charging larger prices than they should legitimately charge, nor do I think this parliament would stand for it. But, we must have actual facts before we take action, and the best way to obtain these facts is to appoint a tariff board for the purpose. I have not much sympathy with those who contend that the Canadian manufacturers should be compelled to compete with the manufacturers of Great Britain and other countries who are paying their workmen less than half what the Canadian manufacturers are paying. Our workmen have to live in a severe but healthy climate; their children must be educated; we have a higher standard of living than they have in England or France or in Germany, and our prices must be regulated on a standard that will be not only fair to the workingmen and fair to the farmers and the consumers generally, but fair to the manufacturers as well. I cannot too strongly deprecate the efforts made by hon. gentlemen opposite this session to set the people of the west against the people of the east, to set the farmer against the manufacturer, and generally speaking to set one class of the community against the other. For many years when they were in opposition before they followed that line of policy, but I appeal to them now to join with us on this side in doing away with this miserable attempt to raise sectional cries. Let us stand for a Canadian nationality and for the rights of all classes in this country to a fair living. If out of these discussions we can evolve a plan whereby every class in this country will get British fair-play then good will result from them. We on this side of the House appeal to hon gentlemen opposite to aid us in carrying out a policy that will make for the advantage of all classes in our country.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Mr. ROGERS moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up to morrow?

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. HAZEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 31) to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899.

An hon. MEMBER. Explain.

Mr. HAZEN. I may say, in explanation to my hon. friend, that the harbour commission of Quebec now consists of nine members, five to be appointed by the government, two by the shipping interests for three years, one by the Quebec Board of Trade for three years and one by the Lévis Board of Trade for three years. The intention of this Bill is that the commission shall consist of three members to be appointed by the government, the same as the harbour commissioners in the port of Montreal.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not had an opportunity of looking into this Bill to ascertain whether it should be preceded by a resolution. In the meantime it will have to go as it is.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GRAIN ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether it is within your province, Mr. Speaker, to allow it or not, but with your good offices and with the consent of the House, I would like to move a resolution on page 16 under government orders. I want to get the resolution through and have the Bill introduced before we rise so that the Bill may be printed and placed in the hands of members for their information before they come back after the first of the year. If there is nothing to prevent it, or if the constitution would not be broken entirely, I would ask that I be allowed to do this.

Mr. SPEAKER. It could be done by moving that we pass on to government orders, and if that motion is accepted by the House it may be agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I move that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This resolution, I think, is in almost the same form as one which was adopted here last session?

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution was not adopted last session although I think it should have been brought in by resolution, but the Bill is the same.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The effect is the same?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD. I assume that my hon. friend will come back to the order of questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is this the same as the Senate passed last session?

Mr. FOSTER. I will explain it when I get the motion through, if my hon. friend will allow me, I therefore, beg to move that government orders be taken up.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to consolidate and revise the Manitoba Grain Act, chapter 83 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and Part II. of the Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of the Revised Statutes, 1906; to establish a Board of Commissioners to administer the grain trade of Canada, and to provide for expenses in connection therewith, and to charge the board with the operation and management of such terminal elevators as may be constructed, leased or acquired by the government of Canada.

He said: I may say in reference to this that I think it is right that this procedure should be commenced by resolution, and that is the reason of this resolution being put on the Order Paper. When the resolution is through I desire to introduce a Bill and I might just as well explain it now as then, I suppose. The Bill is the same Bill as that which was passed through the Senate last session after many conferences, and a great deal of discussion. I may say that all parties seemed to be pretty well agreed to the Bill, it finally passed through the Senate, came down to this House, and was introduced here, but was really not carried any distance in the House owing to the lack of time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Owing to obstruction.

Mr. FOSTER. No, owing to lack of time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought it was obstruction.

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill is, as I said, almost identically the same, there being only some small changes of verbiage or phrases.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no radical difference?

Mr. FOSTER. It is practically the same, and when it comes before the House I am going to invite the whole House to give it the benefit of its consideration. There will be some amendments which will be introduced by the government itself.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The resolution provides for the establishment of a board of commissioners, 'to administer the grain trade of Canada.' I do not see why we should go that far. I quite understand that they are to have the administration of terminal elevators and of the grain business so far as it applies to the terminal elvators, but when it proposes that they shall administer the grain trade it seems to me that the words are too broad. I should be very sorry to commit myself to an Act which would give to these commissioners power to administer the grain trade which would imply the buying and selling of grain and, generally dealings in grain. It would seem to me that it should be limited to the storage of grain in terminal elevators and the inspection thereof.

Mr. FOSTER. The limitations of the legislation will be shown in the Bill itself. At least you can see that it is broad enough to allow the legislation to be based upon it. It is a little too broad to suit my hon. friend if it is meant that the legislation should be as broad as the line laid down in this resolution. It is not the intention that the commission shall have everything to do with the grain trade everywhere, but it has to do with more than weighing in and weighing out and the inspection of the grain at the terminal elevators. It is a consolidation of the two Acts already on the statute book with the commission as an added feature.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend see that it would strike the country as being very peculiar if the House should unanimously commit itself—as I presume we will unanimously commit ourselves—to a resolution in favour of establishing a board of commissioners to administer the grain trade of Canada? It does seem to me that the words are entirely unsuited to what it is intended to do.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the country will be very much startled if my hon. friend is not. The resolution itself is not an Act and if the Act goes too far in the opinion of my hon. friend and this House, there is the time, I think, to make the limitation.

Mr. EMMERSON. In 1909, I think, there was a resolution introduced with respect to the naval service. Some members have thought since that it went too far, and they have not felt reconciled to the wide terms of that resolution. This resolution, if adopted, will commit individual members to a principle which I think they will hesitate to accept under other circumstances, and it seems to me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should qualify the words in the resolution, as to elevators and trade. Perhaps there might be some words of limitation in the resolution, otherwise we would be committing ourselves to a principle to which I am sure even my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would not be willing to commit himself.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I do not think there is any danger to be apprehended. If this was the ultimate legislation, the objection taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) might have a good deal of force. It does not say here that it is to administer all the grain trade of Canada but it does administer a very large proportion of that trade.

Mr. EMMERSON. The trade of Canada would mean all the trade.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Oh well, it might.

Mr. PUGSLEY. East and west, including the maritime provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. (Toronto). I would not like to take the responsibility of limiting it, because it might not then be sufficiently wide for our purposes. The drafting was arranged by the Law Clerk, and I take his version of it as being the proper form.

Mr. MACDONALD. I understand my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce to say that he is adopting the policy of the late government in the Bill which he proposes to introduce and for myself I would be satisfied on that assurance to let the resolution go.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) knows what I did say, that the Act, as it will be introduced, is almost exactly the Act which was passed by the Senate. If the late government was behind that to such an extent we take that as a groundwork. But I also stated that we would be prepared to suggest some amendments for the consideration of the House.

Mr. NESBITT. I understand my hon. friend to say there will be a full discussion of the Act when it comes down.

Mr. FOSTER. I should hope so.

Mr. NESBITT. Do I understand that?

Mr. FOSTER. I should hope so and fear so. I should hope there will be a discussion, and I should fear there will be too much discussion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With that reservation, I do not feel like pressing the objection further. My recollection is that the Bill was introduced in this House as a government measure, and we all regretted that owing to circumstances for which the late government were in no way responsible, but which I think the then opposition were responsible for, the measure was not put through, and the country has been deprived for a good many years of the benefit of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). We have already discussed who was responsible for last year's business, and there is no use again going into the matter here.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am glad to hear the statement of the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there will be a full discussion when the Bill is brought down. I would like to ask one question if he will be good enough to enlighten me in regard to it. I would like to know if it is the intention of the government, either in the Bill to be introduced, or in the amendments which they have in mind, which will make it impossible for any person, having any interest in terminal elevators, directly or indirectly, to have any interest in the ownership of the grain that goes through them? Do the government intend to make such an enactment?

Mr. FOSTER. I would not like to tell my hon. friend just now—I would not like to undertake to say what will be the whole of the enactment. What the Bill does do, in the greater part of it, is to incorporate and consolidate the two Acts already upon the statute-book, which have wide reference to the conduct and supervision of the grain trade of the west. It also provides for the appointment of a commission and that commission has its powers outlined in the Bill itself. The great grievance, so far as I have looked over the papers of the grain producers and a part of the grain handlers, is that they are not treated fairly by reason of selfish interests which worked to their detriment, in the elevators more particularly, and the object of this legislation is to alleviate and do away with that as far as it possibly can be done.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am quite satisfied that the minister has answered me as fully as he can at this stage of the proceedings. I want, however, to take this opportunity of impressing upon the minister, if he will permit me, that this point which I have tried to make, is the most important point in the whole Bill. If you take away from the owners of the elevator any interest in the grain or in the classification of it, you remove from them every motive for manipulating the grain. There is no feature of the Bill, I think, to which the hon. minister can address himself which will be more profitable to the grain growers than to see that those who have an interest, either in their own personal names, or through shareholders, in the terminal elevators, have absolutely no interest in the grain. Once you have that principle established and make severely punishable any infringement of it, you take away the great motive which is there for manipulating the grain, which is the serious trouble.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce for his consideration as to whether the word 'regulated' should not be substituted for the word 'administered.'

Mr. FOSTER. It is more than regulation.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 32) entitled An Act respecting Grain.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DISMISSALS OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax) moved for:

Copy of all papers, correspondence and orders in council in connection with and relating to the dismissal from office of public officials from each of the departments of government since the 1st day of October last past, including both the inside and outside service.

He said: On this motion, Mr. Speaker, I propose to avail myself of the opportunity of discussing very briefly the matter of the dismissal of government officials, and I understand that the government are willing to extend to hon. members the widest latitude possible in discussing this matter, just as if this motion were presented in amendment to Supply.

The dismissal of government officials is inevitably bound to be the subject of discussion in this country upon the defeat of any ministry, owing largely to the method of appointment to the Civil Service prevailing in Canada. I do not propose discussing the matter at any great length, my chief purpose being to secure if possible from the government a declaration of its policy as to the dismissal of members of the Civil Service and those generally in the employ of the government.

I suppose we can safely predicate it as a fact that dismissals have already been made and that the government propose making others. I have no intention of discussing any specific instances of dismissal; and if I should refer to any in the constituency I represent, I shall do so very briefly, reserving to myself the liberty of future discussion in connection with any particular dismissals.

Dismissals have been made already in the county of Halifax. Within forty-eight hours after the defeat of the government on the 21st of September last, prominent members of the Conservative party arrogated to themselves the executive function of the dismissal of officials, without the intervention of members of the government, directly or indirectly.

Some days ago the following question was put upon the Order Paper by myself:

Was Robert Ham, of the Trachoma Hospital, Halifax, dismissed from the employ of the government? If so, on what date, by whom, and for what reason?

To that question the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) replied today as follows:

Records show that this man left the service on his own account on or about October 10, 1911.

The truth of the matter is that on or about October 10 the colleague of the hon. the First Minister (Mr. Borden) in the recent election, ordered, directly or indirectly himself, that Mr. Ham should leave the service of the government; and Mr. Ham, being a young man, without any experience in such matters, assumed that any instructions or orders from a colleague of the First Minister was tantamount to a decree from the government and he accordingly left the service.

I do know further than many officials in the government service in the county of Halifax were threatened with dismissal immediately after the defeat of the government by prominent members of the Conservative party in that city, and I do know that a harvest of dismissals and appointments were promised followers of the Conservative party in that constituency.

I know further that in the county of Lunenburg, which I formerly had the honour to represent, the Conservative committees in certain districts have made claims for the dismissal of many officials, many of whom cannot be considered as being partisan in any sense of the word, since their appointment, unless the simple exercise of their franchise can be so considered; and I do know that such committees have decreed who shall be the successors in office of those whom they have designated for dismissal.

I do not propose to discuss much further the question of dismissals that have already been made or dismissals that are contemplated. I would like to believe that the Prime Minister, my colleague from the constituency of Halifax, will adopt a policy of justice in this regard, and one in the interest of the country, and of the Civil Service. I will be inclined to believe that until I am convinced to the contrary. I quite appreciate the difficulties that confront the Prime Minister in his constituency, but still I look to him to be just enough to be strong and strong enough to- be just in this respect. In view of the manner of appointments to the Civil Service—I refer to the outside service particularly—I readily acknowledge that there will be many cases wherein the dismissal of officials might properly occur, and will be naturally looked for by such officials, particularly those who openly, and with apparently no idea of concealing the same from the public or any person indeed, were active politicians while occupants of government offices. What was the policy of the late government with respect to the dismissal of officials is, I think, pretty well known to most hon. members. That this policy may have been occasionally violated, even perhaps without just cause, frequently inflicting grave injustice upon those dismissed, I do not doubt. That the policy, which I trust the government will declare, will be wantonly departed from I have not the slightest doubt. I am not blind to the human and political elements which enter into a question of this kind, and the whole matter must be treated in a generous fashion by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. Assuming that the policy of the late government was dismissal for partisan causes altogether, and assuming further an occasional departure from this policy on the part of that government, it is still to be remembered that in the various constituencies of this country thousands of officials in 1896 were permitted to remain in office who were active and avowed political partisan up to that date, and who were never dismissed. I know that in the constituency of Lunenburg in the year 1896 there was not a single important office which was not held by a prominent Conservative, and these men were as active political workers as any Conservative who ever stepped into the constituency as a candidate. From 1896 down to the present day not a holder of the class of office to which I have referred, was, if I remember correctly, ever dismissed. I do not pretend to say that on many occasions demands were not made by friends of the government party for the dismissal of such officials, but I do say that ultimately better counsel prevailed on the part of the party leaders within that constituency and the ministers of the Crown, and I, therefore, venture this remark that the policy of the late government as declared shortly after their accession to office in 1896 was not open to substantial or extensive criticism.

While the government of that day laid it down as their principle that dismissal was only to be justified by reason of political partisanship, yet that policy was generously interpreted and generously applied. It may be, of course, that my experience in connection with patronage affairs was limited ; I admit it was, and I was always very pleased that such was the case. Personally, I should like to see the Civil Service Act gradually extended so as to cover all cities and towns of a certain population. I think that neither of the two political parties in this country have ever openly or covertly approved of the system prevailing in the United States based upon the principle that to the victors belong the spoils. I am led to believe and, I trust, correctly, that it is the desire of both political parties to emancipate the Civil Service from political control. Naturally this same question came up before parliament in 1896 after the defeat of the previous government, and many views were expressed by hon. gentlemen who then sat in opposition, as to what should be sufficient ground for dismissal and what should be the procedure to be followed in the way of investigation prior to dismissal. One principle was generally laid down and it was generally concurred in by the opposition of that day, a principle that I wish this afternoon to impress upon the government, and that is that a careful and honest investigation should precede any dismissal. I think that ground is substantial and just. The government of the day will have recommendations for dismissals largely based upon probable falsehoods, unjust suspicions and recommendations which will emanate from pure selfishness. These recommendations in many instances will come from gentlemen who are absolutely without moral sense, who have no spirit of fair play, and who have not the sligtest interest in the public service, and whose political gospel always is: To the victors belong the spoils. The government will also receive recommendations for dismissal from some members of parliament, and from some of the defeated candidates and these recommendations will not always be based upon the highest considerations. In such cases, it is essential that the ministry should exercise the greatest precaution and conduct the fullest investigation before dismissing any official of the government. Therefore, if there is one thing which I wish to impress upon the government more than another this afternoon it is the necessity of careful investigation into each case, and the importance of giving notice to the official under suspicion of wrong-doing, prior to the dismissal, that he may be able to present to the government his defence before final action is taken. This is a proposition which I feel sure will meet with ministerial favour. I submit it is fair, and that in the last analysis it will be found a protection to the government itself, as well as an instrument of justice to the official who is under the charge, or under the suspicion of wrong-doing. I will not go so far as to say that in every case it should be the duty of the government to appoint a commission or a commissioner to investigate the complaint against any official.

I think that frequently, and even in most cases, these inquiries could be made by the individual members of the government themselves. This is a view championed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), in 1896, at least. In discussing this matter of the dismissal of officials, he laid special stress, as I am now trying to do, upon the necessity of giving the official the opportunity of registering a defence to charges preferred against him. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke as follows on the occasion, I refer to, as reported at page 504 of the debates of the second session of 1896:

> Least of all would I like to see a change by arbitrary dismissal, by mere whim of the minister, upon information which must at best be second-hand, coming to him from a partisan source. I would not like to see action taken simply upon such charges. But if there is a charge against any official for neglect of duty, for offensive partisan conduct or unbecoming or ungentlemanly action, the charge should be laid before him as an accusation, he should be allowed to answer, and an investigation should be carried out, and it should be dependent upon that investigation whether punishment is meted out to him or not. I do not think that we, as a parliament, should ask for anything less. I do not think we should limit our civil servants to any greater extent than that. I believe that if this line of policy were carried out, it would prevent the unrest and disquiet which is now abroad in the country, and will continue unless a very clear and satisfactory line of policy is taken at this time.

I entirely concur in that expression of opinion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I very much regret that he does not himself to-day, as a minister of the Crown, seek to live up to the declaration he made at that time. I submit that the principle that he enunciated is a sound one and should be the basis of the policy of the government in the matter of dismissing officials. And I trust, notwithstanding the fact that it appears that members of the government have already departed from the principle laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in 1896, that it will be observed in future.

Now, there is one branch of the public service, wherein I am told, a great many dismissals have already been made and a great number more are to be made——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) before he goes into another branch of the subject, would substantiate his inference that I have gone back on the principle enunciated in 1896, so far as my own department is concerned.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not propose taking up the time of the House to substantiate that statement, because I believe that hon. members on both sides will concur in it. I do know that in the county of Halifax at least, public servants have been dismissed without having been afforded an opportunity of defence. I would like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to state whether he gave to the persons engaged in the Annuities Branch of his department an opportunity to submit a defence to him before he dismissed several of them a few days ago.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend wants an answer to that question now, I have dismissed none, with one exception; and I dismissed that man for cause, and not for partisan reasons.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That is the very point at issue. The hon. minister (Mr. Foster) assumes to settle what is a sufficient cause. I say he has no right to arrogate to himself that power. The proposition I am setting forth is this, that before he dismisses an official, he should give that official an opportunity to submit his evidence, in order to assist the minister himself in reaching a conclusion whether or not there is cause for dismissal.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). And furthermore I gave my hon. friend an opportunity to get the papers in that particular case. If he wants them brought down I will lay them before the House.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not see that that is an answer to the statement I make. Have the papers been placed upon the table of the House?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Well, that was the hon. gentleman's promise—that these papers were to be placed upon the table of the House that I might have the opportunity of seeing them.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What I promised was to bring down the papers with reference to the transfers of the Annuities branch. I expected to have them ready, but they are not ready. With reference to the other matter—the dismissal of McArthur—the hon. gentleman will remember that I said that if he wanted the papers, all he had to do was to ask for them.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Possibly the hon. gentleman is right. I am not very much concerned about that matter now. I was about to refer to one branch of the service wherein many dismissals have already been made and wherein, it is anticipated by a large number of hon. gentlemen on this side, a great number of dismissals are yet to be made. I refer to the Post Office Department. Now if there is one department of the public service to which the rule of dismissal for partisanship ought not to apply, I think it is the post office.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You should have thought of that before.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think it is most reprehensible on the part of any minister of the Crown or any member of parliament to urge the dismissal of a country postmaster on the ground that he has been a political partisan. I observe that the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) smiles at this, but I do not entertain the idea of his comprehending the principle which I set forth in connection with the dismissal of country postmasters. The average country postmaster should be regarded as a public philanthropist, rather than a public servant. He should have liberty of political action, his freedom in this respect should not be curtailed by reason of the fact that he is a postmaster. Personally, I never during my political career recommended the dismissal of a postmaster, especially of a country postmaster, on the ground that he had been a political partisan. I have even had the experience of a postmaster opposed to me politically, keeping within his own control political literature mailed by myself for my political friends, so that there could be no effective distribution in a particular district prior to polling day. I do admit any hon. gentleman, perhaps, would be justified in asking for the dismissal of a postmaster guilty of such misconduct.

But the point I wish to make is that, speaking generally, no postmaster should be dismissed for taking an active part in the politics of his country and that the position which he holds should not be regarded by the Postmaster General or by the government for this purpose at least as an office held under the Crown. If the Postmaster General favours dismissing postmasters who are Liberals upon the ground that they have been active in politics, what does he propose to do with the postmasters who are Conservatives, who are friends of the government and who have, every year since 1896, been active partisans? Will he apply one rule to one and another rule to the other? I would like to ask the Postmaster General if, upon my recommendation and upon satisfactory evidence being given to him, he will dismiss postmasters who are friends of the government and of his party upon the ground of being active in political matters. I wish for a moment to refer to a matter which is, so far as I am concerned, one of local interest. A few days ago I wrote a letter to the Postmaster General saying that it had been represented to me that an effort was being made to change the post office at a place called Spry Bay, in the county of Halifax, from its present location. In my letter I asked him if he would, before deciding to make the change, grant me the favour of an interview with him. I told him in my letter that I did not think there was any justification for the proposed change. My letter was written on the 28th November, and on the 29th, the day following, he very promptly and kindly acknowledged the receipt of my letter in regard to the postmastership of Spry Bay, and said in reply that the matter 'will receive my immediate attention.' Of course, I assumed that, when the Postmaster General wrote that letter to me, he meant to give the contents of my letter to him some consideration, but it appeared on the following day that, while in his letter to me he promised immediate attention, the attention he meant was to immediately dismiss this postmaster and not to pay any attention to my communication to him. I imagine that prior to his writing his reply to my letter he had already decided upon the removal of this office, for on the following day he answered a question previously asked him by me in connection with this particular matter. I cannot place my hand on the question just at the moment, but in effect, the answer was that it had been decided by the department to dismiss the present postmaster and reappoint one dismissed in 1896. This was the justification for the removal of the post office. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was not so much concerned with the change of the postmaster as I was with the change in the location of the post office. I do not know and neither do I care, upon what ground the postmaster acting in 1896 was dismissed. I want to say to the Postmaster General that the reason which he assigns in answer to my question is not a justification for the removal of the post office from its present location. If the location of the post office was changed in 1896 it was not primarily to get rid of the then postmaster, but it was to place the post office in a better location. A grave injustice will be done to the residents of this particular section if the Postmaster General removes the post office from its present location. I can suggest to him a way of overcoming this difficulty, and that is to remove another post office about three or four miles from the post office at Spry Bay to the place of residence of the man whom he proposes to make postmaster in the place of the postmaster now acting at Spry Bay. I should be very glad to go down to the hon. gentleman's office to-morrow or next day to discuss this matter with him. I would like to know what manner of man he is, at any rate, and this might be a justification for making the acquaintance of the Postmaster General. If he will promise me now and here that he will not take any further action in the matter until I have had this opportunity of an interview with him I shall be very glad indeed.

Mr. PELLETIER. I shall receive the hon. gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I thank the hon. gentleman, and I will take advantage of his kindness.

Mr. PELLETIER. I did not catch the date of the answer given in the House to the question put by my hon. friend.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think it was on the 30th of November. As I stated before, Mr. Speaker, the matter of the dismissal of officials was a subject of discussion in the first session of the parliament following the elections of 1896. The hon. gentleman who now leads the House and is Prime Minister of the country was in that year elected as a member for the county of Halifax, and it so happened that his first parliamentary utterance was upon the subject of the dismissal of officials. Speaking on August 28, 1896, the Prime Minister said:

It seems to me that those gentlemen who are in the Civil Service of this country ought to have the same right, as other electors, not only to vote, but to work during the elections, subject to certain limitations. which I shall endeavour to submit to the House. In the first place, I entirely agree that if any such official is guilty of any corrupt or dishonourable conduct in an election contest while working for one party or the other, such conduct ought to have only one result. In the second place, if, for the purpose of supporting one party or the other, he neglects his duty in any way as a public servant, and employs the time for which the country has paid him in furthering the interests of either party, it seems to me that such conduct is reprehensible and ought to be punished.

I willingly concur in the principle laid down by the Prime Minister on that occasion. The Prime Minister then was fresh from legal fields, and new in the parliamentary field, his mind and judgment were then free from political colouring and readily responsive to reason and to logic. Now I wonder if the Prime Minister has suffered any deterioration with respect to his excellent judgment during his fifteen years of journeying in the political wilderness, or I wonder if his sudden and unexpected triumph has affected adversely his judgment in that respect. Is he willing to-day to adhere to the opinion which he then expressed?

Will he force this opinion upon his colleagues to-day? Will he condone to-day what he condemned in 1896? I trust the Prime Minister will to-day, when declaring the policy of his government, see fit to adhere to the policy which he laid down in 1896 in discussing this matter. Further, on this occasion, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce had the honour of a seat in parliament and, as would naturally be expected, he addressed the House upon this subject, and I would ask the attention of that hon. gentleman and of the House, to the views expressed by him upon the occasion in question:

'He would investigate a charge such as was made and if he found a gentleman was guilty of offensive partnership, then he would feel that punishment ought to be inflicted with the loss of his place.'

The hon. gentleman was there quoting a declaration made by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce proceeded as follows:

'I think the whole matter is found there, and in one other fact, and that is—the duty which a man has to perform. It does seem to me, that if a public servant performs the duties assigned to him by the government of the day, if he is not guilty of offensive or unbecoming conduct in his canvass or in the expression of his opinion, he has a perfect right, not only to his ballot, but also to his expression of his opinion, whether it be by voice or by pen. The only limit that ought to be placed upon him in the interest of the service and in the interest of the country is that his duties shall not be in the least interfered with, and in the second place, he shall not lose sight of the fact, that, as an employee of the government as represented by the party in power for the time being, he is to keep that courteous line of conduct which is becoming in every employee towards the person who employs him, towards the party which employs him, towards the party which employs him as the representative of the government of the country. Now, sir, it does seem to me, that we ought not to go beyond that, we ought not to suppress an expression of opinion by men belonging to the most intelligent classes of the people, those who are its office-holders, we ought not to keep them from depositing their votes, we ought not to keep them from a fair and courteous and becoming expression of their opinion, and if civil servants perform their duties faithfully and live up to those rules, I think they have a perfect right, not only to vote, but to express their opinions and to let them be felt upon the country for the good of the country, as they, as intelligent, reasoning beings, according to their light, think to be in the interest of the country.'

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that no hon. gentleman on this side of the House could find any fault with the principle respecting dismissal of officials laid down by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. Possibly, he was a little over-generous to the official, and possibly we might not exact of him strict adherence to the principle enunciated on this occasion, and as I have read it. I do not propose occupying the attention of the House at any further length. The chief purpose I have in addressing the House upon this matter this afternoon is to secure from members of the government, a declaration of their policy upon the matter of the dismissal of government officials, and I trust that the Prime Minister and his colleagues will frankly and candidly give to the House this afternoon the policy which has moved them in dismissals during the past few weeks, and also indicate what shall be their policy in the future respecting these matters.

Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). My hon. friend has brought to the attention of the House the matters which he has discussed in a very moderate way. I have no fault to find with the observations which he has addressed to us from his standpoint. I recollect very well the occasion to which he alluded when I spoke upon this question in the House of Commons in 1896, and I am bound to say, at that time I was impressed with the wisdom of the procedure which I indicated. But I found myself, I found my voice, very much as that of one crying alone in the wilderness; I did not get very much support on one side of the House or the other. At that time, there was a good deal to be said for that point of view, and it did impress itself upon me coming into this House for the first time, that that is a rule which could very reasonably be adopted by both parties in this House. I will not say that I have not considerably modified my opinion in that regard, because I have seen some incidents in the fifteen years in which I have been a member of parliament which would indicate to me that the rule which I then thought a good one would be liable to very great abuse. However, I would like to point out to my hon. friend what he seems to have forgotten, that with respect to both the inside service and the outside service this matter has been settled. In the first place by a statute of Canada concerning the inside service, in the second place by a resolution of this House, concurred in by both political parties with regard to the outside service. So far as the inside service is concerned, the statutory provision to which I desire to call attention is to be found in the Act of 1908 introduced and passed by the late administration. Section 43 of that statute is as follows:

No officer, clerk or employee in the Civil Service shall be debarred from voting at any Dominion or provincial election if under the laws governing the said election he has the right to vote; but no such officer, clerk or employee shall engage in partisan work in connection with said election.

The words of that section do not seem to restrict it to the inside service. My impression of the interpretation of the Act is that the language is restricted to the inside service. However, that is a matter to which we can very easily determine upon an examination of the earlier part of the statute. Sufficient it is to say for the present that it does lay down a definite and specific rule so far as the inside service is concerned.

Now, so far as the outside service is concerned, the rule was embodied in a resolution of the House of Commons moved by Mr. Lake on the 17th July, 1905, and accepted by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who was then leading the government, and that rule is in these words:

That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada, should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion, and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged, or permitted to engage, in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to the provincial or Dominion legislature.

I remember very well the debate which took place upon that resolution and there was only one difficulty which my right hon. friend opposite (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had with regard to it. He stated in the course of his remarks, if I remember correctly, that it was doubtful as to whether or not the rule should be extended to partisan work in a provincial election, but summing up all the considerations one way or another he finally came to the conclusion to accept and he did accept, the resolution in the very words in which it was moved by Mr. Lake. Therefore, so far as the rule is concerned, it seems to me that is a matter which has been settled in the first place by statute, and in the second place by the resolution alluded to, and that it makes pretty clear what are the duties and the responsibilities of any man who is a public servant of Canada.

My hon. friend alluded to some incidents which he says took place in the county of Halifax. I happened to be detained a little in coming to the House to-day so I did not have the advantage of listening to my hon. friend's remarks with regard to these alleged incidents. All I have to say is that no committee in the county of Halifax has any authority to dismiss any official. No committee since this government came into power has had any authority to dismiss any official, and officials whether in the inside or the outside service, can only be dismissed by this government or by the minister responsible for the administration of the department. If any such incidents as those alluded to have really taken place, they have taken place without the knowledge, the sanction, or the approval of the government.

Now, my hon. frined has spoken of what should be necessary to convince the government or a minister of the Crown that an official has taken an offensive part in any election. There are obviously some cases in which inquiry would be rather futile. For example, on the 21st of September last, I myself personally saw three office-holders of this country engaged in active partisan work in the city of Halifax. I arrived at one polling division just after one of those officials had gone inside of the polling booth and assaulted a representative of mine.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There was no such thing as an assault. I know the incident.

Mr. BORDEN. I was not present at the incident. My hon. friend may have been present at it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I was not present, but I am satisfied nevertheless that there was no such thing as an assault.

Mr. BORDEN. I will not bandy words with my hon. friend about that. All I say is that I was told by the Conservative representative that he had been assaulted in that way. But, apart from that, I know that those men were engaging in active partisan work. In that case I would not grant an inquiry, because I saw it with my own eyes. The hon. gentleman has alluded to the action of the late government. I am not going into details with regard to that to-day; but I am bound to say that their action in the county of Halifax did not come up to the high ideals which my hon. friend has put before the House this afternoon. I have not searched the records in respect of such matters but I know of two postmasters in that county who were dismissed without any inquiry whatever; I know the particular incident on account of which one of them was dismissed, because I was present at it and know all about it. The postmaster concerned, who is the honoured and respected father of a member of this House, was dismissed without the slightest inquiry, and with respect to an incident of which to my personal knowledge he was absolutely guiltless. My hon. friend alludes to the case of the postmaster at Spry Bay, and says that he was removed for political reasons; but I think he will be satisfied of the contrary when the papers are brought down. I would like to tell him that W. Charles Henley, of Spry Bay, held three offices at the time the late government came into power: he was postmaster, preventive officer and receiver of wrecks. They dismissed him as postmaster, my hon. friend says, for the purpose of removing the post office. I ask why, then, they dismissed him as preventive officer, and why they dismissed him as receiver of wrecks? It was not necessary to do that, because of the alleged necessity or desirability of removing the post office to another place. He was dismissed, as the evidence shows, in consequence of the incessant clamour which came about the ears of the then Liberal member for the riding, who telegraphed or wrote to have this man dismissed, until, as he says, he was absolutely tired of using his pen for that purpose. Now, my hon. friend is anxious that inquiry should be had in proper cases, and so am I. No one is more unwilling to dismiss officials than I am, but where the government or responsible minister is convinced that an official has been guilty of violation of the plain terms of a statute or of a resolution of the House of Commons concurred in by both political parties, by which his conduct ought to be guided, I would ask my hon. friend what alternative would a government have in a case of that kind? These men have gone on, in the face of a statute or in the face of a plain resolution of the House of Commons. That resolution was concurred in after ample debate in this House by both political parties as represented here, and it seems to me that any official, going on in the face of that statute or of that resolution, goes on at his peril. For my part, I hope the day may come, and in the not distant future, when the Civil Service Act may be extended to a portion at least of the outside service, and I hope eventually, as fast as it can be reasonably done, to the whole outside of the service of this country. Assuming that the statute, which I quoted a moment ago, does not extend to the outside service at the present time, as soon as the Civil Service Act was so extended to that outside service it would take effect by its very terms and, therefore, these men would be prohibited by statute from engaging in any partisan work in any election. If, in the face of a statute of that kind, one of these men undertakes to be a politician, I think the answer might very well be made to him which was made by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition in 1896, when he said:

> If any official in the Service chooses to be a politician, he shall be given every opportunity by this government of being a politician.

That was the principle the right hon. gentleman laid down in this House on the 1st day of September, 1896. I am very well aware that in the debate on that occasion there was very much said with which I agreed, with regard to an inquiry in such cases; but I would like to point out to hon. gentlemen opposite, and to my right hon. friend himself, that the principles which he laid down in that debate were not very well carried out in the two or three years that succeeded it. I do not desire to go into the details of that question to-day, although I am ready to do so at any time that can be named, because we have the details and can give them to this House if necessary. I might just mention two of them. J. B. Ryan, in the Inland Revenue service in the city of Halifax in 1896, was dismissed without inquiry or investigation, because he asked a civil question at a public meeting in the town of Dartmouth. Edward Kelly, in the Inland Revenue service in the city of Halifax, was dismissed without inquiry, simply because of the statement that he had been guilty of partisan conduct. I could give my hon. friend many other instances in my own county.

An hon. MEMBER. Hundreds of them.

Mr. BORDEN. While I do not say that there were hundreds in the county of Halifax, but taking the country all over, there were many hundreds of them, no doubt. I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to remember this, that if one political party dismisses officials in that way, they make it exceedingly difficult for another political party coming into power to take any other line of action. The best remedy that could be given in such cases would be to provide in terms within what limits any public official may engage in political affairs. That being done, there could not be much further question except as regards the evidence.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand the hon. gentleman, the government will be governed by the terms of the resolution and the statute to which he has referred. But will he apply it to office holders indiscriminately, regardless of what side they take, or limit its application to the opponents of the government in office?

Mr. BORDEN. That is the way in which it was applied by the late administration.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am asking as to the application of the rule now.

Mr. BORDEN. No doubt my hon. friend would desire a different application from that which he carried out himself when he was a member of the government. We shall take all those matters into consideration. I am very glad to learn from my hon. friend that the example which the late government set us is one we ought not to follow. I judge that that is the conclusion he desires. With regard to that, I would make the same remark that I did regarding general dismissals a moment ago. I would like some rule adopted which would make the matter so plain that no official could possibly fail to understand it, and then I would like to have that rule applied to officials whether they took part on one side or the other. If we get that rule in the form of a statute, as I hope we shall some day, no doubt, it would be given the general application which my hon. friend desires, but which he and his friends failed to give it while they were in power.

I do not know that there is any other part of the observations of my hon. friend from Halifax to which I need call attention. I can only say that the desire of members of this government is not for wholesale dismissals; but certain rules have been laid down, both by statute and resolution of this House, and I do not see that there is any reason why those rules should not be applied. We desire, however, to apply them in a reasonable and moderate way, and not dismiss any office holder unless there be convicting evidence that he violated the rules laid down by the statute and the resolution of this House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The observations of my hon. friend show conclusively that whilst he is sound in doctrine he is singularly wanting in practice. He repudiates very properly the doctrine which long prevailed in the United States, and was the bane of the American civil government, namely, that to the victors belong the spoils. In this country, on both sides, for many years we have been of the opinion that positions in the Civil Service should be permanent, that everybody who took service under the government should be certain of his position so long as he did not offend against the law of the land or the proprieties of the position he occupies. I laid down the rule when in office in 1896, which has been referred to by my hon. friend, that no man in the service should be allowed to take any offensive part in an election. I did not mean that he should not have the rights of citizenship, that he should not be free to express his opinions and cast his votes, but I meant that he should not take any offensive part in any election. Every one will agree that a public officer should not take part in an election. That was the doctrine laid down in 1896, and which the late government endeavoured to live up to, namely, that no man should take an offensive part in an election. That is a doctrine which should be applied to all parties, but, if I am correctly informed, there has been a constant violation of this rule in hundreds of cases since my hon. friends opposite took office a few weeks ago.

An hon. MEMBER. What rule?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The rule that no man should be dismissed unless he be given an opportunity to defend himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do I understand hon. gentlemen opposite to contest this rule? Do I understand them to deny that a man should be heard before being deprived of his office? Have we come to this, with hon. gentlemen opposite sitting upon the treasury benches, that a man can be deprived of his office without being given the opportunity to plead in his own behalf?

Mr. LANCASTER. The right hon. gentleman made dismissals himself in hundreds of cases without any such investigation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall come to that presently. But is the rule I have mentioned to be accepted or not? I lay down the rule that a man who has taken an offensive part in politics is a proper subject for dismissal; but I should like hon. gentlemen opposite to say whether this man should be dismissed without being given the opportunity of being heard. I say that he should not, and I do not understand that such a rule is contradicted by hon. gentlemen opposite. In 1896 we laid down the rule that every man should have an opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. MONK. But you did not observe it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. We said in 1896 that no man should be dismissed unless he was first given the opportunity of being heard. But I said also that we would accept the written statement of a member of parliament, giving the facts, and asking for the dismissal. That is the rule we laid down, and we have lived up to it. I am told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we did not live up to that rule. I do not admit the charge. I think we did, but even if we were deficient I would expect that the hon. gentlemen who are on the treasury benches at present would at least act according to their own doctrine. Are they going to throw over their own doctrine and institute dismissals right and left without giving any man the opportunity of defending himself or without any member of parliament taking the responsibility of placing on record a charge against the man whose dismissal he seeks? I would insist on the leader of the government that he should enforce the rule that no man should be deprived of office without being given the opportunity of defending himself or at least unless the member of parliament who asks for his dismissal has the courage to put on record the reasons why he demands it.

Mr. BORDEN. Does my right hon. friend know of any case in which a man was dismissed without being given this opportunity?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood that many men have been so dismissed. I understand they have been dismissed without being given the opportunity of defending themselves or without any charge in writing being made against them by a member of parliament.

Sir, this rule is one we should insist upon --that a member of parliament should set forth his charge in writing. For then the papers can be brought down. There is such a thing as public opinion in this country; and, while I do not believe that a member of parliament on either side would lay a charge against a public official that he knew to be unfounded, yet when the papers are brought down that charge, if it has been made in writing, can be discussed, and the whole matter brought before the tribunal of public opinion. But I understand that this rule has not been followed, but that men have been dismissed by this government without having had the opportunity of defending themselves or even having the charge against them put in writing. I must say that I sympathize, as we all must sympathize, to a certain extent, with the hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden). For I know, as a fact, and it is a matter of public notoriety, that since he has taken office—and even before, from the very day after the 21st of September last—the city of Ottawa has been invaded by office seekers, famished office seekers. Why, they, are like the locusts of Egypt, they cover the land! We find them in the corridors of this House. Indeed, the other day, we had the wail of lamentation from the Prime Minister that he could not go to his office or come out of it but there was a delegation lying in wait for him. He could not even take his lunch without them. He should have said: 'Gentlemen, you must be reasonable. A man must eat, and I am very hungry.' Of course, their natural answer would have been: 'But you are not half so hungry as we are.' And such an answer would have helped to explain, no doubt, why so many dismissals have taken place.

But I am serious in this matter. I repeat that if a man while in office is still a political partisan, then as I said in 1896, every opportunity should be given to him to go into politics. But let him have a fair trial first. Though my hon. friend disclaims any intention of adopting the spoils system, yet he has made dismissals which are notorious, and for which there was no possible justification, and which I believe are opposed to the welfare of Canada. We negotiated with the Americans a treaty for the settlement of all questions arising in connection with the boundary waters—a most important matter. That treaty which it took years to negotiate, was ratified only last session. It provided that all such questions should be settled by a tribunal of three men appointed by the American authorities, and three men appointed by the British authorities. These appointments on our side are imperial appointments.

Mr. HAGGART. What does the right hon. gentleman mean—'appointed by the British authority'? Do they receive from the imperial authorities the right to occupy the office?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am going to explain the matter as I understand it, and I know what it is, to some extent. After the statute had been passed, and after the Americans had appointed their commissioners we recommended to the imperial authorities three gentlemen well qualified for the position. They were, Sir George Gibbons, who had been chairman of the Canadian section while the treaty was in negotiation; Mr. L. A. Geoffrion, K.C., of Montreal, a man of unquestionable honour and great ability; and Mr. Barnhill, K.C., of St. John. Now, I understand that these recommendations were replaced by my hon. friend with recommendations of three other gentlemen instead: Mr. Magrath, formerly a member of this House; Mr. T. Chase Casgrain K.C., and Mr. Powell, K.C., of St. John. Against these gentlemen I have not a word to say; they are all men of honour and ability. But they are of no higher honour, and no greater ability than the men whom they supersede. The commission we recommended was in every way equal to the commission that has been recommended since, and in one instance, at all events, superior, because Sir George Gibbons was more conspicuously fit for the chairmanship of that position than any one else because he had an experience which nobody else has had. But, if we assume merely that the qualifications of these gentlemen are the same, the fact that our recommendations have been set aside and others made gives a partisan character to that commission which it should not have. That is a matter of the highest importance; and I do not think my hon. friend can defend in a manner satisfactory to the people the making of these recommendations to the imperial authorities. Such conduct is not calculated to improve our standing either with our American neighbours, or with the imperial authorities.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce). There are just three points about which I wish to make a few remarks. One is the assumption, as I take it to be, on the part of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that the people of the United States were devotees of the spoils system and that this was a blemish on their Civil Service administration which we in Canada ought not to have.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But which they have rectified since.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). If my right hon. friend had given that side of the case as well, I should not have had any quarrel with him. I have only a word to say on that point. Any advocate of thorough and progressive Civil Service reform who looks into the matter will find that in the United States within the last fifteen years an immense stride has been taken in the right direction. The President of the United States has power by proclamation to extend the Civil Service system to any branch of the service, and extensions have been so widely and fearlessly made by Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Roosevelt, and now by Mr. Taft, that at this moment the greatest part of the Civil Service of the United States is under strict supervision and strict Civil Service rules. I only wish that our Civil Service were in all its parts as far forward in that respect as is the Civil Service of the United States.

I concur entirely with the rule laid down by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I believe now, as I believed in 1896, that parliament ought not to take away from a civil servant the right to hold and express a political opinion. The only thing we quarrel with is a civil servant making an offensive display of his political opinion and engaging in partisan warfare. If the civil servant simply votes, or in the quiet of his own circle, gives a fair expression of his opinion on political matters, that is all right, and I should be sorry to see any citizen curtailed of that right. But when the civil servant goes beyond that and takes an active part in the contest between parties, he contravenes that salutory rule and, as has been said, should be given an opportunity to devote himself to politics rather than to the public service. The whole point is as to when this activity becomes offensive ; and I agree with my right hon. friend that a civil servant becomes an offensive partisan when he becomes an active worker or an active talker in the strife between the parties.

The whole point seems to me to be what evidence is sufficient to convict a man of having taken that offensive part. One kind of evidence may be necessary in one case and another kind of evidence in another case; the point is not so much how the evidence is to be obtained as the quality and sufficiency of the evidence itself. Sometimes you may require an examination in order to find out. There are other cases, as that cited by my hon. friend by my side, when it does not require that, but when a minister of the Crown or a member of parliament knows of his own knowledge of the case and takes the responsibility for it. I think that goes far enough and there is no necessity to go beyond that and hold an expensive or tedious or litigous investigation. I think the common sense of the House and of the country would support an opinion of that kind. I stand by my opinions to-day as I stood by them in 1896, and I believe that those are the principles upon which this government is standing and proposes to stand in any action it may take.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) cited another case in which he says this government has offended, that is in dispensing with the services of three gentlemen in a position to which they were recommended by the outgoing government. I think that is carrying it rather to an extreme. It does not seem to me that my right hon. friend is right in that either from the standpoint of policy or any other standpoint. From the standpoint of good administration of government, I do not think he is correct in that. Here were three gentlemen who were to be appointed by the Home government. They were to be recommended by the government of this country. That government being a Liberal government recommended three Liberals and my right hon. friend talks about partisanship. Is any one of these three gentlemen a Conservative? Not by long odds, they were all well known Liberals. No man found any fault with them, but the element of partisanship, certainly the flavour of partisan ship, attached to those three gentlemen. They were recommended, but my right hon. friend does not say they were appointed, and that appointment revoked. Take the circumstance of the case. Those three men were to fill a very important office; it was, you might say, a confidential office to a large extent. To my mind it would be absolutely incompatible that three strong opponents of the government in power should be the three men who are to have confidential relations with another government coming into power on an absolutely different line of political procedure. I do not find it necessary to argue that question, the mere presentation of it seems to me to carry with it its own sufficient evidence. When the names of these three commissioners were announced by the outgoing government hon. members on this side of the House felt that the opinions which had been expressed by some of the three gentlemen appointed put them out of sympathy with the attitude of the members and supporters of the present government upon the important matters with which the commissioners would have to deal. It would seem to me to be inconsistent and absurd that a government coming into power as this did, should be required to have as its confidential commission, engaged in that important business, dealing with this government and to a certain extent with other governments, men who were not in thorough sympathy and accord with the government by whom to some extent they would be directed, and with whom they would have to consult in a confidential way. That, I think, removes it altogether from the atmosphere of partisanship or recrimination in any way. If these gentlemen had looked at the thing properly they would have placed their resignations in the hands of the present government the very moment they knew that the power had passed over to those who were their political opponents and with whom their relations would perhaps not be the most pleasant and the most profitable.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the declaration of policy laid down by the Premier and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), and I do not think that any one on this side of the House can find fault with that policy as laid down. The difficulty to my mind is that from the information I received the government are not adhering to the declaration of policy on which they pinned their faith. The Premier says that he stands by the resolution introduced by Mr. Lake on July 17, 1905, in which it was declared by the House that the true policy was to be:

Whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged or be permitted to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of representatives to a provincial or Dominion legislature.

The Prime Minister says that is a correct announcement of the policy which this government is going to follow and he also says that he does not feel like retracting to any extent the statements made by him in 1896, that he practically stands by the rule which he laid down on that occasion. For the information of the House I would like to read a short statement of policy laid down by my hon. friend the Premier, as recorded in 'Hansard' of 1896, at page 388. It is as follows:

It is not the money of the Liberal party or of the Conservative party which is paid these gentlemen for their services; it is the money of the country, and the fact that these gentlemen worked openly, honourably and fairly, ought not to weigh against them if, at the same time, they do not neglect their duty as public officers. It seems to me that those gentlemen who are in the Civil Service of this country ought to have the same right as other electors, not only to vote but to work durng elections, subject to certain limitations which I shall endeavour to submit to the House. In the first place, I entirely agree that if any such official is guilty of any corrupt or dishonourable conduct in an election contest while working for one party or the other, such conduct ought to have only one result. In the second place, if, for the purpose of supporting one party or the other, he neglects his duty in any way as a public servant, and employs the time for which the country has paid him in furthering the interests of either party, it seems to me that such conduct is reprehensible and ought to be punished.

That was the policy laid down by my hon. friend in 1896 and to-day he says that he adheres pretty nearly in its entirety to that policy. The difficulty I find is that when pressed by my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) to say whether he will apply the policy to Conservatives as well as to Liberals, as he claimed it should be applied in 1896, his answer is: You did not do it and therefore——

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman read the next few lines of the quotation?

Mr. CARVELL. Certainly (reading):

I would be willing to go a little further than some of the hon. gentlemen opposite and have a further limitation, namely, that if an officer is in confidential relations with a minister or with a superior officer, he ought not to take such part in an election as would interfere with the discipline of the office which he holds.

I do not think anybody can quarrel with that proposition. For instance if a private secretary were to go out and take a hand in an election against his minister he should not complain very much if his services were dispensed with. My hon. friend says he will come down next to the declaration of policy as laid down in 1905, but the hon. gentlemen opposite changed their declaration of policy so far as they were concerned, because on May 26, 1908, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) introduced a resolution on which a vote was taken, and for which he himself and his leader voted. It is true that it was with regard to the Civil Service as a whole, and it is also true that the law as it now stands does not embrace every official which my hon. friend wished it to cover at that time. But here was his policy as laid down in 1908, three years after the announcement of the policy which the Premier says is to be the settled policy of the government now:

The Civil Service system of Canada should be based on merit and character alone, and all the appointments thereto should be made from candidates whose competency has been established through open competitive examinations conducted under a non-partisan civil service commission.

My hon. friend must have been reading that very admirable speech of his recently, because I find he reiterates the principle which he laid down at that time, which he will find on page 9141 of 'Hansard' of 1908. In this case my hon. friend was, I think, giving an answer to a question by Mr. Paterson as to what would be permissible under the United States system. I thought the other day when I read it that he had incorporated it as his opinion, and I observe that he does so to-day, and gives it is as a proper declaration of policy. It allows every man to vote, to express his own opinion, to express it privately.

The civil servants have a perfect right to the vote and to the franchise, as I think every civil servant should have, as he is a citizen of the country and he has a right to his vote; he may have his private opinion and is allowed to express it to his friend or his family or in any other private way, but the moment he goes outside that, it is political partisanship and may become a charge and subject for discipline.

I think we have now arrived at what is to be the policy of the present government regarding dismissals. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce asked a very fair and pertinent question, the one question upon which depends the whole matter of whether or not the government are playing fair, whether they are standing by their principles or not; that question is how much evidence is required in order to dismiss a man from his office. The Prime Minister states that he himself saw a case in Halifax where an official had just come from a polling booth in which he assaulted an agent of his. I am willing to admit that if the Prime Minister saw that and took the necessary steps to assure himself of the truth of this charge, it would be a sufficient ground on which to dismiss a public servant. Again if my hon. friend will appoint a reasonable and fair commission, admittedly of his own party friends, and I find no fault with that because many of them will be fair, and if after investigation is held it is found that the official has been an active politician, that he has transgressed the rules laid down by my right hon. friend in 1896, laid down by Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere in 1896, concurred in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in 1896, and reiterated in the declaration of the resolution of 1905, he can find no fault whatever if his services are dispensed with. The difficulty I find is that men have been dismissed from public office in this country within the last six weeks without a particle of investigation, upon evidence which must be false if it was given at all, and without adhering to the principles which my hon. friends lay down now as the rule they should follow.

Mr. HAGGART. Can you give one?

Mr. CARVELL. I will give a few illustrations.

Mr. HAGGART. Appointments made by order in council dismissed without any reason? I do not believe that you can give one.

Mr. CARVELL. I will give my hon. friend appointments by order in council dismissed without notice, without any right of defence and I believe, in one instance at least, without any reason whatever, a case in which I do not believe it is possible to find a reason. The first case to which I wish to refer is not exactly on the line raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart). Within 25 hours of the accession to power of this government, a notice was sent out by direction of the sergeant-at-arms of this House to something like 25 officials telling them that unless they were instructed otherwise they need not report for duty. I do not assume for a moment that the sergeant-at-arms would take on himself to order a man not to report for duty unless some persons higher in authority or whom he considered in authority had directed him to do so. I shall read one of these documents which is dated Ottawa, October 7, 1911. Mark you the 7th of October, and the government were not sworn in until the 8th of October:

Dear Sir,—I am desired by the sergeant-at-arms to inform you that unless you are notified to attend here it will not be necessary for you to report for duty next session.

Yours truly,
H. W. BOWIE,
Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do not think that even the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) will consider there was much investigation at that early date, and I am sure from a long personal knowledge of the gentleman who occupies the honourable position of sergeant-at-arms that he would not issue orders of that kind without instructions.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). What kind of officials were these?

Mr. CARVELL. House of Commons messengers.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the hon. gentleman aware that exactly the same thing was done with all employees along the Welland Canal in 1896?

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend will have an opportunity to give his end of it, and may give all the instances he wants. I am simply trying to see if my hon. friends are carrying out the principles they enunciated to-day. It is not an answer to cite what was done in 1896. I might ask my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) if he is aware that less than 100 years ago men were hanged in this country for petty larceny. That does not make it right to-day. There have been many changes in the civilization and laws of this country in the last 100 years and even, I am glad to say, since 1896. I wish to give credit to the Minister of Customs by saying that so far as I know he has not transgressed the rule laid down this evening or the rule which has been the settled policy of this country since 1896. To my personal knowledge every Customs official in the constituency I represent has had a charge against him by some person of offensive partisanship. I presume that has been done by my opponent because I know that more than a week before parliament met my opponent and two other hungry office-seekers hied themselves to Ottawa and remained here for over a week.

They left Woodstock on a certain Saturday and did not return for a week, or until the next Monday or Tuesday, and I think while they were away they saw my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). My hon. friend does not mean to say his opponent was an office seeker.

Mr. CARVELL. Well, I am not sure; perhaps I should say two hungry office-seekers. As I said before, charges of the same kind were laid against every official in the Customs Department in the county of Carleton save one. There is one official about whose office there is such an awful fight that they did not dare to lay a charge, and I understand he is to be allowed to remain in his position. I want to say in justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Reid) that he did not act with certain other ministers of the Crown in that, but he gave these people a chance. He notified them in a gentlemanly manner that a charge had been laid against them and asked what they had to say about it. I have no fault to find with my hon. friend in that regard. All I am asking to-day is for him to give them a chance, to give them a hearing; and if they are guilty, if they come within the rule laid down here this afternoon, their services can be dispensed with. If they are not guilty, I take it for granted that my hon. friend will be fair enough to say that he will allow them to remain in their positions. If he adopts that procedure, I am satisfied there will not be very many dismissals from the Customs Department in the county of Carleton.

Now I come to another department, and that is the Post Office Department, where the minister has not acted as generously as did the Minister of Customs, I am sorry to say, but where the spoils system is in full swing. In that department men have been dismissed with only about forty-eight hours' notice. I find that ladies have been dismissed who have occupied their positions for years. Of course, they have not got votes. They never did anything and never tried to do anything, but they are dismissed on two days' notice. Let me give my hon. friend (Mr. Pelletier) some information. In the first place, with regard to the postmaster at Woodstock, he is a gentleman who has occupied that position for some thirteen or fourteen years. He obtained a leave of absence after the writs of election were issued, went west, and did not return until about a week before polling day. He is a gentleman, so far as I know, who never lifted a finger or took an active part of any kind in the elections. That man was waited upon by his successor about three or four days prior to the first of December, who told him that he had received the appointment of postmaster in the town of Woodstock, and wanted him to be ready to hand over the office to him on the 1st of December. The postmaster wrote to the Post Office inspector to know what it meant, and I have here a letter which I received from the former yesterday:

Woodstock, Dec. 4, 1911.

My dear Sir,—I did not receive any notice from Ottawa. Mr. Winslow was the first one to tell me. I then wrote Dr. Coulter—— that would be the inspector at St. John, and not the Deputy Postmaster General.

—asking him if he had any word. In his reply he said Mr. Winslow had sent him his oath of office and that he would be up or send some one to make the change in a few days. That is all I know about it.

Yours truly,
C. L. SMITH.

Mr. MACDONALD. Was there no notice from Ottawa?

Mr. CARVELL. No notice whatever. The only intimation that Mr. Smith ever received was, as I told you, about four days before the change, when Mr. Winslow walked into his office and said to him: I am your successor and I am going to take charge here on the 1st December. Oh, but my hon. friends will say: This man was a partisan.

Mr. EDWARDS. Take the case of the Souris postmaster.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not know anything about the Souris postmaster at all.

Mr. EDWARDS. You do not want to know.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend knows anything in that regard he will have an opportunity later on to speak. I want the Postmaster General to follow me in what I am now saying. He will doubtless remark: 'Oh, but I have the word of a gentleman in whom I have confidence that the postmaster at Woodstock was an offensive partisan. Therefore, I acted upon his word and dismissed the official in question. He may possibly come within the policy laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I have evidence which satisfies me anyway because I have the word of a gentleman who was good enough to be our candidate at the last election.

Mr. MACDONALD. Why should he not have sent a notice?

Mr. CARVELL. He did not send a notice anyway, that is sure.

I will now take up the next case, and here is where I want my hon. friend (Mr. Pelletier), to follow me. On the 27th November the following document was despatched from the post office inspector's office at St. John. And here I might state for the benefit of the Postmaster General that so numerous must have been the dismissals in the province of New Brunswick that the sending out of a circular had to be resorted to. These circulars were struck off on a typewriter and just filled in with the name of the post office when it was obtained, and that is all there is to it:

P. O. Inspector's Office, St. John, N.B.,
November 27, 1911.

Postmaster at Bath, N.B.

I beg to enclose herewith duplicate blank transfer receipts which you will be good enough to have filled in with all the blanks you have on hand, and prepare them so that they will be ready for the officer from this department who will be at your office on or about the 1st December to transfer the office.

(Signed): N. R. COLTER,
P. O. inspector.

Now, it happens that the post office at Bath, N. B., was in charge of a postmistress, a Miss Bohen, who was appointed to the office some five or six years ago—I have forgotten the exact date, but it must be that long. She is a lady who certainly did not vote and never opened her mouth one way or the other towards influencing the election in the county of Carleton or anywhere else in the Dominion. This lady was ruthlessly removed from her office on two days' notice, but no charge was preferred against her and no opportunity was afforded her to defend herself. And doubtless this action was taken on the evidence of the same gentleman who preferred the charge against the postmaster at Woodstock. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he thinks this is right conduct in the case of Bath post office, or what justification could be urged for the dismissal of a lady who did not vote and who certainly took no part in the election campaign? I want to know if my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), is satisfied that people should be ruthlessly driven from office without being given a chance to defend themselves?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not heard of a single instance from the hon. gentleman yet of an appointment by order in council.

Mr. CARVELL. Then my hon. friend's hearing is defective, and his powers of digesting evidence are very defective also.

Mr. HAGGART. Postmasters are not appointed by order in council.

Mr. CARVELL. Well, I can only tell my hon. friend that the officer at Woodstock was certainly appointed by order in council.

Mr. HAGGART. He may have been.

Mr. CARVELL. He must be.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know that.

Mr. CARVELL. It is a town of nearly four thousand people, and can you imagine a man appointed to an office of that importance without an order in council? Of course, I may be wrong, but I do not think so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What difference does it make?

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, what difference does it make? This is the case of the postmistress at Bath, and I think the revenue of the post office there must be in the vicinity of $1,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The appointment would not be made by order in council.

Mr. CARVELL. Would not?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. CARVELL. What in the world is the difference then? I believe both these were appointments by order in council, but I may be wrong.

Mr. RHODES. I would like to ask if the hon. member adheres to the principle of accepting the recommendation of the defeated candidate?

Mr. CARVELL. I realize that when it comes to appointments the defeated candidate in my county has the say and not I.

Mr. RHODES. What do you think?

Mr. CARVELL. I realize that when these appointments are made they are made on the recommendation of the defeated candidate. I do not so much object to that. But, Sir, I do object to the Postmaster General taking the recommendation of a defeated candidate and absolutely discharging from office a postmistress who has not violated the rules of the department in the faintest iota. Then again, if my hon. friend the Postmaster General takes the word of a member of this House, the latter is here on the floor of this House to defend his action to state whether or not he knows of his own knowledge that the charges are true; but the defeated candidate is not here and in this case he is not speaking from his own knowledge.

Mr. EMMERSON. The charge should be put in writing.

Mr. CARVELL. I go further than that and say that the official concerned should be given an investigation and given a chance to clear himself. In connection with the post office at Bath, what do I find? I find a petition signed by 164 of the patrons of that office addressed to the hon. the Postmaster General as follows:

To the hon. the Postmaster General.

We, the undersigned voters of the parish of Kent, county of Carleton, province of New Brunswick, and patrons of the Bath post office in said county, enter a protest against the removal, without just cause or reason, of Miss Mary A. Bohen, late postmistress, who has given us entire satisfaction in every particular, and the removal of the office from the business section of the village.

We humbly ask for her reinstatement.

I will send this over to my hon. friend the Postmaster General and I sincerely hope that he will give it due consideration.

Mr. PELLETIER. Will the hon. member kindly mail it to me.

Mr. CARVELL. I may say that I have to-day received a letter from the lady, as follows:

Mr. F. B. Carvell, M.P.

Dear Sir,—I wish to inform you that I was dismissed from office as postmistress, Bath, P.Q., on December 1, after two or three days' notice. I had the impression no non-partisans would be removed from office, and as I come under that class, I did not bring any influence to bear to try to retain it.

I do not imagine that influence would have amounted to very much when the Postmaster General is willing to act on the meagre evidence or on the character of the evidence on which he made his recommendation for dismissal. There are two or three important post offices in my county in which the officials have been treated in exactly the same way. I refer to the post offices at Florenceville and Benton. Only two days' notice was given in the same way. Yet our hon. friends opposite lay down a policy which sounds all right, but in applying that policy they do the grossest injustice. But bad as is the conduct of affairs in this respect in the Post Office Department, if you want to find the spoils system reduced to an absurdity, carried almost to the point of petty larceny, go to the Public Works Department. I have just one illustration of this to give to the House and to the minister, if he were here; and I hope he will take the trouble to read this in 'Hansard' to-morrow. Fortunately for me, and I think for my people as well, I have very little patronage. Perhaps there is no other constituency in Canada in which there is so little as in the county of Carleton, and perhaps there is no other constituency in which there is so large a percentage of office-holders driven out as though they had no right to be British subjects. There are, I think, to-day only two officials of the Public Works Department in existence in that county. One of them has not been decapitated so far, but is expecting to be every day, because we are hearing of it on the streets, not because he has taken any part in an election, but because at some time in the last three or four years, he is alleged to have made statements derogatory to the character of the defeated candidate. The other official was the clerk of works on the public building at Hartland. The money having been voted for this work and the contract let by public tender, I asked the people of Hartland to give me the name of a gentleman who would have not only the ability but the honesty to see that this work was properly carried on. The result was that a petition was drawn up and signed by Liberals and Conservatives alike to the number of 30 or 40 of the leading people of the village, asking that Mr. Macfarlane be appointed to the office. That petition is on file in the Public Works Department. The man was appointed and began his duties in March or April last. The building progressed during the summer time and is now practically completed. I am informed that it will not take more than two months longer to complete it and hand it over to the government. This gentleman certainly took no part in the election campaign; he never attended a meeting, never looked sideways at either a Liberal or a Conservative, but remained in the post office and attended to his duties to the entire satisfaction of every resident of that community, whether Liberal or Conservative. But a hungry Conservative wanted a job, and within four or five weeks after the election Mr. Macfarlane received notice to hand over on the next day all the papers and everything under his control to the man who was appointed in his place, and who was actually one of the men who had signed the petition six months previously asking that Mr. Macfarlane be appointed. That is an illustration of the way in which things are conducted in the Public Works Department. If this is not petty larceny in public patronage, I would like to know where to find it. I have no desire to go over the ground covered by previous speakers, except so far as to call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the flimsy argument he advanced as to the reason why the gentlemen who were nominated for the Waterways Commission were removed from their positions. He says forsooth, that it was because a new government with new ideas, was coming into power, and he is almost surprised that the three gentlemen had not felt called upon to resign their positions voluntarily. My hon. friend is not so narrow as that. If he would go to England or the United States or to any other country and apply that doctrine, he would find that on a change of government the whole diplomatic service would have to be changed.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The diplomatic service is not a party service.

Mr. CARVELL. These commissioners constitute a court, but so hungry were hon. gentlemen opposite for the spoils of office that they were willing to remove men in that position. I think sufficient evidence has been given to show that these hon. gentlemen are not living up to the fine professions which they made in 1896, and which they make to-day. All we ask is that they should carry out the doctrine they laid down themselves and that men should not be driven from office without being given a chance to be heard in their own defence. If they be given that opportunity, and are found guilty, no one will have anything to say on this side. On the other hand if they remove a man without investigation as they have done in the particular case to which I refer, they are false to their own doctrine, and are guilty of deceiving the people.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). There seems to be a misunderstanding with regard to the appointments and dismissals of officials of this government. One would think that the prerogative of appointing and dismissing belonged to the opposition, but we must not forget in the first instance that the prerogative for the appointments to the Civil Service is vested in the Crown, subject to the statutory limitations which parliament imposes. Parliament can impose any conditions it likes. Parliament can enact whether civil servants can engage in political warfare or not. The removal of these civil servants is not in the power of the government but is vested in His Royal Highness the Governor General, and His Royal Highness will not remove any such official without good cause.

Mr. CARVELL. Does the hon. gentleman mean to convey the idea that His Royal Highness had anything to do with the removal of Miss Bohen from the office of postmistress?

Mr. HAGGART. I am speaking of parties appointed under an Act of the Parliament of Canada. I am speaking of appointments under order in council by His Royal Highness, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that His Royal Highness will go into every item of evidence as to the reasons for the removal of any such civil servant before consenting to it. I know that to be the case. If the evidence be not sufficient, His Royal Highness will send back to the minister for further reasons. Remember I am speaking of the inside and outside service to which appointments are made by Act of Parliament, and the conditions of which are defined by statute. I was astounded to hear the right hon. the leader of the opposition say that appointments not made by the Governor General, by virtue of his prerogative, but by the Imperial authorities, had been cancelled without reason. I doubt very much if the appointments ever were made that he speaks of. He is simply putting up a bogey before this House for the purpose of making an attack upon the government. I would ask the right hon. gentleman to point to a single party appointed by order in council who has been removed by this government. The right hon. gentleman must know that when appointments are made by His Royal Highness, under the prerogative of the Crown, such appointments would not be revoked without sufficient reason and evidence being furnished to His Royal Highness; and if any hon. gentleman considers he has occasion to find fault in any such case, let him move for the papers and have them brought before this House and see by them whether there was not sufficient evidence to justify the action taken.

The hon. gentleman has spoken about the removal of postmasters from one end of the country to the other, but he must know that such appointments do not come under the Civil Service Act, but are made by the minister and are revocable by him at pleasure. I would refer the hon. gentleman to cases in which the power of dismissing was exercised in a most cruel degree by the late government in the department of railways. Lockmasters on our canals, and others who had been employed on these canals for years, were removed ruthlessly without reason by the late Minister of Railways, simply at the request of members supporting the government. I must say to the credit of some of those members that they were honourable enough not to exercise the power given them, but others did not fail to take advantage of their opportunities, and even should this government exercise the power of dismissal in the cases which do not come under the Civil Service Act, they would be only following the bad example set by their predecessors.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). When the hon. member for Carleton, N. B., (Mr. Carvell) was speaking, I asked him what he would say about the high-handed acts of the government which he supported so strenuously in their dismissals of men on the Welland canal, which runs through the constituency I have the honour to represent. The hon. gentleman was gracious enough, instead of answering my question, to say that I could address my words to the House. I intend to avail myself of his kind permission. In 1896, when the government led by the present leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took office, without a word on record from anybody concerned, on which to base such an action, a letter was written by the Minister of Railways and Canals to the superintendent of the Welland canal at St. Catharines instructing him to dismiss at once all lock tenders, lockmasters and others on that canal. That is, he was to tell them they need not report for duty after that season, unless they were re-appointed. No charge was made against these men, and no reason could be given for their dismissal except that they had been appointed by a Conservative government. They were excellent men and had done their work well; no one suggested the contrary. Simply the hon. member who represented Lincoln down to 1900 came to Ottawa and saw to it that the letter was written and the dismissals took place. Let me quote what the Hon. A. G. Blair, Minister of Railways said about it. This will be found in 'Hansard' of 1897, vol. 1, page 2122:

> At the close of navigation in the fall of 1896, all employees were notified through the superintendent by letter from myself as minister, that their services were not further required, and that they would be notified before the opening of navigation next spring if they were to be taken on again.

There were 130 of these dismissals at once. The canal could not be managed without some experienced lockmasters, so forty or fifty Conservatives were kept on for another season to teach the new appointees, and then they went too. We hear hon. gentlemen opposite to-day voicing beautiful precepts, setting up high standards of honour and laying down fine rules of discipline to be applied to the Civil Service. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that public officials should not be dismissed so long as they merely expressed their own opinions and voted. But no one pretended that those lock tenders and lockmasters had been active partisans. The only thing against them, as I said, was that they were appointed by a Conservative government. These hon. gentlemen are worried about the inhumanity of the spoils system. What a great difference it makes in these gentlemen that they are there, rather than that they are here. What wonderful ideals of morality have taken possession of their minds since they were beaten by the people on the 21st of September. Some of these men who were then dismissed are living to-day in poverty. And as fast as I can, I intend to give back to them, if I have any influence with the government, the same positions they had in 1896. And if any have died since then, so far as I can accomplish it, their sons, if they are needy, or some other men whose only fault is voting for the Conservative party, shall be appointed in these places, instead of the men who were ungracious, even inhuman enough, to have their neighbours dismissed and take their positions, to the numbers of one hundred and eighty in the Niagara district alone.

The leader of the opposition says that officials should not be dismissed if they only expressed their opinion. Did he ever hear of the case of the postmaster of Beamsville, Ontario? This postmaster voted, and did nothing else. But after the results in that village—in which resided Mr. Gibson the Liberal candidate—were known, he remarked: 'I guess Gibson's in the soup.' This was not said during the election, but after the election was over. And the man was dismissed for saying it. Gibson was not 'in the soup' to the extent that the postmaster thought, but he got there four years afterwards. And was there an investigation in this case? After the man was dismissed, they thought it necessary to hunt up a reason for dismissing him, and they succeeded in bringing forward the evidence I have indicated and so secured the wonderful verdict that Mr. Fairbrother was a partisan. Is it any wonder that Lincoln put Mr. Gibson 'in the soup' since 1900? Is it any wonder that on each successive occasion after that, when the late government appealed for the verdict of Lincoln, the majority against them in that riding was larger and larger? I hope the hon. gentlemen who have worked themselves up into such a state of indignation about the management of the Post Office Department will read the discussion in 'Hansard' about the Beamsville post office, and will cogitate over that case a little. If they do so, I think it will be many years before they will find fault with the administration of the post office as it is now being administered in the interest of the people.

There are one or two other matters I will refer to now that I am on my feet. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) who moved the resolution, wants a declaration of the government's policy. He did not worry about that for fifteen years, while his friends were in power, but now he wants a strict declaration and interpretation of the government's policy in this matter. This government is young, this government is beginning and from all signs it will be able on this question of patronage or any other to give my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) plenty of demonstrations of the fitness of their policy and the approval accorded to that policy by the people.

He does not propose to discuss matters in his own constituency, I suppose because there are no complaints there to amount to anything. He spoke in general terms. He referred to the case of Mr. Ham and said that question five on to-day's Order Paper gives the reason assigned, that because Mr. Ham expected to be dismissed he quit. What was he afraid of? What reason had he to suppose he would have been dismissed if he had not done something for which he should be dismissed? I could point out that several men on the Welland canal have left the service since September 21, because of having been violent and active partisans, and because they expected to be dismissed. They have taken positions in factories or other places because they expected that this government would restore what was taken away in 1896, not by petty larceny, but by grand larceny, when 180 heads went into the basket by one letter from the Minister of Railways, depriving the men and their families of a livelihood without a minute's notice. The hon. member speaks of the dismissal of a minor official as petty larceny, but here was a grand larceny approved of by the leader of the opposition, when he became Prime Minister in 1896. Why did Mr. Ham not wait until he was put out of office? He went out of his own accord.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). He was dismissed by Mr. Crosby, the candidate of the Prime Minister in the recent election, who once held a seat in this House. The young man thought Mr. Crosby was clothed with power to make the dismissal. That was all there was to it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think Mr. Crosby was quite within his rights if he found there was reason for dismissing a man to dismiss him. Who should have been asked if the man was an offensive partisan if not Mr. Crosby?

The hon. member says that he wants an investigation first and wants fair play, and he does not want members of parliament to say whether fair play is given or not. Take my own case, who is responsible to the people of Lincoln for the public service on the canal in my county? Who, under the constitution, has to account for the way that work is being done but myself? Who is to say whether that work is done properly and whether the servants who are doing that work are doing it in the public interest? The member for the constituency must be responsible for the proper administration of the patronage of his county. He is responsible to the people, the people are supposed to know him, and will see to it that he fulfils his duty. The argument of my hon. friend that something was done 15 years ago or 100 years ago is about the logic applied by hon. gentlemen on this occasion. They do not care, and do not want the country to care what they do. They want everything wrong which they have done in the last 15 years to stand, wrong as it is, and they expect us to be so derelict in our duty as not to clean up this public service and put in good men where bad men were put in by the Laurier government since 1896.

Now, let there be no mistake; this is not a matter of spoils at all, but it is a matter of restitution to the people, of the service which has been wrongly interfered with by the Liberal government since 1896. Who started the spoils system? Who had the postmasters dismissed? We remember the case that was discussed in this House eight or ten years ago—I do not remember at this moment the man's name or the place in question but it was in Nova Scotia —where, on a stormy night in an election campaign, the Conservative candidate, his speakers and driver, were entertained by a man in order to save them from the necessity of driving ten or twenty miles through the storm to get home. The present chief justice of Ontario, Sir Wm. Mulock, then Postmaster General, characterized that as offensive partisanship on the part of this man who happened to be a postmaster notwithstanding the fact that this officer was simply playing the part of the good Samaritan, and, being at the meeting, invited these gentlemen to go to his home, an invitation which they accepted. The dismissal of that man was justified by the government then in power. In the places of these men were put men who, they say, were as good as the officials who were dismissed. In 1896 they practically made a clean sweep. We are not after the spoils, we are not looking for vengeance in the matter, but we are asking—and we believe we will obtain what we ask—for a reconstruction of the public service by putting out of office the men who have been put in by the Liberal government simply and solely because they were Liberals and at the expense of Conservatives and their families against most of whom there was not a jot or tittle of objection. We say that there should be a reconstruction of the service upon a proper basis, and if it does happen that honest, able and intellectual persons who happen to belong to the Conservative party are put into office I am sure that there is no proper minded Liberal or any other person who can find fault with such appointment.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, as my department has been to a large extent the subject matter of the discussion which has taken place this afternoon, I wish just to say a few words, and to declare before this House the general line of policy I have adopted, and which I am going to continue in the future so that every member of this House will know exactly where I stand, and it will prevent probably many people from asking questions, except that in some cases what I may say will not be deemed to have answered them beforehand. I am doing this for the general advantage of every one concerned. But, before saying the very few words that I have to say, I would ask my friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) not to think for one moment that I meant not to be courteous to him in not answering further the letter which he wrote to me. I will give my reasons now which I think he will fully understand. He wrote me on the 28th November and I answered that very day by the general formal letter which is always sent in cases like that. It is practically an acknowledgment of the receipt of the letter. Then I said I would consider the matter, but when I came to consider the matter I found that the postmaster in question had been dismissed thirty days before, so that the consideration which I had said I would give could not be given then. I did not mean to be discourteous at all but the facts were as I have stated them, and it was then only a question of considering whether the postmaster had been rightly dismissed or not. Well, what are the facts? The gentleman who was postmaster in 1896 was dismissed without investigation. He is living to-day, and he has asked me to give him back his post-mastership. I have done it, and I shall do it in every case of this nature. If there is one thing in regard to which I shall not hesitate it shall be that, the facts having been ascertained, if one of our political friends, whose head has been cut off by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, comes to me for relief he shall get it. I would be unworthy of the position which I occupy to-day if I did not do that.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman restore the head if it should transpire that there was not a single resident in the vicinity where this postmaster lived?

Mr. PELLETIER. I am coming to that. But let us satisfy ourselves that I am right so far. This is a most interesting case and I am surprised that my hon. friends have taken it as a sample. This file is a very interesting one to read. What do we find in it? It goes back to the days of 1896 and what do we find in 1896? A gentleman by the name of Russell writes to Sir Wm. Mulock, then Postmaster-General, and what does he say? Now, let my hon. friends, who have such grand and lofty ideas to-day about what should be done by this government, listen:

Dear Mr. Mulock,—I enclose clipping from the 'Evening Mail' containing a list of the officers of a newly formed Tory association.

This was a short time after the election of 1896, and we see that these bad Tories were already forming an association for which I congratulate them heartily.

The councillor Henley——

Mark that name; that is the man I have appointed—

The councillor Henley, named as one of the vice-presidents, is your postmaster and Mr. Paterson's preventive officer, at Spry Bay. The people of the district cannot understand it. He tells them that he cannot be removed and they conclude that he cannot be or would have been long ago. They have dragged the life out of me——

The boys down there.

—about the matter and I have written you and Mr. Paterson till I am ashamed to say any more. Could you not appoint your commissioner and let us get some of these cases closed out? I do not see that this case needs the intervention of a commissioner at all.

Yours truly,

B. RUSSELL.

Now, this gentleman whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, was B. Russell. He says that people had been dragging the life out of him. But evidently Sir William Mulock was not of opinion that the case was as clear as Mr. Russell put it. What do we find? In March, 1897, three or four months afterwards, a telegram from this same gentleman, Mr. B. Russell, who says:

My nominee for Spry Bay post office is Gaspard J. Leslie.

Now, on the same day I find in Mr. Mulock's own handwriting:

Appoint Mr. Russell's nominee.

Where is the investigation in that case? Do my hon. friends seriously pretend that after our friends have been treated that way we shall protect the persons they have put in office and let our own people suffer? Let it be clearly understood that in such cases our friends, if they are still alive, will get back their jobs.

Mr. CARVELL. Suppose they are dead, what then?

Mr. PELLETIER. Then we will pray for them.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the Postmaster General tell us what he will do in case a postmaster is not dead?

Mr. PELLETIER. That is another case; sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. Where the postmaster is proved to have taken an active part in politics he will be dismissed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Whether on the one side or the other?

Mr. PELLETIER. I am not going to consider a case of such remote possibility as a postmaster fighting his own government.

Mr. CARVELL. You have a good many things to learn.

Mr. PELLETIER. I do not pretend to be a practical politician, but let us take the cases as they will occur.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend says: When an official has taken an active part in politics he will dismiss him. Suppose he finds that before the elections of the 21st of September, the official took an active part on the Conservative side, will he dismiss him?

Mr. PELLETIER. If cases occur of that description, which I do not expect, and which we cannot reasonably expect, we will consider them.

Now as to evidence, I say that it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule. I will in all cases accept the word of a member of parliament who comes to me and says that he knows enough to demand that man's dismissal. I do expect, however, that the member of parliament will be fair and just enough, and if he has been elected by his constituents he is considered by them to be fair and honest.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will you take an hon. member's word and retain the office-holder in his position?

Mr. PELLETIER. The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) should not confront me with such a cruel dilemma. I do not expect—and I will answer his question at the same time as that of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley)—any of my friends on the opposite side to make any such recommendation, so it is no use discussing that matter at all. If a member of parliament has been deceived—no man can avoid making mistakes, I make mistakes myself, and everybody makes mistakes—if it is found that a mistake or wrong has been committed I will not allow that wrong to remain without rectification.

Mr. CARVELL. Will my hon. friend be good enough to look into the case of the postmistress at Bath at once?

Mr. PELLETIER. I am coming to that. I know of a case—I do not remember the name but I think our good friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce may be able to give it—under the late government, where a member of parliament made a recommendation for the dismissal of an official and a mistake was made. The brother of that officer had taken an active part in the election, and it was discovered that a mistake had been committed, but the late government would not rectify that mistake. I shall not do that. If I make a mistake I shall be broad and manly enough to see that the error is rectified. I have made dismissals, but not with pleasure. I have not dismissed one single postmaster in my own riding, but I have had to dismiss quite a few postmasters in other places and I shall dismiss more; but, in so doing I shall endeavour to keep in view the principles of justice laid down in the resolution unanimously adopted by parliament.

We have been told by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that postmasters should not fall under this rule. Why, Sir, this is a brand new doctrine. Why should not postmasters fall under this rule? Do not postmasters know, have they not been told, for the last fifteen years that they come under this rule? Have they not been dismissed by hundreds and hundreds for violating this rule? So they come under it to such an extent that they are not appointed by order in council. Very few postmasters, as my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) knows, were appointed by order in council. If I mistake not, it is only in cities of 20,000 population or over, that appointments are made in such a way. Now, the postmasters referred to by the member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) are not appointed by order in council.

They are simply dismissed on the strength of a few words in pencil on a corner of the letter of the member of the House who asks for such dismissal. That is all. Now, why should a postmaster who holds his position as long as the Post Office Department is willing to leave it to him, not fall under this rule? I consider that he does.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There are hundreds of persons holding post offices in this country who have been almost forced to accept the position; they did not want to take it.

Mr. PELLETIER. Then I would not suppose that they would be very sorry to lose it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). But there may be no other person in the county whose residence is so well located as this person's, and in the interest of the public service he should be retained there.

Mr. PELLETIER. Some of our friends on the other side have said: Have we come to this that these dismissals should be carried on in this way? It seems that now we are in power and our friends on the opposition side are going to abandon all the principles they have laid down, all the policy which they have put before the country as far as the Civil Service is concerned. They want us to be great saints when we are in power so that their friends shall be protected. It is a pretty clever move on their part, but it is rather thin.

Now, I am holding investigations. My hon. friend will be pleased to hear that I have one commissioner acting in Quebec, and another in Montreal. I believe in the principle that a man should be heard in his own defence. It is a British principle, and it is a good one all over the world.

Mr. CARVELL. Why didn't you carry it out?

Mr. PELLETIER. I did carry it out in all the cases in which I did not consider that I had positive evidence before me.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman state who are the commissioners at Montreal and Quebec?

Mr. PELLETIER. At Quebec it is Mr. Lawrence Stafford. I am not sure who the commissioner is at Montreal, but I will tell my hon. friend to-morrow. Some of the members of this House have asked me for dismissals, and I will say to their credit that when I have told them: 'If you have not enough facts to demand this, it is in your own interest that an investigation should take place,' they have assented. In those cases we have written letters to the postmaster saying: 'The department is informed that you have taken an active part in politics; do you admit or deny this?' This will save the trouble of an investigation in many cases. I have received letters stating that it is true, and in such cases I have saved the country the cost of an investigation, for which I suppose nobody will blame me unless possibly the investigator. Others write long letters on the great principle that a man should not lose his job. These I just dismiss, because I know they cannot deny the charge. If a postmaster writes saying: 'No, Sir, I have not taken any part in politics,' that case is investigated. Now, I appeal to my hon. friends opposite whether this method of dealing with this matter is not fair and right. They did much worse than that during the 15 years they were in office. I know of my own knowledge that people who never meddled in politics at all were dismissed to make room for people who had been waiting a long time to get their jobs, and I know that some of our friends were obliged to leave this country and go to the United States to earn their living because they were dismissed by the late government. With regard to the Bath post office, I expect the papers in a few minutes. I have been able to get some papers with reference to Spry Bay; but I had no notice of this, and my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General knows that with 13,582 post offices in the country, it is not very easy to remember each case individually.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was pretty hard to get him to dismiss anybody.

Mr. PELLETIER. But there are records in the department to show that he did so, and that he put his initials on letters in which people asked him for the dismissal without giving a reason.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like my hon. friend to mention that case. I know of only one case in which a gentleman was dismissed because I was weak enough to accept the word of the member, and when I was assailed in the House for dismissing the postmaster at Souris, Manitoba, Mr. Sifton, who had asked for the dismissal, would not come into the House.

Mr. PELLETIER. You have been his colleague for fifteen years.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, he was not my colleague; he was a private member of the House. He is your leader now. That is the only case in which a dismissal was made while I was in the department.

Mr. PELLETIER. That is probably the case I was referring to, because the papers were put before me the other day. Now, let us come to Woodstock, where we are told the postmaster was dismissed without cause or reason. We have some friends on this side of the House who come from New Brunswick and they know something about that case. I am informed, and credibly informed, that this is one of the worse cases that could be put before the House, that the postmaster there is a violent partisan.

Mr. CARVELL. We would like some proof of that.

Mr. PELLETIER. If my hon. friend will wire down to Woodstock, he will get it. I have all the information I require to justify me in acting as I did. There are members on this side of the House who know something about it; I have consulted them, and they have told me that there is not the least possible doubt about this case. With regard to the Bath case, as the papers have not arrived, I am not in a position to discuss it, but I feel sure that I have not applied to that case any other principle than the one I have stated, which the hon. member for Carleton found to be so good that he greeted my statement with applause.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. Postmaster General finds himself in error about the Bath case, will he reopen the matter and allow an investigation?

Mr. PELLETIER. Most decidedly. As a minister of the Crown it is my duty, and I will not be a party to injustice. But I will try to give prompt satisfaction to the people who expect us to do something, and not let the papers lie on our desks, or in the pigeon holes of the department for too long a time. I wanted to let our friends on both sides of the House know that there is no doubt about the stand which I have taken, and which I will continue to take.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am sure that my hon. friend the Premier did not realize, when addressing the House earlier in the afternoon, that he was giving to the House and the country a splendid opportunity of learning the principles on which his administration was going to act, and did not know that his Postmaster General had made a very large addition to the resolution, which every one in this House agreed to in 1905, and which the Premier adopted as the policy of his government in dealing with the outside service.

My hon. friend from Lincoln was the first to announce this additional feature of the Conservative policy. In the early days of the session he was not very enthusiastic about the personnel of this government, and not specially pleased that his abilities were not recognized in its formation. Evidently, however, he has got new light; he has had a vision. He has been informed that he can have removed all the employees on the Welland canal he wants to have removed. Since then he has discovered some admiration for the present government. If he will now only bring on some of those resolutions that have been standing in his name for the last four weeks, every member of the House will be interested.

He has told the Postmaster General that there was a postmaster at Beamsville who was dismissed and the result was that 'Gibson was in the soup,' and that the county of Lincoln was in the same predicament ever since 1896, on account of the wholesale dismissals made at that time. Well, if history should repeat itself as it often does, my hon. friend from Lincoln had better be careful because should the policy of this administration be carried into effect both he and the Postmaster General will speedily find themselves in the soup. Then we are told that it is not the spoils system, but a simple matter of restitution of rights which is being put into force. Here we have the old Conservative doctrine that they have an inherent divine right to rule, and that no one not belonging to that party has any right to hold any office in the administration of the country, and consequently that because in some time past Conservatives went out of office in some places and vacancies were created which were filled by Liberals, these offices must be filled again by Conservatives. My hon. friend the Postmaster General is too shrewd not to know that Mr. Henley, postmaster of Spry Bay, was the vice-president of the Conservative Association. If Mr. Henley was vice-president of the Conservative Association he ought to have been dismissed. My hon. friend cannot, with his theory of restitution, set aside the doctrine which the First Minister put forward as the basis on which this government would act and which he preached so loudly in his addresses to the people. No one who sat in the last parliament can fail to recollect the different occasions on which he preached about the evils of patronage. Look at the resolution moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) two years ago denouncing the evils of patronage. But my hon. friend is there and we are here. He is there and he can implement these splendid ideas which he so frequently inculcated when on this side. The Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) says that we want the men on the treasury benches to be great saints. We do not expect them to be great saints. We expect them to turn out as great sinners as did their Conservative predecessors when they had to give up office, as these hon. gentlemen will have to do at an early day. I thought we were going to have a clear understanding of what the policy of this government was going to be regarding this large question. I thought that the First Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce were going to make an attempt to give us something tangible in the shape of Civil Service reform, and the elimination of the spoils system which they so vigorously condemned in days gone by. Until we heard the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) and the hon. the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), there was a well defined policy with regard to the inside Civil Service, laid down by statute, and also a well defined policy with regard to the outside service laid down by the resolution of 1905, and I would urge on the government not to depart from that policy in either case. I have no objection to an offensive partisan being dismissed, but we should have evidence to bear out the charge that he is an offensive partisan. I am not here to say that a statement made by a member of this House under his hand in writing to the minister giving specific facts would not be sufficient evidence. I think that every member of this House is entitled to be considered as worthy of credence and there is this further protection that we can discuss the question in the House with the member who makes the statement. But when we come to deal with the written statement of a defeated candidate——

Mr. RHODES. Does the hon. gentleman object to a minister taking the recommendations of a defeated candidate?

Mr. MACDONALD. Most certainly, and I have just given the reason why. We are now dealing with the question of the minister being satisfied by the evidence that a certain fact is true and the minister must justify his judgment to parliament. If he takes the statement of a member of parliament, that statement can be discussed in this House in the presence of the member who made it.

But if he takes the statement of a defeated candidate, he takes the statement of one who cannot discuss the question here, who cannot even give the details to the minister, or put them on record in the department as well as one can who holds a place in this House.

Mr. RHODES. With the permission of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou), I would like to ask him a question. I think I should do it in justice to the hon. gentleman himself, in view of the fact that he lays down the principle here that a minister should not accept the recommendation of a defeated candidate.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman need not ask the question. I am discussing here the responsibility of a minister of the Crown in carrying out a resolution of this House, and I am discussing——

An hon. MEMBER. Showing the white feather.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend who talks about my 'showing the white feather' does not know me. I was going on to say, Mr. Speaker—and—I am addressing the minister——

Mr. CURRIE. I desire ——

Mr. MACDONALD. I decline to yield the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) has the floor and has expressed the wish not to be interrupted.

Mr. CURRIE. But, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD. I decline to yield the floor to my hon. friend (Mr. Currie, Simcoe).

Mr. CURRIE. I only wish to ask the hon. gentleman a question. I want to know——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, I endeavoured to catch your eye to address the House on this question previous to two other hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I have only six minutes to speak now before the House adjourns under the rule. And as the penchant of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) for interruptions is so well known, I do not propose to get into a discussion with him just now. I was endeavouring to call the attention of the government to the proper principles on which to carry out this policy. The statement of a defeated candidate should not be accepted alone—there should be something in addition. But I wish to point out a singular thing which the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) has done in regard to dismissals. The Minister of Railways and Canals has never been in my county. He visited Halifax to attend the banquet to the Prime Minister. While there, a delegation of gentlemen who were looking for scalps waited upon him. They succeeded in inducing him to remove a gentleman, a very capable man, who was the inspector of construction on the roundhouse now being built in Stellarton, in Pictou county, Mr. Faulkner. I queried the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) and the information I received was that Mr. Faulkner was employed as inspector and his services were dispensed with on November 4, 1911. The reason for his dismissal is thus given:

For offensive partisanship. It is not in the public interest to give the name of the person who recommended his retirement.

I contend that a minister of the Crown who removes a public employee is bound to give to the House and the country—that is a part of his responsibility as minister—the information on which he acted. If he has done so at the request of an individual, he should say so, and if he has acted on a statement of memorial he should be prepared to present it to the House. Sometimes you can invoke great reasons of state as a justification for not divulging information, but that does not apply to a case of this kind. And let me tell this House whom the minister appointed. This was Mr. John Fraser. And who is he? I am indebted to my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) for giving to the House information that was within my own knowledge. Mr. Fraser had been postmaster of Stellarton for something like twenty-one years. He had nothing whatever to do with the construction of buildings nor did he know anything about it. He knew no more about the work on the structure in which $35,000 of public money was to be expended than a child would know. He was seventy years of age, and the only claim he had to consideration was that he was secretary of the Conservative party in the last election.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD. Let me give my hon. friend who says 'hear, hear' some of his other qualities. The Postmaster General told us that this Mr. Fraser was appointed postmaster at Stellarton on the 1st April, 1892, and he ceased to hold the office on the 1st of May, 1903, because, Serious irregularities had occurred in connection with the postmaster's accounts which led to his removal from office.

Now, Sir, the occupants of the treasury benches should exhibit some care in dealing with cases that are brought to their attention by candidates who are not in this House. My hon. friend who wanted some information in regard to the subject will see that I have drawn the attention of the House to a case sufficiently serious to warrant the ministry in taking the position that, in regard to constituencies not represented in this House by members supporting the government, they ought to have evidence which should be clear, cogent and positive, both in regard to the action which they take and the appointments which they make. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) will remember, and so will other hon. gentlemen who were in the last parliament, the wail of indignation that went up over the appointment of a Mr. Wagner, because of some irregularities in his case. Yet the Minister of Railways and Canals comes to the province of Nova Scotia, listens to a patronage committee from a county not represented in this House by one of his supporters, wipes out an official against whom nothing can be said and puts in a man, who, according to the reports of the Postmaster General had been guilty of serious irregularities in his accounts which justified his removal. I am sorry the Minister of Railways is not here. This is the first opportunity I have had to call the attention of the House to this matter and to learn from him whether he will not remove at once this man, who in another department of this government was guilty of serious irregularities. This government put in charge of an expenditure of $30,000 a man who had proved false to his trust in another department of the government. The Postmaster General speaks of restitution. But if Mr. Fraser was put in as inspector of this construction it was not because he had been turned out by a Grit government for partisanship or anything of that kind, but he was turned out for the reasons which the Postmaster General himself has been good enough to give to the House. I beg leave to move the adjournment of the debate.

ADJOURNMENT—CABLE RATES.

Mr. LEMIEUX. With the leave of the House I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) if there is any truth in the statement in the newspapers about the reduction in the cable rates between England and Canada?

Mr. PELLETIER. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) who has been a member of government so long, not to press that question for the moment. He will understand the reasons.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

VACANCY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received notification of a vacancy having occurred in the electoral district of South Renfrew by the resignation of Thomas A. Low, Esquire. I have accordingly issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BORDEN. I move that when the House adjourns this day it do stand adjourned until the tenth day of January, 1912.

Mr. MACDONALD. As I am going to leave the House in a very short time to catch a train, I desire to ask on behalf of a certain number of members who have spoken to me on this subject, and also in my own interest, if the hon. leader of the government would agree to fix the date for the resumption of business on the 17th instead of the 10th of January. I know, of course that there are some gentlemen who propose to stay in the city during the recess, who do not want that, but there are other gentlemen who have been more or less engaged with public affairs continuously during the past year, and an adjournment to the 10th of January would be a very short one after all, having regard to those conditions. There may be a difference of opinion on the subject, but I speak for the members of Nova Scotia, and for a good number of other gentlemen from the east, who would like to have an adjournment to the 17th, if that date could be fixed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if there are any hon. gentlemen who oppose the extension of the Christmas vacation the change could not be made now without the unanimous consent of the House, the leader of the government having given notice of an adjournment until the tenth. I understand the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), is very strongly opposed to postponing to a later date the time for resuming business.

Mr. BORDEN. I suppose an amendment could be moved to the resolution.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I should like to make an appeal to the leader of the government on behalf of western members. I think when in opposition the Premier showed very considerable sympathy with what is an undoubted grievance of the hon. gentleman in question. They come a very great distance and have to make a journey home for the Christmas holidays, and to extend this recess for a longer period may detain us here longer in the spring. It is all very well for those who can make this journey. Personally, I am not going west at all, but the fact is that members from the west labour under very great disabilities as compared with those in eastern Canada who have very easy access to their homes. If the government represent that they want time to prepare legislation for the session, I should be disposed to regard such a claim as extremely reasonable, having regard to the very short time they have been in office; but I think that when the recess has been arranged according to the consensus of opinion between the leader of the House and the leader of the opposition, we should be tardy in making an alteration on behalf of one particular section of the members.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). If I am in order, before this motion is put to the House, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. I do not know whether this is the proper time to do so or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better wait until this motion is disposed of. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. EMMERSON. Personally, I prefer the adjournment to the 10th rather than the 17th of January, and I concur in what has been stated by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) that the extension of the recess means projecting the session one week longer in the spring.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What do I understand the motion to be?

Mr. SPEAKER. That the House adjourn until January 17th.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to be permitted to say a word in favour of the proposition of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). The first part of January is required by hon. gentlemen who live a long distance from Ottawa, and are not able to get home during the session for business purposes, and it would be a great convenience indeed if they were allowed to have a longer holiday than the resolution permits. I am not sure than an extension of the Christmas recess will add another week to the length of the session in the spring, because a great deal depends upon the method with which the business of the House is conducted and the attitude of the opposition, and it might not mean a lengthening of the session to give us a longer holiday at Christmas. I think that the proposition of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is worth considering.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understand the motion on the Order Paper to be for an adjournment from the 7th December to the 10th of January. Is there any amendment to that?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is proposed to amend the resolution by extending the adjournment to the 17th of January. Personally, I would agree with the hon. gentlemen who wish for an extended adjournment if I saw any reason for it at all. But every western member is under a great disadvantage in coming down here and having a long vacation as is proposed by this motion. For my own part I am very much opposed to a longer adjournment during the Christmas holidays, and putting western members to the expense which they will incur if an adjournment is made beyond the 10th of January as proposed.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. BORDEN. There is certainly no desire on my part, or on the part of the government, to put any hon. member to any unnecessary inconvenience. The 10th of January and the 17th of January were both discussed in connection with this adjournment, and I understand the leader of the opposition has no very strong opinion one way or the other, but is perfectly willing to accept either date. If it would be likely to keep us here a week longer in the spring, I am sure that no one would regard any change with more displeasure than myself. At the same time, there is a great deal in what the hon. member from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has suggested with regard to the time which would be available to members of the government for the purpose of preparing their work. I am bound to say that we look forward to the Christmas vacation not as a holiday, but as a time when we may be able to do some work. I would be very willing, therefore, if the members of the House have no strong objection, to have an adjournment, until January 17th, but I would not agree to do so if hon. gentlemen persist very much in their objection. I would like, however, just to add that I think the preparation which might be made, if the vacation is extended to the 17th January, would enable us to have a more rapid despatch of business than would be possible if we should meet again on the 10th.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That would depend on the opposition would it not?

Mr. BORDEN. I am speaking of our side of the case. It would enable us to get ready for a speedy despatch of business, and I am thoroughly confident that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will be inspired with the same desire to get through as fast as the public interest will reasonably permit, as we all of us have been very actively engaged in political affairs for more than a year past. Therefore, if there is no strong objection I would be perfectly willing to change the date from the 10th to the 17th, and in doing so I feel pretty thoroughly assured that it would really not cause any delay in the business of the session.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I feel just as strongly against an extension of the holidays as any other gentleman here can possibly feel in favour of it. I think it is only fair that an arrangement having been come to between the two leaders that arrangement should be carried out. It is certainly taking the House somewhat by surprise to spring a proposition for an amendmeent at this time. I will oppose the proposition to extend the holidays unless on the responsibility of the government for government reasons or until a further discussion can be had with the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman takes that position, we will persevere with the motion as it is, for the 10th.

Mr. MACDONALD. Might I ask the hon. leader of the government to let the matter stand till the leader of the opposition comes in? I spoke to him in regard to the request that I have made to the House, and he expressed himself as satisfied with it; otherwise I would not have made it.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the motion is before the House now, I do not see how we could well let it stand and go on with other business.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That, as the time for receiving petitions for private Bills and the time for presenting private Bills without an additional charge will be curtailed by the Christmas adjournment, it is resolved, that petitions for private Bills be received by the House if presented on or before the 1st day of February, 1912; and that the time for presenting private Bills without the payment of the additional charges provided for under paragraphs (b) and (c) of subsection 3 of Rule 89 be extended until February 14, 1912, and March 13, 1912, respectively.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—REFUND OF FEES.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That the accountant of this House be authorized to refund (less the cost of printing and translation) all fees and charges paid in this House on the undermentioned Bills which were undisposed of when parliament was dissolved in July last:

Bill (No. 109) An Act respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company;

Bill (No. 158) (letter U of the Senate), intituled: 'An Act to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company';

Bill (No. 198) (letter Y 1 of the Senate), intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the Quebec and Great Northwestern Railway Company';

Bill (No. 202) (letter G 2 of the Senate), intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company';

Bill (No. 205) (letter D 2 of the Senate), intituled: 'An Act respecting the Canada Cement Company, Limited'; and

He said: The reason for this motion is that on account of the sudden dissolution of parliament in July last these Bills were not passed. I believe it is customary that a motion of this kind should be based on a recommendation of a committee, but as there is no committee to which these Bills have been referred or can be referred, it has been represented to me by the Examiner and Registrar of Private Bills that the motion is a proper one to be made in this way, and I postponed the motion in order that I might make inquiry of him on that point.

Motion agreed to.

REDUCTION OF CABLE RATES.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to lay upon the table of the House a communication from the High Commissioner for Canada, Lord Strathcona, setting forth a communication made to him by the Postmaster General of the United Kingdom with regard to a reduction in cable rates. I believe the substance of this has already been communicated to the press, but I lay it on the table for the information of hon. members. I understand that my colleague the Postmaster General also has a communication to make which he has received from the Postmaster General of the United Kingdom.

Mr. PELLETIER Mr. Speaker, this is a very important communication which I am sure will be gladly received by every one. It is a telegram from Mr. Samuel, the Postmaster General of Great Britain, which reads as follows:

London, 6th Dec., 1911.

Hon. Louis P. Pelletier,
Ottawa.

Cordially reciprocate the friendly wish contained in your letter of 24th November. Have announced in House of Commons that reduced rate for plain language deferred telegrams to and from Canada will come into operation on 1st of January, also that by arrangement with Western Union Company deferred press telegrams at half rates and day and week-end cable letters at greatly reduced rate will be accepted at once by this company for places in Canada served by its system. Letter follows. Am sending this by cable letter on first day of service.

HERBERT SAMUEL,
Postmaster General.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I wish to congratulate my hon. friend on the success which he has achieved with the Postmaster General of England. I may say that negotiations have been proceeding for the last two years. I am glad, however, that my hon. friend gets the credit of having succeeded at last; but he will bear in mind that this is only the first instalment, and only a minimum of what should be obtained in regard to cable communications between the two countries. My hon. friend is aware of the movement which is on foot for closer communication on a telegraphic basis not only with the mother country, but between the various colonies of the empire. Already a step has been taken in that direction by the Dominion government in the establishment of the Pacific cable. But we should have between England and Canada a government-owned cable. The matter has already been discussed at several Imperial Conferences, but I think the time has come when, to curb the monopoly of the cable ring, a government-owned cable should be established between Great Britain and Canada. Once more I congratulate my hon. friend on the success he has achieved.

MESSAGE FROM HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Mr. BORDEN delivered a message from His Royal Highness:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have received with great pleasure the address that you have adopted in reply to my speech at the opening of the session of parliament, and thank you for it. Sincerely,

ARTHUR.

Government House,
Dec. 5, 1911.

RAILWAY FROM NEW GLASGOW TO THORBURN.

*Mr. MACDONALD.

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Railways been called to a Bill proposed in the last session of last parliament to provide for the taking over of the railway between New Glasgow and Thorburn on the terms proposed in a draft agreement with the Acadia Coal Company?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. There was no Bill introduced during the last session of parliament to provide for taking over the railway between New Glasgow and Thorburn on the terms proposed in a draft agreement with the Acadia Coal Company. 2. No.
3. Yes.

MR. P. S. ARCHIBALD.

*Mr. MACDONALD.

Is Mr. P. S. Archibald in the employ of the Department of Railways in any capacity? If so, in what capacity?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes; in an engineering capacity reporting on proposed branch lines.

VEITCH FARM, VANCOUVER.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Is the government aware as to whether Mr. Grisdale of the Department of Agriculture recommended the purchase of the Veitch farm in North Saanich, Vancouver Island, for the establishment of an experimental farm?
2. If so, is it the intention of the government to carry out such recommendation?

Mr. BURRELL:

1 and 2. The government is of the opinion that in the public interest information of this kind should not be given.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. What percentage has been kept of the salary due the census enumerators?
2. When is the balance of such salaries to be paid by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. 10 per cent in organized districts and from 10 per cent to 40 per cent in unorganized districts.
2. Parliament having now voted the necessary Supply payment of the balances will be made as rapidly as practicable.

WILLIAM ROY.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. Was an inquiry made by the Intercolonial authorities after the 1st October, 1904, on the report made by H. Boulay, of Sayabec, county of Rimouski, against William Roy, a section man on the Intercolonial railway at Amgui?
2. If so, when was it made and what was the result?
3. If not, why was it refused and by whose order?
4. Is the said William Roy still in the employ of the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No inquiry was made at the time, in 1904, but an inquiry was made in October, 1911.
2. An inquiry was held October 16, 1911, and the evidence taken is now being considered.
3. It is understood that the minister, in 1904, desired the postponement of the inquiry.

C. N.R., CLARKBORO, SASK.

Mr. MEIGHEN:

Has the Department of Railways any information, and if so, what, as to whether the Canadian Northern Railway Company has, as requested by law, secured title to their right of way and station grounds through the townsite of Clarkboro in Saskatchewan?

Mr. COCHRANE:

The department has no information.

NEWSPAPER MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. PELLETIER. If I have the unanimous consent of the House, I would like as a matter of courtesy to my hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) to give him an answer to a question he put the other day. My hon. friend is not in his seat but he will have the benefit of the answer in 'Hansard.' Re question of daily newspapers from Toronto and Montreal not being delivered at Sydney, Glace Bay and other mining points in the neighbourhood, the Postmaster General is informed that there is no reason, so far as the mail connections are concerned why such delivery should not take place. The Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, who was wired in regard to the matter, informs the department that in all cases all the daily papers are forwarded, except in the case of failure to make connection at Truro, owing to accident or other unaccountable circumstances. There is, therefore, no basis for the assumption that the Railway Mail Service is not adequate so far as the daily delivery of those newspapers is concerned, and the daily papers are being received at those points regularly except owing to accident, &c., as above mentioned, when it is not possibile to make the connection.

POSTAL CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General to a statement published this afternoon regarding a postal convention between Canada and France. Will he be kind enough to have the papers on the table when we meet after the adjournment.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am happy to be able to inform my hon. friend that the agreement has now been signed by both contracting parties.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The newspapers are publishing the rates and we ought to have the record before the House.

Mr. PELLETIER. The papers will be brought down.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) has been kind enough to give a satisfactory answer to the question I put about the payment of the census enumerators. He says that the money is now available and will be paid. Will he be kind enough to see that payments are made before Christmas? We are deluged with letters from all parts of the country asking to have the payments made speedily and it would be a nice Christmas box to send each enumerator what is due him.

Mr. BURRELL. My hon. friend is not the only one who is deluged with correspondence on this matter. We shall do what we can to expedite the payment.

THE COPYRIGHT BILL.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). On the 29th of November last I put the following question:

Is it the intention of the government to introduce the Copyright Bill, Bill (No. 184) of the last session of the last parliament, which had its first reading on 26th April, 1911, or to introduce an analogous Bill during the present session?

To this the hon. the Minister of Agriculture replied:

Mr. BURRELL. At the time of the introduction of the Canadian Copyright Bill there was before the British parliament a Bill to give effect to the resolutions of the Imperial Copyright Conference of 1910. One of the main objects of the Canadian Bill was to make the Canadian law on the subject uniform with the law to be enacted by the British Bill. Since the introduction of the British Bill substantial amendments have been made and it is still before the British parliament. It is not the intention of this government to introduce a Bill this session.

Let me draw the attention of the hon. minister to a paragraph which I find in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of Wednesday, December 6:

Copyright Bill through.

Canadian Associated press cable.

London, Dec. 5.—In the House of Lords today the Copyright Bill passed the third reading.

I would like to ask my hon. friend if he can give us some information about the Canadian Bill?

Mr. BURRELL. I am afraid I cannot give any definite promise along the line mentioned by my hon. friend. While it is true that the delay in the passage of the British Bill referred to had some effect on our action, I would not say that it was the entire cause of the delay on our part. I have noticed the item to which he refers, and when we get the Bill mentioned in it, we shall give the matter further consideration.

THE FISHERIES DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) to the following despatch which has appeared in the daily papers:

Halifax, N.S., Dec. 5.—That there is a good prospect for the complete reorganization of the fisheries branch of the Marine Department at Ottawa is the opinion of ex-Ald. Wilson, who has just returned from Ottawa, where he had an interview with Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on the subject. Mr. Wilson told a Canadian press correspondent to-night that he found the minister favourably inclined to the proposition and disposed to put it into effect.

The reorganization would include the appointment of a deputy minister of fisheries, who would have special charge of the prosecution and development of the fishing industry, which at present is worth to Nova Scotia alone between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 annually.

What the government is urged to do is to appoint a deputy minister of fisheries, a man who would know the business thoroughly. In each province there would be a superintendent —also a practical man—to look after the carrying out of local details.

Might I ask if it is the intention of the government to carry out this reorganization, and if the change will mean that we are to have three deputies in my hon. friend's department instead of two as at present?

Mr. HAZEN. I may say that a few days ago I had a visit from Mr. Wilson of Halifax, the gentleman referred to in the interview, who is largely interested in the protection and development of the fisheries of Nova Scotia. Mr. Wilson gave me ideas and suggestions with regard to changes that might be made with advantage to the fishing interests of this country.

I talked the matter over with Mr. Wilson, and thanked him very much for the suggestions he had made and told him they would receive careful consideration on my part. I am not prepared to answer the hon. gentleman's questions more definitely than I have done in these few remarks. I might add, however, that from my short experience in the department, I am led to believe that the outside protection service might possibly be reorganized with benefit to the fisheries. I am giving consideration to the matter, and am consulting the officials of the department with regard to it, and getting such information as I can from different sources. While I do not say that it can be done in the course of a week or so, yet, I hope at some time to make a reorganization that will give better protection to our fisheries resources than we have at present.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What protection?

Mr. HAZEN. The protection afforded by a better enforcement of the laws than we have at the present time. We have good laws in regard to close seasons, the times when nets may be put out and things of that sort. But I am led to believe, not only by those in the department, but by those outside as well, that there are a good many cases in which these laws are not very well observed this being due, to some extent, to the defective system of appointing fishery officers. A report has reached me to the effect that the fisheries protective service on the Pacific coast is not as effective as it should be; consequently, our friends across the international line come over inside the three mile limit and take fish in Canadian waters where they have no right to carry on fishing operations. These are all matters worthy of consideration. And should I reach the conclusion that by some system of reorganization our fisheries can be better conserved and our fishing industry improved, I am sure I shall have the support of the House in carrying out that reform.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would suggest to the hon. minister (Mr. Hazen) the desirability of having a thorough examination into the question of the pollution of streams by sawdust.

Mr. HAZEN. The question the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) raises, is an extremely important one from the standpoint of the preservation of fish life in our rivers and streams. We have excellent laws on the subject now; the only question is the enforcement of those laws. I presume that as to the province from which we both come, rumours have reached the ears of my hon. friend, as they have reached mine, that there is too much laxity on the part of the fishery officers in seeing to the carrying out of the law.

NAVAL SERVICE—RUMOURED VISIT TO ENGLAND OF THE MINISTER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) whether it is true, as reported in the press, that he is going to England during the recess with regard to the Naval Service?.

Mr. HAZEN. I may say to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the only information I have on the subject I have received from the newspapers.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is it the intention of the government to introduce early after the recess the measure to establish the Tariff Commission?

Mr. BORDEN. It is the intention to introduce the legislation referred to as soon as practicable after parliament reassembles.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) to the fact that on the 29th of November last I moved for a return of papers relating to the Salisbury and Harvey railway and the lending of rails to the company for the purpose of putting the road in order. That return has not yet been laid upon the table. I suppose I can hardly look for it before the House rises, but may I express the hope that the hon. minister will bring it down as soon as possible after the resumption of business by the House?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

THE BANKING ACT.

Mr. MACDONALD. As there seems to be, judging by public rumour, some uncertainty on the matter, I desire to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) whether he intends to introduce the Banking Act soon after the vacation.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I have the matter under consideration. But the importance of it is well known to the hon. gentleman and to every member of the House. I am sorry not to be able to give the hon. gentleman a definite answer.

BILL MINER.

Mr. BUREAU. I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) has left his seat, but I suppose my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) will tell him what I ask. I would like to know if his attention has been called to the statement in the public press to the effect that Bill Miner, the famous escaped convict from New Westminster penitentiary was in the vicinity of Ottawa, and if so, if he has taken any steps or intends taking any steps to have him recaptured?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where did the hon. gentleman find that?

Mr. BUREAU. In the newspapers of the 4th of December.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) seems much more diligent now than he was formerly.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 2) to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act 1908.—Mr. Bickerdike—read the second time.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. With the consent of the House, I move that the Bill be given its third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House will first have to send it to a committee—either the Committee of the Whole or some other.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Then if there is no objection, I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. The Bill has been on the Order Paper for two sessions.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

1. Section 19 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, 1908, chapter 40 of the statutes of 1908, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:—

3. No child of a religious faith other than the Protestant or Roman Catholic shall be committed to the care of either a Protestant or Roman Catholic children's aid society or be placed in any Protestant or Roman Catholic family as its foster home unless there is within the municipality no children's aid society or no suitable family of the same religious faith as that professed by the child or by its family, and, if there is no children's aid society or suitable family of such faith to which the care of such child can properly be given, the disposition of such child shall be in the discretion of the court.

Mr. DOHERTY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) will give us some explanation of the precise purpose of the Bill.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) will probably remember that in 1908 an Act, chapter 40, was passed, entitled the Juvenile Delinquents Act, in which there is provision made only for the children of Roman Catholic and Protestant parents. It has been felt that there are many other children whose parents are neither Protestant nor Roman Catholic who should not be denied the same advantages as are afforded to children of those faiths. For instance, in the larger cities of this country there are a great many Jews, a very respectable body of people, especially is this so in the city of Montreal; and it has been felt that the Jews and other religious denominations are entitled to the same privileges and to the same protection for their children as are Protestants and Roman Catholics. This want has been felt for some time and courts are just now about being established, as soon as the government makes arrangement for a judge. In these circumstances, it has been felt that an amendment is necessary to complete the Bill. Of course the Jews are in a minority, but in any case, and in any country that flies the Union Jack, minorities should be treated not only justly but generously.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must say that I have met several gentlemen in Montreal belonging to the Hebrew race who have asked me to support the Bill presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike), and I do so, Mr. Speaker, very cheerfully. I think the Jews are entitled to the same rights as Roman Catholics and Protestants.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not think there can be any question, or any difference of opinion, as to the propriety of this amendment, that where there is in existence an aid society such as referred to, under control of people belonging to the religious denomination to which the child belongs, it would be a proper thing to send him there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend knows that in Montreal the Jews have a number of good societies.

Mr. DOHERTY. I know they have very excellent societies, and do a good work in caring for their own children and their education. For my part, I think the Bill is a good one, and I congratulate the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) on the idea which inspires him in proposing this Bill. I cannot see any possible objection to it.

Mr. AMES. It seems to me that while the intention inspiring this Bill is undoubtedly a good one, it may not be altogether drawn in such a way as to meet the object in view. What is meant by 'religious faith'? How many religious faiths are there? That there are Catholics, and Protestants, and Jews we admit, but are there not other religious faiths? We know that there are Armenians, there are Swedenborgians, there are Buddhists, and there are a number of other religious faiths. Now are we to understand that not only children belonging to the Catholic, Protestant or Jewish faith, but of any other, may be placed in charge of a committee of three persons belonging to the same faith as the child? Supposing for example, that a Chinese child gets into trouble, must three Chinese be appointed of the Confucian faith to act as a juvenile court with respect to that child? Supposing that the child of some of our Hindu residents gets into trouble, must there be three Hindu guardians appointed with respect to him? While the object seems to be good enough, the wording here leaves it open to very wide and serious claims on the part of a large number of classes.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. It is open and wide, and is purposely made so. There is no reason even why the Hindus should not be able to bring up their children in the same way that Protestants and Catholics do, if there are enough of them who are willing to establish a committee of their own persuasion for the purpose. When people of whatever faith establish such a committee, then the court is empowered to send a child to such a committee to be provided for. I cannot see any objection why people of every faith should not be taken in. I am sure the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) does not object to that.

Mr. AMES. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what is the power of this juvenile court with respect to children?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think the preamble of chapter 40 explains that; perhaps the hon. gentleman has not got it by him:

> Whereas it is inexpedient that youthful offenders should be classed or dealt with as ordinary criminals, the welfare of the community demanding that they should on the contrary be guarded against association with crime and criminals, and should be subjected to such wise care, treatment and control as will tend to check their evil tendencies and to strengthen their better instincts.

Then it goes on to say how it should be done. A committee is to be appointed for the purpose. If the Jews, for instance, do not choose to appoint a committee of their own faith to look after such children, then the court would have to deal with them. But, if in any community the Jews do provide a committee to look after delinquent children, then such children should be sent to that committee.

Mr. AMES. What are the duties of the juvenile court, then we will see whether these various classes of foreigners and strangers are suitable persons to be given the guardianship of the child.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Section 6 of the original Act reads:

> When any child is arrested, with or without warrant, such child shall, instead of being taken before a justice, be taken before the juvenile court; and, if a child is taken before a justice, upon a summons or under a warrant or for any other reason, it shall be the duty of the justice to transfer the case to the juvenile court, and of the officer having the child in charge to take the child before that court.

My hon. friend is aware that they are about establishing a juvenile court in Montreal.

Mr. AMES. The minister himself can probably give me the explanation I want. What is the Juvenile Court Committee that is referred to in this amendment?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Juvenile Court Committee is composed of three people selected from the religious persuasion to which the child belongs, whether Protestant or Catholic. That is all provided for now. My amendment goes further, and makes provision for children of any other religion than Protestant or Catholic, in case the people of that faith choose to form a committee to look after the children.

Mr. AMES. What are the duties of this committee? That is what I have been asking.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The duties of the committee are to look after the welfare of these children, and instead of sending them to the penitentiary or to jail, to take care of them for their own benefit while they are growing up. I thought at the moment that my hon. friend himself was connected with such an association. As to the duties of the committee, section 24 states exactly what they are:

> It shall be the duty of the Juvenile Court Committee to meet as often as may be necessary and consult with the probation officers with regard to the cases of juvenile delinquents coming before the court, to offer, through the probation officers and otherwise, advice to the court as to the best mode of dealing with such cases, and, generally, to facilitate by every means in its power the reformation of juvenile delinquents.

Mr. DOHERTY. Might I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps it might be well to provide that the committee shall be composed of suitable persons residing within the municipality, and to say that it shall be within the discretion of the magistrate or the court appointing them to say who are suitable persons.

I would be afraid that it might be interpreted as it stands there, that the only question of suitability was as to whether they were of the same religion. I am not at all now referring to our Jewish friends, because we all know that there are plenty of them suitable persons, but when you make it applicable to children of every religious faith it is quite conceivable that you might have in a city a small group of persons belonging to some denomination and it might happen that, although among them there would be suitable persons on the score of religious faith, they might not perhaps be desirable persons. I think we should make it quite clear that the three persons of that faith should be competent or suitable in the judgment of the magistrate presiding.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is provided in the Bill now.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think the Minister of Justice is perfectly correct, but that is provided for in the original Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. What section?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Subsection 2 of section 23 provides for just what the hon. gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. AMES. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and I have very much the same end in view. When you narrow it down to a denominational basis you might find it impossible to secure suitable and desirable persons among the very small number that might be entrusted with the care of a child. I would suggest that the words 'suitable' and 'desirable' be put in and that would allow the court to use a discretionary power.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have no objection to the words 'and desirable' being put in.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not find in the original Act what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdiks) suggests, and I do not think that what I propose departs in any way from what the hon. gentleman desires. I make this suggestion because I think it should be made quite clear that suitability means something else than merely belonging to some religious denomination.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think that the word 'desirable' suggested by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) would meet the objection of my hon. friend.

Mr. DOHERTY. I move that the section be amended by adding to it the words 'and in the judgment of the court desirable persons to be named such committee,' so that it would read:

If there are such suitable persons resident within the municipality willing to act and in the judgment of the court desirable persons to be named such committee.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would be very glad to accept the minister's suggestion.

Section, as amended, agreed to, and Bill reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. TURRIFF moved the second reading of Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) is not at present in the House. Is my hon. friend anxious to go on with this to-day?

Mr. TURRIFF. No, I am not particularly anxious to go on to-day, but I would like to get the Bill to the committee as early as possible. I have no objection to it standing, if necessary.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I do not suppose they would do anything with it before the holidays.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. STEVENS moved the second reading of Bill (No. 9) to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. DOHERTY. If the hon. gentleman is not especially desirous of proceeding with this Bill to-day, I would be glad if he would allow it to stand until we have had time to consider the measure more carefully. It is a matter of some importance, being an amendment to the Criminal Law of the country, and I do not think the hon. member will lose anything by letting the Bill stand for to-day.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to go contrary to the wish of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill stands.

DISMISSALS OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Carvell, for a copy of all papers, correspondence and orders in council in connection with and relating to the dismissal from the office of public officials from each of the departments of government since the first day of October last past, including both the inside and outside service.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I tried yesterday on two or three occasions to catch your eye so as to be permitted to say a few words on this resolution, but I did not succeed. I wish to continue the debate for a very short time this afternoon, in order to draw the attention of one or two ministers to certain cases of hardship in the county which I have the honour to represent. Members on this side of the House are somewhat disappointed at the attitude taken by the Prime Minister and by some other ministers who participated in yesterday's debate. There was an expectation by members on this side that a step forward would be taken by the Prime Minister in regard to this important question of Civil Service reform, and the House had good reason to expect something of that kind from the hon. gentleman. If there is any subject, Sir, that he has been identified with ever since his first coming to this House, some fifteen years ago, it is the subject of Civil Service reform. The first speech that he made here on his first entry into the House was in regard to this question, and that speech was a very broad and statesmanlike one. On that occasion he laid down the principle that the widest liberty, in a fair way, should be allowed to men engaged in the Civil Service. Among other things he stated that he would permit a civil servant not only to vote against the government of which he was then a servant, but he would also allow him to express his opinion on any public question that happened to be under discussion, provided he did it in a gentlemanly and fair way, and did not neglect his duties as a civil servant. Those were some of the things he gave utterance to in his first speech during the debate of 1896, but he did not stop there. It may not be out of place that I should put on record a statement, taken from the 'Hansard,' that he made on that occasion:

> If the question of an official's politics is to be considered when a new government makes up its mind whether or not it will dismiss him from office, or, if a government ventures to deal with these questions from the standpoint only of an official's political opinions, or if an official has given expression even on the public platform to his views on any public question—if these things are to control in determining whether or not a man is to remain in the service, we shall have approached very closely to the American spoils system, which I for one hope will never be introduced into Canada.

The hon. gentleman goes on to quote from Leckie on 'Democracy and Liberty,' and he led the House to believe that he agreed with the views expressed by that great philosopher on those questions. Then, later on, at the elections of 1908, my hon. friend issued a manifesto which is known as the Halifax platform. In that manifesto, he again lays down the doctrine of necessity of Civil Service reform in this country. On the occasion on which he placed that platform before the public at Halifax, he is reported as having used the following language:

> A government holds the power of patronage for the benefit of the public, and it is entitled to fill the public service solely in the public interest. The duties of those officials are for the public benefit and are fixed by the laws of the country. Their salaries are paid out of the people's money. To use the power of filling such positions as a reward for party service and without regard to the character and capacity of the individual selected is a gross breach of a solemn public trust. A private trustee so dishonouring his office would be subject to punishment by the criminal law, but the one punishment which can be meted out for such abuse of a public trust is dismissal by the electorate.

I submit, Sir, that the hon. gentleman is not living up to the principles that he laid down in his Halifax platform, and in his first speech in this House, and he has before him the punishment which he said would be administered to the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House if they persisted in this wicked course—that is the dismissal of the electorate. Again, in the election that was held on the 21st of September, the Prime Minister once more brought before the people of Canada this important question of Civil Service reform and it was one of the prominent planks in his platform. In the discussion here yesterday, it did not seem to me, however, that he was disposed to make any advance on the old practice that has been in force in this country for a good many years. He stated yesterday that he was guided by two things: by a clause in the Civil Service Act and by a resolution of this House. He quoted the clause of the Civil Service Act which reads as follows:

> No officer, clerk or employee in the Civil Service shall be debarred from voting at any Dominion or provincial election, if under the laws governing the said election he has the right to vote; but no such officer, clerk or employee shall engage in partisan work in connection with said election.

This is section 43 of the Act of 1908, and it applies, of course, to the inside service. Then my hon. friend said that he would be guided in making dismissals from the outside service by the resolution of this House, passed on July 17, 1905, which reads as follows:

> That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada, should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion, and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged, or permitted to engage, in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to the provincial or Dominion legislature.

Now, Sir, I submit that the policy laid down yesterday, by the Postmaster General, and even by the Prime Minister himself, does not live up to that resolution. The former leads us to believe that he would reinstate every man that was formerly dismissed for political partisanship.

This resolution says that no man who is guilty of political partisanship is fit to occupy public office. I submit, therefore, that the hon. gentleman is not living up to the resolution which he said was to guide him in regard to this matter. Now, the point I wish to make is that we have the right to expect something further from the Prime Minister than simply the old system that was in force in this country for so many years. If not, what is the meaning of this Civil Service reform that we have been placing before the people of this country? The votes of the people are asked for an improvement of the Civil Service, a reform of the Civil Service, and when the people give their votes and the hon. gentleman is returned to power with a large majority, he stands up in the House and says: 'So far as the rule is concerned it seems to me that it is a matter which has been already settled.' Yet my hon. friend when appealing to the country said that he stood for a reform of the Civil Service. And when the people gave him power to carry out that reform, he stands up in his place in the House and says it is already settled. He is not prepared to go any further than the late government went in 1896.

Hon. members who spoke on the other side of the House went back to 1896. If we are to go back over the various changes of government that have taken place we can get a great deal of material for recrimination, but it will not accomplish very much for the reform of the Civil Service. I could refer our hon. friends back to 1879, the year in which the party they represent came into power, and the slaughter of officials on the Intercolonial railway that took place on that occasion. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) spoke of 130 men employed on the locks of the canals having been notified that if they were not notified to come back to their work in the following spring they need not return. In 1879 no less than 344 officials of the Intercolonial railway were summarily dismissed, and the axe was kept swinging over the same class of officials during the whole 18 years in which the party opposite were in power.

Mr. HAGGART. Were they replaced by others?

Mr. SINCLAIR. If it would interest the House, I can give the figures. The number of dismissals was: in 1879 344, in 1880 23, in 1881 35, in 1882 41, in 1883 173, in 1884 64, in 1885 63, in 1886 109, in 1887 164, in 1888 90, in 1889 78, in 1890 67, in 1891 69, in 1892 266, in 1893 50, in 1894 62, in 1895 41, in 1896 71.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. member does not mean to say that these men were dismissed for political purposes, does he?

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is my information. You will notice that in the years 1879, 1883 1887 and 1892 the larger number of dismissals took place, and these happen to be the years after the four elections which were carried by the party opposite. The meaning of that is that they used the Intercolonial railway for the purpose of fulfilling the promises they had made during the elections.

Now, I want to refer specially to some cases of hardship that have occurred in the county which I have the honour to represent. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the case of Robert Sutherland, the caretaker of the public building at Canso. Some days ago I heard of the summary dismissal of Mr. Sutherland from that position, and as it was a matter of some urgency, and I thought that perhaps the minister might reconsider the notice that was given to him to walk out of the building, I wrote to him the following letter:

November, 29, 1911.

Hon. F. D. Monk,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Monk,—I have just had a message from Canso stating that Mr. R. Sutherland, caretaker of the public building at that place, has been dismissed. I regret that your department has found it necessary to take this extreme step at this season of the year without giving any notice, so as to enable Mr. Sutherland to find another house for his family. This caretaker has been a faithful public servant and has done his work well for several years, and I submit that he should not be dismissed from the service without an investigation. I have never heard of any charge against him, and I question if any valid charge can be made. Be kind enough to let me know if you will re-consider this matter and give Mr. Sutherland an opportunity of being heard in his own defence. I remain,

Yours truly,

I have not received any answer to that letter, although it was written a little more than a week ago, except a remark made by my hon. friend in the House that he would examine the papers that he had in connection with the case. In the meantime Mr. Sutherland has been asked to walk out of the building, without any notice whatever, not even the usual month's notice to enable him to get another house for his family. I do not think any just complaint can be made against him. Mr. Sutherland was appointed to the position some years ago when the public building was erected, and has been a faithful public servant. He has not been an active partisan. I have no doubt that he voted for the Liberal party, which I think is the worst that can be said about him politically. He was ordered without notice to move from the building and his hungry successor, I believe, was standing at the door waiting to get in. I think this is a case of very great hardship. I think Mr. Sutherland should not only have had a reasonable notice, but also have had a part of his salary advanced. I would like to ask the minister still to consider the case, and if he finds that there is no complaint against this man, will he give him a fair trial, and if he finds that he has not been guilty of offensive partisanship, will he reinstate him? I should be glad to have the minister's answer.

Mr. MONK. I will answer when my hon. friend has finished.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Another case I wish to refer to is the case of David S. Hendsbee, who was employed as weigher in the reduction works at Canso, under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Hendsbee was appointed in July, 1905. I have here the letter appointing him, which I will place on record:

Ottawa, July 31, 1905.

Sir,—As Mr. A. B. Cox, who has been appointed manager of the Reduction Works at Canso, has been directed by wire to immediately call upon you to report to him at the Works to act in the capacity of weigher, for which you will be paid at the rate of seven hundred dollars per annum, I beg to inform you that you are to act under his instructions.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
EDWARD E. PRINCE.

Mr. D. S. Hendsbee,
Fish Reduction Works,
Canso, N. S.

This gentleman received a letter from the manager dated the 3rd of December, informing him that his services were dispensed with on the 30th of November, three days before the date of the letter.

I submit that that was a pretty cold kind of deal to give a man who was employed by the year, and was depending upon that employment for the support of himself and family. I submit that at least it would have been only fair to have given him three months notice. According to the letter I have read, under which he is appointed, you will see that his appointment was a yearly one at a salary of $700 a year. Yet he was dismissed without any notice or without any intimation that he would receive the three months' salary which would have been paid him had he been in the employ of any private citizen. I trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will consider this case, and if it be necessary that Mr. Hendsbee should be dismissed, he at least should be paid three months salary. The same is true of the case of Edward Kelly, an engineer in the reduction works who, I understand, got his notice of dismissal on the same day, the 30th of November. Kelly's appointment was also a yearly one. He was in charge of very valuable machinery which he looked after during the winter months and for attending to this machinery he got a yearly salary. Mr. Kelly was also given notice of dismissal without any intimation that he would get three months' pay. Another case is that of Mr. John M. Rogers, the postmaster at a place called East Roman Valley in the county of Guysborough. This is one of the cases referred to by the Postmaster General yesterday in which he said he had made restitution. The former postmaster, named Walsh, was dismissed some years ago for political partisanship; and in order to show that the late government was not so severe in matters of this kind—at all events in the county I represent, as at present, I might mention that during the eight years I have held a seat in this House, this is the only case of a dismissal of any kind in my constituency, and it was a very extreme case of political partisanship. Mr. Walsh was dismissed, and the evidence against him is no doubt in the possession of the Postmaster General. Mr. J. M. Rogers was appointed in his place, and it now becomes necessary to dismiss Mr. Rogers, who is not a partisan, in order to reinstate Mr. Walsh. There is no pretence that Mr. Rogers has done anything at all to warrant the charge that he is an offensive partisan, but it becomes necessary, under the construction my hon. friend gives the resolution, to dismiss a man who is not a partisan in order to make room for another man who was proved to have been a partisan, and who was dismissed on that account by the late government. I notice that Rogers received from the department a printed notice. I suppose that so many such notices are being sent out, that printed forms are required. That printed notice reads as follows:

I am directed to inform you that Mr. Patrick Walsh has been appointed to succeed you in the postmastership of East Roman Valley, and that it is proposed to transfer the office to his charge as soon as the necessary preliminaries can be arranged.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. E. MACLELLAN,
Post Office Inspector.

Mr. John M. Rogers, P.M.,
East Roman Valley, N.S.

This is signed by W. E. McLellan post office inspector Halifax, and is addressed to the postmaster.

I asked in the House a few days ago certain questions with regard to this dismissal. The first was:

Has the Postmaster General received any communication asking for the dismissal of John W. Rogers, postmaster at East Roman Valley, Guysborough county?

To that question I got no answer. There was no intimation given that any such communication was received. I also asked what names were signed to any such communications. Neither did I get any answer to that question, and I submit that it ought to be answered. If men are to be dismissed on letters from persons a thousand miles away, those persons should have the courage to sign their names to those letters, and should not be afraid that those letters should be produced in the House. I quite agree that if an hon. member of this House chooses to make a statement on his honour that a certain official has been guilty of political partisanship, that ought to be taken as sufficient proof, but we have that hon. member here and he can be asked any day to substantiate his statement. That is not the case, however, with respect to a defeated candidate who may be thousands of miles distant from this city. In such cases, it should be only fair that the Postmaster General should secure the signatures of those making such charges and produce such letters when they are asked for in the House. My hon. friend the Postmaster General, who informed us yesterday that he wished to be just and fair, ought to consider the position I take with regard to these matters. There are a number of other cases in my county, but I shall not weary the House by going over them. Those I have given are samples of what is happening in Nova Scotia at present, and I submit that the case of Mr. Rogers is not in line with the resolution which the Hon. the First Minister says is one he would be guided by in matters of this kind.

What is the reason we have this clamour for the dismissal of officials all over Canada to-day? I submit the reason is that our hon. friends opposite made so many promises during the recent election that they have now to make some show of implementing those promises. I do not suppose there ever was an election in this country in which so many extravagant promises were made. My hon. friend the First Minister himself (Mr. Borden) led the way by going out to the three prairie provinces, where he knew reciprocity was popular and where he knew it was necessary to give some kind of financial or economic argument in order to capture the votes of the people there—we had my hon. friend going out there and making various promises. He promised the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. That, however, was one of the planks in the platform of the late government, and the late government had taken important steps in the direction of carrying out that policy. But the First Minister went one better. He said: We shall not only construct the Hudson Bay railway, but we will operate it as a government work. He also promised an expenditure of more millions in the supply of chilled meat refrigerators. I am not very familiar with the necessity for those refrigerators, but they were one of the things which the hon. gentleman promised the prairie provinces. Coming down to the Great Lakes, he promised an expenditure of more millions for the purpose of building elevators at Port Arthur and other points to be operated by the government.

Mr. FOWLER I rise to a point of order. I understand we are discussing the question of dismissals. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) seems to have wandered very far afield. He has been discussing the Hudson Bay railway, the elevators in the west, and the chilled meat industry. Of course, he is probably an expert on chilliness by this time, for I am sure it is cold on his side of the House. But I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to keep the hon. gentleman to the subject under discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) was in order. As I understand it, he was giving it as a reason for there being many dismissals, that many promises had been made.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I forgot to mention another very important promise made in the west—the handing over to the provinces of the natural resources of that country. In northern Ontario, as I have pointed out the Prime Minister promised large expenditures at the head of the Great Lakes. I am not aware that he made any great promises in eastern Ontario. There is a general belief among members on this side of the House that the best way to catch votes in eastern Ontario is to tell some fake story about the Pope. It was not necessary, probably, to make promises of any large expenditures in eastern Ontario. Coming to the maritime provinces which lie adjacent to the United States, and the people of which, of course, were very anxious to have the outlet of the United States market for their surplus products, it was necessary to make promises. In his manifesto the Prime Minister announced that the Conservative party had adopted the policy of giving free medical attendance and free medicine to the fisherman of that coast, a policy which has earned for the present government the title of 'The Lydia Pinkham Administration'. Passing to Prince Edward Island, it was thought that, being largely an agricultural province, and not depending so much on the fishing industry, it was necesary to do something extra; and so my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) in order to get the votes promised the people of Prince Edward Island a tunnel at a cost of $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, to connect the island and the mainland. And while the hon. gentleman was scattering these millions upon millions of the people's money from ocean to ocean —and remember, hon. gentlemen opposite used to say that we were 'bribing the people with their own money '—all over the country his lieutenants were making special and more detailed promises. In my constituency, there was not a lighthouse that was not promised; and I am told that many of them were promised to three and four different people. I am told that the position occupied by Mr. Hendsbee is now claimed by no less than thirteen applicants. These promises were made broadcast throughout Nova Scotia, that if the Conservatives obtained power these jobs should be peddled out to their supporters. These are the reasons why we are face to face with this serious state of matters to-day, and why my hon. friend the Prime Minister is not able, with the men he has behind him, to give us the Civil Service reform that he has been promising the people for fifteen years. I would appeal to my hon. friends who occupy the treasury benches and to their supporters. One friend made the remark to me that it was not much use to appeal to a government composed mainly of millionaires on a matter of this kind. But I would appeal to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). He has not a hard heart, and he laid down some good principles in 1896 when discussing these questions. I do not think he has forgotten what he said about the poor man. If so, let me remind him. He said:

> Ministers are simply after all the executive of this country. They do not own this country. They do not own the fortunes of poor labouring men. Poor labouring men have some rights to fair and decent treatment whatever government is in power.

That was good doctrine when it was spoken in 1896, and it is good doctrine to-day. The hon. gentleman declared further that when a charge was made against a public employee, it should be made in the open and not in a ' star chamber ' way, an investigation should be granted in every case, and in every case there ought to be a fair trial. I suggest to my hon. friend—and I know he will be willing to do it if he can, that is if the pressure behind him is not too great—that he try to live up to the doctrine now—that he laid down in 1896. I would appeal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) if he were in his place. The hon. gentleman has had two great opportunities since the 21st of September. The first was the formation of his cabinet. If he had shaken himself free from the anti-British party in Quebec, that was a splendid opportunity for him——

Mr. PELLETIER. There is no anti-British party in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Why, in the debate on the address a few days ago, I read from the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman's leader (Mr. Bourassa) in North Bay in which Mr. Bourassa referred to 'your' king, and 'your' flag, and 'your' constitution. Why, Sir, he would not even acknowledge King George V. to be his king; he would not acknowledge the flag that floats over this building; he would not acknowledge the constitution under which we live. And am I to be told now that there is no anti-British party in the province of Quebec?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There was during the election. Perhaps there is not now.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Perhaps not. Perhaps they are all converted. I say the Prime Minister had his first opportunity in forming his cabinet, and he has his second opportunity now. He has been telling the people that he stands for progressive legislation and practice in Civil Service reform. He has been telling them that for fifteen years. Will he carry out his ideas now? The Minister of Trade and Commerce, when discussing the subject in 1896, characterized the spoils system as the 'meanest principle that can be adopted by any government in any civilized country.' Now, will the Prime Minister rescue his party from committing itself to the principle thus so strongly denounced by his colleague?

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). I rise not in a grumbling spirit or to complain of the dismissals which have taken place in the county of Wright. Of course over there it is a matter of a wholesale slaughter. I do not blame the ministers so much. I understand that sometimes pressure is brought upon them to such an extent that they cannot withstand it. I speak with some knowledge of the subject of patronage, for during some years I have been closely concerned in it. I feel really sorry that the government of the day found it necessary to dismiss so many people in the county I have the honour to represent. I hope that the sympathetic nature of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) may be reached, and that the guillotine may be stopped. In the Post Office Department I must say that I have absolutely no complaint to make to the Postmaster General. I know of no case of a postmaster being dismissed in the county of Wright. I do not blame the ministers altogether for making dismissals but I think some reforms are absolutely necessary. I would, for instance, humbly suggest that positions which partake of the nature of manual labour, especially in these buildings, should be placed under a commission, which would be totally independent of politics. If this were done, then the hon. members who are representatives of counties in or near the city of Ottawa would have more time to attend to their public duties. I would say to the Minister of Public Works that he would have my hearty support if he could discover a means whereby the present iniquitous system of political patronage could be done away with.

Mr BRADBURY. It is a little late in the day to start to preach that doctrine. You should have done that long ago.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think it is good Christian doctrine, and it is never too late to repent. It is a doctrine that I have advocated on more than one occasion, and I see no reason why I should change my views because I sit on this side of the House. I was going to say that I think the elevator men, the carpenters, labourers, men working in shipyards, men working around these buildings generally, and who do not come under the term of civil servants, should be placed under a commission. While on this subject, I may say that I think most of the men who work for the government are underpaid. I would strongly advocate the raising of the minimum wage paid to the permanent messengers of this House and the elevator men; I think they should all be placed upon the permanent staff. Let me add that when a man is to be dismissed from the service, if he occupies what is called a permanent position he ought to be given a fair notice. I have under my hand a letter which was sent to me by a gentleman who has occupied a position under the government for the last eleven years; he was instructed to hand over at once all the material belonging to the government to the assistant foreman of the particular work in which he was engaged. Absolutely no reason was assigned for his dismissal. The man I refer to is Mr. Chenest, of Hull, a man around 69 years of age, who had filled the position during eleven years, and commanded the respect of the community I know of no reason why Mr. Chenest should be dismissed. However, he was dismissed just on the eve of winter, without any notice at all. I do not question that it is not within the perfect right of the Minister of Public Works, or of any other minister, to make dismissals, if he has been so advised by the person who has the handling of patronage in the county. I understand it is invariably the case that the minister is obliged to accept the recommendation of the gentleman who has the handling of the patronage in the county.

Mr. MONK. Not at all.

Mr. DEVLIN. I understand that is being done.

Mr. MONK. I am not obliged to accept any such dictation. My hon friend should know that.

Mr. DEVLIN. I understand that is usually done, that the ministers of the Crown are doing it at the present moment. Though the Minister of Public Works has stated that he is not obliged to do it, I think I can point out perhaps forty or fifty cases within the last two weeks where that has been done. I know he is too goodhearted a man to go over to the city of Hull and dismiss the men employed by the government there and put other men in their places. I am positive that the hon. the minister has done it. I know the letter I refer to was sent upon the instructions of the Minister of Public Works. I know that the Minister of Public Works would have absolutely no interest in dismissing the man I refer to. I say this without wishing to attach any blame to the action of the Minister of Public Works; I mean rather to say that he was actuated by circumstances. I will not detain the House by going over the cases of all those who have been dismissed, and their hardships; but I do hope that as soon as possible labourers, and men occupying positions of that nature, will be put under a commission. Such an action would have my hearty co-operation

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). I am sure that every hon. member of this House will agree with me when I say that one of the most onerous and disagreeable duties which has to be performed by a member of this House is the dismissal of officials from office, no matter how justly they may deserve it, and the distribution of patronage generally. For my part, I would be quite willing if some means could be devised whereby the members of this House would be relieved of that disagreeable duty, so far as it possibly can be done. I think that we should strive to reach, as far as possible, that system which now prevails in the Civil Service of Great Britain. It would be a blessing to the members upon the government side of the House to be relieved of that duty, and would throw the onus of the injustice of any dismissal upon the opposition. I know that when a position is vacant, and you have 15 or 16 applicants for the same, who are probably all competent to fill it, you are only doing justice to your own party when you place in that position the man who has done the most for you politically, provided he is able to fill the place satisfactorily. Practically the effect of what you do is to retire your most active friend, to place beyond usefulness to your party, the man who would do the most for you in helping you to carry an election; and at the same time you are disappointing 16 or 17 of your other supporters. So I say that, looking at it from a merely selfish standpoint, it would be not only in the interest of the member himself, but of the community generally, if we could devise some system whereby we could relieve ourselves from this onerous responsibility and place it in the hands of a competent independent body.

But, in discussing this matter, I assume that we must take the facts as they stand before us to-day, and we have before the House two rules that are to guide us on the present occasion. We have the rule laid down in 1896 by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and we have the law upon the statute-books of this country governing the inside Civil Service. In judging the present administration unless the opposition are of the opinion that this administration are to be governed by a higher tone of political morality than the late government and we have every reason to suppose that will be so—they cannot ask from us any higher standard of political morality than that which characterized their own administration during the last fifteen years. That is if they judge the present administration from their own standard of morality; but, I hope that the present administration will be actuated by a higher standard and will be able to treat officials with greater fairness and even with greater generosity than they were treated by the late administration. Speaking for myself personally and not on behalf of the government, if a man was competent and properley appointed by the late government and has discharged his duties honestly and efficiently, if he has taken no part in elections I will not have the heart to dismiss him but if I find a man eating the bread of both political parties and at the same time taking an active part in elections I will take the first opportunity I can to see that he is dismissed from the office which he holds. I will not expect any official I appoint to take any active part in any election to help myself and should I become aware that he votes against me in the next election I shall consider that he has a perfect right to do so. I think that is a fair stand and I think it will be the stand taken by individual members on this side of the House. While it would be quite proper in most cases for the ministry to take the word of a private member as to facts within his knowledge, I am sure that no private member would ask a minister to dismiss an official on facts not within his own knowledge and not supported by corroborative evidence. In this connection we have the expressed precedents of the right hon. leader of the opposition, the ex-Prime Minister himself, the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), and his predecessor, Sir Wm. Mulock; so that, judging the government upon this matter, the opposition will not surely expect of us a higher plane of political morality than that which characterized their own administration. According to a supplementary return brought down in 1897, only nine months after the late administration assumed office in 1896, I find that there were 250 officials dismissed. This return was brought down in answer to a motion in the Senate asking for the names of all officials who had been dismissed by the administration without investigation, and it shows that this large number were dismissed without investigation. The return is dated 7th April, 1897. Now, that was only a supplementary return. I am informed, but I have not yet verified the facts myself, that the original return showed that 250 or 300 officials had been dismissed according to that return without any investigation whatever. I took the trouble to go over the dismissals that are given in the supplementary return in the Department of Customs, and while we heard one hon. member on the other side of the House yesterday stating that he would give credit to the present hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) because he had not dismissed any officials unjustly and without investigation, this supplementary return showed that after the late administration had been in office nine months, 80 officials had been dismissed from the Department of Customs without investigation. We have these facts staring us in the face and yet the opposition blame us for the paltry number of officials that have been dismissed. As far as I have been able to ascertain we have not had any proof that any man has been unjustly dismissed without some opportunity of being heard. I remember reading some years ago a discussion which took place in 1898, or about that time, upon this question in which a charge was made by the present hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) that a great many officials had been dismissed in Manitoba without any investigation whatever. On looking up the debate upon that question I found that Mr. Boyd, the then member for Macdonald, laid upon the table a schedule showing that the number of officials dismissed in Manitoba between 1896 and 1898 was something like 150.

Then we come down to the question of dismissing postmasters, and I think it was the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) who laid down the principle yesterday that no postmaster should be dismissed even if he did take an active part in politics. I fail to see the difference between an official holding an office in the Post Office Department and an officer holding an office in any other department. It was said that the country postmaster is receiving a very small salary, so small that it is sometimes difficult to get any one to take the position. If that is the case there is no harm in dismissing him, because he apparently does not attach much importance to the position. I think the principle should be applied in all departments that every official who takes an active part in an election should be liable to summary dismissal. We had a debate in this House in 1909 upon the question of the dismissal of the postmaster of Souris, Man. The leader of the opposition, the ex-Postmaster General, Sir Wm. Mulock and his successor (Mr. Lemieux) placed themselves on record as subscribing to the view that the government is perfectly justified in dismissing any official upon being informed, either verbally or by letter, that that official has taken an active part in politics. Judging this government by the standard laid down by the opposition when in power, they can have no fault to find with any minister of the Crown if he dismisses summarily an official upon the simple recommendation of the sitting member. I will quote the precedent for that. These remarks were made by Sir Wm. Mulock in 1897 and were approved in 1909 by Hon. Mr. Lemieux, the ex-Postmaster General, who spoke as follows as reported in 'Hansard' of May 17 1909:

After the last general elections the hon. gentleman who represents the county of Brandon (Mr. Sifton) made a formal charge against the postmaster of Souris and reported, on his own responsibility as the member representing that constituency, that the postmaster at Souris had taken a very active part in the last campaign against him. Under such circumstances, in view of the fact that the complaint or the charge was made by the member himself, on his own personal responsibility I had no other course to follow but to accept his word and to take action against that postmaster. The policy upon this matter was laid down by my predecessor Sir William Mulock, and by the right hon. the leader of the House, in 1896. During that session a debate occurred in this House in relation to the dismissal of a postmaster in the county of Lincoln, Ontario. The policy was then laid down by Sir William that if a charge was made against an official of the government (in that case it was the postmaster) on the personal responsibility of the member representing the county, he as Postmaster General, and the other ministers would have taken action. Sir William's statement is to be found in 'Hansard' of 1897, at page 1853. It is as follows:

When a member in the position of my hon. friend from Lincoln makes a statement of the kind, there is the best guarantee that his statement is absolutely within the facts. He is bound to make good that statement before his electors and before the country. As a public man, he cannot afford to make a statement to me of something within his own knowledge if that statement is not literally true; and, with evidence of that kind, a minister would be derelict in his duty if he did not accept it as a full statement of the facts. At all events, in the future as in the past, I accept the words of my colleagues on matters within their own knowledge, and I consider that those statements are incapable of disproof, and that further inquiry under the circumstances would be an idle sham.

In view of that statement how is it possible for any hon. gentleman in this House to find fault with the dismissal of an official upon the recommendation of the sitting member? But not satisfied with that the Postmaster General went on. He says:

This is the statement I have to make regarding the postmaster at Souris. When the statement is made to me by an hon. gentleman occupying a very prominent position in this House, and who formerly was a member of the Cabinet, such as the hon. member for Brandon, that a certain officer had taken a leading part in the contest against him, my duty is to accept his word and take action against that officer.

An hon. MEMBER. Who made that statement?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The ex-Postmaster General. He goes on to say:

I can only repeat what was said by the right hon. leader of the House on a former occasion, when he declared that a government official who openly takes part in an election against the government takes his own official life in his hands. In the present instance the fact that the present member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) took upon himself personally the responsibility of the charge against the official, left me no other course to follow than to accept his word. I have just said that the policy laid down as far back as 1896 and 1897, is this, that when an officer takes part in an election against the government he takes his official life in his hands, and if an hon. member makes a charge of offensive partisanship against him, the statement of that hon. member is accepted by the government. That is my policy—an officer of the government who takes part in the elections does so at his own risk. To-day he has his friends in power, but another time he may have another party in office.

Now, in the face of all these facts, I would like to ask any hon. member on the other side can he stultify the policy of his leader and the two ex-Postmasters General, and say that a minister on this side who dismisses an official upon the verbal or written recommendation of the member is doing anything that he should not do, or is doing anything that they did not do or would not do, when they were in power.

Mr. M. CLARK (Red Deer). May I put a very friendly question to my hon. friend? Does he not think there is something in such an appeal as was made by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) to the very high professions of the present Prime Minister, professions extending over fifteen years? I do not ask the question from a partisan point of view, but in full sympathy with the opening remarks of my hon. friend that it would be a great thing for the country and for all civil servants if we could reach a permanent basis in regard to this matter.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. My hon. friend asks me to presume a higher tone of political morality than his friends exercised during the fifteen years they were in office.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I do not care about that.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I say, yes, we expect that, and we will get that ultimately.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I hope so.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. As far as I have been able to gather, there has been no dismissal made without cause. If I see an office holder in my own riding driving electors to the poll at election time, or standing around the polling booths, I require no other evidence than my own that he should be dismissed. It would be an indignity for me if I went to the minister and asked for that man's dismissal to be told 'I must give him ten days within which to prepare a defence.' I can quite see that where the member who makes the complaint has no personal knowledge, there might be some mistake; but if sufficient evidence is produced to the minister he should act upon that evidence. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) who complains that a certain postmaster at Spry Bay was dismissed without notice, forgets that when the present Prime Minister complained against the late administration that they had dismissed an officer at Musquodoboit, I think it was, without giving any notice, and without holding any investigation—a former member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) stood up and declared: 'Yes, I dismissed that man without giving him any notice and without granting any investigation. Why? Because I produced four affidavits myself to the minister proving that he was guilty of offensive partisanship.' This man was given no notice and no chance to defend himself, but the member in question coming from the very city now represented by the present junior member for Halifax himself, admitted that that was the principle followed by the late government. And so, I may say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as I can see there has been no case yet made out by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, especially having in view the fact that they themselves have laid down the very rules upon which the present administration has acted

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings and Albert). Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Wright upon the manner in which he has presented his views on this question. That manner was in marked contrast to the attitude taken by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) who had preceded him in the debate. The latter gentleman seemed to think it was necessary to make an attempt to stir up racial and religious strife even in such a small matter as the debate under consideration. He referred in most improper terms to the great province of Ontario and its attitude during the late election. He also insulted the province of Quebec by insinuating that there were in that great province men who were opposed to British connection. He brought forward a number of instances of dismissals which he seemed to think were deserving of a very great deal of consideration. I would like to tell this House a few of the instances of dismissals which were made in my own county from 1896 down to 1911. There was one particular instance in the county of Albert. A gentleman who was collector of customs at the port of Hillsborough in that county attended a joint meeting in 1896 where the candidates of the two rival parties were present to speak to the electors. As is customary in cases of this kind, a pitcher of water was necessary on the platform for the convenience of the speakers during the course of the debate. Nobody had sufficient thought to fill this pitcher so the collector of customs took it out of the hall, filled it with water and returned and placed it upon the table. It seems that during the course of his speech the Conservative candidate took a drink from this water, and that, Sir, was the only evidence upon which the collector of customs was dismissed from office. They held an investigation in that case, they sent an investigator or inquisitor down to Hillsborough and the act which I have mentioned constituted the testimony upon which the collector of customs was dismissed. That was one instance. I am sorry the Postmaster General is not here just now. I would have given him a sample so that he might know just how much he would require from the member when asking for the dismissal of a postmaster. Now, I come to a dismissal in the county of Kings, and will read a communication written by the then member Mr. Domville who has since been translated to a seat in the Red chamber. This is the letter:

Ottawa, Nov. 20, 1896.

Sir,—The Nauwigewauk postmaster now is Dodge. He has always been a most active partisan and worker in elections, and I want him dismissed and T. P. Trueman appointed in his place.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) JAMES DOMVILLE.

That is all. Upon that demand the postmaster was dismissed and Mr. T. P. Trueman was appointed in his place.

Now, I would not have spoken upon the question at all, if it had not been for some remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I was not in the House at the time he made those remarks, but he attributed to me the statement that to the victors belong the spoils, and I think insinuated that I proposed to carry out that idea, so far as I was able to carry it out, to the law.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will My hon. friend pardon me.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I will be very glad to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made the remark that I have seen a report, or what professed to be a report, of a banquet to my hon. friend in which he was reported to have said that he was a thorough party man and believed absolutely in the principle that to the victors belong the spoils. It was from that I quoted.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, my hon. friend knows that while newspapers are in the main trustworthy yet very often they publish reports of speeches which are entirely untrustworthy. By suppressing a certain portion of a speaker's remarks and giving prominence to another an altogether different conclusion is reached and a different construction given. That was the case in this instance.

In this instance, at a banquet held in the county of Albert in honour of the victory that had been achieved not only locally, but in all Canada, I made a few remarks with regard to patronage. After a party has been out of power for fifteen years, you can understand that the question of patronage is a somewhat burning question. Therefore, I conceived it my duty to lay down to my friends present, some 300 men, the rules by which I proposed to be guided in the matter of patronage, and which I proposed to press upon the government. In the first place, I said that every Canadian, whether an office-holder or not, had an absolute right to cast his vote as his conscience dictated, and that no office-holder should be removed from office because he had voted for one candidate or another. I said I recognized that as a proper principle and would act upon it, and I would recommend no man for dismissal simply because he had voted for the Liberal party, though I thought him in a very benighted condition of mind to vote in that way. But I said that if any man, being an office-holder chose to go out during a campaign and become an active worker for the Liberal party, other things being equal, that man should be dismissed. I said that in appointments to office I would consider first that the person to be recommended by me should be competent to fill the position for which he was recommended—that that was what the country had a right to expect. I said that the conditions of competence, efficiency, suitability for the position, being fulfilled, the question then became a party question, and that so far as I was concerned the man who had been an active party worker, provided he fulfilled the other conditions, should receive my support, because I said that in that sense to the victors belong the spoils. I submit that that is a proper position to take and a proper principle to lay down, and it is one that I am prepared to defend here or at any time. Before taking my seat I want to refer to the instance given by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) of the removal of a postmistress, I think at Bath, in Carleton county. To have heard the hon. gentleman one would have thought that never in the whole history of this country had a woman been dismissed from office. Let me say that one of the first dismissals in the county of Kings in 1896 was that of Miss Mary Folkins, postmistress of Collina. She made a most earnest protest against being dismissed, and was able to show that she had taken no part in politics; but she was summarily dismissed without any investigation being allowed. So that if the hon. Postmaster General wants a precedent for the Bath case he will find it in the case of Collina.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad that my hon. friend has taken this early opportunity to correct the mis-statement of a St. John newspaper. The paper was the Conservative newspaper of St. John, and I had every reason to suppose that my hon. friend had been correctly reported. The report certainly gave the impression that my hon. friend was after blood, and was determined to carry out to the fullest extent the principle that to the victors belong the spoils. My hon. friend has made a statement which ought to be fairly satisfactory. I understand him to say that his rule is that where an office-holder has acted as a partisan, he would insist upon his dismissal. I do not understand that very many of those who have spoken on this side of the House have complained of that course being adopted; but, as I understand, the position taken is that in every case in which the person is charged, he should be notified of the charge and have an opportunity of presenting his side of the case; in other words, that there should be a full investigation, unless in a case where a member of this House has a personal knowledge that the person has been guilty of partisanship. In that case I do not think we can complain very much if the minister acts upon the statement of a member of parliament, but it seems to me that that statement ought to be in writing, so that if it were called for it could be brought before the House, and the member could be held responsible for the charge he makes. I happen to know what has taken place in this regard in reference to some dismissals in the province of New Brunswick since I became a member of the government. I have had requests made for dismissals by different members supporting the government. The statement has been made to me that the persons affected have taken an active part in the election campaign upon the Conservative side. I have in mind more especially the ground taken by the late Postmaster General most positively—and in that he was simply acting on what had been the course of the government since 1896—that he would make no dismissal except after investigation or unless the member making the complaint should in writing pledge his word that he had personal knowledge that the official complained of had been guilty of partisanship. I know of one case which stood over for some time under the consideration of the minister. Finally he acted, but only upon the positive statement of the member that he had personal knowledge that the official complained of had been guilty of partisanship. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) made the statement that the minister ought to act upon the request of a member. I think that is going very much further than he contended was the rule during the regime of the late government.

It was not the policy of the late government to act upon the recommendation of a member of the House except when that member made the charge in writing. My hon. friend from Kings and Albert gave the name of a gentleman who was postmaster at Nauwigewauk, and who was dismissed. The files show that the member for that county, now Senator Domville, pledged his word that this man had been guilty of political partisanship. It may be that Senator Domville was mistaken, but at all events he did pledge his personal word to that effect.

I know nothing about the case of Miss Folkins, but I think my hon. friend will agree that if there was no investigation, the member for the county did not give the assurance that he had personal knowledge that she had been guilty of partisanship a great injustice was done; and I am sure he will not quote that as a precedent on which the Postmaster General should act in the case of the young lady at Bath, who was dismissed without any evidence that she had been guilty of partisanship. If the Postmaster General is able to give the information required, I shall be glad to receive the evidence.

Mr. PELLETIER. I told my hon. friend that I had not the papers before me and my time has been so much taken up that I have not had the time to look into the matter. However I intend looking into it. I would not like to be understood as having admitted that there was no case for dismissal. There must have been a case, I am sure, since the dismissal took place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I trust my hon. friend does not understand me to say that he had no evidence. What I was pointing out was that the House has not been furnished so far with any evidence of partisanship. I am sure he would not take the case of the lady to which the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) alluded, who was dismissed some fifteen years ago—and who, he says was unjustly dismissed—as a justification for dealing out harsh treatment to the postmistress at Bath.

I want to refer for a moment to a matter which was brought before the House by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) I refer to the recall of the commissioners who were appointed under the Boundary Waters Treaty. I do not think that the government can justify its conduct with reference to those commissioners. They had been appointed some considerable time before the elections and they were appointed under the treaty which provides that the right of recommendation shall rest with the Dominion government. The British government simply makes the appointment, as a formal matter, because the treaty is one between His Majesty the King and the government of the United States. The negotiation of the treaty was, however, left entirely with the representatives of Canada and the United States. Those who went to Washington representing this country communicated from time to time with the British Ambassador but the whole treaty was negotiated between the representatives of this government and the representatives of the government of the United States, and the treaty provides in express words that three commissioners shall be appointed to act on behalf of Canada by the British government upon the recommendation of the Governor General in Council. That shows that the appointment, so far as the British government was concerned, was merely a formal matter. It shows that these appointments really rested with this government, and that all the British government had to do, under the treaty, was to carry out the recommendations made by the government of Canada.

No doubt the present government, immediately on coming into office, made inquiry and ascertained that His Majesty the King had not actually become a party to the appointments and availed themselves of that point—which was a mere formality—to rescind what the previous government had done and had done a considerable time before the elections came on. As a matter of fact the British government had approved of these appointments, and the British Ambassador had been notified that His Majesty's government had approved of them, and that a formal order signed by His Majesty the King would be given in due course. On receipt of that notification the British Ambassador at Washington advised the Canadian government that the British government had approved of the appointment of the Canadian commissioners and these commissioners were requested to proceed to Washington to organize the commission.

Mr. MONK. Who gave that information?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The British Ambassador conveyed that information to the Canadian government and my department, acting on the request of the British Ambassador, notified the three gentlemen that they had been appointed and requested them to proceed to Washington to organize the commission, pursuant to the request of the British Ambassador.

Those facts show that to all intents and purposes these appointments had been made before the late government left office. Is it not idle to say then that those gentlemen were not appointed?

Mr. MONK. That is the information we got.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will make inquiry, he will find that I have given absolutely what took place. The British Ambassador informed the late government that the British government had approved of the appointments that a formal order signed by the King would follow in due course, and requested that the commissioners should proceed to Washington as early as possible for the purpose of organizing the commission. I am sure that the papers, when they are before the House, will confirm everything I have said, and satisfy my hon. friend that the department over which he presides had been communicated with in the regular way by the British Ambassador informing the minister of that department of the approval of the British government of the appointment of these three commissioners and requesting that they should proceed to Washington for the purpose of conferring with the commissioners appointed by the United States government.

If these facts be proved—and my hon. friend can verify them by referring to the letters on file in his department—they show that these gentlemen were in every sense of the word appointed commissioners to act for Canada. What have our friends opposite done? They have, in the face of the order in council appointing these gentlemen, in the face—

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. MONK There is no order in council appointing them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there was.

Mr. MONK. An order in council suggesting their names.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg pardon; a minute of council appointing them so far as this government could do it under the treaty.

Mr. MONK. It was a suggestion

Mr. PUGSLEY. And recommending to the British government, as we had a right to recommend under the treaty—for the British government was simply to carry out the recommendation of the Governor General in Council—that these gentlemen be appointed. The British government, under the treaty, could not appoint any others than those recommended by the Governor in Council. My hon. friend will find a Minute of Council passed a considerable time before the general election; and he will find in his department, as I have said, the information conveyed to the government by the British Ambassador that the British government had approved of the appointment of these gentlemen, and that the formal order in council would follow in due course, requesting them to undertake the work of the commission and to proceed to Washington to meet the commissioners appointed by the United States for the purpose of organizing. Now, what does the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) say? He says that because these gentlemen were Liberals, and because of the nature of the duties these commissioners will be called upon to discharge, they ought to have retired from office, and allowed Conservatives to be put in their places. What does that mean? It means that if, next year, or the year after, there should be a change of government, these gentlemen who have now been appointed should send in their resignation, or if they fail to do so, should be dismissed from office. That does not appeal to me as a correct doctrine in appointments of this character. It is certainly not according to British tradition. These gentlemen were appointed to what is to be, to all intents and purposes, a court. The commissioners are not to act either for the United States or for Canada, but are to consider as a judicial tribunal all questions of an international character; first, questions arising in connection with the boundary waters; second, questions arising along the common frontier which may be referred to the commission by either government; and, third, questions of any description which the two governments may agree to refer to the commission. They are to be something like the Hague Tribunal but in a smaller way. They are, as I say, to all intents and purposes a judicial body.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) deny that they had a representative character also?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think they have a representative character; I think they have a judicial character. Why, the treaty contemplates, and so provides, that there might be a division of opinion between the commissioners appointed on either side; one or two United States Commissioners might side with the commissioners from Canada or vice versa, and so have a decision by a majority vote. It was expected, as I say, not that they would voice the opinions of the government that they represented, but that they would act in a judicial capacity, forming a tribunal of a most important character to determine questions of an international nature arising from time to time. I cannot help feeling that a great mistake has been made by our friends opposite. They have, in fact, asked the British government to revoke what that government had done, according to the information conveyed to this government through the British Ambassador. They have asked the British government to rescind that and to act upon the recommendation which they themselves have made, under which these gentlemen who had been, to all intents and purposes, appointed were dismissed from office and friends of the party in power appointed in their places.

Motion (Mr. Carvell) agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. It is nearly six o'clock, and there does not appear to be any business for which it is worth while to call the House together this evening. I move, therefore, the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 58) respecting the Department of External Affairs. He said: The Department of External Affairs is constituted by chapter 13 of the Acts of 1909, which provides that there shall be a department of the government of Canada to be called the Department of External Affairs over which the Secretary of State for the time being shall preside. The Act which I am introducing repeals that Act and re-enacts it in another form. The only material change made in the Bill is that it places the Department of External Affairs under the Prime Minister instead of under the Secretary of State.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MANITOBA BOUNDARY EXTENSION.

Mr. MOLLOY:

1. What is the eastern boundary of the extension of the province of Manitoba, regarding which an announcement has been recently made by the Hon. R. P. Roblin?

2. What is the western boundary of the proposed extension of the province of Ontario, regarding which an announcement has recently been made by Sir James Whitney?

Mr. BORDEN. This seems somewhat objectionable in point of form, but I may say for the information of the hon. gentleman that it is expected the Bill will be brought down at no distant date, which will give him the information asked for.

BRITISH COLUMBIA'S PROVINCIAL BOUNDARY.

*Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has any agreement been arrived at with the government of British Columbia as to the claim of that province for increased subsidy?

2. If so, what are the terms of the agreement?

Mr. BORDEN. The claim of the province of British Columbia is that there are special conditions in that province of a permanent nature to which consideration should be given. That claim of the province has been submitted to the government, and is under consideration at present. I might add that the province asks, as I understand it, that a competent and impartial commission should be appointed to inquire into its claim and report thereon.

LOTBINIERE POSTMASTERS.

Mr. FORTIER:

1. How many postmasters in the county of Lotbinière have been dismissed by the present government?

2. What is the name and residence of each?

3. What reasons or complaints were alleged for their dismissal?

4. What is the name and residence of each of the persons replacing them and who recommended them?

5. Is there assurance that the complaints or reasons formulated against these dismissed postmasters are founded in good faith?

6. If there be cause for it, will an inquiry be granted to whichever ones of those dismissed, who should wish to obtain it?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Three.

2. (a) Mr. Orius Mailhot, postmaster at Ste. Philomène de Fortierville, replaced by Mrs. H. Tousignant, (b) Mr. Edmond Bernard, postmaster at Ste. Emelie de Lotbinière, replaced by Mr. Siegfroid Beaudet.

(c) Mr. Clovis Brochu, postmaster at Ste. Agathe de Lotbinière, replaced by Miss Marie A. Gregoire.

3. (a) In December, 1910, the postmaster at Ste. Philomène de Fortierville (Mr. Tousignant) died and his widow was an applicant for the office. Instead of appointing her, however, the late government appointed Mr. Orius Mailhot, who was then and has continued to be an active political partisan. He has been dismissed and Mrs. Tousignant has been appointed.

(b) The two post offices of Leclercville and Ste. Emelie de Lotbinière were amalgamated and one post office took the place of the two with Siegfroid Beaudet as postmaster.

(c) Mr. Clovis Brochu, postmaster at Ste. Agathe de Lotbinière, was dismissed for political partisanship and Miss M. A. Gregoire appointed in his place.

4. (a) Mrs. H. Tousignant, Ste. Philomène de Fortierville.

(b) Mr. Siegfroid Beaudet, Ste. Emelie de Lotbinière.

(c) Miss M. A. Gregoire, Ste. Agathe de Lotbinière.

6. There will be no cause for inquiry because the facts are to the personal knowledge of the Postmaster General.

ST. AGATHE DES MONTS POST OFFICE.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

2. If so, what was the object of said petition, and what are the names of the petitioners?

3. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to dimsiss the postmistress, Mrs. Bedard?

4. If so, what are the reasons alleged for her dismissal?

5. Has there been any inspection made of late of the St. Agathe des Monts post office, and what are the conclusions of the report made by the inspector?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.

2. Praying that Mrs. Frederick Bedard, postmistress at Ste. Agathe des Monts, should not be removed from office. This petition bears many signatures. The list will be given on a motion for production of the papers.

3. Under consideration.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. The post office inspector at Montreal was instructed to inquire into the management of this office. He reports certain facts, but there is no special conclusion.

MR. S. B. PARISEAU.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Is the Minister of Railways and Canals aware that S. B. Pariseau, one of the employees of the Quebec Canals Branch is said to be doing expropriation work as arbitrator for a private concern known as the Cedar Rapids Company?

2. Is any employee of the government allowed to receive a salary from both His Majesty and a private concern?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. The minister is not aware that L. S. Pariseau, an employee of the Lachine canal, is said to be doing expropriation work as arbitrator for a private concern known as the Cedar Rapids Company.

2. The minister is not aware of any law prohibiting an employee from doing outside work; but the rule of the Department of Railways and Canals is that employees shall not perform outside services without special authority to do so.

POST OFFICE ANNUITIES BRANCH.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

In view of the proposed transfer of the Annuities Branch to the Post Office Department and the dismissal of the annuities agents will not the Minister of Trade and Commerce recommend that three months' salary be paid to such agents as a compensation?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I may say that an order in council has been passed making the usual grants in consideration of the dispensation of services.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. How many officials have been dismissed from the Government Reduction Works at Canso, N.S.?

2. What is the name and employment of each official so dismissed?

3. What reasons were alleged for their dismissal?

4. Who recommended said dismissals?

5. Will an investigation be granted in cases where officials express a wish for same?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Two.

2. Edward A. Kelly, engineer; D. S. Hendsbee, weigher.

3. Economy in the operation of the works. It was not considered that such officers should be employed for a longer period each year than the works are operated.

4. The departmental officer responsible for the control of these works.

5. In this instance no investigation will be held, as the action taken was for purposes of economy.

SOREL MARINE YARDS.

Mr. BARRETTE:

Does the government intend to institute an inquiry into the administration of the marine yards at Sorel?

Mr. HAZEN. Yes, the commissioners appointed under the Inquiries Act to investigate and report upon the Civil Service will make a full inquiry into the administration of the government shipyard at Sorel.

2. Has the Post Office Department decided to cancel this contract before the date of its expiration? If so, for what reason?
3. Has an investigation been held?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1, 2 and 3. This contract might have run until the 31st March 1915, but it contained a clause by virtue of which it could be terminated on giving three months' notice. This notice has been given.

POSTMASTER BOUCHER, DORCHESTER.

Mr. BELAND:

1. Has the government or one of its ministers received a petition signed by the parishioners of St. Benjamin, county of Dorchester, P.Q., asking that the postmaster, Mr. O. F. Boucher, be not dismissed? If so, how many signed said petition?
2. Has the government or one of its ministers received a petition asking for the dismissal of Mr. Boucher? If so, how many signed the petition?
3. Is the Postmaster General disposed to respect the expressed desire of the great majority of the parishioners?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. A communication signed by the Postmaster and eleven other persons has been received by the Department asking that no change be made in the postmastership.

MOTION AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all papers and correspondence relating to the negotiations that have been opened by the government for improved trade arrangements with the British West Indies and British Guiana—Mr. Murphy.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of all petitions or memoranda presented to the government, since the 21st of September last, respecting work done or to be done for the improvement and beautifying of Ottawa.

He said: Some few weeks ago the newspapers of this city gave an account of an interview between my right hon. friend the First Minister and a delegation, as I understand it, of a board styling itself the Architects' Association—

Mr. BORDEN. The Royal Architectural Institute.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know exactly what the purport of that memorial was, but, if the reports concerning it are correct, it contained some strictures as to the work done by the Ottawa Improvement Commission appointed some years ago by the government on the instructions of parliament for the improvement and beautifying of Ottawa. That which principally attracted in this memorial was the statement that the Ottawa Improvement Commission seemed to have proceeded with its work hitherto in a rather haphazard way and without any plan made in advance. I believe that everybody who has been a resident of Ottawa for some years will say that ever since the Ottawa Improvement Commission began its operations its work has been very well done indeed. That work may not have been perfect, but I think it will be agreed that it has added greatly to the beauty of Ottawa. And I believe also that it has received the commendation generally of those who have visited the city. But it is not accurate to say—and it is to this I wish particularly to call attention—that the commission proceeded without any plan prepared in advance. The commission, very shortly after it was appointed, secured the service of a landscape architect of considerable reputation and wide fame, Mr. Frederic G. Todd. That gentleman made a report to the commission, which report I now have before me. And part of it is as follows:

Temple Building, Aug. 29, 1903.
The Ottawa Improvement Commission,
Ottawa, Ont.

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your request, I have examined the city of Ottawa and its vicinity with a view to considering the adaptability of certain portions of it for park purposes and also with the idea of outlining a general comprehensive scheme for the improvement of the city, having due regard to the future health and happiness of its inhabitants, and to the fact that Ottawa is the capital of the Dominion of Canada, whose population, wealth and importance is rapidly increasing. I have given my best attention to this problem, and I beg to submit to you the following report:—

I am not aware whether that report has ever been brought to the attention of parliament, or whether it has ever been laid upon the table of the House. It is a comprehensive document. Mr. Todd seems to have gone fully into the subject, examining all Ottawa, and its vicinity, and to have made a report covering:

Large natural parks or reserves.
Suburban parks.
Boulevards and parkways.
Waterway parks—bathing.
City parks and squares.
Playgrounds.

These several heads are dealt with and illustrated on the report. And the commission have, to a large extent, already acted upon some of these recommendations. Recommendations were made with regard to:

Rockliffe park.
Rideau canal drive.
Clemow boulevard.
Paterson's creek park.
Strathcona park.
Somerset street square.

These recommendations have been carried out—though not in their entirety I believe—and with some degree of success. There are some recommendations which contemplate work in a very large way, and which, if carried out in their entirety, would add greatly to the beauty of Ottawa. The commission, however, has not gone into the larger features of the report, but the work done by the commission has been chiefly in Rockliffe Park, the Canal Driveway, Somerset Park, and other similar works all within two or three miles of this place in which we meet. The commission has still more work to do, and I hope that during the coming season it will be able to take up the old cemeteries which are at present an eyesore to the city and which, after the bodies are removed can be transformed into beauty spots for Ottawa. The commission is also engaged in the work of the driveway from Nepean Point to Rideau Hall. This will keep them busy till next season. But what I wish particularly to point out is that it would not be fair to the commission to say that they have been proceeding at haphazard. On the contrary, they have followed a general plan. I can only say to my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that he should bring down as early as possible the representations which have been made—made, I have no doubt in good faith—by those who interviewed him. I repeat that in my humble judgment the commission has done good work. It is work which all parties in this House will agree has been well done, and work in which not only the citizens of Ottawa, but also the citizens of all Canada should be deeply interested. For we all have a pride in the capital of the Dominion which is endowed by nature perhaps more than any other part of the Dominion, which endowment properly used ought to make the capital of the Dominion one of the finest cities on the continent.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). There is no objection whatever to the passage of the motion which the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has proposed. So far as the comprehensive plan is concerned to which he has just alluded, it has never come to my attention before, nor do I think it has ever been laid upon the table of the House. I should have thought that, inasmuch as the commission is carrying on its work by means of moneys granted out of the public treasury of Canada it might have been better perhaps—unless there is some reason that does not occur to me at the moment—that that report should have been brought to the attention of parliament at an earlier date. It has never before been brought to my attention either in parliament, or by the chairman of the commission, so far as I recollect. This motion reads:

> For a copy of all petitions or memoranda presented to the government, since the 21st of September last, respecting work done or to be done for the improvement and beautifying of Ottawa.

Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would have no objection to enlarge the motion by eliminating the words 'since the 21st of September last', so that it might include the document to which he has called attention, and any other document that may be covered.

At the moment I am not aware of any petitions or memoranda presented to the government since the 21st September last respecting this matter, with the exception of the document to which the right hon. gentleman has alluded. That memorial is under date of 24th November, 1911. It is a rather lengthy document, and has been printed for the information of members of the government, to each of whom a copy has been sent. I have brought a printed copy here to-day, and shall hand it over to the right hon. gentleman at once in order that he may not be obliged to wait for the return for which he has moved. It is not necessary to dwell at the moment upon the representations made in this memorial. It will speak for itself. I have only had the opportunity of reading it in a very hurried manner some time ago, and do not recall everything in it with regard to the work of the Ottawa Improvement Commission. I may say, however, that it does not deal solely with the work of that commission, but deals also with other matters such as the location and character of public buildings to be erected.

So far as I was able to gather, and can recollect, the views which were presented on that occasion amounted substantially to this, that in the development and improvement of Ottawa, a comprehensive outlook into the future for a good many years, is eminently desirable; and that there should be some co-operation between the government, the Ottawa Improvement Commission and the authorities of the City of Ottawa itself, because all these are more or less concerned with the erection of public buildings, the laying out of streets, and with other improvements which may be required in Ottawa as a developing city, and as a place of residence in the future. It seems to me, that there is a good deal to be said in support of the reasonableness of that suggestion. The buildings to be erected by the government,—and I think there is a great need of some early step in that direction—the manner in which the streets should be laid out, and the facilities of transportation, all these and many other matters which will readily occur to every hon. gentleman in this House, are intimately connected with the future development of the city of Ottawa. I believe the criticism has been made, perhaps it may have been made in this memorial, that there has not been sufficient regard by the Ottawa Improvement Commission to a comprehensive scheme. I have heard that criticism in private. It is said, for example, that the south end of King Edward Avenue has not been connected with or co-ordinated with any other work of the Ottawa Improvement Commission. That is only one illustration of several criticisms that have been brought to my attention. I do not consider myself competent to pass judgment upon the work of the commission, or upon these criticisms. It is desirable, I think, that proper consideration should be given to a comprehensive scheme, and that too much attention should not be paid to detached work. My right hon. friend thinks that sufficient consideration has been given to that part of the subject. I am not prepared either to deny or to affirm that he is right. It is sufficient to say for the present that at the earliest possible opportunity the attention of the government should be given to the matters suggested in this memorial; the commission will be consulted with regard to them, and we shall endeavour to have the work so carried on that no reasonable criticism or complaint can be made with regard to it. I know we are all desirous, on both sides of the House, that, since a very considerable expenditure of public money takes place yearly on this work, that money should be applied in a reasonable and effective way, having regard to the facilities of transportation, to the beatifying of the city, and to everything else that might tend to the proper development of the capital city of this Dominion.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (St. John City) moved:

For a copy of all orders or minutes of council relating to the appointment of commissioners under the treaty with the United States relating to boundary waters, and questions arising along the boundary between Canada and the United States, signed at Washington, January 11, 1909: together with a copy of all despatches, letters and telegrams between the Governor General, or the government of Canada, or any member thereof, and the British Ambassador at Washington, or the British government, or any member thereof, upon that subject; and also of all letters and telegrams between any member or department of the government and Sir George Gibbons, Mr. Aimé Geoffrion and Mr. Alexander Barnhill, or either of them, relating to their appointment as such commissioners.

He said: I take it for granted that there will be no objection on the part of the government to the adoption of this resolution. I think it will be conceded on all hands that it is desirable it should be passed, in view of the circumstances of the appointment, in the first place, of those three gentlemen whose appointment was made a considerable time prior to the last general election, their subsequent recall, after this government came into office, and the appointment of other gentlemen had been made. I think the House will agree that it is desirable that all the documents, correspondence and orders in council relating to these appointments should be laid before the House. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will remember that at an early date in the session reference was made to the removal of the appointees of the previous government, or rather the appointees of the British government, upon recommendation of the late Canadian government, and the appointment of other gentlemen in their stead. I made the statement that so far as the facts have come to my knowledge, the appointment of Sir George Gibbons, of Mr. Geoffrion and of Mr. Barnhill had been recommended by the Governor General in Council a considerable time previous to the general election. I also called attention to the fact that the recommendation had gone forward to His Majesty's government, and that there had been received by the Canadian government a communication from the British Ambassador stating that the appointment of those gentlemen would be approved of, that, indeed, it had been informally approved of, but that the formal order in council had not been passed, but assuring this government that the appointments would be approved of; and the British Ambassador requested that the gentlemen who had been appointed should be notified to proceed to Washington at as early a date as possible, to meet the commissioners appointed by the United States government for the purpose of organizing under the treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the ambassador the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) speaks of?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The British Ambassador, the Right Hon. Mr. Bryce.

Mr. FOSTER. It was the ambassador at Washington?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. That is the information which I received as Minister of Public Works, in which department the matter more particularly belonged, although the formal communication had come through the Department of External Affairs. I caused notice to be given to Sir George Gibbons, Mr. Geoffrion and Mr. Barnhill to comply immediately with the request of the British Ambassador and urged that they should, at as early a date as possible, proceed to Washington with a view of taking up the work of organization with the commissioners appointed by the United States government. You will understand that the work of organization could not take place until the appointments were ratified by the British government.

Therefore, when the British ambassador made that request, as I was informed departmentally he had done, I took it for granted that, in substance at least, the appointments had been approved by the British government and, in accordance with the request of the British ambassador, I caused the necessary directions to be given to those gentlemen informing them of their appointment and requesting them to proceed to Washington. I believe they did so and took up the preliminary work of organization in conjunction with the appointees of the United States government.

Thus it was a matter of very great surprise to me to learn that after the present government came into office the British government was requested to undo what it had, in substance, already done upon the recommendation of the former government. It may be said that as a matter of form His Majesty had not signed the order in council but practically the appointment had been ratified. It must be borne in mind that, under the treaty, the British government can act only upon the recommendation of the Governor General in Council of Canada. Under the terms of the treaty the British government cannot make the appointment except of gentlemen who are recommended by the Canadian government. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), as I understood, rather questioned the accuracy of my statement. It may be that I was misinformed by the officials of the department who communicated with me but I made the statement according to my recollection. My hon. friend has possibly had the opportunity of looking into the matter since and may be able to inform the House as to the correctness of my statement. When the papers are brought down it will be seen whether or not my statement was correct.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). There is no objection whatever to bringing down the papers and I therefore at once consent to this motion passing. The hon. gentleman speaks of the appointments having been made and recalled. As I understand the situation, a recommendation was made by the late government. After we assumed office we thoroughly understood that the matter was open for our consideration and our action, and we recommended accordingly. I was not aware, except from the statement of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), that any communication had been made by the British ambassador at Washington of the purport which he has indicated. I do not question the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement but I am bound to say that it had not come to my attention when action was taken by the present government. Nor do I quite understand how an intimation of that kind could come from the British ambassador at Washington. That is not the usual channel of communication. However, my hon. friend may be right in this instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the customary channel of communication between the British government and the Canadian government is not through the British ambassador?

Mr. BORDEN. That is not in my experience, on the contrary it is through His Royal Highness the Governor General.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It comes through the British ambassador to His Royal Highness, the British ambassador communicates to the Governor General.

Mr. BORDEN. I am bound to say that if all communications of every kind from the Colonial Office come through the British ambassador at Washington, it is entirely new to me. I have understood that sometimes this may be the case in respect of matters which concern the relations of Canada and the United States.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which this did.

Mr. BORDEN. But I see no good reason why a recommendation made by the Canadian government through the ordinary channel should not receive an answer through the ordinary channel. Does my hon. friend say that the recommendation of the late government went through the British ambassador at Washington to the imperial government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The British ambassador was at once informed of the recommendations which had gone forward to His Majesty's government.

Mr. BORDEN. Quite so, and the British ambassador would be informed of the reply conveyed to the government through His Royal Highness the Governor General, but to the statement that, as a matter of practice, communications of that kind pass through the British ambassador at Washington, I am unable to agree. If this communication went through the ordinary channel, as I understand it did, it was forwarded to the imperial government by His Excellency the late Governor General, and therefore I see no reason why the reply of the imperial government should not have been conveyed to the government of Canada in the same way.

As to the propriety or impropriety of the action of the present administration, my hon. friend has said little to-day and when the papers are brought down he will have a full opportunity to discuss that subject. I do not intend to discuss it to-day. We took action such as we deemed in the best interests of this country and we are prepared to defend that action whenever my hon. friends opposite see fit to attack us with regard to it.

My hon. friend has made the further statement that the British government had purely a formal part in this matter. My hon. friend will remember that the appointment is to be made by His Majesty the King. It is true it is to be made upon the recommendation of the government of Canada. I believe that under the terms of the treaty His Majesty would be bound to appoint upon the recommendation of the Canadian government; but it is true also that His Majesty would not be bound, strictly speaking, to appoint those who were recommended, just as the Governor General of Canada might decline, for good reason, if he had good reason, to accept the recommendation of his advisers for the time being. Thus I cannot quite agree that the action of the British government was quite so formal as my hon. friend would have us understand.

However, there is no reason why the papers should not be brought down and then there will be every opportunity for a full discussion of the matter.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH LINES.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House it is desirable in furtherance of the transportation interests of this Dominion, that the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial railway as a government operated railway should be widened and extended by securing by lease or otherwise such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I do not feel called upon to take up very much of the time of the House in view of the frequent discussions of this subject particularly during the last parliament. In 1907 the subject of the acquisition of branch lines by the government of Canada, to be operated in connection with the Intercolonial railway, was, I think, first mooted in this parliament by myself. Subsequently, in 1908, I made a motion worded as follows, which motion was moved on the 3rd February, 1908:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House it is desirable in furtherance of the transportation interests of this Dominion that the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial railway, as a government operated railway, should be widened and extended, by securing by lease or otherwise, such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial, as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway, and by providing for the extension of the government operation of said railway to industrial centres of western Canada, and to a point or points on the Great Lakes of Canada, either by the construction of an extension to the same to such points, or by securing such running rights over existing lines thereto as will enable the Intercolonial railway to extend its transportation facilities westwardly, with a view of stimulating and promoting internal and interprovincial traffic, and facilitating the import and export trade of the Dominion, through Canadian channels.

That motion was discussed at some length and I took the opportunity then to bring to the notice of the House the character of and the facts relating to certain branch lines then existing and connecting with the Intercolonial railway. I referred, I think, then to railways in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec. It will be observed that the motion which I have just read as having been introduced into this House during the session of 1908 deals solely with the acquisition of branch lines and the extension of the Intercolonial railway westward. Although those were the terms of the resolution then moved, I brought particularly to the notice of the House, the desirability of having connected the two branches or portions of the government railway system of Canada. It is known and recognized in the Department of Railways and Canals and by the government generally that by the term 'government railway system of Canada' you mean not merely the Intercolonial railway itself, but as well, the Prince Edward Island railway. Both of these railways are under government control and operation. There are no branch lines connected with the Prince Edward Island railway that are not operated by the government as a part of that railway, but there are many branch lines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, as well as in Quebec, which are operated by private companies, which railways connect with the Intercolonial railway and which ought in my judgment, to be operated as a part of the system of the government railways of Canada. In 1908 nothing occurred to give effect to the resolution then moved; it went, I think, to the graveyard with many other resolutions and time was not given for further consideration. In 1909 the same resolution was moved by myself but it did not refer to the extension of the Intercolonial railway westward. I did not observe that the suggestion was taken up with any enthusiasm at least by hon. members from the province of Ontario. My own judgment was that it was in the interest of the Dominion of Canada and in the interest of the Intercolonial railway itself that the railway should be extended westward from Montreal, but gentlemen sitting in this House who represented the sections of country that would be traversed by any such extension did not with any enthusiasm take hold of the question. In 1909 I moved a resolution confined to the acquisition of the branch lines, the widening of the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial railway by that course and not by extending it westward. The same fate befel the motion of 1909 as that which befel the one of 1908. I did not find the government of the day as enthusiastic in respect to the subject as I thought they should be. In 1910 further action was suspended on my part by reason of the fact that the government of that day introduced a Bill empowering them to acquire certain branch lines upon certain conditions.

I pointed out that the Bill did not go as far as in my judgment it should have gone, and would have to be amended; but, being willing to accept half a loaf rather than no bread, I supported it in the hope that decisive action would be taken even under the terms of that Bill. Other hon. members of this House, differing with me in regard to the scope of the Bill, claimed that it was within reasonable expectation that under it the government would be able to secure many of the branch lines if not all of those which had been referred to in the resolution. In 1911 the only action taken by the government was upon certain reports which had been made by commissioners appointed by the Department of Railways and Canals. The government of the province of New Brunswick, in 1907, seemed to be strongly in favour of the acquisition of the branch lines. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will, I think, recall that the government of New Brunswick appointed commissioners to travel over the several branch lines existing in that province and to make a report to that government with respect to them. That report was subsequently laid upon the table of this House, together with the report of the commission which was appointed by the government of Canada. The commissioners appointed by the government of New Brunswick were T. M. Burns, then I think a member of the legislature of New Brunswick, and Mr. Gilmour Brown, an engineer of high standing. In 1908 the government of Canada appointed commissioners to report to the Department of Railways and Canals and to the government of Canada with respect to all the branch lines in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. These reports were laid before parliament and were printed, and will be found in Sessional Paper No. 67a, 1909. They dealt very fully with the character of these railways, their value to some extent and their traffic possibilities. In 1911, during the last session of the last parliament, a resolution was brought in by the then Minister of Railways, the Hon. Mr. Graham, I think in the month of July, and was considered by a Committee of the Whole House and discussed at some length, and a Bill founded on the resolution was introduced, but it did not proceed further by reason of the dissolution of parliament. Now, during the elections of September last the subject of the acquisition of the branch lines was discussed in very many constituencies in eastern Canada, and it was promised, I think, on behalf of the right hon. the leader of the government, that should his government come into power they would proceed to acquire the branch lines and operate them in connection with the government system of railways. I know that a number of the candidates contesting the elections in the province of New Brunswick assured the electors that it mattered not which government was sustained, action would be taken with respect to the acquisition of those branch lines and making them a part of the government railway system, as the parliament of Canada had committed itself to that principle. There came under my notice a telegram which the right hon. the leader of the government addressed to my hon. friend from Kings-Albert (Mr. Fowler), as follows:

Mr. EMMERSON.

Summerside, P.E.I., Sept. 8, 1911.

To George W. Fowler.

Am convinced that interest of Intercolonial railway demands acquisition of branch line railways as feeders, and we purpose to acquire them on reasonable terms if returned to power.

This evidently was an important telegram. It was evidently in the judgment of the right hon. gentleman of sufficient importance to demand that he should send it at that particular time, although he was then on a campaign tour throughout the province of Prince Edward Island, and that he should send it to a gentleman who was a candidate in the interests of the Conservative party in the electoral district of Kings. That telegram strongly commits the right hon. gentleman and the government to the necessary action involved in the terms of the resolution which I now move. In view of the attitude of the right hon. the First Minister and past discussion in this House and in view of the acceptance of the proposition generally by the people of Canada, I am not going to attempt at any length to give the reasons why this resolution should pass. I would hope that those who are sitting on this side of the House in view of their past action, and that the government of the day which is committed by the action of its leader during the election—I would hope that both sides would adopt this resolution without opposition and that the government would promptly take action in order to carry it out.

I have never dealt with this matter in this House from a party standpoint. I have always felt that it was of paramount importance to the whole Dominion, regardless of political considerations, that our government system of railways, some 1,700 miles in length, including Prince Edward Island railway should be dealt with by this parliament in the same way that any board of directors of a private railway would deal with their system. There can be no difference between the environment of the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk railway and that of the government system of railways. It is considered good business by our great trunk lines that they should on all occasions, as far as possible, acquire feeders, and they lose no opportunity to acquire branch lines to connect with their central systems. Such a course has been followed by the Canadian Pacific railway in the west as well as in the east. It led, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will realize, to the acquisition by the Canadian Pacific railway of the Tobique Valley railway, to the great advantage both of the Canadian Pacific railway and that railway as well as the people served by it.

It seems like a work of supererogation to attempt to prove the advantages that would accrue to the Intercolonial railway by the adoption of the policy involved in this motion. To-day the Intercolonial railway is suffering because it has not the control of the branch lines which connect with it. A large portion of the traffic which goes over what are known as the coal railways of Nova Scotia is diverted over other lines than the Intercolonial railway. As a matter of fact, many branch lines, which connect with the Intercolonial railway north of Moncton, have their traffic carried to St. John, whence it is carried by the Canadian Pacific railway to Montreal—and this despite the fact that the most direct and shortest route for that traffic would be over the whole system of the Intercolonial railway to Montreal. I make this assertion unreservedly, namely, that a very large proportion of the express traffic which comes from the counties of Kent and Northumberland in the province of New Brunswick, and which naturally go over the Intercolonial railway, is diverted by way of St. John around over the Canadian Pacific railway. I know that a very large percentage of the passenger traffic goes that way. This is due in a great measure to the want of an arrangement with respect to train connections. If these branch lines were under the control of the Intercolonial railway and proper train connections made, there is no reason why the Intercolonial railway should not take all the traffic that is gathered by the respective branch lines which connect with its trunk line. In my judgment the carrying out of the policy embodied in this resolution would not be merely to the advantage of the Intercolonial railway but of the people of all Canada.

In the past whenever the subject of the Intercolonial railway was mentioned at all in this House, hon. members were disposed to regard it as something exclusively in the interests of the maritime provinces. Whenever any proposition was made respecting the Intercolonial railway, it was seemingly recognized as one solely in the interests of the maritime provinces. I am not going to make any reflection upon either political party in that regard, but that is an opinion which has grown up because people have not reflected, because they have not realized the purposes which the Intercolonial railway has served in the history of Canada. I have said more than once on the floor of this House that in my opinion the Intercolonial railway has been of greater service to the trade of Ontario than it has been in reality to the trade of eastern Canada. Eastern Canada has its water communication, and while it has been advanced by the construction of the Intercolonial railway, yet the western provinces have been equally advantaged. The manufacturers and the merchants of Ontario and of the city of Montreal and other industrial centres in the province of Quebec have in the Intercolonial railway a highway which enables them to find a market for their wares along the shores of Nova Scotia and among the fishermen and lumbermen of New Brunswick.

The merchant princes of Toronto and Montreal have reaped very great advantage by reason of the construction of that railway, and by the absorption of other railways known as branch line feeders equal proportionate advantage will accrue to western Canada. Some ask why it is, the branch lines have not been more prosperous, and, as they have not been more prosperous, why the Dominion of Canada should assume the burden of operating them in connection with the Intercolonial railway. Let me say first that when the principle of aiding the construction of branch lines was adopted by the parliament of Canada in the way it was adopted, a step was taken which, in my judgment, was a move forward for the transportation interests of the Dominion. Yet one who at that time looked into the future must have seen that the day would inevitably come when these branch lines must be a part of the Intercolonial railway system, that it would be a matter of impossibility to successfully operate isolated railways constructed from time to time through remote sections of the several provinces; and must have realized that the branch lines could be managed more economically and more to the advantage of the people if they became part of the Intercolonial railway system. I am confident that the right hon. the leader of the government has been imbued with the idea that this is a desirable thing. I have no doubt he will find, as I have found in the past, that there will be opposition to the idea in certain sections of the Dominion. And yet I think that with his great powers he can convince and silence such opposition and show that the proposal is not merely in the interest of the communities traversed by these branch lines, not only in the interest of the Intercolonial railway and of the eastern section of Canada, but in the interest of the transportation in Canada as a whole and of every province of the Dominion. Consider the location of these several branch lines. Travelling from the west eastward you come to Ste. Flavie and the line down to Metapedia, Campbellton, Dalhousie, and so through New Brunswick to Nova Scotia. There is the line extending from near Ste. Flavie down to the south shore of the St. Lawrence and on through to Matane. Then there is one from Metapedia through Bonaventure county to Gaspé. And in the county of Gloucester, N.B., there is what is known as the Caraquet railway through the rich and flourishing section down to Caraquet and on to Tracadie and also to Shippegan, and providing connection for all that section of country. There is no section of Canada with greater natural resources than the county of Gloucester, N.B., I say that unhesitatingly, having some knowledge of the resources of that county. It is a county that is growing in population and in the development of its resources. There are rich stone quarries there, while the fishing resources of that section of New Brunswick are incomparably ahead of any similar section of the maritime provinces. And the people who are now served by that railway would benefit immensely by the acquisition of this line. The people down the Gaspé coast would certainly reap immense advantages by reason of the acquisition of what is known as the Baie des Chaleurs road. And so with the people served by other branch lines. These people have the right to be considered by this parliament. The proposition has been made by the parliament of Canada to construct a railway north from Pas Mission to Hudson bay, and we see much in the newspapers with respect to that work. I am not going to discuss the feasibility of the prospects of that road. But, at best, it is a railway that will serve the traffic interests of Canada only during some four months of the year. I care not how optimistic he may be, no man would say that the Hudson Bay railway, when constructed, can be utilized as a transportation line in connection with the exports of Canada for a longer period than three or four months of each year. Many millions of dollars are involved in the construction of that railway. I say naught against its construction; but I do say, Sir, if the people of that section are to be recognized by the construction of that railway, it is certainly of equal importance that the people living remote from the Intercolonial railway in the provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec, and Nova Scotia, and not having proper railway facilities, should have their interests attended to and their claims recognized by parliament. Many of these places are old-settled sections of Canada, and their people are entitled to recognition in this matter. But these people alone are not to reap the benefit of such a policy. True, they will be placed, measurably at last, upon a footing with their fellows who now have the advantage of railway facilities. They will be able to bring in goods from the markets of Canada and other industrial centres, which will be to them a great advantage. But it will be of equal advantage to the manufacturing and mercantile interests of Canada that these people should be brought into contact with them and be enabled to furnish the market with that which the manufacturers and merchants handle in their business. The proposition in this resolution is for the leasing of these roads. It does not necessarily involve the purchase of these roads, although it may involve that, if in the judgment of the government of Canada that step should seem desirable. It simply involves the leasing of these lines and operating them as a part of the government railway system; and if the policy of leasing is adopted it does not mean adding one dollar to the public debt of Canada.

Personally I would favour, in the interest of the country, and in the interest of the Intercolonial itself, the purchase outright of certain branch lines of that railway. Sir, I have a startling statement to make. There are to be found lying along the line of the Intercolonial, rusting and decaying, sufficient rails to enable many of those branch lines to be relaid with a new track, rails that have become useless to the Intercolonial by reason of the heavier rolling stock that is now used. There are bridges that have had to be taken up because of this heavier rolling stock, that would give to almost every one of those branch lines a steel or iron bridge to replace the defective ones that might be found on those branch lines. The old material, the cars which are obsolete because of the improvement of the Intercolonial itself, the locomotives that are now too light for the purpose of the Intercolonial, with many other items of material, could be utilized on those branch lines, material which is now lying unused, although it is represented in the cost of the Intercolonial as material on hand. These railways could be improved, they could be bettered, each one of these branch lines could be furnished with railway facilities with advantage to the people, to the Intercolonial itself, and to the Dominion at large. Now, why should there be any hesitation or delay? This matter has been discussed for five or six years in this parliament. The right hon. leader of the government may say: Oh, you are supporting a party that did not act as promptly as it should. I admit, Sir, that I have made some complaint against the government, to which I gave a loyal support, that they did not act as speedily as I thought they should have acted. Now, we all realize that a new broom sweeps clean, and we hope that if there have been any undue delays on the part of a former government, the present government will turn over a new leaf, and will take that prompt action which was not taken by the former government. Let me say that, in view of the fact that the former government did act finally, in view of the legislation that they brought down during the last session of the last parliament, and in view of the legislation of 1910, this government is justified from every standpoint of public policy in carrying that legislation forward to completion, although it was not in the first instance as operative as I would have liked. But the last legislation proposed, that of 1911, would certainly have been effective if carried forward to completion. Now, Sir, this subject is with me so old that it has become tiresome to myself as well as to the House. I always feel like apologizing to the House whenever I venture to make any remarks in connection with it. I believe that the government of Canada to-day have an opportunity of advancing the interests of eastern Canada by the acquisition of the branch lines of the Intercolonial, and by connecting the Intercolonial with the Prince Edward Island railway by means of a car ferry service. It is the only natural action to be taken. If you are to continue to operate a government railway, you must operate it from a business standpoint, you must operate it in the same way that a business corporation would operate it, and as business corporations are to-day operating other railways in Canada. On another occasion I hope to have an opportunity of referring more especially to the connection of the Prince Edward Island railway with the Intercolonial. That idea is a complement of the branch lines policy; they are inseparable. If the one is absurd, the other is absurd; if the one is reasonable, certainly the other is reasonable. Now, I appeal to the right hon. the leader of the government that this matter be not allowed to hang fire, but that prompt action be taken with regard to it. It is a matter that has been brought to the notice of this parliament time after time. I am sure that the right hon. gentleman, by reason of his familiarity with the conditions in eastern Canada. must see the desirability, nay the necessity, of taking action in the direction indicated by the motion. Why should there be any more delay? The sooner action is taken the better for the Intercolonial, and the better for the people of eastern Canada. I am not discussing this question from a party standpoint, I have no desire to introduce anything of that kind in the discussion of this question. In the past I have sought to eliminate all partisanship in connection with the discussion of this policy, to which I have been an adherent for so many years. I ask for the favourable consideration of this motion; more than that, I would ask the right hon. leader of the government to take speedy action in the direction of carrying out the promise involved in the telegram which he addressed to the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), from Summerside, in September last.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

ALFRED THOMPSON, Esquire, member elect for the Electoral Division of Yukon, introduced by the Rt. Hon. Mr. Borden and the Hon. Mr. Burrell.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH LINES.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) I have to say that it seems a strange thing to me that, while he occupied the position of Minister of Railways, he did not carry out those improvements which he asks us to carry out now. The government of which he was a member had an opportunity of extending the Intercolonial railway up to the Great Lakes at the time the Canada Atlantic railway was sold. They missed an opportunity then that will probably not occur again for many years. I will only say for the present that the right hon. gentleman who leads this government will carry out the promise which he made to take over these roads, on a proper basis. He is a gentleman who always carries out his promises, and the government will be prepared to take them over after investigation to find out what branch lines on the Intercolonial can be taken over that will become feeders of that road, and not milkers of it; that is to say, it will take them over on a fair and equitable basis.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (St. John). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to hear from the Minister of Railway (Mr. Cochrane) that it is intended to take over only branch lines which would be profitable to the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is what the resolution says.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that the policy of the government as laid down by my right hon. friend the leader of the government before the election in the telegram which he sent to the member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) was to take over the branch lines of the Intercolonial railway if they could be acquired upon reasonable terms. The resolution which my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has moved is as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable in furtherance of the transportation interests of this Dominion, that the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial railway, as a government operated railway, should be widened and extended by securing by lease or otherwise such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial, as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway.

I do not understand that this resolution professes to deal with the matter from the standpoint of revenue only. If that were the policy adopted by the government in relation to the Intercolonial railway, then they would be dealing with the branch lines of the railway and with the various sections of the country which are served by those branch lines just as the most economical and most parsimonious railway corporation owning a trunk line system would deal with them. I do not understand, I would be sorry indeed if it were the case, that when the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) gave to the people of the province of New Brunswick, through the Conservative candidate for Kings and Albert in the last election, an assurance that the Conservative party believed in the policy of taking over the various branch lines, and if they were victorious would carry out that policy, he intended to limit his promise simply to those branch lines which would yield a revenue to the Intercolonial railway if they were taken over, and that, therefore, the matter would be looked at entirely from the standpoint of revenue to the government railway system. The matter has never been so regarded in the past. The very branch which the hon. member for Kings and Albert was urging upon his leader more especially is a railway running from Salisbury to Hillsboro and thence on to the village of Albert in the county of Albert and has never been a profitable road, from the standpoint of revenue. But the hon. member from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), I have no doubt, represented to my right hon. friend the leader of the Conservative party (Mr. Borden) who was then appealing for the support of the people upon the policy of that party in regard to branch line railways as well as other questions, that the portion of that road from Hillsboro to Albert had actually been closed because the traffic had not been found remunerative, and that the late government, through the then Minister of Railways, had made an arrangement under which second-hand rails belonging to the Intercolonial railway would be sold to the company operating that road on credit with the understanding that at the then next session of parliament a Bill would be introduced for the purpose of taking over that road either by way of lease upon terms submitted by the various branch line railways or acquiring it for a cash amount in accordance with an offer which had been made to the late Minister of Railways by the president of that company. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is not in his seat to-day but I am sure if he were here he would be more than surprised and disappointed to learn from the Minister of Railways that the minister does not propose to take over the Albert railway unless it can be demonstrated to him it is going to be a profitable feeder for the Intercolonial railway, looking at the matter simply from the standpoint of revenue. Let me ask my hon. friend if when he considers the question of operating the great canal system of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario he asks himself whether these canals yield a revenue to the federal treasury. My hon. friend knows very well they do not. When he comes to consider the question of expending a great many millions to deepen and widen the Welland canal, will he ask himself what revenue this canal will afford the federal treasury? Then when he comes to consider the question of building the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay canal, which I am glad to learn from the newspaper reports he favours and which is so warmly advocated by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), is he going to look at the matter simply from the standpoint of whether or not that great public work is going to yield a revenue in dollars and cents to the treasury of this country?

Words cannot express the feeling of regret with which I received from my hon. friend this intimation of his policy with reference to the taking over the branch lines. We know that in Ontario there were but few branch lines which were paying their way until they were taken over by the great trunk systems. All over Western Ontario there were branch lines which were not paying their way, which were yielding no revenue to the companies who had put their money into the undertakings, but these lines, when taken over by the trunk line systems, put in order, operated efficiently as they can be operated only by a great trunk line company, became in many cases paying feeders of the trunk line systems. So it will be with the branch lines of the Intercolonial railway. To-day many of them do not yield a revenue, some of them scarcely do more than pay the running expenses. That is due to the extra cost of management and inefficient operation. Quite a number of them have fallen into a state of decay, they are not giving a satisfactory service, and if my hon. friend were to look at them simply from the standpoint of whether or not they are revenue-producing he would, in a number of cases, have to decide against their acquisition. I have always understood, certainly the policy of the late Minister of Railways was, that the matter should not be looked upon wholly from the standpoint of revenue, that the interests of the country through which these branches run and which they were intended to serve, would be considered, that it would be regarded as a very important factor that these roads were not giving to the people of the different sections of the country that accommodation which it was expected they would give when their construction was aided by public funds. Surely my hon. friend will see that while a short branch line operated by a company independent of the trunk line system might not itself be actually earning a revenue, yet if it were taken over, if it were put in good condition, even although it might cost a considerable sum of money to put it in good condition, and then operated as a part of the trunk line system, it might be made revenue-producing not only in so far as the branch is concerned but also in so far as the main line of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned.

What did my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) say to the people of New Brunswick when he sent the telegram to my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler)? The telegram, as quoted by my hon. friend from Westmorland, is as follows:—

Summerside, P.E.I., Sept. 8, 1911.
Mr. George W. Fowler.

Am convinced that interest of Intercolonial railway demands acquisition of branch line railways as feeders, and we propose to acquire them on reasonable terms if returned to power.

(Sd.) R. L. BORDEN.

Does that convey to the people of New Brunswick any idea that the Conservative party is going to look at the matter from the standpoint of revenue? Not at all. What my right hon. friend intended to convey, and what he did convey, to the people of New Brunswick was that the government recognized that these branch lines were not giving to the people that accommodation to which they are fairly entitled, that in many respects they were not in an efficient condition, not in a proper state of repair, that in most cases, if not in all, the people were obliged to pay the double freight—one freight upon the main line and the other freight upon the branches, and that they were put in a very unfortunate position as compared with those who are living and doing business upon the main line of the Intercolonial railway. I am sure that any one reading that telegram would understand that it was the settled policy of the Conservative party to deal with this question in a broad and generous manner; not to look at the question simply from the standpoint of revenue, but that their policy would be to take over all these branch lines, put them in a proper state of repair and operate them as part of the Intercolonial railway system. Having so understood my right hon. friend from the telegram which was published, I am sure that the people of New Brunswick so understood him and it is a matter of very grave disappointment to-day to find the Minister of Railways disposed to take a narrow view of the question and to look at it simply from the standpoint of the earning powers of these branch lines. I cannot but express the hope that upon further consideration and a better understanding of what has been the declared policy of the Conservative party, as expressed by its leader, my hon. friend will take a different view and will look at the matter from the standpoint of the public generally and from the standpoint of the people of the very important localities which are served by these lines of railway.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals has expressed his regret that the government of which my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) was formerly a member had not taken the necessary steps to carry out what he calls—and properly calls—these reforms. Let me say to my hon. friend that with respect to any great proposed change, particularly one involving a liability or a call upon the Dominion Treasury, it is a matter of education in order to arrive at results. My hon. friend from Westmorland had been for a long time advocating the taking over of the branch lines of the Intercolonial railway. As my hon. friend has well said, the people of New Brunswick, through their representatives in the legislature, a number of years ago, unanimously expressed the view that these various branch lines of the Intercolonial railway should be taken over. My hon. friend from Westmorland and other representatives from the maritime provinces pressed that view from time to time with the greatest possible earnestness upon the late government. It was, as I have said, a matter of education. There were gentlemen in the government who at first thought that perhaps it would be assuming too heavy a burden to agree to take over all the branch lines connected with the Intercolonial railway. Had my hon. friend from Westmorland suggested that he would have been perfectly satisfied and that the maritime provinces would have been satisfied if only those lines were taken over which would be profitable to the Intercolonial railway from a revenue standpoint I do not think he would have met with the opposition which he did, but his argument was that they should be taken over upon a different basis and viewed from a different standpoint; that is from the standpoint of giving accommodation to the sections of country through which those lines run. After not only he but other representatives from the maritime provinces had pressed the matter year after year, the late government finally came to the conclusion that it would be in the interest of the country that all these branch lines should be taken over and should become a part of the Intercolonial railway system. Their policy is well known; it was declared to parliament in the resolution submitted by the late Minister of Railways and Canals that all the branch lines connected with the Intercolonial railway should be taken over. I think they were named.

Mr. BORDEN. In what year was that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was during last session.

Mr. BORDEN. I am referring to the statute.

Mr. EMMERSON. In 1910.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that was in 1910. Then, at the last session, my late colleague the Minister of Railways submitted to the House a resolution naming the different branch lines of the Intercolonial. This list included the Albert railway, the Hampton and St. Martin's railway, the Moncton and Buctouche railway, the Caraquet railway and Gulf Shore railway, the York and Carleton railway, the International railway, the Cape Breton railway, the Temiscouata railway, the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island railway, the Elgin and Havelock railway, and the Kent Northern railway, all branch lines of the Intercolonial railway. There was no attempt on his part to discriminate between those which were revenue producing and those which were not revenue producing. The idea was to take them all over upon reasonable and fair terms. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), knowing well what was the policy of the late government, knowing with what anxiety the people of many sections of the maritime provinces viewed the attitude of the two parties upon this question, realizing that the taking over of these various branches, making them a part of the Intercolonial railway and operating them efficiently, as they would be operated as part of the Intercolonial railway, would be greatly to the advantage of the people, and my hon. friend's county being perhaps more deeply interested in this question than any of the other counties in New Brunswick, he evidently felt it necessary, in order to reassure the people, in so far as the Conservative party was concerned, to telegraph to my right hon. friend the leader of the government to ascertain where the Conservative party would stand upon this question, and my right hon. friend sent the telegram which has been quoted. I do not complain of my right hon. friend sending that telegram, although I am satisfied that if such a telegram had been sent by my right hon. friend who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) my right hon. friend the leader of the government would be charging him with attempting to bribe the people and to improperly influence them in the casting of their votes in the election. I am making no complaint against my right hon. friend the leader of the government at the present time, but what I do say is that if the policy of taking over the branch lines is to be limited and emasculated as now suggested by the Minister of Railways, then he sadly and most improperly deceived the people of New Brunswick when he sent the telegram to influence the people of Kings and Albert which has been quoted by my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat amusing to observe the sudden interest which has been developed by the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley), in the subject which has been frequently brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), but in which, so far as I am aware, the hon. member for the city of St. John manifested no deep interest until he went into opposition. My hon. friend the member for Westmorland has been an advocate of this policy for a great many years, and I am bound to say that he has been an advocate of that policy whichever party has been in power, because it was largely due to his efforts that a certain measure was placed on the statute-book by the late administration in 1910. Now, I am disposed to think that my hon. friend from Westmorland has made a deeper study of this matter and knows more thoroughly what he is talking about than my hon. friend from the city of St. John. I say that in no disrespectful way, but for the reason that the hon. member for Westmorland has devoted an amount of time and attention to it that has never been equalled by the hon. member for St. John. The resolution proposed by the hon. member for Westmorland has been accepted by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and in the very terms in which it has been proposed; thus, if the hon. member for the city of St. John carried out in action the observations with which he has favoured the House, he should have proposed an amendment to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Westmorland, because his complaint is directed as much against that resolution as against the answer of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend support the amendment?

Mr. BORDEN. When my hon. friend proposes the amendment, I will let him know what I will do about it. Now, I did not understand the Minister of Railways and Canals to speak of revenue at all or to use the word 'revenue' in the remarks which he addressed to this House. But even if he had taken that into consideration, he would have been carrying out the exact policy presented this House in legislation by the late government, of which the hon. member for the city of St. John was a member. Does he not recollect their legislation of 1910? If he does not, perhaps it might be as well to remind him of it; and let him remember that even accepting his construction of the answer of the Minister of Railways and Canals, which I do not accept, these considerations were had in regard by the late administration and by himself as a member of that administration. Section 3 of chapter 25 of the Acts of 1910 provides:

The Minister of Railways and Canals is authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Government Railways Managing Board, and subject to the authority of the Governor in Council, to lease, in whole or in part, any line or lines of railway connecting with the government railways, if such line or lines are reported by the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals to be in a good and safe condition for operation, and to operate any such line or lines of railway as a part of the government railways; and any such line or lines of railway so leased and operated shall become and form part of the government railways: Provided that no such lease shall have any force or effect nor shall any such connecting railway be entered upon or operated on behalf of the government of Canada until the said managing board, and the said chief engineer shall have approved the terms and conditions of such lease, having regard to the beneficial result therefrom to the government railways, and until the parliament of Canada has first ratified such lease.

Further than that, the said board, in their report to the minister recommending the lease of any line of railway, were required, in addition to their report upon the physical condition of the road and its cost, to state the total receipts and expenditures for the three years last past and to give an estimate of future receipts and expenditures in the event of the road being leased as a branch of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is fair to say that that amendment was inserted by the Senate.

Mr. BORDEN. That may be true. My recollection is in accordance with that of the hon. member.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was upon that we had a conference.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not remember. At any rate the legislation passed the House as a government measure with these provisions. It seems manifest, therefore, that the revenues of the roads as part of the Intercolonial railway were taken into consideration. I do not mean to suggest that as a necessary result of that legislation a road which might not be for some years a profitable part of the Intercolonial railway should not be accepted, and I am bound to say that this government have arrived at no conclusion in that regard. Every one of these cases must be dealt with on its merits. In the meantime, we are quite willing to accept the motion of the hon. member for Westmorland in the terms in which he has proposed it, and I have no doubt that in proposing it in these terms he took into consideration the fact that it would be necessary for the government of this country, in undertaking the acquisition of railways of that kind, to have some regard to the revenue which would be derived from them in the future as well as what had been derived in the past, which would be a guide to what might be expected in the future. I agree with what my hon. friend who has just taken his seat has said with respect to the saving which might be effected in many cases by the operation of these branch lines under the management of the Intercolonial railway. There is no doubt there would be some saving in that regard. On the other hand, when these lines were taken over, a very much improved service would probably be expected by the people and asked for. All these matters are matters for consideration by the government, and in dealing with them I can assure my hon. friend from Westmorland that the government will be disposed to approach the question with a broad outlook; and, while we cannot say with respect to any particular instance what will or will not be the action of the government, we will endeavour to deal with the whole subject along the lines of this resolution, which we are prepared to accept in the very terms in which it is moved.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has my hon. friend's attention been called to the resolution of which the late Minister of Railways gave notice, and which will be found on pages 974 and 975 of 'Hansard'? In that resolution my hon. friend will find that it is recited that although the Act to which my hon. friend refers was passed, no leases had been entered upon under that Act, and it was decided to make these other provisions which are contained in this resolution. It was that resolution which embodied the policy of the late government to which I was referring, and in it the only condition placed on the government is that it shall not be deemed compulsory on the government to take over any of these branches unless, having regard to the convenience of the public or the interest of the Intercolonial railway, the terms and conditions proposed by the company are fair and reasonable. That was the last settled policy of the late government.

Mr. BORDEN. What was the date of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will find it in the notice paper of the 17th May, 1911. He will see that that broadens out very much the basis on which the government could act.

Mr. BORDEN. Was it passed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it was under consideration on the very evening before the adjournment, as my hon. friend from Westmorland has said. It was submitted and considered for a short time in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORDEN. I cannot say that my attention was directed at the moment to that particular resolution. In fact it did not occur to me that that resolution was induced more by the probability of an impending election than by any desire for the development of the Intercolonial.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When that was introduced in May, I had no thought of a general election and I do not think any other member of the government had.

Mr. O. TURGEON (Gloucester). I would like to add a few words in corroboration of what has been so well said by my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) on this question. I have already in previous parliaments given expression to my approval of the policy embodied in this motion. I do not believe that the reproach is at all merited, given by the right hon. the First Minister to my hon. friend from the city and county of St. John (Mr. Pugsley), to the effect that my hon. friend did not show so much zeal for the acquisition of branch lines when he was a member of the late government. Both my hon. friend and myself have had at all times confidence in the devotion of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to this particular policy, and at many times we may possibly have allowed him to shoulder the burden of developing it for the benefit of this country. If this policy were not pushed through as rapidly as my hon. friend from Westmorland and we on this side would have desired, it was in great measure due to the fact that public opinion of Canada was not yet won over to the support of such a policy. Owing to the fact that the Intercolonial railway had not been a paying railway, the people, particularly in the province of Ontario, were averse to any attempt to increase expenditure on it; but thanks to the better administration of my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) when he was Minister of Railways, supported by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) as well as myself and others, public opinion has undergone a change more favourable to the development of that road. For years the popular impression has been that anything done on behalf of the government to improve the Intercolonial railway was done for the special benefit of the maritime provinces. We have, however, always contended that the improvement of the Intercolonial railway was for the welfare of the country at large, that the manufacturers of Ontario benefited from any expenditure and development of that line just as much as the people down east. No doubt in many portions of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, some of the branch lines have not been profitable. That was due, no doubt, to the fact that the companies who owned these branch lines were not in a financial position to give them the facilities and improvements required. It is, therefore, all the more incumbent on the government to acquire and develop those branch lines so that the Intercolonial railway may draw from them greater revenue in the future. No doubt in the course of a few years, after further development of transportation facilities, those districts served by these branch lines will furnish more traffic and thus increase the revenue of the trunk line as well as the branches. In my opinion every branch line which connects with the Intercolonial railway to-day should be taken over by the government regardless of present financial conditions, and solely with a view to future development. With better transportation facilities and with the increase of population which we are having to-day, we may in a few years be able to make these branch lines profitable. My hon. friend from Westmorland has mentioned the Caraquet railway, and has given as good a description of the resources of the county which I have the honour to represent as any one could desire. That county is no doubt one of great resources. Its fisheries are not only inexhaustible, but may be improved and enhanced from year to year; and according to the figures of last census its population shows the largest increase in the province.

I do trust that my right hon. friend the First Minister will put no obstacle in the way of acquiring as rapidly as possible those branch lines. I trust he will not take advantage of the fact that perhaps our party on this side, when in office, did not act as rapidly as possible. If it did not, that was because the education of the people had yet to be made in order to bring about a consensus of public opinion on this matter independent of party. If anything was left undone before the last election, I trust the right hon. the First Minister will endeavour to expedite the acquisition of these branch lines by announcing that policy at once. As has been pointed out by my hon. friends from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) and St. John (Mr. Pugsley) a telegram was sent during the election by the then leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) which commits the latter to the resolution now before the House. That telegram was sent to the Conservative candidate who was interested in the acquisition of branch lines in this county.

And, therefore, he had that one in mind when the despatch was sent. There is no reason why the government should not to-day announce that policy. I hope I understood correctly the last words of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, and that he will accept the resolution of my hon. friend from Westmorland, and will give it substantial expression in as short a time as possible.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It seemed to me that my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley) drew from the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) an inference and conclusion not justified by those remarks. And I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) when he comes to read what was said by the Minister of Railways will feel that he has not been quite fair to that hon. gentleman in placing the matter before the House as though that hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) were throwing cold water on the project of acquiring these branch lines. To make sure on the point I sent out to the 'Debates' room and got the stenographer's report of the remarks made by the Minister of Railways. They were as follows:

Mr. COCHRANE. In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) I have to say that it seems a strange thing to me that, while he occupied the position of Minister of Railways, he did not carry out those improvements which he asks us to carry out now. The government of which he was a member had an opportunity of extending the Intercolonial railway up to the Great Lakes at the time the Canada Atlantic was sold. They missed an opportunity then that will probably not occur again for many years. I would only say for the present that the right hon. gentleman who leads this government will carry out the promise which he made to take over those roads, on a proper basis. He is a gentleman who always carries out his promises, and the government should be prepared, after investigation to find out what branch lines on the Intercolonial can be taken over that would become feeders of that road and not milkers of it; that is to say, it will take them over on a fair and equitable basis.

Thus the Minister of Railways and Canals has stated distinctly that this government is prepared to carry out the promises made by my right hon. friend who leads the House in the telegram which he sent to the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) during the recent election campaign. Some criticism has been indulged in because my right hon. friend sent that telegram. But it must be remembered that the country was being told, and the people of Kings and Albert were being told that unless they voted for the candidate of the party opposite there would be no hope of these branch lines ever being taken over by the Intercolonial railway. It was only right, in order to meet a canvass of that sort, which I think, had little if any basis in fact, that my right hon. friend should send that telegram. And the hon. member for Kings and Albert took the proper way to set at rest a canvass of that sort which was calculated to do him a great deal of harm in the election. It was the promise contained in that telegram that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says will be carried out. That telegram reads as follows:

G. W. Fowler.

Am convinced that interests of Intercolonial railway demand acquisition of branch lines as feeders, and we propose to acquire them on reasonable terms if returned to power.

There is no mistaking the language of that telegram, there is no mistaking the language of the Minister of Railways and Canals when he says that the pledge of the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) will be carried into effect.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAZEN. Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What meaning does the hon. gentleman take from the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals that he proposes to discriminate between such branches as he regards as 'feeders' and such branches as he regards as 'milkers'? The right hon. the leader of the government makes no distinction of that kind.

Mr. HAZEN. My hon. friend must remember that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) was discussing the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) declaring the opinion of this House:

That the sphere of influence of the Intercolonial railway, as a government operated railway, should be widened and extended by securing by lease or otherwise such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial, as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway.

Not all these branch lines are to be taken, but such as 'will serve as direct and profitable feeders'. That is all my hon. friend from Westmorland asks the House to affirm, and it was in discussing that that the Minister of Railways used the language referred to. I understand, of course, that it is not always possible merely on hearing a speech to catch its full import. But now that I have read the 'Hansard' report, I am sure that the hon. member for the city of St. John will see that he drew from the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals an inference and conclusion not warranted by the language used.

Now, the fact that a branch line of railway has not been profitable under independent management does not necessarily mean that it would not prove a profitable feeder to the Intercolonial railway if taken over by the government. It seems to me that the business of a short, independent line, of which we have so many, cannot be developed as that business could be developed if the road were part of a trunk line system. As the hon. member for Westmorland has pointed out, the branch roads may be supplied with rails and bridges that have been removed from the main line because of the heavy locomotives used thereon. Also, if the line were part of a system managed from a centre, as the Intercolonial railway is managed, not only could great economies be effected in its operation, but business could be developed that would make the line a profitable feeder to the Intercolonial railway. When the Minister of Railways referred to roads that would be 'feeders and not milkers', I have no doubt that he had in mind this idea that, even though a road had not been profitable when independently conducted, it might be of great value as a branch of the Intercolonial railway. The hon. member for Westmorland, who is a public man of long experience, and an old parliamentarian, in moving his resolution must have realized as must every one who understands the situation, that the government must justify on public grounds the taking over of a branch line. It must justify it on the ground of great benefit to the communities served by the line and also to the Intercolonial railway under whose management it is to pass. And I think the hon. gentleman was perfectly right in so wording his resolution as to provide for the taking over of such lines as would serve as 'direct and profitable feeders'. It is natural, I suppose, for gentlemen in opposition—and I have been in opposition myself—to be in a very great hurry about the accomplishment of desirable public objects. My hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley) knows that this is not at all a new question. It has been before the public for ten or twelve years. I remember when, in 1889 or 1890, a resolution was passed by the House of Assembly of New Brunswick, when he was a member, and, I think, a member of the government as well, favouring the taking over of the Canada Eastern by the Intercolonial railway. The Canada Eastern was taken over. The logical result, it seemed to me, was to commit the Intercolonial railway to the policy of taking over other branch lines that could be taken over in the public interest.

Yet, although ten or eleven years have intervened, although during that time my hon. friend opposite has been either a member of the late government, or in sympathy with it, we find that down to the 21st of September last no action has been taken by that government along the lines which he now asks this government to take, a government which has only been in power three months; or rather he finds fault with this government because it has not already accomplished what the government which he supported, and of which he was a member, failed to accomplish during so many years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pardon me, I made no complaint that the government had not taken them over. What I was complaining of was that, whereas the right hon. leader of the government gave the people of New Brunswick to understand that he was prepared to take over the branches of the Intercolonial railway, I thought the Minister of Railways was intimating in his statement that there were a good many branches that he had not thought of taking over; and presuming he had given the subject consideration, I thought he was dealing with it from too narrow a standpoint.

Mr. HAZEN. I am glad to find that I was wrong, and that my hon. friend has no fault to find with the government for not going ahead in a more rapid manner than they have done. I am sure my hon. friend will find, with regard to the other point he mentioned, that he has no ground to find fault with the statement of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia). I would not like to say one word that would interfere in any way with the building of those branch lines referred to, in order to get a proper railway service. I believe the people of the lower provinces are entitled to a proper railway service, and I do not wish to say one word that would militate against their getting a proper and a better service by the acquisition of those branch lines. I quite agree with the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) that they are entitled at this time to a proper railway service. When I was sitting on the other side of the House, and when these matters were brought up, I opposed the taking over of branch lines of the Intercolonial railway by the government. I do not think that anything that can be said on the subject will cause the House or the country to believe that if you take several hundred miles of branch lines on the Intercolonial railway, you will not increase the capital account of that railway very much. Some forty years ago we started out with $40,000,000 of capital account, now we have something over $80,000,000 of capital account, and not one cent of interest has it ever paid. It is quite possible that by taking over these branch lines you may benefit the existing main line. Personally, however, I do not think it would, but I am not prepared to offer objections to proper railway facilities being provided to the people who are living at a distance from the main line. I quite agree with the sentiment that what is of interest to the lower provinces is also of interest to the whole Dominion. But the question occurs to me, are we going to do the best thing possible and in the best possible manner? For my part, I do not think we are. I think it would be more advantageous to the people of the lower provinces, and, therefore, to the whole Dominion, to sell the Intercolonial railway, or lease it to some company who would be in a position not only to handle the main line profitably, but who would find it to their interest to build branch lines throughout the whole of the lower provinces, build branch lines to a far greater extent than any government in Canada will ever do. Not only will they build branch lines, but they will do far more towards establishing industries of all kinds throughout those lower provinces than any government would do. Now it has been urged against such a policy that the Intercolonial railway was built, not as a commercial railway, but as a bond of union to bring the different provinces together into the Dominion of Canada. I acknowledge that. The building of the road carries with it the responsibility of operating it, but it does not necessarily mean that if a better arrangement can be made, we have got to operate it ourselves for all time to come. It must be borne in mind that within the last few years another government road has been built down through the lower provinces, and we have to keep this fact in mind when we are seeking the interest of the people of that section of the country. I was a little sorry to hear, not only the Prime Minister but the Minister of Railways, intimate that it was the settled policy of the government to continue adding to the capital account of the Intercolonial railway by taking over many of these branch lines. I have not the slightest doubt that if this be the policy of the government, all the branch lines will be taken over, and it is quite possible, as I gathered from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that under a different management than has hitherto prevailed, the branch lines might become paying institutions. But we have the record of the last forty years, showing that the Intercolonial railway has not paid under any management we have ever had in the past. I have no doubt that possibly that failure may be accounted for partially by the fact that lower freight rates are charged. But there is this to be borne in mind, that other people in the lower provinces who are not livin right on the Intercolonial railway, but who are tributary to other railways, have to pay higher rates and also their share of the deficit, that is, the interest on capital account. While I will be glad to support anything that is likely to give better railway facilities to the people of the lower provinces, I think that the government, before entering into a policy of that kind, should consider whether that cannot be better accomplished either by a sale or a long lease of the Intercolonial railway, by which, while we might not get a very heavy amount of interest for the capital that has already gone into the road, we would prevent any more loss in the future, and in my opinion the people would get a much better service than they will ever get from the Intercolonial railway by taking over the branch lines under any system of government management. There will be more men employed on the Intercolonial railway, perhaps not as many on some jobs, but there will be more men employed in the aggregate, and more material purchased, simply because any business company will go on building other branch lines, and will go into other enterprises contributory thereto, to a far greater extent than any government will do. Let me say in conclusion that I hope the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways will give some consideration to the views I have put forward before they finally decide what policy to adopt in taking over branch lines.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). I see that our hon. friends opposite are not united on this question. The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has put in a very strong plea in favour of these branch lines. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) on the contrary——

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is not a party question at all.

Mr. HAZEN. There is an endeavour to make party capital out of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. PELLETIER. I think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) had an idea, perhaps it was only in the back of his head, of making an amendment to the motion of the hon. member for Westmorland. He spoke very strongly on the matter, and no doubt what he said might be used on some occasions in the maritime provinces.

It has been very well put and very strongly put that from the remarks of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) some people might understand that he had some reproaches to make against the government on account of the policy which we were pursuing in this matter. One of the hon. members on the opposite side of the House, who comes from the western provinces, has just told us that we ought to be very cautious and that he has grave doubts whether these branch lines will ever pay. The gist of his speech is that the government ought to be very prudent in the matter and if I thoroughly grasped my hon. friend's meaning it is that we ought to approach this question in a very prudent way and that it might be better not to do anything at all about it.

Mr. TURRIFF. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. My hon. friend says not, but when he reads his speech in 'Hansard,' he will himself come to this conclusion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do you agree with this or not?

Mr. PELLETIER. With what?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Doing nothing.

Mr. PELLETIER. Doing nothing? Well I do not believe in governments who do nothing, I believe in governments who are up and doing. I think it would be quite proper to say at this moment that the middle course which the government intends to pursue in this matter is perhaps the best one. There ought to be no question in a matter like this about money spent in the west and money spent in the east. We should hear as little talk of that kind as possible during the course of the present parliament; that is my humble advice, that the east and the west should work together, hand in hand, and that the members for the west should not grudge moneys spent in the east. Thus we would have the right kind of reciprocity if members from the east would not grudge moneys spent in the west. Let us be Canadians, let us have some give and take in this matter, help the west, help the east—and try to be Canadians before all.

Mr. TURRIFF.—I think the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) misunderstood me. What I tried to say was that in my own judgment what my hon. friend who is moving this resolution has asked for would be better accomplished in another way, but if the government does not propose to accomplish that by the disposal of the Intercolonial railway I am quite in favour of giving the necessary assistance to provide railway facilities for those people in the maritime provinces who do not now enjoy them. It is not a question of east or west, it is the one question, it is a question of the best way of accomplishing what my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) is setting out to accomplish.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland). The Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) has not been in this House during the past 10 or 12 years, or he would not have given expression to his surprise at any divergence of opinion that might exist on either side of the House on this matter. I have repeatedly heard suggestions similar to that of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I heard them when I was sitting on that side of the House from my own friends and from those who then sat on this side and I am sure if my hon. friend were to consult my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) he would find that there was a wide difference between the opinions held by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and that hon. gentleman as he would find indeed a very wide divergence of opinion between the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) and the ex-Minister of Railways the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) started out not realizing that this was advanced not in any party spirit or from a political standpoint. While I was a supporter of the previous government sitting on that side of the House I advanced precisely the same idea.

I am glad that we have had the discussion this afternoon. I was certainly a little disappointed at the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane), perhaps more at the tone in which he gave utterance to those remarks than the actual remarks themselves. But I am glad he spoke in that way, because he has certainly cleared the atmosphere and what he said and the way he said it has served to bring out a clear explanation as to the attitude of the government. My only desire is to understand as nearly as I can what that attitude will be and how the matter will be treated. I have no complaint to make against the government with respect to any want of action on their part thus far. I assume that their time has been pretty well taken up in some directions, and I would simply urge upon them that they lose no time in dealing with this matter.

This is not a party question, it is simply a business question which affects the Intercolonial railway. I remember an occasion some two or three years ago when the then Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) made the remark that the question of branch lines was one that must be shortly faced as it does not need an authority on transportation and railway traffic to understand that there can be no prosperous main line unless it is fed by branches stretching out into adjacent territory. That has been the doctrine which I have endeavoured to preach and that is what I would like to impress upon this House at this moment, that the Intercolonial railway cannot be a prosperous railway until it has acquired these branch lines, stretching out into remote sections. This is from a business standpoint. From the standpoint of justice, these people living remote from railways are entitled to receive from the government of Canada proper railway facilities.

This is not a question of west or east. I made reference to the fact that we propose to spend many millions in the west in connection with the Hudson's Bay railway. Even although this was only to be used for three or four months in the year, I make no complaint on behalf of the east with respect to that expenditure. But I pointed out that if these expenditures were being made in the interests of transportation, then surely the government of Canada, not in the interests of the east or of the west, of this province or of that, but in the interest of the transportation facilities of Canada, should direct attention to those sections remote from the Intercolonial railway which are traversed by the branch lines proposed to be acquired.

I am glad the discussion has taken the line it has and that emphasis has been laid on the terms of the resolution which I have moved. I have said that the government should acquire:

> Such of the branch lines of railway now connecting with the Intercolonial as will serve as direct and profitable feeders to the traffic of said railway.

It depends much upon the definition which you shall give to the word 'profitable'. The Intercolonial railway, I hold, has been the most profitable venture that has ever been entered upon by the Dominion of Canada and yet, in the matter of its accounts, as between the profit and loss side of the ledger, we will not find much on the profit side of the account. I hold that, while it may not show a profit in the accounts, nevertheless it has been profitable to the trade of Canada, profitable to internal and interprovincial commerce, profitable to the people generally, profitable to manufacturers, merchants and consumers. It has been profitable alike to everybody interested in the progress and development of our Canadian trade. That is the definition that I would give to the word 'profitable'. Many of these branch lines of railway to-day, I am sure, would show a loss in the operation, but the moment they became a part of the Intercolonial railway and were operated as a part of the government system of railways, I am satisfied that even in the matter of dollars and cents as shown in the account, they would show a very great improvement. To-day along these lines of railway, at points 10, 15, 20 and 25 miles removed from the main line of the Intercolonial railway, you will find natural industries and many flourishing communities, but I make this assertion that under the conditions that prevail to-day in respect to transportation you will not find a man, capitalist or otherwise, willing to invest a dollar in industries or in the development of natural resources. I have in my mind with respect to this the Albert railway, to which reference has been made and in which my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is interested. There was in operation a very great industry known as the Plaster industry and they had a very large mill which was used for the purpose of manufacturing their gypsum. That was destroyed by fire. Many hundreds of men were put out of employment, the gypsum quarries were idle and the question arose as to whether that mill should be renewed there by the company or whether they would take it into Cape Breton in the province of Nova Scotia. They felt that if there was no possibility of their getting proper transportation facilities they would remove that mill over to Cape Breton where they had acquired large gypsum interests. They got the assurance that this railway would be made a part of the Intercolonial railway and that they would have facilities that were adequate and necessary for the proper carrying on of their business. Then, they commenced the construction of a mill. It is now under construction and it is therefore a very important matter to them, to the town of Hillsborough and to the surrounding towns in the county of Albert that they should have these proper and adequate facilities. If there had been no prospect of securing these facilities this $100,000 would not have been invested by the Albert Manufacturing Company. I simply invite the attention of the House to that as an illustration of the conditions which prevail on many of these branch lines and I hold that any action that is taken by this government that will serve to develop the districts traversed by these roads will make these branch lines profitable to the country and to the Intercolonial railway. If that is the meaning that is given to the word 'profitable' I am quite content with the statement that is made by the Minister of Railways. I am certainly very well satisfied with the manner in which the right hon. leader of the government dealt with the question and I am sure that there are no mental reservations in his mind in respect to the matter. We want this action to be taken as promptly as is consistent with the conditions and circumstances and if action is taken I am sure that the people of eastern and western Canada will not only be profited by it but that they will be satisfied and grateful for the action taken.

I hope that the Minister of Railways and Canals did not wish to make this a party question when he said that it seems strange that, because I had been a member and supporter of a former government, this matter had not been dealt with. I will not say what my hon. friend will learn, but I learned that all these matters mean a process of evolution. When I first came to this House it was like talking against a stone wall to make any reference to the further development of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). You might as well talk free trade to the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, as my hon. friend from Red Deer suggests, I might as well talk free trade to this government as talk Intercolonial railway to this House at that time. But, I believed that it was a good business proposition and I continued it. Gradually, in time, I got a better reception, the government thawed out and gradually—very gradually it is true, and very slowly—they brought down the policy embodied in the resolution moved before the House in July last by the then Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). The progress of that resolution was interrupted by reason of the adjournment which was necessary to enable the right hon. Prime Minister of that day and other parliamentary delegates to go to England to attend the coronation. Then came that other adjournment in the nature of a dissolution. The resolution to which I have made reference was suspended and it was in suspense until the 21st of September last when the matter came into new hands. It is all very well and I know it is the practice for governments to shield themselves behind the action that was taken by their predecessors. That will not go in Canada. It might do for a little party warfare across the floors of this House. If a government has not been what it should be, the government that succeeds should be what it is expected to be and what it has preached it would be.

Relying upon that being the government policy respecting this matter, I place this resolution, thankful that my hon. friend has accepted it, in the hands of the House, and thereby in the hands of the government, for action at as early a date as possible.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS AND NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. There appears to be a growing tendency in the House to depart from the rule with regard to questions and to notices of motion standing. In rule 32 it is laid down that questions put by members and notices of motion not taken up when called may, upon the request of the government, be allowed to stand and retain their precedence, otherwise they will disappear from the Order Paper. I have repeatedly waited, after calling these questions and notices of motion, to know whether the government requested them to stand, but the request has come more frequently from private members than from the government. Therefore I think it my duty to draw attention to the matter at the present moment, so that the House may be governed by the rule a little more closely in the future than it has been up to the present.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. TURRIFF moved the second reading of Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act. This is a very short amendment to one of the clauses of the Railway Act, to provide that special tariffs adopted by the different railway companies must be submitted to the Railway Commission and have the assent and approval of that Board before they become law. At the present time a railway company must have the assent of the Board of Railway Commissioners to any general tariff, but it may put in force any special tariff by giving the Board 30 days' notice. Formerly the company could put a special tariff in force by giving ten days' notice. At the present time a great deal of the freight of the country is carried under special tariffs, which are often very much lower than the general tariff, and at present a railway company may increase a special tariff to any point lower than the general tariff without consulting the Board of Railway Commissioners further than giving 30 days' notice. It is then put in force and becomes the law, and then the Board of Railway Commissioners do not take any action with reference to it until somebody who has suffered an injustice by what he considers an overcharge makes a special complaint to the Board. My experience has been that many shippers put up year after year with what they feel to be a gross injustice in the matter of freight rates rather than take the onus of going into a fight with the railway companies and bringing the matter before the Board of Railway Commissioners. Now, if it is right that a railway company must have the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners before it can put a general tariff in force, why in the name of common sense is it not also right that the same Board should be consulted and give its consent before a special tariff is increased? If it is thought advisable to allow a railway company to lower its special tariffs without consulting the Board of Railway Commissioners, I think we might fairly give them that latitude, because I do not think they will go very far on these lines.

Mr. HAGGART. Can a railway company make a special rate lower than the tariff rate without the consent of the Commission?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, that is just the difficulty.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the law is against it.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Railway Act allows them to make a special tariff without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners by giving 30 days' notice. All this Bill asks is that before any special tariff is put into force or any existing special tariff rate is increased, the railway company shall submit it to the Board of Railway Commissioners to secure its consent.

Mr. BORDEN. Before this Bill is read the second time, I would like to say that since the Railway Act was adopted by this House in 1903 there have been a great many amendments—sometimes several during the one session. There is therefore very urgent need, I believe, of a thorough revision of the Act for the purpose of incorporating in it the amendments already passed from time to time in the way I have indicated and also possibly for the purpose of adopting some other amendments which the government have under consideration. Under these circumstances I think perhaps it would be unwise to deal with the Act in a desultory way during this session. At all events I would be very glad indeed if for the present my hon. friend would permit his Bill to stand until we can give a little consideration to the matter I have just mentioned. Therefore, if I may be permitted to do so, I would suggest that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. TURRIFF. Of course I would like to get the Bill sent to a committee and have it become law, but I know perfectly well that, in a matter of this kind, I am in the hands of the government any way, and I can quite understand there is a great deal of force in what the right hon. gentleman has said. He does not hold out any promise whatever that the Railway Act will be amended and consolidated this session.

Mr. BORDEN. I am afraid that would hardly be possible. We have had a good deal of parliamentary work during the past twelve months and I would like to get through as soon as the public interest permits. It would be practically impossible to take up so important a matter as the version of the Railway Act and the consideration perhaps of the further amendements before the end of the session.

Mr. TURRIFF. In that case, I would be willing to let the Bill stand, in the meantime, I would not like to take the position that it should not be passed this session. My right hon. friend will understand, I am sure, and especially the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), that at present, in the western country at all events, the question of high freight rates is a very prominent one, and these high rates have in many instances been created under this very system of raising them without consulting the Board of Railway Commissioners. So that while quite agreeable to let the matter stand at present, I would like it to be understood that I shall want to press the Bill a little later on.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. BURNHAM moved second reading of Bill (No. 8) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to do away with the deposit in Dominion elections. In Ontario that deposit has been done away with in provincial elections, and I desire to bring our Dominion Elections law in this respect in conformity with that in Ontario at least. Of course it would be out of the question to urge that the deposit should be done away with in Dominion elections in one province and not in the others, and therefore, I propose to repeal the provision requiring a deposit as regards the Dominion generally. While the deposit of $200 may seem a very small one, there are very large objections to it from one end of the country to the other, the opinion of the labour people is against it, and they are a very prominent and forceful portion of the electorate. Since the request comes from these people, it ought to be taken seriously; and since we have adopted the provincial franchise, it is but consistent that we should follow the provincial practice as much as possible in our elections. So far as I know, the argument against the abolition of the deposit is not one of a technical or legal character. It is the argument that by doing away with this deposit, we shall encourage the candidature of irresponsible parties. Well, that has not been found to be the result in the province of Ontario, in the provincial election, and these are of minor importance to the Dominion elections. Therefore, you may reasonably conclude that such a contingency would be less likely in the Dominion elections. In any event, since the doing away with the deposit in the province of Ontario has not been found to facilitate the entry of irresponsible parties into provincial contests, I do not see why that argument should have any weight in Dominion matters.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend has suggested that as the Dominion franchise is based at present upon the provincial franchises, it would be desirable to make this particular feature of the Act conform to provincial legislation, but I would like to remind him that provincial legislation is not uniform on this subject. In the province of Ontario, it is true, there is no deposit required, but that is not the rule in some of the other provinces. The deposit is required in more than one, so that the adoption of the rule my hon. friend has suggested would not necessarily lead to the elimination of any provision for a deposit in federal elections. I do not think that the proposed legislation should be adopted without further consideration. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to let his Bill stand, I shall take into consideration the question of having it referred to a special committee for the purpose of inquiring into the considerations he has brought to our attention. I therefore beg to move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

Mr. BORDEN moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing that a private secretary to a minister may be appointed a clerk in subdivision B of the first division, or in subdivision A or B of the second division, and paid a salary not exceeding the maximum in such subdivision.

He said: His Royal Highness the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, has assented to the same.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORDEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN. Such of the Bills as are ready, and then we will take up the estimates if there is no objection, beginning with civil government.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5.31 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORDEN. I beg to move that the names of Mr. Boyce and Mr. Fripp be substituted for those of Mr. Chabot and Mr. Foster (Kings, N. S.) on the Committee on Railways and Canals; that the name of Mr. Boyce be substituted for that of Mr. Foster (Kings, N. S.) on the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills; that the name of Mr. Foster (Kings, N. S.) be substituted for that of Mr. Boyce on the Committee on Public Accounts; that the name of Mr. Foster (Kings, N. S.) be substituted for that of Mr. Bradbury on the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization; that the name of Mr. Bradbury be substituted for that of Mr. Stewart (Hamilton) on the Committee on Marine and Fisheries; that the name of Mr. Foster (Kings, N. S.) be substituted for that of Mr. Boyce on the Committee on Mines and Minerals; and that the name of Mr. Stewart (Hamilton) be substituted for that of Mr. Bradbury on the Committee on Forests, Waterways and Water-powers.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN. I beg to move that the name of Mr. Thompson (Yukon) be added to the following Select Standing Committees:—Miscellaneous and Private Bills, Agriculture and Colonization, and Mines and Minerals.

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MACDONELL (Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 59) to amend the Patent Act. He said: This Bill is a very short one but it proposes some rather important changes. The time limit at present within which a patentee or his assignee must manufacture in Canada is limited to two years, and the time within which importation is prohibited is at present one year—that is importation from a foreign country. I believe it is in the public interest that these two periods should be extended. In England the time to manufacture extends throughout the whole length of the patent. I only propose to extend the time within which the patentee must manufacture from two years to four years, and the prohibited period during which he may not import the manufactured article from one to two years, and I propose to repeal the present clause of the Patent Act which provides for an extension of the time, so that hereafter, should this Bill become law, there will be a definite fixed time and no extensions. At present some persons obtain extensions and others do not, so that there is an inequality in the working out of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CAUSAPSCAL POST OFFICE.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Postmaster General received a petition respecting the post office at Causapscal?

2. If so, what is the object of that petition?

3. Is it the intention of the minister to change the site of the post office at Causapscal?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1 and 2. Yes, one asking that the present site should not be changed, and a request that it should be changed.

3. The site has been changed.

CENSUS COMMISSIONERS AND ENUMERATORS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) whether the balances due the different census commissioners and enumerators have yet been paid. In the city and county of St. John—and I presume the same remarks apply to other sections of the province—I have had urgent requests to communicate with the minister on this subject. These balances are due a very considerable time. They are not large sums individually, but the withholding of them has caused very considerable inconvenience. If these have not been paid, when may the commissioners and enumerators expect to receive them?

Mr. BURRELL. The larger portions due have been remitted already, and the payment of such balances as still remain due will be expedited directly the final revision takes place, and that is very close at hand. Within a very short time all claims will be cleared up and paid.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 19) to amend the Inquiries Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before we proceed with the consideration of this motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call your attention to a point of order. I think that in asking the House to give this Bill its second reading my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) is acting contrary to the rules of the House. This Bill imposes charges upon the revenues of the country which may amount to a very large sum though whether large or small would not affect the principle to which I wish to call attention. The Bill provides that the commissioners appointed under the Inquiries Act may employ architects, engineers, counsel and other expert assistants in connection with their work and also that they may delegate to other persons power to act as commissioners in their stead in various sections of Canada. This clearly imposes a charge upon the revenue. The matter is governed by rule 77, as follows:

77. If any motion be made in the House for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the House thinks fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, before any resolution or vote of the House do pass thereupon.

My hon. friend, Mr. Doherty, is asking the House to vote upon this Bill. The subject is dealt with by Bourinot at page 638:

It is the invariable rule that all measures involving a charge upon the people or any class thereof, should be first considered in a Committee of the Whole. Rule 88 orders——

This rule is numbered 77 under our present rules, and is the one I have already quoted. Bourinot quotes the rule and proceeds:

Under this rule, all Bills providing for the payment of salaries or for any expenditure whatever out of the public funds of the Dominion must be first considered as resolutions in Committee of the Whole. And all such resolutions necessary to the introduction of a Bill, must first obtain the recommendation of the Governor General.

I suppose my hon. friend's attention has not been called to the rule or he would have presented this matter to the House in the manner which the rule makes necessary.

Mr. DOHERTY. It seemed to me that the Bill before the House does not fall within the rule which the hon. member, Mr. Pugsley, has read. This Bill proposes to confer certain powers upon the commissioners that may already be named under the existing Inquiries Act, chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes. It gives them power, it is true, to employ counsel, accountants and other expert assistants, and further more it confers power upon them to delegate to commissioners whom they may choose the investigation of some particular matter or matters. But the Bill does not deal with the question of the payment of the people who are to be so employed. I submit that when it comes to be a matter of determining what payment is to be made to the people who are to be employed, we shall be called upon to get, in the regular manner from this House, a vote authorizing these payments. But, for the moment, the Bill does not provide for these people being paid at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will allow me: Suppose there were no further legislation upon the subject, and an engineer or counsel were employed and did the work, could not he proceed before the Exchequer Court to recover payment for his services, and would not the government be bound to pay him?

Mr. DOHERTY. I think it would be doubtful. We have no authority from parliament to take such action that an engineer could proceed and recover through a court of justice. I did not come prepared to discuss the question fully; but only last week I came across a case in which a man who had been appointed commissioner and empowered to carry on an investigation, in the absence of an express arrangement for his payment had no action to recover. I could find that judgment for the satisfaction of the hon. member, should he desire to see it. It was not in connection with this matter at all, but I am in a position to state that it was a case that actually arose. It arose by reason of a difference of opinion as to the amount which ought to be paid, but the decision was that, in the absence of any authorized order in council fixing the amount to be paid, there could be no action and no point of merit. I am not suggesting that the gentlemen to be appointed under this measure shall not, in some regular and proper way, be paid or that the necessary means to provide therefor will not be taken. But, for the moment, what the Bill asks to do is purely and simply to provide that commissioners whose appointment is already provided for under the existing law shall have these further and more extensive powers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If no other hon. member wishes to speak, I desire to say that it seems to me that, if parliament passes an Act authorizing the employment of experts to carry on work for the public they would clearly have the right to recover in the Exchequer Court. They could show that they acted under an Act of parliament, that the commissioners had empowered them to do the work and that parliament had authorized the commissioners to so employ them. I should differ with my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) with great reluctance, but it seems to me absolutely clear that the persons employed under these circumstances would have the right to recover through the Exchequer Court whatever their services were worth. This Bill provides also that these sub-commissioners, whose appointment is not provided for in the original statute may call witnesses and employ experts, and so impose heavy charges upon the public revenue. If it were necessary in the first place, when the original Inquiries Act was introduced, to present first to the House a resolution and seek the authority of a Committee of the Whole House, it seems to me equally necessary now, because this Bill greatly increases the burdens that may be placed upon the revenues of the country. It proposes to create a roving commission, with power not only to act themselves throughout Canada, but with power to appoint one, or twenty, or a hundred different sub-commissions to engage in carrying on their inquiry. And it gives authority, in the name of the government to employ people, thus imposing a charge upon the revenue. I have never before known of an attempt made in the House to have a Bill imposing a charge upon the revenue presented except upon a resolution. Take, the case of the Grain Bill, submitted before the recess by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). That Bill is an amendment to the Grain Act. It is intended to give wider powers to the commissioners appointed under the Act. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not suppose for a moment that he could bring the Bill before the House in the first instance otherwise than by resolution. At the same time, as there is such a rule we ought to be very careful indeed to follow it.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Mr. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say authoritatively that the original Act was so introduced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I said was that if it were necessary, when the original Act was introduced to parliament, to precede it by a resolution, it would be equally necessary now in making an amendment to the Bill. I cannot conceive that the Act could have been introduced without a resolution in the first place, to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORDEN. I have not examined the procedure followed when the original Act was presented. My hon. friend's argument in that respect would have a great deal more force if he had established his premise; but if he does not establish his premise, he does not advance a step. But the question remains to be debated, whether the original Act required that procedure or not. I do not understand that the government could pay out a dollar under this Bill unless the money were voted by parliament; and even if there were a judgment in the Exchequer Court, such as my hon. friend has suggested, I do not think the government could pay out money under that judgment until it had been voted by parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think a judgment is necessarily paid without an appropriation.

Mr. BORDEN. I have seen in the estimates over and over again items for the payment of such liabilities. Unless there is some special provision in the law that every judgment of an Exchequer Court must be paid, then it would be necessary to vote it in the estimates in the ordinary way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is the case, the statute authorizes such judgments to be paid.

Mr. BORDEN. If that is the case, there is no need of further argument on that point. But so far as this Bill is concerned, it seems to me very much as if it were in this position: Suppose you added a clause that any of these persons so to be employed might be paid out of moneys to be voted by parliament for that purpose; in that case you must come to parliament and get the money voted. Therefore, no charge is imposed upon the people until that money is voted by parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not put that limitation.

Mr. BORDEN. Not in so many words, but is not that the precise effect of it? I do not understand how any government could pay any of these persons named in the Act of the Minister of Justice unless the money had been voted by parliament for that purpose. Then that money might be paid by order in council to the parties, and for the purpose for which parliament had voted it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose the Minister of Public Works were authorized to let a contract for the construction of a bridge across the Ottawa river, and pursuant to that authorization, he let the contract. Suppose there was a dispute which came before the Exchequer Court, and the Exchequer Court decided that the contractors were entitled to recover upon that contract. In that case would not the Finance Minister have to pay the judgment if, under the general statute, there is no authorization to pay judgments out of the revenues?

Mr. BORDEN. It would depend altogether on the provision of the general statute to which my hon. friend has alluded. There may be such a statute in existence. But apart altogether from that, it seems clear to me that these sums can only be paid out of moneys voted by parliament. Therefore there is no charge until parliament votes the money.

Mr. SPEAKER. My attention was not directed to this Bill beyond the inquiry which I made if there was anything in it that imposed a charge upon the revenues of the country, and the reply was that there was not; therefore I assumed the Bill was properly introduced. But it seems to me, from the argument I have heard, and after looking over the Bill, that there is a nice point involved in it. Therefore, I would ask that the Bill be held over until another day until I can look into it.

Motion allowed to stand.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 31) to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899. He said: When this Bill was introduced to the House I explained that the object was to reduce the number of commissioners in Quebec from the present number of 9 to the number of 3, thus bringing it into line with the harbour commissioners of the port of Montreal. I may say that the request for this amendment comes from the Board Council of the Board of Trade in the city of Quebec. For some years past the Board of Trade have petitioned the federal government with regard to this matter. Under the Act of 1899, which was a consolidation of previous Acts.

The 'corporation' consisted of nine commissioners appointed and elected as follows: Five appointed by the Governor in Council, one elected by the council of the Quebec Board of Trade, one elected by the council of the Levis Board of Trade, two elected by the shipping interests.

Each commissioner so elected holds office for a term of three years. In December, 1907, the Quebec Board of Trade petitioned the government to reduce the number of commissioners from nine to three, and otherwise reorganize the commission. The commissioners, under date 17th December, 1907, replied to such petition that they are carrying out the improvements in the harbour of Quebec to the best of their ability, and in accordance with the plans and views of the governmeent, and that they feel strongly that they are better able to judge of the requirements of the port of Quebec than the members of the Board of Trade. On the 2nd August, 1910, the secretary of the Quebec Board of Trade advised the Department of Marine and Fisheries of the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Moved by Mr. G. E. Amyot, seconded by Mr. W. H. Wiggs, and resolved, that while we recognize the necessity of reorganizing the present Harbour Commission, as this cannot take place before the next ses ion of parliament, we the members of the Council of the Quebec Board of Trade, in view of the commercial and shipping interests of the city, deem it advisable under the circumstances, to proceed to the election of our representative on the Quebec Harbour Commission, which representative in the opinion of this council, should be the president of the board.

On the 23rd October, 1911, the Quebec Board of Trade again memorialized the government to reorganize the Harbour Commission on the lines of their previous petition.

The purpose of the present Bill is to reduce the number of the commissioners from nine to three. It is drafted on the lines of the amendment in that respect to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners Act.

The revenue of the commission for the year ending 1st December, 1910, was $121,036.84, and the expenditure for the same period was $117,007.16, leaving a surplus of $4,029.68. The advances on loan from the Dominion government to date amount to $3,622,802.42. The interest payable on such loan is four per cent. The overdue interest on these loans amounted, on the 31st March, 1910, to $3,312,795.40. The commission have only paid $72,300 interest all told, and the last payment was made in November, 1890. The commission have issued debentures to the public to the extent of $750,000. They pay interest on these debentures at the rate of four per cent semi-annually, The interest on them is paid up to date. Under the provisions of chapter 36 of the Statutes of 1907, the commissioners were authorized to issue $800,000 in reference bonds. So far only $400,000 have been issued. The secretary-treasurer advised the Department of Marine and Fisheries, under date of the 8th November, 1911, that the balance would be put on the market on the 1st December instant.

By-law No. 108 as approved by order in council of the 17th May, 1910, reads as follows:

Each commissioner attending a meeting of the commission or a sub-committee meeting at the time fixed for holding the same, shall be paid the sum of not less than $5, but not exceeding $10 for each attendance at such meeting.

I have also figures here which may be interesting to my right hon. friend:

Extract from a report of the Quebec Harbour Commission, as contained in the annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, 1911, page 41.

"Three hundred and forty-seven vessels of a total tonnage of 1,578,135 tons register entered the different docks and landed 283,413 tons of cargoes. Ninety-five vessels of a total tonnage of 341,633 tons register and cargoes of 26,525 tons left the harbour during the season of navigation. The increase of vessels in 1910 over 1909 was 33 vessels, 257,692 registered tonnage and 68,846 tons freight inwards and 6 vessels, 246,627 tons register and 5,279 tons freight outwards. Thirty thousand eight hundred and three R.S. lumber and timber were shipped in 1910, against 28,741 in 1909, or an increase of 2,062 R.S. lumber and timber. Lower ports steamers, 2,861 tons, cargo shipped 10,065 tons, 157,487 bushels of grain and 148,060 railway ties were landed. Ten thousand four hundred and ninety-seven first-class, 43,903 second and 107,870 third-class passengers were landed during the year ending December 31, 1910. The total revenue for 1909 was $102,165.84. 1910 was $121,036.84, an increase of $18,871. The total revenue for the year was $121,036.84; the expenditure, $117,007.16, and the surplus $4,029.68."

I have also a statement showing the imports and exports dues which I will be happy to give to the House if required. This Bill practically puts the Harbour Commission of Quebec, so far as the number of commissioners is concerned, on the same footing as the Harbour Commission of Montreal. The Montreal Harbour Commission was at one time composed of nine or eleven members who represented special interests and it was considered far more desirable in the interests of the business of the port that three commissioners should be vested with authority to carry on its affairs. That has worked satisfactorily in regard to the port of Montreal and there would be no disposition there to-day to return to the old order of things. It is believed that the smaller number of Harbour Commissioners in Quebec will also result in that body working more easily together as it will not be so unwieldly, and that good results will flow from the change.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The general idea with regard to Harbour Boards all over the country is that they should represent the different trading interests of the community, and Montreal has always been treated as an exception to that rule. Under present conditions, a certain number of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners are appointed by the government, a certain number elected by the Quebec Board of Trade, a certain number by the Levis Board of Trade and two are appointed by the shipping interests. The minister has quoted resolutions which have been frequently passed during the last three or four years by the Quebec Board of Trade, asking that the system in vogue in Montreal with reference to the control of the harbour should be adopted there. These resolutions were brought to my notice when I was in office, but I do not recollect that either the shipping interests or the Levis Board of Trade, which are both interested in the matter, have ever passed similar resolutions. Naturally on this subject there is a division of opinion and while I do not know that the Quebec Board of Trade is unanimous on the question it must be that a majority favours the change. However, the subject was referred to the Quebec Board of Harbour Commissioners, and my recollection is that that body was in favour of the continuance of the present system. As I understand it now, the commissioners who were appointed by the government some ten or twelve years ago, and who were in office on the 21st of September, have been removed by the minister and new appointments made by him. The hon. gentleman has not told us that he has consulted this new board and that they have endorsed the proposal he now makes. Has he so little confidence in the new men he has put in office that he did not think it worth while to ask their opinion on such an important matter? Is he treating his friends so cavalierly, that having appointed them less than two months ago he will now cut off their heads without asking them whether or not they wish to submit to the operation? What did he appoint them for? Was it simply for the pleasure of dismissing them? If they were fit men for the position, does he not think that their judgment on this question would be worthy of some consideration?

If he does I think that before he proceeds with this measure the least he can do is to refer it to the present Harbour Commissioners and see whether or not they agree to have their heads cut off so soon after their appointment. I think it would be wise for my hon. friend, before proceeding further, to give us the opinion of the present Board of Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. HAZEN. This Bill was introduced early in the session before the adjournment of the House and although its terms were generally known no protest against its passage has been received from any source, either from the Board of Trade of Levis or from any shipping interests of Quebec. I assume that those interested, who are very keenly alive to what affects their business, would have taken means to make known their opposition to this Bill if they did not wish for its passage.

My right hon. friend referred to the changes recently made in the personnel of the Harbour Commission. As in 1896 so in 1911, three of the gentlemen who are the nominees of the government on the commission have been retired and others put in their places. I requested my colleague the Postmaster General to consult with those three gentlemen with regard to the merits of this measure and I am assured that they are of the opinion that it is in the interests of the shipping of the port of Quebec that the Bill should pass. Not a word of opposition to the Bill has developed since it was introduced which leads me to believe that it will meet with general acceptance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Has the Bill been referred to them?

Mr. HAZEN. No, but their opinion was asked in regard to it.

Mr. PELLETIER. The shipping interests of Quebec, the whole trade of Quebec, wish this change and have been asking for it for years and years. The Board of Trade will be accepted as voicing the wishes and desires of the merchants of Quebec. That board have passed a resolution, I think unanimously, in favour of this measure. I have had occasion to speak of this matter very often both before and since the election and have taken the stand that we should have in the harbour of Quebec such a board as they have in Montreal, and I have heard nothing but praise of that suggestion. No newspaper in Quebec has opposed the change except that we have cut off the heads of certain gentlemen who were Liberals. This Bill represents the wishes of the population of Quebec at large.

The right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has declared that the old board were opposed to the change but they were about the only ones in Quebec who were; they thought that they were the right men in the right place but every one except them was of a different opinion. When the work of these commissioners was brought to the attention of the government we thought it desirable to remove some of the appointees of the late government. The Dominion government is entitled to appoint five men on that board. We replaced only three of them. The three gentlemen whom we have appointed to the board were taken not from the ranks of the Conservative party alone but from among the business men of Quebec, and I have heard nothing but praise of the choice which has been made. As the Minister of Marine has not had occasion to go to Quebec as often as I have, I undertook to consult those men about the proposed change. I have met the present Harbour Commissioners as a body, not only those who were appointed by us but those who were appointed by the late government and whom we have retained because I wish to emphasize the fact that we have kept two of the gentlemen appointed by my right hon. friend. We have only removed these whom we thought were perhaps inclined to think that there should be some politics in the administration of the Harbour Board.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who are they?

Mr. PELLETIER. Mr. J. B. Laliberté, one of my right hon. friend's friends, Mr. Tanguay and Mr. Larue. We have kept the two others appointed by the right hon. leader of the opposition, Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Thom. They were two first class business men, and although they were appointed by the late government we have retained them. I have met these gentlemen in Quebec and they knew very well it was the intention of the government to change the board and to put it on the same footing as the Montreal board. Not one member of the board opposed the change. I have been told that the right hon. gentleman when he was Prime Minister had intimated that he thought this change might be made at a very early date. The right hon. gentleman has said that we do not seem to have confidence in the men whom we have ourselves appointed since we are going to cut off their heads.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER. I may inform my right hon. friend that when they were appointed these gentlemen were told that their appointment would be of very short duration, that it would be only temporary as a Bill would be introduced by which the board would be reduced to three men. Those are the facts and I am sure that in this measure we are doing something which will help the trade and shipping of Quebec.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who are the three new commissioners.

Mr. PELLETIER. Mr. Victor Chateauvert,——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good man except for his politics.

Mr. PELLETIER. That part of it we are going to take care of ourselves. I am glad to hear that the appointment is good in all other respects. We have appointed another gentleman to whom I am sure the same certificate will be given by the right hon. the leader of the opposition, that is Mr. J. B. E. Letellier, a name which will appeal to the hon. gentlemen on the other side. There is no fault to find with him I suppose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. The third is Mr. Belleau who has always been considered a good Liberal. It may be that he did not see eye to eye with the Liberal party on the reciprocity question but there are so many in that position that probably no one would think of reproaching them for that. My right hon. friend will admit that except for politics these are good appointments. We have not appointed political friends, we have appointed business men, recognized as such, known as such in Quebec and they themselves are strongly of the opinion that this Bill should pass.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the tenth section, which provides:

> The president and the other commissioners may be paid, out of the revenue of the harbour, such remuneration for their services as the Governor in Council determines.

I understood from my hon. friend that this Bill was intended to copy the Montreal Harbour Commissioners Act, and, if my memory serves me, the salaries of the harbour commissioners in that case are fixed by the Act.

Mr. HAZEN. I cannot say off-hand whether that is the case or not.

Mr. PELLETIER. I may say that the law officer who prepared this Bill informed me that it was exactly on the same footing as the Montreal Bill. But I will find out.

Bill reported.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

House in committee on the following proposed resolution:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing that a private secretary to a minister may be appointed a clerk in subdivision B of the first division, or in subdivision A or B of the second division, and paid a salary not exceeding the maximum in such subdivision.

Mr. BORDEN. By section 39 of the Civil Service Act—the amendment Act of 1908—it is provided:

> Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed for a period not exceeding one year, and paid as a clerk in subdivision (b) of the second division, and after one year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be appointed to such rank.

The salary for sub-division 'B' of the second division being $800 minimum increasing to $1,600 as a maximum, it is necessary that any one so appointed should be appointed at the minimum. Therefore, this requires that a private secretary to a minister appointed to the Civil Service should be appointed at $800 in the first instance, with of course the usual allowance to a private secretary of $600. It is not thought that this salary is sufficient to command the services of persons suitable to fill a position of that kind. At least that has been our experience. Therefore, it is proposed to amend that section of the Civil Service Amendment Act by providing that a private secretary to a minister may be appointed a clerk in subdivision 'B' of the first division, or in subdivision 'A' or 'B' of the second division, and paid a salary not exceeding the maximum in such division.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection at all to offer to the idea involved in this resolution. I think it is quite important that the status of private secretaries should be clearly fixed. I do not think that this is the opportune time to discuss the question, but shall reserve further remarks until the Bill is up for the second reading.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 60) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Charges of management—Printing of Dominion notes, $275,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is an increase there of $100,000. What is the reason for it?

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Leeds). This is made necessary by the demands of the circulation. There was a very large increase last fall and we expect a further increase in the coming year.

Mr. BUREAU. Is it altogether because of the increase in the circulation, or is because of any change with regard to the use of old notes?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It is because of the expected heavy demands of the circulation. Last fall, the demand was so heavy that we had to put out $4 notes. I believe that at one time the American Bank Note Company were printing 30,000 sheets a day in order to meet the demand. In other words the bank note circulation is not nearly adequate to meet the public demand, so that last year a very serious situation arose and had to be met by increasing the circulation of Dominion notes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why are these $4 notes issued? In commercial circles this is regarded as a very objectionable denomination. The notes are apt to be confounded with the $1 notes. I am informed that in the city of St. John the feeling among business men is that as soon as possible these $4 notes should be taken out of circulation. Is it necessary to issue notes of that denomination? Must the law be changed before the issue can cease?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I entirely agree with what my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) says as to notes of $4 denomination. The reason so many were issued was that the plate for printing them was made, and it takes a considerable time to prepare a plate to print such notes as we issue. Last year, prior to my becoming Finance Minister, and, no doubt, owing to the exigencies of the occasion, the $4 notes had to be issued to meet the demands for circulation. Only within the last few days I have been considering with the controller of the currency the advisability of issuing a $5 note. I agree that the $4 note is decidedly objectionable because it is easily confounded with the $1 note, and for other reasons. My present opinion is that a $5 note should be substituted. I think that some further relief can be given by a revision of the Bank Act, for instance, by carrying out the suggestion which has been made that the banks should be allowed to issue circulation against gold. That is a matter for further consideration. But we have already been considering the question of substituting a $5 note for the $4 note, the latter being, I agree, objectionable.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is the work of printing to be done by the American Bank Note Company, or is it intended to make a new contract?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The contract with the American Bank Note Company expires October 1 next, and I am now considering the subject of advertising for tenders for a five year contract, and have for some time past been considering the proper specifications. I think that within the next week or so I shall be able to call for tenders both in this country and Great Britain—although I hardly imagine it likely that any British company will be able to put in a tender as they would be required to establish themselves here. When the tenders come in we will consider the awarding of a contract.

Removal of foreign and uncurrent coin from circulation, $15,000.

Mr. MURPHY. There is an increase of $7,000 in that item.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). An arrangement with the banks exists, made by my predecessor, under which, for a stipulated commission, the banks assist in this removal of foreign and uncurrent coin from circulation. The amount asked is in accordance with the estimate made by my department of the probable cost of the work. If so much is not required the money will not be expended. I think the arrangement to which I have referred is a very good one.

Governor's General's Secretary's Office—salaries and contingencies (including allowance of $300 to Mr. A. F. Sladen), $66,925.

Mr. BORDEN. There is an increase over last year, which is due, I am informed, to an additional number of aides de camp, and to statutory increases.

Privy Council Office—salaries, $40,200.

Mr. BORDEN. There is a slight increase there, due in part to the statutory increases, and to the fact that a translator is here provided for which was not provided for last year in the supplementary estimates. There are now 9.

Administration of Justice—salaries (including D. Clark at $1,100), $114,115.41.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if it is his intention, or if he has considered the advisability of appointing extra judges in the province of Ontario?

Mr. DOHERTY. A request has been made from the province of Ontario, which is at present receiving our most careful consideration. I may explain that there does not seem to be absolute unanimity in the province as to the necessity, in some cases at all events, of the suggested increases in the number of judges.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why is the name of Mr. D. Clark specially mentioned in this item?

Mr. DOHERTY. Mr. Clark, I understand, is the gentleman who occupied the position of secretary to the late Minister of Justice, and he is specially mentioned by name here for the purpose of enabling him to pass into the class which will entitle him to receive a salary of $2,400.

Mr. MURPHY. I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension as to that individual. The Mr. Clark referred to is employed in the Exchequer Court, and not in the Department of Justice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The mention of his name in this item is not in accordance with the Civil Service Act. Mr. Clark evidently is not qualified to receive that amount he is there voted, according to the Civil Service Act, therefore it is necessary to mention him by name. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) knows that that is a very vicious practice. I do not know Mr. Clark at all, he may be a very worthy gentleman. With regard to Mr. Sladen, mentioned in the second preceding item, he is a very good officer. But I submit to the Minister of Justice that if he commences at this early stage of his administration putting men in the estimates against the rule of the Civil Service, he is going back upon all his former professions.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Sladen is not in the Civil Service, he is paid out of contingencies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Therefore, he is mentioned here by name. I have nothing to say against the item at all, I think Mr. Sladen deserves the money, he is in the Governor General's office. But in the case of Mr. Clark, I am satisfied his name is mentioned because he cannot get the salary which is voted under the rules of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BORDEN. Perhaps in regard to Mr. Sladen we may be following the bad example of our predecessors. But it is the same as last year. His salary is expressly stated in the statute which provides for the salaries of Ministers of the Crown and others. My attention was not directed to this at all. As to the principle, I concur with the leader of the opposition that it is desirable to avoid this practice as much as possible. But we could not put that item in the estimates this year until we have amended the statute, which we have not yet had time to do. So far as the general principle is concerned, I think it is right, and I have urged that many times in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to Mr. Sladen's case I have to observe that the office of the Governor General is one by itself. It is difficult to apply the same rule to that office as to other offices. The office of the secretary of the Governor General is fixed by statute, it is a very small sum, only about $400, and no doubt his salary should be improved. I do not find fault with that, but it should be done in a regular manner. The Governor General's office is a peculiar one. But putting that aside, we come to the regular Civil Service and we find here an officer, Mr. D. Clark, who gets a salary this year not in accordance with the Civil Service Act, and the result will be that every one of my hon. friends sitting on the treasury benches will be pestered with demands—I wont break my heart over that—but they will have a great increase of trouble because they have set up a very bad example.

Mr. DOHERTY. It is true that, as the member for Russell (Mr. Murphy) has said, I have mentioned the wrong Mr. Clark. The explanation of this item, I am informed, is that Mr. Clark, in the promotions of last year, got no increase.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why did he get no increase last year? Is not this treating others who occupy the same position unfairly, and will it not lead to dissatisfaction and to pressure on the government to give others the same benefits? I presume Mr. Clark had reached the maximum of his class and was not entitled to an increase in his salary and the moment you depart from the Civil Service Act in this way you will create jealousy among others.

Mr. DOHERTY. As I understand it, when Mr. Clark was promoted last year he did not get his $50 increase.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why?

Mr. DOHERTY. We were not in control last year and cannot be expected to know.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must have been because he was not entitled to it under the Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. I could only rely on the recommendation of the registrar, and I am informed that if he does not get his $100 this year he will miss the statutory increase for one year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a principle involved in it and the item should stand until we know why he did not get the statutory increase last year.

Mr. DOHERTY. Very well.

Department of Militia and Defence—salaries, $142,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Explain the increase.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Disregarding the statutory increases and one special increase there is a decrease in the vote of $150. There is a special increase of $400 for the account. I wanted him to get more but did not succeed in obtaining it.

Mr. MURPHY. Who gets that increase?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Borden, paymaster and accountant, a cousin of the late minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There seem to be other promotions.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Panet is promoted from being secretary to the minister to being an officer in the department. Col. Brown is promoted and an architect named McKenna is transferred from the Public Works Department by the Civil Service Commissioners.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The minister has stated outside the House that he proposes to drill one million men and twenty-five thousand cadets, but he did not mention that he was to have an architect. What does he want with an architect?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). My predecessor found that having taken over the construction of militia buildings costing fifteen thousand dollars or less, the Public Works was so busy with various works throughout the Dominion that the Militia Department was neglected and he got one of these expert architects from the Public Works Department. Inasmuch as this transfer took place before the fatal 21st of September, I do not know that I should be held criminally liable.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh no, I am not at all finding fault with my hon. friend. I see that he is following the policy of the late government in regard to the Militia as well as in regard to the Navy.

Mr. BUREAU. Is that $900 simply for statutory increases for sorters and packers?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is an increase in the number of packers and a decrease in some of the higher departments. One packer named Littlefield was made a messenger at a salary of $800 and the others were statutory increases.

Mr. MURPHY. I asked if there had been an increase in the higher divisions in addition to the promotion of Col. Brown.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Col. Brown's salary was $2,100 and it has now been advanced to $2,200 in accordance with his classification to complete the establishment.

Department of the Secretary of State—salaries, $62,275.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the secretary explain the difference between the total salary of this year and last year?

Mr. ROCHE. It is owing to the fact that there are several vacancies at present in clerkships which are not now being filled.

Department of Public Printing and Stationery—salaries, $72,950.

Mr. MURPHY. I assume the difference between the aggregate of last year and of this is due to the abolition of certain offices and the transfer of other officers to the King's Printer's advance account.

Department of Interior—salaries, $958,411.27.

Mr. OLIVER. I notice that in the first division, sub-division A, while the number of officials is the same, there is an increase in the vote of $600. What has been the basis of this $600 increase? There is no provision made for statutory increases for all the officials of that subdivision. There is evidently provision made only for six. The House will be interested in knowing what particular reason for the difference there is.

Mr. ROGERS. There were 15 statutory increases at $100 and 4 at $25, making $1,600. Then, R. E. Young, who received a salary of $3,800, and who died, has been replaced by a man at a salary of $2,800, making a saving of $1,000. This explains the difference of $600 between the vote of last year and the vote of this year.

Mr. OLIVER. In subdivision B of the first division there is a difference of $883.50 with the same number of clerks.

Mr. ROGERS. There are 36 increases of $100 each, one at $50, one at $12.50, one at $75 and one at $25, making a total of $3,762.50, and there are decreases through superannuations.

Mr. OLIVER. Have all the clerks in the Interior Department received their statutory increases?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. There is an increase in the clerical assistance of $5,000.

Mr. ROGERS. That is to pay temporary clerks appointed during the fiscal year 1912-13. They were employed during six months and were appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

Department of Indian Affairs—salaries, $118,175; contingencies, $13,050.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a difference of five in the number of clerks in each class and it appears as if five had been taken out of subdivision B, second division, and put into subdivision A, third division.

Mr. ROGERS. Five clerks had not passed the Civil Service examination and had to be reduced to a grade below.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose I may assume that, with that exception, the statutory increases have been given in all cases.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). If there is no objection we will go back to the estimates for the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) is prepared to explain the item.

Administration of Justice—salaries (including D. Clark at $1,700), $114,115.41; contingencies, $11,500.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have made inquiries and I find that there is nothing which I can say to justify this increase of $50, except the recommendation of this gentleman's superior officer. I understand that does not, under the law, entitle him to have that special $50. I move that the item be reduced to $1,650. I do not want to insist on something that I cannot justify.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Cut out the name and make it $1,650.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Even without being specially named he will get the $1,650. I understand that he is included in this general salary vote of $114,115.41. The reason his name was mentioned is that otherwise he could not get beyond $1,650.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). That is right. That total should be reduced by $50.

Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Doherty moves that the item be reduced by $50.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Strike out the name.

Office of the Auditor General—salaries, $113,850; contingencies, $6,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is an increase here of $6,550 in salaries.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Part of that is statutory, and there have been some promotions. They are all on the recommendation of the Auditor General. If fuller information is required I shall be glad to have it ready at eight o'clock. I hardly expected that we should reach the consideration of the estimates this afternoon. I have sent for particulars regarding my own department. If the committee will allow the item for the Auditor General's Department to stand, I will be glad to take it up afterwards.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Stand.

Department of Customs—salaries, $276,225; contingencies, $14,000.

Mr. BUREAU. There is an increase here of $14,987.50. Would the minister please explain.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We have added twelve members to the staff in the second division, subdivision B, and two in the lower grade. Owing to the increase in the revenue, making so much more work, the commissioner informs me, it was necessary to add to the staff. He accordingly had to go to the Civil Service Commission and employ a certain number more in the department. It will be seen that we are employing those who have passed the Civil Service examination and are starting the new officers at the minimum.

Mr. MURPHY. That is only temporary employment up to the present, but the minister is providing for permanent additions to the staff.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They will be permanent after they have served their six months' probation.

Department of Inland Revenue—salaries, $107,937.50; contingencies, $8,300.

Mr. NESBITT. Will the minister please explain the increase of $1,850?

Mr. NANTEL. There has been one superannuation, but the position so made vacant has been filled at a lower salary.

Mr. BUREAU. Does the minister say that salaries were reduced by replacing officers with others receiving less?

Mr. NANTEL. One was superannuated.

Mr. BUREAU. In what class?

Mr. NANTEL The explanation of the increase is that one was superannuated. But his successor receives a lower salary.

Mr. BUREAU. That is no information. I see that in the first division, subdivision B, there is one clerk more than in 1911-12.

Mr. NANTEL. I have given the explanation of the increases.

Mr. BUREAU. Who is the man who was superannuated? What salary was he getting?

Mr. NANTEL. I will get the information and give it to the committee if it is necessary.

Mr. BUREAU. I want to know.

Mr. NANTEL. Then let the item stand.

Department of Agriculture—salaries, $399,675; contingencies, $24,500.

Mr NESBITT. There is a decrease here of $3,512.50 in salaries.

Mr. BURRELL. The main item in that decrease is due to the fact that Dr. Saunders, head of the experimental farm, resigned, and Mr. Grisdale was appointed to the position at $1,200 less salary. The rest is made up of the ordinary changes of officials.

Mr. NESBITT. If Mr. Grisdale was appointed to Dr. Saunders' position, why was he not given the same salary?

Mr. BURRELL. That is a question my hon. friend might put to the late minister.

Mr. NESBITT. But I am asking the present minister

Mr. BURRELL. And I am pointing out that it took place before my time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrell) propose to follow the late minister in everything as well as in this? If so, it will be much to his credit.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—salaries (including W. P. Anderson at $4,000), $219,050.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be observed that while there are 5 less officials in the Department, there is an increase of upwards of $7,000. Would my hon. friend explain that.

Mr. HAZEN. I may explain matters by taking up each division by itself. In the first division subdivision A, the only changes from last year's estimates other than the regular statutory increases are an increase of $450 in the salary of Col. Anderson, who is the chief engineer of the department. Then there are two additional clerkships, promotions from the class below. Mr. Adams is one and Mr. J. G. Halkett, who was receiving $2,500, is promoted to this division at a salary of $2,800. The other amounts consist of statutory increases. In subdivision B, 4 officers of this class have been promoted, and 3 new positions have been created. This leaves 5 positions to be filled. On the advice of the officials of my department, and with my approval, it is proposed to have a new official to act as general inspector, at $2,500. He will have the duty of inspecting all the agencies of the department. This duty of inspecting the different agencies was supposed to be performed by Mr. Boyle, but it has been found that his time is fully taken up with attending to the duties of accountant in his department, and unless another official is appointed there will be no proper inspection of the different agencies of the department. It is therefore proposed to appoint an inspector at an initial salary of $2,400. Then Mr. D. H. Steele, whose salary is now $2,050, is promoted to a salary of $2,100; Mr. Noble is to get $2,100 and Mr. D. C. Campbell is also to get $2,100. It is also proposed to appoint an assistant chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspectors, at a salary of $2,100. My information is that this is an appointment that is absolutely necessary. There has been for some years past in the estimates an item of $1,200 to provide for the salary of such an officer, but it has been found impossible to obtain an official having the necessary knowledge for that salary. It is necessary to have an official who will render assistance to the gentleman who is now occupying the position as chairman of the board, and one who will be qualified to succeed him when he retires from the service.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does that refer to the inspectorship in New Brunswick?

Mr. HAZEN. No, that refers to the general inspector. We have different inspectors of the hulls of steamboats in the several provinces, but this refers to the chairman of the steamboat inspectors. In the second division, 5 positions are available. Mr. Halkett is transferred to the outside service. Mr. Stewart, inspector of gas buoys, is transferred to the inside service. Then there is a draughtsman for the marine architects' branch, at $1,650, another for the engineers' branch, at $1,600. In the second division, subdivision B, there is a decrease of 2 from the estimates of last year, when 26 positions were provided for. In the third division of subdivision A, there is one vacancy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the organization of the department provide for 18 clerks in the first division of subdivision B?

Mr. HAZEN. I presume it must. But it is not intended to change the organization in that division. There is only one new position, that is the inspector of marine agencies. Then there are promotions of 4 clerks from a lower class. One is Mr. Cowie, who will be employed by the department in educational work among the marine officials. Then Mr. Steele is promoted to $2,100, as well as Mr. Noble and Mr. Campbell.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are ten promotions in the higher divisions of this department involving an increased expenditure of about $20,000, and my impression is that these offices were provided for on the reorganization which the Civil Service Act called for when it came into force. Are these additions made so as to change the organization?

Mr. HAZEN. I am informed there is no change in the organization and that this is simply in accordance with the practice.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there is a change in the organization an order in council must have been passed.

Mr. HAZEN. The orders in council were passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the organization has been changed. Why has it been found necessary to name Mr. Anderson.

Mr. HAZEN. My deputy minister called my attention to this matter and I acted on his advice. The assistant deputy minister is getting $4,000 a year and the Commissioner of Fisheries $4,000 a year, and it was felt that the salary of Mr. Anderson the chief engineer, who has been in the department for a great many years, and who I am informed discharges his important duties with very great satisfaction, should not be less than that of these other officials. We know that to-day it is not easy to get a man, possessing high professional and technical qualifications such as Colonel Anderson has, and I think a salary of $4,000 is a very moderate one for the services he renders the department and the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the minister think it is in the interests of the Civil Service that one official should be taken out of the law and given a salary which the Act does not provide for, while other officials who may perhaps not have so many friends to intercede for them are allowed to perform equally important duties at a smaller salary? I have in my mind some engineering officials in the Department of Public Works whose salaries are far smaller than the earnings of men discharging similar duties outside of the public service. Take the district engineers throughout the country, the assistant deputy minister of the department, the chief engineer, all of whom are performing duties of the highest class and their salaries are not as high as that now proposed for Colonel Anderson.

Mr. HAZEN. Does not the chief engineer of the Public Works get this salary?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think he only gets $3,600.

Mr. HAZEN. How long has he been in the service?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Twenty years or more. I believe that most of the engineers of the different departments receive salaries inadequate to the important services they render, but if it is desirable to increase, why not do so by amending the Act so that all will be treated alike? It will surely cause dissatisfaction if individuals are selected by name and increases given to them in violation of the Act.

Mr. HAZEN. I agree that the salaries paid to technical and professional officers are very moderate. I am advised by one of the officers of the department that the salary of Colonel Anderson can be made four thousand under the law, but that it cannot be made more than four thousand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then why do you name him?

Mr. HAZEN. I do not see why he should be named, but as I am new in the department that escaped my notice. Colonel Anderson has been in the department since 1875 and I infer from what my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) said that he thinks four thousand dollars only a moderate salary for the duties performed by him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not objecting to the salary, but I am objecting to the evasion of the law.

Mr. HAZEN. I understond that there is no evasion of the law, but that anyway you cannot be evading the law when you ask the supreme authority of parliament for what you are doing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is an evasion of the law. Colonel Anderson is a very good officer, and I have no doubt he is worth the money it is proposed to give him, but he is in a class the maximum salary of which is four thousand dollars, and that maximum is reached by an increase of one hundred dollars a year, so that you evade the law in this way by giving him seven years increase in one. I am very glad to bear testimony to the efficiency of Colonel Anderson and to say that he is a very good officer, but he is no better than Mr. Lafleur and Mr. St. Laurent of the Public Works Department. The Minister of Trade and Commerce used to take us severely to task and now will he allow his own colleagues to do what he would not allow us to do?

I knew a time when he insisted on the law being carried out to the letter. I have no objection to Colonel Anderson being paid $4,000 a year, but if it is done in this way it creates in the service a feeling not at all conducive to the best interests of the country. There are men in other departments who will think they are not fairly treated in not being allowed to jump the increase of four years in one year. My hon. friend is creating a precedent not conducive to the welfare of the service.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not think that difficulty will arise in connection with the increase to Colonel Anderson. The gentleman next to him in the service, the purchasing agent, who is receiving $3,550, has been in the department only a few years while Colonel Anderson has spent a lifetime in the department, and I do not think any feeling of jealousy or ill-will will be aroused in the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me cite some cases of injustice of which I know. There are gentlemen performing duties of accountants in some of the departments through whose hands vast sums of money pass, such men as the accountant in the department of the Auditor General, who handles millions of dollars, whose salaries are very much less than $4,000.

Mr. HAZEN. How long have they been in the service?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think a good many years.

Mr. HAZEN. Thirty-six years?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know we had to consider the matter when arranging for the organization of the different departments under the Civil Service Act. We recognized that we would be pressed to make exceptions in favour of individuals but we steadfastly refused to do so for the reason given by the right hon. the leader of the opposition that it is unfairly discriminating against individual members of the Civil Service. The only way in which satisfaction can be given, is to assign certain salaries to different divisions and subdivisions and adhere to hat. The moment you depart from that rule you must necessarily do what many members of the Civil Service will believe to be injustice, and you open the door to pressure to have increases made in different directions. The late government steadily refused to make such increases, with possibly some exceptions like that of an official in the Governor General's office.

Mr. HAZEN. One of the officials in the department who is now receiving $4,000 received an increase at one jump only four years ago of $500 or $600 to put him into the next class.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the Civil Service Act?

Mr. HAZEN. Since the Civil Service Act came into force.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On no, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) would never have allowed that.

Mr. HAZEN. I had no idea the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) possessed such influence with the late government.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). The Minister of Trade and Commerce was not omnipresent. He tried to watch you all he could, but you slipped in many things he could not possibly watch.

Mr. HAZEN. I am told that the chief engineer of the Public Works Department, who has been in the service many years less than Colonel Anderson, is getting $3,800.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He gets it under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. HAZEN. He has been in the department many years less than Colonel Anderson. I am told the Chief Architect gets more than that.

Mr. NESBITT. It is a principle that is at stake. The minister makes an exception in this case. I can see that all other gentlemen in the Civil Service who want their salaries increased in the same way will attack the ministers and will attack the House. These things will come up continually and while I say nothing against Colonel Anderson of whom I know nothing, it may be that the young man of whom the minister spoke was promoted for ability and he must have been promoted according to the Civil Service Act. I do not see why Colonel Anderson cannot be promoted according to the Civil Service Act, and be satisfied like the rest. The moment the minister introduces exceptions he opens the door to repeated demands for the same treatment. I certainly protest against the law being broken. Why make an exception of this one individual as against all other individuals? I do not know anything about Colonel Anderson, he may be the best or the worst man in the world, I am speaking of the principle.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) said that he could not be omnipresent and that many things escaped his eye under the previous administration. But here is a thing that is under his eye. I am sure that if he were on this side of the House he would rage and storm and this item would not pass without strong opposition from him. Has he changed since last session?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) must have his joke, I suppose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is more than a joke, it is very serious.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). It is now his turn to storm and rage. I have been doing it for some time, I had some success but not as much as I would like, and my right hon. friend now has the opportunity to transform himself into the virtuous watchdog of the Civil Service Act and to see that it is carried out as nearly as possible, for all general rules will have exceptions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). There is no doubt about that. My right hon. friend was supposed to work under the Civil Service Act, and if in this present estimate there are two or three items which seem to transgress the spirit of the Civil Service Act, I think it will be found on examination that they are meant to correct injustices in the past. It would not take much research to discover in the course of the Civil Service administration for the last fifteen years instances of the grossest favouritism whereby men whom ministers wished to advance beyond the degree permitted by the Civil Service Act were advanced to the detriment of and in rank injustice to men who were their superiors in service and in ability. Sometimes it becomes necessary to take one of those rank injustices and transform it by an Act of parliament even though it must be against the spirit of the Civil Service law. I am as strongly in favour of keeping to an Act or law as my right hon. friend, just as strong as when I sat in opposition. I do not like to see those exceptions made, I would rather they were not made, and my right hon. friend will not find many in my Civil Service estimates. But my right hon. friend knows that young blood is strong, and that we cannot always keep things as we older gray headed men would like to keep them.

Whilst we will try to do the best we can and will come out at a high average in comparison with the administration of my right hon. friend, once in a while justice may be done as the result of something that appears to be not merely in conformity with the spirit of the Act. I think the Civil Service Act itself might be improved, and I hope within the next year that it will be improved in many respects. I would like to have an Act so perfect that it would be impossible to violate the spirit of it; but I am afraid that we shall live a long while before either party on this side or the party on the other side obtains an Act so diverse as that of the Civil Service Act without on some few occasions seemingly to offend against the spirit of the Act; but the judgment will have to be on the general results.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not at all dispute the good intentions of my hon. friend or of the administration in this matter. There is a certain hot place which is said to be paved with good intentions, and I am sorry to say that this government is very like that hot place in this respect, though that is not the only point of comparison between them.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). That is a very lurid comparison.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But here is a deliberate and wilful intention to violate the Civil Service Act. Whatever the intention, there is the result; yet that Act was passed not only with the concurrence but with the strong approval of my hon. friend only three years ago. My hon. friend is now correcting an error by which a good and deserving officer in his department was passed over. There are others in the different departments in a similar position, and they will not give any peace to my hon. friend or to his colleagues between now and the time they prepare their estimates for next year until they are dealt with in the same way. What is done in one case should be done in all. Let us have a law and adhere to it which treats all alike.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I suggest is that this might as well be left over. I presume there will be supplementary estimates, and in the meantime perhaps the government might consider a question which was under the consideration of some members at all events of the late government, regarding the engineering staff of the various departments. These engineers urged that a Bill, which was submitted to the late government, should be passed having in view a more thorough organization of the engineering staff of the various departments, including both the inside and outside service. That Bill provided for an increase in the salaries, and I thought it was calculated to do justice to the engineering staff. I feel just as strongly as I did before recess that it would be unfortunate to single out any one member of the engineering staff and take him out of the Civil Service Act. That would lead to the impression that there is favouritism, and I am sure would cause dissatisfaction.

It would be very much better to have one law for all. That was the idea in enacting the Civil Service Act; but the effect of this Bill is to evade that Act by providing in one jump an increase of $450 to one engineer. I had my attention called to the fact, when I was Minister of Public Works, that there are many engineers throughout the country, in the outside as well as the inside service, most inadequately paid for the very important duties they perform. The duties of some of those engineers are just as important as those of Mr. Anderson can possibly be, and they are paid much less salaries. To increase at one bound Mr. Anderson's salary from $3,550 to $4,000 seems to me not in accord with sound principles.

Mr. HAZEN. I have very great respect for the suggestions of my hon. friend, but as there is but one engineer in the Marine and Fisheries Department, I do not see how increasing his salary can be regarded as invidious. Before we took recess, I heard of the case of Professor Prince in the Fisheries Department who was given a very large increase of salary, and I understand that was done since the passing of the Civil Service Act. In the estimates of 1909-10 I find that provision was made for an increase in the salary of Professor Prince from $2,800 to $4,000, an increase of $1,200, and Professor Prince had not been in the service nearly so long as Mr. Anderson has been. Mr. Anderson has been in the service 36 years and has the reputation of being a splendid officer. I am not acting on my own initiative, but after consultation with the officials of the department. These officials believe that in justice to Mr. Anderson, we should give him this increase. I am assured by them that the increase would not in any way cause any feeling of envy or jealousy in the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about the other departments?

Mr. HAZEN. With the other departments I am not dealing. My right hon. friend referred before recess to the salary of the chief engineer of public works. That gentleman is now getting $3,800 and will soon be getting $3,900, and he has not been in the service nearly as many years as Mr. Anderson. If Mr. Anderson were to drop out to-morrow, under the Civil Service Act another chief engineer would be appointed at a salary of $3,200, which would go, by yearly increases of $100, to $4,000, so that in eight years he would get the salary we propose now to give Mr. Anderson, who has been in the service 36 years. That being the case, the House will only do justice to Mr. Anderson by granting him this increase.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I am not astray, a new office has been created to which Professor Prince was called when his salary was increased. I think he was then appointed a fisheries commissioner under our treaty with the United States, and his duties were very much enlarged. It is rather invidious to say anything against the increase of salary of a meritorious officer. No one denies the qualifications of Mr. Anderson, and I would be very glad, if it were regular, to give him the increase now asked. But what I would call attention to is this, the Civil Service Act was amended and consolidated three years ago for the very purpose now sought to be evaded. Before that time the estimates were full of exceptions to the Act. Increases were given notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. In every department there were increases given against the terms of the Civil Service Act. That Act was amended and consolidated in order to do away with that practice. The Act has now been in force three years. My hon. friend (Mr. Hazen), as has been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), is a young blood, full of zeal and disposed to rush. There is no objection, so far as I know, to our rewarding the services of Mr. Anderson, provided it be done regularly.

But if it is desired to reward Colonel Anderson for his services, and if the intention is to do it regularly, then it must be done not for him alone, but for other parties. This afternoon the same thing was sought to be done for a gentleman in the Exchequer Court named Clark, whom I do not know. It was proposed to give him a salary he was not entitled to under the law. And these other exceptions are also against the law and are not regular in any way. Coming again to the case of Professor Prince, I am quite sure of what I say. He was given a new position. But Colonel Anderson was not given a new position; he is doing to-day what he did yesterday; his duties were not increased. There are similar officers in the Department of Public Works. Mr. Lafleur is an engineer. I believe he thinks he is not properly remunerated, and many agree with him. And the same with Mr. St. Laurent. Why take up the case of Colonel Anderson and not that of Mr. Lafleur. Why this invidious distinction? But the only way to avoid such invidious distinctions is to take this matter up on a regular system and according to law.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me quite pardonable for a new government, coming into office and finding glaring inequalities to exist, to seek, in spite of the Civil Service Act, which, after all, is still only on its trial, to remedy these glaring injustices. In my own department, and in others also, I am sure, you will find efficient civil servants who have been in the service for twenty years, and alongside of them recent arrivals, not placed above them, it may be, but almost on a parity with them and having almost equal salaries. Is this just? And for what reason are the increases of these men's salaries left in abeyance, while others but newly arrived are given remuneration almost the same as that given the experienced men? I say, where cases of that kind present themselves that, until the civil service law is properly amended or some more satisfactory way is found of administering it, it is not surprising that, in a spirit of fairness and justice, heads of departments should try to equalize conditions somewhat. Now, as to what has been said by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), it has been a surprise to me since entering upon the duties of my office to find that our engineering service is in such a confused condition. In my department, and also in the Department of Railways and Canals, the government employs a large number of engineers. They are taken entirely out of the operation of the Civil Service Act, and you find in the treatment of them every description of inequality. That condition has existed for quite a number of years; and one naturally asks why the government has not sought to improve that condition, particularly when the Society of Civil Engineers has long pressed upon the government the necessity of passing legislation which would have the effect of placing this class of professional men upon a fairer and better footing. That has not been done hitherto. For a couple of months past I have been in pourparlers with the representatives of that society, and it is my intention—for it is a necessity—to improve that condition of affairs, and to that end, without delay, to lay before parliament during the present session a law prepared by the Society of Civil Engineers, in order that at once parliament may have the opportunity of examining that proposed law and learning the conditions proposed by the civil engineers and may legislate with regard to this professional class upon whom so much of the efficiency of our civil service depends. I am sure that as soon as parliament has taken cognizance of the proposed law——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why not let this stand over until then?

Mr. MONK. These estimates are required without delay. Why did not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) or the government of which he was a member, deal with the question when they had it before them for such a long time? Probably they were estopped by the question of remuneration. That is a serious question. No doubt what is said here is perfectly true, that our engineers are altogether inadequately remunerated. When you give an engineer of the first class—and we have such men in the service of the government—a salary under $4,000, and when you consider how engineers in that class are paid outside the service of the government, you cannot but be impressed with the inadequacy of their remuneration here. The matter is one to be carefully considered. My hon. friend and his government had it before them for a number of years. It is not surprising that in the short space of a couple of months, a new ministry called upon to deal with vast arrears of business and plunged at once into the work of preparing for a session of parliament, should not be fully prepared to deal at once with this question. But I can assure the House that it will be considered as soon as the government has time to consider it; and not later than next session some clear and definite scheme will be laid before the House for its approval. In the meantime, I am not at all surprised that my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) should have seen fit to provide what I would call merely sufficient remuneration for one of the engineers—the chief one, I believe, employed by his department. But for the fact that I have had before me the measure of legislation proposed by the Society of Civil Engineers, and so have had the prospect that the subject would be dealt with by the government, I should have been inclined to deal in the same manner with some of the engineers of my department. I hope that the committee will not place any obstacles in the way of passing this item.

Mr. HAZEN. The right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that the increase given to Professor Prince was because he occupied a different position, but that Colonel Anderson is doing the same work as formerly. I would point out that last summer, with the recommendation of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and with the endorsation of the minister of that time, Mr. Brodeur, and confirmed by an order in council, very much additional work was given to Colonel Anderson. He was given the whole of the construction work in connection with the lighthouse branch along with other construction under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Formerly a portion of the work was under control of the Commissioner of Lights. The change meant that very much additional work was imposed on Colonel Anderson.

My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Public Works, referred to the case of Mr. Lafleur, who is getting $3,800. I am not saying that Mr. Lafleur should not get more pay than he is getting; but on looking up the Civil Service Act, I find that Mr. Lafleur received his first permanent appointment in 1904, and that was the date of his present appointment; so he has been a permanent official for only seven years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend will find that in the Department of Public Works out of the whole number of some 200 officials of this class, only a very few are in what is known as the permanent service.

Mr. HAZEN. I find that Mr. Lafleur was in the outside service before that time, but the Civil Service List shows that he received his first permanent appointment in 1904. Colonel Anderson has been in the inside service during the whole of his tenure of office of 36 years. His first permanent appointment was in 1875, and the date of his present appointment was in 1882. I believe that the work Colonel Anderson performs is fully as much entitled to the salary of $4,000 as that of any other gentleman in the department who is receiving that salary at the present time. There are men in the department who have been there a comparatively few years, who are now receiving close on $3,500 and in some cases that full sum, but whose services I do not think require the amount of ability, and experience, and the amount of training that the duties discharged by Colonel Anderson require.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I wish to inquire of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if Colonel Anderson comes within the provisions of chapter 7 of the Act of 1909, an Act which authorizes certain increases of salary to members of the civil service?

Mr. HAZEN. I presume he does.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Does my hon. friend mean to say, then, that he proposes to amend this statute by a money vote, or does he think this can be done in that way?

Mr. HAZEN. I am not amending the statute.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). This Act passed in 1909 provided that increases of salaries may be made to members of the civil service upon the report of the deputy head. Then another section of the Act provides that the maximum increase shall not exceed a certain amount at any one time. I am not much interested as to whether the proposed increase is justifiable or not, the question is whether, under that Act, the minister is taking the proper course to give this increase.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I am of the opinion that the country will view with some disappointment the attitude of the government upon this particular vote. What has been the record of those gentlemen in opposition, and indeed for ten years past? From the Prime Minister downwards, they have posed before the country as civil service reformers; that is a fact which cannot be gainsaid. As my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition has pointed out, this particular instalment of civil service reform is to drive a coach and six through the Civil Service Act. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a man of a sympathetic nature, and he appeals very strongly to those who have similar sympathies with himself. But I should like to point out that a reference to 36 years of service, while it does not fall upon unsympathetic ears or hard hearts, has nothing to do with the question which has been raised by my hon. friend from Halifax. A real attempt was made to reform the Civil Service Act in the Act of three years ago. That was done by practical agreement between the two sides of the House. The country knows that was done. The country knows the professions we have heard from the Prime Minister and his followers of their earnestness for civil service reform during the last ten years at least. Now a step such as this on the part of the Minister of Public Works, if it means anything, means that we are to open the door for the examination of every individual case upon its merits. If it does not mean that it means nothing. As a civil service reformer he proposed to this committee to do something in spite of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend forgets that the engineers are not provided for by the Civil Service Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes they are.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Then this debate has been an absolute waste of time. All the speeches have gone upon the ground that there is a method for advancing the salary of this engineer. Now we have had a very different example of how civil service reform should be approached in the case of the Minister of Justice himself. An irregularity was pointed out, briefly and courteously, to the Minister of Justice. He examined the case, he conceded the point; and I am bound to say, in the interest of the civil service, in the interest of the public, even in the interest of the hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends, that action of the Minister of Justice will be viewed very differently from the action of the government with regard to Colonel Anderson.

If in the case of Colonel Anderson you drive a coach and four through the Civil Service Act there is no reason why you should not do it in every other case. I trust the Minister will let the item stand until we have an opportunity of looking into it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the Civil Service Act all the officials of the government at Ottawa were included in it, the engineers the same as others, and the Minister of Public Works is in error when he says that they were not. Colonel Anderson was classified at the salary he was then receiving just as all the other officers, and no doubt since that time he has been getting his statutory increases, as provided by the Act, so that in violation of the terms of the Act the minister asked the House to vote Mr. Anderson $450 in a lump sum as an increase for the present year. That evasion of the Act is indefensible and will lead to all kinds of difficulties. The late government was pressed to make allowances to different officials who were doing extra work as translators and such, after hours, and a strong case was made out, but the government refused on the ground that it would be an unfortunate departure from the Act. The Minister of Public Works tells us that he has under consideration a Bill submitted by the engineers—which I presume was the Bill submitted to the late government and on which it was too late for them to take action—which provides for an increase to the engineering staff, and he tells us that he has delayed doing what he considers an act of justice to the engineers in his department until that Bill is submitted, and in stating that he has given us the very best reason why he should not allow one of his colleagues to do what he feels it would not be proper for him to do. The Minister of Marine cannot look upon the question as only pertaining to his department, because we are here to prevent injustice being perpetrated on officials in every branch of the service. There is Mr. Howden, for example, who is in charge of dredging operations, and who has been in the service for forty years and more, whose duties are of a very responsible character. His salary when he comes to retire will affect his superannuation allowance just as Mr. Anderson's will. There are others in the Public Works Department who are performing just as onerous duties as Colonel Anderson and they are receiving smaller salaries than he. Personally I would like to see Colonel Anderson get four thousand a year and I think he is worth it, but I am not prepared to violate the Civil Service Act by giving him what the Minister of Public Works considers he ought not ask the Committee to give the engineers in his department at the present time.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer).

Mr. BUREAU. We do not dispute Mr. Anderson's long term of service nor his ability, and the only issue is the question of evading the Civil Service Act. The Minister of Marine told me that Mr. Lafleur was first appointed in 1904, but the Civil Service Act shows that Mr. Lafleur has been in the service of the government for over thirty years and he is now chief engineer of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works tells us that we will soon have under consideration a measure amending the Civil Service Act, so that these glaring injustices, as he pathetically describes them, may be remedied, and I would suggest that it is much better in the interests of the service and of the country that we should wait until that general Bill comes down rather than to single out an individual officer for this generosity.

Mr. HAZEN. Hon. gentlemen opposite discussed this question as though it were unparalleled since the passing of the Civil Service Act to ask to increase the salary of an official in this way. Now, section 27 of the Civil Service Act states in positive language that the salary of a deputy head shall be $5,000.

Yet in 1910, when my hon. friend himself was a member of the government, I find that the salary of the Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs was increased to $6,000 per annum, $1,000 was added to his salary in spite of what is said in the Civil Service Act. My hon. friend may say that additional duties were imposed on the Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs, and probably they were, and I am not complaining of the amount paid; but what becomes of the argument advanced that the civil servant is bound to give his whole attention to the government no matter what position he may fill, and therefore Colonel Anderson should receive $4,000 because of the additional work imposed on him by order in council passed last summer? In this case, although the Civil Service Act says that the salary of a deputy minister shall be $5,000 the salary of a deputy minister was increased to $6,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was not a new office created, that of Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs, to which Mr. Desbarats was appointed?

Mr. HAZEN. No, I am informed that that was not the case, that the Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs was in the first instance a deputy minister under the operation of the Civil Service Act which says that the salary of a deputy minister shall be $5,000 and the amount was subsequently increased by $1,000 on the theory that in addition to being Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs he was also to discharge other duties as Controller of Naval Affairs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He was appointed Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs by statute. The salary was afterwards fixed by a vote of this House. But I am shocked and horrified to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen) taking refuge in the example of his predecessor. We all thought that they were reformers on that side of the House, that they were to do better than we were doing. They charged us with sins innumerable, yet the moment they are in office, they do the very things for which they reproached us. The country will see how they were deceived in believing the protestations of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The Act respecting the increases of salaries paid to members of the civil service does not apply to deputy ministers, only to officials below the rank of deputy minister. I think the Minister of Marine should give the House some reason for amending a public statute in this manner. All the Minister of Public Works has said about engineers and their salaries, has little or no bearing on the question before the committee. Neither is it important whether Colonel Anderson's salary is what it should be or not. The matter is in this condition that three years ago this parliament, after mature deliberation, provided a method for increasing the salaries of members of the civil service. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any other minister can give a reason for amending the provisions of that Act in this way we should have it. It is no answer to say that Colonel Anderson has been in the employ of the country for a long number of years, and that his salary is inadequate. That surely is not a reason for amending a public statute. The minister should not ask this committee to pass this vote unless he at least pretends to give something which looks like a defence for the request.

Mr. HAZEN. On turning up the estimates for that year I find this item:

Department of Naval Service—salaries, including $6,000 to G. J. Desbarats, $82,800.

The Naval Service Act provides for the appointment of a deputy minister, and the Civil Service Act provides that a deputy minister shall be paid $5,000, and it was only by performing the operation that my hon. friend describes as violating the Civil Service Act, and bringing down something like this Act, especially mentioning the deputy's name, that the salary was increased to $6,000. I say that because my hon. friend would lead this House to believe that such a thing as I am proposing in order to do justice to an old civil servant had never been heard of since the Civil Service Act was passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine I think has failed to recognize the distinction between the case of a deputy minister of a new department which was being created, and the cases of other officials of the department with regard to whom the law makes special provision for annual increases. A deputy minister gets no increase. He is appointed at a certain salary, and he may be a deputy minister for 15 years, but he gets no increase, while a young deputy gets the same salary as an old deputy. When the Naval Department was created it was thought desirable to have Mr. Desbarats, owing to his very great ability take charge of that department, and it was agreed to give him a salary of $6,000. He would probably have preferred to have remained as Deputy Minister of Marine rather than go to another department with greater responsibilities at the same salary. But in the case of all other officials, including Colonel Anderson, as my hon. friend from Halifax has pointed out, who enter the civil service under the Civil Service Act at a certain salary, the statute provides that they shall receive certain annual increases, in the case of Colonel Anderson the increase would be $100 a year. That is the law adopted in 1909. Surely my hon. friend must see that when he picks out this one man out of the thousands of people in the departments here, and says that in respect to him the law of 1909 shall be violated, and that instead of receiving an annual increase of $100 he shall get a jump of $450, he must see that there is a great distinction between that case and the case of making a new appointment of a deputy minister to a new department, then being created in regard to which parliament had a perfect right to act. Here my hon. friend is asking us to depart altogether from the provisions of the Civil Service Act. While I personally would be glad to see Colonel Anderson get all his services are worth, I cannot persuade myself that it is right to select one man when there are scores, probably hundreds of others just as much entitled to a special increase as Colonel Anderson is.

The Minister of Public Works has stated that the engineering branch of the Department of Public Works is in a state of confusion. I do not quite understand what my hon. friend means.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps it would be better to defer the explanation until I come to my estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend does not think he ought to give us the explanation?

Mr. MONK. I think it might be better to dispose of this and reserve these explanations in regard to the condition of affairs in the Public Works Department until we come to that department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then surely it would have been better to reserve everything, it would have been better for the minister not to have stated that he found the engineering branch of the Public Works Department in a state of confusion if he intended to refuse to give an explanation.

Mr. MONK. I do not refuse to give an explanation. In the Department of Public Works we have engineering districts all over the country that in my estimation from what examination I have made of the conditions in the departments, are not properly defined.

In charge of those districts are engineers who are not classified in any way and whose duties are not clearly defined, nor is there any general rule by which their salaries are determined. The Department of Public Works depends for its efficiency entirely on the services of its engineers, and it requires to have relations with the immense outside branches through its engineers, under uniform rules. If those uniform rules do not exist, I think there is some reason for saying that there is room for useful reform.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is different from the statement that my hon. friend found the engineering branch of the department in a state of confusion, which is entirely contrary to the actual condition. What I understand my hon. friend to mean respecting the engineers of the department throughout Canada is that their duties are not sufficiently defined. I should be glad to hear further from my hon. friend on that subject. My idea, from the experience I have had in the department, is that there has been a pretty successful effort to place the different district engineers, so far as salaries are concerned——

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will admit that there is no classification whatever.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I will not admit that. In the offices of the different district engineers young men are taken on at comparatively small salaries, which are increased year by year at the rate of $50, sometimes $100, and in cases of exceptional merit there have been larger increases. In view of the arduous duties which my hon. friend is called on to perform, and of which he complained at a banquet given in his honour in Montreal, when he intimated that he had not much time to devote to the duties of his office because of the numerous demands of office-seekers, which made his life laborious——

Mr. MONK. I do not think I was correctly reported in that regard.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can say to my hon. friend that he has a pretty hard job in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MONK. I am sure my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I do. It is a very arduous department, and I sympathize with my hon. friend. But my hon. friend is fortunate in having a splendid staff behind him. I do not believe that in any department of any government can you find more efficient men than my hon. friend has to assist him, from the deputy minister down through the various branches of the department, notwithstanding the small salaries these gentlemen are receiving. Take Captain Howden, who has been 40 years or more in the service, upon whose shoulders rests largely the responsibility of looking after the building of dredges and tugs, the repairs of dredges and tugs, throughout the country, and whose salary is only a little over $3,000, very considerably less than Colonel Anderson is receiving. Then, Mr. St. Laurent, the assistant deputy minister, is a man of surpassing ability, who could go out of the department and command a salary of from $7,000 to $10,000. He has a chief engineer of great skill and experience, who has been in the department for 30 years or more, and is getting to-day less than $4,000 a year. Mr. Dufresne, assistant chief engineer of the department, who is in charge of the contract dredging work, a very responsible position, only gets about $3,000 a year. Mr. Ewart, the chief architect of the department, who has been there 30 or 40 years and whose responsibility is very great, has a salary very much less than that of Colonel Anderson. In view of these facts, does not my hon. friend feel that he would be doing a grave injustice to the officials of his own department charged with these enormous responsibilities, under whose supervision there is expended every year between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000, if he consented to an engineer in the Department of Marine and Fisheries having his salary jumped up by the amount of $450? Does not the injustice appeal to my hon. friend? Does he not feel that when to-morrow morning he goes to the department he could not with a cheerful face meet the gentlemen to whom such an injustice was done? Let him pause and prevent this great injustice being done, which will lead to jealousy and dissatisfaction and disorganization, and destroy the spirit of fairness which demands that all the officials of the government should be dealt with on equitable principles.

Mr. NESBITT. Suppose we acknowledge the truth of what the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries say with reference to these gentlemen not being properly paid, that is not the question before us. The question is, why break the Act in this crude way? The statement that somebody else did wrong is the poorest excuse any one can give for doing wrong. Why not do as the hon. Minister of Public Works suggests, amend the Act if, as I quite admit, these gentlemen are not receiving as good salaries as they should for the positions they occupy? We are not saying anything against this gentleman. I personally do not know anything about him, and I would vote for giving him any reasonable salary that he should get, but not in this way. Hon. gentlemen opposite are breaking an Act which they assisted to pass, and I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not take the position that might is right, as well as the position, 'oh, you did it.'

Item agreed to—yeas 57; nays 37.

Office of the Auditor General—salaries, $113,850; contingencies, $6,500.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There is an increase in the salaries of $6,500. This is caused by eight statutory increases at $100 each and 60 at $50 each. There are also several promotions and two new appointments at $500 each to examine the annuities.

Department of Inland Revenue—salaries, $107,937.50; contingencies, $8,300.

Mr. BUREAU. When the item was first called, I asked the Minister of Inland Revenue a question and he promised an answer. I understand that there have been some superannuations. Who was superannuated, and why?

Mr. NANTEL. Mr. Newby was superannuated and another employee died. Mr. Newby had a salary of $1,600 and his successor has a salary of $800.

Mr. BUREAU. Why was he superannuated?

Mr. NANTEL. On account of his age.

Mr. BUREAU. Was he requested to ask for it?

Mr. NANTEL. No, he was not.

Mr. BUREAU. How old was he?

Mr. NANTEL. Over sixty.

Mr. BUREAU. How is it that in the second division of subdivision 'A' two more officials were appointed?

Mr. NANTEL. We promoted Mr. Piton from a lower grade and we made a new appointment to take his place at $1,600, the minimum of the class.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On page 20 there is a very extraordinary item in the weights and measures branch, namely, mechanic, Thomas H. Burgess, $1,000. Why was it necessary to mention his name?

Mr. NANTEL. His salary was voted for a couple of years, but, as his name was not mentioned, the Auditor General refused to pay him. So, we decided to put his name in.

Department of Naval Service—salaries, $94,550; contingencies, $20,000

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the minister please explain this vote?

Mr. HAZEN. The total number of clerks provided for in this service for the coming year is 78, an increase of 12 over last year. Hon. members will notice that so far as the deputy minister, the first division subdivision A, and the first division subdivision B are concerned, there are no changes in the number, the only change being in the statutory increases of salaries. In the second division, subdivision A, there is an increase of four clerks, one of whom is assistant to the superintendent of wireless telegraphy, which service is under the control of the Department of the Naval Service. The other three are promoted from subdivision B of the same division. In the second division, subdivision B, there is a decrease of three these being the three clerks promoted. The third division, subdivision A shows an addition of two clerks, promoted from subdivision B of the same division. In the third division, subdivision B, there is an increase of eight clerks, which, allowing for the two promoted, makes a net increase of ten. These clerks are needed for the lower grade work shorthand writing, typewriting and the lighter class of bookkeeping and accounting. The department has been shorthanded in this class, and, during the year has had to employ a number of temporary clerks whose services will no longer be required under the present arrangement. The item for messengers shows an increase of one in the staff. The present office building is too small for the staff and other quarters will have to be provided for some of the employees. This will necessitate more work in carrying files and messages between the offices and so another messenger is necessary. The estimate provides the usual increases authorized by statute. The amount for contingencies is the same as for the current year and covers all items for office expenses and also for temporary clerks.

Mr. DEVLIN. Do I understand that the minister is increasing his staff in connection with the naval service?

Mr. HAZEN. I do not know that it is right to say 'the minister' is increasing the staff. But the staff is to be increased because of the greater quantity of work to be done. In making the increase, I am acting on the reports I have received from the deputy minister and controller of the naval service who advises me of what is necessary in order to carry on the work.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is Mr. Desbarats directing the policy of the government in this matter?

Mr. HAZEN. No, but he is advising and suggesting; and, in most cases I find that his opinion in connection with the work of the office is well given.

Mr. DEVLIN. Are we to understand that the naval service is to go on as it was before.

Mr. HAZEN. Perhaps a better time to discuss that matter—as there is likely to be considerable discussion—I submit to my hon. friend, will be when the general estimates for the naval service are under discussion.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am speaking of the staff. I understand that the minister is increasing the staff by eight clerks.

Mr. HAZEN. I believe that there will be ample work in the naval service department for the increased staff to do. This department deals not only with matters of naval defence, but also with the fishery protection service, the Marconi service, the coast service and the tidal surveys.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad that the law of the naval service is not to be repealed this session. It will be very hard upon the immediate neighbours of my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen). And it will be very hard for the chairman who signed this item as 'passed'.

Mr. HAZEN.

Mr. PELLETIER. It is very satisfactory for us that this naval service law is considered so bad that it has not been and will not be acted upon.

Department of Railways and Canals—salaries (including L. K. Jones at $3,650), $148,012.50; contingencies, $17,000.

Mr. CARVELL. Why this increase in the salary of Mr. Jones?

Mr. COCHRANE. I propose making him assistant deputy minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why does not the hon. minister ask council to change the organization of the department so as to provide for the assistant deputy minister, and then make the salary what he proposes, instead of putting it in the records in this way, which seems to be a glaring departure from the Civil Service Act. I do not see why it should not be done in the way I suggest. There are assistant deputies in other departments, and they are not named. This seems the very thing the Civil Service Act was intended to avoid.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think we should have to name Mr. Jones in the estimate too. I may be wrong, but I so understood, and was so advised. The order in council will have to be passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I mean not only an order in council appointing Mr. Jones as assistant deputy, but also amending the organization of the department and creating the position of assistant deputy.

Mr. COCHRANE. I meant that.

Department of Public Works—salaries, $421,525; contingencies, $20,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is an increase of $28,000 in salaries for Public Works. Will the hon. gentleman give us an explanation?

Mr. MONK. On page 25 will be found the details of this increase of $28,000. I will read a meno. giving particulars:

1911-12.	1912-13.	Positions.	——
			First Division—Subdivision 'A.'
10	12	2	Two promotions expected to be earned by officers in subdivision 'B' —Sec. 24, C.S. Act.
			First Division—Subdivision 'B.'
25	27	4	Two engineers to be appointed under section 21, Civil Service Act, and two promotions expected to be earned by officers in the second division subdivision 'A,' under section 24, Civil Service Act.
			Second Division—Subdivision 'A.'
45	52	9	For promotions which it is expected will be earn by clerks in subdivision 'B,' under section 24, Civil Service Act, and for new appointments under section 21, Civil Service Act.
			Second Division—Subdivision 'B.'
80	81	9	Applications made to Civil Service Commission for 4 appointments, viz.: 2 draughtsmen for chief architect; 1 clerk for accountant; 1 clerk for chief engineer; and for 5 new appointments that may be made before 31st March, 1913.
			Third Division—Subdivision 'A.'
58	62	4	This is to provide for four promotions from subdivision 'B.'
			Third Division—Subdivision 'B.'
38	45	11	To provide for the permanent appointment of eleven clerks now employed temporarily.
			Messengers.
15	17	2	To provide for appointment of two additional messengers.

This accounts for the increase. There may be idle persons in some of the departments, as some people pretend; but I think my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works will agree with me in saying that the officers with whom we are in immediate contact are extremely busy men. So far as I have been able to observe, they discharge their duties in the most satisfactory manner. At times they are overworked, and it is to provide for additional men that this increase has been found necessary.

Mr. MURPHY. Is the appointment of the two new clerks in the first division, subdivision B, to be made under section 21 of the Act?

Mr. MONK. Two engineers are to be appointed under section 21 of the Act; new men, that we require for the service of the department. Also we expect two promotions to be earned by officers in the second division.

Mr. MURPHY. Section 21 of the Act is that which exempts appointees from examination.

Mr. MONK. They will have to submit to examination.

Department of Mines—salaries, $235,030.

Mr. NANTEL. There is an increase of $10,841. That is due mainly to promotions. There are three new men, one at $600, one draughtsman at $1,200, one messenger at $500. In the geographical survey an assistant is required in the photographic division, at $700.

Post Office Department—salaries, $637,040.

Mr. PELLETIER. The increases are mostly statutory, with some promotions. There are 15 increases of $100 each, 183 at $50 each, 7 at $30 each. There are 20 new clerkships. The business of the Post Office Department is increasing by leaps and bounds, and fortunately the revenue is growing in the same proportion. We require 10 additional messengers, porters, packers and sorters. A portion of the increase is due to the inclusion of the Annuties Branch in the Post Office Department, which was previously in the Department of Trade and Commerce. There are 50 increases of $50 each, and one new promotion of $100. That makes a total of $56,260, less the difference between the salaries of employees who have died, left the service or been promoted to higher classes, totalling $19,900, and the salaries of persons appointed or promoted, $13,600.

Mr. MURPHY. These estimates provide for 44 more employees than there were in the department last year. A portion of that number is represented by those who have been brought over in the Annuities Branch. How many come in from the Annuities Branch?

Mr. PELLETIER. Sixteen.

An hon. MEMBER. There would seem to be a number of ladies in that branch?

Mr. PELLETIER. May be that was one of the reasons why Mr. Foster transferred it to me.

Mr. BUREAU. Was the increase of $5,200 for clerical assistance caused by the transfer?

Mr. PELLETIER. No. The Civil Service Commissioners having been unable to furnish clerks who were qualified for permanent appointment, it has been found necessary to accept temporary clerks until they have had an opportunity to pass the examination and their salaries are paid out of this vote.

Mr. BUREAU. Does this include the salary of the commissioner who is investigating the politics of the postmasters in the province of Quebec?

Mr. PELLETIER. No.

Mr. BUREAU. It will be paid from some other source?

Mr. PELLETIER. We will find some means of paying it.

Mr. MURPHY. Have these extra eleven messengers and packers been appointed yet?

Mr. PELLETIER. No, we will have to ask the Civil Service Commissioners for nominations.

Mr. MURPHY. Will they be appointed in that manner or will the minister nominate them?

Mr. PELLETIER. The law says we will have to ask the commissioners to send them over to us.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is better than you did.

Mr. MURPHY. I am suspicious that it will not be done now.

Contingencies of the departments generally, $98,000.

Mr. PELLETIER.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimate last year was only $63,000 so that this is an increase of $35,000, and by the Auditor-General's report, the total expenditure for the year was only $53,998, so the government is asking for the caretaking and cleaning of the buildings $45,000 more than was actually expended.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Prima facie the increase seems large, and it is quite right there should be an explanation. I was much surprised to find on taking charge of the department that in addition to having under me such matters as the national debt, and the tariff, and banking and insurance, I had two hundred and fifty charwomen under my control. It will be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite to know that I have not yet been obliged to make any dismissals.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a good example not followed by your colleagues.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Judging by the increase one would suppose that these ladies have votes.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If they had I believe that my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) would have endeavoured to avail them for his party. The appropriation for the year 1912 was $63,000 and the appropriaition asked this year on the old basis would be $75,000 and on the new basis $98,000. The increase of $12,000 on the old basis is due to the very large increase in the char service, because of our taking over the Victoria Memorial building and other public buildings. The late administration was probably responsible for the increase upon the basis of the former wages.

Other contributory causes have been the necessity for boiling and distributing drinking water, &c., and making provision to meet demands for new offices after estimating for 14 additional women and four additional men for the current year. The substantial increase over the $75,000 is due to the fact that I have provided a dollar a day instead of 75c. a day for these poor charwomen. I do not know that it is necessary to argue the matter. These women come a long distance to their work, they put in substantially the forenoon at their work and in returning to their homes. It seemed to me that, having regard to the increased cost of living and other considerations, a dollar a day was little enough for these women. I gave the matter reasonable consideration and concluded that this government could well afford to pay these charwomen $1 a day instead of 75c. The result is an increase of a considerable sum, but one which I venture to say my chivalrous friends opposite will hardly venture to challenge.

Mr. DEVLIN. I have always failed to understand why these charwomen should be under the Finance Department.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Hear, hear.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think there should be a change and they should be placed under the control of the Public Works Department. There is nothing political in their appointment, they are principally widows and they might very well be placed under the charge of the superintendent of Dominion Buildings. Then a member wishing to have a widow appointed might proceed immediately to the superintendent, where he has perhaps 20 other requests to make. instead of going before the Minister of Finance, who is dabbling away at figures.

Commission of Conservation — salaries, $24,525.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is quite an increase in these salaries.

Mr. MONK. I think most of that increase of $3,762 is composed of statutory increases. The expenditure is very small. I have been on that commission until this year, and I think the committee will admit that its usefulness has been amply demonstrated. They increase their researches every year, and I suppose they have been obliged to increase the staff to some extent.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The details are supplied at page 31 of the estimates. It will be observed that there is a total increase of one in the staff of the commission.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Monk, House adjourned at 9.57 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 61) respecting the Gatineau and Ungava Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The Ottawa and Ungava Railway Company.'—Mr. Chabot.

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Kettle Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Goodeve.

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Premier Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Bennett (Calgary).

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BRADBURY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. He said: I feel constrained to introduce this Bill on account of the almost intolerable condition of things on the Red river north of Winnipeg. Previous to the building of the dam at St. Andrews lock, the river was flooded out at least once a year. Since the construction of the dam we have had a large body of still water extending from the dam to the city of Winnipeg. The sewage of the city of Winnipeg, of St. Boniface, of Brandon and of Portage la Prairie has been deposited in the stream. The conditions have become almost unbearable for the residents along the Red river north of the city of Winnipeg, and something must be done to correct this evil. Previous to the erection of the dam the conditions were not so bad. But, at present, when the water is run off in the fall, it is run off gradually, and the sewage precipitates and is left on the bottom of the river. And among the places that suffer most from this condition of affairs is the town of Selkirk. The object of the Bill is to prevent if possible a continuance of this evil.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—CUSTOMS DUTY ON TWINE FOR LOBSTER POTS.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Before the motion is put I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville) not for the purpose of provoking any discussion on the matter at present, but for the purpose of securing from him some information. There appeared in the press, at least in the maritime provinces, in the month of December, a copy of notice purporting to be issued by the Commissioner of Customs in reference to the duty on lobster twine. I do not know whether that notice is accurate or not, but as published in one newspaper it reads as follows:

Department of Customs,
Ottawa, Dec. 16, 1911.

You are advised that lobster twine used in making the heads in lobster pots is dutiable under tariff item 548, (25 per cent). This notice is sent you so as to ensure payment of duty in accordance with the law, having been made at some ports to obtain free entry under item 682.

JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

I do not know whether this circular was issued to the various customs ports or whether it was issued to the trade generally. I would like to inquire of the Minister of Customs if there has been any change in the regulations recently with regard to the twine used by the lobster fishermen and known as 'twine used in making the heads of lobster pots.' And if there has been any change, what is the reason for it.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Customs). The first I heard of this circular being issued was some time in the latter part of December, when I received a telegram from an hon. member in the lower provinces asking me whether this circular was issued and if any change had been made. I find on inquiry that it was simply a departmental matter, and came about in this way: Information was given to the department that some people were importing manilla twine and entering it under item 682 under which classification 'barked marline and net norsels of cotton, hemp or flax' are admitted free for the fisheries. Under item 548, twine and cordage of all kinds n.o.p. is dutiable at 25 per cent. When the information was brought to the department, the chief of the statistical branch issued the following circular which is on the lines of that which the hon. member (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) has just read:

Department of Customs,
Ottawa, 14th December, 1911.

Collector of Customs,
Port of .....

You are advised that lobster twine used in making the heads of lobster pots is dutiable under the tariff item 548. This notice is sent you so as to ensure payment of duty in accordance with the law, efforts having been made at some ports to obtain free entry under item 682.

The chief statistical officer made a mistake in this circular in using the words 'lobster twine.' And when the fact was drawn to the attention of the department, the following circular was issued to correct that mistake:

Department of Customs,
Ottawa, December 27, 1911.

The circular letter sent you on December 14th, 1911, relative to lobster twine used in making the heads in lobster pots is cancelled, and the following substituted therefor, namely:

Under item 682 'barked' marline is free for the fisheries. Other marline (not 'barked' marline) is dutiable under item 548 although for use in the fisheries.

It appears other marline than 'barked' marline is being imported for the manufacture of heads in lobster pots, and such marline is dutiable, although for the manufacture of lobster pots.

On inquiring from the commissioner, I was told they were using some other kind of twine instead of the 'barked' marline in the manufacture of heads in lobster pots, and some of them are substituting the regular marline. For that reason the first circular was issued, and it was a mistake of the statistical officer in using the words 'lobster twine' which caused the trouble. It never came before me or before the government it was simply a departmental matter. As soon as it was brought to the attention of myself and the commissioner the mistake of the officer was remedied. If any one has paid any duties on barked marline, of course the amount so paid will be refunded on application being made to the department in the regular way.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is anything dutiable now?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There has been no change whatever in the tariff. Anything that has been coming in duty free under this tariff since 1907 will still come in free.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I was already a little suspicious, owing to the ruling of the Customs Department in reference to lumber, that possibly some of the persons interested were successful in the interviews with the Minister of Customs. I would ask the Minister of Customs if he would be good enough to lay on the table all the papers in connection with this matter. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, if I am not out of order, that the grounds of my suspicion are, that in the month of September last the manufacturers of cordage in Canada announced to the wholesale and retail purchasers of their manufactured articles that in the event of the defeat of the late minister——

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken, and I would ask him to refrain from speaking a second time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman will get a chance when we are in Supply.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not want to have it said that I am occupying the time of the House improperly, or against the rules, and in order to put myself in order I will make a motion.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is still out of order, he cannot make a motion if he has not a right to speak.

Mr. CARROLL. Do I understand the Minister of Customs to say that a person engaged in lobster fishing and who wished to get a better class of twine than he has been using heretofore, would have to pay, under the tariff as it stands now, a duty on this better class of lobster twine?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have said that those who are interested in the lobster fisheries can bring in the twine that is specified under item 682, no matter what the quality is. If they want to get another twine than that specified in the item, they will have to pay duty on it if it is classified under some other item of the tariff. I have no power whatever to change the tariff.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has power to change the application, as he has done about the lumber duties.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The right hon. gentleman knows that in the case of the lumber duties, when an application is made to the Minister of Customs for an interpretation of that article, he has a right to interpret it, or to refer it to the Board of Customs. In the case of the lumber duties it was referred to the Board of Customs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Board of Customs is the minister.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have never even mentioned the question of lumber duties to the Board of Customs, and I am surprised at the leader of the opposition making that statement. No man in this country, not even the leader of the opposition, will deny that the Board of Customs gave a correct interpretation in saying that lumber that was planed on two sides was dutiable. Surely the leader of the opposition will not deny that imported lumber that is dutiable must pay the duty. Surely he does not wish to encourage smuggling when he makes that statement.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,425,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is an increase in this item of $200,000. It is required to pay the statutory increases under the Civil Service Act; also to pay salaries of additional officers at existing ports, owing to increase of business, and at new ports and outports, also for additional contingent expenditures which may be incurred.

The increase in the item for the fiscal year 1911-12 as compared with the fiscal year 1910-11 was $300,000, or $100,000 more than the proposed increase for 1912. During the present fiscal year, to the 19th November, 1911, increases amounting to $112,695 have been granted to 1,542 officers in various ports out of a total of 2,200 officers, so that increases have been granted to 70 per cent of the staff. During the same period 109 officers were appointed at various ports and their yearly salaries amount to $80,600. At this date we have applications from various collectors for the appointment of 48 additional officers with yearly salaries amounting to $42,750, and the Commissioner of Customs reports that these additions to the staff are necessary for the efficiency of the service. Owing to the additions to the staff by reason of increased business and the extension of the service the officials estimate a yearly increase of $7,500 for overtime pay of officers and $10,000 for contingencies. Based upon these figures the increase in the estimate for this year is $253,545, as follows: Increase in salaries, $112,695, the same as last year; salaries of additional officers, $123,350; increase in pay for overtime, $7,500; increase in contingencies, $10,000; so that the total if we were to take it on the same basis as last year, would be $253,545. The commissioner tells me that he is of the opinion that we may be able to get along with $200,000. I have discussed the matter with him again since that, and I do not believe that it will be possible for us to do so. I fear that we may yet have to come down with a supplementary estimate and ask for a further amount and for this reason: The revenue of the country has increased very fast. Last year we had about $10,000,000 of an increase, it is increasing this year and it will continue to increase. If the revenues are greater there is more work to do, we have to have more men to do that work, and for that reason it is impossible to keep the expenditure within the limits of the previous year. It is only natural that these men who have been in the service for some years should receive their regular increases.

Mr. CARVELL. Did I understand the minister to say that last year there was an increase in the salaries of the outside service of about $112,000?

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is right.

Mr. CARVELL. And did I understand him to say that there might be increases in the coming year of about the same amount?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. CARVELL. If that be true would there be increases granted to officers who had their salaries increased last year? It would seem that we would be running the salaries up pretty high if that method were adopted.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman knows that men generally start in the service at very small salaries, and they receive a small increase each year. In the inside service the statute allows officers an annual increase of in some cases $50 and in some $100. The officers of the outside service should receive a similar increase. The salaries of very many of them are very small and surely these men are entitled to a small increase. It seems somewhat hard that men in the inside service should get their regular increase of $50 or $100 while the two or three thousand officers in the outside service receive nothing although they may be doing much more work. There are many ports, even small ports where, owing to the increase in importation, these officers are doing more work and where the revenue is increasing. Naturally they apply for a small increase. I feel that we are perfectly justified in giving them their regular increase. The hon. member knows that this is not a new principle, but that it has been the custom of the government for some years to give a regular increase.

Mr. CARVELL. I quite agree with almost everything the minister has said along these lines. I am not criticising him in any fault finding manner. I only want to know whether he has any well defined principle in his mind, or intends to adopt any well defined principle, in granting these increases. Personally I believe the outside service is not paid in proportion to the inside service for the work that is being done. We have lots of officers in the outside service of the Customs Department living on salaries of $700, $800 and $900 and supporting families, whereas, in the inside service, you pay more than that to the man who carries messages from one department to another. I would like to know whether the minister thinks that these gradual increases should apply to the heads of the department in the outside service as well as to the clerks. From a somewhat limited examination of the matter I have come to the conclusion that the customs collectors are probably being fairly paid but that the clerks under them who are really doing the work are insufficiently paid, and if some system could be adopted whereby the minor officers could get their regular increases every year and, if necessary also extending it to the heads of the department, it would be a move in the right direction. If you carried out the general principle of progression you might put the salary of the collector of customs beyond what it ought to be and at the same time you might not be doing justice to the officials who actually do the work. I would draw the minister's attention to this and I think I can say speaking for myself and for hon. members on this side of the House, that there is no objection to give whatever reasonable increase ought to be given to the men who are actually doing the work in the outside service.

Mr. REID. (Grenville). I have no defined policy as to how this money will be distributed during the coming year. It has been the policy of the government to put an amount in the Estimates for increases. I see from this statement that last year the Minister of Customs distributed these increases among 1,542 officers out of 2,200 so that 70 per cent of the staff got an increase. I do not know by what rule he was guided but I suppose that the minister must take each case as he finds it.

Mr. REID (Grenville).

There are men, as the hon. member states, getting very small salaries and I often wonder how they do live. The only thing I can say is that we will have to take this matter up and endeavour to distribute this money fairly among the officers that we feel are entitled to an increase giving all such a proportion, as the officers of the department shall conclude that they are entitled to. I have a great deal of sympathy with many of them. The policy I have adopted is to try to get young men into the service, give them a fair salary to start with, see that they get their increases and treat them in such a way that they may make good officers and give good service to the country.

Mr. CARVELL. I presume from what we are reading in the newspapers as to the policy of this and other departments that there will be very many dismissals in the hon. gentleman's department on account of active political services during the last elections. Will the minister apply the policy which he has foreshadowed in promoting clerks and officials to chief positions of the outside service, or will he feel that it is incumbent upon him to import—shall I say worthy, or perhaps hungry, political friends?

How many customs officers have been removed from office for political partisanship during the last three months?

Mr. REID (Grenville). When vacancies occur, I will have to fill them as I deem best in the public interest. When the late government was in power appointments made in the Customs Department were made without any reference to the rule of promotion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). If a customs officer is charged with partisanship is he given an opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am following the policy laid down by the House. When a member charges that an official has been an active partisan in his constituency I ask for his dismissal. But in the case of another constituency where there is not a member to represent the constituency if a charge is made I have an investigation, and if it is proven that the official has been an active partisan, of course he is dismissed.

Mr. EMMERSON. You don't take the word of the member who represents the constituency in all instances.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What does the minister consider to be offensive partisanship warranting dismissal?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I judge each case on its own merits. When an hon. member states that an official has been an active partisan I act on the information.

Mr. CARVELL. And I suppose the minister would take the word of a member on this side of the House.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, I would take it into consideration.

Mr. BUREAU. Does that rule apply to your newly appointed officers who have themselves been offensive partisans.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They could not be offensive because we have had no election since.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The customs officer at Mahone Bay, Lunenburg county has recently been dismissed, and I think I can say positively that not since his appointment to office had he been guilty of any partisan act or anything that might be construed by any person as such.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think that was the case where the previous official who had been many years in office, and who had been discharging his duties satisfactorily was dismissed without any notice, or any explanation whatever, and I came to the conclusion that that man who had been so badly treated should be restored to office.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not know what the record in the department is, but I can assure the minister that the official to whom he refers was very properly dismissed, and that very grave charges, though not of a partisan character, could have been sustained against him. The minister had no right whatever to restore that man to office.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There were no charges against this man to be found on the records of my department.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). You don't want to look too far back.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). The rule for the outside service formerly was that if a person exceeded the age limit of 35 or 36 years he would not be appointed, and I understand that the minister has announced that his policy was to appoint young men. Recently, in the town of Windsor, a young man of 30 years, Mr. Brian, has been dismissed, and it is reported he is to be replaced by a man of over 60 years.

Mr. WILCOX. In view of the information required by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) it may be well to explain. He refers to Mr. Thomas Bryan, a preventive officer, of the city of Windsor, who received his appointment fifty-two-days before the election, and he was dismissed on my recommendation, and I assume full responsibility for the recommendation. In this question of dismissals and nominations to office, I feel that it is my duty as a member of this House to be guided by the policy that has been assented to by both parties heretofore in this House. I have before me the doctrine laid down by the Liberal party just after the change of government in 1896, as it appears in the Ottawa "Free Press', and it reads:

> The rank and file of the Liberal party will acclaim a plain statement of the need for a closer loyalty of the department to this accepted principle of party government—all patronage should go to the friends of the party. Every departure from this is an act of disloyalty to the followers and supporters of the party.
> No cabinet minister nor any supporter of the Liberal party can assault this position and be loyal to his party.
> Every new appointment, every power of patronage, belongs by right of system and precedent to the members of the Liberal party.
> To appease a political foe by gifts of patronage is a sign of cowardice, or even worse.
> In the initial appointment or in the awarding of a government contract, it is expected that the party in power shall be loyal to its frineds. Without such loyalty the party becomes disorganized.—Ottawa 'Free Press.'

Mr. CLARK (Essex). What is the date of that antediluvian quotation?

Mr. WILCOX. My hon. friend will find it in the 'Hansard' of January 26, last year. And this principle was so clearly followed by my hon. friends who now sit in opposition, that the church, to which I think my hon. friend adheres, in conference assembled, passed the following resolution:

> That the sordid system of patronage unfortunately obtaining in this country is not only folly from the party point of view with which as such this conference has nothing to do, but that it is contrary to public policy and an offence against the people, inasmuch as it proceeds on the assumption that the party in power is justified in administering the affairs of the country to the advantage of that section of the electors who have assisted in returning it, whereas according to any true view such party should regard itself as a trustee of the whole people.

This was clearly the Liberal policy, but I am inclined to follow the policy subsequently assented to by both parties in this parliament, that men who enter the civil service of this country should not take an active part in politics, is a sound policy and that policy shall be followed in my constituency in the case of men who, to my personal knowledge, acted as partisans in the elections. This is a matter of statute, because, as pointed out by the Prime Minister, the law clearly and distinctly prescribes the duties of the civil servant and also prescribes what he shall not do. One of the things which, according to the law, he is not to do is to take an active part in a political contest under penalty of dismissal. Therefore, it is my duty as a humble member of this House to maintain the law in those cases, and when I find that a civil servant who is under my jurisdiction, has violated the law, I would be derelict in my duty if I did not enforce the provisions of the law. But the civil servants in the riding of North Essex who are now under my jurisdiction, so far as dismissal and recommendation is concerned, will be accorded fair treatment. They will not have handed out to them the lemons that were handed servants left there by the Liberal-Conservative party in 1896. I would ask my hon. out to that splendid army of civil friend why customs officer Church, of Essex, was dismissed in 1896, a prominent officer, without any examination or investigation whatever. I would ask why W. M. Scott, of Leamington, a trusted civil servant left there by the Liberal-Conservative party, was dismissed and a Liberal put in his place? I would ask him why Mr. McCormick, why Captain Caldwell, of Amherstburg, were dismissed? I have here the answer received by Mr. Caldwell, of Amherstburg, who wrote to the department asking for an investigation and for the papers relating to his dismissal. He received the following reply:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, respecting charges preferred against you by Collector Gott, of Amherstburg, and report by Assistant Inspector Colcock.

In reply I beg to state that I am not authorized to furnish you with a copy of any such documents.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner.

That was all there was to it, he was put out and a Liberal was put in his place. In those days the Liberal party had no criticism to offer for the dismissal of these trusted employees without investigation. I would ask my hon. friend why postmaster Ira Pastores, of Harrow, was dismissed and a Liberal put in his place. It seems to me that in view of the fact that I have in the city of Windsor the seventh largest port in this Dominion, with 140 officers under my charge as a member of this House.

An hon. MEMBER. My charge?

Mr. WILCOX. Jurisdiction.

An hon. MEMBER. What do you say to that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. WILCOX. I will say that was a mistake, I will put it, our charge. In view of the dismissal of all these splendid officers it is almost hypocrisy for hon. members opposite to criticise the dismissal of a man only six weeks in the service who I have every evidence was a most offensive partisan in the election of the 21st September. I might also ask why Mr. Killackey, that young man of Irish parentage, maimed physically, but a giant intellectually, was kicked out of the service and a Liberal put in his place? The Windsor 'Record,' the Liberal paper in that city—and I have nothing personally to say against the boys in the 'Record' office—although they have carried on a terrible criticism about the dismissal of this man to which my hon. friend has referred—kept up the refrain Killacky, you must go back, Killacky, Killacky you you must go backey.

You must go backey—and he was dismissed. There was not a word of remonstrance against this dismissal from my hon. friend at that time or against the dismissal of many others whom I could mention. Take for instance the Windsor Post Office. Miss O'Connor was dismissed, an orphan, who had been two years in the service, who had given good service, and against whom no charge was made. She was dismissed and a Liberal put in her place. Then there were Belleparche and many others. In view of these facts, it seems to me that the criticisms offered by my hon. friends opposite are hardly justified. Just a word regarding Mr. McHugh, whose nomination I recommended, to take the place of Mr. O'Brien. I recommended the dismissal of Mr. O'Brien and he was dismissed. Mr. McHugh is just as active a man as I am.

An hon. MEMBER. Is he Irish?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes, and none the worse for that. He is clerk of the Township of Maidstone. He has been an accountant over twelve years and is auditor of the county of Essex, holds a first-class certificate, and from the standpoint of integrity and ability I defy my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) to mention his superior in the county. I believe in the principle of appointing reasonably young men to the service, but I had further a particular reason for recommending Mr. McHugh. It was reported to me by the collector of customs, Mr. J. A. Smith, that, owing to the wonderful growth and development and increased revenues of the port, an auditor will shortly have to be appointed for that port. Mr. McHugh, having special qualifications for that position, I thought he would be an admirable man to fill it. I did not consider it would be fair to the township to leave him clerk of the township of Maidstone at the beginning of the year two or three months and then take him away, so I recommended Mr. McHugh for the place of Mr. O'Brien, and when the proper time comes, he will be recommended by me for the more important position, and I defy my hon. friend to say he is not qualified to fill it. While on this subject I may say that, as a moderate man in politics, I recognize that in this young country, of which we are all so proud, human ingenuity has never devised a system of government equal to the party system. I have no hard feelings against the Liberals or the Liberal party, but there are certain principles laid down in our constitutional government, and it is my duty to carry out those principles as closely as I possibly can. There are in the city of Windsor a few officials whose dismissal I should consider it my duty to recommend. Their dismissal will be a gentle reminder to those left in the service. It will teach them that they must do their duty or they will meet the same fate. I shall not discuss the little schemes in view which were played by those who had the adminstering of patronage in North Essex, because—miserable little schemes to catch the votes of my supporters in certain sections of the country. But I may say to the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that every one of those men who were guilty of those schemes will be dismissed because I have absolute evidence that they were guilty of violating the law. And when my hon. friends opposite hear of their dismissals, I hope they will not be free with their criticisms, knowing as they must, that I had just cause for recommending their removal. There are in the Customs Department 42 officials. In order that I might be properly qualified to do my duty as a servant of the people, I have studied with great care the schedules of the various offices, and I find that in these there are some 13 officials on the temporary list. These officials never received their permanent appointment. Why they have been permitted to remain three years in the customs service at the port of Windsor without being permanently appointed I am unable to perceive. But that would only show that those who had charge of the administration of patronage for the riding of North Essex were derelict in their duty. Possibly they were kept on as temporary employees and not brought under the Civil Service Act, in order that they might be let loose at election time and take part in the contest. Whether that was the object or not, I do know that that is just what a number of them did. My hon. friends opposite need have no fear with respect to the recommendations which I shall make regarding those who are in the civil service at the port of Windsor. They shall be given fair treatment, and the policy agreed to by both parties in this parliament will be followed as closely as possible, and those guilty of violating the law will be recalled.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not think my hon. friend, who has just spoken, has given any clear definition of what he understands by partisanship. We had a very curious case in Montreal the other day. It was not the case of a man acting immediately under the control of the government, but of a man employed on the harbour commission, Mr. Garneau, a very good servant and worthy superintendent. I do not think he was an offensive partisan in any way because I wanted him in my division but could not get him. After the elections were over, some hon. member insisted on the commission dismissing this man. He asked what there was against him, and the only charge of conduct that might be considered offensive was he was seen on one occasion riding in a cab with the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

That was while the present leader of the opposition was Prime Minister. If that is to be regarded as 'offensive partisanship,' I think the fact ought to be known. The line ought to be drawn somewhere. The fact of Mr. Garneau being invited to step into Sir Wilfrid Laurier's carriage and drive through the streets of Montreal on the way to the Windsor Hotel, surely ought not to have caused his dismissal from the Montreal Harbour Board.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I did not rise on a former occasion for the purpose of critising the dismissal of Mr. Brian, nor did I rise to criticise the appointment of McHugh. Mr. McHugh is a very estimable gentleman, and if a man of mature years is to be appointed to the service, I do not know of any person I would rather see appointed than that same gentleman. But my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) seems to have had a guilty conscience in this matter; for, when I rose to ask a question with regard to the age of appointments in the department, he felt it necessary to justify the dismissal of this young man Brian. It must be pleasing to Mr. Brian, and a matter of congratulation to his friends to know that for the only ground that can be found for his dismissal, we must go back to a date prior to 1896 and find the declaration by some zealous Liberal that the policy ought to be 'to the victors belong the spoils.' That policy was not acted on after 1896.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). No. But even if it were, it was very much condemned by the party now in power; and by adopting now the policy which they denounced then—'to the victors belong the spoils'—the hon. gentlemen are repudiating all their pretensions in the way of civil service reform. Reference has been made to Mr. Killacky, and I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilcox) must have had in view the Irishman of the township of Maidstone when he referred to that gentleman. He was an offensive partisan.

Mr. WILCOX. Was he such after his appointment?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Would my hon. friend expect a man appointed as Mr. Killacky was to be retained? He went up and down the concessions carrying on an offensive campaign, and having his appointment in his pocket. Then when the government was defeated, this defeated government passed an order in council appointing this Mr. Killacky to a deputy collectorship. I do not think you will hear any person on this side complain of a dismissal of any official appointed under circumstances such as these. It is a rare commentary on the dismissal of Mr. Brian, that the only excuse for it is an old article in the Ottawa 'Free Press' declaring that 'to the victors belong the spoils.'

Mr. WILCOX. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, that is not the principal reason.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). What did Mr. Brian do that he should be dismissed?

Mr. REID (Grenville). He was appointed a few days before the elections.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). But I would like to know what he did. That is what his friends have been trying to find out. And Mr. Brian himself asked for an explanation.

Mr. WILCOX. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke, Essex) was present at the Liberal nomination in the city of Windsor at which Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Healy and Mr. Ed. O'Neal were the candidates, and he will remember that Mr. O'Neal, one of the candidates, openly declared that certain civil servants in the port of Windsor had been canvassing the delegates from different parts of the riding against him.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). But not Mr. Brian. I know to whom he referred.

Mr. WILCOX. That statement was made, and I have the evidence. There is another gentleman who was transferred immediately previous to that convention into the civil service for reasons which were very questionable. Mr. Brian was transferred from the Immigration branch to the Customs Department just about this time, and he took an active part in that convention, and in the election that followed. Mr. Brian was pointed out to me upon three different occasions, by men prominent in Windsor, as one who was very busy in securing the registration vote. I was informed by one of the most prominent citizens of Windsor that he was present when this young man brought in three votes for registration. It was actions of this character that led me to the conclusion that this young man was taking a part in the election. There was also the fact that he was also only temporary assistant, and that he could not receive an appointment except upon my recommendation. And I felt it my duty to give my recommendation to a friend rather than to a foe.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I am glad to hear the further reasons given by the hon. gentleman, that Mr. Brian was an offensive partisan. If he were such, then I assume that the policy is to dismiss all such people. I am not going to criticise that, if the party think that the proper system to adopt. But I do not believe that this man was an offensive partisan. My hon. friend (Mr. Wilcox) himself does not know it of his own knowledge. I have made inquiries, and Mr. Brian has asked for an investigation, declaring that the charges were not true. That investigation was denied, and Mr. Brian and his friends justly feel sore. It was said that he was only temporarily employed. They are all temporary in the same sense. There was not a better officer in the customs service than 'Tom' Brian. He was recognized by the officials there, and by the inspectors who came from Toronto; and I do not think the minister will say that he had a better officer for his years. He had been an immigration officer and desired to be transferred to the customs, in which he had been engaged for a few months, and that was made a pretext for his dismissal. It is not material to me what policy is adopted. They can fire the whole of them; and, from a party standpoint I would sooner they did. They would be going back on all their professions. But it is due to the civil service that a policy should be laid down, and that a minister should not take shelter behind one of the members. He gives his supporters carte blanche, apparently; and whether a member acts from malice or on mistaken judgment he has only to say that this or that man is to be dismissed, and the minister will dismiss him. If that be the policy, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the hon. gentleman approve of the government making appointments to the civil service between the dissolution, and the holding of the general elections?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). That is the case of Mr. Killacky with whose dismissal by the Liberals my hon. friend (Mr. Wilcox) finds fault. There may be cases in the course of the administration of government where that must be done. But that is not the case here. Mr. Brian was appointed long before the elections.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, he was appointed in August, after the dissolution.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I do not know how that is. At any rate it was before the election, and before there was a suggestion of a change of government. He was only transferred from one department to another. At that time he had been some years in the other department, and had held the highest position in the Immigration Department. But the minister has not answered my question as yet. I think it is fair to the service, and to the people to know whether the rule as to the age limit is going to be carried, as it was under the former government.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman does not mean to say that the former government had an age limit in the Department of Customs.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I certainly do mean to say it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I know that in the Customs Department the former government appointed men all the way up to 75 years of age, within the last few years.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). If my hon. friend will look up the correspondence with regard to the county of Essex, and particularly Windsor, within the last year, he will find that perhaps half-a-dozen have been refused certificates recommended by those having the patronage, because they exceeded 36 years of age, on the ground that that limit was being enforced.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know anything about the county of Essex, but I do know that the late government, throughout the Dominion, have been appointing men right up almost to the time they left office, men up to 60 years of age.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Perhaps the minister will say that in his appointments he recognizes no age limit.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In the outside service we are not compelled by law to recognize an age limit. But I may say for the information of the hon. gentleman, that I have been appointing only those who are under 36 years of age in almost every place, except in special cases. In the case at Windsor, the hon. member for that county advised me of the special qualification of this particular man, and I understand he is about 50 years of age.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). He is over 60.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What is the age of the hon. gentleman's appointee?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know, but he has special qualifications, and will be a valuable officer. The hon member knows that in some cases you cannot apply an age limit, as for instance in the case of appraisers. But I am apointing those under the age limit in every case, except in those mentioned by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox).

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). What do you mean by age limit?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Under 36 years of age.

Mr. CARVELL. We have from the government a rather remarkable statement in the declaration of the Minister of Customs to the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox). An hon. member comes into this House and reads a resolution passed by a prominent religious denomination in Canada condemning in the strongest terms the policy of dismissing men from office, and then he goes on to say practically, that to the victor belongs the spoils. He turns down the policy declared by this religious denomination, and so far as we can see, the hon. gentleman must have come here as the exponent of the government, because he is prepared with all the data and documents on which he made this extraordinary speech. Now we have had a declaration of the policy of the government as shown by the hon. member for North Essex. I would like to ask the minister a question. He tells us that in cases where the constituency is represented in this House by a member supporting the government he will take the word of that member in regard to the offensive partisanship of any public official, and the minister will remove him from his office if the member recommends his removal. In other cases where the constituency is represented by an opponent of the government, I understand an investigation of some kind will be held. Will the minister tell me whether counsel will be employed by the government, or whether they will allow the accused to be represented by counsel? Will the government allow the man accused reasonable notice in order that he may make his defence at the investigation? Or will the minister simply send a man around the country and ask some questions of Conservative politicians and dismiss the man on their representations?

Mr. REID (Grenville). In cases where investigations are held there is a regular commissioner duly appointed by order in council for that purpose. If there is no counsel employed, then the commissioner must notify the man charged, who will have a right to appear and give evidence, or rebut evidence that may be brought against him. He can take any means he likes to disprove that evidence, and the commissioner must take the evidence under oath. Then a report will be sent to the department, it will be looked into, and if the evidence is sufficient to justify the dismissal the dismissal will have to be made.

Mr. CARVELL. I am not going to find fault with the declaration of policy on the part of the minister. I may say that only to-day I received notice that one of those commissioners had arrived in my town yesterday afternoon, and up to that moment not a single official had ever received notice that he was coming. Perhaps the commissioner was only on a scouting expedition for the purpose of spying out the land, and getting his witnesses and coming back later on. But no one had received any intimation whatever that he was coming. I am glad to learn that the minister is going to give these people a chance to defend themselves. Would the hon. gentleman say who are the commissioners appointed in the different ports of Canada for the purpose of holding these investigations?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). In New Brunswick, the commissioner appointed is Mr. E. T. C. Knowles. In Nova Scotia the commissioner is James A. Macdonald of Halifax. There are one or two others down in the lower parts of the province, whose names I can get if the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. MACLEAN. (Halifax). Who will be the commissioner in this Windsor case?

Mr. REID (Grenville). A commissioner is not necessary in that case. I have proof that he was an active partisan.

Mr. EMMERSON. In case of an hon. member making a charge to the minister of offensive partisanship of an official, does the minister require full particulars of the charge, or does he simply take the statement of the member declaring that such a man is an offensive partisan?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). In cases that have come before me the member has generally stated that this man has been an active partisan, has shown partisanship, either by attending meetings, or canvassing, or doing something of that kind, and I have taken the member's statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. Must the member state of his own personal knowledge that the official has been guilty of special acts of offensive partisanship?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). The member cannot in all cases speak of his own personal knowledge, because the official accused may have been attending a meeting some miles away. A case was brought to my attention where an official had been present at a public meeting and had made a speech, and I considered that was sufficient evidence.

Mr. EMMERSON. A case of that kind would perhaps be a matter of public knowledge. Where it is not within the knowledge of a member I want to ask the minister if he does not think that he should have either an investigation of it, and accompanying the declaration of the member, does he not think there should be the affidavit or the sworn declaration of the party who imparted the information to him?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). Members who have made charges of this kind have always stated that they have themselves made a very particular investigation. No member has ever asked for the dismissal of an officer without first having made an investigation himself.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do you require to have his statement in writing?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). They write me a letter to that effect. Hon. members on this side of the house are not anxious to dismiss officials who have not been active partisans, but those who have been active partisans certainly deserve it. If a member states to me that he has personal knowledge or that he has evidence based on personal inquiries that a man has been an active partisan I am satisfied to take his word and dismiss the official.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Would the minister mind bringing down the report on Mr. Brian?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Certainly, I will bring down the report on Brian or any other man.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The difficulty is that the policy which the minister has enunciated has not been carried out. In my constituency men are dismissed without any investigation whatever or any complaint being made against them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the hon. gentleman tell me the name of any?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I cannot give the name of any in the minister's own department but I can give him the name of a man in the Department of Public Works—Roderick Sutherland. I can also give him the name of a man in the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think the hon. gentleman should refer to the Department of Customs; that is out of order.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understood that my hon. friend was speaking not only of the policy of his own department but the policy of the government generally with regard to the dismissal of officials. I would like to know from the minister if he makes any distinction between a letter written to him by a defeated candidate and a statement made to him by a member of parliament? My own view is that a defeated candidate should produce more definite and clearer proof than a member of parliament. A member of parliament is here, we can confront him with his statement and, if there is anything wrong with it, we can criticise it and he must stand up to it. But, when a defeated candidate a thousand miles away writes a letter reflecting upon some official and secures his dismissal, it strikes me that that is too much like the star chamber style of doing business and that something should be required of him that is not required of a member of parliament. I would like very much to have the view of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) on this question of dismissals. I regret that he is not in his place. The Prime Minister during the last fifteen years, has been the champion of Civil Service reform. The first speech he made in this chamber was on that question and it was a very able and exhaustive speech. He quoted from such great writers as 'Leckie on Democracy and Liberty' and he laid down the principle that a civil servant might not only vote against the government that employed him but that he was entitled to speak in public against the policy of that government provided he did it in a gentlemanly manner. The different manifestos that he has issued since that time have all contained a declaration in favour of civil service reform. In the Halifax platform this question had a prominent place and in the platform issued at the last election in September the Prime Minister declared in favour of civil service reform. We are told that the government is going to adopt the old policy of 1896. Then, what is the meaning of his civil service reform? Is there nothing in it at all? Is it just empty talk and wind? I presume that the people believed him when they voted for his party on this question because it is a very important question. It is up to the Prime Minister to lay down some principle and to show that he, as the Prime Minister, is willing to take a forward step and to justify the numerous manifestos that he has issued during the last fifteen years on this important question. I find that his own newspapers do not support him in the attitude that his government is taking on this question. If there is any newspaper in Canada that can be looked upon as the organ of the Prime Minister it is the Halifax 'Herald' and that paper has been speaking out pretty strongly on the question of the dismissal of civil servants. It says:

> Mr. Borden should, moreover, lose no time in introducing such reforms into the civil service as will put a prompt and complete end to the scandal of the hungry horde of party heelers, who apparently think the sole business of the government is to provide them with an opportunity to feed at the public trough—a humiliating example of which is furnished in Halifax to-day. This horde of political dervishes seems under the impression that it is the sole business of the government to drive away the present occupants of the public trough to make room for themselves, without regard to consequences.

That is the editorial statement of the organ of the Prime Minister. Evidently the Halifax 'Herald' is not satisfied with the policy which has been adopted on the other side of the House with regard to this matter. Then, I find that the Toronto 'Telegram,' another paper that gives, I understand, an independent support to the Conservative party, has come out very strongly condemning the government on the policy they are pursuing with regard to the dismissal of officials. I wish to call attention to an item which appeared a few days ago in the Montreal 'Star,' and I submit that the Montreal 'Star' is a newspaper that is supposed to give fair-play to the government. I am glad to see that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Hughes) is in the House just now, because I want to draw his attention to this matter. The Montreal 'Star' refers to the case of Mr. Eugene O. Baldwin, a customs employee of Coaticook. This is a case that I think has not been mentioned this afternoon. I know nothing about the case except what I have read in the Montreal 'Star.' The 'Star' states that this gentleman has been suspended from the service of the government and it gives as a reason for his suspension that he issued a manifesto about the time of the election. Mr. Baldwin says that he took no part in the election, but he admits that he did issue a manifesto in which he protested against the Nationalists and their press indulging in such expressions as 'Imperialistic Virus'; 'We have had enough of England and the English'; 'We will not be made to forget that in 1837 it was necessary to bore holes in the British Flag in order to breathe the atmosphere of liberty.' It appears that Mr. Baldwin had courage enough to denounce the Nationalists for making statements of that kind at the last election and that for that reason he has been dismissed from the customs service. This is the statement which I find in the Montreal 'Star.' I would like to know what the Minister of Militia thinks of it. Is he in accord with that kind of policy? Has it come to this, Sir, that a man who complains, who enters a loyal protest against expressions of this kind, is to be condemned?

Mr. Baldwin protested against the use of such language during the recent election and the Montreal 'Star' states that Mr. Baldwin was suspended from the service on account of these protests of his. I would like to hear the view of the Minister of Militia on a civil servant being dismissed for protesting against such language.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Except in one or two cases, I have insisted upon an investigation. In the case of Mr. Baldwin I was told that he was a very active partisan in the last campaign and there was placed before me a newspaper the whole front page of which was spread with an article written by Mr. Baldwin and adorned with his photograph, and that article contained some harsh language. If the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) himself had read that article, he would have to agree that it was actively interfering in politics. The moment a man leaves his office and enters the political arena, it makes no difference to me to whom he refers, he will not occupy his position longer, if I have the power to dismiss him.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I cannot understand why the minister does not grant an investigation in the case of Mr. Brian of Windsor. The hon. member (Mr. Wilcox) says that he was guilty of political partisanship, and the hon. member (Mr. Clarke) who knows him just as well, and whose word will be as readily accepted in this House or outside of it as the word of the hon. member (Mr. Wilcox) states that Mr. Brian was not a political partisan and has not taken part in politics since his appointment to office. In view of that, the minister has no right to constitute himself the sole judge and to refuse an investigation before his commissioner whom he is to appoint for the province of Ontario. What is the use of his appointing a commissioner at all if the minister is going to act this way in some cases and not in others?

Mr. REID (Grenville). It amuses me to see the change of mind that has come over the hon. member (Mr. A. K. Maclean) within the last few months. The leader of the opposition, when he came into power in 1896, would grant no investigation, and the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) sustained him. Take the case of Mr. Milner, of Sackville, N.B. He was accused, in 1896, of being an active partisan and a commissioner was appointed to inquire and the commissioner went around taking evidence, and he refused Mr. Milner an opportunity of appearing before him and defending himself, and Mr. Milner was dismissed. He never had a chance of stating his case, and when he asked for the evidence, even that was refused to him. So far as I am concerned I believe that no man was more unjustly treated than Mr. Milner and I believe he should be put back in his office

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). You don't know him.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The late government never gave him the slightest possible chance to defend himself.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). And you contended that was wrong and why do you do now what you condemned?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The minister has incorrectly stated the policy laid down by the late government. That policy was that no man should be dismissed without there being an investigation, the only exception being that if a member stated on his responsibility, that of his own knowledge he knew the facts charged against the official, we would take that without further evidence. And there is reason for that, because when a member of this House charges an official of his own knowledge with offensive partisanship the member can be called to account in this House and we can debate his recommendation and investigate it also.

We can take knowledge of what he says, we can debate it and we can investigate it under oath. I presume a man would tell the truth under such circumstances, but at all events he may be mistaken and his word can be controverted. Unless a member did so, under the late government an investigation was always held and the very case cited by my hon. friend proves it. A charge was made against a man in Sackville, a commissioner was appointed, and an investigation took place. What we complain of in this matter is that Mr. Bryan was dismissed without any investigation and so far as I have been able to follow the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox), he has not stated that he made a charge of his own knowledge that Mr. Bryan had been guilty of offensive partisanship.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the case of Mr. W. C. Milner, sub-collector of customs at Sackville, which is in the county I now represent, Mr. Milner was the owner, proprietor and editor, of the 'Chignecto Post,' published at Sackville. He was also sub-collector of the port of Sackville. The 'Chignecto Post' is a very strong and ardent supporter of the Conservative party and week by week it contained articles naturally supporting that party and condemnatory of the Liberal party. A change of government occurred in 1896, and charges were made, I believe, against Mr. Milner, because of what was claimed to be offensive partisanship. I was not a member of the House at that time and therefore had nothing to do with the transaction, but an investigation was held, evidence was taken and the commissioner made a report upon which action was taken by the government. No one will claim, not even Mr. Milner, although he has certain peculiarities, that he was not a strong partisan. He was recognized as such, and no complaint was made as to his dismissal, it being the policy of the government to dismiss, after investigation in cases where the charges were sustained. I know personally that Mr. Milner, during all the years previous to 1896, and while he held the office of collector of customs at Sackville, and was editor and proprietor of the 'Chignecto Post,' was a very strong supporter of the Conservative party, openly, publicly, and I admired him for the courage of his convictions. I do not think that Mr. Milner made any serious complaint at the time as to his dismissal, he recognized that it was part of the fortunes of war. He went down with his party and certainly that case is quite different from those that have been cited here.

Mr. REID (Grenville): Mr. Milner was not allowed to appear before the commissioner at many places he sat holding his investigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. I know the commissioner sat at Sackville and took evidence.

Mr. REID (Grenville). On January 19, 1897, he received a notice from Mr. McAlpine that he had been directed to investigate charges of partisanship. On January 20, Mr. Milner wrote to Mr. McAlpine asking for a copy of the charges, but received no reply. He then asked him verbally, but he never received a copy. Mr. McAlpine sat at Sackville on February 5, Mr. Milner was present. The commissioner adjourned from time to time and Mr. McAlpine received evidence in other places when Mr. Milner was not present. As to the statement that Mr. Milner was proprietor of this paper, Mr. Milner furnished evidence that in 1895, two years before the investigation, he had ceased owning that paper, it had been turned over to a company and he was really not the owner, and then, owing to this paper criticising the action of the Liberal party, he was promptly dismissed. When he asked for a copy of the evidence, he received this reply:

Ottawa, Oct. 5, 1897.

Mr. W. C. Milner,
Sackville, N.B.

Sir,—I am directed by the Hon. the Minister of Customs to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 28th ult., with reference to your dismissal from the position of collector of customs at Sackville. The minister desires me to say to you that the reason for your dismissal was that it appeared on investigation by Mr. McAlpine that you had taken an active partisan part in politics.

The minister does not deem it advisable to comply with your request for a copy of the report of the commissioner.

The question of granting you an allowance in lieu of sums paid in by you to the superannuation fund is under consideration.

Yours very truly,
JOHN BAIN,
Private secretary.

He was denied the evidence in that case.

With reference to the statement of the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the policy was laid down by him in 1896, that he would only accept the statement of a member of the House of Commons when it was of his own personal knowledge, I may say that in the Customs Department that policy was violated in every possible way. Members were not required to state in every case that the matter was of their own personal knowledge. The right hon. leader of the opposition knows that it would be impossible for a member to know of all cases of his own personal knowledge, of every case. There are constituencies in Canada several hundred miles long and an official might take an active part, he might attend a meeting at a distance, and the member might have information from reliable men of the official taking an active part in the campaign, but how could the member have personal knowledge of all such cases. If information has been given him from people in whom he has confidence and he is prepared to assume the responsibility in this House there is no reason why I, as Minister of Customs, should not accept the statement of that member, and see that the man is dismissed. That was the policy carried out by the present leader of the opposition from 1896, on.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The minister has not yet stated what his department will require from a defeated candidate who asks for the dismissal of an official.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When a defeated candidate makes charges against an official of active partisanship I have so far sent those charges as given to me to the commissioner appointed for the purpose of investigating and he is advised to notify whoever makes the charges and the official against whom the charges are made.

Mr. EMMERSON. Are copies of the charges conveyed to him?

Mr. REID (Grenville). All of the papers are sent to the commissioner.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does the party accused receive them?

Mr. REID (Grenville). He hears the evidence put up against him, which is the evidence we act on, and is contained in the commissioner's report. The official, therefore, is notified. No doubt he will be present and hear what is said against him. But we have to go by the evidence obtained by the commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. Apparently there is no improvement with regard to the procedure judging by what the hon. minister has just said. He made a complaint that Mr. Milner had not received a copy of the charges, but the hon. minister does not now propose to furnish the accused with a copy of the charges preferred against him. With respect to Mr. Milner, who is a personal friend of mine, I want to say this. I have understood that Mr. Milner—and I am not condemning him for looking after his own interests—feels that perhaps his friends who are now in power will consider a claim by him for a return to him of all the moneys paid by him as annuity and perhaps some other consideration. I am informed that such a claim has been presented to this government and that he is seeking to get consideration from the government by reason of the course which was pursued in 1897.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have not heard anything of it.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is spoken of locally, but whether it is true or not I am not in a position to say. I would be only too glad if Mr. Milner could get any money due him, if there be any due him.

Mr. REID (Grenville). So far as I can remember, Mr. Milner has not made any application such as stated by the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson).

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. minister made a statement which I think is a fair one, namely, that in the case of a complaint against an official by a member supporting the government, he would act on the recommendation but on the charge of one who ran as a government candidate and was defeated, that official is entitled to an investigation. The minister has told us that he instructed the commissioner to hold such an investigation, but I want to point out to him a case acted upon the very opposite of what he says is the rule in his department. It is the case of a gentleman living in my town who was first suspended and then dismissed without investigation, although he asked for one

Mr. CURRIE. Was it a permanent appointment?

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes, he was an under official in the Customs House. It was alleged that he was a partisan. I could explain what he did which was considered partisan, but I do not think that is necessary. But what I claim is that he did not receive the treatment which the minister says an official was entitled to.

An hon. MEMBER. What is his name?

Mr. LOGGIE. Mr. Gaynor, in the Customs House at Chatham.

Mr. EMMERSON. Was that since this government came in?

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes. I could tell hon. gentlemen that there are many officials who worked energetically against me in my election in 1904, and I was pressed by my friends to ask for their removal, but not one official in the county of Northumberland was dismissed by the Liberal government. Mr. Gaynor was treated very harshly.

Mr. CLARE. When was he appointed?

Mr. LOGGIE. He was appointed by the Liberal government on my recommendation in 1904 or 1905. Some of the allegations made against him I know to be untrue.

Mr. CLARE. What were the facts?

Mr. LOGGIE. I do not know that I need here give the facts. All I can say is that I hope I may be favoured with the papers; and if an injustice has been done Mr. Gaynor, I trust the hon. minister will carry out the principle he has laid down and grant an investigation. Mr. Gaynor asked for one during the time of his suspension, before he was dismissed. Had an investigation been granted, I believe that Mr. Gaynor would have retained his position in the Customs House at Chatham.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If I remember rightly, the charge made against him was that he went to a political meeting and tried to interfere with the speakers.

Mr. EMMERSON. Why should that not be investigated?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). From the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite, one would think they were the most innocent lambs in the world and that they would not remove any one from office without investigation, but I happen to have run across an old return which I intend putting on 'Hansard' if the House will allow me. In the Senate, nine months after the late government had obtained office in 1896, a return was asked for and brought down. It contained 35 pages, and I propose to read it and put it on 'Hansard' so that when hon. gentlemen opposite deny that any one was removed from office without due time by the late government he can turn up the facts. This is not a full return. It will be found in the Sessional Papers number, 517 19. 1897a:

Ottawa, 24 April, 1897.

The Under-Secretary of State,
Ottawa.

Sir,—Referring to the address of the Senate of 9th instant asking for information respecting persons who have been removed from office by dismissal, superannuation, or otherwise, since 13th July, 1896, or who have been appointed to fill the positions thus vacated, I have the honour to state that so far as this department is concerned, three persons have been removed from office by dismissal since 13th July, 1896, namely, C. B. Deacon, clerk in the office of the assistant receiver general, at Winnipeg, under authority of an order in council of 30th November, 1896; John Cameron, agent of the Government Savings Bank at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and W. M. DeBlois, agent of the Government Savings Bank at Annapolis, Nova Scotia, under authority of an order in council of 22nd February, 1897, the cause in each case being that the gentlemen in question took active part in the recent general elections for the House of Commons.

In the case of Mr. Deacon the dismissal took effect from 1st January, 1897, and the assistant receiver general at Winnipeg was notified by letter dated 2nd December, 1896, that the dismissal was to take place, and he notified Mr. Deacon on the 7th of same month.

In the cases of Messrs. Cameron and DeBlois the dismissal took effect from 1st April, 1897, and these gentlemen were so notified by letters from the Finance Department, dated 25th February, 1897.

No superannuation allowance or gratuity was granted in either case, and no persons have been appointed to fill the position thus vacated.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. M. COURTNEY,
Deputy Minister of Finance

Now, Mr. Chairman, those are only a few of the dismissals during the first nine months of the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite. It would take me two days and nights to read the names of all those civil servants who were slaughtered immediately after the elections of 1896. The proscription lists of Marius and Sulla the tyrants of ancient Rome, were not to be compared with the lists prepared after the elections of 1896. Hundreds of men were thrown out of office without any reason being given for their dismissal. The members of the late government never for a moment, ceased to make the open boast that they believed in and always practised the spoils system, and that they were going to practice it. Now, Sir, it is an old principle of British law, adopted now by all civilized countries, that when a man comes into court demanding justice, or crying for mercy, his own hands must be clean. For that reason I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite have any reason to complain if a few heads have been cut off in view of what they did themselves. In addition, we all know that the present leader of the oppositon always was the high priest of the spoils system. We know that throughout his whole political life he practised those principles, and endeavoured to set up in this country a system of partisanship. His regime reminds us of the old days of the Gulephs and the Chibellines when one party had to wear a buckle on one side of their cap and the other party wore it on the other side of their cap; one party had to cut their bread up and down, and the other party to cut it crossways; one party would only drink wine out of a cut glass cup and the other side would only drink it out of a clear glass. That principle of partisanship was followed clear through during the late election. Everybody in the civil service of the government was notified that they must get out and work from morning until night to help re-elect the government of the day. Some of these civil servants in my riding came to me and told me the orders were, roughly speaking, that they were to get out and holler for the government candidate, and if they didn't holler, their heads would go into the basket. Now, Sir, I am not a believer in the spoils system, but we cannot have an efficient civil service in this Dominion unless there is some balance obtained between the numbers of Conservatives and the number of Liberals holding offices. When that time comes I will be the first person in this House to support a movement for civil service reform in the outside service. What do we find in the permanent service to-day? I have the figures here to show the relationship in some of the departments between the adherents of the two political parties. A mere hasty glance over the civil service list shows me that in the Printing Department, for instance, the Liberal apointees numbered 68, there was only one old Liberal of the Mackenzie regime, and 16 Conservatives left in the department. We find in the Interior Department, leaving out the Northwest Mounted Police, 750 Liberal appointees, 2 old Liberals and 90 Conservatives. That policy was carried throught from beginning to end, and it has made it very difficult for those who desire to see a good and efficient service to let things go on, and drift as they have been doing. Take the case of those departments that are now under the Civil Service Act. We all know that when the previous government began to investigate any department, and the lid was raised, immediately there were runaways, a scrambling to Patagonia or the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, on the part of some of the officials, and some of them often suicided. And still we are asked here to keep on a service of that kind, to keep it intact, and retain men of that description, without going into their characters or ascertaining whether they are efficient for the position they hold or not. I think it is an insult to more than fifty per cent of the people of this country to say that not more than fifteen per cent of all the offices should be held by Conservatives.

Let justice be done, let no man be injured who has served his country and who has attended to his business. But, how can the active political partisan, the man who has persisted for years in being an active political partisan, expect immunity from those on the Conservative side against whom he has directed his efforts?

You might as well try to rob a grizzly she-bear of her cubs as try to take an office from a Grit. At the first move there will be a yell. In my own case three postmasters out of about fifty in my riding made themselves actually impossible by their actions and they unfortunately compelled me to dismiss them. I find the 'Globe' newspaper publishing sermonettes at my expense making me out a Herod who has gone up and down the country slaughtering the innocents. You will find the same thing in the 'Star.' I am quite prepared to defend the case of every one of these officials that I ordered to be dismissed. We have heard so much from hon. gentlemen opposite upon this question that it is only fair that we should put the case from our side before the public and that we should remind the public of the great bloody assize that was held by the Liberal party in 1896.

Mr. LOGGIE. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to a few words that the minister uttered before recess. In referring to the case of Mr. Gaynor he said he understood that he had interrupted a meeting of Mr.

Sifton's, I think, at Chatham, N.B., Mr. Sifton did address a meeting at Chatham. He is a statesman of wide repute, the people of my county had never heard him and a very large gathering was the result. The meeting was widely advertised, the largest meeting ever held in the county took place on that occasion, and Mr. Sifton was the principal speaker. He invited any gentleman in the audience to ask him any question relative to the matter under discussion. I was not present myself, but I believe the information I am giving the committee is accurate. Mr. Sifton in discussing reciprocity, alluded to the arrangement as a treaty. Mr. Gaynor, having been invited by Mr. Sifton as one of the audience to ask any question, arose and asked a civil question. The question was this: Is it a treaty or only a trade arrangement? Mr. Sifton being somewhat deaf was not able to hear, in articulate words at any rate, what the question was and this caused some confusion. He asked what the question was, the chairman of the meeting said who it was that had asked the question and a request was made to put it in writing. Mr. Gaynor did not put the question in writing, but he immediately left the meeting. That is what took place regarding Mr. Sifton's meeting. He invited any gentleman to ask any question on the matter under discussion, when discussing the question he alluded to the arrangement as a treaty and Mr. Gaynor asked the civil question: Was it a treaty or only a trade arrangement? Because of that civil question and because of Mr. Sifton being unable to catch articulate words a little confusion came about.

Mr. CURRIE. What about the question?

Mr. LOGGIE. The question was: Is it a treaty or only a trade arrangement?

Mr. CURRIE. Well, he ought to be in the asylum.

Mr. LOGGIE. Well then if he ought to be a great many more ought to be.

Mr. CURRIE. That is right.

Mr. LOGGIE. Mr. Sifton, as I said, being deaf, did not hear the question, and, therefore, he did not give any answer, or, any direct answer, to Mr. Gaynor, as I understand the matter. I appeal to the minister in all fairness, does he consider that sufficiently partisan conduct to justify the injury which has been done to this man? The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Currie) said that we should not injure any man. I claim that this officer in question has been injured. I do not think the case as presented justifies his being dismissed without being heard. It is the doctrine of the minister that where the Conservative candidate was not elected and where a member is not in the House to present his case the matter should be investigated. Mr. Gaynor asked for an investigation, he was refused an investigation and he has been dismissed. I claim that he has been injured. He is a man somewhat up in years. He was for ten years in this position prior to which he was town clerk. But another gentleman has now the position of town clerk and Mr Gaynor is walking around town doing nothing at the present time. He has a family to support. It is a case of hardship that ought to have some consideration at the hands of the governement. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat stated that the Liberals went to the officials in the several counties and said to them that they must get out and work for the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LOGGIE. I want to say to these hon. gentleman that that is not what goes on in some of the counties at any rate. I think that as far as my county is concerned the Conservative party could very well have afforded to treat Mr. Gaynor in a more liberal manner than he has been treated, and I would suggest that even now, although Mr. Gaynor has been dismissed, an investigation should take place, and if the case is such that Mr. Gaynor cannot be retained then I have nothing more to say. But, until an investigation has been held I claim that it is not fair to dismiss him it is not in accordance with that high standard of politics that we all seek for, it is simply the spoils system carried out to perfection. I said before recess that after I was elected in 1904 the first man nominated for office in my county, I believe, was a Conservative and in the 1908 election he was out canvassing against me. Still, he was not dismissed.

Mr. BRADBURY. What relation was he?

Mr LOGGIE. Relation of whom?

Mr. BRADBURY. Yourself.

Mr. LOGGIE. Not any. Anything else?

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman knows that so-called commissioners were appointed in 1896 to go around and try these officials.

Can he tell me of one single case where a man came before that commission on a charge and got off?

Mr. LOGGIE. That is not the point, my complaint is that we did not get the commission according to the minister's promise and the request of the party in Quebec. The hon. gentleman refers to cases where a commission was given and the circumtances were investigated. What I want and what I think is fair, is that this case should be investigated. I think, under the circumstances, after what the minister said this afternoon, he should reconsider the matter, and see if nothing can be done to meet the case, because it is a hard one. I am sure that unless he does so he will not be carrying out the doctrine of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Currie), that no man will be injured. I consider that Mr. Gaynor has been injured, because the matter was not investigated. The government are simply inviting another party when they come into power to repeat this same doctrine of the spoils system. The hon. gentleman repudiates the doctrine, and yet he preaches it, and the minister and the government of the day are, to my mind, perpetuating it or doing their share in perpetuating it.

Mr. CURRIE. Why didn't you start a year ago?

Mr. EMMERSON. In connection with the distribution of increases, I wish to point out to the minister what I consider has been a hardship in the past. The increases to officials in customs ports have been made dependent upon the amount of revenue from these ports. While that may be a principle to be taken into consideration, it should not be a governing principle, at least to the extent to which it has been made a governing principle in the past. There are many ports where largely for export business it is necessary for the officers to devote all their time to the duties of the office yet where the revenue is very small. Men may be employed in such ports for years without receiving any increase while others in ports producing larger revenue receive increases. This has been a rule of the department under both the late government and its predecessors, and I think it is an injustice which should be remedied.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have not yet been able to take up the question of how these advances shall be made, and I agree that there are places were there is little revenue and that the men employed in them should receive an increase, so long as they are performing active service. There is another point which I am sorry to have to admit. Quite a number of cases have been brought to my attention where those employed before 1896, have not received the increase they should have received in the last 15 years, in other words men have been appointed at salaries higher than these officials and have received increases from year to year, while quite a number have received no increases whatever.

Mr. EMMERSON. And I can show you quite reverse conditions.

Mr. REID (Greenville). I feel that all the officials in the service who are doing good work should receive a fair increase each year and I shall try to give every one who is deserving an increase. Quite a few cases have been brought to my attention in which I think men have been unfairly treated. These will certainly receive my attention at the earliest possible moment. I want to be fair with all officials and to give them increases, and I agree that men in the outside service should receive fair treatment.

I cannot understand how some of these men in the outside service can manage to live on the salaries they receive. After they have been in the service for a time and can do their work efficiently, I beleive they should receive the same comparative recompense as those in the inside service. I shall try and treat the officials in my department from one end of the country to the other impartially and justly.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can say that, under the late government the officials in my county and in the adjoining county of Albert have been treated on equal terms, regardless of their political views. In my own case, when applications were made to me for such favours by strong political and personal friends, my answer from the department was that they could not accede to the request because the revenue of the ports concerned had not grown sufficiently to warrant it. I only ask for a businesslike application of common sense in the treatment of these officials. No doubt a great many have been overlooked but the minister will find amongst that number many political friends of the Liberal party as well as opponents.

Mr. McKENZIE. I trust that the minister in establishing these courts of inquiry will remember that their decisions may effect the property and civil rights of the officials charged, and doubtless in many cases their means of living. These courts are to be appointed under the authority of the minister as representative of the King to deal with subjects of His Majesty and we trust that they will be fair in their operations, and guided by the same high principles which guide the courts of justice in this country. I hope the minister will be careful as to the character of the men he will appoint and that he will make inquiry as to their standing in their different communities. In 1896, when a somewhat similar court was established by the late government in my part of the country, it was not a Liberal who was appointed but a good old substantial Tory official, Captain Douglas, an old English military officer, a gentleman who was not much affiliated one way or the other with party lines, and every one knew that Captain Douglas would give a fair trial. I understand that the men appointed by the Minister of Customs in my part of the county, so far as I can learn, are extreme partisans. In my own county he could not appoint a more extreme partisan than the one he has appointed. He is a good lawyer, a good fellow, a man of good education and standing but he met me on every hustings in the county and to give a fair trial to a political partisan is the last position on earth to which he should be appointed. I hope the minister will warn him that the public eye is upon him and that it will hold the minister responsible for his conduct. If the inquiry to be promoted by the minister is to be a mere pretext for dismissal, then it would be more manly for the minister to take the bull by the horns and make these dismissals direct rather than go through the screaming farce of an unfair trial. The minister should insist upon a specific charge being made in each case, and a copy of that charge, giving the date and the nature of the offence alleged, should be given to the accused official so that he may have an opportunity to defend himself in a fair way. If the official cannot defend himself and the evidence against him is explicit then I for one have no fault to find, but I most emphatically protest against any farcial trial. The minister should have the evidence before him and decide on that evidence himself and not leave it to such partisan officials as I know have been appointed. In the old days, and especially in the Public Accounts Committee, where he was the hero of the opposition, the Minister of Customs always insisted upon going to the bottom of every matter and I trust that in the present circumstances he will act in that spirit of searching for truth which so characterized him before he entered office.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The gentleman appointed in Halifax is Mr. McDonald but I do not now remember who was appointed in the district in which my hon. friend lives.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman to whom I refer is Mr. Duschman.

Mr. REID (Grenville). His name was recommended to me. As far as I am concerned, I have no desire to have any investigation for the purpose of dismisssing a man who is innocent. Certainly I shall expect Mr. Duschman to conduct the inquiry in a fair and reasonable way into the case he has to investigate in the Customs Department, and shall expect him to submit to me at Ottawa the evidence. The decision does not rest with him to dismiss or keep in office an official, but I shall take his report and assume the full responsibility of acting on it myself; and unless there is evidence that I consider justifies the dismissal, I shall not dismiss. The hon. member has referred to investigations held in 1896 by Captain Douglas. I may say that Captain Douglas reported on some cases in Nova Scotia at that time, and officials were dismissed who, I am satisfied, the hon. gentleman, if he were to look into the evidence, would admit were dismissed unfairly. There was another commisssion which made investigations in Nova Scotia. I think there was a man named O'Connor, at Halifax, who was very unfairly treated. A man named McLellan swore that he had been an active partisan and on that evidence O'Connor was dismissed, and McLellan who testified against him, was appointed to his place. Does my hon. friend think that that was a fair investigation. Mr. McLellan is, I believe, still employed in the customs service at Halifax.

Mr. McKENZIE. That would depend largely whether it was known that the man who gave the evidence was looking for the job. If I knew that the man who gave the evidence against an official was looking for a job, I would not accept his evidence. It is possible that was not known.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The person who called for an investigation at the time knew well enough whom he was going to recommend for the position, and no doubt the commissioner had some little idea of that himself. At all events, there is a sample of the kind of evidence taken in Nova Scotia in 1896. I am only citing a couple of cases that come to my memory at present, so that the hon. member will see that in Nova Scotia in 1896 everything was not carried on as fairly as he is trying to show such investigation should be carried on. I consider that we should have fairer investigation than we had in 1896, and I believe that any one I may dismiss as the result of an inquiry and investigation will be properly dismissed, and there will be no dispute on either side of the House that my judgment was right.

Mr. EMMERSON. Notwithstanding that my hon. friend has not fixed any particular age limit for the outside service, he is desirous of appointing younger men. During the past few years, so far as my experience of the department is concerned, in the appointment of sub-collectors, the department has insisted on my nominating to vacancies men who were under the age of 36. I know that some months ago when a vacancy was created by the death of a sub-collector, I was called upon to nominate a gentleman to succeed him and the department insisted on the age limit. I am not going so far as to say that the department should be restricted to any particular age limit as long as men retain their youthful vigour, because sometimes it is impossible in many communities to find men properly qualified as young as the department desires. I know I had a case in which a man was 60 years of age and they said he was too old for the appointment. I got one who was certainly under 40, but I do not know whether he was under the 36 year limit. If the department is going to continue the rule laid down by the predecessor of my hon. friend, I think it is but fair the House and country should know.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may say that since I have been at the head of the department I have adopted this rule. Take our large ports such as Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg, in the case of any new appointment, the nominees have all been under 36 years of age, and in addition they have been subjected to an examination by the officers of the department. The examination is a very simple one. I think the hon. member will agree with me that the questions we ask are so simple that any young man capable of doing clerical work should be able to pass the examination. The Customs Department is one in which the work is principally clerical. In almost every case we have not appointed an official over 36 years of age, but I may say that you cannot always confine your choice to that age in these large ports when making certain appointments. Take the positions of collectors and appraisers. You have to take men of some experience. In the case of appraisers, you have to take men who have had actual experience in the particular lines of goods they are to appraise. You may have to take a man of 50 years or much older than the 36 year limit, because he is appointed for a special purpose.

Mr. EMMERSON. I quite concur in that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then there are other positions in these large ports in which you cannot always find competent men under 36 years of age, but I admit that when you can, it is much better for the service to choose such men. Then there are appointments in the smaller outports where there is not much clerical work to do. There of course you must allow the age to be much more than the 36 years limit, but the chief places where the age limit should be observed are the very large ports where the main amount of revenue is collected. Take a port like the city of Montreal, where $20,000,000 is collected in duties in a year. If you have there a lot of men appointed after they attained the age of sixty or sixty-five, or even seventy, you can hardly expect them, in the rush of the work there, to be capable of doing their work right.

Mr. EMMERSON. And they cannot readily adapt themselves to it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No. It would probably take any man a year or two to get the knowledge of the work to be done. In a large port like that, I claim, it is necessary to start a man in when he is young. He should be given a fair salary at the start, and an increase each year to make him feel that he is being justly treated and to encourage him to do his work well. In a large office like that, there are many chances for promotion. That is the way, I believe, in which large offices like those of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver and others must be handled. I have had to retire some men. In doing so, I have given them six months' leave with salary. In Montreal, for instance, I know cases of men who were appointed at sixty years of age. Suppose such a man filling a position in a customs post office, probably having charge of the mail coming from some foreign country—say from the United States. It is his duty to take these parcels and put on the customs stamps and forward them to the officers in the places to which they are to go. If the man is not able to do the work, he probably lets the parcels go without putting on the stamps. And I believe from what I have learned from inquiring, that we are losing a very large revenue on account of not having proper officials in positions of that kind. So, I have had to retire a few men—very few indeed—who, I felt, were not qualified for the position. I think I have answered the hon. member all that he has asked as to my ideas of how positions in the customs service should be filled.

Mr. CARROLL. We have had statements as to the policy of the government with respect to the dismissal of partisan officials. I did not quite understand what conclusion the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) wished the House to arrive at from the reading with which he favoured us. I suppose he intended to illustrate the policy of the late administration in regard to partisan officials. But I do not see that the late government is very much to blame if they dismissed officials even without an investigation. For I think it is correct to say that the leaders of the late government made no promise in their platform of 1893 or down to 1897, of any great civil service reforms. If they made no such promise, nothing very much was expected of them. But what can we think of a party and a leader of that party who for fifteen years have declared to the people that they stood for civil service reform both in the inside and the outside service, when we see that leader approving the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr Wilcox)—approving if not in words, at least by his nod and smile of approval? As early as August, 1896, we find the right hon. Premier of the present day giving utterances to these expressions in this House of Commons:

It is not the money of the Liberal party or of the Conservative party which is paid to these gentlemen for their services; it is the money of the country, and the fact that these gentlemen worked for either party, so long as they worked openly, honourably and fairly, ought not to weigh against them if, at the same time, they do not neglect their duty as public officers. It seems to me that those gentlemen who are in the civil service of this country ought to have the same right, as other electors, not only to vote, but to work during elections, subject to certain limitations which I shall endeavour to submit to the House. In the first place, I entirely agree that if any such official is guilty of any corrupt or dishonourable conduct in any election contest while working for one party or the other, such conduct ought to have only one result. In the second place, if, for the purpose of supporting one party or the other he neglects his duty in any way, as a public servant, and employs the time for which his country has paid him in furthering the interests of either party, it seems to me that such conduct is reprehensible and ought to be punished. I would be willing to go a little further than some of the honourable gentlemen of the opposition and have a further limitation, namely, that if an officer is in confidential relation with a minister of with a superior officer, he ought not to take such part in an election as would interfere with the discipline of the office which he holds.

What a change has come over the right hon. gentleman in these fifteen years! I have no doubt that when, a year ago, visiting the island of Cape Breton, he made his promise and pledge to the electors to that part of the country as to the manner in which he was going to reform the civil service, he meant to fulfil his pledge should he come into power. Yet we find hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House saying, why should the opposition kick or howl over this matter to-day because, forsooth, a political partisan is having his head chopped off? Personally I am not howling if my friends lose their political jobs. But what will strike with disappointment the people of this country, especially in the province of Nova Scotia, is that the policy which the right hon. Premier of this country has been promising the people for fifteen years past, he is not going to carry into effect now that he has the chance.

Now the Minister of Customs (Mr Reid, Grenville) has given us the general outline of what he will probably do and what he has been doing with reference to political partisans. He has told us that if a member of this House of Commons recommends the dismissal of any official for partisanship, the official will be dismissed after notice. But what I would like to ask the minister is this: After receiving such a recommendation from a member of this House and after giving such notice to the charged official of the charge that is made against him, will he give that official an opportunity to send for example, a sworn declaration that he has not been a party politician since his appointment?

Now I would like to ask the minister a question, and I want a specific answer to this case. Suppose that a member from one of the Nova Scotia constituencies laid a charge against a certain official and that official was notified and made his answer by a sworn declaration; who is the Minister of Customs going to believe? Is he going to believe the man who has the courage of his convictions, and who states on oath that he has not taken the slightest part in politics either for or against the government, or is he going to believe the written or verbal statement of the member of parliament? Such cases as this will undoubtedly arise. Now I do not think that the Minister of Customs followed closely the speech of the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) to-day, when he brought to the notice of the government the fact that these pledges and promises of civil service reform have been made time and again by the right hon. leader of this government, and by the various ministers of the government and their followers, during the past fifteen years. Why has this sudden change come about? Is it because there is a hungry horde of office seekers, as described by the Halifax 'Herald,' the government organ in Nova Scotia, who are waiting to step into the positions of men who are to be dismissed? This is what the Halifax 'Herald' says:

In every ward there is a group of soreheads vowing all sorts of 'vengeance' on Premier Borden and A. B. Crosby because, forsooth, the government has neglected to make 'a clean sweep of the Liberals' in government positions and hand over said positions to the 'workers' of the Conservative party... The disgruntled heelers of ward 6 are, to quote the statement of one of the most ignorant of them, 'out for blood,' and are 'going to get' Borden and Crosby,—the animus of the heelers' spleen against these gentlemen being the fact that certain of the alleged 'workers' have not yet attained to the dignity of feeding at he public crib.

Are the right hon. gentleman and his ministers afraid of these men described in the Halifax 'Herald,' who are 'out for blood,' and who are 'going to get,' Borden and Crosby, unless they are put into the offices of dismissed Liberals. Is that one of the reasons of this sudden change of policy on the part of these gentlemen opposite, who have been preaching civil service reform for the last fifteen years? The only answer they make is 'You have been doing these things for the past fifteen years. Why, Sir the Liberals never promised anything else. On no public platform, from 1893 down until the present, I defy any member of this parliament to show that the present leader of the opposition ever promised the people of this country civil service reform. He never made any such promise, and, therefore, he had no promise to fulfil, in that respect at least. But the case regarding the present leader of the government is not at all the same, as we all know that he has made all sorts of promises of civil service reform. I want to say to him that the people of Nova Scotia, both his political friends and opponents, will be grieved indeed to learn of this sudden change of policy on the part of his government. The people of Nova Scotia who have much confidence in his integrity as a politician and a statesman, will be grieved to find that up to the present time he has given no indication whatever of his intention to fulfil these pledges ; they will be grieved when they learn through the press that he had endorsed the sentiments, as I said, with nods and smiles of approval, of the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) that we have heard this evening. I have not very much fault to find with the Minister of Customs for, beheading a man who has taken a too prominent part in party politics. But I do say that it is incumbent upon the government to give us some indication, some intimation of what they really mean by political partisanship. If we examine the records of the House of Commons since 1896 until last September, we would be justified in inferring that political partisanship did not mean a man going out and voting Liberal or Conservative, and expressing his honest opinion on public questions. I think in a question which involves the wages of perhaps 10,000 citizens of this country, the ministers of the Crown should state publicly and unequivocably what they really mean when they speak of political partisanship. For example, I am a customs official in a certain port, and my idea of political partisanship may be, not that I may go out and speak on a public platform on behalf of a political candidate, but that I may let my friends know in a quiet way how I am going to vote. I think that is the idea of political partisanship expressed by the Prime Minister. Therefore, I say it is unfair to the civil service, and still more unfair to the public, that we should be left any longer in doubt as to the policy proposed to be followed by this government. Once more I would ask the Minister of Customs to give an answer to the question I asked him a little while ago. I have no doubt that he wants to be fair in these matters, he has expressed himself so in this House to-day, and at other times.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I want to say in answer to the hon. member that he is supposing a case. I do not know what he has in mind, I cannot give him an answer about something that he is supposing. If any officials have been dismissed in his constituency, if there are any charges made against them, if he will state the name of the official, I will be able to answer.

Mr. CARROLL. Give a general outline of the policy to be pursued by the government.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think I have done that several times to-day, at least I have tried to do it, and if the hon. gentleman cannot understand my meaning, I am very sorry. I do not think I can put it any plainer. If he will take an hour or two to-morrow and read over 'Hansard,' he will understand the policy of the government, at least of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. CARVELL. I think the minister has tried to meet this discussion fairly this afternoon. Perhaps he will be willing to go one step further and tell the committee whether he will be willing to give the officials a copy of the charge they are called upon to answer.

At this very day investigations are going on in the maritime provinces against officials who have not the faintest idea in the world what they are being called upon to answer. I do not think this is in harmony with the minister's ideas of justice and fairplay. I think that if an officer is to be investigated it is only reasonable that he should have three or four days notice of what the charges are. What we fear—and I am afraid the minister fears it too—is that in many cases these investigations are merely fishing expeditions, that they are merely sending men around in order to see if it is not possible to obtain some evidence rather than to give officials a fair trial on a charge which has been properly made. I hope my hon. friend will keep this principle before him, and see if it is not possible to acquaint an official with the charge before he is called upon to answer it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether he does not think the case presented by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) is one which ought to receive reconsideration. The Minister of Customs has stated that the rule by which he has intended to be guided is that, in the case of a county which is not represented by a Conservative, he will always require that charges shall be laid, and that there shall be an investigation before action. But, in the case of Mr. Gaynor that rule has been absolutely violated. It is all very well for the Minister of Customs to say that he will be guided by such principles, that he wants to act fairly, that he is going to have an investigation held where there is not a member of this House who is able to give his personal assurance that the official has been guilty of partisanship. But, we have the absolute fact that a worthy, deserving officer, who has been for some ten years in the service, has been turned out into the street, confronted with all the difficulties that necessarily confront a man who holds a public office, and who has, after several years of public service to seek for some other livelihood; we find that man—a man with a considerable family and very little means—turned out on the street without any investigation, without any opportunity of defending himself, and without there being any member on the floor of this House able to take the responsibility of making a charge of partisanship against him. How does my hon. friend think that squares with the profession that he has made that it is his determination that every man shall have an investigation, and a fair trial? Upon whose assurance is the hon. gentleman acting in turning Mr. Gaynor out of office? I understand that he has been informed that Mr. Gaynor interrupted Mr. Sifton at a public meeting which he held in Chatham. Has my hon. friend investigated the circumstances? Has any charge been made against Mr. Gaynor, and has he had an opportunity of stating exactly what took place? My hon. friend from Northumberland is here to-night, and he says that all that Mr. Gaynor was guilty of was that he attended Mr. Sifton's meeting, that Mr. Sifton invited anybody in the audience to ask any question which he thought proper, that Mr. Sifton made the assertion that what had taken place between this government and the government of the United States was a treaty, and that Mr. Gaynor asked Mr. Sifton, in a polite and courteous manner, a question which any citizen had the right to ask as to whether it was a treaty or a trade arrangement. I ask my hon. friend what is there in that which would justify him in turning this man out of office, if that is what took place, and we have the assurance of my hon. friend from Northumberland that that is exactly what took place. Is my hon. friend able to say that the statement of the hon. member for Northumberland is not correct? Surely, if my hon. friend is able to do that he ought at least to submit the evidence to this House, but if the statement made by my hon. friend from Northumberland is correct no one can escape the conclusion that a great injustice, a great wrong, has been done to Mr. Gaynor, and that too in face of the public declaration of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government (Mr. Borden), a declaration made upon more than one occasion, that an office holder had the right not only to exercise his privilege of voting for either political party, but even to attend a public meeting, and to make his views publicly known. Notwithstanding that clear declaration of policy of the Liberal Conservative party, without any assurance from a member of the House that this officer has been guilty of partisanship, without any charge being made against him, which he has been called upon to answer, without the slightest opportunity being given to him to answer any charge, he has been ruthlessly turned out of his office and compelled to seek some other means of livelihood. My hon. friend must realize what an unfortunate position that places a man in. When a man is appointed to the public service he gives up the business to which he has been accustomed for years, he gets out of the way of any other business, and if he is turned adrift the case with reference to the great majority of office-holders will necessarily be one of hardship. That is why the late government laid down the rule—a rule which I know has been acted upon during the last four years at all events—that they would not dismiss any official unless a member of this House was prepared to give his own personal assurance that he had a knowledge that the official had been guilty of partisanship or unless in an investigation the office-holder was found to be guilty of partisan conduct.

Just a word or two with regard to the case mentioned by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Wilcox) in the very interesting and very unique—shall I say—speech which the hon. gentleman made, in which the hon. gentleman seemed to forget that he was not the Minister of Customs, and in which the hon. gentleman seemed to forget that he was not the whole government in so far as the constituency of Essex was concerned. What is the evidence upon which that hon. gentleman said: I cut this man's head off, I had him dismissed, I was not going to allow him to remain in office any longer? It was that some one, two or three of his committee men had told him that this gentleman had been the means of getting two or three names placed on the register of voters, and, as I am just reminded by an hon. gentleman who sits near me, this had been done before this gentleman was appointed to office. Surely partisan conduct on the part of my hon. friend from Essex could not possibly go farther when simply upon the statement of one or two members of the committee that this gentleman had, before he was appointed to office, been the means of putting two or three names on the voters' list, the hon. gentleman would regard that as a sufficient reason to raise the axe and cut that man's head off without any investigation or charge. I think my hon. friend can see that in assuming for a moment the duties of Minister of Customs and making the Minister of Customs the means of carrying out his will in cutting this man's head off he has not been acting in accordance with those principles which have been laid down by the right hon. the leader of the government, and by many other members of the Conservative party, as well as by members upon this side of the House in recent years when we have all been striving as far as possible to give permanency to the civil service, and to keep as near as possible to the idea that the outside members should be treated the same as the inside service.

Mr. WILCOX. It always gives me pleasure to listen to the sympathetic appeals of the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), but I always have great difficutly in discerning whether he is serious or not. However, in the observations he has just addressed us it is self-evident that he cannot be serious. This afternoon, as my reasons for recommending the dismissal of Brian, I stated that I had the word of a number of reliable men in Windsor, that this young man had taken a partisan part, and that on three different occasions he had been pointed out to me as having been engaged most actively in the election. These statements together with the circumstances that surrounded his transfer from the Immigration Department to the Customs Department justifies, to my mind, the recommendation I have made. However, an incident has occurred since his dismissal which, if it be, as would appear on the face of it, has proven to me that this young man was not just what might be expected from one possessing the very high qualities attributed to him by the member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke). After he received his notification from the department, this young man wrote to me asking for an explanation of his dismissal. I dictated a letter telling him that he had received his instructions from the Commissioner of Customs, and that he had better direct his inquiries to that source. I, however, had not mailed that communication when I met the young gentleman in a personal interview, and I explained to him fully why this recommendation had been made. He asked me to write him a letter with a view of using it with other employers in securing a position. I gave him that and he directly took it over to the Liberal paper and it was published with 14 words eliminated. It seems to me that such an act was not very honourable; it must have been a mistake on the part of the press or intentional on the part of this young man.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why not read the letter?

Mr. WILCOX. Here it is:

South Woodslee, Ont., Jan. 2, 1912.

Thomas J. Brian, Esq.,
Windsor, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your communication dated December 30, has been received, and in reply would say that I am unable to understand why those who were entrusted with the administering of the patronage for the North Riding of Essex, previous to the change of government did not give you your appointment.

You being only a temporary assistant in the customs service, and having been asked by the department to make a recommendation, I have felt it my duty to give my recommendation to a political friend. This is clearly my duty by right of system, by right of precedence and by right of law.

Yours very truly,

Now, this is what appeared in the newspapers:

WILCOX EXPLAINS.

By Right of System, Precedent and Law, says was his Duty to Dismiss Officer Brian.

As explanation of the abrupt dismissal of Customs Officer Thomas Brian and as a reply to a communication received from the officer in the form of an inquiry as to the reason for same, Oliver J. Wilcox, M.P., has written Mr. Brian as follows:

South Woodslee, Jan, 3, 1912.

Thomas J. Brian, Esq.,
Windsor, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your communication dated December 20th has been received, are entrusted with the administering of the patronage for the North Riding of Essex previous to the change of the government did not give you your appointment.

You being only a temporary assistant in the custom's service and I have been asked by the department to make a recommendation, I have felt it my duty to give my recommendation to a political friend. This is clearly my duty by right of system, by right of precedence and by right of law.

Yours very truly,
O. J. WILCOX.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That is clearly a typographical error; it does not alter the purport of the letter.

Mr. WILCOX. Well, if it is a mistake, there were two communications published in connection with this matter, and the only mistake was in this one he should not have given it to the press under the circumstances. Now, however, that may be I do not know but under the circumstances, he should not have sent it to the press, I concur to the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) with respet to giving a decent living wage to the officers in the outside service. Let me call the attention of these gentlemen opposite, who are so anxious for fair-play, to the following condition of the custos officials in Windsor and these facts I have obtained from the Collector of Customs. For instance, J. M. Beers, has been in the service for 29 years and he to-day receives a permanent salary of $850; Alexander Dench has been in the service for 28 years, and he receives a permanent salary of $800; while P. H. McKeown, who has only been nine years in the service, receives a salary of $1,000, and remember that each of these three gentlemen hold the same position as preventive officers.

It seems to me that there is a discrimination. All those who are in the permanent force should receive salaries in proportion to their length of service, and a man who has been in the service only 9 years should not receive $200 more than a man who has been in the service 23 years, when, under the report of the collector of customs, they are both considered expert officers. My hon. friend said that the Liberal party had no policy with respect to dismissals up to 1907. I have here an extract from a speech delivered by Mr. Lister, a prominent member of the Liberal party, on August 28, 1896, in which he said:

Sir,—I take it that the principle propounded by my honourable friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is the true principle. Every man in this country so long as the law does not deprive him of the right to vote has that right. I would oppose to the very utmost the interference by anybody with that right. But the moment an official goes beyond it, the moment he becomes a partisan, then he takes his official life in his hands, and if the fortunes of war go against him he must have to cease to be a public servant in this country, I say, moreover, that if the government do not do their duty in this regard they will disappoint the Liberal party in this country, and further, they will disappoint certain office-holders because they expected to die officially if we succeeded to power. What is the law on the subject? What are the rights of these people? It is laid down in Todd's Government of the British Colonies: in these words:

But an active interference in political contests in opposition to the existing administration would constitute a sufficient offence to justify the removal of any public officer.

That was clearly the policy of the late government. My hon. friend has referred to the present Prime Minister. But, Sir, on January 26, 1910, the following resolution was moved in this House:

That in making appointments to the public offices and particularly to those of a representative nature party service should not alone be considered but selection should be made with regards to capacity and personal character.

That motion was voted down by the Liberals. Forty-three Conservatives voted yea, and 70 Liberals nay. So, if the policy is not changed the Liberal party have no one to blame but themselves. Under existing conditions in this country those who are in the civil service, who have taken an active part, who have become partisans, have committed offences under the law for which the law provides the penalty of dismissal. That being the policy of the two political parties in Canada, it will be my duty to pursue that policy until that law is changed by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. WILCOX

Mr. CARVELL. Will the Minister now state that he will in future direct that the commissioners shall submit to the officials of the government charged the charges which they are intended to answer before the investigation takes place?

Mr. REID (Grenville). In some cases the charge is made by an individual that an official has been guilty of active partisanship and he asks that an investigation be held. In a case of that kind the commissioner will get the evidence from us to that effect and he must go and see this man and have the person who is charged with being an offensive partisan, present when the evidence is heard.

Mr. CARVELL. Does the minister order investigations without any particulars or charges being furnished?

Mr. REID (Grenville). The charges are made of active partisanship specifying some—

Mr. CARVELL. No details?

Mr. REID (Grenville). If any responsible person makes a charge that a man is guilty or active partisanship and will produce the evidence, if a commissioner is sent, there is no reason why a commissioner should not be sent. The Commission will present the evidence; that is fair to all concerned.

Mr. CARVELL. That is unfair, the person charged should have some information beforehand of what the charge is. I am afraid that in many cases the only charge is active partisanship and even the department has no particulars of what the charge is.

Mr. EDWARDS. Hon. gentlemen opposite might place on file their respective definitions of what they understand as active partisanship. It would be interesting to place those definitions alongside of their policy for the last 15 years.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not know that we are called on to do that; we are not govenrning just now. The Minister of Customs now has the power to say whether or not a man shall be dismissed, and if so, under what conditions, and therefore it is for the minister to state what he considers active partisanship.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. member is familiar with what happened in 1896. The Liberal party then had a printed document which they would have some person sign. It was simply filled in and addressed to the minister. It read: I charge So and So with being an active partisan. No charge or information was given, and this was sent to a commissioner and investigated. That was done in 1896 and I can show the hon. member the form used.

I do not think we have had any cases worded in that way, they have expressed more than that. The hon. member will see all the evidence when the return comes down and will be able to judge as to whether there was sufficient evidence or information given to justify the action taken in each case. We have appointed as commissioners men who we believed would be fair in every case. I have had reports from one commissioner, and the reports were such that I felt justified in not dismissing the officials mentioned. We are going to try and be fair and not do as was done in 1896, throw out men against whom there was no evidence. If I had evidence which would justify the dismissal of an official—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was the case of Gaynor investigated?

Mr. REID (Grenville). If I had evidence that would justify the dismissal of a man without investigation, I would dismiss him, but there have only been two cases—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not that imply that my hon. friend is not going to have an investigation in all cases?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There would not be any need for an investigation if I had evidence such as was submitted to me in those two cases. Take the case of Baldwin who wrote a letter last February.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Take the case of Gaynor.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In the Gaynor case the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) himself admits that Gaynor attended this meeting and interrupted the speaker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He does not admit that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He admits that Mr. Gaynor did ask a question and at all events interrupted the speaker.

Mr. LOGGIE. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If I remember rightly he caused a disturbance at that meeting by his interruptions. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was not at that meeting.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Neither was the hon. minister.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But I have had evidence submitted to me which my hon. friend has not. Nor was the hon. member for Northumberland present.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Did the hon. minister notify Gaynor of the charge made and give him an opportunity to reply?

Mr. REID (Grenville). If I remember correctly, Gaynor admitted that he was present and did interrupt the speaker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What did he say?

Mr. REID (Grenville). If my hon. friend wants the particulars, he will have them when the papers come down. I am not going into the details without having the papers before me, but I am prepared to discuss the facts any time my hon. friend desires a discussion. An order has been made for all these reports and they will be brought down and we can discuss this matter when we have the facts before us. But I cannot possibly remember all the particulars now. But what I do say is that sufficient has been admitted by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) here to-day to justify my action. The very fact that this official came to this public meeting and there interrupted the speaker is sufficient.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All he did was ask a polite question.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He interrupted the speaker for the purpose of embarrassing him and doing something to break up the meeting.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the speaker requested those present to ask him any questions he chose.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As far as I am concerned, I am free to admit that if any government official attends a public meeting and takes part in it by asking questions and interrupting the speaker, that would justify his dismissal. The evidence shows that Gaynor went to that meeting, and I believe he went there with the intention of interrupting and trying to break it up. When Gaynor admits that he went to that meeting and interrupted Mr. Sifton or whoever it was, he committed an offence and I believe deserved to be dismissed and there was no need of an investigation.

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. minister has surely forgotten what I said. I said that Mr. Sifton invited any one present to ask any questions they wished, and Gaynor asked whether the reciprocity agreement, which Mr. Sifton had alluded to as a treaty, was a treaty or only a trade arrangement. Surely, the minister will not say that Mr. Gaynor was not within his rights, especially in view of Mr. Sifton's invitation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If Gaynor went to that meeting, he had a perfect right to be a politician and ask questions or take what part he chose, but he was bound to take the consequences. If he went to that meeting, I believe he went there for the purpose of conducting himself as a party politician.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is very unfair. How can the hon. gentleman assume that?

What proof has the hon. gentleman for his belief that Gaynor went there for the purpose of interrupting the meeting? It was a public meeting on a public question in which the people took a deep interest, because every one was interested in reciprocity. Mr. Sifton was there, not as a Conservative but professedly as a Liberal who felt that on this great question, on which he differed from his party, he should address the people, and he invited any one present to ask any question he desired. Mr. Sifton referred to reciprocity as a treaty, and Mr. Gaynor asked him whether it was a treaty or a trade arrangement. That was all he did. He asked the question in a courteous manner in response to Mr. Sifton's invitation. Does not my hon. friend think he is most unfair, simply with that information before him, in believing that Mr. Gaynor went to that meeting for the purpose of interrupting Mr. Sifton? But here is the point I make. The hon. gentleman has said that he wants the country to understand that he will only dismiss in one of two cases. In the one case, when a member of this House takes the responsibility of giving his personal assurance that an official has been guilty of partisanship, or in the other case where a charge has been made and the official has been given an opportunity of answering the charge. But in the case of Gaynor, my hon. friend has gone outside those two cases. He has simply taken the statement of a man who is not a member of this House and chosen to dismiss him without giving him the slightest opportunity to defend himself, and he has done that, although his leader has declared over and over again, in this parliament and outside, that a civil servant has not only the right to exercise his privilege as a citizen of going to the poll and casting his vote, but also to express his opinion regarding public questions. Yet because this particular official, holding a minor office, goes to this public meeting and asks a civil question which he and every other man present understood Mr. Sifton would be glad to answer, my hon. friend has chosen to dismiss this man without giving him an opportunity to present his side of the case.

Mr. BORDEN. It is a great pity that the right hon. leader of the opposition is not here to-night so that my hon. friend would have the opportunity of denouncing him for having dismissed an inspector of Inland Revenue at Halifax simply for having asked a question at a public meeting regarding the Manitoba school question.

That meeting was held in the town of Dartmouth. The man in question interrupted one of the candidates who was elected. And that man was dismissed without an investigation and without an opportunity of defending himself in respect of the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And did not my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) condemn that action?

Mr. BORDEN. I am not aware whether I did or not, but I know that the fact is as I have stated; and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) is sincere in what he says, he should attack his own leader for having made that dismissal.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The leader of the government (Mr. Borden) made a similar statement before the recess. I made inquiry concerning the matter while at my home in Halifax during the recess, and was told by many persons, one of whom was present at the meeting, that the facts are not as they have been stated by the right hon. gentleman. He says that this man asked one of the speakers of that evening a question. I understand that he uttered very offensive words to the one who was addressing the meeting, and not only that, but endeavoured to break up the meeting by creating a disturbance at the end of the hall. Of course I speak from information given me by others. It may be that the right hon. gentleman was present at this meeting, and if so, I would not pretend to put my information against his.

Mr. BORDEN. If I am not entirely mistaken that was the joint meeting in the town of Dartmouth at which I was present. If so, I can say that no such incident took place at the meeting. It may be that it was some other meeting; it was a long time ago, and I am not absolutely sure. Still, my recollection is that that was the meeting alluded to. And knowing the official as I did a very quiet civil man—I would not believe, in the absence of very convincing evidence, that he should attempt to do any thing of the kind. He assured me over and over again, that the only incident complained of with regard to him was his asking the question at that meeting.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I suppose it would not impress my right hon. friend very greatly at the time, because a few months afterwards he took the ground that it was not objectionable for an official to attend a meeting and ask a question of one of the speakers.

Mr. BORDEN. Quite so. And afterwards this House, by unanimous vote decided that active participation in political affairs should not be permitted to any civil servant. Every one in this country has had six years' notice of that.

Mr. TURRIFF. A good deal of stress is being laid by the Minister of Customs and other speakers on that side on the idea that in 1896 the late government dismissed a number of officials for offensive partisanship. I am not going to criticise the present government for making some dismissals. I am well aware that when a government has been in power for a number of years thy are certain to have appointed, especially to the outside service, some men who deserve to be dismissed on a change of government. When the Liberal government came into power in 1896 they did make some dismissals. But I know of three cases myself of civil servants who took an active part in the campaign, yet were not dismissed. I know two men in the city of Ottawa, officials under the previous Conservative government prior to 1896, who for weeks during the election campaign of 1896 held meetings throughout this part of the country. And both of these men are officials in the same department in which they were then engaged and at much higher salaries than they had in 1896. Reports were sent in against them but they are there to-day. One of them who was receiving $600 at that time, is drawing $2,000 to-day—a good official; earning his money; I have nothing to say against him on that ground. I know of a case in the west of a government official who spent the whole of election day 1896 in the same polling division in which I was myself. He arrived there at seven o'clock in the morning though the poll did not open until nine. Reports were made against him by our Liberal friends. But the minister in charge of the department in which this man was employed would not dismiss him because the cabinet minister who complained of him was not able to say of his own knowledge that the man had shown himself an active partisan. And that official is there to-day; has been ever since a good official; I have nothing to say against him as an official since that time.

Mr. RHODES. How has he voted?

Mr. TURRIFF. Strong Conservative. He is one of the flat-footed kind that vote and make no bones about it—and I admire him for it. I have given cases coming under my own observation—and I am sure there must have been many others—of officials who were not dismissed by the late administration though they had taken an active part in politics. It seems to me, after listening to this debate all day that either the Liberals did not dismiss many in 1896 or else the party now in power who criticised at that time show to-day that they did not mean anything by what they said because they act in exactly the contrary way. Now, why not call it an even deal and let that part of it go? But the thing to do is to amend the Civil Service Act in the way I shall suggest. I put in six years in the civil service here in Ottawa. In my judgment it would be much better, when a man enters the civil service, that he should drop his franchise and not have a vote at all. I believe that the good men in the civil service would not object to that. If this were done you would do away with much of the inducement to dismiss officials on a change of government. I am quite certain it is not a pleasant duty for the minister, this dismissing of officials. It cannot be a pleasant duty.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would almost seem to be when we consider the number of people waiting in the upper corridor.

Mr. TURRIFF. I know there are crowds waiting for office. But it cannot be a pleasant duty for ministers to dismiss officials especially if those officials have been doing their work well. Judging from my experience of three terms in parliament, patronage does not give a member,—nor do I believe it gives a minister—any particular satisfaction. And I do not know that it is any particular source of strength to a member or minister to be obliged to administer patronage. So, I say, it would be better, instead of going on harping on one side and on the other of this subject, to take away the vote from the civil servants. Then when in the future, there is a change of government there would not be the difficulty we have to-day and the hardship because it must be more or less a hardship for a man to be summarily dismissed after he has been in government employment.

That was my view of the question, that you will never get over the difficulty as long as you keep the present system of dealing with the civil service.

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to enter a protest against the statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Turriff). He proposed to obliterate the Conservative party in this country by appointing them to office and then depriving them of their votes. But he has gone further, and suggested that there should be a deal in this House of Commons with respect to the matter. Speaking for myself as a new member, I am not bound by any precedents or customs, or by anything that may have been said in this parliament in the past of this description. There are other people to be considered besides the members of this House, there is the great mass of the people of this country, who expect us to do our duty here. My view is that if a man administering a public office takes part in political struggles then I would endorse the statement of the right hon. leader of the opposition who is reported to have said that if such a man wished to be a politician he would give him every opportunity, that meant that he would put him out of office in order to give him full opportunity to exercise his talents as a politician. Now if the argument advanced by members of the opposition to-night is reasonable and cogent then the whole system of law with regard to testimony in a court on a question of the veracity character of a witness goes to the wall. We know that when a man desires to impeach the testimony of a witness he may do so by bringing other witnesses into court to show that the general reputation of that witness for veracity is bad, but he is expressly debarred by law from giving any particular instances, unless given a particular opportunity of doing so. Surely if the Liberal argument holds good that particular instances must be given in order to justify a case, then the system has prevailed in courts of law for so many years with regard to character, to veracity and other qualities, should pass out of existence. It is apparent that public opinion however is the final judge of such matters. When an office-holder has so little sense as to go to a public meeting and get up and ask a question he deserved to be dismissed. Then if he has a right to ask one question, he has a right to ask two, and if he has a right to ask two, he has a right to ask thirty-two and if he may do that in a public meeting, he may do it in the street. So if you follow out the doctrine of these gentlemen of the opposition, you make a perfect farce of the whole system from beginning to end.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not agree with the view expressed a moment ago that civil servants should be deprived of their franchise. It seems to me that both parties have come to a pretty good understanding with regard to the civil service, and the course it should pursue in elections. The principle has been well laid down by both parties in this country, particularly by the present leader of the opposition, who says that if a man is a political partisan he should be deprived of his office, and be given full opportunity to devote all his time to politics. It seems to me that when a member of this House, on this side of the House, makes a charge of partisanship against an official, staking his reputation on the correctness of the charge, that a minister is perfectly justified in accepting his statement, and in removing the official. I say that in my estimation a minister is justified in taking that statement from a member on this side of the House, and I deliberately make a distinction between members on that side and members on this side. In looking over the political history of this country for the last 15 years, I am forced to doubt whether any minister of this government would be justified in taking a statement from a member on the other side of the House as to what would constitute a case of political partisanship. I am certain in my own mind that it would be impossible for any minister of the Crown, in this government, to satisfy a member on the other side of the House that one of their pet officials had been guilty of political partisanship. I have reasons for coming to that conclusion. For instance, take the case of W. T. R. Preston, known to political history in this country as 'Hug the machine Preston.' There is every evidence that he was grossly partisan, but that never made any difference to his position, except to entitle him to an increased salary. Take the case of J. B. Jackson, a man whose name has come down in a very unsavoury way in the political history of Ontario, a man who endeavoured to unseat an hon. gentleman who is now a member of this Houe and in doing so took a course which brought him the strongest denunciation from the bench that was ever made in any court. Now the Liberal party of this country took up the case of J. B. Jackson, gave him a salary of $3,000 or $4,000 in the old country. A member of the former government, Sir Richard Cartwright, stood up in his place in this House, and defended the course taken by Jackson, a course which the judge declared to be disreputable and a disgrace to the country. Take the case of Philip Wagner, a man who held an official position in the Interior Department in the west, a man who had to do with the immigrants going in to that country, a man who was brought before the courts on charges of defrauding those immigrants, and taking advantage of their lack of knowledge, a man who was consequently sent to prison, and as soon as he came out of the doors of that prison, was rewarded with an increase of salary by the then Minister of the Interior the Hon. Mr. Oliver. That is why I say, in view of these facts, that Liberal members of parliament are not competent to give testimony on a case of political partisanship. Take the case of Captain Sullivan and the 'Minnie M,' the position that Captain Sullivan occupied in the councils of the Liberal party after taking a gang of men on the 'Minnie M' to control an election in a certain district. Would the ministers of the Crown be justified in view of all these facts in regarding members of the opposition as competent to say what is and what is not political partisanship? For my part I do not think they are competent. From 1896 down to the present time we have seen dismissals made by the previous government without the shadow of a trial, without the semblance of an investigation. Take the case of the Souris postmaster. Was there anything against the reputation of that man? In the very year he was dismissed from his office, at twenty-four hours' notice, he was elected mayor of his town by acclamation, showing the appreciation in which he was held by his fellow citizens. What was the excuse given by the former Postmaster General when that case was brought to his notice in the House?

The only reason that he gave us then was that: The member for Brandon asked for his dismissal and I dismissed him; that was sufficient for me. The wish of the member for Brandon was all that was required in order to remove that man.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not the hon. member for Brandon also give his personal assurance that the man had been guilty of offensive political partisanship.

Mr. EDWARDS. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. No, the other night the hon. gentleman who sits near my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) said that the hon. member for Brandon would not come and defend the matter in the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was in the House, but from the former Postmaster General I understood that the hon. member for Brandon gave his personal assurance that the official had been guilty of political partisanship.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is only one illustration of the slippery little side ways that we have been accustomed to in this House in the last three or four years at least, because we have the ex-Minister of Public Works endeavouring to place an interpretation upon the facts in order to convey the idea that something took place which really did not occur at all. The hon. ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) said in his place in this House that the hon. member for Brandon had left him in the lurch, that when the matter came up he avoided being present in the chamber, and had left him to attend to the case himself. The hon. member for Brandon was not in his eyes at that time the white haired boy that he had been some years previously. What is the meaning of all this play on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. They know perfectly well, and no one knows better, I presume, than the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works, that there are in probably all the departments, officials upon whom they can rely to do the side work for the Grit party and they are, therefore, anxious to try and stir up a sufficient amount of dust to enable to retain their positions the men upon who they can rely. I see the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) smiling in regard to that. The hon. member for Westmorland, whose name appeared in the Auditor General's Report as having received money for supplies furnished to the recent government contrary to the laws of this country——

Mr. EMMERSON. I was not smiling, nor do I think my name appeared in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. EDWARDS. I mean the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie), not the hon. member for Westmorland.

Mr. LOGGIE. I must tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) that he is entirely wrong. There is not a word of truth in the statement that the hon. gentleman has made. It is not true that I received one dollar in payment for any supplies furnished to the government. There is not a fraction of truth in that statement as a matter of fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. EDWARDS. I venture to say there is not an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who says 'take it back' who can tell me what he wants me to take back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. EDWARDS. Do you wish me to withdraw the statement that the hon. gentleman's name appeared in the Auditor General's Report as having received money from the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, we do.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then I am prepared to prove it by the pages of the Auditor General's Report, and I did prove it in this House last year by the pages of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. LOGGIE. This matter was up before. In so far as the name in the book is concerned the hon. gentleman is right, but I think it very unfair and ungentlemanly for the hon. gentleman to refer to it now because at that date I gave him my word that the name was not there accurately, and that I did not sell one dollar's worth of goods to the government. I gave the hon. gentleman that assurance, he was compelled to accept it, and it is very unkind and unfair to refer to the matter on an occasion like this. He is in duty bound to withdraw that statement now.

Mr. EDWARDS. What statement does the hon. gentleman wish me to withdraw?

Mr. LOGGIE. The statement or the insinuation that I sold goods to the government of Canada, and received money in payment therefor. I say the statement is not true, that it is not a fact, that while the name is in the book there was a clerical error, that the correct name is W. S. Loggie, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of New Brunswick, and of Canada, and entitled to sell goods to any one. Be fair and withdraw it; be a man for once.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Order.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand that the hon. gentleman does not take exception to my statement that his name appears in the Auditor General's Report?

Mr. LOGGIE. If you qualify it the way I do.

Mr. EDWARDS. But that he does take exception to the interpretation that may be placed upon these words, and that I am not to withdraw the words, but I am to withdraw the supposed interpretation that may be placed on the words. I do not know in what way I can do that. If his conscience is troubling him I cannot help it; I feel sorry for him but I did not suppose, when he has lauded the Liberal party in appointing men like J. B. Jackson and Philip Wagner, that he would feel annoyed at a reference to a line in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman pardon me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) has charged the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) with a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have made the statement that he has charged the hon. member for Northumberland with a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. Not only did he make that statement clearly and forcibly, but he was bold enough to say that he could prove it. The hon. member for Northumberland made a statement very emphatic in a a very frank manner, I think and I assumed that it would be accepted and I think it was accepted by every member in the chamber except the hon. member for Frontenac. I think it is my duty——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Never mind the duty——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I rise to a point of order. The hon. member Mr. Maclean (Halifax) will be good enough to take his seat.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). If I am out of order I will take my seat and if I am not I shall not take my seat.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am rising to a point of order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think, Mr. Chairman, that points of order are settled one at a time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not at all; a gentleman may be out of order in rising to a point of order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has risen to a point of order.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman is out of order. An hon. mem- is not permitted——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). An hon. member is not——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) is just stating his point of order. I understand the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence also intends speaking to a point of order. The hon. member for Halifax is stating his point of order.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. member (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) is not stating a point of order; he is making a speech.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I can complete my statement by saying that I submit to you, Sir, and to the committee that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) should accept the explanation made by the hon. member for Northumberland. I think the hon. member for Frontenac hardly does justice to himself if he does not make some explanation or withdaw the statement that he has made.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. EDWARDS. I presume I have the right to speak on a point of order.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am responsible for the words I utter and I do not wish to avoid my responsibility, but I am not responsible, thank Heaven, for the understanding of hon. gentlemen opposite. I did not say what the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) alleges I said, and 'Hansard' will bear me out. What I did say, and what I am prepared to stand by, I shall repeat, and if Mr. Chairman rules that the statement I am about to make, which I believe is identical with the statement I made a moment ago, is out of order, I shall certainly withdraw at once. I said that the Auditor General's Report said that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) had received money for goods supplied. I did not say he had received that money; I said the Auditor General's Report said so, and the Auditor General's Report does say so and he himself admitted it, but he said that the Auditor General's Report was wrong. It is a quarrel between the Auditor General and the hon. gentleman, not between the hon. gentleman and me. However, there was no correction made of the Auditor General's Report until after the matter was brought up in the House, as is a well known fact. I might ask him several questions as to whether he is a member of the firm and directly interested, but I have no wish to go into that, and I don't care whether he got the money or not. Mr. Chairman is my remark in reference to the Auditor General's Report out of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not consider that the hon. gentleman is out of order; he can proceed.

Mr. EDWARDS. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) was probably dozing when I made the statement in the first place, but, having heard the statement in the second place now, no one knows better than he does that I was not out of order although he was. Referring to the dismissal of the Souris postmaster, I quote for the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) the words of the then Postmaster General :

This is the statement I have to make regarding the postmaster at Souris. When a statement is made to me by an honourable gentleman occupying a very prominent position in the House and who formerly was a member of the cabinet such as the honourable member for Brandon that a certain officer had taken part in the contest against him, my duty was to accept his word and take action against that officer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is almost exactly what I said.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, 'almost exactly' like hundreds of other statements made by the hon. gentleman, with the word 'almost' written in capital letters and underscored. That is the way to take the hon. member's statements—almost exactly—but you can leave the word 'exactly' out altogether and say 'altogether wrong.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did I not say that the Postmaster General had stated he had dismissed this official upon the assurance of the member for Brandon that he had been guilty of offensive political partisanship.

Mr. EDWARDS. But did he say it was to his personal knowledge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To his personal knowledge, yes. How does the report just read by the hon. gentleman differ from the statement I made.

Mr. EDWARDS. I shall be happy to state the difference. The difference lies in this, that my hon. friend said the member for Brandon stated 'on his own personal knowledge,' but the member for Brandon stated nothing of the kind. He simply asked for the dismissal of the official and he did not say he knew of his personal knowledge that the official was guilty of political partisanship.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member just read that the member for Brandon stated this official had taken an active part in the election against him.

Mr. EDWARDS. We are merely taking up time and I might as well take up a piece of it as any one else and so I will read the statement again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is dreadful to obstruct the estimates.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will be perfectly willing to sit down and let the estimates go through if the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) will give the same undertaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Read the statement again and then the estimate can go through.

Mr. EDWARDS. This will be the second time I have read it and I have no doubt that after a second reading of it the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley), like the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), will be able to understand it. Here is is :

This is the statement I have to make regarding the postmaster at Souris. When a statement is made to me by an honourable gentleman occupying a very prominent position in the House and who formerly was a member of the cabinet such as the honourable member for Brandon that a certain officer had taken part in the contest against him, my duty was to accept his word and take action against that officer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS. There is not one word in regard to 'his personal knowledge.' How do hon. gentlemen opposite square their position with regard to their 'hear, hears' now with the position they have been taking to-night. They have been endeavouring to impress on the ministers that they should have ironclad and copperplate rules that a member should put it down in writing and state to the minister that he knew of his personal knowledge that such an officer was guilty, before they take action against that officer. Why are they asking members of the present government to adopt a course which they themselves know well is entirely contrary to the course adopted by themselves when in office. Is there anything approaching consistency in that? It sits with very bad grace on the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite to attempt to put on an air of righteous indignation, because of any dismissals which have occurred in the service since the 21st September last. I can understand some hon. gentlemen taking the position they do, but for the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) to get on his feet in this House and pose as an apostle of political purity is more than I can understand, because it is so entirely contrary to his past record in this House.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I differ so acutely and so frequently with my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) that it gives me very great pleasure to say that I agree, to the extent of a small vulgar fraction, with what he has uttered to-night. I am in agreement with him as to the undesirability of disfranchising civil servants. In the rest of his speech he has given us another evidence of his unique ability in this House to pour forth vitriolic and partisan rhetoric which will never help any cause in favour of which he speaks. I rose for a very practical purpose. I sympathize sincerely with the Minister of Customs in having to bear the brunt of this wholesale debate upon dismissals. I think the House and the country are indebted to him for the bluff honesty with which he has stated the position of the government so far as he is concerned.

There can be no doubt whatever about what he means. He does not put it quite so crudely as the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox), he has managed to avoid the knife, at least in expression, but he means the knife all the same, and it is a matter of thankfulness whether it is axe or knife or tomahawk, that we know what the ministers and individuals are after.

Having said that word of sympathy, I would add that I had a practical object in rising, and that is that I do not know that we can get much further forward by the prolongation of this discussion. We understand one another and we will have to get on with the business of the country. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite, from the right hon. the Prime Minister downwards, have recourse in such wholesale' fashion to the 'tu quoque argument. I know that this House is very resentful of egotism, but I may say that there is at least one member against whom the (tu quo) argument does not prevail. This is my fourth session in the Canadian parliament and I have yet to make my first recommendation of the dismissal of any one. In the west we are expanding very rapidly and I have recommended the appointment of many postmasters. In the majority of cases I did not know the politics of those I recommended, no great virtue on my part because many of them from below the line did not have any particular politics. In 1908, when I fought my first contest, a gentleman came to a meeting of mine and roared like a bull of Bashan. He was the most virulent Tory in a public meeting I ever met. I could have no doubt as to how his vote and influence were going. Two years later there was a vacancy in a post office caused by this gentleman taking over the store at his place and the old postmaster recommended him for the postmastership. I found it consistent with my view of politics to appoint this bull of Bashan and I recommended his appointment as postmaster. I did it with my eyes open. In referring to him in this way, I have no animus, he would laugh at the matter for we in the west live on broader prairies and breathe freer air, we are not dominated by the prejudices which find a resting place in the bosom of the hon. member for Frontenac. I went to have tea during the last contest with my friend knowing he would oppose me in any way he could. I preferred no charge against him when he opposed the Liberal government nor would I prefer a charge against him for supporting a Conservative government. Canadian public life will be better and the standard of members of parliament and politics will be better when that good old example brought here from England is followed by the whole country.

We had an hour and a half's reading exercise from the hon. member from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) which was only an extended effort at what has been the whole argument on the other side, an argument that the logicians hold in very slight regard, that is the 'tu quoque' argument. We have heard nothing yet, but surely that argument, always weak, is particularly weak in this case. For what do hon. gentlemen say? When they use this 'tu quoque' argument they say: We will follow that for which we condemned you a few years or months ago. Surely that is an impossible position to sustain, a position which we must all want removed from our public life. Just think of the highest intelligence of Canada—we are bound to assume that we have the highest intelligence of Canada on the government benches because they have been returned by the majority of the people of Canada—having nothing better to defend their political action by than the statement in so many words: We are prepared to follow what we condemned in you.

I was surprised beyond measure at my right hon. friend the Prime Minister in his very brief incursion into this debate giving his imprimateur to that line of argument. What did his short incursion into this debate amount to? He said: It is very true that I have expressed certain ideas different from that on which we are acting, but when we proposed to alter the existing system we were voted down. But we cannot vote him down now. Is his argument that he held those views when he was leading a minority, honestly and sincerely, but that he cannot give force to those views now that he is supported by a majority? I never heard of such a rule for the political conduct of a political party in any civilized country under the sun. What is the ordinary action of a political minority? It is to take logical, sincere, and strong ground in which it believes and to be voted down, but the moment it comes into power, having a majority, surely it is to give effect not to the views which voted it down, but to the views which are now in a majority. That was the position of the Prime Minister. In other words, he has forgotten that he has passed into power, he thinks he is yet in opposition and he is yet criticising the old government, forsooth he fails to recognize that being in power the very first expectation the country has of him is that he will carry into effect the principles for which he contended so long when he was in the minority. What the government failed to recognized is that they will not be expected by the country to follow the example of their predecessors. What the country will expect from them is that they will fulfil their own pledges and live up to their own principles and platforms. That is what the country will look for from them, and I am bound to say I am disappointed and I think that a number of people who formed an honest opinion about my hon. friend the Prime Minister that he was sincere in everything he said about the civil service, will be disappointed at an attitude such as he took here to-night and is allowing his ministers to take. I have said sufficient to indicate where I stand on this question; I do not think we will get any further forward by a further discussion. We are indebted to my hon. friend for stating so honestly where he stands. I think the members of the government realize that it is an immense departure from the passage quoted from the speech of the Prime Minister in the first session he came to the House. We are indebted to our hon. friends for stating so honestly where they stand. I do not think if they reflect on the arguments they have brought forward they will be satisfied with that position. I hope they will proceed at as early a day as possible to put the outside service on the same basis as the inside. When they bring forward a fair measure of that kind, embodying a fair and honest endeavour to put the whole civil service of Canada on the same basis as the civil service of the old country, I, at any rate, will give them most hearty and non-partisan support.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). My hon. friend has referred to the system prevailing in the old country. But I would ask him if a civil servant in the old country were to depart from the law as laid down by the Civil Service Commission of the government, and took an active part in politics, what would be his fate. He would be dismissed, would he not?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). The question is a very difficult one to answer because the system in England has been so long in vogue there that when once appointed a civil servant fully understands that he must keep aloof from taking any active part in politics, and I would urge on the government that if they would bring our law into such a shape that a similar result would follow here, we would be saved all these discussions.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not my hon. friend the Minister of Militia think that if a civil servant in the old country were charged with any political offence, that charge would be submitted to him in specific language, and he would be given the opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am not troubling myself with thinking anything about what does not concern me, particularly in public matters at present.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I appeal to the Minister of Militia to say whether in a case such as happened at Coaticook in the province of Quebec, in which a customs officer had protested publicly against disloyal sentiments that were uttered by politicians in that county, he would for that reason dismiss him from office. I would ask the Minister of Militia to say whether he would approve of such dismissal or not, remembering that all the offence this man committed was simply this that he had seen certain staments in the public press which he considered disloyal, and were read here to-day—my hon. friend knows that they were—such as boring holes in the British flag in order that we might breath the air of liberty—and had protested against such language used by public men on a public platform. For that reason he was dismissed from a position he held in the customs. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Militia to give the expression of his opinion with regard to that incident.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The reference made this afternoon was just as distinct and clear as that which the hon. gentleman has made now, and I challenge any one to show what he really means. I have not read the article in question, and I will require a good deal more evidence than has been presented to me by the hon. gentleman to understand the situation. I do remember something about shooting holes in the flag, but I also remember something about the navy being established to bring England to time because she was not doing justice in the boundary award. I have also a distinct recollection of another statement made in 1896 when certain gentlemen, high in the ranks of the Liberal party, declared that the Tory party was voting money to take our dear boys from the side roads of the province of Quebec and other parts of the Dominion to fight Britain's battles all over the world.

An hon. MEMBER. Who were they?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They were the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and every man jack of the great Liberal party in the province of Quebec. I do not know that my hon. friend grew eloquent over the seriousness of that charge. I have not had the privilege of reading up the case to which he refers, but I shall study it at my leisure, and have a better understanding of it than I could gather from my hon. friend's remarks.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The hon. gentleman has made a very long harangue in answer to a very simple question.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have not heard of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Let me suppose a case, without troubling the House with the evidence, which I think will be clear enough even for my hon. friend. Suppose the statement were made that it was necessary to bore holes in the British flag in order to breath the air of liberty, and supposing a public servant, on hearing that statement made on a public platform, or even in the press, protested publicly against it. Would my hon. friend dismiss him from the public service for having made the protest, which he considered it his duty to do as a Canadian citizen? That is a simple question.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have not heard the question yet.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Evidently I cannot extract an answer from my hon. friend. I am glad the right hon. the First Minister (Mr. Borden) is in his place. I do not think he feels very comfortable over the position his ministers are taking as contrasted with the attitude he has taken himself with regard to this very important matter. It has been pointed out over and over again to this House that the First Minister entered parliament as a champion of civil service reform. His first speech was delivered on that question, and at various times since, in his speeches and manifestos, he has declared himself in favour of a forward step in regard to the civil service. Now that he has attained power, the people expect him to keep his word. Is he ready now with a strong majority at his back, to put into force the principles he advocated when in opposition. I have not at present all the manifestos my hon. friend issued to the people of this country, but I have one of them here. It is called the Halifax platform—a Liberal Conservative platform laid down by R. L. Borden, opposition leader at Halifax, August 20, 1907. There can be no doubt about this being his platform because his photograph is on the other side of the leaf, and the very second plank in this platform is in these words: 'The appointment of public officials upon consideration of capacity and personal character, and not of political services alone.' That is a good principle, and I would expect my right hon. friend to honour it. But what happened? You will remember that a jollification was held at Halifax in November last, and a sort of Belshazzar's feast was going on there. During the time this was going on the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) was in Halifax. Certain parties drew his attention to the fact that there was an official, an inspector of a public building that was in course of erection at Stellarton, N.S., in conection with the Railways Department, by the name of Faulkner, who might be dismissed to make room for a heeler. Faulkner was a good officer, no complaint has been made against him, but the Minister of Railways was apparently urged by this hungry horde referred to in the Halifax 'Herald,' to dismiss this man.

The Minister of Railways surrendered to 'the hungry hordes' referred to by the Halifax 'Herald.' By telegram, it appears he dismissed Mr. Faulkner and appointed a man named John Fraser in his place. We have found out from the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) who this Mr. John Fraser is. It was pointed out that Mr. Fraser was formerly in the employ of the Dominion of Canada as postmaster of Stellarton, and was dismissed for a reason which was given in this House by the Postmaster General. The following is the reason:

> Serious irregularities had occurred in conection with the postmaster's accounts which led to his renoval from office.

As a matter of fact this man was dismissed from office at Stellarton for the reason that he could not account for the money he had received in connection with the post office. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) has mentioned the case of Philip Wagner. This case is a little like it only more aggravated. The late government was in power for fourteen years, and my hon. friend from Frontenac was able to pick out one case of a man who had misconducted himself in public office and was put back into office a few years later. But hon. gentlemen opposite were hardly warm in their seats, they had not been in office more than a month, when this appointment of Mr. Fraser was made. We would not expect decay to set in so early. One of the very first acts of the Minister of Railways was to appoint a man who had been dismissed from a public position of trust to another position in which he had control of the expenditure of some $30,000 under the Railway Department. Now, that it strikes me, is not on all-fours with the declaration of my right hon. friend in his Halifax platform:—

The appointment of public officials upon considerations of capacity and personal character and not of party services alone.

This man, Fraser, I admit, was an energetic worker for the Tory party. He was doing everything he could for them, and I have no doubt he voted for them. But I would like my right hon. friend to tell the house how he squares the appointment of Mr. Fraser to the position of inspector at Stellarton with his declaration in his Halifax platform.

Mr. MACLEAN. (Halifax). Will the Minister of Customs, at a future day, furnish me with appointments made at the port of Halifax with the ages of the appointees?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. KYTE. What instructions have been issued to the commissioners appointed to investigate charges of partisanship?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). When we receive a charge against an official of active partisanship, we send the information to the commissioner, who will take it up with those who have made the charge and will notify the official in order that he may be present when the evidence is taken. Everything will be done openly and above board and the official will have every opportunity of hearing the evidence that may be given against him. That evidence will be forwarded to Ottawa where I will look into it, and I shall have to decide upon the evidence whether to take action or not.

Mr. KYTE. Are we to understand that partisanship, according to the minister, relates to conduct in the Dominion political affairs?

Mr. REID. (Grenville). I will take that into consideration in any case submitted. I have to take the evidence that is given.

Mr. KYTE. I would like to know from the minister now if he will be good enough to state it, whether these charges should relate to the conduct of officials with respect to federal elections day.

Mr. REID. (Grenville). So far as I am concerned, if, while a man has occupied an office under the Dominion government, he has taken part in provincial elections, I think he should be dismissed.

Mr. KYTE. The whole scope of the discussion points to the fact that if civil servants have not placed themselves in a position hostile to the present government, they have not forfeited the confidence of the government. The issues pertaining to the provincial and municipal elections are vastly different from those in federal politics. If a civil servant exercises his right in regard to provincial or municipal elections in which the issue are not those of federal politics, I would like to know from the minister if he would dismiss that official.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I will follow the resolution passed in this House, and it covers provincial as well as Dominion elections. The position is clear; an official can be one of two things; he can be an official or he can be a politician. If the evidence shows that he has taken part in a provincial or dominion election, he will be dismissed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Taken part on either one side or the other?

Mr. CARVELL. While it may depart from the present scope of debate I would like to know if the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) would feel like taking the same ground as the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville)?

Mr. PELLETIER. I think I have explained pretty well what my views are.

Mr. CARVELL. I may not have been here at the time. Therefore, I would be much obliged if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pelletier) would explain again. Would he take the ground that an official of his department taking part in a provincial election should be dismissed from office?

Mr. PELLETIER. We all move by one light in this matter. We follow the resolution passed by this House, and it covers provincial as well as Dominion elections.

Mr. CARVELL. I am glad to have that declaration from the Postmaster General.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am trying to keep as many postmasters as I can. But many took part in the election knowing that this House had solemnly declared that they should not do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) think that when an official wastes time which he is paid to devote to the service of the Crown—wastes it in provincial as well as Dominion elections—there is double ground for dismissing him?

Mr. CARVELL. As a rule work done in elections is done after business hours, and therefore I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) can be serious in putting such a question.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to make another request to the Minister of Customs—to give to the committee the age of the gentleman appointed in Windsor, Ontario, Mr. McHugh—the age furnished by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) in recommending his appointment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Certainly, I will be glad to do so.

Mr. McKENZIE. I trust that the Minister of Customs appreciates the point I made with regard to procedure in these inquiries. I was urging that when inquiry is made into the conduct of an individual, that individual should have fair notice of what the charge is. I am afraid that possibly I did not impress the Minister of Customs, and so I make my statement in the presence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who, I am sure, with his vast experience in inquiries of all kinds as one of the leading lawyers of the Dominion, will appreciate the importance of it, that any trial is a farce unless the person tried has the best knowledge that can be given him in advance of the nature of the matter for which he is to be tried.

I, therefore, submit again to the minister that any charges that are made should be specific, and a fair opportunity should be given to the official to answer the charge. I think also that no charge should be made beyond the previous election. My experience has been that the previous government, in making an inquiry, never went back beyond one election. I hope the Minister of Customs will put some limitation to this inquiry, and not go back to the Garden of Eden looking for troubles.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman was once a judge, and may be supposed still to have a judicial mind. He thinks that no inquiry should go back beyond the previous election. But cannot he realize that if the people were right on the 21st of September, then this government ought to have been in power at least eleven years ago; and if a man obstructed them eleven years ago and seven years ago, as well as three years ago, he ought to be trebly dismissed.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and preventive service, including salaries and expenses in connection with the Board of Customs, $175,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my right hon. friend will agree that the House might cease its labour now, at half past eleven o'clock.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are only two or three more items here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will realize that there has been a good deal of speaking on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) thought it necessary to give a great deal of information in a permanent form which he has placed upon the 'Hansard,' where it may be read in the dim and distant future. I am sure that nothing will be gained by going on to-night, because several gentlemen desire to speak on the other items.

Mr. BORDEN. We might go on and finish all the items but one, and then this discussion which my hon. friend refers to can take place upon that one.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—THE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. BORDEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the House adjourns, I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if it is true, as reported, that the commissioners of the Transcontinental railway have been notified that it is desirable that they should hand in their resignations, and if so, does he intend to make other appointments in their places, pursuant to the statute?

Mr. COCHRANE. They have been asked for their resignations, and it is not intended to make any appointments in their places.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman state how the business of the construction of the railway can be proceeded with without commissioners, under the present state of the law? The law provides as to what shall constitute a quorum.

Mr. COCHRANE. We are going to amend the law.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the resignations take place before the law is amended?

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think it matters much whether they hand in their resignations before or after the Bill is introduced.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I had in mind was that under the present state of the law I did not see how one man could act as commissioner.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.38 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, January 15, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REVISED STATUTES—FRENCH TRANSLATION.

Mr. DOHERTY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to correct certain clerical errors in the French version of the Revised Statutes, 1906. He said: The purpose of the Bill is simply to correct a number of errors that have crept into the French translation of the Revised Statues of 1906. As the House will remember, the English version came into force and effect before the French version. Unfortunately there appears to have crept into the French version quite a number of errors, and accordingly as they are discovered we are endeavouring to rectify them, so that the laws may be the same in both versions. We have to go over quite a number of different statutes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BRIDGE AT HIGHLANDS.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to draw the attention, more especially of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), to an article that appeared in the Montreal 'Daily Witness' of Monday last. It is headed 'New $80,000 bridge to be built at Highlands.' It goes on to say that this bridge has been contracted for, that the contracts have been signed recently.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. gentleman rising to a question of privilege, or does he propose to introduce a subject that will invite discussion? In the latter case, he would be out of order.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I hope it will not invite discussion. I wish simply to ask the Minister of Railways if it is a fact that this bridge is being built where it is not required.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Order.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Well, I mean to say, not required by the public.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. What I mean to say is that neither the Minister of Public Works nor the Minister of Railways—

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend, but we can see that he is going further than to ask a question. He is not only inviting discussion but he is provoking it.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Then I will simply ask a question. Are these hon. gentleman aware of the fact that a contract has been let for that bridge, and if so, are they aware of the fact that there are other places where a bridge is far more necessary? If they will say that they are satisfied that this bridge is going to be built in a right and proper place, then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not familiar with the subject the hon. gentleman mentions. If a contract has been let for this bridge, it has been let by my predecessor. I will take note of what the hon. gentleman says and inquire into the matter; and if the bridge has been located in a wrong place, we will put it in the proper place.

CANADIAN MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

Mr. BOYCE. Before the orders of the day are called, and with a view of asking a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I would draw attention to an article which appeared on the front page of the Montreal 'Herald' of Saturday last, under the caption 'Missionaries flee 2,500 miles across China in daily peril. Twenty-five Canadians in party harassed and fired on by rebels and imperialists.' The article goes on to give the harrowing experiences of 25 Canadian missionaries in China who are escaping from Cheng Tu under the advice and instruction of the British consul there. The statement to which I wish especially to draw the attention of the minister is found lower down:

> Two miles above Hokiang we reached the British gunboat 'Widgeon,' and experienced a great sense of relief. 'We are safe now,' we thought. To our surprise the captain refused to afford us any protection. He turned a deaf ear to our appeals, and sent us on down the river through a district that for hundreds of miles was infested with marauders and full of perils. Had the gunboat been with us, it is altogether unlikely that we should have been fired upon as we were.

I beg to draw that to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and to ask him if he will cause inquiry to be made to ascertain the truth of that report, and if he finds it so, to take such action as is necessary for the protection of Canadian citizens.

Mr. HAZEN. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) is in error in placing this responsibility upon me. It is a matter relating to external affairs, and external affairs are under the control of the right honourable the Prime Minister. However, I will have great pleasure in calling the attention of the Prime Minister to the matter who no doubt will cause inquiries to be made, and take such steps as may be necessary for the purpose of protecting Canadian citizens.

PAY OF CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. I am frequently in receipt of letters recently, and I suppose other hon. gentlemen are, from persons engaged during the earlier part of last year as census enumerators, stating that they have not yet received the full amount of compensation due them. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if those payments cannot be expedited in some way. They are long overdue, and can see no good reason why they should not be paid.

Mr. BURRELL. I think my hon. friend could not have been present in the House when I answered a similar question put by the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and I informed him that while there were portions of these sums remaining unpaid, the work of revision was being expedited, and when complete, the payments would all be made.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to invite the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to a subject which was mentioned Friday evening just before adjournment, namely, with regard to the resignation of the members of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. I have understood that two, if not three, of the commissioners have, at the request of the government, resigned as members of that board. I would like to ask the minister if he has taken legal advice from the Minister of Justice as to the status of the board, as to whether that board can now legally transact any business in view of there being only one member of the board remaining. Under the Act two are required to form a quorum and if there is only one member of the board I would take it that the board is not in a position to transact any business whatever. My purpose in directing the minister's attention to this is to ask whether he has taken advice from the law officer of the Crown, the Minister of Justice, in respect to the matter.

Mr. COCHRANE. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) I beg to say that so far only one member of the board has resigned. But I expected to-day to be able to introduce a Bill to amend the Act in the way the hon. gentleman speaks of, so that there shall be only one member of the board.

Mr. EMMERSON. It certainly is not amended yet.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). But there is still a quorum; only one has resigned.

Mr. HAZEN.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But all have been asked to resign.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not wish to appear to be dissatisfied with the answer of the Minister of Railways, but the question I aksed was whether he had taken the advice of the Minister of Justice with respect to the legal status of the board providing the commissioners resigned as they had been requested to do.

Mr. COCHRANE. I told the hon. gentleman that we were introducing a Bill amending the Act as he says and, of course, any government Bill must be taken before council, so that the Minister of Justice must be aware of it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then I am to understand that the advice of the Minister of Justice has been asked?

UNALIENATED RIGHTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I desire to ask the government a question. In December last in a newspaper published in Halifax, there apeared the following despatch from Ottawa, a portion of which I will read:

> The representations made by Premier McBride, Hon. Mr. Bowser, and other British Columbia ministers, when here recently, in regard to the transfer to that province of unalienated rights in what is known as the railway belt, have, as expected, borne fruit. At to-day's sitting of the cabinet an order in council was approved placing the administration of unalienated rights, including water rights, in the hands of the British Columbia government, subject to such future action as may be taken by the federal government. It was stated that the order in council will contain a provision that the cost of administration by the province is to be paid for out of the revenue and that any surplus revenue is to be turned over to the Dominion treasury.

Mr. ROGERS. I may say in answer to the hon. gentleman that up to the present time there has been no transfer of any of the rights of the Dominion to the province of British Columbia. There has been some discussion upon the question but no decision has yet been arrived at.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 16) An Act respecting Patents of Thomas Wadge.—Mr. Aikins.

Bill (No. 33) respecting the Alberta Electric Railway Company and to change its name to 'The Alberta Interurban Railway Company.'—Mr. Bennett (Calgary).

Bill (No. 34) respecting the Algoma Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Boyce.

Bill (No. 36) respecting Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'Barcelona Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited.'—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 37) respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Goodeve.

Bill (No. 39) respecting the Canadian Northern Montreal Tunnel and Terminal Company, Limited.—Mr. Guilbault.

Bill (No. 42) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company and the Carillon and Grenville Railway Company.—Mr. Achim.

Bill (No. 43) respecting the Cap de la Magdelene Railway Company.—Mr. Paquet.

Bill (No. 44) respecting the Central Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Baker.

Bill (No. 45) respecting La Compagnie du Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.—Mr. Achim.

Bill (No. 47) respecting the Hamilton Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Barker.

BRITISH EMPIRE TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. CROMWELL moved second reading of Bill (No. 46) respecting the Dominion Trust Company, and to change its name to 'British Empire Trust Company.'

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The British Empire Trust Company is the name of a very prominent trust company having its head office in London, England and transacting a very large Canadian business so that the giving of the same name to a Canadian company might lead to confusion. I do not know that this is the proper place to raise the question but it should certainly be considered by the committee. I would suggest that the solicitors for the British Empire Trust Company in Canada should be notified and meanwhile the Bill might stand.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The committee is the proper place to consider that matter.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

PATENTS OF E. F. PIPER.

Mr. FRIPP moved the second reading of Bill (No. 53) respecting certain patents of Edmund F. Piper.

Mr. CURRIE. I take the exception to this Bill that when a renewal of patents is asked for mention should be made in the title as to what the particular patent is, I understand that a great many patents have slipped through this House by private Bills thus being patented by Act of Parliament in this country when they are not patented in any other country in the world. When it is not stated on the order paper what the patent refers to, the public are in ignorance of it and when it goes to the committee no one knows anything about it except those present at the committee. This Bill should go to the Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Committee on Standing Orders has reported the Bill and consequently it appears upon the order paper.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be well to let the Bill pass its second reading, and then go to the Committee on Standing Orders, where the objection raised by my hon. friend could be dealt with.

Mr. SPEAKER. In my judgment the Committee on Standing Orders would have nothing to do with this question at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that my hon. friend from Simcoe objected to this Bill being further proceeded with on the ground that its title is insufficient and might mislead the public. That may be correct or not. The promoter of the Bill is not here to explain it; perhaps an explanation might satisfy my hon. friend; therefore, I think it should be allowed to stand.

Mr. CURRIE. I am quite willing that the Bill should stand so that an explanation may be made.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would call attention to Order No. 2, which involves the same point, and would ask whether that Bill was sent to the Committee or not. The hon. member who introduced that Bill was not in his seat to make an explanation.

Order allowed to stand.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BOUNTIES TO VETERANS.

*Mr. MACDONALD:

Does the government intend, during the present session, to introduce any legislation granting any bounty or assistance to the volunteers of 1866 and 1867? If not, why not?

Mr. HUGHES. The matter is under consideration.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION COMMISSION.

*Mr. MACDONALD:

1. When does the government expect to lay upon the table of the House the report of the Commission on Technical Education?
2. Has any report been received from the said commission?

Mr. CROTHERS. The report of that commission is being prepared, and as soon as it is completed it will be laid on the table. We have received from the commission from time to time interim reports.

COAL FOR GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Mr. PARDEE:

1. What was the average cost per ton of steam coal purchased for the Dominion government steamers during the year 1911 at the ports of St. John, Halifax, Charlottetown, and Pictou, for coal delivered in bunkers and alongside the said steamers, respectively?

2. At what ports in the maritime provinces does the Department of Marine and Fisheries take delivery of coal for steamers alongside their steamers?

3. What is the average cost per ton to the department of putting on board their steamers the coal which is delivered to them alongside of the different ports in the maritime province when coal is purchased alongside?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The coal for Dominion steamers was purchased under agreements at the following rates:

St. John, N.B.	Per long ton.
'Lansdowne' alongside steamer	$4 15
Trimmed in bunkers	4 40
'Stanley' loaded and trimmed in bunkers	4 75

It is much more difficult to coal the 'Stanley' than the 'Lansdowne.'

Halifax, N.S.
Alongside steamer	$4 10
Trimmed in bunkers	4 35
Charlottetown, P.E.I.
Delivered in bunkers	4 50
Pictou, N.S.
Delivered in bunkers at Abercrombie Pier	$3 25
F.o.b. cars at Pictou or Pictou landing	3 75

2. At Pictou, N.S.

3. Cost of conveying coal from cars to bunkers of winter steamers at Pictou.—C.G.S. 'Earl Grey,' per ton, 45c.; C.G.S. 'Minto' forward bunkers, per ton, 55c.; side pockets for reserve supply, per ton, $1.

NAVAL DISCIPLINE ACT.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the Act passed in the Imperial Parliament in November or December last, known as the 'Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act'?

2. Does the government intend to make provision for the application of the provisions of said Act to the Canadian Naval Forces?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The governement was advised on December 11 that a Bill amending the Naval Discipline Act had been introduced in the Imperial House of Commons. The governmen is not aware that this Bill has become law.

2. When the government is advised that the Bill has been passed and receives a copy of the Act as amended, it will take the matter into consideration.

GASPE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Who has the mail contract between Petite Magdeleine and Chlorydormes, county of Gaspé?

2. Is or was there a request for the annulment of this contract?

3. Have any complaints been made against the mail carrier?

4. Who has asked for the cancellation of the contract?

Mr. PELLETIER:

There is no contract in existence for the carrying of mails between Petite Magdeleine and Chlorydormes. The question of entering into a contract for this work is under consideration by the department. Mr. J. A. Gagnon is performing this work temporarily at the present time.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Have any petitions been sent to the Postmaster General with the object of changing the post office at Cap Chat, county of Gaspé?

2. If so, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to make such change?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.

2. Under consideration.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF GOODS.

*Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has any order for goods been given by the Department of Public Works since October 1, 1911?

2. If so, have tenders been asked for in each case? If not, what orders for goods have been given without tender, to what firms respectively, and for how much in each instance?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.

2. Tenders have not been asked for in each case. I would like to direct attention to the latter part of question 2, reading as follows:

If not, what orders for goods have been given without tenders, to what firms respectively, and for how much in each instance?

I would submit that this is unreasonable information to ask for, as the department has since October 1 been purchasing all sorts of supplies all over the Dominion for the carrying on of public business, and this question would include every purchase, even so small as a broom bought by the caretaker of a public building anywhere. It would take a long time to prepare a list of all these purchases, ranging from five and ten cents up, stating where they were made and the price. If, however, my hon. friend wishes to put the question in the shape of a motion, I presume the House would order the return to be brought down.

If he has in view some specific purchase in some specific locality, and will put the question pointedly as to that particular locality, we will endeavour to answer it promptly.

Question allowed to stand.

MR. J. E. SEVIGNY.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has Mr. J. E. Sevigny of Valleyfield, Quebec, been appointed immigration agent at Montreal? If so, what is his salary, and what is the nature of his work?
2. Is the government aware that Mr. J. E. Sevigny is the president of the Conservative club of Valleyfield
3. Is Mr. J. E. Sevigny a brother of Mr. Albert Sevigny, M.P.?
4. Who recommended the said J. E. Sevigny for immigration agent?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. No. Mr. J. E. Sevigny has been appointed clerk in the office of the immigration agent at Montreal. Salary, $1,500 per annum. He is engaged in clerical work.
2. The government has no knowledge of this matter.
3. The government has no knowledge of this matter.
4. The minister.

PENITENTIARIES EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WILSON (Laval):

Is it the intention of the government to increase the salaries of the employees in the several penitentiaries of Canada, and to present to parliament, during the present session, a measure for that purpose?

Mr. DOHERTY. The matter is under consideration.

SOREL INVESTIGATION, PAYMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. Has the government paid the law and other expenses connected with the prosecution of the inquiry, during the session of parliament of 1910-11, before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, into the charges of irregularities, abuses and frauds charged to have been committed in the shops and stores of the government of Canada at St. Joseph de Sorel and in the city of Sorel, in the electoral district of Richelieu, and as to the alleged connection therwith of a certain member then of this House?
2. If such payments have not been made, will the government cause inquiry to be made as to the propriety of making the payments at an early date?

Mr. DOHERTY:

1. These accounts are not payable by the government, but by the House of Commons.

They had been paid as far as approved.

2. The government is looking into the matter.

NAVAL SERVICE. CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS.

Mr. PUGSLEY:

Having reference to the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, quoted in Hansard of the present session, page 179, as follows:—

That fact is, and I have evidence that cannot be contradicted and which I am prepared to give the House at any time if my statement is challenged, I have evidence that those vessels, under that contract, (referring to the tenders for the construction of cruises and torpedo destroyers), and under the conditions, would not have been completed for six years from the time the contract was awarded, and by the end of the six years those vessels would have been obsolete, entirely unfit for the purpose for which they were designed.

What is the evidence to which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries referred, and will he give the House such evidence in detail?

Mr. HAZEN:

In the conditions embodied by the late government in their call for tenders for the construction of vessels for the Naval Service it was stipulated that the time allotted for the construction of the vessels would be six years.

In a memorandum from Admiral Kingsmill, dated October 9, 1911, it is stated that 'owing to the rapidity with which designs change it is anticipated that if it takes six years to complete the programme the ships will be out of date before they are completed.'

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAR FERRY.

*Mr. HUGHES (Kings):

1. Is it the intention of the government to establish a car ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland?
2. If so, when will the government commence the construction of the necessary piers and steamers, and at what points on the island and the mainland will the piers be built?
3. In the opinion of the government, how many years will elapse before the car ferry will be established and in working order?
4. Pending the establishment of the car ferry, what steps will the government take to relieve the people of Prince Edward Island from the onerous burden of the three short haul rates?
5. In the event of the said ferry not being a success, would it prejudice in any way the claim of the people of Prince Edward Island for continuous communication by means of a tunnel?
6. Is it the intention of the government to widen the gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway to make it correspond with the gauge of the Intercolonial railway? If so, when will the work be commenced?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes.
2. The government will at an early date cause surveys and reports to be made in order to determine the points on Prince Edward Island and the mainland between which the steamers will ply, and also the other works required in connection with the proposed ferry. As soon as the necessary information is obtained, and specifications, &c., prepared, tenders will be invited and the work will be proceeded with, without delay.

3. Within two years.

4. The establishing of the car ferry and the standardizing of the Prince Edward Island railway gauge, is for the purpose of doing away with the short haul rates.

5. No.

6. It is the intention of the government to widen the tracks of the Prince Edward Island railway to correspond with the Intercolonial railway tracks, and this work will be carried on as soon as practicable.

2. For what cause was he dismissed?

3. At whose instance was he dismissed?

4. Has his successor been appointed?

5. If so, on whose recommendation has the appointment been made?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. The services of S. M. Ferguson, Acting Preventive Officer of Customs at Oyster Ponds, Guysborough County, N.S., were dispensed with November 30, 1911.

2. For political partisanship. He admitted acting as agent for a candidate in the polling booth on election day.

Mr. COCHRANE.

3. G. A. R. Rowlings was the complainant.

4. No successor has been appointed.

CHARLOS COVE LIGHTKEEPER.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Has Stephen Richard, lightkeeper at Charlos Cove, N.S., been dismissed?

5. On whose recommendation was the new lightkeeper appointed?

6. Was there an investigation prior to dismissal? If so, with what result?

7. Is it the intention of the department to grant an investigation in this case?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.

2. G. A. Rowlings, Sydney, N.S.

3. The complaint against him was that he took an offensive partisan part in the recent federal elections.

4. Alexander Richard.

5. G. A. Rowlings, Sydney, N.S.

6. No.

7. Not unless a request is made for one.

UNIFORM COPYRIGHT LAW.

Mr. WILSON (Laval):

1. Referring to the following despatch published in the 'Montreal Gazette' on the 30th December last, from London, England:

UNIFORM COPYRIGHT LAW.

Imperial Government asks Dominion to submit Amendments.

London, December 29.—(Canadian Associated Press.)—The 'Yorkshire Post' says the Home Government has invited the Dominion governments to submit amending legislation to the Copyright Act, though it is feared it will be impossible to have a uniform Empire law if the new Canadian government takes the same view as its predecessors. Germany and other countries are determined to stand aloof from the convention if Canada persists in its present attitude. Hon. Martin Burrell's recent statements lend hope that Canada will come into line.

Is it correct that the Canadian government has received from the Imperial government an invitation to amend the Copyright Act? If so, what are the terms of this invitation?

2. Has the government considered the alternative of Canada adhering to the International Union, for the protection of literary and artistic works, or of detaching itself from it?

3. If the government has come to any decision whatever, in that regard, what is the nature of that decision?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. The Dominion was invited to the Imperial Copyright Conference, 1910, and assented to resolutions passed thereat which might involve amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act.

2. No.

3. Answered by No. 2.

THREE RIVERS, INLAND REVENUE.

*Mr. BUREAU:

1. Has any charge been made against C. D. Hebert, collector of inland revenue at Three Rivers, of having been at the last federal elections a most active political partisans?

2. If so, when and by whom was the charge made?

Mr. NANTEL. There is no written charge on file in the department against C. D. Hebert of having been a political partisan. It having been privately stated to the minister that Mr. Hebert had acted as such partisan, the former, early in November instructed the Deputy Minister to write to Mr. Hebert asking him if he had taken an active part in politics. Mr. Hebert has answered in the negative and he is still in possession of the office.

SYRIAN IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LAPOINTE (St. Jacques):

1. Has the honourable the minister of the Interior in his possession one or more petitions or correspondence, &c., of a certain number of Syrians, of Montreal and vicinity, or elsewhere, with the view of suspending or recalling in any matter in which they are concerned, the following order in council:

P.C. 926,

At the Government House at Ottawa,

Monday, the 9th day of May, 1910.

Present:

His Excellency in council is pleased, under the authority of section 37 of the Immigration Act of 9 and 10 Edward VII, to make and doth hereby make the following regulation:

No immigrant of Asiatic origin shall be permitted to enter Canada unless in actual and personal possession in his or her own right of two hundred dollars, unless such person is a native or subject of an Asiatic country in regard to which special statutory regulations are in force, or with which the government of Canada has made a special treaty, agreement or convention.

(Signed): RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to yield to the requests of the signers of the said petitions?

3. From the immigration point of view, does the government classify the Syrians as Asiatics under the terms of sections 37, of chapter 27, 9 and 10, Edward VII, intituled: An Act respecting Immigration?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Such a petition, it appears, was presented to the late Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, some time in July, 1911, and the official file of correspondence shows that it was refused.

2. The matter is not now before the government.

3. Yes.

NAPOLEON GUILLEMETTE, DISMISSAL.

*Mr. BUREAU:

1. Has Napoleon Guillemette, clerk of works, in connection with the Dominion Public Building at Trois Rivières been dismissed?

2. If so, upon whose recommendation was he dismissed and what was the reason given for his dismissal?

3. How many days' notice was he given before the taking effect of the order of dismissal?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.

2. No special recommendation. The department had no further use for his services as clerk of works.

3. On November 9, 1911, Mr. Guillemette was notified that his services as clerk of works were no longer required by this department.

ST. TITE POSTMASTER.

*Mr. BUREAU:

1. Has the postmaster of the town of St. Tite in the county of Champlain, been dismissed since the 21st of September, 1911?

2. If so, was there any complaint laid against him?

3. What was the nature of the complaint and by whom was it made?

4. Was there any investigation held in this case?

5. Who recommended the dismissal and on what ground was it made?

6. Who has been appointed in his place, by whom was he recommended, and what was the occupation of the present incumbent before his appointment?

Mr. PELLETIER: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. The postmaster of the town of St. Tite is now Dr. Emil Lacoursière. This postmaster was removed in 1898 to make room for a political partisan of the late government. Since his appointment, he has continued to be a political partisan. The former postmaster has been re-instated. No investigation was necessary, because the facts cannot be disputed.

The recommendation for the re-instatement was made by the present member of parliament for the county of Champlain.

IMMIGRATION HOSPITALS.

Mr. PAQUET:

1. How many hospitals for immigrants have we, and where are they situated?

2. Who are the physicians in charge of those hospitals?

2. At Quebec, Dr. J. D. Page. At Halifax, Dr. Francis A. R. Gow. At St. John, Dr. Leonard Ellis. At Montreal, Dr. A. D. Stewart. At Victoria, Dr. G. L. Milne.

STATE-AIDED IMMIGRATION SOCIETIES.

Mr. PAQUET:

1. What are the societies of colonization, immigration and charity that are provided for by the government?
2. What is the amount voted for each of these associations?

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon) moved:

For orders in council and all correspondence between the government and the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company and its successor, the Winnipeg Great Northern railway, now the Canadian Northern railway, relative to the proposed route of said railway to Hudson bay, with all accompanying plans and reports; also a copy of all correspondence relative to the offer of Milburn & Company, steamship owners, of England, said to have been made to the government through the said railway company to place a line of steamships on the route between Hudson bay and England on the completion of said railway, and the further offer by the said Milburn & Company to place one of their Baltic steamships at the disposal of the government for the purpose of making a practical test of the navigability of the route for commercial purposes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why I move this resolution is that the correspondence to which reference is made does not appear in any of the reports or sessional papers. It is very desirable that the House should be fully informed, not only in respect of the feasibility of the Hudson Bay road, but also of the proper selection of one of the two ports usually spoken of as the suitable termini of the railway. There is no question of public importance before Canada that is of greater interest to western Canadians than the question of a short, inexpensive and speedy route for the exportable products of that part of the country to the markets of that world and for the imports of goods from abroad. Western Canada is having some disadvantages under which eastern Canada is not labouring. The farmers of eastern Canada can more easily pay the duties under the National Policy than can the farmers of western Canada at the present moment, for the simple reason that under that policy there has been built up in eastern Canada excellent home markets and great industries, which have effected an increase in the value of farm lands and farmers have found for their products a close and ready market, the home market. Western Canada's industries have not been built up to the same extent, it is yet a young and growing country, and will presently have its own home market. Western Canada also has the burden of paying freight rates for long distances to take the surplus product to the final market, usually at Liverpool. This may be corrected to some extent, in time, by the reduction of freight rates, as well as by the creation of local industries and a home market. These industries are being begun in western Canada and the home market is enlarging. For instance, the city of Winnipeg is now, perhaps the third largest in manufacturing in the whole of Canada. There will be established industries in Brandon, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton; and when these markets are established the rural population of western Canada will have the same advantages in respect of markets that those in eastern Canada now enjoy. But, until these industries are established western Canadian producers will be at the disadvantage of being obliged to carry their produce to market over a longer distance than will those in eastern Canada. It is undesirable that a remedy should be sought in the way suggested by the late government, that western Canada should find its market south of the line for its products; for it is not in the interest of Canada to build up industries in a foreign country or consider that its home market is their home market. Nor is it desirable that western Canada should continue to find a home market for her products only in eastern Canada. Although it is very much better that such a market should be found in eastern Canada than that it should be found in the United States, if that can reasonably be done.

The British North America Act properly states that confederation of the provinces was established to promote the welfare of the provinces, and the promotion of the interests of the British empire. It is far better that the markets for western Canadian produce should be either Canadian or British. When our products are exported it is desirable they should be taken by the shortest route possible from the place of production to the final market at Liverpool. The action of the late government in deciding to construct the Hudson Bay railway is appreciated in the west. It is true they started late, better late than never; although it seemed to the people of western Canada that the Hudson Bay railway would be rendered practically useless if the trade, instead of being turned to the northeast by the Hudson Bay railway were diverted to the United States. The government is to be commended in commencing the construction of that railway, and letting the contract for 185 miles. The whole length from the Pas to Churchill is 477 miles. From the Pas to Nelson is 410 miles, and when the 185 miles are constructed, it will be necessary to decide the direction is shall then go. Is it to go to Fort Nelson, or is it to go to Churchill? As I understand from the reports of the chief engineer of the Hudson Bay railway, that point 185 miles distant is somewhere to the west of Split lake. The route to Churchill would be about north from there, that is the route to Churchill the government was heretofore considering. The new route that is now suggested as being a better one is to run from that point, the end of the present contract, in a more northeasterly direction, crossing the Nelson river, and then south of the Nelson river to a point about 100 miles to the west of Port Nelson. From that point there can be constructed a line almost due north to Churchill, or on the north side of the river to Port Nelson. To decide the route it becomes, therefore, important to determine whether the terminus should be Port Nelson or Churchill. If the port is to be Nelson it will be somewhat nearer to the producers than Churchill, and the railway will run through a better country. The distance from Winnipeg to Churchill is about 600 miles. The distance from Winnipeg to Nelson is about 125 miles less. The distance from Brandon to the Pas is 300 miles, from the Pas to Nelson, 410 miles. Therefore, it becomes important to decide at once what route is to be taken. If the more recently suggested route is to be taken, crossing the Nelson river at a point 100 miles to the west of Port Nelson, the line would be lengthened to Churchill about 15 miles; it will not be lengthened to Nelson. If that route be taken, it will afford an easier grade, and the whole line of railway will not have more than four-tenths of one per cent grade. If that route to Churchill, the one suggested by the late government, is taken, the grades will be heavier. There is no question that the people of the west believe that the route from western Canada to the British Isles should be as far as possible through Hudson bay. Many years before that western country became part of the Dominion of Canada, that was the highway to Manitoba. People still have confidence in that route. They know well that Churchill is much further south than that important point on the White sea, north of Russia, Archangel. Archangel is above the latitude of 64 degrees north, Churchill is about 59 degrees, and Nelson about 57 degrees north. Archangel was at one time the only seaport in Russia. It has now a population of over 20,000. Its exports amount to nearly £1,500,000 sterling annually. It has large manufactories of linen, leather, mats and cordage. There is no reason why, for western Canada, Nelson or Churchill should not be of equal or of greater importance, they are in a better latitude.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the distance along the sea-coast from Nelson to Churchill.

Mr. AIKINS. In a direct line it is about 125 miles, almost due north. Churchill is a little to the northwest of Nelson. The port at Nelson is open perhaps two weeks longer, and closes two weeks later than Churchill. Practically there is a month's difference between Nelson and Churchill. It, therefore becomes important that the House should come to an early conclusion as to which port shall become the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway. If the same energy were applied to the construction of that railway that has been applied to the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway, the railway could be constructed next year; at all events, it would not require more than two years to complete it. When it is constructed, what is then to be done with it?. No arrangement was made, I understand, by the late government for a harbour at the terminus, and unless there is a harbour at the terminus the railway itself will be largely useless. Concurrently, therefore, with the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, a harbour should be constructed where the freight carried by that railway may be received for water carriage.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Where does the hon. gentleman get his authority that Port Nelson is open so much earlier, and remains open so much longer in the fall than Fort Churchill?

Mr. AIKINS. I shall endeavour to inform the hon. gentleman before I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Would the hon. gentleman also please tell us why it would be better to take one of these ports than the other for a terminus?

Mr. AIKINS. That is a question for the House to decide, and in order to come to a conclusion I am moving that all possible information should be laid before the House. I am not expressing any preferences, because I do not know everything about it. It is true I know a great many things, but I do not know all.

Consequently, I think it is desirable that we should have all the available information on this subject and as rapidly as it can be obtained, and so come without any further delay to a conclusion and construct the harbour. The most recent report we have concerning those ports is one that was brought down at this session—of Mr. Wm. J. Stewart, hydrographer of the Department of the Naval Service. Referring to the navigation of Hudson bay and Hudson straits and also to these ports, he says:

Apart from the ice question which it will be seen is by no means insurmountable, the dangers and difficulties of the navigation of Hudson Strait and Bay arise chiefly from the inaccuracies of the charted positions of the salient points, and from the proximity of the magnetic pole, with the consequent effect on compasses.

As the whole of the Hudson Bay chart appears to be more or less in the nature of a sketch or running survey, great caution would naturally be exercised by the shipmasters in making land.

It seems to me that although the recent government decided to construct that railway, they were leaving out a very important part, the water route, and not making the chart necessary for the proper navigation of Hudson bay and straits, and preparing the port.

Mr. CURRIE. Has there never been a chart made of Hudson bay?

Mr. AIKINS. So far as I can ascertain there has never been an accurate survey of the straits or of Hudson bay as will appear a little later on from this report. Further on in the report, he says:

Until the results of the detailed surveys are in, it is difficult to give an unprejudiced opinion as to the relative values of Fort Churchill and Port Nelson as ports, and I can only take the point of view of a master of a vessel making these places for the first time without local knowledge or pilot's assistance.

Churchill harbour although of not very great extent as it at present stands, appears to me to be adapted to easy enlargement, the eastern shore having good water close to. The entrance is narrow and I do not imagine any sea could get up that would inconvenience loading operations alongside wharfs, but the heavy tide and current from the Churchill river running against a strong breeze makes boat work difficult at times.

The current from the Nelson and Hayes rivers is very swift, a great volume of water being discharged into Nelson roads. When this current combines with an ebb tide and sets against the heavy northerly gales which prevail here in August and September, a very bad sea is raised, especially, as may be imagined, inside the five fathom line of sounding.

Churchill harbour is situated in latitude 58-56-10 N. and longitude 94-10 W. and about the middle of the west shore of Hudson bay.

The approach to Churchill harbour is very well marked and comparatively easily picked up. The first landfall (approaching from Hudson strait) is Cape Churchill, which stands well out from the low west shore and in contrast to the shore south of it, may be approached to within a comparatively short distance.

The entrance to Churchill between the 18 foot contours is 1,100 feet wide and has as much as 90 feet of water in it with not less than 6 fathoms outside.

The harbour itself is in two parts, outer and inner, but the latter is so shallow as to be useless and injurious to the former, in that it furnishes a large area in which water is stored during flood tide to cause strong currents through the entrance at ebb tide.

The outer harbour or harbour proper is about 3,000 yards long north and south with an average width of 2,000 yards giving an area of one and a half square miles most of which, however, is very shallow. The area of water over 18 feet deep inside the entrance is about 1,600,000 square yards or about half of a square mile. The anchorage space is therefore not suitable for more than three or four vessels.

That it is only suitable for 3 or 4 vessels is of very serious importance, because if there are to be exported from western Canada 100,000,000 bushels of wheat or 200,000,000 bushels, and no doubt the exportable product will amount to very much more than that. It is quite impossible to export so much by a harbour in which only three or four vessels can find accommodation at once. There will have to be many more vessels there at a time

The range of the spring tide is about 15 feet and the water rushes through this entrance with a velocity of 6 miles per hour on the ebb tide and 2½ miles per hour on the flood. As remarked in the beginning of this report the inner harbour is very large and allows a large volume of water to be impounded furnishing a supply that must escape during the ebb and cause heavy currents. The harbours might be separated by a dyke and thus provide a wet basin above and cut off the supply for the strong currents at ebb tide.

Further in the report he says:

Last season when approaching Nelson river to put the schooner on the station for her work, the steamer 'Stanley,' with her in tow, ran into shallow water (4 fathoms), then moved out to 9 fathoms and fixed her position as 10 miles from land where nothing could be seen from the deck and only a few trees and the beacon on Marsh point from the Crow's Nest.

After becoming acquainted with the locality and procuring a pilot the schooner was piloted at high water to an anchorage just off the position selected for the outer railway wharf.

Owing to the great difficulties encountered very little surveying that can be placed on paper was done. The greatest labour was necessary to get ashore with material for signals and owing to the low beach these had to be large and high that they might be seen a few miles off. The winds and seas were very heavy and in the exposed situation working from even a large well covered-in launch was impossible.

Observations for tides show that springs rise 16 feet and neap 10 feet, and the tides flow and ebb at from 2 to 3 knots.

Of course, this information is all gathered from cruising about in bad weather, when circumstances made it impossible to fix one's position for transfer to paper and when the survey work is completed it may have a different appearance.

There is one thing certain that the survey is no child's play, the roadstead is exposed to every wind that blows and every sea that runs, the currents and cross currents are strong, the shores so low that nothing can be seen from boats and all locations must be determined from the previously ascertained position of the ship.

Ice began to form, coming down the river on one tide and up on the next, on October 31, and gradually became worse, each day making navigation more hazardous.

Until further and proper definite information is obtained, no opinion can be expressed as to the suitability of this port for a terminus.

It seems a rather singular thing that the government should have undertaken the construction of the Hudson Bay railway without knowing to what point that railway is going to run. I hope that, with the present government and with such a Minister of Railways, the work will be carried on expeditiously, and that what might have taken the former government ten years to accomplish will be accomplished in one or two years at least. The House will readily see that it is of the utmost importance that it should be seized of proper information to enable it to come to a conclusion. That report is the last word that the House has with respect to these different ports. It brings the matter down to 1911. The next report before the House is one that was made by the chief engineer of the Hudson Bay railway, Mr. John Armstrong, in 1909. At the end of the first part of the report, he says:

In accordance with the above, surveys were made of the harbours at the mouths of both the Churchill and Nelson rivers, the results of which have been sent forward to you.

The results at Nelson seem to justify the recommendation that a further appropriation for an accurate survey of that port be made before it is rejected as a terminus for the Hudson bay railway.

Appended to the report are the following statements:

Fort Churchill is at the mouth of the Churchill river where the river passes through a large tidal flat or lagoon mostly dry at low tide except near the outlet to the sea. The lagoon is surrounded by hills consisting of rock at the sea outlet and of sand and gravel further up the river.

The only available situation for docks at present is out near Cape Merry, with the railway terminals from two to three miles up stream, and the townsite from three to five miles up stream. Another townsite is available on the west side, but it would be somewhat difficult to get railway and dock sites.

There is no posibility of improving the Churchll river so as to give inland communication by water owing to its shallowness over its many wide and frequent rapids. The neighbourhood of Fort Churchill is practically destitute of all forest growth for miles in all directions, the vegetation being restricted to mosses and patches of coarse grasses along the edges of the water areas.

The main freshwater supply is obtained from the numerous small lakes in the neighbourhood and is of excellent quality. The tidal flats are thickly stewn with boulders, some so large as to be visible above high water.

Tides and Currents.

The main current in the harbour is along the indicated channel of the Churchill river, being approximately down the centre of the lagoon, but striking more against the eastern side towards the harbour mouth. With the ebb tide the current attains a velocity of from six to eight miles per hour, creating a somewhat difficult entrance for low-powered ships. The local pilots prefer to bring in their ships with the incoming tides.

It is quite useless for anything but a steam vessel to attempt the entrance at any other time. The current with the incoming tide is much less, probably not exceeding 4 miles per hour. The highest tide observed was 13½ feet, and the lowest 8 feet, both probably being subject to modification with a longer series of observations. The water is always more or less salt near the entrance. At low tide fresh water may be obtained in the Churchill channel opposite the Hudson Bay Company's post, but when the tide is in this cannot be done.

Ice Conditions.

The harbour usually freezes over about November 15. The open sea also freezes over during the winter four or five miles out from Churchill. The usual date for the opening of the harbour is about June 19. This last spring the harbour opened on June 7, or about 10 days earlier than usual. The ice lay off the coast and harbour this year, preventing the return of the survey party until July 13, when a start was made for York.

The harbour has been reported on occasions to have been blocked by ice as late as August owing to long continued north winds. This liability of the harbour to be filled with loose heavy ice drifting up and down with the strong currents will need to be seriously considered in choosing the type of docks to be built here. As shown on the chart, the direction of the current tends to throw the drifting ice against the east shore, the only available place for docks at the present time. The ice, however, does not jam here very much but is swept on out by the strong current. Jams more frequently occur on the west side between the police barracks and Cockrill's Point.

Anchorage.

At the present time very little shelter can be had at low tide by any ship drawing over 18 or 20 feet of water. Space to accommodate two or three ships of this size might be had, but anything larger would have to anchor almost in front of the entrance, which, being three-quarters of a mile, allows the full force of the seas to be felt. The seas enter the harbour with sufficient force to cause a heavy swell to be felt throughout the harbour; in fact it is reported that at times it is impossible for the smaller boats to cross the harbour for two or three days at a time. The bottom consisting of mud affords a fairly good holding ground for anchors.

Material.

The material forming the harbour bottom is mud, thickly strewn with boulders of all sizes, and is probably a deposit from the Churchill river.

Excavating for ships berths close inshore to avoid the heavy drift ice will probably encounter solid rock, as the solid rock in several places runs to the water edge.

Defence.

Fort Churchill being practically upon the open sea can only be defended by strong forts and batteries placed in the immediate neighbourhood of the port itself.

Port Nelson.

Wherever the ice was of sufficient strength the sounding was done through holes, the method of locating being indicated on the chart. The soundings in the open water portion were taken from a boat hired from the Hudson Bay Company at York Factory, and were taken in May and June after the ice had gone out. This portion of the work was accomplished under great difficulties, as only five small buoys could be obtained to mark ten miles of river.

The boat, which was the best obtainable, was the usual coast boat of very shallow draught and clumsy rig, but endowed with special qualities in the matter of drifting.

Owing to this propensity and to the fact that the small buoys were not visible from one to the other, some difficulty was experienced in keeping the proper course. However, after ten days or two weeks hard work a sufficient amount of information was obtained to enable us to state with certainty that a good channel exists in which a ship drawing 26 feet might safely enter at all stages of the tide. Mr. R. D. Fry, the engineer in charge of the party, believes this chart to be a conservative representation of the actual conditions at Port Nelson, and that more extended surveys with the proper equipment will probably show a more favourable situation.

In order to get the best results it will be necessary to have a strong boat equipped with power, preferably a good sea-going tug which could be fitted to burn either coal or wood, with a dozen large sized buoys and fifty or sixty smaller ones to mark the channel and points to be sounded.

General Description.

Port Nelson is at the mouth of the Nelson river, while York Factory is situated at the mouth of the Hayes river, about fifteen or eighteen miles from Port Nelson.

The site at the mouth of the Hayes was chosen by the Hudson Bay Company on account of the better communication with a greater number of inland posts, and also being a much smaller stream was not so difficult to navigate.

A great deal of tracking had to be done on both rivers, and the Hayes being much smaller, offered less trouble in crossing and recrossing to take advantage of paths to tow from. The Nelson river is known locally as the North river, and Port Nelson is named by the British Admiralty as York Roads. Hudson Bay vessels crossing to York Factory with supplies anchor about 15 or 20 miles from the post in York Roads. The site of York Factory was not chosen on account of its accessibility from the sea, but entirely on account of the easier communication with inland posts. The Nelson river proper may be said to end at Flamboro Head, which is the approximate limit to which the tide reaches. The estuary is a wide tidal flat with the main channel running approximately down the centre, finally discharging into an open sea abreast of Beacon Point, some 25 miles from Flamboro Head. At Flamboro Head the banks rise sheer from the water edge to a height of 100 to 125 feet. From this point they gradually diminish in height on both sides of the river until at Sam's creek on the north, and Beacon Point on the south, they are about ten feet above the water. The north shore is of clay with a sufficient fall for drainage and covered with a fair growth of spruce.

A good site for terminals and town may be had in the vicinity of the point marked on the chart. Above this point the banks become higher and much more abrupt.

The south shore is also of clay with a good slope for drainage, but at the present time is covered with a very heavy growth of moss, rendering it very wet. An abundant supply of freshwater may be had either from the Nelson river itself or from various smaller streams and lakes in its vicinity.

Tides and Currents.

The main current when the tide is ebbing is along the main channel, the current over the flats running approximately parallel to it. As the water lowers the currents over the flats converge more and more upon the main current, till at low tide they are approximately at right angles to and approaching it. On the ebb tide, the current flows at the rate of about 3½ miles per hour, being strongest at the mouth abreast of Beacon Point. Under favourable conditions the current here might rise as high as 4 miles per hour. So great is the discharge of the Nelson river that a perceptible current may be noticed several miles out to sea. With the incoming tide a current of about 2½ miles is obtained.

Ice conditions.

About the 20th of December the river is usually frozen over at Seal Island or Flamboro Head. From this time on the ice gradually creeps down the estuary and out from the shore line until the first half of the month of April. About this date the weather moderated to such an extent that the thawing through the day counterbalanced the freezing at night and the ice began to recede towards Flamboro Head, the estuary being usually again clear of ice by May 15.

That answers the question of my hon. friend.

The ice is broken up into large floes by the rising tide, and is borne off out to sea by the ebb tide. Owing to the appreciable current of the Nelson river being felt so far out to sea very little of this ice ever drifts back again. Between May 15 and June 1, the upper Nelson ice breaks up and passes down the centre of the estuary in the main channel, usually occupying from 24 to 36 hours on passing out to sea. During last winter no ice jams occurred inside of a line drawn from Beacon point to Sam's creek and a careful scrutiny of the shore line after the snow and ice had disappeared failed to find any trace of its ever doing so.

The winter of 1878, an exceptionally mild winter, the channel remained open for 40 miles above Flamboro Head.

During the freeze up in the fall, a considerable quantity of slush ice comes down from the upper Nelson.

During the winter more or less ice floats up and down the open channel with the tides, but being very scattered no jams ever occur.

Anchorage.

The anchorage being some nine or ten miles in from the mouth of the channel no serious sea is ever experienced which may cause trouble to anything larger than canoes or row boats. The condition of the seas at Port Nelson will probably be found to resemble those experienced at Quebec on the St. Lawrence. The bottom is of sufficient stiffness to furnish a secure holding ground for anchors.

Defence.

The defence of Nelson from hostile fleets will be comparatively easy, the long comparatively narrow channel approach being easily rendered impregnable by means of sea mines, and rendered otherwise dangerous by the removal or changing of buoys and other channel marks. Battleships which carry the extreme long range guns are of such draught as to render it somewhat dangerous to manœuvre in less than 45 feet of water thus preventing their closer approach than 15 or 18 miles, a distance considerably greater than the effective range of even the heaviest guns. The lighter ships which might approach closer carry correspondingly lighter guns. The establishment of strong batteries and forts at Sam's creek would seem to be all that is necessary to render Port Nelson absolutely unassailable.

It might be mentioned here in passing the greatly increased difficulty a hostile fleet would have on blockading the Atlantic coast of Canada were the Hudson bay route opened. The fact that ships may enter and leave Port Nelson all the year round is a fact worth remembering when the possibilities of war are considered.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do you believe that?

Mr. AIKINS. Well, while my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) might act on my opinion in that regard I am not sure that every member of the House would. However, the fact is stated here that the mouth of the Nelson River is open all the year around and if that be so we have at once a solution of the difficulties of the west because we will not be restricted to a few months navigation through the Hudson bay but may be able to navigate in other months than June, July, August and September. I submit that from these reports it is impossible to come to any conclusion as to which would be the better port and it is in the interests of the west that the House should have all possible information to enable it to select the best terminal for the railway. Of course there will be an advantage always to Western Canada if Port Nelson be the better terminus, because there will be a shorter railway haul of sixty or seventy miles or more and the port will be open earlier and close later than Fort Churchill, if either should prove impossible as a winter port.

The House has some prior information concerning the matter. Lieut. Gordon's report, made I think in 1886, referring to Fort Churchill, contains the following:

This harbour is admirably suited for a railway terminus. The necessary docks could be easily and cheaply built, and the deep-water basin enlarged at small cost. Stone is lying at the water's edge ready to be laid into docks and piers, and nature seems to have left little to be done in order to make this a capacious port fit for doing a business of great magnitude.

Twenty feet would be deep water at that time. It would be necessary perhaps to have deeper water now; and if, as is stated by Chief Engineer Armstrong, the bottom of Churchill harbour is rock, it will be very much more expensive to create a proper port there of suitable size than it will be at Port Nelson, where no such rock is reported. Prior to that we have a statement made in 1884 by Robert Bell, Senior Assistant Director of the Geological and Natural History Survey of Canada, and that statement has since been amply verified. In answer to a question, he said:

I think it is manifest that the advantage would be very great indeed, and it is a matter, just now, of very great importance. The cost of the transport of wheat, for example, to the markets of the world, say Great Britain, is reduced to the very lowest point by competition with all the world, and consequently, if our wheat regions of the Northwest were labouring under any disadvantage, as far as carriage was concerned, the price must necessarily be reduced to meet this competition. It is, therefore, essential to successful farming in our Northwest that we should have an easy and cheap route to the markets of the world; and also for carrying heavy freights from Europe to the Northwest, such as iron and heavy goods generally, it is very desirable to have as short a land carriage as possible. As a route for immigrants, the ocean route being as short as to other ports, and the land route being much shorter, it would afford a direct and cheap way of bringing immigrants to the Northwest; and the importance of it is enhanced by the fact that we could keep them to ourselves; whereas, if they were brought in by the present routes, they run the chance of being tampered with by the immigration agents of the United States. It might also be valuable for the export of bulky, low-priced agricultural products, such as potatoes, pressed hay, &c.

That statement by Professor Bell in 1884 can be repeated with the same accuracy and force at the present time. From that time little has been done towards ascertaining what should be the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway and what would be the best route through the Straits and Hudson bay itself. If one goes back to 1878, one finds similar views and doubts in a report in that year by Professor Henry Youle Hind, who said:

When we consider that York Factory is actually nearer to Liverpool than New York, it surely becomes a question of the greatest moment to determine how far existing information would warrant minute inquiry into this very important subject. As the result of a prolonged but desultory study of the question, I have no doubt that continuous and safe navigation by steamers, constructed as sealing steamers are, can be carried on between Port Nelson and Liverpool for at least four months in the year—that is, from Liverpool to Liverpool again, leaving three months, or perhaps a little more, for Hudson bay.

Such navigation would, in effect, bring a thousand miles of sea coast line, now included in Ontario and Keewatin, into direct water communication with the outer world, and develop new interests for the Northwest, apart from the outlet it would afford to its grain. The lignite coal on the west side of the Davis' Straits is of importance in this connection.

Port Nelson river, or as now termed, Nelson river, is the outlet through which drains the whole of the rivers and lakes included within the basin of Lake Winnipeg, extending from the Rocky mountains on the west to within one hundred miles of the shores of Lake Superior on the east, and covering a drainage area of about 360,000 square miles.

Port Nelson is about 80 miles nearer to Liverpool, via Hudson straits, than is New York. It is at the mouth of a river of the first class, carrying a body of water double that of the north and south branches of the Saskatchewan combined, and it reaches the sea through a narrow depression in the Laurentides, having a descent of about twenty inches in a mile, or, in round numbers, seven hundred feet in a little more than four hundred statute miles from the spot where it debouches from Lake Winnipeg.

Port Nelson, moreover, is about the same distance from the edge of a vast fertile region in the Northwest, exceeding two hundred millions of acres in area, as Quebec is from Toronto.

For more than two hundred years from two to five sailing vessels on an average, frequently with warships convoying them, have sailed annually from Europe and America to Port Nelson, or other ports in Hudson bay, and returned with cargoes the same season via the only available route, Hudson straits.

The establishment of a cheap and speedy means of communication between the Northwest and the open Atlantic via Hudson straits, would not only secure the rapid settlement of Manitoba, but open to successful immigration a fertile area twenty times as large as that province. The proximity of this vast extent of country to its own seaboard would, under such conditions, also secure the carrying trade of its own productions under one and the same flag.

The most recent admiralty map of Hudson straits exhibits a want of full information regarding the coast lines on both sides of the straits. The remark made by Lieut. Chappell in 1814, that the southern shore has never been explored, is true at the present day. This officer states that 'all this coast, as well as the northern shore is fringed with islands; the principal of which are King George, Prince of Wales, Maiden Pass, and Mannils islands; and they doubtless afford shelter to many fine harbours.'

The latest charts still show a disconnected coast line here and there for three hundred miles, and the fringe of islands, noticed by Chappell, is not recorded on any published chart. This officer asserts, that the 'Rosamond,' convoying the Hudson Bay Company's ships, in 1814, was piloted through the Hudson straits by the means of a private chart supplied by the chief mate of the 'Prince of Wales,' one of the ships under convoy.

Port Nelson is upwards of two hundred miles nearer to the mouth of the Fraser river, one of the projected termini of the Pacific railway, than it is to Halifax on the Atlantic coast. In other words, it is, so to speak, already more than half across the continent, within the wide limits of the Dominion. Then, again, the distance of Port Nelson from Liverpool is nearly one hundred miles less than Liverpool is from New York. The relative distances measured on the globe being 2,960 miles and 3,020 miles. If two of the Dundee sealing steamers, similarly found, were to start at the same hour in the month of September, one from Port Nelson, the other from New York, the probability is that they would arrive on the same day at Liverpool.

Port Nelson lies under the same parallel as Dundee in Scotland, and it cannot escape notice that numerous fine sealing schooners from the Scottish port, have, since the 10th of March, been pushing their way among the same kind of ice as that found barring Hudson straits, in pursuit of seals. From twenty to five and twenty of those sealing schooners are now engaged in the same pursuit on the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador, seeking the ice, whose presence we lament later on in the year. The employment of these, or steamers constructed for summer work in the Hudson straits and bay, would afford a wide field for the exercise of that skill and enterprise which at present finds a temporary employment only in the destruction of half a million sportive creatures—the life of ice encumbered seals.

In answer to another question he said:

Here we have Port Nelson and further south, Selkirk, and there the sources of the Red river, which is a down grade to Port Nelson. In fact here, within a certain radius, the agricultural capabilities are not very great, but in the west and south, in the valley of the Red River, and on a considerable portion of the upper Missouri, Port Nelson will be very much nearer than any other port either down the Mississippi or down the valley of the St. Lawrence, or any of the Atlantic ports.

That was in 1878. Very little has been done by the Dominion authorities to ascertain which port would make the better terminus for the Hudson Bay railway, and of course the railway would be almost useless without a proper and wisely selected terminus.

I therefore suggest that immediate action be taken to obtain all possible information concerning the better routes through Hudson straits and Hudson bay and the better port for the terminals of the railroad on that bay, because on these matters may depend not only the question of railway communication, but communication by the Nelson river to Lake Winnipeg, and thus to Selkirk and Winnipeg. It is quite possible that there may be constructed on the Nelson river a few locks which will give navigation to sea-going vessels all the way from Liverpool to at least Selkirk. Therefore I have much pleasure in moving this resolution.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment rise to offer any opposition to my hon. friend's method of obtaining increased information upon this subject. I do not know that I should have intervened even for the few minutes I shall speak, but for some general positions which my hon. friend stated very oracularly and very emphatically on the trade question. If I understood him he uttered what must have been regarded by many of the hon. gentlemen by whom he is surrounded as very great political heresy. I think he said that the east was in a better position to bear the burdens of the National Policy than the west. Why Sir, in ten years residence in Canada I have never heard from hon. gentlemen opposite a word about anything but the blessings of the National Policy, and I am gratified indeed to learn that my hon. friend at least is in the way of finding out that the National Policy is not a communicator of blessings only, but of burdens, and I am sure that my constituents and a large number of the inhabitants of Western Canada will be glad to hear of the frank admission that these burdens fall more heavily upon western Canada than upon the east. We shall not fail to quote my hon. friend in that connection and to congratulate his constituents and himself on his coming into line with Liberal views on that matter.

His next statement, based upon that to which I have just referred, seemed to me also extremely heterodox for any one sitting on that side of the House. He went on to say that it was eminently desirable because of the disadvantage under which the people of the west live, to have the shortest routes to the markets of the world. I understood that the party opposite had just conducted a political campaign in support of the long route, the route from western to eastern Canada. I understood that that contention had influenced a vast number of votes in the last election in the province of Ontario, and that it was the general view of hon. gentlemen opposite. I may have been misinformed in that matter, but I am almost certain that I remember when some of these gentlemen were sitting here, they pointed out that one of the great evils of the reciprocity pact was that it was going to lead to the construction of railroads north and south instead of east and west. I thought it was the general consensus of opinion on the other side of the House that it was desirable to have long routes and costly routes so long as they ran from west to east, and not short and cheap routes, to which I am glad that my hon. friend has been converted, because we on this side of the House, trading upon the ordinary methods that guide reasonable human beings, have always held the view that cheap and short routes were good for business.

My hon. friend went on to make what I venture to describe as a somewhat oracular statement. He said it is not desirable to trade to the south. So it would appear that his objection is not to north and south but only to the south. Sir, I want more than the 'ipse dixit' of my hon. friend to convince me of the wisdom of that reflection, and I think if he will reflect he will find there are a great many more people in Canada who want more than his 'ipse dixit' to be converted to that position.

My hon. friend has had a long and an honourable connection with a great railway company. Does the Canadian Pacific railway find it undesirable to trade to the south? If so, why does it build its branches to the south? Is my hon. friend aware that the international boundary line is at present intersected by railways at 42 places? Does not Canadian material pass out of the country at those 42 places? Is it not carried on the freight trains of the company with which my hon. friend has had this long connection? Thus it would appear that my hon. friend is not only a heterodox member of the party opposite but a very heterodox lawyer of the Canadian Pacific railway.

There are some bankers in Canada and during the recent election one was quite prepared to hear them teaching that the poor farmer should not trade north and south. But these bankers, if they have money to invest, do not hold that this principle applies to them; they go to Wall street very readily if they can use their money to profit and advantage there. So they do not have the same fear as my hon. friend of trade to the south.

When I was in British Columbia last summer I learned that the British Columbia government, which of course is a Conservative government—there are none but Conservatives in British Columbia, apparently—was building the finest automobile road on the continent straight down to the United States boundary line, they had a steam roller working on that road, on each side of which was painted the words 'The British Columbia Government,' and which bore a squealing American eagle on the front. They evidently believe there is good business to be done in the south. The province of British Columbia before Confederation was doing a very considerable business with the states to the south by means of boats. My hon. friend knows that, but perhaps his delusion only takes him to the extent of believing that while it is perfectly good to trade with the south in boats it would be bad to do so in railway trains, although I cannot understand an official of the Canadian Pacific railway making that invidious distinction against the train. The fact is railway companies and the British Columbia government and the steamboats on the coast and the bankers can all trade with the south, but when it comes to the case of the poor fisherman wanting a little more for his fish, or the homesteader on the plains wanting a little more for his wheat, he must let it lie on the plains of Saskatchewan and rot.

But he must not think for a moment that he is fit to share the advantages of the superior people who have to do with the great corporations and the banks. It appears to me the most futile contention in the world that we should not do business with the country to the south of us when the fact is that our international trade figures show what ought to satisfy any reasonable man —that we are doing half of our entire business with the United States at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. More than half.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Well, I am always conservative in my statements, however liberal I may be in opinion. Canadian people have found that it is desirable to do business with the country to the south of us. I think I have given sufficient reasons for not accepting the ipse dixit of my hon. friend (Mr. Aikins) upon this question. The hon. gentleman went on to say that, while it is not desirable to trade to the south, it was all right to go north, because, if you are not going to trade with Canadians at least you would be trading with British people, which in his opinion is not so bad as holding truck or trade with these awful Yankees. Personally, if I get a good price for potatoes I do not much care who eats them. It is the money I get for the goods that appeals to me in a matter of trade. But even on the question of trading with the British our friends opposite have undergone a comparatively recent conversion. For, in 1897, when the government of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) introduced the proposition to help trade with the British—the British Preference—it was received with as much virulent opposition from the Conservative party of that day as did the offer of American reciprocity at a more recent day. I congratulate these hon. gentlemen that their minds are expanding. As my right hon. friends said at the Commercial Travellers' dinner at Montreal, expansion is the very watchword of trade. We thought we were following that rule when we wanted to trade with the United States as well as with Great Britain. But the home market apostle would make a ring fence around himself and deal only within his own country. But, Sir, since the days when the British preference was opposed by our friends opposite they have moved forward at least—even they have been capable of some mild expansion. And the future is with men who want to expand. Let us hope that within the next few years they may go back on their policy of recent times and be converted to a further expansion, even though that expansion be in the way of trade with the United States. These hon. gentlemen say: We want the Hudson Bay line if it is practicable to trade with Great Britain. But, until then, would it not be wise to take the opportunity of trading elsewhere? Is it wise, and I am serious in putting this question to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) who has a great deal of the breadth which is the common property of us westerners—is it wise, from his point of view, to follow the course indicated by the hon. member for Brandon? He (Mr. Rogers) is bringing people into this country; he is following his predecessors in an active immigration policy. What to do? To get people on the land. What to do on the land? To raise wheat. Is it a wise policy to bring these people in to raise wheat and then to let that wheat rot on the prairie while you wait until you build a road through a country which now has no population, through icebergs where you can get a look at the seals, in order to establish a route to Britain? Is it wise to do this when you have the offer of free and exclusive entry into a market of one hundred millions of people? It seems to me a policy that inevitably leads to restricted production. Until we can get this outlet, would it not be better, instead of definitely taking the position that we cannot deal with the people to the south, definitely to consider taking that market. Sir William Van Horne referring to the unfortunate condition of affairs in the west, used a very striking metaphor. He said: 'The hopper is too big for the spout.' That is, you cannot bring the stuff east fast enough at the present moment. What would a farmer say when faced by such a condition in his own business? Why he would say: 'Get another spout, or get a bigger one.' But you did not do it, and the people of Canada did not do it; and so the stuff is lying on the prairie at the present moment.

As I said, I did not rise to oppose my hon. friend's motion. I quite agree with him that we need all the information that it is possible to get before we proceed to build railroads anywhere. I quite agree that we cannot have too much information on this subject. But I think there is one thing the country will expect, and that is to know what the government policy is. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) in a short and perfectly easily understood and emphatic deliverance—I think the first he made in this House—said: 'We are not going on with these things until we have made more surveys and got more information.' That is a policy that could not fail to commend itself to the sober judgment of the country; it is a policy which would be perfectly defensible upon any platform. But there have been reports that, as the result of a debate in this House or of something else, the order has since gone out: 'Full steam ahead.' I think it is reasonable for me, as an opposition member, to ask whether the minister has issued that second order conveying second thoughts or whether he still stands by what he said—which no one could fail to understand—that they were going to look into the matter before proceeding with the building of the road.

I do not know that I can agree with my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) that the road would be useless without a terminus. It seems to me clear that the road might be built for one or other, or both, of two purposes: It is said that along one of the projected routes there are ten million acres of splendid arable land. Our homesteads in the west are not so numerous as they were; people will continue to come to Canada; and I have not the least doubt that upon these ten million acres of land, if there be such, we shall have numerous settlers going within a very few years. That being the case the road might be justified as being of service for colonization purposes and for the use of the people who will settle upon these lands.

If my hon. friend looks upon the road as purely a trade route, then, of course he would be obviously correct in stating that the road would be practically useless without a terminus at a proper harbour. That brings one to the question—upon which the hon. gentleman has quoted some extracts from various writers but upon which, I think, he gave no definite opinion himself—of the navigability of Hudson bay. Upon that question, I am bound to say, I myself have no very definite opinion. Therefore I support with all heartiness the bringing down of these papers, because we cannot have too much information upon such a project. But I think we are entitled to know at least what the government are doing and whether the Minister of Railways stands by his first definite statement, to which I have referred or whether there is anything in what has appeared in the newspapers, that since that time he has ordered operations to proceed.

Mr. JAMES McKAY (Prince Albert). It is not my intention to detain the House at length on the subject, as both parties in the House have practically come to the conclusion, at any rate so far as utterances in this House are concerned, that it is necessary that the Hudson Bay railway should be constructed.

Now, a few remarks with regard to the statement of the hon member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). I give credit to that hon. gentleman for the possession of a great deal more intelligence than one would suppose he had, judging from the remarks he has just made with regard to the construction of this road and our trade with the United States. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the first thing the right hon. the leader of the opposition considered when he was introducing legislation for the construction of the National Transcontinental railway, was the development and encouragement of an east and west trade. The underlying principle was not merely the development of an east and west trade, it was more especially the development of the whole Dominion of Canada. As it was so well put by Sir William Van Horne, the hopper was too large for the spout. When that legislation was under discussion, the then Minister of Finance stated that if one transcontinental railway was not sufficient he was prepared to build a second, and to give another spout to carry out the products of that great west. Moreover, when the right hon. the leader of the opposition introduced that legislation be established practically contractual relations between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Dominion of Canada, he provided that they should so build this road and so conduct their business that the trade should go to the Canadian ocean ports in consideration of the assistance they were being given by the Dominion. The right hon. gentleman and his supporters must then have been in favour of the development of the trade in Canada. Now, if the great fertile west is at present producing more than our present railways are able to handle, and which I am prepared to admit, let us look around and see if we cannot construct another spout that will help take out this immense product and still not build up interests to the south of us at the expense of our own. In 1904 the Conservative party in this House was prepared to follow the late government in developing the west, and in providing another outlet for western produce. Let us look around and see if we cannot find still another outlet. I think we can find it in the immediate construction of the Hudson Bay railway. I submit that there has already been sufficient money spent, sufficient investigation made, to establish the partial navigability, at all events, of the Hudson Bay straits, and to warrant the immediate construction of this road. I go further, and submit that the country is pledged to the construction of that road. It is not my intention at this stage to dwell on the question of the navigability of the straits, or to the extent of their navigability. All parties who have looked into the question, I think, are agreed that it is navigable to a sufficient extent to warrant the building of the Hudson Bay railway. Now, for the benefit of those who may think that the transportation facilities we now have are sufficient to carry the products of the great west, I wish to remark that even if we never sent a bushel of grain over the Hudson bay and through the Hudson straits, the building of a railway, and even of more than one railway, is warranted by the nature of the country through which this road is to pass. We have the departmental records and reports which have been carefully made by the gentlemen who compiled them, they have been made by men of experience, and they show that there are millions of acres capable of being cultivated and capable of sustaining a large population, north of the Saskatchewan river. When we look at the map and examine the country through which the road would pass, even if we never took a bushel of grain over the bay and had to bring the grain back into the prairie section and carry it to the east, the distance it would have to go from the furthest point would not exceed the distance from the starting point of this road to the Edmonton district. Now if you carry grain from the district of Edmonton, and north of Edmonton, to the eastern ports, why can you not carry grain from a point 200 miles north of Prince Albert to the east, even if you did not carry it to the bay? I would submit it is a reasonable thing to go on with the construction of the road from that point of view.

Now, I will say a word as to the nature of that country. The last grain statistics report to which I have had access. issued by the late administration for teh year 1910, shows that, in round figures, there were only 13,000,000 acres under grain crop in 1910. The survey made by the Department of the Interior show that there are something like 145,000,000 acres surveyed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Now, when you consider that in 1910, when only 13,000,000 acres were under crop, the product was sufficient to cripple the carrying facilities of our railway system, what will be the case when, with our increase in population, the area under crop will be doubled? The immense west is practically untilled at present. Consequently, it is very important that we should look about for additional means to take our products out as rapidly as possible. By constructing the Hudson Bay railway we will still be following out the policy of the late government in developing our trade in Canada, a policy which the Conservative party in this House and this country have always supported.

In answer to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), if we require another outlet for this immense west in our Dominion, is it not better for us to establish that outlet and develop our cities in our own west instead of developing the cities to the south of us? If the position were that we had no utlet towards Hudson bay then there might be some force and reason in advocating an outlet to the south of us, but why should we develop cities in the neighbouring republic to the detriment of our ports in our own western dominion? I submit that that is a very important reason why we should, as soon as possible, go on with the construction of the Hudson Bay railway.

I was going on to refer to the conditions of the country north of the Saskatchewan river through which this road will be constructed. Though I am not opposing the construction of the Hudson Bay railway from the Pas, if proper investigations had been made with regard to the country farther to the west I think there would have been no doubt but that the government of the day would have come to the conclusion that it would have been much better to build a road from Prince Albert to the bay than from the Pas. But, it is not too late to start that road and everything should be done by the present administration to encourage the construction of a road from Prince Albert to Hudson bay,

It need not necessarily go right to the bay but it could connect with the present road from the Pas to the bay at some point north of the Saskatchewan river. Anybody who has looked into the question will see that it is very difficult to build from Hudson Bay junction to the Pas as well as the first 80 miles from the Pas towards Split lake. We find in the report of Mr. Armstrong that there was more difficult grading done on the construction of the Mackenzie & Mann road from Hudson Bay junction to the Pas than will be encountered from the Pas to the Bay. But we find that the route which will be naturally followed from Prince Albert either towards Split lake or the bay will not be subject to these difficulties that are referred to in Mr. Armstrong's reports and other reports, namely, muskegs and large stretches of low land. What is the condition of the country north of Prince Albert? We find that one of the officials in the Department of the Interior made an investigation of the country north, or we might more accurately say a little north west of Prince Albert, and he refers to a section of country, mark you, extending for a distance 200 miles north of Prince Albert. I now propose to read from the report of Mr. Crean, C.E. of the Department of the Interior.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER. For what year?

Mr. McKAY. For the season 1908-9. At page 18 he states:

> The gross area explored, and about which some information has been collected, is approximately 22,000,000 acres, being that tract outlined in red on the accompanying plan marked 'A.' The water covered area in this tract (area of lakes and rivers) may be set down at approximately 3,000,000 acres—the remaining land area—19,000,000. I would estimate that an area of fully 5,000,000 acres of suitable for settlement as soon as surveyed and made accessible by roads and an area of about 12,000,000 acres of swamp or land probably too wet at present for successful cultivation, could be reclaimed at a moderate expenditure. All the swamp will, however, eventually repay the cost of reclamation.

Now, in practically a small portion of country extending over 200 miles north of Prince Albert we have an official of the government stating that there are 5,000,000 acres now fit for cultivation and, with a little expenditure, 12,000,000 more making 17,000,000 acres fit for cultivation. How many acres did I say, according to the Department of the Interior report in 1910, were under grain crop the product of which crippled the transportation facilities? Why, a lesser area than that—13,000,000 acres—and we find that in that area referred to by Mr. Crean, wheat has been successfully grown—I will not say to any extent, because naturally there was no necessity for cultivating grain to any extent. According to the information that I have been able to collect from people who live in the north they simply cultivated what they required. At a point 200 miles north of Prince Albert one of the oldest Anglican Missions in the west was established. At that point one of the missionaries successfully grew wheat for seven years without it ever having been touched by frost. They had a little mill where they ground the wheat which they used for food. That goes to show that wheat can be successfully grown in that region. I think I am justified in reading a portion of the evidence given by a reverend gentleman who was before the Senate with regard to this question. In a pamphlet published by the late government entitled 'Canada's Fertile North Land', at page 84, the following evidence is given:

> Evidence of the Venerable Archdeacon J. McKay, of the Church of England, Diocese of Saskatchewan, heard before the Select Committee on February 27, 1907.
> Archdeacon McKay explained that he had been forty-five years in the west, in charge of missions of the Church of England, and was ten years at a place on the Churchill river, a little north of Lac la Ronge. The nearest point to Lac la Ronge on the map is where the Anglican mission is situated, about ten miles north of Lac la Ronge, on the Churchill river. This is about due north from Prince Albert, and in a straight line it would be considerably over two hundred miles from Prince Albert.
> So far as agriculture at Lac la Ronge is concerned, witness had raised good wheat on that point on the Churchill river for seven years in succession without having it frosted. The climate is good.
> The witness had travelled the country about Lake la Ronge pretty freely and if it were clear of timber it would be in his opinion all generally fair agricultural land.

According to an official of the department we have some seventeen million acres of land in that vicinity, and we have the evidence of this reverend gentleman, who states that for seven years he successfully grew wheat 200 miles north of Prince Albert without it ever having been frosted. I submit that that section of the country is worthy of consideration. To-day there is a railway built and operated some one hundred miles through that section, and as fast as the land is surveyed, and as fast as the railway is being built homesteaders are taking up land along the road, shipping out grain and making a successful living. We come now to the country north and northeast of Prince Albert, and so far as I am aware no official has made a report on that section, presumably because it is well known to be good land. One of the surveyors of the Department of the Interior has been subdividing townships in that section, and within the last year or two he has continued his work to a distance of 125 miles northeast of Prince Albert. He has made no report on the quality of the land because his business was to subdivide it, but in conversation with gentlemen in Prince Albert he has stated:

All that land is good. From where I concluded my subdivision the country appears to be not so good for agricultural purposes as it is more a timber country, but for 125 miles out from Prince Albert the country is a good agricultural country. The whole of that distance I would say would be an excellent farming country. I was there in the winter and summer both. I worked for three years in that district. That country is just waiting for settlers; it is just waiting for a railroad. It is principally agricultural for the first 125 miles from Prince Albert and past that we get into some timber country.

According to other authorities this timber country is also good agriculture land when cleared, but this gentleman is speaking of what may be considered open glades in the bush, and not covered with such large timber as is found further north. Now, Mr. Speaker, why are we surveying that country, and why are we getting people to go into it? I know, of my own knowledge, that to the extent of some thirty or forty miles north of Prince Albert, homesteaders are in there now, and they are going further north as the land is surveyed. Will not these people require the government to build a railroad into that country in which they are being induced to locate? When we come a little further east we find that the section immediately north of the Pas was explored by Mr. MacInnes of the Geological Survey, and in his evidence given before the Senate committee he made the following statement:

The whole region from Split lake to a line of about forty miles north of the Saskatchewan is a clay covered country. The witness computed the area of this country at about 10,000 square miles.

Here you have about 6,000,000 acres according to that estimate. In that country, north of the Saskatchewan river, and immediately north of the Pas, we have an area of 10,000 square miles which has been explored and pronounced to be good land. Going farther west, between that and Prince Albert, we have the surveyors' statements that there is good arable land there, and going a little farther we have Mr. Crean's report—who has spent more time there than any of these other gentlemen—that there are something like 17,000,000 acres of good land. Consequently, if we build the road from the Pas, we will be going through an immense area of good land, according to Mr. MacInnes' report, and if we build farther west from Prince Albert to connect with that line, in territory where settlers are already building their homes, we will find another large area of good land tributary to these railways. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that I have given good reasons for the construction of these roads. Of course, I do not contend for a moment that we would ever have to abandon the Hudson bay route so far as the ocean navigation is concerned. I do not intend to go into the relative distances of the Hudson bay ports, and the other ports in the east from the European market, or the immense advantage it would be to the west to build the Hudson Bay railway because all that is contained in these reports, and it has been dwelt upon very favourably in this House. I submit that for these considerations alone—and there are many others that could be enlarged upon—it is urgent that the Hudson Bay railway should be constructed as speedily as possible. The building of the Hudson Bay railway has been a factor in the west for many years. and for many years there was a land grant for the building of it on the statute-book, which was repealed some time about 1908, and something else substituted. One important point for us to consider is: How will the government build this road, and who is to bear the burden of it. I understand that the land grant I have referred to would have sufficed to build the road, but in lieu of the repeal of these land clauses, legislation was introduced allowing the selling of homesteads and pre-emptions.

The then Minister of Interior made the following statement, which will be found in 'Hansard' of 1907-8, vol. 6, page 11,135.

The pre-emption provision of the Bill of last year was placed in the Bill for the purpose of ensuring and securing the building of the Hudson Bay railway. It was placed there in the room and instead of the provision which had been in the Lands Act since 1882 setting aside a matter of 6,500,000 acres of Northwest lands for the building of the railway.

Of course, that was not the Bill that was eventually passed, but the then Minister of the Interior announced the principle on which he was making the change. Then, farther on, referring to the Act which was in fact passed, he said:

By applying the pre-emption provision of this Bill to that area, we will create a new source of revenue which will provide sufficient money to ensure the construction of a railway to Hudson bay.

The provision there referred to was the selling of these homesteads and pre-emptions. Just what quantity of land has been sold and what amount of money has been collected from this source I am not prepared to say; but in looking into the matter I find that from the sale of homesteads over $2,000,000 will be collected and from the sale of pre-emptions over $24,000,000. I am not prepared to say how much of the land thus sold was in the area set apart for the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. Of course, I do not for a moment pretend that this money was set apart in a special account for the construction of the road; but I submit that the administration of that day, the members of this House who supported that measure, and the country at large, were led to believe that the revenues derived from the sale of those homesteads and pre-emptions would so increase the revenue of the Dominion that the government of the day would be in duty bound to build the railway. Now, I submit that there have been sufficient areas set apart and sufficient moneys acquired from the sale of those homesteads and pre-emptions not only to build the Hudson Bay railway from the Pas, but to build another branch from Prince Albert to the Pas road, or if necessary to assist any corporation that may be willing to undertake the construction of another road; because I claim that one road will not be sufficient; we should have as many roads through that country as through any other section, because there is a great deal of good land there for settlement. The road can be built undoubtedly as a colonization road, at any rate for a distance of 125 miles from Prince Albert, according to actual surveys made by the surveyors of the Department of the Interior, and we know that there is a great deal of good land beyond it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that these are good and sufficient reasons for the west demanding that the Hudson Bay railway should be constructed immediately. We in the west contend that this road can be built without putting any further burdens of taxation upon any other section of the Dominion; it can be built out of our own lands. We in the west undoubtedly require further transportation facilities, and, therefore, it is only right that we should press the matter, in view of the fact that the building of this road will promote the development of the whole of Canada. All we ask is that this road should be built by selling some of our lands, and if the government of the day look at the matter in the proper light, they will, I am sure, proceed with the construction of the Hudson Bay railway as energetically and as quickly as possible.

Before sitting down, I have a word or two to say with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), in reply to the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins). If I understood him rightly, I did not think he took umbrage in any way at what was said in favour of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway; but he seems to have a hankering after the markets to the south. But I hardly think the hon. member was serious in what he said, because he must surely know that we can have very extensive trade relations with the United States without injuring Canada or sacrificing the development of Canada; but we must regulate that trade and control our own fiscal policy. We can go on and trade with the United States as we have been doing, but at the same time we must look to the development of our western country. The hon. gentleman said that he understood that there were no burdens, but only blessings. Surely he was not serious in that. It does not matter how good an administration may be, we must have a revenue to carry on the affairs of the country, and in order to get that revenue we must have some burden in the way of taxation. In that sense the National Policy is a burden, and, as the hon. member for Brandon said, under present circumstances the farmers of the east are perhaps more capable of bearing that burden than the people of the west. But the burden is one from which, under the Conservative administration of that policy, blessings flow, and, therefore the National Policy has always been distributing blessings throughout the wide Dominion of Canada.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton). Mr. Speaker, I do not in any way wish to counter the resolution offered by the hon. member for Brandon in which he asks for information in regard to the Hudson Bay railway and route. We who believe in the Hudson bay route feel that the more information there is secured in regard to that route the better it will stand in the estimation of the people of Canada. But I would not like him or the House to understand that my support of this resolution would in any way be considered to justify a delay of one moment in pushing the construction of the railway. I agree most fully with what the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. McKay) has said, that there is now before the people of Canada ample evidence to warrant the government of the day carrying forward the policy of their predecessors and securing the early construction of a railway to Hudson bay, the opening of a new route to the British market for the products of our western prairies. I wish to repeat that for myself, and for the vast majority of the people of western Canada we believe that there is, and has been ample evidence to support the late government in its policy, and to support the present government in the continuation of that policy if they should so decide. If their policy is not a policy of the early construction of the Hudson Bay railway, then I can only assure them that they will receive the fullest condemnation from the people of the west that it is possible to afford them. We look at this particular time more than ever before for an increase of transportation facilities for western products. When the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) introduced his Transcontinental Railway policy in 1903 he spoke of the great necessity of the early completion of the work then undertaken. To-day we in western Canada are placed in a position immeasurably more urgent than ever occurred before in the history of that country. The grain blockade of this year is producing more serious results than any blockade that has occurred in any previous year. Either the railway companies which are to-day transporting the products of that country are absolutely inadequately equipped, and unable to handle the traffic, or they are guilty of not using the endeavours that they should use in handling that traffic. This conclusion is absolutely irresistible.

Without discussing at any length the merits of the Hudson Bay railway, it must appeal to any man who considers that the cost of transportation of the great product of the west is the chief burden that the producer of that grain has to bear, that any plan which will cut out 1,000 miles of rail, or rail and water transportation between the producer of the grain in the west and the consumer in Great Britain, will surely be a stupendous benefit not only to the producer of the grain, but to every interest in the Dominion of Canada that benefits by the prosperity of the producer of that grain. I need not emphasize that from the heart of the grain fields of the west to Liverpool by way of Hudson bay cuts out 1,000 miles of rail or rail and water transportation. Somebody must get the benefit of that reduced cost in transportation, and we are of the opinion that the producer of the grain would receive a large part, if not the whole of that benefit.

It is said that the route will not be open for a long period during the season. Some people claim it will be open for five months, and some for only three, but I say that if it is only open for one month the construction of the railway would be justified. To reach tide water by a line of railway from the wheat fields only as long as the rail route from Winnipeg to Fort William would enable an enormous amount of wheat to be handled by that route in only one month of the year as compared with the time required for the handling of a similar amount of grain to Fort William and then by the long rail or rail and water haul from Fort William to Montreal. There is everything to gain by the shortening of the route, and the cheapening of the cost of transportation of western products, and there is nothing to lose.

Let me point out something that has perhaps not yet been considered in connection with this northern seaport on Canada's eastern coast. There is to-day being developed for settlement in the far northwest the Peace River country.

To-day—this very day—there are hundreds of people who are on their way, in this cold winter weather, to take up homesteads in the Peace River country. Any person who takes the trouble to look at the map will see that, whatever advantage there may be to the rest of the prairie country in securing a railroad outlet to Fort Churchill on Hudson bay, that advantage is accentuated enormously in the case of settlers in the Peace River country should there ever be a direct railroad connection between that country and Hudson bay. My hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay) said that the possible settlers one or two hundred miles north of Prince Albert could find the present eastern outlet for their grain at a less haul than the people of Edmonton to-day. That is true. And if that be true in regard to Edmonton how much more true is it in regard to the Peace River country, three hundred or three hundred and fifty miles northwest from Edmonton. The ultimate prospect of the development of the Peace River country depends primarily upon Canada securing the opening of the Hudson Bay route or, secondarily, upon securing an equally northern outlet to the Pacific coast.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SMALLPOX AT OTTAWA POST OFFICE.

Mr. PELLETIER. I think perhaps the importance of the matter justifies me in making an announcement to the House. In the city post office this afternoon there has been discovered a case of smallpox. Unfortunately, the man was allowed to remain there two or three hours before his removal. We have been requested by the health authorities to act promptly in the matter; we have done so, and the city post office is now closed. If hon. members have any pressing messages to send, I would advise them to use the telephone or the wire. I do not know how long we shall be deprived of the use of the city post office. I may have something more to say before the House adjourns.

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. OLIVER. When the House rose at six o'clock, I was trying to show the advantage that would be gained by the Peace River country, now in process of development, by taking the route by way of Hudson bay, over other sections of the west. A glance at the map will convince any one that with the distance west and distance north, the advantage resulting from the adoption of the Hudson Bay route is increased; that is to say, the Peace River country would have a maximum of advantage and the city of Winnipeg would have a minimum of advantage. As you increase the advantage going west or north, so you decrease the advantage going south or east. But all parts of the country, whether east or west, or north or south, would necessarily be benefited by the addition of a supplementary outlet such as the railway to Hudson bay. At the present time all parts of the country without distinction are suffering for the lack of an adequate outlet; so an increase in outlets would necessarily be to the general advantage of the whole country, whether the locality was east or west, or north or south. But the direct advantage would lie more strongly with the part which is to the west and to the north.

On this point I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that the present located starting point of the government construction at the crossing of the Saskatchewan called the Pas, is probably the most generally advantageous point from which a start could be made; that is to say, the advantages and disadvantages are averaged up by starting from that point. There is a maximum of advantage and a minimum of disadvantage such as could not be obtained were the starting point made farther east or farther west. The choice of this particular point on the Saskatchewan river as a starting point for a government-constructed Hudson Bay railway, was made after careful consideration, and with due regard to all the circumstances of the case. We are satisfied to rest on that point, and if my hon. friend should see fit to change that starting point he will do it to the detriment of the general interests of the northwest. In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay), I entirely coincide with him as to the probable desirability of a connecting railroad from Prince Albert to some point on the Hudson Bay railway for colonization purposes, and for the purpose of still further shortening the route between the country tributary to Prince Albert and Hudson bay. But even my hon. friend from Prince Albert will admit that if the only road were from Prince Albert, then a large part of the eastern portion of Saskatchewan and the whole of the province of Manitoba would be placed at a serious disadvantage in the matter of railroad distance to the bay. All interests can be served by using the present starting point, and ultimately making a connection from Prince Albert to a point on the direct road from the Pas to Hudson bay, such connection being, as my hon. friend has pointed out, desirable and even necessary for the development of the agricultural portion of that country. So whatever information the Minister of Railways may have had, I want to assure him on behalf of the late government and on behalf of this side of the House, that we are prepared to take our stand on the proposition that the Pas is the proper starting point for the railway to be constructed by the government from the Saskatchewan river to Hudson bay, or in other words, for a connection of the existing railway lines in the prairie provinces by way of a railway to Hudson bay.

Now, while we are discussing this question of the Hudson Bay railway, it may not be out of place to make a comparison between the advantages of the proposed route by way of Hudson bay and the conditions on the existing route by way of Fort William to Montreal. I have heard some people criticise the proposed Hudson bay route in comparison with the route by the lakes to Montreal, on the apparent assumption that all the grain of the prairie provinces was transported to Montreal or tide water by that route in the season of growth. It seems to be assumed that all the crop of the west could be moved to tide water by way of Fort William before the close of navigation in each succeeding year. That is, of course, absurd. I have not the actual figures, nor is it necessary to present them for the purpose of demonstrating the conditions. We will assume that the crop of the west, 80,000,000 bushels, goes forward to tide water, and that of the total amount, certainly not the whole, and certainly not the half, and for purposes of ease of calculation I will say one-quarter, finds its way by Fort William to Montreal or New York in the season of growth. We will assume for ease of calculation that another quarter or 20,000,000 bushels, goes forward by all rail during winter months, which leaves half of the total amount remaining in storage, either in the country elevators or in the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur during the winter months. Now compare these conditions with those by way of Hudson bay. We would have in each season of growth, say three months, in the fall to transport the grain from the wheat fields by way of Fort William to tide water. But by the Hudson Bay route, if you like to say so, we would have only one month, as against three months by way of Fort William and Port Arthur. We will assume that. I do not admit for a moment that that would be the limit, but I am assuming that, so as to make the argument in favour of the St. Lawrence route as strong as its friends could possibly desire. That would mean that half of the total crop going at the present time via Fort William has to remain in storage for not less than five, or six, or seven months before it reaches the market.

You must remember that the terminal elevators are not emptied on the day that navigation opens. Navigation opens at Fort William some time in May and during May and June, and possibly July, the process of emptying those elevators is going on; so that grain which went into storage in Fort William in early December may possibly only be released from storage some time in July. What would occur in the case of grain going by way of Hudson bay would be that grain which went into storage in the latter part of October would remain in storage until, say, August, to give the most extreme limit that any person could ask, before it would be released. The difference then would be as between five months storage in one case, and, at the outside, nine months storage in the other; that is four months is the possible difference in the time of storage. Now, the storage costs approximately half a cent a bushel a month, or, in other words, the extra storage at Churchill as against Fort William would be only a matter of two cents a bushel. Over and against that increased storage and the extra length of time upon which interest will have to be paid—a difference, remember, not altogether between five and nine months but with respect to a great deal of the grain, between seven and nine months—would be the fact that ocean vessels of the largest size can reach port at Churchill during the season of navigation whether that season be long or short. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, and it cannot be denied that during, we will say, the middle portion of the season of navigation, the Hudson bay route from Liverpool to Churchill and other Hudson Bay ports is no longer and is much safer than the route to Montreal because it must be remembered that the route to Montreal is not devoid of difficulty. There is a very long river channel to be followed and there are the straits to be passed, there are fogs and shallows and difficulties along the St. Lawrence route to a very much greater degree than those which are to be encountered upon the route by way of Hudson bay, barring possibly the presence of ice at certain seasons of the year. Besides that let it be understood that there is not only cut out of the calculation the cost of transportation for a thousand miles of lake and rail, but there is also cut out, at any rate, one, and possibly two, handlings of the grain in its disposed at Churchill and from the elevator in the prairie provinces would be discharged at Churchill and from the elevator there, would be discharged directly into the Liverpool vessel, but the grain that goes to Fort William is discharged into the lake carrier, the lake carrier, then, if it goes by way of Port Colborne, possibly discharges at Port Colborne or possibly partially at Kingston and in any case must discharge again at Montreal; or, if it goes to a Georgian bay port, it discharges at the Georgian bay port and again there must be an elevator charge at Montreal. So that we not only cut out a thousand miles of distance but we cut out one or two loading charges and delays. Taking all these things into consideration there is no question that the advantages of the Hudson bay route are stupendously in excess of those of the St. Lawrence route in such part of the season as there is no difficulty from ice.

The evidence that there is a part of the season in which there is no difficulty from ice is that for over 200 years the Hudson Bay Company have navigated the Hudson straits and bay with vessels year after year, vessels that were not as manageable, or as easily handled, as the vessels of today, and yet they handled the traffic year in and year out profitably and with advantage to themselves. It was only in comparatively recent years that any other route was known into the northwest except the route by Hudson bay. It is only of recent years that any doubt was ever raised to the possibility or practicability of the navigation of Hudson bay and straits.

I wish to say, so far as the people of western Canada are concerned, that there is the most urgent and pressing necessity for increasing the outlets for their great product; and the Hudson bay route offers to them the easiest, the quickest and the most certain means of securing such an outlet as compared with any other existing or prospective routes. I want to refer for a moment to what my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay) has said with regard to the cost of this road and as to who is to bear the cost. He reminded the House that at one time there was a land grant set apart by Act of parliament to aid in the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. This Act was passed, it must have been twenty-five or thirty years ago, and it remained on the statute-book during many years, or until it was demonstrated that it had no usefulness, that it would not achieve the object that it was intended for. When it became evident that this proposed land grant would not secure the construction of the road it became desirable for the government of the day to take other means and the principle was adopted of providing for the sale of land in a certain part of the western country on settlement conditions with the view, as my hon. friend has said, of providing an additional source of revenue sufficient to meet the cost of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway out of the treasury of the Dominion of Canada. There is no question who is going to pay for the Hudson Bay railway under that policy; the men who buy the land are the settlers of the west and they will have to find the money out of the product of that land. While it would be improper to make any suggestion of east against west or west against east, I would like to say to the House that, when it is an absolute fact that western Canada looks upon this road as a necessity to its welfare and when such provision has been made in the statute that western money will actually be provided to build it, it looks very much to me like a case of setting the east against the west if the government of the day would fail to go on with the construction of that road, and to use otherwise the money especially provided to secure for the west that additional outlet to which it is entitled and which is a necessity to its welfare. It was in 1908 that the Act providing for the sale of pre-emptions came into force. Payments upon the pre-emptions did not accrue until three years after their being entered for, but the three years having elapsed the payments on account will now begin to be made. There have been already very large payments in regard to purchased homesteads and interest on the pre-emptions, and I am satisfied that the work of constructing the railroad will not now go forward faster than the money for the sale of these pre-emptions will come into the treasury to meet its charge. There is consequently every reason why there should be no delay in pushing this work forward. There is no question as to the propriety of the starting point, there is no question that for the distance that was covered by the contract let by the late government the road is practicable and is common to either Nelson or Churchill. If the government is not able to decide between the respective advantages of these two ports before that one hundred and eighty-five miles of railway can be built, then I can only say that the government will have been very dilatory in seeking information or else they will have made very bad use of the information they have received. The people of the west are looking to this government, as they looked to their predecessors, to press construction as fast as it can be done, and they look with very very grave disapprobation upon the action of the Minister of Railways in ordering the cessation of work upon the contract that had been let. Such action was not an implementing of the very definite promises made by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition. The Rt. Hon. Mr. Borden visited the West during the past year, and he was particular in all cases to declare for the early construction, nay for the immediate construction, of the Hudson Bay railway. He made light of the intentions of the late government and questioned the smallness of the vote taken for construction purposes. In view of the fact that those arguments were used by him, (and they were used by him beyond any question), the people of the west have the right to feel aggrieved that the very first action taken by his government was to order work to be stopped upon the contract already let. I hope that before this debate closes the Minister of Railways will be able to announce to the House—as has already been announced in the papers and contradicted by the papers as well—that orders have been given to resume construction upon the Hudson Bay railway, and that he will assure the House there will be no delay in pushing that work to its completion.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, as I am very deeply interested in the question brought to the notice of the House by our eloquent friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins), I feel that I would not be doing my duty to my constituents and to the people of the west if I did not add a few words to convince this government—as I endeavoured when I was upon the other side of the House to convince the late government—that the most important issue before the people of this country to-day is the building of the Hudson Bay railway. We have had in the west a number of very important questions to settle, and I do not say that we have settled them all. We have had the educational question which is not without its difficulties; we have had the immigration question, which by the showing of the last census does not seem to have been very well settled; we have had the question of the administration of justice in that new country, but Sir, I am convinced—and I am convinced of it because of my knowledge of the feeling which prevails amongst the people of the west—that the question of transportation is regarded by them as of supreme importance. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), in his remarks hinted at there being an east and a west, but let me tell him that during the last campaign I laid it down as a cardinal principle that there should be no east and no west, and that if we are ever to become the great nation we hope to then it behooves the representatives of the people to forego anything which would lead to even the suggestion of a division of our grand Dominion into an east and a west. The question of the improvement in our means of transportation is a question of common interest to the east and to the west. I do not need to tell my hon. friends on the other side of the House from the west what position the farmers of that country are in to-day. We thought first when the Canadian Pacific railway was built that there would not be work enough for it to do, and the same doubt arose in the minds of many people when the Canadian Northern was constructed. Then, we got the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, and whatever our friends on the other side may say, I state on the very highest authority that no Conservative in Canada ever contended that we did not need a third transcontinental line. We may have criticised the manner in which it was proposed to build that railroad, but we always admitted there was need for it. What is the condition in the west to-day? Are the members of this House receiving any correspondence about education or immigration or the administration of justice, which were live issues in the past? No, Sir, not one per cent of our correspondence refers to these matters, but our constituents are pouring in communications asking for better facilities for the transportation of their grain, and that is easily understood, for what benefit is it to the farmer to have one thousand bushels or ten thousand bushels of wheat if he cannot get it transported to the market?

I say that the live issue in this country to-day is the building of the Hudson Bay railway. Let us have as many transcontinental lines as we like, the long land distance will always be detrimental to the profits of the farmers of the west. I was surprised, in studying the question of reciprocity, to find the great difference in cost between land transportation and sea transportation. When I found that wheat could be carried from the Argentine Republic to Montreal, a distance of 6,000 miles, for 5½ cents a bushel, less than it costs to carry wheat from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, when I found that butter could be carried from Denmark to Montreal at one cent a pound, I began to realize the importance of our getting the Hudson Bay railway. I believe the late government has been humbugging the people of the west over this Hudson Bay railway question for the last 15 years. In my experience of 30 years no government, Tory or Grit, has gone to the country without having as a leading plank in its platform the building of the Hudson Bay railway. I do not think I need tell the present government that the feeling of the western countries to-day, and the feeling of the rest of Canada too, is that we want that road built, and built now. I shall regret very much if the principal plank in the Conservative platform in the next election will be the building of the Hudson Bay railway, because I want to see this road built, if possible, as Mr. Borden promised, within the next four or five years. I would like to ask the late Minister of Interior if there is anybody in this House or in this country to-day who can tell us which is the better port, Nelson or Churchill. Each of us may have his opinion on the subject, but is it not time, after these thirty years, that the government of the day or the late government should be able to answer that question? I am told that there is very little information upon which we can rely; but I say this: we want that road built. The people of the west are very much in earnest in this matter. There are at least 175,000,000 acres of tillable land that will grow wheat or other grains in the three provinces, and to-day only between 14,000,000 and 15,000,000 acres of that is cultivated. See what it will mean when even 10,000,000 acres more are cultivated. The transportation facilities we have to-day are absolutely inadequate to carry out the grain we produce at present. The late Minister of Interior says that it is to the best interest of Canada that that road should go from the Pas. I do not care where it goes from; I want to see a road to Hudson bay, and that is what the people want. I am glad to see it stated that the government are going to start the road from the Pas. I understand that they can build not only the 175 miles from the Pas which was the contract of the late government, without knowing what their destination will be, but even 275 miles. I understand that a four-tenths grade can be got by the Fort Churchill route, and it will go well towards Nelson in order to get to Churchill. The great object is to get the shortest route possible. My hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay), and I do not blame him, says the route should start from Prince Albert. Give us one trunk line to Hudson bay, and you will soon see branch lines built from Prince Albert, Edmonton and many other towns. Now, the distance from Vancouver to Liverpool by the C. P. R., which is the shortest route at present, is 5,868 miles; from Vancouver to Liverpool by the Hudson Bay road, the distance is 4,568, or a difference of 1,300 miles. I understood my hon. friend to say that the distance from Churchill to Liverpool was about the same as from Montreal to Liverpool. Well, according to the very best figures I can get, from Winnipeg to Montreal by land is 1,422 miles, whereas the distance from Winnipeg to Churchill is 945 miles, a difference of 477 miles. The very shortest land route, which is what we want to reduce freight rates, is by the Hudson bay. Is it the fault of the harbours of Fort Churchill and Port Nelson that we have so much opposition to the construction of this road, or is it a question of the navigation of the straits? I am led to believe that it is largely the latter.

As my hon. friend said, we have had the Hudson Bay Company for a century and a half sending 750 vessels through the straits and Hudson bay and losing only two ships. What kind of ships were employed by the Hudson's Bay Company in their trading? As every one knows they must have been exceedingly crude. They had not the aids to navigation that we have to-day, and with the present strong type of ships and efficient aids to navigation the danger of navigating these waters would be still further reduced. I have heard men high in authority ask how the grain is to be got to the old country after it reaches Hudson bay. What was the old government doing that it did not get some information about that? That is what I blame our governments for, whether Grit or Tory. This is not a new question, it has not been sprung on this government nor was it sprung on the old government, it has been discussed in this House and in the country for years, and to say now that we cannot go on with this road because we have not sufficient information is not doing justice to the intelligence of this government or any other government that puts up such a plea. It is an old old story, and I have no desire to take up the time of the House in discussing it. I stated my views three or four years ago and to-night, supporting the government, I maintain the position I stated when in opposition. Thousands and thousands of bushels of grain are to-day lying either at the stations in the western country or in the granary. What does that mean to the producers of that grain? What would it mean to my friends from Annapolis county if they could not ship their apples? The question is a broad one, it reaches out, it does not affect the farmers alone, but the merchants, the mechanics and every other class of citizen. They cannot pay their bills, they are in just the same position as if the Annapolis valley fruit growers could not market their crop.

Then why should we spend our time arguing whether we should build the Hudson Bay railway? That question has been settled long, long ago. I do not wish to raise any question of west and east. You say you want the Georgian Bay canal and I am with you, for that looks to me like a splendid proposition, for water transportation, I claim, is the only transportation that a farmer can afford to use. We cannot afford to raise wheat in the west with the rise of wages and other conditions in that country and still have these long land hauls. Our friends in the east need not be afraid of all the wheat going through Hudson bay. When I state that only 15,000,000 acres are being cultivated out of 150,000,000 or 175,000,000 acres, it will be evident that there will be plenty of wheat for all the roads to carry. I am in sympathy with what the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) said in reference to the time this grain would have to be in the elevators if it went to Hudson bay. When I addressed the House before he produced the statistics for 50 years in reference to the period of open navigation in Hudson bay and showed that the shortest period for which the bay and straits were open and in which they could transport wheat was over four months, and that sometimes navigation was open for five and a half months. How much more open navigation than five and a half months will you have in the river St. Lawrence?

Mr. SCHAFFNER.

I repeat that this question has been sufficiently discussed. It is evident that the time has come for action and the needs of the country demand the immediate construction of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, when you read the motion of my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) I read it over carefully and I wondered whether it was intended to help on the construction of the railway, because in that motion the hon. member asks for copies of papers and documents that are all available and at the hands of the government. I wondered whether the purpose of the motion was not rather to give the hon. member an opportunity of making a speech and of expressing repentance for some of the sins he committed during the last election campaign, because every word that he said and every word uttered by my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay) and my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) has been an absolute condemnation of the policy of the government during the last campaign. They have pointed out in their speeches the conditions as they exist in the west to-day. They have dwelt on the difficulties under which we labour and all those difficulties practically would have vanished if the grand offer that was made us of trading with the country to the south had been accepted and the people of the west had been able to sell their produce where there is a market for it and where the money is waiting to pay for it.

My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) the other night took me to task for saying something about the government operating the Intercolonial railway, and suggesting that they might much better hand it over to a company. He criticised me for talking about the east and the west, saying that there should be no east and no west, that we should all be Canadians, and he gave us quite a little screed on loyalty. Sir, I do not have to take my loyalty from a member of a party whose leader says: Not a ship, not a dollar, not a man to help the British Empire, a party some of whose members say they have to shoot bullet holes through the British flag to breathe the air of liberty. But if I was wrong the other night in any way, what about my hon. friend from Brandon who to-night talks about the east and the west and points out the disadvantages under which the west is suffering as compared with the east. I trust my hon, friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) will take his own follower to task for trying to raise issues as between the east and the west.

I was surprised to hear my hon. friend from Brandon acknowledge that the National Policy weighed heavy on the people of the west. It is about the first time that we have heard members on that side of the House make that concession. Usually they try to make out that that policy is all right, but I think my hon. friend from Brandon is beginning to find out that the sentiment of the west will not stand such talk very much longer and he is finding out what his own people think on this question. Therefore he is trying to square himself with his own people, at least that is what it looked like to-night. He pointed out that one of the difficulties confronting us in the west was that we did not have manufactures to the extent that they have down here in the east. That is very true, and for many a long year to come it will remain true. There is no question that the west will never be the manufacturing end of Canada. It cannot possibly be because in most cases the goods can be manufactured much more cheaply in the east than in the west, and the result will be that we in the west, instead of putting our energies into the manufacturing of goods, will continue to buy our manufactured goods from the eastern manufacturer, and in order to pay for these goods we should be put in a position where we may sell our product to the best advantage and thus be best able to help out the manufacturers of the east. My hon. friend from Brandon pointed out that the people of the west had to pay for a long haul to get their products to the market. That is true, Mr. Speaker. And not only have we the long haul but we have to pay double prices as compared with those paid by the farmers of the east to convey our products of the farm to the markets of Great Britain or of eastern Canada. That is what we have been complaining of all along. My hon. friend from Brandon acknowledges the long haul, I would like to see him go a little further and say that the time has come when the Canadian Pacific railway—and he is a great friend of the Canadian Pacific railway; has been its solicitor in the west for the last twenty or twenty-five years and is intimately identified with that road—and the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway and all other roads should be, by law if necessary, compelled to carry the produce of the farms in the west at the same price as they are carrying similar products for in the east, instead of charging two prices. Within the last two months, the Canadian Pacific railway, in the freight rate investigation, made the statement that while it costs $5.45 to move 1,000 tons of freight, one mile on the Montreal division—that is, between Montreal and Chalk river—yet on the western lines from Chalk river to the Rocky Mountains it only costs $3.75 for the same service. In other words these railways can carry freight in the west for about two thirds of what it costs them in the east. Yet, for the past twenty years they have been charging us almost double. So, if the object of my hon. friend is to hasten the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, I am with him heart and soul. But I only hope that when he gets these papers they will enable him and the government he supports to go on with the construction of that road without unnecessary delay. The hon. gentleman seems now very anxious that whilst we trade east and west the people of the west should also be allowed to trade to the north. True he puts a bar against the farmer trading to the south. But he does not put a bar to the Canadian Pacific railway trading to the south, for, while that company has one road running from the west to the east it has six roads running south into the United States. Why were these roads built by the Canadian Pacific railway? Of course, to make traffic between Canada and the United States. We heard a great deal of talk to the effect that the western farmer should not be allowed to sell his goods in the United States. He is even said to be a disloyal man if he attempts to do that. But do we hear any of these gentlemen say that it is wrong for the easterner to sell his products to the United States? If it is wrong for the western farmer to sell his goods across the line, what is the meaning of these forty-two railways that cross the line between Canada and the United States? Would my hon. friend from Brandon suggest that we should tear up these tracks and not allow traffic between Canada and the United States? I do not think he would take that position. So it comes down to this, that the western farmer can be allowed to trade with the United States provided you tax him high both on the goods he sells and on the goods he buys from that country. But something has to be done to better conditions in the west. I see by the latest issue of the 'Grain Growers' Guide' that at 133 points there is a shortage of 7,000 cars. Anybody who knows the west knows that there are a great many more than 133 points that are calling for cars so in all probability there is a shortage of over 10,000 cars at the present moment. That means that 10,000,000 bushels of wheat—for these cars have an average capacity of 1,000 bushels or over—that should have been transported months ago has not been transported yet. It means that the farmers have to carry that wheat probably all winter or pay storage on it at Fort William. It means that they have to lose in price on account of not being able to ship their wheat and also have to lose the interest on accounts that they owe. Every one in the west is feeling the cost of the lack of cars to remove the crop. Let me read what has taken place at one town in the west. Here is a despatch published in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of recent date:

Tugaske, Sask., Jan. 9.—The car shortage here is the worst in the history of the town. Farmers come often as far as twenty miles with their sleigh loads of grain and get here just before daylight so as to get their wagons unloaded should any cars have come in during the night. Many of them are disappointed and they have to turn their loads round and drive back home again.

Between the dates of September 30 and December 31, 1911, there were 589 cars ordered. To date there have been only 203 delivered. It is estimated, quite conservatively, that there will be required at least 1,000 cars to handle the crops. Business is paralyzed throughout the whole district. Farmers cannot meet their financial obligations and must submit to the harrassments of their creditors. Banks are getting tired of running an extended line of credit and are closing down. Merchants cannot meet their accounts with the wholesalers and commerce is disorganized.

So, you see, there is a very bad condition of affairs in the west. My hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) made one statement with which I entirely agree—in fact I agree with a great deal of what he said on this occasion. He said that the people of the east had no need to fear that all the wheat would go by the Hudson Bay railway if that railway were built. That is quite true. And in the same way the people of Canada, the people of the east especially, had no need to fear that all of the wheat, or even anything like half the wheat, would have gone into the United States if reciprocity had come into force. But there would have been another market. And, instead of being able to ship only east and west—and north if the Hudson Bay railway is built—we would have been able to ship east and west and north and south. The Hudson Bay road leads us to England. And that is a good market; nobody says it is not a good market.

But there are many times in the year, in my constituency at all events, there is no time of the year that we cannot draw our wheat across the lines and get more money for it than by shipping it to England, or down to eastern Canada. I had a letter the other day from one of my constituents who is farming on the Canadian side of the line, and in the fall he goes over to the town of Ambrose, in North Dakota, two or three miles south of the boundary line, where he buys nothing else but Canadian wheat and flax. He buys there every year from 50,000 to 200,000 bushels of Canadian grain that has been drawn across the line, paying the duty, and sold in the United States or shipped in bond through to Great Britain. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that if it were not for the duties on the products of the western farmer, he would be able to sell his crop; it would not be stacked up in sacks as it is now, lying in the open field on the prairie. He would be able to sell his grain and get a better price for it, the merchant would be able to pay the wholesaler in Winnipeg, and the wholesaler would be able to pay the manufacturer in the east, and we would have a much better state of affairs all round. The western farmer would have been just as loyal under those conditions as he is to-day. Everybody knows it; I do not believe there is a man on the other side of the House who does not know it. I do not believe there is one member on the other side of the House who thinks that trading with the United States without paying duties would make us any more disloyal than trading with them and paying high duties. You cannot stop the people of Canada from trading with the United States. It is not the government of Canada that is trading with the government of the United States, it is the individuals among the Canadian people throughout the Dominion of Canada that are buying and selling goods in the United States. Why do we buy goods in the United States? Because we can buy them better than we can buy them anywhere else, or we would not want to buy them there. Why do we sell goods in the United States? Because we can get more money for them there than we can get anywhere else. But according to the various views held by hon. gentlemen opposite in this House, if the poor western farmer were not made to pay high duties on what he sells in the United States and high duties on what he buys from the United States, he would become a disloyal man. However, we begin to see signs that the representatives of western constituencies on the other side of the House are taking a somewhat different view than they did before the election.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The same views.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well, I saw in a paper the other day an interview with the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), in which he points out that some such measure as the reciprocity agreement was necessary for the people of the west, and there was no more uncompromising opponent of it than the member for Calgary. But he is beginning to change his views, just as the member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins) is beginning to change his views, according to the speech he made here to-night, otherwise I cannot understand what his speech meant. My hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. McKay) made a good speech in this House to-night, and I agree with practically every word he said. He pointed out truly that 13,000,000 acres under crop can block up all the railways in Canada while other wheat is lying out on the prairie in millions of bushels—and remember that in the province of Saskatchewan, at all events, twenty or twenty-five per cent of the wheat is not threshed yet—what would it have been had all the wheat been threshed? My hon. friend pointed out that if 13,000,000 acres under crop could block up all the railways, what would it be in a few years when we have 26,000,000 acres under crop? If we have double the amount in crop that we have at present, even if the Hudson Bay railway is in operation, it will not take out the extra amount of wheat, and we will still be under the necessity, if you are going to put the western farmer on any sort of fair footing, of providing him other markets and better facilities for getting his crop to market. I can understand my hon. friend from Prince Albert wanting to see a road from Prince Albert to the Hudson bay, and I agree with him. I believe that a road from Prince Albert to the Hudson bay is necessary, or at least, a road to connect with a road from the Pas to the Hudson bay. But I would not like to see that made the main line, because then, if you want to ship anything from Winnipeg to the old country via Hudson bay, you would have to send it via Prince Albert, which would be too much out of the way. But if the present road is built as a main line there can be a connection made at any point that seems most feasible, and there will be several branches no doubt connecting with it. As to which is the best port, the government has had that under consideration, and has sent out one expedition after another. I understand there was an expedition out there last summer; no doubt the Minister of Railways has the report of the officer sent out on that expedition, I understand there were two sent out. He will have those reports by this time, and he will be in a position to judge which is the best port to make the terminus of the railway. I trust that the Minister of Railways will reconsider the decision that he came to a while ago to shut off the work, and I trust that the report we have seen in the newspapers that he had given instructions that the work was to be started again is true. If that report is true, it will be welcome news to the western settler; if it is not true, the western settler will be much disappointed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to put any obstacle in the way of this motion passing. There is no doubt that if the object of the motion is to facilitate the building of the Hudson Bay railway, it will meet with the hearty approval of everybody in the west, Liberal and Conservative alike. It is a matter for congratulation that this is not a party matter, nor is it so treated by any one in the House. It is a matter that the people of the west are very much interested in, and all hope to have the road built as quickly as possible. I think it would make a great difference in the cost of sending wheat to the old country if that road was built. There is no doubt in my mind that it would be a good road for three or four months, and it would have a tendency to keep the other roads in order. It must not be forgotten that last fall the carriers on the lake and rail route via Fort William to Montreal raised the prices about six cents a bushel, simply because there was a big lot of wheat to get out, and the shippers got together and put the price up. Now if we had a route by the Hudson bay they would not be so well able to do that. I trust, Sir, we will hear to-night from the Minister of Railways something definite on the subject, and that the government of which he is a member is going on with the construction of the road as quickly as possible. If 275 miles, as the member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) says, can be constructed before deciding which is to be the terminus, Fort Churchill or Port Nelson, so much the better. That will keep them busy until they are in a position to decide which is the best port to make the terminal.

Mr. T. MACNUTT (Saltcoats). Mr. Speaker, I only wish to occupy a very short time in discussing this question. I do not think that it is necessary to take up very much time in discussing the necessity or feasibility of the Hudson Bay railway. Those questions were settled long ago. Both the present and the late government are committed to the Hudson Bay railway. In 1908 the then Prime Minister committed his party, the House and the country to the building of the road. Immediately afterwards a sum of money was placed in the estimates for a survey. It was an unknown country and it was absolutely necessary that there should be a scientific survey made of it. The government were then in the hands of their chief engineer. The engineer they employed was a first-class man and I think he is still recognized as a first-class man. Although he is, I believe, a Conservative, I think he values his professional reputation above his politics and he no doubt did as good work under the Liberal government as he would have done under a Conservative government. He found that he was not ready with the information, more money had to be voted and he went on with the survey in the following year. It was only about a year ago that he was in a position to tell the government to go on and call for tenders to build the road and then for the first time the government put a sum of money in the estimates for that purpose. Previous to this they had commenced to build the bridge across the Saskatchewan river. There was a great deal of criticism of that step, but their early action in regard to the bridge was justified because, although the contractors are first-class bridge men, the bridge is not completed yet and it will be necessary to have that bridge completed before the work of building the road can go on to any large extent because I was informed by the contractor that a great part of the material which will be required for filling up the muskegs will have to be carried on flat cars. The place at which they can get that material is too far away from the work to make it possible to move it with teams. It will, therefore, be necessary to have the bridge built and trains running before the actual work of constructing the road can go forward. However, it is expected that the bridge will soon be ready.

The former opposition were continually criticising and sneering at the government for dilly-dallying with the road and spending so much time upon surveys bridge making and so on. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), in his trip to the west last year, would not promise everything the farmers asked, but there is one thing he did promise. After criticising and sneering at the government he did promise that the policy of his government, if he got into power, would include the immediate construction of the road. The sum of $2,000,000, placed in the estimates by the former government, came in for very severe handling. It was said that at that rate it would take about thirty years to build the road. But we find that since these hon. gentlemen have got into power there has been a little dilly-dallying on their part. The first thing they did was to stop the work. Later, I believe, it has been ordered to proceed. But there has been a good deal of time lost. We also find that $2,000,000, the identical sum that was criticised last year and which was only intended for the work up to the end of the fiscal year, whereas we are now beginning a fiscal year, has been placed in the estimates by this government and of this $1,500,000 is a revote. Practically we have only half a million dollars of new money placed in the estimates for use in the construction of the Hudson Bay railway during the fiscal year 1912-13 To use the arguments that were put forward last year by members of the then opposition, it does not appear to me that we are going to have that road finished within the next twenty years. However, whether that is so or not, we all recognize the great importance of the Hudson Bay road. It has been looked for for many years, but it is cold comfort to the people of the west who are unable to ship their grain, unable to get a dollar, many being unable to get money to buy coal for the winter or to buy Christmas presents for their children, and who have hundreds and thousands of dollars worth of stuff lying out in their fields spoiling for want of transportation, to know that there is little prospect of the completion of this work within a score of years. Even the immediate construction of the road, even the completion of that road within two years, is not going to help them as the acceptance of the offer of the United States to open their gates and allow our produce to go in free would have helped them. There would have been plenty of transportation then, and I do not suppose that there would have been a bushel of grain lying unsold in the west that the owners wished to sell, not to mention anything about the price. It is not a matter of price so much as the fact that they are not able to sell it at all for want of transportation. I have here some extracts which are taken from letters sent by correspondents of farmers' papers throughout the west. I shall take only a few words from the communications of parties writing from different points throughout that country.

Thousands acres uncut; Car shortage serious; Some can't sell crop; Financial hardship; Losing money; farmers can't meet bills; Situation serious; Shortage very serious; Can't pay debts; Business at standstill; Farmers getting discouraged.

I need not go over them all, but there are statements here culled from letters from some one hundred different points, and there are very few points in the west where the same tale cannot be told. What is the matter with the conditions at all these points? How much harm would have been done to the people in the east if the farmers could have turned their grain into money and employed the money in such a way that it could have found its way down to the east? There was a crime committed against the country generally and particularly against the west on the 21st September last.

There is one thing I do not think has been touched upon, and it is that a great deal of the grain in the west is likely to go tough. It was a very wet fall, since that time and after the snow came it was threshed and it is now lying out in heaps in the fields. It must be taken, not to an ordinary elevator or warehouse, but to a drying elevator because if it is not treated in that way it is going to heat and spoil. That quality of grain seems to have a greater value in the United States than here. A great deal of that wheat will go Nos. 4, 5, 6, and feed. I see that the prices on January 3 as between Winnipeg and Minneapolis were, on No. 4, 7 cents; on No. 5, 12 cents; on No. 6, 17 cents; and on feed, 17 cents, better in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg. If that grain cannot be got out of the country and put through dryers a great deal of it will be wasted because it will simply heat and go bad altogether. It will be no use for anything. The country is up against a severe proposition all because the short haul to the southern market was denied.

My hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) referred to the shortage of cars and in that connection I wish to read the following article:

THE GRAIN BLOCKADE.

There are more than 7,000 cars needed at 133 shipping points in the prairie provinces, and this will not represent more than a fraction of the total needs of the country to-day. A study of the information supplied by our readers in this issue shows just how serious the situation is becoming. With the thermometer running from 20 to 45 below zero for the past two weeks, with no chance to raise money on grain or at the bank, it can be imagined that there is suffering in many parts of the country. The Canadian Pacific railway is reported to be curtailing its shipments east from Fort William in order to provide relief in the country and prevent all possible grain from going to Duluth or Minneapolis. On January 23 the new rate on flax and barley will go into effect to Minneapolis and Duluth, but it is still far above the Fort William rate. Prospects are for a through rate to Minneapolis and Duluth on wheat and oats towards the end of February, on Canadian Pacific railway, Canadian Northern rail way and Soo lines only. What will happen to all the tough wheat in Saskatchewan that must be conditioned before warm weather? And what will happen to the farmers who have only this tough wheat as a result of their year's work?

It seems to me that one way to relieve the transportation difficulty, for the future at all events, is to proceed immediately with the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, but in the meantime it is possible that we shall have to ship our grain south, pay the duty, and sell it in the American market, or else let it rot where it is. I can tell you that there are a great many farmers in the west who will put in their crops next year with heavy hearts, because they know not where to find a market. It is one thing to sow a crop, and reap it, and thresh it, but it is another thing to market it and get the money for it. It is quite possible that the more a man cultivates the more he will lose, and it looks as though that will happen in some cases this year. I know farmers who have always employed two or three men, but who will this year put no more land under crop than they can work themselves, because they are not sure that they will get any return to pay their employees. The consequence of all this is that a great deal of the land in that western country will lie fallow this year. The Hudson Bay railway will afford great relief no doubt, but no matter how rapidly it is built it will be three or four years before it is available. The magnates of Toronto and Montreal whose unholy profits were in danger, prevented us from getting reciprocity which would give us a market in the United States, but it matters not to them how much of our crop goes bad so long as they have the handling of it, and the consequent rakes-off. Had they allowed reciprocity to carry we would have had a great many American dollars circulating in this country, and that is what the most of us are after. If we cannot have facilities for sending our grain to market, then that western country will be at a standstill. Last year, I am informed, that from one distributing point alone—probably in anticipation of reciprocity—four hundred gasolene and steam outfits were sent out, and I have made a calculation that a gasolene or steam outfit will do about eight acres a day on the prairie, and will work at least sixty days. This means eight acres a day for sixty days or four hundred and eighty acres for one outfit, giving a total of one hundred and ninety-two thousand acres, which at twenty bushels an acre would aggregate three million eight hundred and forty thousand bushels. Now, taking one thousand bushels to a car, it would require three thousand eight hundred and forty cars and one hundred and fifty-four engines to transport the grain represented in this instance alone. The people felt sure that they would have the southern market, and they broke up thousands and thousands of acres which may not be cropped next year. In conclusion, I wish to say that if there is any possible way for the government to give immediate relief for the transportation difficulty in the west it would be of much more advantage to us at the moment than arranging for the building of the Hudson Bay road. I do not say that the Hudson Bay railway is not important, but it will not meet our present difficulties, and what will the people do in the meantime. There was but a poor crop in the west this year, and there is fully twenty-five per cent of it not threshed yet, and in some places, fifty per cent. We have three transcontinental roads it is true, but they are not able to provide cars or engines to move the crop, and the elevator room is all taken up. Judging by the vote of only half a million dollars for the Hudson Bay railway this year the road is not going to be proceeded with very rapidly, and even supposing it is built in three or four years, all the routes then available would not begin to be sufficient to take out the grain that will be offered for export, not to speak of what will be consumed at home. It takes time to build railways, and the country having turned down the market of the United States with its short haul from the wheat-fields, it is the duty of the government to offer the people of the west some substitute. I shall support the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Aikins) because we need all the information it calls for.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals). There is no objection to the motion of the hon. member (Mr. Aikins), but I fear that when he gets the papers they will be a disappointment to him, because when I took charge of the department, and assumed the duty of looking over the contracts which had been let just before the retirement of the late government, I was somewhat astonished at the meagreness of the information before the government in reference to the character of the country traversed, in reference to the building of the road itself, in reference to the harbours on the Hudson bay, and in reference to what was to be done with the wheat when it got there. This meagreness of information led me to hold up the contract for a short time in order to ascertain if we could possibly discover what position we were in. I regret to say that I have not yet been able, from the information of the department, to discover which is the best harbour to bring this railway to. The report of the last expedition does not make it in any way more reassuring, but, on the contrary, it seems to mix up things worse than ever before. With all due deference to the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), I have to say that were it not that the route had been surveyed, and the road located and the contract let, I would not, with the information now before me, consider that the location was the best one. But, considering the promises that have been made by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House as to the Hudson Bay railway being built quickly, and as to its urgency, I find it is too late now to alter it. I have therefore ordered the contractors to proceed, and the road will be gone on with and completed as fast as possible.

If the harbour question were settled today, I would be in a position to advertise for tenders for other portions; but another expedition will be necessary to settle that question. I feel that we ought perhaps to go a little slow until we get further information. I do not know that we should be getting on any faster if, as has been suggested, we let a contract for 100 or 200 miles further, because there is no way of getting in supplies as cheaply as we could get them in by the Hudson bay if the question of the harbour were settled. But it is the intention of the government to push the construction of this road as rapidly as possible. I may say that there has recently been made to the government a proposition which give us two strings to our bow; that is, that if the Hudson straits prove to be not navigable for a great portion of the year, a line of boats be established, to run from Nelson or Churchill, whichever port is settled upon, across James bay to the Nottawa River in the province of Quebec, and on down through Quebec by the Transcontinental line. This would shorten the distance to the Atlantic seaboard from Prince Albert or Edmonton by 600 miles. If the Hudson bay route should not prove favourable, the feasibility of this alternative could be looked into. I did ask the department what information we had that would warrant us in spending $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 on this road for any other purpose than opening up that vast country; and let me say here, speaking for myself only, that I believe it is the duty of this government or any government, to open up that large section of Canada and see what is there. Great results have accrued from the opening up of a country which was formerly looked upon as a part of the frozen north. Such has been the case in Ontario and in the Yukon, and, if for no other reason than that, I believe that it would be well worth our while to build the road to Hudson bay. But if it is to be also an outlet for the great wheat crop of the west, it is absolutely necessary to proceed with its construction, and to proceed as rapidly as possible. As I have said, the contractor has been ordered to proceed, and he will drive the work forward as fast as possible.

Mr. AIKINS. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) have referred to me as an official of the Canadian Pacific railway and a solicitor of the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. TURRIFF. We will make it explicit.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. member alludes to me, I may say that I made no such reference.

Mr. AIKINS. I referred to the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for Assiniboia. I did not refer to the hon. member for Edmonton ; he knew better. Those statements are simply a feeble echo of what was urged as an argument, though futile, prior to the 21st of September. My conviction of the impropriety of the trade policy of the late government, as enunciated in the election, was such that I felt it my duty to relinquish the connection which I previously had with the railway company as its solicitor and counsel and I realized that the constituency of Brandon would perhaps have more confidence if I did sever that connection. I ceased then to take briefs from that company and decided to take a brief from the constituency of Brandon and for the country. I presume that in the thought expressed by the hon. member for Assiniboia that I was experiencing a change of heart or a change of policy, the wish was father to the thought; but my conviction with respect to the trade policy of the late government, as enunciated prior to the 21st of September, is the same now as it was then. It is true, Mr. Speaker, I did refer to the long haul as being a disadvantage to western Canada for the export of its products, and I do not see any difference between a long haul through the United States to the Atlantic seaboard and through Canada so far as the question of distance is concerned. It has been suggested that some of the surplus wheat that cannot be exported just now by reason of the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William being filled, should be stored at Duluth. I would prefer to see that surplus product stored in warehouses or elevators at Churchill or Nelson. I presume that the hon. member for Red Deer would have no preference as to our product being carried over American railways or over Canadian railways or being stored at Duluth or at Churchill or Nelson. So far as I am concerned, I cannot help having a preference that our products shall be carried over Canadian railways and stored in Canadian elevators. The policy of the late government, I believe would be to a very ladge extent destructive not only of our carrying trade, but of our infant industries that are growing up in western Canada. I have faith in western Canada and in western Canadian people. I believe they have enterprise and virility, and I am certain that, the opportunity being given to them, they will establish industries in proportion to their population quite as strong and prosperous as the industries established in eastern Canada. It is true, it will take time to do it. As to the report which we have received to the effect that the product of western Canada was about $113,000,000 as against a billion in eastern Canada, all I have to say is that times will change and the people of western Canada, with their enterprise and intelligence, will soon establish for themselves those industries and build up those home markets which would never have come into being if the policy propounded by the late government had been carried into operation. The hon. member for Assiniboia has referred to freight rates and has stated that they are excessive. May I ask what steps the hon. gentleman took to have those freight rates reduced when the late government was in power? If he took no such steps, how can he find fault with the present government for not doing so?

In November last a representation was made to the Minister of Railways. The Minister of Railways did take immediate steps, and he received a letter from the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners to this effect:

Ottawa, Nov. 24, 1911.

My dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 20th instant, enclosing copy of a resolution of the Winnipeg Board of Trade. This is the first complaint that has been directly made to the board regarding western freight rates generally. A good deal has appeared from time to time in the western papers, but no step was taken by anybody there to require a general investigation regarding rates throughout the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Why, when the late government was in its palmy days, when it had such strong supporters as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), were not these representations made to the authority which had the right to make the reduction, the Board of Railway Commissioners? During the whole of that period silence sat pleasantly on their tongues.

Mr. TURRIFF. For a couple of years back I had discussed this matter of a reduction of freight rates with members of this Railway Commission, and the reply was that under the Vancouver case on which they have been taking evidence for a long time past this whole matter would be dealt with.

Mr. AIKINS. The explanation given by the hon. gentleman is rather peculiar. He must have done this under cover, certainly it did not appear publicly that such action was taken. Complaint has been made of the poor farmer of western Canada. Western Canada is prosperous. Western Canada is going to remain prosperous, because we have a fertile country, and an industrious people. The Winnipeg 'Free Press,' a paper which supports hon. gentlemen opposite, in its issue of January 6, 1912, contains a suggestive comparison. The paper states that while in 1910 there was sold $48,181,000 worth of wheat, in 1911 there was nearly $63,000,000 worth. Of oats, in 1910 there was over three millions of dollars worth, and in 1911 over six millions. In barley the same proportion obtained. The total of wheat, oats and barley for the same periods were: in 1910, $58,590,000, and in 1911, $75,384,000. Of cattle, hogs, potatoes, hay, roots, poultry, and products of the dairy, in 1910 the total was a little over $80,000,000, and in 1911 over $101,000,000. That paper goes on:

The year 1911 will go down in the history of the west as one of the most unfavourable for the agricultural industry and in no way can the resources and possibilities of the country be more emphatically demonstrated than the mere statement that at the close of such a year, and with not more than 60 per cent of the agricultural productions actually disposed of, over $100,000,000 has been put into circulation from the farms alone.

The paper further says:

In December the enormous total of 18,000,000 bushels passed inspection at Winnipeg.

And also:

For the four months of the crop year of 1911, just completed, 83,000 cars of grain passed inspection at Winnipeg. Of these the Canadian Pacific railway brought in 45,721; Canadian Northern 26,516; the Grand Trunk Pacific 7,587.

The west, as I have stated, is prosperous. One way in which it can be made more prosperous will be to have this short, and, I hope, less expensive trade route for its products to the markets of the world via Hudson bay. I would suggest to the government of the day that they should include in their estimates a sum sufficient to make not only a proper exploration, and examination of Hudson bay, and a proper chart, but that they should also commence immediately the construction of adequate harbour works at the Hudson bay terminal so that when the railway is constructed the whole route may be put into immediate operation.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS OF BOOTS AND SHOES.

Mr. CARVELL moved:

For a return showing the quantities, the different kinds as far as practicable, and prices of all boots and shoes imported into Canada during each of the fiscal years ending respectively March 31, 1908, 1909 and 1910, together with the countries from which the same were imported, giving the quantities, &c., from each country for each year.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is, of course, no objection to bringing down all that can be brought down, but the commissioner points out that it would be almost impossible to bring down a complete return to this order as it appears on the Order Paper. I would suggest that the hon. member let it stand until we can get it worded so that we can comply with the order, and then we can bring the papers down.

Mr. CARVELL. I realized that there might be some difficulty in furnishing the information, and for that reason I inserted the words 'As far as practicable,' thinking that that would allow the minister to exercise his discretion in the information to be given.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The difficulty is that there are so many different makes and kinds of boots that it would be hard to distinguish them. If we knew exactly what the hon. member wanted, we could so word the order as to cover it. We have no objection to let it go through as it is, if he will be present to discuss the matter with the commissioner and express what he would like.

Mr. CARVELL. I will accept that suggestion, or I will even go farther and accept any information the commissioner can give.

Mr. AIKINS.

Mr. REID (Grenville). All right, so long as it is understood that way.

Motion agreed to.

CAPTAIN PETER DECOSTE.

Mr. WILLIAM CHISHOLM (Antigonish) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, papers and correspondence, petitions or memoranda presented to the government, or the Department of Public Works, or any official thereof, in connection with the dismissal of Captain Peter Decoste from the dredge 'Cape Breton.'

He said: It is not often that I impose myself upon the House, but as I feel that it is my duty to make this motion so I desire to explain my reason for making it. I sought to obtain the information covered by this motion early in the session. To that end a series of questions were put upon the Order Paper by me early in the session, and a pretended reply was made on the 30th November. But it was not a reply to the questions I put, the answers were evasive and the information was not forthcoming. Thinking that perhaps it was a mistake on the part of a clerk in the office of the Minister of Public Works, I called the attention of the minister to the fact that the answers did not give the information desired. I asked if any charges had been brought against this man, Captain Peter Decoste, and if so what they were, by whom preferred, and whether an investigation had been held. But the minister did not condescend to reply; in fact, he stated that he thought that the questions were sufficiently answered. For that reason I am now obliged to ask for the information in this form.

This Captain Peter Decoste is an experienced navigator, of an experience of upwards of a quarter of a century, and who has been for fourteen years engaged in looking after dredges and tugs for the Dominion government, and has given every satisfaction wherever he has been employed. I know as a matter of fact that he is a capable, competent man and stands high in his community. I know also that his dismissal came as a great surprise to those who knew him. During the time he has been employed by the government, so far as I know, no charges have been preferred against him and no complaint made by any of his superior officers. I am informed also that during that time he has been so fortunate as not to have a single man under his direction suffer serious injury, nor has there been a loss to the department of a dollar in connection with the work for which he was responsible. He received a notification from the superintendent of dredges at North Sydney to quit the service forthwith, but was given no information whatever as to what were the charges against him. This is a most serious matter. One would suppose that the Minister of Public Works, before dismissing a man of the reputation of Captain Peter Decoste, would have given him a month's notice or at least would have intimated what the charges against him were. So far as the mere matter of employment is concerned, I do not know that he is particularly anxious to serve under the government after the way he has been treated. But the man's reputation is at stake.

Suppose he goes to seek employment elsewhere: the very first question that will be put to him by the man or company that he applies to will be: Where were you last employed? Why did you quit that service? What answer can he make? There is not even an allegation that he has been dismissed for offensive partisanship. Absolutely no information as to the reason for his dismissal. Is it unlikely that his application under those circumstances, will at once be turned down? I submit that this is a most unjust act on the part of the minister. Let me point out another thing. In his answers to the questions to which I have referred the Minister of Public Works informed the House that the successor to Captain Peter Decoste was Captain Daniel Gillis. Now, I am not here to find fault with Captain Gillis or to say anything against him, but it is a fact that he was dismissed in 1896, as I am informed, not for offensive partisanship but for incompetency and incivility. He had the misfortune to lose one dredge, and had the further misfortune of having another dredge sunk with its equipment involving a loss to the country of between $9,000 and $10,000. I do not say this was due to any carelessness or neglect on his part or to any incapacity. It may have been simply his misfortune. He may have been just as good a man as could be found for the position held by Captain Peter Decoste. But I am bound to say in all honesty and fairness that with such a record, the minister before making the appointment, should have inquired what kind of a man the successor to Captain Decoste was. I have said Captain Gillis was not dismissed on account of partisanship. As a matter of fact he was continued in the employ by the late administration after 1896 as mate on some of the government dredges, and has been in the employ of the government up to the time of the dismissal of the man whom he has replaced. Now, the Minister of Public Works has always taken high ground and has declared that he was disposed to do justice to all sections of the community. It may seem rather peculiar that Captain Peter Decoste is the only French Acadian to hold the position of Captain on one of these dredges in the maritime provinces, and he is the first to be dismissed, without an hour's notice and without an investigation. I do not propose to elaborate. I bring forward this motion only because the answers given to my questions on the subjects were no answers at all.

However, that is characteristic of the present government. It seems to me that ever since the House met, when members on this side of the House put proper questions, if answers are given at all they are answers of a character that give very little light, and are such as to leave the members as much in the dark afterwards as before. It is on that ground, therefore, that I move for all papers and correspondence in connection with this man Decoste.

Hon. F. D. MONK (Minister of Public Works). I regret that I was not in the House when the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm) made his argument. I confess that, not knowing exactly that this matter was to be brought up this evening, I have not the papers with me, and am not in a position to discuss the circumstances of the dismissal of Captain Peter Decoste. The papers will be brought down at once. Let me call attention to the serious difficulty that we encounter when we are called upon to discuss the circumstances of a dismissal such as this one without the papers being before the House. My hon. friend probably is more familiar with all the circumstances of this dismissal, not having had as many to attend to as I have had since I came to the office, and is in a better position to enter into all the details he has just enumerated than the minister can be, who requires the documents in order to properly discuss the dismissal. This is an anomaly which I am sure the House will appreciate. When the papers are brought down, and we come to discuss the estimates with reference to dredging in my hon. friend's county, or elsewhere in the maritime provinces, we will be able to go more fully into the details. For my part I must confess to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am surprised at the audacity displayed by some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House in connection with these dismissals. My own experience of the dismissals which took place in 1896 makes me extremely humane and cautious in matters of that kind, and it is my pretension that since I took possession of the department I have made no dismissals whatever except for just and clear cause. Why would it be otherwise? What pleasure can a minister have in dismissing an official? Is there any member in this House who takes pleasure in recommending dismissals when there is no ground for that recommendation. I do not think there is a man in this House of that cruel disposition. In 1896 I was new to public life, I had just been elected in the county of Jacques Cartier, through which runs the Lachine canal.

Shortly after the government of that day came into power, every man on the canal was dismissed, without any charge, without any notice, almost without the knowledge of the Minister of Railways and Canals. It mattered little whether these men had been placed there by a Liberal or Conservative administration, they were all dismissed, without notice, without a hearing of any kind. When I complained to the Minister of Railways and Canals, at that time the Hon. Mr. Blair, he told me that he knew nothing about it, that these dismissals had taken place under pressure of members of parliament from the district of Montreal. I remember particularly the case of a man named Sauvé, who had been placed on the canal by the Hon. Mr. Laflamme when he was Minister of Justice in the Mackenzie administration. Mr. Sauvé had always behaved very well, he had been retained after 1878 by the Conservative administration. He was bridgekeeper in 1896, he was a Liberal, who had never meddled in politics. At midnight, in the month which followed the advent to power of the right hon. the leader of the opposition, that man, with twelve children, living in a small house near the bridge, government property, an infirm man, guardian of the bridge, with that large family, was told to leave next morning. He had to clear out the next morning, without having any knowledge whatever of what he was charged with. He had never meddled in any way with politics, and was not given any opportunity to defend himself. The matter created quite a sensation in that locality. From one end of the canal to the other it was known that the man in charge at Ste. Anne's was dismissed, without even a mock inquiry. It is well known that everybody was changed on that canal from one end to the other. In Sauvé's case he was removed on this short notice, and under those circumstances, to make place for a brother-in-law of a member in the district of Montreal. That was the experience I had when I entered public life, and I am bound to say to this House that it created such an impression upon my young mind at the time that I determined that I never would be a party to proceedings of that kind. Let me say to my right hon. friend who leads the opposition and who was primarily responsible for all that occurred at that time, that though we may try to improve the Civil Service law, and remove the Civil Service entirely from the operation of patronage, whatever else you may do, you must absolutely prevent our civil servants from meddling in politics. Unless you are rigid on that point all the other reforms will come to naught. All civil servants of whatever grade or condition must be absolutely prohibited from meddling in politics if you are going to carry out any real reform. They must know, they should know by this time, that any interference in politics must meet with immediate punishment, and that if they choose to meddle in politics they must take the consequences. When you have proof before you, satisfactory proof, that they have infringed that wise and salutary rule, you must act upon it, they must be dismissed. What are you going to do when you find that a civil servant has meddled in politics? What does the minister do when he finds one of his employees at fault? He dismisses him. If he has committed faults of omission of sufficient gravity he dismisses him the moment he is satisfied in his own mind that the man is guilty, that he has really infringed the rule. Is the minister going to have a trial, a kind of Warren Hastings trial, in the case of every public servant when he is satisfied that he has infringed the rule? I think it is a wise rule which says that the minister must be satisfied. In what way? Well, it has been considered I think, that the denunciation by the sitting member in this House, who takes the responsibility of making the accusation, is a sufficient warrant to the minister. I believe it is. Is he going to appoint a Royal Commission to make a costly investigation when he is satisfied from the declarations before him that the accused has interfered in politics contrary to the rule? Let me call attention to this fact, that many candidates, to my knowledge, have called upon civil servants to help them in elections. To my mind that is a very grave matter. Members of this House will all admit that that is done sometimes, men who have teams are invited to furnish their teams for election purposes. That was done in the last election, public servants were invited to take part, to come to the committee rooms, to canvass, to work, and very often the civil servant did so with reluctance.

But what I wish to emphasize is that, when the minister is satisfied by the evidence placed before him or from his personal knowledge that the rule has been infringed, the public should know that the very best step to take at once is to be severe. No reform in the Civil Service will be of any use unless that rule is adhered to. I had the case of a man to deal with, and I was perfectly satisfied from what I had been told, from information received here and there, that he had infringed this rule. I was reluctant to place the department to the cost of—how much?—$150, $200, $250, or $300, for an investigation, and I sent for this man. I asked him: Have you anything on your conscience; do you not think you have, unfortunately—because I had no desire to dismiss this man—infringed the rule? I believe my colleagues will bear me out when I say that our experience is that, probably in the hope of saving themselves civil servants deny having engaged actively in politics, having gone beyond the mark, having infringed the rule. What is the consequence? The country is put to an expense of some $200 or $300 when the minister in reality, had it not been for the sentiment of mercy, and the desire to do justice, would have been justified in acting on the information he had. But the country is put to the expense with the result that the facts are established so that you have to act.

I believe, as far as my experience has gone since I have been in office, that it is always with reluctance that members of parliament, even in the face of gross violations of the rule, the everyday rule which all civil servants ought to know, and which they do know as a general thing, take action towards the dismissal of an official guilty of that offence. I do not believe, whatever may be said, that the idea of the spoils of office for the victors is prevalent in this country or among my colleagues in this House. But when we have the evidence that a rule of that kind has been transgressed we are acting in the public interest in applying the sanction of that rule as it has been recognized time and again for fifteen years on both sides of the House. In England interference of the public service in elections was the bane of the country. It was the plague of public administration. They reformed it. I was talking to a man the other day who has sat for many years in the British parliament. He told me that thirty years ago these abuses completely disappeared, and that during the many years that he sat in the British parliament as a member he had never once been applied to for any position or for anything in the nature of patronage. In 1882, the American government sent a commission to England that came back and made a complete report, and the American government, beginning with Mr. Cleveland, have, in many of their departments, carried out reforms, placing the Civil Service entirely outside of the region of politics. They are pursuing these reforms every day. In this country we have to make considerable progress before we reach that stage of perfection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Give us an example.

Mr. MONK. Well, I will not copy the example you set for me fifteen years ago when you spread desolation throughout my county under the circumstances I have just indicated. But, I venture to say that we have gone a great deal further, and at any rate cases which have come under my observation have been most conspicuous. I think I should give this explanation to the House.

With regard to dredging in the maritime provinces, it has not been necessary for me to be a long time in the control of my department to ascertain there are great reforms to be effected. The branch of my department which, in my estimation, calls for the most drastic reforms is that of dredging. Dredging has been carried out to a very large extent, and the necessity for it is increasing, but with regard to the awarding of contracts there are a great many things which require to be looked into and which I hope will be looked into with the least delay possible. Where the dredging is done by the government with its own plant the abuses have been most grave. The appointment of officers upon these dredges, and of the men who serve under them has been a question of political patronage and particularly so in the maritime provinces. I do not at this moment remember exactly the circumstances of the dismissal of Captain Decoste, but I am perfectly certain when the documents are all brought down it will be found that the department has acted with prudence and that the facts absolutely justified the action we took.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) does not know what is going on in his department. There are very few officials in the Department of Public Works in the constituency that I have the honour to represent. I only know of three and the whole three have been dismissed without any trial and without any complaint as far as I know against them. There was one case that I brought on two occasions to the notice of my hon. friend—the case of Mr. Roderick Sutherland, the caretaker of the public building at Canso. When I heard that this gentleman had been ordered out of the building without any complaint being made against him and that another gentleman was waiting at the door with his furniture——

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman say that no complaint was made against him?

Mr. SINCLAIR. That was my information. My information was that no complaint was made against him that he knew of. No complaint was made to him or to myself and I endeavoured by letter to find out from my hon. friend what the reason was for the dismissal of Mr. Sutherland. It was very severe weather, Mr. Sutherland had a family living in the upper part of the building, he had no other house to go to and he was ordered out on the street with his family. The furniture of the heeler who was to take his place was piled at the door and he was striking and rapping for admittance. I received telegrams from Mr. Sutherland and I wrote a letter and asked the hon. minister if he would be kind enough to tell me what was the complaint against Mr. Sutherland and further requested that he would be kind enough to give Mr. Sutherland a trial. I waited for more than a week but I got no reply to my letter. I have had no reply yet although that letter was written weeks ago. I brought the matter up in the House and I endeavoured to extract from my hon. friend some information with regard to it. He informed me on that occasion that when I was through with my speech he would give me the information. That happened some time ago, but he has not yet honoured me by giving me any information with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Sutherland. It could not be done on the word of any sitting member because there is no member from Guysborough except myself. It must have been done on the recommendation of a defeated candidate or some one else. We were told in the House the other day by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) that the policy of the government was that when a defeated candidate asked for the dismissal of an official there would be an investigation and evidence required.

A number of dismissals have been made in my constituency on the recommendation of the defeated candidate, and there have been no investigations, and no charges made, so far as I can find out.

Mr. MONK. I did not get a request from anybody for an investigation.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Why, in Sutherland's case the minister has my letter requesting an investigation which he has not honoured with a reply, and he has my further request from my seat in this House. It is not asked that there should be a long trial, like that into the conduct of Warren Hastings, but we protest against the Star Chamber manner in which he is carrying out these dismissals. There is no department in the government where such cruel and unheard of things have been done as in the department of the hon. gentleman. If he only carried out the principles he has announced in the House all would be well, but when we know of our knowledge he is not doing so, I will not sit here without entering my protest.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The papers have stated that the Minister of Public Works has appointed a gentleman in Ottawa to conduct an investigation into the charges made against officials in the Public Works Department. Is that true?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the name of the gentleman?

Mr. MONK. Mr. Hector Chauvin has been appointed to investigate the applications for dismissals in Ottawa.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Mr. H BOULAY (Rimouski). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker,, our hon. friends on the side of the House are very touchy in regard to these dismissals, when their supporters are affected; but I may be allowed to submit certain particulars which are not generally known and especially to recall some of their doings of 1896 and the years following. I still remember the deeds of almost incredible savagery which were committed by the Liberal party in 1896 on reaching power. I propose recalling a few of them in support of my contention. I shall quote letters written by certain officials of the Railway Department dismissing our friends without even giving them the two weeks' notice provided by statute. Here is a letter dated Campbellton, January, 1899, to Mr. Théophile Michaud, section foreman at Amqui:

Dear Sir,—I am instructed to notify you that after the 15th of the present month your services will be dispensed with. This will give you the usual 14 days' notice. Please acknowledge receipt of this letter.

Yours truly,
JAMES PATTERSON.

No reason is given for such dismissal.

Another letter, dated October 28, 1896, from River du Loup, to Mr. George Dubé's address reads as follows:

George Dubé, Esq.,
Sectionman,
St. Alexandre.

Sir,—I am instructed by the chief engineer to notify you that your services will no longer be required as sectionman on the Intercolonial railway. You will, therefore, consider yourself discharged after the 31st of this month.

Yours truly,
JAMES YEO,
Trackmaster.

As will be seen, it was only a short time after the former government had come into power. That man wrote to the department to obtain particulars, and the answer sent to him was as follows:

Moncton, Nov. 2, 1896.

Mr. George Dubé,
Ex-Section Man,
St. Alexandre Station, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th ult., asking the reasons for your discharge from the service.

I do not know of any reports against you. My order was from the general manager and was repeated to Mr. Yeo.

Yours truly,
P. S. ARCHIBALD,
Chief Engineer.

Now, that is only a sample of what was going on in 1896. And in my constituency where there are about a thousand civil servants, a clean sweep was effected throughout the county of poor sectionmen on the Intercolonial, most of whom earned $1 or $1.25 per day. They were all dismissed with the exception of the supporters of the government then coming into power. Strangely enough, two of these unfortunates along with others were dismissed simply because they bore my name. One of these victims was at the bedside of his dying wife, and what did the Liberal party do? Did they postpone taking action until that man resumed work? No, news of his dismissal was carried to him at home while his wife was lying on her deathbed, and that poor woman was so much taken by surprise that within twenty-four hours she died.

But that is not the whole story. A poor sectionman of St. Flavie, named François Roy—and that case is still vivid in the minds of the people of that locality, so painful an impression did it make—was on his deathbed. Lest they might lose the opportunity of depriving him of the small insurance which would be forthcoming from the Intercolonial, had he died while in their employ notice of his dismissal was forwarded to him two days before he expired, and his family was thus deprived of that amount.

Mr. Speaker, these are a few samples and illustrations of the doings of the Liberal party in 1896. And our opponents to-day protest forsooth when we insist that some of their friends should be discharged. In my own constituency there are still living twenty of the victims of 1896, and not a single one has been reinstated. Will our opponents contend that we have not the right to discharge their friends in order to reinstate those who lost their situations in 1896, though their only fault consisted in their party leanings?

Liberals take the ministers to task for having effected too many dismissals. We are of the contrary opinion, we think they are not discharging as many as they should. I am sincerely of opinion that before adopting the principle laid down by the Liberals, we should first restore things as they were when the Liberals came into power, that is to say set things right by discharging their friends to reinstate ours, and then if there are reforms to be carried out let these gentlemen suggest them, and we shall approve of them if they are right. But first let each one have his due.

Cases of dismissals of that sort are not wanting; there is one recurring just now to my mind. At Moncton, Mr. T. V. Cook was dismissed on the ground of old age—he was forty-six years old—and he was replaced by a Mr. Palmer, who was sixty-one, but who was a friend of the government; he was appointed though by fifteen years the senior of the man he replaced.

I shall not dwell any longer on the subject of dismissals. The matter has been already debated at length in this House, and I think that public opinion is pretty well posted in this connection, and hon. members of this House as well.

Our opponents have very bad grace to show surprise under the circumstances, for they have exhibited a remarkable lack of decency and fairness in dealing with our friends in 1896.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). The Minister of Public Works has told us that the denunciation of the sitting member is sufficient for him to dismiss an official, and lest the impression should go abroad that I, the sitting member, denounced the Captain of the dredge 'Cape Breton'. I wish to say that such denunciation did not come from me, nor have I been able to find out whence it came. That is why I put the question in the House, a first time and a second time, as to the manner in which that dismissal was made, and that is why I have moved to-day for the papers. The minister tells us that it will be shown that the department acted with prudence, but I think it will be shown that the department acted with characteristic promptness. I am told that in the matter of these dismissals the Minister of Public Works is the biggest sinner of them all, which is to be wondered at, because in this House, when in opposition, he always pleaded for political purity, and denounced, as we heard him to-day, everything that savoured of unkindness or lack of charity. He was moved very deeply this evening when he told us of the dismissals that took place in 1896 on the Lachine canal, but he forgot to tell us that he denounced the then government for having done what he now tries to excuse himself for doing. It is quite plain that these gentlemen opposite are not honest and sincere. Why don't they stand up manfully and say that they have dismissed these men because they were partisans; why do they not tell us that in the assurances they gave the electors they were trying to fool the people, and that when they were trying to seek their votes they proclaimed they had virtues which they did not possess.

Why do they not say that they are only playing a game—call it hypocrisy if you will—and that they are no better than others? What the country wants to know is where these hon. gentlemen stand; it wants to know what foundation there is for all this pretended virtue. The hon. gentleman refers to the cases of men who were dismissed from the Lachine canal. No doubt everybody sympathizes with any men who have been summarily dismissed; but I submit that it is not as great a hardship for an ordinary labourer to be dismissed as it is for a man say in the position of a sea captain. Captain Decoste depends for his livlihood on the knowledge which he has as a navigator. If he is dismissed without any reason being assigned, the supposition may be that it was for dishonesty or incompetency or something of that kind, and he may find it difficult to obtain another position. Suppose the official of a bank is dismissed without any reason being given, what other bank is going to engage him? He must have as it were a clearance from his last employer. Take a railway conductor or operator who has been dismissed in the same way, if he goes to seek employment elsewhere, the first question he is asked is why he left his last employment. Therefore, I say the Minister of Public Works inflicts a great hardship on this man by dismissing him without assigning any reason, even if he had no better reason than that he was a political partisan. I hope he will do at least this measure of justice to Captain Decoste, that he will give the reason for his dismissal and give him an investigation. I rather suspect that the minister has been imposed upon in connection with this matter. I have an idea that the facts were not correctly represented to him. I know Captain Peter Decoste, who is a man highly respected in the community in which he lives and wherever he is known. While he has his opinions and exercises his franchise and has the courage of his political convictions, he is not by any means an offensive partisan. I would like to know what means the Minister of Public Works has of judging what an offensive partisan is. If a man simply exercises his franchise, is he to be dismissed? If a man happens honestly to believe that a certain policy is the best for the country, exercises his franchise accordingly, and gives expression to his convictions without being offensive or making himself a nuisance to the public, I think it is unfair for the administration to dismiss him because he happens to be a Liberal. I would say that the least expected of a man in the service of the country, whether Liberal or Conservative, is that he should be faithful to his employers; but he should surely be allowed to give expression to his views without being called an offensive partisan. What I regard as an offensive partisan is a man who goes about provoking controversy and making himself a public nuisance and not discharging properly the duties of his office. The Minister of Public Works gave us this evening one of the sermonettes that we heard from him quite frequently when he was on this side of the House. In the cold shades of opposition he used to preach virtue loudly and eloquently; but it was a rather hyperborean atmosphere, because he was not in much more favour with his own friends than he was with the Liberals. I am afraid it is a case of

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish).

When the deil was sick the deil a monk would be,
When the deil was well the deil a monk was he.

When he has the reins of office in his hands, and is pressed on all sides by ravenous wolves looking for jobs, he falls from grace, and shows that he is not entitled to be placed on that high pedestal upon which we have been accustomed to place him.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all papers, correspondence and orders in council in connecton with and relating to the dismissal from office of public officials from each of the departments of the government from the fourteenth day of July, 1896, to the 10th day of October, 1911, including both the inside and the outside service.—Mr. Goodeve.

ADJOURNMENT—THE OTTAWA POST OFFICE

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PELLETIER. Before the House adjourns, I desire to give a little more information in regard to the unfortunate occurrence at the city post office to-day. In the first place, I may inform hon. members that the mails from this House and the Senate to-night and to-morrow morning will not be taken to the city post office, but will be taken directly to the trains. Every possible precaution has been taken by the health authorities with the co-operation and concurrence of the department. The mails are being fumigated to-night, and the process will last until six or seven o'clock to-morrow morning. All mails which had not left the office when the event became known have been kept there to be fumigated. The public will understand that it is better to have a little delay in the mails than to run any danger. It is probable that all the employees in the city post office will be vaccinated to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). There may be one or two Bills, which are on the order paper and after that Supply. We will deal with the estimates of the Minister of Customs in the afternoon and then with those of the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjurned at 10.49 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, January 16, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. On Thursday last I asked that Bill (No. 19), to amend the Inquiries Act, be held over to give me an opportunity to look into the point raised by the hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Pugsley), as to whether or not the Bill should be preceded by a resolution, under rule 77 of this House.

An examination of cases shows that this rule has sometimes been given a wider application than the rule itself seems to justify. Bourinot, at page 638, states that 'it is the invariable rule that all measures involving a charge upon the people should be first considered in a committee of the whole.' A discussion of the point also appears on pages 566 to 573.

The Bill applies both to part I and part II of the Inquiries Act, which is a consolidation of two previous Acts, neither of which was preceded by a resolution. Part I was a Bill introduced in the Senate in 1868 and part II was a Commons Bill introduced in 1880.

It has been urged that though the present Bill does not deal with the question of payment of the persons to be engaged by the commissioners; they might, under its terms, incur expenses which would be payable out of the consolidated revenue fund and thus be a charge upon the people without parliament making any provision for their payment by a resolution in Supply.

This objection could certainly have been urged, with at least equal force, in the case of the two Acts which this Bill seeks to amend. And yet, as pointed out, no resolution was deemed necessary as a condition precedent to their enactment.

An English precedent, referred to in Bourinot, note (n), page 643, was a motion for leave to bring in a Bill to enable the government to acquire lands for public purposes, but not providing funds for the same. On objection being taken that the Bill 'involved a charge upon the public,' answer was made that the Bill only proposed to give the government power to buy land, but for that power to be of any use an estimate must be voted in committee; that the Bill would not enable the government to purchase any lands until the House in committee had considered the estimates and agreed to them; that the Bill did not authorize the expenditure of any public money although the expenditure was contemplated. The Speaker ruled that the object of the Bill was to take ground for certain purposes. It did not give them power to purchase the property. The funds should be voted afterwards in committee of the whole.

The question is not free from difficulty. Mr. Bourinot in his observation seems to have extended the scope of the rule rather beyond the terms in which it is worded. What those terms cover is 'a motion for any public aid or charge upon the people.' This Bill does not constitute such a motion. The most that can be said is that under its provisions something may be done which may give rise to a claim against the government. If this is sufficient to bring it within the rule, then it would have to be held that every Bill conferring a power upon the government in the exercise of which expense might be incurred, comes under the rule. This, in my opinion, would be giving altogether too extensive an interpretation to the words 'a motion for any public aid or charge upon the people.'

While the authorities are not absolutely reconcilable, I am not disposed to attach to the rule this very enlarged meaning. I am therefore of opinion that no resolution is necessary.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient, (a) to authorize the transfer of public records, documents and other historical material from the various government departments to the Public Archives, which material shall be placed in the custody of an officer to be called the Dominion Archivist, who shall have the rank and salary of a deputy head; (b) to provide for the purchase, under the authority of the minister named for that purpose, of records, documents and material, and for expenses in connection therewith; and (c) to provide for the appointment of such officers and clerks as are required for the proper care, custody and control of the Public Archives.—Mr. Borden.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN. This resolution explains itself fairly well. At the present time the archives have not been constituted under any particular Act. They have been attached to the Department of Agriculture in common with a great many other subjects which have no particular relation to that department. It is proposed upon this resolution to found a Bill which will be known as the Archives Act and which will contain provisions for the administration of the archives under the President of the Privy Council. I do not know whether it is desired to discuss the proposed resolution now or whether it would meet the views of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to pass the resolution and discuss it on the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will have the discussion upon the Bill

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 66) respecting the Public Archives.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 19) to amend the Inquiries Act, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what respect will the Act as amended differ from the existing law?

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice). It may possibly be that with regard to engaging the services of competent technical officers, counsel, &c., necessary to assist the commissioners, that power is conferred impliedly under the existing law. There is a maxim that things that go without saying go better when you say them, and so the amending Act makes that power clear. However, I do not think it could have been intended by the existing law, as is provided here, that subject to such a power being expressly inserted in the commission, the commissioners may depute their right to carry on the inquiry to such experts or other persons as they may indicate, and that these persons so deputed may exercise their powers in the same manner as the commissioners themselves. This seems to be a desirable power to confer upon commissioners, more particularly where the scope of their inquiry may cover a very wide field, and where it might be found convenient to carry on different branches of the inquiry simultaneously. Under the second part of the existing Act which deals with departmental inquiries, there is power to depute the right to investigate, but that is limited to a particular case and applies only to a commissioner appointed by a minister to conduct a departmental inquiry. It seems desirable that this power should be conferred on the commissioners as is provided in this Bill. It is obvious that such power will enable a commission charged with the investigation of a very large department or a number of departments, to proceed with greater expedition than would be possible if the commissioners had personally to conduct an investigation into each particular matter which might arise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To the object of the amendment, that of giving the commissioners more ample powers, I can see no objection, but I do not know that a Bill is necessary for that purpose. I have always understood that the powers conferred on the commissioners to investigate were sufficient to enable them to employ accountants or special experts.

The first part of the resolution reads as follows:

> 11. The commissioners, whether appointed under part I or under part II of this Act, if thereunto authorized by the commission issued in the case, may engage the services of such accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts, clerks, reporters and assistants as they deem necessary or advisable, and also the services of counsel to aid and assist the commissioners in the inquiry.

I have no objection to this, but as to the other part regarding the delegation of powers I may have to offer some observations later on. But if the commissioners have the power to engage counsel to assist them, does not my hon. friend think the party whose conduct is being investigated should have a similar power?

Mr. DOHERTY. There might be circumstances under which it would be considered just that the party whose conduct is being investigated, should be entitled to the assistance of counsel; but I do not think it would be necessary for that purpose to insert any provision in the Act. We are dealing with powers conferred on the commissioners; and if it should appear to them desirable that any one whose conduct is being looked into should be aided by counsel, they would not require any special authority to consent to such counsel being heard. That would not be the case of their calling on anybody to render services to them, but would be merely an exercise of their own judgment as to whether the assistance of a counsel on behalf of the party accused would be advisable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This Bill is a departure from the law in a very important essential by authorizing the commissioners to engage counsel. I do not suppose that this government would claim to be so unjust as to appoint its commissioners from among gentlemen who are at all biased by partisanship. I believe that, upon the recommendation of my hon. friend, commissioners have already been appointed. Those gentlemen are all known to be very active Conservatives. It is now proposed to give them the power to employ counsel. I take it for granted that they will employ counsel somewhat tinged with partisan bias. I would not expect them to employ any one known to be a good Liberal. Now a one-sided investigation—an investigation in which there is only one lawyer—is bound to give great dissatisfaction. It would be the easiest thing in the world for a lawyer—and he will do it perhaps unconsciously—to give a bias in favour of the particular side of the question in which he is interested. When we propose to give power to the commissioners to employ counsel it is only right that the official whose conduct is being inquired into should be given the right to be also represented by counsel. Only in that way will he get fair-play. Therefore, it seems to me that the suggestion of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should be accepted. It ought to be the inalienable right of every man, whose conduct is being investigated, to employ counsel in order that he may get fair-play and that all the facts be brought to light.

It is only by giving to a man that right that justice will be completely done and that the public will be satisfied that justice has been done. In order to bring the matter before the committee, I would move that section 1 be amended by striking out the word 'section' in line 2 and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'sections.' That would enable the additional sections which I have suggested to be added. Then I will move that the following be added as section 12:

Any person whose conduct is being investigated under this Act shall have the right to be represented by counsel on such inquiry.

It is not proposed by this amendment that the expenses of counsel, other than those employed by the commissioners, shall be paid by the government. The party whose conduct is being investigated, if he chooses to employ counsel, will have to pay that counsel himself. I trust that my hon. friend will see, on reflection, that this request is a very reasonable one.

Mr. BORDEN. No one is disposed for a moment to quarrel with the suggestion that any man who is being investigated by a commission appointed by any government ought to have the right to be represented by counsel if he so desires. I do not know that this rule has been very fully carried out in the past, because under at least one commission issued by the late government the parties whose conduct was being investigated were permitted ostensibly to have counsel, but the counsel was not permitted to say a word or take any action. I think that any commissioners appointed under the provisions of this statute would have it entirely within their discretion to permit any person whose conduct was called in question to employ counsel. I think that course was taken by Mr. Justice Cassells acting under the commission issued under the second part of this Act, which conferred upon him certain powers of inquiry into the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not think the proposed amendment is necessary. At the same time, I would not be disposed to oppose the suggestion of the hon. gentleman if it would not lead to confusion. For example, suppose that a commission appointed to inquire into certain departments of the government, begins its work in a particular department, is every person in that department whose conduct is inquired into to have the right to employ counsel and the whole work of the commissioners to be thrown into confusion in that way? My own idea is that it would be better to leave the matter to the commission, with the assurance that fair play would be given in every case. However, if my hon. friend has a strong opinion about it, we will let this section stand and take his suggestion into consideration and give him an answer to-morrow. I can assure hon. members that we are disposed to put into this Act every provision which will ensure fair play.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The suggestion made by my hon. friend beside me may not be necessary, but the Minister of Justice stated a moment ago that the Bill itself may not be necessary. It has been felt hitherto that the powers sought to be concurred by statute were implied powers, but it is to make assurance doubly sure that the Bill is introduced—to put it beyond doubt that commissioners will have power to employ experts, accountants and counsel. In the same way it is just as necessary to make it absolutely sure that any party whose conduct is being investigated shall have the right to employ counsel.

Mr. BORDEN. We are dealing with two entirely distinct things. In the one case we are making sure that the commissioners shall have the power which my hon. friend thinks they have at the present time, but in the other case we are dealing with a matter as to which the commissioners have perfect discretion at the present time, and one could hardly suggest in advance that that discretion would not be exercised fairly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The suggestion of my hon. friend is that the party whose conduct is being investigated should have the right, beyond the discretion of the commissioners, to walk into court and say, I want to be heard by counsel. If he had not that right, he would have a sense of injustice and the feeling that he was not getting fair play. I think there is nothing to be lost and everything to be gained by giving him this right, and I hope my hon. friend will accept the suggestion.

Mr. DOHERTY. It is only fair that any person against whom any imputation is made, implying guilt or misconduct of any kind, should be entitled to have counsel. And, while I do not expect perfectly angelic commissioners, I confess that I did not suppose that the commissioners that this government would appoint would be so devoid of a sense of justice that under these circumstances they would refuse a man the right to have counsel. It does seem to me, then, that when you provide, as in the terms of this suggested amendment, that any person whose conduct is to be investigated shall have the right to counsel, you go too far. For, if it be necessary to investigate the operations of a department, the conduct of every employee in that department will be subject, at all events, to be investigated; and if every one of these employees has the right to be represented by counsel, even before anything has been suggested reflecting in any way upon his conduct, you may hamper the entire investigation. As I have said, I have not the slightest objection to any man against whom an imputation is made being entitled to be heard by counsel and defended by counsel, should he so desire. I never doubted that any commission we would appoint would recognize that principle and act upon it. It never occured to me that anybody would want to act so unfairly as to refuse such a right. But it seems to me that the difficulty may perhaps be in the terms in which the proposal is made rather than in what is intended. I can hardly think the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) would suggest that everybody whose conduct was subject to be investigated should, as a matter of right, be entitled to have counsel before the commission. To insert such a provision, it seems to me, would afford facilities to block the investigation and that, I think, we ought to avoid. I am sure we are as desirous that any investigation made should be carried on wtih absolute fairness as hon. gentlemen on the other side can be. But, on the other hand, I do not think we should so far overlap as to run the risk of making an effective investigation impossible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. minister (Mr. Doherty) is supposing an extreme case—that each officer of a department under investigation would wish to employ counsel to speak for him at the inquiry. The right proposed to be given is that any employee should be free to engage counsel and pay him out of his own pocket. No one would do that unless he has cause to employ counsel. There may be a hundred cases to be investigated and of these probably ninety-nine will feel it unnecessary to engage counsel. But the commissioners have the right to employ counsel and a similar right should be given to the other party. I understand that this matter will be left for further discussion later on.

Coming now to the second part of this amendment of the law as proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice, I must say I have very serious doubts as to the working of this proposed legislation. It reads:

—and the commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts, or any qualified persons, to take evidence and inquire into and report to the commissioners upon any matter within the scope of the commission as may be directed by the commissioners, and such persons shall, in the execution of the powers as deputed or authorized, have the same powers which the commissioners have to issue subpœnas, enforce the attendance of witnesses, compel them to give evidence, and otherwise conduct the inquiry.

In this my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), proposed to afford means by which these experts may be given powers in effect even greater than those given to the commissioners. The commissioners are authorized to engage other experts, and then to hand over to these experts the same powers as to subpœnaing witnesses and compelling evidence that the commissioners have themselves. I am sure that the government will place at the head of this commission a man who is a lawyer or a judge, one who understands the examining of witnesses with a view to ascertaining the truth. But to hand over to the experts the same powers that are given to the commissioners seems to me illogical, and if I may say so with out offence, impractical. You cannot expect an accountant or an engineer to have the same ability to examine a witness so as to find out the truth as a man whose business it is to deal with these matters. I think that under the circumstances the hon. member (Mr. Doherty), on fuller consideration, will agree that this legislation is extremely dangerous, and is not calculated to give justice to the parties whose conduct is to be investigated.

Mr. DOHERTY. This legislation is not by any means the first under which it is provided that men of technical knowledge should have the power to summon and examine witnesses. Gentlemen who are familiar with our laws in the province of Quebec will know that we have a whole series of articles in our Code which provides for reference of matters of this kind, matters requiring expert knowledge in connection with certain arts or sciences, to experts, these experts being not only empowered, but required to hear witnesses. An accountant who goes into the accounts of a great business covering, possibly, the operations of years, will require, in order to arrive at correct conclusions, information that does not appear on the face of these accounts. If some such provision as this were not made, when he needed such facts he would have to report the fact to the commission, the commissioners would have to sit and bring the witnesses to them.

I think that is not a very reasonable suggestion. It seems to me, it would be better to follow the course which is followed, certainly in my own province, and I am told in other provinces as well.

The only difference I can see is that with regard to the legislation I am referring to where the courts exercise these powers of conferring a power of investigation and examination upon accountants, and experts, and other persons of those classes, the power of compelling an answer, for instance, might possibly have to be referred back to the court. There is an obvious reason for it. The court has a function, and a quality which after all the commissioners do not necessarily have. There is no reason to suppose that the special commissioner who may be named under these provisions, the man whom I may call the sub-commissioner as distinguished from the principal commissioner, will not be a man perhaps more competent to elicit proof with regard to a technical matter, if I may so describe it, and use a word that may include them all, than would be the commissioners themselves. To empower that special commission to carry on an investigation seems to me to be, with all respect to the criticisms of the right hon. gentleman, the most rational method of arriving in the most effective way at the truth with regard to the charges which are the subject matter of investigation, or that may call for being treated in that way. As to these commissioners having power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and compel them to answer, I cannot see that there can be any objection to the special commission that might not equally be applied to the commissioners themselves, and of course a commission that would not have power to compel the attendance of witnesses and compel them to answer, would be on its face a perfectly nugatory one. I confess that I cannot see that the observations of the right hon. gentleman justify his expression of such a very strong objection to these provisions. The right hon. gentleman speaks of them as something absolutely new. As I pointed out at the outset, to a very moderate extent the power of deputing the power to carry on an investigation is to-day, under the Inquiries Act, conferred upon commissioners who may be named under it, that is, in the case of commissioners named for departmental inquiries. Section 9 of the Act already provides for that case. It is therein specially set forth that you may have such a deputation of power or powers:

> If, by reason of the distance at which any person, whose evidence is desired, resides from the place where his attendance is required, or for any other cause, the commissioner or commissioners deem it advisable, he or they may issue a commission or other authority to any officer or person therein named empowering him to take such evidence and to report the same to him or them.

Then it goes on to provide:

> Such officer or person shall before entering on any investigation, be sworn before a justice of the peace faithfully to execute the duty entrusted to him by such commission, and shall, with regard to such evidence, have the same powers as the commissioner or commissioners would have had if such evidence had been taken before him or them, and may, in like manner, under his hand issue a subpœna or other request or summons for the purpose of compelling the attendance of any person, or the production of any document, book or paper.

Now that power seems to be a large one, but it is conferred only in the case of a departmental inquiry, and would not, therefore, apply to the case of a commission issued under general powers, under the provisions of general application of part I of the Act. In the second place, the power already conferred is to be exercised only in that particular case, and with regard to the examination of a person or persons to whom it is difficult, by reason of distance or for other causes, to be present to testify, or whom it is not possible or convenient for the commissioners themselves to examine. So the legislation at present is after all but a widening of cases where this power of deputation may take place, an extension of it, so as to make it apply not only in one particular instance a departmental inquiry but also when, in the judgment of the commissioners it is advisable in the case either of a general inquiry, or an inquiry under the general provisions, or in the case of a departmental inquiry.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend think that the very fact that parliament, by section 9, only provided for a special commission to be appointed in an exceptional case where, by reason of the witnesses being far away from the headquarters of the commission, it would be exceedingly difficult or inconvenient to get the witnesses before the commissioners, that in that particular case power should be given to a special commissioner to make an examination—does not the hon. gentleman think that this fact shows that parliament at that time, at all events, when the original Act was passed, was of the opinion that this deputing of authority ought to be exercised only in exceptional cases? But in the present Bill my hon. friend proposes to widen it, so that it would be absolutely at the discretion of the commissioners to appoint a sub-commission without any reason at all, without it being necessary to do so for the convenience of a particular witness to give his evidence? The words are very broad. It says:

Commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts, or any qualified persons, to take evidence and inquire into and report——

In other words, it gives to these commissioners absolutely the same power which the Governor in Council has to-day to appoint commissioners. These three men, or these commissioners, whatever number there may be, whenever they choose to do so, may appoint special commissioners, who may be absolutely without qualification to hear evidence, absolutely without knowledge of the rules of evidence, absolutely incompetent to carry on an important inquiry; they may be appointed to hold these investigations anywhere they please throughout the country, even though there might not be the slightest necessity from the standpoint of the convenience of witnesses. My hon. friend has said that it is not at all uncommon in the province of Quebec to have experts make inquiries. I do not dispute that at all; in the other provinces the same thing is done. But I know that in the province of New Brunswick inquiries made by a court go to referees, as a rule, indeed I think always, referees who are always men of experience, who know the rules of evidence, and who, therefore, are competent to carry on these inquiries. My hon. friend has also said that in the province of Quebec, if any question were to arise with respect to a witness declining to give evidence upon a particular matter, the referee would have to send the matter to the court and let the court take proceedings. But there is no such provision in this statute. These experts might be utterly ignorant of the rules of evidence, utterly ignorant as to the mode in which an inquiry of this character—because it is a semi-judicial inquiry—ought to be conducted, might be utterly ignorant of the rules which govern such an inquiry. If a witness should decline to give evidence, you can bring him up at once, or have him brought up before a magistrate, and have him fined $400 without referring back to the commissioners at all or without any reference to a court. It is surely a dangerous power to give to an expert, to give to an engineer or to an accountant or to some person who has not the slightest idea of the rules of evidence. But that is what my hon. friend proposes to do. As the Prime Minister has said, presumably, in appointing commissioners of this character, the chairman would be a lawyer of good standing, or he would be a judge. The reason that a lawyer or a judge is selected is that he knows the rules of evidence, he knows how to conduct an inquiry, he knows what questions ought to be asked of a witness, and what questions ought not to be asked of him.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

He knows the difference between giving evidence of facts and giving hearsay evidence. If a witness should decline to answer a question these commissioners can then take proceedings before a magistrate to have the witness fined $400 for refusing to give evidence. But my hon. friend proposes to vest that power in anybody whom these commissioners may choose to appoint, men who may not be lawyers, men who, indeed, it is expected, will not be lawyers, men who may be engineers, architects, accountants, or other persons, and who may be entirely ignorant of the rules of evidence and will not have the slightest knowledge of the mode in which the inquiry should be carried on. It seems to me that the present provision contained in section 9 is amply sufficient for the purpose. This Bill gives to the commissioners very wide powers with which we make no quarrel upon this side of the House. Where, by reason of a witness whose evidence it is desired to obtain living a long distance from the place where the commissioners are holding their court, it is desirable to have sub-commissioners appointed, such sub-commissioners may be appointed under section 9. I think that covers all the cases which might reasonably be expected to arise, and that upon the whole it is better to keep these inquiries under the control of your own commissioners, as to whose knowledge, qualifications and experience you are able to judge when you make the appointments. It would be a most unreasonable and improper thing to allow these commissioners, of their own motion, without the necessity arising, as is provided for by section 9 of the present law, to delegate the powers which they themselves possess to men who may have no experience whatever as to the conducting of inquiries and as to the law of evidence, to allow them to determine as to whether a witness is refusing to state what, in law, he is not bound to state and to empower them to have him brought before a magistrate and have this large fine imposed upon him. I could understand that my hon. friend might justify this amendment if it were proposed that there might be in certain circumstances a reference back to the commissioners or a reference to a court or a judge, but this will give all these sub-commissioners, who may not be lawyers or judges or men having the slightest knowledge of the rules of evidence, the very improper right and the very absolute power of bringing a man up before a magistrate and having a very heavy penalty imposed upon him simply because he refused to answer questions which were entirely improper and which he was not bound to answer.

Mr. BORDEN. I think the dangers which my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) conjures up are more or less imaginary. Take the cases that have been put forward as illustrations by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), of references in courts which we see every day; a matter which will occupy a long time is, by reference, committed to some person with the duty of inquiring into it. We know that these men to whom these references are made very often have no legal training, and that notwithstanding this, these apprehended injustices do not occur. In addition to that, there are hundreds of officials throughout the country who have no technical legal training whatever, but who administer oaths and conduct inquiries and no detriment to the public interest is apparent. For example, coroners for the most part are medical men having no training in the law and yet they conduct inquiries and receive evidence, and I have never known of any serious injury resulting from their lack of technical legal training. There are hundreds and thousands of justices of the peace throughout the country who, under the laws of the different provinces, have the authority to examine witnesses on oath.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And who make a great many blunders, too.

Mr. BORDEN. Well, there are a great number of them and I do not think as a general rule that any serious injustices result from their acts. They are men, it is true, who have no technical training, but they do hear witnesses on oath and draw conclusions from the evidence so given. The proposal embodied in this Bill is purely for the purpose of convenience and expedition. It comes down in the end to this, with which every hon. member will agree at once, that it is desirable to empower these commissioners to employ experts for the purpose of making an inquiry, whether the inquiry be near or at a distance.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It also proposes to empower them to take evidence as well as to inquire.

Mr. BORDEN. I understand that; I am coming to that. I think we all agree in what I have said that it is desirable, at all events, to give that power. The only point that has been raised is as to whether or not, granted the expediency of appointing experts to make these inquiries, it is desirable in the public interest that they should have the right to take evidence on oath for the purpose of making their inquiry more thorough and effective than it otherwise would be. It does not seem to me that there is any particular detriment to the public interest or any injustice to any person in carrying out a proposal of that kind. I do not know in what way it could be limited, unless we struck it out altogether. Thus, it does appear to me, as at present advised, that if you grant the expediency of permitting men of that type to be employed to make special inquiries, from the standpoint of efficiency and thoroughness, you advance the matter by giving them power to take evidence on oath. In any case all they can do is to report to the commissioners and then the commissioners surely might be trusted to see to it that any injustice, if such injustice should transpire, would be remedied by them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will give me his attention for a moment I think I can show him that this amendment is not consistent with the principle of the Bill. The principle of the Bill does not introduce any new feature into the Act as it exists at the present time, but it simply has to do with attempting to clear up that which is doubtful. The Act which exists upon the statute book, which has been on the statute book since Confederation and which has been borrowed from the legislation of other lands, is an Act of great public convenience. It empowers the government to investigate all sorts of subjects. This power is not only in the direction of good government, but its value is becoming more and more recognized. The Bill does not propose to depart from the principle of this Act or to introduce any new feature, but simply to grant certain powers which would be already implied; that is to say it would be implied that the commissioners appointed to investigate any public question would be given full power to employ counsel, accountants and experts. But, this was not sure. It is made sure, but at the same time the powers of the commissioners under the Act were not as extended as the powers of these accountants will be under this proposal. The commissioners had the power to delegate the authority, as was stated by my hon. friend a moment ago, to interrogate witnesses on oath under all circumstances as a matter of course?—not simply under certain conditions, and here is the law cited by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) himself:

> If by reason of the distance at which any person whose evidence is desired resides from the place where his attendance is required, or for any other cause, the commissioner or commissioners deem it advisable, he or they may issue a commission or other authority to any officer or person therein named, empowering him to take such evidence and report the same to him or them.

Under the existing law, it is only in certain cases that the commissioners can delegate the authority vested in them to examine witnesses. In this case the Minister of Justice takes power to authorize the commissioners to appoint accountants, bookkepers, or engineers, whose calling does not train them to take evidence, to investigate and to seek the truth. Sometimes the courts of justice will delegate such authority but the Minister of Justice knows better than anybody else that the courts exercise this power with extreme caution and that it is a universal rule that the best way to get the truth is to have the witness himself before the court. I think you are going too far in this instance when you give men untrained in the law the power to conduct such inquiries. We do not object that the commissioners shall have power to get at the truth in every possible way, and they can examine experts, engineers, and accountants, before them. But to depute to these experts the power to conduct an inquiry is not conducive to the best interests of justice. As to the example cited by the Minister of Justice of a coroner conducting an investigation, he knows that the first duty of a coroner, although sometimes he may not do it effectively, is to acquaint himself with the rules of evidence. My amendment is, I believe, a reasonable one, and I therefore move:

That all the words after 'inquiry,' in line 11, be striken out.

This would eliminate the words 'and the commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountant, engineer, technical adviser or other experts, or any qualified persons to take evidence and report, &c.'

Mr. DOHERTY. I endeavoured to make it clear that in connection with this right to depute the power of investigation to accountants, or experts, or other persons, we were enlarging the scope of the existing Act. The argument of my right hon. friend, that Parliament when it enacted section 9 thought it wise to limit that power to one particular case hardly applies, because we are here to-day asking parliament to say that it is wise to extend this provision. Hon. gentlemen opposite are conjuring up imaginary cases. They seem to have perfect confidence that the Governor in Council will appoint commissioners who can be trusted to carry on these investigations, but they fear that the sub-commissioners may not be so trusted. The Bill does not enact that whenever a commission is issued the commissioners shall have power to depute; it is only in cases where the Governor in Council, in the commission issued, confers the power to depute that the commissioners will possess such power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the Minister of Justice say that these commissioners cannot appoint experts to take evidence unless they are specially authorized? As I read it, the moment the Governor General in Council authorizes the commissioners to employ accountants and experts it ipso facto vests in them the power to take evidence.

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes, but the commissioners have no power to delegate anything to these accountants and experts unless their commission expressly authorizes them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which of course it always would do; that is the object of the Bill.

Mr. DOHERTY. That would depend on who happened to be the advisers of His Excellency. No doubt, if the hon. gening to its circumstances, and who, when it should be done, but there are some governments which judge of each case according to its circumstances, and who, when they have the power, exercise it only when they believe it wise to exercise it. That is the kind of government we are entrusting this power to at the moment. It seems to me that if you trust the Governor General in Council to select commissioners having these wide powers you might entrust the Governor General in Council also to determine the kind of men to whom this power should be deputed and the circumstances under which it should be exercised. Under the Act as it stands the Governor in Council could give all these powers to three men whom he might choose, and all that is suggested now is that these three men so chosen, and for the exercise of whose judgment the government must be responsible, should be authorized to delegate certain of their powers when the necessity arises.

It does not give the commission by virtue merely of its appointment the right to delegate. So that you have that very direct control over the men who are given this power to depute and also over the circumstances under which it may be wise that they should be given the power to depute.

My right hon. friend has said that it is only in very rare and exceptional cases that this power is exercised by the courts. Why, it is a power that is frequently exercised in the case of technical disputes. The court may refer a disputed claim to an accountant and give him the power to hear evidence. The court may refer a builder's claim to an architect and give him power to hear evidence. Why is this done? Because the facts to be inquired into concern matters with which these men are specially familiar and are, therefore, more competent to get at the truth in the most satisfactory and shortest way.

Again, these sub-commissioners are merely going to report to the commission, and their finding is not to be necessarily that of the commission. If any injustice has been done these gentlemen are under the control of the commission, which passes upon their report, and the commissioners are under the control of the courts of the land. Should they, for instance, endeavour to compel an answer under circumstances when, by law, a man is not bound to answer, the court could be appealed to for the protection of the witness. Hon. gentlemen opposite are too frightened about what may happen under the operation of this Bill. It is simply a matter of applying to this particular instance methods that have stood the test of time under the ordinary law as administered by the courts of justice in order to arrive at the truth in the most expeditious and satisfactory way.

There are other instances of similar legislation. The late government entrusted to the Railway Commission the investigation of matters of very great importance indeed. That commission was given a very free hand as regards rules and regulations and is not composed exclusively of lawyers. They examine witnesses and exercise all the powers given by this Bill, and I must bear this testimony to the value of that commission, that they have done so generally to the satisfaction of the public.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend will look at the possible consequences of his legislation, he will see that the opposition from this side is not a factious opposition, but one conducive to substantial justice. He has cited the case of a judge deputing to an accountant or other expert a disputed claim. But the commission you are appointing is to investigate the civil service and is being given very large powers. I do not object at all to the appointment of that commission. It may or may not do very valuable work, according to the spirit in which it engages in that work. But that commission, which has jurisdiction over the whole country, may appoint one expert here and another there, and another elsewhere, and each of these experts will have the same powers to investigate as the commissioners themselves. Do you think it right that these experts—these accountants or architects or engineers—should be given the same powers as the commissioners? Why do you appoint these commissioners? Simply because you believe that justice is more likely to be administered when you have three heads than when you have only one. But you allow these three men to give all their powers to one man, and this man can investigate just as can the commission itself. While it may be wise that the commissioners should be authorized to appoint these experts, it is not wise that each of these experts should be given the same powers of investigation as are given the commissioners themselves.

Mr. BORDEN. My right hon. friend puts the case in a very fair way and I am quite ready to take issue with him as he puts it. For example, I suppose he would have no objection to any one of these commissioners making a necessary inquiry. That practice prevails in the case of the Railway Commission under the Act passed by the late government. One member of that commission may make an inquiry and report to the board. And that commission is not composed entirely of lawyers. There were also men appointed by the late government to investigate the Civil Service, none of whom were lawyers, and they had all the powers of investigation which my right hon. friend now thinks should not be exercised except by commissioners learned in the law. No great detriment to the country resulted from this. Further than that, let me call attention to a case directly in point. In Nova Scotia in 1896 or 1897 it became necessary to appoint some gentlemen to make inquiry into the conduct of officials of the government who were accused of offensive partisanship. One of the men sent to make these inquiries, and who conducted a great number of them, was a man who had no training whatever in law. He was a retired sea captain—Captain Bloomfield Douglas. If Captain Douglas, according to the judgment of the right hon. gentleman, was competent to make inquiry into the conduct of officials, what possible objection has he to the appointing of an engineer or an accountant or other experts of standing and reputation to make a like inquiry into certain questions which it is necessary to investigate in the public interest. I cannot distinguish between the two cases. If this proposed measure comes into operation, it will be found that the proceedings will be conducted just as thoroughly and fairly as in the case of any inquiry before the commissioners themselves.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can see a wide distinction between the case mentioned by my hon. friend and by my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) and the powers proposed to be given under this Bill. If the appointments were in the hands of the government the government is responsible in parliament, but he proposes to delegate that power to commissioners who are not answerable to parliament.

Of course, the government is responsible in the first instance with respect to the appointment of these commissioners, but the commissioners, in delegating to others certain powers, are not answerable to parliament. So it seems to me that there is a vast difference between the action taken in 1896, referred to by the right hon. leader of the government, and the present action. In that case the government of the day acted and was answerable to parliament for its acts.

Mr. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend think that the difficulty would be removed if these various experts should be appointed only with the approval of the Governor in Council?

Mr. EMMERSON. The government would be responsible, and I do not think it is wise to have the powers of the commission delegated to anybody.

Mr. BORDEN. I would prefer as the fairest way to leave it to the judgment of the commissioners; but if there is any very strong feeling that the government ought to take the responsibility, that is to say, to approve of the appointment of any accountant or expert, I would be prepared to consider the suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is such a thing as carrying a principle too far, and it seems to me that this is a case in point. You have provided that the commissioners shall have power to appoint experts. When you have gone that far it seems to me that you have gone all the length that is required. I grant that the commissioners would have their work facilitated by the appointment of experts, but that these experts should have the same powers as the commissioners I dispute.

Mr. MONK. As far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, if the suggestions made by hon. gentlemen opposite are adopted, the inquiry will be blocked. If a branch of that particular department is under investigation by the commission, and the conduct of fifteen or twenty people, officials, contractors and others, is in question, is it going to be suggested that each one of those interests or individuals shall have the right to appoint a separate lawyer to represent them before the commission? If that were to take place, it would be impossible for the commission to advance its work. I know that is not under the immediate consideration of the committee, but I mention it because it seems to me that the commission has the necessary discretion in that regard. Then, suppose the commission determines to investigate certain branches of the service of my department, that of dredging, for instance, and finds it necessary to conduct a partial inquiry necessitating the presence of an expert in some distant province, where the expert will necessarily have not only to view the work, but to hear witnesses in order to ascertain certain facts. If this amendment were adopted, the commission, in order to ascertain particular and limited facts in connection with one particular work, would have to transport itself to that remote part of the country, whereas, as the Minister of Justice has explained, it would be better that such an inquiry should be conducted by an expert. It seems to me that the amendment suggested in this regard would only retard and block the work of the commission.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Under the first part of this section it is proposed to enable the commission to employ the services of two different classes of persons: First, they may engage the services of accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts; further, they may employ the services of clerks, reporters and assistants. But they can only employ either or both of these classes if they are authorized to do so by the commission appointing them. If the rest of the section had followed this wording, the section as a whole might not be so objectionable. For instance, if the accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts were authorized to inquire and report to the commissioners on any matter of a technical or expert nature, I believe that would be fair legislation; but under the latter part of this section, which asks for power to authorize the employment of any qualified person to inquire, not into any matter where special or technical knowledge is called for, but to take evidence and report to the commissioners on any matter within the scope of the commission, the commissioners might delegate their entire power if they so wished. I think it is fair to say that no legislation except under the greatest safeguards should enable the power granted to the commissioners to be delegated by them. If so, the grounds upon which their power might be delegated should be specifically stated, as provided in section 9 of this Act.

It is true that in this country it has been found necessary, to assign to the courts in a certain sense, legislative powers. At least it is found better to grant the courts restricted legislative power, for experience has shown that these matters can be better worked out by courts even than by legislatures. So, I submit, the power to take evidence and inquire should never be delegated from the person primarily authorized unless the exceptions are designated in the statute, or the commission. I think they are very well set out under section 9. As the latter part of section 2 presumes to give power that the former part of the section never intended, I think that probably there is an error in drafting.

Mr. DOHERTY. No, there is no error in drafting. Nor is the hon. member (Mr. Maclean, Halifax), mistaken in saying that the law does propose to give power not only to experts, but even to persons who may not be experts to inquire into facts.

As I pointed out when I first spoke on the Bill. there may be facts to be learned in particular localities which it would be difficult for the commissioners as a whole to reach; or it may be necessary in a commission covering a very wide field to carry on the investigation of facts regarding different branches of the matters to be inquired into simultaneously in special cases. There is no mistake it is intended that the power should exist. It is intended, however, that the power should be exercised according to the necessities of the case and we contemplate that it would be exercised by men who in its exercise would bring to bear upon the question of when, and where, and how they should exercise it, a sound judgment. If I understand correctly the main objection to it is that we are giving to persons whom the Governor in Council appoint power to delegate certain of these powers. I confess, I do not see that, either from the point of view of the responsibility of the Governor in Council for what is done or from the point of view of the wisdom with which it may be carried out, there is any very material difference between providing what is here proposed, and providing that the Governor in Council may issue separate commissions to different people to carry on given sections of this investigation. If I understand the objection, it would not apply to this latter course because the powers would come directly from the Governor in Council to each individual or group of individuals called upon to exercise it. If that is considered to be a serious matter, and it is thought any advantage would be derived from it, I should be disposed to consider whether, if it met these objections, we might not insert in the Bill a proviso that this power of delegation should be exercised with the approval of the Governor in Council. This would bring home to the Governor in Council the express authorization for the exercise of this power and the choice of the persons to exercise it. If that is what is wanted I should be disposed to consider the advisability of doing it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and more particularly the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) will agree with me that, so far as the practice of the courts of any of the provinces is concerned this Bill is a new departure, and certainly there is no such practice in the courts of Great Britain. A great deal has been said by the Minister of Justice about references in the Supreme Court. But no one knows better than the Minister of Justice that a referee in the Supreme Court is hedged about with a great many safeguards. In the first place, the rule of reference is drafted with two lawyers keenly watching what it contains. It is then submitted to him in the way of evidence names the particular case in which the referee shall inquire. And the referee is not a judge of evidence, as the right hon. the Prime Minister knows,—in our province at all events—he may not reject evidence; he must take everything that is submitted to him in the way of evidence write it down and mark any objection taken to it. There is another phase of reference which, I presume, is the same all over this country, but, which is not provided for in the Bill before us. After the rule of reference is returned to the judge, the judge does not at once decide it, but, it is open to the counsel of both sides to criticise the evidence. And, if the power to make a finding is in the referee, it is open to the judge to set that finding aside on hearing counsel. So, the Minister of Justice cannot find consolation in comparing the procedure under this proposed Act with the procedure in the courts in regard to matters of reference. The Minister of Justice has also said that it is common to refer questions of building to architects. I have never heard of such a thing myself. I have often known the judge to refer such a matter to a referee with power to bring achitects before him to give evidence; but it is new to me that an architect should be the judge or should take the evidence. A question of bookkeeping may arise that would take a week to inquire into. The judge does not wish to take up the time of the court with it and leaves it to a referee who will take the necessary time, bring the witnesses before him and investigate the case. But a bookkeeper is not appointed to take the evidence; a lawyer or some competent person is appointed for that purpose. Any one familiar with the practice in the courts knows that that is the rule observed in every part of the country. The Minister of Justice says also that it is only when the power to call in these experts is named in the commission that they can be called in. I submit both to the Minister of Justice and to the right hon. the Prime Minister that it is very often only after we have gone on several stages in a trial that we discover what kind of evidence is necessary in order to reach a proper conclusion. Do the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice say that every time a commissioner 'strikes a snag,' reaches a stake where such evidence is required, he must go back and have his commission amended?

Mr. DOHERTY. If the 'snag' was not foreseen and the necessary power was not included in the commission,—certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then a new commission is needed every time a new class of evidence becomes necessary. It seems to me that is a very clumsy way of conducting an inquiry. My right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) knows that in our province the only class of tribunal of this kind that exists is the Admiralty Court. If the judge of that court is not a seafaring man, if he does not understand navigating or the working of a ship, he has the right to bring to his assistance what are known as assessors.

No person knows better than my right hon. friend that that is done every day, I suppose in every province of Canada, at all events in Nova Scotia. There would be no objection to vesting power in these commissioners to call such men to their assistance if it was necessary, and if necessary, let them appeal to the department under whose control they were acting. If, for instance, in the Department of Public Works, it is found that the commissioners require certain expert evidence, say for instance, an engineer, they could make application to that department, and have an engineer put at their disposal and give expert evidence. Then the appointments would be all the time under the control of the department, and the power of making appointments under the control of parliament. But this spreading abroad of jurisdiction is, I think, entirely without precedence, and I think without authority in common law or in common sense. There is another objection I would point out to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Justice. It appears to me that there could be at least a dozen courts sitting at the same time inquiring into the same matter under this Act. There are, I think, about a dozen different authorities that can be appointed. It is a sound principle of law that a man has a right to be present at any inquiry into his case. There is nothing in this Act to prevent at least half a dozen such courts sitting at the same time, one at Victoria, one at Sydney, one at Halifax and another at St. John, inquiring into the same case, with the experts appointed under the power of this commission, into the acts of the same individual, who is supposed to be present at all these places, or be represented by counsel. This may be an extreme supposition, but the power is there. The engineer, accountant, bookkeeper, or any other expert that may be appointed, is not at all to take any cognizance of the fact that another branch of the commission is holding court somewhere else, or can hold a court. I think the powers of his court, like those of every other court, should be concentrated as much as possible, and not spread abroad in this way. If, in the wisdom of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, it is thought desirable to procure the assistance of experts to help these commissioners, they should go to that court as assessors, go to the admiralty court in our province, and in that way procure the desired assistance. The character of the experts would be such as to give the decision more authority, and we would have the security of knowing that no person will be appointed except upon the approval of the Prime Minister, who is responsible primarily for any appointments that may be made in connection with this or any other inquiry.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Does my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) seriously think that half a dozen investigations could take place at different points in this country to inquire into the acts of the same individual?

Mr. McKENZIE. Why not?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Because it is not common sense.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then this Act is not common sense.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It is absolute common sense. My hon. friend knows that his supposition is absurd. You must give the commissioners and sub-commissioners credit for ordinary, every-day sense, and it is not possible that half a dozen investigations could be taking place at the same time in as may different cities, inquiring, as he said, into the acts of the same individual. Now it seems to me that the objections which have been raised to this amendment are entirely fanciful. Fears have been expressed as to the possible abuse of the legal procedure which, I think, are entirely without foundation. Take the case of an arbitration. Will any hon. gentlemen say that a lawyer, or two or three lawyers, must always be appointed as arbitrators under the Arbitration Act of the several provinces? It is a matter of common experience, at least in the province of Ontario, that an accountant, or an engineer, or an expert, or other qualified person, or an ordinary every-day layman, an ordinary citizen, is entrusted with the power of holding an arbitration upon cases involving property rights of the greatest value, and no one has ever heard of the consequences ensuing which have been suggested by the hon. gentleman. I have had a great deal to do with arbitrations in the course of my life, and I have never known a matter brought before the jurisdiction of the High Court in which arbitrators have been appointed, experts, accountants, lawyers or ordinary persons—and these arbitrators in the province of Ontario, at all events, are given power of pronouncing upon the admissibility of evidence—I have never heard of any penalties being imposed by them, and I have never known of any abuse under the Arbitration Act. Now it does seem to me that these sub-commissioners are only given the powers that are given to arbitrators under the Arbitration Act; the Bill enables the commission to carry out its duties anywhere in Canada by multiplying itself in a proper manner, in order that a wider inquiry may be held.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Are they supposed to make inquiries largely of an expert and technical character? Is that the purpose?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I do not know. I am dealing only with the clause in this Act which is under discussion. I do not know what application may be given to it or if it can be given a wider application than is provided for by this Act. What does this Act say? It simply says that these comsioners may delegate to subcommissioners and other persons mentioned certain powers, that they may employ an accountant, for instance. An accountant is an expert, an engineer is an expert, and they may appoint such technical advisers or other qualified persons as they may deem necessary. You will observe that it stops short of reporters, assistants, clerks and others, it is only experts that are to be appointed.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What is meant by 'qualified persons?'

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend knows what a qualified person means as well as I do. A qualified person is a man who has the qualification necessary for the special investigation, and that is precisely what we want. Now let us consider what is the safeguard in this Act, because I am sure we all want to meet the wishes of our hon. friends in this matter, if their objections are substantial and not shadowy. What is the real safeguard? In the first place, the commission is to be appointed by the Governor in Council, in other words, by the government of this Dominion. In the second place, you will observe that it is only under authority of the commission issued in the case that this power of delegation is given, in other words, the government of the Dominion which appoints the commission knows that it is a commission in which the power of delegation exists, and consequently knows all that may flow from that power of delegation. The result is that the Governor in Council will be charged with the responsibility of seeing to it, and will be held responsible for seeing to it, that only such commissioners are appointed as may be safely entrusted with the power of delegation. It must be assumed, therefore, that these men so appointed will exercise a wise discretion in deputing their authority to subcommissioners. My hon. friend from Halifax said that they might delegate their entire powers; in other words, I suppose they might take a holiday, and delegate their entire powers to a hundred or so accountants, engineers and other experts, to conduct the investigation. Now, I think we may assume that there will be a certain amount of common-sense employed by the commission in carrying out its work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Let us make sure.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). You must apply common-sense to everything. There is not a statute in this country against which you might not bring a hundred or a thousand fanciful objections.

Very often lawyers have, but nevertheless the legal business of the country is transacted in due course. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite have really gone out of their way to suggest fanciful and foundationless objections to this legislation which is designed to meet the case of an inquiry extending over a great area. It is absolutely impossible for the commissioners to investigate every particular case that may arise and it seems to me that under these circumstances it is good legislation. The government is responsible for bringing this commission into action. It does not follow that in every case the commissioners are going to do this but it does mean that, if, in a particular case such as that with which we are confronted at the present time it is desirable under the statute to appoint five or a hundred men, we should give the commission the power of delegation so that it may, in the exercise of a wise discretion, appoint sub-commissioners who will carry on, throughout the length and breadth of the country, the investigation that is required under the authority of this Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White), intended to defeat the objection which is raised, in my estimation, is a very strong confirmation of the stand which we have taken. The whole of the argument of my hon. friend springs from the fact that he has assimilated the investigation of this commission to the work of an arbitration. If this were an arbitration I would agree with him, but it is not an arbitration—far from it. In an arbitration the two parties agree upon two arbitrators. One agrees upon one man, the other agrees upon another and these two arbitrators agree upon a third. If they have only one arbitrator they agree upon some one man. Therefore, they select their own tribunal and they may select whom they choose. They may select a technical or a non-technical arbitrator, but, at all events, they select men in whom they have confidence. But, this is not the case of an arbitration. The man who is to be investigated will be forced into this case. He has nothing to say as to the appointment of the arbitrators. If it were a case such as has been suggested by my hon. friend, where he had something to say in the selection of the arbitrators, well and good. But, he is brought before a tribunal not by his own consent but perhaps against his will. He has nothing to say as to who his judge shall be. Therefore, can my hon. friend show why, under these circumstances, we should not be guided by those rules which experience has shown to be the best and the most conducive to the ends of justice? The rules which have been employed to safeguard the administration of justice should be thrown around an inquiry such as this. Let us have the services of experts, but to say that these men shall have the power to investigate and pass upon the matters referred to the commission is to depart from the sound principles which should guide us in a matter of this kind.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has shifted his ground. The objection that was made at the outset to this Bill was that legal procedure would be abused and that penalties might be inflicted upon witnesses.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It was said that penalties might be inflicted upon witnesses. Even if the parties do appoint their arbitrators, as they do appoint them under the Arbitration Acts of the several provinces, what abuse has taken place in so far as the infliction of penalties is concerned where the arbitrators have not been lawyers but have been laymen? That is the point I am making. I say that the objection in regard to the abuse of legal procedure is fanciful. The objection was taken that only lawyers were qualified to hear evidence because they would know whether evidence was admissible or not and yet, in all the hundreds of arbitrations going on all over this country, whoever heard of any particular abuse, whoever heard of the imposition of penalties, whoever heard of the matter being brought before the High Court of Justice in order that justice might be done, or that penalties might not be improperly inflicted? If you wish to shift the ground to argue it on another basis, well and good, but if I am correct in what I say that is your objection and it must fall to the ground in this case. There is no objection from the legal standpoint to accountants and other experts holding an investigation and none of the abuses which have been suggested will be permitted to take place.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think that if we knew what was the purpose and object of the legislation we probably would agree as to our conclusions upon this particular Bill. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice if the main purpose of this Bill is not to provide the assistance of experts and those technically trained. Is that not the main purpose of the Bill?

Mr. DOHERTY. What?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). To secure for the commissioners the aid of technical advisers and experts?

Mr. DOHERTY. That is one of the objects. There are two purposes, and that is one of them.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What is the other?

Mr. DOHERTY. The other is to enable the commission to carry on this investigation with promptitude by making it possible for certain aid to be provided in cases where it is necessary that they should be investigated simultaneously.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The Minister of Finance says not.

Mr. DOHERTY. I did not so understand the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It strikes me that the chief purpose of the draughtsman of the Bill was to provide technical and expert aid to the commissioners. I think, if I might suggest to the Minister of Justice, that the Bill might very well stand amending in several respects. I think it is hardly wise to have 'clerks, reporters, and assistants' follow the enumeration of 'accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts,' when later in the clause you give the former named officers certain defined powers to take evidence. 'Clerks, reporters, and assistants' are terms which should have been used earlier in the section, and should be made a separate sentence. Assuming that the purpose of this legislation is to provide assistance for the commissioners in the way of experts and those technically trained I say the legislation is perfectly fair, and I personally would agree to a clause enacting that these accountants, engineers, technical advisers and experts should be commissioners to take evidence in questions of a technical nature or where technical knowledge was required. I do not think that is objectionable, but when, in the middle of this clause, you interject a very general authority to the commissioner to delegate his power of taking evidence upon any subject named within the scope of the commission, you adopt a new principle altogether. Then, it is departing from the scope of the Bill to say that two different objects are aimed at. That is the objection that we have to the Bill namely, that it enables the commissioner to dispose of the power given to him under the commission, to others. If it were simply confined to granting powers to technical experts to take evidence in technical matters I do not think it would be so objectionable.

Mr. MURPHY. Might I inquire from the Minister of Justice whether the commissioner or commissioners will have the power to delegate their authority, or any authority, to sub-commissioners, even if that authority is not expressed in the commission?

Mr. DOHERTY. No. The first condition of the commissioners having any power of delegation is that their commission expressly empowers them to so delegate. With regard to the objection of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), to our empowering persons other than accountants or experts, if I followed him rightly, he would not object to accountants being authorized to make inquiry with regard to matters of accounts——

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Yes, that is right.

Mr. DOHERTY—or other experts being employed to make inquiries in expert matters? His objection is to other qualified persons being authorized to investigate with regard to facts coming within the scope of the commission.

My statement was that the intention of this Bill was to make it possible in the case of a commission whose scope was very wide to carry on investigation into certain branches simultaneously.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). These different branches might refer to the same case and the same men; take for example a contractor who had dredging in different parts of the country.

Mr. DOHERTY. You would have to assume that because there is power to carry on investigation into different branches simultaneously, there would be such gross abuse of that power as would entail the carrying on of the investigation without that man being present or being heard. Of course, I never dreamt that such a thing as that would occur. And, unless it is assumed that this is some Machiavelian machinery devised for the purpose of getting people into trouble, such a thing as that is not conceivable. I am not at all certain that if this power were sought to be abused, in violation of every principle of natural justice, that the courts of the land could not restrain. This commission is not going out to a world where there is no law and no justice and, as the Minister of Finance has said, no common-sense. I do not suppose that it is possible to enact anything which, under any condition and under all circumstances it is not possible to devise abuses under. No parliament can undertake that they will grant powers, which are not susceptible of being abused, unless indeed we should get that angelic commission which my distinguished friend from St. John said we were not going to appoint; but, in my opinion, there is not a remote possibility that there will be any such abuse of this power.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Can the Minister of Justice suggest any case, in which the division of this inquiry will lead to good results?

Mr. DOHERTY. There may be a matter of expert knowledge and account that would be required to be looked into by experts and accountants, but there may also be a tangled-up question of fact which can only be cleared up by an investigation of the facts; for example, in the city of Halifax.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That may be quite possible.

Mr. DOHERTY. I suppose it is conceivable that there are matters in Halifax which may require investigation, and there have been so many extreme possibilities suggested by gentlemen on the other side that I was led to take that example. There may, for instance, with regard to the Department of Public Works be matters of fact calling for investigation both in Halifax and in Montreal, and if the commission has to be present on every occasion at the taking of evidence with regard to these facts, then its work might go on indefinitely, whereas if you get competent people to take the evidence and report to the principal commissioners who are going to make their findings, it would undoubtedly lead to expedition. Be it remembered that these deputed people are not going to decide; they will simply take the testimony and report it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would not the report of the commissioners be of more value if they hear the evidence in Montreal and Halifax, rather than that they should hear it in Montreal and have it taken by a sub-commissioner in Halifax?

Mr. DOHERTY. It is conceivable that there may be certain points of view from which it would be better to have all the evidence heard by all the commissioners, but the advantages which would result from that would be vastly more than counterbalanced by the grave inconvenience which would result from the delay in the operations of these commissioners. After all, in the courts of the land, the judgments that finally determine things are the judgments of men who did not hear the evidence but who had it reported to them. Nobody would suggest that it would be much better that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should come over to Canada and hear the evidence.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not see any analogy between that and the present case.

Mr. DOHERTY. Do not their Lordships determine on questions of fact?

Mr. McKENZIE. They accept the findings in almost all cases.

Mr. DOHERTY. I beg to differ most emphatically from my learned and hon. friend; it is elementary that there is an appeal upon a question of fact.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). They give more weight to the evidence where the judge below has heard it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And generally they accept the findings on facts.

Mr. DOHERTY. The cases are of course numerous where judgments have been reversed in appeal upon questions of fact. In this case not only will there be a report from the deputy commissioner, but that will be accompanied by the actual testimony.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Testimony about what?

Mr. DOHERTY. About whatever matters of fact are investigated.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would the minister consider it good business and ordinary common-sense, to use the word of the Minister of Finance, to take the opinion of a man in Winnipeg and a man in Montreal and a man in Vancouver upon the manner in which a certain branch of the Public Works should be organized, without the Chief Commissioner being there so that he might hear the different views and form some sensible business-like conclusion? If you are simply inquiring into the conduct of an official in the public service the minister may be right.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not think that the main business of this commission is going to be to inquire into the opinions of gentlemen scattered all over the country as to how the public departments of this government are going to be ordered. If that is necessary it is quite simple for the government itself to get the advice of men who are competent to give that advice. But, if what we hear is true, there are a great number of matters of fact that call for investigation and that are proper matters for testimony of the people who will tell what the facts are about certain transactions. This can be as well investigated by men deputed for the purpose, as by the principal commissioners, and that evidence can be brought back and reported to them.

Mr. DOHERTY.

There may be special cases in which it would be specially advantageous that the commissioners themselves should hear the evidence and they will have to exercise their judgment in deciding whether that is necessary or not. But if we are to have a practical investigation, such as we all desire, we are only providing in this Bill the necessary means to attain that result within a reasonable period of time. For my part I am willing to give serious consideration to the suggestion that each particular delegation should be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. That would practically be the same as if the Governor in Council were to issue a commission. Our only motive is to give the public a satisfactory and effective investigation and avoid abuses as much as it is possible to avoid them under any legislation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand my hon. friend is going to consider the amendment we have suggested to this Bill. I would like to suggest another amendment in the shape of an additional section. Before doing so I would say that the feeling in this parliament has been growing for some years that it is desirable, not only that the government should have the opportunity of holding investigations into public matters but also that the right should be vested in the minority of the members of parliament to compel the holding of such investigations. We know that there are cases arising from time to time with regard to which the minority may consider properly that there should be some investigation, and I submit that in such cases their demand should be granted. I would move, therefore, that the following section be added to the Bill:

Whenever forty or more members of the Senate or House of Commons or of both, of whom the leader of the opposition for the time being in the House of Commons shall be one, represent in writing to the Governor in Council that in their opinion it is expedient and in the public interest that inquiry shall be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, or in reference to the state and management of the business or any part of the business of any department of the Civil Service of Canada, either in the inside or outside service thereof, or the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties, the Governor in Council shall forthwith cause such inquiry to be made; and for such purpose shall by a commission appoint a judge of the Superior Court to make such inquiry, who shall have all the powers granted to commissioners under this Act, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply to such inquiry.

Mr. BORDEN. This proposed section is so absolutely contrary to the utterances of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, as I have heard them many times in this House during the past ten years, that I could hardly believe my ears when I heard him seconding the motion. I have known of a great many occasions during the past two years when, not forty but eighty members of this House desired investigation into public departments, and the right hon. gentleman was the first to rise and say that these investigations should not be granted unless in each case a charge were made. Under the circumstances I do not think the right hon. gentleman can be serious in seconding this motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has certainly happened that when motions were made by my right hon. friend I did not agree with him, but whenever I differed from him he found fault with me and appealed to a higher court, the people. The people supported him and they expect him to carry out the principles he advocated when in opposition. But when we propose that he should put those principles into practice, in every instance he goes back on them. I am not at all surprised that he should do so in this case. During the last four months we have seen him on many occasions turning his back on his own platform.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman challenged us to appeal to the people. We did appeal and we got a judgment in our favour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Upon your own doctrines?

Mr. BORDEN. Exactly and we got a decision in our favour. As a matter of fact the amendement proposed is entirely out of accord with the principles of responsible government, as understood in this country, and no one knows that better than the right hon. gentleman, and no one has declared that so often.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have held that the minority should not dictate to the government as understood in this country, of the right hon. gentleman declaring that the minority were entitled to investigations when they called for them. We appealed together to the people and they supported him. Let him now carry out his own doctrine.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). The right hon. gentleman goes beyond the principle of a minority. These forty might be the minority of a minority.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That does not impair the principle.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see anything objectionable in this.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Of course not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems to me that it is only carrying out what we have the right to believe is the desire of the people of Canada.

My right hon. friend who now leads the government has for many years contended that the people's representatives were here, the minority as well as the majority, to watch the people's interests—that the government were like the board of directors of a financial institution, and that the minority of the people's representatives in parliament had the right to demand that there should be an investigation into any matter connected with the government of the country. If I remember rightly, in the Bill which was introduced to amend the Bank Act, that principle is applied, because it is there distinctly provided that a minority of the shareholders of a bank, I think one-fourth, may at any time have an investigation into its management. The people have sustained my right hon. friend, but we cannot pick out the particular policy on which they have sustained him. We have a right, therefore, in regard to the different policies he has laid down, to expect that my right hon. friend, and those associated with him in the government of the country, will recognise as sound the principles which they contended for when in opposition. We also think that it is our duty, as servants of the people, to take note of the wishes of the people, and I certainly think it is in entire harmony with the wishes of the people that when a considerable number of the members of parliament, and certainly 40 is a considerably number, consider that there is a matter of public importance which ought to be investigated, and take the responsibility of attaching their signatures to a memorial to the Governor in Council to that effect, such an investigation should take place. Then, this amendment has the additional safeguard of requiring that of those 40 members one shall be the leader for the time being of the opposition in the House of Commons. That, it seems to me, guarantees parliament and the government against any frivolous demand for an investigation. It is a guarantee that only on the strongest possible ground will a memorial for such an investigation be presented. We do not ask that the opposition shall have any voice in the appointment of the commissioner. All we ask is that the Governor in Council shall issue a commission to a judge of a Superior Court, and he shall conduct the inquiry in accordance with the provisions of this Bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, does not that strike you as a reasonable proposition? I would be greatly surprised if it did not strike, not only you, but every member of this House as entirely reasonable. Surely the government can have nothing to complain of in it if the affairs of the country are being properly and wisely administered. It is the pride and joy of Canadian and British institutions that we can trust our judges to rise above party and carry on investigations of this character in a judicial manner. If this proposition is refused, it will surely mean tying the hands of the opposition and preventing us from having an investigation of public matters when we think an investigation should take place. This seems to be an appropriate time to move forward in the direction of reform. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, wants to make these investigations very effective. He wants all at once to be able to start a roving commission to investigate the conduct of the officials of the different departments of the government from one end of the country to the other. We have had no intimation from him as to where he is going to begin or as to where he is going to stop.

Mr. DOHERTY: We will begin at the beginning, and we will stop at the end.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where my hon. friend will begin we do not know, but I am sure that he has fixed in his mind that the investigation shall end on the 10th or 11th of October last. I think we are in harmony with the progressive sentiment of the people in desiring that there shall be the fullest light of day thrown upon the conduct of the government of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I called attention casually to the fact that the resolution as it was presented, was not contented with laying down the principle, entirely new, I think, in parliamentary practice, that His Majesty's opposition, even when a united voice, in any matter of public business or public interest, should automatically prevail to the extent of having an investigation conducted, in any public matter on any occasion that it might choose. I do not think that representative government could be carried on with that as an arbitrary condition. But it becomes positively absurd when it makes the demand that, whenever forty members in a minorty consider it in the public interest, an inquiry shall be made—forty members in a minorty which may range up to 82, 83, 85, or may be 100. Now a small section, perhaps not half, of the minority in parliament is going to be clothed—if such a law as this passes—with authority to impose its will upon the majority. Have we ever heard of anything so revolutionary, so absurd, advocated in a Canadian parliament? You have here two hundred and twenty-three members. The number may soon be two hundred and fifty, or three hundred. And it is proposed to enact a law to put it into the power of a mere fraction of that House to make itself the judge of what is expedient in the public interest, to interfere with the machinery of government, and at any time when it please to impose, not one or two, but it may be thirty or forty or fifty investigations. Not a rump of the parliament, but a mere rump of the opposition, may impose upon the majority of parliament any fad or fancy it may choose. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows that it is absolutely absurd. Why should he think that he is obliged to stand at the back of the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in any of his newly found fads or fancies in public virtue and public purity? Let the hon. member for the city of St. John make his specious plea to this House, and, if he can, convince himself and—what would be a good deal harder—convince others that he is consumed with the desire to purify politics; but why should he drag so reputable and so experienced a statesman as the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) behind him in these vagaries. A reading of the resolution is enough to convince the whole country of its absurdity. I have been somewhat amused, and a good deal edified by the course of this whole discussion. I have full sympathy with hon. members opposite in their pleading for the rights of the person whose office, whose reputation, or whose conduct as a public official is impugned, and have noted with pleasure their burning and consuming desire that even the smallest and meanest in the service of the country should not be deprived of having counsel to represent his case before this commission. It is a lovely sentiment, and humane in the extreme. But where was this sentiment concealed in the breasts of hon. gentlemen opposite at a former stage of their career? I agree with them that if even one man's reputation, his life interest, or his wordly future is involved in an investigation of the working of any part of the government machinery, something dear is impugned, some thing of value to him at least is at stake, and it ought to be the clear right of common humanity that he should have the power to represent his case, and, if opposed by legal representatives, he should have the power to bring legal representatives to his aid. But did my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) make much outcry not many years ago when that right was absolutely denied by commissions appointed by himself? I never heard that he did. But, if, in his own bosom, he was plagued by such humane feelings, I am glad to know now, at long last, that he had them, even though he most effectually smothered them at that time.

Mr. DEVLIN. I did not intend to take any part in the debate, having great faith in any suggestions which my good friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) should offer. But when it comes to the question whether the opposition shall have the right to ask for an investigation into the acts of government in the management of the departments, I must say I most heartily support the amendment of the hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Pugsley), and I fail to see how, in view of the events that have taken place in this House in recent years, hon. gentlemen opposite can possibly refuse to His Majesty's loyal opposition or to a fair number of the members sitting on this side of the House, the right to inquire into the acts of the adminstration. There is absolutely no blame attached to the members of the government side or even those on the treasury benches. This is a young government, a very young government. They have not had time to sin; but they will sin, there is absolutely no doubt about that in the minds of the people. But what surprises us on this side of the House is that they should be afraid to allow us the right of investigation of the acts of the departments over which they at present have administrative power. At present we are seated upon this side; but in two or three years the sides in this House may be changed again and hon gentlemen opposite then may claim the very right which they to-day are refusing to grant us. Take, for instance, the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). Of all the members on the opposite side, he certainly must feel the most uncomfortable. How can he refuse to give to the opposition the right to investigate acts of the departments when he, day after day in this very House, insisted that it was the right of the opposition to investigate every department? What is he going to say to-day? And what will other hon. members opposite say? Are they going to refuse the people of this country through their duly elected representatives, the right to investigate the acts of the departments? Sir, if the government refuse that which is asked for by the hon. member for St. John city then they go back upon every promise they made to the electors of this country and upon every principle that they advocated when they were on this side of the House.

If the country will not believe in their—what should I say?—in their sincerity, then the electors will ask themselves why they made a change of government. The present government asked the people to give them the privilege of adminstering the affairs of this country and to show what they could do. To-day, when we say to them: Practise what you preached when in opposition, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) gets up and says, Oh, but this is not constitutional. Well, if it is not constitutional to-day it was not constitutional when we sat on the other side of the House. But hon. gentlemen opposite said it was thoroughly constitutional then. If it was constitutional when hon. gentlemen sat on this side of the House, it is fairly constitutional to-day.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 19) to amend the Inquiries Act.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I understand there is an arrangement that there is to be no division in connection with this Bill this evening.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I have not any specific knowledge, but I think the arrangement was that there was to be no vote on the principal amendment. It will, I suppose, be possible to get rid of two of the amendments and then the committee can rise.

Amendment (Mr. Pugsley) negatived.

Mr. DOHERTY. We promised to take into consideration, with a view of possibly adopting it in its present form or perhaps of finding terms which would be more satisfactory, the amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) providing for the right to those whose conduct might be impugned, to have counsel. As to the amendment of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) eliminating that portion of the clause which provides that the commissioners be authorized to depute any portion of their powers, I do not think any amount of consideration of it would lead us to that angelic frame of mind where we would be disposed to accept it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I thought it was understood that this amendment should stand, but any way I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that he could improve the drafting of that clause in the Bill, and it would be better to let it stand.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have no objection to that. I would be very glad if there could be any modification of the wording which would suit the views of hon. gentlemen and which would retain the purport of the clause.

Mr. ROSS. My understanding was that the whole matter should stand.

Mr. DOHERTY. The result is that with the exception of the last amendment which has been disposed of, the other amendments to stand.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—THE NEWMARKET CANAL

Mr. WHITE (Leeds), moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. A. M. ARMSTRONG (North York). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would ask permission to draw to the attention of this House a matter that is of some importance to every member here, and which is certainly of vital importance to myself and to the riding I have the honour to represent. For the past four or five days the newspapers throughout western Ontario have been giving considerable space to announcing the fact that the government has decided to close down on that great national highway, that immense artery of commerce, that everlasting monument to Liberal stupidity and incompetence known as the Newmarket canal. I think I am justified in saying that no member of this House is more vitally interested in the ultimate fate of that public work than I am, as I have the honour to represent the riding in which it is built, and I am proud to say that I was born, and that I reside in that riding. And, lest hon. gentlemen opposite might have a tendency to misconstrue my remarks this evening, permit me to say in the first place that I considered that work from its very inception an unjustifiable expenditure of public money. Permit me to say further that the action of the late administration in commencing and carrying on that work cannot be explained or exonerated, and, if I may be permitted to use a hackneyed phrase, I will say still further that the scheme as it was carried out was conceived in infamy and born in shame. Well, since the 21st day of September last another phase of this question has presented itself, and as representations have been made in the public press with regard to my stand on the question, I rise now to place myself fairly and squarely before the members of this House and before this country with regard to the stand I take on this question. Let me say that throughout the campaign which was closed on the 21st September last I ridiculed that work; I criticised it on the hustings throughout the length and breadth of North York, and under similar circumstances I would take that course again, as I consider it to be the bounden duty of any honest man to criticise a work of that kind. But Sir, as I understand it, some seven hundred thousand or eight hundred thousand of the hard earned dollars of the people of this country have been sunk in that work, and the question arose as to what would be done by this government. Let me point out to the House and to the country that I proclaimed privately and publicly throughout the length and breadth of my riding before the elections, that should there be a change of administration then in view of the vast expenditure that already had been made in connection with that work I would urge that a commission be appointed—this was my own idea only—consisting say of three men, one an expert engineer, whose position and reputation in his profession would preclude the possibility of political interference from either side, another who occupied a high position in the financial world, and the third a man who had considerable experience in questions of transportation and who might be termed an expert in that direction.

I consider that such a commission, if appointed, would be a proper one to investigate into this matter and report to the government and this House on the possibility and practicability of that work, after examining it from alpha to omega. We would then be in a position to decide whether the cost of completing that work would be justified by the amount of traffic which we might expect it could accommodate. That was the stand I took during the campaign. I said that if such a commission were to report that the amount of traffic would not justify the expense, I would be the first to stand up and demand that the work should cease; but on the other hand, if that commission should report that the traffic would justify sufficiently the money expended, I would be the first to ask this government to push that work to completion. I am glad to say that while the present administration has not taken the course I hoped they might, I have sufficient confidence in the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) and this government to feel satisfied that they have in their possession sufficient information to convince themselves and the electorate that it was not possible or practicable to go on with the work, and I would ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane), in view of the fact that I have the honour to be the representative of the riding particularly concerned and that the electorate of this Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific are interested in this work,—I would ask him to lay on the table the information he has gathered which has led him and his colleagues to the conclusion that the traffic we might expect on that canal would not justify the expenditure of further public moneys to complete it.

Before I resume my seat I would like to refer to a statement which appeared in the public press a few days ago. I noticed in the 'Weekly Star' that a gentleman who had the honour to represent the riding of North York in the last parliament, and who, I thought, was politically dead, but who apparently has enjoyed political resurrection, has given a lengthy interview to a reporter. In that interview I noticed a statement to which I wish to refer. He wound up by saying—I refer to the hon. Sir A. B. Aylesworth, ex-Minister of Justice—'politics never entered into this matter at all.' I take issue with that hon. gentleman. Let me tell this House and the country that I fought that octopus known as the Newmarket canal for three years and no one can convince me that, from its inception, it was ever anything else than a political machine. Were it not for that canal and the numerous contracts scattered by the ex-Minister of Justice and his predecesor throughout the riding of North York, he would have lost his political scalp in October, 1908.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Ottawa Astronomical Observatory—additional buildings, &c..	$ 60,000
Ottawa New Departmental Building and site therefor..	500,000
Ottawa Eastern Departmental Block —addition..	220,000
Total..	$780,000

Mr. MONK. This first item of $60,000 is to make provision for the erection of a boundary and geodetic survey building and camera huts. Also for sidewalk to the electric cars, alterations to furnaces, awning for the observatory and sundry other items. This estimate was prepared a good while ago by the chief architect under the direction of the officers who were employed on this work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Where is the geodetic survey building to be erected?

Mr. MONK. At a suitable point on the Experimental Farm. The estimate was carefully prepared by the chief architect in order to meet the requirements of the officers engaged in this branch of the service.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have noticed in the public press in Ottawa a statement to the effect that the government proposed expropriating property on Wellington street for the new departmental buildings. If I remember correctly, the newspaper stated that the government had abandoned the idea of erecting these buildings on Sussex street, as formerly contemplated. Will the minister inform the committee whether there is anything in this or not?

Mr. MONK. The question of my hon. friend is a very natural one, because I have myself seen in the newspapers that intimation; but there is no foundation for it in fact. The government has not had the necessary time to consider carefully that question or to arrive at a decision in regard to it. As the committee is aware, we found, when we came into office, a very long site down on Sussex street which had been acquired by the government some years ago at very considerable cost, totaling, with the expenses connected with the acquisition of it, over $700,000. Plans were competed for and prepared for the erection of some of the departmental buildings there for the accommodation of the Justice Department, the Supreme Court, the Exchequer Court, the Railway Commission—everything pertaining more or less to the administration of justice. But nothing has been done during this long period, and the reason, I imagine, for the delay and for allowing that site to remain idle, with the large capital which its acquisition involved, was that many objections apparently were urged upon the late government against the final adoption of that site. We heard some echoes of those objections when we came into office.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). What was the nature of those objections?

Mr. MONK. It was urged that it was not the proper site in the first place for the erection of the departmental buildings, as it would not afford proper accommodation for a large installation. Then, whatever accommodation could be obtained there would be at the sacrifice of appearance. I have heard it suggested that we should utilize Major Hill park, which has lost some of its usefulness as a park on account of the construction upon it of a large hotel. It has also been urged that the locality is somewhat low and it is not at all as advantageous as other localities higher up in the western part of the city. But it has been absolutely impossible for us, with the pressure of business and the arrival of the session, with all that that entails of labour on each of the departments, including the preparation of the estimates, which generally begins in August, but was in this instance necessarily delayed until a few days before the beginning of the session, to give to a question of that magnitude and importance the mature consideration that it absolutely requires.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I suppose matters of patronage take up a considerable time of the minister.

Mr. MONK. I would not deny that they take up some time; but I can tell my hon. friend that if that matter were absolutely eliminated it would be impossible to give the question the mature consideration that it deserves. I think I have some justification for that statement in view of the fact that since nearly ten years the absolute necessity for increased accommodation has been making itself seriously felt, and yet nothing has been done except the expensive leasing of premises to meet the urgent wants of the various departments. And although a considerable period has elapsed since the expenditure of that large sum, amounting to three-quarters of a million or perhaps more for the purchase of the site on Sussex street, that site has remained absolutely idle, and is to-day like a desert.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is there any income from the properties purchased?

Mr. MONK. Not that I am aware of. After the properties were acquired, the buildings were pulled down, and there the place stands as a monument to the wisdom of the late government. We deemed that under the circumstances the matter required further consideration. I may tell the committee that at the present moment not one of the departments is properly, conveniently or adequately accommodated with space. I have here a list of the leases of properities we have made throughout the city.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The hon. minister might particularly mention the buildings that have been leased by the present government.

Mr. MONK. We have refrained from leasing as far as possible. I am aware of only one lease that has been made, and I think my hon. friend will find upon examination that we have carefully observed the rule that the lessor should not receive more than a reasonable and moderate per centum upon his investment.

Mr. MONK.

Mr .MACLEAN (Halifax). What is moderate?

Mr. MONK. 6 per cent, when you deduct the cost of administration, is a fair return to any lessor. In the city of Montreal you cannot expect to derive a sufficient return from a real estate investment when you get only 6 per cent.

That is what we have done in the one lease just made through my department, and I think I have strictly conformed to that rule. We have acted under pressing demand from all the departments for increased accommodation. There was amongst others the Post Office Department in the Langevin block, where the accommodation was absolutely in violation of the first laws of hygiene. They are cramped there to a degree which, I am perfectly sure, no health officer would tolerate for a moment if he inspected the premises. I give the Post Office Department as one instance, but I can assure the committee that all departments are cramped for space, my own as well as others. Some have to divide, one important part of the department being installed in one part of the city and another elsewhere; and it must be obvious to hon. members that, under these circumstances, the business of the department is carried on with great difficulty.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the hon. minister give us some information about the lease to which he has referred?

Mr. MONK. I was just mentioning that it is a lease of a building on Metcalfe street adjoining the Langevin. If my memory serves me rightly we were asked $19,000, then $16,000, and finally we succeeded is obtaining a five years' lease of that large, new and commodious building for the sum of $13,000 a year. If it were possible to avoid these leasings, I think it would be extremely desirable to do so. Any practical man will admit that, in the face of our requirements, we should get to work as soon as possible upon the erection of the new departmental building or buildings. But that, so far, has been utterly impossible. I could give the committee some idea of the increasing wants, and of what has been done by the government in order to meet these wants within the past few years.

Mr. McKENIZIE. Before the hon. minister leaves the subject of the lease, perhaps he would explain further. Is the rental based upon the size of the place, and if so what is the rental per foot of floor space?

Mr. MONK. In the rental of large buildings, that is the principal consideration. We were asked at first a sum considerably exceeding $1 a foot. Though the building was new and presented many advantages, being right in the midst of our departments, we still thought that price was excessive. But hon. members will be surprised to know to what extent rentals have recently increased in the city of Ottawa, and also the price of real estate. I spoke a moment ago of our property on Sussex street. At the end of that street is the large Lindsay block. That block has not been acquired by the government; and if we could compare the price at which it might have been acquired two or three years ago and the price quite warrantable demanded at present, we should be convinced of the large and permanent increase in real estate values in Ottawa. That makes it all the more urgent, I think, that, with as little delay as possible, the site or sites required for the accommodation of new departmental buildings should be secured. As I say the price of $1.30 to $1.40 per square foot of floor space per year for this new building appeared to us excessive. But on investigation we found that in some instances here in Ottawa that price had been paid. I would not be positive, but I think it was paid by the late government for accommodation that could not be compared with what we obtain in this instance. But ultimately the price was cut down to, I think, 86 cents per foot. Even that rate somewhat surprised me, because in the city of Montreal you can get very good accommodation at 86 cents per foot. Nevertheless we could not find anything that would so well meet the immediate wants at a lower price and finally we concluded that we would accept.

Mr. McKENZIE. How does that compare with the experience of the department in former leases?

Mr. MONK. Very favourably, I think, under the circumstances, and in view of the increase of prices to which I have referred. The price of the Woods building per foot was about 78 cents.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). And the hon. gentleman's friends objected to that price.

Mr. MONK. Yes, and I think with good reason. I think that an examination of the debates which took place in regard to some of these rentals will convince hon. members that we paid a rate on the investment in some of those instances far exceeding six, seven or even ten per cent.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not think that would be a fair way of judging the value per foot.

Mr. MONK. That is considered a fair way to estimate when you do not go on the assessed value, which would not be fair in a city like Ottawa, particularly where the assessed value is lower than the real value. But if you can obtain pretty sure data as to the real value, and if on that the lessor receives only six per cent, I do not think that is an excessive amount. This building is new, and it is to be divided inside to meet our requirements. Also it is heated and has elevator service.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). And lighted?

Mr. MONK. No, it is the custom for the tenant to do the lighting.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the tenant put in the lighting fixtures?

Mr. MONK. No, he only furnishes the current.

Mr. McKENZIE. Who is the landlord?

Mr. MONK. His name is Blackburn. I believe he is a good Liberal. But we attend to these affairs without consideration of politics, keeping in view only the merits of the thing. I think this is a very good transaction. We simply had to find space, and this was an eminently suitable building for our purposes.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Does the Militia Department occupy any part of this building?

Mr. MONK. No; I think the Militia Department, though wanting space, is pretty well installed as compared with some of the other departments.

In the Department of Public Works we had to move our accountant from the immediate neighbourhood of the department in order to provide some necessary space. These inconveniences have become manifest to me in almost every department. So that, however, quickly we proceed to put up the departmental buildings, it may be again necessary to lease additional space to meet necessary requirements. But I am anxious to do that as moderately as possible, hoping that the very inconveniences to which we are all subjected will oblige us to devise some means to install permanently the departments as soon as possible. But nothing in that regard has been decided. It has been impossible to give adequate consideration to these large problems within the short time we have been in office.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Will the minister give us the total amount paid in rentals for government offices in the city?

Mr. MONK. In rented buildings the floor area in 1900-1 was 38,970 feet; in 1905-6 it was 132,685 feet; in 1910-11 the requirements had become so great that the rented space amounts to 365,221 feet. The total amount paid in rentals at the present moment is $192,000 a year. It is extremely desirable that as soon as possible we should cease paying any rentals at all.

But that is a matter that requires very careful handling.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Can the government, with the appropriation now asked for, go on and change the site without referring back to parliament?

Mr. MONK. I would not like to say that for sure. But it seems to me that, within the terms of this appropriation, some of it might be used for the acquisition of land, if that was absolutely necessary. It is my opinion, without having been able to give it much consideration, that we should utilize as much as possible the space required at such large cost in some way without placing the departments in a cramped position. I believe there was a competition for plans, and we had a plan of the Justice building and the Supreme Court competed for, and the prize was won by one of our most eminent architects in Montreal, Mr. Maxwell. I have not seen that plan, nor am I a good judge of plans, but I should imagine that we could avail ourselves of that plan. I think there will be left around it sufficient vacant space to avoid the necessity of cramping the Justice Department and the Supreme Court. But nothing has yet been decided for want of time, and I would ask the Committee to trust the government on the assurance that we will give it all the attention it deserves.

Mr. NESBITT. Can the minister tell us whether that six per cent allowed for the lessor is gross or net? That is to say, who pays the taxes?

Mr. MONK. It is net.

Mr. McKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is now dealing with a new building. Has he followed any rule for providing space, or has he any rule as to the number of occupants he will put in any given space? I may point out that in school buildings, for instance, there is a regulation by which a certain amount of space must be given to each pupil. Is the minister going to adopt means to preserve as much as possible the health of people occupying rooms in the departments, both with regard to allowing the necessary space to each person, and in providing good ventilation? Also what step is being taken to furnish these office buildings with a supply of pure water?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend's question is a very natural one, because it deals with a subject of great importance. But so far as I have been able to see, no rule has been observed in the past in that regard, that is to say, in allowing so many cubic feet of air for each occupant of a room, as no doubt the laws of hygiene necessitate. Some regard has been paid to that rule in the new building we have rented. But it is impossible to lay down any such exact rule in the departments as you would do in a school where a uniform rule can be applied. Some departments require more space than others, according to the nature of the service that is rendered. At any rate, I will bear in mind my hon. friend's suggestion. But up to the present, I think those rules have been more marked in the violation than in the observance.

Mr. NESBITT. Is provision made for proper ventilation?

Mr. MONK. Yes, and in regard to water supply also. I think that matter has been attended to in this new building we have rented. Generally throughout the public buildings in Ottawa, hon. gentlemen will find that there is a special effort made to secure a pure water supply.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think the minister is entitled to some consideration in connection with the delay in the construction of these new public buildings. I am sorry, however, to see him question the wisdom, and perhaps the good faith, of the late administration in buying this property over on Sussex street. Perhaps I misunderstood him, but I thought from the manner in which he referred to it that he doubted the wisdom of having purchased the property at all, and that as a location for a public building, it might be objectionable. This is a matter that I think should be decided by the members of the House of Commons, altogether free from political partisanship. When one thinks that the property upon which the parliament buildings now stand was selected prior to confederation, and by the governments of Upper and Lower Canada, one cannot but appreciate their foresight and business capacity. They did appreciate to a large extent the possible future of the country. Still, in this year of our Lord, it is easy to see that even they, with their excellent judgment, did not quite foresee the growth of Canada.

In my judgment it matters very little whether or not these buildings are erected on the Sussex street property although it might be convenient for the public service. I think it would be a good expenditure, indeed, if many years should elapse before buildings are placed upon this property. I hope the present government will proceed to expropriate many hundred thousands of dollars worth of property in the city of Ottawa and as near the parliament grounds as possible I think the needs of the future will demand this property. The advance expenditure will prove to be a good investment and I think the future will justify most completely the action of any government in buying in advance of the present needs property in this growing city of Ottawa. The Sussex street property might eventually be decided not to be a proper site for some of the new buildings to be erected by the government. I cannot venture any opinion upon that because I have not examined that property and my judgment might be worth very little in any case. I think there are many reasons why the government should proceed, notwithstanding the fact that the Sussex street property may not be put into immediate use by constructing buildings thereon, to expropriate property to the west of the parliament grounds. I think it is a matter for which the country would commend any government in the future. It will not be material as to whether or not there is an immediate necessity for the construction of buildings upon these properties because in many cases the buildings upon the properties purchased may remain there and the rentals will yield a sufficient revenue to pay the interest upon the money expended. I agree, however, with the Minister of Public Works that there is a crying demand for increased building room for the public service and I trust that when he gets over the immediate rush now upon him and his colleagues—and I fear the Minister of Public Works is a little busier than some of these other hon gentlemen for reasons which I suggested a moment ago—he will find time to give some consideration to the higher questions which concern this country.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend express the opinion which he has just given to the committee in regard to the acquisition of sufficent space here in the city of Ottawa to accommodate for many years to come the increasing wants of the government at this central point. I quite agree with my hon. friend when he says that, whatever may have been the lofty thoughts which inspired the founders of confederation in the acquisition of land here, they do not seem to have fully realized the wants of the future and we should without delay, I think, ensure to the government more space than we absolutely require at the present time in order that in future gradually, as the necessity arises, without being obliged to arrange every day for new fringes or pieces of property, we shall know that we have, before eal estate takes another leap upwards, the property we want. I assure my hon. friend that I have no desire whatever to cast any animadversions upon the dealings in real estate of the late government on Sussex street. I feel that, coming suddenly, as it were to the department, which has so many engrossing branches of the service to attend to. I require the good-will help and assistance of all the members of this committee. Still my hon. friend will bear in mind that I merely referred to it as a proof that the late government was proceeding slowly. We have invested in the Sussex street acquisition about $600,000 and more than that, I believe, with the surrounding expenses of which I have a full statement here. But evidently the question of the immediate construction of the new building was so puzzling and difficult to solve that the late government preferred waiting and proceded to rent property instead of utilizing that piece of land. I believe myself that if it is possible for us to be guided by the principle laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) a moment ago, not to be too niggardly as to space, we should install there some of the public buildings, but I would be sorry to say that we will confine everything in that long, narrow space, at least every inch of it. I do not think that would be wise. We must acquire at once, either by expropriation if necessary——

Mr. SINCLAIR. What frontage have you on Sussex Street under that purchase?

Mr. MONK. A frontage of about a thousand feet.

Mr. NESBITT. Can the minister give the average depth?

Mr. MONK. 155 feet.

Mr. NESBITT. Can the minister give us any idea of the value of the property now supposing he decides not to build there at all?

Mr. MONK. The amount for the acquisitions on this street was $596,915.06. I could not give my hon. friend (Mr. Nesbitt) a very valuable opinion as to the present value but no doubt it has gone up considerably since the acquisition. The people who own property in the immediate vicinity complain of this neglect of the property, of its lying unutilized as it is, and if we decide to utilize it immediately, either in a limited way or altogether, the neighbouring proprietors would be extremely grateful because representations have been made to me since I took charge of the department that the present condition of affairs is ruinous to the properties on the other side of the street and in the immediate vicinity. But all that would disappear if we decided to utilize the property one way or the other, while if we decide finally to part with it I think it will have considerable value. It has gone up 20 per cent in value. I am not surprised at that because there has been a great increase in real estate values. I hope, as soon as this short session has terminated, or as soon as the House and the committee have disposed of these estates, to look upon that question as one which should be taken up first and foremost. It is a very pressing question, but at the present moment. with the disturbances to which my hon. friend has delicately referred, and others, it is very difficult properly to consider the question.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think this is a very opportune time to discuss this question of the site of the public buildings. I am very glad that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has brought this matter up. A remark was made by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) with regard to the cubic feet of space utilized in this building. I remained here during the greater part of the vacation and took the opportunity of visiting the various departments. No member of this House can visit the departmental buildings, and especially the Post Office Department, without coming to the conclusion that the governments of this country have paid very little attention to the sanitary condition of these buildings.

It is gratifying to note that to-day an enthusiastic wave is sweeping over Canada, for the building of sanatoria, but it is true on the other hand that some of the public buildings in Ottawa are busy preparing subjects for these institutions. I agree with the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that our opinions may not be worth very much, but after all public opinion is to some extent formed by reading the newspapers, and I have seen some very strange suggestions in the Ottawa newspapers—which I suppose are particularly interested in this subject—one of which was that the departmental buildings need not necessarily be close to the existing buildings, but that they might be situated, like the Victoria Museum, which is possibly a mile away. The newspapers, which suggested that, cannot have understood the extent to which members of parliament have to visit the departments, because it would certainly be most inconvenient if those doing business with the government had to go a mile away to find a public building. There seems to be no doubt but that there is urgent need for new and larger buildings to accommodate the demands of the growing public service of the country, and in the erection of these buildings it is exceedingly important that the health of the civil servants should be considered. In that connection I believe that the site on Sussex street purchased by the late government, being so much lower that the level of Mackenzie avenue, is not a suitable place. It might be a good place for cellar kitchens, but I do not believe it is suitable for the erection of departmental buildings. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that our fathers looked well to the future when they erected the existing buildings, and it behooves us not to be niggardly in this direction. In my opinion the north side of Wellington street, west of the Supreme Court, would be a very suitable location and I believe the government could not possibly go astray if they secured that property.

Mr. MONK. As this is a question which must be solved before long, I am sure the government would be glad to have expressions of opinion on it from the members of the committee, and if there is any hon. gentleman who has anything to say with regard to the choice of a site I would be glad to hear it. It would seem to be a pity not to use, at any rate for the partial construction of our public buildings, the Sussex street site, although it has some objectionable features, inasmuch as the late government had acquired it at very considerable cost. It is absolutely insufficient in my opinion and I believe we should now, before values take another leap upwards in Ottawa, acquire all the space we will reasonably want for quite a number of years. I believe too, that the buildings to be erected should be as near as possible to the present buildings.

Mr. NESBITT. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) that there are properties near Parliament hill, which if they can be acquired at any reasonable price would afford eligible sites for departmental buildings. I do not think, however, that it would be wise for the government to indicate what land they are likely to take until they have finally decided on the matter, and I think, with the minister, that the Sussex street site should be considered for at least a portion of the new buildings

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like the Minister of Public Works to say that in the near future he will take into consideration the providing of better accommodation for the discharge of our legislative duties. The accommodation provided by this Chamber is very uncomfortable, and it is not fair to ask the representatives of the people to work under such conditions as now prevail. I heard the late minister (Mr. Pugsley) complain a few evenings ago that some of the New Brunswick Liberal members were very uncomfortably housed in a room in the basement. It may be very difficult to devise a remedy, but surely there must be some way of arranging in the near future that every member or every two or three members should have a room wherein they could work. The average member of parliament is supposed to come here to work. He cannot do it in this Chamber at all times, and it is only fair to him and the country that greater convenience should be available.

I would like to suggest to the hon. minister that this is not a duty which should be cast on the government, and the Minister of Public Works should not assume work of this kind. This is one which concerns the members themselves, and the minister might well ask for the appointment of a parliamentary committee to deal with this matter.

Mr. MONK. I shall make a note of the observations of my hon. friend, because we all desire that the accommodation of members should be sufficient. I shall see that his observations are communicated to the proper officer to-morrow. As regards leaving the matter in the hands of a committee of the House, I should be very glad to be relieved of any of the arduous duties I have to perform; but I do not know that that would be a very practicable scheme. However, I shall consider it with the other suggestions.

Mr. MURPHY. In this connection I may say, with regard to the Sussex street site, that the late government reached the decision that the site was not sufficient for present requirements, not to say anything at all about future requirements. That will explain why the new departmental building was not erected on that site. In order to provide facilities for the proper housing of the different officials in the different departments, a sub-committee of council was appointed, of which I happened to be a member. That committee was appointed to make a selection of desirable sites in the city upon which buildings immediately required, and others required later on, might be erected. On that committee was the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and myself. We made a pretty general inspection of what we thought would be desirable sites in the city; but at that time the then First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was absent attending the Imperial Conference, and as he was much interested in the erection of departmental buildings, we thought it advisable not to make any report until his return. But the dissolution of parliament followed so speedily after his return, that no report was made.

In connection with the preparing of a general plan which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) has indicated will be made for these buildings, I would like to impress on him the advisability of keeping in mind what his right hon. leader (Mr. Borden) suggested a few days ago, namely, that effect might be given to the recommendations made by a committee representing the Royal Institute of Architects. That committee waited on the right hon. gentleman a short time ago and made certain representations regarding the work of the Ottawa Improvement Commission. The work of that commission is intimately connected with the erection of public buildings and the general operations within the city of Ottawa of the department over which my hon. friend presides for the time being, and I would suggest to him the advisability of proceeding along the lines which the leader of the government intimated would be followed in connection with devising a general plan which would comprise new buildings and the selection of sites for buildings hereafter to be erected. No doubt it is desirable to consult the convenience of members by having these buildings situated as closely as possible to the existing ones, but that is not the only nor by any means the chief object to be kept in view. Architectural effect is something not to be lost sight of in that connection; and if the buildings be erected in a straight line along one street, that architectural effect will be absolutely lost.

A visit to some of the buildings in Washington that I made a year ago last summer disclosed that they have there a topographical map of the whole city upon which are shown not only the present buildings owned by the government, but also the sites of whatever buildings may be erected in the future, and not merely in the immediate but in the distant future as well. A suggestion formerly made by me that something of the kind might be done in Ottawa was met by the objection that if anything of the kind were done here, the owners of property would immediately advance their prices. But information of that character need not necessarily be communicated to the public, nor do I imagine it would be possible at this stage of the country's development for the government to go into such an extensive plan. That is possible in Washington, because that city is organized under a district system—the District of Columbia. But what I wish to impress particularly on my hon. friend in my capacity as a citizen of Ottawa and representative of a county which embraces a portion of that city within its boundaries—is the necessity for keeping the architectural as well as the practical in view, and if possible of acting in conjunction with the Ottawa Improvement Commission or with any body of architects the government may consult, for the purpose of selecting sites that will not only provide sufficient room for present needs but also produce architectural effects as well.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend's suggestions have to a certain extent already been acted upon, because I have already had some communication with the body of architects to whom he refers, and we do not intend doing anything decisive until we are able to confer with them at regular length. We at once struck a committee of the Privy Council for the purpose of settling this question, but have not been able to give it the necessary time so far. As regards Washington, I have on several occasions visited that city, and I do not know that we could very advantageously copy the system adopted there in any way. If we wish to establish here departmental buildings that will harmonize with what we have already, we will have to diverge considerably from what they have done there. However, all these considerations will be borne in mind and dealt with as soon as possible.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I was much pleased that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) referred to the unsatisfactory condition of the present building. I would like also to draw the attention of the minister to the deficiencies of this chamber. No doubt great improvements could be made in it by a skilful architect. The ventilation has always been very bad, and no doubt that could be improved. It is very difficult to hear across this chamber. I found great difficulty the other day in making the Minister of Militia hear the few words I had to say to him, and every hon. member knows how difficult it is to hear in this chamber. I read recently in a book published by Toby, M.P., a very interesting description of the improvements made in the House of Commons at London by some slight changes brought about by a skilful architect. When the English House of Commons was erected, it was like this chamber. It was almost impossible to hear what was said in it. But by improvements in the roof and in other ways, it is now perfect, so far as acoustic properties are concerned.

Similar changes were not made in the House of Lords chamber; it remained as it was before, and it is now a very difficult chamber in which to speak. It is said that there are not more than half a doenz peers who can throw their voices across that chamber. It was an exact copy of the House of Commons at the time it was built. I have no doubt that great improvements could be made in this chamber, by changing the roof, for example. I think the deep places in the roof have a great deal to do with the sound of our voices down here. This matter has been before this House nearly every year since I have had the honour of a seat here. But we have now a new Minister of Public Works, who will want to make a record for himself, and if he can give us some good air to breathe in this chamber, and so change it that we can hear one another, he will earn the gratitude of every member of this House.

Mr. MONK. I think the problem of improving the acoustic properties of this chamber, and the ventilation also is a very difficult one, because of the mode in which it is built, with no openings from it except into the lobbies, representing the cloisters of ancient times. It is perhaps an advantage to some of us in some cases not to hear what is being said in the chamber. However it should be otherwise, and I think the observations of my hon. friend will lead me to ask the House in the supplementary estimates for an amount specially to enable us to consult some skilful architect to see if the present conditions cannot be improved upon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not only should the acoustics of this building be improved, but there should be something else. If you travel on the continent of Europe or even in such a matter-of-fact country as the United States, you will find the various Capitols provided with historic tableaus. In the lobbies of the House of Commons, and the House of Lords in England there are pictures of great beauty, representing the best history of the land. Our walls are quite nude in this respect, and if I were in my hon. friend's place for a few months I think I could improve them. I know my hon. friend's artistic sense, and I think he should encourage some of our painters to decorate the walls of this building. It is true, we have in the corridors of the Senate the portraits of our past Speakers, but these are not enough. It seems to me that there are events in the history of our country which should be reproduced on the walls of this building.

Mr. MONK. We shall be very ready to do this, and I am sure that my hon. friend will help us to get the money necessary, because what pertains to art nowadays costs money. We have the historic events worthy of commemoration, but we lack to a certain extent the native artists to reproduce them. Art is still at its dawn in this country. We have never encouraged it as it should be encouraged. Although we have a great deal of latent talent and some also that has manifested itself, I think there has not yet been enough production on the part of our native artists to warrant us in placing an amount in the estimates for the purpose of covering our walls with scenes commemorative of the great events of our history. For some time still I am afraid they must remain written in golden letters on the pages of our annals.

Mr. OLIVER. In reference to the question of the better ventilation of this chamber, I venture in all humility to offer a suggestion. While it might not be possible to secure absolutely satisfactory ventilation, I submit that there should be no serious difficulty in greatly improving the present conditions, unless it is beyond the ability of the architects of the Public Works Department, by providing for the opening of the windows. There are large windows on both sides of this chamber at the upper part which open into the outer air, and it has always been a mystery to me why provision has not been made for opening these windows so that the outer air may come in, and the inner air go out. If these windows could be opened, there is nothing to hinder their being opened after parliament adjourns at night and remaining open until people begin to reassemble here in the morning. It seems to me that in that very simple way the ventilation could be easily improved, and we do not need a very skilled architect to carry out the project.

Mr. MONK. We do not require any great artist or expert to do what my hon. friend suggests, but we have both sat for a great many years in this House and endured these inconveniences. I will endeavour to ascertain whether any attempt has been made in the past to remedy the evil which my hon. friend has pointed out. If none has been tried, we will endeavour, with the assistance of the chief architect and others, to invent one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Might I ask my hon. friend, who has a very generous nature, to look a little better after the members of the loyal opposition?

His compatriots from the province of Quebec belonging to the Liberal party are all in one little room—about fifteen or sixteen of them. We hear much about the 'housing problem.' Would not my hon. friend look at the housing provided for his friends on this side of the House and give them a little better accommodation? I must say he was very kind to me and my friends from Beauce (Mr. Beland), and Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), and the ex-Speaker (Mr. Marcil). He gave us his own room; and it is a room full of memories. It is easy to fancy that we hear the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monk) voice ringing in that room, and we enjoy that thought immensely. But the Quebec Liberals are all in one little room where they have no light or air—and the Liberals like light and air. We want to be in perfect trim to fight this government. But in the quarters provided we have not room to air our grievances. I know the hon. minister's generous nature, and I urge upon his attention the claims of his Liberal compatriots from Quebec. The Liberals, when in power, were generous. They gave all the nice rooms in the new wing to our friends on the other side. I surely need not urge the lesson of this upon my hon. friend.

Mr. MONK. I will give my hon. friend's observations immediate attention. I have the warmest sympathy for hon. members from the province of Quebec who sit in opposition. For many years we had not even the little room to which he has referred, but wandered about the lobbies and rooms of this building like some of those pictured in Dante's Inferno, having no place in which we could take refuge. I think it was only about a year before the change of government that we finally got one room. That gave us courage. And my hon. friend knows what a good account we gave of ourselves in the contest. We will see what can be done for our friends opposite. If the matter is not attended to I hope my hon. friends will remind me of it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I invite my hon. friend to be our guest in our little room. I assure him of a warm reception, and I am confident that when he sees how inadequate our quarters are he will decide to give us better accommodation.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not wish to confuse the minister with too many suggestions, and I suppose that the internal management of the library of parliament, of which I wish to speak, does not devolve upon him, but upon the committee of both Houses. The subject of the enlargement of the library presents many difficulties, but that it must be enlarged very soon can be seen by anybody who visits the library to-day. I do not know who the members of the committee are, but there is one matter I wish to point out. In going in and out of the library one encounters piles of bound volumes of Canadian newspapers upon the floor. I like to read the Canadian newspapers of both sides; but I doubt that there is good reason why this amount of space in the library should be given to these volumes. However, I am not pressing this as a grievance for the consideration of the minister, as I know he has enough. But I think the committee in charge of the library should take the matter into consideration.

Mr. MONK. Certainly the need of increased accommodation in the library is very urgent. I may say that the Joint Committee of both Houses on the library has regularly for at least eight years past called the attention of parliament to the absolute insufficiency of the accommodation afforded by the library building. No doubt the inconvenience to which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean, Halifax), calls attention, these huge volumes of newspapers encumbering the library, must have struck every member of the committee. I imagine, without having knowledge that this is due to want of space, that there is absolutely no place else to put these volumes. The problem of enlarging the library, with the configuration of the present building, is almost insoluble. Plans have been made —one the addition of a wing to this building in which books not often required might be stored; another to dig a large vault in which old and unwanted volumes might be kept. But none of these schemes have been adopted. The necessity of enlargement is an urgent one, and as soon as possible the government will take it into consideration.

Mr. MURPHY. In last year's estimates there is an item of $100,000 for a new Printing Bureau; but in the estimates before us no figures for the Printing Bureau appear in the extension column: is this an indication that the intention is abandoned, or is the building to be proceeded with?

Mr. MONK. We had some idea of asking parliament to renew that vote, because the Printing Bureau building is quite obsolete and inadequate, as my hon. friend (Mr. Murphy) knows better than I do, and something else is necessary. Recently, I believe, an officer of the department has visited the United States and has brought home a report with many important suggestions concerning a new building. But we do not deem it advisable to ask for that credit again this year. If, during the year, some definite plan can be arrived at—for in this as in other matters immediate improvements are necessary—we will come to parliament next session and ask for an amount necessary to cover this very essential work. For this year, we think that the departmental buildings other than this one, will give us enough to do.

Mr. MURPHY. Did the hon. gentleman refer to an officer of his department or to an officer of the Printing Bureau as making a report?

Mr. MONK. I understand that an officer of the Secretary of State's Department has a very elaborate report on that subject. In fact, it was sent to me, but I have not yet been able to study it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Have sites been selected yet for the proposed monuments to Brown and McGee? I noticed that there was some discussion of the subject some time ago. Is it decided whether McGee and Brown will be placed with the other monuments around this building?

Mr. MONK. I do not think that an absolute decision has been arrived at with regard to that matter. I believe that the former Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) expressed the idea—which appeared to be concurred in—on a public occasion, that McGee's statue had its natural place on what is now being called the plaza.

Addition to the Eastern Block, $220,000.

Mr. MONK. That is to complete a work actually in progress. The building is covered in and is being finished.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What branches is it intended to place in that building,—Finance?

Mr. MONK. I think the Finance Department will have its share there. But I would not like to incite any of my colleagues to make raids as yet. Our wants are very great; there is ample demand for all the space that will be available. I would ask my hon. friend to leave that question in abeyance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I desire to make a suggestion. Having sat in the Council for five years, I am bound to say that the chamber for His Majesty's Canadian Privy Council is utterly inadequate for the work to be done. I think a part of the new building should be devoted to the work of the Privy Councillors. It is time we should have a room for the ministers proper to their work. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will admit that the present Privy Council room is totally unfit for the work carried on there.

Mr. MONK. Certainly, there is a great deal in what my hon. friend has stated. And some of my colleagues have expressed to me the same opinion.

Well, it is a very old chamber, full of memories. I am very conservative myself, and I believe in leaving things as they are as much as possible. My hon. friend is aware that that old building in Downing street from which the greatest empire in the world is administered, has remained for many years with inadequate accommodation, the same as it was when the foundations of that empire were laid. However, the inconveniences my hon. friend has pointed out certainly exist. As soon as the block is further advanced we will see if proper accommodation can be provided for the Privy Council.

Mr. McKENZIE. Perhaps the minister would give us some idea as to what we are to understand by the estimates that we passed a short time before the holidays. We passed estimates for public works all over the country. In the natural course of things those votes would lapse at the end of the fiscal year. There is a difference between the estimates passed in December and the book that is presented to us now. Are the estimates we passed last month to be continued and kept alive, after the lapse of time at the end of the present year? The difference between the estimates we passed last month and the present estimates is very striking. In my own county, I find very few works that were in course of construction carried into the present estimates. I would like to know what is to happen to the estimates we passed a short time ago.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must know that the estimates passed last month were those for the year 1911-12. The estimates now under consideration are for the financial year beginning on the 31st of March next. The five-twelfths we voted last year were not, in many cases, expended, as it was considered inadvisable to begin the work until the whole appropriation was voted. No certainty existed as to when the remaining seven-twelfths would be appropriated. When it was made available, the season was so far advanced that most of the works could not be proceeded with. In such cases the amounts are often set down again as re-votes. But the whole subject of voting an appropriation for a public work which has not been begun, had to be reconsidered before the reinsertion of the vote in the estimates for the coming year. In many cases the amounts appropriated for 1911-12 were only sufficient to begin the work. Where the works were begun, a sufficient amount has been added to the re-vote to complete the work for the year 1912-13. Where the work had not been begun the government had to consider, in preparing the estimates for the next year, whether it would be advisable to go on with those works, and the whole question was reopened. In many cases my hon. friend will find that where the work was begun we have continued it. The estimates of last year dovetail to a certain extent in the estimates of this year, but not in all instances.

Halifax Quarantine Station on Lawlor's island—new buildings, repairs and renewals, $25,000.

Mr. MONK. This vote of $25,000 is asked to be taken for erecting new buildings, and repairs and renewals to the existing buildings at the Lawor's island, Halifax, quarantine station. The estimated cost is as follows:

Laboratory..	$ 4,500
Residence for medical superintendent.	5,000
Residence for assistant superintendent..	5,000
Residence for captain..	2,500
Residence for engineer..	2,500
Improvements to existing buildings...	5,500
Total probable cost of proposed works	$25,000
Deduct assumed expenditure prior to 31st March, 1912..	1,500
Revote applied for in main estimates..	3,500
Balance under new vote..	$20,000

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Who makes the request for the new building on Lawlor's island?

Mr. MONK. It is for the Department of Agriculture that we are carrying out this work, which is urgently needed. The quarantine requirements everywhere are very insufficient at the present moment.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think I will have to ask the minister to allow this item to stand until a future date. I am not very thoroughly acquainted with all the facts in connection with this proposal to build a new quarantine station on Lawlor's island, but I do know that some of the medical men in the employ of the Department of Agriculture in connection with immigration say that this is an unsuitable place for a quarantine station. I believe it is regarded as an error by some of the leading business men of Halifax and by prominent members of the Halifax Board of Trade. It frequently happens that the water between Lawlor's island and the mainland during the winter season is frozen and access to the island is thus prevented. If that is correct it is obviously a matter for consideration as to whether the quarantine hospital should be placed there when one reflects upon the fact that the immigrants reaching the port of Halifax arrive there during the winter months. It has been said, I do not know how seriously, that the proposal to erect a new quarantine station on Lawlor's island was put forward partially by the desire to get rid of the office of one of the medical attendants in connection with the immigration service. Of course, that would be an extreme penalty to pay for the removal of an officer whose partisanship cannot be proven or suspected by living beings down in the city of Halifax. I do not present that as a fact myself, but at least upon general considerations I would like the minister to allow the item to stand. I do not think that the Department of Agriculture has given the matter sufficient consideration as yet.

Mr. MONK. Certainly, if my hon. friend wishes the item to stand it can stand, the more so as I do not see my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture present, but I can assure my hon. friend that the idea he has expressed, that possibly all this expenditure is being incurred in order to get rid of some officer of the service there, is absolutely a dream.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I notice that there is a house for a doctor; it looks suspicious.

Mr. MONK. All this was worked out before ever we came to take office; in fact, the foundation of this calculation is to be found in a letter containing a request from the hon. Mr. Fisher, the previous Minister of Agriculture, dated the 22nd March, 1911, in which he states:

That in view of the possible introduction into Canada of Asiatic cholera during the coming season he is of opinion that a bacteriological laboratory should be provided at once for the Halifax quarantine station.

These estimates have reference to the establishment of this bacteriological station. Of course, I cannot for a moment discuss with my hon. friend the advisability of keeping the quarantine station on Lawlor's Island. My hon. friend is more familiar with the locality than I am. But I can assure him that all this was prepared before the present government took office and we are merely carrying out the calculations and demands that were made upon the government previous to our taking office. If my hon. friend wishes the vote to stand——

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like it to stand.

Mr. MONK. I have no objection.

Item allowed to stand.

Lunenburg public building—fittings, $2,000.

Mr. MONK. This vote is asked to be taken to make provision for changing the location of the screen and fittings required in the Lunenburg post office, also to provide for a lavatory on the ground floor. The vote is asked at the request of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to ask the minister if any request has been made to him for the dismissal of the caretaker of the Lunenburg post office?

Mr. MONK. I could not tell from memory, but I do not think so. I will make a note of it and I will let my hon. friend know, but I do not think there has been any demand.

Wolfville public building, $26,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Permit me to ask the minister if he is prepared to define the policy of the new government with regard to the erection of public buildings. We have had in the past a great many complaints from hon. gentlemen who are now on the government benches that these public buildings were given as rewards for political favours, that they were erected in small towns with a small population and trifling business, whereas larger towns with a greater population and more business were cut out altogether because they happened to be represented by a member of the opposite political faith. I would like to know from the minister if he is prepared to deal with this question, to define a policy which will carry out the principles that he and his party advocated while in opposition, that public buildings should be erected where the public requirements call for them, irrespective of any favour to any person and that the smaller places will not necessarily be looked after until the larger ones are served. If he has any information to give us on that important question this will be a very suitable time to let the committee hear what his policy is going to be. It might enable us to avoid a great deal of discussion and difficulty in the future.

Mr. MONK. I presume my hon. friend has not asked that question in connection with this vote, because this public building seems to have been decided upon by the late government as far back as February, 1909.

Mr. SINCLAIR. No, it has no connection with this vote, but it has reference to the general policy.

Mr. MONK. They passed an order in council for the acquisition of the site. I certainly find my hon. friend's question a very natural one, but I am not ready this evening to propound any policy in connection with the erection of public buildings. Nor am I prepared to criticise the policy which has obtained hitherto, because I have sought vainly to find any principles of the late government upon that very important subject. I do not believe that any rule of any kind existed. Public buildings were erected where it pleased the late government to erect them, sometimes in suitable places and sometimes in places where, it seemed to me, there was no justification at all for them. In face of that policy, or rather of the total absence of policy, it will be necessary for the present government to become more familiar with the question before propounding any rules, but I think I have seen enough to be able to say that the adoption of some general rules is absolutely necessary. What these rules should be we have not had time so far to determine.

It must be obvious that for a number of years past some places where public buildings were absolutely necessary have been entirely neglected. For instance, the public buildings in Toronto are absolutely inadequate to the needs of that city. It is impossible to conceive how the government has for years past neglected the crying wants of Toronto while they found money to erect public buildings in places where the revenue did not justify it. If the principle were laid down that a certain population and a certain revenue and certain other conditions had to be present before a building were erected, I believe a great deal of money would be saved to the country. I am not in a position after so short a time in office to say that the question has been carefully studied and that we have been able to arrive at a guiding principle in that respect. I hope that when the government has more leisure a more definite policy will be laid down than has been the practice in the past.

Mr. McKENZIE. In last year's estimate a provision was made for the errection of clock towers in the public buildings at North Sydney, Sydney Mines and Baddeck, on the report of an officer of the Public Works Department. The moneys were voted and I believe they could have been expended within the year, but nothing was done. The appropriation for these three places in my riding is dropped from the present estimates, nothwithstanding that two similar items for Kentville and Windsor are continued. I would like the minister to tell me for what reason this discrimination has been made. I hope it does not follow the principle of the Day of Judgment that one will be taken and two will be left. Why should Kentville or Windsor be favoured when a town like Sydney Mines with ten times their population, ten times their business, and ten times their activity is slighted. Mr. de Witt, an officer of the department, reported in favour of the tower clocks being erected on these buildings in my county. I am glad the chief architect is present, because I want to call specially to his attention the neglected condition of the public building at North Sydney. The report of the officer asking for these repairs is before the minister. The windows of the post office and customs building are in a deplorable condition, rain and snow pour in, and the occupants of the offices are rendered very uncomfortable. Requisitions have been made time and again for these repairs, but nothing has been done, and I now publicly ask the minister to attend to the matter. While I was supporting the late government I frequently visited the department asking for these works, and I always found the chief architect courteous and willing, but some way or other these buildings continued to be neglected. I again urge on the minister the desirability of carrying out the recommendation of Mr. de Witt in connection with the tower clocks.

Mr. MONK. I shall make a note of the recommendations made by my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie). The amount required for these repairs was voted last year, and if they are so essential and urgent as represented by the hon. gentleman I do not know why the vote was not applied to them. If it is possible to afford a remedy for the conditions indicated before the vote lapses I will see if it can be done. In a great many cases we had to provide for the continuation of works which we did not initiate, and where work was not begun with the money voted, we assumed in some cases that the work was not essential. However, the representations of my hon. friend will be considered.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Has a site been purchased at Port Hawkesbury, Inverness county, for the erection of a public building?

Mr. MONK. There is no site bought nor any vote asked for.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). An appropriation of $3,000 was brought down in the supplementaries for the purchase of that site.

Mr. MONK. Nothing done so far. No site has been purchased.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is speaking about a clock. I know that the hon. minister (Mr. Monk) has a tender feeling for clocks. When on this side, he was always asking for a clock at Lachine. There is a building in the course of erection at Marieville, county of Rouville. That building was ordered, before I became a member, by the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur). The people of that locality have been asking for the last few months that a clock should be provided for that building and I make a warm appeal to my hon. friend not to complete it without that very necessary adjunct. He will remember that I helped him considerably in his many requests to the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) when he was endeavouring to get for the community of Lachine a clock in the tower of their public building.

Mr. MONK. Somebody deceived me very badly in that matter, because Lachine did not get the clock. It was not the fault of my hon. friend, but unfortunately he was not the incumbent of the Department of Public Works, and I did not get my clock.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is it there now?

Mr. MONK. No, but there will be one. The vote for Marieville we shall come to shortly, and it will then be opportune to discuss the matter of the clock.

Mr. MACLEAN. (Halifax). I would ask the hon. minister to let the items for Nova Scotia stand, as some of the members from that province are not present, and go on with the items for Quebec.

Lachine post office, $4,000.

Mr. MONK. This is to redeem the promise made by my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux).

Mr. CLARE. I would like to ask whether there ever has been an order in council passed fixing the places where the orders for clocks are to be placed. The late Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), during the elections, made a promise to the town of Berlin regarding the clock, and I understand the clock was to be bought in that town without regard to competition.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did not make that promise at the time of the general election. I paid a visit one summer to the town of Berlin, and I saw that clockless tower and was ashamed of the government, and I thought the people there were entitled to a clock, and they got it before the election.

Lévis, armoury and gun drill hall, $70,000.

Mr. MONK. This is under contract. It is some of the work of the late government which we are endeavouring to complete.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But the hon. gentleman was most emphatic in his speeches against militarism and now he is providing the province of Quebec with armouries for guns.

Mr. MONK. But this is not militarism. This is for the defence of our native heath. Militarism and defense are quite different. My hon. friend has often expressed that idea within my hearing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I should like to hear the hon. minister make that explanation in the province of Quebec.

Maisonneuve post office, $40,000.

Mr. VERVILLE. Is it the intention of the department to proceed with the work? This amount is sufficient to commence the work, but not to complete it.

Mr. MONK. The idea is to proceed with the work as soon as possible. There is a plan for the postal stations all over the island of Montreal, and this must be in pursuance of that plan.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that the municipality of Maisonneuve was quite willing to give the Public Works Department the site and a square surrounding it in order to enhance the appearance of the building. There is enough ground at this site to erect, if not a palatial building, at least one that will be a credit to the great city of Maisonneuve, which has a population not far from 25,000.

Mr. MONK. We are anxious to carry out any suggestions in regard to the æsthetic improvement of the locality that may be made to us. The site was purchased in 1910 from Mr. Morgan. If there is any arrangement by which the municipality will improve the surroundings of the proposed post office, we will see that the hopes held out by my hon. friend are realized before we go very much into the expenditure.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I remember the circumstances of the sale of that site to the Public Works Department, and I remember also the delegation which came to Ottawa, headed by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). The mayor, Mr. Michaud, stated that the city would provide a little park around the building in order to enhance its appearance.

Mr. VERVILLE. Quite a long time ago a proposition was made to the Maisonneuve city council to the effect that if the government would put up a building costing $50,000, the city council would furnish land worth about $15,000. That was on paper. The city council which was so anxious at that time, was rather slow about getting the land, and I as the representative of the riding was asked time and again, 'Why don't you have the government furnish a plan?' Of course, my answer was, 'Why don't you furnish the land?' Finally, I thought it was unfair to ask the citizens to contribute $12,000 or $15,000 for land. The government has of course purchased the site, which is a square on Ontario street about 100 feet by 120 feet on Mr. Morgan's farm between the lacrosse grounds and the building on the left. There will be a boulevard starting at the building and extending to the river, with a street 60 feet wide on each side, and there will be a park at the head of that street. The site is a very good one, and the people seem to be well satisfied with it. I have told the people of Maisonneuve that in the selection of a site it was not they who had to be pleased, but the Post Office Department. I believe that site was purchased a year ago at a very low figure. I am sure nobody could purchase a piece of land there at the same price to-day. If the land was purchased at a low price, it was with the expectation that the government would put a fairly good building. As far as I am concerned, I am satisfied with the plan proposed. It will be a very good building. I understand, from the answer given by the Minister of Public Works some time ago, that this vote of $40,000 is for the preliminary work, because I know that it is impossible to construct the building for that money. It will be a monument if it is constructed according to the plan.

Mr. MONK. I do not know whether the municipality ever intended to give the government the site my hon. friend has referred to; but whether they so intended or not, it was not given. The site was purchased in 1910 from Mr. Morgan.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At what price?

Mr. MONK. It was $8,437.50 under order in council dated 20th September, 1910. There are four streets around that site, and when the time comes to build, we shall do our best to make a suitable structure.

Marieville public building, $15,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will implement his promise there and give us a clock. The people are clamouring for it.

Montreal general post office—enlargement, additions and alterations, including fittings, furniture, &c., and alterations to old building, $200,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When is it expected this building will be ready for the public?

Mr. MONK. I do not know. It is a most extraordinary thing how long government buildings take. There are fine buildings alongside that have been begun, finished and occupied while our work is going on. I heard that the late government's policy was to make that construction last as long as possible. Of course I do not believe that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It was due to the fact that we had three or four hundred men there whom we could not place anywhere else. So we had to build by piece-work. We have a good contractor, but he needs a little——

Mr. MONK. He needs stimulation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He must be stimulated.

Mr. MONK. We are doing our best. The inconvenience is very great. The contractor has promised to deliver two flats, I think, almost immediately, and we are doing our best in the department to hurry him up. And I think he also is making great, unusual efforts.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not wish to say more than I should say, but speaking as a Montrealer, and as a representative from the district of Montreal, I think my hon. friend in the immediate future should look for a new site for a post office. The postal business of Montreal is increasing so much that the time is not far distant, when the present building, even with the additional accommodation to be afforded will not suffice for the work. The hon. minister (Mr. Monk) must remember that the British mails centre in Montreal. On certain days the building is full of boxes, baskets, and parcels of all kinds, and the people simply cannot move. If my hon. friend will compare the figures of the post office of to-day with those of ten years ago, or even five years ago, he will see that the postal business in Montreal has doubled, if not trebled. When we obtained from the Post Office Department in Great Britain a reduction on British magazines and newspapers from 8 cents a pound to 2 cents a pound, I myself went to Rimouski in the summer two or three months after the new arrangement came into operation; and where I had previously seen something like sixty or seventy, possibly a hundred, bags and baskets of magazines and newspapers, I saw now nine hundred and a thousand. And all this enormous increase centres in the Montreal post office. So that when you have the British mail coming in the building is blocked. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) can easily learn what the business men of Montreal have to say on this matter, and I am sure that he will come to the conclusion that it would be better to look out for a site.

Mr. MONK. I quite agree with my hon. friend that the accommodation in the Montreal post office, even with the additional space now being provided, will be inadequate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux), knows better than I do, for he has been Postmaster General, how far the solution of the problem he has just indicated is to be sought in making a larger main post office, and how far in providing suitable postal stations all over the city to which the mails can be taken from the receiving station—in other words whether there should be concentration or distribution of the work. At any rate, I am quite sure that the accommodation is not sufficient, but will need to be increased before long.

Montreal new barracks, $100,000.

Mr. MONK. This is a revote.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I see by the press that when my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) was present at a dinner—quite a historic dinner—with his colleague, the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Hughes), the question of the location of the new barracks came up. At first it had been decided that the barracks should be on the south shore of the St. Lawrence between Longueuil and St. Lambert. I am sorry that the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Rainville) is not in his place. I understand he has been advocating that scheme during the elections and that he expected that his friends in office would give him the barracks for some site within the section I have indicated. But the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Hughes), said that having motored through the city a whole day he had found that there were hundreds of available sites, and that he would certainly not move the barracks to the south shore, but would leave them to the good citizens of Montreal. I do not know whether the Minister of Militia has made a selection of a site, but I am pleased to hear that the barracks will be located in Montreal. However, I am sorry for the hon. member from Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Rainville) who has made these promises to his electors. But an interview was published with the Minister of Militia in which that hon. gentleman said that, in order to soothe the hon. gentleman's feelings, if he could not give him the barracks he would cause the Minister of Public Works to spend the money on the boulevard between Longueuil and St. Lambert. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), is aware that that interview between the Minister of Militia and the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres was published.

Was my hon. friend consulted about that? Has he made any such promise, and does he intend to implement such a promise? I understand that the barracks are going to Montreal. We will have barracks in Montreal for the loyal citizens of Montreal, the Nationalist party included; on the south shore a boulevard was promised by the Minister of Militia and Defence, and are we going to have that?

Mr. MONK. I am afraid I cannot speak authoritatively for the government upon that question. However, if the Minister of Militia stated that if the barracks were taken away from Longueuil there would be compensation for the people by doing some work on the boulevard, I think that is a very good idea, and I approve of it. But nothing has been decided. The late government had about decided to establish those barracks in my own constituency, without any suggestion of my own, because I was not permitted to make any suggestion on any subject during the fifteen years I represented the county, sitting on the same side where my hon. friend is sitting now. But at Northmount, Côte des Neiges, the government had almost closed a purchase for a site for the barracks. Does my hon. friend know that there was an option taken for that site? Why they left that site and subsequently determined to build at Longueuil I do not know. Perhaps my hon. friend knows what new current of opinion set in which led them to change from Northmount and to build at Longueuil. My hon. friend knows more about that than I do. But I think nothing was decided definitely, even as to Longueuil, and I am inclined to believe that the late government was moving back towards the island of Montreal for the barracks. The Minister of Militia expressed, in my hearing at Montreal, the opinion that the island of Montreal would be more suitable for the barracks. I have reason to believe that all the militia men of Montreal share that opinion, and it seems to be the most reasonable opinion. But nothing has been finally decided. My hon. friend who takes such an interest in military matters may rest assured that everything will be done to make the position of Montreal strategically a safe one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend himself takes a great deal of interest in military matters.

Montreal—new customs examining warehouse, $300,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Has the government decided to build on the Grey Nunnery site?

Mr. MONK. Yes, that is a very good site.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Who is the architect?

Mr. MONK. The plans are being prepared at headquarters where we are in immediate contact with the Customs Department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think I can say without offence to any one that the best architect in Montreal, in fact in the province of Quebec, Mr. Marchand, has been retained for the preparation of those plans.

Mr. MONK. I believe there was some negotiation with him, perhaps he did prepare a sketch. But I think the matter of the erection of an examining warehouse should be under our immediate direction here, where we can get suggestions, and have a plan which is the result of experience.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understood that besides building the examining warehouse, the customs house would be moved. Is that a fact?

Mr. MONK. I hope so, in the near future.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that the customs authorities in Montreal are in a sad plight, they have no more space, and they have applied to the Department of Public Works to move to a place on McGill street which is more central.

Montreal—postal station 'F' at Westmount, $50,000.

Mr. CODERRE. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works if this sum of $50,000 is all that it is intended to spend on that building. I have been told by the architect, Mr. Piché, who prepared the plans last year, plans which have been approved by the late government, that the erection of that post office at Westmount according to these plans would certainly cost $70,000. I would like to know, therefort, if voting this sum would mean that the government would spend no more for the erection of that building?

Mr. MONK. I may say in reply to my hon. friend from Hochelaga that we do not expect to be able to get a suitable building for the sum of $50,000. In fact, according to the estimate of Mr. Piché, the architect, it will cost $70,000. For a place such as Westmount, I think $70,000 is not an extravagant sum.

Mr. CODERRE. Nothing is too good for Westmount. I would like to ask the minister another question. The site for that building was purchased and paid for by the government I think in 1909. It is at the corner of Strathcona and Victoria streets. But I am informed that the Westmount council and the Citizens' League have petitioned the Department of Public Works and the Post Office Department to change the site of that building. The people there seem to think that a site should be chosen on Green avenue, about the corner of Western avenue, which they consider is the most central place of the whole town, and the most suitable for a post office. I visited the department a few days ago, but received no definite answer on the subject. The lot has been purchased and paid for.

I would like to know if the government has consented to make the change. If the location is changed, could that sum of $50,000 be applied to purchase another site?

Mr. MONK. I think that under this vote, if it is found that the site is not suitable and does not meet the requirements, it would be possible for us to dispose of this site and acquire another one. As a matter of fact, strong representations have come to us from the municipal authorities and corporate bodies of citizens in that vicinity to the effect that this site is not the proper one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How much has been paid for this site?

Mr. MONK. $16,000, at the rate of $1.40 a foot.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But it is too near the Montreal end of Westmount. I quite understand my hon. friend's anxiety about it, and I hope that with this vote he can do it. I quite remember the circumstances of this sale made to the Dominion government by the gentleman who owned that lot. Generally, when a post office is to be erected, the Department of Public Works consults the Postmaster General and I usually gave Mr. Ross, of Toronto, authority to go about quietly and see what lots could be obtained at a reasonable figure. The great trouble when a public building is to be erected is that the amount of the vote is eaten up by the price of the site.

Mr. MONK. And the costs.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And the costs, certainly. My hon. friend will find that out in the general routine of his department. He has to be very careful to see that he shall not be mulcted in the long run. Well, I sent Mr. Ross, who was not known to the hoi-polloi in Montreal, and he came back with figures which were simply appalling. We had to select a rather inferior site because we had to be governed by the price. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is not the best available site, but if he tries to get a better site he will be met by an exorbitant price. My hon. friend is quite right in advocating a change of site.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). This item is, I feel sure, controversial; we have done a considerable amount of work this evening, the minister, I know is quite tired, and anxious for a rest; therefore I trust that he will now move that the committee rise.

Mr. MONK. The committee has been very obliging, but could we not finish these Quebec votes to-night? They are not controversial.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It will take too long.

Mr. MONK. We will just finish Quebec and leave Ontario for another day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If we pass the next item that will finish Montreal.

Mr. MONK. Most of these are revotes —finish the Quebec business.

Mr. LEMIEUX. You must hear more about Quebec, I am sorry to say.

Mr. MONK. We would do good work if we finished the Quebec votes to-night.

Napierville public building, $15,000.

Mr. R. LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works upon the building that his department intend to erect at Napierville. I wish to know if his department will erect that building upon the land bought last year? Moreover, I would like to know if the hon. minister has entered into negotiations with any persons in Napierville about that site. Does the minister know that some people have asked for a change of site?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) In reply to my hon. friend, I will state that this is a vote of $15,000 for a public building in town of Napierville, on St. Luc street. The site cost $1,000. The work will be proceeded with immediately. Does the hon. gentleman desire to know whether the site has been changed?

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) I wish to know whether the hon. minister is aware that negotiations have taken place with the people of Napierville concerning a change of site?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Not to my knowledge. I never heard anything of that. Oh, I beg the hon. member's pardon; there has been some question of a change of site; representations were made that the proposed site was not the best that might be chosen; but nothing has been decided.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) I should say for the information of the hon. minister that when the question arose as to the purchase of this site, a public meeting convened by the parish priest was held in the vestry and that it was unanimously decided that the site chosen was the most appropriate one; the former government, therefore, purchased it.

Then, in the estimates of 1911-12 was inserted an item of $27,000 for the building of a protection wall from the town of Laprairie to the bridge of the St. Jacques river. Five-twelfths of this amount were voted during the last session and expended in the course of the summer. The balance was voted during the present session before the Christmas vacation. I perceive that the minister has placed nothing in the estimates to cover this expenditure. What was voted in December will lapse on the 31st March next and the $15,750 necessary to complete the work will not be forthcoming next spring. If the amount is not inserted in the present estimates the work cannot be completed next summer, and the expenditure already incurred will become useless. Does the hon. minister intend to include that amount in the supplementary estimates for 1912-13 ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) The hon. member is mixing up the vote for public buildings with that required for wharfs in the province of Quebec. He should, I think, keep both separate.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) As both matters concern my constituency, I thought that I might follow the example of certain other members of the opposition and take advantage of the opportunity to put the question.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I do not exactly complain of that, but it seems to me that in considering the estimates some method is necessary and that we should avoid skipping from one chapter to another. In any case, I will remind the hon. member that since a few years the country has expended more than one hundred thousand dollars for the protection of lands in Laprairie, whereas at Verdun, in the county of Jacques Cartier, on the opposite side, where exactly the same conditions exist, not one cent has been expended by the government, in spite of the report of the engineer, Mr. St. Georges, made at the request of the late Minister of Marine, Mr. Préfontaine, recommending the same works there as on the Laprairie side. The conditions, I say, were absolutely the same. In consequence of this refusal, the municipality of Verdun was obliged to spend large sums of money. Therefore, while on the Laprairie side the government was spending large sums of money, the Verdun shore was left absolutely without protection. This may have induced the present government to reason in this manner: We will consider whether this is an equitable treatment, for if we do anything on one side of the river, we should also consider the requirements of the other shore.

I do not say that these works will not be carried on, only the hon. member would have been well advised had he sustained at the time the cause of Verdun.

Mr. LANCTOT. (Translation.) I regret that the hon. minister did not attend the political meetings that took place in the county of Laprairie in 1908, when the Hon. Simeon Beaudin, now a judge of the Superior Court, was a candidate against me. He accused Roch Lanctot of only obtaining very small morsels, crumbs in fact for his electors, whereas, if elected, he would secure the completion of all these works within the year. It would not be with $5,000 or $10,000 that they would be helped, but with hundreds of thousands. As for the county of Jacques Cartier, I have never objected to its obtaining the amount necessary for its protection, but I was not the member for Jacques Cartier. I may state here that everyone in my county is favourable to these works, not excepting the local member, Mr. Patenaude. Everybody desires that they be continued and completed at the earliest possible date if we are to hope to obtain the international route going from Laprairie to Rouse's Point.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Is the government aware that by a referendum which took place on the 1st of January, 1912, at the city of Ottawa, the electors declared, by an overwhelming majority in favour of the principle of creating the national capital into a federal district, to include within its boundaries the city of Ottawa and as large an area of the surrounding country as may be necessary to enable the said district to be planned, developed and beautified to the best advantage; the said district to be governed by a commission; the members of the commission to be paid and a proportion of them to be nominated by the government of Canada, but the majority to be elected by the people resident within the district; the government of Canada to contribute a fair proportion of the necessary revenue, and representation in parliament, and the provincial legislature for the district to be continued?

Booking agents must distinctly understand that in no case are they to give cards of introduction to parties desiring work other than farm labour, or in the case of females domestic service.

Emigrants and employment agents will both be assisted by the booking agent mailing device form to employment agent as soon as ticket is sold.

Booking agents are requested to immediately destroy all previous lists of employment agents and to carefully preserve this list for reference until such time as they receive one of a later date.

MR. EUGENE BALDWIN.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) moved:

For a copy of all letters, reports or other documents, relating to the removal from office of Mr. Eugene Baldwin, late of the customs service at Coaticook, Quebec.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Customs). This is included in the motion of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) passed a few days ago, in which he asked for all documents in connection with dismissals up to date.

Mr. CARVELL. It may be the end of the session before the return I moved for has been brought down and the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) would like the papers in this special case as soon as possible.

Mr. BORDEN. Strictly speaking, two motions could not be moved with reference to the same subject matter, but under the circumstances this might pass and the larger return will be expedited.

Motion agreed to.

LOBSTER TRAPS.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) moved:

For a copy of all papers, letters, recommendations, ministerial instructions, and any other document, from the Department of Customs, relating to a temporary change in the customs tariffs upon the twine used in the headings of lobster traps.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are no documents other than those I read to the House the other day, namely, the two circulars sent out by the department, in one of which there was a clerical error which was afterwards corrected. However, I have no objection to this.

Mr. CARVELL. I know that the hon. member who placed this notice of motion on the Order Paper saw copies of letters sent the hon. minister regarding the interpretation of that clause. There must have been letters or telegrams in this connection.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that a Select Special Committee should be appointed by this House to make an inquiry into an Old Age Pension System for Canada, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

He said: This motion has been standing on the Order Paper for some little time in order that hon. members might become familiar with so important a measure and also because the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), has a similar resolution on the paper, and he asked me to allow mine to stand until he got back here on the 17th. As we both are interested in the same resolution on the same matter, I agreed to do so, but evidently he has been unable to get here to-day, and as, under all the circumstances, this seems a favourable opportunity for bringing the resolution to the attention of the House, I venture to move it, seconded by the hon. member for Pictou. I may say that there have been, and probably will be, the usual objections to a measure of this description. Some people seem to think that Canada is exempt from the usual rule that scientific treatment of economic subjects is the best treatment. We have imported many good ideas at different times from the older countries, but I doubt if there be any which is a better one than this. In Germany where they have raised everything to the status of a science, the old age pension system is working in perfect order. That system has also been introduced, as no doubt every hon. gentleman is aware, into the United Kingdom, and is found to work well there. It has also been introduced into old France, probably the most prosperous country in the world, and there too it has been found to work perfectly. It is about to be introduced into the United States, and our American neighbours consider that they are exceedingly progressive and energetic in the handling of these subjects. Therefore, I think it will be admitted that this matter deserves every consideration in this Dominion.

The object which is at the basis of the old age pension system is to do away with promiscuous poor relief. Its intention is to raise the people, the poorest and least provided for, to the status of ordinary independent citizens, so that instead of being, as heretofore, the wastrels and strays of ordinary everyday life, looking here and there for rescue and possibly reclamation, instead of being at the beck and call of those who may be charitably or uncharitably inclined—instead of being in this promiscuous ill-considered, unholy and wholly unscientific condition, they will be brought into some reasonable and proper condition by a system of relief such as is contemplated by the old age pension scheme. It is found that people of this class are raised into a sense of security and independence by the old age pension system and acquire an independence of character which they never knew before. That is the very essence of self-respect. We are aware that pauperism in the old country has increased alarmingly of late years. We are aware that it has increased to an extent which has become appalling.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Proportionately to the population or an absolute increase?

Mr. BURNHAM. I understand from the returns that it has increased in proportion to the population.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). My information is exactly the opposite. It is that there has been a gradual decrease of poverty in England in proportion to the population from the time of Charles the Second.

Mr. BURNHAM. I understand differently. At any rate one thing is certain, and that is that the prosperity of England is greater now than it ever was at any period, and we would have the right to expect that pauperism there would have decreased. My hon. friend will agree with me, however, that in this expectation he has been disappointed.

Some time ago I had the honour of introducing into Canada the Children's Aid movement. It met with some objections. One of these was, why not let the people alone? Why interfere with a man and his family? In other words why not let the poor children go as heretofore without anything in the shape of protection or supervision. It is only necessary in order to show the indifference that these objections concealed, to say that it is only recently that the age of consent was raised in this civilized country to a reasonable age. This idea also came from the old country. I may say that so good have been the results of the Children's Aid movement, that much of it has been incorporated in the Criminal Code.

The very same system or principle of treatment is contemplated in the Old Age Pensions Act with regard to poor people. Those conversant with the condition of things in Canada must be aware that at the present time charitable institutions are being multiplied daily and their resources are being taxed to the utmost; in other words, promiscuous charity is becoming both widespread and alarming. We can possibly stand that, because we are a young and vigorous country, but the morals and well-being of the people cannot stand it, and it is surely well for us to see what is going on around us the world over and to fall in with the scientific treatment of this question in a vigorous and proper way. Some people urge that this means the spending of a vast amount of money. They ignore in the first place the set-off in the relief of the people from the enormous burden of promiscuous charity. But what does the probable burden amount to? As near as I can ascertain, the number of people in Canada to-day who would come within the purview of old age pensions is about 30,000. The number of people 70 years of age or over is of course vastly greater than that; but no old age pensions Act contemplates the payment of a pension to people who are not in need of it; they must have very limited resources and be otherwise in a condition to warrant it. The principle upon which the whole system works is the principle of rescue. If we reject old age pensions we are deliberately rejecting something intended as a modern, progressive, scientific substitute for indiscriminate charity and poor relief. In Ireland the people have been greatly relieved and helped by the old age pensions system. It is a very simple thing when you come to understand its working. All that poor people have to do, when their names and claims have been approved, is to go to the post office, hand in their little paper and get their weekly pension, and go away and relieve their own necessities themselves. I have statistics to show that the decrease in outdoor relief, in Scotland and England, especially in England, has been tremendous. There is no doubt whatever, from all the reports that have been handed in, that the change from workhouse relief to the far better process of pension relief has been productive of good results, and that is what we are looking for. I have the reports of the Local Government Boards of England, Wales and Scotland. They did all that I asked for in sending me material from England, but more than I asked for in sending me material from Scotland, where great interest, perhaps even greater interest than in England, is taken at any rate in answering questions. Sir George McCrae, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, in his letter says: 'The pension system has, I am glad to say, worked smoothly in Scotland.' I emphasize this fact in order that we may give due heed to the experience of others. I fancy that in Canada we are very prone to rely upon our own virility and stamina, perhaps a little too much so. I may say that the Old Age Pension Act of 1908 in the United Kingdom was brought in with pretty stiff qualifications, but it worked so well that in the amendment of 1911 those qualifications were very greatly relaxed. To take one example, in 1908, if people got poor relief they could not have pensions; but in 1911 they were allowed to have a certain degree of poor relief as well as a pension.

Some people have the idea that a system of old age pensions is a very large affair. It is not anything of the sort. In the first place, the people must be British subjects and qualify as British residents; and they must not be disabled by reason of imprisonment, idleness or misbehaviour from receiving a pension. The machinery of the movement consists in the appointment by local councils, such as municipal councils, of what are called pension committees. The government appoints pension officers. These two authorities have the right to decide who shall have pensions and who shall not have pensions under the Act. There is always an appeal allowed to the superior pension officers and to the Treasury Board. In England a person must have reached the age of 70 years, and must, for at least 20 years, up to the day of the receipt of any sum on account of the pension fund, have been a British subject and have had his residence, as defined by regulations under this Act, in the United Kingdom Thirdly, the means of a person, as calculated under this Act, must not exceed £31 10. Applied to Canada, according to the statistics which I have been able to gather, the total annual fund for a very respectable beginning would be about $2,250,000. That would have the effect of giving the people of over 70 years of age coming within the stipulations of this Act, a pension running from half a dollar to probably $1.50 a week. In other words, they would be provided with a good basis upon which to continue their own existence in their own way, immeasurably superior to houses of refuge or things of that sort even though they do not come under the head of promiscuous charity. But a careful reading of the reports issued by the Local Government Board in the old country will show that the relief officers agree that the accurate statistics which have been gathered by the pension officers and the complete and orderly way in which they have gone about their relief business, has produced an abundantly good effect; so much so that while charity has become systematized, it has become systematized in the proper way, waste has been very largely eliminated, and the character of poor people has been very greatly benefited.

It is quite evident from the comments upon the motion by leading old country statesmen that they are perfectly satisfied. in fact delighted with the movement, it is having such an excellent effect upon the people. In moving this resolution I am availing myself of the privilege, not of naming the committee but simply of proposing that there shall be such a committee in order that we may proceed slowly, without too suddenly committing ourselves, in the development of a great and beneficial movement. I am well aware that nothing in these things is so detrimental and so injurious as undue haste; and I have endeavoured to guard against that. I have already pointed out that in the old country there is a central pension authority to look into claims. Pension committees meet in the regular way, like a commission for the management of waterworks or anything of that sort. But, instead of having behind them only the force of their own good intentions they have the authority of parliament. We know that in the face of all sorts of disorganized—not unorganized but disorganized—charity people are very apt to weary in well-doing and, while missing the opportunity to help those whom they should assist, become the prey of professional charity-seekers. The only possible way to guard against this in a movement of a general character is for the government to take hold and maintain systems and business like methods. There has been of late years, I am aware, a tendency towards the introduction of the socialistic state in modern politics. That is due to the fact, of course, that the masses have seen what is good for themselves and the classes have been inclined to ignore these remedial measures whilst devoting themselves to the great development of industrial enterprises. We have been amazed at the wonderful progress in trusts and mergers, at the appalling accumulation of wealth; but we do not seem to be at all amazed at the accumulation of poverty. So long as we ourselves are not directly concerned, we are apt to regard with but casual emotion the submerged tenth and to think that because the Good Book says 'Ye have the poor always with you' we must always have them with us. But that is not the meaning of the words; but whether it is or not it does not in any sense stand in the way of our developing remedial measures on scientific lines. The report of the inspector for the district of Dorset and Southampton says:—

A further comparison—that of the returns for the last week before the removal of the pauper disqualification for an old age pension, and for the first week after such removal shows a decrease in outdoor relief in the latter week from 24,670 to 17,519, or 7,151, and a decrease in the number of 'not able-bodied' poor relieved from 14,817 to 7,754 or 7,063—this represents a decrease of 29 per cent of the total outdoor relief, and of 47 per cent in the 'not able-bodied' relief. In some unions the decrease in the 'not able-bodied,' &c., is as high as 60 per cent and 70 per cent.

An investigation of the blue-book reports shows that all through the same impression prevails. There are a few cases in which men are not able to gauge it properly. Besides, the amendment to the 1908 Act only came into force in 1911, and they have not been able to collect statistics sufficient to warrant them in giving an opinion. But in every other case they have hastened to say that the diminution of our outdoor relief has magnificently justified the introduction of the old age pension system.

As I have said, these are the days when we must pay attention to the great movements for the development and reclamation of the people. It is only in this way that good feeling can be developed in a community, and only in this way can the state do justice to itself. For, after all, what is the state but the co-ordination of all the means of administration and development by which the industries and movements of the people may be supervised in such a way that they shall not be, as they were long ago, moving here, there and elsewhere merely of their own accord, but will be under the guidance and supervision of the various boards and organizations which are appointed for that purpose? Why, it is only recently that we have had even a conservation movement. Fancy! The people of this country did not until recently wake up to the necessity of the conservation movement. They thought that when they paid their doctors' bills that was the end of the health movement. That idea continued until somebody showed them how extremely futile it was. We have been under the impression that we could lay waste the country, burn our timber, strew the land with all sorts of slush, and yet the day of reckoning would never come. But it has come already. Conservation of health and wealth and good morals, and to that general end the conservation of the means of industry, all lie within the purview of government. So, it is for us to say whether or not the time has come for the substitution of old age pensions for indiscriminate charity. Indiscriminate charity is such a grievous waste, and is so contrary to the principle of individual independence and the spirit of manhood that for this, if for no other reason, we should reject it and reject it at once. We have examples, great and illustrious examples, in the German nation, the French nation, and the motherland—an example shortly to be followed, I believe, by the United States—examples from which we must derive great profit, and whose records we can study and use for our guidance.

It is not incumbent upon us to launch out upon this scheme in any extreme way. We can do it tentatively, we can do it quietly, as quietly as we wish and we can proceed as rapidly thereafter as we find advisable. I contend that, that being the case, to reject or set aside this motion is to reject or set aside the very principle of the movement, not simply because the means are not available, because, as I say, for a mild beginning the means must be available. The principle is an abiding principle, and one which I hope will commend itself to the members of this House. I have, therefore, much pleasure in introducing this resolution.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the thanks of the House are due to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burnham) for again bringing this matter to its attention. He has evidently given the subject a great deal of thought, has accumulated considerable information and has presented his views for our consideration in a very clear and useful manner. The subject is one which naturally enlists our sympathies, because there are few more pathetic spectacles in life than helpless old age confronted with privation and poverty. The real question, so far as Canada is concerned, is whether conditions here are such as to require what is admitted to be advanced legislation of this sort, and whether, if so, public opinion is as yet ripe for it. So far as I am aware, there has been no public agitation in Canada either politically or through the press or otherwise, for legislation on the subject of old age pensions. It must be remembered that in Great Britain, where the old age pension system exists, that legislation was preceded by an agitation extending over almost a generation. Agitation of that kind is necessary before legislation involving such a large expenditure can or should be adopted. While any legislation which has been adopted in Great Britain should commend itself to our attention, I am of opinion that we should not favourably consider it until we carefully compare or contrast if necessary the social and economic conditions existing in Great Britain and in Canada.

I think it is not an extreme statement to say that in Great Britain, in the past, poverty has been the inevitable lot of vast masses of the population. In very many instances this has been through no fault of the citizen himself. The causes for this condition have been many. They are stated to include unemployment, sweated industries, physical deterioration and excessive drinking. So precarious and so unremunerative has been employment in Great Britain that there could be no assurance, even to the sober, thrifty and industrious, that they would be able to raise their families and to lay by a pittance for old age, and under those circumstances the workhouse has been the inevitable goal of great numbers of respectable, sober and industrious people—industrious if they had only had the opportunity.

Owing to the stigma and contumely which would naturally attach to the receipt of charity under conditions such as these, it is not to be wondered at that in Great Britain an agitation sprang up for old age pensions which have now been established, and I think there is very much to be said in favour of that legislation. If we admit the principle of pension for those who have served the state on the battlefield, then where, owing to economic conditions prevailing, a man has failed and honestly failed in the industrial strife it might be considered even a matter of right, if he could not otherwise be decently provided for, that the state should step in and pension him when he attained a certain age—and it must also be remembered that old age itself enters as a factor into the creation of poverty. In other words, a man whose powers are waning is unable to help himself and, under the economic and social conditions prevailing in Great Britain and on the continent, it might very properly be a subject of legislation that men who have lived sober, honest and industrious lives, who have done their best to raise their families and take care of them, when they have attained the age of three score years and ten or earlier if their powers fail them, should be made an allowance from the state sufficient at least to meet the necessities of their existence. It must also be remembered, in considering the matter from the political standpoint, that in Great Britain a very large percentage of the population might reasonably feel that some day they might have to avail themselves of old age pension relief and consequently there resulted a political movement in Great Britain based upon a very substantial body of public opinion such as is not at all available in the beginning of such a movement in this country to-day.

Let us consider the case of Canada. In the first place, there is little or no unemployment in Canada. Canada to-day is among the most favoured nations of the earth. I am not sure that Canada does not occupy the leading position in the world to-day so far as unemployment is concerned. Our industries are thriving and our artisans are nearly all employed; wages are good and while the price of living is high our artisans and workmen, speaking generally, are self-respecting citizens quite capable of taking care of themselves. In the event of sickness or accident depriving a wage earner of his power of work or old age interfering with his efficiency and leaving him no longer able to take care of himself, we find the need supplied by provincial and municipal charity, and by the filial piety of the sons and daughters of Canadians. I desire to pay this tribute to my own countrymen that I know of no people among whom the natural affection of sons and daughters is more likely to take care of aged parents than Canadians. It is a great credit to the sons and daughters of Canada that they are so ready to take care of their parents and to take care of them well.

Then in this country we have very few sweated industries, and we have, as I have said a condition of abounding prosperity. I think that with reasonable thrift it is possible for any industrious, sober artisan to raise his family and to provide something for his old age, and as I have said, in the event of sickness or accident age is usually well taken care of and cared for in such a way that no stigma attaches to the recipient of the charity afforded by provincial and municipal agencies. I think that it is within the facts to say that on the whole the poor in Canada are well looked after, and it is on this account as contrasted with the conditions in Great Britain that there has been no widespread movement, as I have said, for the old age pension in Canada.

The old age pension system in Great Britain provides from one to five shillings per week to those over 70 who can qualify, as stated by my hon. friend the mover of this resolution. From one to five shillings a week might fairly suffice in Great Britain to support a mere existence, but from one to five shillings a week would not support a mere existence in Canada. I think that when the matter was debated some three years ago in this House it was pointed out that the equivalent of five shillings here would be $3 per week.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Does the hon. minister mean to intimate that five shillings is the largest sum paid under the old age pension system?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The information I have, subject to correction, and I shall be very glad to be put right if it is incorrect, is that five shillings is the amount allowed to those over 65 years of age who can qualify.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I am quite sure that ten shillings is paid in some cases.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In some cases?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Well, that is possibly so.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). We would naturally look to a minister dealing with a question of this kind to give the House accurate information and to show that it is correct.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes, you would. Well, I think I am reasonably sure and probably the hon. gentleman will be good enough to correct the information authoritatively and from documentary evidence if it is wrong. This is the information I have obtained from one of the departments and also from having looked the matter up. Possibly the hon. mover of this resolution will be good enough to say if it is correct that from one to five shillings a week is allowed in England.

Mr. BURNHAM. That is the information contained in these Acts and regulations which I have received from the local government board. It is contained in the schedule.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think I have taken reasonable care to verify this statement and even if I had not the comparison I make is between the cost of living in Great Britain and the cost of living in Canada. In 1908, when this matter was made a subject for discussion in this House, they estimated that about $3 per week would be the equivalent of five shillings in Great Britain. I do not venture to say whether that is correct or not; I simply state that, as a matter of fact, when the question was debated here before that was one argument used to show that a very much greater charge per capita would be imposed in this country than in Great Britain.

In connection with this movement, it has been argued that the giving of old age pensions would impair thrift. I must say, from what I have read in regard to the operation of the Act, that I should be disposed to believe that it does not impair thrift; and that a comparatively small pension such as is given in Great Britain, would not in any way destroy or impair the instinct of thrift if a citizen should chance to possess it. In connection with the Canadian aspect of the matter, I desire to draw the attention of my hon. friend and of the House to the Dominion Annuities system which, I believe, was established with the idea that it might forestall such legislation as we are now discussing, or render it unnecessary to enact such a law. It is very interesting to observe at how low a cost an annuity can be provided for a man of 65 or 70 years of age and I propose to give a few illustrations from one of the publications of the department in regard to this subject. There are two plans and under the first plan, which is called plan 'A,' in the event of death before the first payment of the annuity falls due the total amount which the annuitant has paid in, with 3 per cent compound interest, will be repaid to his legal representatives. Now, the way it works out is this: A man beginning at 20 years of age and paying 25 cents a week—that is $13 a year—until he is 60, will receive at 60, a life annuity of $129.51. A man beginning at 25 and paying 25 cents a week, which is $13 a year only, until he is 60, will receive, at 60, a life annuity of $99.34. A man beginning at 30, and paying 25 cents a week until he is 60, will receive, at 60, a life annuity of $74.73, and so on beginning at 35, 40 and 50 years of age. Under plan 'B', where the same annuity is obtainable for smaller payments and where there is no return in the event of death before the annuity becomes due, a man beginning at 20 years of age and paying 25 cents a week, which is $13 a year, until he is 60, will receive, at 60, a life annuity of $176.38. A man beginning at 25 and paying 25 cents a week until he is 60, will receive, at 60, a life annuity of $132.35. A man beginning at 30—I hardly think he is likely to begin at 20—and paying 25 cents a week until he is 60 will receive a life annuity of $97.35. Take it in another way, first under plan 'A', which I have mentioned, and then under plan 'B.' In order to produce an annuity of $65 at the age of 65, which is equivalent to $1.25 a week, or to the five shillings legislation of Great Britain, a man would have to pay, starting at the age of 25, $5.40 per annum. Let us say that $65 in this country is not nearly sufficient to support more existence, let us multiply it by three in order to give an annuity of $195 per annum. Beginning at the age of 25 he would have to pay $16.20 per annum, at 30, $21.27 per annum, and at 35, $28.41 per annum in order to produce an annuity at 65 of $195. I merely call attention to this to show that under our present legislation, the means whereby those who are reasonably thrifty and provident may provide against the necessities of old age.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How many have availed themselves of this annuity plan since it has been in operation?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am unable to answer that offhand as my hon. friend will readily understand.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) could tell how many have availed themselves of the annuity plan.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell my hon. friend exactly, but a very fair number.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I can get that information.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, I think it may be got in the blue-book.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). But I do believe that if the annuity system were properly advertised and brought to the attention of the public——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds)——the system would be more generally acted upon. It appears to me, prima facie, to have many advantages. In the first place, there are no lapses except in the case of plan 'B.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. Many facilities are given.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Let us assume that is so; at all events, that only maintains the argument that I have been advancing here.

Many questions arise that may properly be the subject of inquiry by a committee such as that asked for by my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) and which I expect would be able to collect a good deal of valuable information for the House on this important question. And it is an important question for notwithstanding that we are proud to speak of the prosperous condition of Canada, still this is recognized in all countries as being what is called advanced legislation. It can hardly be said to be a new question, because it is already an accomplished fact in Great Britain and, as I understand, in Germany and France, and it is now being considered by the United States.

A great deal of information will, however, be required by us. We shall want to know how many there are of sixty-five years and over amongst our population, and how many of these are likely to become the recipients of old age relief in the event of our enacting such legislation. Then, the question would arise as to whether such a charge should be borne by the Dominion or by the provinces to which we give per capita subsidies. It will also be fit to consider whether it is opportune to interfere with provincial, municipal and private charities. Then, in Canada, more than sixty per cent. or over half of our population, are of the farming community, and from what I know of our farming community, they are prosperous, industrious, and thrifty, so that I cannot imagine that many of them would have to look forward to relief in old age under such legislation as is now proposed. Therefore, so far as our farming community, our business people, and our prosperous labouring classes are concerned, the question arises as to whether public opinion is at all ripe for such legislation. Of course, it is in my opinion a great advantage to us to have this question brought before us and it is highly desirable that whatever information my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) and his committee may get shall be available for our guidance. We will then be able to know what number of the aged would be likely to become recipients, what the charge upon the public treasury would be, and what would be a fair pension as compared with that granted in Great Britain.

Mr. MACLEAN. (Halifax). It would be very difficult for a committee of the House to get that information in the absence of statistics to start upon.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). A committee was appointed in 1908, which I believe did not present a report, but there was a very interesting debate in the House in connection with it, and I gather from the report in Hansard that Mr. Ralph Smith took the view that old age pensions in this country should be universal and that every person, no matter what his means, on attaining the age of sixty-five or seventy should be entitled to receive an annuity so that there might not be any stigma, I think that was how it was described, upon the recipient.

I do not understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) has any such idea in his mind. On the occasion of the debate to which I have referred, the Hon. Mr. Fielding estimated that there were 270,000 people in Canada who had attained the age at which pensions might be granted, and he estimated that the annual charge would be something like forty million dollars. Of course, that is not what my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) means. He simply has in view a plan which apparently has been a success in Great Britain, whereby only those who need relief will be applicants for it, and will be entitled to receive it. I am inclined to think that in Canada the number of such persons would be comparatively small. Then again, on the question whether public opinion is or is not ripe for such legislation, we have to consider whether we wish to announce to the world—unless it be found absolutely necessary to do so—that in Canada we have come to that stage when it is necessary to enact old age pension legislation. Canada is looked upon as amongst the most prosperous countries in the world, as a country in which the immigrant is certain to improve his lot, and, if he is sober and industrious is certain to achieve comfort if not a competence. Under these circumstances the public might probably ask if it were wise for us to advertise that it had become necessary for us to establish an old age pension scheme. This whole question is, of course, one which enlists our sympathies and I must compliment my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) upon the generous enthusiasm he has shown in the cause of the aged poor. I can assure him that I do not lack sympathy in such a cause as this, and it may perhaps be well to keep it before us, because the time may come when such legislation will be necessary, and then, any information that will enable us to come to a just conclusion would be welcomed. I think the committee should be granted as moved for by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham).

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I find that 340 persons have purchased immediate annuities, and 213 have purchased deferred annuities during the three or four years that the law has been actively in existence. The amount of money purchased under the former is $83,300, and under the latter $464,730.

Mr. A. VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). I am glad that the Minister of Finance has granted the committee moved for by the hon. member (Mr. Burnham). The Minister of Finance has referred to social and economic conditions, and he has said that he does not expect that at the present time such legislation would be necessary in Canada. Well, he and I move amongst different classes of the people, and I come in contact every day with a different element from what he comes in contact with. I know for a fact that this legislation has been asked for, not for ten or twenty years, but so long as I can remember, by those who are in need of it. In answer to the statement that this legislation has not been asked for, I may say that we are passing legislation every day which has not really been asked for, and we are protecting the trusts and mergers, who are really forcing a large number of the population to ask for such legislation. I have always been in favour of old age pensions, and I always will be, for those who are in need of them. Sometimes, we are giving pensions to those who do not need them, and I do not begrudge them their pensions. We are pensioning our judges, because they are not in a condition of health to continue their work on the Bench, but sometimes they are in health enough to do other work

We pension our civil servants who are receiving high salaries, and our municipal servants also, in the larger municipalities, receive pensions. These men receive as a rule high salaries, whereas the labouring man, who has put in fifty years of hard work, helping to build up the country, and who has been receiving a much lower wage, has nothing in his old age, and frequently has to turn to some public institution for charity. Should this committee be named, I am confident it will gather a large amount of information which will show the necessity for the old age pensions and that such necessity has been felt for a long time. If there has been no agitation, the reason is obvious. There is really very little public opinion in the country except what is promoted by the newspapers. But how is it possible for the labouring men to get the newspapers to make an agitation in their behalf, especially against the opposition of a very strong element which is all powerful with the press? I am very pleased that a committee has been appointed. I have no doubt it will do very effective work, and be able to make a good report, and be the means of bringing to light much valuable information obtained from those who have made a study of the question.

Mr. PARDEE. How many of these lecturers are now employed with regard to the annuity system?

Mr. FOSTER. None.

Mr. PARDEE. It has always appeared to me that this system would be largely taken advantage of if it were made known to the people. While, as the Minister of Finance has said, our farming communities are very prosperous, that is no reason why the annuity system should not be explained to them, and why they should not be induced to take advantage of it more than they do at present. There is no reason why this system should not apply with equal satisfaction to the rural parts as to the populous centres. There are many communities in the country where, if the people knew the advantages of the system, the easy payments which will come back to them in years, they would take advantage of it. My own opinion is that the dismissal of the lecturers is not a step in the right direction, and that the system should be brought more before the people than it has been in the past. When we consider the figures given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, according to which only 348 have availed themselves of the one system, and 214 of the other, making in all only 500 people with an assurance of $500,000, we must admit that this result is altogether out of proportion to the number of years in which that annuity system has been in force. It is a good system, and one likely to ward off the old age pension scheme, and I submit that every effort should be made to make it public.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE (Kingston). If my short experience in this House had not taught me there must be something in repetition, I would not raise my voice this afternoon to register my conviction in favour of the resolution moved by the hon. member (Mr. Burnham). I feel that I would be false to conclusions that have moved me very much for the last few years if I did not take this opportunity of placing before the House the reasons why in my judgment a committee should be formed to press forward with energy the task entrusted to them. The Minister of Finance has said that so far as he is aware, Canada has expressed no opinion in favour of an old age pension system. There may be a certain amount of truth in what the hon. gentleman says, but I think a close analysis of this question will show that the reasons are historic as well as economic, and perhaps to-day we have reached a condition that might be described by the historic expression 'the parting of the ways'. It is perhaps but natural that in a new country where the natural resources are rich and to a great extent unexplored, the legislation demanded by the people should be simply police regulation, the opportunity of working out to the full individual effort, the securing of freedom of life, and protection of property. There is enough for all, and none need suffer except from want of effort.

But as the country becomes more settled more is demanded by the people. Assistance along the line of opportunity is demanded, and I think in Canada we have about reached that stage in our natural development. We have reached it for economic reasons, owing to the fact that the influx of population is from the country to the city. The tremendously complex industrial activity in this country has swept away the small factories, and the great centralized industries are in the manufacturing centres that supply the wants of the people. Cheapness in production is at all times the standard of efficiency, and soon as a man has reached that time in life in which he cannot do a fair day's work for a fair day's pay, he is set aside as too old for work, and is practically useless from the industrial point of view. I think there is no more pitiable sight—there is perhaps only one equally as pitiable on the streets of our cities as compared with the man who wants work and cannot get it, and that is a sight of the man who is too old to work satisfactorily and is cast aside in the rush of industrialism. There is not one of us who has taken any active part in the charitable work of our cities who has not been moved by the many cases of men and women who have been industrious, thrifty, and hardworking through a long period of life but who are by necessity forced on their children for support, or else into our almshouse or houses of industry in their old age. The problem becomes acute for the reasons I have outlined. In the old days, when we had a proportionately greater agricultural community there was always a corner in the kitchen and a sup to drink and a bite to eat for the old people when they got beyond their working days; but under our modern industrial system, in our crowded cities, when the cost of living has increased to such a tremendous degree, the effect is that the old men and women often become a burden on their children. And the great—I do not know exactly what word to use—the great love that parents have for their children many a time makes the father and mother leave the home of the son or daughter and seek the almshouse and the poorhouse rather than be a burden on them. The Minister of Finance suggested that possibly an old age pension would work against thrift. 'Thrift' is a fine sounding word, but we must define it. There is a distinction between parsimony and economy, and what one may consider thrift, another may consider extravagance. I doubt very much if the workman is thrifty who hoards his earnings rather than give his children the opportunity of a fair education which they should have with its resultant possibility of advancement. My idea of thrift in the working class of this country is a thrift that spends wisely and well that which comes to the hand of the workingman so that his children may have a better opportunity than he has had. I think, Sir, that we utterly fail to grasp the true trend of legislation of this country if we sit idly by and believe that police regulations alone are going to suffice for the advancement of our people.

We have got beyond the days of mere individualism and have come to the days of so-called socialism. Socialism, Mr. Speaker, is a broad term. I would like to define it as I understand it. It is not socialism which takes from a man what he has saved, which robs him of the fruits of his labour, but that socialism which gives every man a chance, which says that the man who is down shall not necessarily be kept down all his life for want of a fair opportunity. We see it in our legislation to better the food supplies of the people; we see it in education, in the provisions of the law which enable school boards to establish night schools and schools for the training of backward children; we see it in the Workmen's Compensation Act, which implies that great industrial concerns must be supervised, and that in the cost of production there must be taken into account not only the breaking of machinery and the wearing out of boilers, but also the breaking of a man's arm or the loss of his life—that when men's lives are sacrificed on the altar of cheaper production, compensation must be provided for those who are deprived of their bread-winner. I am very much in favour of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham). Every man must be in favour of making old age as comfortable as possible. Whether the question is practicable or not I am not in a position to say. The experiment has been tried in New Zealand and found effective, it has been tried in Australia and has worked well; it has been introduced in England and promises to work well there. The final question for solution in connection with it is, where is the money to come from? But before that question need be asked, there are one or two questions for which answers must be found. The first is: Is it advisable from the Canadian—the national—point of view to establish this system? Another question is: Is it advisable from the point of view of the worker? These two questions being answered—if in the affirmative—it seems to me that the Canadian nation is big enough to solve the financial problem. With bounding revenues and growing prosperity Canada should not lag behind in the march of social regeneration. The hon. Finance Minister stated that in England the pension rate was from one shilling to five shillings a week, and doubt was thrown by the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) upon the correctness of these figures. I sent to the library for the statutes from which I find that one shilling per week is the lowest rate and five-shillings per week the highest, which shows that the statement of the Minister of Finance was perfectly accurate. If we were to have legislation of this kind in Canada at all, we should have it in the early stages of our industrial development, and I feel sure that if a committtee is named and it takes up the question honestly and earnestly and goes to the root of the matter, it will do much to simplify the working out of this great problem in the early stages of our national development, before our industrial centres become too greatly congested and industrial conditions become so acute that it will be absolutely necessary to promptly relieve want. Let us hope that something may be done so that the man who has spent his life in work and sometimes hardship, or the woman who has given the best years of her life to the care of her children may not become paupers in old age and spend their declining years in obnoxious surroundings, but may be enabled to spend them at home among their children in some degree of comfort.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, there is always a great danger of a man being misunderstood when he puts himself in any sense in opposition to what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance called the generous enthusiasm of my hon. friend who introduced this motion. I am quite sure, however, that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if the Minister of Finance will apply to him for advice, which he is so well able to give him, would tell him that if he wants to be a success as a Minister of Finance he will cut out that generous enthusiasm towards people who want to spend the public money very early in his career. It is a quality which does great credit to my hon. friend as a man, but is a dangerous quality in a Minister of Finance—I had almost said it does great credit to his heart, but perhaps not so much credit to the financial portion of his head. The question of state aid to any given portion of the inhabitants of a country is a very large question. As my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) has said, pensions have been very popular with certain portions of the community. I was brought up in a school known as the individualist school, which my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) tells me is now extinct. Well, I may be an obsolete survival, but I imagine that for all that is best in individualism we have perhaps more illustrations in Canada than in any other country in the world. I do not agree with my hon. friend that individualism is extinct. In the old country the pension system was carried so far that they had what were called perpetual pensions, and it was a part of the work of that great individualist who represented Northampton, Charles Bradlaugh, to destroy them. Those perpetual pensions were brought down from the days of Charles II., and were conferred upon the children of aristocrats whose families had a somewhat curious origin, into which it is not necessary for me to go. Individualism has gone to the length of abolishing those perpetual pensions, though, as my hon. friend from Maisonneuve pointed out, pensions are still given to men like Lord Cromer. Personally I am a good deal of an individualist. I do not look on pensions of any sort with any degree of favour. If there are to be pensions, it seems to me that they should be given to the poor rather than to the rich. That, I think, would commend itself to any person who wanted to think accurately and reasonably. But we have to approach this question of state aid very carefully. My hon. friend from Kingston defined the state. Well, I think I have a simpler definition which I have culled from my reading of Prof. Charles Sumner, a distinguished man who taught at Harvard University until a few years ago. He says the state is everybody else outside of those who are being supplied with some particular thing; the state is 'the other fellow'; and of course the state is a very good thing to go to on the part of the man who wants to get anything.

As I have pointed out the wealthy have been most successful in this respect. I believe it is one of the misfortunes of a protectionist fiscal system that in time the poor come to imitate the wealthy. Professor Sumner, in the same writing to which I have referred, pointed out that while only wealthy manufacturers now, under the fiscal system, were getting relief through the tariff, in time the poorer people would learn the trick of the manufacturers, and he foretold—and after all it is difficult not to believe a successful prophet—that one of the results of this relief of wealthy manufacturers by the state would be that the other fellows, that the poor, in time would apply for relief and that Socialism was the natural outcome of protectionism. That was not the teaching of a benighted free trader from England, but of a great professor in the great protected country to the south of us, the United States, and it would almost appear as if his prophecy was being fulfilled in Germany, according to recent events in that country.

To a few of the statements made by my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) in a measure backed up by the Minister of Finance, I would like to take a qualified exception. I think my fellow Canadians, for I am a Canadian now, will understand me when I say that there is nothing on which I feel more strongly than on misrepresentations, I think in most cases perfectly innocent, of the old country, and its conditions. I think we should endeavour to have accurate information of what is going on in the old country. Since I came to Canada nothing has struck me more than the colossal want of accurate information about conditions in the old country unless it be, when I have returned to the old country, the equally colossal lack of accurate information on the part of the old country about Canada. Mr. Asquith, who presumably knows something about the old country, he has lived there all his life, and has risen to a position of the highest eminence, made himself responsible a few years ago for the statement that in the United Kingdom, they keep the densest population in the world in the greatest average degree of comfort in the world. I throw out that statement, giving my authority, the highest it is possible to quote, as a guard against careless statements about the amount of poverty and unemployment in the old land.

We had an interesting category of the causes of poverty in the old country. If a man works hard in England at whisky he will become unemployed, and there are a large number of people in the old land who work very hard at that kind of thing. The consumption of alcoholic liquor leads to the expenditure of the sum of $800,000,000 annually in Great Britain. That does not qualify a man, as I understand the scheme, for an old age pension there; a man must be a sober man. But in many cases the production of poverty by that expenditure does not stop with the man who does the drinking, that is the misfortune of that kind of habit.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White), who I quite appreciate is the last man to say anything unfriendly to the old land, went on to draw a contrast in favour of Canada, and he said that unemployment was practically unknown in Canada. I must say that that statement rather startled me. I have been reading in the newspapers recently that there were 2,000 men in Ottawa seeking government jobs at the present moment.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). That is a change of employment.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). They only wanted change of employment? I should think that the men who are losing their employment to give these 2,000 men a chance would be glad to know where they are to get employment. I have seen a few of them, and they are extremely anxious, they seem to fear that they are going to take up the unemployment being deserted by the other lot.

However, I think that exaggerated statements about conditions on the other side of the Atlantic are calculated to do only harm, and I am sure that everyone here wants accurate information. I was under a misapprehension as to the sum paid. I rather think that in part of his statement my hon. friend was wrong, at least in a Bill sent around to me the age is 70 instead of 65. I believe there are recent amendments to the Act, and if the motion for information required any justification to me it would be in the somewhat hazy condition in my own mind about what has actually been done on this subject.

With regard to the merits of the question, I do want to endorse what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said about the very different conditions that prevail here and those that prevail in the old country. In England and Wales they keep somewhere in the neighbourhood of 560 people to the square mile. In Canada, I think we have 1¾, not quite 2 people to the square mile. The statement of these two simple facts shows that the opportunity here for a man to get on and keep out of the condition in which he needs relief, is immeasurably greater than in Great Britain and I feel that a statement of that kind and a study of the conditions would lead us to be extremely careful about embarking on this scheme simply because it has been adopted of recent years in Great Britain. What I feel on the general principle is that if you go indefinitely along the lines of helping men to do what they should do for themselves you will inevitably, in the end, undermine the virility and the strength of your people. I have said upon many a platform that there is no country in the world which, from climatic conditions, from the great heritage of territory into which we have come and of resources of every kind, has a better chance of having for its ideal the building of a strong, virile, self-supporting, independent people than this country of Canada, and I think that governments and politicians should hesitate before they proceed to measures which would in any way interfere with that destiny of the country because, after all, the highest destiny of Canada must be found in the character of the people which she builds up in successive generations of Canadians.

I would like to give an example of the difference in opportunity in this country and in Great Britain. One of my oldest friends in this world and a near neighbour of mine in western Canada came to this country at 57 years of age. He came, I think, in the year 1889. He is now in his 80th year. He brought with him £400 ($2,000) and his family and he proceeded to do what so many Britishers do when they come over here; in two years he lost sight of his £400. He was not quite on to the methods of trade in the west, and he found himself, in his 60th year, without anything. He took a homestead, his sons did the same, and to-day, in his 80th year he is a contented, hearty, pleasant old gentleman, a splendid Grit and a good Free Trader—but that is by the way. He and his two sons own, without incumberance, 640 acres of land and 200 head of cattle, and there is no happier man in the world. He tackled what would have been a certain prospect of the workhouse in England at 60 years of age and that is his position to-day. If he had been of a whining or weakly disposition and there had been the facility for it I suppose he might have sought an old age pension and retired upon the magnificent sum of $3 a week for the rest of his life.

I cannot help thinking that he has done more for Canada by doing as he has done, that he has set a better example to those of succeeding generations. Government, in my judgment, ought to be careful to do nothing to prevent success in life and avoid the possible production of failure; and one of the worst things about charity, whether private or government charity, if it is not of the very wisest kind and wisely administered, is that it produces the very evil which you want to do away with. I, as a private member, do not feel that I am under any need to show the caution which I enjoin on my hon. friend the Minister of Finance; so I should like to say that I admire the generous enthusiasm of my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham). And I hope I share it. I hope I am not less sympathetic than those hon. members who have spoken more strongly in support of this scheme than I can conscientiously do. But while I profess an equal sympathy, I think perhaps I am a little more cautious in my thinking on economics. My hon. friend will not misunderstand me, if, as I sit down, I repeat my advice to him, that, when he is likely to be carried away in the direction of generous enthusiasm he should make a friendly call on my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), who, while he is good-hearted, has also a long experience in handling finance, and an experience also of the office that my hon. friend holds, and I am sure that hon. gentleman will show him how to avoid the dangerous tendencies of youth when he is inclined to spend too much of public money.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville). I do not intend to speak on this question to-day. I merely rose to notify hon. members that one of the gentlemen who has made a very special study of this question, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is prevented from being here to-day by the snow blockade on the Intercolonial railway. I know that he intended to speak on this debate, and I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) to agree to the adjournment of the debate in order to give the hon. member for Pictou an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). That would not preclude others from speaking in the meantime.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). I desire to add a few words to the excellent speeches which we have heard here this afternoon on this subject, which is one of the greatest social topics engaging the attention of almost every modern civilized country in the world. I desire to compliment the mover of the motion (Mr. Burnham) on his excellent speech and on the clear and incisive manner in which he has set forth his case. I desire also to call the attention of the House to one statement of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), that the Manchester School of Economy is not dead since we have recently had a demonstration of it in action. I would also call attention to the feeling manner in which the leader of the late government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said 'hear, hear,' to that statement. I know that he said it in a very feeling way, because, beyond question, it was the work of the Manchester School in action that placed the right hon. gentleman on the other side of the table. The hon. member from Red Deer said that the Manchester School was not dead. On this side we hope that he will succeed in reviving the Manchester School whenever a general election comes round; for to do so will be of great benefit to the Conservative party. Another thing the hon. gentleman said was that he hoped he was a Canadian. I was beginning to doubt whether he was really a Canadian or an Englishman, or not, after hearing him eulogize the United States day after day ever since the session began. I hope we shall all agree to accept his word for it. I am sure we can accept his word for it that there is a colossal amount of ignorance with reference to matters in connection with England;—I think he displayed that when he questioned the accuracy of the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) a moment ago.

Now, with reference to the question of old age pensions and of poverty in England, statistics show that in free trade England 35 people out of every 1,000 are recipients of charity of a public nature. And no doubt in that country the question was so serious that the government had to take some action. We all know that every country, especially our own, is now passing through a period of transition. We passed through a period of political transition a few months ago, and beyond question we are passing through a period of social transition now; and it will be for us to consider the manner in which we are to approach the very important question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burnham) has brought before us. Many of us who study questions of this nature, study them through the medium of books published in the old country where the idea of the relationship of individuals to the state is altogether different from the idea that obtains on the American continent. We must bear in mind that in Europe the state is virtually the Executive and all acts or privileges held by the people proceed from the Executive. In America the idea that prevails is that the people are the Sovereign, and, therefore, we who represent the people here are representatives of the people and not the appointees or servants of the Executive, as the idea prevails in England. For that reason, when we take up a social question of this kind, we must consider it from the standpoint of individual responsibility, knowing that there is no responsibility attaching to the state to do anything for the individual in respect to charity. Now, so far as Canada is concerned, there is no question that old age pensions will bring about conditions that might be injurious to our prevalent ideas of thrift and individual responsibility. Every man born in this country, or who has lived in this country for more than a year or two, has learned the elementary lesson that he must make provision for himself during a certain portion of the year at least. A large proportion of our people are not employed in the winter; therefore, in summer they must provide the means to enable them to live during the winter. That all makes for individual thrift; and the idea that predominates with every Canadian is a feeling of responsibility to make ample provision for himself in his old age, and for his wife and family, if he happens to possess them. That is what has brought about the successful conditions which have made us the greatest nation of individual wealth-owners in the world. I think that statistics will show that the individual Canadian has more money in the bank, that the average wealth of the individual Canadian is higher than in any other country in the world.

It might be a very serious thing for us to place on the statute-book any Bill of a nature that will tend to destroy that independent spirit which makes a man continually strive to put aside his savings so that in his old age he may have something to comfort him. It would be unfortunate if his individual responsibility should be destroyed, if he should go on and live a reckless life in the expectation that when he became old the state would take care of him. However, at the same time we must all realize that all nations to-day of any consequence have old age pension laws upon their statute books. The first nation to take this step was Germany.

In 1891 Germany adopted an old age pension law and that has virtually been the model Bill for other countries. England for a hundred years had been discussing this question, ever since the days of Owen when great reforms were discussed and many introduced and carried through. Men like Paine and others have written on the question of old age pensions and these are the men who laid the foundation possibly of the modern idea of socialism. But, it was reserved for a later age to bring in a Bill of this kind. So Great Britain now has an Old Age Pension Act. I desire to place on 'Hansard' just very briefly a résumé of the laws that obtain in other countries with respect to old age pensions, so that when this question comes up again for discussion we may have some data on which we may go. In Germany the state provides a portion of the pension. The individual and his employer have to pay a certain amount of premium. Therefore, this makes for a joint responsibility. Let us see what they have done in Denmark. Denmark adopted the old age pension system about the same time as Germany. The system in Germany was instituted in 1891 and it has been further extended in 1902 and 1908. This is the system in vogue in Denmark: Recipients of public assistance must be over 60 years of age, they must be of good character and for five years previous to receipt must have had their domicile in Denmark without receiving public charity. Such public assistance may be granted either in money, or kind, or by residence in an institution, such as an hospital. The assistance given, whatever it may be, must be sufficient for maintenance, and for attendance in case of illness. The actual amount is determined by the poor-law authorities, but all private assistance amounting to more than 100 kroner (£5 13s) a year to taken into account in measuring the poverty of the applicant. The cost of assistance is met in the first case by the Commune in which the recipient is domiciled. That is to say that the municipality pays the pension, but half the amount is afterwards refunded by the state.

A wise check is thus placed in that way upon individuals receiving old age pensions from the state because their own neighbours have to pay a certain amount of it, and they will see that the state is not defrauded.

The next nation to adopt this system was France. In 1910 France adopted this system of old age pensions.

It is a contributory system, embracing all wage earners, with the exception of railway servants, miners and sailors on the special reserve list of the navy. It applies also to small land owners, tenant farmers, and farm labourers. All are eligible for a pension at the age of 65, if in receipt of less than £120 a year. The actual rente or pension is calculated on the basis of the total obligatory contribution, together with a fixed viagère or state annuity. Male wage-earners are required to contribute nine francs a year, and females six francs, the employers contributing a like amount. The largest pension obtainable is for life contributions and amounts of 414 francs. A clause in the Act permits wage-earners to claim the rente at the age of 55 on a proportionately reduced scale without the viagère. The total cost of providing pensions in 1911 is estimated at over £5,500,000.

The next country we find adopting the old age pension system is New Zealand. New Zealand is a country of very advanced socialistic legislation. It is one of the most progressive of the great dominions under the British Crown. It has very advanced legislation with regard to labour questions, land tenure and old age pensions. In that country they have had to reduce the amount of land that any single person can hold. We find that in the Argentine Republic, whilst every individual is provided with land, and other assistance upon settling in the country there is a check placed upon his acquiring of too much land and bringing about the same condition of affairs as that which has obtained in Europe for so many generations, and which it is virtually a survival of the feudal system which must ultimately be ended so that the proper proportion of the people may go back on the land again as they did in France in the days of Napoleon the Great, or immediately after the revolution. We may have to adopt a similar law. New Zealand's Old Age Pension Bill was introduced in 1898, it became law almost immediately.

The claimant must be 65 years of age, a resident in the colony and to have so resided for 25 years, so that they may know that all recipients of the pension are citizens of the colony. That will also prevent people coming from another country and by residing in New Zealand for a year or two becoming pensioners. They must be free from conviction for lesser legal offences for 12 years, and for more serious breaches of the law for 25 years previous to the application. They must be of good moral character, and have a record of sobriety and respectability for five years. Their yearly income must not exceed £52, and they must not be owners of property exceeding in value £270. Aliens, aborigines, Chinese and Asiatics are excluded. The pensions are for £18 per annum, but for each £1 of yearly income over and above £34, and also for each £15 of capital over and above £50, £1 is deducted from the amount of the pension. Applications have to be made to the deputy registrars of one of seventy-two districts into which the colony is for this purpose divided. The claim is then recorded and submitted to a stipendiary magistrate, before whom the claimant has to prove his qualifications and submit to cross-examination. If the claim is admitted, a certificate is issued to the deputy registrar, and in due course handed to the claimant. Payment is made through the local post office as desired by the pensioner.

That is something along the line of the idea brought forward by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). I understand that there has been very little pension fraud perpetrated in New Zealand. The authors of the measure state that it is a great success, while some, of course, claim that it is not designed to relieve poverty, but rather to further it. There is a difference of opinion upon the results of this pension law in New Zealand. The state of Victoria has also an old age pension system which was put in operation in 1900. There pensioners receive 10 shillings per week on fulfilling the necessary conditions. The necessary conditions are these:

The pensioner must be 65 years of age, or permanently disabled; must fill up a declaration that he has lived 20 years in the state; has not been convicted of drunkenness, wife desertion, &c.; that his weekly income, and his property do not exceed a given sum (the regulation of this and other details is entrusted to the Governor in Council). It appears to me that this question having arisen in other countries, and advance legislation having been adopted with regard to it, this country should be well up in the forefront in the matter of modern legislation, which, while making for and encouraging individual liberty of action and responsibility, at the same time would eliminate from the statute-book anything in the nature of charity.

Indiscriminate charity has led to a great many abuses, and has caused the people in other countries to look to the government for a means of living whether they deserve it or not. I trust that we Canadians will always live up to the idea that it is well to provide something for the rainy day. I am pleased to think that so far as the idea of filial love is concerned, and the obligations of the younger to the older generation, amongst no people in the world is that instinct so strong, as it is with Canadians. The committee moved for by the hon. member (Mr. Burnham), will, without doubt, produce beneficial results, and I am sure it will present to the House a report which will throw light on this social movement which is exercising the minds of so many people. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), has made reference to 5,000 people wishing for government positions, and no doubt there are an equal number lying awake at night wondering if they will hold the positions they have, but these are things that occur, unfortunately, after few elections. I believe Sir, that the dominant note of this parliament should be to inculcate in the minds of the people individualism and independence of the state, so that we may long continue free from that system of bureaucracy and indiscriminate state charity which unfortunately has become a necessity and sometimes an abuse in other lands.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). If there is no one else who wishes to speak at the present time, I will move the adjournment of the debate so as to allow an opportunity for some members who are absent to take part in it later.

On motion of Mr. Foster, the debate was adjourned.

BRITISH PREFERENTIAL TARIFF.

On the order being called, for the proposed resolution—Mr. Pugsley—

Whereas, by section 5 of the Act 6-7 Edward VII, it is provided that 'On and after a date to be named by the Governor in Council in a proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' the British preferential tariff shall apply only to goods brought into Canada by ship direct to a Canadian seaport.'

And whereas that portion of the Transcontinental railway between Moncton and Lévis is now nearly completed;

And whereas, by means of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk, connecting with the Transcontinental at Lévis, and the Intercolonial and the Canadian Northern systems, goods arriving at Canadian seaports both in summer and winter, can be expeditiously carried to all the settled sections of Canada;

And whereas, it is desirable that such proclamation should be issued at an early date; and that reasonable notice thereof should be given;

Therefore, be it resolved that, in the opinion of this House, the Governor in Council should fix a date not later than the first day of July next on which said section 5 of the said Act shall be brought into force.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to withdraw this motion, and I shall briefly state my reason. The resolution reads that the Transcontinental railway will very soon be completed between Moncton and Lévis, and my idea was that the proposal in the resolution with reference to the British preference should go into effect when the Transcontinental railway is completed between Moncton and Lévis and connections thereby made with the Grand Trunk system to all parts of Quebec and Ontario. Since I put the motion on the paper the minister has stated that that portion of the Transcontinental would not be completed until 1913. and in view of that I ask to withdraw the motion. If I should be here another session, as I hope to be, I will again propose it.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Not during the present session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Motion withdrawn.

DOGFISH SCRAP.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved:

For a copy of all papers, letters, recommendations, petitions, ministerial instructions and other documents in the possession of the Department of Marine and Fisheries relating to the price of dogfish scrap.

Mr. HAZEN. There is no limitation to the time covered by this motion, and I am informed by my officials that if it is passed in its present form the return will be very voluminous. If there is any particular feature of it that my hon. friend wishes to call attention to I shall be pleased to get him the information with regard to that.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I limited the resolution to information respecting the price which was fixed at twenty dollars a ton for a long period until changed recently, and I should think the correspondence would not be voluminous with respect to that. However, the motion can be amended so as to cover the period from the 31st March, 1911, to date.

Mr. CURRIE. As the motion reads, it covers the price of dogfish scrap all over the world. Why not limit it to Canada, if that is all that is wanted?

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

INQUIRY IN THE CASE OF WILLIAM ROY, ASKED BY H. BOULAY, OF SAYABEC.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimousiki) asked:

For a copy of all papers, reports, correspondence and messages respecting a report made in 1904 by H. Boulay, of Savabec, against William Roy, sectionman at Amqui, Intercolonial railway, and of all that has been subsequently done to give effect to that report.

(Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am asking for a copy of certain papers and reports so as to throw some light on the Liberal adminstration between the years 1896 and 1911.

In 1904, the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) was at the head of the Department of Railways, and I was at that time but a farmer in the county of Rimouski. I would like to learn from the hon. member the reason of his conduct upon that occasion, regarding a citizen of the county of Rimouski who happens to be to-day the member for that county, to the great surpise, no doubt, of the hon. member for Westmorland. I stand to-day in his presence and I think the occasion is well chosen to remind him of his conduct in 1904 and ask him to explain it, if he thinks he can do so.

These are the facts: During the electoral campaign of 1904. I visited Causapscal in the company of Mr. Wm. Price, then a candidate in Rimouski, and who has since occupied a seat in this House as a member for Quebec West. During the speeches delivered by the candidates, a hand-car from the Intercolonial railway, carrying several employees of that road, came in from the parish of Amqui. Among them were several bullies. All these employees were paid so much a day by the people of this country to work on the railway and not to work for the Liberal candidate. I took no part in the discussion, I was only a spectator at the meeting, and after the speeches were over, I went to the station waiting for the first train to take me home. I was followed by one of the employees of the Intercolonial, a man in the employ of the hon. member for Westmorland who was, at that time, Minister of Railways and Canals. The man was drunk, going even so far as to threaten me. Being under the impression that the administration of the railway, under the direction of the hon. member for Westmorland had the duty to protect the public; supposing that all law-abiding British subjects could rely on the protection of the laws in this country, I did not stoop to answer the insults of that man. I simply said to myself: I will make a report to his chief, and justice will be done.

I was quite wrong in my expectations. I expected too much from the fairness of the then Minister of Railways, and here is the proof. I made a full report, relating all the circumstances, to Mr. Pottinger, who was at the time the general manager of the Intercolonial railway. Mr. Pottinger is well known, not only in the province of Quebec, but by those all over Canada who have anything to do with the Intercolonial railway. He is a gentleman, in the fullest acceptation of the word, beloved and respected through the length and breadth of this country. I am glad to avail myself of the present occasion to pay him this well-deserved compliment. Mr. Pottinger, with his usual fairness granted the inquiry and a date was fixed for the hearing. I was present at the appointed date, but only to find out that a message, an order, had been received from Ottawa, from the hon. member for Westmorland, who is now in his seat. The purport of the message was simply this: 'We will not grant an inquiry to Mr. Boulay who is a Tory; he has no claim to the protection afforded by the law and by the regulations of the Intercolonial railway; in spite of his report relating all the circumstances of the case, and notwithstanding that we are bound to protect him, we decline to grant the inquiry.' That was done in the face of the written and expressed rule that says: All employees reported for drunkenness will be dismissed or suspended.

What was the result? Has that man been suspended or even reprimanded? Not at all. Until November last, up to the date of his dismissal, he was never interfered with; he was given full opportunity to assail me on all occasions, and he did not fail to do so during the last election, in company with two other men employed in the same section.

If the hon. member for Westmorland has any excuses to offer for his conduct on that occasion, I would be glad to hear them now that after having waited seven long years, I am his colleague in this House. That is the reason why I am asking for those papers.

Mr. EMMERSON. I could not follow my hon. friend very closely but I understood him to complain of some difficulty that arose while I was Minister of Railways and that the complaint came to the department and was not investigated. I cannot recall the circumstances, and I have not the advantage of being in possession of the papers which are of course to be found in the Department of Railways and Canals. The impression on my mind was that there had been an altercation between some party, with which the department had nothing whatever to do; but that because one party had assaulted another, the complainant felt that the department should intervene and try out the right between these two individuals. I am under the impression that, on behalf of the department, I declined to enter into any inquiry into difficulties that had arisen among the employees or between the employees and outsiders. I did not think that the department should resolve itself into a police court to determine any such matters. The records of the department will show what was done. I cannot recall that there ever arose in the department, during my jurisdiction any question of a political nature regarding any employee, and I think I am safe in saying that no man was dismissed between January 1904 and 1907 because of any political partisanship. Whenever a dismissal did take place it was on the report of the officials without regard to any political consideration. I understood my hon. friend to complain that a dismissal was not made in this instance because of an altercation which took place between Mr. Wm. Roy and somebody else.

I must have had good reason for not dismissing the man, and I do not feel that the time of the department should be taken up with investigations with regard to any assault committed either by an employee of the department or by any individual not in its employ upon an employee. If I had the papers before me I could refresh my memory, and I am satisfied that the position taken by myself and the department in the matter would be justified by the facts. Certainly the intention of the officers of the department was to see that justice was done to any employee and to any of the patrons of the line.

Mr. MONK. It is quite natural that my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways should not remember the circumstances of this particular case. I merely rose for the purpose of saying to my hon. friend from Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) that the government will bring these papers down in my hon. friend's own language. But perhaps I may be allowed to say further that I do not think my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has quite understood the gravamen of the charge made by my hon. friend from Rimouski, and the reason he puts forward for asking at this late date for the production of these documents. It is not a question of a difficulty between two individuals or of private relations between an employee of the government and my hon. friend from Rimouski, who at that time occupied no official position whatever. The question is this, as I understand it from the statement made by my hon. friend: At the time my hon. friend from Westmorland was Minister of Railways, a meeting took place at Causapscal on the line of the Intercolonial railway. My hon. friend from Rimouski, as a private individual, attended that meeting, but took no part in it. On his way back from the meeting, on the train and at the station, the man mentioned in this motion, in a state of absolute intoxication, was pouring insults and injuries of all kinds upon my hon. friend from Rimouski, discussing political matters, and insulting him without any reason or provocation whatever. After this incident my hon. friend from Rimouski lodged a complaint with the Department of Railways and asked for an investigation, alleging these facts and offering to prove the truth of this accusation; but he never received any reply. At any rate, the investigation which he demanded was never granted, and the man was kept in the employ of the government in connection with the Intercolonial railway, he remained an active partisan, and in the last election he continued the same system of active participation until a change of government came about, when, on the express demand of my hon. friend, he was dismissed from the service. My hon. friend, for his own justification probably in his own division, is anxious to have the whole report brought down, in order to show that in 1904, on this particular occasion, as well as ever since, this man has been an active partisan. I take this occasion of repeating what I have stated already, that whatever steps we take jointly on both sides of the House to improve the Civil Service, unless we punish severely by dismissal all civil servants who violate the rule that they must not take an active part in politics, I think we shall fail of any improvement in the service.

Motion agreed to.

MR. JOHN RUTHERFORD, LANDS AGENT.

Mr. KNOWLES moved:

For a copy of all letters, resolutions, telegrams and other communications or memorials in connection with the removal from the Moosejaw Land Office of John Rutherford, lands agent.

He said: I would like to add to the motion the following words 'and the appointment, either temporary or permanent, of a new incumbent of the office.' I sent a copy of this to the Minister of the Interior a few minutes ago and he did not take any exception to it.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

DISMISSALS IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved:

For a tabulated statement showing the number of dismissals in the Post Office Department since the first day of October, 1911, in the nine provinces of the Dominion. Also the names of the postmasters so dismissed, the locality, the cause of dismissal, the names of the petitioners praying for such dismissal in each case, and the names of the petitioners opposing said dismissals.

Mr. BORDEN. In the absence of the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) I think it would be better to allow this motion to stand. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) is going into a number of particulars which are not usually asked for or given in such cases. So far as the number of dismissals is concerned, there is no objection to that, or to the names of the postmasters dismissed, the localities or the causes for dismissal. But I am not so sure about some of the other particulars and would ask that the hon. gentleman allow it to stand for the present.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very well.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Mr. MONK.

PARCEL POST CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved:

For a copy of the Parcel Post Convention between Canada and France, and all papers connected therewith.

He said: I understand that the postal convention has been in force for a few weeks. In fact, the schedule has been published in he newspapers. I have received several requests from boards of trade and chambers of commerce asking for copies, and I think it would be wise to have it widely published so as to let people know what rates they are called upon to pay. Secondly, the object of the motion is to learn whether the French government has agreed to allow the convention to be signed by the Postmasters General of the two countries. Objection was raised when I was in Paris last year that such a convention partook of the nature of a treaty and could only be signed, in the case of Canada, by the British Ambassador in Paris. I then stated to the French authorities that the postal convention under the postal union laws were generally signed by the respective Postmasters General of the countries concerned. But the question remained in abeyance for a while. I would like to ascertain whether this particular convention was signed by the Postmaster General of France or by the Minister of Foreign Affairs. I know it was signed by myself as Postmaster of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN. I have no doubt that if the Postmaster General were in the House to-day, he could give the information at once. I have no special information on the subject myself. There is no reason why the motion should not pass; and possibly, in advance of the papers being brought down, the Postmaster General may be able to give the information that is asked for.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN OFFICES IN LONDON.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the High Commissioner of Canada and the government, or any member thereof, with reference to the lack of accommodation at the Canadian Offices, 17 Victoria Street, S. W., and the desirability of the erection of suitable offices in London for the High Commissioner and his staff and the Immigration Branch, befitting the dignity of Canada as an integral portion of the British Empire.

He said: For many years the office at 17 Victoria street has been the rendezvous for all Canadians visiting London. They meet there and receive their correspondence and so the office has been a very great convenience. The impression one receives on visiting the office for the first time is not favourable. The exterior of the building is gloomy. The offices are in the centre of a large row of buildings and you would expect to find there a wholesale house rather than the office of the High Commissioner for Canada. The interior is very little better; it is dark and gloomy, the rooms are cut up and the accommodation utterly inadequate. The reading room, which is supposed to contain the Canadian papers, is very small and dark. No doubt the office is conveniently located for the officials, as it is close to the English government offices, but it is not sufficiently central to be a convenient meeting place for visiting Canadians. The Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk railway, the Montreal 'Star,' and the Toronto 'Globe,' have offices right in the heart of London, some of them in magnificent buildings. These offices are near Trafalgar square, which, as every one knoks, is a landmark in London, whereas to reach the High Commissioner's office it is generally necessary to take a conveyance. So inconvenient is the office of the High Commissioner that many people from Ontario and from other provinces as well, now make use of the office established by the government of Ontario in the Strand. While that office is not commodious, it is a credit to Ontario and is in a very central position. Many Canadians also make use of the offices of the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk railway and the great Canadian newspapers, where they find magnificent rooms elegantly furnished with attendants who are able and willing to give information to visitors.

In deciding where Canada should erect a building in London, we may well notice what has been done by other Overseas Dominions. The Commonwealth of Australia has secured a magnificent site on the newly opned street, Strand-Aldwych, where they purpose erecting a building to cost, with the site, something like $3,000,000. In a despatch from Melbourne the 'Standard of Empire' says of this building:

> The purchase of the Strand site for £364,000 for the purpose of building thereon offices to house the High Commissioners and the various States Agents-General in London, having been approved by the House of Representatives, it only remains for the Senate to sanction the proposal. It is regarded as certain that there will be no opposition from this quarter. It is not certain as yet whether New Zealand will agree to share the building which is to be erected, but it is known that an intimation that the presence of the New Zealand High Commissioner would be welcomed has been conveyed to the Dominion government.

The same paper published a cut of the building, showing a magnificent structure right in the heart of London, and says:

It is hoped that the Commonwealth Government Buildings, which, as already stated in the 'Standard of Empire,' will cost, with the price of the land, £600,000, will be started on the Strand-Aldwych site about the middle of next year. It will probably take two years to complete.

In the way of preliminary arrangements, all that remains is for Sir George Reid, the High Commissioner for Australia, to fix the actual purchase money with the county council and sign the contract. The plans prepared by Mr. Alfred Burr, F.R.I.B.A., have already received official sanction.

The new building will be much more than the mere official headquarters of the Commonwealth Government. For instance, it will contain on the ground floor a large hall for the exhibition of Australian produce. This alone will cover an area of 12,000 square feet, and its achitectural features include two massive domes. On an upper floor provision is made for a spacious lecture-room, where people can learn from those who have experience of the country what are the advantages and prospects in any particular State.

There will be four entrances to the building. One will be about the middle of the Strand frontage, with another in a corresponding position on the Aldwych side. There will be a third entrance at Melbourne place, where the Victoria building now stands, and the fourth will open out on to the corner of the Strand and Aldwych. Handsome staircases will lead from each to the upper floors.

The accommodation will be sufficient for the Commonwealth Government and the five States in addition to Victoria, whose building is already standing. These are New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, and Tasmania. There will also be room for New Zealand, if, as may be the case, the authorities of that Dominion desire it. The whole block will be in the style of the existing building at the corner of Melbourne-place. It will be in Portland stone, and will contain eight stories. At the Strand-Aldwych corner a high dome will form an interesting landmark in the neighbourhood.

The Commonwealth offices will be arranged on the first and second floors at the Strand-Aldwych corner of the building. The rooms will be lofty and well lighted, the ventilating and heating arrangements will be on the latest and most approved style, and in the general equipment the building will bear comparison with any of the public offices in London.

In view of what our youngest sister is doing, leading the way as she has led it in other cases where we have lagged behind, I think it is up to this parliament to decide what we are going to do. We often boast of being the brightest gem in His Majesty's Crown and yet we as Canadians, when we go to London, as many do, cannot help but feel a little humiliated to realize that we have a building so little suited to the needs of the people who visit that country in keeping with the high position Canada holds in the Empire and which lends so little dignity to the office of our High Commissioner in that great city the heart of the empire. The question arises here; What are we going to do? Are we going to be satisfied with the building we have, or are we going to erect a building in keeping with the dignity of this country in some central spot in London? I do not say that we should erect a building on the Strand near where the Australian Commonwealth are erecting their magnificent edifice, but I do believe that, either in close proximity to the Australian building or else at some place near Trafalgar Square, Canada ought to erect a building that would be in keeping with the needs of our people and the dignity of our country. There is, to my knowledge, a site very close to where our immigration offices are situated in London. I may say in passing that the government have in London an immigration building in addition to the High Commissioner's office. That building is very well and very centrally located. I would urge the government to secure a site very close to where our immigration building is at the present moment. I understood when I was in London from the gentleman who is in charge of the immigration work there that the rental of the building was very high and that it would almost pay the interest on the cost of a first-class building. Whether that is so or not, I contend that Canada ought to acquire at the earliest possible moment a site not far from Trafalgar Square and erect thereon a building in keeping with the needs of the country that would be a land mark in London for all Canadians and those seeking information regarding Canadian matters. I believe that such a building ought to contain a large hall, just as it is proposed that the Australian building shall, for the permanent exhibition of Canadian products, lecture rooms, and offices for all Canadian employees that we have in the old country, that it ought to be the centre of Canadian work, and I trust that the government will see its way clear to move in this direction and to provide a suitable building for the High Commissioner in London which will possess the same accommodations as those of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk buildings, among which are large and spacious waiting rooms supplied with all the Canadian papers, and where there will be attendants, who will be ready and willing to direct Canadian visitors. Everything that can be done ought to be done to make the visit of Canadians to London as pleasant as possible, and the High Commissioner's building at the present time is utterly unsuited for this purpose. I believe that the time has come when Canadians ought to take a long step forward and place Canada in as good a position as any other part of the British Empire in London. I feel as a Canadian that we ought to occupy perhaps a little better position. I believe that the government would be justified in spending $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 if necessary to provide a suitable building that would be a landmark in London, so that all Canadians who go there will have no difficulty in finding out where the Canadian building is, that it may be so constructed that people will all recognize it as the Canadian building and that any Canadian going there will have no difficulty in finding the home of the High Commissioner. I have no intention of taking up any more of the time of the House but I just wish to move this resolution.

Mr. BORDEN. Before the motion passes I would like to say that I have listened with a great deal of attention to the matter which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) has brought to the attention of the House and I desire to add also that it is a question thoroughly deserving of consideration. The proposal of the government of the Commonwealth of Australia to erect a very handsome building in the Strand, I think, was brought to my attention in a casual way some time ago. I have not any very detailed information as to the character of the building to be erected nor in regard to the other details of the proposal. It seems apparent, however, that the building which Australia intends to erect is to be a very fine structure indeed, a building in which all the work of the Australian Commonwealth in London will be transacted and in which all the officers of the Commonwealth who are appointed for the purpose of discharging duties of one kind or another in connection with the affairs of the Commonwealth in the mother country will be gathered.

It is perfectly true that the accommodation provided at present for the High Commissioner is perhaps not thoroughly suitable; it is equally true that the officers of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior in London are housed some distance away, and one can readily see that there might be considerable advantage in following the example of the Commonwealth of Australia and entering upon the project of erecting in the city of London a building that would be worthy of the very high place Canada occupies in the British Empire. Two of the great railway corporations, the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, have erected very fine structures in or near Trafalgar Square, and these buildings are obviously of advantage, not only to these corporations themselves but to the whole Dominion, in that they bring to the attention of all who visit London, the importance of this country, by reason of the great undertakings these companies represent. Apart from the advantage of the convenience, there would be other advantages from having a great building erected in some suitable place in which all the officials of the Dominion might be suitably accommodated, and in which they could carry on their work more effectively than has, perhaps, been possible up to the present. The matter has not yet come before the government in a definite form, and before any proposal could be submitted to the House it would be necessary to obtain a great deal more information and to give the subject very careful attention. I express my thanks to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) who has brought this matter to our attention, who has placed before us a good deal of information as to the proposals of the Australian government, and who has very truly pointed out to us the advantage which would accrue from the course he has suggested. There is no objection to the motion passing and the matter will receive the consideration of the government. If any hon. gentleman has any views to express in regard to the desirability of entering upon such a project I hope he will let us hear them.

Motion agreed to.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of the report of the Board of Engineers appointed for the reconstruction of the Quebec bridge, and of the plans prepared by them; of all notices calling for tenders; of all tenders received; of the report of the board on the same; collectively or individually, to the Minister of Railways; of the report of the said minister for the acceptance of tenders, and any orders in council awarding contracts for the building of the said bridge.

He said: In the latter part of December last a press despatch appeared in most of the Canadian newspapers, which read:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's late government came in for sharp criticism at the annual meeting of the Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Company, which was the only British concern to tender for the construction of the railway and road-bridge over the St. Lawrence. After the receipt of the tenders the managing director stated divisions among the commissioners arose, resulting in the resignation of the chairman. The Canadian government accepted a tender of about £1,800,000 from a Canadian competitor for a railway bridge only, which did not conform with the conditions of the specifications. The action of the Laurier government was an outrage, as had the other competitors taken liberties with the specifications the £1,800,000 bridge would not have been the cheapest.

It would be premature to offer any observations upon this despatch. It was copied in all the newspapers, and comments were made on it in some of them, reflecting rather severely upon the government, the suggestion being made that a wrong had been committed against one of the tenderers. The only way in which this matter can be ventilated is by bringing down all the correspondence and papers. This is the object of the motion and I would ask the minister to expedite the return as much as possible.

Mr. MONK. Would my right hon. friend add the word 'specifications' after the word 'plans.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. The reason I ask for this is that I have been informed that the specifications mentioned a fixed price of nine cents per pound for the steel that was to enter into the construction of the bridge and all the tenders were supposed to conform to that price, whereas, the party who received the contract got it at a price about two cents per pound higher which of course would make a great deal of difference. I do not know if that is true, but if true, it would to a certain extent justify the complaint made by the other tenderers that they had not been afforded an opportunity of tendering at a higher price than the price of the steel mentioned in the specifications.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would be happy to have the word 'specifications' added, I want all the papers to be brought down so that we may have a true understanding of the matter and see where the wrong, if any, is. I would be sorry to prejudge the matter now.

Mr. BORDEN. There is no reason why the motion should not be passed. The despatch to which my right hon. friend has called attention came under my notice at the time, but I have no observations to offer with regard to it, because I have not had an opportunity of investigating the matter. I agree with my right hon. friend that any comments had better be deferred until we have all the papers before us.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ST. JOHN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PUGSLEY moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Department of Railways and Canals, or any official thereof, and the St. John Railway Company, or the municipality of the city and county of St. John, on the subject of the granting of permission to the St. John Railway Company to lay its rails across the track of the Intercolonial railway at or near the Haymarket Square in the city of St. John, N.B.

He said: For about a year, and perhaps longer, there has been a controversy between the St. John Street Railway Company and the Department of Railways and Canals, with regard to granting permission to the street railway to cross the track of the Intercolonial which runs from the main line round the western side of Courtenay bay to what is known as the Ballast Wharf, which is the deep water terminus of the Intercolonial. I have seen statements in the St. John newspapers in which the manager of the Street Railway Company complained of the request of his company not having been granted. He makes the statement that the department has insisted, as a condition of granting permission to cross the track of the Intercolonial railway, that the Street Railway Company shall undertake to provide, at its own expense, a block signal system, and also bear the expense of protecting the crossing, not only in respect of the present railway, but of all tracks which the Intercolonial railway may construct across that street in the future. I have also seen the statement that the department insist that the company shall become responsible for any accidents at the crossing.

Mr. HAZEN. When was the application made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Upwards of a year ago. The reason I make these remarks is because the matter is one in which the people of St. John, particularly that portion of the city which may be regarded as the suburban portion, and also people living on the eastern side of Courtenay bay, take a deep interest. The crossing is a level one. The people feel keenly the necessity of having the street railway extended out to that portion of the county.

Mr. BORDEN. Is it a question as to the sufficiency of protection?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but as to the burden to be imposed on the Street Railway Company. If the statement made by the manager of the street railway is correct, I really do think that the Railway Department is too exacting. It ought to be borne in mind that the Intercolonial railway has paid nothing to the municipality for the right to cross the streets, and in these days the operation of an electric railway and to use the streets in settled portions of the community is a very proper one. Therefore, when the electric railway company applies for permission to cross the track of the Intercolonial railway, that permission ought to be granted on very reasonable terms. I know that when some years ago the electric company proposed to cross the Intercolonial railway at Mill street, there was no difficulty at all in getting the permission. The manager went to Moncton, and in the course of a very few days permission was granted. There must be some unusual difficulty thrown in the way of this crossing. I do not at all blame the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane), because I presume the matter heretofore has been treated purely as a departmental one, and has been pending about a year. I would ask the hon. minister to look into the matter personally, in view of the urgency of the case, and its importance to the people concerned. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), knows the situation very well, and I am sure will do everything possible to remove the difficulty which for a year or more has existed between the Street Railway Company and the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. HAZEN. I think it is somewhat premature to discuss this matter until we have the facts before us. I do not know the facts beyond what has been stated by my hon. friend; but it seems singularly strange that the Street Railway Company, if it was really in earnest and desirous of meeting the wishes of the citizens of St. John, should have allowed a year to elapse without getting this matter settled in some way or other. I cannot believe that the officials of the department in the past or present, would be so unreasonable as to place in the way insurmountable difficulties. I have seen statements in the press giving as the reason why this extension was not made that the county councillors of the parish of Simonds were not disposed to give the street railway the permission it required, unless the company would agree to terms which it was impossible for them to accept.

I would be sorry to see anything thrown in the way of the Street Railway Company extending its lines, because the universal opinion in the city of St. John is that it has not been progressive, as have street railway companies in other communities, in the way of giving the people an opportunity to go out to the suburbs in the summer, and in the winter as well, which would have been given if the management of the street railway were progressive and had the interests of the community at heart. I therefore sincerely hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals will take this matter up with the view of having an arrangement made, which, while fair to the department and in the public interest will also be fair to the street railway company, and that this matter may be expedited while the street railway company is in the mind to extend its line out by the Marsh road to the parish of Simonds, which is very much desired by the citizens of St. John. It would seem to me, my attention having now for the first time been called to the papers, that all that the Railway Department should in principle demand all conditions similar to those which the Railway Commission of Canada would impose if the street railway wanted to cross the track of the Canadian Pacific railway, or any other railway, subject to the control of the commission. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Railways will do what he can to see that this work is expedited and that reasonable terms are imposed on the street railway company.

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens). Will the hon. minister kindly state what extensions he thinks the street railway company should make?

Mr. HAZEN. I am very glad to tell my hon. friend what I think. I think they should extend the line in the first place to Milledgeville, which is a great resort for our people. It is the headquarters of the Kennebecasis Yacht Club, and many people go there in order to cross to Bayswater and other points on the other side of the river. I also think it should extend its line out by the Marsh road to the parish of Simonds and Little River. I think, further, that it should ultimately have an extension to the town of Rothesay, so that the people may have means of reaching that popular summer resort.

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens). I have no doubt that the hon. minister has no intention unfairly to reflect on the management of the company to which he has referred. We all agree that the extension to Milledgeville should be made; but the hon. minister knows that the men who control the entire block of land there have refused to sell it. A few years ago a prominent man from Montreal went there for the purpose of acquiring that property, so that a town plot could be laid out, with streets and sewerage and everything else which would be necessary to people getting lots and building on them. The hon. gentleman knows that it would be practically impossible to extend the line to a point where all the land is owned by one concern, and where no one could purchase a lot.

Mr. HAZEN. Has not the railway company, by its charter, the absolute right to run through Milledgeville, just as it has through the streets of the city, without acquiring lots from anybody?

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens). My hon. friend knows as a practical man that to make the extension to Milledgeville simply to carry people out on a few fine afternoons, is not a project that would commend itself to any practical railway man. You must have permanent residents at the place to which the extension is made in order to make it financially successful. If there were a town laid out where people could get lots, so that there would be some prospect of the extension being profitable, I am quite sure that it would be promptly made. My hon. friend also suggested an extension to Rothesay. He knows how impracticable that would be, as it would for the whole distance run parallel to the Intercolonial railway, which gives train accommodation every two hours, selling season tickets for $10, and what are called pupil tickets to anyone who wishes to take lessons of any kind. With the small number of summer residents there, he knows as a practical man how impossible it would be to extend the system to that point and make it pay, with the Intercolonial railway competing. With regard to the extension proposed, I think the late government are to blame for not giving the permission. I think onerous terms were imposed on the railway that should not have been imposed. The track which the street railway company desires to cross is a branch track which is only used as a switch in order to carry freight cars down to the ballast wharf. As the railway company got permission to go on these streets, it seems to me that it would be unfair to require it to provide a watchman there. There is no watchman at the present time. It seems to me that there ought to be some fair order made that could be met by the company.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is no objection to the papers with reference to this matter being brought down. I may state for the information of the House that the lease which was prepared and offered to this railway company was according to the terms laid down in an order in council passed on the 9th of July, 1911, so that the hon. gentleman who is moving for the papers must have had a hand in framing that order in council. The papers have only been put into my hands this morning. If the company wants to cross the tracks of the Intercolonial railway, I do not see that the Intercolonial railway should be put to any expense in the matter. I do not want to be onerous, and I will go into the question and try to work it out on its merits.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad my hon. friend has called attention to the order in council, but I may say that I never had the matter brought to my attention and did not know when the order in council was passed; but I did know that the Railway Department for the past year had adhered to the view that these conditions should be complied with.

Only a very short time ago, and since this government came into power, if the newspaper reports are correct, the secretary has written a letter to the manager of the Street Railway Company stating that he has been directed to say that the department adheres to the view which had been expressed by it some months ago. Therefore, I take it, the view of the department up to the present has been the same as for the past year. I think that ought not to make any difference. My hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) ought to look into the matter personally, because of the importance of it. And if he thinks the departmental action is not reasonable, I feel sure he will take steps to induce his officials to make reasonable terms with the Street Railway Company. I think there is just one respect in which the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) is in error. He says he does not see why the Intercolonial railway should bear any expense in connection with the matter. That might be true if the street railway company were asking permission to cross the right of way of the Intercolonial railway. But that is not the case; the street railway company is simply asking permission to occupy one of the public streets of the city with its tracks. The Intercolonial railway has not paid a cent to the municipality for the privilege of occupying the public streets. It seems to me that both ought to be regarded as in the same position, and the Intercolonial railway authorities ought not to say that all the expenses incident to the crossing should be borne by the street railway company.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman would not want us to do better than he himself recommended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It happens that I did not recommend it. The hon. minister ought to know, that this being a departmental matter, it would originate with the board of management, and not engage the attention of the government.

Mr. COCHRANE. There was the order in council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the provisions of the order in council are what I am informed they are, and what the manager of the street railway company says they are, I think it ought to be changed. And had the matter been brought to my notice, I would have urged my colleagues to make the change. Now that this is brought up, I hope the hon. gentleman will not simply throw himself back on the order in council passed on the recommendation of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). An order in council is not like the laws of the Medes and Persians; it may be changed. I should rather have expected that my hon. friend would take the opportunity to find fault with the late government, and would try to do better, and deal more liberally than his predecessor.

Mr. HAZEN. Would my hon. friend from Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean) tell what the cost to the Street Railway Company would be of doing what the order in council required, apart from any danger involved, and also if it is true that the order in council seeks to make the Street Railway Company liable for damages that may occur, because there have been accidents in that locality.

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens). I cannot speak definitely as to the amount. But I have been informed that it is very large. There would be the expense of a watchman, and the cost of a diamond crossing there would be considerable. And the liability for accidents occurring there whether through the negligence of the railway——

Mr. HAZEN. Did the order in council require that?

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens). Yes, all accidents that might occur at that point. My hon. friend will see that the expense is heavy. And he is a fair man, and I am sure will look at it in a fair way. And, as he is a fair man, I am certain that he makes the statement he does concerning the extension because he is wrongly informed. He knows—take, for example, the extension at Carleton—the street railway company are doing there what no other street railway company in Canada or on the continent is doing. That is, they maintain in Carleton a separate system, and a man can cross the ferry or cross the suspension bridge and take a transfer to ride in Carleton on the one 4 cent fare if he buys twenty-five tickets. So,it will be seen that the street railway company have, as far as possible, performed their obligations to the public and this proposed obligation should not be imposed upon them. Further, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hazen) knows that when this company was taken over it was a bankrupt concern, that even the bonds did not pay ten cents on the dollar. He knows—for he has taken the trouble to look into the statements of the company—that the street railway part of the company practically has never paid anything to the shareholders but barely pays interest on the bonds that are an obligation on that part of the system. So, the street railway has not been a paying concern in the sense of paying dividends; and further it has met all its obligations to the public by making all the extensions possible.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before the House adjourns, may I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN. First, Bills and then Supply, taking up first Public Works or Customs, I am not sure which. There is one item remaining in the estimates of the Minister of Customs.

SNOW BLOCKADE ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he has any information concerning the train which left Halifax on Monday last, but which has not yet reached Montreal.

Mr. COCHRANE. I believe the line is clear to-day. I had a telegram this morning from Mr. Brady that the snowploughs were working, the lines were open, and the trains were moving rapidly.

House adjourned at 5.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 67) respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Mr. White (Renfrew).

Bill (No. 68) respecting Queen's College at Kingston, and to change its name to 'Queen's University at Kingston.'—Mr. Nickle.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Queen's Theological College.—Mr. Nickle.

Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin.—Mr. McKay.

Bill (No. 71) respecting a certain patent of the Spirella Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Blain.

Bill (No. 73) respecting the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Barnard.

THE USE OF FLAGS.

Mr. BRADBURY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 74) respecting the Use of Flags. He said: the object of this Bill is to prevent the defacement of the national flag. Every hon. member of this House must have noticed the use that is sometimes made of the Union Jack as an advertising medium. Travelling along our streets, we may sometimes see a large Union Jack with the name of some hotel or some other advertisement printed across the face of it. It is also frequently used at auction rooms or to advertise auction sales. The object of the Bill is to prevent the flag being defaced in these ways.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am a little surprised that my hon. friend does not go further with his Bill. I think it must be within his knowledge that the Union Jack has been put to baser uses than those to which he refers. I think there should be a provision in his Bill against the defilement of the flag in political contests.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. During recent years, particularly in the last election, there were published in the city of Montreal, and distributed all over Canada, copies of special newspapers, on which was printed the Union Jack and beside it the Stars and Stripes, and under both were the words, 'Under which flag?'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friends seem to gloat over the idea that the flag should be put to such base uses. It seems to me that there is no political party in Canada which has a monopoly of the Union Jack, and if there is any political party in Canada which attempts to assume exclusive control over the flag they should be penalized by law, and there should be provision in the Bill introduced by my hon. friend forbidding any man or any party or any coterie of men defiling the flag in that way or trampling it in the dust. I know that in the past it has been sometimes said in certain sections of the country that in order to breathe the air of liberty people were compelled to bore holes through that flag. That day is now happily past, and we should have one flag for all parties, and those who would attempt to usurp its use exclusively should be placed under the ban of the law and made to suffer penalties which I do not at this moment attempt even to characterize.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have noticed that in September last—

Mr. SPEAKER. At this stage of the proceedings it seems to me hardly proper to carry on a debate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a motion, Mr. Speaker, before the Chair, and on that motion I presume I can speak. I noticed in a newspaper published in September last that a gentleman in the employ of the government made use of an expression somewhat in harmony with the patriotic remarks of my hon. friend who has sought to introduce this Bill, in the course of which he said:

I appeal to every loyal citizen of the empire to resent this insult to our flag, to our honour and to our children.

And yet, Sir, for having used this expression and expressions like it, that gentleman has been dismissed from office by this governement.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

THE LABOUR GAZETTE.

*Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Has the government made any dismissals of any correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette'? If so, how many have been dismissed, what are their names and where are their residences, respectively?
2. Does the government intend to replace them?
3. Does the government intend to suppress the names and residences of the 'Labour Gazette' correspondents in future?

Mr. CROTHERS. When I was placed in charge of the Labour Department I asked my deputy to make a report on all the servants in that department, stating the age, the date of appointment, the salary, the character of the work assigned, and the manner of the performance of it. No change has been made in the department since. I also asked the officer who is in charge of the publication of the 'Labour Gazette' for a like report respecting the correspondents of that publication. He made a report, reporting that a few correspondents were incompetent and a few others inattentive and careless, and I gave instructions to have all those who were reported as incompetent and inattentive to duty notified that their services would not be required after the 1st day of January. There was no reference whatever to their politics. I did not know as a matter of fact the politics of any one of them. Of course, I suspected that, having been appointed by the late government they were all Liberals, but that question did not enter into the matter at all. Now, I prefer not to publish the names of those gentlemen. I would be perfectly willing to show them to my hon. friend in private, or if he takes the responsibility of insisting on it, I suppose he has the right to have them published.

Mr. VERVILLE. I put the question on the Order Paper because it has been rumoured in the newspapers that from now on the names of the correspondents are not to appear in the 'Gazette.' When the hon. minister states that all the men who were dismissed were incompetent, I am sure that he has been misinformed by his department.

Mr. CROTHERS. My hon. friend is mistaken. I did not say they were all dismissed for incompetence. I said that the officer reported that some of them were incompetent and some of them were inattentive to duty, and those notified that their services would not be required after the 1st of January belonged to one or other of these classes.

Mr. VERVILLE. I know of one dismissed who is in neither class.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not permissible to raise a discussion on a question.

Mr. VERVILLE. The hon. minister has raised the question, and I would like to answer him.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question should be simply asked, and it is for the minister to give the answer he sees fit.

Mr. VERVILLE. I shall bring the matter before the House when we go into Supply.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY STATION AT TRURO.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

1. Were tenders asked for the construction of an Intercolonial station at Truro, N.S.? If so, who was the lowest tenderer and what was the amount of the same?
2. Has a formal contract yet been entered into with the lowest tenderer?
3. When will construction be commenced?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. (a) Yes. (b) Frank B. Wilson. (c) $132,770 bulk sum, and schedule prices, for four items (if required) viz.; excavation and back fill, trenches and catch basins. Concrete including forms, setts. Supplying and laying 12 inch vitrified clay pipe. Cast iron covers and frames of catch basins—amounting to $2,380, upon estimated quantities.
2. No.
3. Not known.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY. CONDUCTORS.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) :

1. Is it the policy of the Department of Railways to promote Intercolonial Pullman car porters to the position of Pullman car conductors?
2. Did the Prime Minister of Canada, in the year 1908, or in any other year at Halifax or elsewhere, declare it as the policy of the Conservative party to promote Pullman car porters to the rank of Pullman car conductors?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No.
2. The department is not aware.

ANNUITY BRANCH LECTURERS.

Mr. TURGEON:

1. When the honourable Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in this House on the 1st day of December, 1911, that 'in some cases some agents of the Government Annuities Branch had charged to the department lectures which had never been delivered,' did he have in mind Mr. Theophile J. B. Lisgar, of Northern New Brunswick?
2. Did the said Theophile J. B. Lisgar give good satisfaction in his accounts with the government?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). The name of Mr. Theophile J. B. Lisgar of New Brunswick was not in my mind when I made the statement I did in the House. With reference to the second question, so far as I have examined the case, the information given by my department is that the name given here as Lisgar should be Leger, and that Mr. Leger performed his services satisfactorily.

FERDINAND THERRIEN.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Have any charges been made against Ferdinand Therrien, Inland Revenue officer at Nicolet, Quebec?
2. If so, what is the nature of said charges?
3. Has any investigation been ordered by the Minister of Inland Revenue?

Mr. NANTEL:

1. Yes.
2. Offensive political partisanship.
3. Not yet. The advisability of so doing is under consideration.

MR. HECTOR CHAUVIN.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has Mr. Hector Chauvin, K.C., been appointed to investigate charges of political partianship against certain officials?
2. In which department is the investigation taking place?
3. Who recommended Mr. Hector Chauvin to act as commissioner?
4. What is his remuneration, and is he to be paid by fees or by a monthly salary?
5. Is Mr. Hector Chauvin, the defeated Nationalist candidate in Labelle county at the general elections of 1908?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2. Department of Public Works.
3. By the head of the department.
4. $15 for each day's service when employed.
5. No record in department.

MICHEL CAMPEAU.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Has the Department of Public Works dismissed Michel Campeau as caretaker of the post office at St. Louis du Mile End?
2. If so, by whom was his dismissal requested?
3. By whom has he been replaced?
4. What were the reason or reasons that suggested the said dismissal?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2. By Mr. Villeneuve and others.
3. Honoré Paquette.
4. Political activity and other reasons.

INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act by providing that when a person is a member of either House for more than thirty days during any session, though a member for part only of such session, he shall not be subject to any deduction from his sessional allowance for any day on which the House did not sit before he was elected or appointed, or after he ceased to be a member, as the case may be.

Motion agreed to.

THE INQUIRIES ACT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 19) to amend the Inquiries Act.

Mr. DOHERTY. Before the committee rose, there were before it two amendments to this Bill. One, moved by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), was to add a section providing that any person whose conduct is being investigated before the commission shall have the right to be represented by counsel. The second proposed that all the words after the word 'inquiry' in the 11th line be struck out.

With regard to the first amendment, I promised to take it into consideration, and see to what extent we could meet the views set forth—views in which, so far as they sought to provide that anybody against whom any charge was made, should be represented by counsel, we fully concurred. I desire to say to my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), that I would be willing to accept his suggestion modified as follows:

That the Bill be amended by adding thereto the following section: The commissioners may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this Act, and shall allow any one against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

This differs from the amendment proposed by my hon. friend to this extent. It gives the absolute right to any one against whom any charge is made in the course of the investigation to be represented by counsel, and gives discretion to the commissioners to authorize any one whose conduct is being investigated to employ counsel.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That change in the amendment meets my view.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). The hon. gentleman would withdraw his amendment and substitute this one.

Mr. DOHERTY. With regard to the other amendment proposed, I said the other evening that after consideration I did not see my way, nor did the government, to accept the amendment That amendment would do away in toto with the power of the commissioners who may be named to depute any of their powers to any person. That we were not prepared to accept. I now propose an amendment to section 1 of the Bill which goes a certain distance towards meeting the suggestion. I beg to move that the Bill be amended by inserting in line 14 thereof, after the word 'persons' and before the word 'to' the words 'when authorized by order in council' and by inserting in line 24 thereof, after the word 'to' and before the word 'issue' the words 'take evidence'. The effect of the proposed amendment would be to make the last portion of the section which deals with power to authorize and depute read as follows:

And the commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountant, engineer, technical officer or other expert or any qualified person, when authorized by the order in council, to take evidence and inquire into and report to the commissioners upon any matter within the scope of the commission, as may be directed by the commission, and such persons shall, in the execution of the power so deputed and authorized, have the same powers which the commissioners have to take evidence, issue subpœnas, enforce attendance of witnesses, compel them to give evidence and otherwise conduct an inquiry.

The effect of the two amendments is that there shall be no deputation or delegation of power to take evidence and consequently of power to subpœna witnesses and compel answers except when such delegation of powers is authorized by order in council. This amendment, I think, meets the objection, so far as it is a serious objection, to the delegation of this power of examination of witnesses with its consequent power of compelling attendance, etc. By this the Governor in Council is made directly responsible for every instance in which the power is deputed to any person to carry on an inquiry of this kind.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does this empower the commissioners to make the appointments or must that be done by the government?

Mr. DOHERTY. The power to name accountants and experts would remain in the hands of the commissioner, but if they are to be authorized to carry on an inquiry involving the examination of witnesses, etc., it would be necessary that that delegation should be authorized by the Governor in Council, and, of course, one of the matters that the Governor in Council would have to consider in such a case would be whether the person named was a proper person to whom to depute these powers. There could be no delegation of the power to summon and examine witnesses and compel their answers except with the direct approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then why not name the party to be appointed in this way by the order itself?

Mr. DOHERTY. What difference would it make? The commissioners may name the accountants and experts to assist them, and this power of authorizing the conduct of inquiries includes the power of authorizing these accountants or these experts.

So far, therefore, as they are concerned, when it is a matter of delegation of powers to them in the particular manner with which we are now concerned, they will have to go to the Governor in Council for his approval before getting these additional powers. Now, with regard to the cases where it was a matter of authorizing other qualified persons to carry on this investigation in this manner, it seems to me it is immaterial whether the commissioners are authorized to name those qualified persons, and so authorizing them with the approval of the Governor in Council, or whether the Governor in Council may name such persons. It puts the accountants, experts and other qualified persons, so far as the original nomination is concerned, all on the same footing, and all of them are made subject to the approval of the Governor in Council before they get any power to carry on an investigation by means of the examination of witnesses, which involves the powers with which we are concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I grant to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that this is an improvement upon the Bill. Yet he will not be surprised if I say that so far as I am concerned, it does not satisfy me. The Bill as it is can be improved, as even at present it can be made to harass a subject of His Majesty in more ways than one. The Bill as amended may work in this way: Messrs Morine, Lake and Ducharme who have been named commissioners to investigate the public service, have been granted very large powers. They may to-day appoint an accountant, but as the Bill was originally presented, this accountant would have had power to go anywhere in the country and hold an investigation. The following day they might appoint an engineer, and that engineer also would have had power to go into any part of the country and hold an investigation and hear witnesses. The third day they might appoint a technical adviser, if thought advisable, who would have been given the same powers; the fourth day they might appoint another expert, who would have the same power. But in the amendment of my hon. friend there is some restriction put upon the power of the commissioners. If Messrs Morine, Lake and Ducharme appoint an accountant to hold an investigation, and the next day an engineer, and the third day a technical adviser, and the fourth day a technical expert, these men will not have power to hold an investigation, they can only give advice to the commissioners; they have no power to hold an investigation unless those powers so delegated to them by the commissioners are approved by the Governor in Council. That is the extent of the amendment of my hon. friend So far, it is a valuable improvement, I admit, upon the original Bill. But this amendment does not do away with an objection which was made from this side of the House, that this commission would have the power to institute any number of roving commissioners all over the country. This point was made by my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), and I have heard no argument against it. I accept the amendment, I think it is an improvement on the Bill, but I do not think it goes as far as it should.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have had no clear and distinct information given to the House of the objects to be accomplished by this legislation; but I think we may fairly assume, in view of what we have observed is being done throughout the country to-day, and particularly in the city of Ottawa, that this Bill is brought in to accomplish a political party purpose, and that possibly the commission itself and subcommissions may be entrusted with the power of going on voyages of discovery to accomplish similar purposes. Now, the gentlemen who have been named as commissioners are seen every day here in the corridors of the House; they are frequently to be seen in the adjoining room No. 16, and I think we might naturally suspect that they are at least partisan in their political views. I do not say that they will not do justice in the accomplishment of their duties, because they are men of high position, one of whom has been a respected member of this House. But they are all strong partisans, that is recognized and admitted. I will assume however that they will have a sense of the responsibility attaching to the position to which they have been appointed, and that their partisanship will be somewhat curbed and restrained. But in the execution of the powers which have been delegated to them, there is a greater danger and a greater menace, because they still retain the power of harassing individuals and officials of the government throughout the country. Now, I think the objects of government are well known. I think the people of this country want good government, wise government, but they also want fair government. They do not want any party entrusted with the powers of government to exercise a jug-handled control over public officials, or other men engaged in the administration of public affairs. It, therefore, seems to me that there should be no legislation that would give cause for suspicion that the government of the day is not disposed to treat fairly officials who occupy positions in the departments. We must recognize a number of things; we must recognize that men have been appointed to positions in the service, both because of their fitness, and because of the fact that their friends were in a position to entrust them with these official positions. But we must assume that once they are appointed, they will do justice, that they will discharge the duties assigned to them properly, even though they were appointed by their political friends. Now, it is not fair to harass these men, to give a commission power to go on voyages of discovery from ocean to ocean. If there are in the service any officials who have not properly performed their duties, some one must have a knowledge of such maladministration, or wrong doing, or any cases of negligence sufficient to warrant accusations being made.

With these accusations before the government, or in the possession of any department of the government, there might, fairly and justifiably, be men authorized by the government who would take the responsibility of inquiring into such charges. Then, the men accused will have an opportunity of answering, if they can answer. If they cannot they certainly must take the consequences and they must take them without the sympathy of their friends. But, to entrust to gentlemen who, presumably are being appointed because of their friendship to the government, and it may be because the government think they have other qualifications, the powers of delegating the authority which they have so indiscriminately, is going a step beyond anything that has characterized the administration of affairs in Canada up to this moment. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice veils, it is true, the horrid character of this proposition in a measure, by his amendment which shrouds it and does not give it such an ugly look, but there is under the shroud and veil the power to do wrong, the menace against men who have at least the right to be recognized as not being guilty until their guilt is proved. It strikes me that the amendment of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should have been recognized by the government and accepted because if it be true, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice says, that there is no such object in view, that simply all these possibilities of action are conjurings of hon. members of this side of the House and unjust conjurings, there can be no objection on his part to accepting the amendment of my right hon. friend. Further, as I stated, the amendment of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice in a way, takes off the ugly look, sugars the proposition, but I fear that within the velvet glove there is still the hand of steel, and that there is in this proposition, if the government desire to utilize it in that way, the opportunity to do a grave injustice to men of integrity, men whose only offence is that they hold public positions, to do an injustice to them that, I am sure the people do not want to have done, and I therefore, as one member of this House, would protest against the legislation that is now being enacted.

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Chairman, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who object so strongly to the proposed amendment forget that similar legislation has been upon the statute-books for twenty-five years. If they will look at the second part of the Inquiries Act giving power to the head of a department to appoint a commissioner to investigate the conditions in his own department, they will see that similar power is given to such a commissioner to delegate his functions to what you might call a sub-commissioner. You will find that in section 9 of the Inquiries Act.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That is all well known; it has all been discussed.

Mr. CROTHERS. Well, I will read it to you so that you will know it a little better perhaps, because what I am about to read applies to the second part of the Inquiries Act and not to the first. Section 9 provides that where a commissioner is appointed by the head of a department,

> If the commissioner or commissioners, deem it advisable, he or they may issue a commission, or other authority to any officer or person therein named empowering him to take such evidence and report the same to him or them.
> Such officer or person shall, before entering on any investigation, be sworn before a justice of the peace faithfully to execute the duty entrusted to him by such commission and shall with regard to such evidence have the same powers as the commissioner or commissioners would have had if such evidence had been taken before him or them, and may, in like manner, under his hand issue a subpœna or other request or summons for the purpose of compelling the attendance of any person, or the production of any document, book or paper.

So that the commissioner appointed by the head of a department under the second part of the Inquiries Act has, by the section I have just read, power to depute his authority to an officer or any other person whenever he deems it advisable and that officer or person so appointed by the commissioner has the right to subpœna witnesses and take their evidence just as the commissioner himself might do.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It is restricted though.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is proposed to restrict this. This is no new principle. It is acted upon in the courts every day. The judge desires a line run between lots 1 and 2, not being satisfied with the evidence which has been adduced before him. He calls upon a provincial land surveyor to run the line and the very first thing that that surveyor does is to subpœna two, three, four or five witnesses and examine them under oath as to the land-mark or as to where the corner-post is. He goes back to the court and gives evidence of what he knows based upon the evidence he has taken as to the starting point, the landmark or the corner-post. That is done every day in the courts. Every day in the courts important questions are being referred to laymen who are not trained lawyers and they are authorized to subpœna witnesses, to examine them under oath and to report to the judge. We have had in our department 120 boards of investigation. In a great many of these cases there have been no lawyers, laymen have been appointed, they have subpœnaed witnesses examined them under oath, reported and made their awards.

Mr. EMMERSON. But that is the case of an arbitration.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is the case of an arbitration but the principle is the same.

Mr. EMMERSON. The arbitrators being chosen by agreement between the parties.

Mr. CROTHERS. Not all of them. I am simply referring to this aspect of it to meet the objection raised by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that these men may not be trained lawyers. I am satisfied that this government for many years has yearly been wasting millions.

An hon. MEMBER. Not this government.

Mr. CROTHERS. I mean the late government. Of course, the new government has not had time. I am satisfied that many millions have been wasted year after year by the late government. An honest effort is being made by the new government to have the departments reorganized, to see where these millions have been squandered and to save to the people of this country the many millions—I do not hesitate to say many millions—that have annually been squandered. When an honest effort is being made to constitute a commission and give that commission power absolutely necessary to discharge the duties for which it is appointed we find our friends on the other side of the House, from the right hon. leader down, objecting to the very principle that has been on the statute-book for the last twenty years and during the time while they were in power.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to make out that this provision may lead to mistakes being committed and to wrong being done, but so long as human nature is what it is so long will there be mistakes. Mistakes are made in courts of justice; the late government made mistakes in appointing judges; judges make mistakes and juries make mistakes; I believe innocent men have been hanged; mistakes have been made in electing some gentlemen to this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We see that on the other side.

Mr. CROTHERS. I was looking at the opposition benches when I made that assertion. But, because courts of law and juries make mistakes no one proposes to abolish courts and trial by jury. It is possible that the committee we have appointed will make mistakes, because to say they will not would be to say they are not human, and so we can only do the best we can. The measure would be shorn of its object were these commissioners not authorized to depute their power to examine witnesses. There may be men a thousand miles from here who may have evidence to give about a certain matter, and would you propose to bring them here?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The present law gives them power to send a commissioner to take the evidence.

Mr. CROTHERS. It does under part 2 which is confined to departmental investigation, but it is necessary to amend the Act so as to make that same power applicable to part 1. This is a proper provision and I have no apprehension there will be any abuse under it. We may safely assume that the men who have been appointed and the men who will be appointed, will be possessed of commonsense and will see that British fair-play is done, and no man's rights sacrificed.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The Minister of Labour has said that judges and juries have made mistakes and he assumed in his remarks that the government intended to appoint something in the nature of a judicial tribunal to carry on these investigations, but the Minister of Labour knows well that the commission which has been appointed is not a judicial committee in any sense of the word, but a highly partisan tribunal. It is idle for him to argue that that commission is going to be as impartial as a judicial body or a jury would be. I believe it is the duty of this parliament to safeguard the rights of individuals when they are to be investigated by a board of highly partisan officials. I would point out to the Minister of Labour that there is reason for this power being applicable to part 2 and not to part 1 of the section. It is a very different thing between a minister in his own department appointing a commissioner and giving him power to appoint a subcommissioner, and conferring that power on a roving commissioner such as is contemplated under the present Bill. This is nothing short of a roving commission of inquiry to be carried on by a biased partisan board, and it seems to be the determination of the government to carry this measure in the drastic form in which it has been suggested. I would, however, ask the Minister of Justice if he has considered the propriety of striking out the words 'or any qualified person.' The Bill says that the commissioners may authorize and depute any 'such accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts, or any qualified persons.' I would suggest that these last four words be stricken out. There may be a difference of opinion as to who is a qualified person to take evidence and carry on the investigation and the expression is too broad.

Mr. CROTHERS. I direct attention to the fact that the word 'person' in section 9 of the existing law is not even qualified by the word 'qualified.' It says that this power shall be given to 'any' person and we propose to have a qualified person.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am dealing with the section before the House. It enumerates different classes of persons and then if you add the words 'or any qualified person' it of course gives it greater breadth than is at all necessary.

Mr. DOHERTY. If I have correctly grasped the suggestion, it is that we should limit the choice of the commissioners to experts and that we should prevent the commissioners authorizing any other qualified persons to carry on an inquiry. I am surprised at this suggestion in view of the fact that the other evening hon. gentlemen opposite strenuously urged that we were doing exceedingly wrong in giving this power to examine witnesses to experts who might not know anything about the rules of evidence and could not consequently determine how the examination should be carried on. But they now ask us to limit the appointment to experts, such as accountants or other persons with technical qualifications. That would be tying down the commissioners to one special class even in matters which are purely questions of fact, involving no necessary technical or expert knowledge. I do not think that would be any improvement. The objection the other evening was that unqualified persons might be appointed, but, under the amendment I suggest, only those will be appointed who, in the judgment of he Governor in Council, are qualified to carry on these investigations. In view of the fact that the legislation we are seeking to amend gives the Governor in Council the authority to name the commissioners, we should not object to give them the authority to appoint these subcommissioners. What I desire is to have a fair investigation, and I do not see how we can go further than we have gone.

Mr. GUTHRIE.

My hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) spoke of this Bill as an instrument to harass people. Well, every measure devised to find out whether any one has done wrong will no doubt be looked upon by the wrong-doer, or the person suspected, as a measure intended to harass. But any one who has not done wrong will not consider himself at all aggrieved because the people who employ him inquire into the administration of his office. When the director of a company says to his manager: I intend having an audit of the books and management, does any one suppose the manager could regard this as an attempt to harass him? And we have provided that if, in the course of the inquiry any charge develops against anyone, he shall have counsel. Unless we are going to throw up our hands and say we have no right to investigate our public business because such investigation may prove disagreeable to somebody, I do not see how we can be fairly accused of seeking to harass any one. Nor do I see that there is any great hardship if the commissioners select others to do certain part of the work which, under the Act, they can do themselves. I am quite prepared to accept any amendment that will provide that any investigation involving an imputation against anybody shall be carried on with the direct approval, and under the direct authority of the Governor in Council, but further than that I do not see that it is possible to go unless we are prepared to abandon the Bill, the object of which is to obtain a prompt and effective investigation.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If the minister's statement means anything it means that he desires to retain the words 'or any qualified persons,' because such language would enable the government by order in council to appoint people qualified to take evidence or to perform such services as may be necessary in the conduct of such an inquiry. If that be his object, his Act is not well drafted. There is no necessity for the words, 'accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts.' They should come out and the only words that should remain are 'any qualified persons.' If the Act were passed as it is printed, the ordinary rule of 'ejusdem generis' would apply, and the only persons who could be appointed would be persons of the same general class as accountants, experts and technical officers. You could not appoint a man to take evidence who was not possessed of technical knowledge. Therefore, I would suggest that the words 'accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts,' be struck out, leaving the words 'any qualified persons.' Any court officer of any Superior Court in any province would satisfy me.

Mr. BORDEN. A good deal has been said in the course of the debate about the commission that has been issued, and I would like to say that there is nothing on the face of the commission nor in anything that has taken place in connection with it to justify the statement that it has been issued for the purpose of harassing any one. The commission was founded very largely on the terms of the one issued some years ago by the late government. It was desired to continue that inquiry, which certainly was not complete, and possibly to extend it in some respects. It is not for the purpose of making charges against anyone or investigating the conduct of anyone, except in so far as that conduct may come into question incidentally in the course of the work of the commission. The objections which have been made seem to me to have been met very fairly by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. It is already contemplated by the statute, as the right hon. leader of the opposition himself admitted, that accountants and experts should be appointed to assist the commissioners in their work; so that the Bill is only making more certain what he has declared to be already within the purview of the Statute. Then, so far as the appointment of persons to take evidence is concerned, this is spoken of as a roving commission. It is quite possible, I suppose, that the same result could be attained by issuing 14 or 15 departmental commissions to inquire into every department of the government. Would that be a wise course? I think it would be much more in the public interest that one general commission should be issued, with power to inquire into any department of the government, and the conditions which prevail generally in the public service. Objection was taken on the ground that it is not desirable to give to any person deputed by the commissioners to make inquiry, the power to take evidence. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour, has already pointed out that if this were merely a departmental inquiry, there is already pretty wide power to send, not a qualified person, but any person, to take evidence with respect to any particular matter; so that if we had 12 or 15 departmental commissions, each one of them might send out some persons to make a particular inquiry without any qualification stated, because that is the statute at present. But in order to meet the objections taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, has proposed certain amendments, and I will suggest another which would go further to meet their views; because we have no desire to make this Bill anything but perfectly fair to all concerned while giving to the gentlemen who have been named on this commission power to do efficient work in the investigation which has been entrusted to them. My suggestion would be to strike out of the fourteenth line the words 'take evidence and,' and to insert in the seventeenth line after 'persons' the words 'when authorized by order in council,' and in the twenty-fourth line, after the word 'to,' the words 'take evidence'; so that the latter portion of the section will read as follows:

—and the commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts, or any qualified persons, to inquire into and report to the commissioners upon any matter within the scope of the commission as may be directed by the commissioners, and such persons, when authorized by order in council, shall, in the execution of the powers so deputed or authorized, have the same powers which the commissioners have to take evidence, issue subpœnas, enforce the attendance of witnesses, compel them to give evidence, and otherwise conduct the inquiry.

The matter would be brought back to the Governor in Council before any one of these men could undertake to make an inquiry upon oath and, after all, that is no more than we have at the present time. At the present time the Governor in Council could issue a commission in respect of every department of the government, and by such commission could authorize the persons named therein to conduct such an inquiry upon oath. It seems to me, therefore, that the Bill, when so amended, would simply be a convenient form of enabling a general commission to do in a comprehensive way what might be done by a dozen departmental commissions if the Governor in Council saw fit to appoint such commissions.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the right hon. gentleman state in what respect his amendment differs from the amendment proposed by the Minister of Justice?

Mr. BORDEN. In this instance the accountants have no power to take evidence or conduct an inquiry on oath unless specially authorized by order in council. They may proceed to make an inquiry, and report to the commission, but when they come to make an inquiry on oath, and that has been the chief objection raised to this Bill, they must first of all receive the authority of the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council could give that authority to them apart altogether from the commission.

Mr. MURPHY. In what respect does that differ from the amendment of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. BORDEN. The amendment of the Minister of Justice did not omit the words I have proposed to have stricken out, 'to take evidence,' in the 14th line.

Mr. GERMAN. It seems to me that an Act of this kind places the power in the hands of a gentleman appointed by the government, perhaps strongly biased by reason of his political proclivities, to enquire into a man's conduct and to report to the main commission without the person whose conduct is being enquired into having any knowledge of the fact whatever. The amendment suggested by the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden), has convinced me of what the intention of the Act is. I had thought of making inquiry whether the phrase 'to take evidence and inquire' would mean to inquire by taking evidence, or to take evidence, or to inquire without evidence. While I have no objection to the Bill in its general scope, I think it should be so worded that no man's conduct in his position as a public officer could be a subject of investigation or his position be placed in jeopardy without his having the right to a hearing. The Minister of Labour grew emphatic on the fact that courts and juries make mistakes. We all know that juries make mistakes, but the mistakes of courts and juries can be and are rectified by Courts of Appeal. Here there is no Court of Appeal; this commission is the final court. A man in British Columbia may be telegraphed to to inquire into the conduct of some officer in the service there, and he may conduct that inquiry in any way he sees fit. He may have a strong personal feeling of animosity against the person whose conduct is to be inquired into. He makes his inquiry to suit himself, he makes his report to the commission, and on that report the commission will act and perhaps dismiss this man from his position. There is no remedy in case an error occurs, and it should be made clear that no person's conduct should be inquired into without his being notified and given an opportunity to appear before the commissioners or the experts sent by the commissioners.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I take the observation from my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) without any qualification as intending to mean what he stated, that this Bill is simply intended to carry out the powers of investigation into the public affairs of the country. He has referred to the commission lately appointed which is intended to complete the work done by the commission appointed by the Liberal government some years ago. I might have something to say as to the character of the respective commissions, but I abstain from that to-day. I take the words of my right hon. friend literally. My hon. friend is aware that commissions of that kind, although the intention may not be to harass anybody, can harass persons. I have heard the complaint in this House and there may be a necessity of guarding the rights of the subject and making it impossible that any man's private affairs shall be unduly ventilated or his rights unduly harassed. The object of the amendment is to empower the commissioners to depute their power of conducting an investigation; that is, that the commissioners may call in experts to investigate technical matters. If the Bill were limited to that there could be no objection. My objection is that when the commissioners are empowered to employ experts the power should go no further; that is, that these experts should not have the power to investigate, but that the whole responsibility of the work should be assumed by the commissioners themselves. It is not according to the rules of evidence or the rules of fair-play that technical officers who have been brought in to give to the commission the advantage of their technical knowledge, should be empowered to do the duties of the commissioners themselves. Let the commissioners perform their own duty. Of course in the case of distant witnesses, there should be power to delegate the authority to hear evidence, but that is provided for under the existing law. I submit to the judgment and the fairness of my hon. friend that the power of investigation, with this exception, should not be deputed to anybody, but should be retained by the commissioners themselves.

Mr. BORDEN. It comes down to this in the last analysis, that if the commissioners who have been appointed should discover anything in a particular department which they think would require investigation by an expert, under the law as it is to-day, the Governor in Council could appoint an expert as a commissioner and send him to make an inquiry on oath into that particular matter. There is no doubt about that. All that we are doing now is to enable the commissioners to name a man who will make some inquiry into such a matter and if the commissioners think it is desirable that the person so employed should make an inquiry on oath, then instead of having a separate departmental commission, as we could have under the law at the present time, he will be appointed under this section.

Now, can any one say that there is any more probability of justice being done in the one case than in the other? The two cases are absolutely the same in the last analysis, except that I think this is a more convenient way of doing it than that which is afforded by the law to-day. The power of inquiry to-day is vested in the Governor in Council, if they see fit to exercise it in the way I have suggested; therefore we say that the person nominated or suggested by the commission to make an examination, who may perhaps have begun an examination, shall not have a right to examine any person on oath or conduct an inquiry upon oath, unless he receives the authority of the Governor in Council. Now what, after all, can be the harm? It is a matter of convenience, and it is only for that reason that I am pressing it upon the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. Instead of delegating any such powers to an expert who has discovered what he thinks to be wrong, and needs to be investigated, would it not be fairer to delegate such powers, if you are going to delegate them at all, to somebody other than the expert who has been sent to make the preliminary inquiry? We all know that detectives get a theory, and then they seek to get evidence to substantiate their theory. An expert sent out to some distant point, say to an office of the Public Works in Halifax, is sent there to examine, to make an inquisition in a way, and he reaches a certain conclusion in his mind; for ever after he is interested in sustaining the conclusion he has reached. If he is authorized to sit in judgment on the conduct of the official involved in that department, it seems to me that the official is not getting fair-play. Some one else should be empowered to hold an inquiry and take evidence, and that an official is entitled to receive a statement of the charges made against him, whether inferentially or directly; and he should be brought before some other tribunal than the one constituted by the appointment of an expert.

Mr. DOHERTY. The hon. gentleman misapprehends what these experts or others who may be authorized to conduct an inquiry, are going to do. They are not going to pass judgment, they are going to make an inquiry and report to the commission, and the commission is going to report to the Governor in Council.

Mr. EMMERSON. They will report their conclusions.

Mr. DOHERTY. They will report the evidence they take, and with that no doubt their view of it, leaving the evidence itself to the commissioners, who will at their discretion accept or reject the view of these sub-commissioners.

Mr. GERMAN. The Bill does not say they are to report the evidence, they are simply to report. They make an inquiry and take evidence, and they can make a report to suit themselves without reporting any evidence at all.

Mr. DOHERTY. In the 14th line they are authorized to take evidence and inquire into and report to the commissioners upon any matter.

Mr. GERMAN. Why not add the words 'and report the evidence'?

Mr. DOHERTY. I have no objection. I do not think it is necessary to make it more clear, but I have no objection. I think the form of the amendment suggested by the Prime Minister would make it more clear than the words in the original form.

Mr. BORDEN. So far as this Bill is concerned there is absolutely no difference. In both cases the responsibility is on the Governor in Council. There is no need of any change. You might provide in the statute that the Governor in Council must always appoint a fair person, but that would not improve the matter in any way. The Governor in Council is always supposed to appoint fair persons, and we will endeavour to do that. I am sorry to hear some of the animadversions that have been passed in this House upon the gentlemen who constitute the commission. The leader of the opposition has said that he does not propose to go into that question to-day, and he may take some other occasion to do so, if he thinks advisable. All I am endeavouring to point out is that so far as an opportunity to be heard is concerned, this Bill does not make any change at all, but it does make a change to secure greater convenience.

Mr. EMMERSON. I appreciate what my right hon. friend has said, but the amendment suggested by him seems to lead to the conclusion that he proposes to have the expert make an inquiry and report, and this expert would then be authorized by the Governor in Council to hear evidence.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would ask the leader of the government why he could not get the same result by stopping at the 11th line of this amending Act, reading the amending section 11 with section 9 of the original Act. What does he want that he could not get by taking this new law down to the 11th line to the word 'inquiry,' and reading that with section 9 of the original Act. I think that covers the whole ground. I would like to say to the Prime Minister that I think there is some misunderstanding about these technical men. My experience has been that we have always wanted these technical men to give evidence, not to make inquiries.

If there was a question to-day of general importance with respect to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway my hon. friend would not appoint the chief engineer, Mr. Leonard, to take evidence. He would have Mr. Leonard give evidence before some competent tribunal. In that way he would have the benefit of Mr. Leonard's judgment, and not by appointing him a commissioner to take evidence of others. He could not then give his own evidence because it would be his duty to take the evidence of others, and it seems to me that all this commission require is the evidence of capable men taken before some competent tribunal. The power to summon and bring experts before the commission is a proper one. When the Minister of Justice has accomplished that I think he has done everything that he could want to do. This Bill, read with section 9 of the Inquiries Act, gives him all these powers. I do not see why, when you want the evidence of the expert, you appoint him as a commissioner. I think the expert should go before the commission and give his evidence. I want to get away from standing here and saying that I do not object to an inquiry of this kind without giving the fullest opportunity to the man whose conduct is to be inquired into to be present. I took the objection the other day when this Bill was up that it might possibly happen that half a dozen inquiries might be going on with regard to different phases of the same questions, and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) jumped to his feet, and said that that was pure and simple nonsense. Of course, nonsense that I, or any humble member of this House, might indulge in, might be harmless, but if we are going to put it into the shape of a statute it becomes serious. If what I said was nonsense that different phases of the inquiry might be going on simultaneously I would remind my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that the Minister of Justice says that that is in the statute, and that that is the purpose of it. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance had better tell his colleague the Minister of Justice not to be playing with such dangerous nonsense as drafting statutes, taking them before council, having them passed upon and bringing them into this House in order to have them enacted into law. That is what we are told by the Minister of Finance is nonsense. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) the other day asked the Minister of Justice what was the purpose of this Bill, and he replied that one of its main purposes was that inquiries at different places about the same matter could be going on simultaneously. I do not wish to be regarded as talking nonsense to this House. I would like the Minister of Finance, who is perhaps a younger man than myself, and certainly not as old a member of the House, to be a little careful about the force of words, and put in a little more time on the dictionary before he uses them again. As I understand it, the purpose of this legislation is to enable the commission to get every possible piece of information that is required, and I for one will not for a moment stand in the way of that being done. As far as departmental administration and the responsibility of a minister are concerned I do not think there is a member in this House who wishes in the slightest way to interfere with the full knowledge, judgment and common-sense that any minister may exercise in the management of his own department, or with his taking such steps as he may find necessary to secure proper administration in the department. But, when you travel outside of that, and constitute a court, I would appeal with every confidence to the Prime Minister who, from his experience, has. I am sure, formed high conceptions of the duties of courts, not to create a court to inquire into the conduct of officers in any department that will violate the principles of fair-play, and which will not secure to every individual whose conduct is under investigation the same fair-play that he would get in any other court in the land. That is all we ask and that is all we will hold the Prime Minister responsible for. This commission is spoken of as an instrument by which a Minister of the Crown will obtain information for the bettering of the administration of his department. As far as that phase of it is concerned I do not think that there is any objection from this side of the House. What method should hon. gentlemen adopt to secure that end? They may adopt any method they think proper and spread the jurisdiction as wide as possible if their object is to secure general information for the betterment of the adminstration of the departments, but, when we come down to another phase of it, where the conduct of any individual, possibly with a view to his dismissal, is concerned, we think that if he is brought into court and put upon his trial he should have the same rights as he would have in any other court of the country. I do not think that under the method proposed here he can possibly have these rights and for that reason I object to this measure as do other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think, concerning this Bill, that one might very truthfully use the words which the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) used in a statement issued to the public during the recent campaign in reference to the Canadian navy, that it was ill-advised, ill-considered and hasty, or something to that effect. It seems to me that the Minster of Justice has not bestowed the amount of care upon this Bill that he should have done. He has consented to several amendments, but taking it in its present form, the Bill can only be productive of harm and doubt. It exhibits evidence of bad drafting. The right hon. Prime Minister told the House that the amendment as now before the committee and the statute as it at present stands differ very little, that they are practically the same and that the only change which the amendment contemplates is for the purpose of expediting public inquiries. If that is true it surely is incumbent upon the Minister of Justice and the administration to give some reason for this amending legislation. I think it is a fair test of amendatory legislation to ask the question: Why should the existing statute be changed? What circumstance or circumstances have created the necessity for an amendment to the statute which has been in force for a long number of years? I think the Prime Minister and the members of the government will agree with me that, generally speaking, it is unsound in principle to empower a commission, constituted for a definite purpose, to delegate that power away. I do not think it is businesslike to empower a commission to delegate their authority except for the reasons which are stated in the statute, just as under section 9 of part 2, the commissioner is empowered to delegate his authority to another commissioner who is empowered to take evidence when the evidence of a witness is sought who resides a considerable distance away from the place of the inquiry.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is not confined to that.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Yes, it is.

Mr. CROTHERS. No, it is not; read the section.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That is the only condition upon which that power can be delegated.

Mr. CROTHERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). This Bill, I presume, was introduced after the appointment of the Public Inqury Commission some time in December last. I assume that it was thought by some person that the powers were not ample within the statute to enable the commissioners to perform their work thoroughly.

It is evident on the face of the order in council appointing the commissioners that the duties of this commission can be carried out under the powers contained in the present statute. If the object of appointing the commission is to improve the public service that can best be done by leaving the inquiry entirely in the hands of the commissioners, and it is unbusinesslike and opposed to commonsense to grant these commissioners, under any circumstnces, the right of delegating their power. The duties of the commissioners as set forth are to inquire into:

1. The methods employed in the transaction of public business.
2. Control of expropriations and expenditure.
3. The construction and maintenance of public works and the carrying on of dredging operations.
4. The administrative methods and operations of the chief spending departments.
5. The administration and alienation of the public lands.
6. Discipline and efficiency of the departmental staffs.
7. Duplication of the same or similar work in two or more departments.

Under what heading in this enumeration is it possible to conceive of the necessity of delegating all or any of these powers? It would seem that the duties assigned to this commission may be performed very largely in Ottawa, and if they are not able to suggest reforms and the correction of abuses with the information they can get from the ministers, and deputies and departmental staffs, how do hon. gentlemen opposite expect them to make any report which will be of value? I submit that the ministry have not given to the committee a sufficient reason to warrant us in supporting this legislation.

Amendments (Mr. Doherty) agreed to.

Bill reported as amended, and amendments concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. BORDEN moved second reading of Bill (No. 58) respecting the Department of External Affairs. He said: The object of the Bill is to bring the Department of External Affairs under the Prime Minister, and there are many reasons of convenience and in the public interest why that should be so. The Bill has been drafted and introduced for that purpose.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

Bill (No. 60) to amend the Civil Service Act read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On Section 1,

Mr. BORDEN. This section amends section 39 of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908, by providing that any person appointed private secretary to a minister may be appointed in subdivision B of the first division, or in subdivision A or subdivision B of the second division. The subsections 2, 3, and 4 of this Bill I propose to strike out, as they are unnecessary, at all events at present.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The object of the Bill is simply to give the private secretaries of ministers a rank and status which they cannot have at present under the law. I find no fault with that, and am ready to give the suggestion of the government favourable consideration. I know by experience that it is impossible to get the services of a private secretary, properly qualified to discharge the duties, unless we give more salary.

Mr. BORDEN. I beg to move that subsections 2, 3, and 4 be struck out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the reason?

Mr. BORDEN. The reason is that it would probably create some discrimination between the secretaries who would be appointed under this Bill, and those who already may have positions in the civil service, and may be selected by the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume that one effect of the Bill, taken as a whole, would be to improve the position of ex-private secretaries—that by reason of the provision for an increase to the amount of $100 per year for each year they have served, some measure of justice would be done them as compensation for the loss of the $600 salary which they would suffer on ceasing to be private secretaries.

Mr. BORDEN. If the committee are willing to amend this so that it will apply to private secretaries, whether appointed in this way or not, I have no objection. I thought possibly some objection might be raised by reason of this proposed discrimination. It was on that account that I proposed to drop the subsections 2, 3, and 4.

In the Bill as drawn there is a certain difference of advantage or possible advantage created in favour of a person who is brought in, not being already a member of the civil service, and it was for the reason that I did not desire any discrimination of that kind that I proposed that these should be dropped. If the committee are willing to approve an amendment in subsection 3 so that that discrimination should not arise, I shall be glad to reconsider the proposal I made a moment ago to drop these sections.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Without reading the sections very carefully, I was under the impression that it was intended now to improve the status of the private secretaries of ministers, and was also intended to improve to a certain extent the position of those who had been private secretaries and ceased to be such when the late government went out of office. If it is not intended to make any provision for the retiring private secretaries, it would seem that the provision made for the new secretaries is pretty handsome. A private secretary now appointed might at once receive $2,800 and $600 besides, making $3,400. That is a pretty generous allowance for a private secretary when you consider what the private secretaries under the late government received, I do not think in any case on their appointment more than $2,100. But under this Bill a private secretary could start at $3,400.

Mr. BORDEN. It would be possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a pretty generous allowance. I certainly would like to see liberal provision made for the new private secretaries, but I think we should also make provision for those who have been private secretaries of ministers for a number of years, and who, when they ceased on the 10th of October last to be private secretaries, had to submit to a reduction of $600 in their salary. I think my right hon. friend should give some consideration to them.

Mr. BORDEN. I suppose that could be accomplished by enlarging the words of section 3.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that my hon. friend beside me, or myself would be prepared to suggest any form in which it could be done, but I think the provision made to-day for private secretaries of ministers might very well be extended to former private secretaries. I would recommend that principle strongly to my right hon. friend. The position of a private secretary is one that is very peculiar. In the first place, no man can discharge the duties of that office unless he is a highly intellectual and well-educated man. He has no hope of reward beyond the annual increase of salary. Probably if he had given himself to any other avocation he could have done much better; but from a sense of loyalty to the minister with whom he is connected, he continues to be his private secretary, and when the minister goes out of office, he is stranded. I think that the members on both sides of the House will recognize that these men should receive better treatment than to be simply given the rank in the service which falls to them when they cease to be private secretaries. If the same principle were applied to all, I think it would be fair.

Mr. MURPHY. I would like to add my appeal to those addressed by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) to the right hon. leader of the government on behalf of the private secretaries of the ministers of the late government. This Bill, I assume, arose out of the situation which developed when the late government went out of power. At that time several of the ministers had positions to which they might have promoted their private secretaries, and had the moneys voted for those positions; but upon their applying to the Civil Service Commission, one member of the commission declined to issue the necessary certificates entitling the secretaries to promotion. The result was that the ministers were obliged to vacate their respective offices without doing that which they would have liked to have done for their private secretaries, who had rightly deserved promotion, and that which had formerly been done for private secretaries. Like my hon. friends who have already spoken, I have no objection whatever to the private secretaries of the new government receiving this increased remuneration. These gentlemen, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, require exceptional ability and occupy positions of exceptional trust, and in my judgment they cannot be too well rewarded. But I would appeal to the right hon. leader of the government on the ground of fairness, that the treatment which he now proposes to extend to the new private secretaries should also be given to the private secretaries of the late government. In the case of my own private secretary, he had occupied that position under my predecessor and myself for a period of fourteen years, and I am strictly within the facts in saying that no person in the employ of the government of Canada rendered more valuable service during those fourteen years than that gentleman did. As a result of not getting his promotion, he is now in a position in the department which is not consistent with his ability and his long term of service. I say that without reflecting in any way upon my respected successor whom I was glad to see appointed to the position he holds. I felt that I should not let the opportunity pass without making this appeal to the right hon. leader of the government not only on behalf of the gentleman to whom I have alluded, but also on behalf of the private secretaries of the right hon. leader of the opposition, the former Minister of Labour, and the former Minister of Railways and Canals. I think these ministers were all in the same position as myself, in having had positions to which their secretaries might have been promoted, and for which the salaries had been voted by this House, but in each case we were unable to get the necessary certificates from the Civil Service Commission owing to the reluctance of one member of that commission to sign them. I trust that what has been said will induce the right hon. the Prime Minister to so amend this Bill as to cover the cases of these private secretaries.

Mr. BORDEN. I am sure the present government would be disposed to deal in the fairest possible way with the gentlemen who lose a certain part of their emoluments by ceasing to be private secretaries. I have no knowledge of their position in the civil service except in one instance that has been brought to my attention. What has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly by the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), is worthy of consideration. As I have said, my suggestion to strike out these three subclauses was purely because it had been brought to my attention that the Bill, as drafted at present, created a certain discrimination between persons selected in the civil service as private secretaries, and persons selected from outside. The Bill as drafted undoubtedly means that those appointed from outside the service would be entitled to receive a certain consideration upon ceasing to be private secretaries whereas that consideration could not, under the terms of the Bill, be given to those selected in the civil service. It did not seem to me that that discrimination could be very well supported, and for that reason I suggested that the clauses should be struck out. The Bill may be amended so as to avoid that discrimination, and for that reason I would suggest a postponement of its consideration.

Progress reported.

REVISED STATUTES—FRENCH TRANSLATION.

Bill (No. 65), to correct certain clerical errors in the French version of the Revised Statutes, 1906—Mr. Doherty—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. DOHERTY. The first section of the Bill is to insert in the French version certain words which have been omitted. The section deals with the giving or procuring or the agreeing to give or to procure any office, place, or employment, in order to induce a person to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate, or to refrain from becoming a candidate in an election. In the French version the words 'agreeing to give or procure, or offering or promising to procure,' are entirely omitted. It is a manifest case of omission pure and simple.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There is a departure here from the usual system of amending a Bill. This Bill amends by inserting words, and the practice has been to repeal the section and substitute another.

Mr. DOHERTY. It may not sound as well, but it is not part of the bad drafting of the Minister of Justice, as the hon. member found in the other case, because the minister did not draft it, it has been placed in my hands by the officer in charge of this work. I do not know what advantage we would gain by repealing the section and substituting another, particularly when we are amending to supply an omission in only one version.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). While it is not very important, it is well to follow a system. We have followed the system of repealing and substituting sections where words are added, and I think it would be unfortunate to adopt this method of inserting words in making amendments.

Mr. BORDEN. This is not the first occasion on which it has become necessary to amend the French version of the Statutes. It has usually been done in this way. I agree that as a general rule the observation of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean), is entirely correct. I followed it to-day in the Bill respecting the Department of External Affairs, by enacting a new Bill altogether.

On section 2,

Mr. DOHERTY. The English section, as it now reads, provides that all actions or suits for indemnity for any damages sustained by reason of the construction or operation of a railway shall be commenced within one year next after the time when such supposed damage is sustained or in the case of continuing damages after the cessation of such damage.

The French version leaves out the provision making the prescription run only from the cessation of the damages, and the amendment supplies that omission.

On section 3,

Mr. DOHERTY. The French version leaves out entirely this provision:

That nothing contained in this section shall apply to any mortgage upon real estate given by a joint stock company, or a corporation, or under any debenture issued by any such company or corporation.

On section 4,

Mr. DOHERTY. In this clause, the English version provides for certain rights in favour of creditors to the sum of $200; the French version says to the sum of $400.

On section 5,

Mr. DOHERTY. The English version reads:

Except in the Northwest Territories, any person dissatisfied with an order or decision of the court, or a single judge in any proceeding.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax).

The French version leaves out "the court," and consequently the right of appeal from a judgment of the court.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE PUBLIC ARCHIVES.

Mr. BORDEN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 66) respecting the public archives. He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go on with the Bill in committee to-day, but I think that possibly it might have its second reading, and I shall be prepared to give full explanations in committee. The object of the Bill, as I explained upon its introduction, is to establish the archives under the authority of an Act of parliament and to give a certain status to the Dominion archivist. The work of the archives has been carried on in a somewhat systematic and effective way during recent years, but there seems some need of legislative provisions being enacted in connection with it. To bring that about this Bill has been introduced.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is there not an archives branch now under Dr. Doughty?

Mr. BORDEN. I may say to my hon. friend that it has been carried on up to the present without any Act of parliament and perhaps not in such a certain and effective way as it might possibly be if some Bill of this character were placed upon the statute-book. I do not know of any Act of parliament that defines the duties of the archivist or deals with the matters under his charge. For that reason it was thought desirable to bring this subject to the attention of parliament.

Mr. MURPHY. When does the right hon. gentleman intend to proceed with the Bill in committee?

Mr. BORDEN. To-morrow, if convenient.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

At Six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—REGINA CITY CENSUS.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw). I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, who is not in his seat, but who will probably notice what I have to say in 'Hansard', a matter with regard to the incompleteness of return No. 73, brought down in answer to a motion moved by me on the 29th November, and which asked for the documents, &c., in connection with the taking of the census in the city of Regina. The minister has placed on the table what is called a supplementary return because it refers to certain things which must be mentioned in the main return, but, while this supplementary return has been brought down I have been unable to find after diligent search any first return, and I presume the latter was mislaid in some way before it reached the House. Anyway, the return brought down has no connection with the return asked for in the order of the House. The papers in the supplementary return concern the taking of the census in the electoral district of Regina outside of the city of Regina, and refer to the prosecution and punishment of certain enumerators; my motion distinctly asked for papers in connection with the 'City' of Regina. I hope the minister will bring down immediately the real return called for with regard to the taking of the census in the city of Regina. In this supplementary return there is one telegram which bears no date, and although that does not concern me, I trust that the real return when brought down will be carefully prepared so that it will deal with the census in the city of Regina, and the complaints against the correctness of that census, and that the papers will be in every respect complete.

CORRESPONDENTS OF THE 'LABOUR GAZETTE'.

Mr. A. VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). Will the Minister of Labour be kind enough to tell the House, and the country what correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' have been dismissed, and by whom have they been replaced. The minister told us this afternoon that certain correspondents were removed for incompetency, and other reasons unconnected with politics. The political aspect of this does not concern me, but I can tell the minister that I know that men who were absolutely competent have been dismissed. I refer now, more particularly, to J. F. Girard, who lives in my constituency, and who on several occasions had been asked by the department to make special reports, and who was considered competent to do so in addition to his ordinary work as correspondent. Of course, from a political point of view I believe the minister had a perfect right to dismiss him because he helped me all he could, and I am sure he would help me to-morrow if he had a chance.

Then again the former practice was to print the name of the correspondent at the head of the news he supplied, and this was a guarantee to the labour men of the country of the ability of the writer to deal with the questions he treated of. Possibly, in some parts of the country there were correspondents not fit for their positions, but these correspondents must seek their information, especially from the labour standpoint, through the direct channel of the organization. I understand that in future the names of the correspondents are not to be published, and I am sure the Minister of Labour is not afraid to publish the names of his new appointees. The minister says he will let me know who these correspondents are, but it does not matter whether I know or not so long as the labouring people of the country, who are entitled to know, shall be made aware of the fact. If the names are not printed, what guarantee will the working men of the country have that it is not members of the Manufacturers' Association who will in future send the reports, and how can he expect to have a fair report? With all due respect to lawyers, I do not believe they are qualified to write a fair report on the trade conditions in different parts of the country. I believe the minister was badly misled in dismissing J. F. Girard, if he dismissed him on the grounds of not being competent. I have been informed time and again that he was a most competent man. If he was dismissed from the political side, I repeat that the Minister of Labour was perfectly justified in putting him aside, and I don't blame him at all, but we have his word that politics had nothing to do with it. The labouring men of the country are anxious to know who are going to be the correspondents in the future, so that we may learn whether we may expect proper reports on the trade conditions of the country.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour). My hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) seems to assume that there has been some change in the management of the 'Labour Gazette' with respect to the publication of the names of the correspondents. There has been no change in that respect whatever. I am informed by my deputy that the names of the correspondents have been published all along and they are still being published. As to the dismissal of several correspondents I can only repeat what I said this afternoon: I got a written report from the officer who has charge of that publication, on all the correspondents in Canada. I went over the names with him, and without any regard whatever to their politics, certain of them were notified that their services would not be required after the 1st of January simply because they were incompetent or inattentive to their duties. I am glad to hear the hon. member (Mr. Verville) say that while Mr. Girard's services were not dispensed with on account of partisanship, he should have been dismissed for partisanship. I can assure the hon. member that the names of the correspondents will be published in the future as in the past.

Mr. VERVILLE. I did not say Mr. Girard should be dismissed. I just said that if it were for political reasons he was dismissed you were right to do it, because he had supported me.

Mr. CROTHERS. That is in substance what I said. The hon. member (Mr. Verville) said that Mr. Girard had been guilty of partisanship, and he could not find any fault if he were dismissed on that ground. In addition to the ground the department acted upon, the hon. gentleman has given new ground for this dismissal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not the Minister of Labour see that there is a great difference between dismissing a first-class man on the alleged ground of incompetency and dismissing him upon the ground of partisanship? I understood the minister to say that no correspondents had been dismissed for partisanship.

Mr. CROTHERS. I have said that all along.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And now it appears from the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Verville) that a most efficient man, in whom the public had great confidence, has been dismissed for alleged incompetency. If the minister dismisses a man on the ground of incompetency all right, but I understand that he has repudiated any such idea.

Mr. CROTHERS. Certainly. I prefer to take the report of my officer who has charge of the 'Labour Gazette' rather than a statement made by any man in this House on such a point. It was on the statement of my officer that these changes were made, and they were not made on the ground of partisanship.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the minister from his place in the House give me the names of the correspondents at Amherst and Springhill, Nova Scotia, and state if either of them or both of them were dismissed for incompetency or inattentiveness?

Mr. CROTHERS. The gentleman who was correspondent at Amherst is a man by the name of Ross. Immediately on the results of the elections being known he wrote to the department saying he expected to be fired and, therefore, would resign at once. Beyond that I may tell my hon. friend that the officer in charge of the 'Labour Gazette' reported that this man was an unsatisfactory correspondent. He has been replaced. So far as I am concerned, I do not propose to have anybody dismissed merely because he was or is a Liberal. In addition, when anybody is dismissed, I shall see to it that a Conservative will replace him if I can find one capable of discharging satisfactorily the duties of the office. I communicated with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) and he recommended a Mr. Forsyth, a printer by trade, a member of the city council, and a very prominent and capable man in Amherst, and I had much pleasure in appointing him.

Mr. CARROLL. It does seem strange that the officer in charge of the 'Labour Gazette' did not ascertain before the 21st of September that there were certain incompetents employed on the 'Labour Gazette.' It strikes me as rather strange that he should have made up his mind with regard to these shortly after the present government came to power. I fail to see why the hon. minister should have any objection to giving this House and country the names of those who have been dismissed as correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' because of incompetency or negligence. I think it is due to the country that we should know who were dismissed and for what reason. I quite agree with the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) that the country should know who are the correspondents of the 'Gazette,' so that we may judge whether they really have the interests of the labour movement at heart or whether they represent the financial interests. As the representative of a constituency, where about half the people belong to labour organizations, the fact was brought to my attention that certain correspondents had been dismissed, and the labour organizations are interested in knowing by whom they are to be replaced. Are they going to be replaced by men who understand and are in sympathy with the labour movement or by men who have, perhaps, the financial interests of the country at heart more than the interests of labour? I would ask whether the correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette' at Cape Breton has been dismissed, and if so whether for incompetency or negligence, and by whom was he replaced?

Mr. CROTHERS. In reply I may say that the report regarding the correspondent at Sydney, whose name is John Moffat, is in these words: 'A good correspondent, well informed, careful and attentive to instructions.' I, therefore, did not dismiss him, and he is still correspondent.

Mr. CARROLL. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, but if I had not put this question, we would not know who was the correspondent.

Mr. CROTHERS. There can be no doubt whatever that Mr. Moffat would have notified my hon. friend if he had been dismissed. My hon. friend has insinuated that this report from the officer in charge of the 'Labour Gazette' was made up very quickly after the 21st of September. I am rather inclined to believe that it was made up some time before, and that my predecessor was notified that these men were incompetent and inattentive, but did not take proper action.

GUYSBOROUGH BRANCH RAILWAY.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the government, and especially that of the Minister of Railways, to the fact that a certain appropriation of $1,000,000, which was placed in the estimates by the late government to construct a branch railway in the county of Guysborough, Nova Scotia, has been struck from the estimates. I was somewhat surprised to note that fact, and at first I thought that there might have been some mistake made by the printer or some one else. But on examining the estimates more closely, I discovered that the vote for a branch line in the island of Cape Breton was also struck from the list, and that the only item remaining in the new estimates of the three which were in the old estimates, is the million dollars for the construction of a line in the county of Halifax. If the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) will say now that he intends to restore this item to the estimates for the present session and gives me the assurance that he will go on with the building of the Guysborough branch, it will be unnecessary for me to make some of the remarks I otherwise would make. I notice that he shakes his head.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have not noticed it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The hon. minister will not give me that assurance, so that evidently my worst fears are realized. I see that the purpose of the government is to abandon for the present the construction of this branch railway in the county of Guysborough. Now the remarks I shall make on this question will be directed chiefly to the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden). The Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) is to some extent a stranger to the province of Nova Scotia, but his right hon. leader (Mr. Borden) is of course well posted. He knows all the details about what is required there, he has gone over the ground and ascertained the condition of affairs in the county I have the honour to represent. I presume, therefore, that he will be willing to be held responsible for the action of the government in striking the appropriation for a branch line to Guysborough from the estimates. Ever since the 21st of September I have been repeatedly asked by my constituents what would be the fate of the Guysborough branch railway under the new administration, and I have always replied that I could not see how the government could do anything else than go forward with that work. It appears, however, that I have been mistaken. What are the facts? It will be remembered by those who were here last year that the late government decided to embark on the construction of certain branch lines in the non-railway counties in the eastern portion of Nova Scotia.

Three branches were selected as those most necessary to begin with—a short one in the Island of Cape Breton; a second one starting at Sunnybrae in the county of Pictou and reaching the town of Guysborough on the Atlantic seaboard, with a spur to the deep waters of Country Harbour; and a third commencing at Dartmouth, and passing through the Musquodoboit valley to the Dean settlement in the county of Halifax. This House accepted the proposal by a resolution. On that resolution there was quite a long discussion, a number of hon. gentlemen from the maritime provinces, including the Prime Minister, speaking upon it. Acting on the resolution, the late government placed $200,000 in the estimates for the branch on the Island of Cape Breton, $1,000,000 for the Guysborough branch, and $1,000,000 for the branch in the county of Halifax. Very careful surveys had been made for these branches by the local government of Nova Scotia and a company called the Halifax and Eastern Railway Company. I see by the estimates that this information, which cost a great deal of money, is to be purchased by the government, there being an item of $85,000 for that purpose. There can be no question about the facts being in the possession of the government, as most careful surveys were made by the Halifax and Eastern Railway Company. Tenders were asked for, and about the time of the defeat of the late government, the contracts were awarded. The contract for the Guysborough branch was awarded to the Nova Scotia Construction Company of Sydney, which deposited, I am informed, $50,000 as security for the performance of the work. About the same time the late government purchased the Sunnybrae branch, which belonged to the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, 12 miles in length, starting from Ferona on the Intercolonial railway and reaching Sunnybrae. It was intended that this should be made a branch of the Intercolonial railway. That branch will not be of much value unless it is extended into the county of Guysborough. Now, the resolution to which I have alluded was moved in this House on the 12th of December, 1910, by my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), and I had the honour of seconding it. That resolution reads as follows:

That in the opinion of this House the time has arrived in the commercial and industrial development of the province of Nova Scotia when the Intercolonial railway of Canada should be extended into the non-railway counties of the eastern section of the province.

You will note that the resolution refers to 'the non-railway counties of the eastern section of Nova Scotia.' These counties were understood to be Guysborough and Victoria in the island of Cape Breton. The county of Halifax can scarcely be called a non-railway county, as it has a part of the Windsor branch within its bounds, the main line of the Intercolonial cutting it in two; the Dartmouth branch, and the Southwestern railway reaching from the city of Halifax to the boundary line of Lunenburg. The county of Halifax is almost gridironed with railways which have been built at the public expense, and the people of the county I represent have contributed their full share of the money. The eastern section of Halifax county, however, is in somewhat the same position as Guysborough in being without railway communication. The right hon. leader of the government on that occasion made a speech in which he urged that something definite and prompt should be done by the late government in regard to the construction of these branches. Permit me to quote a short extract from that speech, which was delivered in this House on the 12th of December, 1910. In referring to a series of meetings which he had held in Nova Scotia in that year, he said:

I passed along the shore of the county of Halifax to the county of Guysborough last summer. I travelled altogether about 500 miles through districts not served by railways at all, and where railway development would mean a great deal to the people and lead to considerable development in that little province.

I can tell the Minister of Railways a great many things I saw. I could speak of a great many districts where railway facilities might lead to very great progress and advancement in that little province. I saw, in the county of Guysborough just across the line from the county of Halifax, one of the most splendid harbours that can be found anywhere in the world—Country Harbour. This harbour stretches back ten miles from its mouth, with water close up to the shore everywhere from forty-five to sixty feet in depth, landlocked twice, and with a splendid roadstead outside, where, in almost any weather, ships can ride in safety—and have ridden in safety—without going inside... All along that shore are opportunities of development. The people of Halifax county, as well as those of Guysborough county, and those of other counties in the province of Nova Scotia to which allusion has been made, have, it seems to me, fairly good reason to complain that their interests in respect of railway development have not been properly attended to in the past. And especially is this true of the last fourteen years, when the coffers of this country have been filled to overflowing, according to the boasts of hon. gentlemen on the other side, and when huge projects of development have been undertaken... It comes down simply to this: does the government of this country propose to maintain the Intercolonial railway of Canada as a state-owned railway, or is it vacillating and hesitating, unable to make up its mind as to whether that road is to be a state-owned railway or is to be handed over to some private corporation for operation? I will assume for the moment that it is the intention of the government, as I believe it is the will of the people of Canada, that the Intercolonial shall still continue to be owned by the people of this country. Then, I say, it is the duty of the government, under these conditions, to give to the Intercolonial railway, not only in the province of Nova Scotia, but in every province of Canada, those facilities which a private corporation would give to that road, should it pass into the ownership of such corporation. This is no time for hesitation and vacillation. Make up your mind—and I hope you have made it up in the direction I have indicated; then, give to the Intercolonial the branches, feeders, extensions which would be given if it were owned by any of the great railway corporations.

I was very much pleased to listen to that speech, because I gave the right hon. gentleman credit for sincerity in making it. I felt that by that strong speech in favour of the branches proposed in the resolution for the non-railway counties he was committing himself to the proposition of building them. It will be noted that he made a very flattering reference to the port of Country Harbour, describing it as a splendid harbour, one of the best in the world; and with that I quite agree.

In a list of the ten great harbours of this continent I think you would have to include County Harbour, but, Sir, it was the Lord who gave us this harbour, it was the Lord who placed these granite headlands there that shelter us from the storms of the Atlantic. He placed those rugged mountains on either side and gave us these deep and placid waters in which the navy of Great Britain might ride in safety. We are thankful to Him for that, but where does my right hon. friend come in? Nature has done a great deal for us, but what is the Prime Minister of Canada willing to do for us? We did not ask him to do anything, but to keep his hands off. If he had kept his hands off what had been done by the government just defeated, this splendid harbour would have been connected with the great coal mines and with the trade and commerce of Canada by two glittering lines of steel, fifty miles in length, in two years; all that he required to do was to leave it alone. The contract had been made, the money provided and the Lord knows that the railway was badly needed in that country. All these things had been done before my right hon. friend came into power. It is very fine to tell us about our beautiful harbour, but when he refuses to do anything to bring that harbour into touch with the trade of the rest of Canada I cannot give him credit for as much sincerity as I would have given him at the time he was making that speech. Note what he says:

> The people of Halifax county, as well as those of Guysborough county, and those of other counties in the province of Nova Scotia——

I presume he includes in that the people of Victoria.

> —to which allusion has been made, have, it seems to me, fairly good reason to complain that their interests in respect of railway development have not been properly attended to in the past. And especially is this true of the last 14 years, when the coffers of this country have been filled to overflowing.

Now, we have left with my right hon. friend a tidy surplus of $30,000,000 in the bottom of the chest. We have started him in business in as good shape as he could expect. He cannot, therefore, say that he has declined to place this in the estimates because he is short of money, it cannot be for the want of money. The meaning to me of that speech was: If you put me in power, if you give me charge of the affairs of this country, I will do this thing, I will do it without delay. This speech was made a campaign sheet by the Conservative party in eastern Nova Scotia. It was published in capital letters in the Guysborough 'Times,' in the county which I have the honour to represent. It was given great prominence in the Halifax 'Herald,' and other Conservative papers, and my opponent on every hustings in Guysborough county made frantic appeals to the people to desert me and vote for him because he said: If you ever want a railway in Guysborough you can only get it by voting for the Tory party. We have had two elections in that province, the local in June, and the Dominion in September, and at both of these elections in the county I represent this branch railway question was the leading issue, and the party of my right hon. friend committed themselves up to the hilt and professed to have the right hon. gentleman's authority for saying he was in favour of building this if he was returned to power. My right hon. friend did me the honour of visiting my county in 1910. He spoke at Sherbrooke at the village of Goldboro and in the town of Gusysborough and we were glad to see him there. One of the subjects he discussed was the great want of railway facilities in the county. I did not attend the meetings, but I understand he gave positive assurances that if he ever got into power he would build this important branch railway into the county of Guysborough. But he went further than that, he issued a manifesto to the electors of the county of Halifax prior to his own election and in his manifesto, if I understand it aright, he claimed that he was the man who originated this branch line idea in the province of Nova Scotia. I think I should embalm this manifesto on the pages of 'Hansard.' It reads:

> To the electors of the county of Halifax:
>
> Halifax, N.S., August 31, 1911.
>
> Gentlemen.—Three years ago you elected my colleague, Mr. A. B. Crosby, and myself to be your representatives in the parliament recently dissolved. Then, as now, the demands upon my time denied me the opportunity of holding many meetings in my constituency, or of meeting the electors personally.
>
> Upon the great issue which has precipitated dissolution, and upon other important issues now presented for the determination of the people, I have issued an address to the electors of Canada, which I submit to your consideration.
>
> Notwithstanding the enormous expenditure upon the National Transcontinental railway, little has been done to solve the transportation problem for Halifax. This port should become the real terminus of one or more great railway systems reaching into the prairie provinces and thence to the shores of the Pacific. The position and natural advantages of Halifax entitle it to that status. It is not necessary to enlarge upon the benefits which would thus enure to the constituency and to the province. It will be my aim and policy to accomplish this result.
>
> Railway extension through the eastern part of the county has for many years been urgent. For fifteen years the federal government with abounding revenues has remained indifferent and inactive. During the past session, while both federal and provincial governments were trifling with the question, I took the ground in parliament that the road should be built as a part of the Intercolonial railway and without delay. As a result of this the federal government has apparently been awakened to a momentary sense of its duty, and an item of $1,000,000 has been inserted in this year's estimates for the commencement of the work.
> The highways through the country districts of this and other counties have been for many years, and now are, in a disgraceful condition. The time has come when the federal government should co-operate with and assist the provincial governments in the establishment of a system of permanent state highways. This policy which is outlined in my general address will be of vast advantage to this county, which has suffered so long in this respect.
> The fishing industry, so important to our province, is carried on largely by boat fishermen. The conditions governing boat fishing have changed greatly of late years. Fishing is now frequently carried on many miles outside our territorial waters and during the entire year. The boats employed are more expensive, better equipped and more costly to operate than those in general use some years ago. Thus, boat fishing has become largely a permanent employment, and those engaged in it are in reality seamen. This change is advantageous to the industry, because it ensures a regular supply throughout the year, which is essential in order to retain our hold on the markets. The Liberal-Conservative party has adopted and will carry out the policy of extending to the boat fishermen the same free medical aid and attendance afforded to those employed on Canadian vessels engaged in the deep sea fisheries.

Before the close of the campaign I hope to have the privilege of addressing you upon these and other important questions.

In conclusion, I desire to pay a well deserved tribute to the energy, the zeal and the industry with which my colleague, Mr. Crosby, has faithfully discharged his duty as your representative. He has been prompt, active and earnest on all occasions to safeguard and maintain the interests of his constituents.

Faithfully yours,
R. L. BORDEN.

You will note that in this address my hon. friend says that the old government was trifling with this question of building railway branches in those two counties and that he took the ground in parliament that the road should be built as a part of the Intercolonial railway and without delay.

As a result of that, the late government were awakened to a sense of their duty, and they voted $1,000,000 to build a branch in his own constituency. You will note that he was in a hurry on that occasion. In the case of the Navy Bill he wanted the word 'speedy' inserted, he wanted to push it along faster. In this case he uses the phrase 'without delay,' he was impatient to have the Guysborough road and the Halifax road built at once when he was in opposition. Now this address I have read refers especially to the road in his own constituency, and these roads were practically going over the same ground. One would almost think by reading his address that he had originated the proposition. He does not say anything about the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) who has been the pioneer on this question for a great many years; he does not give any credit to the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) who was really the man that brought on the resolution on which this estimate was founded. I am willing to give credit to my right hon. friend, where he deserves it, for originating anything in this House. I think he should take credit for originating the idea of medicine for the fishermen. That was his own idea. I have had a good deal to do with the fishing industry of this country. I was chairman of the fishery committee for a number of years, and I never heard a request for free medicine from the fishermen until I saw it in this document. But while I am quite willing to give him credit for that—and I want it understood that I am not opposed to free medicine for the fishermen, I am willing to give him credit for that—at the same time, I am not willing to give him credit for being the originator of branch lines in Nova Scotia, or anywhere else. He got the money very easily, he asked for it, and the government placed $1,000,000 in the estimates—just as easy as asking, that is all he had to do. I wish we could get money out of him as easy as that, by simply requesting it, and being handed out a million like rolling off a log. Now, I have pointed out by all these speeches of the right hon. gentleman in my county, and in the House of Commons, that he pledged himself up to the hilt in regard to this Guysborough branch railway. I quoted from his speech in the House of Commons, I referred to his remarks at Sherbrooke, and at Guysborough. Now that he is in power, what has become of it all? Does it mean anything? How is he going to redeem these pledges that he gave to the people of Guysborough when he was in opposition? Is he going to forget all his Tory friends in the county of Guysborough that trusted him so implicitly on this question? Is he going to forget the fishing industry in which he took such a lively interest at the time of the election? Let me tell him that the medicine will be of no use if he does not give the fishermen a railway into Guysborough county. Is he going to forget all about the harbour, the most splendid harbour in the world, to which he gave such a great certificate? Is he going to forget his friends, Mr. Rowlings, Mr. McNutt and Mr. Wells, those gentlemen who travelled over the county with him, and promised this railway to every fisherman, and farmer, and every one else in the county of Guysborough, if they would vote for him. But after all, he seems to have capitulated to some kind of petty party consideration, and he strikes the million dollars for the Guysborough railway from the estimates.

Now, I would like to be permitted to point out the contrast between the Prime Minister and the leader that I have the honour to follow on this side of the House. I don't like to make comparisons, but this comparison is very striking. When my leader was dealing with this question he looked over the requirements of eastern Nova Scotia. He saw that all that territory east of Halifax harbour was undeveloped, that there were great resources there. He did not care anything about the county line, as to whether it was Halifax or Guysborough. He saw that two branches were needed, and he laid the two branches down on the map, irrespective of who represented the county. My leader dealt with it in a broadminded way, and he gave the two branches, one for Halifax and one for Guysborough; and I have never been prouder of him in looking over this matter than I am to-night, in comparing him with the leader we have on the other side of the House. Now we all admire a man with generous instincts, a broadminded statesman; but what do you think of a statesman that cannot see across the line fence of his own county? That is not what one would expect from a Right Honorable Privy Councilor of Great Britain. That is not what one would expect from the Prime Minister of a great country like Canada. I do not want it to be thought that I am opposed to the Musquodoboit branch. I will cheerfully vote for the Musquodoboit branch when the matter comes before the House. It is just as necessary that it should be built as the other; and I rejoice at the success of the people of Halifax in getting the Musquodoboit branch. How is it that my right hon. friend selected the Musquodoboit branch and condemned the Guysborough branch? An hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean) suggests that I call it the Dartmouth branch, perhaps that is a better name. Why does the Prime Minister condemn the Guysborough branch and select the Dartmouth branch? Can he give me any good reason? Why does he discriminate against the branch into the county of Guysborough? He cannot say that it is for lack of money with wich to build it. While I do not want to say anything against the Dartmouth branch as a business proposition, I make the statement without fear of contradiction that the Guysborough branch is a better business proposition than the Musquodoboit branch. To begin with, the Guysborough branch starts from one of the greatest coal mines in eastern Canada and ends at a great harbour on the Atlantic seaboard. There is a chance of development, a chance of trade. While the Dartmouth branch is defensible, and runs through a good country, still it ends in the woods. There is not a town at the terminus, no hotel there, it is simply a country district. You may get some logs to carry, some lumber to carry, but the two branches cannot be compared with one another, so far as the development that might take place is concerned. At the same time let it be understood that I am in favour of the Dartmouth branch, and I believe it will be a feeder of the Intercolonial. I may point out that along the line proposed to be run from Sunnybrae to Guysborough there is a large quantity of good timber that would keep a road busy for the first ten years to haul it out. The branch that runs to the town of Guysborough taps Chebucto bay, which is close to the best fishing grounds on the Atlantic seaboard. This road runs through a good agricultural country, equal to the Musquodoboit, I have here an example of the progress that has been made in the town of Canso for some years past, and I will place it on the 'Hansard' as an illustration of what can be done when you give the people railway facilities. Fifteen years or so ago they did not have a daily boat between the town of Canso and the railway at Mulgrave The late government, with its characteristic enterprise in promoting the trade and industries of the country, gave us a subsidy for a daily boat, and immediately the fresh fish branch of that industry began to grow. Here are the figures:

Average = More than a car load per day.

That is splendid growth as the result of providing railway facilities for the town of Canso and remember, that is only the fresh fish business, that is only one branch of the business; it takes no account of passenger traffic, or salt fish or with all the other traffic which these boats bring to the Intercolonial railway.

Commencing in 1891 with $1,134 this trade grew until last year the Intercolonial railway got from it the magnificent sum of $45,179.11. More than a car-load a day of fresh fish was shipped by the Intercolonial railway throughout the whole year. In 1911, 4,110 tons of fish were shipped which, at ten tons to the car, makes a good deal more than one car-load for every day in the year. If that can be done by one town like Canso in fresh fish business alone you can see what development could be brought about by a railway reaching along that shore and touching at points like Country Harbour and Guysborough. I attribute this splendid development of the fresh fish business at Canso largely to the facility given by the daily boat by which people were enabled to ship their fresh fish to Mulgrave to be forwarded by train from that port. The late government also placed fast freight trains on the Intercolonial railway starting on schedule time from Halifax and Mulgrave. These trains joined at Truro and then went on through to Montreal. A car-load of fresh fish is placed on this train and the shipper knows that it will get to Montreal on a certain day and at a certain hour in the day. That has done a great deal to advance the fresh fish trade. In addition to that refrigerator cars and icing facilities were placed along the line, express charges were lowered and the late government paid a part of the expressage in order to carry the fresh fish of the country into the market in Ontario and the west.

But what we need more than anything else is a railway connection with the shore. If you can give us at Canso a branch line of the Intercolonial railway reaching down to the water where the fish are landed so that we can get the fresh fish loaded on board the cars where it is landed from the sea like they do in Aberdeen and other parts of England and Scotland. We will make Canso the Gloucester of Canada, we will make it a bigger and a more thriving town than Gloucester in the United States, or Grimsby in England, situated as Canso is upon a Cape jutting out into the Atlantic and being the best fishing ground in existence anywhere on this continent to-day. With all these chances of development you can understand how great the disappointment was, after our struggles for the last number of years, to find that the million dollars placed in the estimates by the late government had for some reason which I fail to understand, been struck out by the present government. I am not here to ask for any favours for my constituents, but I am here to demand fair-play and their just right. The county of Guysborough is one of the oldest settled portions of this Dominion and ever since railway construction commenced in Canada many years ago my constituents have borne their full share of the $400,000,000 that was contributed by the governments of this country to aid railways in other parts of Canada. I submit, Sir, that in all justice their time has come, or ought to have come. I wish to protest and I wish to do so as strongly as I can, against the discrimination which has been exercised with regard to the county of Guysborough. Why should my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) strike out Guysborough and leave the branch in his own county to be built? This step that he has taken will be resented in Guysborough and in every other county in Nova Scotia, for there is a general feeling in that province that there should be a branch line in Guysborough. There is such a thing as public opinion in Nova Scotia and I do not think that my right hon. friend can outrage public opinion in that way and escape.

The people of Canada are forming their opinions about the new cabinet and the new Prime Minister and I am sorry that he should give them such an opportunity as this to form an opinion about him. They are looking around to see whether the men who occupy the government benches are broad gauge men or narrow gauge men. The people of Canada and the gentlemen in the reporters' gallery have been watching the men who hold cabinet positions in the new government and some of the newspapers have been writing about the gloom of the front benches. If my hon. friends keep on as they have been doing for the last month or two, keep backsliding, keep going back on all the promises they made during the fifteen years they were in opposition, the front benches will be getting gloomier all the time.

How can we expect that gentlemen who occupy the Treasury Benches could look cheerful, when day after day they are engaged in the ghastly work of chopping off the heads of decent officials? How could we expect the Prime Minister to look cheerful, when one of his recent acts was to bring despair to the hearts of 17,000 people in his native province, and his own next door neighbours at that? The right hon. gentleman is not justified in interfering with an expenditure of this kind, the principle of which has been accepted by the House, and on which $150,000 has already been expended for no better reason than to serve the petty political purposes of the Conservative party. Let the right hon. gentleman answer this question: Why has he continued the appropriation to the Dartmouth branch line, and dropped the appropriation for the Guysborough branch line, thus discriminating against Guysborough?

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton). My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has ably presented the facts to the Minister of Railways, and to the Prime Minister, and these facts apply to my county of Victoria as they do to the county of Guysborough. I was very much pleased, when on a former occasion I brought this matter to the attention of the House, to have the able advocacy of Mr. R. L. Borden, then leader of the opposition. I was pleased, indeed, to have his support for the resolution I then moved, because I felt that the opposition which he then led would not criticise a vote if put in the estimates for the purpose of building this road. It is a great surprise now to me, and to the people I represent, many of whom are ardent supporters of the present adminstration, that the Prime Minister has made such a right-about-face upon this question, and has abandoned every argument he urged in favour of the proposition when he led the opposition. We know that the vote for the building of this railway received the assent of the House without a dissenting voice from Liberal or Conservative, and let me ask the Prime Minister what does he think of this setting aside of estimates, which have received the sanction of the Sovereign through the Governor General; which have been voted by this House, and solemnly consecrated so to speak to the purpose for which the money was voted? I never for a moment supposed that the money so voted for the building of a railway in the county of Victoria would not be expended for that purpose. I may be inexperienced in such matters, but it seems to me that money voted in that way by the parliament of Canada for a certain purpose should not be lightly dropped from the estimates, and the vote of parliament nullified. Not only has this government discriminated as between Guysborough and Halifax, but it seems to have discriminated against Cape Breton in favour of other parts of Canada. There is an enormous appropriation in the estimates for the development in New Brunswick, and I do not say that that appropriation was unnecessary, but we find the Prime Minister without having any particular knowledge of how much money it will be necessary to expend there altogether, committing himself to the project, and rejecting necessary works in the counties of Victoria and Guysborough, in his own province. In Prince Edward Island we find that pre-election promises to broaden the gauge of the railway on that island, and nobody knows how much that work will cost, are to be carried out; but, urgent and necessary works in the shape of railways on the Island of Cape Breton are to be rejected. Does the leader of the government think it fair to the good people of Cape Breton that the votes passed by parliament for the purpose of developing their country shall be rendered nugatory by this government, while expenditures ten times greater are to be made in New Brunswick where they have all the railway facilities that are for the present required? Surely, it ought to be expected that before this government undertook such large expenditures in places where they are not so much needed as in Cape Breton, railway extension should have been granted to the county of Victoria. I wish to point out that we are not asking for expenditure in a country where there is no promise of a return from it.

I have here a letter which was published in the 'Post' newspaper in the city of Sydney—a paper supporting the present administration. In that paper there is an open letter dated January 2, addressed to the Minister of Railways, advising him what he should do regarding the development of railway facilities in the island of Cape Breton and between the cities of Sydney and Halifax. That letter gives the income now being received from the Intercolonial railway and an estimate of the income that might be expected from further development. Here are the figures, taken from the Auditor General's Report for the year 1910:

Earnings.	Freight.	Passenger.	Total.
Montreal	$565 669.76	$171,213.42	$736,883.18
St. John	470,105.86	124,240.44	594,346.50
Halifax.	640,631.33	193,022.64	833,674.17
The Sydneys..	663,138.34	138,511.12	801,570.46

These are the earnings from that part of the country for which I am asking further developments. That section is paying better returns to the Intercolonial railway than any other place from Montreal to the terminus of the road at the city of Sydney. When the Intercolonial railway was extended into the island of Cape Breton, it was said that it would not pay. We denied that statement and our contention has been proved correct. In the county of Victoria we have exactly the same resources, the same raw material to be developed. It is a good farming and lumber county and a splendid fish county. What my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said about his county is equally true about the county of Victoria. You cannot find a better sea coast any where for fish, and the fish from that county does not go into Canadian territory at all. It is brought directly on board vessels from ports in the county of Victoria right into Boston and other New England markets. To ship to our own markets would involve double freight handling. This magnificent fish, therefore, is sent direct to the United States and exchanged for goods which are brought back here, paying duty each way, which duties have of course to be paid by the Canadian people. But if we had the proper railway facilities, we would be in a position to send our fish direct into our own Canadian markets. I hope that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) will give this matter further consideration. For the last ten years I have been continually advocating this railway extension, and I heaved a sigh of relief last session when the government agreed to build this branch. I am all the more sorry that I have to begin the battle over again. I have no wish to weary the House or the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways. The right hon. the Prime Minister knows the situation as well as I. He knows every corner of Nova Scotia, its resources and necessities. He certainly explained them forcibly in his speech which was quoted by the hon. member for Guysborough this evening, and his knowledge cannot be less to-day than it was then. I am sorry that he should have found it necessary to cut off the votes for the counties of Guysborough and Victoria, while retaining the vote for his own county. I would rather have expected him to leave his own county out and provide for the others. I trust we shall have some good explanation for the course taken, and I cannot too strongly urge on the government the carrying forward of this project which the former government undertook.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways). The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) told us that if I put one million dollars in the estimates he would not talk for an hour, but the thought occurred to me that it would cost the country a little too much if I were to accept his offer just now. The reason why there is no vote in the estimates this year is that the late government could not make up its mind as to which route the railway should take. They started at the blind end of the railway, near the ocean, and they purposed building for forty-three miles there, but they could not decide as to whether they would start the line from Sunnybrae or come across at the end of the Dartmouth road, which probably arose from the fact that they were considering the number of constituencies which might be influenced. Further surveys will be necessary. The engineer of the department has sent me a memorandum stating that surveys must be made, and of course hon. gentlemen will easily understand that there has been no time to undertake that work since we have come into office. I may say, further, that although hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted a great number of figures, there are no statistics in the department which I preside over, to warrant us going on with the construction of this railway now. I believe that before committing the country to any expenditure, we should be able to give the people a just reason for our action, and we should see that the taxpayers of Canada get a fair return for the money expended or at least sufficient to pay the interest on the capital. I know it is very desirable that the different provinces should be opened up so that their natural resources may be developed to the best advantage, and I trust that in the coming summer sufficient information may be obtained to determine the route and other considerations so that we may be able to come to a conclusion on the matter before we meet the House again at the end of the present year.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think the minister will agree with me that it is hardly fair to the contractors to delay the work any longer. A great deal of important work could be done during the winter season. At any rate, I would like to know when the minister expects to be able to enter into a formal contract for the construction of the Dartmouth branch, and if he expects that the construction will be commenced shortly?

Mr. COCHRANE. The contractor has been already ordered to go on. With regard to the Prince Edward Island railway, I do not think it would be prudent on our part to construct any more narrow gauge branches, in view of the policy of the government to establish a railway ferry, and to widen the gauge all over the island.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Inasmuch as it appears that a new survey must be made before this Guysborough road is an accomplished fact, may I suggest that the Minister of Railways take into consideration a proposition which has been put before the government to solve the difficulty, that is, that the road should start at or near South River or Antigonish, and pass up the South River valley to Country Harbour, with a branch line to Guysborough. I understand that Mr. P. S. Archibald is now in charge of the engineering work in the Halifax district, and he is quite familiar with the proposed route. I think he made a survey there some years ago for some company. There would be no engineering difficulties in the way of the construction of this road. It would be practically level, there would be no great bridges to be built, it would be a very cheap road to build, and it would pass through a magnificent agricultural district, one of the finest in the eastern part of the province. It will not be a bleeder or milker of the Intercolonial railway, but will on the contrary be a feeder from the start, and a good paying proposition. If Mr. Archibald is instructed to make a survey, I have no doubt that he will report favourably on the proposed road.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, no one appreciates more than I do the very great importance of the fishing industry of the province of Nova Scotia and its future development upon a much greater scale than has been attained in the past. I realize also the extreme importance of railway connection with points on the coast. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has given relief to his feelings in a speech of about an hour. The only fault I have to find with it is that he might have condensed it into about ten minutes. The hon. gentleman is exhibiting at present an impatience that was not apparent during the ten years that he sat in this House, and never said a word about this matter. I want to tell him that he need not be at all pessimistic about it. He speaks about this government forgetting Guysborough. I would not be very much surprised if my hon. friend were quite willing that we should forget Guysborough if he thought he could make some political capital out of it; but we do not propose to forget Guysborough, and we propose to deal with the question of railway development in Nova Scotia by branch lines of the Intercolonial railway exactly along the lines which have been spoken of by me in the past. But I would like to remind the hon. gentleman, and also the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), that we cannot do everything at once or in the absence of certain information that is essential. The estimates for the present year are already running up to a very considerable figure, and there are those on this side of the House who have not been altogether pleased because the estimates do not contain some items which concern their constituencies. It is perfectly apparent that while we ought to proceed with the development of our transportation lines as rapidly as possible, we cannot do everything in one year. With regard to the Musquodoboit railway, the development of the port of St. John, the car-ferry between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, all these matters have been brought to the attention of the House and pressed with great persistence, on many occasions. The hon. member for Guysborough will remember that some years ago, previous to an election, there was some work done on this Guysborough line by his own political friends.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What does my right hon. friend refer to?

Mr. BORDEN. I am referring to a piece of this line which I saw myself when in Guysborough.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will my right hon. friend permit me to explain that? That piece of line was built by a company, of which the late Mr. Fitzpatrick, of New Glasgow, was the president, a company consisting altogether of men of his own party. There was no politics in it at all. Nobody, who knows the facts, in Nova Scotia will say that it had any political meaning; but Mr. Fitzpatrick promoted the company to build that Country Harbour branch, and he fell down, because he could not get the money. He died in London while trying to promote this railway. He was a Conservative member of parliament in Nova Scotia; and associated with him in the company was Mr. McCormick, of Parry Sound, and Mr. McLeod, of Northern Ontario, both former members of this House, and both of the same political stripe as my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN. The provincial government of Nova Scotia, as I understand, put the carrying out of that road as an election promise.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Not at all.

Mr. BORDEN. I have no personal knowledge of that, but I have been informed that such was the case by respectable citizens of the county which my hon. friend represents.

All I have to say about the Guysborough road is that we cannot undertake all these things at once. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals has had the importance of railway development in Nova Scotia placed before him not only by myself but by delegations which met him in Nova Scotia. He is thoroughly impressed with the importance of that development but it cannot all be done at once. As I have already said, the estimates for this year run to a large amount and do include the items to which my hon. friend made allusion. I do not know whether he objects to that or not. So far as I understand that item it simply amounts to this, that this government is willing to pay the reasonable value to the country of those surveys which were made by a company that proposed to undertake this work and which afterwards gave it up because the late government came to the conclusion, in consequence of a debate I think initiated in this House by the hon. member from North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie), that it would be the best policy to have that road built as a branch line of the Intercolonial railway, and I still have the temerity to think, notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. friend from Guysborough, that the attitude which I ventured to take in the discussion of that motion had a good deal to do with the subsequent course of the government with regard to that very matter, and I know by the expression of approval which I see on the face of my hon. friend from North Cape Breton and Victoria that he entirely agrees with me in that. I would ask my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), not to be so downhearted and pessimistic about the prospects of railway development in Nova Scotia. Matters may have a gloomy appearance to him at present, but I will ask him to cheer up and come to the conclusion that the claims of Guysborough will be recognized, notwithstanding the fact that he represents that constituency. The county of Guysborough has a very important fishing industry, no one realizes that more thoroughly than I do. So have the counties of Halifax, North Victoria and Cape Breton, and no one is more anxious than I am to do everything that can be done in reason to give railway development to every one of those counties in order that the fishing industry may be carried on upon a scale that has been absolutely unknown in the past.

So far as the voting of the estimates to which my hon. friend called attention is concerned, it is perfectly true that five twelfths of the amounts were voted in the first instance without discussion, and when we came back in the early part of this session we voted the other seven twelfths without discussion. My hon. friend knows the explanation then made. We had no time to revise the estimates or to consider what we could or could not do. These estimates were placed before the House with a distinct statement and understanding that in voting the balance of the estimates we must be left free to deal with the situation in any particular case according to what we conceived to be in the public interest.

Under these circumstances, I do not think there is any reasonable ground for complaint so far as the county of Halifax is concerned. It is not gridironed with railways by any means. There is more than 100 miles in the eastern part of the county of Halifax which has been settled for more than 100 years that has no railway communication. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) knows that as well as I do. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) is also aware of that fact. Thus it does not seem to me that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has any reasonable ground of complaint against the appropriation for the purpose of building the Halifax and Musquodoboit Valley railway.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am not making any complaint against that, I am heartily in favour of it, and I said so in my speech.

Mr. BORDEN. I am glad to hear the hon. member is in favour. He seemed to think that it should not be built until we could build all these roads at once. We cannot build all these roads at once, but we can make a beginning and every one in Nova Scotia realizes that the Musquodoboit Valley railway has been upon the tapis in that province and has been discussed at every election during the past thirty years. It is a magnificent fertile valley, the building of the road will open up a fine country and I see no ground whatever for any complaint in regard to the construction of this road.

In conclusion I can only say to my hon. friend from Guysborough and my hon. friend from North Cape Breton and Victoria that the claims of their counties in respect of these matters will receive the careful and earnest consideration of the government, but that they must remember that everything cannot be done in one year or at one session.

Mr. KYTE. Perhaps this would be an oportune time to receive a declaration from the right hon. the leader of the government with respect to the question of acquiring branch railways in the maritime provinces. That question has been closely associated with the question of extending the Intercolonial railway. The agitation for the construction of branches in the counties of Halifax and Guysborough has not been more active or earnest than that for the acquiring of branch lines in the maritime provinces. I will be glad if the Prime Minister will be good enough to say whether we are to hope that at an early date this government will carry out the policy adopted by the late government in respect to that matter. The present government obtained power largely on a policy of leaving well enough alone and the people of the maritime provinces would be very much disappointed if the policy adopted by the late government in regard to branch railways was not let alone and carried out without change. I was somewhat disappointed at the declaration made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) a few days ago on this point, when he said that only such railways as would be feeders to the Intercolonial railway could be taken over and not such railways as would be milkers. The Intercolonial railway has been a milker of the green spots of the maritime provinces for a good many years. The most profitable and prosperous districts have been tapped by it and it has obtained business from these portions of the maritime provinces. Thus it could scarcely be expected that private capital could be got to come in and supply the unprofitable sections of the country with railways, and I deem it the duty of the government in the line of the policy of a generous expenditure with respect to railway and canal operations in other parts of Canada, to pay some attention to this important matter and at an early date to give some assurance to the people of the maritime provinces that the branch railways will be acquired on the lines of the policy laid down by the late governement.

Mr. BORDEN. I might inform my hon. friend of a circumstance that does not seem to have been brought to his attention, that under the policy announced by the late government and put in the form of a statute, which is still in force, I do not think that any one of the branch lines to which he alludes could be taken over. I think the terms fixed in that statute would probably prevent any one of these branch lines being taken over. The terms of the statute, as the hon. gentleman knows, are very severe and stringent. When the hon. gentleman asks whether there is any hope, I can only reply to him in the words of the old adage, that while there is life there is hope, and there is probably good hope now since a progressive government is upon the treasury benches.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understood the Minister of Railways to say that he had some figures in his possession which indicated that the Guysborough branch line was not a good commercial venture. If he has such figures, I would ask if he would place them on the table of the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. I said there were no figures in the department on which I could base that claim.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Before you leave the Chair, I would like to say a word or two with regard to the subject which my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has brought to the attention of the House. The proposition to build this railway to Guysborough was one which, in the last parliament ,received the unqualified approval of the then leader of the opposition. As he has told us himself to-night, he supported the resolution moved by the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) on this question of railway extension in Nova Scotia. I can remember the right hon. gentleman declaring in the most emphatic tones that it was the bounden duty of the government then to proceed with the construction of these railways in eastern Nova Scotia. Why has the right hon. gentleman adopted different tactics? Why does he come here now, when he has the power to implement his studied and measured statement of a year ago, when he has the responsibility in his own hands, and deliberately refuse to carry out the promises he then gave to the country, and upon which he and his supporters in the county of Guysborough canvassed during the last election? He was not satisfied with declaring to this House the necessity of the construction of that railway into Gusborough; but when he came before the people of Nova Scotia and asked for their support in the election, he issued a manifesto in which he declared that he and his party were pledged irrevocably to the construction of this railway. Why does he hesitate to implement that promise to-day? He has a surplus, I am told, which runs into tens of millions, he has ample money left him as a result of the wise administration of the last government. The last government, had they remained in power with the money at their disposal which the hon. gentleman has, would have gone on and built that railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why was not the contract for the whole road let, instead of only a little bit of it?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend need not try to escape from the responsibility by saying that only a part of it was let. Let us see where the Minister of Railways stands with regard to this proposition. Let us see what the late government did with the support of the then leader of the opposition. They proceeded to purchase a line of railway from Eureka to Sunnybrae, from the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, among the directors of which are a number of the friends of my friends opposite, who have come to the leader of the government and the Minister of Railways and asked them to continue the construction of the railway. My hon. friend knows that they proceeded to call for tenders for the construction of another portion of the railway, these tenders were received, and a contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. Now, the present Minister of Railways comes along and tells us we will disregard the purchase of this railway from the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, we will disregard the tenders that were called for, because the late government did not let the contract for the whole line. My hon. friend's excuse is not good enough; he is trying to escape from the responsibility which falls upon him. They say down in Nova Scotia, even the friends of the hon. gentleman himself, that he is one of those gentlemen who regard the maritime provinces as an incubus upon the Dominion.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman has no right to make any such assertion.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am only telling you what the hon. gentleman's friends say in Nova Scotia in regard to it. I am not saying my hon friend the Minister of Railways made that statement, but by their fruits ye shall know them. My hon. friend is trying to escape from the policy which was laid down by his leader, and to which he pledged himself in this House, and upon which he and his friends went before the people in Nova Scotia asking for support. Now we are told that nothing is to be done because the late government did not let a contract for the whole road. That answer won't go with his friends in Nova Scotia. Then the leader of the government tells us to-night: If you will wait some time in the future, perchance this railway will be built. Is that to be the way all the promises made by the right hon. gentleman in opposition are to be fulfilled? Is the answer to all these various propositions to be that some time in the sweet bye-and-bye we will build the railway and we will provide all these sums of money that we assured you would be spent? Is the Minister of Railways to be the medium of carrying out the promises of his leader, or of attempting to see how he can avoid carrying them out? The Minister of Railways apparently is in the position before this House, and this country to-day of trying to find an excuse for not carrying out the promises of his leader. That is a very humiliating position to be in, Mr. Speaker. Either this railway in Guysborough county is required, or it is not. The Minister of Railways knows that a delegation of his own friends from eastern Nova Scotia waited on him in Halifax and pointed out how the greatest fisheries in the Dominion of Canada are barred from the markets of Canada, barred from that interprovincial trade which is said to be one essential in binding confederation together. My hon. friend's leader told us in the last parliament that they would remove that difficulty, and give the people railway communication. Yet to-night the Minister of Railways tells us that they are not going to do anything of the kind. Perhaps if you will be good boys, sometime in the future we will do something for you. That is practically the position. I want to say that the right hon. leader of this government came to Nova Scotia, and when the question was raised as to his position in regard to this railway matter, did he say, as his minister says to-day: We are not going to build this railway because the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not call for tenders for the whole of it?

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not say that.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then all I have to say is that the Minister of Railways was trying to say something like that, perhaps he did not succeed in doing it. Apparently both he and his leader are taking the position that they are not going to do anything now. My hon. friend disclaims that as being a reason, but if it is not there is no other reason. On the eve of the last election his leader, in the manifesto issued to the people in Nova Scotia, gave his word of honour that if he and his party came into power they would construct this railway. Now they propose to build this railway in the Prime Minister's constituency, which will run up into the woods and stop there, without giving any communication to the fishing industries of Nova Scotia, and will fail to supply the great fishing industry on the banks of the south portion of Nova Scotia a means of access to the Canadian market. Let it be understood that that is the result of the declaration of the government in regard to this matter to-night. The right hon. leader of this government stands in this position, that he has falsified his position taken up in the last session, and falsified his promise to the people of Nova Scotia on the eve of the last election.

Mr. CROTHERS. Those of us who have listened to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) for several years, are not surprised at the very eloquent speech he has made, based upon absolutely nothing. The right hon. the Prime Minister told this House a few minutes ago that he was in favour of the construction of this railway, the Minister of Railways said in substance that he was in favour of it. The Prime Minister said: We cannot do it all at once. Then my hon. friend from Pictou gets up and makes an eloquent speech of some length on the assumption that we never intend to build it. That is the logic of the speech delivered by my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Labour—Conciliation and Labour Act, including publication, printing, binding and distribution of the 'Labour Gazette,' and allowance to correspondents, $30,300.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) tell me why, without any reason, he has removed every correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette' in Nova Scotia?

Mr. ROGERS. We have had that to night already.

Mr. CROTHERS. What was the hon. gentleman's question?

Mr. MACDONALD. Would the Minister of Labour tell me why he has removed the correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette' in the county of Pictou?

Mr. CROTHERS. What is his name?

Mr. MACDONALD. Thomas Hale.

Mr. CROTHERS. If my hon. friend had been in the House this afternoon, instead of being away where he should not have been perhaps, he would have heard this whole matter discussed. As a matter of fact, Mr. Hale has not been dismissed.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am very glad to learn it. My information was to the contrary. I saw a statement in a local paper to that effect. I hope my hon friend will not dismiss Mr. Hale. If my hon. friend will give me the assurance that he will not be dismissed—

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Hale will be treated just as other correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette'. If my officer who has charge of the publication says that Mr. Hale is a good correspondent he will be retained.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is that the only qualification that my hon. friend requires? What does he consider constitutes qualification?

Mr. CROTHERS. There are several qualifications necessary. If my hon. friend had been here this afternoon he would have heard me state that when I got the report from the officer having charge of that publication on all the correspondents throughout Canada those that were reported as being incompetent, inefficient and careless were notified that they would not be required after the 1st of January. This was done without any reference to politics whatever. I did not know the politics of any one of them. Correspondents irrespective of their politics have been retained and nobody has been discharged except under circumstances I have mentioned.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am quite sure that the gentleman as to whom I have interrogated my hon. friend has been a most worthy correspondent, most satisfactory in every way and I hope that my hon. friend will deal with him solely on that basis.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These items have been taken up without any notice to this side of the House. We were all under the impression that the public works items would be considered. My hon. friend who represents Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), and who takes a very great interest in the labour movement, I am sure, would like to have been here while these items are under consideration. There is another matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the minister, and that is that the hon. member for Maisonneuve made a very courteous request, and a request which he had a perfect right to insist upon as a member of this House, that a list should be furnished of the names of the correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' who had been dismissed. I do think that my hon. friend the minister should comply with that request, and I think he ought to comply with it before asking the committee to pass the items which appear upon page 84. I submit to my hon. friend that that request is only reasonable and there are two good reasons for not going on with these items to-night. One is that we were informed that public works items would be under consideration, and, secondly, because the request of my hon. friend from Maisonneuve has not been complied with.

Mr. MONK. I was asked this afternoon to postpone consideration of the estimates of the Public Works Department on account of the absence of my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux).

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was only Quebec.

Mr. MONK. In regard to that, the officers of my department have been extremely busy, they are having the notes containing the information in regard to the items typewritten; the work is not altogether finished, but it will be ready to-morrow.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it would be better for the committee to rise if there is no other business ready.

Mr. MONK. There was no pledge that we would take up Public Works? In the statement made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), he said that Public Works or Customs, probably, would be taken up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The two were mentioned—Customs and Public Works. I referred to the fact that we were to have some information and some returns with regard to dismissals made by the Minister of Customs before proceeding further with estimates of that department, and then we all understood that Public Works would be taken up. These were the only departments which were mentioned, and I am sure that the hon. member for Maisonneuve—

Mr. MONK. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has been here; he is not here at the present time; he has made a request and this is the best way, with all courtesy and all reason, to enforce the request of any member upon this side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Here he is, now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, my hon. friend from Maisonneuve is now here and I will repeat in his presence what I have said, that we were given to understand that the items for consideration this evening would be in the estimates of the Department of Public Works. There was no notice that items in connection with the Labour Department would be taken up, and I think that the request of the hon. member for Maisonneuve should be complied with before these items are considered. If my hon. friend is willing to waive that request and go on with the consideration of these items without getting the information, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CROTHERS. I stated to my hon. friend from Maisonneuve this afternoon that I did not desire to expose to the public the names of those gentlemen who had been notified that their services would not be required after the 1st January.

An hon. MEMBER. That is absurd.

Mr. CROTHERS. I thank my hon. friend for saying it is absurd. I told the hon. gentleman that if he would take the responsibility of insisting on the publication of the names they would be published, but I did not understand him to take that responsibility. The hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) has now assumed that responsibility, and so I give the names:

Gustave Audet, Montreal, Que.
George Bartley, Vancouver, B.C.
J. A. Chenevert, Sorel, Que.
E. E. Cinq-Mars, Hull, Que.
F. A. Derman, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.
J. R. Falconer, Newcastle, N.B.
N. C. Franklin, Brockville, Ont.
J. F. Girard, Montreal, Que.
R. F. Gofton, Berlin, Ont.
Joseph Hanley, Belleville, Ont.
E. Little, Quebec, Que.
D. Mitchell, Windsor, Ont.
F. J. Nash, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
A. D. Pepin, St. Johns, Que.
A. D. Ross, Amherst, N.S.
J. A. Wiley, St. Catharines, Ont.

The main estimates last year provided for $27,300, and my predecessor found it necessary to put an additional sum of $3,000 in the supplementary estimates which have not yet been voted, so that we ask for $30,000, which is exactly the sum expended last year.

Mr. VERVILLE. Is it the intention to replace the dismissed men by men in the labour movement who have a thorough knowledge of labour conditions, or will lawyers and professional men be appointed who cannot possibly be competent for such duties? I can inform the minister that the only place it is possible to gather information on labour conditions, in the large centres especially, is through the different labour organizations, and it is very important that the minister should remember this. The fair wage officer generally goes to the labour temple in the large cities, and false information has never been given to him. It is just as important to the labouring men that this information should be correct as it is to the government and the 'Labour Gazette'. Of course, if the minister appoints incompetent men we shall very soon be able to discover that. He has announced that Mr. Audet and Mr. Girard have been dismissed in Montreal, and both happen to live in my riding which covers half the city. One is a carpenter, and the other a labourer, and Girard, who was a school teacher for eight years knows both languages and was competent to do the work. I do not ask the Minister of Labour to reappoint him because that is his business, and not mine, and no doubt the men who will get these places will be as good friends of mine as those dismissed. I am speaking now in the interests of the 'Gazette' when I ask that competent workingmen, and not professional men shall be appointed.

Mr. CROTHERS. Before appointing any correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette' I will take good care to satisfy myself that he is qualified for the duties I desire him to perform. I am not in a position to promise that correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' will be drawn from any particular class, but I will undertake to be responsible that they are competent men. If they prove to be incompetent I will see that their services are dispensed with.

Mr. MURPHY. Where is the 'Labour Gazette' now printed?

Mr. CROTHERS. The 'Labour Gazette' is printed for us in or by the Printing Bureau. We have nothing to say as to where it shall be printed. So far as I am concerned nothing has been done to change the place of printing.

Mr. MURPHY. Is the 'Gazette' actually printed at the Printing Bureau or in some establishment outside?

Mr. CROTHERS. When I first took office I understood it was not printed in the Printing Bureau and that under direction of my hon. friend (Mr. Murphy) it was printed in the 'Free Press' office in this city. I have heard, although I know nothing about it myself, that the printing has been changed from the 'Free Press' Company to another company in this city, but I have nothing to do with that. The Printing Bureau is supposed to do the printing for us and if any change is made it is made there.

Mr. MURPHY. Then we will get the information from the Secretary of State.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Secretary of State). I have no objection to giving all the information in my possession. Formerly the 'Labour Gazette' was not printed by contract, but was printed from month to month by the Ottawa 'Free Press.' The King's Printer informed me that other applications had been made to him to print it, one being by the Ottawa Printing Company. He told me he had informed himself as to the equipment of that establishment to handle the work and inasmuch as the company offered to print it at the same price that the Ottawa 'Free Press' was printing it at, he had my sanction to transfer the work from the 'Free Press' to the Ottawa Printing Company. I asked him if in his opinion he thought it would be necessary to call for tenders and he stated no, as he could testify that the prices were fair and reasonable, and, as a matter of fact, the prices instead of becoming lower since the work was given to the 'Free Press,' had actually gone up. He felt sure that if tenders were called he would not get it printed as cheaply as at present. Under the circumstances I gave my sanction to the work being transferred to the Ottawa Printing Company at the same price. There is no contract, and if at any time the work is not done satisfactorily to the King's Printer the arrangement can be changed.

Mr. MURPHY. I may say that the 'Labour Gazette' was not printed at the 'Free Press' under my instructions. It had been printed there for years before I came to the department and the work was continued there. But the fact that it was printed at the 'Free Press' and not at the Printing Bureau was a fertile subject for criticism by hon. gentlemen opposite when on this side. The hon. gentleman who used to lead these assaults on the former Minister of Labour is not in the House this evening; and as he is a personal friend of mine I shall not refer to his criticisms further, but shall content myself with reminding the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) that each time this estimate came up, there was an attack made on the late government for not having had the 'Gazette' printed at the Printing Bureau. Now, however, the contract is taken from the 'Free Press' and turned over to the Ottawa Printing Company without any tenders being asked for. This is just another evidence of the hollowness of the professions of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CROTHERS. The hon. gentleman objected to the word 'instructions,' but I understood that he was at the head of the Printing Bureau a number of years, and had control of the printing of the 'Labour Gazette.' The printing of the 'Labour Gazette' continued to be done by the 'Free Press' for years after my hon. friend became the head of the department, so I think I was not far astray in saying that it was done by his instructions.

Mr. MURPHY. It was not I who made the contract with the 'Free Press.' The contract was there and I continued it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What will be the cost of printing under the present contract?

Mr. ROCHE. That is impossible to tell because it varies from month to month. At any rate the cost will not vary much from that which we have been paying in years gone by.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is hardly a satisfactory answer. There is a rule governing all the departments, that where practicable, work shall be put up to public competition. I would like to hear the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) on this subject. During several sessions we were favoured with interesting speeches from him advocating public competition, and that not only printers friendly to the government, but also those opposed to the government should be given a chance to compete for the advertising. My hon. friend looks strong and healthy this session, and I am surprised that he has not yet opened his lips to offer any criticism upon any of the betrayals by the government of its professions, which we have brought to the attention of the House. I do not believe that, it would be possible for him to restrain himself when he finds a contract like this given absolutely without competition and without asking for any tenders.

Mr. MURPHY. Would the Secretary of State be kind enough to furnish us with the prices paid the 'Free Press' and those now being paid to the Ottawa Printing Company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As well as the total estimated cost for the year.

Mr. MURPHY. Who compose the Ottawa Printing Company?

Mr. ROCHE. I have no knowledge whatever.

Mr. MURPHY. Were the overtures made to the King's printer?

Mr. ROCHE. He, who, I presume, was the proprietor, had an interview with myself. I think his name is Mr. Boudreau or some such name as that. I do not know who compose the company.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). One of my townsmen, I notice, is in the unfortunate list of correspondents removed from office—Mr. Mitchell, a very respectable and intelligent mechanic—and I am very much surprised to find his name in the black list. What is the particular reason for his dismissal, and was his dismissal recommended by the chief executioner for that district who represents North Essex (Mr. Wilcox)?

Mr. CROTHERS. Mitchell's work was not satisfactory to the officer in charge of the 'Labour Gazette.'

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). In what respect?

Mr. CROTHERS. I cannot go into the particulars now.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Was his dismissal recommended by the hon. member for North Essex or entirely at the instance of the department?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have no recollection of receiving any communication from the hon. member for North Essex asking for the dismissal of this man. I know, however, that he was not dismissed on the request of any one, but for the reason I have given.

Mr. DEVLIN. As the hon. Secretary of State contemplates making changes in the printing, I would like to remind him that the city of Hull is very near Ottawa and that we have establishments there for printing, and he might save the country considerable expense if he would inquire from the printers of Hull how much they would charge to print the 'Labour Gazette.' He would no doubt have satisfactory work done in any one of these establishments.

Mr. McKENZIE. What is the circulation of the paper in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. CROTHERS. I am sorry that I cannot tell at this moment, but I may be able to give the information to-morrow.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has anything been done to push the circulation by agency or otherwise?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find by the Auditor General's Report of last year that 184,000 copies were published and the cost ran very close to $17,000. Does the hon. minister think it right to hand over to a company, presumably friendly to the government, printing to this extent without taking the least trouble to obtain tenders? It is a very large order, and it seems to me that it is one in regard to which my hon. friend ought to have called for tenders, if not in a public way, at least by circulars issued to the different offices.

Mr. CARROLL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour if it is his intention or the intention of the government to introduce this session any amendment to the so-called Lemieux Act, especially the concilation part of it. The reason I ask this is that for many years past in this House, and on the hustings hon. gentlemen opposite criticised that Act very adversely.

Mr. CROTHERS. I have been considering very carefully the various provisions of the Lemieux Act with a view to improving its provisions, but I have not yet reached a conclusion, and it is not my intention to recommend to the government to introduce any amendments to that Act during the present session.

Mr. MURPHY. If the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor), were in the House, he would be certain to ask the hon. Secretary of State if the Ottawa Printing Company were a union office. In his absence I beg to ask that question.

Mr. ROCHE. I know nothing whatever about the Ottawa Printing Company, whether it is a union office or not.

Mr. MURPHY. May I ask if the Ottawa Printing Company was recommended to the Secretary of State by the Ottawa members, or either of them?

Mr. ROCHE. I presume that the Ottawa members did recommend the Ottawa Printing Company.

Mr. DEVLIN.

Mr. EMMERSON. This parliament during the last three or four years, passed an Act which prohibited any department giving any such order without first asking for public tenders. I would ask the Secretary of State if he is familiar with the passage of such an Act, which apparently has been disregarded, not only in the present instance, but in the action taken by his predecessor in office.

Mr. ROCHE. I am aware of the provisions of the Act to which the hon. member refers, but I presume that the government preceding this government did not look on this arrangement in the light of a contract that would come under those provisions, because it made an arrangement with the Ottawa Free Press Company to print the 'Labour Gazette' from month to month, and that arrangement could be terminated at any time possibly before the $5,000 would be reached. But I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member for Westmorland, and the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works should be so shocked at the idea of this government handing over the printing of the 'Labour Gazette' to the Ottawa Printing Company, in view of the fact that no word of criticism emanated from either of them when the government of which the ex-Minister of Public Works was a member made a contract, if contract it was, with the Ottawa Free Press Company for printing the 'Labour Gazette.' I am confident that if the Ottawa Free Press Company were still printing the 'Labour Gazette,' we would not have heard a word of remonstrance here.

Mr. EMMERSON. I may have been a member of the government when such a contract was entered into. If I have sinned, that certainly would be no justification for my hon. friend; but, in the light of the professions of my hon. friend and of those who surrounded him during the past few years, professions to which I have often listened to with admiration, I would naturally have expected that they at least would not have followed in the footsteps of their sinning predecessors.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Secretary of State if he does not think that for the printing of the 'Labour Gazette,' involving for 1913, an expenditure of $30,000, he should have asked for tenders. He must surely admit that he is skating on very thin ice when he seeks to overcome the principle of the Act referred to by dealing with the whole thing as a monthly expenditure. I do not think it is very important what the late Secretary of State did in this connection. If he did what the present Secretary of State proposes doing, he did wrong. Possibly the matter never came to the attention of the committee just in this light. I do not think the Minister of Labour should get this vote until either he or the Secretary of State states that for the fiscal year 1913, he proposes to ask for tenders.

Mr. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman has entirely exaggerated the situation. The publication of the 'Labour Gazette' does not involve an expenditure of $30,000. All the expenditure connected with the Conciliation and Labour Act, and the allowance to correspondents is included in the vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not the printing of the 'Labour Gazette' come to very nearly $17,000?

Mr. ROCHE. I cannot tell, for the reason that it is not let by contract for the year, but the expenditure varies from month to month. Of course, I assume responsibility for this as Secretary of State, but I am not a practical printer.

I did ask the King's Printer, a practical man appointed by the late government, whether in his opinion it was necessary to call for tenders, and he stated he did not think it was, that he could quite justify the expenditure, and that if he called for tenders, the work must be printed in this city anyway, and we could not have it done at as low a rate. I am not condemning the expenditure on the 'Labour Gazette' in years gone by, but as it is from month to month, and I had the advice of the King's Printer that it was not necessary to call for tenders, I was guided by his advice, and merely transferred the work to another establishment at the same rate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend remember that within a year or two this question came up in the House upon a motion, made, I think, by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asking this House to declare that as far as possible all work should be let by public competition, and was not that resolution unanimously passed?

Mr. MONK. Was it acted upon?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and acted upon continuously in the Department of Public Works, and I think my hon. friend is acting upon it to-day in that department. It is the law, as the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) says, that no contract for any public work involving an expenditure of more than $5,000 can be made except after public competition except in two cases, one where in the opinion of the chief engineer or the chief architect of the department the work can more properly be done by employees of the department or in cases of extreme urgency where in the opinion of the chief engineer or the chief architect it is in the public interest that it should be done without calling for tenders. The House, if I am not mistaken, affirmed clearly that that principle should govern in all the public departments. It was urged by hon. gentlemen opposite, and was concurred in by the members upon the then government side of the House, that what are known as patronage lists should be done away with, and that in all cases of obtaining supplies for the government there should be public competition, either an advertisement should be published in the newspapers inviting competition or circulars should be sent around to different people in a particular city where the supplies were to be obtained asking their prices. I think we ought to treat this matter with a good deal of earnestness. This is the first time in the history of this new parliament that the matter has been brought to the attention of the House, it certainly is a very glaring case. The Secretary of State made up his mind that he would no longer allow the printing of the 'Labour Gazette' to be done by the Ottawa 'Free Press' because those controlling the Ottawa 'Free Press' are Liberals. My hon. friend in defiance of the law, and of the express wish of the members on both sides of this House, has chosen to enter into a private contract involving the expenditure of about $17,000 a year for printing the 'Labour Gazette'. I ask him how he can justify that. It will not do for him to say that he gets it printed as cheaply as it was being printed by the Ottawa 'Free Press'. I do not know whether tenders were called when the contract was given to the 'Free Press', but I do know that very recently either in the last session or in the session before, both sides of the House expressed the view that work of any magnitude should only be done after public competition, that all patronage lists should be done away with, and that the government and all departments should endeavour to get the work done at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. MONK. Did not my hon. friend permit dredging to be done in the river Saguenay to the amount of $60,000 without tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders were called for the dredging work on the Saguenay, the work was not let without inviting public tenders.

Mr. MONK. It was done with my hon. friend's permission without any contract and the claim is there to-day for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend said it was done without calling for tenders? My recollection is that public tenders were invited for that work. The price was too high to accept, but we entered into communication with the lowest tenderers, and told them their tender was too high and they agreed to abide by a reduction which the department might make. They went on with the work because it was urgent and they came down to the figures recommended and agreed to by the departmental engineers. But that is a very different thing from doing work without tenders. The Secretary of State has not awarded this work to the lowest tenderer, as we did in the case of the Saguenay river, but has awarded this large contract of $17,000 a year to political friends upon the recommendation of the Conservative members for the city of Ottawa, as my hon. friend has said, and without inviting competition from any quarter, without giving the printers in Ottawa an opportunity of submitting prices. My hon. friend in that is not only violating the law as expressed in the statute, but he is disregarding the expressed view of members of this House as shown by the resolution in which both sides of the House agreed.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not think it is a good argument for the present Minister of Public Works to justify a contract of that kind without tenders simply because the ex-Minister of Public Works sinned in that way, as I have no doubt he did. No contract of this magnitude, $15,000, should go through without tenders. That is a good principle to stand by, and we should adhere to it, that nothing over $5,000 should be given out without tenders being called for in the usual way. The Minister of Public Works said his predecessor had done this.

Mr. MONK. That was in answer to the boasts that were made. I would be quite ready to bring down lists of work done without tenders if that is called for.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Even if there were such cases, that is no excuse for you doing the same thing. We will admit that my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) made mistakes, but after the professions made by the gentlemen now in power they should adhere to the principle and I for one cannot vote for this item unless we have an assurance that tenders will be called for later on if it cannot be done now.

Mr. BRADBURY. What effect did it have when the House expressed itself in that way? How often was the principle violated by the late government?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is the old story again, you do as badly as we did. I cannot vote for an item of that kind unless the minister says that tenders will be called for.

If it cannot be done just now, he may say it will be done later. But the principle is there, and on this side of the House we always stand for principle.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. CROTHERS. I think it is very doubtful whether the strict meaning of the statute referred to by the ex-Minister of Public Works has in any way been violated. I remember distinctly when I took charge of the department that I asked my deputy, trying to familiarize myself with the work of the department, where the 'Labour Gazette' was printed, and he told me it was printed by the Ottawa 'Free Press.' I asked him if there was a contract, and he said he did not know, but he would write to the King's Printer. He wrote to the King's Printer, and got word back that there was no contract, that the work was being paid for month by month at so much per page, costing $1,200 or $1,500 a month. So there was no contract. I was told at the time that it would be wise to leave it where it was, because if we were to advertise for tenders it would cost us a great deal more. I laid the matter aside for further consideration; I was not called upon to consider it afterwards. There seems to be no contract except month by month. as I was advised by the King's Printer. We pay them, as I understand, so much an em, which varies according to the size of the monthly publication, and according to the number of copies disposed of from month to month. Their contract is really only for one month at a time, and is less than $1,500.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Will the minister say that he will call for tenders?

Mr. CROTHERS. My hon. friend was probably out of the House. If he had heard this whole discussion, he would know that I have nothing to do with the printing of the 'Labour Gazette.' It is being printed by the Printing Bureau.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is very clever. I will ask the hon. the Secretary of State if it is his intention to call for tenders for printing the 'Labour Gazette' in the future.

Mr. ROCHE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if the work is not being done satisfactorily, either at excessive prices or otherwise in an unsatisfactory manner, certainly tenders will be called for, since the hon. gentleman insists upon it. But if we have to pay higher prices the responsibility must devolve on the other side of the House. But at the same time, owing to representations made to myself by the King's Printer I did not look upon it in the light of a contract. It is a monthly arrangement, and I do not think it comes at all within the provision that the ex-Minister of Public Works has stated.

Mr. MURPHY. I have a great deal of sympathy with my hon. friend. I hope he will not think I am unduly insistent if I ask him further whether he knows that the 'Labour Gazette' is printed in the office of the Ottawa Printing Co. or outside; in other words, if he knows whether the Ottawa Printing Co. has the plant necessary to do this work?

Mr. ROCHE. That is the very point on which I satisfied myself personally. I had an interview with the proprietor and asked him if his office was sufficiently equipped to do that work within his own office, and he said it was. I advised him to see the King's Printer, and he did, and satisfied the King's Printer to the same effect. I am not aware that the work is done outside, I do not think it is.

Mr. MURPHY. Would my hon. friend be good enough, when he submits the comparative prices of the Ottawa 'Free Press' and the Ottawa Printing Co., to submit this very information.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I intend to vote against this item unless the hon. gentleman will say that for the future he will ask for tenders. A principle is at stake. I do not wish unnecessarily to embarrass him, let him take his time, but the principle must stand. We have got to have tenders called for any contract of that kind.

Mr. CURRIE. It does appear to me that the whole trouble in this case is that the work has been taken away from a good Grit institution and given to somebody else. The hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) is very insistent on his view. I understand that one of the largest political bodies in Montreal that controlled the expenditure of thousands of dollars during the régime of hon, gentlemen opposite, never for a moment gave a Conservative any consideration at all, but gave all their work to good Grits. Then the moment there is a change of government, the cry goes forth, 'if a Tory wants to get any work, or tender for any work, oh, there is politics in this; that is a Tory politician, you cannot give the work to him; you will have to give it to a non-partisan Grit.' That is the system they want adopted. I think we had better let hon. gentlemen opposite run the country and control all the patronage; let them do everything in connection with the government. But no hon. gentleman have forgotten the old days when the gentleman that to-night leads the opposition used to stand up here and proclaim boldly that the government of the country was run just according to the way they wanted it run on this side and not according to the way we wanted it run, and that if there was anything good going they would take good care it was the Grits that got it and not the Tories. It is not many moons since I heard the leader of the opposition declare: 'Gentlemen, you take care of the Tories, and I will take care of the Grits.' Now when we start in to take care of the Tories, what happens? Why, hon. gentlemen across the floor, whose escapades with reference to sawdust wharfs we all know, and who gave contracts in certain cases after the work was done, have the audacity to get up and tell us, Oh, this is a terrible thing! Why, you are giving this work out without calling for tenders! Well, now, I happen to be a practical printer. I used to be one, and know a little about the business, and I know that it is one of the most surprising things in connection with this system how well a number of Grit printers have thrived in this city of Ottawa. We have some who went 'stoney-broke' in Toronto, good Liberals, who came down and started printing offices in Ottawa, and in a few years they were riding in automobiles. But now, when some poor unfortunate Tory has had the audacity to offer to do some printing for this government, the late Minister of Public Works, who was the grand almoner of the Liberal party, finds his dignity offended, and he says there must be tenders called for. To my mind, knowing the business as I do, knowing that from month to month changes are required in the printing forms, knowing that from month to month the kind of type that is used is different, and that the number of pages in the 'Labour Gazette' is different, the only thing the government can do is to ask for tenders or ask for a price on each publication; and if you ask for a price on each publication the price does not come anywhere near $5,000. I hope the day will come when hon. gentlemen will cease all this wild cry about keeping the patronage for the Liberal party. Let them become reconciled to the fact that they are now in the cold shades of opposition. Let them be 'sports' and not die-hards. Let them take things easy. If a Liberal does lose his head, don't let them get excited over it. It is very amusing to hear them say: 'Don't give one dollar's worth of business to a Tory, nor get it done in a Tory office. Tories are not worthy of it. Only those gentlemen who have so long sat at the feet of the present leader of the opposition are fit to get a dollar of business from this country.'

Let us look at this question in a commonsense way. The government has come into office and it is endeavouring to carry on the business of the country to the best of its ability. Let us give a little bit of work to the Tories. Do not let hon. gentlemen opposite have all of the patronage for the next ten or fifteen years and we will get on much easier in this House and the time of the House will not be wasted. I think the explanations given have been sufficient. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) is very inconsistent. When an opening occurs in Montreal, shall it go to a Tory? Oh, no not for a minute. When a Tory applies for an office on the water-front he says to him: You are a politican, you cannot have this office; only Grits who are not politicians shall be allowed to get office.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the water-power.

Mr. CURRIE. I forgot to mention that. Only Grits should get any of the water power of the St. Lawrence river across from Montreal. Now, Mr. chairman, let us give up all this nonsense—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE. Yes. Let hon. gentlemen accept the situation gracefully. Let them be goods sports and not waste the time of the House crying aloud for reforms that for years were brought to their attention and which they persistently refused to adopt. Let them give the government a chance to look into these things.

Mr. McKENZIE. The question is whether there is such a statute as that which my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has brought to the notice of the committee or whether there is not. I accept the law as he states it. I am not familiar with the statute. The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) says there is such a law. A few days ago there was some criticism about the construction of the tariff law of this country. We said that a generous construction should be given to that statute. What were we told? We were told by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid), by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) and others, that any law that is upon the statute-book must be observed while it is there and that if it is bearing hard upon anybody let it be amended. But, for me and my house, says the Minister of Customs, backed up by every Tory on the other side while the law is there it should be observed to the letter. That is the construction, the doctrine, the theology of hon. gentlemen opposite. Why not now be manly enough to stand to it? I ask the hon. member for Simcoe has he a new doctrine when that does not suit him? That was the doctrine in its application to the construction of the tariff law of this country. Now, there happens to be a law which says that any work which exceeds $5,000 must be put up for tender and contract. I submit to the Minister of Labour and to the Secretary of State, both of whose departments seem to be involved in this thing, that they cannot avoid the operation of the statute by making twelve pieces of a contract. That is a violation of the law.

Mr. CURRIE. Why did hon. gentlemen opposite violate it for ten or fifteen years?

Mr. McKENZIE. I care nothing about that. I am talking about the violation of the statute and we have evidence of it before us now. We have no evidence that anything of the kind was done before. We have now the admitted fact that it is the purpose of the Secretary of State to make twelve pieces of a contract in order to get clear of the operation of a statute solemnly passed in this House. He cannot do it any more than he can divide up his claim in a suit at law in order to get into a court of lower jurisdiction.

Mr. CURRIE. If the Secretary of State cannot do it now, how in the world did the Secretary of State who sits across there do it before?

Mr. McKENZIE. Supposing my hon. friend steals something, which, of course, he would not do——

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McKENZIE. —which of course he would not do——

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has sat in a court of law as judge, and he knows there is no such thing as supposing. Nothing but facts have weight there.

Mr. McKENZIE. But supposing he did. You will get through very much quicker if you will leave me alone.

Mr. CURRIE. I do not know; we are in no hurry.

Mr. McKENZIE. I was going to say that if a person is put in the criminal dock charged with a violation of the criminal law, would it do for him to say to the prosecuting counsel: You are guilty of the same thing that you have charged me with? Is that an answer that a judge would take cognizance of? Is that an answer to the jury or is that a ground upon which you can expect to be acquitted? It is nothing of the kind because it would be ridiculous to put forward such an argument and it is equally ridiculous here, in a new parliament fresh from the people, especially in view of the pledges of honesty and good government which hon. gentlemen made to the country. I submit, Sir, that there is a statute which requires that it shall be observed in a certain way, and I appeal again to my honest and hon. friend the Secretary of State, for whom I have the greatest regard, and whose intentions, I believe, are good, not to be led away with the idea that he can make twelve pieces of this contract in order to escape the statute. He cannot do it. He cannot escape responsibility in that way. I want in this way to bring to the notice of the Auditor General, if he ever reads the debates of this House, that this country expects some safeguards from him, a fact which I believe, in some instances, he seems to have forgotten. The people have been told that it is the duty of that officer to scruntinze the payment of money out of the public exchequer, and they expect that the Auditor General will see to it that the provisions of these statutes are observed to the letter before the money is paid. I call his attention to the fact, as it may come to his ears, that he should see to it that the cost of printing this book should not be paid out of the exchequer unless the law governing such contracts is fairly and strictly observed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is very desirable that hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member for one of the Simcoes who, to our edification and delight, shows that he knows a little of everything and is not troubled with any great knowledge on any one thing—

Mr. CURRIE. Perhaps you would like me to give some of your history here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it might be well to place upon 'Hansard' the statute which clearly bears upon this question. It will be found in the Revised Statutes of Canada, volume 1, page 660, and it is section 36 of chapter 39:

Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases—

(a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or

(b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; or,

(c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000 and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

Then subsection 2 provides:

2. Whenever in case of any work tenders are required to be or are invited, the minister having charge of the department concerned shall submit all tenders received therefor to the Governor in Council and the contract for the work shall be awarded under the direction of the Governor in Council.

Upon reflection the Secretary of State must perceive that he has violated the provisions of this statute. Does the minister pay so much a month or does he not pay according to the extent of the work which is done?

Mr. ROCHE. So much per page per month.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And he pays each month simply because the departments pay monthly. According to the argument of the minister, if this work involved $100,000 per year, he could let it without tender and say that the work is being done from day to day, thus getting rid of the law entirely. On the same principle you could let a contract to dredge out a harbour which would cost one million dollars and pay at the rate of so much per 100 cubic yards, and say that such a course was justifiable. This printing is to all intents and purposes a yearly contract, amounting to seventeen thousand dollars a year, and it is unquestionably an infringement of the law to let it without tender. I may say to the Minister of Labour that he was mistaken to-night in thinking that I used the word 'absurd' in reference to his remarks; that word was in connection with another matter I was speaking about to my hon. friend beside me, and of course I would not insult the hon. gentleman, but, I do say that it is absurd for any lawyer to contend that a contract cannot be given verbally just as well as if it were written, signed, sealed and delivered, and when the Secretary of State orders this printing to be done at a price of $17,000 per year, it virtually amounts to a contract. What we complain of, however, is, that in face of the statute and of the resolution moved by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and adopted by parliament condemning the partronage system and the awarding of contracts without tender, this contract involving $17,000 a year is let by the government in violation of that principle. The Public Works Department has always endeavoured to adhere to that rule in the past—the minister smiles at that.

Mr. MONK. Very much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister would smile at anything if he would smile at such a correct statement as that.

Mr. ARTHURS. Did you not violate that rule yourself when you gave the contractor for the Royal Victoria Museum $70,000 to finish the building, without calling for tenders. Did you not give as a reason in this House for doing that, that the contractor was losing money on the building and you thought it just to give him the balance of the work without tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong. Mr. Goodwin was the contractor for the whole building, and it was thought it would lead to very great inconvenience to have different sub-contractors for the plumbing and the electrical fitting and such work in the building, and on that account, the contract for these incidentals was given to Mr. Goodwin and that was in accordance with the provisions of the statute. Of course, in case of urgency, such as where a wharf has to be repaired quickly, time does not permit of calling for tenders.

Mr. MONK. The Timiscaming dam for instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that case tenders were called.

Mr. MONK. No, sir.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend had better take time to look into these matters before interrupting.

Mr. CURRIE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) is prepared to come to the Public Accounts Committee during the rest of the session to defend his accounts where he has given contracts without tender I can assure him that he will get plenty of opportunities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall not be afraid to go before the Public Accounts Committee or anywhere else to defend the awarding of contracts in my department. Does not the hon. member (Mr. Currie) think that it is a poor defence for the Secretary of State to offer when he says: You violated the statute and I am perfectly justified in doing the same? The members of the late government always endeavoured to keep within the law and we instructed the employees of the departments to keep within the law, but to-night the Secretary of State persists in a violation of the law when his attention is called to it, and he refuses the reasonable request of the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike) to assure the House that at a convenient time he will call for tenders for this printing.

My hon. friend declined to give that assurance, and it does seem to me as if our hon. friends opposite, coming here flushed with victory, really believe that the people will justify anything they may do, and will condone violations of the law, or any erratic course they choose to pursue. They will find, however, that the people are not in that mood, but that on the contrary they expect this government to improve, if they can, on the course followed by their predecessors. At all events they expect that when the attention of the government is called to a violation of the law, they will have sufficient respect for the statute to give the reasonable assurance asked for by the hon. member for St. Lawrence, and see that public tenders are called for.

Mr. CLARK (Bruce). I am somewhat surprised to find members of the late government condemning the present administration when it follows a precedent set by themselves. But what I want to call the attention of the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to is the fact that the assurance he asks for has already been given. He has been told by the Secretary of State that this is only a temporary arrangement which can be abandoned at any moment, and the Secretary of State has told him that if the arrangement does not work satisfactorily, new tenders will be called for and a new arrangement made. That surely ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not wish to embarrass the Secretary of State, but rather to assist him in every way possible, but I will not sit in this House and vote for any contract that is in violation of the statute. The statute requires that in the case of any expenditure over $5,000, tenders should be called for, and I shall vote against this item unless I get the assurance that this arrangement will cease, and tenders be called for.

Mr. MONK. Let me appeal to my hon. friend—we both come from the same part of the country. My hon. friends have come to the House to-night full of fight, and we have been working since three o'clock trying to advance the business of the session. Let me say that I do not agree that this is one of those expenditures on public works which fall within the law. It is work done under an arrangement from month to month, and the amount is lower than that fixed by the statute. In that view we are supported by the fact that the same method was followed a number of years ago by those gentlemen who are now criticising us. We have the assurance of the minister that he will observe the requirements of the law.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. He has not said so.

Mr. MONK. He has declared that if this printing done from month to month is not satisfactory, he will have it done differently. He has given an assurance which ought to satisfy my hon. friend, and I would ask him to allow us to make some progress in our work.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. My hon. friend knows that I would not press this matter further, if the Secretary of State would give us the assurance that he will not violate the law.

Mr. ROCHE. If I thought I was violating the law, I would not ask that this vote be sanctioned.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). A good deal of the opposition to this item is based on an entire misconception of the scope of the Statute. A contract from month to month, not exceeding $1,500 in any month, terminable at a month's notice or less, is not a contract to the amount of $5,000 which comes under the Statute. There is not a lawyer in this House who will say that such a contract, terminable at a day's notice, changeable at any time at the wish of the minister, is a contract amounting to $5,000. Therefore it is evident that, so far as the Statute is concerned, there is no violation of the law. I think everyone admits the general principle that where a substantial sum is involved, tenders should be called for. I do not dissent from the proposition that in the case of public works, involving an expenditure of $5,000 or over, tenders should be called for, unless the nature of the work otherwise requires, because there are works with regard to which no advantage would be gained by calling for tenders. But the point I desire to press on my hon. friend is this: My hon. friend, who is leading the House (Mr. Pugsley), is a good lawyer, but also a very clever advocate, and he can torture a statute about as well as any one I know when it is his interest to do so. I happen to be a member of the bar myself, and I am confident there is not a lawyer in the House who will say, as a matter of strict law, that a contract which is terminable from day to day, or week to week, and which does not involve in any one month an expenditure of over $1,500, is one which comes strictly within the Statute. In other words, the sum of $5,000 is not immediately involved, because the contract is terminable at any time, and the amount involved immediately is $1,500 or less. And in support of that view, I can point to the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite when in office. In doing this, I am not using the tu quoque argument, because that is not one on which I rely, but I say it is a fair argument to urge on behalf of our contention that it was one which was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite year after year while they were in office. What would they have said if we had urged the interpretation of the contract which they now adopt, and have insisted that they should call for tenders in this particular case? Would they not have said that the statute did not apply to any such contract?

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there such a contract as the minister states?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think there has been probably a misuse of terms in regard to a contract. Any agreement, verbal or written, is a contract; but what I think was meant was that no formal contract for a year or some other period of time was entered into. There is no doubt that an order given for work duly acted upon constitutes a contract.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there a specific contract which we could handle?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is only the document. That is not necessary to constitute a contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Can the hon. Secretary of State say whether there is a written contract?

Mr. ROCHE. There has been no written contract from the beginning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has there been a letter giving the order?

Mr. ROCHE. As to that I am not confident; but the King's Printer informed me that the arrangement could be terminated, if not satisfactory, at a month's notice. If it were a yearly contract, as the Minister of Public Works says, how could it be terminated at a month's notice?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, if it is satisfactory, it is not terminable at a month's notice.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend, I think, is quibbling a little as to that. If I hire a man at $5 a day, would my hon. friend argue that because I might by possibility continue to hire him for 2,000 days, this would involve a contract of $10,000? Let me ask my hon. friend in regard to an item for 1911-12, that appears in the estimates on page 7—the printing of Dominion notes, postage stamps and Inland Revenue stamps—a very large contract. Let me ask him whether since 1896 any tenders have been called for that work. In 1896, I understand, tenders were called for, but since that time the contract has been renewed from time to time without tenders being called. I am not too critical about that, but I want my hon. friend to be reasonable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend aware as to whether or not the contract which was awarded to the Bank Note Company after public tenders were called provided for an extension from time to time?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am not positive that it did not. As I say, I am not unduly critical about that, because that work is of an exceptional nature. Take a contract for stationery: I suppose it is a most common experience for a business house to get its supplies from some concern that knows its wants. The contract for the printing of Dominion notes and stamps involved last year $175,000, and for years no tenders have been called for in connection with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But my hon. friend is going to call for tenders.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The contract expires in October next, and we are going, if we can, to make a five years' contract, and we are calling for tenders, on account of the large amount involved. The point I am making is that hon. gentlemen opposite have interpreted this statute in the past differently from what they have done to-night. That is confirmed by the fact that the company that did the work before was given it without tenders being called for, as I understand. On all these grounds I say that they have succeeded in making a great deal of smoke where no fire exists, and have gone out of their way in regard to a comparatively minor item to bring a charge against the government in connection with the giving of work strictly in conformity with the statute and along the lines of its previous interpretation by themselves.

Mr. OLIVER. I agree with the Minister of Finance that this question of itself is not of serious importance, but I must draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the position taken by our friends on the government side makes it a question of very serious importance. When we see every kind of argument brought forward, from the strictly legal one to the 'you're another,' all in defence of a procedure which admittedly is not in accordance with the best principles of carrying on the public business, our friends are putting themselves in a very unfortunate position before the country. What difference does it make what the late government did in this matter? Our friends on the other side are there to say from time to time that the late government did wrong. They have no hesitation whatever in changing the policy of the late government in many important respects, and I submit that it is not for them to raise as a defence for their action that the late government did the same thing. If they are going to follow the policy of the late government in everything, their argument is good; but if they are going to reject the policy of the late government in things of the highest importance, I submit that they cannot raise the defence that the late government did thus and so. We are here as they are there for the purpose of transacting the business of the country in the best way, and if something done in the past has not been done in the best way, no matter by whom it was done, we are here, we on this side as well as they on the other side, to have it done in a better way. Now, as a practical printer, I want to say that it is not economical to handle the printing business in this way. There is all the difference in the world as a practical proposition between the letting of a contract for the printing of the 'Labour Gazette' and the letting of the contract for the printing of the notes and stamps required by this country. There is only one institution in the country that can fulfil the latter contract.

Mr. AMES. That is if the work of all the departments is to be given under the one contract.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

Mr. AMES. But if the work of each department is to be given separately there is more than one firm able to do it.

Mr. OLIVER. My statement stands as I make it, it is correct and must be admitted to be so. The Minister of Finance is no doubt taking the proper course in advertising for tenders for notes and stamps. The difference is great between that and an ordinary piece of printing. There are a thousand institutions in Canada which could print the 'Labour Gazette.' If the Printing Bureau is too crowded to do it, it must go outside, and I submit that the contract for the printing of that paper should be a yearly contract and should be let by public tender. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been defending an action which is indefensible as a business proposition on legal grounds on the one hand and on the other hand on the bald, plain ground that it was right and proper that the public money should be paid to the friends of the government for services to be rendered as required. Hon. gentlemen will vote for that principle when the committee is divided.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Minister of Finance has taken exception to my interpretation of the Act. My hon. friend said that the Bill does not apply to this case, and that no good lawyer will say so. He says that this work does not come within the meaning of the works mentioned in the Act.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No, I said it might be argued. I was arguing on the ground that it did not come under the $5,000 clause.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend would thereby throw a doubt on the point I have raised.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). And I think it is reasonable to do so.

Mr. EMMERSON. The section is No. 36 in the Act respecting the Public Works of Canada. The second section of the Act says:

This Act is divided into two parts. Part 1 applies exclusively to the Department of Public Works and the public works and property under the control of that department. Part 2 is not by this section limited in its application.

Section 36 is incorporated under part 2 of the Act and it says:

Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders.

With the exceptions therein referred to, I hold that this particular work comes within the meaning of that section. I hold that the 'Labour Gazette' must be printed for the year under contract and that it must be printed in Ottawa. That contract must be approved of by the Governor in Council and I hold that where the amount exceeds $5,000 it must be made the subject matter of an order in council. Admittedly this has not been made the subject matter of an order in council, and in that my hon. friend is not following the law. No publishing house in Canada would take this work from month to month at as low a figure as it would on a yearly contract. It must have been understood in making this contract that this work was to cover a period of 12 months. I am not a stickler for doing every work under contract.

As the Minister of Finance says, there should be reason applied in all these things. If the Secretary of State were to say that this work is of a nature that could be better done without tender and contract, I would concur in the idea. The same with respect to work that is done in the Department of Railways. Take the preparation and publication of the time-table. That work must be done in one particular place, and as near the headquarters of the railway as possible. I am not making a factious opposition to this vote. If the minister holds that this is a contract from month to month, and that it should be acted upon, either by individual tender, or by an order in council I would say that he was taking the proper course.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). I would like to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), when he was Minister of Public Works, and constructed the new wing of the parliament building, the original contract let by tender amounted to something like $250,000, and in addition to that there were items amounting to $237,000, for which no tenders were invited at all. It seems to me that upon this small item the ex-Minister of Public Works is showing a high degree of sensitiveness. It seems to me that when he let the enormous amount of $237,000, in connection with the erection of the new wing without contracts, he should not be so supersensitive in connection with this vote. Just for the information of the House, I desire to place upon 'Hansard' the proceedings of February 18, 1909, on an item for additions and alterations to Ottawa parliament buildings:

Mr. AMES. Were not tenders invited for these additions? Were tenders invited for the elevators?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we decided that it is very much better to install the Otis-Fensom elevator as we believe their system to be the best. We have had some experience calling for tenders for elevators, and it was very unsatisfactory.

Mr. AMES. Then all the other $237,000 were given out without tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Without public tender.

Item voted on division.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What items will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MONK. We will dispose of the Bills which are on the Order Paper, and then go into Supply. We will be ready to take up the estimates of the Labour Department, some in Public Works, some in Marine and Fisheries, and some in the Interior.

On motion of Mr. Monk, House adjourned at 12 o'clock (midnight).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 19, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). On the calling of the orders of the day I beg to give notice that I will take an opportunity at an early day, on going into Supply, to discuss the railway question as it is in the country at present, and especially with a view of trying to get at the underlying principles connected with the railway situation in this country, in view of the inquiry to be made into the rates and other railway grievances by the Railway Commission.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 19) to amend the Inquiries Act. —Mr. Doherty.

THE PUBLIC ARCHIVES.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 66) respecting the Public Archives.—Mr. Borden.

On section 2,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is it the intention of my right hon. friend to have the department under the control of the Prime Minister?

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). Yes, at the present time. My right hon. friend will observe that a department is not being created, although the archivist is to have the rank and status of a deputy head.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that. The reason I put the question is that I have discussed the matter with the former Secretary of State, the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy), and he thought this department had better be under the Secretary of State. There are in the Department of State valuable archives, and they are being added to from year to year.

Mr. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman will observe that it is quite possible to do that by order in council. I shall be very glad to give attention to his suggestion, and it may be that that will prove to be the better course. I think that it will be necessary in the early future to make some addition to the archives building, as I am informed by the archivist that the present building is already taxed almost to its full capacity. He thinks the addition could be made without destroying the architectural symmetry of the building.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I rather think myself that it is a pity that the archives building was not planned on a larger scale, as the archives are likely to be added to from time to time by such a competent man as Mr. Doughty.

On the preamble:

Mr. MURPHY. I regret that I was not in my place when the reading of the sections of the Bill was begun. But, if I may be allowed at this stage, I desire to offer a suggestion to the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden). It seems to me that the Archives Branch would be much more properly placed in the State Department than attached to the Privy Council. The leader of the government is aware that the Department of State Act places in the charge of that department all state records. The Secretary of State is given a dual capacity. Section 5 provides:

> The Secretary of State shall be the Registrar General of Canada, and as such shall register all instruments of summons, proclamations, commissions, letters patent, letters patent of land, writs and other instruments and documents issued under the Great Seal, and all bonds, warrants of extradition, warrants for removal of prisoners, leases, releases, deeds of sale, surrenders, and all other instruments requiring registration.

The State Department is essentially a department of record, and the work of the department, and the work of the Archives Branch would seem to be intimately correlated. There are, I happen to know, a great many old and valuable records in the State Department, as well as other records not so old but of great national value. It seems to me that the Archives Branch would more properly fit in with the State Department than with the Privy Council, or in fact, with any other department. I think we may apprehend a good deal of confusion arising, and a good deal of unnecessary work being made if the Archives Branch is not placed in the State Department. That was brought home to me all the clearer when, the other day, my hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) brought down a return showing among other things the great variety of documents that are on record in his department, and of which he has custody as Registrar General. I bring this subject to the attention of the right hon. the leader of the government in case he has not considered it. I would point out that, in my opinion, unless the Archives Branch is placed in the State Department, it will be necessary to amend the Department of State Act to avoid the difficulties to which I have referred. I entirely approve of the Bill, and only offer these observations with the view to making it more workable, and carrying more thoroughly into effect the object which I know my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has in view.

Mr. BORDEN. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has already spoken along the same lines as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Murphy). I can only repeat to my hon. friend what I said to the leader of the opposition, that the suggestion is worthy of consideration, and will receive it. But the hon. gentleman will observe, that under clause 2 of the Bill, it is quite possible to change by order in council the department to which the Archives are assigned. I have not been able to give the subject all the consideration it deserves, probably. But the object of the Bill is, that as documents in the various departments of government cease to be required for the every-day purposes of public administration, they should be removed to a place of security in the Archives building, and classified so as to be easily accessible to those who may desire to consult them. I have here a memorandum, prepared by Dr. Doughty, giving an historical view for the past thirty or forty years of what has been done in this direction. From this memorandum, and from conversation with Dr. Doughty, I find that the documents in the Archives are useful not only to those engaged in historical research, but are found eminently useful from day to day for the purpose of determining questions in controversy in courts and in many other similar ways that will occur to hon. members. It seemed to me that the idea mainly to be kept in mind is that as these documents cease to be useful in the departments they should be removed, not only as a matter of convenience, but also for greater security. I am told, for instance, by the deputy of my own department, that there are thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, of documents in the upper story of the eastern block which are, and have been for a long time in danger of destruction should fire unfortunately break out in that building. No doubt the same is true of many other departments. The removal of such documents is provided for by the Bill, subject, of course, to the approval of the department concerned. In the meantime, the difficulty has arisen that the Archives building is altogether inadequate, so far as space is concerned, for this purpose. And I indicated before my hon. friend (Mr. Murphy) came in, that it might be desirable, and even necessary, in the early future, to undertake the erection of an addition to that building, which could be done, I think without any detriment to the symmetry of the structure as originally designed. I can only repeat in conclusion that the observations of my hon. friend are very pertinent indeed, and I will give them careful consideration.

Bill reported.

INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act by providing that when a person is a member of either House for more than thirty days during any session, though a member for part only of such session, he shall not be subject to any deduction from his sessional allowance for any day on which the House did not sit before he was elected or appointed, or after he ceased to be a member, as the case may be.—Mr. Doherty.

Mr. DOHERTY. The whole purpose of the Bill to be founded on this resolution is to insert in section 37 of the Senate and House of Commons Act the word 'sitting' before the word 'day.' That section at present provides that when any gentleman is elected or ceases to be a member of the House of Commons or appointed to, or ceases to be a member of the Senate during a session, and is consequently a member of either of said Houses for only a part of a session, which part, however, exceeds thirty days, he shall be entitled to his full indemnity less a deduction for each day of absence, and a further deduction of $15 for every day of the session that elapsed before his election or appointment, or after his ceasing to be a member of either of said Houses. The section that provides for absences of members provides for a deduction of $15 for absence on each sitting day. The effect of the provision with regard to gentlemen who become members of either House during a session, or who cease to be members during a session, is that a deduction of $15 is made for every day of the session before their election or appointment or after their ceasing to be such members without regard to whether the House sat or not. This in a number of cases has worked out so that hon. members of the Senate have been subject to a considerable deduction for days on which the Senate did not sit at all. In the last couple of cases the effect of the disposition was that two or three hon. gentlemen found themselves actually indebted to the country for the privilege of having been a senator for a part of the session, as the deduction of $15 for every day that elapsed before the appointment exceeded the entire amount of indemnity. I do not think that is a reasonable position. If these gentlemen had been members of the Senate and had been absent, they would only have had a deduction of $15 on each day the Senate sat. But to be subjected to a deduction of $15 for every day of the session before they were appointed, or after they ceased to be members, does not seem to be reasonable.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is the Bill retroactive?

Mr. DOHERTY. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I apprehend the object of my hon. friend's Bill, but I am not sure that the amendment is aptly expressed.

Mr. BORDEN. It amounts to this, that the deduction ordinarily is for every day on which the House sits. The deduction is made, not only in respect to every day before the appointment or election on which the House sits, but is made for every day whether the House sits or not.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 75) to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, including payment of members of board, witnesses, travelling expenses, &c., $25,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to make a few remarks in regard to the constitution of the Conciliation Boards at the present time, and I would suggest to the Minister of Labour that if he has in view any amendments to the Act he should consider the establishment of a permanent board to deal with the disputes under the Disputes and Industrial Investigation Act. I represent a constituency in which there are a great many miners. Nearly every day during the last four or five years, boards have been asked for in connection with disputes between the miners and operators, and the feeling has developed that the present operation of the Act is not satisfactory. I would like to point out the reasons to the Minister of Labour, and ask him to consider them. At present under the Act, the employees appoint one member for the board and the employers another member, and these members are partial to the side that appoints them. Then the Minister of Labour almost invariably appoints a chairman, because the other two members cannot agree on the chairman. This chairman may be impartial but he has no information on the issues that come before him, he is not acquainted with the technical side of the matter presented to him, and as a result his decision is often unsatisfactory, no matter which side he favours in his judgment.

Last year at a banquet in the city of Lethbridge I took occasion to advocate the establishment of a permanent Board of Conciliation something along the lines of the Railway Commission, but operating as the present boards of conciliation do under the Lemieux Act. I felt that in that connection we would be able to get a board of men who would become thoroughly acquainted with questions affecting industrial disputes and there would not be so much trouble in having the parties to these disputes accept the judgment of the board as there has been in the past. In connection with mining many technical matters come up and a man really must be acquainted with the mining business in order to sit upon that board and consider the questions brought before him and decide in a way that would be satisfactory to one side or the other. When I made that suggestion in Lethbridge it was endorsed by some of the leading newspapers of the province of Alberta, and there is no province in this Dominion that is more interested in the proper working of the Lemieux Act than Alberta. A strike has just come to an end in that province which lasted for seven months. That strike was a very serious matter. I am perfectly satisfied with the existing Act in every respect except this that I believe there should be a permanent board. I would like to quote the opinions of a couple of newspapers in regard to a suggestion I then made of a permanent board of conciliation.

The Edmonton 'Journal,' a very strong supporter of the present government said:

Mr. W. A. Buchanan, of Lethbridge, made a very valuable suggestion the other day to the effect that the board of conciliation should be made a permanent one, instead of being appointed to deal with a particular trouble. This would, he believed, tend to give increased confidence on the part of both employers and employed in the working of the Act.

There can be no question of this. It would then be known by the parties to the controversy whom they would be dealing with. The board would be able to do better work as a result of larger experience and its prestige being increased, there would be less chance of action being taken contrary to its decisions.

The Calgary 'Herald' said:

Hon. W. A. Buchanan, of Lethbridge, expressed a sensible and courageous opinion at the Board of Trade banquet there, when he advocated a permanent board of arbitration for labour disputes. Such a tribunal, if similar to the railway commission would be very valuable.

The Calgary 'Albertan' at the same time endorsed the suggestion by saying:

The suggestion made by Hon. W. A. Buchanan that the commission for the investigation of strikes be made a permanent board, and not merely a temporary board, is a very good one. The objection made by the miners to arbitration in this instance was that they do not know who will be on the board, and are not inclined to refer to any person the settlement of technical questions. A permanent board would be much more valuable than a temporary board.

I quote these references not because they are endorsing a suggestion I made myself, but to impress upon the Minister of Labour that the idea is favoured in Alberta, and I believe generally in western Canada, and I hope the minister will consider this suggestion in connection with any changes he may make in the Lemieux Act.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is the minister contemplating making a change in the provisions of the Act?

Mr. CROTHERS. I think I answered that question yesterday by saying that I was considering the various provisions of the Act with a view to making improvements if I reached the conclusion that I could improve it, and also that it was not the intention to propose any amendment to the Act during the present session.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do I understand the minister's statement to mean that the department will not put into effect this session the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan)?

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes, I have considered very fully the change suggested by the member for Lethbridge and I have not reached the conclusion that it would be any advantage to make that change. I may be convinced of that hereafter.

Combines Investigation Act, $10,000.

Mr. MURPHY. How far has the inquiry into the United Shoe Machinery Company's business proceeded?

Mr. CROTHERS. A great deal of evidence has been taken both in Montreal and Quebec, but I have no knowledge how nearly through they are in taking the evidence.

Mr. MURPHY. I understood from the papers that there was some delay on account of some notice from the department, and that the proceedings were suspended.

Mr. CROTHERS. The proceedings were never suspended.

Mr. KNOWLES. Are there any representations in the department with a view to having an investigation as to an alleged combine in the retail lumber trade in the prairie provinces, and if so, does the minister propose taking any steps to have such alleged combine investigated?

Mr. CROTHERS. We have not had any such representations as my hon. friend refers to. The Minister of Labour has no power under the anti-Combines Bill to begin proceedings against anybody, or to initiate any investigation into combines. The anti-Combines Act provides that any six individuals may set it in motion, but not that the government can set it in motion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Has an investigation been applied for under the Combines Act in connection with the Davies Pork Packing Co.?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have no recollection of such application to us. Had it been made I would have pointed out that we have not the power to proceed under the Anti-Combines Act.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have representations been made as to the alleged combine in cement?

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not know that I have received such a communication directly, but I have heard there have been such charges. We have no power under the Anti-Combines Bill to take any action.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does the minister intend to improve the Combines Act or to change it in any way this session?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have no intention of suggesting any changes in the Anti-Combines Bill or any other Bill this session.

Mr. MACDONALD. This government possesses very prominently the characteristic of being unready in all things.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Except about dismissals.

Mr. MACDONALD. In my constituency in 1908 the chief issue against me was what my opponents described as this nefarious Lemieux Act which was passed by the Laurier government, and in the mining counties of Nova Scotia every Conservative candidate declared that the government, by that legislation, had interfered with the rights of the workingmen and promises were made that the moment they got into power that legislation would be swept away. In the last campaign, the Conservatives talked a good deal against the Combines Act, and promised its improvement, but here is their Minister of Labour in power for four months and though he does not seem to have been working very hard, he is only able to tell us that he is going to do nothing about it, and that he will take time to think. Well, thinking seems to be the chief occupation of this government, but it is time that they should give effect to some of the schemes they propounded in opposition. The Minister of Labour before he attained power was loudest in denouncing Mr. MacKenzie King, but now that the responsibility is upon himself, he proposes to do nothing and to be satisfied with the legislation he formerly denounced.

Mr. OLIVER. What part was taken by the Department of Labour in the settlement of the coal strike in Alberta?

Mr. CROTHERS. We did everything we could to effect an amicable settlement after the parties had refused to accept the award made by the Board appointed by the late government. Shortly after we came into power the Minister of the Interior told us he was going to Lethbridge on business of his own department, and I suggested that he might be able to assist the parties in arriving at an arrangement. I communicated with them and they answered thanking me for calling their attention to the fact that Mr. Rogers would be in Lethbridge, and I believe they met him and talked over the matter and a settlement was reached on general terms, and an agreement in writing was signed by the parties leaving some details for further arrangement, and these details were settled later. I do not remember now that he took any part except by way of correspondence.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is there any record in the department?

Mr. CROTHERS. There is the correspondence.

Mr. OLIVER. What time elapsed between the Minister of the Interior meeting the parties at Lethbridge and the date the coal strike was declared off?

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not remember exactly, but some days, and possibly some weeks, elapsed.

Mr. OLIVER. What principles were at stake in the dispute, and how was the agreement arrived at with respect to them?

Mr. CROTHERS. From recollection, the points in dispute were respecting wages, and also respecting the closed shop, particularly in its connection with the practice of the check-off. I think both sides accepted the finding of the board as to wages, but with respect to the leading difficulty between the men and their employers, I believe the board reported they were unable to get a definite statement from either party as to what they desired, and, therefore, could not reach a conclusion. The award was made before I came to the department, but I understand it was unsatisfactory in respect to the check-off.

Mr. OLIVER. What was the final settlement in regard to the check-off?

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is that it was agreed there should be something in the nature of a check-off. Under the system the men were required to sign a paper addressed to the employers authorizing them to deduct from their wages a certain amount and pay it into the union.

I understand that in some cases they have gone so far as to insist that the men should authorize their employers to take off a sum of their wages to pay the rent of the union buildings. In some cases they have even gone very much farther, and the men are required to sign papers authorizing their employers to pay a certain sum into the church. I do not think the men consented to all these conditions, but they did consent that a small sum should be docked off their monthly pay to meet the fees of the union.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there an agreement that the mines shall run under the closed or open shop system?

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is that there was no question as to the open or closed shop—at any rate not in these terms. I do not think that the settlement referred to an open or closed shop in these terms, but recognized that distinction to the extent of providing that a certain sum should be docked from the men's wages to pay the fees of the union.

Mr. OLIVER. On the order of the employees?

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes, in writing.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to have the view of the minister on the question of the International Union.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). Why not go further and ask him about socialism?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to ask him whether he would favour the restricting of the spreading throughout Canada of labour unions which have their headquarters in the United States.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not think that this is an opportune time to discuss that question.

Mr. MURPHY. Did I understand the hon. minister to say that the western coal strike was settled without the intervention of his department?

Mr. CROTHERS. I did not say so.

Mr. MURPHY. Was it settled without the intervention of his department?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have said what we did. There was a correspondence between us and the leaders of the different parties out there, I requested them to see my hon. colleague (Mr. Rogers). I understood that they did see him, and he succeeded in securing a settlement, and that settlement was signed. Now a settlement of that kind, I understand, is subject to the approval of the different local unions in the eighteen mining districts affected, and it took some time to submit the settlement to the various unions, and have their approval.

Mr. MURPHY. That is not the understanding I got from the despatch which was published in the 'Montreal Star,' dated 28th October, 1911. A telegram was sent to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers), by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), in these terms:

> Have succeeded in getting full and complete settlement of strike signed by both parties.

To that telegram the following reply was sent by the deputy minister, no doubt at the public expense, and was likewise published in the 'Star':

> I am directed by the Minister of Labour to convey to you his most cordial congratulations on the splendid success resulting from your efforts in the cause of industrial peace and thus bringing to a close the prolonged dispute in the western coal mines. I am also to request you will kindly convey the minister's best wishes to both parties and an expression of his desire that the settlement effected may bring a season of extended prosperity and good feeling.

Naturally upon reading these telegrams, one would conclude that the strike was then over and ended, but we are now given to understand by the Minister of Labour that he was misled by his colleagues and that these congratulations were extracted from him under a misapprehension.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask for what period the arrangement was signed? I assume that an arrangement was reached for some stated period.

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is two years from the 31st of March coming, but I may be wrong as to that.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say, so that there may not be any misapprehension as to our understanding of the matter, that my information is that my hon. friend is hardly correct in stating that the arrangement in its essential particulars was arrived at and signed on the intervention of the Minister of the Interior and that all that remained was to obtain the consent of the various local unions. My information is that for a long time—I cannot say how many days—after the visit of the Minister of the Interior, there were councils held between the two parties and that, as a matter of fact, an arrangement which could be submitted to the local unions was not arrived at until some weeks after the arrival there of the Minister of the Interior. Then after the men and the operators had finally come to a conclusion. there was still further delay, as my hon. friend has said, in order to secure the consent of the various local unions. Now the settlement of the strike was vitally important at that time for this reason: It was at the beginning of the winter when the whole country was depending upon the opening of these mines. The people had to lay in a supply of coal then if they were going to have protection against the rigours of the winter. They could get coal from the east if they ordered it in time; but if they could get coal from these western mines, they would be under no necessity to order it from the east, so that when my hon. friend announced to the country that the strike was settled, a large number of people, who otherwise would have ordered their coal from the east, did not do so. Consequently, as the strike was not then settled, these people were short of coal at the beginning of the winter, and unfortunately the winter set in with rather extraordinary rigour. That is all over now; and in one way it is not important even if my hon. friend or the Minister of the Interior thought they had settled the strike when they had not. But I take the liberty of warning my hon. friend that in dealing with a matter so important as a supply of coal to the prairie country in the beginning of winter, he should have made sure that the strike was really settled before he announced the settlement; and I would suggest that on any future occasion he should take care before making such an announcement, to be sure that it is absolutely correct and thus save the people a great deal of suffering which they had then to endure because of that premature announcement.

Mr. CROTHERS. My hon. friend has had a good deal more experience than I have had in public office. It is very kind of him to warn me to be more careful in the future. He is perhaps old enough to have had experience of the settlement of of a case that did not stay settled.

Mr. OLIVER. Several.

Mr. CROTHERS. He is quite unwarranted in inferring that because this case was settled it did not stay settled. I am almost sure that I saw in the office the original agreement of settlement made at the time the Minister of the Interior was at Lethbridge. The terms of that agreement quite justified my hon. friend in sending the telegram that he did, and justified me in sending the congratulatory message which I sent to the parties who, I thought, I was justified in thinking, from the papers they had signed, had reached a settlement.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite accept what my hon. friend has said; but would there be any objection to placing the papers he mentions on the table, so that everybody may be satisfied that matters were as he has stated here?

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not think there is any objection.

Mr. OLIVER. I would ask, then, that that be done.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is one phase of the subject on which the Minister of Labour has voluntarily informed us, and it concerns the Minister of the Interior. The Minister of Labour remarked, as I understood him, that the part played in this matter by the Minister of the Interior, which so many have believed to have been a great and important part, was a mere incident. I happened to be in the city of Winnipeg on the day the Minister of the Interior left there for Lethbridge, and it was given out with a great flare of trumpets by the press supporting the present government that he had gone to settle the strike. Those who know the Minister of the Interior in the west, and we all know him by reputation, know that whether he does things or not, he makes the public believe that he does them. Though a colleague of the Minister of Labour he is unlike the Minister of Labour in this respect, that he labours. The Minister of Labour says that the one thing that should have been done by his department was not done by him, but by the Minister of the Interior, while he has been thinking, and he will perhaps continue to think until next November before he does anything to supply the needs of his department in the line of legislation. At the time the Minister of the Interior left Winnipeg for Lethbridge, I remember meeting some of his party friends, and they all agreed in saying that the strike was settled before he had gone. Let me say, without meaning any offense to my hon. friend, that it was a piece of clever political play on his part to go to Lethbridge at that time so that he would get political gain from the settlement. I believe it was for the sake of political profit that he gave such a blare of trumpets, and afterwards, at the country's expense, was the recipient of congratulatory messages such as that which the Minister of Labour sent. But the Minister of Labour this afternoon gets up and tells the country: 'It was just a little incident that the Minister of the Interior happened to be there at all. He came to me, and said he was going to Lethbridge, and asked me if he could do anything for me.' The Minister of the Interior has plenty of business in the west. At that time he had several defeated candidates to look after, and we find that Mr. McGrath, Mr. Lake and Mr. Campbell, are now all nicely stowed away; perhaps he went west principally to arrange their advent to the restfulness of office. He was going to Lethbridge on business which was no doubt important, and while there, by accident, as a side issue, he settled this great question of supreme importance to the western country. I think the Minister of the Interior will take it with little kindness from the Minister of Labour that what people believed took him out there was merely a little incident, and not deliberate, and that not by any serious thought, but just by putting in a little word the strike was settled.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to enlighten the hon. member for Edmonton as to why the announcement was made that the strike was settled when it was not. Some members, at least those from western Canada, will remember that at that time there were four by-elections about to take place in the southern part of Alberta. The people there were very much interested in the efforts to settle the strike, and before the elections took place the announcement of the settlement of the strike was made, and every candidate supporting the party of the Minister of the Interior was returned. The strike was announced to have been settled on the day the Minister of the Interior left Lethbridge. That had a good effect on the electors in the city, though it was some weeks, probably a month, after that before the men resumed work and the strike was really settled. In the memorandum of agreement signed by the Minister of the Interior when at Lethbridge there was a clause providing that if they could not come to terms on the questions mentioned in it, the Minister of the Interior should appoint another committee to try to settle the strike. I may say that the award made by the Rev. C. W. Gordon of Winnipeg was the award accepted by the men in this particular settlement of the Minister of the Interior; but when the award was originally made by the chairman of the board, the representative of the operators, Mr. Colin McLeod, although he agreed with the report of the chairman of the borad, added a clause to the report, and it was that clause which prevented the early settlement of the strike. Both sides later accepted the Gordon award, and it was the basis of the agreement made by the Minister of the Interior. I am told on good authority that the miners and operators had come to an agreement, ten days or two weeks before the Minister of the Interior visited Lethbridge, to accept the Gordon award. It has been said, I do not know whether it is true or not, that a member of the operators' association, who was a very kind friend of the Minister of the Interior, and was very anxious that he should get credit for the settlement of the strike, managed to hold off the settlement until that memorandum of agreement was drawn up, although it had been practically agreed to two weeks or ten days before that time.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I hope the minister will do me the honour of answering my question, which I submit is a very practical and important one. The minister must meet with this question day by day in the management of the affairs of his department. The question is this: Would the minister appoint a conciliation board at the instance of a union having its headquarters outside of Canada, say in the United States, just the same as he would if it had its headquarters in Canada? That is a very practical question, I think, and one that ought to be answered.

Mr. CURRIE. Before the question is answered, I think, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) should explain his own views on the subject; he comes from Nova Scotia.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would favour the Canadian union. But I want to know the minister's idea.

Mr. CROTHERS. What is the hon. gentleman's question?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think the minister ought to have been able to understand the question. The question is: What is the status of International Unions, so far as the Department of Labour is concerned, under this government? Would the minister appoint a Conciliation Board at the instance of a union having its headquarters in the United States as readily as at the instance of a union well known to have its headquarters in Canada? For instance, in Nova Scotia we have a union known as the Provincial Workman's Association, to which a large number of miners belong. We have another, with headquarters in the United States, known as the United Mine Workers of America. Suppose these two unions, differing in views from one another, seek to deal with the department, which of them would the minister favour? Or what are his views with regard to dealing with unions that have their headquarters outside of Canada?

Mr. CROTHERS. I think I cannot do better than send my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) a copy of The Industrial Disputes Act. It is clear the hon. gentleman has never read it. We do not regard the matter at all from the point of view of whether the union is Canadian or International. If there is a dispute between workmen and their employers in the cases provided for in the Act, we proceed to establish a board without considering whether there is a union of any kind or not.

Mr. CARROLL. I think that the question asked by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) is a very pertinent one and certainly is a very practical one so far as eastern Nova Scotia is concerned. We had a serious struggle in the mining centres of Nova Scotia which lasted for a couple of years; a struggle which arose, as I understand it, not out of differences between capital and labour, but out of differences existing between two rival labour organizations. It arose between the United Mine Workers of America, an International Union having headquarters in Indianapolis, and the Provincial Workman's Association. I understand the hon. member for Guysborough to ask this question: Suppose a grievance arises and the United Mine Workers want a Conciliation Board, and the Provincial Association want a Conciliation Board, to air the same grievance, and they come to the hon. minister at the same time, to whom is he going to grant the board? I think the question is a pertinent one; and it is one in which the people of Nova Scotia have a very keen and live interest to-day, and are likely to have for some time to come.

Mr. MACDONALD. The question asked by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) seems to me a fair one, and the minister is distinctly evading an answer—there is no use in putting it in any other way. Every one who has read the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act knows that a certain number of workmen can apply for a board. And the statement made by the minister setting forth that fact suggests that he is avoiding and evading, an answer to the question which was intended to show where the minister stood on the question of international labour organizations. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) shows the importance of that question. What does the minister think about it? Or does he think anything about it? So far as I can see, if the minister has any views regarding affairs relating to his department, he proposes to keep them to himself. Whether he has views or not seems to be a matter of doubt; certainly, so far as this House is concerned the minister has not given any enlightenment. Perhaps he might say whether, in his opinion, the present law in regard to trades unions requires any amendment or not. He is doing such a powerful lot of thinking, perhaps he will tell us when he is going to give us the result of his thoughts. The question put by the hon. member for Guysborough is a fair one, and, in justice to the House and country, the minister, as head of the department, ought to make an answer.

Mr. CROTHERS. If I were as fond of talking as my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) I might take up as much of the time of the House as he does. Or, if I were to endeavour to lash myself into paroxysms of eloquence as he does, I might feel it right to take up time with merely hypothetical questions. I can say to my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) that no such question has arisen since I was appointed minister. When the question arises I hope I shall be competent to deal with it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understood the minister to answer my question in this way: He directed me to read the Industrial Disputes Act, and pointed out that under the Act any individual could make representations to the government in such a matter whether appointed by a union or not.

Mr. CROTHERS. I did not say that.

Mr. SINCLAIR. And I understood the minister to say that he would not give the preference to a Canadian over an American organization. That is the inference I draw from his answer. I was hoping it would be the other way, and that he would take the view that it would be better to give a preference to the organization with headquarters in Canada. I have strong views on that question myself, and am disappointed to find that the new government does not agree with me.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CURRIE. Another question?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes, another question. The subject on which I desire information from the minister is this: The Carpet Weavers' Union of Toronto caused an information to be laid last June against J. C. Murray, of Toronto, president or manager of the Toronto Carpet Company, I believe. A prosecution was instituted, and after the change of government the prosecution was stopped by orders from Ottawa,—I do not know from what department. I would like to know whether the prosecution is now proceeding or is to be proceeded with. A question was asked in the House on the 26th of November last as to whether the prosecution would be gone on with and at whose instance it had been stopped. Part of the question only was answered. It was not stated at whose instance the prosecution had been dropped or stopped. It was currently reported that it was stopped at the instance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Sir Edmund Osler). All I desire to find out from the Minister of Labour at the present moment, is what position the prosecution is in now.

Mr. CURRIE. I think the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) is trifling with the House. The question is one that ought to be put on the order paper. While I am quite willing, and I am sure the House is quite willing, to accede to the wish of hon. members opposite for a little fight, I think it is going too far to expect a minister to have all the details of his department at hand every moment of the day and night.

Another thing is this absurd idea of wasting the time of the House by putting hypothetical questions—if such and such a contingency should happen how will the minister act? Now children at school would know better than to put questions of that kind. If the hon. gentleman desires an answer to that question—I do not speak for the minister—but I say in all fairness, put it on the order paper. Whilst we were in opposition I never, during the whole period that I was in the House, for three terms, put a question of that kind.

Mr. BELAND. The hon. Minister of Labour is very fortunate inasmuch as he has the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) to supply the information which he himself fails to give us. The minister seems to be very reluctant to answer questions put by members on this side of the House. I may be more fortunate than some of my colleagues, but I heard the minister make a statement a few minutes ago that about a hundred boards of conciliation had been appointed during the last year.

Mr. CROTHERS. No, about 120 since the Act was passed.

Mr. BELAND. How many boards were appointed last year?

Mr. CROTHERS. I could not tell offhand.

Mr. BELAND. Could the minister say how many boards were appointed whose findings led to an agreement between the disputing parties, during the last year?

Mr. CROTHERS. I could not tell you as to last year; but I believe that out of 120 investigations about 110 were successful in bringing about a settlement. I am not sure that the whole 120 went so far as to have an award made, but about 110 brought about a settlement, or a settlement was effected in consequence of the proceedings.

Mr. BELAND. Just for the sake of information—does the minister know whether any board has been appointed to deal with disputes arising in private enterprises?

Mr. CROTHERS. There has been no such board appointed since I came to office. The Act does not apply to private individuals or firms. But if private firms consent, the department may proceed, and establish a board.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I want to see if I can get an answer to my question. Surely the minister knows whether, in that case, the prosecution has been stopped this year.

Mr. CROTHERS. I had nothing to do with instituting any such proceedings as my hon. friend refers to; I had nothing whatever to do with stopping any such proceedings.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Will the minister say whether proceedings have been stopped?

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not know, I have not dealt with it in any shape or manner.

Mr. GUTHRIE. On the 29th of November last my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) put this question:

1. Has the J. P. Murray Carpet Company, of Toronto, been charged with a breach of immigration regulations by inducing weavers to come to Canada while a strike was in progress?
2. Were proceedings commenced against this company for this alleged violation?
3. Have these proceedings been stopped? If so, at whose instance?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Some misunderstanding of instructions has taken place, but the matter is now before the Justice Department with a recommendation that the case proceed.

Now, if the Minister of Labour would be kind enough to inform me as to the position of the case, that would probably satisfy all I desire to know at present. I have a communication from the Weavers' Union, and I desire to answer it. It may be that the matter is in the Department of the Interior more strictly; it was an officer of the Department of the Interior who laid the information. As the information is a serious one, I think perhaps I had better, in this instance, put the facts upon 'Hansard', and if the Minister of the Interior will grant an explanation it may serve my purpose. The information comes to me in the shape of a statutory declaration made on the 28th of June, 1911, and sets out the facts as follows:

I, Harry Packwood, formerly of Ayr, Scotland, but at present of Toronto, carpet weaver, do solemnly declare:—

1. I am a carpet weaver and lived in Ayr, Scotland.

2. About the end of the month of May last I was visited in Ayr by one Louis Sprage, a fellow weaver, who showed me a letter from one Costello, now an employee of the Toronto Carpet Company, Toronto, Canada, stating that there had been 'a bit of bother' at the company's works in Toronto with the workmen, 'It is all settled,' and inciting me to come to Toronto to work for the company. Mr. Sprage had received that letter from Jas. T. Murray, a director of the company, who was then in Glasgow. Accompanying that letter was a covering letter from Murray to Sprage stating that at the company's works in Toronto 'Pay was good, work is steady, living is reasonable, British law rules, justice and fair-play are always respected.' The letter further invited Sprage to bring others to Toronto to the company's works.

3. Sprage saw a number of others as well in the factory where I was working, and about 16 of us went to Ayr to see Mr. Murray. We all visited him together. I asked him, in the presence of the others, if there was not some trouble with his employees at Toronto, and he said 'No,' there was no trouble, no strike or no lockout. There had been some trouble but it was all over. Some had come back and the others had gone to the United States and started work there. I told him I did not mind working in a non-union shop as long as there was no trouble there. He assured me and all the rest that there was no trouble at all. About seven altogether agreed to go, but eventually five from Ayr and nine from Dundee and one from Glasgow agreed to come out, on the representations made by Mr. Murray. Prior to my departure he showed me a declaration sworn to by him that there was no strike or lockout at his factory in Toronto.

4. Not one of the 16 had as much as $25 before we left Liverpool. After we passed Rimouski Mr. Murray spoke to me and gave me 16 express orders, each for $25, with instructions to give one to each man, in order to pass the immigration officials, and to tell the men to say, if questioned by the officials, that they had had more money, but had left most of it at home and had only brought $25 and enough for a little spending money. Subsequently he recalled the express orders stating that he found he could get us through without the money. We passed through at Quebec without any one, immigration officials or any-one else, asking us any questions of any kind.

5. Upon arrival in Toronto we immediately learned that there was a lockout at the factory and that it was still in existence, with employees still walking the streets. Eight of us refused to work under the circumstances as we had been totally misled by Mr. Murray as to conditions of labour at his factory in Toronto. The result is that we are thrown on the streets, without means and no way of getting back to our homes in Scotland. We have nothing to send to our families.

6. The names of the 16 who came out are: W. Phillips, W. Drake, J. Abernethy,, W. Clark, J. Imesley, L. Sprage, T. Dempsey, Jamieson D. Muir, R. Niell, P. McGlenn, E. Dunn, H. Rennie, S. Jones, T. Whithurst and myself.

7. We ask if these conditions are a sample of the 'British law, justice and fair-play' referred to by Mr. Murray in his letter above referred to.

And make this solemn declaration, &c., &c.

Upon these facts an information was laid before the magistrate in Toronto under section 55 of the Immigration Act, 1910. That Act provides a penalty of $400 in the case of any one inducing any person to come to Canada upon a misrepresentation of facts.

Under the statements contained in that declaration I think it quite clear that an information may well be laid under section 55 of chapter 27 of the statutes of 1910, but through some technicality the police magistrate at Toronto dismissed the charge. Upon the charge being dismissed in June last the Carpet Weavers' Union communicated with the Department of the Interior, and an inspector of the Department of the Interior, Inspector Herbert went to Toronto to investigate the case. Inspector Herbert then lodged an information charging breach not only of the Act but of the regulations. These men were passed into this country on fraud in the face of regulations which should have prohibited them. Either Mr. Murray attempted to supply the men with money to qualify them under the immigration requirements or he made some fraudulent arrangement with somebody whereby they were admitted without the $25. The inspector of the department promptly laid an information against Mr. Murray who went to England and did not return, I believe, until after the general election. No sooner was the election over than Mr. Murray, through some influence, obtained a direction that the proceedings against him be dropped and the proceedings were stopped. When this House met, the matter was brought to its attention by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) who asked at whose instance this prosecution had been stopped. The answer is evasive, it does not state at whose instance it was stopped but it does say that the matter is in the hands of the Justice Department with instructions to proceed. Surely I can get an answer to my question, has the prosecution gone on and if not, why not?

Mr. ROGERS. Shortly after I took over the department this matter was brought to my attention by an officer of the department who pointed out that this case had already been before a magistrate in Toronto and had been dismissed, and that he doubted very much whether we could collect sufficient evidence to successfully carry on a prosecution. He presented the case to me in such a way as to lead me to believe that it did not amount to very much and so instructions were given to allow the matter to go. Shortly after I had notice of the seriousness of the case, something along the lines of the statement just read by my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and immediately that was brought to the attention of the department we took the matter up with the Department of Justice, and since that time we have been collecting evidence. I was informed by the officers of my department the other day that sufficient evidence has been collected and that the case is proceeding at once in the city of Toronto as soon as it can reach its turn in the court there.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has the minister arranged to completely settle the differences between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and its employees, and can he tell us whether the men who were not taken back, about whom a great deal of complaint arose during the autumn of last year, have been reinstated?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have been doing all in my power to endeavour to have these men reinstated, and I am not without hope that I shall succeed in the near future.

Mr. OLIVER. Although under the terms of the Combines Investigation Act proceedings have to be initiated outside of the government at the same time the fact that there is such an Act presupposes the undesirability of the existence of combines. The organization of combines, if it is an evil, has become a greater evil from year to year and from month to month. Four or five years ago the organization of combines was almost negligible, but to-day it would be impossible for me to give a list of the combines that exist. One of the recent ones will, by its name, attract special attention, that is the bread combine. When a condition arises that actually the baking of bread has been made the subject of a combine, the purpose of that combine being to, of course, restrict the cost of production, which is a proper purpose, but also and more especially to restrict competition in production, and, therefore, make it possible to increase the cost to the consumer, it seems to me that the time is ripe for a new view to be taken in regard to combines. This question has become one of the first importance in the commercial, industrial and financial life of our country. It is an outgrowth of present day civilization. It is a condition which did not exist in former years, and which could not have existed. It has become possible because of the completeness of the machinery for carrying on commercial, industrial and financial enterprises.

It is something that in itself was right but it unquestionably has grown to be a wrong, and the high cost of living as to which the people complain everywhere, is not so much because of decreased or restricted production, or increased or lavish consumption, as because of the restraint upon market conditions, exercised by the combines which stand between the producer and the consumer for the purpose of taking an unjust toll from both.

Intimately connected with the combine question is the question of over-capitalizatoin. In earlier times the merger was arranged in the first place for the purpose of reducing the cost of production which was legitimate; in the second place, for the purpose of increasing competition, which was not so legitimate, and in the third place for the purpose of increasing the cost to the consumer, which was entirely illegitimate. In the organization of the mergers to-day the main question is that of over-capitalization, the building up of financial structures whose foundations rest upon the ability of the combine to take an unjust toll from both consumer and producer upon the necessaries of life, and the more it is a necessary of life the greater the power of the combine, and the greater the possibility of profit. In my estimation this feature of combines is of such extreme character as to change the attitude of the public mind towards these organizations. I am not asking the minister to declare on the subject now, or to take the responsibility of initiating legislation, but there must necessarily have come to the Labour Department facts in regard to these mergers and combines, and protests against them which I will ask the minister to facilitate access to for the benefit of those members of the House who may be interested in legislation dealing with these questions.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I can see now that I and some other members of this House are likely to get more support than in the past in dealing with the capitalization of companies of all kinds. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), nas raised the important question of the enforcement of federal law by the federal authority, and for many years I have advocated that principle in this parliament. Our Combines Act to-day is left to the initiation of private individuals, but in the combines law of the United States there is a distinct clause stating that it is the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to enforce it, and there is provision made for the appropriation of a large sum of money for that purpose. There is a clean-cut clause in their legislation stating that it is the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to enforce the law, and to that end he is authorized to engage counsel and employ special agents. The result is that in the United States to-day there is an effective law against combines and the most active man in the enforcement of this law is the President of the United States and his Attorney General and the United States attorneys throughout the country. It is idle for us to pass laws in this parliament if we make no provision for their enforcement, and I trust that hon. gentlemen opposite will change the idea they have held in the past with regard to this matter. Our doctrine is that while we pass laws at Ottawa to remove grievances, it is for the provinces to enforce these laws, but that doctrine I have never subscribed to. The enforcement of the Railway Act with reference to exorbitant railway rates, is left in Canada to the individual shipper, whereas in the United States the Interstate Commerce Commission can enforce their law and can employ special counsel to that end. I believe, Sir, we are coming to that in this country. Indeed, in the telegraph rate case, and the express rate case before the Railway Commission, special counsel were retained to represent the people. It is for an extension of that principle that I am contending; I want to see federal laws enforced by the federal government. We have combines in Canada, it is true, and I assert boldly here that these combines must be regulated by the law of this parliament, and that law must be put in operation against them by the federal authority.

I would like to hear some expression of opinion in that regard. The question of over capitalization, I propose to discuss at a very early day, as I to-day gave notice on the Orders of the Day that I shall bring that question up. That is comprised in the railway question, and that very same question has been raised in this House by the present Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Monk) who has been long desirous of this government having some control over the capitalization of joint stock companies. That is a question which must be dealt with, and it cannot be dealt with by the individual so well as it can be by the state. We must change the system we have followed in the past and no longer leave the enforcement of our laws to individual initiative. I take the ground that the enforcing of Federal laws must rest with the Minister of Justice or any special department created to administer these laws. We have a railway commission but it is not given all the powers it should have. In many cases, in which that commission has taken the initiative, it was taken by the chairman largely on his own account; and the law would be much more effective if we had some official whose duty it would be to enforce it.

Mr. BURNHAM. I should like to add my feeble testimony to the remarks of the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), who has told us that the principal question for solution at the present time is the discrepancy between the price paid the producer and that paid by the consumer. Between the two there is an enormous disparity, and that loss or waste is entirely due to the absurd conditions which bolster up the middleman. The middleman has developed in recent days into a combinester who is living on the fat of the land. He is largely, by means of over capitalization, living on the efforts of the producer and the necessities of the consumer and if the people of this country want a socialistic state, the way they will get it is by neglecting to enforce the laws they are so ready to make. The masses, who are vainly striving to get their wages raised so that they may be able to live decently and pay for the education of their children will not submit to be robbed, and have the food taken from their lips by those who have no hesitation in over-capitalizing their companies and combines in order that they may in this way blind the people's eyes and be able to rob them at discretion. If the government, whether Grit or Tory, is not willing or able to enforce the laws they have made, then the people of Canada will take over the means of production and transportation and all the duties of the middlemen and conduct the state as a socialistic state, so that in the future there will be preserved a just and equitable balance between those who produce and those who consume.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did I understand the Minister of Labour to say that he is unable to tell us whether any representations have been made in regard to the alleged cement merger?

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is that I saw a copy of a resolution said to have been passed by the Winnipeg Board of Trade, complaining of an alleged merger in cement.

Mr. KNOWLES. That resolution was one of the important representations which were made and forwarded to this government. Sir Sanford Fleming, a lifelong Conservative, has communicated in the most public way with the present government on the same subject. We have here an item of $10,000 which, if it is voted, will be used by the Minister of Labour, who is so ignorant of these communications made to his government. Does it not show indifference to his office and duties when he comes to this House and asks this committee to vote $10,000 to be used in all possibility—nay in all probability, we hope—in investigating the affairs of that same cement merger, and at the same time tells us that he has not taken the trouble to look into these representations that have been made on this matter? Does he know that he wants the money for anything? Surely if he wants it for anything, it will be to investigate those outstanding grievances. Yet, although the record is right under his very eyes, he tells us that he has not taken even the trouble to give it any attention. The cement merger is one that the minister would do well to inform himself upon at an early day. It is going to be a live issue. The hon. minister will recollect, especially if he was a member of the Private Bills Committee last session, that the people who have been spoken of as the cement merger came to parliament and asked for a private Bill, giving them the entity of a stock company, created by statute of this parliament. Hon. members will recall the outburst this application created throughout the country, the demand for information it excited, the desire for statistics or data as to the way in which this merger sprung into existence, and how, when this company refused to give that information frankly to a committee, the committee, a majority of which was then composed of Liberals, refused to proceed with the Bill, and its promoters discreetly withdrew it. I put a motion on the order paper at the close of last session—for the matter did not reach prominence until then—calling for all the papers in connection with the creation of that joint stock company, which I believe was created by letters patent, but the session came to an end and my motion was not fruitful in getting these papers. Now, the country is agitated. The Boards of Trade, especially in the west, are taking the matter up and will continue to take it up, and I fear they will have a much lower opinion of the Minister of Labour when they learn that he has not taken even the pains to read the information which has been placed formally and carefully before his government.

Mr. ROGERS. One would really think that my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) was serious in pointing out what he claims is the lack of knowledge on the part of my hon. colleague the Minister of Labour with regard to the cement combine. However, I would like to say a word or two in connection with the remarks of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), and as well as a word or two in connection with statements made by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham). I agree entirely with a great deal that has been said by my hon. friend from Edmonton regarding the conditions which this government finds existing in the matter of combines in this country today.

It is strange that after having been fifteen years in power our hon. friends opposite are unable to point to any Act of theirs which has had the effect of preventing the up-building of combines in this country, and should so suddenly become converted and begin attacking those combines. Now, this is to my mind a very important question for this parliament and this government, in view of the fact, as stated by my hon. friend from Edmonton, that a few years ago we did not have these conditions in this country, which was largely due to the policy followed by the party on this side of the House when formerly directing the affairs of this country. Since that time we have had changed conditions. We have had a government which has been very generous in its treatment of the combines in all parts of the Dominion. It, therefore, becomes the duty of this government to meet the conditions as we find them, and I do not think there is any single question that has engaged more of the time and attention of the government since they came into power than the very question we are now discussing, as to how we can best remedy the serious conditions which have been left us by hon. gentlemen opposite in respect to the combines that exist throughout the length and breadth of this country. It is a matter for serious consideration. The amount in the estimates seems small, but it will be well and properly used by the government for the purpose for which it is voted, that of investigating these conditions and endeavouring to improve them. Let me say also, on behalf of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour, that he will be only too pleased at any time to supply information to this House in respect to any complaints that may be made in connection with the question we are now considering.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. Minister of the Interior is somewhat surprised that the party sitting at present on this side of the House did absolutely nothing during the years they were in power, to combat the evil of combines and mergers. I would like to remind him that one of the great effects of reciprocity for which we laboured so hard would be to kill combines and mergers. I am very glad that the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) brought this question up in the form in which he did. The hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) made some wise suggestions, and the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) spoke strongly against combines and mergers. We have in the county of Wright which I represent what is worse than the cement combine; we have a merger which will more directly appeal to the hon. Minister of Labour than any other merger in this Dominion. It is a merger in what is essential to the health of the labouring classes—a meat merger. Recently a company whose chief place of business is in the city of Hull, and which does a great business, a company which I greatly admire, more perhaps than they admired me during the last election, formed a combine in the meat business under the name of the Matthews-Lang Packing Company. The only effect of such a merger is to considerably raise the prices of meats of all classes. I have very little concern for the richer class, a class to whom the hon. gentlemen on the opposite side belong, and with whom the government of the day is more particularly concerned. We on this side of the House, while wishing at all times to protect the richer class where it is necessary, are more concerned with the classes who have no protection. We are the friends more particularly of the masses of the people, and to the ranks of those friends we heartily welcome the hon. member for West Peterborough and the hon. member for South York.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I am holding out the hand to you, and I am glad to see you coming over.

Mr. DEVLIN. It is a cause for mutual congratulation that we should find a plank on which we can agree, and I am glad to see the hon. member for South York standing with us for the masses of the people. I would like to appeal to the Minister of Labour, as I think an appeal to any other hon. gentleman on the treasury benches would be futile. I could not appeal to the Minister of Inland Revenue or the Minister of Public Works or to the Minister of the Interior; these are all the ministers of capital. I appeal to the Minister of Labour to give his earnest consideration to what is to-day in its infancy, but what promises to sap the very life of this nation this awful meat combine. I hope he will send officers to the city of Hull to inquire into its working. I give him the assurance, as the representative of that side of the river, that I will help his officials out as far as it lies in my power to do so.

Mr. MURPHY. The hon. Minister of Interior has said that during the former régime of his party there were no mergers in Canada, but he stopped short of supplying the reason. The reason was that when his party friends got through with what was valuable in this country, there was nothing left to merge. They were identified with the lean years in this country whereas the party which followed were identified with the fat years. Let me remind my hon. friend from South York and my hon. friend from West Peterborough that the bread merger was not brought into being by any Act or law of the Dominion government or parliament.

The bread merger was the creation of the Ontario government at a time when my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) was a member of that government. Now, it may be true that the Minister of Labour has received no complaint with respect to the bread merger. But let me point out that the headquarters of that merger are in the city of Toronto—most properly in the city of Toronto. Let me also remind him that he has in the city of Toronto one or more correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette', and I should think it very strange, indeed, if these correspondents had not drawn attention to that particular merger, and its operations in that city. I would ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) whether the Toronto correspondents of the 'Labour Gazette' have not drawn attention to the bread merger, and to the operations of that merger more particularly in the city of Toronto.

Mr. CROTHERS. They have not, so far as I am aware.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crothers) make inquiries, and let us know at a later date, and on some other item of his departmental estimates? It may be that up to this time the minister has not had time to read the 'Labour Gazette'.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Before passing this item—which I hope we shall soon pass—I should like to say a word. I am very sincere in saying that I hope we shall soon pass the item. I do not know what has come over my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) lately. He is defended from behind by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie). That is not a unique experience; for that hon. gentleman, apparently has a self-assumed position of general oversight of the Cabinet. But the hon. minister has also been defended by the minister in front of him (Mr. Rogers). I think it time that some one on this side should come to his relief, and try to get this estimate through. I was very gratified, notwithstanding the Minister of Labour's (Mr. Crothers) self-imposed—or should I say, Simcoe-imposed?—rule of partial silence, to hear from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) that the Cabinet are seriously considering this very important question of trusts. I cannot use any words of condemnation to the Minister of Labour for considering or thinking; and I believe that if the Cabinet will only think plenty upon this question of combines, if they will honestly and fully consider it, they will become more radical in their ideas; they will reach the root of the question, and find the cause of combines. They will then have a clear road. For, as I have said on former occasions in this House, it is an important rule for politicians as well as for medical men that the best way to treat a disease is to remove the cause. Now, I do not think that this Cabinet—or ten Cabinets like them—will be able to prevent what is evidently an industrial tendency of our times; I do not believe they will be able to prevent these combinations of capital. I believe that these combinations have come to stay, and I will go a step further and say that if these combinations are in the order of Providence, and in the course of evolution, not only can you not prevent them, but, I believe there is no harm in them. And I would like to point out to the Cabinet who are considering the question—and after all one of the functions of this House of Commons is to participate, in its own way, in the thinking of the Cabinet—that these combinations become dangerous only when they get the field to themselves.

Now, when do they get the field to themselves? When competition is ruled out. Rule out competition and you give them the field to themselves whether to buy or sell, and they become masters of the situation; masters of the producers on the one hand and of the consumers on the other. It is extremely necessary to teach this doctrine in eastern Canada; not so necessary in the west, for we there knew a little more about it, judging by the results of the last election. Why, I am told, that there are actually people in eastern Canada who could not solve the simple proposition of how reciprocity could at once help the producer and the consumer! It was the very A B C of economics. The moment you subjected your trusts—your canning combine, for instance—to external competition, this is what would have happened: they would have had competition in buying and competition in selling, and they would have been compelled by the operation of the laws of trade to give more for what they bought and to sell the finished product at a lower price. Why, that is the simplest thing in the world. There is the position: These things become dangerous only when they have the field to themselves, and they get the field to themselves from the want of competition. And now the next step: The want of competition is artificially arranged by the tariff. Yes, it is the tariff that artificially protects these men, whether in buying or in selling; and thus they can rook the producer on the one hand and the consumer on the other. I throw out these things for the guidance of the Minister of the Interior who has been good enough to lift the veil of the cabinet proceedings to the extent of telling us that these matters are seriously engaging the attention of the cabinet. Now, my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), to whom we are all indebted for bringing up this question, shows that closely connected with the evils of trusts themselves is the evil of over capitalization. The possibility of over capitalization is, economically, absolutely connected with the other evil of the want of competition. I do not need to labour to prove this part of my case; the people who make the combines prove it to us. When they send their circulars abroad to float the securities of their concerns, they state in these circulars what tariff is being carried by the stuff they peddle. Why do they state that? Why, to show that the tariff ensures to them the right to be free from competition in buying on the one hand and in selling on the other. Oh, they are quick enough! Politicians may be slow, and statesmen may have to consider, but the merger men know their business, all right, and know what it is that enables them to pay big profits. They tell the foreign investor: This stuff in which we are forming a merger carries so much of a tariff, therefore, we do not have competition and so we are enabled to rook the consumer to the extent of the extra money to enable us to pay dividends both upon the actual capital invested and upon the artificial wealth we are going to pour in, in the shape of water.

Mr. BURNHAM. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Certainly.

Mr. BURNHAM. Has the hon. gentleman seen the report of the statisticians in England of the over capitalization of railways in free trade Britain? And will the hon. gentleman please explain that?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I have not seen the report, so it is rather hard upon me to ask me to explain it. I really must play my role; and that does not include the ability to explain a report which I have not seen. But my hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) will agree with me, that we are not talking about railways, and he will see that railways do not enter into the question. I have been speaking of things in which foreign competition is artificially cut off by the tariff. Now, foreign competition in railways is a thing I never heard of. So far as I know, people do not import railways into the country.

I really think it is well that my hon. friend intervened, because I had said all I intended to say. I dealt with the subject in a way that I hope the cabinet won't resent. I have given them a little help in the considerations upon which I understand they are engaged. I do trust that they will be thorough. I am not in a hurry for them to do things. I wish they would let the tariff alone. I see they are going to introduce a tariff commission this session. I wish they would leave well enough alone, through one session, any way. But the more thinking they do upon this question the more they will begin to see that at the root of any evils flowing from combines is the tariff, which gives the field to the combinations, and enables them to rook the producers on the one hand and the consumers on the other.

To provide for the appointment of inspectors in connection with shipping gear, dangerous machinery, railway construction, &c., $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the Minister of Labour explain what it is intended to do with this amendment?

Mr. CROTHERS. This sum was put in the estimates last year with a view of appointing an official, as is stated in the item here, in connection with shipping, dangerous machinery, and railway construction, with a special view to the appointment possibly of an officer to visit construction camps on railways, and see if anything could be done to better the conditions of those who are engaged in railway construction. However, no attempt was made although that sum was voted last year and no part of it has been expended. It is thought that possibly an inspector may be appointed this year, or it may be found desirable to appoint one; therefore, this sum is asked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to say that the item seems to be intended to cover the salaries of other inspectors besides those who may inspect railway construction or dangerous machinery. I think that if it is intended to serve any useful purpose by this vote, the amount ought to be increased. The amount voted last year was only $5,000. My own opinion was that it was entirely too small for any real and effective service. As my hon. friend is aware, the loading and unloading of steamers is a pretty dangerous occupation. In the city of St. John it is not an unfrequent occurrence that men engaged in this occupation meet with accidents, and sometimes lives are lost, through, is is claimed, defective machinery. I think it is very desirable in the interest of the large number of people who are engaged in this work that there should be a very effective and thorough inspection of the gearing and machinery employed in loading and unloading vessels. If you take the ports on the Pacific coast, Victoria, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, New Westminster and others, and the ports upon the St. Lawrence, the ports upon the great lakes, and the ports of the maritime provinces, my hon. friend will see that with the small sum of $5,000 he will be limited, and will scarcely be able to cover the requirements. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has made some appointments. I know the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries did make appointments of inspectors of gearing and machinery in one or two ports. The appointments ought to be solely in one department or in the other, and I think perhaps they would come more properly in the Department of Labour. One thing I wish to emphasize is that it is all important that experienced and thorough inspectors should be appointed at the large ports, with a view of reducing as much as possible the dangers incurred in this occupation.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman has referred to the necessity of having compentent men appointed as inspectors. I think it is very important indeed that at the ports where large numbers of men are engaged in loading and unloading ships, every care should be taken to see that the gearing is of a proper quality and construction, and every effort should be made towards the security of the workmen engaged in this occupation. There are some inspectors already in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and if others are appointed in the Labour Department, there might be some overlapping. There was an inspector of gearing, I think, appointed in Montreal by the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries. My attention having been called to this matter this year on consultation with my officials, I had an order in council passed for the appointment of a permanent official to inspect the gearing and machinery used in the harbour of St. John. This step was taken largely through members of the labour organizations in that city, men who are engaged, both in winter and summer, working in loading and unloading ships. A most competent man was recommended by these labour organizations, a man well able to pass the examination which he was required to pass, and he was appointed for that purpose. His salary will be paid out of the funds of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. McKENZIE. When the Minister of Labour is appointing these inspectors, I would like him to keep in mind the harbour of Sydney, where there are very large shipments indeed of ores and coal. In that harbour we have a tremendous amount of machinery which is under no inspection at all that I know of, and in connection with which there may be some danger. I hope, therefore, without any regard to party affiliations, the Minister of Labour will see to it that a proper man is appointed to inspect the gearing and machinery in the harbour of Sydney.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will find in his office representations from some labour organizations in Halifax asking for the appointment of some such official.

Mr. HAZEN. If such representations were made it was before I became minister, but I shall make inquiries in the department.

Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Education, $15,000.

Mr. MURPHY. Has this commission completed its work and reported?

Mr. CROTHERS. Last year there was voted for this purpose $25,000. The commissioners completed their general work about the beginning of December and during that month each commissioner wrote out his report of portions of the work done especially by him. After a conference they left the general report to be prepared by the chairman of the board, Dr. Robertson, who is now engaged, with the secretary, in the preparation of the general report. It is expected that he will complete his labours about the 1st of March.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Does the minister recollect the remuneration paid the members of the commission?

Mr. CROTHERS. I think it is $16 a day and all travelling and living expenses.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am rather of opinion that the remuneration is not so high, I think it is $16 a day and moving expenses, but that the commissioners have to pay their own living expenses.

Mr. CROTHERS. My recollection is that it is $16 and all necessary travelling expenses, including living expenses, but my hon. friend may be right.

Mr. NESBITT. Is this supposed to complete the payment of the commission?

Mr. CROTHERS. We think it will complete it. The printing of the report will, of course, be a matter for the House to determine.

Public buildings, N.B.—Hampton public building, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend proceeding with the public building at Hampton?

Mr. MONK. This $3,000 is for the purchase of a site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was provided last year, and I had hoped my hon. friend would put in an amount for the erection of the building, which was not supposed to be expensive, I think about $5,000.

Mr. MONK. We are not yet in possession of the site, and steps are being taken by the Department of Justice to see that the property is vested in the Crown.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the minister consider putting in an amount in his supplementary estimates of $5,000 for the erection of a building?

Mr. MONK. If the demands are not too numerous, it seems to me it could be done.

Hillsboro public building, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the minister inform me why the inspector of that work, a very capable man indeed, an architect? of much experience, has been dismissed? Was there any complaint as to the way in which he performed his work?

Mr. MONK. I shall endeavour to procure the information for my hon. friend this evening.

The position of inspector on buildings under construction has always been considered of a temporary character. He would hold his office absolutely during pleasure, and the case is very different from that of a permanent employee. I think there were complaints against this gentleman that he was a political partisan but I cannot say if action were taken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the minister bring down the record?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot imagine that this gentleman could be a political partisan, I have known him a long time, and you might search New Brunswick from end to end and not be able to secure quite as competent a man as Mr. Watson E. Reid. He has had a large experience in Canada and the United States, and there are evidences in New Brunswick of his splendid ability as an architect and builder.

Mr. MONK. Was he the architect or the inspector of the building?

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume the plans were drawn in Ottawa, and he was employed to inspect it. It is unwise to change the inspector of a building—unless there are very grave charges against him—during the construction of that building. It is evident that the man who starts at the very foundation should be there to see it completed. I think a mistake was made in the interests of the country in removing this gentleman, and I do not know that even any good will result from it to the party in power.

Mr. MONK. I found that a large number of buildings were under the supervision of local architects, and I do not think I dismissed any of them. If he is the architect in charge of that building I doubt very much that action was taken, but I will bring down the information. In the province of Quebec, at all events, the position of inspector of a building under construction has generally been considered an absolute sinecure.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not so in this case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This gentleman was appointed by reason of his experience as an architect for the purpose of seeing that these plans and specifications were properly carried out.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand that he was the architect, and not the inspector?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is an architect of wide experience, but he was appointed as inspector by reason of his expert knowledge.

Mr. MONK. Then he was the architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in the sense of drawing the plans which were prepared at Ottawa, and they were sent to him, and he was appointed inspector to see that they would be carried out.

St. John drill hall, $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister has stated that where a local architect had been appointed to take charge of the erection of a building his policy was not to discharge him. Mr. Brodie, a clever young architect, was appointed to take the entire oversight of the erection of the St. John drill hall. I have not the pleasure of knowing him personally, but I never heard that he took part in an election. He has a very high reputation as an architect, and was appointed because of his expert knowledge. I am informed that he has been removed and a Conservative architect given the position. It seems to me that that is carrying the system of party patronage to a very great extreme. Let me call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the resolution moved in 1910, by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), which was concurred in by both sides of the House, and which reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the prevailing system of party patronage constitutes a menace to honest and efficient government, incites to great waste of resources and extravagance of expenditure, tends inevitably to corrupt and lower the tone of public morals, and should forthwith be eliminated from our federal administration.

There was an additional clause added to that resolution, moved by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who complimented the late government on the efforts they had made to remove the evils which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), complains of. That resolution, as amended, was unanimously adopted. But despite the efforts made, during the last few years at all events, to remove as far as possible the evils of patronage, we find my hon. friend, without any reason whatever, so far as I know, dismissing a thoroughly competent architect from the position of inspector of this building and appointing another in his place. Would my hon. friend be good enough to give the reason why Mr. Brodie was dismissed?

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

St. John quarantine station, Partridge island—new buildings, repairs and improvements, $40,000.

Mr. NESBITT. Is this amount expected to complete the improvements?

Mr. MONK. Yes, it is calculated that with $39,500 the whole of the improvements will be completed. We have asked for $40,000.

Tracadie Lazaretto—house, &c., $10,400.

Mr. BELAND. How many patients are in that hospital?

Mr. MONK. I have not that information. The Director General of Public Health states, by letter of October 22nd last, that a house is urgently required for the medical superintendent, who has not been able to bring his family to Tracadie since his appointment on the 1st of April, 1909. In addition to this, the reverend sisters are very desirous of having a drying room 40 feet square in connection with the laundry. The estimated cost is: house,$4,500; barn, $1,500; additions to laundry, $3,000; septic tank and contingencies, $1,400. At present there is accommoadtion for only 12 lepers.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The other evening, item 4 of the vote for public buildings in Nova Scotia was allowed to stand at my request. The item reads:

Halifax Station on Lawlor's island—new buildings, repairs and renewals, $25,000.

I suggested that the words 'on Lawlor's Island' be struck out. The vote in those terms would be sufficient for the department; on the other hand, if there is any force in the remarks which I made as to the desirability of having the quarantine station elsewhere than on Lawlor's island, the department will be free to make the change.

Mr. MONK. I am not conversant with the question of quarantine, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) in whose department this matter rests is not in his place at the moment. I thought that I had reassured my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) as to his objections. The vote was not asked for with the idea of dispensing with the services of any of our officers.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I was not questioning that. I did not intend to be taken too seriously on that point. But there is a feeling in Halifax among some persons who are qualified to have an opinion on this matter that the quarantine station should not be on Lawlor's island. If the words I have indicated were struck out, the department could spend the money even though it should decide to change the location. If this amendment cannot be adopted now, I would like the item to stand.

Mr. MONK. I think we can adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend and leave out the words. I move that the words 'on Lawlor's island' be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before we leave the consideration of public buildings I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) a question with regard to the dismissal of the caretaker of the public building in Westville. I am informed that the officials of the department notified this officer that his services would not be required after the 31st of January. Will the hon. minister inform me what were the reasons which induced him to take that step?

Mr. MONK. I am sorry to say I have not the papers before me at the moment, and I do not recollect the correspondence. But I can bring down the papers if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) desires them.

Mr. MACDONALD. In the first place, whatever the reason may have been for this dismissal—and I cannot conceive of there being any reason that would warrant it—at least the hon. minister could hardly be justified in removing this official on the 31st of January. Westville is a mining town, and to remove a man from his home in the middle of the winter is a very hard thing for the party thus dispossessed. It is almost impossible to get a place to live then, for the town is overcrowded. If the hon. minister is not prepared to tell why he dismissed this man, I would ask him as a matter of fairness, as a matter of the charity which we ought to show towards even those politically opposed to us, that he should at least give this man a month's time, until the spring opens, before he dispossesses him. We cannot discuss the reasons for the dismissal, as my hon. friend is not ready. But I ask him, if only as a matter of common decency, that he give this man a little longer time.

Mr. MONK. I will make a note of my hon. friend's suggestion, and act upon it. We gave what we thought was sufficient time for the caretaker to find another installation. We have done that in several other cases, including some in Montreal. I can assure my hon. friend that actions in this direction are very unpleasant to me; and if the treatment meted out to the caretaker in question can be softened by an extension of time I will see to it.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would ask the hon. minister to go into the case from that standpoint. As to the merits of the dismissal, I would like, before the last of these items is passed to have an opportunity of discussing it. It is better to have these matter disposed of on the estimates rather than upon substantive motion in the House. I should like to have the opportunity of discussing the matter, and I am sure that the hon. gentleman will give me the information required.

Mr. MONK. Yes, I will get the information, and on some item of the supplementary estimates—

Mr. MACDONALD. Not the supplementary estimates, if my hon. friend pleases. For, if there has been no reason for this dismissal, my hon. friend will have gone beyond the stage where he can provide a remedy. I am prepared to discuss the question now. But my hon. friend has not the information on which his officials acted. I would like, then, at some later stage of these estimates, to have an opportunity to discuss the matter. I trust he will temper justice with mercy and accept my reason for delaying action in the matter.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I would like to get information with regard to the dismissal of the caretaker of the public building in Inverness. I have been looking for this information for two months, but up to this time have not received it. The caretaker in the public building in Inverness was dismissed summarily. Why it was done, I do not know. As to his being a partisan, I cannot speak with knowledge. I know that my friends blamed him in 1908 for voting for the Conservative candidate. That he may have done; I do not know.

But I think it is due to the caretaker, who has discharged his duties, I think, to the satisfaction of the department, that he should be told at least why he is dismissed. I have both written to the minister and had an interview with him, but up to date I have not been able to get any information whatever. This gentleman depends upon me to get the information why he was dismissed. What am I to do? I have been to the minister to get information why the man was dismissed, and that is all I can do. Surely it is not too much to ask the minister to give the reasons why this man was dismissed. I would like also to get a little information with regard to the proposed public building in Hawkesbury. Perhaps I am not in order on this item. But perhaps the minister will give me information with regard to my first question.

Mr. MONK. I regret to say that I cannot at this moment give my hon. friend the information which he is certainly entitled to. If my hon. friend has written to me and received no answer it has been an inadvertence on my part. Since I am in office, I have four stenographers busy, I may say, far into the evening every day, answering letters, and it is quite possible that the letter written by my hon. friend has not received attention. That is through no fault of mine. It is an accident which can be understood. When the minister receives three or four hundred letters a day, some may escape notice. But I am very anxious to give that information to my hon. friend, and will do so as soon as I can examine the records of the department. As the committee is aware, we act in cases of that kind upon the complaint of responsible parties, and as I have understood the principle as laid down in this House in past discussions, it is considered that the complaint of the sitting member or of a candidate in an election——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MONK. I have always so considered. A complaint that is properly libelled, giving proper details, supported by proof to the satisfaction of the minister, is considered conclusive evidence of active partisanship. But I will find out the details for my hon. friend, and will let him have the documents as soon as I can get them. My hon. friend will have several opportunities of discussing the matter before these items are put through.

Mr. KYTE. The other evening we had a discussion on this question when the Minister of Customs was getting his estimates through. He was asked what principle he had adopted with respect to dismissals, and he stated that in counties represented by Conservative members he took the word of the member as regards charges of partisanship against officials. In cases of constituencies not represented by Conservatives, he felt it was his duty to have an investigation and inquiry. He did not go so far as to say that he would take the word of the defeated candidate. I observe that in the city of Ottawa there is a gentleman named Chauvin appointed to investigate charges of partisanship against officials of the Public Works Department in the city of Ottawa. The charges are given to the accused officials, and they have a right to retain counsel to represent them at the investigation. I think that is only fair and proper. I should like very much if the Minister of Public Works would intimate to us to-night that a similar course will be adopted with respect to officials who are charged with partisanship in the outside service. There is a case in my constituency of a man named Bissett, who is a government repairer of telegraph lines. He received a letter on the 7th day of December, reading as follows:

Geo. E. Bissett, Esq.,
General Repairer,
St. Peter's, N.S.

Dear Sir,—I have from the hon. the Minister of Public Works an advice of the termination of your engagement as general repairer. You might please turn over to Mr. Morrison, our local agent at St. Peter's whatever tools, and so forth, that you have belonging to the service, so that they will be in hand when required for your successor.

He received no notice whatever of any charge being made against him, he was not aware that any charge had been made; the first intimation he received that a charge was contemplated by the department was this letter of dismissal. Now his dismissal took place at the end of December, only two days' notice I think was given. this is a case where I think, at all events, that some investigation should have been made. There is no allegation whatever made upon which he was dismissed, no allegation that he was guilty of partisanship, or any other offence that would justify his dismissal in this harsh and arbitrary manner. There are many employees of the Public Works Department in my constituency, and I should very much regret indeed if it is the intention of the minister to pursue a similar course in these other cases. I think it would be fair that all the ministers of the government should adopt the same policy with respect to this matter. I think the statement made by the Minister of Customs the other evening met with the approval of both sides of this House, when he said that in constituencies not represented by Conservative members, charges of partisanship would be investigated. I observe that the government did recently appoint several commissioners in the province of Nova Scotia for the purposes of investigating charges of partisanship. There are three gentlemen that I recall now who have been appointed to investigate these charges; and I fail to see with what purpose or object these appointments were made, if dismissals are to be made summarily in this manner. It is a farce and a waste of public money to appoint commissioners to make inquiries, if ministers are going to take upon themselves the dismissal of officials without investigation or inquiry. I think it is a new doctrine on the subject which has been laid down by the Minister of Public Works to-night, that if the defeated candidate makes charges against persons in his constituency, charges of partisanship, his word is to be accepted and the accused persons are to be dismissed. With regard to the Conservative member who is elected, the case is different. The man who is elected can afford to be magnanimous; he has no reason to be actuated by motives of revenge as regards officials who may have worked against him. But as regards the defeated candidate no such considerations will appeal to him, he is actuated by a spirit of revenge, and he is not so careful nor so generous in his dealings with public officials as the man who has been elected.

Mr. EMMERSON. Besides, he is not here.

Mr. KYTE. He is not here to defend any improper charges he may make against those officials. It is contrary to precedent, it is contrary to our notions of right and fair-play that the defeated candidate, who is not here to answer any criticisms, should be accepted as a sufficient authority to justify dismissals. I wish the minister would be good enough to take us into his confidence to-night and state whether these summary dismissals will be continued in his department, or whether he will give accused officials an opportunity of defending themselves against charges that may be made by those who feel it their duty to make them.

Mr. MONK. Heaven preserve and guard me from any expression, and protect this committee against any word, that may fall from my mouth which would have the effect of once more rekindling the discussion we have had in this House, I think far too lengthy, upon the subject of dismissals. But if my hon. friend wishes me to take the committee into my confidence and tell the committee what I think, I am prepared to say at once, that so far as my department is concerned, I would be delighted to afford any official who is about to be dismissed, or who has been dismissed, or who feels that he has been the object of any injustice, an opportunity of having an investigation.

In 1896 when every official in my county was dismissed under circumstances to which I have already adverted, and when I asked for a general investigation, my lamented friend Mr. Blair who was then Minister of Railways and Canals shrugged his shoulders and told me such a thing was impossible and was never done. But the lesson I learned then has taught me that these things cannot be done with impunity, and I would be prepared to grant an investigation wherever there is some ground for putting the country to the expense involved because it must be obvious that if every civil servant who has committed an infraction of the rules which the minister is satisfied he has committed is entitled to a commission, the country would be drawn into very great expense, and some kind of discretion must be exercised. But where there is a doubt, common British Justice requires that the minister should afford the employee an opportunity to justify himself and show that the accusation was not well founded. I have acted upon that principle, and wherever I had a doubt, if an investigation was demanded, I have granted it and always with the feeling that it was a somewhat costly proceeding. As I said the other night, if you are sure an employee has infringed the rule in such a grave manner as to deserve dismissal, you dismiss him. You cannot make every one of these dismissals the occasion of a political trial which calls for considerable expense, and although in political matters you have to be doubly careful, you cannot have an investigation where there is really, in your own opinion, no need for one. However, I have granted one wherever I have thought necessary.

In Ottawa the circumstances were somewhat special. A large number of complaints were made by the sitting members. I received them, I saw that they were put in such form as to constitute regular accusations, and when I saw that in many cases these accusations were denied, I chose a man who I thought was just, humane and equitable, and I entrusted him with the task which I could not possibly carry out myself, of giving a fair show to the employee accused in order that justice should be rendered.

As to the sitting member, my hon. friend seems to take it for granted that if he denounces an employee, then, on account of the position he occupies in this House, his accusation must be considered prima facie well founded. Is it just to refuse the same amount of credence to a man because he has been defeated? If he is nobody, if he has no standing in the community, I could understand it, but if he is a man chosen as the candidate, holding a respectable position, just as respectable as that of his triumphant adversary, and he puts the proper allegation before the minister, I think it little matters whether he is the defeated or the successful candidate. Any respectable citizen worthy of credence who makes a complaint against a civil servant is entitled to be listened to. Because a man is a member of parliament he is not, in my opinion, in a better position in this respect than anybody else, and if the circumstances are given, if the complaint is properly lodged, why should I not act until the contrary is proven on this accussation? It would be giving a singular privilege to a member to say that he would be in a different position than any respectable member of the community who makes that complaint.

I believe we can greatly improve our civil service, but I think every man is prepared to admit that all these improvements would go for naught if we should allow civil servants to take an offensive part in politics. If a civil servant attends meetings in a noisy manner, interrupts the speakers, becomes an offensive partisan, if he canvasses, attends committee meetings, takes an active part in the election, if he furnishes teams to one of the candidates can he be treated with indulgence? I think not, I think we ought to be very severe. I never complained on that score, when all my own constituents were put out of office suddenly, some of them at a moment's notice, infirm men with large families. What I complained of was that they were not afforded an opportunity of defending themselves when they asked for it. In the case pointed out to-night, I am prepared to lay the documents before my hon. friends and if in their opinion there is ground for an investigation, which is always a somewhat costly proceeding, it will take place undoubtedly.

Mr. EMMERSON. Would you restore the man to his position?

Mr. MONK. Surely if any injustice has been committed, some arrangement must be arrived at by which that injustice can be repaired.

To save expense investigators have been appointed in the different provinces, and they will be available for any investigations that may be necessary. There are a number of civil servants who openly meddle in elections. I have seen them in counties in Quebec interrupting speakers, raising rows, fighting, openly taking part in an offensive manner in the campaign and stating that they were ready for dismissal if their party did not remain in power. What is to be done in cases of that kind?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). No one would object to a dismissal in that case.

Mr. MONK. No, I think not, I think that in the present condition of affairs in regard to the civil service, we must absolutely admit that principle. There is room for improvement, but the moment you countenance in any way the meddling of civil servants in a campaign you do a thing that has always been discouraged in England, and in every country where they have endeavoured to improve the civil service, and I think we should endeavour to stand by that rule here.

As to any individual case in my own department I am anxious to give all the information possible, and where any injustice is committed, to repair it, to give the parties a full chance of investigation. I have done that in Ottawa. I believe that in the city of Ottawa the abuse was very great. I really believe that candidates forget all the injury they do to a civil servant in asking him to furnish teams to attend committee meetings or if he controls other employees to get them to vote and work in the election. It is in the excitement of an election campaign that he does this, but he places their positions in jeopardy. I know that has been done in several cases because these public servants have come to me and have told me how the thing happened. It was under these circumstances that I chose a man who I thought was just and fair, and asked him to investigate. There were probably 100 complaints. Neither I nor any of my officers could afford the time to investigate them as we were already overrun with work. I chose the most fair man I could find and told him that he must act absolutely according to the principles of justice and fairness.

Mr. NESBITT. Is there anything in the Civil Service Act which keeps any civil servant from taking part in elections?

Mr. MONK. There is such a clause in the Act, but anyway everybody knows that it is absolutely forbidden, and that if civil servants do meddle in politics they risk their positions. Some do it in an underhand way, but the more frank do it openly and say they don't care whether they lose their positions or not.

Mr. KYTE. It is within my personal knowledge that the late Minister of Railways absolutely refused to dismiss without inquiry, a man against whom a charge of partisanship was made, and he appointed a commissioner to inquire, and not until he had that commissioner's report did he act. Of course I accept the statement of the Minister of Public Works as to what took place in his own constituency, but in my constituency no dismissals were made in 1896, except after investigation and report by a commissioner. The Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), who is I suppose not any more humane than any other member of the government, has adopted a course entirely different from that of the Minister of Public Works. Where charges of partisanship have been made against officials of the Post Office Department in my constituency he has notified them of the charges and asked them for their answers. I am happy to say that in a couple of cases, in which I asked the Postmaster General to give these officials an opportunity of defending themselves, he was so gracious as to grant my request. So far no dismissals have been made in the Post Office Department to my knowledge, and I have reason to believe none will be made until an investigation is held. At all events, the Postmaster General has been fair enough to intimate to the officials charged what the allegations against them are. I am not asking for an investigation in every case, but I do say that the charge should be communicated to the official, and an opportunity given him to answer. If he is charged with partisanship and he has been a partisan I have no doubt, if he is a truthful man—and I have no reason to assume they are not all truthful and honest men—he will admit the charge.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have had some experience and I would like to find one of them who would admit it.

Mr. KYTE. The experience of my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury), with his people is very different from my experience with my people. My people will state whether or not the charge is true. But there are cases in which the line is so illdefined between partisanship and nonpartisanship; and there are cases in which the man making the charge does so on hearsay, and these cases should be made the subject of inquiry and the official given an opportunity to explain the circumstances. I object to the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Public Works, that it is proper to dismiss a man first and try him afterwards; it would be more consonant with British justice to have the trial first and the conviction afterwards.

Mr. MONK. I would not like to be understood as reflecting on the conduct of the late Mr. Blair when Minister of Railways in 1896, but those who were there at that time will have no difficulty in accepting the statement I have made with regard to the dismissals in my constituency. Of course, at that time the doctrine as to the civil service was not as clearly defined as it is now. I know from my own experience, that when civil servants are charged with partisanship they generally deny it, and small blame to them because they think they may have a chance of retaining their positions. For instance, there was a man in my department, and I had abundant proof before me that he had infringed the rule, and I told him it was better he should resign. The man interested me, I had no desire to dismiss him, I thought I might transfer him to some other position, but he absolutely denied the charge, and we had to have an investigation, which I tried to conduct as cheaply as possible, yet it cost over $250, and of course the evidence was absolutely clear as to his infraction of the rule. As a rule, the officials deny such a charge, although in some cases the evidence is so strong that were it not that the political question was present no minister would have any hesitation in accepting the evidence without the inquiry.

Mr. MACDONALD. The resolution of the House imposes on the minister the duty of removing a man who offensively interferes in politics, and with that I do not quarrel. As to whether we are to have civil service reform in this country, in the inside or outside service backed up by public sentiment, and that all officials should refrain from politics, is a question as to which there is some doubt. If the minister will carry out his promise to be fair in dealing with these officials, there is little he has said I would quarrel with, barring his assertion that the statement of a defeated candidate is entitled to the same credence as the statement of any member of this House. When a member of parliament stands up in this House and makes a statement under the rules of this House he is on his honour and that statement must be accepted by every one of his fellow members. The rule is so absolute in its character that any hon. gentleman sitting in this House must realize there is an onus put upon him which places his statement in a category different from that of an ordinary statement. The defeated candidate is bound by no such rule as obtains in this House in that regard, and pressed by party friends in his constituency he makes representations which nine times out of ten are not to his own personal knowledge. He is not on his honour in the presence of parliament as to the statements he makes, but he is actuated in a large degree by the political necessities of the local situation.

So that there is a very great distinction, which the hon. minister will himself at once admit, between the member of the House on either side who makes representations here on his honour as a member and a man outside—whether a defeated candidate or not. That being the case, if my hon. friend is actuated by a desire to be fair to those who occupy positions in the service, whether in the outside or inside service, he will not accept representations made to him by parties who are not members of this House without giving the accused the opportunity of saying whether or not these charges were true. At the inception of this debate I mentioned the case of a caretaker in the government employ at Westville. I happened to be in that town on election day, I took an active part in that contest, and I never saw this man interfere in politics in the slightest degree. I was very much surprised, therefore, when the other day this man came to me with a letter from Mr. Ewart in my hon. friend's department, notifying him, without any alleged cause whatever, to leave on January 31st. I mention this also to my hon. friend because I regard it as a severe hardship to move this man, who has a family to support, dependent on his retaining his position, in the midst of winter. In this case it was not even the defeated candidate who made any charge, because the defeated candidate was Mr. Bell, now a senator, and I am sure that he did not approach the minister concerning this man at all. So that it was solely on the representation of somebody outside this House who was not even a defeated candidate, that this man was dismissed. I would ask my hon. friend to cancel this notice of dismissal and give this man an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf.

Mr. MONK. I certainly recognize that there is a distinction between a member of this House and an ordinary citizen of a constituency or a defeated candidate. But still I think he will admit that the member elected remains in active politics and undergoes a pressure which in many cases the defeated candidate does not. Of course I eliminate at once the candidate who does not reside in the constituency, but who goes in to contest an election and leaves it afterwards, and is not subject, as is one who is living there, to the public criticism of his constituents when he asks for the dismissal of a public servant. But a defeated candidate, who resides in a constituency, holds a prominent position there, is a man of standing and credence, and in such a case the complaint has to be considered according to the circumstances of the case. In the case of the member elected, who has to defend his actions in this House as my hon. friend says, we are obliged to accept his statement, according to the rules of the House. But when a man of standing in his constituency, who is subject to the judgment and criticism of his fellow citizens, openly denounces a public servant as unfit to retain his position, his representations are entitled to considerable weight. I might mention personally that in one case since the election, I was asked by a gentleman living in the constituency, occupying a responsible position there, and not meddling in politics: How is it I hear of dismissals and you have not dismissed a certain public servant, who is known to have taken a most active part in the elections, who has done committee work and canvassed the voters and who spoke at meetings held there. I said there had been no complaint against him, but will my hon. friend say that I should take no notice of such a complaint against this man?

Mr. MACDONALD. I did not say that. If my hon. friend will just follow out that rule, he will grant my request at once. We both agree that where a public servant has been guilty of interference in politics as a partisan, he should be dismissed. We also agree that when a representation is made by a member of this House, the minister should accept the statement of the member who makes it. We also agree that when a complaint is made to a minister by any person of standing in the constituency, whether on the ground of partisanship or any other dereliction of his duty, the minister is bound to inquire into it. But my hon. friend will not say that because a defeated candidate, or any other person outside this House, chooses to make a complaint against an official in a department, he will act on that without investigation. In the case I refer to, the defeated candidate did not ask the minister to dismiss this man. My hon. friend is dealing with a case in which somebody outside this House, who is not even a defeated candidate, has asked him to make the removal. All I ask my hon. friend is to give this official the opportunity to be heard and not turn him out of his home, without an investigation, in the depth of winter.

Mr. BEATTIE. I have not asked for any dismissals in my constituency, though I think I ought to have done so. I certainly would have done so if I had followed the precedent set by the late administration. For instance, in 1896 there were three young lads, not one of whom were more than twenty-five years old, dismissed from humble positions in the post office at London. The only charge against them was that their fathers were supporters of mine. I did not raise my voice against that arbitrary action, although I felt deeply that it was a great hardship and injustice. The dismissals made in 1896 were a disgrace to the country. Let me point to another instance. These hon. gentlemen opposite compelled an old gentleman of 68 years, who had been in charge of that post office for years, to take superannuation, and before they left office appointed in his place an old gentleman, whom I shall not name, of about 75 years of age. That gentleman they made postmaster of London. He had previously been Deputy Speaker of this House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He never was very brilliant, but I will not say here that he was not fit for the office.

Mr. BEATTIE. The appointment was very much against the wishes of the Liberals of London. I have not made any representations to this government regarding that gentleman, although in 1896 the late government dismissed everybody they could lay their hands on. Here was a case in which three young men were dismissed by the late government from the London post office, not one of whom was over twenty-five years of age, solely because their fathers were good Conservatives and supporters of mine.

I am very glad those young gentlemen were dismissed, because they occupy to-day very much better positions than they would have attained in the postal service of Canada. The Conservative party have been very kind and lenient in this matter, and I have been the same. I do not wish to do any man an injustice. But it is somewhat amusing to hear hon. gentlemen opposite complaining of dismissals when we have not dismissed anything like the number they did in 1896.

Mr. KYTE. The hon. Minister of Public Works stated that, in considering the value to be attached to the statements of defeated candidates with respect to charges against officials, he would eliminate the man who went from one constituency to another to contest an election, and returned to his own home after the election was over. That is exactly the condition in my own constituency. My opponent is not a resident of the county I represent, but lives in another. He came to my county as the candidate of the Conservative party, and after the election he returned to his home in another constituency. Since then whatever information he has received with respect to the partisanship of officials in my constituency has been largely obtained from men seeking the offices of those they desire to have dismissed. I would like the minister to bear that in mind whenever in the future representations are made by the defeated candidate in Richmond county looking to the dismissal of officials there. He is not a resident of the county, but a non-resident, and therefore has no personal knowledge of the charges he alleges. I hope, therefore, the minister will feel constrained not to put the value on that gentleman's allegations that he would in other cases, but will grant investigations in all cases where the officials are accused of partisanship.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was very much disappointed to hear my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works make what seems to me to be a declaration of approval of the doctrine, to the victors belong the spoils.

Mr. MONK. It was not so intended.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps it was not, but it had that effect. The hon. gentleman referred to the action of the late Hon. Mr. Blair. In the county of Westmorland is the city of Moncton, the headquarters of the Intercolonial railway. In 1896 I was not in Dominion politics, but in that year the Hon. Mr. Blair became Minister of Railways, and I wish to state that among about 1,000 employees outside of the higher classes of officials, there was only one dismissal made by Mr. Blair because of political partisanship, and that was the ex-chief engineer of the Intercolonial railway upon charges that were made and investigated.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). How many dismissals on other grounds?

Mr. EMMERSON. None. Although the Conservative party had been in power for eighteen years and had filled every possible position on the Intercolonial railway, in the shops and offices and everywhere else, with their own friends, the Hon. Mr. Blair, on becoming Minister of Railways, declined to make dismissals except in cases where charges were made and investigated. Previous to dinner there was a question up with reference to the dismissal of Watson E. Reid, an architect, who was entrusted with the responsibility of inspecting the public building under construction at Hillsborough, and the Minister of Public Works stated that after recess he would have full information on the matter. I would like to ask him if he has furnished the information, and if so, what the character of that information is?

Mr. HAZEN. I have listened very attentively to this debate, and I am astonished that hon. gentlemen opposite should attempt to leave the impression on the country that after the general elections of 1896 men were not removed from the employ of the government on the ground of political partisanship unless their cases were investigated and they were found guilty of the charges laid against them. I am especially astonished to hear the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) make the assertion he has made, because it is a well known fact in the province of New Brunswick that up and down the line of the Intercolonial railway from Quebec to St. John men were dismissed by the score without investigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend is not prepared to say that was the case in the county of Westmorland.

Mr. HAZEN. I am prepared to say that it was the case up and down the Intercolonial railway, and I am prepared to give my hon. friend examples if he wants them. I have in my mind a man in St. John, James Demille, who occupied a humble position as checker in the railway station, and who after the election of 1900 was dismissed without one word of warning.

Mr. EMMERSON. That case did not occur until after the election of 1904, years after Mr. Blair had ceased to be Minister of Railways.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not care who was Minister of Railways. The party to which my hon. friend belongs were in power, and during the régime Mr. Demille, a worthy and respectable citizen, was dismissed from office on the ground of political partisanship.

He denied the charge and wrote demanding an investigation. He received a reply that no investigation was to be given and no change made in the order of dismissal. That is one case that occurs to me at the moment. I turn to 'Hansard' and I find another. My hon. friend from Richmond, N.S. (Mr. Kyte) has told us that in his constituency no dismissals were made without investigation first held. I accept his statement as I would accept that of any other hon. member of this House. But, even though that was the case in Richmond, it was not the case in every county of Nova Scotia. I find in 'Hansard' for 1909 at page 6784, the following:

Mr. MADDIN asked:.

1. When was Hector McRae, late keeper of Plaster Mines lighthouse, Victoria county, N.S., dismissed, and what was the cause of his dismissal?

2. Was there any charge against him? If so, who was the complainant and was there any investigation?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. (a) By order in council, dated 6th May, 1909; (b) offensive political partisanship.

2. (a) Yes; (b) D. D. McKenzie, M.P.; (c) No.

So it is clear that in other counties they were dismissed without investigation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The point was that the defeated Conservative candidate was not a resident of the county.

Mr. HAZEN. That does not affect the statement of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) which was that no man in that constituency was dismissed by the Liberal government without an investigation. But as to this gentleman being resident outside the county, the hon. member for Richmond might have explained that that gentleman represented the county of Richmond in this House, I believe, from 1891 to 1900. And on several occasions since he has been a candidate in the county. Surely the statement of such a man should have weight. It must be recognized that he has knowledge of the politics of the people there. My hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has referred to the case of Mr. Reid, inspector of construction of the post office at Hillsborough. And the hon. gentleman speaks in a way—I do not say intentionally—to give his hearers the idea that this gentleman was the architect of this post office.

Mr. EMMERSON. I expressly said he was not the architect, but that he was an architect by profession and was employed as inspector. Being an architect, he was better qualified to act as inspector than another man would have been.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman always speaks of him as an architect and inspector of the post office at Hillsborough. He may be an architect, but though I am fairly familiar with the people of New Brunswick, I have never heard of any great architectural work designed by Mr. Reid, nor have I ever heard of Mr. Reid as an architect at all. He was acting as inspector on this building, work which did not call for a man with the qualifications of an architect. I am sorry the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is not in his seat, for he would be familiar with the facts. But I am informed that Mr. Reid was very active in the elections in endeavouring to defeat the hon. gentleman who is now member for that constituency. But the position Mr. Reid occupied was in no sense a position in the civil service. He was appointed because he was a friend of the government, and the position was in its very nature a temporary one. Was it not in line with the way politics are carried on by both sides that, when the present government came into power it should select one of its own friends to fill this position which Mr. Reid occupied simply because he was a friend of the former government? I do not wish to take up time discussing a matter which has already been discussed at length, and would not have spoken but for the statement of the hon member from Richmond (Mr Kyte) which would lead one to believe that no official was dismissed by the late government without an investigation. Hundreds of cases are to be found all over the country, cases of men who had been for years in the public service and whose dismissal involved great hardship, cases even of men who were dismissed not for anything they had done, but to visit upon them the sins of their relatives who had taken part in politics.

Mr. EMMERSON. The late Mr. Blair's name having been mentioned, I stated that in the county of Westmorland, Mr. Blair had made no dismissals after 1896, without an investigation.

Mr. HAZEN. Was not Mr. Foster dismissed?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not in Mr. Blair's department. And in that case, a year or two afterwards an investigation was held by Mr. Bill, from Nova Scotia. As Mr. Blair's name was mentioned, I thought it due to his memory to recall the fact, that, in 1896, when he became Minister of Railways, so far as the county of Westmorland is concerned, which I have the honour to represent, though in the Intercolonial railway shops at Moncton there are about a thousand men employed, and hundreds more in the offices, and hundreds in other places in the county, no dismissals were made except after an investigation. Speaking from memory, there was really only one, the chief engineer; and the facts of that case frequently came before this parliament after 1896.

Mr. HAZEN. Was not Mr. Cook, the general storekeeper dismissed?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, he was superannuated at a later period, because of his condition of health.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. EMMERSON. One at a time, please. Now, as to the case of Mr. Demille, the Liberals came into power in 1896. Mr. Demille was a Liberal. Mr. Demille's family belonged to the county of Albert, which county I represented for twelve or fourteen years, so I knew something about them. He received employment under the Liberal government, largely, I suppose, because he was a Liberal. He held a position down to 1904, and then his services were dispensed with. But that did not arise from what Mr. Blair did, nor was it because of any change of government. It seems to be the doctrine of my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen), that the mere fact that a man is a Liberal is a reason for his dismissal. Mr. Watson Reid I have known for years. He lived in the county of Albert when I had the honour of representing that county. He is a Liberal, no doubt of it. But he never took an active part in politics. He may have attended public meetings on either side, but he was recognized by the people generally as a man who would take no part in politics. He received his training as an architect in the United States, but returned to his native province. While not actively engaged in his profession, he has designed a number of residences that would do credit to the best architect in New Brunswick. He was engaged to supervise the building at Hillsboro because it was the first Dominion building erected there, and the object was to make it a credit to the country. Simply because of his qualifications, he was selected as an inspector. As to this job as inspector, Mr. Reid does not care a snap of the finger, I venture to say, whether he has it or not.

I am speaking of the principle, and I was calling the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the circumstances of this case. I was not making any complaint on behalf of Mr. Watson Reid, but I was saying that as he had been engaged from the very inception of the building, he should be kept on until it was finally completed. I made no reference to other sections. I have not contended that the Liberals did not dismiss from office very many men, but only after investigation. The great complaint against the Liberal government in 1896, and for a year or two afterwards, was that they did not act. The Conservatives had been in power for 18 years, almost every position in the public service of New Brunswick was held by a Conservative, and it was the complaint of those who had supported the Liberal party that there was no possibility of their being recognized—I am only speaking of facts. That the government did not respond to their appeal is either to its credit or its discredit; to its discredit perhaps from a party point of view. They suffered in the province of New Brunswick because they did not listen to the appeals to make dismissals. There may have been some dismissed without investigation, but that was not the case in the county of Westmorland, and my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. Reid) says there was not one such case in his county. But all up and down the province these complaints were made. I want to tell the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he has not had the opportunity of knowing New Brunswick that I have had. I have resided in Westmorland, and my duties required that I should go up and down in every county, in every section, indeed in every school district in the province of New Brunswick officially. Therefore I know something about the complaints of the people in 1896 as regards the inaction of the Liberal party in not removing Conservative office-holders. So much was that the case, that in the last election it was openly stated that if the Conservatives came into power they would sweep every Liberal out of office, instead of retaining their opponents as the Liberal government had done. It is amusing to listen to the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries contrasting their utterances with the declaration of principles made by their leader in 1896 from the floor of this House, and in the very first speech which he ever delivered as a member of the House of Commons. Any one who would read the declaration of principles laid down by the right hon. gentleman in 1896 and contrast it with the unblushing confessions of his colleagues in this House to-night, confessions of their adherence to the policy that to the victor belongs the spoil, will be struck with the contrast. And now we have the Minister of Public Works suggesting that the defeated Conservative candidate should be considered as a sufficient authority to warrant dismissal. It seems to me the doctrine is being carried far beyond anything that has ever been accepted in this House. I agree that men who took their offices in their hands during an election and openly espoused one party or the other, should receive their congé. Will my hon. friend deal in the same manner with respect to those officials who took an active part in the last election in opposition to the candidates of the Liberal party? If he will take my word as a representative of the county of Westmorland, I can give him the names of office-holders in the railway service, in the customs service, in the postal service, who openly and flagrantly espoused the cause of the Conservative candidates. When I asked that question of the leader of the government the other night he said: well, he would take that into consideration. My hon. friends opposite affect to feel outraged because an official takes an attitude against their party, but they smile, and laugh, and jeer when there is a complaint made against an official who espoused their party cause in the election.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Might I suggest that it is a smile of surprise that there is a solitary Tory left in the public service.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, I have listened to many astounding things from my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, and that is the most astounding of them all. I am not going to stand here and pose in any hypocritical manner with respect to the attitude of the Liberal party. But the Liberal party dismissed after charges were made—I am speaking now of the section of the country in New Brunswick with which I am familiar—they dismissed parties, and when vacancies occurred they appointed their own friends to office, and in that I hold they were right. When hon. gentlemen opposite take that course they will receive no criticism from me. But let us be fair and manly. If they will only dismiss on representations of their Conservative friends who are members of this House, and in the case of defeated candidates, on statements made on oath and on sworn evidence, after investigation, then I do not think that the country at large will complain of their course.

We are not contending that men should be retained in office who have been partisans, but we are contending that men who are discharged should have fair-play, should have a trial, should not first be executed and then have their trial. That is the position of the Minister of Public Works, he beheads the man, and then seeing him writhing in the dust says: Oh, if you will come forward now that your head is off and make an explanation which is satisfactory I shall replace the head. I do not think that is fair, I think that men who are charged should have a fair trial, and an opportunity of refuting, if they can, the charges made against them. If they cannot they must take the consequences, and they cannot even expect the support of their own friends.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski). Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised by the utterances of the hon. members opposite about dismissals. It is true that before to-day I knew that lawyers can venture to whitewash a negro, but I could not believe that there were amongst those gentlemen some of them as bold as to shield so reprovable deeds which the late government have been guilty, and deeds that I have witnessed myself during so many years. Above all I could never believe that men like the hon. member from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) and from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) who absolutely knew by themselves all what has happened from 1896 to 1911, could reproach the Conservative party, as they have done, on account of dismissals, when that party has not done yet the tithe of dismissals ordered by the Liberal party.

I am sorry my hon. friend from Westmorland cannot understand what I have been saying. But to state that there were no dismissals in 1896 without investigation is untrue, and I can prove it. I have a list, and I have letters referring to men who were dismissed from 1896 to 1900 without an investigation, without any cause being given for their dismissal. I shall again read for the information of my hon. friend from Westmorland a letter which I submitted to the House the other evening:

Campbellton Station, Jan. 2, 1897.

Mr. Theophile Michaud,
Section Foreman,
Amqui.

Dear Sir,—I am instructed to notify you that after the 15th of the present month your services will be dispensed with. This will give you the usual 14 days' notice. Please acknowledge receipt of this letter.

Yours truly,
JAMES PATTERSON.

Here is another one which is shorter than that, three days' notice:

Rivière du Loup Station,
October 28, 1896.

George Dubé, Esq.,
Sectionman,
St. Alexandre.

Sir,—I am instructed by the chief engineer to notify you that your services will no longer be required as sectionman on the Intercolonial railway. You will, therefore, consider yourself discharged after the 31st of this month.

Just three days. That man with a family was dismissed without the 15 days' notice. This man wanted to know, as the hon. member for Westmorland is saying now, the reason why, and he wrote to his superior, and received the following reply:

Moncton, N.B., Nov. 2, 1896.

Mr. George Dubé,
Ex-sectionman,
St. Alexandre Station, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th ult., asking the reasons for your discharge from the service. I do not know of any reports against you. My order was from the general manager and was repeated to Mr. Yeo.

Yours truly,
P. S. ARCHIBALD,
Chief Engineer.

To show you how bad a man that was, and how dishonest, I shall read you another letter. After being dismissed he went on another road, and served there for six or seven years. At the end of that term he asked for a certificate from his chief, and you will see what he got:

New Carlisle, Quebec,
June 17, 1907.

To whom it may concern:

George Dubé has been in the employ of this railway for over six years and is only leaving for causes to his advantage. I can thoroughly recommend him as an industrious, sober, and eminently trustworthy man, and am sure will give every satisfaction in any position he may fill.

CHAS. D. SCOLES,
General Manager,
Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway.

That is the kind of men they were discharging in my county in 1896, and later on. I have here a partial list, about one-tenth, of the men discharged in my county at that time:

List of employees of the Intercolonial railway dismissed in 1896.

P. S. Archibald.
Geo. Skeffington.

Mr. HAZEN. Were they all given an investigation?

Mr. BOULAY. They were given an investigation in the same way as George Dubé was.

I observe on the order paper a question by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) asking how many dismissals of postmasters there have been in the county of Rimouski. There are about twelve, and to equal what was done in 1896 I have about 40 more to ask.

I do not intend to do it because I have still some idea of what is honest and what is humane, and I will spare the people who deserve to be spared. I expect that after this the members of the Liberal party will not again refer to the question of dismissals. If they did right in 1896 how is it wrong now in 1912 for us to restore the poor men whom they unjustly dismissed? It is nothing but fair, now that the Conservative party is in power, that they should put back in their places all those men who were unjustly dismissed by the Liberals in 1896. I can tell my hon. friend from Westmorland that all those men whose names I have mentioned have not been put back yet on the railway, but in justice to these poor fellows who have waited for fifteen years they will have to be. Let me tell you the means the Liberals took to dismiss the last Conservative sectionman on the railway in my district. They imported a track-master who was working on another railway and he declared he was glad to call himself a friend of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and having that man who was a Grit, of course they could discharge whom they pleased, and so, the last Conservative in the railway in my county, J. C. Gallant, was dismissed in 1900. I think I have given sufficient cases to the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) to induce him to refrain from talking any more about dismissals. He now asks from the Minister of Public Works the indulgence of giving his friends an investigation before dismissing them, but if the Minister of Public Works or any other minister did that I would certainly blame him. The rules of the Intercolonial railway say that an investigation is to be given to a man dismissed within fifteen days after he is dismissed—not before he is dismissed, remember—and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) who has been Minister of Railways, must know that rule. The hon. member for Westmorland was not so scrupulous in 1904. When I spoke the other day in French, and I suppose he did not understand me, but he could have read my words after they were translated, I made a severe charge against him as a public man. It was his duty as minister to protect the patrons of the government railway against his own employees, and he failed to do so. I was insulted badly by one of the sectionmen right on the railway premises and I was ordered to go home by him. I reported the facts to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) when he was minister, then I wrote to the government, then I wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the chief of the minister, but no justice was ever rendered to me. No investigation of any kind was ordered, and that is why I have recently put a motion on the order paper to ask for all the papers concerning that affair, and when I get them I presume I shall discover that orders came directly from the hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) who was then Minister of Railways, not to give an investigation. I think I have said enough to remind all those who are on the other side of the House now that when they were on this side of the House, they did not carry out the practice which they now recommend should be followed.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it would indeed have been a matter for surprise had the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) refrained from addressing the House anent this question of dismissal of government employees. As a matter of fact the hon. member is throughout the district of Quebec, the recognized executioner of the Conservative party.

Sir, it would seem that much vaunted advance of civilization was an unknown factor as far as this matter is concerned. In olden times when victims were sacrificed, their bodies were strewn with flowers. Nowadays the member for Rimouski, not content with having poor employees deprived of their means of living, deems it becoming to add insult to injury. That shows very poor taste on the part of the hon. member.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of Mr. George Dubé, of St. Alexandre, all the men whose names have been mentioned by the hon. member as having been dismissed, were living in the county of Rimouski, whose representative in 1896 was a friend of the government. Mr. George Dubé himself resided in the county of Kamouraska, which, in 1896, was also represented by a member friendly to the government.

Hon. members all seem to concur in the opinion that whenever a member, under his personal responsibility, charges a civil servant with offensive partizanship, the minister is bound to accept his statement. We do not object to that. But the hon. member has not mentioned the name of a single employee who had been dismissed without inquiry, on a charge brought against him by others than members of this House.

As I stated a moment ago, he will soon have made for himself a name as an informer against government officials.

There is not a constituency in the province of Quebec—and I state it as a compliment to the hon. member who apparently is proud of it—wherein heads have fallen in as large numbers as in this county of Rimouski. It is a fact known to all that postmasters have been dismissed without inquiry and without notice.

Mr. BOULAY. How many?

Mr. LAPOINTE. I wonder whether my hon. friend takes pride in it, but as a matter of fact, after these postmasters had been dismissed, he found himself under the necessity of requesting that a certain number of them be reinstated, the people having become indignant at the way things were carried on.

Now the hon. member is not content with playing the part of the executioner in his own constituency; his ambition requires greater scope. He has gone beyond the limits of the county of Rimouski, and you will be surprised to learn, Mr. Speaker, that, at his request, a man in the employ of the Intercolonial, at Fraserville, in the county of Temiscouata, so worthily represented by my friend Mr. Gauvreau, was summarily dismissed, without previous notice, without inquiry, by means of a simple letter which was sent to him stating: Your services are no longer required. That employee who had been contributing for fourteen years to the superannuation fund of the Intercolonial, wrote to the Minister of Railways inquiring as to the reasons which had brought about his dismissal, what were the charges made against him, and requesting an inquiry. The minister answered: Sir, you have been dismissed on a charge of having taken an active part in the last elections and of being guilty of offensive partisanship. You have been dismissed on the recommendation of Mr. H. Boulay, member for Rimouski, who stated that to his personal knowledge you had been guilty of offensive partisanship. Now that officer is not acquainted with the member for Rimouski, has never spoken to him. And the hon. member states that to his personal knowledge that man has been guilty of offensive partisanship.

Well, I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. Minister of Public Works thinks of that? If he accepts the statement of government members as regards the wrong-doing of government officers residing in their constituency, is he going to accept such statements when it comes to dismissing officials outside their constituencies?

Then, it seems to me the hon. Minister of Public Works has bad grace to quote the case of England. In Great Britain, he contends no government official has the right to take part in elections. As a matter of fact, is it not true that civil servants in Great Britain are debarred from interfering with politics, whether in favour of one party or the other? Both parties are agreed on that point. And it is known in Great Britain that no public servant has the right to work for any party. Should that rule be enforced here, the hon. minister would have to act on our statement whenever we complained of the doings of some official who had worked against us. As for myself I would be in a position to mention some employees of whom we have reason to complain; and that would provide him with a good opportunity to show that he really means what he says.

I repeat it, in none of the cases mentioned by the hon. member for Rimouski, did the complaints emanate from others than members of this House supporting the Liberal government then in power and representing the constituencies wherein those officials resided. So that the speech made by the hon. member is in no sense an answer to the reason set forth from this side of the House.

Mr. LAPOINTE.

Mr. BOULAY. (Translation.) The hon. member for Kamouraska has just made statements the truth of which it would be very difficult for him to prove. He stated that I demanded the dismissal of postmasters whom I afterwards caused to be reinstated. I may say to the hon. member that he has been very wrongly informed, as all the postmasters who have been dismissed have been so dismissed in order to reinstate those who had been discharged in 1896 and subsequently. The object then was to make amends for the harm done in 1896, and not a single one of the postmasters dismissed on my representations of late has been reinstated.

The hon. member for Kamouraska stated that Mr. Talbot was an Intercolonial railway employee at Rivière du Loup. Well, for the information of the hon. member who does not seem to be very well posted, I may say that Mr. Talbot's work was being performed between Levis and Campbellton. So that it is not a River du Loup official, but a district official whose dismissal I requested, and I did so knowing him to be a party heeler, who has been canvassing votes all over on the trains, and who was the keeper of the black list of Conservative employees at River du Loup. That is the reason which induces me to request his discharge, and nothing else.

I think I have answered satisfactorily the charges wantonly made by the hon. member for Kamouraska. Let me close by congratulating him on having addressed the House in French, anl I hope hon. members on the other side will follow suit.

Mr. NESBITT. Were it not for the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) that civil servants should not take any part in politics, I would not say anything in this debate, and I only do so because silence might be construed to give consent. I do not agree at all in that doctrine except where civil servants are disfranchised by any statute. They are citizens of this country just as the rest of us, and the difficulty I see is that the government take the ground that civil servants have not the rights of ordinary citizens. But the government themselves are simply civil servants, in a higher grade no doubt, but still they are but servants of the Crown. Therefore unless we pass an Act disfranchising our public officials, I do not see why they should not exercise the rights of citizens as other citizens do. Of course if you take from them the rights of citizenship, you deprive them of the right to vote, then you take from them the right to take any part in politics, but that you have not done yet. I am absolutely in accord with the right hon. the First Minister in the speech he made in 1896, which was quoted here the other night, and agree that civil servants should be punished just the same as anybody else for misdemeanours. In the opinion I have expressed that until disfranchised, our officials should be entitled to exercise all the rights of citizenship, I am alone in this House, judging by the opinions we have heard from both sides within the last two weeks, but I cannot help that. I have my own views on everything, no matter what, and am not disposed to change them without what I consider good cause. In the riding of North Oxford, our experience is apparently unique. Within my recollection, there have been no public officials dismissed in that riding either by the provincial or the Dominion government. In fact my predecessor, the late Mr. James Sutherland, whom a great many in this House knew, not only did not dismiss anybody in 1896, but made appointments to the government service indifferently from Liberals and Conservatives. I know that Liberals in that county thought that in this he was unjust. I know that there was a good deal of clamour on the part of certain Liberals, who thought that his conduct in this respect was unjust and unfair, but that did not cause him to alter his course. I know also that he was always glad to assist any young men in the riding, whether Liberals or Conservatives, any way he could, to the best of his ability. My experience, therefore, in the riding I have the honour to represent, is apparently, from all I have heard in this House, very unique. That no doubt is why I have no hard feeling against any public official who takes part in politics. I hold that civil servants are simply human beings like the rest of us and should be treated as such. Why should a village postmaster, for instance, getting a salary of $150 or $200 or $300 a year, have to give up his birthright on that account? I think it is absolutely unfair to require that he should practically divest himself of his manhood simply because he is drawing a little money from the public purse. I have nothing more to say except to express the hope that the precedent set by the riding of North Oxford will be followed throughout the Dominion. So far as I am concerned I shall never hesitate to assist to the best of my ability any man, young or old whether Conservative or Liberal, in the riding. I have never questioned the politics of any man when I could do anything for him.

Mr. SINCLAIR. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would save a good deal of time and discussion if he would be more open and frank. I endeavoured to extract from him his consent to give an investigation into a case of very great hardship in my constituency but have not yet been able to get him to do so. I refer to the dismissal of the caretaker of a public building at Canso, which case was similar to that mentioned by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), namely, the dismissal of the caretaker at Westville. The caretaker at Westville was ordered out of the public building on the 31st of December without any charge being made against him that he was aware of and without any intimation that any investigation would be given. The caretaker at Canso also received a letter notifying him to move out of the building. I requested the hon. minister to grant an investigation and also give this man a little time in which to find shelter for his family. I must say that I have not been very well treated by my hon. friend, because I have not yet received a reply to my letter, though it was penned some months ago. I did, on several occasions, draw his attention to the matter, but he always put me off with some irrelevant remark, and has not yet offered to give me the investigation I asked for. I notice also that in answering some questions which I put to the hon. minister, he was anything but frank and open. When asked who recommended Mr. Chauvin as commissioner, he replied that he was recommended by the head of the department. By that I suppose he meant himself. And no doubt he meant that no one recommended Mr. Chauvin, but that the minister selected him of his own accord. Then he was asked whether Mr. Chauvin was the defeated Nationalist candidate in Labelle county in the general election of 1908 and his reply was: 'There is no record in the department.' What do you think of that reply? Here we have the assistant leader of the Nationalist party of the province of Quebec, who does not know who his own candidate was in that election. There is no record in the department, and consequently we cannot get that information from him. But perhaps he will tell me now whether this man was really the Nationalist candidate who ran in the county of Labelle?

With regard to the case at Canso, the candidate who was opposed to me in Guysborough does not reside in that county, but resides in Sydney, which is about a hundred miles from Canso, so that he must get his information from some of his political friends at Canso. I have received so many letters from officials of various departments in my constituency in regard to the efforts made to drive them out of office that I have made some inquiries as to where these efforts started from, and I was informed that complaints were invited by means of a printed form which was sent to the neighbours of the officials in the various districts asking them if they had any complaint to make against anybody; and these complaints made by anybody go to the Minister of Public Works, and he acts on them. That is the kind of evidence on which the heads of officials are cut off in the county of Guysborough. I do not admit the statements made by some hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to what took place in 1896, and subsequently, so far as my constituency is concerned. I know that the dismissals made there were made after investigation. Captain Douglas travelled along the coast, and where a legitimate complaint was made against a man, he held an investigation, summoning witnesses, swearing them, hearing the evidence, and giving an opportunity for cross-examination, and then made his report. No one can complain of that; it is a fair trial. There were not very many dismissals, on the Intercolonial railway. For example, at Mulgrave where a large number of people were employed to my best recollection there were only three men dismissed, and these were dismissed for good cause. The late Mr. Blair was a generous hearted, and broad-minded man who was not in favour of dismissal, and he did not entertain complaints unless they were made by responsible people, and then he gave investigations. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has given us a long list of dismissals made in 1896, but it does not contain any in connection with the Intercolonial. We were told by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that all up and down the line the slaughter had taken place. I can not speak for up and down the line, but I can speak for one corner in the province of Nova Scotia where it did not take place unless there was good cause for it. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works should define his policy on this matter. That he has not done so is one reason why he has had these long discussions when he brings his estimates forward. The hon. Minister of Customs did better. He came out squarely and frankly, and stated his policy in the following words:

> When a defeated candidate makes charges against an official of active partisanship, I have so far sent these charges as given to me to the commissioner appointed for the purpose of investigating them, and he is advised to notify whoever makes the charges and the official against whom the charges are made.

There we have a statement of the method in which the minister proposes to act. We have not yet had anything of that kind from the Minister of Public Works. He has not stated the principle on which he will act for the future. I feel that he should not get his estimates passed until he states definitely and clearly his policy on that important question. I hope he will do so to-night. I do not think he is justified in saying that it is too expensive to send a man to investigate a complaint against an official. The most important and valuable thing we have in this country is justice and fair-play, and the Dominion can afford to pay for it. There are three of these axemen or headsmen appointed in the province of Nova Scotia. Why does he not say that one of these men will be employed in every case in which complaints are made against an official of the Public Works Department, to visit the place and hold an investigation, and inform himself whether the statements made are true or not? If he will declare his policy in some such way as that, I shall be satisfied; I will take his word that he will carry it out, and I think he will find that it will be to his own advantage to do so.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). So far as the county I represent is concerned, there is no very serious complaint on the ground of dismissals. I did call attention the other evening to a case that I thought was a hardship, and I think that is probably the only case in the county. The reason is that in that county practically all the old officers of any kind are Conservatives. In 1896 there were very few dismissals by the Liberal party, certainly none of officers occupying prominent positions. All the good offices were held by Conservatives, and are still held by them. I may say, however, that they have always conducted themselves like gentlemen, and have never been offensive partisans, though they are pronounced in their political views, and are always ready to give expression to their convictions if anyone wants to discuss politics with them. As long as officials do not go out of their way to be offensive or insulting, do not go about seeking to provoke a quarrel, I do not consider them to be offensive partisans. I do not think that the fact of a man going to a public meeting, and even asking questions, is an evidence of partisanship. The hon. member for Westmorland has stated that the leaders of the Liberal party have been accused of not having been as mindful of the demands of their friends in the way of giving them offices as they should have been. I have heard again and again charges made against the Liberal party that they were not dismissing Conservatives as they should have done; and to-day, when you meet Liberals and discuss the matter with them, they will say: 'Your fellows are going to get it in the neck, they are going to be dismissed right and left, and it is good enough for you; you deserve it; how did you treat your enemies after 1896? How did you remember your friends?'

There is no doubt that, speaking generally, the Liberals did not dismiss, except for good cause and usually offered investigation. There are many Liberals properly dismissed now. Many have gathered around the various services in the past fifteen years and who are really not required. Some, perhaps, are not competent to perform their duties, and yet it was pretty hard for the late government's friends to turn them out. So far as these are concerned, we have no complaint to make. But when it comes to turning out an active, capable, efficient man, and replacing him, as in many cases with a man certainly no better qualified, if as well, I think it is time to call a halt. The Minister of Public Works has said that on the recommendation of the sitting member he would dismiss a man who was represented to him to be an offensive partisan. To that we can scarcely make objection if we are going to recognize at all the idea of partisanship not being permitted in an official. But the minister says that he will accept the recommendation even of a defeated Conservative candidate against an office-holder. I agree with those who have said that, in such a case the minister should go a little more slowly; he certainly should not dismiss officials on such a recommendation in the summary manner he has done, but should make inquiries. But what about the cases in which neither the sitting member nor the defeated candidate makes complaint. In my county the defeated candidate is a gentleman of the highest honour, a man of integrity and of the highest personal character, who has made himself highly respected in every way. Though I differ from him politically, I am bound to say that as a man, and a party man, he is above reproach. But the Conservative party in the county of Antigonish were not satisfied with him to dispense patronage. I do not know whether they felt he would be too upright and honourable for them. But the 'hungry horde' met in conclave and decided upon a mode of action by which the spoils of office might be divided amongst them. In such a case what will the minister do? Here are those seeking office—'the hungry horde' as they are called by the 'Halifax Herald,' the leading Conservative paper of Nova Scotia, and supposed to be the personal organ of the leader of the government—assembling and parcelling out offices among themselves.

The recommendations do not come either from the sitting member or from a defeated candidate. The defeated candidate is ignored—he is treated with the greatest disrespect. They form a sort of patronage committee, the jackals; they make representations to the government. Will the government listen to them? Is this to be a jackal government? I hope that when the minister answers the questions put by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) he will take the House into his confidence and tell us what he proposes to do in cases of that kind. So far as the principles as enunciated by the minister were concerned, on the whole they were certainly good and should meet with the approval of both sides of the House. And he spoke in such sympathetic terms that one would really believe that the injuries perpetrated hitherto, will not be repeated in the future. I wish we could be satisfied that his practices are going to be in accordance with his preachments. But when we find that men have been dismissed without an hour's notice, dismissed under such circumstances as have been related here by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), we cannot but look with suspicion upon some of the principles we hear enumerated even by ministers here in this House. I submit that it is not a proper thing to hang, draw and quarter a man first, and then give him a trial. Yet that is virtually the position the Minister of Public Works is taking. I would ask him to state what he proposes to do when neither the sitting member nor the defeated candidate makes representations regarding dismissals, but the representations come from a committee of those seeking office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not presume to speak for this side of the House as a whole, but I know there is a great deal of disappointment and dissatisfaction by reason of the statements made by the Minister of Public Works to-night. We had been led to understand, when the question of dismissals was under consideration in this committee, and the Customs estimates were before us, that where the sitting member did not take the responsibility of making a charge, but the charge was made by somebody outside of the House, notice would be given to the official concerned and a fair opportunity for him to put in his defence and to have his case investigated. But the Minister of Public Works has upset all our expectations based upon the statement made on the former occasion by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville). The hon. minister (Mr. Monk) must see that it is very desirable that a uniform rule should be laid down and followed by all the departments. Then I think he will see that the hon. members for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), Inverness (Mr. Chisholm), and Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) are entitled to the information which they ask for in regard to the officials to whom they refer. I was going to suggest to the minister that possibly he might allow item 140, 'Dominion Public Buildings,—Renewals, improvements and repairs,' to stand, allowing us to proceed with other items; and then when this item is taken up perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) would be able to give the information for which hon. gentlemen have asked to which they are fairly entitled; also, if he would allow me to make the suggestion and did not think me too presumptuous, he might, after consultation with his colleagues, be prepared to give us information which would indicate a uniform course in these matters on the part of the different departments, not having one minister go by one rule and another by a different rule, thus confusing the public mind as to the course to be pursued. If it is intended to act upon the request of the committeemen or the defeated candidate without investigation, let it be so stated. But do not let one minister say that in all cases where a charge is not made by a member of parliament there will be an investigation, that every man shall have a fair chance to defend himself, and then another minister act upon some entirely different principle.

I throw out this suggestion, I do not know whether it will meet the views of hon. gentlemen who are asking for the information. But I think that might be satisfactory, and then my hon. friend could get on with some other items, and when this item 140 is taken up, he may perhaps be in a position to give the information that is asked for.

Mr. MONK. I think item 140 has been passed. But we might leave open any other item that might be found convenient. I do not think hon. gentlemen in the committee have, some of them at least, followed the explanation I gave this evening. I am bound to say that to those who have been in parliament for many years, and who witnessed what took place when the former government came into power in 1896, there is something profoundly absurd in all this discussion. I alluded briefly to what occurred in my own constituency and I know a number of others of that kind, and I mitigated my statement by saying that at that time the doctrine had not been as fully laid down as it has been since, in discussions, resolutions, and in the House. But I venture to say that if the people of this country knew the amount of time we have wasted in the discussion of this subject since parliament began sitting this year, there would be an outcry. It has been calculated that the sittings of this parliament cost the country over $10,000 a day, and we have been spending I do not know how many days on this discussion, which seems to me perfectly idle. It is somewhat discouraging.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am afraid that if my hon. friend persists in making reflections against hon. members on this side of the House, who are not conscious of having wasted one minute more than hon. gentlemen opposite, he will not make progress with his estimates.

Mr. MONK. I believe that a great deal of valuable time has been wasted. It is easy to understand the position of the government, mine is perfectly clear, and I cannot understand how the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) can have any doubt whatever as to my own position. I cannot discuss a case when the papers are not familiar to me. I have consented to a motion to bring down the papers, and an opportunity will be given to discuss each case when the papers are before the House. As to investigations, I stated a moment ago that investigators had been named in each province, and that for my own part, where a prima facie case was made out for an investigation, I would grant it with pleasure. What more can I say? As regards complaints against public officials, I expressed the opinion that I did not believe that we should act merely and exclusively on the complaint of the sitting member, but that the evidence of other respectable citizens in the constituency was entitled to consideration. I do not see that I could go much further. I have in every case where an investigation has been asked, consented to it, and facilitated it. Now what sense or reason can there be in the complaint of a moment ago by the hon. member for Guysborough, that I would give no information in reply to questions? I have answered every question placed upon the order paper so far as I could. He asked me upon what recommendation Mr. Chauvin had been appointed, and I had stated four minutes before that I chose Mr. Chauvin myself, knowing that he was a just and fair man, and all gentlemen who have spoken to me about that choice have approved it, those who are interested and those who are not. I was asked if Mr. Chauvin was the Nationalist candidate in Labelle county in 1908. I do not know. A question of that sort should not be put to ministers. I do not know whether he was a Nationalist candidate or not, I took no interest whatever in that election. I do not know who is a Nationalist and who is not. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the session is wearing away. I am anxious to give as much information as I can on these items under discussion, and in relation to those items I have endeavoured to make my information as complete as possible. I cannot discuss each individual case unless I have the facts before me, but I am bringing down the papers in each case. My hon. friends complain that they have applied for an investigation. I have no knowledge of that whatever. Whenever an investigation has been asked of which I have any knowledge, I have been prepared to grant it. I would not say that a minister in every case must grant an investigation; but when a fair case is made out for an investigation I would deem myself most unjust not to consent to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend see how absurd it is to dismiss a man first upon the recommendation of a political committee, or the defeated candidate, and then hold an investigation?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must not assume that in any case I have acted upon the recommendation of a political committee, I would not dream of doing such a thing. The very fact that a political committee recommended a dismissal would place me on my guard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How about a defeated candidate who gets his information from a political committee?

Mr. MONK. If I have at any time acted upon the complaint of a defeated candidate, it was when he articulated that complaint in a proper manner; I have, I think, in one or two cases.

Mr PUGSLEY. What would be a proper manner?

Mr. MONK. Where he states positively what is the particular case of offensive interference by a public official. Mr. Chairman, I would ask our friends opposite not to push this too far. They have made a protest, which is right and proper, I do not make any complaint of that. But there have been numberless injustices in 1896, and a great many since—not always cases of dismissal, but unjust treatment of public servants. No end of them have come under my notice. Men have been placed ahead of others who have been a longer time in the service, and who found themselves retained at inferior salaries, without any complaint against them whatever. We are anxious to deal justly in all these cases; but I would suggest to my hon. friends that all this froth and pathos—it is nothing else to me—can be pushed a little too far, and might work an injustice to their own friends who are in the public service, against whom there is no complaint, and whom we are anxious to treat fairly and justly.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much pleasure to the remarks of the hon. members who are complaining of the dismissals which have been made in their respective counties. There has occurred there what has already occurred in the county of Montcalm which I have the honour to represent. In my county several postmasters have been dismissed, and also several postmen without any notice, inquest or legitimate reason whatever.

Mr. Bourassa, the Nationalist chief, will never forgive me my victory over his own candidate. And I can assure you that since then public employees in my county have got a hard time of it. Postmasters are dismissed one after the other, postmen also tumble down in great numbers, and I am informed that we are only at the beginning of it. As the hon. member for Rimouski has said, there were still left 42 other dismissals to make in his own county. In my county, we must now be nearing the half-hundred mark.

When I hear the hon. Minister of Public Works speak of 1896, it seems to me that he does not remember 1878, when the Conservative party came to power. In scarcely five years, there were dismissed over 400 Liberal employees who had been nominated under the old administration. And those same gentlemen are now wondering that some kind of revenge was taken in 1896 for all the injustices which had been perpetrated in 1878.

The hon. member for Jacques-Cartier has told us that in his county there have been many dismissals. But he has not cited a single name; he has not shown us a single case, and I am just waiting for him to give us the number of dismissals in the county of Jacques-Cartier. I know that county as well as he does, I am living there since 25 years and he will not impose upon us in that respect.

They speak of dismissals and they want to make us believe that in their proceedings they are only inspired by charity and clemency. Yes, in expelling all the Liberal employees. Such is their clemency. Do not lose the time of the House in discussing such matters, says the Minister of Public Works, they are not worth the while. No, it must be foolish to spend a couple of hundred dollars in each case, when poor fellows are thrown into the street, and are left to their misery in the dead of winter. Postmasters have just been discharged without notice, without inquest and without giving them a chance to defend themselves.

They say to us: If you know of any cases of unjust dismissals, show them to us, and we will set matters right when the time comes. Yes, when they are already turned out in the street.

Such is the way of proceeding of those hon. gentlemen. They tell us: Do not lose the time of the House uselessly. Well, we will take up the time of the House, and we will take of it what is necessary to denounce your infamous policy in thus turning out those poor fellows from the public service.

Those hon. gentlemen think that we are losing time uselessly. Were they of the same opinion last year, when they were blocking during months and months the vote of the necessary credits? They even went so far then as to declare that they were ready to stay months and months to put obstacle to the voting of the Liberal appropriations.

You are now thinking that we treat you hard to-day in playing the same game, when we only ask for justice.

You must know that if we have not the numbers on our side, we can certainly muster up as much courage as you.

Dismissals have been made in the county that I represent. A great many have already fallen, persuant to the demands of the candidate who was beaten by me. And I can assure you that he keeps up a good grudge against me. They have spent $20,000 in trying to get the best of that scoundrel Lafortune, that mountebank, that humbug, that man of nothing, as the Nationalist chief Bourassa was wont to say, and they are naturally furious to see that they have not triumphed over me.

Commissaries have been appointed, Mr. Chauvin, brother-in-law of Mr. Bourassa, was appointed a commissary. He is the man who has been charged with an inquiry. I can assure you that we may expect some queer kind of justice from him.

On the evening of the 21st of September, Bourassa was positively out of his wits to see that D. A. Lafortune had bitten the dust. We have crushed that mountebank, was he saying everywhere. But he had crowed too early, and when the latest reports came to hand he could very well see that it would take a dozen men like him to have the best of me.

But the defeated candidate will never forgive me for my triumph over him.

And those gentlemen of the government will take the word of the beaten candidate for decreeing dismissals in my county. Of the beaten candidate, Mr. Marion, who has been condemned by public opinion; who has been overtaken in the very act; who has declared, on his word of honour, things which were absolutely compromising in order to effect his triumph over me, we have shown the falsehood of all that by solemn declarations which have been submitted at the time.

Here is the very man whose word of honour they are willing to take in order to make a report against the employees of my county. When we are back to power—which will come before long—when we shall have resorted once more to public opinion, the dismissals which have been made against us will then be so many agents in our favour to show the grave injustices committed towards those men.

The hon. Minister of Public Works takes the word of those candidates. He takes information which is not sustained by facts. Let those heads fall, says he, and then afterwards we will try to repair the injustices committed. The hon. minister has been during a long time a professor of criminal law. If his teaching to students run along this way: When a man is accused, behead him, and afterwards you can go on with his trial. That would be assuredly a nice teaching.

I have the honour to be the King's attorney, in Montreal, and before having a man convicted, whatever should be the crime of which he is accused, I would not pass condemnation before hearing him. Such is the sound doctrine of criminal law, and in civil matters the same rule must be followed. Complaints have first to be submitted, before proceeding with dismissals. Those people must have the right to defend themselves, and we would be there to meet your commissaries. But, no, everything goes on behind closed doors. First, let us pass condemnation, let us discharge those people, and then we will go before parliament and we will say that we are willing to be good and charitable. Do not discuss those matters, will say those gentlemen, you are losing the time of the House, it is ridiculous, it is absurd. Well, the ridiculous side of it is with you. The nonsense, here, consists in committing injustices. The time of the House does not belong to you any more than it does to us. The opposition possesses as much right to be heard as yourselves, and you must know that we will abide with that privilege as often as you will give us the occasion.

We hear about estimates for postoffices everywhere. I have obtained for the county of Montcalm the sum of $15,000 for the erection of a postoffice at St. Jacques l'Achigan; but I can assure you that I do not see that amount any longer in the estimates of this year. I do not know if the hon. Minister of Public Works intends to deprive me of that postoffice, but it looks very much like it. I have asked if the plans have been prepared; I have asked how far they have gone with that question, but I hear nothing more about it. I fear very much that those $15,000 which have been voted to me last year are now a thing of the past. They will say in the county of Jacques-Cartier: You have not built our postoffice. we have been boycotted and now the tables are turned on us. I say no; there have been works erected in your county under the old administration, just as you have had a great number of your friends placed into positions to our own detriment. Every one knows that a great number of Conservatives have been given positions in public offices by the Liberals. I do not know if you will do as much; I do not know if you will do as much as the fourth part of what we have done. There has been in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier a man who is now gone. I will say nothing against his memory, but he has greatly protected the Conservatives because he was himself an old Conservative. I mean Mr. Israel Tarte. A great many Conservatives have been protected by that minister, and there are a great many to-day occupying positions in the department because they have enjoyed the protection of Mr. Tarte.

I cannot tell whether the Minister of Public Works will show himself as generous towards our people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say: I must protest energetically, in the name of the electors whom I have the honour to represent, against the rigourous, unjust and illegal proceedings of the Minister of Public Works who discharges men guilty of nothing reprehensible, men whose misfortune has been to do their duty and to belong to the Liberal school, which is the true and sound school, having nothing to do with that new and heterogeneous school called the Nationalist-Conservative, Reformist-Coalitionist-Oppositionist school. There are a dozen or so of such schools.

After those gentlemen have come to power, all those schools at once vanished and were merged into the only Conservative school. To-day the adepts of all those different schools vie with each other in telling parliament: We are of the Conservative school.

Grand master Bourassa, the Nationalist chief, had promised me what is now taking place. If we come to power, was he wont to say, I can assure you that those Liberals will be turned out of the public offices. He is true to his word. That is the first promise that he has ever kept. He changes his opinions as often as he does his linen.

And when I heard to-night the Minister of Public Works complaining about some difficulties we were raising with regard to the voting of his appropriations, I then remembered having once heard him say everywhere that Liberals were bad administrators and real spendthrifts; that the public moneys we used to have voted for postoffices was so much money thrown to the winds, and so much waste to help political patronage. Well, you will soon hear him ask you a postoffice for his constituency; he will take the one that was to being erected in my own county for the county of Jacques-Cartier.

Before long you will see that sums of money are asked for the erection of post offices in his county, to the detriment of my own county. And he will then think that I am out of temper. Yes, Mr. Minister, and I deny you the right to deprive me of what has been voted by this very House for my county. You will certainly do all you can to take away that post office from the county of Montcalm; so as to give satisfaction to your consort, Henri Bourassa, who has not been able, though he paid us three great visits and brought over in my county a lot of people, to get the best of me. Well, you will do all you can to please your consort Henri, but you will not prevent the people of Montcalm to say that you have been unjust.

I have said enough, Mr. Speaker, for the moment, but I reserve myself for another opportunity, when other injustices will be revealed.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L. Islet). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I had no intention to speak to-night, but the words just spoken by my hon. friend the member for Montcalm force me to break silence.

I find it to be my duty to publicly express the high admiration which I profess for my worthy friend, the hon. Minister of Public Works. He bears with great dignity the mantle which was formerly that of Sir George Etienne Cartier, and that is in brief the greatest elogium I could make of my hon. friend. I know him to be inspired with a spirit of justice and kindness, and of that I warmly congratulate him.

I may also have the right to say what has taken place in the county of L'Islet in 1896, and also relate what is going on there to-day.

In 1896, twelve postmasters were dismissed without inquiry by the Liberal party. Heads of families were thus discharged without inquiry, and turned out in the street without further notice. Lots of worthy people who were working since many years on the Intercolonial were thus summarily discharged, without even the shadow of an inquiry to protect them against such proceedings, simply because they were connected with Conservative families. Several poor postmasters were thus discharged, one especially who was 75 years old, at St. Jean Port-Joli, and who had no other means of subsistence.

And now, what do we see in that same county? There were only three postmasters dismissed, and their places have been filled by those who had been discharged in 1896. There was not a single dismissal on our national railroad, the Intercolonial, in L'Islet, and there was none either on the Transcontinental. When I asked the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) to dismiss men who had insulted me at public meetings, who had even taken an active part at public meetings, the hon. Minister of Railways formally declared to me that he would not be able to do so without an inquiry.

I have reason to be satisfied with the conduct of the present administration with regard to dismissals, which you will find to have been only inspired by principles of order and justice.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Does not the minister think we have done a good day's work and that we may adjourn?

Mr. MONK. There are a number of items for public buildings in Quebec that we might pass. When the committee meets again I will be able to furnish the information which has been asked for.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). These items for public buildings in Quebec were allowed to stand at the request of my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), who is not here to-night. I think I can promise the hon. minister that no delay will be involved in the postponing of these Quebec items.

Mr. MONK. Then we might adjourn.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Monk, the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, January 22, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of Harbour Commissioners.—Mr. Hazen.

Steamboat Inspection Report for year ending 31st March, 1911.—Mr. Hazen.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Hon. F. COCHRANE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 76) to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act. He said: The purpose of this Bill is to reduce the commissioners in number from four to one. It is felt, now that as the railway is far advanced and questions of policy are largely decided, it is not necessary to have more than one commissioner.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

Mr. COCHRANE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 77) to encourage and assist the improvement of highways. He said: This Bill is to carry out one more promise made by the present government when in opposition, that a certain amount of money should be granted to the different provinces to build and improve highways. The Bill, is perhaps, a little meagre, but this is because it has been impossible to decide in detail just what is the best way of carrying out the plan proposed. So we propose doing it largely by order in council until we get more definite information. The money will be decided the same as our subsidies for the different provinces, and the object will be to work in with the different local governments. We shall have to get their permission in any case before going on, either with them or alone, and in deciding what roads shall be improved or where the work is to be done.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask my hon. friend to tell us upon what principle or basis the division is to be made amongst the provinces?

Mr. COCHRANE. Either with what they choose to grant, or if they do not like to grant anything at all, we will go on, with their consent, to fix a standard of roads to be constructed, and then the Dominion can go on either with or without the assistance of the provinces. But they would be taken into consideration and it would be arranged what routes should be followed in construction or what roads should be improved. I hope the provinces will join and will contribute; but there is nothing in the Bill to force them to do so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is there no proportion as between the provinces, on the basis of population or anything else?

Mr. COCHRANE. That lies largely with the provincial governments. I hope they will contribute. But, so far, we have not been able to take it up with them and ascertain on what basis they would like to carry it out.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Are the expenditures contemplated to be made out of revenue or out of capital account?

Mr. COCHRANE. Out of revenue, I should think. Did I understand the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to ask how the money would be divided among the several provinces?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was asking the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) to tell us if there is any basis of allotment as among the provinces. The provincial subsidies are based on population; is this based on population?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, I explained that it was to be on the same basis as that upon which the subsidies are granted to the provinces.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Have the government in view any stated amount which would be appropriated for the several provinces?

Mr. COCHRANE. That will come up in the supplementary estimates. I do not know that the amount is yet settled.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It will be payable out of revenue?

Mr. COCHRANE. Out of revenue.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SOUTH RENFREW.—SPEECH OF THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS.

Before the orders of the day are called:

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). I desire to draw the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) to a statement appearing in the 'Evening Journal' of Friday evening, January 19, purporting to be an account of a convention which took place in South Renfrew, at which the hon, Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville) spoke. According to that account it would appear that the Minister of Customs made the statement that the Georgian Bay ship canal would be immediately begun. My question is: Was the Minister of Customs authorized by the government to make such a statement, and is the government ready to declare its intention with respect to the immediate construction of the Georgian Bay ship canal?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may say to the hon. member (Mr. Devlin) that I never mentioned the Georgian Bay canal in any remarks that I made at that convention.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose that indicates the extent to which we should place confidence in the statements of the ministerial newspapers. I desire to call attention to a statement I find attributed to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville), not in the 'Journal,' but in the 'Free Press.' That hon. gentleman is reported having said in South Renfrew:

> When the Liberal party, by means of lavish expenditure of money and by other unfair means, succeeded in defeating our honoured leader, Hon. R. L. Borden, in Halifax, and we asked them to allow his election in Carleton by acclamation so that he could lead us from the opening of the session, G. P. Graham and others refused and made us wait until the House met and they kept Mr. Borden out of the House as long as they could, although Carleton never elected anybody but a Conservative, and the election was a mere matter of form. For this kind act they now ask us to allow Mr. Graham to be elected by acclamation.

As to this, I may say, in the first place, that, as everybody knows, in 1905, Mr. Graham was not in the House. Further, nobody ever approached me with regard to facilitating the election of my hon. friend, Mr. Borden, until the day of the opening of the session. And certainly nothing was done by the government of that day to delay the election for one single moment. Mr. Kidd, who was the member for Carleton, resigned on January 9, 1905. The Speaker issued his warrant on January 12, the government issued the writ of election on January 21, and the election was fixed and took place on February 4, and on that day the present Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) was elected by acclamation. So the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Reid, Grenville) is absolutely inaccurate.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. KNOWLES. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) to the remarks I made on Thursday. The hon. gentleman was not present and I asked that they be called to his attention, which, I have no doubt, was done. The point was with regard to returns brought down concerning the Regina census. The return, as read, was a supplementary one, and the original was not brought down. I ask that it be brought down or an explanation made as soon as possible.

Mr. BURRELL. It was brought down in that way because in the census office we recognize Regina district only; there is no separate commissioner for Regina city. So far as Regina city is concerned there are practically no returns to bring down except the instructions usually issued with regard to the carrying on of the work and the returns made. There is nothing to bring down.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will put the question again. My motion asked for a return of all documents in connection with the taking the census in the city of Regina, and of all protests in connection with that matter, and if there were not certain protests made against the correctness of the census in the city of Regina.

Mr. BURRELL. We cannot bring down from the departmental files all incidental references to one place and another place. All we can do is to take from the departmental files what regards direct references to the city of Regina. We may have for instance, from twenty, thirty or forty different places, incidental complaints, and remarks about other places in connection with the taking of their own census. But, we cannot be expected to go through all the files of every department, and find out what incidental references are made to another city.

THE GRAIN BILL.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) when the Grain Act will be dealt with. If he cannot give us an idea now, will he be good enough to tell us a week ahead, if possible? Will he also send word to the secretary of the Grain Growers' Association of Saskatchewan, as they intend sending a person to interview the government?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). We may be able to bring it down about the first of next week. I may say that notice has been given to the associations in the west, and gentlemen are on their way here to do a little interviewing on the matter.

THE TOWER CLOCK.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Before the orders of the day are called I would like to be allowed to address a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), on what appears to me to be a question of urgent public importance. The tower clock, which has acted in a peculiar manner since the very beginning of the session, has stopped for the last ten days altogether. I should like to know from the Minister of Public Works whether this falls under the general head of dismissals, or whether it is symptomatic of the general condition under which we may expect the country to drift since the change of government; and if the hon. gentleman will have the matter attended to.

Mr. MONK. This is even a more complicated matter than dismissals, on account of the arrangement made by the late government in regard to the clock. I find that in order to have the clock attended to I must communicate with Mr. Belanger. But Mr. Belanger himself is not the party directly responsible, he must communicate with Mr. Lapierre, who has a contract about the clock. It is due to this circuitous arrangement with regard to the clock, probably, that it has not been put in order sooner. I have myself taken the trouble in the matter to-day to communicate again with Mr. Belanger, and have extracted from him a promise that he will communicate with Mr. Lapierre. As soon as I have been able in this way to reach Mr. Lapierre, I suppose the clock will be attended to.

THE ALBERTA GREAT WATERWAYS RAILWAY.

Mr. OLIVER. I disire to ask if the government has reached a decision in regard to the disallowance of the Alberta Act regarding the bonds of the Great Waterways Railway?

Mr. DOHERTY. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the government has reached a conclusion to leave the Act to such operation as it may have under its terms.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I wish to inquire of the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) when we may expect the supplementary estimates?

Mr. KNOWLES.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am unable to give a definite answer.

VACANT SENATORSHIPS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I wish to ask the Prime Minister if the vacant senatorships in Nova Scotia have been filled; and if not, when it is expected they will be filled?

Mr. BORDEN. No. There are two vacancies, I think, that have not been filled; One of them has existed for some months, and the other very recently occurred. The question of filling them is under consideration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. I may say that one of them was under consideration by the late government for several months before they retired.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I should suppose the present government would have been in more haste to fill it.

VACANCY IN SOUTH RENFREW.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask if the issuing of the writ for an election in South Renfrew is still under consideration also?

Mr. BORDEN. I beg to inform my right hon. friend that it is.

CANADA'S NAVAL POLICY.

Mr. MURPHY. I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. the Premier to a dispatch that appeared in the Ottawa 'Citizen' and other ministerial papers, on Friday last, the 20th instant, purporting to give the substance of an interview with the Hon. George H. Perley in London, in which he says:

> It is impossible for the Canadian government to touch the naval question yet.

I would like to ask if that is the decision the government has come to, and if Mr. Perley made this announcement after consultation with the British Admiralty.

Mr. BORDEN. My attention has not been directed to the press dispatch alluded to. The government have had no communication with Mr. Perley on the subject since he left on his holiday. The attitude of the government with regard to the matter has already been explained to the House, and requires no further statement.

Mr. MURPHY. My right hon. friend has not answered my second question: Did Mr. Perley make this announcement after consultation with the Admiralty?

Mr. BORDEN. I have no information whatever on the subject. I have not heard from Mr. Perley with regard to that question. I have simply had a letter from him informing me that he was having a very delightful holiday, and that the weather had been very good.

SOLICITOR GENERALSHIP.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would ask the Prime Minister if a decision has been reached as regards a Solicitor General?

Mr. BORDEN. No, the vacancy has not yet been filled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Under consideration?

Mr. BORDEN. Under consideration.

VOLUNTEER BOUNTY ACT.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) if he is able to give us any information of what will be the contents of this Bill on the Order Paper to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act?

Mr. ROGERS. I may say that this matter is also under consideration. The hon. gentleman will get the information in a very few days.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GOVERNMENT FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND THE MAINLAND.

Mr. PARDEE:

1. Did the Prime Minister on or about the 23rd day of December last send to Mr. McLean, M.P., Charlottetown, a telegram in the following words:—

Ottawa December 23.

'To A. A. McLean, M.P., Charlottetown.

'In reply to representations of Nicholson and yourself during the past two months, I beg to inform you that the government has determined to undertake the establishment of a government ferry service between the island and the mainland. This will involve the changing from narrow to standard gauge of the Island railway. This improved service will do away with three short hauls, and it is hoped will result in great advantage to the people.

'(Signed) R. L. BORDEN.'

2. Did the Prime Minister have before him on the 23rd day of December, 1911, an estimate from competent experts and engineers of the cost of a government ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, or of the cost of changing the narrow gauge to the standard gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway?

3. If so, what was the estimated cost of each of said services respectively?

4. Who were the parties who made or prepared the respective estimates?

5. Was any order in council passed in regard to the proposed services? If so, when?

6. Was the Prime Minister aware, on December 23 1911, that an election for the provincial legislature of Prince Edward Island was to take place on January 3, 1912?

Mr. BORDEN:

1. Yes.

2, 3 and 4. Estimate was prepared by the proper officers of the Department of Railways and Canals and was submitted to the Prime Minister by the Minister of Railways and Canals. This estimate was placed before the Prime Minister before the said telegram was sent. The information as to the estimated cost of the service will be given upon the proper item in Committee of Supply.

5. No, but items were placed in the estimates.

6. The Prime Minister had no official information as to the alleged election, but such notice as appeared in the public press was available to him.

PURCHASE OF GOODS BY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

*Mr. MACDONALD asked:

1. Has any order for goods been given by the Department of Public Works since October 1, 1911?

2. If so, have tenders been asked for in each case? If not, what orders for goods have been given without tender, to what firms respectively, and for how much in each instance?

He said: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the form of this question, I understand that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) took some objection to the extent of the information that it would be necessary to gather in order to answer the question. With his permission I would ask that the question stand as a notice of motion for a return.
