Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in remembering the late Mr. Hartt I think it is a tribute both to his ability and to the opportunities provided by this country that, having come from Roumania, he should have achieved the distinction of membership in the legislature of Quebec and in this parliament.

As occasionally I sat here listening to him I admired his ability to use both the English and the French language, as well as, of course, his mother tongue and I believe related languages. We wish to join with all others in the house in expressing sympathy to his widow and his sons in their bereavement.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it is a cause for deepest regret that a man should be taken from our midst at the early age of fifty-four. At that age a man has acquired just enough knowledge and wisdom to be of real value to any body of legislators with which he might be connected.

Mr. Hartt proved himself to be very sincere, a man of great courage, as was pointed out, and a man disposed to face facts as they are. These things I believe constitute a great tribute to his memory.

This group desires to join with those who have already spoken in expressing our deep sympathy with the bereaved ones, and our appreciation of a fellow member who has gone.

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I speak from a sense of personal loss. I knew Maurice Hartt, having first met him twenty-five years ago when he came to the counties of Essex and Kent to speak on behalf of an old friend of mine, Eddie Odette, who was running in the constituency. I remember on that occasion hearing him speak at Tilbury and Belle River, and speaking in most fluent French. Then, as in later years, he was a most forceful speaker.

Our paths did not cross often. However, we met again in Ottawa in 1947, when he recaptured Cartier for Canadians. On account of ill health he seldom spoke in the house, but he did make some fiery and worth-while contributions to the cause which was closest to his heart—establishment and recognition of the state of Israel.

He was a man of intense loyalties—loyalty to his country, loyalty to his party, loyalty to his religion; and he was fiercely loyal to his friends. His great interest in life was the people in his riding of Cartier. There were many underprivileged people there who made many demands upon him. He met those demands as well as any member could have met them.

It is interesting to note the statistics in Cartier. That riding has a very high member-mortality rate. Public service had shared much of Mr. Hartt's life. In 1939 he was a member of the legislature of Quebec. He came to this house in 1947, but he took up community life in the city of Montreal from the time he graduated from Queen's and moved to Montreal.

To the public life of this country he gave a mind that was keen and thoughtful and a heart that was kind and considerate. He was a man who loved a fight, giving as he got. As recently as Monday of this week I received a cheerful and buoyant letter from him telling me of plans he had in mind for the future. Hon. members will appreciate what a shock it was to me when yesterday afternoon I was informed he had passed on.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

I saw him a few times during his illness. From our conversations I feel sure he would want me to say what I am now going to say. I wish particularly to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), you, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton), for their thoughtfulness and kindness to Mr. Hartt during his long illness.

May I join with hon. members in extending deepest sympathy to his wife and children. He leaves to them a cherished memory of a very high reputation earned in the service of his country.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to join in paying tribute to the memory of the late member for Cartier, who was my roommate for some considerable time.

I, too, wish to express my sympathy to Mrs. Hartt and her two sons. It is tragic to learn that at the early age of fifty-four years a man of Mr. Hartt's calibre should have been called. As his former roommate I had the opportunity for many discussions with him about the hard knocks one sometimes gets in life. I am sure those who have known him will miss his pleasant smile.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POLYMER CORPORATION, SARNIA—REPORT AS TO THREATENED STRIKE

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday, in view of the threatened strike at the Polymer Corporation, because of representations made to me I asked the following question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe):

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is based on a dispatch in today's Globe and Mail, and also on a telegram which I have just received. The dispatch indicates a threatened strike of employees of Polymer Corporation which would involve all the major industries in Sarnia. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce prepared at this time to make a statement to the house?

I asked the question because it affected not only the major industries in the city of Sarnia, but also those in western Ontario, inasmuch as the plant supplies electricity to the extent of about 40,000 horsepower. This was the answer given at that time by the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

Mr. Speaker, I have had no report today from the Polymer Corporation, but a few days ago it was reported to me that a conciliation board had been sitting on a labour-management dispute, and that the board had brought in a unanimous finding which the management intended to accept. What has developed since I cannot say. The management of the corporation handle their own labour negotiations. From what I know of the relations between the management and labour at Polymer I can assure my hon. friend that there is not likely to be a strike.

My interpretation of the minister's answer was—except for the last few words which are so important—that there would be no strike. Having received the minister's answer, I wired the union at Sarnia accordingly. My interpretation of what the minister said was borne out by a press report in the Globe and Mail of today's issue, which states:

Trade Minister Howe said today he could assure the Commons that there will be no strike at the government-owned Polymer rubber corporation at Sarnia.

I understand that the only other morning paper in western Ontario, the London Free Press, carries the same interpretation of the reply given by the minister.

Inasmuch as there is a vast difference between "there will be no strike" and "there is not likely to be a strike", I wonder if in view of the seriousness of the situation, in case there should be a strike, the minister would clarify the record.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, obviously if the the hon. member will read what I said it will be clear that I was expressing an opinion. Whether I said that there would in my opinion be no strike, or that there was not likely to be a strike, is, I think, immaterial. My hon. friend may make the headlines in his local paper, but I do not think he has thrown much light on the situation.

Mr. Murphy: I think it is more serious than that.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Murphy: The statement made by the minister does not clarify the question I asked. The point I am raising now is in substantiation of what I said a moment ago. What the minister said yesterday is not borne out by what appears in Hansard.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I submit that there are certain questions which are so obviously a matter of public interest that no narrow interpretation of the practice should apply. In this particular case there is involved a plant which is not only a crown corporation producing certain important products, but supplies steam to many vital industries in the area, and electricity to the hydroelectric system throughout that part of Ontario. I should think that it is a matter of considerable importance, not only to the members of this house but to the people of western Ontario, to know whether there is or is not going to be a strike which will have effects that will go far beyond the Polymer plant.

An hon. Member: Where is the privilege?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howe: I think it should be obvious to every hon. member that I cannot anticipate with certainty human behaviour. There are 800 men on the payroll of the Polymer plant, and they will determine whether or not there will be a strike. From my knowledge of labour conditions since the plant began operations I expressed the opinion that there would be no strike. All I can do is to give an opinion.

Mr. Graydon: You did not say it was an opinion yesterday.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That the name of Mr. Ward be substituted for that of Mr. Weaver on the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1949-50

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1950, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Has any decision been reached as to when it is proposed the house will rise for Easter? I think many hon. members who live long distances away want to make their transportation reservations.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The matter has been under consideration, and I understand that the government whip is going to communicate with the whips of the other parties. The present suggestion is that when the house adjourns on the Thursday before Easter it shall stand adjourned until the Monday after Easter week, but there has been no formal decision. The views of the various groups are to be ascertained, almost at once, before the formal decision is reached.

OIL AND GAS

QUESTION AS TO EXPORT TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): I should like to direct the following questions to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any representations been made to him by the C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan with regard to protecting Saskatchewan so far as export of oil and gas from Alberta is concerned? What is the policy of the minister with regard to the granting of permits for pipe lines from Alberta to the United States?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first question is that I have no knowledge of any representations from the province of Saskatchewan in that connection. In answer to the second question I would say that I spoke on this subject at the last session of parliament, and pointed out that the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act is designed to protect Canadian consumers. It is necessary under the act for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to give a certificate to the effect that the present and foreseeable future needs of Canada are protected before any exports of electricity or gas are permitted. It has been suggested frequently in the current debate that gas will be sent to the United States from the pipe line before the pipe line reaches Vancouver. I stated last session that that would not be permitted. I know from discussions with the sponsors of the pipe line that it is not proposed to undertake any such export.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I know from discussions—

Mr. Howe: Sit down; you have said enough on this subject.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): —that just the opposite has been said.

JAPANESE GOODS

QUESTION AS TO SALE IN CANADA AT PRICES BELOW REAL COST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of complaints by Canadian businessmen and others, are any steps being taken by the government to see that Japanese goods, including men's shirts, are not dumped on the Canadian market at prices below the real cost, thus endangering the livelihood of our Canadian workmen?

Mr. Graydon: Look out that you don't lose your shirt over this.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I am hanging on to mine. Goods have been appraised and additional duties assessed pending the outcome of inquiries which are now being made as to the fair market value in Japan.

Mr. Fraser: The fair market value in Japan would not—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fraser: —protect us here.

JAPANESE PEACE TREATY

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER PROVISIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Is there to be a commonwealth conference in the near future to deal with proposals for a treaty of peace with Japan?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member may be thinking of a report that came out of London the other day that there would be commonwealth talks on this subject in London. We discussed at the Colombo conference the principles that might underlie and the provisions that might be included in the Japanese peace treaty when a Japanese peace conference is held. Those discussions were not completed and it was agreed they would be continued on an official level through our experts on this subject. I believe that in this way a further exchange of views may take place before long among members of the commonwealth concerned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO TREATMENT OF VETERANS IN D.V.A. HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the minister inform the house whether there is any justification in fact for the article appearing in the Globe and Mail of March 15, wherein certain officials of the Blue Cross organization charge tardiness in the treatment of veterans or others entering D.V.A. hospitals?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): My hon. friend kindly sent me notice of his question, but I only received it as I entered the house; consequently I have not had time to read the article to which he refers. I think it would answer his question if I were to say that I know of no charges from anywhere regarding, to quote my hon. friend's question, "tardiness in the treatment of veterans or others entering D.V.A. hospitals".

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PERMIT FROM UNITED STATES TO CALL AT TAMPA, FLORIDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As the President of the United States signed the approval this week for Trans-Canada Air Lines to fly between Montreal and Toronto, and Port of Spain, Trinidad, by way of Tampa and St. Petersburg, Florida, will the minister say whether the press dispatches are correct in stating that this permit was given to Trans-Canada Air Lines as the outcome of the application by T.C.A. to fly a direct Montreal-New York route?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The President of the United States has signed a permit which will permit Trans-Canada Air Lines to make a traffic call at Tampa, Florida, en route to Nassau and Jamaica. Although possibly having some relation, it is a different application from the one pending, which if granted will permit Trans-Canada Air Lines to fly from Montreal to New York.

DR. LEOPOLD INFELD

KNOWLEDGE OF ATOMIC ENERGY—PLANS TO TEACH IN WARSAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a matter, not by way of a question but under the general provision as to matters of public interest. It is one that I think should be brought immediately to the attention of the government, in view of the possible implications. It is also a matter that should be of common concern to the whole house.

In the issue of The Ensign dated March 18 there is a statement on page 3 headed: "Einstein aide plans to teach in Warsaw." The subheading is: "Communist Poland recalls Toronto Varsity scientist." In the article there is the statement that Dr. Leopold Infeld, who is a teacher of mathematics at the university of Toronto, has announced that he is to proceed to Warsaw to teach in the universities there, and to make plans for certain educational programs in co-operation with the government of Poland. The article further discloses the fact that, and I quote:

> . . . he is thoroughly familiar with the theory and much of the practical application of atomic energy.

It is also stated here—and I have other evidence to the same effect—that in 1946 he predicted that Russia would have the atomic bomb within three years. It was a strangely accurate prediction. It also is disclosed—and this does surprise me—that this scientist, who was a refugee from Poland and was welcomed as a professor at the university of Toronto, was teaching in Warsaw and Krakow last summer.

I think all of us are fully aware that in the communist states education is something that conforms to more than academic standards. Those who are engaged as teachers in their universities are certainly under certain limitations and are subject to qualifications that do not relate to their academic standing alone. I bring this matter before the house because I think it will be a most remarkable thing if it is true that Dr. Infeld is going to apply to the university of Toronto for a sabbatical year—not just the summer—during which he will receive half pay from Canada's largest university while he is in Poland for the purpose of organizing educational activities under the guidance of a communist government. His statement is significant in view of the words in quotation marks in the article, which is in turn a quotation from the Toronto Globe and Mail, that Dr. Infeld said some time ago he would return to Poland when "a progressive government in a new Poland that needs him would attract him back to Europe."

That statement is not open to much doubt if the words are correctly attributed to Dr. Infeld. I believe that the appropriate department of the government should look into the matter immediately; and, having regard to what has already happened under not dissimilar circumstances, appropriate steps should be taken to ascertain the circumstances under which Dr. Infeld plans to return to Poland armed with certain atomic knowledge that he gained during two years' association with Dr. Einstein in the United States, and from several years' activity in the fields of mathematics and physics at the university of Toronto.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. F. H. Larson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that during the time I shall occupy the floor of the house today I shall be able to have the ear of members of the Progressive Conservative party and as many as possible of the members of the Liberal party, particularly those who are attending their first or second session. I refer to the newcomers on the Liberal side of the house, because I know that many of them have not had much opportunity to study the proposals that have been put forward from time to time by the Social Credit party in the house. It is because I should like to have them know exactly what we think about some of the important matters facing the Canadian people today that I appeal to them to listen. Furthermore, I appeal both to the Progressive Conservatives and to the Liberals to take seriously what I am going to say today, and then to take part in the debate and show cause why the things I say are not correct, if they think they are not.

I challenge them to take up the arguments that I shall present and debate them. Let them come to grips with them rather than try to brush them off by simply saying that it is all idealism, foolhardiness, or something of the kind.

Before I proceed, Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to call hon. members to order, because no one can hear as long as the buzzing which is going on at the present moment continues.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Low: I first appeal to the Progressive Conservative party.

An hon. Member: That is your first mistake.

Mr. Low: We shall see whether it is a mistake. I believe in appealing to the reason of any man, no matter what he calls himself. After all, the names of the parties are merely labels, and frankly I have failed to find very much difference between that side of the house and my colleagues to the right, except that the group on the other side of the house seems more concerned about getting elected than doing something for the people.

I want to direct these views to the Progressive Conservative party, because the matter before us today is the amendment that has been moved by that party.

I should like to go back just a few years and remind them of some of the things said by a great leader of their party. I refer to the former prime minister of this country, Mr. R. B. Bennett. I am quoting now from a radio speech he made on January 4, 1935, I presume during the course of the election campaign, or at least leading up to that campaign. This speech is recorded in a little blue booklet called "The Premier Speaks to the People." I was attracted by some things the former prime minister had to say to the country over the radio that evening. I quote:

> My friends, when many of us talk about unemployment, we fail to realize what unemployment means. Unemployment is the visible expression of those inherent defects in the capitalist system which I have deen discussing.
> I have said I would end unemployment. That is why I have said and say again I will reform the system. The cynic may deride my determined effort to do so, but those of faith and sincere purpose will support me to the end of the road.

That was spoken as though from deep conviction that there were faults and weaknesses in the capitalist system which had to be corrected if we were to get at the root of our troubles and solve the unemployment problem. From Mr. Bennett's statement it is apparent that he was not trying to treat symptoms but rather was acknowledging the fact that we were producing to a far greater extent than the Canadian people were allowed to consume, and that the result of that fault was unemployment. Mr. Bennett declared at that time that he would reform the system. I could quote other statements he made during the same series of broadcasts. One that came over the radio on January 9, 1935, contained this statement:

> In my three previous talks I have declared definitely and repeatedly that there must be reform of our capitalist system and that the time for that reform has come. I have shown you that until the worst of the depression was over, reform was not possible. I have told you what we have done by other means to carry the country through the depression. I have said that further progress without reform is improbable.

There were a number of other addresses; and by the way I hold in my hand one of those addresses that has a foreword by an hon. member who now sits on the other side of the house, who at that time was a great hockey player and sportsman—the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Conacher)—supporting the then prime minister of Canada, Mr. Bennett, and declaring to the country that the Conservatives were the reform party, not the Liberals.

Mr. Conacher: That was before I grew up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Low: What I have to say now was occasioned by something the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) said in the course of his address yesterday. Mr. Bennett was beginning to see the need of reform in 1935. He declared that reform must come to the capitalist system, that something had to be done about the growing menace of unemployment. He was not allowed to carry into effect the reforms he had in mind—and I do not wish it to be said we knew or endorsed what he had in mind. I challenge anyone in this house today to show that since 1935 those fundamental weaknesses in the capitalist system, which Mr. Bennett appeared to see, have been removed, and that the necessary reforms have been carried out. They have not. No effort at all has been made by the government that has been in office since that time to reform the fundamental weaknesses of the capitalist system and thereby make it possible for the Canadian people to have confidence in the future.

If that is the case—and I declare that it is —then these reforms must be undertaken at the earliest possible moment, and I am directing this question to my hon. friend the leader of the Conservative party. What fundamental reform of the capitalist system is there in the proposal he made here yesterday that we allow the thing to drift along, with works programs, the building of dams, power projects and irrigation systems? That is exactly the kind of thing that has been going on ever since Canada was Canada. Mr. Bennett appeared to know that works programs of that kind were not enough. I ask the leader of the Conservative party to stand up some time during the course of this debate and tell us where in this proposal is the fundamental reform that will take care of unemployment. It just is not there, as must be perfectly obvious to every thinking person.

Well, the question now before us is the Conservative amendment; and because it is some time since it was placed before the house I am going to deal with it clause by clause and tell the house what we think about it. The first clause reads:

> We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that Your Excellency's advisers have:
> (1) failed to take adequate measures to preserve and expand markets for Canada's surplus products of farm, forest, sea and mine, and to deal with the problems of increasing unemployment and reduced income to Canadian farmers and other producers.

We believe the statement in that first paragraph of the amendment represents the true situation today, and because that is so we are prepared to support that clause. I believe that in speeches already made by members of this group we have indicated how we feel about markets and surpluses. The truth of that matter is that we have lost our traditional British market; we have lost other traditional markets in the sterling area, and we have failed to protect the best interests of the Canadian people by well-timed, realistic action that would recapture those markets and preserve them for the future. The Liberal government have not played the game with the Canadian people. They have not played the game with the rest of the British commonwealth. That is why we supported the idea of a commonwealth conference on trade, suggested some time ago by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). We still feel that something worth while could be done through such a conference, to recapture and hold our traditional markets, and, while doing so, strengthen our commonwealth ties. For these reasons we strongly supported that suggestion.

The other evening we were all pleased when the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew), on his return from a trip around the world, gave his realistic and refreshing speech on trade. Though he appears to have been forced to change what he originally said when he spoke in the house on March 13, as recorded at page 688 of Hansard, even in its changed form it makes an interesting and refreshing departure from the stubborn stand which the other ministers of the crown have taken and maintained during the past two or three years. I liked what the Minister of Fisheries said. I thought it indicated he had done some real and earnest thinking. What I am saying today is not to be interpreted in any way as criticism of the minister. I want to congratulate him upon his courage and his realism in standing up in this house and declaring to the Canadian people that there is a surplus problem, and an unemployment problem associated with it.

Anyone reading his speech cannot fail to get those two implications from it. In fact they are definite statements. He knew that surpluses and unemployment go together. He said so. In his prepared speech he saw to it that there was a hyphen placed between the two words; it is a surplus-unemployment problem. The Minister of Fisheries was realistic, honest enough, and felt his duties strongly enough, that he made that declaration to the Canadian people. I imagine the minister will have a hard time living down some of the things that did occur after he had made his speech. It is not going to be my purpose, however, to argue with him about the change he made.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, two or three things in the minister's speech which I believe he and his colleagues should follow up.

As recorded at page 688 of Hansard, the minister said:

> Many of these difficulties may be overcome by extending the scope of barter arrangements for the particular commodities we have in surplus.

He indicated the reality of surpluses, and he indicated also a change from what we had heard a little while before the election of 1945. At that time the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), in a speech he delivered somewhere in southern Ontario, declared that the government was against barter deals. All through the election campaign the Liberals said that they were against barter deals. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) returned from his recent journey to Europe he was reported in the Ottawa Citizen of March 2, page 19, column 1, paragraph 4, as follows:

> Canada was encouraging private businessmen to arrange barter deals where such are more desirable. But the government was not directly involved in any such trade.

Even he, after a most stubborn stand over a period of almost two years, has finally come to the conclusion that Canada will have to resort to some barter. A realistic position will have to be taken to see to it that our trade constitutes largely an exchange of goods for goods, and that we are not restricted by this stupid convertibility provision. We want to see to it that goods are sold for convertible money as often as we can, but if our trade is going to be severely restricted by a convertibility clause in a trade agreement, then I say it is not realistic under present circumstances. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, as well as the Minister of Fisheries, has come to realize that we have to resort to some sort of barter in order to bring our trade up to the level we want. One other thing: I hope that the colleagues of the Minister of Fisheries will not be too stubborn about the situation in the future, but I hope he will be stubborn in maintaining his position.

Then, the Minister of Fisheries goes on to say this:

> It seems possible, therefore, to work out in Canada a combination between the very large groups of manufacturers and wholesalers and the government to provide both the management and the finance—

I realize that that was changed, and I am admitting that here, so the minister will not think I am trying to twist what he said.

> —to operate bilateral deals and to overcome the lack of facilities that faces any single corporation. Such a body could barter parcels of mixed Canadian merchandise for mixed imports from the non-dollar countries, and such merchandise could of course include capital equipment as well as foodstuffs or raw materials.

The next paragraph reads as follows:

> This instrument might be used experimentally as an additional means of meeting the surplus-unemployment problems. If the subject is not approached in some such way, there is a danger that the various boards handling surpluses will operate independently on a give-away basis, and that the various local unemployment problems will also be tackled by relief, public works or other means that will alleviate but not remove the basic difficulty.

Let me say that this suggestion put forward by the Minister of Fisheries is, on a national scale, what the Social Credit group in this house has been advocating on an international scale for the past two years or more. It is an instrument by which surpluses of food and other materials might be exchanged between nations, to the mutual advantage of those nations—an international commodity clearing house. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) says that such a thing is unnecessary now; that the government can handle the problem itself. It is not handling it. The problem is still here, and the surpluses are appearing, more and more in number and quantity. Unless we do adopt some such proposal as is represented by the international commodity clearing house, I am satisfied that the government of Canada is going to continue to find itself in the same embarrassing position, with respect to surpluses and unemployment, as it is in today, only more so. The sooner we get at it the better, because the international monetary fund and the international bank do not provide the mechanism for an exchange of goods and services between nations, except on a convertibility basis. This is impossible under the present circumstances, and will be until our sister nation, the United States, begins to make dollars available in sufficient quantity to make convertibility possible.

I just want to leave that part, Mr. Speaker, with this word to the Minister of Fisheries. I compliment him on his realism. It is a good sign, and it is certainly reassuring to me to know that at least one minister on the front benches sees through the film of money to the things that are beneath it.

Before I go on to the next subject, Mr. Speaker, there is one other thing that occurs to me about this matter of surpluses. I imagine that the Minister of Agriculture will never live down what he said the other night, "A little cheese, a little butter and some honey." It will be thrown up to him for quite some time. The ministers ought to be more straightforward than they have been about this matter of surpluses. They ought to let the Canadian people know just what the situation is. Surpluses began to appear in this country two years ago. Time after time, the government was warned about them, and about the danger of accumulating surpluses of goods and services. I know this group certainly warned the government on a number of occasions. I know the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) warned the government on a number of occasions about what was happening in his constituency—the berry problem.

I was under the impression that there were surplus beans in this country. On March 1, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. McCubbin), in answer to a question asked by the member for Middlesex East (Mr. White), told the house that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) arranged to give 38,000 bushels of beans to the refugees of the war in Palestine.

This cost the Canadian taxpayers $194,419.88. These had been bought under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. They were surplus, and there were given away. We would never have known about this magnanimous gesture on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his colleagues if a direct question had not been asked by the hon. member for Middlesex East. We suddenly found that there had been a surplus of beans in Canada, and the surplus had been cleared away by the expedient of the Secretary of State for External Affairs giving them away. I am not questioning for one moment the good purpose that was served. All I am suggesting is that surely hon. members ought to be given a chance of patting the minister on the back for his magnanimity on behalf of the Canadian people whose money bought up the surplus of beans. We should have been given an opportunity to pat the minister on the back and tell him what a good deed he had done with our money. That is all I am saying about this. But we were not informed. It is too bad that we missed such a chance in this house.

Mr. Pearson: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I think he will find that he was wrongly informed, because this was included in an estimate for Middle Eastern relief, and was passed in the house. Part of that relief took the form of beans.

Mr. Low: That is fine, Mr. Speaker. As I said, there was no questioning the validity of the purpose, but certainly a thing of that kind, even when done by ministers who are rather reticent and who do not want too much publicity, ought to be recognized. It would have been a good opportunity for us to give the people of Canada a chance to pat them on the back. Anyway the incident does show that a surplus of beans did exist.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): It has been done with beans, but it has not been done with honey.

Mr. Low: During the election campaign I was out in British Columbia and I visited the town of Yarrow. At that time the Minister of Agriculture and the other ministers of the crown were telling the Canadian people that there were no surpluses; that the claims of the opposition members were all imagination; that we were trying to frighten the people. I went into the town of Yarrow and was taken by the manager of the big packing plant there to see the berry-packing industry. That day I was shown enough berries, strawberries and raspberries to make a million cases of pure strawberry and raspberry jam. It represented the whole of the 1947 crop of berries that had been standing there for two solid years, and most of the 1948 crop of berries, for which the growers had not received a cent. I should like to know just how much they have received up to this very time. They were lying there; I saw them myself in great hogsheads, left out under a boiling sun to rot. And yet the ministers claimed that there were no surpluses at that very moment. I do not need to say anything further about that.

We now come to the third section of the Conservative amendment, and we wish to say that we can agree with it. It may not go quite far enough perhaps to suit some people, but we would support it. We would also support section 4. We did demonstrate last night what we thought about the extension. We can support the extension.

We now come to section 2. Section 2 has to do with the question of a contributory old age pension program. It refers to failure on the part of the government to inaugurate a contributory old age pension plan on a national scale. I should like to take the next few minutes to place before the house our views with respect to section 2.

We have not yet been convinced that it is possible under a free democracy to devise and apply a contributory scheme of old age pensions that would be socially just, or that could replace and render unnecessary a basic non-contributory scheme. If a contributory program of old age pensions is to be socially just, I think all hon. members can see that it must cover everybody in the nation. Any scheme of the kind that I have ever heard of is in most respects like the present unemployment insurance program that we have in Canada. Many classes of people are not covered by the insurance benefits, and indeed, sir, I cannot see how they can possibly be covered under any unemployment insurance scheme that is workable. Perhaps the best example of these classes is the farmer. How can contributions be collected from the farmers of this country for an old age pension scheme? Especially, sir, how can contributions be collected from that very large number of subsistence farmers, those who are living right on the borderline, and who may not have more than $50, $60 or $75 in cash in a year? In my judgment there will always be a substantial number of subsistence and marginal-line farmers who would not be able to make a contribution to any kind of an insurance scheme.

Just because they cannot, I ask this question: Are they to be denied the old age security that we are prepared to advance to other classes, especially to those who live and work in the cities? Will it be socially just to exclude the farmer who, along with his wife and family, today has to put in very long hours of labour, away beyond the limits of health in many instances, and to include on the other hand the organized workers who have succeeded in reducing hours of work to eight a day for a five-day week? Farmers have no five-day week and no eight-hour day.

Then, sir, there are those who are mentally or physically incapacitated, and therefore are permanently unemployable. How can these people become eligible to share in a contributory scheme of pension? And yet we all admit that something will have to be done to provide them with a means of living.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about a week ago say that he felt the kind of old age pension scheme we now have could not possibly be considered as anything else but contributory. I agree with him. The closest calculations that I have been able to make indicate that the average Canadian, who begins at twenty years of age his active earning life in this country under present conditions, pays to the federal government more than $54,000 in taxes by the time he has reached the age of seventy, and is therefore entitled to an old age pension. Some people call that merely good citizenship. We think it is more than that. It is also a very substantial premium on a decent old age pension.

Mr. Knowles: You could buy a good annuity with that.

Mr. Low: As I say, it is also a very substantial premium on a decent old age pension insurance at a reasonable age without any further contributions at all. Especially should this be so since the life expectancy of a seventy-year old Canadian is only twelve years. If the full federal contribution of $30 were paid to him for the entire twelve years of his life expectancy the pensioner would receive only $4,320, which is only eight per cent of the taxes averaged over the years from age twenty to seventy, a sort of eight per cent discount for cash, as it were.

Even if we continue to follow the present restricted system of cash pensions, I say that it is impossible for us to give social justice to our own aged citizens. Let me interject here another very important consideration in connection with this contributory pension scheme. Let us not overlook the fact that all social security benefits of any kind, I do not care what they are, have to come out of current or accumulated production of goods and services. As a general rule, whatever social security benefits are paid during the calendar or the financial year are, in the final analysis, taken out of the production for that same calendar or financial year, because, under the financial system we have persisted in following, accumulated surpluses become so embarrassing from the point of view of storage, unemployment and so on, that they are sent abroad as fast as they possibly can be, on a give-away basis, or on what they call a foreign investment basis. What do we do, therefore, when we introduce a contributory social security program? By such a procedure we declare—and when I say "we" I mean the Canadian people as represented by the Canadian government—that the aged and crippled people in this country cannot have access to any equitable amount of our current production of goods and services unless, no matter how little they have on hand after the government gets through exacting taxes from them, as a result of which they have had to deny themselves the purchase of pressing needs, they contribute so much each year for fifty or more years.

We tell them, in effect, that unless for fifty years or more they let food, clothing and a good many other things go to waste each year, they have no right to share in the yearly harvest of Canada's rich production after they reach the age of seventy. They are told, "Unless you scrimp and save some money and hand it over to us, to the government—unless you save money out of your miserable pittance of net income, and do it each year for fifty years, there will be no food, clothing or shelter for you after your earning days are over, no matter how much of these material goods have gone to waste each year, mainly because you and people like you have not had enough money to buy them."

It does not make sense, does it? If it were actually materials being accumulated to the credit of the contributors over the years, there might be some sense to it, but all contributors accumulate is claims to current production, which claims may or may not have any value by the time a person becomes pensionable.

This brings me to another argument against a system of contributory pensions. One of the greatest evils of our present financial system is that there results from its operation a constant decline in the value of the unit of our money, the dollar. The 1950 Canadian dollar will purchase not more than half what the 1936 dollar would buy. Although for the last hundred years we have been improving manufacturing methods and materials, introducing labour-saving machines, and discovering new materials, all of which make it possible for us to produce things faster, cheaper and better than ever before, yet the cost of these things to the consumer in money has been constantly going up.

I warn all hon. members that this steady decline in the purchasing power of our dollar will continue to go on, unless social credit reforms are applied. What justice is there in forcing people to contribute to a social security fund in 1950 dollars that in A.D. 1990 or 2,000 will be only half or one-third returned to the contributor? That does not make sense, either.

All one has to do is take a look at the plight of pensioners and superannuitants today to see what happens to them and their purchasing power over the years. That is why I say, as I said at the session last fall, that we certainly must have a resurvey of our whole pension program. Certainly government policies have a great deal to do with the decline in the value of money. If that is so, there must be something done, some reform brought in which will guarantee that when a man contributes to some scheme over a period of years he will get back dollars with as great value as the dollars he put in.

I have something more to say on this phase of the matter, but, in view of the fact that the time at my disposal is fast running out, I should like at this moment to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), the following amendment to the amendment:

That the amendment be amended by striking out the word "contributory" where it appears in subparagraph (2); and also by adding the following as clause 5:

(5) failed to adopt measures adequate to establish in our country a balanced economy wherein Canadian consumers are constantly supplied with effective purchasing power sufficient to enable them to buy Canada's total production, if they so desire.

We suggest that such an amendment would round out the amendment offered by the Progressive Conservative party, that it would bring reassurance to the Canadian people and make it possible for them to face the future with confidence.

For the rest of the time at my disposal I should like to round out the argument I have begun in connection with pensions. What I have to say will take only a few minutes. A contributory old age pension arrangement might take many years to work out on anything approaching a satisfactory basis. While it is being worked out, what is going to happen to our aged citizens? Must they continue to live in poverty?

We do not oppose the idea of a voluntary contributory plan. Perhaps it could be made to work satisfactorily as a supplement—and I stress that word—to a basic non-contributory plan, but never to replace it. As a matter of fact we already have a number of such schemes available in the form of government or insurance company annuity programs. I say they are good, and if a person has the ability to make contributions over the years he can get just as good a deal from them today as he possibly could from a government scheme.

Mr. Knowles: If he has the money.

Mr. Low: Yes, if he has the money. But if he has not the money he could not contribute to them, or to a government scheme.

An hon. Member: And if he has a chance to work.

Mr. Low: Yes, as the hon. member suggests, if he has a chance to work. There is one aspect of this whole matter of pensions which I think all too often escapes notice. I refer to the fact that as more and more normal peacetime conditions return to our country and the world, and as more mechanization takes place throwing people out of work, it is possible to produce a very great volume of goods and services with less man-hours of work than ever before.

As a result unemployment tends to spread. Consequently it becomes the practice to hire younger labourers and to turn the older ones away because they are too old to work. It is not exceptional in this country today to see men of fifty or fifty-five who are told, "We are not hiring men of your age." Much of this would not be so if our productive effort resulted in the distribution among consumers of enough purchasing power in the form of salaries, wages, dividends, profits and compensations to enable them to buy back what has been produced.

But that does not happen; and as a consequence surpluses of most things begin to accumulate that cannot be distributed because there is no money, or far too little, in the pockets of thousands of potential Canadian consumers. As this condition begins to develop it becomes possible to provide pensions to the aged without resorting to taxation. It can be done by having the treasury cause to be created new money to represent the actual value of the surpluses, which money is turned over to the health department to spend into circulation through pensions on a non-contributory basis. I contend such a procedure would save large quantities of goods and services that otherwise would be wasted, or that might remain unproduced.

The absolute necessity of adopting a procedure of this kind, Mr. Speaker, will become much more evident as general unemployment develops into a problem—and I say it will develop into a problem; there is no question about it.

I think one of the reasons why so many members of the house who favour better old age pensions do not cast their votes in favour of improvements when they are proposed by opposition groups on various occasions is that they fear the adverse effect of the tax increases which would result. I do not think there is any question about that. For this they can hardly be blamed, because taxes bear too heavily now on the average Canadian.

What they can be blamed for is that they have not sought out ways of improving our distribution system that has become so inefficient that it allows many hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of goods and services to go to waste each year, or to remain unproduced, which amounts to the same thing, if we can produce it. By a few fundamental changes in that wasteful distribution system it could be made possible for substantial improvements in the standard of old-age pensions without the necessity of increasing the tax load of the average Canadian. The Social Crediters try to see through the film of money to the realities that are beneath it. I know, Mr. Speaker, you are looking at me as if to indicate that my time has elapsed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Low: I certainly would not want to continue without the unanimous consent of the house, but I should like to take a moment to round out this argument because I think it is important to hon. members of the house. We look at Canada's almost limitless productive capacity. We see with regret apple trees pulled up by the roots, thousands of barrels of apples begging for someone to eat them; we see many hundreds of cases of health-giving celery being dumped on the garbage heaps; all this because there are no buyers with cash to pay for these very important and worth-while products. We think of the ten per cent decline in poultry and egg production during the past few months. That decline could have been prevented if markets had been available.

Then we remember the 270,000 old age pensioners and the additional thousands of physically and mentally incapacitated Canadians who now are having to eke out a miserable existence on $40 or $50 per month, or even less in so many thousands of cases. I say to the members of this house: Could these aged citizens, could these mentally and physically incapacitated persons consume more of the products that are going to waste, either actually or because market incentives are not provided to have them produced? I think we must all agree that the answer to the question is obviously yes. I think we must all agree that the old age pensioners could and would consume these surpluses if they could get at them. It follows then that the problem is one of bringing willing and needy consumers and the actual or potential surplus production together. I emphasize that such a thing is physically possible.

Anyone who is at all well informed must know that whatever is physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible. We Social Crediters say that it must be made financially possible for our aged citizens to enjoy a decent standard of living because there is absolutely no reason in the world why the things to ensure that standard cannot be produced right here in our own country and made available to them. We look at the physical and natural realities. We conclude that it becomes our moral duty to see to it that our aged and incapacitated are not forced to continue to live in poverty while hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of good produce are allowed to waste.

While we keep these things in mind we Social Crediters think of the burdens carried by the taxpayers of this country. They must be protected as well. I venture the prediction that our aged Canadians and the thousands of crippled unemployables will never get social justice if it depends upon taxation to get it. I believe every thinking person realizes that that is so. While we are on this matter of taxation I should like to say just a word about the people who organize themselves to press for higher pensions. There is some responsibility upon them to find out what effect their pressure may have upon the taxpayers of Canada who are already overburdened by a heavy weight of tax exactions.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is a month ago today since this session opened and since I last spoke in this debate on February 21 many things have happened in this country, including a speech by the right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he took some twenty minutes over his forty-minute time limit to place on the record a political speech delivered last May 28, none of which had anything to do with the many complex problems of today. This he did without the unanimous consent of the house and with the full support of a very noisy, howling, desk-thumping crowd of Liberal members who, it has been said, somewhat resembled a lot of trained seals. Personally I do not include some of the Liberal members in that description, but to a large extent that statement is all too true of the majority.

As has well been pointed out in a number prominent newspaper editorials across this country, the Minister of Agriculture might much better have used his time in some constructive discussion of the agricultural marketing problems facing us today. He did say that there is just a little surplus of cheese, just a little surplus of butter and a small surplus of honey, but he neglected to mention surpluses of potatoes, apples and eggs and many other agricultural products.

I have since heard the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) refer not only to surpluses of products but to a surplus of unemployment in this country. More than that, the minister has been giving it serious thought and I think that is all to the good.

Speaking in Moose Jaw last April the Minister of Agriculture pointed out that the 20-cent payment on wheat was only a partial payment and there was still to the credit of the farmers an amount of from 12 to 15 cents per bushel. The report of the wheat board which was recently tabled shows that as of July 31, 1949, there was a bank deficit on the four-year wheat pool period of somewhat over $5,200,000. Therefore, it should be understandable why there is so much concern among the wheat farmers as to what their future payments may be.

The minister stated that the losses in marketing wheat under the British wheat agreement will not be borne by the farmers themselves. The money will be paid into the pool by the government of Canada by the end of this crop year, and if any loss is taken it will naturally be taken by the treasury or by a settlement that we may get from the British under the "have regard" clause. Since that statement was made the losses suffered by the wheat producers in marketing are greater than ever, apart from any future adjustment that may take place.

On March 7, 1950, the price of wheat at North Portal on the United States side of the street to United States farmers equalled $2.20, while the price on the Canadian side of the street to the Canadian farmers was $1.58-1/2, a difference of 61-1/2 cents a bushel.

We had in this house on March 1, 1949, as recorded on page 1013 of Hansard, the meaningless statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that with the initial wheat payment of $1.75 per bushel, basis Fort William, the farmer's return for 1949-50 will be higher than in any other corner of the world. Well, the Canadian farmer now knows differently. It is my firm belief that after future adjustments are made, as a result of the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreements, the Canadian wheat producers will have subsidized British and Canadian consumers to the extent of several hundred millions of dollars.

According to the Sanford Evans statistical bureau of Winnipeg, during the first full calendar year following the war, in 1946, as a result of controls and embargoes imposed by our government, Canadian farmers suffered a loss in the marketing of livestock and coarse grains of $378 million over and above the great losses in marketing of wheat. That was just in one year.

The cost of living is still very high in Canada. The Bank of Canada index for February was 161·6. Many false accusations have been made as to agricultural production and sales being responsible for this. I should like to quote certain figures taken from the Winnipeg Free Press of September 15 last. They refer to Winnipeg, Manitoba, in the case of Canada, and St. Paul in the case of the United States, with the exception that as to wheat the quotation is at Minneapolis, the twin city of St. Paul. The figures are as follows:

	St. Paul	Winnipeg
Choice steers, live weight	32 c	22 c
Good cows, live weight	20	14½
Veal calves, live weight	28	24
Hogs, live weight	21½	22
Lambs, live weight	23	20
Wheat (Minneapolis) $2.22		$2.05*
		2.12

* Contract basis.
 Open market basis, class II.

Turning to some of the important items that enter into the cost of living, note the following comparisons as of the same date:

	St. Paul	Winnipeg
Sugar cured side bacon	43 c	47 c
Spring lamb	59	59
Pot roast of beef	39	38
T-Bone steak, commercial	59	57
Canned ground pork and beef	39	50
Grade A roasting chickens	43	49
Canned shrimp, 5 oz. can	33	55
Argentine corned beef, 12 oz. can	43	47
Oleomargarine, per pound	29	39
Butter, first grade	59	61
Shortening, 3 pound can	85	$1.15
Bread wrapped pound loaf	11	10½
Orange juice, 48 oz. can	29	58
Soap flakes, large package	27	35

I am sure that is a most interesting contrast between what the agricultural producer in Canada receives for his products and what is received by the agricultural producer in the United States on the one hand, and on the other hand what the farmer's wife and other housewives in Canada have to pay for the articles I have mentioned compared with what is paid in the United States. Despite that comparison, under the present price ratio in Canada an hour's average wage of industrial labour will today purchase more farm products than at any other time since 1913.

On March 1 of this year a further increase was announced in freight rates making a total increase over the past two years of 40 per cent. The increases recently allowed by the board of transport commissioners should be held back by the cabinet until such time as the discrimination and discriminatory rates now in effect against western Canada and other parts of the country are removed.

According to the federal bureau of statistics the price of farm machinery increased 12 per cent last year. The estimated requirements for new farm machinery for 1950 are over $200 million, and over 60 per cent of it will be in western Canada. Think of the added burden of freight rates here alone. Everything the farmer buys is plus freight while everything that he sells is less freight. The farm labour index since 1939 is now 3·79, and has increased over three and three-quarter times. While the farmer's products are falling in price, his costs of production are all still increasing daily. I placed a question on the order paper with respect to income tax exemptions, and I wish to deal with that to some extent. It was answered on March 1 last. The question was as follows:

Are farmers allowed income tax exemption on new buildings, equipment or plant expansion on the same basis as is allowed to industries for 1949 or 1950?

The answer of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) was:

No. The capital cost allowances in respect of taxpayers other than farmers and fishermen were set out in the regulations published in statutory orders and regulations, part II of the Canada Gazette, of the 8th February, 1950. The capital cost allowances in respect of farmers and fishermen were set out in the regulations published in statutory orders and regulations, part II of the Canada Gazette, of the 22nd February, 1950.

As most people realize, for the past few years farmers and fishermen have been allowed capital depreciation of 20 per cent on automotive equipment such as tractors, self-propelled combines, trucks, cars and so on. One month following the calendar year of 1949, and for the purpose of assessment of 1949 income tax returns, order in council P.C. 458 was passed by the government dated the 31st day of January, 1950, and was published in part II of the Canada Gazette of the 22nd of February, 1950. This retroactive legislation by order in council allows capital depreciation to farmers and fishermen of 15 per cent on automotive equipment and 10 per cent on harness and other stable equipment. The capital cost allowance in respect of taxpayers other than farmers and fishermen is set out in order in council P.C. 6471 under date of the 22nd December, 1949, and is published in part II of the Canada Gazette of the 22nd February, 1950.

Under class 10, automotive equipment—tractors, trucks, automobiles, trailers and so on—is allowed capital depreciation of 30 per cent, and harness or stable equipment is allowed 30 per cent depreciation, but a farmer or a fisherman is only allowed 10 per cent for harness and stable equipment.

If you are in the timber and lumber business in a big enough way, or in a few other large industries, under class 14 or 15 you may take capital depreciation of 100 per cent on certain equipment. We are not supposed to be living under a dictatorship in this country, and I protest as strongly as I can against this type of retroactive legislation by order in council. In my opinion people should know, when they are commencing the business of the year, on what basis they are to be assessed rather than have the basis of assessment established after the completion of the year's business. I think that is only a reasonable request and in the interests of good business.

I am not unmindful of the explanation made by the minister on March 13 when he pointed out that over a period of six years' capital depreciation the legislation would be slightly in favour of the farmer or fisherman. But what of the operator who desires to change his equipment in two or three years or any time less than six years? During the war years certain industries were allowed double depreciation. They were allowed to write off certain equipment in three years, and it was then a capital asset. This same principle is now to some extent in effect under the present legislation.

I protest as strongly as I can. Right now the situation is causing great confusion among farmers in western Canada, and I would imagine all over Canada, in preparing their returns. Yesterday in the vote on the amendment to the amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne every Liberal member voted confidence in the government. They voted against the third clause of the amendment which reads:

Deliberately violated a law of this parliament by illegally suppressing the report of the commissioner under the Combines Investigation Act on the flour-milling industry for ten months, including the period of the recent general election campaign, and denied to parliament information essential to the performance of its duty and the maintenance of responsible government.

I was amazed that there were not some Liberals who would rise and conscientiously express their feelings about this matter by voting in favour of the amendment which somewhat censured the government for that very serious offence. As most people know, flour milling in Canada is certainly big business. The inquiry into this matter dealt with the basic food commodity of this country, and the price of the daily bread of our people. This combine was carried on at the expense of the farmers, because it fixed prices at both the purchasing and selling ends. No offence so serious has ever been committed by any government in this country since confederation; and it is hard to imagine all their supporters in this house voting concurrence in such an undertaking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with a couple more local problems within the constituency I have the honour to represent, something I have never done before except on the estimates. The first has to do with the construction of a customs building at Lyleton, Manitoba. First I should like to read the question I asked and the answer given on February 9, 1949, as they appear at page 385 of Hansard:

1. When was the contract for customs building southwest of Lyleton, Manitoba, let?
2. Has the building been completed?
3. Who was the contractor?
4. Was the contract on a cost-plus basis?
5. What was the total cost?
6. What accounts, and for how much, are still outstanding?

Mr. McCann:

1. Foundation contract let October 14, 1947. Superstructure contract, January 14, 1948.
2. Yes.
3. Contractor—L. J. Geddes, Gainsborough, Sask. Subcontractor—F. Stratford, Lumsden, Sask.
4. Contract for basement and sewage disposal system on straight contract basis and contract for superstructure on time and material basis, plus 10 per cent.
5. Total cost of combination office and residence including garage, sewage disposal and landscaping, $16,605.92.
6. One account with Brandon Sign & Stamp Works for $48 is still outstanding, pending settlement on correction to sign.

With respect to certain people who supplied material and performed work, that return was absolutely false. Last October I wrote to the minister concerning this matter, and I shall quote his reply, giving the initials rather than the names, to show that the answer given me in the house was incorrect. The minister said:

I have your letter of the 26th October, regarding outstanding accounts for work carried out and material provided during the construction of the customs excise building at Lyleton, Manitoba.

I am informed that the account of Mr. L— has been passed for payment in the full amount, and the account of M— Lumber and Manufacturing Company Limited has been placed before treasury board and payment may be expected in the near future.

I do not know whether those settlements have been made as yet, but I do know that as of February 1 of this year these people had not been paid. That is a serious matter. I am not blaming the minister personally, but I say someone is certainly at fault in that department.

The second matter with which I wish to deal is a question I discussed fully on December 1, 1945, on the estimates of the Post Office Department. That discussion may be found at pages 2816 and 2817 of Hansard for that year, if anyone cares to read what I said at that time. I asked the then postmaster general for an explanation of this situation, which I have never received. The war was over then, and I urged that a new post office should be constructed for the convenience of the people of Killarney, a town of some 1,200 population. On October 31 last I put the following questions on the order paper, to which I received these answers:

1. Did the federal government purchase property in Killarney, Manitoba, for a post office, if so in what year?
2. What was the purchase price?
3. Did the federal government or any agency thereof pay rent for said property following the purchase?
4. If so, to whom?
5. What amount and for what period of time?

The attached information has been received by the Secretary of State of Canada from the Department of Public Works and post office.

Answer of Department of Public Works:

1. (a) Yes.
   (b) 1939.
2. $2,000.
3, 4 and 5. Please refer to the Post Office Department.

Answer of Department of Post Office:

1. To be answered by Department of Public Works.
2. To be answered by Department of Public Works.
3 and 4. Postmaster at Killarney was paid a rental allowance which, it is understood, he in turn paid to the Whyte estate.
5. $30 per month from date of purchase until September 1948.

Not only did this government pay much more in rent, over a period of nine years, for their own property than it had cost originally; during that time the Department of Public Works spent a good deal of money repairing it. Last fall there was a vote of some $25,000 in the supplementary estimates for a new post office at that point, and in the Killarney Guide much credit was given to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and certain other Liberal members as a result. There was no discussion of this very serious matter of the government paying rental on their own property for some nine years. On behalf of those people I am happy to learn that there is a vote of $80,000 in the estimates this year for a new post office and federal building at Killarney. Irrespective of whom the credit should go to, I am sure those citizens will be happy when that building is completed, because it is badly needed there at the present time.

admitted in evidence by wheat board officials that there was some doubt as to whether some of these brokers had actually rendered any service for the money paid; in fact the chairman of the board admitted before the committee that payments had been made to some brokers when services were not rendered. It was argued by government members that it would not be in the public interest to give either the names of the brokers or the amounts of money paid them individually. The following day a motion was moved by two of my colleagues, the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) that the board produce to the committee a complete record of brokerage fees and commissions of all kinds paid since the outbreak of war; the persons or corporations to whom such payments were made; the amounts paid to each, and the service rendered by such persons or corporations. The motion was defeated. I asked for a recorded vote, but still the motion was defeated, despite the fact that the order of reference in paragraph 2 (5) included a complete break-down of storage, insurance, interest, brokerage and commissions, which surely was broad enough to cover that information. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and his present parliamentary assistant (Mr. McCubbin) voted with other Liberal members of that committee to defeat that motion and prevent the public from getting the information.

This year on the committee on agriculture we have forty-four Liberals and sixteen other members divided among the three opposition groups. Never, during the war years or since, have we been able to obtain from the wheat board a proper accounting of their handling of the farmers' grain. The wheat board has become a political board directed by certain cabinet ministers. While I believe in the principle of wheat board marketing, I do not think they should be a political board, and I believe they should account to the producers for their actions in handling their grain.

Our public accounts committee for 1950 is composed of 50 members, of whom 35 are Liberals and 15 are from the opposition groups. Those 15 are divided between the three opposition parties. During the time I have been here, the government supporters have considered it their duty to sidetrack or smother criticism. They are there as partisans. I am told that in Great Britain the public accounts committee is composed of 15 members, with the opposition in the majority. The chairman is usually a member of the opposition. This is based on the theory that the opposition has not only the right to examine public expenditures, but is in the best position to inquire into the efficient management of public funds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order. I just heard the hon. member say that the members of the government on certain committees had acted in a way to sidetrack criticism, or the work of that committee. I am sure that the hon. member for Souris does not want to be so harsh, so perhaps he could modify his expression.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I bow to your ruling, sir. If anyone wishes to check my statement, the basis for it can be found in the proceedings of the agriculture committee for the year 1942. It is set out in great detail, so members can check it and judge for themselves.

As has been pointed out, there is approximately $600 million in the votes for national defence for this coming year. This is for only one department. Newspaper reports from the Liberal study clubs indicate some of their desires as to the allocation or method of expenditure. I think parliament must develop a more effective form of scrutinizing and checking upon this great expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

With respect to the arguments of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), and the Liberal propaganda sent across this country at public expense to the effect that there is no effective national alternative to the Liberal party, I would advise all people interested to read an editorial appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 14, 1950. It is headed, "Only Room for One Party," and deals with the general elections held in Russia a few days ago.

There is also an interesting editorial in the Ottawa Journal of March 15, headed "Chamber of Commerce and Government Expenditures". I should like to quote one small paragraph from that lengthy editorial. It reads as follows:

> The greatest enemy of economy in any country, the greatest breeding ground of extravagance, is a parliament in which one party is completely and continuously entrenched. Power, continued power, corrupts; breeds the mood of indispensability; breeds most of all indifference to criticism—breeds in fact resentment of criticism. Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Abbott would have a far sharper ear for the advice and demands of the chamber of commerce if their majority in parliament were nine instead of ninety.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the taxpayers across this country, that some more satisfactory method will be evolved in this parliament for scrutinizing these gigantic expenditures. It should be on a more efficient basis than we have hitherto been permitted to carry out that function.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, at this late stage in the debate, I shall only detain the house for five minutes. I am prompted to speak at all by a report which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 7. It concerns income tax prosecutions against farmers on the prairies. I should like to draw this report to the attention of parliament, and particularly to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann). It reads as follows:

> The national revenue department appears to be putting on another campaign against farmers who have failed to file income tax returns . . . In the first two months of this year, 1,953 prosecutions have been launched, mainly in the prairie provinces and western Ontario.

The efficiency of the Department of National Revenue has been lauded in this House of Commons on many occasions. I believe most members are prepared to admit that the department is doing a capable and efficient job. So far as the current campaign is concerned, and others like it against the farmers, I think everyone would agree that the department was only doing its job, if the campaign were being conducted on a universal basis, that is, against all Canadian farmers and in all Canadian provinces. It is only fair that farmers, like everyone else, should pay their fair share of income taxes. However, according to this report, as well as other evidence which is available, the department is not conducting this campaign universally across the country. It seems to be concentrated on the prairies, and some provinces have been overlooked.

Investigations and prosecutions against farmers have been launched in the past several months, mainly in the prairie provinces. While there may have been some, I cannot find evidence of many prosecutions having been conducted in the other provinces, particularly in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against the farmers of Quebec. But I am using them as a basis of comparison for what is happening in Saskatchewan, my own province. I may be wrong, but this recent campaign appears to me to be discrimination against the prairie farmers. I ask the Minister of National Revenue to tell the people of Canada, as soon as he can, and particularly the farmers, why his department is so active against the farmers on the prairies, and so inactive against the farmers in Quebec and other provinces.

Mr. Sinclair: The ones in the prairie provinces are the ones who are making the money.

Mr. Thatcher: They are not the only ones. If the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sinclair) will wait a minute, I shall give him the figures. The conduct of the Department of National Revenue is all the more strange in view of some of the figures that have been recently released.

In my hand I have a report on taxation statistics published by the Department of National Revenue for the year 1948. On page 145 I find that in the whole province of Quebec 400 farmers paid income taxes for the year 1946. They paid a total tax, Mr. Speaker, of $14,000. Based on the number of farmers in the province, that would be about 9 cents each. Perhaps the farmers in Quebec are not doing very well. However, I know that a friend of mine in Moose Jaw, who only has a small store—

Mr. Sinclair: A hardware store?

Mr. Thatcher: —in 1946 paid more in income taxes than all the farmers in the province of Quebec. I say there is something wrong. I wonder why the department has so many inspectors in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, when there are so few farm taxes being paid in the other provinces.

The personal income taxes collected in Canada in 1946 amounted to $695 million, which means that the Quebec farmers contributed about ·0002 per cent of that total. In the same year, the Saskatchewan farmers contributed $3,300,000. Can anyone be surprised today if Saskatchewan farmers are a little perturbed? Can anyone be surprised if they resent the fact they are virtually the only ones who are being investigated and prosecuted?

I have the 1949 report, also published by the Department of National Revenue. It contains the 1947 tax figures. According to that report, page 139, I find that out of 155,000 farmers in the province of Quebec only 540, or three-tenths of one per cent, paid income taxes. In Saskatchewan the same year 16,893 farmers paid; in Manitoba, 7,280; in Alberta, 13,985. The department only collected the magnificent total of $79,000 from the farmers in the province of Quebec. During the same year they collected in Saskatchewan $4,900,000, in Manitoba, $1,600,000, and over $4 million in Alberta. Some of my friends, like the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, say that possibly the Quebec farmers are too poor to pay income tax. That contention does not seem valid to me. I have heard a good many of my friends from Quebec tell us in the house of the wonderful farms they have in Quebec, about their magnificent dairy herds, of the cheese production and butter production which is carried on. I have travelled through Quebec. It is a very beautiful province. I have been amazed to find how attractive some of the farms are. Would any Liberal member in this house say that in 1946 all the farmers in Quebec could or should have paid only $14,000 income tax, and that the farmers in the province of Saskatchewan should have to pay about 230 times as much?

I have no complaint against the province of Quebec. I know that so far as Quebec as a whole is concerned it pays a good deal more in income tax than does my province. I believe that in 1947 they paid $154 million as compared with $21 million in my province. I admit that. I repeat that I ask no special treatment for the farmers of Saskatchewan; I think they should pay their legitimate taxes. But I do ask that they be treated by the income tax department in exactly the same way as are the farmers in other provinces. If farmers are to be investigated and prosecuted in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, let them be given similar treatment in Saskatchewan; but if the department is going to ignore farmers in Quebec and in some parts of Ontario, let it also do the same thing in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. I believe this matter should be explained by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) very soon. If prosecutions are to be continued against farmers, it should be universal in all ten Canadian provinces, and not alone on the prairies.

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): I want to discuss some problems of taxation, but particularly the problems of taxation dealing with urban and suburban municipalities. I hope to make one or two suggestions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) which would, in my opinion, greatly ease the burden of taxation and the difficulties which we see only too plainly are facing our municipalities, particularly in Ontario, at the present time.

I wish to discuss particularly the municipalities in metropolitan areas. I am not referring to what are known as dormitory suburbs, but to those completely balanced municipalities which have grown on the perimeter of our major cities. I wish also to deal with the cities themselves.

The study I have made is of course of my own constituency of York West and the city of Toronto proper. I did this because it is the area I know best. The figures which I have obtained are, I believe, applicable to most of the municipalities in Canada which are growing in both population and industrial potential.

The dormitory suburb as such is now probably an uneconomical anachronism because today the cost of providing municipal services, schools, et cetera, to a house is so great that without adequate industrial assessment few municipalities can provide it and remain solvent. It is true there are several wealthy suburban so-called villages without industry, where restrictions have been imposed on house construction, but these contain large houses and have a low density of population, there being in some cases only three to five houses to the acre; also the ratio of school-age children per house is below average simply because the residents are somewhat older and their families have grown up. Even so, these few expressly favoured municipalities are today faced with the most serious problems concerning the raising of revenue through taxation.

York West does not contain any such municipality and is in fact, despite its geographically suburban position, an industrial area, with a manufacturing output probably as large as any other constituency in the dominion.

The figures I wish to quote are taken from the taxation statistics of the Department of National Revenue. They are from the dominion bureau of statistics, and from the municipal taxes of the Department of Municipal Affairs in Ontario. While they are accurate in themselves, they deal with a slightly different period in time, and therefore the figures cannot be precise. But I submit they do not only indicate a trend, but are sufficiently accurate to prove the point which I wish to make at the present time. The interpretation of those figures, Mr. Speaker, I submit, shows the very serious situation which is facing municipalities at the present time.

Let me go over the district of which I have made a study. I am now referring to the riding of York West including the whole of the township of York, only about half of which is in my riding. These are the population figures for 1948: York township, 90,018; Etobicoke township, 30,769; Mimico, 10,164; New Toronto, 9,156; Swansea, 7,360; Weston, 7,219; Long Branch, 6,677; making a grand total for the riding of York West, with the addition I have mentioned, of 161,447. The population growth of this constituency, as estimated by many experts, is at an annual increase of 8 per cent. Therefore at the present time it is reasonable to assume that the district of York West has an estimated population of slightly over 187,000 people. By 1953, which is four years after the last election, and if there is no election in that year, that riding will have a population of over 225,000. If there is no election until 1954, the population will be approaching 240,000. I submit that, Mr. Speaker, to show the tremendous rate of growth of the suburban municipalities and the size of the district, which, as I say, comprises the riding of York West, and the peculiar problems which these municipalities are facing because of this growth.

I have here figures showing the total tax levy in York township, and the other municipalities. These figures are prepared by the Department of Municipal Affairs in Ontario, and appear in its annual report of municipal statistics for the year 1948. I believe that, with the consent of the house, these figures might be tabled. But, because of their interest, I shall give them in detail now. This table shows the total tax levy as compared with the school tax, and the figures are as follows:

Municipality	Total Tax Levy	School Tax
York township	$3,175,000	$1,072,000
Etobicoke township	1,243,000	411,000
Mimico	337,000	120,000
New Toronto	445,000	138,000
Swansea	290,000	91,000
Long Branch	218,000	85,000
Weston	303,000	110,000

This table gives for that district a total tax levy of $6,012,753 of which $2,029,816 was for school taxes. This means a very considerable tax burden on the population of my riding. It is a burden which, because of the growth of population in that area, is increasing. It is also bound to increase further because of the extra services by way of schools and other physical services provided by municipalities when new population moves in.

Let us compare these levies with the figures showing income tax raised in the same district. These figures are from the statistical report for 1949 of the income tax branch. While the amounts for the district of West York are not broken down into municipalities, nor in fact are they broken down at all, they are based on returns for the Toronto metropolitan area of which the constituency of West York forms a part, despite the fact that it is not in the city of Toronto proper.

We have on the record a total municipal tax in West York of $6,012,753 and a total school tax of $2,029,816 for the year 1948. Thus it will be seen that the school tax is 33 per cent of the total tax levy, giving a per capita tax for municipal purposes of $37.30.

It is generally assumed that the average dwelling contains five people. Using that multiplier, as the standard for the family unit, we get a municipal tax per family unit, that is per house, of $185 for 1948. As I have said, taxes increased not only in 1949, but, I understand, are likely to increase again in 1950. So with a tax levy two years ago of $185 per house, the taxpayer in my constituency owning real property is bearing an increasingly heavy burden.

To realize just how heavy that burden is, let us compare these figures with the figures for income tax as applied to the Toronto metropolitan area. In that area there were 359,119 taxable returns yielding a total tax of $115,400,000, or an average of $321 per taxpayer. These are the figures for 1947 when taxes were considerably higher than they are now, and exemptions lower. Out of a total population of 997,600 for the whole metropolitan area, this gives an average tax per income tax payer of $321.

In that year one out of every three citizens or residents in the Toronto metropolitan area —and in all cases I am taking the metropolitan area as the standard—paid income tax. I submit that with the increased exemptions the figure for this year is more likely to be one out of every four who would be liable for the payment of income tax. Also the tax collected would be considerably less than the $321 collected in 1947.

Let us see what this means. The municipal taxation on the householder, according to the figures I have given, amounted to $185. The average income tax was $321. Assuming that every householder is an income-tax payer, these figures show a municipal taxation of 54·5 per cent of total income taxation. In other words the average taxpayer in the Toronto metropolitan area is paying 54½ per cent as much in municipal taxation as he is in income taxation. That, in my opinion, is a serious situation. It is a serious situation for a number of reasons. The first reason is that municipal taxation is a fixed charge on real property. If a citizen runs into hard times and his income decreases, his income tax also decreases, but his municipal tax continues and is a first charge against what may be his main security, namely, his house and his property.

That is the situation which I submit was largely responsible for the difficulties faced by the municipalities in the years following the first war. As property values fell, as they do in times of lowered national income, it became less and less desirable to own property. Many hundreds of people who were purchasing houses either on time payments or under a mortgage, found it was not economically sound to continue either type of payment because with the destruction of the value of real property they were better off to let the mortgage holder have the house and either purchase another house at a lower value or rent. That was the situation after the last war. We must prevent it from happening again.

With the tremendous increase in the number of new family units, particularly veterans' housing, in the constituency of York West, we are faced with a school problem of tremendous importance and seriousness. A veterans' housing project was erected in the township of Etobicoke consisting of some 350 houses. The qualification necessary to obtain a house was that you should be a veteran with overseas service and a minimum of two children. Actually each house rated 2·4 children, of whom two children were of school age. That meant that the school section was faced with the immediate problem of providing accommodation for from 600 to 700 children. With the optimum of 50 pupils per room that meant an additional ten or twelve rooms. At an average cost of $35,000 per room it meant that that school section was faced with an immediate capital outlay of from one-third to half a million dollars.

This was previously a farming district and it was absolutely impossible for that school section to make that capital outlay. It imposed a tremendous burden on the whole municipality. This is merely one example of the capital expenditures being faced by municipalities at the present ime. Admittedly the government of Ontario has done and is still doing a great deal to help in the erection of schools. In fact it would be impossible for many municipalities to go ahead with their school building programs if it were not for the aid being given by the provincial government.

The figures I have given to the house indicate the tremendously heavy burden of taxation that is being borne, a burden which is likely to grow. I suggest that the ratio of municipal taxation to the federal income tax is now nearly 60 per cent in many sections. That is assuming that the householder and the income-tax payer is one and the same person, and that is true in virtually all cases.

A principle was enunciated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in his last budget against double taxation. He wisely—and I would like to see this extended—made a deduction of ten per cent on income from dividends paid by Canadian corporations. That was a step in the right direction and I hope in the budget to be brought down it will be extended. But here is an even more vicious example of double taxation. The home owner has a liability to pay municipal taxes which is just as much a liability as a mortgage would be. Unless he pays, he loses his property. Yet he gets no credit in his income tax return for that payment. For income tax purposes he is not allowed to deduct those essential taxes he pays to the municipalities. Nor is he allowed under the regulations as I understand them to deduct mortgage payments on his own home. My just request therefore is that municipal taxation be considered as a deductible expense for income tax purposes.

[Mr. Adamson.]

There is one other and slightly increased danger to the man or family buying their own home today under a long-term program extending over twenty, twenty-five, thirty, and in some cases forty years. The payments being made are a direct charge against the family. If they are not made, the security of the home owner is destroyed because he loses his property.

I have one further suggestion to make as to education. Today the cost of education to municipalities and taxpayers of municipalities is a matter of growing concern. As I have shown, it is fully one-third of the total tax levy at the present time. Here is a direct charge for the education of our children which must be met. If I as a taxpayer give a scholarship to educate somebody else's child I am allowed to deduct that from my income for taxation purposes. Nevertheless, because it is my moral responsibility to educate my own child, I am not allowed to make a deduction from my own income for that purpose. I suggest that the matter should not be placed on a moral basis. It should be placed on an actuarial or economic basis. It is much more important for me to see that the children who are my responsibility receive as good an education as they are capable of absorbing. Because it is my duty to do so, and because I will endeavour to do so, is beside the point. I feel that the government should base its taxation so that the money spent by an individual taxpayer for the education of his children by way of school taxes or school or university fees should be allowed as a deduction from his income for taxation purposes.

I have tried to show the house that our system of municipal taxation is a growing burden on the very people who form the backbone of the country, the great middle class, the people who own their own homes, who are doing everything to maintain the economic stability of the country, the people who should be encouraged in every conceivable way to do the very thing they are doing, namely, build a house, live in it, have a family and form a stable and secure backbone of the economy of Canada. Therefore I suggest to the Minister of Finance that in the preparation of the budget one of the reforms that should be included is that taxation levied by way of municipal taxes on the homes and properties of taxpayers should be allowed as a deduction from income for taxation purposes. Municipal taxation is a liability just as much as the interest payments on borrowed money.

As I have indicated, in my riding the total of such taxes in 1948 amounted to some $6 million. The loss of revenue would therefore not be a great one, and it would be an immediate help not only to the municipality but also to the home owner.

Today municipalities in the constituency of West York are submitting resolution after resolution to me asking that the federal government assume 50 per cent of the cost of direct relief. With these resolutions I am in complete accord, but I suggest that the two recommendations I have made would be of immediate help to municipalities and home owners. In accepting these suggestions we would not be doing anything but admitting and continuing the principle that dual taxation is an evil. We would be providing that branch of government which is closest to the people, municipal government, with a degree of security, and by the adoption of the two suggestions I have made we would provide home owners, heads of families, with a sense of growing security and a realization that to own a home, to have a family, is something which is the foundation of our economic system and is the highest type of action any citizen can take. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that these two recommendations should be given earnest attention by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) when considering any new measures of taxation to be included in the budget he will be bringing down shortly.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): First, may I explain my reason for participating in this debate. During the last session, I spoke briefly during our discussion of amendments to the National Housing Act and confined my remarks at that time to the housing situation. I therefore wish to take advantage of this debate to mention briefly other matters of concern to our people.

May I join the speakers preceding me and congratulate the mover and seconder, Mr. Larson and Mr. Dumas, for the very capable manner in which they discharged their duties, and further may I add a word of congratulation, late perhaps but none the less sincere, to our new Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who, I am sure, will give his new department the splendid leadership it deserves.

During the long history of parliament it has been the privilege of hon. members taking part in this debate to eulogize their own constituencies. It is not my intention to follow that practice; in fact I do not think I will mention my riding at all. Mind you, I could use the entire forty minutes allotted to me in telling you of this grand district of Nipissing which I have the pleasure to represent, strategically located as it is at the gateway to the unlimited wealth of our great north land. I could tell you of the great resources of this district; I could give you some of the highlights of the history of some of the centres of population in my riding. I could tell you stories of the picturesque and beautiful town of Mattawa, nestled in the valley at the junction of the Mattawa and Ottawa rivers. Or I could tell you the history of Sturgeon Falls and how it became a boom town with the building of the Abitibi mill there; of its history during the long, dark years of depression, and its resurgence as one of the best towns in northern Ontario. I could tell you of North Bay, so properly called the gateway to the north and the capital of northern Ontario. I could tell you that North Bay is a great transportation city, because all the commerce of the north must pass our way. I could tell you of the railways fanning out in all directions, carrying manufactured goods from the south to house, clothe and feed the people of northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, and bringing from our great north country the materials wrought from our rich and bountiful land, products of the forests and the mine, including gold, silver, cobalt and nickel. Yes; 95 per cent of the world's supply of nickel is produced only some eighty miles west of our city. Busses, too, fan out in all directions from our city, over a splendid system of highways, carrying people to and from the industrial centres to the south and to the mining and lumber districts of the north. We have, also, one of the finest airports in the country.

Then, if I chose, I could tell you of the hundreds of lakes and streams so bountifully stocked with every fish imaginable that have attracted and are continuing to attract thousands of tourists to our district. I could tell you of the miles of beautiful sand beaches on lake Nipissing, that same sandy shore where the famous explorer Champlain paused with his friend, Brulé, in the long twilight of a summer evening on that 25th day of July, 1615, and admired the beauty of this great inland lake. I could tell you, if I were not so hesitant to boast of our district, that here in lake Nipissing is the greatest pickerel fishing bank on the North American continent; I could also invite you to come to Nipissing and paddle your canoe over the beautiful waters of Trout lake and travel, if you will, the exact course taken by Champlain on that day so long ago on what is now known to thousands as the famous Champlain trail. Then I could tell you of the beautiful Temagami area in the north end of my riding, rapidly developing into one of Canada's most popular summer playgrounds. I could tell you of the wonderful possibilities of the beautiful French river area, as yet practically virgin territory.

Yes, if I were not so hesitant to extol the virtues of my riding, I could tell you that this great paradise attracts thousands of tourists annually, who swell our population and spend approximately $5 million each year in our district. Then, if I chose, I could tell you of our people; I could tell you that Nipissing is the home of the world-famous Dionne quintuplets, those five charming young ladies who only a few years ago rocketed our little village of Corbeil into international headlines; I could tell you of our people, English-speaking, French-speaking, people of Italian origin, and so on, who, regardless of their race or background, are real Canadians with a tremendous amount of faith in the future of our great country.

All this I could tell you and more if, as I said before, I were not so hesitant to boost my riding. I would extend a welcome to industry planning new developments to seriously consider the district of Nipissing before making any final decision as to the location of new plants, because Nipissing is the geographical centre of Ontario, linking northern and southern Ontario. To our west lie the sprawling grain empire of the prairies and the rapidly-developing oil fields of western Canada; and to our east the great port cities of the Atlantic. In these days when so much emphasis is being placed upon decentralization, I would urge that consideration be given to our district. Here employer and employee can work and live together, removed from the countless pitfalls of congested-area living, yet only a few hours away from the great markets provided by Canada's large cities.

And now, sir, I turn to other matters. I was indeed pleased to see our government, during the last session, acknowledge their responsibility regarding assistance to municipalities where there is an excess of federal buildings. While the government is to be commended, I do not believe that we have gone far enough, because regardless of the concentration of these federal buildings the responsibility is there, and I hope that the legislation proposed last year and again referred to in the speech from the throne this session is only the thin edge of the wedge, and that our government will give further consideration to this assistance to our hard-pressed municipalities.

Now, sir, a word about social security measures in general and old age security in particular. I am indeed pleased, as I feel sure all hon. members are, to see a committee being set up to study thoroughly all phases of an adequate old age security measure. We have heard considerable talk in this country about the abolition of the means test, and I regret to see some of our people using this issue to stir up worry and discontent, yes, even hardship, among our older people, knowing full well that they do not have the authority or the responsibility of doing anything about it. Unfortunately there are two groups of people in this country—one who would recommend giving everything to the people with no regard to the cost, and the other who shudder when the words "social security" are mentioned. They hide behind the cloak of free enterprise and claim that any step forward in the field of social security is a sign of weakness and can only result in the softening and breaking down of the initiative of our people. Thank goodness there is still a third group, to which I subscribe, who do not believe that everyone should be dependent upon the state, nor on the other hand that business exists only for the sake of business and profits. We believe that industry can and should show a profit and yet, at the same time, can and should share some of these profits with labour. These same beliefs, it would seem, carry through when thinking in terms of old age security. One group would recommend pensions for everyone without restrictions; another group believe that the government has gone too far with its present legislation, and in our own group we believe that the whole matter should be gone into very thoroughly and similar types of legislation in other countries studied, and in gathering these facts making sure that any new plans being embarked upon can be carried out successfully and within the means of Canada's national purse. Let us all join together in working out a plan whereby Canada's senior citizens may be freed forever from anxiety and fear; that will enable them to relax and enjoy, in the twilight years of their life, the peace and security they so richly deserve.

At this time, I should like to refer briefly to a matter that has not been covered, to my knowledge, by other hon. members, and that is Canada's tourist industry. During 1949, Canada's tourist industry established new records, when over-all revenues from travellers from other countries reached $288 million according to the bureau of statistics. Today, the tourist business provides more United States dollars to Canadian people than any other export industry, with the sole exception of newsprint. It is, therefore, no mean factor in our national economy. This industry depletes no raw materials in this country, because our forests and streams, our fish and game, can be preserved by intelligent conservation methods for generations to come. The tourist business, in the main, consists of accommodation and personal services for several million travellers each year; travellers who return to their own countries as the most effective ambassadors of good will it is possible to obtain.

Both 1948 and 1949 have been record tourist years. There are signs, however, that the days of the easy tourist dollars are disappearing. Competition in the travel business is friendly, but is none the less intense. In the year 1948, for instance, tourist promotion agencies in the state of California spent over $900,000 on advertising and publicity, more than the entire advertising appropriation of the Canadian government travel bureau. In that same year, other states of the union spent over $5 million on travel promotion on their own behalf. In addition to this United States competition, Canada must face competition provided by some 46 foreign governments which maintain travel promotion offices in the United States.

The advertising budget allotted to the Canadian government travel bureau to further this important industry, our second ranking source of United States dollars, was $820,000 for the 1948-49 fiscal year. It is $895,000 for the 1949-50 fiscal year, or less than one-third of one per cent of the annual revenues. All Canadian travel promotion organizations, including the travel bureau, the provincial tourist bureaux, railways, steamship lines, and other transportation interests last year spent $2,500,000 on advertising in the United States, or less than one per cent of the 288 million United States dollars the tourist industry brought into this country. Considering the size of the job, and the amount of money available, the Canadian government travel bureau's advertising campaign has had results which in many respects have been phenomenal. In 1949 the bureau handled 321,751 individual inquiries. The tourist industry of this country broke all its previous records in both 1948 and 1949, and it now looms large in the Canadian economy.

This travel movement across the United States border is far from being one way, however. The success of our competitors' own advertising is demonstrated by the all-time high of travel spending by Canadians in other countries in 1949. They spent $164 million on pleasure travel in the United States during the year, according to the bureau of statistics, and $27 million in other countries. This total of $191 million was a new record. Travel business is not restricted in importance to those directly engaged in serving the tourist. It is a business which puts new money into the pockets of every Canadian, whether he be a farmer, a railroader, in fact, everyone, because everyone depends upon the general prosperity of our country for their livelihood. It puts money into the treasury of our federal government, and every provincial government in this country. It seems fair to suggest that this important industry's welfare is the concern of every Canadian.

We have a wonderful country to offer on the travel markets of the world. It has a land area of three and a half million square miles, with more than half of the world's fresh water; a wealth of scenic beauty; rich reserves of fish and game, and an incredibly varied climate. Perhaps because of this, the travel business is one which does a very respectable job of furthering its own growth; however, that does not mean it merits the neglect which it sometimes encounters in the minds of those who take it for granted. In such a competitive business, this is an unwise, even a dangerous attitude. A business that brings more than a quarter billion of new money into this country in a single year calls for the same kind of realistic attention we give our other export activities.

We must remember also that our problem with respect to the United States, which is the greatest travel market in the world, is a peculiar one. The average Canadian knows a great deal about events in the United States; he cannot help it when he reads his newspapers, his magazines or listens to his radio. Unfortunately, he does not always realize how little the average citizen of the United States knows of affairs in Canada; yes, indeed, how little his neighbours know of the simple geography of this country. Therefore, the travel business does both a public relations job and an information job for Canada.

Our game and fish, our forests, all help tell the Canadian story in the simplest and most fundamental manner. The courtesy of our people to the yearly influx of vacation-seeking visitors is becoming a byword across the border. It has done much to sell Canadianism in the United States, but it is a story that needs telling in many different forms, and none of them deserve neglect or indifference. We shall never fully realize the value of the tourist industry to this country until the day when it might be lost. That day will never come if due attention is paid to this basic enterprise. So I would urge the government to pay special attention to the development of this very important industry. True, the government is assisting in various ways. One could not cite a better example than the completion of the trans-Canada highway. Surely nothing is more important to our visitors than good roads. But, I repeat, the Canadian story needs telling in many ways. This government can do this by extending the budget of our Canadian travel bureau; and in so doing broaden its facilities. It is my prediction and my sincere hope that, in the not too distant future, the Canadian travel bureau will have an annual budget of $5 million, and our tourist industry will be pulling a billion United States dollars into Canada every year.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is now before the house a new subamendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). I rise to make a few comments on behalf of this group with respect to that amendment, and also with respect to some of the things that the hon. member for Peace River said in his speech this afternoon, with which I thoroughly agree. I have at least one other purpose in re-entering this debate at this time, which I shall state a little later on; but before I go further, so as to have the record perfectly clear, I wish to re-state our position with respect to this important question of old age security, which has been pinpointed again by the amendment moved by the leader of the Social Credit group. We in the C.C.F. believe in, and advocate for all we are worth, a program of over-all social security. We believe that that program should provide protection for all Canadians against all the exigencies over which they have no control. To be specific, it must include unemployment insurance, health insurance, sickness benefits, adequate old age pensions without any means test, and so on. We have said a number of times, but I repeat it to make it clear, that when that program is on an over-all, all-inclusive basis, we are prepared that there should be collected a special tax to help provide for its payment.

I want to make it equally clear, however, that when the talk is about a one-point single coverage proposition, such as old age pensions only, we do not support the so-called contributory idea. I shall have something more to say about that, but I think it is extremely interesting and valuable that so much discussion on this subject is now taking place not only in this house but in the press and throughout the country.

I have already indicated what we believe to be the objective towards which this parliament and this country should be striving. We recognize, however, that it will take time to achieve an over-all scheme; that there are certain steps that may have to be taken stage by stage. Among the reasons that that is so is the far-flung nature of our country, the various sectors that comprise our economy and our dominion-provincial set-up. That being so, if we are to be practical we should face the fact that it is our responsibility as individual members of this house, it is our responsibility as a parliament, it is the responsibility of the government, to think in terms of the next step that can and should be taken right now. What we are going to get in the immediate future is not the over-all plan, the ultimate ideal, towards which some of us have been working and will continue to work until we get it; what we are going to get soon—I hope—is one or two next steps. It is because that is the actual situation we face that we take the time that we do—and we take it deliberately—to impress upon the government our conviction that the first step now to be taken should be the removal of the means test and putting the old age pension on a basis of universality.

When we advocate that, we are conscious of other improvements that need to be made; that the amount needs to be increased; that the eligible age limit needs to be brought down, and this should not be forgotten, even at this session. But if there is to be one next step, that step should be the removal of the means test from the present old age pension.

The amendment that is now before the house, as moved by the hon. member for Peace River, in so far as its first point is concerned, does two things. On the one hand, it turns attention to what I am just now talking about, namely, the need for getting rid of the means test from the present old age pension. The other thing that it does is to confront this house with a vote on one of the cardinal elements in the dominion government's proposals of 1945. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River asks that the word "contributory" be taken out of clause 2 of the amendment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). When that word is taken out it will leave clause 2 reading as follows:

> We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that Your Excellency's advisers have:
> (2) failed to take steps to inaugurate a national system of old age pensions without a means test.

I would remind hon. members opposite, and hon. members opposite in particular, that this is the very wording that was used by the federal government to describe its old age pension proposal in 1945. It was a national old age pension payable to all at age 70. That was the heading put on it; and, in the detail describing it, it was clearly set out that it was to be a pension without any means test whatever. Here is what it says on page 37 of the proposals of the government of Canada as contained in the green book of 1945:

> National old age pensions at age 70.

The statement under that heading is that it was to be paid at a uniform rate, regardless of means, to men and women aged 70 and over in all parts of Canada. I submit to members of the Liberal party that before they lightly vote against the amendment that is now before the house, just because it happens to be moved by the Social Credit group, they realize that if they vote against it they are voting against the very proposal that was made by the federal government to the provinces in 1945, one of the important proposals included in those that were reiterated by the Liberal party at its national convention in 1948, and one of the proposals that all of the Liberal candidates went to the country on in 1949, namely, that that offer still stood.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I stress the fact that what is before us now is the proposal which was made by the federal government to the provinces in 1945. I recognize clearly, as I have said before, that when that proposal was made in 1945 it was conditioned upon certain tax agreements. It was not conditioned upon any constitutional changes. That was made very clear by Mr. Mackenzie King at the meetings in 1945 and 1946. What was said on that point may be found at page 388 of the book in which those discussions are reported. There you will find the statement made by Mr. Mackenzie King in April of 1946 to the effect that the government's proposals in their entirety involved no constitutional changes, with one exception, and that one was to be a proposal for a reciprocal delegation of powers between the dominion and the provinces.

But there was to be no constitutional change, so far as social security measures were concerned. That proposal of 1945 was worked out clearly in a way that would not require a constitutional change. And I submit there is no need today to talk about waiting until we have solved the method of amending our constitution, and waiting until—still later—there have been amendments to the constitution, because there is still before the country the substance of the proposal made by the federal government in 1945.

Mr. Gillis: Just an alibi they are using.

Mr. Knowles: I wish to say again what I have said before, that I give credit to the federal government for the soundness of the proposal they made in 1945. I have said it a good many times, and I hope my approval of it is not turning the government away from it. The people of Canada still remember it, and agree with it. Indeed there is an essential soundness in the original proposal. It needs to be amended in really only one important particular—as to the amount. That $30 figure of 1945, when taking into consideration the rise in the cost of living index from 1945 to 1950, should now be something over $40.

So all the government has to do to have a sound proposal to put before the country today is to take the proposals of 1945, amend the $30 figure to $40 and give to the people of Canada an old age pension of at least $40 a month payable to all at age seventy, without a means test. Then the other proposal is still there for pensions for those from sixty-five to sixty-nine as well.

For a few years we heard a good deal about the alleged refusal of some of the provinces to enter into a tax agreement. We were told many times that that was the reason those proposals could not be put into effect. We do not hear so much about that today. I wonder if it is because of the pleasant atmosphere of the conference which took place in this chamber in January of this year. Prior to that the government could always talk about the fact that two provinces had refused to agree, and that always seemed to be a sufficient alibi—at least to the government. Today, however, it appears that the provinces are a little more friendly to the idea of finding ways and means of adjusting our dominion-provincial difficulties. We do not hear so much about that phase of the matter now. We hear, rather, the sort of remark that we heard from the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey) and again this afternoon from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Garland) that you have to consider the cost involved, and that you have to consider whether or not the government ever offered old age pensions without a means test, unless there was attached to it a contribution, which I have dealt with on a previous occasion.

It was very clear in the 1945 proposals that any financing that would have to be done was to be done by a modification of the income tax. There was to be no constitutional change—and I am sure when the government said in 1945 that there was to be no constitutional change it had in mind the fact that back in 1925 the Department of Justice had given the federal government a ruling, and that that ruling was that you could not impose a special tax for social security purposes without having an amendment to the constitution.

So the government in 1945 no doubt had that ruling in mind when it said, "we have worked out a scheme which can be implemented without any constitutional change." They also said in 1945, and repeated it in 1946 and 1947 and 1948, that those proposals were worked out on the basis of considerable study, and that it was a plan that would hold together and work.

That proposal, in effect, is what is before us in the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), because in his subamendment he asks us to change the wording of the main amendment before us so that we will be voting for a national system of old age pensions, without a means test.

The amendment of the hon. member also draws particular attention to the use of the word "contributory". I think it is valuable that there has been a great deal of discussion in the house and in the press and throughout the country about that word. I think a great deal more discussion is necessary, and a great deal more thinking before some hon. members get it all sorted out. In my view it is a word that is being used sloppily, and for various motives.

I wish to support the views expressed this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River when he said that the only way in which we can pay for social security at any time is out of current production. He made that very clear this afternoon—and it is exactly what the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has said a number of times. By the way, I commend the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River to his colleague the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), because he did not seem to like what was said the other evening by the hon. member for Vancouver East. However, that is only by the way.

That point must be driven home, and we must think about it. It is fundamental to the whole concept of social security; because when today old age pensioners are living on their old age pensions, or when people are living on pensions from private industry, or from civil service pensions, or whatever it may be, they are not living on dollars and cents; they are not living on pieces of paper; they are living on a portion of the production of today's economy. What we are doing is to permit a portion of current production to be used for a socially desirable objective—to provide some sort of retirement for some of our older people.

The tragedy is that we have not reached the point where we can decide as a nation that we are going to set apart a sufficient portion of the production we are now producing to provide adequate retirement for all our old people. Similarly in the year 1990 or 2000 A.D., as the hon. member for Peace River said this afternoon, people who are now 20 or 30 will be retiring. They will not live on credits in some insurance office, or at the annuities branch, or in some new office where records are kept. They will not live on dollars and cents, on cheques, or paper; they will live on goods and services out of the production that is current in the year 1990 or in the year 2000.

The reason it is important for us to realize all this is so that we will not use this word "contributory" in a sloppy fashion. Too many members in the house seem to think there is some magic in that word. They seem to have in mind that if individuals, on a contract basis, put aside so many dollars a month or so many dollars a year, across the years, in some magic way they will be able to retire without a means test when their working years are done.

Well, as the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, that depends upon the economy of that day, the value of the dollar in that day and, in the final analysis, upon what society in that day is producing. That means this, that the only use of the word contributory that is realistic is as it is used in current terms. We are all contributing today to old age security, such as it is, which some of our old people enjoy. We contribute to it out of the wealth being produced today. And when some of us are old and retired, if we are on an old age pension at that time, we will be enjoying a portion of what is produced at that time and contributed to our retirement, in the goods and services we will consume, by the people who are working in that day.

The quid pro quo of this is that people who are working today should in any decent and sensible society contribute toward the security of people who need it today and, in turn, we will get the same consideration from the people who are working when our day comes to retire, and so on. I plead with hon. members to think of this whole business of social security in those terms rather than in the private life insurance company terms which envisage people simply paying contributions into a fund and somehow magically being able to retire at a later year.

As a matter of fact I hold in my hand the current tables of the annuities branch which are contained in sessional paper 64-A tabled on Wednesday, March 8, of this year. It occurred to me that it might be interesting to look into this to see what it would cost on an annuity basis for a person 25 years of age to try to provide for retirement 40 years from now on a direct contributory basis. Surely that is a long enough period in the twentieth century to ask people to work.

If a young man 25 years of age wishes to try to provide an annuity of $100 per month at 65, which I hope would not be unreasonable for a man and wife 40 years from now, the rate for males would be $15.24 per month, which would have to be paid every month for 40 years. If a woman aged 25 years was seeking to provide $100 per month at age 65 she would have to pay $17.64 per month for 40 years. If you think in terms of a man and wife both aged 25 years who are seeking to buy an annuity of $50 each so that they would have $100 as long as they were both living and $50 when there was only one survivor, the average of the figures I have given would amount to $16.44 per month for the 40 years.

Even if you put it on a split basis and divide the cost among employer, employee and the government on a 40-40-20 basis—I use that figure not to propose it but simply because it is the unemployment insurance basis—you would be asking people to contribute $6 or $7 per month for 40 years, and employers to do the same. That amount would be the required contribution to a contributory scheme on a direct individual basis. In terms of the wage rates of our people, in terms of the income of farmers across the years, it would be impossible to impose such a payment on all our people. Those who are saying that we cannot afford to remove the means test without putting it on a contributory basis might as well realize that they are saying to the people of this country that we cannot get rid of the means test. If you are putting it on a direct contributory basis, the cost to the individual is clearly prohibitive.

Someone may ask, and it is a fair question: If you cannot do it that way, how are you going to do it? The fact is that if you are going to have a proper retirement allowance for old people, bearing in mind that the people cannot pay for it themselves out of the wages they are now getting, what you absolutely have to have is a certain amount of redistribution of wealth in favour of social security. The justification for a redistribution of wealth in favour of social security is that people who are earning wages of $30 or $40 a week cannot afford to buy their own old age security and yet they are producing wealth far in excess of what they are getting. I assert that those who are trying to push forward an individual direct contributory idea are simply trying to stem the tide of the redistribution of wealth in social terms such as I am suggesting to the house right now.

I urge strongly that members face up to these facts and realize that the only possible way to get proper social security is to build it into the income tax structure whereby people will pay for the total cost of government, including social security, on the basis of ability to pay and then, as a matter of right, draw their pensions when retirement is reached.

That is our position. It is because of that philosophy, it is because of that analysis, which I submit is fundamentally sound, that I take up the time of the house at this stage of the debate to urge the government to consider the fact that they should be bringing in a proposal to amend the Old Age Pensions Act in such a way as to eliminate the means test and put it on a universal basis. I ask the government to go back and read their own material submitted to the dominion-provincial conference. I ask them to read their own assertions that amendments to the constitution were not necessary, that a plan had been worked out on the basis of study, a plan that would work, and that it would be brought into effect with the least possible delay.

This afternoon the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Garland) made a most interesting speech and I think we all enjoyed the way in which he was so hesitant about telling us of the beauties of his constituency. Apart from that he went on to say that those who were advocating the removal of the means test were bringing hardship and misery to our older people. May I tell him that the hardship and misery that our older people are suffering is more real than that; it is the reality of the means test that is really hurting them. They are suffering, too, from the kind of thing that is being said in newspapers and in this house which leads them to believe that they are not going to be relieved of the means test unless the plan is put on a contributory basis. I do not know whether many people have seen annuity tables such as those I hold in my hand, but even if they have never seen such figures they realize that with the incomes they get they simply cannot afford to make the contributions necessary to provide for their old age security.

In the light of what I have said, it is obvious that we shall support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River. I think all hon. members in the house should support it, and I think that Liberals in particular should support it because it gives them a chance to vote for the old age pension proposal of 1945 which they reiterated with such fanfare in their national convention of 1948.

I said earlier that I rose for at least one other reason, and I turn now to deal with it. I hold in my hand a couple of press reports, both written by the same writer but appearing in different papers. They both refer to a speech I made in this house during this same debate, back on March 6. One report appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of Thursday, March 9, 1950, under the byline of Chester Bloom, and the other appeared in the Free Press Weekly Prairie Farmer of March 15, 1950, also written by Chester Bloom. The article in the Winnipeg Free Press reads:

Pension Issue Bares Rift in C.C.F. Party
By Chester Bloom

Ottawa, March 9 (Special)—Mr. M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F leader, Wednesday attempted to smooth over indications of splintering in the C.C.F. group in the House of Commons.

The general C.C.F. policy has been to go along with the Liberal government against the Progressive Conservatives on questions involving expansion of social security.

Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) Monday seemed to strive to create a direct breach with the St. Laurent cabinet. Again and again, he berated the Prime Minister for allegedly breaking the "promise" of August, 1945, of old age pensions for those 70 years and over without means test. He included other ministers in the attack.

The article goes on to suggest that there is a rift or division between my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), and me over this issue. The irony of this story is that when you compare the quotations from my speech and from what my leader said there is no difference whatsoever. Mr. Bloom goes on to state:

Mr. Coldwell said Wednesday his party's platform backed the contributory plan but only on an over-all basis—that is, including health, sickness benefits, hospitalization, unemployment insurance and old age pensions without a means test.

The party did not want old age pensions put on a contributory basis separately from the other social security planks.

That is exactly the position that I took; indeed it is exactly the position that Chester Bloom says I took. He said that I gave the impression we are pulling away from supporting the Liberal party because while we support a contributory over-all social security plan we are not prepared to accept a contributory one-point social security plan. That is exactly my position, the position of my leader, the position of this group and of this party. I suggest that sort of journalism is not very responsible, especially when the story fails to bear out the heading and the opening paragraph.

In the same article Mr. Bloom says:

Mr. Knowles carefully avoided mentioning that this so-called "promise" actually was a proposal conditional on all provinces accepting the complex dominion-provincial agreements of 1945.

May I ask Mr. Bloom to look at pages 472, 473 and 474 of Hansard for March 6, and he will find that on at least three occasions I referred to the fact that the original proposals had been based on the tax agreements, but I pointed out—and this was my complaint—that the government was no longer using the refusal of certain provinces to agree to these taxation arrangements as its excuse for not going ahead, but rather it was now saying that it had never proposed old age pensions without a means test except on a contributory basis.

Not content with that irresponsible and completely erroneous story about a rift in this party over the question of social security, which it is really ludicrous to even suggest, Mr. Bloom rewrote his article in a longer story which appeared in the Free Press Weekly Prairie Farmer of March 15, 1950, and he really went overboard this time. The heading is:

They say at Ottawa.

The subheading is:

Mr. Knowles re-words the communist doctrine.

Things have got to a pretty bad state in this country when you have to start throwing the word "communist" at a person because he advocates the removal of the means test from old age pensions. That is just how bad it is. I am amazed at even the Free Press doing that. The last time they used the word "communist" in connection with my name they apologized within two days. Mr. Bloom not only repeats part of what he said in the article in the daily Free Press but also goes on to say:

Actually, the most important utterance of Mr. Knowles can be found on page 475 Hansard, March 6 last. How close C.C.F. speakers approach communist doctrine in the heat of debate was illustrated by that remark. Mr. Knowles said he believed (his own opinion)—

It is substantiated by the green books I have on my desk.

—that the federal government in the dominion-provincial agreement proposals of 1945 had in mind adjustments or increases in the income tax to pay the total cost of old age pensions without a means test out of the federal treasury. Then he added—

This next paragraph is in black face type, in quotation marks, and is directly from me.

"That would be a proper scheme because it would envision people paying according to their ability to pay and drawing the old age pensions at the proper age as a matter of right."

That is the end of Mr. Bloom's quotation from me, and the next paragraph reads:

That phrase, obviously, is merely a rewording of the fundamental Marxian communist doctrine: "From him according to his ability and to him according to his need." Realistically, it means taking the property and possessions of people who have them and giving them to people who do not have them.

I should like Chester Bloom and others to note the paragraph which he quoted from what I said, and by which I stand as a statement of something fundamentally sound. Then I should like him to compare it with this statement which I am now going to read. It is as follows:

What we mean by a contributory old age pension scheme is a scheme whereby all Canadians will contribute each year to a fund for old age pensions and where old age pensions will be paid out as a matter of right to those who will have attained the pensionable age.

That is exactly the same doctrine, that all of us should pay into a fund and that we should then draw our pensions as a matter of right at the pensionable age. This speaker went on to spell it out even more clearly. He said:

Some of us won't have long to go—

This man is in his late sixties.

—and won't have many payments to make before we get ours, but it is a system that will go on continuously and will mean no unfairness to those who will start at the age of twenty or twenty-one and who will continue to pay into the fund until they reach pensionable age. It will be a pension of an equal amount for everyone at pensionable age to which everyone of taxable age will make a direct contribution.

There it is, another way of stating exactly what I said, that what is meant by a proper old age pension scheme is one into which we all pay, all of us who are taxable, all of us who can afford it whether we are sixty-eight or twenty-one, and in return for having played our part in contributing to the providing of social security in the days when we were working, when we reach pensionable age we draw a pension as of right at a flat amount, the same amount for everybody, without a means test.

I ask Chester Bloom this question. If he insists on saying to the people of western Canada that my statement was a rewording of communist doctrine will he not say the same for the statement I have just quoted, which is that of the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) speaking in Vancouver on April 14, 1949? The statement he made was not something the Liberal party wanted to forget because they gave it permanent form in the fall issue of their quarterly publication, The Canadian Liberal. The fact is that both statements are fundamentally sound.

I submit again that this sort of journalism is the kind that brings freedom into danger, and that even the Free Press should not indulge in that sort of thing. When these articles first appeared I thought of rising in the house on a question of privilege, but I felt that perhaps it deserved even more than that. To return to what I said earlier, I want to add that what bothers me about articles of this kind is not only the irresponsible journalism involved therein, and the misstatements to which I have drawn attention, but also that what is going on here is an attempt in many papers—I saw it in the Globe and Mail a few days ago—to tell the people of Canada that they cannot have the removal of the means test until our whole pension plan is put on a direct contributory contract basis. If we have to wait for that we will never get it, at least not for all our people. If we have to wait for that you have to think in terms of the figures I gave from the annuity tables. If you are thinking of that you are asking for the kind of system they have in the United States where, despite some of its good features, it is providing, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) said the other day, only ten per cent of their retired people with a pension as of right, leaving many thousands still on a means test basis.

In other words, it all adds up to the clear position that if there is to be one next step, as is the case in practical politics, that next step should be the removal of the means test from the present old age pension. Let us have along with it, if we possibly can, the lowering of the age, but certainly let us have a revision of that $30 figure of 1945 into a figure of at least $40 for 1950. I call upon the government of the day to implement the sound proposal they made at that time.

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Knowles: I know that hon. members are calling "time", and I am going to sit down shortly. Nevertheless I suggest to hon. members that they think very clearly before they vote on the amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) because what they are being asked to vote on is their own government's proposal of 1945, reiterated in their convention of 1948, promised to the people of their constituencies in 1949, and promised by many of them in the language the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Campney) used when he said that he would fight for it here in this house. I suggest the least they can do is vote for it when they get the chance to do so.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, this particular portion of the debate has been headed, as hon. members know, by the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) which in the first place strikes out the word "contributory" from the Conservative amendment, indicating that Social Crediters are opposed to the contributory idea in respect of old age pensions and social security, and especially old age pensions which are under discussion at the present time. The last portion of our amendment reads:

The government has . . . failed to adopt measures adequate to establish in our country a balanced economy wherein Canadian consumers are constantly supplied with effective purchasing power sufficient to enable them to buy Canada's total production, if they so desire.

I am inclined to think this particular portion of the amendment sets us at variance with every other party in the house. I am not sure what view the C.C.F. would take of that portion; but Social Crediters take the view that a government is failing in its responsibility if it neglects to enable its own people to buy all the production which is brought about within the nation. As soon as it fails to provide purchasing power with which the people can buy its own production, it fails to provide purchasing power with which the people can buy the goods the country can trade its production for. This creates a shortage of purchasing power in the country, which tends immediately to surpluses, unemployment, falling prices and all the other evils which characterize a depression. That is the Social Credit stand; we have made it perfectly plain.

Now may I turn to a matter which I believe had better be cleared up before we go much further. During the course of his speech the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) made a remark which indicated that money could be gotten out of production; at least that was the interpretation placed upon the expression by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Before confusion arises I believe it would be well to quote the exact words of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) the other night, to illustrate exactly the difference between the Social Credit idea of getting money out of production and what I conceive to be the C.C.F. and Liberal idea of how to get money out of production. I am going to read several statements made by the hon. member for Macleod at page 671 of Hansard, in dealing with a statement which has been repeated several times by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and which was referred to with approval by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), which I take it indicates that the minister approved the attitude adopted by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Here are the words of the hon. member for Macleod:

> We believe that money must come out of production. We Social Crediters believe that, but the interpretation as to how he should get it out of production is entirely different from ours. The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) also said the same thing. Of course he amplified his remarks a little bit. He said it has got to come out of national income, and that of course if there were a Conservative party in power they would follow policies leading to the highest national income. But that was talk, because he did not say what policies they would pursue, and I am saying to him—

Then some interjections took the hon. member away from that line of thought. Later, at page 671, he used these words:

> The war was fought out of our national production and not out of our national income, because there had to be an expansion and the creation of $4 billion during the war, and yet the war was fought out of production, not income.
> [Mr. Blackmore.]

If I might stop there, just to amplify the hon. member's statement for a moment or two, I believe it will help clarify the matter. If we had not had sufficient production in Canada to enable everyone to get all he needed to eat and wear and keep him warm, we could not have fought the war. We had to have enough production for that. If we had not had enough production to support our armed forces we could not have fought the war. So we fought the war out of production. But in the course of the war we went into debt to the extent of billions of dollars beyond our national income. During the war billions of dollars were created by the banking system. Those dollars were away beyond our national income and did not in any direct way comprise part of our income, which I think makes the meaning of the hon. member for Macleod quite clear. Then I want to quote one or two more remarks, also at page 671:

> Furthermore, let me ask the minister this. If he believes what he said, let me take him back to the period of the thirties just as an illustration, and it is apt to happen again. It is beginning to happen now. Here are goods piled sky high on the shelves of our warehouses, on the shelves of our department stores, and rotting on the ground. That is high production . . . Let him tell me how he is going to get money out of that production.

I would pause there to point out that just as soon as the Liberals or Conservatives devise a means whereby they can get money out of that kind of production they will be on their way to a better world; and success to them. Obviously if the production is there and you can get money out of production, there should be a way whereby that may be done. I submit there is only one way under the sun by which you can do it; that is by creating debt-free money to represent the production and thereby turning the production into money. Now I continue quoting from the remarks of the hon. member for Macleod:

> There is the production. Does the government get money out of it? No, they do not do that. They destroy the production. Does that bring them money? In the United States they dye their potatoes blue. Does that bring them money? These are the questions I am asking the hon. gentlemen who say the only source of money is production.

If the hon. member for Macleod were here he would ask the hon. member for Vancouver East—and that hon. member would be able to answer, because I think he has another chance to speak during this debate—does the hon. member for Vancouver East see how he can get money out of that kind of production? And is that what he means by getting money out of production? Or does the hon. member for Vancouver East believe he would have to take the money out of the pockets of the poor fellows who toil to produce the production, in other words tax it away from them? If he thinks that, his idea is just about as far away from social credit ideas as twice the distance between the poles. If the money could have been got out of production by means of his idea applied during the depression, why was it not done? Why did the United States destroy hundreds of thousands of pigs and cattle? Why did they pile oranges in vast heaps and burn them? Why did they plough under cotton, if people could get money out of that production? They could have got money out of it if they had understood social credit and realized that money is only the reflection of production, that a financial system should reflect the actual facts of the productive system, which is common sense. If they had realized that and had been prepared to create and use debt-free money to represent their surplus production they could have got themselves and the world out of that depression without having to go to war with Hitler to do so.

There are the quotations from the remarks of the hon. member for Macleod! Now may I just say a word or two further in this same connection. I wish to use some figures so the whole thing will be on Hansard and hon. members can read it and contemplate it. Before I do so, however, I would urge that up to the present time there has not appeared the slightest hint of a suggestion from anyone on the government side—except the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) the other day, and all honour to him—as to how we are going to get out of the difficulty we are in. Surely the members must recognize that the government, for all their talk, have been worse than useless in the matter, because they have not even gone as far as the Minister of Fisheries. There has to be a solution to this difficulty. We have to be able to sell goods to Britain. We have to be able to distribute goods abroad to other nations that lack goods. We have to be able to distribute in Canada our goods. We cannot compete in the wild scramble for world markets with a rehabilitated Germany, a rehabilitated Belgium, a rehabilitated France, and a rehabilitated Japan. Japan is already threatening us with the shirts that were mentioned here in today's proceedings. We cannot enter into competition with these people. If we do, we shall be in the midst of commercial warfare which will result, beyond any shadow of doubt, in military warfare. We shall be to blame for that, because we shall have failed in this hour of need. We cannot sit here twiddling our thumbs without finding a solution; we have to find the solution. I am using the following illustrations to help members see, to some extent, what the social credit idea is.

According to government documents, in the year 1918 the United States produced $60 billion worth of goods. All the money that went into circulation in the United States in wages, salaries, dividends, and every other possible means, in that year was $45 billion. This meant that there were $15 billion worth of goods in the United States for which there was not purchasing power. Following the reasoning of the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin)—who is not in his seat—I imagine what those gentlemen would try in such a situation would be to take tax money out of the $45 billion of purchasing power, in order to enable them to distribute the $60 billion worth of goods. It is exactly that kind of situation which the Liberals are facing, and which every government in the world is facing, if these governments persist in maintaining the financial system which is in use today. There is talk about redistributing income. How can you redistribute $45 billion worth of income to make it buy $60 billion worth of goods? As the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) reminded us the other night, you can spend a dollar only once.

What would have been the attack of social credit under these circumstances? Social credit would have said: We have $15 billion worth of surplus goods here. The backing of money is goods; money is only a ticket for goods. Where the goods are the money surely can be, because money is only a ticket for goods. It is only a means of distribution, and where distribution is to be accomplished, surely the means can be created, just as readily as you can create a handle to carry a trunk once you have the trunk. Now, how can you get money out of that surplus $15 billion worth of production? I have mentioned the creation of debt-free dollars to enable the people to buy these goods. It would be very much the same as Lincoln did during the civil war in the United States. It may not be well known to all hon. members of the house, but Lincoln created $450 million worth of greenbacks, debt free, during the civil war. He created that money at a most inopportune time, because many production facilities were, in a large measure, in disorder. A great number of his best producers were engaged in the war; fighting was raging back and forth over some of the finest production areas in the United States. Surely, if at such a time he could create $450 million without causing inflation, he could do better than that in times of peace.

Why was Lincoln able to create $450 million worth of purchasing power? Because there were enough goods to back it or absorb it when he spent it. So, the Social Crediters would say there were surplus goods, $15 billion worth of them, which would serve as a backing for the creation of debt-free money. I think that makes quite clear what is meant by Social Crediters, when they speak of the creation of money out of production. They do not mean stealing it out of the pockets of the people who are toiling to produce, because that only decreases the purchasing power in the country, and makes the whole economy worse off.

The member for Peace River (Mr. Low) mentioned this afternoon money for old age pensions, and I shall try to interpret what he said. The member is sitting right here, so he can testify as to whether or not this is what he meant. When he spoke of getting money by deduction out of production, he meant that the money saved up for old age pensions say over 20 years, starting say in 1950, will be spent in say 1970, thereby using part of the production of 1970. May I ask the member for Peace River, in your presence, Mr. Speaker, if that is so.

Mr. Low: That is true.

Mr. Blackmore: That is another meaning entirely than the one which the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) took from the hon. member's remark.

Now I desire tonight, in the time at my disposal, to discuss the whole question of sound money. We have to face this thing first or last, Mr. Speaker, and we had better face it first. It should be faced right now. If there is not any truth in the social credit contention, then we invite the 262 members of this house to prove it. The case is clear, and hon. members are welcome to say anything they desire. If we cannot answer every one of their questions, then it will be time for them to wonder whether our ideas about sound money are correct. In the meantime, we are going to talk about sound money.

Mr. Pouliot: Try to prove that your money is sound first, and then we shall listen to you attentively.

Mr. Blackmore: Good, I think we shall prove it to you. In fact, I think I have proved it already by the illustration of the $45 billion and the $60 billion in the United States, and the illustration about the $450 million in greenbacks in Lincoln's time. I believe all reasonable men will admit that is proof.

May I begin by quoting from the words of our Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), as they appear at page 58 of Hansard:

> And that is not just a problem of convertibility.

He is talking about taking sterling in return for our goods.

> The dollars or pounds are merely symbols;

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Admirably said; the Prime Minister is beginning to grow in wisdom.

> . . . and unless there are the commodities available that those dollars or pounds would call for, they are of no immediate use.

Since the Prime Minister is in the house, I wonder if it would be fair to ask him if the converse of his statement would not be true also? If the symbols are no good without goods, then if the goods are there can we not create the symbols?

Mr. Pouliot: Do not be too scientific, or we will understand nothing.

Mr. Blackmore: If I am not completely scientific, then you will say I do not know what I am talking about. I shall stay with science.

Mr. Pouliot: I admire the hon. gentleman, and he knows it.

Mr. Blackmore: I appreciate that greatly, but I shall stay with science; that is what I am going to do tonight.

Mr. Pouliot: Not too much of it.

Mr. Blackmore: Not too much, but not too little of it, either.

After quoting from the Prime Minister, may I draw this conclusion? If money is only a symbol of goods, and we now have more goods in Canada than we have symbols to distribute, why can we not create the symbols without borrowing them from the bank or anybody else? The bank creates them, and then we borrow them and put ourselves in debt by paying interest to the bank. Because we do not feel free to borrow enough, we cannot pay our old age pensioners what they ought to have.

Some discussion is going on in the country now about money. We notice this year that the Financial Post has stepped into the picture, trying to discredit what the Social Crediters are going to say, before they had a chance to speak. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) dealt with that in his first speech.

Now we have the Toronto Star Weekly, an admirable paper in many respects, probably quite honest—I am assuming it is quite honest—in its February 25 issue carrying an article by Robert Nielsen from Ottawa, so it is supposed to be authentic. This article is called "It's only money." May I quote several passages from Mr. Nielsen's article? Near the beginning he says, in speaking of the history of Canadian money:

> In the intervening four centuries, there have been more kinds of funny money than a Social Crediter could think up in an opium dream! Leather bills, playing card notes, silver dollars with holes in them, coins in halves and quarters.

I suppose the thing that made the article acceptable and salable was the silly little sneer about funny money and Social Crediters. I hope that was not the reason why the Toronto Star Weekly put the article in; there is no group of people in the world today that appreciates, advocates and understands sound money more than Social Crediters do. The money they propose is as far from funny money as it can possibly be. Further on he uses these words:

According to James E. Coyne, Donald Gordon's successor as deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, our money today has value because its quantity is limited. It's pretty obvious, says Mr. Coyne, that if the amount of money in circulation were infinitely increased, its value would decline to very near that of the paper it's printed on. He, therefore, defines it as one of the key functions of the bank to see that money remains reasonably scarce.

As if any poor lunatic had ever advocated "infinitely" increasing it. I suppose the article was rendered salable once more because of this reference to "infinitely" increasing it, as though anyone had ever advocated anything like that in Canada.

Mr. Pouliot: May I ask a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Yes.

Mr. Pouliot: What would be the symbol of the infinite quotient for his sound money?

Mr. Blackmore: I think probably you and I had better call up Mr. Coyne tomorrow and ask him.

We will get it together and we will both be sure that we are right. Further on the article says:

The resourceful Hudson's Bay Company solved the exchange problem by issuing its own copper tokens, based on a beaver skin as the standard of value. The largest coin represented one beaver pelt, a second one-half a beaver pelt and the smallest one-quarter of a beaver pelt. If Ojibway Indian Joe Hoot Owl brought in a beaver but wanted only a clay pipe from the company store, the company could give him three quarter-tokens change, good another day.

There is Canadian money. In this case the symbols were created beyond question. They did not have to borrow them from any bank. The article goes on:

But the governors of New France had no means of coining money, and it wasn't long before they were forced to improvise. And their innovation was a dandy. In 1685 the intendant, Jacques de Meulles, strapped for cash to pay his soldiers and staff, hit on the idea of paying them off with playing cards, which were abundant. He stamped them with the royal coat of arms, signed them, and paid them out at the rate of one card to a four-franc note. The cards were further cut up into halves and quarters for smaller amounts. These playing cards constituted one of the earliest forms of paper money in the western world.

There are the symbols again. They were made. Did they work? Of course they worked. Why? Because there were plenty of goods to exchange with them.

Mr. Byrne: Somebody got skinned.

Mr. Blackmore: The beavers, no doubt!

Mr. Byrne: Beaver skins.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Let it be a public fight. Don't keep it so private down there.

Mr. Blackmore: I appreciate the kindness of the hon. member for Calgary West. I continue with the article:

De Meulles and succeeding intendants, fairly responsible men, tried to keep new currency on a sound footing. They would redeem the card money with gold and silver whenever France sent any, taking it back from the merchants when supplies of food, clothing and other commodities came from the old country.

But trouble began in 1690 when a cargo of flour and pork sank on the way out.

Goods, you see.

Similar cargoes went down in 1691 and 1692. The intendant had issued fresh card money against the arrival of these goods. The people and the merchants were stuck with cards, but no goods, and a great outcry arose. This was perhaps Canada's first taste of inflation.

Altogether the author has done a pretty good job. He shows what caused—what always causes—inflation, namely, a shortage of goods in relation to the amount of money, not the kind of money, what it was made of, or where it came from. I continue:

The financial structure of the country was undermined by experiences like this, as the French colonial regimes issued more and more unbacked notes during the 18th century struggle for supremacy with England. Only a fraction of the paper money outstanding was redeemed by the French government after the capitulation of Quebec in 1759. Not surprisingly, the whole institution of paper money suffered loss of prestige, and the long-memoried habitants stoutly resisted early attempts to establish banks of currency issue when the British took over.

It is only fair to put that in as part of the article. I continue:

It was through the imperial army, of all institutions, that confidence in paper money was re-established, and the way paved for the rush of private bank openings that featured the early part of the 19th century. To pay running charges of the war of 1812, bills were issued against the credit of Britain. These usually bore interest and, more important, they were redeemed within four or five years.

It does not say whether redeemed in goods. If they were, that was good enough. I continue:

Another distinct phase of Canadian monetary history, the issuance of private paper money, began about 30 years before the banks got into the business, and flourished for several decades. The acceptance of these notes depended on the firm's or individual's reputation. The Montreal antiquarian, P. N. Breton, listed 41 individuals and firms which issued paper money, including several breweries and several city corporations. A favourite denomination of the city notes was 7½ pence.

Here is the last quotation I shall use:

To say that the world today is more complicated than it has ever been is to state a truism. But for Mr. Average Canadian, the vital matter of currency has achieved a simplicity and uniformity unequalled since the days when the red man ruled.

That is just the trouble, Your Honour. The ordinary citizen thinks that everything is well with our money, whereas there never was a time when everything was much worse than it is with our money, because our money is simply not adequate to the task we must have it perform.

I should like to thank the Toronto Star Weekly for the article. It shows a desire to have the truth about money. If the Star Weekly will go forward and give the Canadian people the actual facts about money it will perform the greatest service it has ever performed in this country in all its long history.

What is sound money? What is a sound dollar? A dollar having constant buying power. I fancy hon. members will say, "I want a dollar which will buy the same amount of goods ten years from now as it will buy today." That is what everybody thinks about when he thinks about sound money. Our money is a long, long way from that.

I have here a set of figures which hon. members will be interested in. These figures were compiled for me by the finance department and submitted to me in a letter dated March 2, 1950. They show the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar from 1927 down to 1949, inclusive. I am going to run down right through the list, so that when it is on Hansard members may read it tomorrow. We are taking the Canadian dollar of 1939 as 100. We are saying it is worth 100 cents. What was the 1939 Canadian dollar worth in 1927? What is that same 1939 dollar worth today? That is what we are asking ourselves, to see whether our Canadian dollar is sound. This table will set out the value of our dollar in the various years, taking the base of 100 for 1939:

1932	102·6
1933	107·5
1935	105·5
1936	103·4
1937	100·3

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Not very much soundness about that Canadian dollar, was there? Yet, every dollar of it practically was a good old bank dollar, borrowed from the bank and supposed to be perfectly safe! Going on from 1939, these are the figures:

1943	85·7
1944	85·4
1946	82·1

And it is still going down. Will anyone say that is a sound dollar? Well, he will be courageous if he does, and he will have a hard job proving it.

What is a sound dollar? I submit that one definition of a sound dollar is one that does not fluctuate in value. Is a sound dollar money backed by gold? Is it money backed by securities and bonds? Is it money lent by the banks? Is it money backed by the credit of a person, a company or a community?

What is credit? It may be described in two sentences: First, the money-producing power of a country and, secondly, the goods-and-services producing power of the country.

Again, is it always money that is scarce that is sound, as was implied by Mr. Coyne's statement? Is it money that is adequately distributed, like blood? Money has been called the bloodstream of the state. But blood would not be much good to one's body if it did not reach his toes and his hair. Money is not really sound in a state if it cannot reach adequately every individual of the state. Money is the bloodstream of the state, remember!

Now, sound money is money with at least three characteristics: Firstly, it must have plenty of goods and services behind it and in front of it; and, secondly, have behind it or under it a price structure which is not fluctuating unduly; and, thirdly, must be adequately distributed. Anything short of that is not sound money.

There is a monetary problem in the world. "The Story of Money" by Sir Norman Angell, published in 1929, an excellent book, is a very careful study of the whole of the world's money. He closes his work with these words:

One thing at least, then, the survey has proved, that there is a monetary problem, and that the task of its solution deserves the efforts of our wisest economists and boldest statesmen.

That was in 1929, before the depression. Did he know what he was talking about? I submit he probably did.

People generally must come to understand money. The closing words of the introductory note in the same book, just before chapter one, are these:

> Money can never be a safe and dependable device in a society made up of people who are ignorant of its nature. We are now facing a monetary revolution.

One sentence more I have left out, because it does not seem to have any bearing on what I am saying. Do you agree with that? Well, if we are facing a monetary revolution, what changes are you going to make? What is the matter? Why do we need a monetary revolution?

In Sir Norman Angell's fine little booklet "Your Money", published in 1936, comprising a series of articles which the Financial Post had Sir Norman Angell prepare in order to set Social Crediters right in 1935, we find the following words on page 1:

> Without some knowledge upon which to base such decisions, democracy itself is impossible. To know what we are doing, what we are talking about when we discuss these matters, we must know something of the nature of money. Our whole civilization rests upon insecure foundations so long as most of us are completely ignorant of such a subject as this.

What an astonishing thing, Mr. Speaker, to find so little discussion of money in this house! And almost none in the responsible papers of the country—except that, of course, which seeks to discredit those who wish to discuss money! It seems to indicate that a change of attitude is needed.

I have discussed to some extent what sound money is. I should like now to read into the record a statement which I think is of very great value, and one which I have read before. This is a statement by the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland bank in England for many years. It occurs in his report to his shareholders in January of 1936, and is found in The Times, down in our library, for January 30 of that year. These are, I believe, words of great importance:

> We learnt that a shortage of money may be just as vicious in its effects as an excess, though deflation has still a touch of virtue about it in the minds of many people. Nevertheless it is becoming more and more widely recognized that greater productivity calls for an increased supply of money, for otherwise prices will fall, business will stagnate, and the growing productive capacity will be unused.
> For money to be truly "sound" there must be enough of it to finance an ordinarily growing volume of trade, yet not so much as to give rise to an inflationary movement of prices.

The whole secret of success in managing our monetary affairs is to build up a system under which we can be sure that there will be plenty of money when there is plenty of goods. The last depression came on because we had plenty of goods and did not know how to get enough money into circulation.

What is enough money? Suppose we accept the statement of Mr. James E. Coyne, that we need a scarcity of money. Scarce in reference to what? Is it the number of people in the community? Is it the goods and services producing capacity of the community? Is it the goods and services actually available for consumption in that community, or the goods and exchanges to be made?

The answer is that it is the goods and exchanges which are to be made. May I quote from "Your Money", by Sir Norman Angell:

> Having dealt in the previous article with the chief money illusion—which is broadly that money, even when it is the precious metals, is itself wealth and that a nation enriches itself by the simple fact of increasing its store of money—we deal in this chapter with what might be called the chief money truth. This truth is that when you do increase the quantity of a nation's money out of proportion to the quantity of goods or exchanges to be made, you get a rise of prices; that when you decrease it, you get a fall.

Our whole problem is to devise a money system whereby we can avoid either an inappropriate increase or an inappropriate decrease of circulating money. I maintain that the only mechanism which has been suggested thus far for doing that very thing is to be found in the Social Credit proposals.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure hon. members who are waiting for the vote that I shall be brief. I am constantly amazed when listening to the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and caused to wonder why it is that ministers of finance the world over should have to struggle as they do when there is such an easy means at their disposal as outlined by members of the Social Credit group. It is amazing to me that the men in charge of finance in the different nations should not be ready to accept a plan that could be carried out with such great ease.

I rise to support the subamendment. The subamendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) does not ask us to subscribe to a social credit method of carrying out the principles involved therein. I support it because more than 2,000 people in the riding I represent have written to me within the past few weeks protesting against the means test as applied to old age pensions. I support it because I am confident that these people do not want to have to wait for the removal of the means test until we have established and built up in this country a contributory old age pension scheme.

As has been pointed out, the government committed itself in 1945 to exactly the kind of old age pension provided for in the sub-amendment, and I quote from page 37 of the green book as follows:

As part of the general proposals now put before the conference, it is proposed that the federal government would establish a system of national old age pensions entirely financed and administered by the federal government, and paid at the uniform rate of $30 per month regardless of means to men and women aged 70 and over in all parts of Canada.

I submit that that is the type of old age pension plan to which this government was committed in 1945, to which it committed itself in the election of 1949 and from which it is trying to get away at the present time. While I am on my feet I should like to read a few quotations from a petition which I presume every hon. member has received from the old age pensioners' society of Manitoba. Speaking of the means test it says:

We regard the means test as one of the most iniquitous pieces of legislation that could be enacted in any country against its citizens.

I would remind the Liberal members of the house that those are almost exactly the words used by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) in his election campaign speeches in June 1949. They go on to say:

We despise and reject any attempt to bring about communism in this land, but we also insist that causes or laws which create a feeling of inequality, dissatisfaction and suffering should be removed at the earliest possible moment.

1. We, as a body, desire freedom and encouragement to proceed with any kind of labour, for which each individual has been fitted.

2. To be allowed and assisted to sell the product of our hands or minds just as freely as any other citizen of our country, whether on the old age pension or off it.

3. To accept jobs or occupations whenever and wherever offered, with the opportunity of being paid for the product of our hands or minds without in any way affecting our pension.

A party that is crying for free enterprise, a party that insists it is maintaining freedom in this country, should be ready to accept this proposal and give to old age pensioners the same type of freedom that they insist should be given to other citizens. The petition continues:

We object to any form of slavery such as the means test imposes (1) when we are denied the privilege of accepting a gift from a relative or friend, without being penalized for it, or being deprived of part or all of our pension.

5. We object to being disallowed to earn anything above the $50 a month limit set without penalty.

The restrictions on the old age pensioners means, frequently, being shut up in a little room, living on one or two meals a day, with no social or congenial surroundings, and not able to attend meetings for mutual satisfaction, because they cannot walk the distances required to do so; and with the meagre pension allowance, increase in rents, cost of living increases, transportation charges, et cetera, they cannot use any means of conveyance.

[Mr. Noseworthy.]

We are not unmindful of the fact that certain Canadian officials are being paid huge salaries of $25,000 per annum with a pension allowance, not of $40 a month but of $6,000 a year, while others receive a salary of $20,000 a year and receive a pension of $5,000 a year.

That reference to pensions reminds me of a newspaper article dated January 14 which contained an account of the retirement of the manager of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. This man had been receiving a salary of $209,000 and he was pensioned on January 1, 1950, with a pension of $95,000 a year. I bring that in because of another question raised by my constituents and about which I have received many letters. I refer to the lack of service being given by the Canadian subsidiary of this parent company which can afford to retire its manager on a pension of $95,000 a year. I refer to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

In the Toronto area alone today there are close to 12,000 home owners who, although they live in communities that have every other convenience, have applied for telephones but cannot get them although they may be needed in case of sickness or for other reasons. I want to take advantage of this opportunity to call to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), under whose department the affairs of that company come, the fact that we have a situation where a utility serving the public, and which is now asking for an increase in its rates after just having floated a new debenture loan, according to its own report has today across Canada approximately 200,000 applications for new telephones and improved telephone services. I think as members of the house we have some responsibility for a company which is rendering as important a public service as the Bell Telephone Company. In addition to registering my protest against the government for failing at this session to remove the means test from old age pensions, I also want to register my protest against the kind of service we are getting from the Bell Telephone Company in the Toronto area.

HEALTH INSURANCE STUDIES

Mr. Knowles:

1. What amount of money was voted for health insurance studies for the fiscal years ending in 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949 and 1950?

2. What amount was expended and charged to the above item in the fiscal years ending in 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949, and how much has been expended and charged to this item thus far in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1950?

3. To whom was this money paid, and/or in what other ways was it expended?

4. How much of the time of the persons indicated in the answer to question 3 has been spent on health insurance studies, and what other tasks have these persons performed?

5. Is there available any report summarizing the results of health insurance studies made under the items noted above?

1.

Amount voted:

1946	$10,187
1947	43,555
1948	27,863
1949	43,897

2.

Net expenditures (For explanations and additional expenditures see answers 3 and 4):

1946	$ 3,122.63
1947	6,738.17
1948	18,954.41
1949	23,589.27
1950	44,487.13 (to Jan. 31/50)

Amounts charged to health insurance studies vote:

1946	$ 2,261.26
1947	4,763.44
1948	6,918.51
1949	20,500.55
1950	43,149.80 (to Jan. 31/50)

Re: Fiscal year ended March 31, 1946—

Salaries were paid to—

Dr. K. G. Gray, appointed December 10, 1945, as Assistant Director of Health Insurance Studies	$ 1,853.11
Miss M. I. Bunn	11.89

Questions

Other expenditures—

Cost of living bonus and other payroll items	$ 1.82
Telephone, telegrams and postage	2.03
Materials and Supplies	9.00
Transportation and travelling expenses	383.41
		$ 2,261.26

Additional staff were employed in the directorate of health insurance studies as follows—

Miss Marion VanDusen was employed as full-time secretary to Dr. Gray. Her salary (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the health branch administration vote) should therefore be added to the above 563.26

Mr. J. S. Cudmore, Statistician, was seconded full time to the directorate. His salary (which was paid by the dominion bureau of statistics) should therefore be added to the above .. 310.00

Re Dr. Gray's duties—

Upon the establishment of the directorate of health insurance studies on December 29, 1945, Dr. Gray was assigned full time there and performed no other duties. .....

Re Miss Bunn's duties—

Miss Bunn was actually employed full time in the proprietary or patent medicine division. Her salary (which for various administrative reasons only was charged to the health insurance studies vote) should therefore be deducted from the above. 11.89

Net Total ..... $ 3,122.63

Re: Additional cost incurred on health insurance studies—

The amount of $3,122.63 does not represent the total expenditure on health insurance studies. During this year the previously established working committee on health insurance was actively engaged in health insurance planning.

This committee consisted of:

Dr. G. B. Chisholm, Deputy Minister of National Health, Chairman; Mr. Alex Skelton, Mr. J. B. Coyne, Mr. J. Howes, Mr. J. T. Marshall, Mr. R. E. Curran, Dr. G. D. W. Cameron (after Dr. Heagerty's retirement), Dr. K. G. Gray.

This committee, with the directorate of health insurance studies, was responsible for the revisions in the 1945 proposals on health insurance submitted to the second session of the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction. (Statement by the Prime Minister of Canada of April 29, 1946; conference record, pages 386-7).

It is of course not possible to estimate the cost of the work of this committee.

Re: Fiscal year ended March 31, 1947—

Salaries were paid to—

Dr. K. G. Gray	$ 500.00
Miss M. I. Bunn	1,315.51
Mr. J. W. Willard	377.10
Mr. W. Krutaski	760.00
Dr. J. L. Little	1,467.74

		$ 4,763.44

Additional staff were employed in the directorate of health insurance studies, as follows—

Miss Marion VanDusen was employed on full-time duties in the directorate. Her salary (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the health branch administration vote) should therefore be added to the above 1,908.79

Mr. J. S. Cudmore, Statistician, was employed full time in the directorate. His salary ($1,580 of which was paid by the dominion bureau of statistics while on loan from the bureau from April 1—December 31, 1946, and $750 of which was for various administrative reasons charged to the departmental administration vote while actually employed by the directorate of health insurance studies from January 1—March 31, 1947) should therefore be added to the above ..... $ 2,330.00

Re: Duties of Miss Bunn, Mr. Willard and Mr. Krutaski—

Miss Bunn was actually employed full time in the proprietary or patent medicine division. Her salary (which for various administrative reasons only was charged to the health insurance studies vote) should therefore be deducted from the above..... $ 1,315.51

Mr. Willard was actually employed in the research division but devoted one-half his time to health insurance studies. One-half his salary should therefore be deducted from the above..... 188.55

Mr. Krutaski was actually employed full time in the personnel division. His salary (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the health insurance studies vote) should therefore be deducted from the above..... 760.00 2,264.06

Net total ..... $ 6,738.17

Re: Duties of Dr. Gray and Dr. Little—

Dr. Gray worked full time on health insurance studies until his resignation on April 30, 1946, to return to the Ontario provincial service.

Dr. Little was appointed assistant director of health insurance studies after Dr. Gray's resignation, and devoted his full time to that work.

Re: Additional costs incurred on health insurance studies—

The amount of $6,738.17 does not represent the total expenditure on health insurance studies. During this year the research division of the department had under constant review the development of health insurance schemes in other countries. In addition a number of specially concerned divisions of the health branch of the department gave, under the direction of the deputy minister of national health, a great deal of time and attention to problems related to health insurance.

It is of course not possible to estimate the cost of these services.

Questions

Re: Fiscal year ended March 31, 1948—

Salaries were paid to

Dr. J. L. Little	$ 1,000.00
Mr. W. H. A. Calladine	393.81
Miss H. Ekstein	725.50
Miss U. V. P. Tupper	360.00

Sundries	2.50
Materials and supplies	154.86
Transportation and travelling expenses	90.65
		$ 6,918.51

Additional staff were employed in the Directorate of Health Insurance Studies, as follows:

Miss Marion VanDusen was employed on full time duties in the directorate. Her salary (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the health branch administration vote) should therefore be added to the above 2,082.00

Dr. J. H. Horowicz was employed full time in the directorate. His salary, additional to the $275 listed above (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the departmental administration vote) should therefore be added to the above 3,025.00

Mr. J. S. Cudmore was employed full time in the directorate from April 1 to August 28, when he was granted education leave. His salary (which for various administrative reasons was charged to the health branch administration vote) should therefore be added to the above 1,178.64

In June, 1947, Dr. H. M. Cassidy of the University of Toronto was appointed to act as technical adviser to the department on matters of social security, including health insurance. In this connection the work of the director of health insurance studies was reorganized and Dr. B. D. B. Layton, chief of the venereal disease control division, was temporarily released from his duties there and put in charge of the directorate. His salary for the period July, 1947, to March 31, 1948 (which was charged to the venereal disease control vote) should therefore be added to the above 4,650.00

The research division was assigned to co-operate with the directorate of health insurance studies. Mr. J. W. Willard, officer in charge of this division, worked part-time on health insurance. Research assistants—Mr. J. A. MacDonald and Miss B. J. Stewart —worked full time on health insurance studies from July, 1947 to March 31, 1948 and research assistant Mr. C. D. Allen worked full time from September 15, 1947 to March 31, 1948. Their salaries (which were charged to the departmental administration vote) for this period should be added to the above..... 5,587.05

Re: Duties of Miss Ekstein and Mr. Josie—

Miss Ekstein and Mr. Josie were actually employed full time in the research division. Their salaries (which for various administrative reasons were charged to the health insurance studies vote) should therefore be deducted from the above.. 4,486.79

Net Total ..... $ 18,954.41

[Mr. Martin.]

Re: Additional costs incurred on health insurance studies—

The amount of $18,954.41 does not represent the total expenditure on health insurance studies. A large proportion of the time of the deputy minister of national health, Dr. Cameron, was devoted to over-all direction of and active participation in the work on health insurance. The deputy minister of welfare, Dr. Davidson, closely co-operated with the health branch in this work. In addition, the legal adviser, Mr. R. E. Curran, and the heads of various divisions concerned—Dr. Moore, Dr. Stogdill, Dr. Ansley, Dr. Couture, and Mr. Hughes—participated in over-all planning as well as in work related to their specific fields.

It is impossible to make an estimate of the proportion of the time of such officials or of Dr. Cassidy and other advisors—and hence of the cost—which was devoted to health insurance studies work.

Re: Fiscal year ended March 31, 1949—

Salaries were paid to the following, who worked full time on health insurance studies—

Miss A. T. Gotro	$ 310.00
Dr. J. H. Horowicz	3,387.08
Mrs. N. Ivanoff	241.07
Mrs. S. Lefebvre	740.00
Miss U. V. P. Tupper	1,710.00
Dr. F. W. Jackson	6,264.00
Mr. W. H. A. Calladine	573.33
Miss G. L. Brommell	853.00
Miss M. VanDusen	2,310.00

Other expenditures—

Telephones, telegrams and postage	$ 588.99
Printing, stationery and office equipment	879.67
Sundries	56.11
Transportation and travelling expenses	2,587.30	$ 20,500.55
Additional staff were employed in the Directorate of Health Insurance Studies, as follows—
Mr. J. S. Cudmore was employed full time in the Directorate from June 1 to September 15, 1948. His salary for that period (which was charged to the health branch administration vote) should therefore be added to the above		988.72
Dr. B. D. B. Layton was employed full time in the Directorate from April 1 to July 31, 1948. His salary for that period (which was charged to the venereal disease control vote) should therefore be added to the above		2,100.00

Re: Additional costs incurred on health insurance studies—

The amount of $23,589.27 does not represent the total expenditure on health insurance studies. During this year a considerable proportion of the time of members of the research division was devoted to assigned duties in respect of health insurance studies. The deputy ministers, the legal adviser, and heads of various divisions concerned actively participated in the work of the directorate of health insurance studies. The directorate was also supported by clerical assistance from the departmental secretary's division.

It is impossible to make an estimate of the proportion of the time of such officials and staff which was devoted to this work.

With respect to expenditures during 1948-49 and 1949-50: activities in connection with health insurance studies included the administration of the health grants program.

No apportionment of time and cost as between studies on health insurance and grants administration can be made or would be justified. Actually a portion of the clerical and mechanical work could be attributed exclusively to the administration of the health grants program but it is not possible to make such an apportionment. According to the statement of policy by the Prime Minister on May 14, 1948, the implementation of the health grants program is the necessary prerequisite to the introduction of a health insurance scheme. Preventive and curative aspects must be well integrated within any over-all health plan and, therefore, the implementation of the grants program can not be separated from planning of health insurance.

Information and experience obtained from the implementation of the health grants program is being collated into basic studies on health insurance.

[Mr. Martin.]

INCOME TAX—INDIVIDUAL PROPRIETORS CORPORATIONS AND CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Isnor:

What was the total income tax received for each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 from (a) individuals in business as proprietors or partners; (b) corporations; (c) co-operatives?

Mr. McCann: No analysis is made of actual tax collections, as detailed information is not given about the individual taxpayer at the time the payment is made. Therefore, the following figures represent the tax liability as declared by the taxpayer at the time of filing and prior to any adjustment which may subsequently be made at the time of assessment.

(a) Tax liability as declared by individuals in business as sole proprietors or partners:—

1945—Not available
1946—$87,386,000
1947—$98,170,000

DUNDAS, ONT., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. Lennard:

1. Are the alterations to the Dundas federal building completed?
2. If so, how much money was expended on these alterations?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. Yes.
2. $39,149.

Questions

CIVIL SERVICE PENSIONS

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20 per month; (b) 20 to $29.99 per month; (c) $30 to $39.99 per month; (d) $40 to 49.99 per month; (e) $50 to $59.99 per month; (f) $60 to $69.99 per month; (g) $70 to $79.99 per month; (h) $80 to $89.99 per month; (i) $90 to $99.99 per month; (j) $100 per month or over?

2. How many widows of retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired federal civil servants and also the number of widows of retired civil servants presently residing in each province?

Mr. Belzile:

SEDITIOUS OFFENCES—PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Fleming:

1. How many prosecutions have been instituted for seditious offences since the 1936 amendment of section 133 of the Criminal Code?

2. What was the nature of the offence charged in each case?

3. What was the outcome of the prosecution in each case?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Garson:

1. Two on behalf of the government of Canada. There may be other prosecutions instituted by the attorneys general of the provinces of Canada of which the federal government has no record.

2. In one case the charge was speaking seditious words against His Majesty the King. The other case was one in which the accused was charged with being a party to a seditious conspiracy.

3. The outcome in the first case was "charge dismissed". In the second, the accused was convicted but the conviction was later quashed on appeal.

IMMIGRATION—GERMAN NATIONALS

Mr. Pearkes:

1. Are persons of German nationality permitted to enter Canada as immigrants?

2. If so, under what conditions?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce):

1. The entry to Canada of German nationals is prohibited by an order respecting enemy aliens passed under the authority of section 38 of the Immigration Act.

As stated by the Minister of Mines and Resources on September 26, 1949, in the House of Commons, special consideration is being given on humanitarian grounds to applications from legal residents of Canada for the admission of the following classes of first degree relatives:—

(a) Wife and unmarried children under 18 years of age; (b) husband; (c) parents 65 years of age and over; (d) bona fide fiancées.

Admission requires the authority of the governor in council.

2. Answered by No. 1.

WHEAT AGREEMENT—SUMS TRANSFERRED FOR PURCHASE OF OTHER GOODS

Mr. Argue:

1. What sum of money has been transferred from the British wheat agreement for the purchase of other Canadian exports?

2. What are the various exports, with quantities and value covered by such transfers?

3. Will the sum transferred from the British wheat agreement be made available for the purchase of wheat at a future date; if so, at what price per bushel?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. None. However, by arrangement with the United Kingdom ministry of food, the delivery of 12½ million bushels of wheat, which would have been deliverable before July 31, 1950, under the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement, has been postponed until the early part of the crop year 1950-51.

2. As part of this arrangement the United Kingdom government agreed to make certain purchases of bacon, salmon and lumber.

Bacon: The bacon to be purchased under this agreement is that provided for in the contract announced by the Minister of Agriculture on the 3rd of January, 1950, which provided for the purchase of $17½ million worth of bacon on the basis of 29 cents per pound of grade A Wiltshire sides, f.o.b. Canadian seaboard.

Salmon: The United Kingdom ministry of food has concluded negotiations with a committee representing the industry. The government was not a party to these negotiations.

Lumber: The United Kingdom ministry of supply has called tenders for approximately 40 million feet of eastern softwood.

3. Since the arrangement in so far as wheat is concerned involves simply the postponement of delivery, the price to be paid on delivery will be the price for the year 1949-50 agreed under the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement; namely, $2.00 per bushel plus carrying charges, basis No. 1 northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur, Vancouver, or Churchill.

SALES TAX—REVENUE FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

Mr. Fleming:

What amounts have been collected, by years, and in the aggregate, by way of sales tax from the outset thereof on (a) ice cream; (b) other foods; (c) clothing; (d) household furniture?

Mr. McCann: Information not available. No separate statistics are maintained of sales tax collected on individual commodities.

WHEAT—SALES, DOMESTIC AND FOR EXPORT, ETC.

Mr. Ross (Souris):

1. How many bushels of 1949 wheat crop have been delivered under Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement, as of February 28, 1950?
2. How many bushels of class II wheat have been sold, as of this date?
3. How many bushels have been sold for domestic consumption, as of this date?
4. What is the estimate of bushels of 1949 wheat crop, that will be sold under each of these headings as of July 31, 1950?
5. What has been the average monthly price of class II wheat since August 1, 1949, to date?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Wheat clearances to the United Kingdom during the period August 1, 1949 to February 28, 1950 amounted to 68,809,955 bushels. This figure does not include wheat for flour, the shipment of which is a matter of arrangement between the Canadian mills and the British food ministry.

2. It is not the policy of the Canadian wheat board to divulge information as to its current sales position.

Questions

3. See answer to No. 2.

4. See answer to No. 2.

5. The average of daily class II prices during the period August 1, 1949 to February 28, 1950 was $2.23 per bushel basis No. 1 northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur and Vancouver. The monthly average class II prices basis No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver are as follows:

August, $2.06; September, $2.21; October, $2.38; November, $2.34; December, $2.22; January, $2.14; February, $2.18.

Note: In answering the above questions 1949 wheat crop is interpreted as referring to the crop year commencing August 1, 1949.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—CONTRIBUTIONS AND BENEFITS

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

1. What was the value of the contributions received by the unemployment insurance fund during the month of February, 1950?
2. What amount of benefits were paid out during the said month?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle):

1. $9,999,676.84.

2. $13,605,340.11.

NEWFOUNDLAND—SALES TAX

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

What amount of revenue has been collected by the federal government for general sales tax collected from goods consumed in Newfoundland, April 1, 1949, to February 28, 1950?

Mr. McCann: No record is kept of the sales tax collected on goods consumed in individual provinces but sales tax collected in Newfoundland for the period April 1, 1949 to January 31, 1950, was $1,555,277.51.

No figures are yet available for February 1950.

NEWFOUNDLAND—TAXES ON TOBACCO AND LIQUOR

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

What amount of revenue has been collected by taxes on (a) tobacco; (b) liquor, in Newfoundland, from April 1, 1949, to February 28, 1950?

Mr. McCann: The excise duty and tax revenue collected on tobacco in Newfoundland during the ten months' period commencing April 1, 1949, and ending January 31, 1950, was $1,489,971.21.

Likewise, the excise duty revenue on spirits was $50,643.90 and on malt, $330,591.84. There is no excise tax on spirits and malt.

In addition to the foregoing revenue, there is a sales tax of 8 per cent but no separate record is kept showing amounts applicable to each item.

Questions

Goods upon which excise duty, excise tax and sales tax have been paid in other provinces are shipped to Newfoundland, but this revenue is likewise not included in this answer since no record is kept.

No statistics are yet available for the month of February 1950.

LOAN TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

HOUSING—LOANS FOR HOME IMPROVEMENT AND EXTENSION

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the part of the National Housing Act relating to home improvement loans and home extension loans been proclaimed? If so, when? If not, when will such proclamation be made?

2. What total amount of money is authorized for (a) home improvement loans; (b) home extension loans?

3. What amount of money has been lent for (a) and (b) as noted above?

4. How much money has been lent in connection with urban, and how much in connection with rural home improvement and home extension provisions noted above?

Mr. Prudham:

1. P.C. 1180, dated 28th March, 1946, proclaimed part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, in force effective April 1, 1946, with respect to home extension loans.

With respect to home improvement loans proclamations have been issued only as follows:

(a) P.C. 6905, dated 1st September, 1944, and P.C. 7061, dated 12th September, 1944, proclaimed part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, in force as of the 1st day of September, 1944, with respect to home improvement loans and home extension loans made in respect of homes situated in the town of Kamsack, Saskatchewan, and the area adjacent thereto which had been damaged by the cyclone of August 9, 1944.

(b) P.C. 2752, dated 17th June, 1948, and P.C. 3013, dated 1st July, 1948, proclaimed part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, in force with respect to home improvement loans made in respect of homes situated in British Columbia which had been damaged by floods occurring in 1948.

General proclamation of part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, with respect to home improvement loans has been delayed because building materials, particularly plumbing and heating equipment, are still in short supply. An increased demand for these materials, which might well result from the proclamation of part IV, would seriously interfere with completions of new dwellings. The material supply situation is being watched closely and as soon as there is evidence that the supply of plumbing and heating equipment exceeds the demands of new construction, part IV will be proclaimed with respect to home improvement loans.

2. The aggregate principal amount of the guaranteed home extension loans and the guaranteed home improvement loans is limited by section 19 of the National Housing Act, 1944, to $125,000,000.

3. Home improvement loans, nil; home extension loans, $114,090.00.

4. All home extension loans made to date have been in respect of urban homes.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES—WINNIPEG AND OTTAWA—CIVIC HOLIDAY

Mr. Knowles:

1. Were the post office employees in Winnipeg given the day off on the occasion of the civic holiday in August, 1949?
2. If so, did they suffer loss of pay at that time?
3. If no loss of pay was suffered at that time, was any deduction made from subsequent pay cheques because of the August civic holiday?
4. Were the post office employees in Ottawa given the day off on the occasion of the civic holiday in August, 1949?
5. If so, did they suffer loss of pay at that time?
6. If no loss of pay was suffered at that time, was any deduction made from subsequent pay cheques because of the August civic holiday?
7. If there was any difference in the treatment of post office employees at Winnipeg and at Ottawa in connection with the above-noted matter, what was the reason for the difference?
8. Have any steps been taken to eliminate discrimination in this matter?
9. What was the practice with regard to civic holiday time off for post office employees (a) at Winnipeg; (b) at Ottawa, in 1948, 1947 and 1946?
10. What will be the situation in connection with this matter for the civic holiday of August, 1950?

Mr. Rinfret:

1. No general holiday was allowed. If, however, local service conditions permitted, employees were allowed leave of absence. This was either charged against their leave credits or pay was deducted.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Yes.

5. No.

6. No.

7. Action was based on the declaration made by the Secretary of State which restricted civic holiday to the public service throughout the city of Ottawa.

8. The question is under consideration by the government and a definite decision will be made prior to the observance of civic holiday next summer.

9. (a) 1946—where practicable, leave without pay; 1947—where practicable, leave without pay; 1948—leave with pay. (b) 1946, 1947, 1948—leave with pay.

10. Answered by No. 8.

IMMUNIZATION AGAINST DIPHTHERIA, ETC.

Mr. Isnor:

Are any studies being carried out to evaluate preparations for the immunization of children against diphtheria, whooping cough, etc.?

Mr. Martin: Yes. An intensive study of various preparations is being carried out by the laboratory of hygiene of the Department of National Health and Welfare in collaboration with McGill university and the Connaught medical research laboratories. An accurate method for measuring the value of diphtheria toxoid and tetanus toxoid has been developed. The use of combined antigens, such as diphtheria toxoid and whooping cough vaccine, is under investigation both in the laboratory of hygiene and in the clinical field. The results of these studies will be available shortly.

MOUNTED POLICE—COST OF SERVICES TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Higgins:

What cost per man per annum is the province of Newfoundland to pay for the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Garson: No agreement for the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to enforce provincial laws in the province of Newfoundland has yet been made, but it is likely to be the same as for the other provinces. The existing rate is $1,400 per man per annum.

GANDER, NFLD., AIRPORT—REIMBURSEMENT FOR CONVERSIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Higgins:

What was the amount paid to Newfoundland in respect to expenditures made by Newfoundland at Gander airport for conversion of buildings to civil use, runway improvements and the replacement or expansion of plant and equipment between April 1, 1945 and March 31, 1949?

Mr. Belzile: $663,964.99.

S.S. "BAR HAVEN" AND S.S. "SPRINGDALE"—PURCHASE FROM NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Higgins:

How much was paid to Newfoundland for (a) S.S. Bar Haven; (b) S.S. Springdale?

Mr. Belzile: (a) and (b) $1,466,933.47.

*HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr. Poulin:

How many Canadian citizens are covered at present by (a) a non-compulsory sickness insurance plan in corporations or companies operating on a profit or non-profit basis; (b) a sickness insurance plan in commerce or industry?

Mr. McIlraith: The information asked for in this question is not available as statistics on this particular subject are not kept.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

WHEAT BOARD—LOANS FROM CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Wright:

1. What were the daily loans made by the Canadian wheat board from the chartered banks from April 1, 1949, to July 31, 1949?
2. What chartered banks participated in these loans?

Questions

Mr. McIlraith:

SCRIPT PREPARED BY LISTER SINCLAIR FOR CBC BROADCAST

Mr. Isnor:

1. Was a script prepared by Lister Sinclair dealing with the story of two businessmen, recently used over the trans-Canada network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?
2. If so, what was the date of broadcast?
3. Was the script read and approved by (a) program director; (b) general manager?
4. Who finally approved of said script?

Mr. McCann:

1. No.

2, 3 and 4. See answer to No. 1.

HOUSING—TORONTO AND YORK COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. How many housing units does Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation now own in Toronto and York?
2. In how many of these houses did vacancies occur in 1949?
3. How many applications for houses did Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation receive in the Toronto and York area during 1949?

Mr. Prudham: In the city of Toronto and the county of York:

1. 1,020.

2. 71.

3. 1,091.

PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK—HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Coldwell:

1. How many miles of highway were built in Prince Albert national park in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949?
2. What was the cost per mile for this construction, including clearing, grading and gravelling?
3. How many miles of highway have been built in Prince Albert national park since March 31, 1949?
4. What was the cost per mile for this construction, including clearing, grading and gravelling?

Mr. Prudham:

1. 16·2 miles.

2. $14,750—moved 22,000 cubic yards per mile.

3. 13·6 miles.

4. $22,000—moved 32,500 cubic yards per mile.

GANDER, NFLD., AIRPORT—REIMBURSEMENT FOR BUILDINGS AND EQUIPMENT

Mr. Higgins:

What was the amount by which Newfoundland was reimbursed for payments made by Newfoundland for buildings and R.C.A.F. equipment at Gander airport?

Mr. Belzile: $866,000.

PURCHASE OF NORTH YORK, ONT., PROPERTY

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. Did Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at one time own land at the corner of Bathurst street and Lawrence avenue in the township of North York, Ontario?

2. If so, when was it purchased, from whom, what was the acreage and what was the purchase price?

3. Has this property been sold recently by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or is Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at present negotiating for the sale of this property?

4. If sold, to whom was the sale made, and what was the selling price?

Mr. Prudham:

1. Yes.

2. This land which consisted of 152·03 acres was purchased on June 19, 1947, from Fred J. Mulholland for the sum of $179,868.15 which amount included legal and survey fees.

3. Yes.

4. The eastern half of this property comprising 65·38 acres was sold during August, 1949, to the Great West Life Assurance Company and Investors Funding Corporation jointly for the sum of $98,070.00.

WINDSOR, ONT., EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

Mr. Noseworthy:

2. If rented, from whom and at what rental?

3. Is the space previously occupied by the unemployment insurance office at 81 Main street, Windsor, now occupied? If so, by whom and at what rental?

4. Is the building at 81 Main street, government-owned property?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. In a rented building.

2. (a) From Mr. Morris Weisdorf. (b) At an annual rental of $4,560, including all services except minor repairs.

3. No.

4. Yes.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—CANADIAN MEMBERS

Mr. Lennard:

1. How many members of the international joint commission of the St. Lawrence deep-sea waterways is Canada entitled to?

2. How many have been appointed by Canada to this commission?

3. Who are they?

4. Are any of them engineers?

5. If not, what are the reasons for not appointing one or more engineers to this commision?

Mr. St. Laurent:

A distinction must be made between the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin commission and the international joint commission.

If the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin agreement of 1941 is approved and ratified by the United States and Canada, duties in connection with the St. Lawrence deep-sea waterways will devolve upon the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin commission, set up under the terms of that agreement, and not upon the international joint commission. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin commission will consist of not more than ten members of whom an equal number will be appointed by the United States and Canadian governments respectively.

Since the commission is not yet in existence, the following answers refer to the international joint commission set up under the terms of the Boundary Waters treaty of 1909.

1. Three.

2. Three.

3. The Hon. J. A. Glen, the Hon. George Spence, General the Hon. A. G. L. McNaughton.

4. Yes. General McNaughton is a graduate engineer. Mr. Spence has had practical engineering experience.

5. In view of answer to No. 4, no answer is necessary.

BURLINGTON, ONT., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. Lennard:

1. Are the additions and alterations to the Burlington public building being done on a cost plus basis or by contract?

2. When will this job be completed?

3. How much has been spent to date?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1 and 2. No work yet undertaken.

3. Nil.

UNITED STATES BASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Higgins:

1. Is a new agreement being formulated between United States and Canada with respect to the United States bases in Newfoundland?

2. If so, when is it expected this agreement will be finalized?

Mr. Pearson:

1. The practical application of certain aspects of the bases agreement of 1941 is under consideration by the permanent joint board on defence (Canada-United States) which will no doubt report to the Canadian and United States governments in due course.

2. Answered by No. 1.

NEWFOUNDLAND—REIMBURSEMENT FOR RAILWAY EQUIPMENT

Mr. Higgins:

What was the amount by which Newfoundland was reimbursed for payments made before March 31, 1949, for railway equipment not delivered until after March 31, 1949?

Mr. Belzile: $225,600.

Questions

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—CHOICE OF ROUTE

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton):

1. In the conference held between the dominion government and the representatives of the provincial governments in December, 1948, was the route of the trans-Canada highway selected through all nine provinces represented thereat, and agreed upon?

2. At such conference did a committee of the dominion government refuse to proceed with negotiations regarding the sharing of costs of the trans-Canada highway following the alleged agreement of the nine provinces to the route and specifications thereof?

3. As a result thereof, was the project held up for an entire year?

4. Have all of the said ten provinces of Canada now agreed on the route of the trans-Canada highway, and if not, what provinces have not agreed?

5. If all the provinces have agreed, what was the date on which the last of such provinces to agree did agree?

6. Following a further conference held in December, 1949, did the federal government agree to submit an agreement to the ten provinces, and if so, has such agreement been submitted, and in what form?

7. What government selected the route through the province of Saskatchewan, and when was such selection communicated to the federal government?

Mr. Prudham:

1. No.

2. No. The subject of the sharing of costs was not on the agenda and only incidental references were made to it.

3. No.

4. No agreements have been signed with any province.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. A draft agreement was forwarded to all provinces on March 1, 1950.

7. The selection of route is a matter for the provinces. Saskatchewan indicated a choice at the conference in December, 1948, and confirmed it on January 14, 1949.

MAYO MINING DISTRICT, YUKON—HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER

Mr. Green:

1. Did the government have surveys and investigations made during 1948 and 1949 in Mayo mining district of Yukon in anticipation of installing a hydroelectric generating plant?

2. If so, what have such surveys and investigations cost?

3. Has the government decided to install such a plant in said district? If so, what is the estimated cost of such installation, and when will such installation be commenced?

4. If such plant is installed, will it be operated by the government as a public utility? If not, how will it be operated?

5. Will all mining companies and individuals mining in that mining district and requiring electric power be furnished with it to the extent of the plant's capacity, and at approximately what rate?

6. Will any mining company have priority in being supplied with power from said plant, and if so, what company?

[Mr. Belzile.]

Mr. Prudham:

1. Surveys and investigations were carried out on behalf of the government during 1949 to determine the feasibility of hydroelectric power development on the Mayo river.

2. The amount spent to date is $45,063.16.

3. No final decision has as yet been reached.

4. See answer to No. 3.

5. See answer to No. 3.

6. See answer to No. 3.

ST. JEAN L'EVANGELISTE, QUE., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Courtemanche:

1. Who is the mail carrier at St. Jean l'Evangeliste, Bonaventure county?

2. Was his contract awarded following tenders? If so, on what date, and in what amount?

3. What was the amount paid prior to the renewal of the contract?

Mr. Rinfret:

1. Edouard Quinn, Jr., contractor for conveyance of mail between Robitaille and Canadian National railway station (Nouvelle) via St. Jean l'Evangeliste.

2. Yes. 1st March, 1947. $850 per annum.

3. $519.50 per annum.

CIVIL AIRCRAFT PILOTS—OCCUPATIONAL DISABILITIES

Mr. Benidickson:

What efforts are being made by the Department of National Health and Welfare to control, alleviate or eliminate the occupational disabilities that develop among professional civil pilots?

Mr. Martin: The most common occupational disabilities that develop among professional civil pilots are:

(1) Damage to the hearing mechanism caused by the vibration and noise of aircraft and radio navigation aids, and

(2) Flying fatigue.

Regarding (1), the Department of National Health and Welfare is making a complete survey and study of all causes and effects of hearing damage among civil pilots. This is aimed at establishing ways and means of early recognition of such damage and will establish the patterns whereby civil pilots and the Department of Transport will be advised of necessary control measures.

Regarding (2), this problem has been under study by the Department of National Health and Welfare for some months. Following the completion of this study the department will suggest appropriate hours of flight duty and rest periods for civil pilots, within limits that are economically sound and still consistent with maximum flight safety.

LEIPZIG FAIR—OFFICIALS IN CANADA

Mr. Adamson:

Are there any officials of the Leipzig fair in Canada?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Not as far as it is known.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. Whiteside:

What action was taken (a) during the fiscal year 1947-48; (b) during the fiscal year 1948-49, against those, if any, who contravened the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations?

Mr. Martin:

(a) It was found necessary to undertake 53 prosecutions. In addition, 136 lots of adulterated or misbranded foods or drugs were seized and destroyed or otherwise disposed of to prevent injury to health, or fraud; 464 shipments from abroad were refused entry into Canada because of adulteration or misbranding; and 1,057 warnings were given to the trade for borderline products and first offences of a minor nature not affecting health.

(b) There were 65 prosecutions, 106 seizures, 465 import shipments refused entry, and 789 warnings given.

ARMOURIES, DRILL HALLS AND URBAN TRAINING CENTRES

Mr. Pearkes:

What armouries, drill halls and urban training centres for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army, or the Royal Canadian Air Force are at present under construction in Canada?

Mr. Blanchette: Royal Canadian Navy, none; Royal Canadian Air Force, none; Canadian Army, an armoury at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

INCOME TAX—FARMERS—PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Thatcher:

During the first two months of 1950, how many prosecutions have been launched against farmers, who have failed to file income tax returns in (a) Quebec; (b) Ontario; (c) Manitoba; (d) Alberta; (e) Saskatchewan?

Mr. McCann: No information available as statistical records are not maintained by the taxation division with respect to the occupation of delinquent taxpayers against whom proceedings have been instituted for failure to file income tax returns.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many Canadian veterans of world war I, not now eligible for any benefits under the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act, could qualify for an allowance thereunder if the United Kingdom were declared a theatre of war in world war I for the purposes of the said act?

2. How many widows of Canadian veterans of world war I, not now eligible for any benefits under the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act, could qualify for an allowance thereunder if the United Kingdom were declared a theatre of war in world war I for the purposes of the said act?

Mr. Mutch:

1 and 2. Statistics covering these categories have never been compiled.

Estimated number of veterans alive today who served during world war I in the United Kingdom but not in an actual theatre of war as presently defined in the War Veterans Allowance Act: 51,000. Of this number it is not known how many would qualify from the standpoint of financial or other statutory considerations to receive war veterans' allowance.

Estimated number of widows of veterans who served during world war I in the United Kingdom but not in an actual theatre of war as presently defined in the War Veterans Allowance Act: 7,600. Of this number it is not known how many would qualify from the standpoint of financial or other statutory considerations to receive war veterans' allowance.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—HOSPITALIZATION OF MENTAL PATIENTS

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the Department of Veterans Affairs any hospitals, or wards in D.V.A. hospitals, for the treatment of mental patients?

2. How many veterans are hospitalized as mental patients?

3. Of these, how many are in D.V.A. institutions, and how many are in other hospitals, or other institutions?

4. Of those in other hospitals or institutions, what are the figures by provinces?

Mr. Mutch:

Return as at February 28, 1950:

1. Yes.

2. Departmental patients: 2,171.

3. In D.V.A. institutions: 1,212; in other institutions: 959.

4. Newfoundland, 16; Prince Edward Island, 12; Nova Scotia, 32; New Brunswick, 3; Quebec, 36; Ontario, 211; Manitoba, 126; Saskatchewan, 128; Alberta, 128; British Columbia, 228; outside Canada, 39.

PATRONAGE

Mr. Knowles:

1. Who administers, handles, or has charge of, the patronage, on behalf of the federal government, in or for each of the following electoral districts: Beauce, Chicoutimi, Labelle, Papineau, Three Rivers, Brant-Wentworth, Broadview, Carleton, Danforth, Dufferin-Simcoe, Eglinton, Elgin, Frontenac-Addington, Greenwood, Grenville-Dundas, Haldimand, Hamilton West, Hastings-Peterborough, Huron North, Lambton West, Lanark, Middlesex East, Peel, Peterborough West, Prince Edward-Lennox, Simcoe

North, Victoria (Ontario), Waterloo South, Wentworth, York East, York South, York West, and Annapolis-Kings?

2. Who administered, handled, or had charge of, the patronage, on behalf of the federal government, during the first six months of 1949, in or for each of the following electoral districts: Kamouraska, Jacques Cartier, Prescott, and Restigouche-Madawaska; who handled it, in each case during each of the following months: July, August, September, and October, 1949, and who now handles it, in each case, and as from what date?

Mr. Knowles:

1. Does anyone other than the sitting Liberal member administer, handle, or have charge of, the patronage, on behalf of the federal government, in or for any electoral district in Ontario or Quebec at present represented by a Liberal member?

2. If so, in, or for what electoral districts is such the case, and who does handle it in such cases?

Mr. St. Laurent: These questions are somewhat similar in substance to questions asked by the same hon. member on the first of March to which I gave the answer that is reported at page 352 of Hansard. In form, and especially in the French translation, the question is quite objectionable. In the French translation it reads:

De qui relève, qui effectue ou à qui est confiée la distribution des faveurs ministérielles, pour le compte du gouvernement fédéral...

The English translation of the French is "the distribution of ministerial favours for the account of the federal government." There are no ministerial favours and nothing which could be translated as "ministerial favours" if that is what is meant by patronage. The question in English reads:

Who administers, handles, or has charge of, the patronage on behalf of the federal government . . .

No one has charge of patronage on behalf of the federal government. It may be that certain members or persons make recommendations to ministers about appointments or other matters in connection with the public service, but no one handles or administers patronage for the federal government. The only knowledge I have of anything of that kind is that one of the defeated candidates in a by-election asked me who was going to handle patronage. I told him that to my knowledge there was no patronage, that there were persons who made certain recommendations to which more or less importance was attached, but that was all there was to it. I think this is the kind of partisan political warfare which should not be spread upon the orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I will comment on this matter on a more appropriate occasion, when I have time.

An hon. Member: Who does it in Saskatchewan?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: I will do it now if you will let me.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PROVISION OF BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN FORMER MEMBERS OF FORCES OTHER THAN CANADIAN

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1946, to provide benefits for certain former members of His Majesty's forces other than Canadian and for certain former members of the forces of His Majesty's allies or of powers associated with His Majesty, which forces participated with Canada in wars concluding on or before the 31st day of August, 1921, who have resided in Canada for not less than twenty years, and to provide further for decentralizing the administration of the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY LEGISLATION, ALTERNATIVE METHODS, ETC.

The house resumed from Friday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin.

That a joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to examine and study the operation and effects of existing legislation of the parliament of Canada and of the several provincial legislatures with respect to old age security; similar legislation in other countries; possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles; the probable cost thereof and possible methods of providing therefor; the constitutional and financial adjustments, if any, required for the effective operations of such plans and other related matters;

That 28 members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the house at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of this house, and that standing order 65 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary; to call for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting, and to report from time to time;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee for the use of the committee and of parliament, and that standing order 64 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

And the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Hansell.

Mr. Speaker: When this motion was before the house last Friday two amendments were moved. The deputy chairman (Mr. Beaudoin) was in the chair at the time, and while he did not say it in so many words he did bring to the attention of the house the possibility that the amendments might not be in order. I believe we should dispose of that question now.

It seems to me there are several reasons why the amendments might not be in order.

The deputy chairman mentioned standing order 50; and it occurred to me that the amendment might not be in order because the motion before the house is wide enough to include the contents of the amendment. As to the amendment to the amendment, it occurs to me that it would be irregular in that it is not actually an amendment of the amendment. But there is another difficulty in connection with it; that is it widens the scope of the motion before the house, and according to our rules I doubt whether that may be done.

I mention these points in order that hon. members will see my difficulty

Mr. Knowles: If I may speak to the questions that have been raised both by the deputy chairman last Friday evening and by you, sir, tonight, I believe my amendment is in order; and I also feel that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) should have the right, at least at the proper stage, to move an amendment in the terms of the one he has proposed Reference has been made to standing order 50. That reference appears in Hansard for March 10 at page 672. Standing order 50, found at page 129 of Beauchesne's third edition, reads:

A motion to refer a bill, resolution or any question to the committee of the whole or any standing or special committee shall preclude all amendment of the main question.

I think it is fair to say that this standing order has been cited in debates on points of order a number of times, and it does create confusion in the minds of some hon. members. It seems to me, however, that if we take a moment to analyse the standing order its wording is clear, and the logic of it is also quite clear. Standing order 50 says in effect that if there is before the house a proposition that I will call A, whether it is a resolution, a bill or a question, and then some hon. member moves what I shall call B, namely a motion to refer A to the committee of the whole or to some standing or special committee, then it is not in order for someone else to try to get around B over to A. In other words as long as there is a motion before the house to refer the earlier question—the question of substance—to a committee, it is not in order to try to get around that motion of reference to amend the terms of the main motion.

I point out, however, that what we have before the house in the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is not a motion to refer anything at all. It is a motion for the appointment of a committee, a substantive motion in itself. It so happens that the word "refer" does not even appear in the motion. Indeed, as yet there is no committee to which this subject could be referred. So I repeat that what is before us is a motion to appoint a committee.

Then I ask Your Honour to take note of standing order 38, found at pages 87 and 88 of Beauchesne's, third edition. It is lengthy and I shall not read it all, but please note:

The following motions are debatable: Every motion—

Then follow a series lettered from (a) to (m), and included therein is:

(j) for the appointment of a committee.

There we have clearly stated a rule which applies to the motion before the house. It says that motions such as this one are debatable. Then if Your Honour will note subsection (2) of standing order 38, it says:

(2) All other motions, including adjournment motions, shall be decided without debate or amendment.

Surely it is clear from subsection (2) of standing order 38, which says that other motions shall be decided without debate or amendment, that the motions referred to in subsection (1) paragraphs (a) to (m) are subject to both debate and amendment. In other words I submit it is quite clear that the kind of motion we now have before us, that is a motion for the appointment of a committee, is subject to both debate and amendment; and it is under that right to amend the motion that I claim my right to move my amendment, and also because of that right I submit that standing order 50 does not apply to a motion of this kind.

The Acting Speaker on March 10 also asked us to note certain instances in Hansard of bygone years, and in the Journals. I have looked up the two references he gave us at that time. The first was to page 2588 of Hansard for May 17, 1929, which relates to a motion for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on a certain proposed money resolution. The leader of the opposition of that day sought to amend the terms of the resolution; and Mr. Speaker, I think correctly, applied standing order 50.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member, having spoken to the point raised concerning standing order 50, would direct his remarks to the other difficulty I mentioned; that is, that the motion before the house is wide enough to include his amendment.

Mr. Knowles: I shall be glad to do that in just a moment, if you will just let me say one other word about amendments to motions of this kind. What I want to say follows what I have been talking about thus far and also relates to the point to which you have now directed my attention. I would like you to note that on four occasions, the references to which I can give you, motions to set up committees and indicate their terms of reference have been amended. In at least one of the cases it might have been argued that the enlargement of the terms of reference asked for was already in the motion; but the amendment was permitted. The first of these four cases was in 1925, as found in Hansard, May 1, page 2750. That case is parallel to what we have at the present time—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman again? I should like to dispose of this matter tonight, and since it is getting close to eleven o'clock, may I say to him now that, from what I have heard, I shall not base my ruling on standing order No. 50. I should like to hear his representations with respect to the other point which I raised.

Mr. Knowles: All right, Mr. Speaker; thank you. I did not understand that before, but in the light of your remarks, I shall not have to go ahead with the other three cases in which amendment of a motion of this kind was permitted.

In respect to the point to which Your Honour directed my attention, I ask you to note citation 537 of Beauchesne's third edition, which is taken from page 469 of Bourinot. It reads as follows:

> A committee can only consider these matters—

I believe that is a misprint; it should read "those matters".

> —which have been committed to it by the house. A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference.

Now, it is that sort of restriction that is placed on a committee to stick to its terms of reference that makes me feel that the main motion, as worded by the minister, is not sufficiently wide to permit the committee to do what I request in my amendment.

The motion as worded by the minister says that the committee can examine and study the operation and effects of existing legislation in Canada and other places. Here is the crux of the matter. It can examine and study possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles. I do not need to refer to the rest of the motion, as it does not relate to the point. There is the crux of the matter, and the crux of the crux, if I may say so, is the word "alternative". This motion gives the committee the right to study possible alternative measures. I am satisfied that if I were a member of that committee, and I moved that we study the possibility of recommending, not an alternative measure, but the removal of the means test from the present old age pension, I would be told by the chairman that that went beyond the terms of reference.

It is to make it absolutely clear that we have the right to discuss the proposal I make that I feel my amendment should be placed before the house. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) expressed the other view, namely, that the terms were wide enough. I feel that if that is the case he should not object to my amendment; there would be no harm in making sure. It is not just on that ground that I argue for it. I contend that once we get into that committee, we will not have the right to do what I feel we should do unless this enlargement of the terms of reference is made.

Mr. Pouliot: I wonder whether the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) or the leader of the opposition has a first mortgage on the floor of the house? Since the opening of the session, they have taken up all the time of the house. The member for Winnipeg North Centre has been splitting hairs again about a motion. The question is just as clear as crystal water or daylight at noon. Here is the part of the motion which interests the hon. gentleman:

> . . . possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles;

Well, the committee is supposed to report to the house. Who ever heard of a committee being empowered by the house to pass regulations or being substituted for the house to enact legislation? The house will act upon the recommendations which the committee submits to it, and my hon. friend knows it.

To the previous quotation the hon. member added after the words "contributory insurance principles":

> . . . and also the possibility of the immediate removal of the means test from the present old age pension.

I believe that is exactly the subject that would be submitted to the committee. Since the hon. gentleman expects to be a member of the committee, he will have an opportunity of suggesting that the committee take immediate steps to do what he requests. It will be up to the committee to decide whether or not that is the thing to do in due course. The reason I object to the amendment submitted by the hon. gentleman is that it is redundant. I am not resuming the debate on the motion; I am merely arguing the point of order, and stating the reason why the amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank hon. members for the assistance which they have given to me.

During Friday's debate on the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to appoint a joint committee on old age security, a proposed amendment was moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and a proposed subamendment by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). During the course of the debate the deputy chairman of committees, who was then in the Speaker's chair, issued a caveat concerning the admissibility of the proposed amendment and subamendment.

I have listened with interest to the very able and cogent arguments which have been advanced to the effect that standing order 50 is not applicable and it may be that on another occasion serious consideration may have to be given to these representations. There are, however, other precedents which must be considered at this time. For instance Bourinot, in his Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, at page 316, states clearly that:

> The object of an amendment is to effect some alteration in a question . . .

Proposed amendments which neither add to nor subtract from the main motion have been held to be inadmissible. (See Canadian Commons Journals, 1948, volume 74, page 229, and House of Commons Debates for March 8, 1948, at page 1993, and Beauchesne's third edition, citation 407.)

The main motion, in this instance, empowers the proposed joint committee to examine and study "possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada, with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles." The proposed amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would insert immediately thereafter the following words:

> . . . and also the possibility of the immediate removal of the means test from the present old age pension;

It seems clear that the words "possible alternative measures of old age security for Canada" are sufficiently broad to cover the removal of the means test from the present old age pension. It seems equally clear that the concluding words:

> . . . with or without a means test for beneficiaries, including plans based on contributory insurance principles, were not intended to, and do not in fact, limit in any way the generality of the immediately preceding words. This being so, I must conclude that the proposed amendment adds nothing to and subtracts nothing from the main motion. Since the proposed amendment is otiose, I must rule that it is out of order. Moreover, even if the proposed amendment would, in fact, have conferred wider powers on the committee, it would in my view have run counter to citation 546 of Beauchesne's third edition, which reads as follows:

> When the house is considering a motion, of which notice has been given, for the appointment of a select committee, a member cannot move an amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which were set down in the notice.

I believe that citation applies particularly to the subamendment which was moved by the hon. member for Macleod.

It reads as follows:

> That the following words be added to the end of the first paragraph, "and to examine the possibility of granting pensions to incurables who are unable to earn a livelihood."

The amendment being out of order, the proposed subamendment is of course also out of order. However, while it is not necessary for me to do so, I should perhaps add that, in any event, it does not purport to amend the amendment, and therefore it would be inadmissible as a subamendment. (See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, citation 364.) Moreover, even if moved as an amendment, it would in my view be out of order under citation 546 of Beauchesne's third edition.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask one question? I am not going to appeal your ruling or present further argument. May I ask one question?

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Knowles: May I?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Would I be correct in understanding that your ruling that what I asked to be included is not necessary means that the terms of reference do make it possible for the committee to discuss the possibility of removing the means test from the present old age pension?

Mr. Martin: No doubt about that.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): He mentioned it.

Mr. Speaker: My ruling was that the amendment adds nothing to nor subtracts in any way from the motion.

Mr. Knowles: That will hold in the committee.

On motion of Mr. Pouliot the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall go into supply and take up the estimates of the Department of National Defence. If the items carry we shall revert to government notices of motion.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 17, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Summary of orders in council passed during the period February 1 to February 28, 1950.—Mr. St. Laurent.

Final report on the activities of the Fraser Valley diking board from its inception on July 22, 1948, to March 1, 1950.—Mr. Howe.

Report of the administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1943, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1949.—Mr. Sinclair.

Order in council, P.C. 5460, dated October 27, 1949, authorizing the granting of modus vivendi licences to United States fishing vessels visiting Canadian Atlantic coast ports during 1950.—Mr. MacNaught.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ST. PATRICK'S DAY—PRESENTATION OF SHAMROCK TO MR. MCIVOR BY PAGE BOYS

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, since the day when a page boy, Romeo Latreille, rescued a girl from drowning in the river near Ottawa on a Sunday afternoon, I have had high regard for the page boys. I appreciate the emblem of my native land, now on my desk, donated by them. It keeps fresh the memory of the patron saint of Ireland; and I am sure hon. members feel grateful for the splendid stuff of which the page boys and their leaders are made.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—PROSECUTIONS—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ON MARCH 16

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last night a question was answered in which I had asked how many prosecutions had been launched against farmers who had failed to file income tax returns in several of the provinces. The answer given by the minister was that no information was available. In my hand I hold a copy of the Winnipeg Free Press of March 7, in which it is stated that in the first two months of this year, in all Canada, 1,953 farmers were prosecuted. My point of privilege is this: If the department can give a newspaperman the full figure, it should be able to give members of parliament a break-down of that figure.

I hope the minister will reconsider the answer to my question, and try to give a break-down. I am particularly interested in the prosecution of farmers in Quebec and Saskatchewan.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue a supplementary question. In addition to the publicity in the papers about income tax prosecutions, can the department give the number of prosecutions that have been properly asked for? The farmers of Manitoba are just as much interested in this controversy as are the farmers of other provinces.

Mr. McCann: I shall take the hon. member's question as notice. The answer given to the hon. member for Moose Jaw was a correct answer, and the only one available, because we do not keep the statistics by occupations. That is why we are not responsible for press comments with reference to the number of prosecutions in any part of Canada.

Mr. Thatcher: May I ask, as a supplementary question, how the minister's department got the total farm figures for the newspapers?

Mr. McCann: I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Is it not a fact that we do get, when we ask for it, the number of farmers, by provinces, who pay income tax? That information has been given before, because I am sure I have asked for it.

Mr. McCann: That may be true, but it entails a lot of work, because our essential statistical records are not kept by occupations.

RADIO BROADCASTING

REFERENCE TO MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order:

That a select committee be appointed on radio broadcasting to consider the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and to review the policies and aims of the corporation and its regulations, revenues, expenditures and development, with power to examine and inquire into the matters and things herein referred to and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, and to send for persons, papers and records; that the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary; that the committee have power to meet while the house is sitting;

that the committee shall consist of the following members: Messrs. Balcer, Boisvert, Cote (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville), Decore, Diefenbaker, Fleming, Fulton, Gauthier (Portneuf), Gauthier (Sudbury), Hansell, Henry, Isnor, Kent, Knight, Langlois (Gaspe), Maybank, McCann, Murray (Cariboo), Richard (Ottawa East), Robinson, Riley, Smith (Moose Mountain), Smith (Calgary West), Stewart (Winnipeg North), and Whitman; that the presence of at least nine members shall be a quorum of the said committee; and that standing orders 64 and 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. McCann: Stand.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have waited since March 10 for this government notice of motion to be called. Every once in a while it is called and allowed to stand. I want to enter my protest against the make-up of the committee provided for by this motion, because it does not represent all the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is not before the house. The hon. member's remarks would be in order when the motion is moved.

Mr. McLure: I am not speaking to the motion; I am speaking on a question of privilege. I think it would be of benefit to the house if I were allowed to give my reasons.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Queens may be correct and doubtless his reasons would be of benefit to the house, but I am afraid that under the rules of the house I cannot allow him to give them at the present time.

OIL AND GAS

QUESTION AS TO EXPORT TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I was not in the house yesterday when the orders of the day were called, but I note that the minister is reported on page 792 of Hansard as having said:

> It has been suggested frequently in the current debate that gas will be sent to the United States from the pipe line before the pipe line reaches Vancouver. I stated last session that that would not be permitted. I know from discussions with the sponsors of the pipe line that it is not proposed to undertake any such export.

Am I to understand from that statement that no export permit will be granted other than through an all-Canadian route?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Several members of the house have given information that they obtained from the principals behind the bill, and I have given information that I obtained from the principals behind the bill. I might say that I cannot understand the unnatural fear that certain hon. members have of letting these men come before a committee of the house where members of the house could find out what they intend to do.

Mr. Cruickshank: I take it the minister is not going to answer my question. Is that correct?

IMMIGRATION

GERMAN NATIONALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the government recently given consideration to permitting the immigration of German nationals, particularly those who have Canadian relatives?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yesterday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), I pointed out that we do permit certain German nationals to enter Canada. In answer to the other part of the question, I would say that the government is always giving consideration to doing anything to improve its immigration laws, and if there is to be a change it will be announced in due course.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence forces—

202. To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $579,301,670, including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $438,178,000 and commitments for future years of $141,123,670 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1950-51 will not exceed $384,932,304.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since the last session of parliament a number of events have taken place regarding defence which I am sure will be of interest to the house.

Before the last session was concluded I left by R.C.A.F. North Star for the meetings of the military committee of chiefs of staff and the defence committee of defence ministers under the North Atlantic treaty. These meetings took place at Paris on November 30 and December 1.

On the military committee we were represented by Lieutenant General Charles Foulkes, chief of the general staff and chairman of our chiefs of staff committee, and we were accompanied by other officers representing all three services.

It will be remembered that the first meeting of the defence committee held at Washington in October created the various agencies to plan and co-ordinate collective action under the North Atlantic treaty. These agencies included a standing group consisting of representatives of the chiefs of staff of France, the United Kingdom and the United States; also five regional groups. Canada is a member of both the north Atlantic ocean group and the North American group. She is an observer on the western European group.

Since the Washington meeting all the groups had been established and made good progress in their planning.

The defence committee meeting at Paris received reports on this work and arrived at unanimous agreement on the following:

1. A strategic concept for the integrated defence of the north Atlantic area.

2. The means to be taken to arrive at a program for the production and supply of armament and equipment.

3. Co-ordination of planning between the various regional groups.

4. Additional steps to further defence planning of the North Atlantic treaty organization.

Since the Paris meetings, further action has been taken in the various regional groups.

Arrangements were approved at Paris to merge the day-to-day working of the western European group and western union, both of which have the same membership. As western union came into existence on March 17, 1947, the plans of that group are well advanced.

Work in the north Atlantic group is being carried right along as Canadian-American co-operation has continued without interruption since our wartime partnership. In connection with the North American group, the United States and Canadian chiefs of staff met together at Washington for the first time on January 17 of this year.

The north Atlantic ocean group is making good progress with its important problems.

Further meetings of the military production and supply board, the military committee and the defence committee will take place at The Hague on March 24, March 27 and April 1 respectively. I expect to leave for The Hague on March 25, accompanied by the same officers who went to the Paris meetings. Our representatives on the military production and supply board will already be there.

Under the North Atlantic treaty we have not made any specific commitment, but we have given the general undertaking contained in article 3 of the treaty to take such action as we deem necessary by means of continuous and effective self help and mutual aid to maintain and develop individual and collective capacity to resist armed attack. A second undertaking, as contained in article 5, comes into effect in the event of an armed attack against one or more of the signatories. That undertaking is to take such action as we deem necessary to restore and maintain the security of the north Atlantic area.

It is important to recognize that the fundamental contribution each partner in north Atlantic security must make in the event of an emergency is first to ensure as far as it can the security of its own territory, and then to make the maximum contribution to common defence. With the circumstances of the world as they are today, the defence of Canada, the defence of North America, the defence of the whole north Atlantic area are inseparable parts of the same problem.

During and following the North Atlantic treaty meetings in Paris, I took every opportunity to discuss defence arrangements with my opposite numbers from other countries and accepted invitations to visit defence establishments and to have talks in France, Belgium, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, as well as in the United Kingdom. In all these countries we received the warmest possible welcome, visited establishments of various kinds and obtained information of great value. Altogether during the whole trip we travelled 10,000 miles in the North Star and Dakota aircraft of the R.C.A.F., and despite bad weather we were able to fulfil every engagement in a complicated and full program. I was pleased the other day to hear the high praise of the R.C.A.F. by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), and to find that the experience of his party confirmed my own in travelling many thousands of miles in R.C.A.F. aircraft over the last three or four years. They are a fine service doing a great job.

The objects of our discussions in all these countries were:

1. To familiarize ourselves with defence problems, possibilities and programs in the western union countries.

2. To get to know better the defence ministers and ranking officers with whom we would have to work in connection with the North Atlantic treaty.

3. To secure information about the experience and practices of other countries by which to examine our own defence plans and to improve the efficiency of our own defence forces.

4. To examine the work and inspect the establishments of our military attachés and the Canadian joint staff in London.

Here are four general conclusions:

1. Neither war nor peace is inevitable, and it is plain that pending the proper operation of the United Nations, which still remains a main objective of our efforts, the best guarantee of peace is the collective strength of the north Atlantic powers.

2. The steps taken to implement the North Atlantic treaty, particularly the attitude of the United States, have increased the improbability of military aggression and strengthened the faith of the western European nations in the possibility of preventing aggression by collective action. Such improvement as there has been in the general outlook is shown by changes in the complexion of their governments. When I was last there in 1946 most of the countries visited had communists in their cabinets; today not one of them has a single communist.

3. Parallel to the organizational work, the exchange of information between countries is already resulting in increased co-operation as well as greater efficiency within each country. Progress is being made in the adoption of standard battle procedures and communications practices. The standardization of equipment is necessarily a longer job.

4. The greatest shortage is equipment as other commitments have so far prevented much production in quantity. We appear to be spending in proportion more on equipment than the other countries.

I saw much that will assist us in the further development of our own program and it was interesting to observe that we have made as much progress as any of these countries with regard to organization, officer training, defence procurement machinery, integration of defence research, reserve organization, equipment, training and recruitment, and, finally, conditions of service as regards pay, allowances, pensions, food, clothing and quarters.

In the United Kingdom, in addition to numerous talks with members of the government and high ranking officers, I spoke to the Imperial Defence college, visited the army cadet school at Sandhurst, the staff college at Camberly, a fighter station at Odiham, and the great naval establishment at Greenwich. Continuing dividends from this kind of visit are the personal friendships formed which lead to further co-operation.

In this connection I have an announcement to make which will be of considerable interest. One of the purposes of the trip was to look into the question of officer training and to see if there was a way in which the considerable facilities which we have in Canada could be utilized for the benefit of the North Atlantic treaty organization in general. Canada has had a unique experience of joint training. The British commonwealth air training plan produced 131,000 aircrew, of whom 71,000 were Canadians, the rest coming from the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand. It has been described on many occasions as one of the great contributions to allied victory in the air and everywhere. In addition, we trained considerable numbers of personnel from France, Belgium, The Netherlands and Norway. The son of our good friend, Mr. Pierre Dupong, the prime minister of Luxembourg, served in the Canadian forces.

At the present time we have reciprocal arrangements for training officers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and Australia.

The recruiting of officers and men in our own active forces has been most satisfactory, and very soon we shall recruit and train officers and men only to replace normal retirements and discharges.

On this trip, therefore, without commitments on either side, I asked the defence ministers of the countries visited whether or not they thought it would be desirable for us to offer to have some of their officers come to Canada for part of their training. Several of the countries already have similar arrangements for training in other countries, though on a smaller scale than we had in mind. The replies received from ministers and service heads led me to recommend to my colleagues that we should make the offer.

It was recognized that this and other similar arrangements already in effect would give opportunities for officers to add to their professional knowledge and to get to know personally officers and men not only of Canada but also of the other countries with whom they would be working in the future. They would get to know something about this country, its geography and potentialities. This work would add to their knowledge of common procedures, and it would give them an opportunity to improve their knowledge of either of our two languages.

In my discussions I was struck by the fact that almost all the people with whom the idea was discussed recognized that it would have a very considerable psychological force in bringing home to us all the unity of purpose and the necessity for working together that we must all have if the full strength of the north Atlantic powers is to be fully developed.

Accordingly we have forwarded, through the representatives in Ottawa of the countries concerned, letters to the defence ministers of the north Atlantic powers offering to train a total of 150 officers of the ground forces and 100 officers of the air forces from the various countries. It is assumed that the training proposed would last about a year, and that if the number of members of the other forces are available to come the plan would continue so there would be a continuing offer to train a total of 250 officers each year. The arrangements proposed do not contemplate any payments between countries. Later a reverse operation may be worked out whereby Canadian personnel would do training in other countries on a similar basis. This arrangement will be combined with the existing reciprocal arrangements that we have with the United Kingdom, the United States and France.

Hon. members will appreciate that the training in Canada of 250 officers from a number of different countries would represent a big program in training staffs, personnel and establishments compared with any similar peacetime arrangements. Training together would be an exercise in practical co-operation of the particular kind for which we in Canada are well qualified by experience and for which we in Canada have a proud record of achievement.

Turning now to events within Canada, a major event in Canada's defence and industrial history was the first flight on January 19 of the twin-engine jet all-weather fighter, the CF-100. This aircraft was specially designed and built in Canada, with a range and navigational instruments suited to Canadian conditions. The aircraft is at present fitted with two Rolls-Royce Avon engines. If flight tests prove successful, we propose to replace the engines with our own Orenda engines. It is believed that the Canadian-designed and built Orenda engine may be the most powerful in existence. The successful conjunction of the CF-100 and the Orenda engine would put our country some years in advance of any other in respect of meeting requirements for a long-range all-weather fighter. Those of us who were able to see the first Ottawa flight of the CF-100 last Saturday must have been struck by its powerful performance, and say with the test pilot, Bill Waterton, formerly of Camrose, Alberta: "We have an aircraft".

The development of the CF-100 is a remarkable achievement of designers, engineers and industry, in A. V. Roe Canada, Limited, working together and in fullest co-operation with the R.C.A.F. It is also a vindication of our faith in Canadian industry and Canadian skills. We invested a good many million dollars and, in an accelerated program, pressed on to develop a Canadian aircraft to meet Canadian conditions well in advance of similar efforts in other nations.

The first test flight of the CF-100 in Toronto last January was for me immediately followed by an inspection tour of the principal defence establishments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. On this trip I found that good progress was being made by both active and reserve units. Most striking was the fine co-operation between the navy, army and air force, the new teamwork between active and reserve as members of a single force, and the understanding support of veterans and others in the civilian community.

Three weeks ago I paid another visit to the west, this time to witness Exercise Sweetbriar. Leaving Rockcliffe on the morning of Monday, February 20, we travelled over 6,500 miles, returning Saturday night, February 25. Our object was to observe the closing stages of the exercise and to discuss at first hand with officers and men of the United States and Canadian forces their impressions of the food, equipment and training, as well as the strategical possibilities of the far north and the lessons learned from their work together.

The exercise has been very fully reported in the press of both countries, and I shall confine myself to a brief summary. I should like, however, to express appreciation to the press of the fair and full account they gave.

The main object of the exercise was to develop doctrine and procedures for the employment of combined Canadian and United States forces operating in the Arctic and under Arctic conditions and to test in the field the latest developments in clothing, food, aircraft, vehicles, weapons and other equipment and material.

The exercise began on February 13 and concluded on February 23. Over 5,500 personnel of the United States and Canadian armies and air forces took part, about one-half being Canadians.

The tactical assumption was that an aggressor force had captured the air field at Northway in Alaska and had moved down the northwest highway almost the whole 350 miles to Whitehorse. The task of the allied force was to drive the aggressor back and recapture the air field.

In preparation for the exercise, the great majority of the 1,457 Canadian army personnel involved had trained at Wainwright under even more severe conditions than those prevailing during the exercise. The period of training altogether covered about seven weeks.

For all of the eleven days of Exercise Sweetbriar, and for most of the even longer period at Wainwright, the troops lived out under the most severe winter conditions. Those of you who were in the prairie provinces this winter will recognize what this meant when I say that every day, at some time or another, the temperature was below zero and reached a low of —58 degrees. Moreover, throughout the exercise they lived on their original issue of supplies, supplemented by food, fuel and equipment brought in by airlift. You can appreciate something of the size and complexity of modern military operations when I tell you that there were no less than 978 motor vehicles, of which 428 were Canadian, and more than 100 aircraft, of which some 60 were ours, and all these were serviced on the spot and generally out of doors.

The exercise concluded at 12 noon on Thursday, February 23. At this time the troops were given their first meal indoors since its commencement. The airlift to take the troops home was already starting. While I was having my first experience of a flight in a jet, the great four-engined aircraft were shuttling backwards and forwards, so that that afternoon they brought out 423 of our men and the first convoy of 120 motor vehicles was moving off. Two days later, by Saturday, all the aircraft, motor vehicles, equipment and men had been efficiently dispatched on the long way home and Northway was again alone with the northern lights.

It will be some time before detailed reports are considered. It is possible, however, to make the following interim report:

1. The exercise was valuable in training personnel and testing doctrine and equipment of every kind.

2. The results confirmed the basic concept of Arctic warfare already held by the staffs of both countries so that there will not be any major change.

3. Military operations in the far north can only be successful if keyed in to one of the existing systems of transportation—airways, the highway or water. The distances a potential aggressor would have to go from any base favour the defence but only if the defence can stop any leap-frogging operation such as from air field to air field. Fighting in the north we know requires specially trained personnel of high morale and top physical condition with first-class equipment and air supremacy. These have been our targets and we are making good progress. Our new aircraft, the CF-100, is specifically designed to have the added range to do the job, and it has been speeded along so that it is years ahead of any aircraft having similar performance.

4. While aircraft and some motor vehicles and equipment proved even better than expected, the exercise confirmed the necessity for having tracked vehicles in bigger quantities. For example, we should probably have one bulldozer for every infantry company. The experience gained will lead to further developments in new equipment for preheating motor vehicles, ventilating tents, and so on.

5. In respect of food, cooking, accommodation, clothing and other personal equipment, physique, leadership, staff planning, weapons, motor vehicles, aircraft, and all-round performance, the Canadians showed that they were in every way equal to the fine forces of our good neighbour, the United States.

On my return I sent the following message to the chiefs of staff of the forces employed:

"On the conclusion of Exercise Sweetbriar, will you convey to all officers and men who contributed to its success my hearty congratulations and thanks for a job which was a credit to themselves and in accordance with the best traditions of the Canadian forces.

Co-operation between army and air force, Americans and Canadians, was one of the principal objectives of the exercise and that co-operation at every level left nothing to be desired.

We can be proud that in personnel, equipment and performance generally, the Canadian forces acquitted themselves well."

At the request of Major General Penhale and Air Vice Marshal Dunlap, who were the Canadian officers directly concerned, and on the recommendation of the chief of the general staff and the chief of the air staff, all of whom deserve great credit for their part, I approved an extra week's leave for all men engaged on the exercise. A number of these men had been away from their homes or their home camps for several months.

I do not think it is generally appreciated that from the beginning of the training at Wainwright on January 3 until the close of the exercise at Northway on February 23, that is, during a period of seven weeks, the great majority of the Canadians lived out under conditions as severe as could be found anywhere; that they travelled under these conditions over 4,000 miles; that this was done over country as rugged as can be found; and yet when I visited the base hospital at Whitehorse there were not more than six cases due to accidents and twenty-five due to various types of respiratory troubles, not very many more than would be expected on a summer vacation of a similar group of civilians. At the end of the exercise their physical condition was good and their spirits high.

Throughout the exercise the R.C.A.F. maintained their sixty aircraft with a serviceability at the high level of eighty per cent, although all servicing of aircraft in the area was done under battle conditions. The air transport command lifted into Whitehorse

1,198 passengers and 366,766 pounds of freight. Mustangs, Vampires, Mitchells and Lancasters of the R.C.A.F. flew a total of 174 sorties. On the conclusion of the exercise the combined forces lifted out from Northway to Whitehorse on two days, February 23 and 24, 1,596 passengers with 50 pounds of baggage per passenger. The R.C.A.F. then lifted from Whitehorse to Edmonton 995 passengers, mostly personnel of the army, and 160,073 pounds of cargo, the job being completed two days ahead of schedule.

The most important single result of the exercise is that, of the armed forces that were engaged there, there are now over 5,000 United States and Canadian personnel who hold the Arctic in a healthy respect but no fear, who know that they can live there provided they meet the tough and challenging conditions.

Among the objects of the exercise was to get training and experience in staff work and administration.

Planning which began last May covered such things as special Arctic clothing, pack rations, arcticization of aircraft, vehicles and equipment. A lot of this was the result of research and development carried on at Churchill and elsewhere over a number of years.

The main camp for training had to be opened at Wainwright, with five other major camps and twelve staging camps, where construction was carried out at below-zero temperatures. At all of these there had to be supplies of food and fuel and men competent to do the job.

Altogether 102,000 spare parts and other articles of equipment were issued, and 642 Canadian vehicles were prepared. There was no fatal accident attributable to the exercise. A doctor parachuted down with the Princess Pats in their magnificent drop, followed in the next descent by a paymaster to ensure that the troops had money to buy what they wanted at the PX stores.

Primary attention was naturally focused on the fine work of the Princess Pats under Lieutenant-Colonel D. C. Cameron, D.S.O., E.D., and the battery of the Royal Canadian Artillery. The various servicing corps constituted the largest proportion of personnel involved, and the way in which the Royal Canadian Engineers, the Royal Canadian Army Service Corps, the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps, the Royal Canadian Ordnance Corps, the Royal Canadian Electrical and Mechanical Engineers and others did their job, reflected great credit on their training, organization and ability.

In addition to the lesson which we learned from Exercise Sweetbriar, that we could live and work in the north country, we had additional confirmation of our ability to work with the American forces.

The senior Canadian administrative officer who, during wartime, had a close association with the troops of Great Britain, Belgium, Poland, The Netherlands and Czechoslovakia, which at one time or another were under Canadian command, had this to say in his report about his experience in working with the Americans on Exercise Sweetbriar:

> I should like to state that the co-operation and co-ordination of administrative effort between Fifth U.S. army and western command has been nothing short of phenomenal; on countless occasions I have often wondered with which headquarters I was serving, and I know from experience that this applies to many officers, both Canadian and U.S. There has been a wonderful demonstration of our ability to work together to achieve the common objective.

I should add that I have had the most friendly messages from Hon. Louis Johnson, Secretary of Defence, His Excellency Laurence Steinhardt, United States ambassador, who accompanied me on the exercise, and Lieutenant General S. J. Chamberlin, the exercise commander, who, like Air Marshal Curtis, Major General Penhale, most of the press and myself, suffered what were called "minor respiratory troubles" from which the troops who lived out were singularly free.

The exercise and everything about it brought home the magnificent vastness of our country. We must come to realize that Canada is just as big from south to north as she is from east to west. From Ottawa to Winnipeg the distance by air is 1,058 miles. It may surprise some hon. members who are more accustomed to the fenced-off farms of the east when I say that the distance from Edmonton to Snag on the Alaskan boundary is 1,327 miles—that is, nearly 300 miles further than the distance from Ottawa to Winnipeg.

I know it will interest hon. members of the committee when I say that at Whitehorse I saw my good friend George Black, who sent his greetings to all his old friends in the House of Commons. I only wish that it might have been possible for all hon. members to be present. Had they been there, I am sure that they would feel the same pride that I do in our armed forces today.

To support these forces we are seeking from parliament this year an appropriation of $425 million, an increase of $42 million over principal estimates of $375 million, and supplementary estimates already voted of $8 million. To this, since the tabling by the Minister of Finance yesterday of the further supplementary estimates, there should be added, if the sum is voted by the house, an additional $4 million, which represents the cost of our acquisition from the British government of the British admiralty properties in Newfoundland at a cost of $7 million, reduced by a carry-over, which we estimate will be unexpended from our estimates and supplementaries, of $3 million.

This figure of $425 million is many times greater than our expenditure on defence in the years before the war.

This sum of $425 million is allocated among navy, army, air force and defence research, among construction, equipment and personnel, among active, reserve and cadet services. The same dollar as I said earlier this week cannot be spent once on construction, again on equipment, and a third time on personnel.

This allocation is worked out, subject to the approval of the cabinet defence committee, between myself and the chiefs of staff. The chiefs of staff act jointly as regards over-all division on matters having interservice implications, and separately with me as regards matters concerning only their own service.

Our planning must look several years ahead. On the one hand we must start work in time to produce the results in personnel and equipment when they are likely to be needed. On the other hand, we must avoid starting things now which might involve us in future commitments for the expenditure of money which might then be needed for other defence purposes of greater priority.

We must use the money appropriated in the best way to meet an immediate threat and also to develop our full potential. We must maintain a force in being and the means necessary to develop our full potential as quickly as possible. This is a question of emphasis—of planning and timing. Our target must be always to become more and more operational. That is what we are doing.

The proposed allocation of this appropriation of $425 million as between the various defence functions provides that the expenditure for the Royal Canadian Navy be increased from $67 million last year to $82 million for the coming year. This increase is mostly attributable to the cost of implementing the previously announced program of construction of three new anti-submarine escort vessels, one arctic patrol vessel—ice breaker; a gate vessel, and four minesweepers.

The Royal Canadian Air Force expenditure would likewise be increased from $138 million to $169 million to cover the costs of manufacture of the F-86A fighter aircraft and the CF-100 all-weather fighters, as well as radar equipment.

[Mr. Claxton.]

The expenditure for the army is being decreased from $135 million to $130 million because of the urgent requirements of the other two services for equipment. The provision of major items of new equipment for the army is being deferred in view of the relatively large present holdings of fighting equipment of this service.

The increase in administration is largely due to the increased activities of the inspection services to enable them to take care of the increasing flow of new equipment.

In 1948, 12 per cent of the total appropriation was spent on equipment; in 1949, 24 per cent and in the coming year it will be 28 per cent. This trend reflects both the increasing cost of fighting machines and the importance which is attached to having up-to-date weapons in the hands of our services. It is, I am sure hon. members will agree, a desirable and proper approach.

For the convenience of hon. members I have had a chart prepared comparing the allocation of the defence dollar by services and also by requirements for each of the years 1948-1949, 1949-1950 and 1950-51, which, if the house will consent, I shall be glad to put on record.

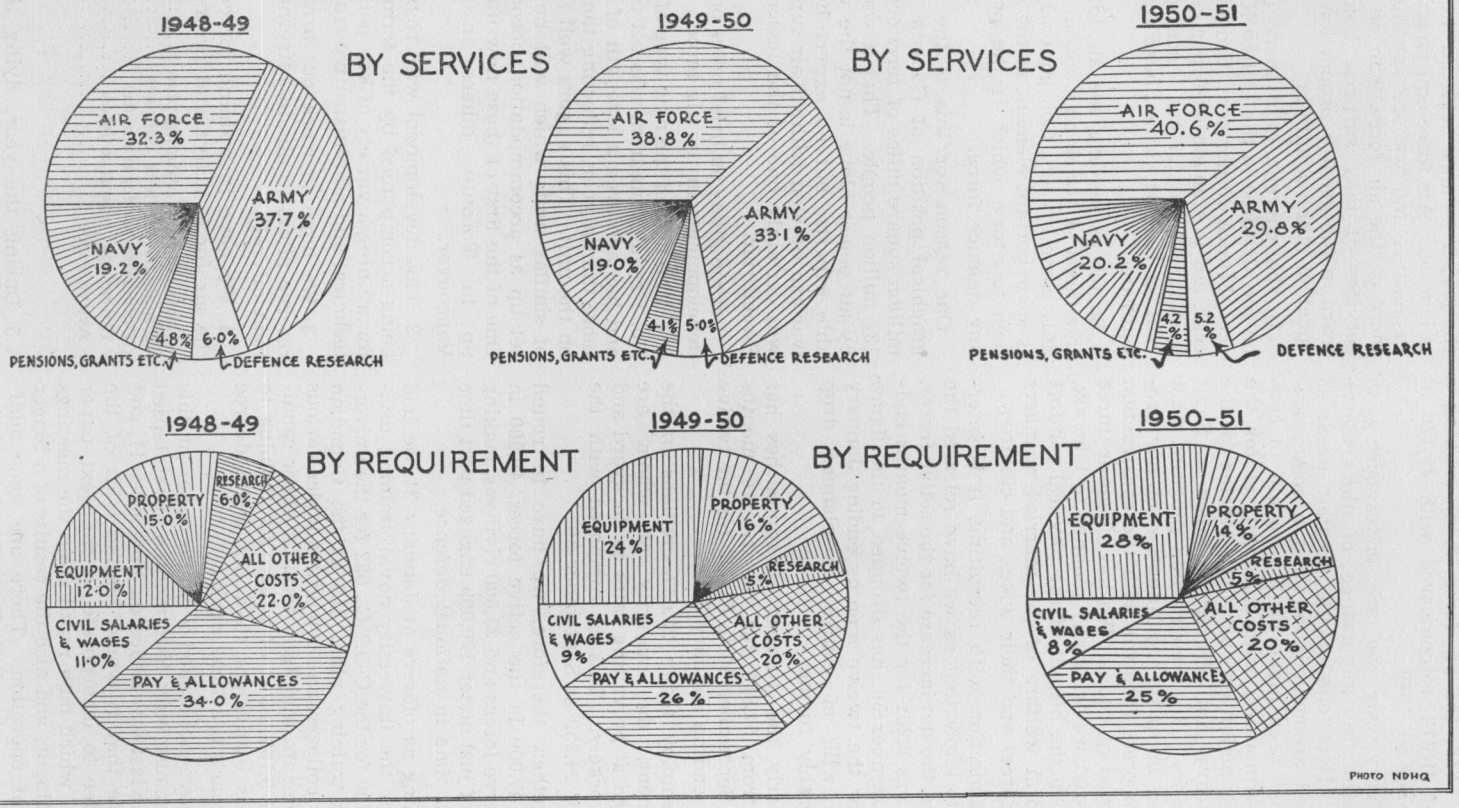
As at January 31, 1950, the total strength of the three services—that is, the active force—was 47,163 officers and men, representing 93 per cent of the present establishment and an increase of 2,004 over the figure for September 30, 1949, given in paragraph 93 of the white paper.



At January 31 the strength of the navy was 9,322, which is over its establishment of 9,047. We are continuing recruiting for the navy to replace normal retirements and discharges, and also to increase the establishment, probably to 9,600.

The strength of the army today is 20,601, and of the air force 17,240. In addition to the replacement of those retiring or discharged in the normal course, we shall be continuing to take on a limited number of single men between the ages of seventeen and twenty-five who have good education and can pass the physical requirements.

The number of men desiring to retire from the armed services at the termination of their engagements or leaving for other reasons is very much smaller than anticipated and planned for. Accordingly we expect to have a waiting list for all three services within a matter of months.

For the reserve forces the figures have continued to improve. As at January 31, 1950, the navy had a strength of 3,555; the army 41,855; the air force, 3,467, making a total of 48,877 as compared with 45,126 at September 30, 1949.

In every way we are endeavouring to emphasize the importance of the reserve forces. Here one of the greatest needs is increased accommodation, and a commencement has been made on a program to construct armouries, with the contract for the first new major armoury to be erected for the 49th Heavy Anti-aircraft regiment at Sault Ste. Marie. This construction program must be fitted in to the continuation of our program to press forward with the construction of married quarters. We have done in three years what we originally planned to take six, greatly to the benefit of the physical comfort and moral welfare of the married members of the forces and their wives and children.

In connection with recruiting, it is interesting to know that as we have released the pressure, the net increase for the active forces, which was 8,261 for the twelve months ending September 30, has dropped to the figure 7,346 for the twelve months ending January 31. It will, of course, as planned drop considerably further.

Similarly the number of approaches has fallen from 54,814 for the twelve months ending September 30 to 53,092 for the twelve months ending January 31.

We employ today 23,087 civilians in the department, the majority of whom are employed at prevailing rates as dockyard and shop workers. This is compared with the figure of 24,359 at September 30.

Altogether, therefore, we have in round figures 47,000 in the active forces, 49,000 in the reserve forces and 23,000 civilians, making a total of just under 120,000 engaged part time and full time in national defence.

Training as officers at January 31 we had 1,403 for the university naval training division, 2,700 for the C.O.T.C., 632 for the university air training plan, 319 at the Canadian services colleges, and 606 others under various arrangements, making a total of officer candidates of 5,760, most of whom are training to standards equivalent to a university degree and a year's practical work.

We have not issued a white paper at this time, because only four months have elapsed since the last was issued on November 11, and I believe that it would be the wish of the committee to incorporate in the next paper material which may result from the meetings at The Hague, and also the results of a longer period of operation. There are some additional matters to which I should now refer.

We are continuing to place great emphasis on the air force, but not to the point where the proper balance between the three services is ignored. Air force equipment is immensely expensive, and we are spending very much more on the air force than on the other two services—it may surprise hon. members to learn, a far greater proportion than is being spent in other countries.

In the current year there is being spent on the air force in the United Kingdom 29 per cent, France 30 per cent, United States 34 per cent, but in Canada 42·6 per cent. This proportion will be further increased to 44·8 per cent for 1950-51, if the house votes the present estimates.

So far as we can see ahead, if there is a likelihood of attack on Canada, it would probably come by air. Consequently the air force is an important element in the defence of our own territory, which is the primary task of any defence force.

One reason for this is the size and geographical position of Canada. We have 3½ million square miles of territory, occupied by 13½ million people. That a war can be won by air power alone is not the view of reputable experts; but no expert believes that a war can be won without air supremacy. This was certainly one of the lessons of Exercise Sweetbriar.

Let me give you brief notes on some further developments in the air force.

1. The first of the new type of reserve units, No. 1 radar squadron, was set up in Montreal and has achieved a strength of 450 in a little more than a year, reflecting the utmost credit on the unit. This augurs well for the success of similar units which will be progressively set up as accommodation becomes available. One of the first of these new units will be set up in Toronto, others in Halifax and Vancouver.

2. This development with regard to radar is being accompanied by the formation of units for training a variety of key personnel in both technical and administrative trades.

3. We hope to work out arrangements for reserve pilots to obtain refresher training on light aircraft.

4. We have in training for commissions in the air force, active and reserve—

University air training plan	632
Canadian services colleges	94
University undergraduates	79
University postgraduates	1
Active force	324
	1,130

5. During the year, flying time increased by 60 per cent, the number of hours flown per man on strength compared closely with the U.S.A.F.; we had the first wings parade of university flights; and the ceremony at Trenton demonstrated fine organization and training as well as the fact that the R.C.A.F. stood as high as ever in the eyes of our country and of other nations.

6. We have in the R.C.A.F. two interceptor squadrons in operation, and the equivalent of seven other squadrons of one kind or another.

7. We shall continue steady development until we shall have at least five interceptor squadrons and the equivalent of about six other active squadrons immediately ready for action, the fighters being equipped with the latest type aircraft. In addition, we have ten squadrons of auxiliary, with another soon to be activated. Several of the auxiliary squadrons, by their excellent performance in various exercises have shown well-advanced preparedness.

Another service which has shown a substantial increase in the appropriation is the navy. As I have indicated, this is largely to meet the costs of the new ships which will be under construction this year.

In the R.C.N. we shall have in commission on the west coast the cruiser Ontario; the destroyers Athabaskan, Cayuga and Sioux; the frigate Antigonish; the Algerine escort vessels Rockcliffe and Sault Ste. Marie; the auxiliary vessel Cedarwood; and the patrol craft 724.

On the east coast we will have the aircraft carrier Magnificent; the destroyers Micmac, Huron and Haida; the weather ship St. Stephen; the frigate Swansea; the Algerine minesweeping vessel Portage; and the motor minesweeper Llewellyn.

In addition, six training vessels will be in commission on the great lakes during the summer.

Of the destroyers, Cayuga, Sioux, Micmac and Huron have been recently commissioned following extensive refit to improve their capabilities as anti-submarine vessels. Similar refit will be completed shortly on Athabaskan.

In addition to the above improvements, many changes in accommodation, including introduction of cafeteria messing and separate dining and sleeping quarters, have been carried out in Sioux and Athabaskan. This is the first time that either Canadian or British destroyers have had this improved accommodation.

Effective training is being given to the officers and men in the twenty-one divisions of the R.C.N. reserve. In accordance with the Mainguy report, courses for officer cadets are now all being put on the same four-year basis in the Canadian services colleges.

During the last few months the navy has had a number of useful exercises with United States and other forces.

Everything that we are doing in the navy is directed to meet its clear and unmistakable role to protect our coastal waters and trading routes against mine and submarine attack.

The role of the army is equally clear. It is to provide the forces necessary to meet an immediate attack on our country any time and any place. To do this we have organized a brigade group, a highly mobile, hard-hitting unit. More than half of this group consists today of well-trained, experienced, tough soldiers. The remainder are undergoing training of various types from recruit training to the more complex unit training. While the proportion of fully trained troops will increase, there will always be some in the brigade group who have just joined. No unit is ever fully trained, because its personnel is never static and officers and men are taking courses of various kinds virtually until the day of their retirement.

In addition to seeing to the immediate defence of our own territory, our forces must act as the organizational and training nucleus for the development of the largest forces we can develop to play our part where they may be needed. A large part of the personnel of the army—all the reserve units and a very large portion, certainly more than two-thirds of the active forces—are concerned with this side of the job.

Defence research activities have been carried on on an increased scale, maintaining close co-operation with research activities in other countries and with other research activities in Canada.

In civil defence we have completed the stage of planning at the federal level. Civil defence depends on close co-operation with the provinces, the municipalities and other agencies at every level. Following earlier preliminary discussions we are now in a position to make further progress.

Our over-all plan we believe meets the strategical needs of Canada and makes the best use of the resources available.

The factors involved in the speed of development of our maximum potential are organizational staff, trained officers, qualified tradesmen, equipment, accommodation, and, finally, trained personnel. Any plan which involved the immediate full-time employment of many more men would not be the best way to use the money made available.

What I have said with regard to the development of the forces in being to the maximum potential applies to the navy and the air force as well as the army. In the case of these forces, however, the largest controlling factor determining the speed of development is the supply of equipment, particularly ships and aircraft. By the time we could build any ship or any aircraft, we could recruit and train the crew. You will see, from what I have said, the reason for our emphasis in our program on the building of ships and aircraft.

This question of equipment is extremely important, particularly in view of the close relations between the United States and Canada.

The integration of industrial capacity under the Hyde Park declaration helped to win the war. A similar arrangement is in the interest of both the United States and Canada in peacetime. The continuation of the general principles of the Hyde Park declaration was accepted in an exchange of notes in May, 1945, and the joint declaration of February 12, 1947. I may say that our friendly discussions with members of the administration in the United States and with their highest service officials show that they hold the same view as we do. It makes sense for Canada and the United States to co-operate industrially and economically with relation to defence as well as in training and command and battle practices.

Unfortunately there are statutory obstacles in the United States which make it difficult for us to purchase military equipment there and make it even more difficult for them to purchase military equipment in Canada. But in consequence of discussions I am glad to say that, pending a more satisfactory permanent solution, temporary arrangements have been worked out which permit purchasing of some equipment in the United States, but there is still the problem of finding the United States dollars.

We think it is in the best interest of collective defence to have diversified sources of production. We can make many types of things just as well as United States manufacturers and, given reasonable markets, often more cheaply. There are some things which it is not in the interest of Canada to make at all, for example, tanks, heavy motor vehicles, large calibre guns. It is not in the interests of Canada to make these things provided that there is an adequate and fair amount of specialization. On the other hand, we think there is great merit in Canada specializing in the production of certain items, which it cannot do if dependent on domestic consumption for outlet.

In these circumstances we believe the sensible thing for both countries would be to work out an arrangement whereby certain items of United States military equipment are bought in Canada in order to maintain defence productive capacity here, and in order to permit of specialization in production.

[Mr. Claxton.]

What I suggest now is the effective revival of the Hyde Park agreement for the integration of North American defence industry.

Mr. Graydon: Does that require legislation in the United States congress?

Mr. Claxton: Unquestionably. I suggest this as the kind of way in which we should and could work together.

In conclusion, may I say that our defence forces are in better shape than ever before in the peacetime history of our country. We are employing the defence dollar in the best way we know how, to make suitable provisions for construction, equipment and personnel. In respect of organization, officer training, integration of defence research, our forces are second to none and our plans have been well laid to put us in the lead with regard to the two special weapons we need, long-range fighter aircraft and anti-submarine vessels.

I am glad to say that during the time I have held this job I have had nothing but the most complete and loyal support from all heads of services and from officers and men of the armed forces. It has been a pleasure to serve in this department. It has been a privilege to have been associated with the officers and men of the armed forces of our country. They are grand people, and it is a pleasure to work with them for the defence and security of Canada.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of National Defence for the kind invitation that he extended to me and other members of the house to observe the flight of the CF-100 jet fighter a week ago tomorrow. We had the opportunity of driving out to Rockcliffe airport and there seeing a machine of which we can most certainly be extremely proud. I hope that the minister will give us a further opportunity of seeing this fighter when it has its new engines and its full armament. It is a little difficult to judge the full capabilities of an aircraft when it is not loaded as it would be for action.

Then I should like to take this opportunity of thanking the minister for his graphic description of Exercise Sweetbriar. We have read accounts in the press of both Canada and the United States of the progress made during that exercise; and I feel quite certain we all share the pride the minister has expressed in the achievements of the Canadian and the United States troops who took part. No doubt we all have personal friends who were on that exercise and who have confirmed the report given by the minister today as to the magnificent physique and grand spirit of our troops, and their determination to do in peacetime, to the very best of their abilities, the job of preparing for war; not for a war of aggression, but for war in defence of their own country. I could not help smiling a little when the minister expressed regret that members of parliament had not seen the troops taking part in that exercise. I may assure him that the only reason I did not do so was that no such invitation was extended to me.

In listening to the minister's statement I could not help feeling that it was more in the nature of an annual report than a presentation of estimates, explaining why Canada was expending a very large sum of money, and breaking down that expenditure to give us information as to how this money was to be distributed as among the various services. Naturally we are pleased to hear an annual report on the activities of the department for the past quarter, but at the same time I do think hon. members, who are here charged with the responsibility of looking into these expenditures and safeguarding the money of the taxpayers, would have liked a great deal more information as to how that money was going to be spent in the coming year, instead of a general description of the activities of the defence forces in the past year.

Before proceeding to a discussion of the estimates for this year I too should like to refer briefly to what has happened in the past. The minister has had the opportunity of giving credit with respect to some of the achievements of the officers and men of our three services, and today I should like to take this chance to offer my congratulations also on the magnificent work they have done. Within the last few weeks we saw the men of our services perform actions in the highest traditions of those services. My mind goes back to the unfortunate accident which occurred a few weeks ago, when it was necessary for the destroyer Cayuga to go to a remote island off the Pacific coast and, in severe weather and over most difficult terrain, rescue their comrades—of another country, but still comrades—who had been taking part in the exercises in the north, and who had the misfortune to become lost over the Pacific. Also during the past year on numerous occasions the rescue squads of the R.C.A.F. have done really excellent work in the mountains of British Columbia, in the far north, and at various other points, and I think they should also receive praise. I know that on every opportunity the minister has sent his congratulations, and now I want to add mine. Naturally I felt elated when I heard of the progress made by my old regiment, the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, and I was delighted with the minister's glowing reports in that regard.

Generally speaking, all through both the active and the reserve forces there is the keenest possible spirit and a willingness to do rather more than a day's work. As far as the reserve forces are concerned, they are still ready to devote a good deal of their spare time, both in the evenings and during their annual holidays, to the work of their units, a tradition which has been handed down for many years and which the reserve divisions of the navy, the reserve army and the auxiliary squadrons of the air force are living up to so well. If in the course of my remarks I should appear to offer some criticism and some suggestions as to the conduct of the department I should like it understood that I am in no way criticizing the endeavours of individuals from the minister right down to the newest recruit. I offer suggestions and perhaps criticisms only because I believe we have the best type of fighting men the world can produce, and I am anxious to see that they are given the best possible arms and equipment so that should they ever be called upon to defend our lives, in the defence of this country, they will have at least a fighting chance.

At the beginning of the minister's review he told us of the meetings that had taken place at Paris and described in rather general terms the progress made. I cannot help feeling that we are left without any idea as to what definite commitments this country has been assigned. In fact, the minister almost went so far as to say that we had no detailed commitments in so far as the North Atlantic treaty was concerned. I believe the people of Canada expected that the minister would come back with something more definite, something which would be encouraging to the people and to the services. The services would then know that they had a definite role into which they were to fit in the general over-all defence of the north Atlantic area, and of the world.

I felt more encouraged by the remarks which were made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) when he was speaking on this same item on a motion to go into supply. He was referring to the North Atlantic treaty, and he said, as recorded at page 429 of Hansard:

> We are getting down to the detailed problems of working out an effective system of collective defence for the north Atlantic region.

I think perhaps we should have had a firmer, more definite statement from the Minister of National Defence.

Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs went on to say:

> As planning for military production and supply under the north Atlantic organization gets under way—and it is now under way—account should of course be taken of the needs of specialization in production and of the availability of productive capacity in all the north Atlantic nations. Means must also be found for overcoming existing difficulties which impede the transfer of equipment and supplies among the north Atlantic nations so as to permit the maximum use of their productive capacities. Solution of these difficulties is necessary if full advantage is to be taken, for instance, of Canada's present and potential productive capacity by the north Atlantic countries.

I had hoped that the Minister of National Defence would be able to tell us that some of the difficulties regarding the transfer of purchases of military stores and equipment from the United States had been ironed out, and that it had been possible to reach an agreement whereby Canada could now purchase large quantities from the United States; and would also be able to specialize, in her own industry, in certain types of equipment which the United States would have been able to purchase from us. However, I did not conclude from the remarks the minister made that any such agreement had been reached.

If I drew any conclusions from the description of the commitments to which Canada might possibly have agreed, it would seem to me that the emphasis is being laid now upon the defence of our own country, as being a major contribution towards the North Atlantic treaty. If so, I feel, with some modesty, forced to call the minister's attention to the fact that that is a side of our defence policy which I have emphasized in this house for a number of years. Moreover, from statements which have been made by senior officers, who may or may not have been at the Paris conference, it would seem that there is a change in policy in so far as our defence forces are concerned. The minister did not refer to it any more than by a general statement, that the defence of our own country would be a contribution to the North Atlantic treaty. I have not quoted his exact words, but I think that was the intent of what he said.

Senior officers have apparently given to the press statements which would indicate that, since the beginning of the year, there has been a change in the emphasis. I quote from a Canadian Press dispatch which, I believe, reported statements by Air Marshal Curtis:

Canada will assume a relatively big air-fighter role in continental and Atlantic defence plans.

That is just one statement. Then, the same chief of air staff reported that last year marked a turning point in the post-war progress of the R.C.A.F. He is reported as having said that our original concept was a force consisting primarily of a nucleus body, able to expand rapidly in the event of war. We now see, in the light of the changed world situation, that we must go further than that. The R.C.A.F. must be brought to a point where it is able to bring into immediate action those forces required for the initial defence of Canada. I should imagine that these statements were in line with the remarks of the minister this afternoon, and that they are following out the general policy. I must say that the statements by Air Marshal Curtis are much clearer, and more definite, than the statements which were made by the minister today.

During the discussion of the estimates last year, I spent some considerable time in pointing out how I felt the emphasis must be placed upon the role the Canadian air force must play, as the prime arm which would, and could, only be the principal factor in the defence of our limitless northern territory. I was interested in hearing the remarks the minister made concerning the lessons which he drew from the Sweetbriar exercise. He suggested that air support would be necessary in any Arctic operations—I believe he said air superiority—and that such operations could only be carried out as a leap-frogging process from one established airport to another. I suggest that the only way in which we could meet such a contingency would be to have an air force in being, an air force that would be ready upon short notice to engage an enemy who might be tempted to raid our northern territory.

If, as has been suggested by high air force officers, the emphasis is now being placed upon the operational side rather than the nucleus expanding-type policy, then I think it is all to the advantage. I feel that the minister has no doubt been studying the book written by Dr. Bush, to which he referred a few days ago, and he drew the same conclusions as Dr. Bush has drawn in his volume "Modern Arms and Free Men", namely, that the pendulum now is swinging in favour of defensive operations as against those of an offensive nature. Dr. Bush, of course, does stress the point that, in order to have an effective defence, there must be an air force in being, one able to take the air at short notice. I should like to put on the record just a few paragraphs from Dr. Bush's volume, in which he is writing largely about the atomic bomb. I quote from page 43 of his book. May I say that I think this is encouraging. I think this is heartening to the members of this committee and to the nation as a whole, that they should hear what a recognized authority has to say on this matter. He says:

But the spectre of great fleets of bombers, substantially immune to methods of defence, destroying great cities at will by atomic bombs is a spectre only. There is a defence against the atomic bomb. It is the same sort of defence used against any other type of bomb.

We have had too many alarmist statements made across the country that there is no defence to the atomic bomb. It is interesting to hear what the leading military scientist, of this continent anyway, has to say on that matter. He then goes on to say—and here is a warning that we should well heed:

. . . at any time against a poorly prepared enemy, the modern bomber at very high altitude can proceed with comparative immunity, even though it has a serious problem in hitting anything precisely from its position eight or ten miles up. Against a fully-prepared enemy, with plenty of early warning, interception radar on ground and in the air, and the best of jet pursuit ships, it would appear still to be vulnerable.

Then he goes on to say that the defending pursuit ships have all the advantage of ground radar, in early warning sets and sets for ground control interception, while the bombers and fighters accompanying the attacking force have at their disposal only airborne radar of very limited range. Then he says that into that picture there is also introduced the high-speed, guided missile which is about to enter the field on the side of the defence. I should like to give one more quotation:

The jet was adaptable to the plane of short duration and very high speed, namely, the defensive interceptor of bombers, and it was not adaptable nearly so well to the accompanying fighter, which had to fly distances comparable to those of the bomber. There is a fundamental factor here that favours the defence, namely that the short-duration defensive aircraft must be expected to outperform the fighter that has the burden of a long accompanying flight.

I think those statements are distinctly heartening. I want to call attention, however, to that warning, that we must have a defence force prepared if we are going to take the advantages which now seem to be swinging to the defence.

That leads me to suggest that there should be a careful examination of the policy now being carried out with respect to the provision of our jet interceptor fighters. In the white paper tabled at the end of the last session of parliament there is an item for $30 million for the purchase of, I think, one hundred F-86's. This afternoon the minister referred to the equipping of the fighter squadrons with this aircraft. I believe that certain purchases of that aircraft have already been made—and I would ask the minister to confirm this fact; I have seen it reported in the press—to the extent of something in the neighbourhood of thirty, according to the press dispatches I saw. The decision which has been made to equip our fighter forces with that particular aircraft I cannot regard with anything but the greatest concern. Even a most casual reading of such volumes as Jane's All the World's Aircraft, and Flight and Aviation Week, reveals the fact that the F-86, which is referred to as the Sabre type, has a performance far inferior to the performance of the new bombers and fighters with which it might have to compete. In fact, a study of the various publications which deal with aircraft design and development reveals what I think you can only describe as rather alarming shortcomings of that particular aircraft for the peculiar conditions under which it must be produced and under which it must operate in Canada. I am tempted to ask whether the strategic, technical and economic factors concerning the F-86 have not been overridden by political considerations. With regard to the equipping of our fighter squadrons with this particular aircraft, we appear to have abandoned the United Kingdom types of jet fighter in order to obtain the United States types. Has this decision been motivated with the idea that the United States might unload upon us certain surpluses?

So far as I can make out from the study I have given to this matter, the F-86 does not measure up to the Canadian requirements, because of its sluggish climbing performance, which makes it unsuitable for bomber interception, while its high fuel consumption seriously restricts its range. Its sluggish climbing performance is due to the heavy wing loading and the inferior performance of its J-47 engines at high altitudes.

The Vampire types, even the older types of Vampires, have a climbing performance considerably better than the climbing performance of the F-86. I know it is reported to be the speediest aircraft in the world. It is a racing type of aircraft, a racer. But speed is not everything in interceptor work. Maximum rate of climb, operational ceiling and manoeuvrability are the paramount factors required in an interceptor.

The proposed production program, which I understand, according to press reports, will see the F-86 coming into production either at the end of this year or in 1951, raises serious doubts in my mind as to whether it will not be an obsolescent machine before it comes off the line. These doubts are reinforced by the decision which I understand has been taken in the United States in which orders for an improved type of Sabre, the F-93, have been cancelled. Doubts have been expressed in leading aviation papers in the United States that the F-86 will ever become a practical interceptor. I do suggest that money could have been saved to this country if the R.C.A.F. had continued to use the improved Vampire types during the interim until our own CF-100 becomes generally available, which I gather, from the remarks made by the minister this afternoon, will be toward next year.

That is, our CF-100 is an all-weather two-seater jet made by the A. V. Roe Company Limited of Malton, Ontario. As has been said repeatedly, it is a magnificent machine. Are we wise in scrapping the Vampire type of aircraft at this stage in order to take an American aircraft which does not have many of the excellent qualities of the more modern types of Vampires? Would it not have been better for us to have continued with that British type of aircraft rather than to have made the change at this stage?

The newer types of Vampire, such as the Vampire-6, have a climbing capacity up to 40,000 feet in some 14½ minutes, whereas the F-86 requires somewhere in the neighbourhood of 26 minutes to reach that height; and from the standpoint of manoeuvrability and stability at high altitudes the Vampire is without a peer. More recent developments of the Vampire type, such as the Venom interceptor, have even greater speeds and climbing ability. I saw a report in the newspaper that the Meteor-8 could climb to a height of 40,000 feet in four minutes.

The Vampire fighter has already been adopted by twelve countries connected with the North Atlantic security treaty. These include France, Sweden, Norway, Australia, South Africa, India and, of course, the United Kingdom. It is reported as having been adopted as the standard ground-support fighter for all western union nations. Thus, one basic design of Vampire type provides the interceptor, the ground support, the night fighter, and the naval version as in the Sea Vampire. Thus can supply and servicing be standardized.

The Canadian aircraft industry has shown itself quite capable of producing all types. It could have continued to produce the Vampire types just as well as it could have ventured into the development of the Sabre type. The manufacture of Vampires I am sure could be arranged in Canada, in exactly the same way as it is being arranged in Australia and France.

If we had pursued the course upon which we first started, then we might have seen that by now we could have even replaced the old propeller-driven Furies of H.M.C.S. Magnificent with, shall we say, Sea Vampires.

From the servicing point of view the introduction of the F-86 will necessitate the setting up of stockpiles of a whole range of spare parts, and the establishment of new maintenance procedures—and this in addition to such stores as I believe are fairly extensive, and such servicing arrangements as now exist which have been provided for the original Vampires of the R.C.A.F.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

From the point of view of cost it seems to me that the dice are heavily loaded against the F-86. We are told that something over $30 million was required for the purchase of the hundred F-86 machines for Canada. That works out at about $300,000 for the frames—because, according to the white paper, the armament, engines and the like, are in addition to that.

I ask the minister to tell us before this debate is concluded how much Canada will have to put up in United States dollars, free of Canadian income tax, in the payment of royalties to this North American company for the privilege of constructing these aircraft here. It seems to me that when an opportunity is offered to deal with a country of the British commonwealth and to obtain a type of aircraft whose performance has been proved to be superior to that of the type we are obtaining from the United States, if advantage is not taken then we are simply paying lip service to the expressed desire of fostering commonwealth relations and saving United States dollars.

I understand that Vampire frames can be obtained from the United Kingdom at about one-third of the cost of the F-86 frame. If that is so, would it not be advisable to have three Vampires for each F-86 that we have? Viewed from every conceivable standpoint, technical, strategical and economical, the only conclusion that can be reached is that a mistake, if not a serious blunder, was committed when we selected the F-86 as our interceptor fighter. It would be well if that fact was recognized and I hope that action can yet be taken to remedy what I feel is a grievous mistake. I hope the minister will be able to explain in detail what was involved in the decision reached to go into F-86's.

There seems to be a change in Canadian naval policy from the nucleus idea to having a navy which must be prepared to meet the menace of hostile submarines. I could not agree more with the minister when he says that our principal naval objective must be the protection of our coasts against mines which may be laid and against submarines. Undoubtedly that is modern naval thinking. I notice in today's paper that Vice-Admiral John H. Cassady, deputy chief of naval operations of the United States, told a committee of the House of Representatives:

> The threat of enemy submarines affects all of our programs and gives rise generally to the most urgent requirements which must be covered by our 1951 estimates.

The statement made by the minister did not indicate clearly the progress being made with the construction of the three anti-submarine escort vessels. I feel that every effort should be made to press forward with the construction of that type of craft. It is a Canadian type that is designed to meet our own particular requirements. It is a novel type of vessel and one suitable to the task it is being given to do, the hunting of the modern submarine. In my opinion we cannot press on too fast with this construction work.

Another indication has been given of a change in naval policy in the division of our Canadian vessels into operational and training fleets. I regret that we have not been able to produce a second aircraft carrier to operate with the anti-submarine escorts which I hope will be on the Pacific as well as the Atlantic coast. I hope the minister will be able to clear up the question of whether we are not spending too much money on the maintenance of obsolete vessels which are now in reserve or even in the operational and training fleets and which are of little value in modern sea war. Surely frigates are out of the picture as far as operational vessels are concerned. They cannot be classified as a submarine-hunting vessel.

Referring to the remarks by the minister in connection with the army, I do not see that the same policy is being carried out in so far as the army estimates are concerned. The estimates reveal that there is something like a $2 million reduction in the appropriations for the active army. I should think that one of the lessons of Sweetbriar was that we must concentrate on the mobile brigade group and that greater emphasis should be given to the active army so that it will be prepared to meet any diversionary raids which may threaten our shores. On the other hand, there is an increase in the amount allotted to the reserves. One can only draw the conclusion that there still remains greater emphasis on the nucleus or expansionist policy.

Referring to what we have heard about Sweetbriar and the description of the airlift, I think in fairness the minister should have pointed out that the type of aircraft which transported the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry was not really adaptable to modern conditions and the dropping of parachute troops in hostile countries. It is all very well to say it was a grand airlift, but the Dakota must be ruled out as an aircraft for the transportation of troops. Unless you have a vast air superiority the carrying of key airborne troops in a Dakota is much like putting sailors into a wooden vessel.

If the initiative has been taken by the aggressor then we cannot count upon air superiority. I note also—and this surprises me, considering the importance of the north—that reductions have been made in the estimates for the maintenance of the radio system in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I am sure that reductions can be made in army expenditures. I am sure that if the department carefully scrutinizes the figures and takes stern action considerable reductions can be made in the amount of money which is expended on our defence establishments. By that I mean camps and barracks which are scattered all over the country. Surely by more concentration a great deal of the overhead might be cut down. In every province of the dominion there are small detachments of troops, air force, navy and army, and I cannot help thinking that a great deal of money could be saved if there was more concentration and we limited the overhead.

Then of course we only have to look at national defence headquarters in Ottawa. The Mainguy report suggested that many of the positions held at headquarters by naval officers might be filled by experienced civil servants. Nevertheless we find that during January of this year—and these are the latest figures I have been able to secure—there were almost 3,000 officers and men employed at headquarters, and in addition to that another 3,000 civilians employed at national defence headquarters. I know it is quite easy to talk about reducing staffs, and I know it is difficult to do so. From personal experience I know that it is difficult to make officers dispense with clerks, and senior officers dispense with staff officers, but I believe there is room for reductions there.

I am alarmed to see that, instead of any reduction being made, the amount of money allocated for departmental administration has increased by $1,200,000.

Mr. Goode: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pearkes: Certainly.

Mr. Goode: The hon. member for Nanaimo, with all his experience, has complained that the department is spending too much money by decentralizing the quarters for troops. I am not too sure that he means that, because from my experience with the army I know that is one of our principles so far as present-day warfare is concerned. I am not sure whether he expects the department to have headquarters in two places in Canada where they would be susceptible to air attack.

Mr. Pearkes: I could go into a long discussion as to the advisability of concentration or dispersal, but I am talking about the small detachments that are maintained across Canada. They would not all be in danger of immediate attack. So far as the estimates are concerned, I have not had the benefit of the chart which the minister has tabled, but I am forced to say that I find they are being presented in a most complicated form. It is difficult to tell just how much will be distributed among the various services. As I understand, the total commitments the house is being asked to pass amount to something over $623 million, of which it is estimated $425 million is to be spent this year. There are rather broad headings under which that amount is to be expended. Another $144 million is allocated to be spent in future years and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, there is no indication in the blue book how that amount is going to be distributed among the various services, or for what purposes it is to be spent. Obviously it is for commitments that have been made for escort vessels and aircraft which must be provided for in the future, but I hope the minister will be able to indicate, before this debate is over, the general distribution of that amount of money among the various services and research.

Then there is another $55 million which I feel is rather in the nature of a blank cheque given to the minister to meet any unforeseen commitments which may possibly arise during the coming year. It seems to me that must be a most comfortable floating reserve for the minister to have. I cannot help thinking that we should have a detailed explanation as to why that amount is necessary.

The great bulk of the estimates is assembled under one item with a new heading, "defence forces". Last year and the year before similar items were grouped together under the heading, "demobilization and reconversion." I do not know whether demobilization has been completed, but I do not think it has been because there are still outstanding claims. I do not quite know where those will be placed. I have some questions to ask as to the amount of money actually allocated to what you might call the combat units of our defence forces. No doubt the chart which the minister has provided will assist us in ferreting out that information. I use the word "ferreting" because I think hon. members will agree that very little information has been given to the committee today about how the money is going to be spent in the future. Many times in the house I have said that it is almost impossible, within the limited time available, for the committee of supply to really secure the necessary information. I feel that it will take a very long time if we are to have a detailed examination and analysis of these defence expenditures. However, it is the wish of the house that the matter be dealt with in committee of the whole. We suggested a special committee to examine these estimates, but the house did not agree, so I shall have to ask hon. members to be patient as we ask questions concerning these estimates.

There is such a wide range of subjects even under this one item to which I just referred that I think it will illustrate how extremely difficult it is to carry on a connected discussion. For instance, here we have the pay and allowances of all three services. That has to do with the number of men in the services and the various types of training. Also under that same item come such questions as the Northwest Territories and Yukon radio system, the northwest highway system, the aerial photographic survey, the northwest staging route, the cadet services, and even the imperial war graves. So you might have one question with respect to the establishment of some particular unit; then another member of the committee might ask something about the progress of the construction work on the Alaskan highway, while the next question might concern war graves and war memorials. I do suggest that it is practically impossible, and we have found it impossible in the past, to make a careful analysis of these estimates.

The other day the minister was kind enough to tell the house how these estimates had been brought down in the past; and in giving the dates on which his estimates had been presented in recent years he said "terminal pressure" had not been applied. By that I gathered he meant that the rush at the end of the session had not commenced when his estimates were presented. He said that in 1947 his estimates were brought down on July 9 and 10. I looked to see when the house prorogued that year, and found that the session concluded on July 17, just one week after his estimates were brought down. I well remember that at that time we were sitting morning, afternoon, and evening, and Saturday as well. Then he said that in 1948 his estimates were brought down on June 24 and 25. That year the house prorogued five days later, on June 30; and again we were sitting morning, afternoon and evening. Last year it was a bit better. His estimates were brought down on November 11, 18 and 24, and the house did not prorogue until December 10; but I well recall that the session continued for many days after the original target date for prorogation. So if the minister wants to be at all fair he must admit that at the time his estimates were brought down there was some justifiable anxiety on the part of members of this house about when they might return to their constituencies.

I do not think the minister's arguments against the setting up of a committee were well founded. As far as I could see there was no attempt to change the constitutional system. There was merely a request on my part and on the part of other hon. members that we be given an opportunity to carry out our duties in connection with the examination of these estimates, at a time when they are increasing so greatly and when such changes are taking place. It was a request that we be permitted to perform our duty without the rush and without the feeling that we were delaying other hon. members.

Because of our system of presenting estimates here, hon. members are groping in the dark as they seek such information as may be fed to them from time to time. The minister asks us to have faith in his infallibility; that the estimates have received careful consideration by the officers of his department; and that he is doing his best in the allocation of such money as he is given to promote the welfare of all the services. I believe he is, but I do not believe he is infallible. I believe the officers on his staff are doing their best; I have every confidence in their integrity, but I have no confidence in their infallibility.

Finally, the difficulty we as members experience is undoubtedly felt by others who have to do with defence matters. I have here a report concerning Major General G. B. Howard, general manager of the Canadian industrial preparedness association, who apparently made a tour across Canada recently with the idea of interviewing leaders of industry to see how industry could assist the Department of National Defence. The report states:

> Lack of information from the government on defence requirements and types of equipment likely to be manufactured for defence purposes is hampering the work of the Canadian industrial preparedness association.

He goes on to say:

> We should continue to press the government authorities for all possible information . . . What are we expected to do to assist in planning industrial defence? What are the requirements we are expected to meet; and what is our role?

Those are questions the general manager of this association is reported as asking. In view of the immense amount of work that must face the committee of the whole of this house, I am going to ask the minister once more if he will not consider referring these estimates to a committee which will be able to make the careful analysis which the importance of these estimates and the size of these expenditures require hon. members of this house to make.

Mr. Claxton: I did not want to interrupt the hon. member in his very constructive and helpful remarks by raising a point of order, but obviously it would be quite improper for this committee or this house to revert to a discussion of something already decided by the house this session. I should like to have that point noted, but I would, at the same time, like to thank the hon. member for his helpful and constructive speech.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): When the member for Nanaimo speaks on defence estimates, we listen to him with respect. Obviously, he has a great and detailed knowledge of the services. When he tells us that, in his opinion, there are savings which could be made in these estimates, I am inclined to agree with him. I believe, however, it will be rather difficult to ascertain just where those savings could be achieved this year. We are spending in the next twelve months the huge sum of $425 million for defence. None of us dispute the necessity for that defence, but when we realize that this figure is greater than the total ordinary expenditure on the Canadian budget in 1939, we also realize how drastic a change has taken place.

That $425 million is a lot of money. How is it going to be spent? We know that in the year 1948-49, $145 million was spent on construction, equipment, supplies and so on. A total of 65,308 contracts were let out. Obviously, this year there will be many more. Despite the denial, which I accept, made the other day in this house by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the now rather celebrated study group, I think there remains an unhappy feeling in the minds of many of us that there are some who would like to get their snouts into the patronage trough. I hope the minister will be firm, and will not permit patronage to be shown in this matter of contracts dealing with the Department of National Defence.

It has been said it is government policy to provide the forces estimated to be necessary to defend Canada. Today the minister qualified that somewhat, of course, because we in Canada cannot provide the forces requisite to defend ourselves. We might be able to do so were we to conscript every man, woman and child in the country, and were we to bankrupt ourselves with military expenditures. When the minister states that the defence of Canada is also the defence of the north Atlantic powers, he is right. Defence must be looked upon from that point of view. Yet, in his remarks, I detected what appeared to me to be an illogicality. He said that the best Canadian strength is the collective strength of the north Atlantic powers. There can be no argument against that; it has been said month after month during the past year. Yet, surely, collective strength implies that commitments have been made collectively to defend ourselves collectively; but earlier the minister stated we had made no specific commitment under the North Atlantic treaty. In that case,

I cannot see how we can say that we have any collective strength at all, if we are not prepared to make commitments to those who are our allies.

At this point, I should like to quote a sentence which appears on page 13 of the white paper issued last year. It reads as follows:

> There hardly remains an inhabited point on the map too remote to be directly affected.

That refers, of course, to the unhappy tragedy of a war.

> Such a conflict, while constituting man's greatest failure to live intelligently with his fellow-men, would also, paradoxically, necessitate a degree of co-operation previously unimagined, among those nations and individuals who value freedom.

Those words are profoundly true. But why do we have to wait until the calamity of a war is upon us before we learn that lesson? Why can we not do these things now, if they are going to add to our defence, as I am convinced they are? Why can we not achieve this degree of co-operation now?

In this document, at page 8, we are told:

> By pooling resources, the effect of the pact should be to reduce the total expenditures which each of the 12 countries would have found necessary for their security had there been no pact.

That also is very true. One would think then that, under a system of collective security, the national commitments for each nation would be cut down accordingly, because our strength would be the strength of the entire group. To have the sort of co-operation which is envisaged in the white paper when war comes, demands the surrender of certain powers to a supranational authority. I am more than willing to see that done now, rather than wait until a war comes upon us—if indeed one does come. If we wish to make the North Atlantic treaty a reality, then certain powers have to be surrendered to a supranational authority. The trend has to be towards the nucleus of an international army among those powers.

There are other questions which I should like to ask the minister, and to which he may reply later, concerning matters which were not touched upon by the member for Nanaimo. What is the industrial defence board doing now? Under the order in council which constituted it, it was asked to prepare, and keep up to date, a plan for industrial production in the event of war. I should like to know how far that plan has gone, and if the plan is being kept up to date. Then, the industrial defence board was asked to advise on the locations of industry. What sort of advice is it giving? Obviously, under the conditions which prevail in the world today, if there were to be a war, then decentralization of industry would be highly advisable. Are any plans being made for such decentralization?

The industrial defence board was asked to advise on the maintenance of reserve stocks. What is the situation with regard to our stockpiling of chrome, manganese, tin, and natural rubber? I do not ask that details be given to the house, but I think some total figure in terms of dollars might be given to us, so that we should have some appreciation at least of what is being done.

The Canadian Commercial Corporation apparently was asked to try to place shadow contracts with various industries throughout the country, to ascertain if requirements could be met in case of necessity. I should be interested in knowing if this has happened, and what the result has been of placing such shadow contracts. In a speech which the minister made about a year and a half ago now, I think to the Canadian Ordnance Association in Montreal, he commented upon the position of the steel industry in Canada. He emphasized the tremendous importance of steel to our economy. We still produce far less than our requirements. I should like to know if the government is preparing for the worst. Obviously, this department should be one which, while it hopes for the best, should nevertheless prepare for the worst. I would like to know what the policy of the department is with regard to this industry. If Canada is not producing sufficient steel for her needs, if she is dependent on other nations, might it not be advisable to carry out policies which would ensure the steel Canada needs? Would there be any better way of doing it—in fact it would be killing two birds with one stone—than by rehabilitating the maritimes by building an efficient steel industry down there? It could only be done by the government taking over that corporation which is known as Dosco.

There was another matter which was not referred to by the minister, the question of defence research. I imagine this is one of the most important departments under the minister. It is spending less money this year than it spent last year, although the supplementary estimates may increase the amount. Nevertheless here is a department which is surely a key to many of the things we want to find out; and we are justified in asking what sort of security clearance is used in this department. I think hon. members may know by now I am not one of those who are enthusiastic about security clearance, but I realize the necessity for it. I ask the question from the point of view of United States experience, where able and competent young scientists have volunteered their services to government bureaux only to find that the interminable delay of security clearance was such that they got fed up and, instead of working for the country, devoted their talents elsewhere. Are we short of skilled and trained staff in the defence research department? Have we all the men we need? Are we giving those who are there the opportunity of productive work?

I think the most important point I want to make, and one which I think the minister should answer because there may be an answer to it, is this apparent illogicality of his, as I call it, where he talks about the best guarantee of strength being collective security, and then states that we have made no specific commitments under the treaty. I do not think that Canadians would have any objections at all to specific commitments under the treaty; and we in parliament certainly would want to know what they are. Most certainly I am convinced that there can be no collective strength until we have given these specific commitments to those who shall be our allies.

Mr. Pouliot: I am glad the Minister of National Defence is here, Mr. Chairman. I should like to bring some facts before the committee. I have been interested in listening to what has been said by the minister, by the hon. member for Nanaimo and the other members who have spoken. I am not familiar with logistics, but I have received many letters from soldiers and men who want to get into the army, and I should like to explain their case.

Over the C.B.C. there is a program called "Comrades in Arms"; in French, it is "Tambour Battant", beating the drum. It is supposed to help recruiting, and it is wonderful. There are Mexican songs and tom-tom and all sorts of tunes that are supposed to invite young men in good health to join the colours; and it must be quite expensive. It has been running for some time. I do not listen to it regularly, but I hear it occasionally. There is always the same announcement at the beginning and at the end. There are no military marches and there is no military inspiration in the music that we hear. It is just fun, Viennese waltzes and other things. It is quite astonishing.

I have a case that I am going to mention to the minister. He must be familiar with it because we had some correspondence about it. I am unfolding some of the files to which I referred the other day on another matter. The case I refer to now is that of Romeo Santerre, who is a nice fellow, less than 25 years of age, with three years' service in the army, of which one and a half years was overseas. He was honourably discharged and now he would like to get into the army. In spite of "Comrades in Arms" and "Tambour Battant", beating the drum, I am obliged to fight for him in order to get him into the army.

What to me seems stupid on the part of the brass hats is their paying for a program over the radio to invite young men to get into the army and then failing to accept them when they are able-bodied and willing to come in. I have this man's regimental number here. I will give it to the brass hats who probably adorn the gallery. I do not know whether there are any there. I find the brass hats stupid. The number is E-100850. The reason the young man is not accepted by the army is that he has not sufficient education to meet their standards. Who ever heard of such a thing? He must be a B.A. in order to be accepted in the army! What is the use of having a program over the radio, in both languages, telling young men "join up", "get into the army", "you will be happy in the army", "there is a career for you in the army"? Romeo Santerre listened to that in French and said to himself, "That is my chance to get a job. I have been in the army. I have nothing to do. I am unemployed. I am ready to go back again. Although I saw many things in the army that were unpleasant I do not mind about that; I am ready to go; I am willing to go. I have my experience of one and a half years overseas and one and a half years here in Canada. I think I am fit. I was honourably discharged. I want to join the colours." If that man joined the colours after having listened to the program, we would think the program was worth something, having regard to the money expended on it.

Romeo Santerre tries to join the army. Is he accepted? No, sir; he is not accepted because he is not highly enough educated. He must be a B.A. He must go to a university. He must be like the civil servants. The army seems to be like the civil service. In the civil service a man must have university degrees in order to get in. They must have a gilt embossed parchment attesting the degree of M.Sc. and then they are doctors; they wear mortarboards. What the army wants is not able-bodied men; it is men with mortarboards. The army is just the same as the civil service commission. I am quite indignant about this matter. Here is a young man who is willing to go into the army. But can he get in? No, sir. They say to him, "You have no mortarboard; you have no honorary degree, you have no degree of doctor of laws from a university that did not give you any lectures on law; you are not qualified to get into the army. You are too ignorant." Who ever heard of such a thing?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pouliot: I want Santerre in the army.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

PRAIRIE TRANSMISSION LINES LIMITED

The house resumed, from Friday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benidickson for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to incorporate Prairie Transmission Lines Limited, and the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Edmonton East): "That this question be now put."

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this pipe lines bill, and I do not wish to delay proceedings unduly. However, the hon. member who preceded me in the debate, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), made certain remarks with which I think I should deal.

In his speech on March 14, reported in Hansard at page 748, he said:

> May I warn members from some of the other provinces. Let us first take those from Saskatchewan. They may find the next step will be that instead of their towns being supplied with natural gas that gas will be sent down into the United States.

Then he proceeded to warn members from Quebec and, finally, to chastise the four Liberal members from British Columbia, implying that these members were not doing their duty by their own province, and that they had favoured the bill—although, as has been pointed out, all they did was to move for a vote.

Before I received the advice from the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, I had communicated with the province of Saskatchewan. The city of Yorkton, in which I am particularly interested, is not, I think, very much concerned with the bill, because in that constituency at the town of Kamsack we have found gas, and it is now being partially supplied with gas.

In any event we are interested as a province; and with that in mind before the hon. member spoke I had communicated with the boards of trade in Saskatoon and Regina as to what action if any they wanted the Saskatchewan members to take with regard to these bills which, as hon. members know, were debated in the last session, as well as in this one.

In that connection I also asked a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), which is reported in Hansard at page 792 as follows:

> Have any representations been made to him by the C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan with regard to protecting Saskatchewan so far as the export of oil and gas from Alberta is concerned?

In reply to that the minister answered in these words:

> I have no knowledge of any representations from the province of Saskatchewan in that connection.

My second question was:

> What is the policy of the minister with regard to the granting of permits for pipe lines from Alberta to the United States?

In answer to my second question he said:

> I would say that I spoke on this subject at the last session of parliament, and pointed out that the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act is designed to protect Canadian consumers. It is necessary under the act for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to give a certificate to the effect that the present and foreseeable future needs of Canada are protected before any exports of electricity or gas are permitted. It has been suggested frequently in the current debate that gas will be sent to the United States from the pipe line before the pipe line reaches Vancouver. I stated last session that that would not be permitted. I know from discussions with the sponsors of the pipe line that it is not proposed to undertake any such export.

In addition I have received a copy of a letter which the commissioner and the board of trade of Saskatoon sent to the Hon. J. H. Brockelbank, minister of natural resources and industrial development in Saskatchewan, at Regina, dated March 13. That letter points out that it has been brought to their attention that a private bill was coming before the house in connection with this matter.

The question was raised as to whether Saskatchewan's interests in getting a supply of gas should not be protected. The thought was that in any such bill authorizing the exportation of gas to centres in British Columbia Saskatchewan's probable needs of natural gas should be provided for, before any gas was exported to British Columbia.

With that I agree. I have checked the history of these pipe line bills that were passed at a session of parliament before many hon. members who now hold a seat were here. I refer to the session in April of 1949. Apparently all these bills received second reading on April 29 of that year.

I was interested to note what the sponsors of the attack on the present bill had done to safeguard the interests of Saskatchewan in connection with the previous legislation. I find they took no stand on it at all. Bill C-8 was not passed, and that was an application from this same company. Then I find that on April 29, 1949, Bill B-8 was passed, under which the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company obtained a charter in the same wording as the application in the present instance, giving them rights within or outside Canada.

Then I find that the Trans-Northern Pipe Line Company, oil only, also obtained a charter, with rights within or outside Canada. I find, further, that the British American Pipe Line Company on the same date from the House of Commons obtained a charter, for oil only, within and outside Canada.

Then I find a bill, sponsored I believe by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), for the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited. It was passed, but it only gives permission within Alberta and British Columbia, or outside Canada, to construct a pipe line for gas and oil. So that in that bill Saskatchewan is left in the choice position of not having any interest at all. They got a charter for the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. By that bill Saskatchewan was left in the cold.

The bill now before the house proceeds to follow exactly the same language in which the other bills were passed, and those bills were not questioned. No riders were added and no amendments moved either by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra or the hon. member for Fraser Valley in any way limiting the route of the pipe line, or anything of that nature. I have checked that.

Mr. Green: Has the hon. member checked the proceedings before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines? If he does he will find that that was where we got that pledge.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I am taking the record of Hansard. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is quite a skilful lawyer, but I do not think he will attempt to convey to this house that anything said before a committee is binding when there is nothing in the bill. With his legal experience I doubt if he will contend that for one second. The previous bill passed without any amendment. I think the hon. member will agree that anything said before a committee of this house is not binding or operative on anyone.

Mr. Green: Unless the people behind this company are entirely dishonest, the pledge they gave before that committee would bind them.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The hon. member who sponsors this bill, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), is reported on page 447 of Hansard of March 3, 1950, when replying to a question by one of the opponents of the bill, as saying:

> I have given the assurance, Mr. Speaker, that this company is quite prepared to build a pipe line wherever any of these regulatory bodies insist that it be built.

That is a much more binding undertaking given before the whole house than anything that might be given before a committee. The same hon. member pointed out during the debate that the Alberta government is not opposed to the incorporation of the particular company provided for in this bill. On the contrary, that government feels strongly that no bona fide company should be refused incorporation and thus deprive and limit the province of Alberta from dealing with several companies instead of one. The leader of the Social Credit group also made it quite clear that he wanted a vote on this bill on its merits and also wanted it referred to a committee of the house.

I repeat that the bill that passed the house covers only the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia—Saskatchewan was completely out in the cold. Should this bill pass permission will be given to incorporate a company that can operate in Saskatchewan. It looks to me very much as though there were a nigger in the woodpile. The same hon. gentlemen are now strenuously opposing the granting of a charter to a company which the government of Alberta is in favour of.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) gave an opinion which I concur in with deference—I submit the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) concurred in it also—that the province of Alberta alone has jurisdiction over the oil in Alberta while it is in Alberta. In addition conservation measures were prepared by the hon. member for Calgary West, according to his statement—we will presume that with his usual thoroughness he included every protection necessary for the province of Alberta—and they provide that the conservation board must ratify and give consent to the exportation of oil or gas from Alberta. Until they do that neither the company that has been formed nor the company that is proposed by this bill will be able to build a pipe line to move gas or oil out of the province of Alberta.

Then in addition the province of Alberta has safeguarded itself further in connection with how much oil or gas shall be exported from the province. They have ruled, and properly so, that the people of Alberta must come first and then the other provinces and the United States. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is criticizing Liberal members who voted for another bill which was in accordance with the wishes of the government of Alberta. I would remind them that there never was any motion to amend or restrict that bill. There was never even a suggestion that there should not be exportation to the United States. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra did say that he thought our own people should be served first, but there was no attempt to amend or restrict the legislation. I submit that from a legal point of view you could not have restricted it.

Mr. Cruickshank: Does the hon. member say seriously that there was no motion before the house that the bill be amended to provide for an all-Canadian route?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I say that there was no amendment introduced to the bill that passed this house which related to Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. Cruickshank: There was an amendment.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The hon. member for Fraser Valley did not oppose that bill, which was worded similarly to this bill. He never said a word during the whole debate as to the provisions of the bill that passed this House of Commons. He did ask a simple question as to whether the bill permitted exportation from Canada. All the hon. member did was to ask that gentle question and get an answer.

Mr. Cruickshank: I disagree entirely with my hon. friend.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The hon. member is not reported in Hansard. He will have an opportunity later in this debate to produce Hansard.

Mr. Cruickshank: I intend to be on Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind hon. members that they should address the Chair and not engage in conversation.

Mr. McIvor: Which would cost more, a pipe line to Saskatchewan or a pipe line to British Columbia?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Because of the mountains, a pipe line to British Columbia would naturally cost more than one to Saskatchewan. We have some splendid cities in that province, including Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Regina, and I am not forgetting my own city of Yorkton. No provision for Saskatchewan was made in the bill for which the hon. member for Fraser Valley voted.

I should like to go further and quote the opinion of the Prime Minister in support of my contention that the province of Alberta has the whole say as to whether a pipe line is built for the purpose of exporting oil from that province. The same thing applies to Quebec. For thirty years that province has had the right to say that pulpwood could not be cut unless it was manufactured in Canada.

Mr. Cruickshank: Oh.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The hon. member for Fraser Valley disagrees with his own leader. I think possibly his leader knows a little more law than the hon. member for Fraser Valley.

Mr. Cruickshank: I concede that, and distinctly more than you do.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I should like to quote from page 2651 of Hansard of April 27, 1949, where the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> I do not think the parliament of Canada would have the right to say to those operating on crown lands in the province of Quebec. "You shall have the right to export wood cut on those crown lands." That wood is simply not exportable. I would imagine it might be the same situation with respect to gas taken from concessions in any other province. I would imagine the province would have the right to say, "We will allow you to exploit these lands provided you do not send the product from these lands outside of Canada."

As Alberta has the right to do. The Prime Minister continued:

> In that case I do not think any licence granted under federal authority would authorize a concessionaire to export contrary to the conditions of his concession from the owners, that is to say, the provincial government.
> Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That is a term of the contract.

He apparently agreed with the Prime Minister.

> Mr. St. Laurent: A term of the contract, and I do not think, whatever be the terms of the federal legislation with respect to permits, that such a permit could give one holding a concession the right to violate his contract.

In other words, any company will first have to enter into a contract with the government of the province of Alberta, and no doubt that government will make sure that the contract is fair not only to Alberta but also to the other provinces of Canada. I think the government of British Columbia realizes that because, since we have been debating this matter, a motion was passed unanimously by their legislature urging that the pipe line be built in Canada. They also sent their attorney general to the government of Alberta, and that is the proper place to go. They have the first say. The Prime Minister said:

> . . . I do not think, whatever be the terms of the federal legislation with respect to permits, that such a permit could give one holding a concession the right to violate his contract. It might very well be that, although the owner under the contract did not forbid exportation—

The province of Alberta is the owner of 90 per cent of their oil and gas and they likely would forbid export.

—parliament could say, "we will not allow you to export gas because we have the control of foreign trade, we will not allow that commodity to go out without a permit, and we will not give you a permit." I do not think, however, they could do the reverse and say, "we will allow you to export it no matter what the province, as the owner of the land from which it is taken, wants you to do with it."

That is the opinion of the Prime Minister. By giving second reading to the bill we will then have the opportunity to send it to a committee of the house. The people of British Columbia and Saskatchewan have no protection under the bill passed last April. Any company will have to go first to the government of the province of Alberta which has the first say. Under our law they next have to go to the board of transport commissioners, and under the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act passed in 1907, which is chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, they have to get a permit from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), and you have his declaration on the matter.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Quite honestly it is an attempt to clear up a point. I think it is understood that the province of Alberta would have the say as to whether or not its natural products are to be exported, but if this measure is passed does the hon. member suggest that the province of Alberta would have the right to deny to the company the right to build its pipe line wherever it chooses to do so?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Yes, I would go that far, and I think the Prime Minister agrees with that view. Ownership of 90 per cent of the land in Alberta is in the crown, and the rest is privately owned. The government of the province of Alberta has passed regulations under its conservation bill.

Mr. Knowles: Respecting the export of its raw materials.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): And relating to oil and gas. They give a permit to the company to operate. They charge a licence fee and in the licence they also stipulate where the company can operate and what it can do.

Mr. Knowles: Where does the board of transport commissioners come in?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The board of transport commissioners comes in under our own statutes. Then we also have an old statute relating to the export of gas and oil, chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927. It gives the Minister of Trade and Commerce the right to refuse or to grant a permit. You have the declaration of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he intends to do as he has on other occasions. As was pointed out during the debate last April, he did so in connection with other matters and gave protection to Canada. He will not grant a permit unless he thinks one should be granted, and he can revoke it at any time. In this case the minister says that he has the assurance of the company which is applying for a charter that they will build in Canada. Furthermore, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) says that he heard that.

Mr. Cruickshank: Will you permit a question? Did the minister say they would build their line entirely within Canada?

Mr. Green: He did not say that.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The Minister of Trade and Commerce said they had assured him that they would build in Canada.

Mr. Green: No, he did not say that.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I think he went that far.

Mr. Cruickshank: We are glad to hear you say it on his behalf.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I have read you his answer from Hansard. With reference to the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), may I point out that the Prime Minister said at page 2652 of Hansard for April 27, 1949:

I cannot change the constitution.

He is referring to our own powers.

In my view the resources of a province are controlled by the legislation of that province.

Alberta has its legislation.

If there is legislation in the province of Alberta saying that the owners of fields where there is gas must comply with regulations made by a board set up under the authority of that legislation—

The hon. member for Calgary West referred to the activities of the board.

—I think as a lawyer they would have to do so, because that is control of property and civil rights within the province. The federal government has the right to control export but it cannot force export.

I think that answers your question.

Mr. Knowles: I think the hon. member must have misunderstood my question. I was not asking where Alberta comes into the picture so far as the export of raw materials is concerned. My question related to the building of the pipe line once this charter has been granted.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I referred you to what happened in Quebec, as did the Prime Minister, in the matter of cutting pulpwood. Once it is severed from the land it is severed whether it is oil or pulpwood.

Mr. Knowles: That does not apply at all.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I disagree with you there. The Prime Minister also said:

> The laws relating to the hon. member's property are under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, but if it is something that is free to be dealt with the federal government can say, notwithstanding that it is free to be dealt with, "we will not give you a permit to export it unless you comply with such and such regulation."

The hon. member for Calgary West agreed with that. At page 2653 of Hansard for April 27, 1949, he said:

> Or to cross a boundary.

Following that remark the Prime Minister said:

> Or to cross a boundary—unless you comply with such and such regulation. But they cannot make exportable something that is governed by a provincial law which makes it non-exportable.

Surely that answers your question.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry, it does not.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): In spite of what the hon. member has just said, the legislature of the province of Quebec has made pulpwood, which is a product of the forests, non-exportable from Canada in an unmanufactured state. That has been going on for over thirty years and the law has been respected and followed, and is valid legislation. Therefore I say that, in so far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, I am in favour of the bill being given second reading and going before a committee of the house. I am most surprised that members of the C.C.F. are opposing the government of the province of Alberta which wants the bill passed. They want competition. If you leave the situation as it is with only one measure incorporating a company on the statute books you are creating a monopoly. You are allowing only one company to have a charter. It is far more favourable to the people of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to have several companies competing with each other. We will get cheaper gas and oil, but if you give a monopoly to one, as was done in April of 1949 without the C.C.F. saying one word against it, without even moving an amendment, you are simply building up a monopoly, and you have done that in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yorkton, who has just concluded his remarks, has made some statements which I think require to be dealt with immediately. I should like to deal with the last one first. He said that if no further companies are permitted incorporation before this house we will be creating a monopoly. It is not this house which will be creating a monopoly. The very nature of the gas pipe line industry itself creates a monopoly. For that and similar reasons the Alberta government has set up its gas conservation board and the British Columbia government has set up its public utilities commission. The two provinces have similar legislation to control the price to be charged for those products or utilities which are in the nature of monopolies. So the fact that there may be two or three companies seeking incorporation, or that two or three companies may be incorporated, would not make the slightest difference to the price of gas in Alberta or British Columbia, in that set-up.

So the issue before us, and the only issue, is whether or not we shall incorporate a company which has declared that it intends to build its line through the United States. It is on that issue that we as members of this house are asked to make up our minds in voting for or against this bill. Before I go on to deal with that point in detail may I refer to two or three other arguments advanced by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). He has referred to the fact that last year we incorporated a number of companies. At least two if not three of the companies he mentioned had to do with oil pipe lines. The Interprovincial and the B-A are certainly oil pipe lines; and an oil pipe line has nothing in common with a gas pipe line. What is before us tonight is a bill to incorporate a company to build a gas pipe line. An oil pipe line is a common carrier. The oil must be taken to a refinery and processed before it is of any use. Gas, however, is available as soon as you put in a branch or distributing line and tap the main pipe line. You have a commodity in a form in which it can be used right away. So there is no comparison between the two undertakings; and the fact that last year we incorporated oil pipe-line companies is no argument in favour of continuing to incorporate gas pipe-line companies.

Let me say further that while we incorporated the Westcoast company last year to convey gas, when it was realized that there was before the house no undertaking from the company as to whether or not they would serve Canada first, the company was asked in committee—which was the only available place at that time where they could be asked—whether they would build their line through Canada or where they intended to build it; and as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has pointed out, they gave a firm undertaking to build their line through Canada. Since that time they have been before the Alberta board asking permission to export gas over a Canadian route which they have laid down in black and white.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Is that line not for gas or oil?

Mr. Fulton: Gas.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Look at your statute.

Mr. Fulton: I am referring to the application made by the company to the Alberta board.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I would point out to the hon. member that the Westcoast company has to do with gas and oil.

Mr. Fulton: The proposal was to construct a gas pipe line. There are certain considerations which must be borne in mind by hon. members when dealing with this bill, considerations of national as well as local policy. May I deal first with the considerations of local policy. I would inform the house that yesterday the British Columbia legislature passed unanimously a resolution asking that the pipe line from the Alberta gas fields to the Pacific coast should be built through Canada.

Mr. Cruickshank: Would the hon. member permit a question on that? Am I not correct in saying that in the coalition government of British Columbia there are both Liberals and Conservatives, and that it was also endorsed by the C.C.F.?

Mr. Fulton: That statement is correct.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Did British Columbia also ask that we should not pass this bill?

Mr. Fulton: I shall read the resolution which was adopted unanimously by the British Columbia legislature yesterday. It was introduced by Mr. G. E. Braden, M.L.A. for Peace River:

Whereas there are strong indications that a great potential of both petroleum and natural gas exists in the northeastern section of British Columbia:

And whereas exploration is presently taking place to ascertain the extent and value of these resources:

And whereas it would be a further incentive to greater and more intensive exploration if an outlet to market of these commodities was available:

And whereas proposals are now being considered for the construction of gas and petroleum pipe lines from available supplies in Alberta to Vancouver and the Pacific coast states of the United States:

And referring to the last question of the hon. member for Yorkton, I might say that those words—

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Read it.

Mr. Fulton: Obviously those words refer to the proposals now before this house. The resolution continues:

And whereas, in the opinion of many members of this legislature the requirements of Canadians in this connection would be a matter of first consideration:

And whereas the industrial development of the interior of British Columba as well as the Vancouver and Fraser valley areas would be greatly stimulated by the construction of oil and natural gas pipe lines from Alberta and northeastern British Columbia through the interior of British Columbia to the Pacific coast:

And whereas, if the proposed northern route is followed, many millions of dollars will be spent in British Columbia in the construction of the lines with consequent employment of thousands of our citizens:

Therefore be it resolved, that the legislative assembly of the province of British Columbia urge upon the federal and provincial authorities concerned the advisability in the interests not only of British Columbia but of Canada as well that such pipe lines be constructed through the Yellowhead pass and thence through the interior of British Columbia to Vancouver, with provision for the extension of the line to the Peace river block so that when sufficient supplies of petroleum and natural gas are available in that area there will be an available outlet to market without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Cruickshank: Now would the hon. member permit another question on that, just to make it clear? That was adopted by all parties, was it not?

Mr. Fulton: That resolution was adopted, as the hon. member said, by all parties in the British Columbia house.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): And they did not oppose this bill.

Mr. Fulton: As hon. members of this house know, at the present time there is a coalition government in British Columbia made up of Liberal and Conservative members, the opposition being the C.C.F.; and every member in the house subscribed to this resolution. It asks in specific terms that the route of the proposed pipe line from Alberta to the Pacific coast be through the Yellowhead pass and into British Columbia. That is the route proposed to be followed by the Westcoast Transmission Company; and so far that company alone has given the assurance that this route will be followed. Speaking for myself—though if I have been able to follow the arguments of others who have spoken I think I can speak for them as well—if any other company seeking incorporation will give a similar undertaking that it will follow this route to British Columbia, then I will withdraw my objection to its bill.

I am basing my stand and my appeal to the members of this house tonight on what this pipe line, if it is built through British Columbia, will mean to the area I come from, to my province, and to this country, and what it will mean to have the principle accepted that pipe lines transporting Canadian resources should serve Canada first.

May I just remind hon. members of the two alternatives placed before the house by the member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), in his very able speech the other day. He placed before us the two alternatives we have in considering these bills. On the one hand, there is the possibility of a route through Canada, serving the Canadian cities en route, and providing adequate natural gas for those cities, as far as we know forever, and certainly for the foreseeable future. That route from Alberta to the Pacific coast, if it is built through Canada, will not only supply the Vancouver and Pacific coast market, but it will serve the Canadian cities in the interior of British Columbia through which it passes. And such a pipe line, Mr. Speaker, will serve the Pacific coast market, including the United States cities on the Pacific coast, just as well if it is built through the interior of British Columbia, as it will if the route is down through the United States. So there is no question of any member who has spoken in opposition to this bill seeking to deny export of gas to the United States. There will be as much gas exported to the United States through that Yellowhead route as there will be through the U.S. route these companies are asking for. Our point is that we want the route to go through Canada first, and serve the Canadian cities en route.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Will the hon. member permit one more question? Do you agree with the statement made by the member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) before the Gyro club in the city of Ottawa? This is the statement:

> . . . oil and gas are found together and so abundant is the latter that "enough gas to supply the needs of Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and all eastern Canada is being wasted in flares. If we had a market for our gas, we could continue our search for oil," said the speaker in conclusion.

Mr. Fulton: We are trying to get a market for it.

Mr. Cruickshank: We want the pipe line routed through Canada.

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. gentleman would open his mind, instead of closing it, he would realize that we are all equally ready to serve Alberta, and help find a market, but we want the pipe line routed to its market through Canada instead of the United States. We have one proposition, a route to the Pacific coast of the United States through Canada, and serving the Canadian cities and towns en route. We have the other alternative of a route proposed by this company whose bill is before us tonight, the major portion of which would run through the United States. It would serve the same ultimate market on the Pacific coast, without any similar advantages to Canada. There would be no advantage to Canada, either in its construction, because it will be built through the United States, or in its maintenance, because it will lie in the United States. There will be no service to the Canadian cities in the interior of the province of British Columbia, which would be served by the other route.

Why is it there are only these two alternatives? Why is it that if the route to the Pacific coast is through the United States the interior of British Columbia will not be served? The answer is, and again I am quoting, amongst others, the authority of the member for Calgary West, upon whose statements the member for Yorkton seems to place a good deal of reliance, that there will be only one pipe line from Alberta to the Pacific coast. If hon. members will reflect, they will see that is the case. The significance of that factor is, and I think it must be admitted, that the market in the interior of British Columbia, Kamloops, Vernon, Kelowna and Penticton—those interior cities—is not large enough to warrant a separate pipe line being built to serve that market alone. If, therefore, that line goes to Vancouver and the Pacific coast via the United States and does not go through our area, we will not get a pipe line built back up from the coast to serve us. If the line goes by any other route, we will not be served with gas. If it is built through our area, then it is a simple matter—I have talked with the officials of the company—to serve the cities along that route.

Furthermore, a definite assurance has been given that the company will service these cities, and will service the whole of the Okanagan area as well. I ask hon. members to consider the area which is vitally concerned in this matter. There are the four large centres I have mentioned, Kamloops, Vernon, Kelowna, Penticton, all cities of between ten and fifteen thousand people. Each one serves a tremendous area of its own. The other cities farther to the south, Oliver and Osoyoos, and the Merritt, Princeton and Hope districts will be served as well. To put a conservative estimate on it, that area contains at least 100,000 to 150,000 people. If this pipe line follows the route to the United States, that area will not be served with gas. You can see, Mr. Speaker, what it means to have the pipe line built through the interior of British Columbia.

I should like to lay before the house some of the telegrams and resolutions—

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member permit a question before he proceeds with that? I think he will admit that the gas, in a city like Kamloops, would have to be retailed, regardless of whether or not a pipe line came through Kamloops or adjacent to Kamloops. The gas would have to be retailed by a company in Kamloops. The hon. member has a great collection of figures tonight. Has he any figures of the economic minimum of service within the retail area that would justify a retail distribution such as that? Further, would he deny—

Mr. Fulton: I should like to answer the questions one at a time.

Mr. Laing: Will he deny that the economic—

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. member has the great interest which his position as a British Columbia member—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Cruickshank: Let him make his own speech.

Mr. Sinclair: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind hon. members that the member for Kamloops has the floor.

Mr. Fulton: I shall answer the hon. member, but I should like to answer questions which are put singly and not in groups. If the hon. member has the great interest which his position as a British Columbia member—

Mr. Sinclair: Answer the question.

Mr. Fulton: —should give him, he might give us the benefit of his views when he speaks—

Mr. Cruickshank: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: —instead of, as he did last time, carefully taking a position on both sides of the question.

Mr. Sinclair: Answer the question.

Mr. Cruickshank: Tell him to make his own speech.

Mr. Fulton: To answer the question which the hon. member has asked me, I have talked this matter over with the officials of the Westcoast Transmission Company—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: —who assure me that the problem of supplying cities such as Kamloops, Kelowna and Penticton with natural gas on the route of the pipe line is a problem which they are well qualified to handle, and one which they are prepared and anxious to undertake. They have looked into the matter, and have satisfied themselves it will be economically desirable for them to supply that market if their pipe line goes through that area.

Then, dealing with the question of the views of the people whom I represent, I should like to read some of the resolutions which have been sent to me in support of the Canadian route. On February 13, the Kamloops board of trade passed a resolution which reads as follows:

> Whereas it is the opinion of this Kamloops board of trade that Canada's natural resources should be used to serve Canada first and to promote the welfare and growth of the Canadian economy before being exported;
> and whereas there is need of a conscious and dynamic policy to develop Canada's resources and economy;
> therefore be it resolved that with respect to the construction of a gas pipe line to serve Pacific coast cities using Alberta natural gas this Kamloops board of trade is of opinion that the route of such pipe line should be built so far as possible through Canadian territory first so as to serve Canadian cities before the gas is exported to the United States.

At their meeting last Sunday in Revelstoke, the Mainline-Okanagan associated boards of trade endorsed that resolution according to a wire I received today; and that association represents the main line boards of trade from Chilliwack to Revelstoke and the Okanagan boards of trade from the areas of Vernon, Kelowna and Penticton, all those areas being unanimous in support of the resolution.

I have similar letters or resolutions from the Kamloops junior chamber of commerce, the Osoyoos junior chamber of commerce, the Penticton junior chamber of commerce, the Smithers junior chamber of commerce, the Vernon junior chamber of commerce—

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Do any of these resolutions oppose this bill?

Mr. Fulton: —the central north Thompson board of trade, the Blue river and district board of trade and the Rutland board of trade. Those are only some of the resolutions and telegrams which hon. members from the interior of British Columbia have been receiving in connection with this matter.

Mr. Cruickshank: And the Fraser valley.

Mr. Fulton: In our desire to obtain the services of a cheap source of power, which we will obtain only if this pipe line is routed through British Columbia, we in the interior of the province face a problem which is very much the same as the over-all problem as between Canada and the enormously more powerful industrial nation of the United States, which brings me to a consideration of the wider implications of this measure and what I consider should be a national policy for the use of Canada's resources. As in all areas which are not yet fully developed and industrialized, we in the interior of British Columbia are at a disadvantage as compared with the more heavily industrialized centres of the country. Whenever you go to an industry and try to attract it to such areas as that, the answer is that they are too far from the markets and that they are too far from cheap sources of power to make it economically wise to build their industry in that area; hence we go around in what sometimes amounts to a sort of vicious circle. Because the sources of power and the markets already exist, let us say at the coast, the industry goes down and establishes there. This action increases the market, it increases the facilities and increases the disproportion between the undeveloped and the developed areas. I am speaking here from the point of view of local interest. That is why we want this gas in the interior of British Columbia, and we can have it without doing any disservice to the coastal areas; because it is as advantageous to build through our district, and the supplies of gas are ample to supply us and still leave plenty over for Vancouver, the other Pacific coast cities, and the United States.

In that respect there is a parallel between our position vis-à-vis the already developed coastal areas and the position of Canada in comparison with the United States. If we allow this gas to go to the United States Pacific coast cities before it goes to Vancouver, the result is obvious. Vancouver will be at the end of a branch line. Vancouver's gas will cost more than the gas in the United States cities which will be served first. The United States is already more highly industrialized than is Canada. Because the gas will be served to them at a cheaper rate, it will be more attractive for industry to go to the United States, and hence the disproportion between Canada's industrial development and that of the United States will be perpetuated if the route should be built through the United States first.

That brings me to the broad national question of the policy of building Canada first, the policy which is actually inherent in this gas pipe-line bill and in the stand of those who are opposed to the incorporation of a company which does not give us the assurance that it will build its route through Canada. If the various governments of Canada had never taken the stand that Canada's resources should be developed for Canada first and that they were going to build a nation here north of the forty-ninth parallel, we would never have reached even the stage of development that we have today. One has only to think back to the history of the construction of our railways to realize that it is only when governments and parliaments assume their full responsibility with respect to the directing of the national policy that we can have national growth along conscious and positive lines.

Mr. Speaker, it is nine o'clock, and I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: It being nine o'clock, the house will resume the business that was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence forces—

202. To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $579,301,670 including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $438,178,000 and commitments for future years of $141,123,670 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1950-51 will not exceed $384,932,304.

Mr. Pouliot: I wish to continue, Mr. Chairman, with what I was saying before the dinner recess. I was complaining of the silly program called "Comrades in Arms" or "Tambour Battant", which is pure nonsense. I was going to ask the minister, as he is familiar with the case of Romeo Santerre, if he would have any objection to taking him into the army again. This is my question, and the reason is obvious. He had something more and something much better than any university degree. He had experience in a theatre of war to the extent of several months. As I wrote on December 21 last, the experience that he has acquired on the battlefield should be a greater asset than any university education. May I ask the minister if he will take him into the army again.

Mr. Claxton: I shall be glad indeed to take into consideration the representations made by the hon. member, but I cannot guarantee that the candidate for service in the armed forces would conform to our requirements at the time. I shall be glad, however, to look into the matter again.

Mr. Pouliot: I thank the minister, but I will ask him to be kind enough to tell me something about the requirements for getting into the armed forces. It seems to me that the radio listener should be warned that applicants must have mortarboards before they can be admitted to the army. It is not fair to say to them, "Come in; come in", if they are not all accepted. Instead of the silly prologue to that broadcast a warning should be given to all those who have not enough education, according to the standards established by the Department of National Defence. The program should be known as one to invite people not to enlist, instead of one calling them to the colours.

This is something absolutely nonsensical. Why should a country pay for that program if it serves no purpose, and if those who are willing to enlist are refused the opportunity, particularly when they show what Mr. King would have called good will? That is something beyond my understanding. I do not understand it at all.

I would ask the minister to be good enough to give us the titles of the songs on the program, the titles of the musical parts, both in French and in English, since their beginning. We will see that we will have Strauss and all the other Viennese composers coming to the fore to call people to the colours. Well, if so, it will be quite unusual. I want to know, further, how much this cost the country, and what the results were. In the case of Romeo Santerre they were nil. I am wondering if they have been better for others.

It may be that other fellows who were qualified to be good soldiers, who had good eyesight so that they could shoot straight, and who were able-bodied, have been refused, perhaps because they could not write Latin verse, or because they could not make a translation from French into Greek.

It is the funniest thing; in virtue of the North Atlantic pact, I was under the impression that these things had been decided, and that the examples I have given must have been due to the eccentricities of someone from Oxford or Cambridge, or from some French lycée who wished to show his importance in the drafting of a program like that.

What are the important qualifications of a soldier? He must have sufficient intelligence to understand orders given to him by his commanding officer; he must have good health and good training. I appeal to all those who have been in the army, I appeal to the minister and to his critic, the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), and ask them bluntly if the best soldiers they had under them were not precisely lumberjacks who, perhaps, could not read or write, but who were always on the job. They were the best shots, the best marksmen. They were able to walk long distances and were physically trained to be soldiers.

Those men were not university graduates—far from it. They were the ones who went to war under the command of experienced officers such as the hon. member for Nanaimo, and others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pouliot: I thank hon. members who are returned men for their approval. They were fortunate enough to have education, but they did not turn a cold shoulder to the men who were the backbone of the army, and who were always there when there was a difficult task to accomplish. That is that.

We are in an age of super-education. We are in an age of mortarboards and gowns. We are in an age where people are much too clever. That is why Romeo Santerre was not accepted when he wanted to enlist again as a private. Incredible! I know Romeo Santerre well. He is a nice, clean fellow.

Mr. Pearkes: A good man in a tight corner.

Mr. Pouliot: Yes, a straight, first-class man for the army. I would not recommend him as secretary to my hon. friend, or as chief of staff in the Department of National Defence; but I do recommend him as a private soldier. He wants to be a private soldier, and I want him to be.

I am for the voluntary system; I am not for conscription. During the last war the government sent military police to look after the farmers' sons and to take them to the clink. I believed the farmers were needed on the farms, and objected to the action then taken. I was for voluntary service, and when a young man wants to enlist I do not see why those who call for recruiting should object to it. That is why I am so insistent upon having this man accepted in the army. I guarantee to the minister that he will be a good soldier.

I have another case to put before the minister, and this one refers to a young man with more education than the first one I mentioned. He is a fine fellow, but was not accepted in the R.C.A.F. because he had a year less in education than was required for the training. A notice was sent to him in French, and I see in that letter some mistakes in French grammar. The letter was sent by the commanding officer of the Quebec station. I say that officer should first learn French grammar, before he is in a position to tell others to be well educated. It is absurd!

There are other cases. I have many others, but I brought only a few with me to the chamber. The one I shall now mention concerns a cook who would like to join the army to serve in the kitchen and to prepare good meals. This man is a good cook, but he suffers a little from his feet. I understand that a cook is not required to be a professor of gymnastics; he has other things to do than playing the role of acrobat in the army. Because this man has sore feet he is not to be admitted. There are obstacles in the way all the time.

I place before the house another case concerning a man whose name I shall not give, but who is at present in jail. This man would like to be in the army and his case is before the parliamentary assistant. He is in jail because he made a mistake, but that should be forgotten. He is a good marksman and would be able to kill the enemy. If there is a war he is the one I would recommend because he would not miss his mark.

Mr. Drew: Is that what he is in jail for?

Mr. Pouliot: In war everything is permitted. I am relating these stories to indicate that I am not alone in having some good will, as Mr. King would say. There are many others who have good will and who are ready to enlist in the army, but they cannot. Probably when this fellow was in jail the radio of the keeper was on full blast and he heard the famous programs, "Comrades in Arms" and "Tambour Battant". He then said to himself, "This is my chance to get into the army; it is a fine place for me and I am ready to go." Perhaps that was the result of the fine programs in English and French that are heard over C.B.C. at times.

I shall try to summarize these cases as much as I can. During the first days of the war I offered to raise a regiment in my county in one week for the defence of Canada, but my offer was turned down. I never thought that I would be again insisting that the wishes of those who wanted to get into the army should be fulfilled. But the fact is that many of these men are born warriors.

Then a word about the reserve army. Many of the officers connected with this organization consider themselves very important. Probably they never saw a German or a Jap or any one of our enemies during the last war except from a distance when they were brought here as prisoners. Nevertheless they consider themselves to be important people. I have a letter here about the way cadet officers in the reserve army were dealt with. There was a Captain Schooley, the chief instructor, and a Lieutenant Ravel. I do not know if he is French or Huguenot, but he did not seem to recognize the French language in the camp. Captain Schooley said many times in the class that French was not a handicap to the men speaking that language; it only meant that they had to study three or four times as hard.

The lectures and examinations were all in English. No one spoke French. All the officers were strong personalities and they established an atmosphere in which it was not good for French-speaking people to live. This certainly was less attractive than the broadcasts "Comrades in Arms" and "Tambour Battant." They were much more interesting.

I mention these things because I think it is positively unfair to invite a person to come to you and then close the door when he arrives. It is not even good manners. I want to bring these facts before the committee in the presence of the minister. The minister must not take it for granted that the brass hats in his department are infallible. I knew most of them during the war and I found them to be as stupid as stones. You could not get anything out of them. They were born stupid. Probably they had a fine education, but no one could see what benefit they got from them. I have never been in the army, but I certainly used the language of the buck private with regard to the high-ups.

An hon. Member: That is why we like you.

Mr. Pouliot: I appreciate that remark. It does my heart good to hear remarks like that when I say something that I dislike to say. We are not going to be bossed indefinitely by these brass hats. It is nonsense to ever think of that. A great many of them are still there. We won the first world war, we won the second world war, and they were there in their swivel chairs. During the war we heard much about the importance of swivel chairs. They were going from hemisphere to hemisphere in their swivel chairs.

An hon. Member: Around and around.

Mr. Pouliot: They were rolling around. I do not want to take up too much time, and besides my time is limited. Yesterday a return was tabled dealing with a private who had been accepted in the army and placed in category A. That meant that his health was good, that he was well, that he was able-bodied, that he was physically qualified to be a good soldier. When he was discharged his Pulhem test P dropped from 1 to 3; M dropped from 2 to 4; S dropped from 1 to 4. This man was well when he was taken into the army but he was no longer well when he came out. It was evident that he suffered disabilities during his service. He was accepted as being in category A, in good health, but when he was discharged his papers indicated that he was no longer well.

Why not be generous and give this man a pension? The minister may say that this matter does not come under the Department of National Defence, but that department was responsible for the medical examination in the first place. He was examined by army doctors, not by doctors of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That man was not on pension when he was examined for the first time. He was entering the army. He was accepted in the army as a man who was fit. Then he had some service, and when he was discharged he was not at all in the same condition of health as when he entered. When it is established in that manner that that man has suffered a disability of any kind, the presumption is that it was due unquestionably to his military service, but we are told that the disability from which he suffers existed before his enlistment or occurred after his discharge. No pension is paid to him.

I complain in the most severe language against the pension commissioners, but we must also complain against the army doctors who have not fulfilled their duty. To the new members of the house may I say that during the war I had to fight for the soldiers and against the doctors. I received protests from very high medical authorities, but after I had sent them copies of Hansard, in which statements that were according to the facts showed beyond any doubt that the doctors referred to were incompetent, then they said: We never thought that it was as bad as that.

I hope that these people will receive justice, and that justice will not be denied them because the departments concerned refuse to acknowledge the fallibility of certain doctors. I will have other opportunities to speak about this matter. I can tell the minister that some of the cases I have mentioned have amusing aspects superficially, but if we consider them seriously we will realize it is a pity that there are such obstacles in the way of patriotic young men who desire to serve their country, who are qualified to accomplish that noble duty, and who cannot do so on account of the stupidity and procrastination of some important bigwigs in the Department of National Defence. In my humble view it is time to stop it. After the sitting this afternoon I met many of my colleagues who told me that I was perfectly right, and that they realized the difficulties young men have to get into the army, especially if they are from the province of Quebec. As I am an advocate of voluntary service, I hope that those who are willing to enter the army will have no obstacles placed in their way, and will be admitted as the good Canadians that they are.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I shall not be able to bring to you the technical skill that the hon. member for Nanaimo did this afternoon nor the sprightly personalities with which the hon. member for Temiscouata has just delighted us. I certainly agree with him that I would much rather have a good cook with bad feet than a bad cook with good feet. Indeed, it seems to me there might be some possible advantage in having a cook whose feet were not too good because it might keep him beside the stove on his job. I would say to the hon. member, however, that I had a very desolating experience in 1939 which perhaps throws some light on the different qualifications which apparently are now required from soldiers. A friend of mine, who like myself had been in the first war, received a letter from his son who had joined up for the second war. This was in the autumn of 1939, and the letter contained a sentence which was devastating to us. The young man wrote to his father and said: War has now reached the stage where an intelligent man can take part in it. I submit to the hon. member for Temiscouata that possibly that has something to do with the new regulations.

Tonight I propose not to talk about the technique of war, which indeed I am not qualified to do, but to discuss the question of how we in the opposition are to discharge our duty with respect to the expenditure of the huge sums of money that are now being brought before the house by the Minister of National Defence. I listened of course with great interest, as other hon. members did, to his speech this afternoon. Certainly when one thinks that he has been from Alaska as far as Berlin or farther in the course of his duties, it gives us an idea both of the way the world has shrunk and of the way in which our responsibilities have extended. I could not help taking a particular interest in the paymaster who jumped with the men. If he landed in Alaska I hope he had the proper qualifications from the foreign exchange control board before he started out; otherwise he may be in for great difficulties. I must say I sympathize with him in taking those risks merely for the sake of seeing that the men had their money. I would have thought that a little higher degree of organization might have enabled the men to have their money before they started, but maybe he was a sporting fellow and liked to jump.

Mr. Claxton: He landed in Alaska, he brought the money, the men received the money in Alaska in Canadian funds, made their purchases in Canadian funds, and everything was fine.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Oh, I see; you had a sort of extraterritoriality there. At any rate, there it is. I think we agree with the minister that the meetings which he attends, and which produce the personal contacts that he mentioned, are valuable as he says. We find it easy to accept his assurance that our men compare very favourably with any others. When he says that our defence is in better shape than it ever was before in peacetime I think we will say it certainly ought to be, considering the amount we are spending on it.

I feel almost apologetic in bringing the house to the sordid consideration of money and how it is to be spent, but after all that is our duty, and therefore I propose to do so.

I should like to remind the house again of the huge total sum which we are considering, some $579 million, more, if I remember correctly, than our whole expenditure in the last year before the war. I should like to refer the committee particularly to just one of the large lump expenditures that we are facing. I have picked this one out because it is the largest single gobbet that I see, that is to say, $80 million odd in the air force for stores, equipment, aircraft and so on. I mention that just to bring before the committee the astonishing size of the amounts that we are now dealing with.

I go on to ask what is the duty of the government and of the opposition—because after all we are part of the machinery of government in this country—in these circumstances; and I want to read just part of a sentence from a small book by a distinguished British parliamentarian, Quintin Hogg, which is called "The Purpose of Parliament":

> It is not the right of the government to stifle criticism; it must, therefore, put down for discussion such financial items as the opposition wish to discuss.

That, of course, refers to the British practice, and I merely want to stress the one word "discuss". It is the matter of discussion I wish to bring to the attention of the committee; and I suggest that you cannot discuss a thing unless you have the necessary information enabling you to do so. It is this question of information which I wish to bat up to the minister, so to speak, tonight.

I want to say a general word about the way this house now deals with the estimates that come before it. If an intelligent citizen observed all the time this house spends in dealing with the estimates and saw what really happens, I think he might very easily come to the conclusion that he had been witnessing a solemn farce; for I doubt if a single member in this house has ever seen a single dollar lopped off a single item. If the hon. member for Quebec South were in his place he would be an exception, because I find that in 1922 he was actually instrumental in having some hundreds of thousands of dollars lopped off the defence estimates, when his own party was in power. But then, of course, the hon. member has qualities and capacities which are denied to us more ordinary people.

What happens now? I think all hon. members will agree that when an estimate comes into this house it is a government measure. We do not discuss it. We ask questions about it, but we do not discuss it. What Quintin Hogg says should happen does not happen, because when you discuss a thing presumably it is with the idea that something is going to be done about it. Since I have been in this house, as far as I can remember, not a dollar has ever been cut off any estimate that has come up. Everything brought in here is a government measure. Indeed, it is more than that; the ingenious Minister of Trade and Commerce—and I am sorry he is not here tonight—is able to use these estimates for the purpose of doing things for which there is no legislative authority whatever. Hon. members may remember that on April 7 of last year there was under discussion an item of some $800,000 in connection with the Canadian Commercial Corporation, I think; and after a great deal of wiggling the minister admitted in effect that there was no authority for it. But he said, "If parliament approves, the item will be confirmed by parliament." In other words, in effect he said, "We bring it in here and if it is approved, all right; it doesn't matter whether or not we have authority for it."

I am just making the point that there is no real discussion; that everything goes; that estimates are brought in here as government measures; and that as far as I can see our procedure in dealing with these estimates comes close to being a solemn farce. They are a means of eliciting a certain amount of information; they provide an opportunity to make speeches which we hope will be read by the people at home, and all that sort of thing; but as far as service of the state is concerned, it just is not so. It is under those circumstances that I want to ask the minister what he proposes to do here. As was pointed out this afternoon, we have been refused a committee, and that is that. Now I want to know how we are going to have any real discussion unless we get the information; and how is the information to be given? Are we to get the facts here in this committee of the whole? I think we all know how difficult it is to get information here, with no experts present. We would require a system of orderlies running in and out if there were a real desire on the part of the government to answer questions. Of course what really happens is that we get tired, tempers get short, and eventually out of sheer fatigue the items go through. There is no really satisfactory discussion; there cannot be under such a procedure.

In the case of these defence estimates that is accentuated over and over again, because here we have many items on which, of all things, we need expert assistance. This afternoon, when my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo had finished speaking, the minister very generously thanked him for his suggestions, and if I remember his words correctly even termed them constructive suggestions; yet neither the hon. member for Nanaimo nor anyone else in this house is to have an opportunity of talking with any of the experts. I will have a little more to say about that a little later on.

What has the minister said to us in answer to the complaints? He said one or two things. If I remember well, he said that never had so much information been given as now. I am not particularly interested in that statement. It is possible that we may have passed out of black darkness into twilight, and I am not going to argue on that; but I submit that what we want is light—I mean information in a way it has not been given before. I think that situation has to be faced.

Now let us look at these figures; let me look at this $80 million I mentioned previously. I am going to be in my riding tomorrow morning, and I have a great many intelligent electors there. I can imagine one of them saying, "What about this $80 million? Do you know anything about that?" I will have to say, "No, I don't know much about airplanes." Then I can imagine him asking, "Then how are you going to vote on that? Is anybody going to know anything about it"? I would reply, "The minister is going to tell us about it." Then my questioner might say, "Well, is the minister an expert?" I would have to reply, "Well, no; the minister very frankly said he was not an expert." Then I think my friend would say, "Well, have you any experts in the house at all, either on your own side or on the other side?" I would say, "Yes, we certainly have on our side some I would consider experts, such as the hon. member for Nanaimo and the hon. member for Calgary East, and I think there are others I could name. I am quite sure in the other corners of the house there are some people of the same kind, who could be useful in that discussion." Then I can imagine my questioner going on and questioning me making me look very silly, and finally saying, "Do you mean to tell me you are going to pass an item of $80 million, not knowing a thing about it at first hand, except what somebody tells you, and that has been passed on by somebody else?" I think he would go on to say, "That is a funny kind of joint you are running down there," and he would be quite right.

I ask the minister what he would have to say to that, because as far as I can see that is the position we are in. My questioner, I think, might very well say, "Well, it would seem a sensible thing to get together a group of these men who are more expert than you are and have them sit in with the minister's experts and discuss the whole thing." I would reply, "Yes, I should think that would be a very reasonable thing indeed, but the government would not allow that. That is the kind of government we have. They are so much better than the rest of us they do not need to discuss these matters with anyone in the house outside the government ranks."

Mr. Fulton: And they even have study groups.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wish I knew more about that study group. I really think the minister ought to help us a little on this. We are very modest people over here in the opposition. We read what the Prime Minister said the other day, that there are no people in Canada to be compared with the members of the cabinet; and I imagine he might include the parliamentary assistants as well. He did not say that, but they are a nice lot of chaps. And of course we know that he is going to Toronto, to that great university which I sometimes think is too pleased with itself, so that from time to time I have to remind it that smaller places have better quality than larger places; still it is a great university. The Prime Minister is to be there to establish the fact that there is no alternative to the present government. So, as I say, we approach this in a very modest manner; we are only asking for help in doing our duty, as far as it is possible for us to do it.

An hon. Member: Just farm boys trying to get along.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is right. Just here I should like to correct one misapprehension the minister is under. This will involve going back for just a moment to the debate on the proposal to establish a committee. Of course I am not going to debate that question at all; I am just putting this on the record because apparently the minister had it in his mind that what we suggested here was something that would require a constitutional change.

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, I think we must have a stop to this sort of effort to restore the debate to the position it was in before the decision was arrived at by this house that there would be no committee. Therefore, I suggest to you that the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Drew: May I rise to point out that the motion that was before the house, and on which the house voted, was a motion for a general committee to inquire into the Department of National Defence and the connected problems of defence. There is absolutely nothing in the decision that was reached then which would prevent the hon. member reviewing that decision. Certainly, there could be nothing in that decision to prevent the suggestion now that there should be a committee to consider defence estimates; that was not the motion before the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Now, coming back, Mr. Chairman, to the suggestion that would lead to the defence estimates going to a committee—as I said, I am not arguing about the other committee at all. I am putting something on the record, because I think the minister would like to withdraw a mistaken statement, if he thinks it is mistaken after hearing what I read to him. It is very brief, but I want to read what was said by the leader of the opposition on November 18 last:

If the answer to the request is there can be no committee—

Mr. Claxton: Really, Mr. Chairman, we have to have a ruling on this. Either this parliament decides one thing once, or it continues endlessly debating the same thing day after day, and week after week, after parliament has decided it. I do not think that makes sense. It is against the rules of the house, and I ask for a ruling.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member is out of order, because he is referring to a previous debate; that is out of order.

Mr. Fulton: It is from the last session.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but the hon. member cannot review a debate which has already been decided. I cite Beauchesne, third edition, 245:

It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I think—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I thought the chairman had given his ruling.

The Chairman: I have given my ruling, and it is not debatable.

Mr. Drew: A ruling may not be debatable, but if a ruling has been made in error, it is open to any member to point out the error that has been made.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You can appeal the ruling.

Mr. Drew: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I appeal the ruling.

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood) was discussing the advisability of appointing a special committee to consider national defence estimates. I ruled the discussion out of order as reviving a debate already concluded.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Dion from the committee of supply reports that in the committee of supply Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood) was discussing the advisability of appointing a special committee to consider national defence estimates. The chairman ruled the discussion out of order as reviving a debate already concluded. From this ruling the leader of the opposition appealed to the house.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I was paired with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner). Had I voted I would have voted aginst the ruling.

Mr. Cardiff: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the chairman's ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the chairman's ruling confirmed.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry for this interlude, when I thought I was getting on with the minister so well. I now begin again.

I wish to point out the situation as I see it. What we are now faced with is a situation where the only members who will be able to have a chance to form an opinion on these matters at first hand will be the minister, and anyone else with whom he chooses to take counsel—I presume his assistant, and possibly one or two others. The rest will have to form their opinions at second hand. Apparently they will have to judge what the experts say and think and feel entirely on what the minister tells them they say and think and feel.

I am not able to understand why this should be so. It does not make sense to me, at all. I would like to give an illustration from the business world. But first I would like to repeat a suggestion which has already come out, that although we may not have a committee on defence, which has been decided against, we could have the other different kind of committee to which the leader of the opposition referred, merely a committee to consider these accounts.

I wish now to give my illustration from the business world. I ask members to consider a situation where the general manager of a company—and I compare the minister to a general manager who, after all, holds a most dignified position—comes to his directors. I should think that in a sense the members of the House of Commons might be in the same position as the directors of the company. Then the general manager says that he proposes to embark the company upon very heavy expenditures in connection with very difficult and important matters of a highly technical nature. He shows no sign whatever of allowing any of the directors to form any opinion, or to form their own opinions from a direct contact with the experts.

Finally I would suppose that some of the directors might suggest that it would be very desirable to have a committee of the board, and it might be suggested that there were on the board men who had expert knowledge—indeed, perhaps some with greater knowledge than the general manager—on these particular technical matters. It is suggested that a committee be formed so that these men may make up their own minds from firsthand evidence and be in a position to advise their colleagues on the board.

I suggest that that is exactly what has been put to the minister, and what I am putting again. We will suppose the general manager refuses. He says no, it is better that he should see only these experts. I would ask hon. members to consider what would ever prompt a general manager to make such an answer as that. Would it be, perhaps, that he was afraid?

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member has had enough experience in the House of Commons to know that he cannot do indirectly what he has failed to do directly. I suggest that the hon. member has been out of order in all his remarks since the last vote.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I submit that all I am doing is to suggest to hon. members an analogy with what we are being asked to do. I am suggesting to the minister that he might advise some way whereby we in this House of Commons could discharge our duty.

Mr. Claxton: I can answer that right now. By following the ordinary rules of parliament, the practice since this parliament has been in existence is to have the estimates discussed before the whole committee of parliament, as they have been tonight, and as they always have been.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): But surely I am entitled to point out that that procedure has disadvantages. That is all I am doing.

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, I ask that you rule the hon. member out of order, because he is suggesting some other procedure, which has already been voted on by this house within this week.

Mr. Drew: Is it out of order for anyone to discuss national defence at all? Apparently it must be.

The Chairman: It is out of order to discuss other matters in the committee.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May I give this illustration, and may I suggest that I think there are certain disadvantages if we are forced to follow strictly the usual procedure. I am leaving it to the minister to say if he will advise a better method than I am offering at the present time.

The Chairman: We cannot discuss again the matter of a committee. It has been settled.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I have not made myself clear.

The Chairman: The hon. member must discuss the item before the committee.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not discussing the matter of a committee. If you wish I will withdraw that suggestion. I am discussing the position in which we are being put if in this unusual situation we are forced to follow the ordinary practice. I am asking the minister if he cannot find some way of enabling us to have some direct means of forming our own opinions. The minister may say that he will bring the experts to the house; I do not know. Or perhaps there are other ways. I am not very experienced—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Claxton: Mr. Chairman, the house, when it was meeting, decided that the estimates of the Department of National Defence would be called, beginning with item 202, and that is the item under discussion. And I suggest that every word said by the hon. member for Greenwood is out of order. We are discussing item 202, and following items.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not know much about the rules of this house.

Mr. Cruickshank: We realize that.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is one thing that is perfectly clear and that is that on the first item of any department there has been wide opportunity for discussion. I submit that the minister is entirely wrong in saying one has to be tied to any narrow compass. All I am asking the minister to do is to see if he can think of some way to enable us to be provided with some information. As I say, he may have some entirely different method that I have not thought of at all.

I am only putting this forward. I am only making a suggestion which I do not think he will want to have denied. We on this side of the house feel that we are being treated in a most unfair manner. That is all I am saying, and I should like to go on.

I should like to give this illustration from business. I have given you the situation of a general manager who comes to his directors and asks them to form an opinion without their having an opportunity to see the experts. I say that that is a most undesirable situation. I say further that I have no doubt we have experts in this house and I hope that in some way which the minister may devise better than I it will be possible for those men to form their opinions through direct contacts and then let the rest of us have the benefit of their advice. I cannot for the life of me believe that when the minister thinks this over he will not desire to do that if he can. If he does not, all I can say is that he is not the man I thought he was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Let me take back those words and just say that I would have thought that the minister would be anxious to meet us to the extent of letting us arrive at an independent judgment on these important matters. That is all I am asking and I do not think it is unreasonable. There ought to be some way of doing it. I do not know whether it is good parliamentary procedure, but I do know it is common sense. I believe every voter in this country will say it is common sense.

I think I am stating the situation fairly, and the minister can correct me if I am not, when I say that the minister is proposing that no member of this house except perhaps himself and the parliamentary assistant, and maybe one or two members of the government, shall have any direct contact with the sources of information, that is to say, with the experts. If that is a fair statement, and the minister will correct me if I am wrong, then I just cannot believe that it makes common sense, or that the minister will want to stick to that.

Why should he not want people to talk with the experts? Is it because he has the same fear as the general manager?

Mr. Claxton: I have already raised this question and the hon. gentleman, for whom I have the greatest respect based on a friendship of 25 years, should know that he cannot get around the rules of this house in the way he is trying. He cannot raise this question again and again and again.

Mr. Drew: And again.

Mr. Claxton: This is a new method of dealing with the rules of the house and the estimates that are referred to the committee of the whole house on supply.

The Chairman: I think on item 202 we should not discuss the manner of discussing the item, we should discuss the item itself. Standing order 58 reads:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am discussing item 202.

Mr. Cruickshank: No, you are not.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Who is the chairman of this committee? I submit I am discussing item 202. I am asking the minister in all sincerity whether he can assist us in some way to form an independent judgment and not merely have to go back to our constituents and say, "We do not know anything about it; all we know is what the minister told us." As I say, that is not common sense. I cannot believe that it is impossible to find some better method of dealing with it. I submit that I am discussing item 202 in every sense of the word.

The Chairman: It may be common sense, but it is out of order.

Mr. Sinnott: On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Greenwood is not—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Have we a new Speaker?

Mr. Sinnott: I am speaking on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Greenwood is not trying to discuss the situation; he is just telling the minister what to do.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I think it is high time we understood exactly what the procedure is. You will recall that the last estimates that were brought before the house were those of the Department of External Affairs. In calling those estimates, just as in calling these, the long accepted practice was adopted of the minister making a statement. Following that statement, those who cared to follow in the debate did so. It was clearly understood, and understood from the moment the minister began to speak, that, when the debate on the statement made by the minister ended, the motion would then be dealt with to refer the items to a committee.

The procedure now before us is precisely the same. The minister has used, and properly used, the calling of these estimates before the committee as a means of making his statement on national defence. He has covered the whole ambit of national defence, far beyond this single item. The practice is clearly established that the debate then continues in relation to the speech of the minister, and when that debate is concluded the items are proceeded with item by item.

That was the procedure followed in the case of the Department of External Affairs. It was so clearly followed that we now have an adjourned motion in relation to those estimates which will be resumed at a later date, not to deal with the item itself but with the debate which was continuing in relation to the statement by the minister. That is what we are doing now and it would be a violation of long accepted practice to suggest that we depart from that at this moment.

Mr. Claxton: If I may speak on the point of order, I could not agree more with the leader of the opposition, because he has stated the position perfectly. I am completely in agreement with him except when we go on to discuss, as I submit the hon. member for Greenwood has been doing for some time, something which is in addition and which has been decided in this house by a vote this week. He is now getting to the point where he is wasting our time and where he is out of order.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Apparently the minister has entirely misunderstood me. He thinks I am still talking about a committee. What I am doing—

Mr. Cruickshank: What are you doing?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Oh, Fraser Valley again. What I am doing is merely to ask the minister for help. I am merely asking the minister to exercise some common sense where we can be sensibly within the rules. I have very little more to say, but I do want to go back to what I think is a most interesting point. I am sure the members of the house should all be interested. Why is it that the minister feels that none of us must talk to the experts?

Let me say quickly that we recognize that there are certain matters of security. Of course we do. We are not irresponsible. We know there are certain things that cannot be disclosed and we also know that those are the minister's responsibility. But I am asking why it is that nobody can talk to the experts. Is it because the minister, like my imaginary general manager, is afraid that the experts may say things that are different from what they have said to him?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, perhaps my hon. friend is confused, but we have to follow the rules of the house. Standing order 57 reads:

> The house will appoint the committees of supply and ways and means at the commencement of every session, so soon as an address has been agreed to, in answer to His Excellency's speech.

Mr. Knowles: Why bring that up?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The first citation under that standing order reads:

The committee of supply controls the public expenditure by considering the grants of money that will be required by the government for the services of the year—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is just what I am talking about.

Mr. Cruickshank: What?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It continues:

—upon the estimates of expenditure presented by the ministers of the crown.

My hon. friend knows that the estimates are considered in this committee, not elsewhere. You may suggest on going into supply that you do not like this rule. You may object to it, but once we are in committee of supply it is to consider these estimates.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is right.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What you are suggesting is that we should bring along officials of the Department of National Defence so that you can personally cross-examine them.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Only if the committee approves it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Just one second; be patient. The rules of the house say that the minister is responsible for these estimates, and the government also.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I said that too.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): He is the one who will answer any question that is put to him. He is advised by officials of his department, by chiefs of staff and so forth. Nothing in the rules says that members of parliament are going to call before the committee of supply—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Nothing says they cannot.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Would you just listen patiently?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): You are taking up all the time.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. gentleman would want to have these officials here and question them because he says he is not too sure that the minister is right in what he is saying.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Well—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now we will change the procedure; we will take the minister away and you will have your dealings with officials of the department or chiefs of staff.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am only trying to explain the rules.

Mr. Cruickshank: He would not understand them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): He will after a while. You have the minister at your disposal. You may agree or disagree with him, but when we are in committee of supply you cannot change the rules and the methods by which the estimates are considered at this stage.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I just ask the Minister of Public Works this question. Suppose the Minister of National Defence wanted to bring somebody in here. It has been done before in wartime. Let me repeat that I do not think the minister listened to me as carefully as I wish he had.

Mr. Claxton: Never done.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to bring up the point that we are now left in the position where no one except the minister can see these experts. I want to raise that point, and that is my last point. I cannot see any reason why it should not be done, and I hope when the minister thinks it over he will not feel it is desirable to pull down the blinds and keep out the light.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, it is my privilege tonight to say a few words as to defence and the armed forces of Canada on these estimates. I think it is most appropriate that I, as the member for Kingston City, should have a few words to say as to this matter. I wish to say that I consider it a great honour to represent Kingston City not only because of its historical, educational and military background but also because it was once represented by the late Hon. Norman Rogers, who was formerly minister of national defence. I think it is fitting at this time that I should pay a tribute to this man because time does not lessen a tribute paid to so great a statesman.

It is also fitting that I should direct the attention of the house to the Royal Military College at Kingston. The Royal Military College is not exactly within the confines of my constituency, but just beyond the boundary thereof. I should also like to say that it is not the only military establishment in the city of Kingston and vicinity, a fact of which many hon. members are well aware. At this time I wish to direct the attention of the house particularly to the Royal Military College in order that hon. members may be aware of its activities and the good that it is doing in the building of Canada as a nation. I also wish to direct attention to a statement of the hon. member for Middlesex East to be found at page 90 of Hansard of the 21st of February of this year. He said that he considers the education of officers at the Royal Military College at Kingston as a waste, and that we might better train officers in the C.O.T.C. at universities. It is not my intention to make any personal attack on the hon. member for Middlesex East because I am quite sure that he was sincere and earnest in his remarks. He was directing attention to expenditures which he considered exorbitant in the education of young officers at the Royal Military College. He expressed the view that they could be trained elsewhere.

To understand fully the activities of the Royal Military College I think it is necessary to make a slight review of its history and the activities which are carried on there for which our money is being spent. It was brought into being in 1876 and is the oldest military school in Canada. I may say that in past years a number of its graduates were among the first presidents of the engineering institute. It is also a point of history that the stone frigate which was built in 1820 is still used, and is one of the main buildings at the Royal Military College.

Geographically the college is situated on a projection of land which ends in Point Frederick. On the east is Navy bay and on the west the Cataraqui river. The college is also blessed with many fine limestone buildings which at the present time are being extended. There is a dormitory now under construction for the accommodation of cadets who are being trained at the college to be officers. We must consider the military and educational role that the Royal Military College has played in making a nation of Canada. I might mention to the house that a large number of ex-cadets of the college have died on active service. Many of them have risen high in our present defence organizations. Up to last year there were only 2,032 graduates of Royal Military College since its opening in 1876 and 272 ex-cadets have died on active service. The proportion of its graduates killed on active service is greater than in any other Canadian university.

I think it is also significant to point out that between 85 and 90 per cent of the ex-cadets of military age were on active service during world war I and world war II. It has produced renowned and successful leaders, which is borne out by the fact that of the relatively small number of graduates it has produced three generals, nine lieutenant-generals and forty-six major-generals.

We should also consider the use to which the Royal Military College was put during the war. There was very little maintenance carried on during that time and we should consider what it is necessary to do now. It ceased to operate early in the war and was used for officer training for special courses. I am sure many hon. members of the house attended them. It reopened in September, 1948, and it is significant to note that it reopened as a joint services college. The courses are designed to train officer cadets for the active and reserve forces of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force. I might say at this point, with reference to the expenditure on the training of officers in Canada, there is also the Royal Roads college which has a two-year course. The distinction is that the Royal Military College of Kingston has a four-year course. With the exception of the final year, this college has no summer term. Each year consists of eleven months of instruction, and the year is divided into three terms, fall, winter and summer.

During the fall and winter terms 85 per cent of the instruction is on academic subjects and the remainder on service topics, including physical training. The summer term is devoted entirely to practical service training at the various armed forces establishments, and with different units to which a cadet may be attached during the summer in order to get what we might call his practical training in the services. This summer term of practical training must be taken by all cadets who successfully complete the fall and winter terms, and commences in May, continuing until late in August. In this term the cadets follow courses of practical military training in their own service, whatever it may be. The pay for the cadet during the summer term amounts to $153 per month plus board, lodging and clothing.

Naval cadets are appointed to the naval reserve with the rank of cadet. Studies include instruction in navigation, seamanship, engineering, communication, gunnery and other subjects. The practical aspects of the naval instruction are emphasized in the four to six weeks they spend at sea during the summer on board ships of the Royal Canadian Navy.

Army cadets are enrolled in the C.O.T.C. and are given the status of second lieutenants during training. Officer cadets receive training in the branch of the army in which they will be commissioned. Training is conducted at the various schools under a progressive syllabus during the three years of summer training. On completion of the three years of the C.O.T.C. program an officer cadet is qualified as a lieutenant in the active force or as a captain in the reserve force if he so chooses, which I will speak about later.

Air force cadets are appointed to the R.C.A.F. supplementary reserve class "F", with the rank of cadet. They receive flying training as pilots, navigation officers or radio officers during the three years of summer training before graduation from college; and on completion of their course are awarded their wings and join whatever branch of the air force they may prefer.

I wish now for a moment to deal with the details of these courses which these young men receive. The first two years are the same at both Royal Military College and Royal Roads. The third and fourth years of a general or engineering course are taken at R.M.C., with specialization starting in the third year. Four to five hours a week in all courses are devoted to physical training and service subjects. I think this is significant. We must realize that if these cadets who take their third and fourth years at R.M.C. are to be properly trained in engineering, there must be reasonable capital expenditures as far as laboratories are concerned.

It will have been noted that since the beginning of the year Canadian newspapers and magazines have been carrying advertisements with respect to enlistment at R.M.C. We as Canadians cannot but feel proud of the Royal Military College because of the democratic way in which the cadets are chosen. The requirements for admission are high, but the procedure is democratic. A candidate to become a cadet must be a Canadian citizen or other British subject normally resident in Canada. Candidates must have reached their sixteenth year but not their twentieth birthday on the first day of January preceding entry. Naval applicants, except in the case of candidates from French classical colleges, must not have reached their nineteenth birthday on January 1. A high standard of physical fitness is required of all candidates, and I am sure we will all agree this is very necessary for anyone about to enter His Majesty's service. The examinations are held at convenient centres by boards consisting of service medical officers. Candidates are also required to appear before a regional board of service officers and college officials for a personal interview. Both medical examinations and personal interviews take place each year about the first week of July. I think we might condense it by saying that any boy, no matter who he is, providing he is physically fit and has a sufficiently high academic standing, may be admitted as a cadet at R.M.C. Half the candidates are selected under a provincial quota determined by population, while the remainder are selected in open competition. In both cases selection is based upon the academic standing and the recommendation of the service board as to the physical and personal characteristics of candidates. Later I will discuss the matter of the fees which the candidates must pay the receiver general. I am quite sure that hon. members will agree that they are sufficiently low that almost any lad who can qualify as to physical fitness and academic standing may become a cadet at R.M.C.

Before any member of this house or any Canadian citizen attacks the expenditures being made by the Canadian people to maintain the Royal Military College, that person should carefully weigh the advantages of this college to Canada as a whole. They should also make a comparison with other forms of military education such as the C.O.T.C. which, it is granted, does an excellent job at the universities, where education in arts, letters and sciences is predominant. At R.M.C. cadets receive an education in arts, letters and sciences and a military education, with none of these being stressed at the expense of the others.

I should like to review briefly the role of R.M.C. It is a military educational establishment maintained primarily for the training of cadets for entry into the commissioned ranks of His Majesty's service. It has the educational status of a university college, and is a full member of the national conference of Canadian universities. It is one of the three sources for the production of officers for our armed forces in Canada; and in considering the Royal Military College I think it important to remember that it does not depend upon quantity but rather upon the quality of its products. I believe we should pay attention to the fact that it sets a standard pattern which serves as a yardstick for the various officer production schemes we have in Canada.

The unification of the services is one of the latest developments in military science. In this development R.M.C., in its training of cadets for all armed services, plays a key part. It is appropriate this week that I should speak about R.M.C. and its importance in the national life of Canada, because a week ago tonight the West Point hockey team motored to Kingston to play the annual hockey game with the cadets of R.M.C. It is regretted, but shows signs of good sportsmanship, that those boys came up here with the idea of winning their fourth straight hockey game over R.M.C. I must say they did very well this time, as the minister stated the other day, but West Point were repelled by R.M.C. by a score of 6 to 4.

By way of deviation, may I stress the importance of the hockey game between West Point and R.M.C. These boys came from the United States to play against R.M.C. They spent the week end with our cadets, dined with them, were shown around the buildings, went on parade with them, and went to church with them. We in Canada should feel grateful we have a college of that nature, because here we find friendships being established between the future generals, admirals, and air marshals of these two great American countries. Regardless of who won the game, I am sure that both countries will be better off in the future, owing to this intermingling of our defence leaders of tomorrow.

If we are to fully appreciate the value of R.M.C., one must look at least 50 years into the future of Canada. No one knows what lies in store for Canada, and what troubles are ahead. We do know that between world wars I and II there appeared in our universities an almost complete lack of military training, and such periods will likely return. Therefore, we should be congratulated on having two military colleges.

The Royal Military College has a large investment in buildings, starting with a stone frigate in 1820. It also has an extremely capable staff of civil servants, backed by a powerful alumni who, after leaving college, take an active part in defence developments in Canada. They are also interested in the service training in Canada, and I believe are always available for their suggestions. There is another role which R.M.C. plays in the national life of Canada. It helps to weld together the English and French-speaking Canadians. French is a compulsory subject at R.M.C., and the college attracts a good percentage of French-speaking cadets. I believe statistics show that last year around 15 per cent of the cadets were French-speaking, and it is expected that this proportion will increase with time.

Prior to this last war we often heard that if there were a world war II it would be a war of great scientific proportions. Towards the end of world war II we learned of the atom bomb. Now we are speaking of the H-bomb. If there is a world war III it will call for a greater number of scientifically trained officers than world war II. Every dollar spent on capital equipment for R.M.C. in peacetime increases our war potential. It could be compared to the British Military College of Science, a unit with a highly qualified technical staff whose teaching and research facilities, on very short notice, could undertake the training of a large number of technical officers for the services. R.M.C. is like the military college of science, in that it trains officers for the technical corps and the army, but R.M.C. differs in that it does the same for the navy and the air force. In so far as research is concerned, R.M.C. and the military college of science are parallel.

There is no more important investment that Canada could make in peacetime than the education of an officer, no matter what service he chooses to enter. Such an officer corps undoubtedly becomes the nucleus of our forces in wartime. When we compare the cost we might say, by way of comparison, that one jet fighter and its accessories would buy the equipment for all the laboratories at R.M.C., and maintain them for a period of 10 years. At this particular time in our history, the value to the services of the engineering graduates trained on this equipment, over a period of 20 years, would certainly be greater than the value obtained from one jet fighter, which might either be destroyed or become obsolete in a few years.

It is important, both in Canada and in the United States, that there be a means of introducing into our universities compulsory physical discipline and training, in order that we can make our young men physically, mentally and spiritually fit. R.M.C. is one of the few educational establishments on a military and university level which fulfils this role. The quality of officers produced at the service college will depend, in the long run, on the quality of the staff and cadets that can be attracted to the college. Unless both the staff and cadets are of high calibre, there is no way of producing a product of the high calibre required to form the nucleus of our wartime army or to lead our peacetime army. Upon admission to R.M.C. or Royal Roads, each officer cadet must undertake, upon graduation, to serve as a commissioned officer in one of the three services, either in the active or in the reserve force.

A brilliant young cadet, keen to make a reputation in civilian life, plays an important role in the well-being of R.M.C. He acts as a leader and pace-setter while at R.M.C., and builds up the prestige of the college in civilian life. Experience shows that this type of graduate finds time to serve with distinction in the reserve force in whatever part of Canada he may choose to reside. Again, this contributes to the standardization of our training.

I have mentioned previously that Kingston is an educational city. I am sure you are all aware that Queen's university is located there, and I know that many graduates of Queen's are on the floor of this house. But Queen's plays a greater part than merely being an educational institution. It is a most important factor in making R.M.C. an attractive seat of learning. It is significant to note that the faculty at R.M.C. takes an active part in all the activities at Queen's. Last year five of the R.M.C. staff lectured at Queen's, and several members of the Queen's staff lectured at R.M.C. It must be realized, though, that such an association will last only as long as R.M.C. contributes its share of instructors equal in professional status to the instructors at Queen's. I think it is most important, therefore, that the staff at R.M.C. be as well qualified as the staff at Queen's, or equivalent universities, in order that we may maintain a high standard of training for our officer cadets. If the staff at R.M.C. is to be as good as at other universities, it is only natural that those in charge at R.M.C. must be prepared to pay an equivalent salary. I understand the staff members of this military college are not allowed to take consulting work in the summer, but are retained in research or training in summer courses.

Canada has traditionally based her defence on a nucleus force built up in peacetime. We are also dependent upon voluntary enlistment. I think it is to the advantage of the defence of Canada that our nucleus force, either active or reserve, has available as officers those trained in a standard pattern, which makes the unification of the services easier. The member for Middlesex East (Mr. White) has stated in substance that it would be better to train officers in the C.O.T.C., at a cost of $500 per cadet, than by operating R.M.C. at a cost of $30,000 per officer. I think, before we can accept his view, we should review the cost to the government of training a cadet at R.M.C. According to the information which I have obtained, there are at present 170 cadets attending that college. You will recall that it only reopened in the fall of 1948, and it was estimated that for the next four years there would be 100 entrants in each class. The plan therefore would be to accommodate 400 cadets who, it is estimated, will be in attendance in the year 1951. The full cost of operating R.M.C. at full strength would be in the neighbourhood of $1 million per year, exclusive of capital costs. If the fees which are paid to the receiver general, and of which I will speak later, are deducted plus a reasonable deduction for the use of equipment, staff and other facilities of R.M.C. by the services, defence research boards and other government departments during the three and a half months in the summer when the college is free of cadets, we therefore could estimate the cost of training the 400 cadets at $740,000. The cost per cadet per annum therefore would be in the neighbourhood of $1,850.

In the brief submitted to the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences, dated July, 1949, it is pointed out that the cost of training a medical student in Canada is approximately $1,200 per year. When the cost of medical research and maintenance of medical research is considered, which is important, the cost of training this medical student would be $1,600 per year. Of this total annual cost, I think we will find from that report that the student pays 25 per cent. Therefore I think that this sum of $1,600 for training of a medical student should be borne in mind in the consideration of the training of a cadet at R.M.C. As I have said, the training of the cadet can be estimated at $1,850 per year per cadet; but at R.M.C. it is necessary for the cadets to live in dormitories in order that they have the advantages of a military mess. In other words, it is a military unit in order to train them as young officers. This part of their training normally should cost in the neighbourhood of $550 per year. When this is deducted from the $1,850, we get a figure of $1,300 per year per cadet. We should also consider during that period of time—those eight and a half months when they are taking training there—the staff is also carrying on research to the benefit of the defence research board.

Let us now consider the fees which are paid by cadets attending R.M.C. There is an annual tuition fee of $100 payable in advance, and in addition a charge to cover the partial cost of room, uniforms, laundry, books, etc., of $450 per cadet in the first year and $200 in the subsequent years. There is another $30 which is the normal athletic fee paid at other universities. Therefore, to sum it up, each cadet pays to the receiver general in his first year $580 and in his subsequent years the sum of $330. It is also to be noted that he receives transportation costs of $25 once a year from his home to the college.

I am sure that the hon. member for Middlesex East cannot say that the expenditures entailed in educating a cadet at R.M.C. are exorbitant. I agree with him that there have been large capital expenditures this year owing to the preparation of laboratories for 300 to 400 students in the year 1951; but I think it is proper to assume that these capital expenditures will not go up, and such expenditures made in peacetime are war potentials for the future. We must also bear in mind that during wartime R.M.C. was used for officer training and its laboratories and equipment were put to use by the officers trained there; and I doubt very much if there was much time for maintenance in those days. If we did not have R.M.C. or if we did not have a college for training our officers, as has been suggested, I think that we would be unique among the leading countries of the world, because most countries have their officer training schools. The United States has West Point, England has Sandhurst and the Military College of Science and Belgium has its Military Academy. I think it is also significant to compare the establishment of the total staff of R.M.C., including cleaners and cooks, up to strength, and students; I think we shall find that the ratio is ·7 of staff to 1 of the cadets, which is about one-half of the figure for West Point and much less than that for Sandhurst. The pre-war figures at R.M.C. were ·85 to 1. We shall therefore be running a post-war R.M.C. with a smaller comparative staff per cadet; and from what I can find out, R.M.C. is being operated at the present time at the lowest staff-student ratio of any military college.

It may also be of interest for the committee to know that during last summer, which was the first summer of vacation since R.M.C. reopened in 1948, an all arms course was carried on by the army at R.M.C. This, I understand, was mostly for students who had three years C.O.T.C., and who spent their fourth summer, for final training, in the college grounds. I might say that we must always bear in mind that this is one way to train our officers in which we can have one standard and have unification of the services.

I also wish to make a short remark with respect to a report in the Winnipeg Free Press of March 4, 1950, of a speech made by the hon. member for Middlesex East in which he states that, as he saw it, the R.M.C. is merely creating and nurturing a military caste in Canada, that it might better be closed and the training of army officers turned over to the universities. As one who resides in Kingston, I wish to say that I have many friends and neighbours there who are graduates of R.M.C. and are connected with it. There are many other such persons in the city. I doubt whether there is a larger group or aggregation of cadets and staff of a military institution in any other place in Canada; and I have not found these gentlemen to be as described, a caste separate and distinct from other people or other citizens. They seem to be successful, to take an interest in civil life and to retain a keen interest in army affairs. I might say that they are a benefit to any community, whether in the active army or civilians in the reserve force, or retired. They are also among the best of citizens and are a great contribution to the backbone of any community.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Monday being private members' day, we shall follow the order of business set out in standing order No. 15.

Mr. Knowles: Pipe lines.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 20, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRESENTATION ON TUESDAY, MARCH 28

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, barring developments which I do not now expect, I would propose to bring down my budget next Tuesday night, March 28. I would hope that I might be able to get the unanimous consent of the house to do so at eight o'clock. Perhaps it might be arranged to have private and public bills, which is normally the first order of business at eight o'clock on Tuesdays at this stage of the session, follow my remarks and the brief ones of the opposition financial critic.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Electoral district of Broadview

Dominion of Canada, To wit } House of Commons

To the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons:

We, the undersigned, hereby give notice that a vacancy has occurred in the representation in the House of Commons, for the electoral district of Broadview, due to the decease of the former member, Thomas Langton Church.

Given under our hands and seals, at Ottawa, this 20th day of March, A.D. 1950.

J. W. Noseworthy,
Member for the electoral district of York South

Stanley H. Knowles,
Member for the electoral district of Winnipeg North Centre

Accordingly I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Just before coming into the house I saw a copy of Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. At the top of page 3 the order of precedence is private bills, Senate amendments to public bills, etc. Further down the page is the heading, "Orders of the day". I think the usual procedure is to call private bills before calling orders of the day. Therefore I now call private bills.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, because of the order of business to be followed today I would ask you to permit me to direct a question to the government which I believe is of particular concern to hon. members who live some distance away from Ottawa.

Several days ago a question was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) as to the date on which it is intended that the house shall rise for the Easter recess. At that time the Prime Minister indicated he would give instructions that the whips of the parties be brought together for the purpose of discussing the matter. Time is passing. It is obviously a matter of great importance to all members to be able to make their arrangements for the Easter holidays and secure the necessary travel reservations. Good Friday is only two weeks from next Friday, and the time is short within which members can make reservations. No matter what the length of the recess may be, I suggest to the government that this is a fairly obvious consideration which should be borne in mind.

Unless there are any matters of overriding urgency, I am sure that members would prefer to spend holy week in their own homes, because it is a week which is of great importance to most of them. Therefore I would ask the government to give an indication as to the date on which the house will rise for the Easter recess. No steps have been taken to bring the whips together; obviously, therefore, it becomes a matter for decision by the government.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in discussing the subject the Prime Minister indicated the other day that the government had in mind adjournment on the Thursday evening before Good Friday and the reassembling of the house on the Monday after the week that follows Easter Sunday. I have heard no objection to that proposal, and I assume there is no change in view.

Mr. Wylie: In that event we shall not get home until Sunday morning; some members will not get home until Monday.

Mr. Howe: The Prime Minister will be in his seat tomorrow, and I will ask him either to confirm or to vary what I have said. In the meantime I think hon. members can make their plans accordingly.

Mr. Drew: I do not want to enter into a lengthy debate, but I should like to point out that there has been no discussion. It is stated that there has been no objection. There may be none within the ranks of the government, but we were unaware, aside from rumours which may have been reported to us, that the date mentioned was suggested. I repeat that it would be much more appropriate for holy week to be taken as a holiday, and for members to return immediately after Easter, than to take the following week.

Mr. Knowles: Since the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said that there has been no objection to what the Prime Minister announced, I should like to point out, for the purpose of the record, that the Prime Minister said that the views of the other parties would be ascertained from the opposition whips, and I have written to the government whip indicating our views in the matter.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps the matter can be left in abeyance until tomorrow. I am sure the Prime Minister will endeavour to clarify the situation.

Mr. Low: I should like to ask the minister to convey to the Prime Minister our desire that the matter be reconsidered in the light of what has been said. We would prefer to have the house adjourn earlier so that our members can reach western Canada before Sunday.

Mr. Knowles: That was our request.

INCOME TAX

APPEAL BOARD—JUDGMENT IN CASE OF "MR. C." AND THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I should like to refer to the judgment of the income tax appeal board in the case of "Mr. C." and the Minister of National Revenue, and make a request in connection therewith. Will the minister consider tabling the judgment, evidence and reasons for judgment involved in the order of the appeal board?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I shall look into the matter, and after I have reviewed the question more carefully I shall be able to give an answer.

FARMERS—PROSECUTIONS—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ASKED ON MARCH 16

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): On a question of privilege, I should like to refer to a question asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), to be found at page 849 of Hansard for March 17. It had to do with prosecutions of farmers under the Income Tax Act.

The information which was given to the press was that during the period from January 1 to March 6, 1950, 1,953 summonses were issued for failure to file returns. These summonses covered all types of taxpayers, and this fact was so reported in most newspapers. I reiterate that it is not practicable to break down the figures by occupational groups. I should also like to state that the Winnipeg Free Press, if it published a report, as was stated by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, to the effect that 1,953 farmers were prosecuted, was in error in so doing.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Maybank for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the motion of Mr. MacDougall: "That this question be now put."

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on Tuesday last I outlined the two alternate routes for a pipe line from Alberta to the Pacific coast. One was the route which is proposed to be followed by this company, running from southern Alberta into southern British Columbia and then into the United States at the nearest point. The other was through the Yellowhead pass and down through central British Columbia, serving Canada first and then going on to the United States. I also spoke of public opinion in British Columbia favouring the Canada-first route. Further proof that I was correct in those statements is given in a resolution adopted unanimously by the legislature of British Columbia last Thursday. I will not read the recitals to that resolution, but the final paragraph was as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that the legislative assembly of the province of British Columbia urge upon the federal and provincial authorities concerned the advisability, in the interests not only of British Columbia but of Canada as well, that such pipe lines be constructed through the Yellowhead pass and thence through the interior of British Columbia to Vancouver, with provision for the extension of the line to the Peace river block, so that when sufficient supplies of petroleum and natural gas are available in that area there will be an available outlet to market without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): May I ask the hon. gentleman if the resolution of the British Columbia legislature opposes the bill now before this house?

Mr. Green: The resolution advocates the Canada-first route through the Yellowhead pass. That resolution was moved by the member for Peace River, part of which is in the constituency of the hon. member who asked the question; and the one riding in British Columbia which would gain the most by the Yellowhead route would be the riding of the hon. member for Cariboo.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I would like an answer to my question.

Mr. Green: The hon. member may make his own speech. I am not answering any more of his questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would inform the hon. member that questions may only be asked with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): It was an honest question, and I should like an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Green: I have here a press dispatch of the following day from Vancouver, headed "Victoria unanimous on B.C. gas pipe line". The dispatch goes on to say:

> The house got on its collective high horse Thursday. Party lines were forgotten as M.L.A.'s unanimously went on record for a gas pipe line from Alberta through B.C. to the Pacific coast.
> They feared that if they didn't do something, the U.S. would beat us . . .
> Even the public galleries grew enthusiastic. One after another, M.L.A.'s hopped up to say why, of course, the line should be in B.C.
> Opposition leader Winch said the C.C.F., too, wants the line in B.C. He urged the house to speak in a united voice for B.C. first, because there's a very powerful New York voice in the House of Commons . . .
> Everyone agreed pressure should be put on Ottawa to have the line in B.C. The resolution went through with flying colours and everyone thumped desks.

It will be rather interesting to see the attitude of British Columbia Liberals in this house—interesting to see whether their fear of their constituents will overcome their fear of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

Then I pointed out that no company had a prior right to this route. The Alberta Natural Gas Company could choose the Yellowhead route too, or any other route which served Canada first; and if they should do so there would be no objection in this house.

The suggestion has been made that the question of the route is none of our business. In moving second reading of this bill the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) made no attempt whatever to explain the route. Asked where the line was to run, he replied, "I don't know"; and he said it in such a way that one could only take from his remarks that he had no intention of giving the house that information. We have been told that the granting of a charter should be automatic, that parliament has no duty other than to grant it. We are told that questions of policy must be left to the board of transport commissioners, to the Alberta natural gas and petroleum conservation board, and finally to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Well, I suggest that the board of transport commissioners will never take the responsibility of deciding that the route must serve Canada first. There is no hint given in the legislation that such is government policy. How is that board supposed to know that it must decide whether or not the route is to serve Canada first? Besides, the board of transport commissioners have plenty of trouble of their own just now trying to straighten out the freight rates mess. So far they have not been very successful in solving that problem, and they are most unlikely to be successful in solving the pipe-line problem.

As for the Alberta natural gas and petroleum conservation board, surely its responsibility is to decide whether there is gas to be sold. It is not the responsibility of that board to decide which way it shall go from the province. As for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, he has made his attitude abundantly clear. He calls those of us who advocate that the resources of Canada should be used first for the Canadian people "little Canadians." That is the way he describes anyone who advocates serving Canada first. The other day he was asked a prepared question by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart), and brought in a very carefully prepared answer which said—

Mr. Howe: I just want to say I had no knowledge that any question was going to be asked, and I had no prepared answer.

Mr. Green: It is a funny thing that the minister should have read from a typed statement when giving his answer. Someone in his office knew all about it, in any event. The following day the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) asked, at page 850 of Hansard:

> Am I to understand from that statement that no export permit will be granted other than through an all-Canadian route?

The minister did not answer; he made a number of evasive statements which did not have a thing to do with the question, and gave the hon. member for Fraser Valley no reply whatever. It is obvious that his policy on this question is the same as the policy of the United States oil and gas interests. We do not expect, therefore, very much help from the Minister of Trade and Commerce in seeing that this pipe line goes through British Columbia before going to the United States.

This house has a duty to perform on this question, Mr. Speaker. If the members believe that the route to the Pacific should serve Canadians first, then they can easily force this company, as well as the second company for which application is made, to promise to build this route accordingly. In fact this parliament could write a stipulation to that effect into each bill. Certainly the record of the applicants for incorporation of this particular company is such that we know the Alberta Natural Gas Company will not serve British Columbia first unless it is compelled to do so.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: I must point out it is only with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor that questions may be asked.

Mr. Green: If you will not be too strict about my time, sir, I shall be glad to answer the question.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): When the other pipe line bills were before the house in April of last year, did the hon. member insist upon the insertion of a restriction such as he advocates for this bill?

Mr. Green: If the hon. member will read the speech I made on the main pipe-line bill, I believe he will find I advocated that Canadians should be served first; that has been our stand throughout.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): You never moved any amendment to the bill.

Mr. Green: The charter bills are in the shape they are because that was the policy of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Howe: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has made a statement about me; so may I say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had absolutely nothing to do with those charters. There was no reason why he should.

Mr. Knowles: You drafted the over-all bills.

Mr. Green: They were at least approved by the cabinet. I may have named the wrong minister.

Mr. Howe: No; approved by the law clerk of the House of Commons.

Mr. Green: The development of British Columbia has been a long, hard struggle, made possible largely by the determination, courage, and foresight of our pioneer parents. The people of that province have been in direct competition with our neighbours in Idaho, Washington, and Oregon. They have been at a disadvantage as compared with those good folk south of the line. For one thing, there are far more people in those three states than there are in British Columbia. The producers in those three states have a larger home market. There is far more arable land there than there is in British Columbia, and the produce matures much earlier. If this company's plan is followed and natural gas, and then oil, go by the United States route, British Columbia will be further handicapped. She will be handicapped because Canadian resources are allowed to go to the United States first.

If this house grants the application for incorporation, it is in fact betraying the people of British Columbia. I am in deadly earnest when I say that. I am convinced it is in the best interests not only of British Columbia but of Canada that this bill should be defeated.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. T. Applewhaite (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the opposition.

Mr. Drew: I have no desire to speak first, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Skeena wishes to go ahead.

Mr. Applewhaite: I thank the leader of the opposition for his courtesy, and I trust that nothing I have to say will make him regret his decision.

It seems to me that I have heard over and over again what amounts to the same speech in these debates; I have lost count of how many times or by how many hon. members the speech has been made. In fact I have the impression that I have heard what amounts to the same speech from the same hon. member on more than one occasion. These two bills have been before us now for nearly a month, and we had two somewhat similar bills before us for the most of last session. We have listened to a lot of words about them, but we have learned very little that is new. I think all hon. members will admit that these speeches have been more notable for their vague generalities and their hysterics than they have been for their facts or logical arguments.

There is evidence now that this hysterical, illogical and incorrect thinking is spreading beyond this chamber to other parts of the country. I refer particularly to parts of British Columbia. Whether that is being encouraged and fostered by the friends of those who already have a charter, I am unable to say. It has been said before, but I am going to repeat it, that this bill we are discussing does nothing except bring into being a legal entity, a corporation or company which can be born in no other way. Those who object to the granting of the charter, that is, to the birth of this company, have only one real argument. It amounts to this: Do not bring this company into the world; it might not do what we think is right. It would be just as logical to pass a law against having children, because they might not be amenable to the line of reasoning of my hon. friend. That may sound absurd, but it is no more absurd than some of the speeches to which we have listened.

Ostensibly the opposition to this bill arises out of the route of the pipe line, the construction of which this bill envisages. Those who oppose the bill claim to do so because they say they fear, perhaps with some reason, that this company might not build from Alberta to the Pacific coast by a Canadian route. As a matter of fact the bill does not say the pipe line will go to the Pacific coast, so it might be questionable whether that subject is before us. The responsibility for the route of that pipe line is not the responsibility of this House of Commons, as the law says today.

The Pipe Lines Act, sections 11(a) and (b), says:

> A company shall not, except as in this act otherwise provided, begin the construction of a section or part of a company pipe line, until,
> (a) The board has by order granted the company leave to construct the line;
> (b) The plan, profile and book of reference of the section or part of the proposed line have been approved by the board.

Section 12(1) reads as follows:

> (1) Upon an application for an order granting leave to construct a line, the company shall file with the board a map showing the general location of the proposed line, the termini, and all cities, towns, villages, railways and navigable waters through, under or across which the line is to pass.

To protect provincial rights and interests, section 12(2) says:

> (2) The company shall file a copy of the application and of the map with the attorney general of each province to which the application relates in whole or in part . . .

Section 12(3) reads as follows:

> (3) Upon the application, the board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant and in particular to the objection of any party interested . . .

That is the law today, that the board of transport commissioners shall decide the question of a route. Is it a wise provision? The hon. member who preceded me evidently thought so. When he was speaking on the general bill on April 8, 1949, as recorded at page 2513 of Hansard he said:

> The minister has already pointed out that the board of transport commissioners is to be made supreme in administering this act. That is a wise plan, because the board of transport commissioners is a judicial body, and it is wiser to put them in control rather than have the control placed directly in the hands of a department of government. But the minister said nothing at all about the interest of the provinces in these pipe lines. I believe that the provinces of Canada, certainly the province of Alberta, are vitally interested in this legislation. I am afraid that the legislation will not work out as it is meant to unless there is the utmost co-operation with the provincial authorities.

Mr. Sinnott: Who said that?

Mr. Applewhaite: The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). In order to set hon. members worries straight as to the views of the province of Alberta, I should like again to place on the record a paragraph from the telegram from Premier E. C. Manning, who, I assume, speaks for Alberta, in which he said:

> The Alberta government is not opposed to the incorporation of the Alberta Natural Gas Company or any other bona fide company under provisions of Pipe Lines Act but on the contrary feels very strongly that no bona fide company should be refused incorporation in that refusal would deprive the province of its right to deal with any or all legitimate companies interested in exporting gas and would restrict such dealings to those particular companies favoured by parliament for incorporation.

Are the hon. gentlemen still in favour of co-operating with the provinces, particularly Alberta, or do they prefer to restrict such dealings to those particular companies favoured by parliament for incorporation? I return to the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, at page 2513, where he is reported as having said:

> I am going to suggest to the minister and to the house that when this bill receives second reading it be referred to a committee of the house. I presume the proper committee would be the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I suggest that it be referred to that committee for consideration. The same course should be followed with the special acts which are to be brought in in respect of the different companies. If such procedure is followed the result will be that the members of the house, the press and the Canadian public generally will have an opportunity to study the terms of the bill, and we may find in the end that we have the very best kind of legislation that can be enacted.

I assume that the hon. gentlemen are still in favour of the very best kind of legislation that can be enacted. Again, as reported at page 2653, the hon. gentleman said:

> When the bill was up for second reading it was suggested by members of the various opposition parties that not only this foundation bill but also the special acts should be referred to that committee, and I would ask that that be done.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Whom are you quoting?

Mr. Applewhaite: I am quoting the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. The hon. member said a great many things on that occasion.

Mr. Fulton: Why do you not read the whole of the speech?

Mr. Applewhaite: That was the end of that particular speech. I might just stop for a moment at this time, Mr. Speaker, in order to suggest that if hon. members would restrain that impatience born of frustration which always marks the defenders of the indefensible cause, I could perhaps get on with my remarks.

As reported at the foot of page 2513, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra said:

> The third consideration—and this is a very important one—is that this development of oil and natural gas must bring down the cost to the Canadian consumer. I submit that the development could be of great help in reducing the cost of living in Canada. There is not much use in Canada's developing vast quantities of oil and natural gas if our people are not going to have any benefit by way of reduced prices for those commodities.

That speaks for itself. The hon. member also said something else. I admit that on this occasion he was speaking with reference to his suggestion that railway rights of way be used; he said so many things that I have difficulty in keeping up with him.

Mr. Maybank: You are doing all right.

Mr. Applewhaite: As reported at page 2657, he said:

> If the cost is higher than necessary the Canadian people are going to have to pay the difference.

And again, at page 2514:

> That means that pipe lines should be installed in the most economical way possible.

That also speaks for itself. Again at page 2514 we find the hon. gentleman saying this:

> I hope the control of the board of transport commissioners is not to be a mere formality. If that were to be so, the bill would have little value.
> The administration of this measure is left to the board of transport commissioners, and that board must be in a position where it can do a real job.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Applewhaite: I should be most willing, Mr. Speaker, to permit at the end of my remarks all the questions that members wish to ask; but I think if they restrain their impatience they may find that the questions which are now worrying them will be met before I get through.

Mr. Knowles: All right.

Mr. Fulton: We will tell your colleagues to follow the same course.

Mr. Knowles: I shall listen with interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Applewhaite: The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was not the only person who believed that the administration, in so far as these practical questions are concerned, should be left in the hands of the board of transport commissioners; because in the same debate, on April 27, 1949, as reported at page 2645, the leader of the Social Credit party, who is an Albertan, had this to say:

> So far as it provides authority for the regulation by the board of transport commissioners of pipe lines for conducting oil, we think that the bill is excellent.

Every hon. member and every individual in this country favours an all-Canadian route if such a route is economically feasible and possible. Of that fact, of course, there can be no question. These resolutions which have been passed—and I would include the resolution of the British Columbia legislature—would have been far more effective if they had included those words "provided the same is economically feasible and possible." We all favour an all-Canadian route under those circumstances. Let there be no misunderstanding about that. But we in this chamber are in this position: The existence of that feasibility and practicability, even possibility, has not been proved before us and cannot be proved before us, because this is not a forum in which that sort of evidence can be adduced. If this bill were allowed to go before a committee, or if this company were allowed to go before the board of transport commissioners, cost accountants could be produced and these questions could be answered. The failure to permit this bill to go to a committee just makes it impossible for us to get that information. In view of the requests that have been made from various sections of the opposition during the past few months for a committee on this and a committee on that, it is a little bit difficult for us to ascertain why the opponents of this bill are apparently afraid to let it go before a committee. No logical reason for that course of action, or rather of inaction, has as yet been produced.

I do not think it has ever been denied that the refusal to incorporate any more pipe-line companies in the west would have the effect of establishing a monopoly for the one company which already has its charter. That is not a monopoly compelling that company to build through British Columbia. As the bill has been passed and as the bill stands today, there is no restriction whatever, legally, upon the company, forbidding it to build anywhere in the world it likes, provided that it can get the necessary permits.

We are asked to defeat this bill. On what ground? On somebody's vague suggestion as to the intentions of this company and the intentions of the existing company, as to whose intentions there is and can be no definite proof until each company restricts its applications before the board of transport commissioners to one route and one route only. I have said this would result in the establishment of a monopoly. I repeat that this is not a monopoly which compels the existing company to build an all-Canadian route. It is not a monopoly which compels the existing company to build any route. It is a monopoly upon which, if they choose, they can just sit on their exclusive charter and do nothing, and Alberta can whistle for markets and British Columbia whistle for gas indefinitely.

It has been suggested that we must eventually land up with a monopoly for practical reasons; that only one pipe line is feasible. That may or may not be true, but in any event it is only partly true. In the first place, why establish the monopoly in the negotiation stage? Why should we guarantee any chosen instrument freedom from all fair competition by any other at any time? We are told that we are going to find ourselves with a monopoly as the result of a sort of accident. Well, the cases in which someone did not know the gun was loaded are also accidents, accidents which could have been prevented with a little precaution; and, accident or not, the victim is just as dead. My friends of the C.C.F.—I think I still have some—will at least agree with me in this, that an established monopoly like death is pretty permanent and pretty hard to overcome. However, if the suggestion is that a monopoly is essential, and that the present company, which has its charter, is entitled to retain such a monopoly because it is going to build an all-Canadian route, though its charter does not say so, I would suggest this. Let the directors of that company hold a meeting and say so, and then let the directors of that company if they want us to hold off any competition in the interests of Canada, come to parliament and apply for an amendment to their charter which would forbid them to build elsewhere than in Canada, at least until they do reach the city of Vancouver. That would clinch the argument. I hardly think they will do that. It would be interesting to know what valid argument they can produce against such a suggestion.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You make the amendment and I shall vote for it.

Mr. Applewhaite: The suggestion has been made that we who support these bills on principle are in some way traitors to Canada or to our respective provinces. The word used by one hon. member was that this is a betrayal of at least part of the country. Nothing could be more absurd. A better job in the interests of Canada, a better job in the interests of British Columbia and Alberta, is being done by those who are willing to see all these companies go before a committee, and all these companies take their applications before the board of transport commissioners, than is being done by those who would retain one unrestricted charter for only one company.

As I say, we have no binding information as to the intentions of either company, and we cannot get that information in this chamber. There has been quite a lot of talk about surpluses; there has been quite a lot of talk in this house and outside of it by hon. members from Alberta—and I am sure they would not exaggerate—about the surpluses and potentialities of both oil and gas in their province. Then we have had a lot of opposition criticism of this government because we have not found markets for Canadian surpluses. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not the Canadian government who are stopping the exploration of possible markets for this particular commodity. In that connection I trust the leader of the Social Credit party will not be annoyed if I repeat some remarks which he made, and which are reported at page 2776 of Hansard of April 29, 1949. I quote and adopt these words because he said them so much better than I could. Speaking of the bills which were before the last parliament, he said:

> They should all be passed. If they are passed it will enable both the Alberta government and the board of transport commissioners to consider every application for a licence and to deal with that application on its own merits. That would be ample protection to the people of this country.

We have no facts—of course we cannot have them—as to the cost of construction of an all-Canadian route. If this bill were before a committee, and still more so, if this company were before the board of transport commissioners, these things could be found out. At the present time this house does not know whether it would cost $10 million, $20 million or $70 million to build through British Columbia, or whether it could be done cheaper; and for some reason every step seems to be taken to make certain that this house does not get that information.

What about the consumer? Have we no responsibility for the consumer? I assume every hon. member will agree that the final cost to the consumer must depend very largely upon the cost of the capital works involved. And this brings me to a reiteration of a statement that I have made before, that we all favour the principle of an all-Canadian route. Why on earth would we not? But not if such a route is going to have the result of materially adding to the costs of home owners and the costs of production for ever to those who want to use gas as fuel or as power.

I should like to ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Calgary West, both of whom are successful lawyers with many years of sound practice to their credit, to take home a little question with them this evening, and to arrive at an honest considered opinion on it in the morning. Would they advise a client to apply for a charter limited by statute to an all-Canadian route, while Westcoast Transmission still hold their unrestricted charter? Neither of these hon. gentlemen could or would answer that question with a yes. Neither of them is as green as all that.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): My answer is yes.

Mr. Applewhaite: And yet that question shows us exactly the position in which we in this house find ourselves today.

I should like to draw to the attention of the opponents of this bill a principle of which they may or may not have heard. It is the principle of stare decisis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Applewhaite: In common layman's language, that principle means that the general public is entitled to consider that the law, once established, will remain the same without arbitrary alteration other than by statute.

Mr. Fraser: You do not know the Liberal government.

Mr. Applewhaite: I would suggest to those opponents that they could find many passionate speeches in recent Hansards on that principle. Here we have the law and the practice definitely established. We have decided to treat five or six companies one way, and we are now asked to treat two in an entirely different way. I suggest that such a course of action involves an entire lack of principle.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I think you had better go to work on stare decisis again. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Applewhaite: The vehemence of the interruptions that we get during these debates shows a lack of sound argument upon which the interrupters can depend. It has been interesting to me to watch some hon. members gaily flitting all over southern British Columbia scattering pipe lines with a lavish hand from Kamloops to Vernon to Trail to Penticton to Keremeos to Armstrong, to goodness knows where, over lakes and mountain ranges, cheerfully oblivious of cost or of density of population, of potential markets or any other practical consideration.

The fact is that in that whole area the largest potential market is offered at the city of Trail. I will admit, and I think others will also, that if a line is built over the United States route it would pass in the neighbourhood of Spokane and Wenatchee. I suggest to hon. members that they look at a topographical map. If they do, they will find out that it would be easier and more feasible to build a line into places like Trail and Penticton from the south rather than down from Kamloops.

These are the practical facts we should have before us, and these are some of the practical facts which can be brought out only before a committee or the board of transport commissioners. I suppose it is because we do not want these practical facts brought out that we do not want to get this bill into a forum where they can be ascertained. Incidentally I wonder if it is fair to mention little places like Keremeos in a debate of this kind. Nothing could be crueler than to dangle before small communities the hope of cheap gas and cheap fuel and then find out that the population is not sufficiently large to justify the expense of the construction of the distribution works involved.

I assume that the fear in the minds of hon. members who are opposing this legislation is that gas will be exported for use by United States consumers leaving the Canadian consumers unsupplied. That is a very legitimate question to raise, but the question was answered last year by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) who placed on Hansard on April 27 the appropriate sections of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, which provides that a permit to export may be cancelled if Canadian requirements are not being met. That statute is effective, and it provides that protection today.

In these days nearly every board of trade in my district is passing resolutions urging greater freedom of international trade and international traffic. We are all urging a greater amount of international co-operation. This debate sounds very much to me like no truck or trade with the Yankees. It sounds to me like narrow nationalism carried to the point where it is definitely deleterious to our own country, as narrow nationalism always is.

The real argument in favour of this legislation is based upon a sound principle which we should be able to count on the Conservatives supporting. It is the principle that business is entitled to conduct itself in this country on two sure foundations. One is that there shall be free and untrammelled competition on an equal basis between all who are engaged in the same business. I do not believe in playing favourites. I am not going to say to one, "Yes, you can have your charter", and to the other, "No, you cannot even apply for a hearing". I do not believe that that is the way Canada wishes to do business.

The second principle under which business should be able to operate in Canada is that it should be free from all restraints except such as are necessary in the public interest, and those should be applied with equal hardship on all. I make this statement whether these bills pass or not, but particularly if they do not pass: The history of the next five or ten years will show that the real interests of Canada, of Alberta and of British Columbia have been best served by those who supported these bills.

Mr. Knowles: Before the hon. member sits down may I ask a question? I accepted his suggestion that I wait until he finished. When the hon. member was quoting from the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra made on April 8, 1949, why did he omit any reference to what the hon. member said as reported in the second column of page 2513 of Hansard?

An hon. Member: You read it.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member read from the first column and also from the next page, but he did not quote what the hon. member said—

Mr. Applewhaite: The hon. member has asked his question and I will answer it. I was carrying on a certain line of argument, and when the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was wise enough to support my argument, I quoted him.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that I offered to stand aside until the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) had spoken, because if it had been necessary to hear an argument in this house as to why there should be a demand for a procedure other than that now before the house, it was contained in the remarks that we have just heard.

I should like particularly to refer to one lofty observation the hon. member made to those less capable of understanding the niceties of debate. He asked hon. members to restrain that impatience which always marks the defenders of any indefensible cause. May I underline those words and remind hon. members that they are excellent words as applied to the impatience of other members of this house when certain principles are insisted upon in connection with private legislation.

I am entering this debate at this time because no one with the slightest appreciation of what has taken place can longer regard these bills, and particularly this one, as private bills. It is obvious that they have the support of the government, not simply the concurrence of individual members of the government. It is surely not without significance that the bill now under discussion is sponsored by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Maybank). That gives it at least a semi-official, if not a fully official, position before this house. It would be surprising if the parliamentary assistant of the department which handles minerals in this country were to sponsor a bill which did not have more than passing approval by the government. That may be quite all right, but let no one suggest that the government has no more than an ordinary interest in this bill. That interest has been shown by the intervention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on more than one occasion, and by other hon. members of this house.

There is a much wider principle involved here than that which has been discussed today. Before discussing what I regard to be the basic and fundamental principles involved, may I suggest that it was most improper for the hon. member for Skeena to speak of those who, as he said, might be prompted by friends of the applicants for a particular bill. If there is going to be any suggestion of special interest in these bills, then I suggest to the hon. member who has just spoken that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has indicated a definite interest in only one of the bills now before the house, the bill under discussion at the moment.

I want to refer in some measure to ancient history with reference to what is under consideration in the two pipe-line bills now before the house. First of all, I ask hon. members to recall that the measure now under consideration is not a bill dealing only with gas pipe lines. It is a bill which also confers the power to build an oil pipe line. Therefore we should bear in mind the fact that the measure has wider possibilities than merely the handling of gas. Of course that has some relation to the question whether it is to be used for export purposes or merely within our own country.

A great deal has happened in Canada since the first oil well came into production at Petrolia in 1858. A great new industry developed in that area. Gas became a cheap and efficient fuel for homes, places of business and industries throughout a considerable part of southwestern Ontario. The oil industry became a most important one, and as a result of that discovery the Imperial Oil Company came into existence and has continually expanded ever since that time. Today there is very little oil in that area, and there is real concern about the supply of gas, which requires to be supplemented by supplies from the United States. What has happened there, where the first oil and gas production came into being, offers many lessons which should be borne in mind in dealing with these matters. Both gas and oil are wasting assets. Gas and oil become exhausted.

The other side of the picture of course is that tremendous development goes hand in hand with adequate supplies of gas and oil. Every hon. member of the house is aware of the fact that there is a great chemical industry in the Sarnia area related to the production of oil now supplied so largely from the United States. That is something which can be paralleled in Alberta and in other areas where gas is found today. British Columbia, with its vast resources of raw materials, can make most effective use of this cheap fuel, as also can Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Nor is there any reason why the possibility of the use of gas as a fuel for industry, and particularly for chemical plants, should be limited to the provinces I have mentioned. At the present time a great gas pipe line is being built for a distance of 1,800 miles from Texas to the city of New York, a longer distance by far than it would be necessary to carry gas to the lake ports in the northwestern section of the province of Ontario.

There are vast possibilities for the use of this cheap fuel within Canada in the development of Canadian industry. I was amazed to hear the hon. member for Skeena suggest that the arguments that have been put forward in opposition to this measure sounded like "no truck or trade with the Yankees." That is simply a sample of the specious type of argument which has been put forward to meet the sound reasons advanced in favour of the development of Canada's resources for the advantage of Canadians themselves. At no time have I heard any suggestion that, when Canadian needs were satisfied, we should not export such surpluses as we may have from time to time; but gas is power, power means production, and production means income and the possibilities of new population in different parts of the country.

Our first concern should be for the development of Canada, just as the first concern of the government of the United States has always been for the development of that country. While the United States have made available to Canada supplies of oil, gas, coal and other products which we require, they have never left any doubt that the export of their raw materials and other products must always be related to the primary consideration of the development of their own country. No United States citizen will raise any question about the soundness of the assertion of that same policy in Canada. Certainly we want to have friendly dealings with them. Certainly we want to have an exchange of surpluses with them, but surely it is inconsistent for us to export vitally important resources from Canada until we have first assured to our own people those resources which are in short supply. We have imported, and will continue to import, enormous quantities of oil, and we shall continue to import gas. Certainly we should be sure that we use our resources of gas and oil here in Canada.

A Canada-first policy does not mean Canada only. It means that we make use of these resources to the greatest advantage of our own people before selling them to others. After all, the same policy has been followed as to our forests. In Ontario, Quebec, and other provinces whence these resources are exported in such large quantities, provisions are in effect which insist that to the highest extent possible the raw wood shall be processed in Canada. That policy has not been seriously objected to in the United States. It is a policy which has built up the great paper, pulp and other wood industries of Canada. We should make sure that we build up other industries in Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and the other provinces of Canada, whether the resource be gas, oil, or any other basic commodity we have in Canada.

There are vast possibilities. In every case of this kind let us realize that cheap fuel means cheap production, and cheap production means not only the possibility of the development of new production within our own country, but also the possibility of export to other parts of the world in highly competitive lines.

A great deal has been said, and more will be said, about freight rates. What better way is there to overcome the problem of freight rates than to manufacture and use our raw materials right at the source, with the power available within our own country, so that we can ship the finished product when it has the highest value in relation to its volume? The best way to overcome the difficulty of freight rates is for the manufacturing to be done from the raw materials right in Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and to send the products in their most valuable form to the rest of Canada. That is true in this case just as it is true in the maritime provinces, where they have possibilities of the development of power to which I made reference on other occasions.

What we are considering here is not only a gas pipe line but an oil pipe line as well; and it seems to me we should have a great deal more information before being asked to pass upon this application. We are told it can go before a committee, but the committee is not going to find out what route is going to be followed. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has stated that to his knowledge at least five routes have been surveyed by the company making this application. Therefore the house is not going to be in a position to pass judgment upon the route that will be followed.

This brings me to an observation made in this house a year ago when another of these bills was before us. If this house is not going to be asked to exercise its judgment in relation to the route to be followed, this bill should not be before us at all. Right in the act under which these pipe lines obtain their authority it is made quite clear that there is a similarity to the procedure under the Railway Act. That is to be found in section 4, where it says:

> The provisions of the Railway Act relating to sittings of the board—

That is the board of transport commissioners.

> —and the disposal of business, witnesses and evidence, practice and procedure, orders and decisions of the board and appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of Canada are applicable with respect to every inquiry, complaint, application or other proceeding under this act, and the board shall exercise and enjoy the same jurisdiction, powers and authority in matters under this act as are vested in the board by the Railway Act.

That would indicate quite clearly that an application is to be dealt with in a similar manner to an application under the Railway Act; and it is obvious why that should be so. These pipe lines become great common carriers, not just for one oil company, not just for the products of one or two designated producers, but common carriers for oil supplied to them. The principle is the same.

If we come to the practice in this house with respect to either railways or canals, if an application is made for a charter for a new railway or a new canal a map must accompany that application so that hon. members in deciding on the charter know the route which is to be followed. Surely if that is sound in the case of a charter for either a railway or a canal, or an addition or change in relation to it, that principle is equally sound in this case. The very fact that the practice before the board is to be similar to that under the Railway Act should make it clear that the practice and procedure in this house in dealing with a bill of this kind should be the same.

We are told that applications were dealt with last year, and that if we insist upon following this procedure now we are granting a monopoly. I wish to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks I make now apply with equal force to those applications which already have been made. If mistakes were made in the past that is no reason for continuing to make those mistakes. As it happens no confusion arises in regard to the carrying of gas or oil west, because the board has not yet disposed of the application of Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, which obtained a charter from this house last year. Certainly I would strongly urge that every rule made applicable to these two companies whose applications are now before the house should apply with equal force and without reservation to the company to which I have referred.

But, Mr. Speaker, I should like also to be sure that all these companies are going to be considered equally. I think that is something every hon. member would like to be quite sure about. In that respect I noticed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had this to say at page 850 of Hansard of Friday, March 17:

> Several members of the house have given information that they obtained from the principals behind the bill, and I have given information that I obtained from the principals behind the bill. I might say that I cannot understand the unnatural fear that certain hon. members have of letting these men come before a committee of the house where members of the house could find out what they intend to do.

The principals there referred to are the principals behind the bill under consideration. The remarks then made were not on any bill then before the house, but were in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). That, then, carries us back to a discussion that took place in the house on November 15, 1949, and I should like to quote again from the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as it appears at page 1806 of Hansard of that date:

> A good deal has been said about possible routes of the pipe line. A good many uninformed assertions have been made in the house in that regard. I know nothing about the pipe line company which is asking for incorporation under this bill; but I do know something about the interests that are asking for incorporation under another bill now before the house. I know that that company has surveyed five routes from Alberta to the Pacific coast, and that one of them at least is an all-Canadian route.

I then pass over certain further remarks and quote again:

> I should like to know much more about the incorporation asked for in the bill about which I am speaking than I know at the present time. But the place to obtain that information is in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines to which this bill will be referred, and before which the sponsors of the bill will appear to make their case for incorporation.

Further on the minister said:

The province of Alberta will, in the end, decide with which incorporated company it wishes to do business.

I might explain that those remarks were made when the Prairie Transmission Lines Limited bill was before the house, and the principals to whom the minister referred on that occasion were those behind the bill now under consideration, that is, the bill to incorporate Alberta Natural Gas Company. In other words the minister quite frankly indicates his knowledge and interest—and that interest is quite natural in regard to activities of this kind—and it is clear that he has been dealing with or that he knows about the Alberta Natural Gas Company but he does not know so much about the other company. From this it seems quite obvious that the minister has a much greater interest in this company than in the other one.

Mr. Howe: I might explain that the representatives of one company called on me and told me their story, but that was not so in the case of the other company. I have not the vaguest idea who is behind the second bill.

Mr. Drew: I accept that statement, but I must say that if the principals behind the other bill did not call upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, he must be the only member upon whom they did not call, because they were moving around here fairly freely for some time.

Mr. Howe: Who are they?

Mr. Drew: The principals are named in the bill. I do not know anything about them, beyond the fact that there were certainly people around here during the last session trying to see everybody about this matter. It may be that the minister avoided seeing them, and perhaps some others did as well.

Mr. Cruickshank: On a question of privilege, in fairness to the minister, I should like to say I do not think that is a correct statement. I sponsored the company seeking incorporation last year, and we did not think it necessary to communicate with individuals. We had a good case, and we let it go at that.

Mr. Drew: Of what company is the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) speaking?

Mr. Cruickshank: I sponsored the bill for the Westcoast Transmission Company, whose directors are principally business and financial men in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Drew: I am speaking about the other company whose bill is before us, Prairie Transmission Lines Limited. I only interjected that comment because, as a matter of fact, it became something of a joke around here, the extent to which members were being met in the lobby and asked—

Mr. Cruickshank: It was far greater this year than last year.

Mr. Drew: —to listen to certain arguments. I am not suggesting there was anything improper about that. It is quite proper for those who have business before the house to inform members on the subject; it is helpful if they do that. I am only pointing out that, if the minister has not heard any arguments on behalf of that company, I can assure him others did, and in the way I have mentioned.

I do want to point out that if the bill is sent to committee, the members of the committee will not get detailed information as to the route. The committee will be able to find out who the principals are, but their names are already shown. Committee members will be able to ask other questions as to the company's ability to carry out its obligation, the general purposes and so on. It is still a fact that the members of this house will not have before them the information which is an essential requirement in the case of an applicant for a railway, or a canal, and which is made a similar procedure by the words of the governing act.

Let us see what we are being asked to do. We are not just being asked to pass a bill which incorporates a company. We are being asked to pass a bill which gives to the people securing that incorporation extremely wide powers. I think those powers should be on the record, so that no one will be in any doubt as to what powers are being conferred when parliament passes this bill. Section 7 of the Pipe Lines Act should be on the record along with the arguments which are being made. The Pipe Lines Act was passed on April 30, 1949, and section 7 reads as follows:

7. A company may, for the purposes of its undertaking, subject to the provisions of this act and the special act,

(a) enter into and upon any crown land without previous licence therefor, or into or upon the land of any person, lying in the intended route of its line, and make surveys, examinations or other necessary arrangements on such land for fixing the site of the line, and set out and ascertain such parts of the land as are necessary and proper for the line;

(b) purchase, take and hold of and from any person any land or other property necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of its line and alienate, sell or dispose of any of its land or property that for any reason has become unnecessary for the purpose of the line;

(c) construct, lay, carry or place its line across, upon or under the land of any person on the located line of the company pipe line;

(d) join its line with the pipe line of any other person at any point on its route;

(e) construct, erect and maintain all necessary and convenient roads, buildings, stations, depots, wharves, docks and other structures, and construct, purchase and acquire machinery and other apparatus necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of its line;

(f) construct, maintain and operate branch lines, and for that purpose exercise all the powers, privileges and authority necessary therefor, in as full and ample a manner as for a company pipe line;

(g) from time to time alter, repair or discontinue the works or any of them, mentioned in this section, and substitute others in their stead;

(h) transport oil or gas by company pipe line and regulate the time and manner in which oil or gas shall be transported, and the tolls to be charged therefor; and

(i) do all other acts necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of its line.

Those are extremely wide powers, Mr. Speaker, to confer upon a company when we do not know where those powers are to be exercised. I do not believe it is sufficient for the members of this house to be told that this matter is to be passed upon by the board of transport commissioners; that the Minister of Trade and Commerce must give an export licence before the gas can be exported; or that the government of the Province of Alberta must approve of the delivery of oil to this particular pipe line. After all, the members of this house cannot delegate their responsibilities to others; but that is what we are being asked to do if we give an open charter of this sort, without any definition of the route or circumstances under which these extremely wide powers are to be exercised.

With this bill before us, the members of this house are not fully aware of what the ultimate, detailed application before the board will be. We know that a great many changes may take place, because a great many changes did take place in the routes under consideration in the case of the application of the Westcoast Transmission Company, which was granted a charter last year. Let us see what did happen in that case, so that no one will be under the impression that a company would be tied down to any route which it gave a committee to understand it would follow.

The Westcoast Transmission Company Limited was granted a charter by parliament last year. The company has made three applications since then to the board of transport commissioners for approval of a pipe line. The first application was filed on May 10, 1949, and that asked for a line from Athabasca to Vancouver, and a branch line down to Blaine. As hon. members know, this town is on the border, and three-quarters of it is in the state of Washington. That application was withdrawn on November 15, 1949. The second application was made on May 11, 1949, but no action has been taken on that application. It called for a line from Edmonton through the Crowsnest, following the route of the Canadian Pacific. It misses Macleod, does touch Cranbrook and goes to Kingsgate. Kingsgate is also on the border. This plan also called for a branch line from Kingsgate to Trail, and a map filed before the board in that case shows the pipe line continuing into the United States to Sandpoint, Idaho, a little over 50 miles from Spokane.

A third application was made on October 13, 1949, by this same company. That called for the route to go through the Yellowhead pass, from Edmonton to Edson, Jasper, to Tete Jaune Cache, B. C., south to Vancouver and also a branch line to Dawson Creek, B. C. That application was heard on November 23, 1949, and adjourned to February 21, 1950. When it came up on February 21, 1950, it was then adjourned sine die and that is where it stands. I think it is important that we bear that fact in mind, because the concern of the members lest any monopoly has been created is not borne out by the actual situation. They are no farther along than are the present companies; and any observation that I make applies with equal force to any one of these companies.

But we are not leaving this matter in thin air. There is a simple procedure which should be followed. If this is not to be dealt with in exactly the same way as an application on behalf of a railway or on behalf of a company that intends to construct a canal, where they file their map, and that is before the members of parliament, then I submit that there is an extremely simple procedure which should be followed. There should be an amendment to the Pipe Lines Act, and that amendment should provide that the companies referred to in these procedures will be companies which have obtained a charter under the dominion Companies Act. In other words, if the members of parliament are not to exercise any judgment, if they are not to be given the facts upon which they can exercise some judgment, then there is no reason why this incorporation should not be granted in precisely the same way that incorporation is granted to any other applicant under the Companies Act. It should simply emanate as an administration procedure from the department of government that grants charters. Upon complying with the requirements as to information which is necessary for the purpose of obtaining a charter, they should obtain a charter in the ordinary way. Then they should go before the board of transport commissioners and make their application. We would then not be called upon to go through the pretence of exercising some judgment in regard to bills which are before us but which do not give us information upon which any judgment can be exercised.

I hope that no one will suggest that we are standing in the way of charters being granted. Before any hon. member, whether it be a minister of the crown or any private member on the Liberal side, suggests that we are standing in the way of companies getting incorporation so that development can be proceeded with in this country, let them give us some sound and understandable explanation why that simple procedure cannot be followed. It would save a great deal of time in this house; it would bring this debate to an end, and that seems to be a matter of great concern to the government and to some others; it would carry this procedure forward on a proper and sound basis; and it would do away with any suggestion that the members of this parliament are being used as rubber stamps to give a high degree of authority to those who are applying, and that they would be giving incorporation by parliament itself, which seems to have a strangely useful value when the financing stage arrives.

I want to make it clear that I do not think that the discretion of the members of parliament should give to any applicant that added measure of authority that comes from parliamentary responsibility, for the purpose of carrying out their financial arrangements with what appears to be an added measure of authority granted in that way. The charter can be a charter with all the powers conferred by the Pipe Lines Act. The amendment is simple. It simply needs to say that the company referred to in the act is a company with a charter granted under the dominion Companies Act. It seems to me that the government should have some reason for not following that course before it asks us to deal in this way with an application which will give us such limited information.

This is not something about which there has been no discussion. Some suggestion was made this afternoon that there had been nothing but vague generalities. But there are more than vague generalities in connection with this matter. I am not putting before parliament any one publication as having any special authority; but hon. members who have been following the discussions on this matter must have noticed that there have been in responsible publications a number of discussions which indicate that there is going to be substantial export of oil down from Alberta, through Montana, Washington and into Oregon. I am not suggesting for one moment that there should not be such export as long as our own requirements are first met and assured indefinitely.

I want to refer to a drawing which appeared in a publication which enjoys a good reputation for accuracy and responsibility. I refer to U.S. News & World Report. In their issue of December 2, 1949, there is a drawing which shows in black the oil pipe line from Edmonton to Superior as one which has already been granted, and then it shows the line down from Edmonton to the border at the junction between Montana and Idaho, then on into the state of Washington to Seattle, down through Tacoma to Portland. There is no line shown to Vancouver or in fact to the west.

Mr. Howe: Is that not the Westcoast Transmission Company line that my hon. friend just described?

Mr. Drew: No.

Mr. Howe: Down through Kingsgate?

Mr. Drew: No. This does not give the name of any pipe line. I was under the impression that this is a line which has been under discussion in some way. It refers to this as a proposed line, but it does not mention the name of the company at all. I would suggest again that we bear in mind that these applications are for oil lines as well as for gas lines.

Mr. Howe: Oh, no.

Mr. Drew: What is that?

Mr. Howe: I understood that this was a gas line that is under discussion?

Mr. Drew: No; it is for oil and gas.

Mr. Howe: I mean, the bill indicates that the application is for a gas line; you cannot have both through the same pipe.

Mr. Drew: I hope every hon. member will realize that it is dealing with an oil pipe line too; it does not mention oil by the name of oil, but it covers oil because instead of using the term "oil" as it is used in the other two bills it uses the term "liquid hydrocarbons", which means either crude or refined oil. It might have been more convenient perhaps if they had used the same term in each bill, but those who drafted the bill chose the term "liquid hydrocarbons".

Mr. Howe: I am sorry; I think my hon. friend is right.

Mr. Drew: Yes. I am merely pointing that out because I do not want any of the members to be under any misapprehension. This does cover oil. Consequently, in granting this we want to realize that we are granting authority both for gas and for oil, and that when this proposed line is drawn in a fairly exact form, it may be constructed for oil as well as gas and in fact even be referring to the oil in this particular article to which I have referred.

May I qualify my remarks by saying quite definitely that I am not suggesting for one minute that this publication has any authority to speak either on behalf of the government of Canada or on behalf of the board of transport commissioners. I merely refer to this because it is only one of a number of well-informed articles which have shown similar drawings and which indicate that there is such an understanding in the minds of many people. I also would like to feel that we have all the information that is available in regard to discussions that have taken place. If, for instance, there is any quid pro quo as between the authorities in the United States and Canada I think we should know it. If there is any qualified understanding that there will be export of gas and oil south from Alberta, as a condition of the entry of gas particularly through Ontario for their requirements, then it would be helpful if we knew it. I do know that this has been suggested in the discussions to which I have referred. So long as our own requirements are met, it is only proper that we should deal in a businesslike way with those who have dealt in friendly terms with us in the past.

As many hon. members know, there was a very severe shortage of gas in southwestern Ontario, in 1944, in 1945 and again in 1946. Actually, in the cold weather it became quite severe, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows. An application was made to the federal power commission in the United States for permission to export gas from the United States. Actually there had been an executive order in 1944 permitting the Union Panhandle company to export gas into Ontario. However, in 1946 the federal power commission overrode that executive order and declared that such export was illegal without a permit being granted by the federal power commission. At present there is an application by the Union Panhandle Pipe Line Company before the federal power commission in the United States. They contemplate exporting gas to the province of Ontario, and meeting the requirements in that southwestern part of the province. There is also reason to believe that, if this application is granted, two other companies propose to apply, and they have in mind supplying gas as far as Montreal. It is already carried through to Hamilton. The intention of these other companies is to carry gas on to Toronto and to Montreal.

I am pointing out to the house that discussions have taken place, which contemplate the supply of a large quantity of gas in eastern Canada, to Ontario and to the province of Quebec, and that rightly or wrongly there is in the minds of some of the United States interests a belief that there is a relation between the granting of this authority in the east and the granting of the power to export in western Canada. We should certainly know if any such consideration does exist. I am not for a moment suggesting—and I do not want the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take from my remarks that suggestion—that there would be anything improper in such a discussion; but I do say that if such a discussion has taken place, and if the representatives of the Panhandle company have had discussions here and have had discussions of which they are aware in Washington, and which are related to the export of gas and oil possibly from western Canada to the northwest states in the United States, these are certainly considerations that should be fully disclosed, because many hon. members would feel that this was a businesslike proposition. We would also like to know what the policy is.

Before we give any blanket authority from this parliament I feel that we should also know what the policy of the federal power commission in Washington is, because unless they are prepared to grant authority to export gas to this country where it is required, then certainly we should not put ourselves in the position of granting authority for the export of gas in another part of Canada. This should be one business transaction, if it is in fact under consideration, or if there is any relationship between the two.

I come back, however, to this part of the discussion which has been before the house. We hardly yet realize the change that has taken place in the opportunities that are offered to the people of Canada in these last two years as a result of the discoveries in Alberta and of what may happen beyond that. I should like to quote from this article, which uses a colloquial form of expression:

> Oilmen say that, from the standpoint of exploration, Alberta is "the hottest place on earth."

They do not mean just the ordinary heat; they are talking about the tremendous possibilities of this development. Just to take the province of Alberta alone, let us keep before our eyes the opportunities presented to the province by these oil discoveries, and by the presence of gas in such enormous quantities as a result of these oil discoveries, along with the existence of coal. In this instance coal becomes valuable as something more than fuel, because today coal is the basis of some of the greatest chemical developments that have been discovered by man. Through the use of cheap gas, through the use of oil right in Alberta, chemical developments could take place which would make Alberta one of the great industrial centres of the whole Dominion of Canada and of the North American continent. That applies with equal force to British Columbia, if adequate supplies of gas and oil are carried to the great centres of British Columbia and to tidewater where industries can locate and export to the markets of the world. With their enormous resources, let us not measure the demands of British Columbia in terms of the gas they can use today or tomorrow, but measure it in terms of what could happen there with their raw materials being fabricated in great industries that would use these cheap forms of fuel for the employment of hundreds of thousands, yes, possibly millions of people in that one province alone.

Let us not forget the raw materials that lie in the north of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, to say nothing of the increasingly strong belief that there are oil resources in Saskatchewan and Manitoba as well. These are the possibilities of tomorrow. And what we do today, and the conservation that is insisted upon today, should relate to these possibilities of tomorrow.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I for one am not raising these views today for the purpose of opposing development. I raise these views because I believe that the way to get development is to simplify the procedure, and not take the time of this house in dealing with things when we are not asked to pass judgment upon any known facts. When I say "any known facts", let me say any known facts in regard to the final route over which this pipe line will go. Let the government accept the suggestion that has been made. If the bill before the house is not to contain a map which shows where the route will go, then let there be a simple amendment to the Pipe Lines Act, which makes it possible for any company to obtain a charter, and then the board of transport commissioners will in fact assume the authority.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) was quite frank in his statement that we have not the facts before us. According to him we should pass this bill along and let somebody else exercise his brains in regard to the way it is to be done. That is not the reason we were elected to come here. We were elected to represent the people in our own constituencies, no matter to what party we belong. We were elected to exercise some measure of judgment and I believe we should insist upon being given the facts upon which judgment can be exercised before we deal with a bill of this kind. It is for that reason that I for one intend to oppose these bills before the house.

I believe it is the duty of every member to realize the tremendous future that has opened up to the whole of Canada by these mineral discoveries, not only in Alberta but elsewhere, during the past few years. With that knowledge we should gauge our course of action here to the tremendous future that lies immediately ahead. Yes, we should be prepared to export our surplus, but quite frankly our policy should be Canada first in the use of the resources which we possess.

Mr. G. M. Murray (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, because the riding which I represent has been mentioned this afternoon it is necessary for me to take some part in this debate. I come from the Peace river district of British Columbia where many wells have been put down and where there is a large surplus of natural gas and very good prospects of oil. We will be much concerned with any policy adopted by this parliament in connection with this bill or any other bill which may be brought in later.

As I see the picture today, if we do not allow this bill to pass we will be giving the company which has been incorporated a monopoly. If there is one fear that we should have in this country it is about private monopoly controlling our great basic resources. A pipe line is a transportation system and the question of rates would come up. If there is but one pipe line transporting these vast resources of oil from Alberta and northern British Columbia to the Pacific, I am sure there will be a likelihood of danger of a monopoly taking advantage of its position and levying excessively upon the consumers.

It has happened in the past in Canada. It was very fine to hear the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) refer to the early days of oil development in Ontario in 1858, but if you will trace the history of our country you will find that the only misery and civil difficulties that arose were due to monopolies which were forced upon the people of Canada. I think that this bill or any reasonable bill backed by honourable men should be passed by this parliament. There should be a free field in the development of the oil resources of our country so that there will be safeguards for industry and for the consumers of the products which are carried by these pipe lines.

I think of another monopoly which found its origin in Calgary many years ago, a monopoly in connection with a basic commodity which is vital and necessary to every home owner or other person who has a stake in the country, particularly farmers and industrialists. I refer to the manufacture of portland cement. I can remember when there were a dozen cement mills across Canada competing one with the other and producing plenty of cement in the golden days when the west was being developed and new homes were being erected from coast to coast.

Then came the sinister hand of monopoly. These cement mills were gathered together and placed under one directing head. The price of cement per sack was at once advanced. Companies were incorporated and stock was placed upon the market to the great enrichment of the promoters who were clever enough to manipulate the creation of a monopoly in a product essential to the country. We are still paying the penalty for that. If you will look over the figures you will find that last year we imported four million sacks of cement from foreign countries. The local organization which has such complete control from coast to coast was not able to supply the cement.

Across the line in the state of Washington, where our alleged enemies live who are going to squeeze the gas out of this pipe line and deny it to the widows and mothers of British Columbia, Henry Kaiser is manufacturing cement on the Columbia river and shipping it into British Columbia by scow loads. This at a time when our own great monopoly is not able to meet the needs of the community in respect to that commodity. It will be the same with oil. Just the other day complaints were raised in the House of Representatives that one of the oil lines in the United States was imposing excessive charges upon the industrial community around Detroit, Michigan, running into many millions of dollars. It was claimed that they were exacting tribute from that industrial area as a result of their monopoly.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Was it true? Were they?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): True or false, that was stated in an Associated Press dispatch under date of March 16 which is in the library and available to hon. members to read. It is almost prophetic of what will happen if we permit one interest to move the gas and oil from Saskatchewan and Alberta to the great Pacific seacoast.

Some people seem to fear the United States as though they were about to destroy us. But they did not talk that way when the Repulse and the Prince of Wales were sunk in the Pacific and the United States came in and built a pipe line from Norman Wells to Skagway. They did not ask for delay to incorporate another company to carry it over a Canadian route. That oil was carried some 600 miles to service the ships of the United States navy at a time when things were very dark in that part of the land.

Alberta Natural Gas Company

I was up on the Peace river when it was necessary to build a bridge across the river for the defence of North America. A group of United States engineers arrived with their equipment, steel, cement and the other things necessary for the construction of a bridge. I assure you that no Canadian rose to say that it must not be done because it was not a Canadian bridge. That bridge was built over the mighty Peace river to increase the security of the defence of both Canada and the United States.

Supposing they do take gas out of this line for industries in the state of Washington. I was in British Columbia not long ago and I met a group of lumbermen who told me that lumber is now going from British Columbia to the United States market. Future shipments of lumber to that country depend upon the existence of good will. If the United States tariff on lumber were increased, certain mills in British Columbia would have to shut down. I ask you if it is not a proper thing to maintain employment in British Columbia where thousands of men are working in the logging camps and mills producing lumber for sale in the best world markets available. The best market at the present time is the United States of America. None of us have complained about loads of lumber going over there. None of us have complained about the tons of newsprint from Powell river and other places that go to the United States of America. Why should we complain about selling them a little gas or oil from the Peace river country or Alberta?

As I say, I regret that able men have risen in this house to champion monopoly in the great basic industry of the transportation of gas and oil. We remember the monopoly that was granted when the first Canadian railway was put through to the Pacific coast. One railway had the sole right to transport goods east and west, and no other railway might cross it at right angles in the region from the head of the lakes to the Pacific ocean. Within my own memory I recall that the people of Manitoba desired that other railroads should be constructed in their province to serve the settlements, to move wheat and other products, and carry on trade north and south in their province. The man who sought to build that railroad from the United States north through Manitoba was a good Canadian by the name of James J. Hill, an empire builder, born at Guelph, Ontario. He was told that he could not build a railroad across the main line of the railroad then in existence. The legislature of Manitoba had something to say about that. They made a request that the new company be allowed to build a line running up into the northern part of the province. Resolutions to that effect were passed by the Manitoba legislature and sent to Sir John A. Macdonald and his government at Ottawa, but they said: No, we have made a contract, we have given them a monopoly, and we do not propose to see it broken.

Just imagine what would have happened if they had had their way in the 1890's, if the government at Ottawa had been adamant in its refusal to break the franchise that had been granted. There would not have been any members here from northern Saskatchewan, from the Peace river district or from Edmonton because all the traffic was east and west. The monopoly had it within its power to decide what part of the country would be developed and at what time. I have not noticed this in any of the school books that my children and grandchildren are reading today, but the people in Manitoba made an armed protest against the monopoly which was throttling the province at that time. Under the leadership of a fiery man who was then attorney general of Manitoba, the late Hon. Joseph Martin, K.C., who later became premier of British Columbia, an organized rabble burned boxcars and tore up tracks. As a result James J. Hill was allowed to build his railway to the north.

After their protest they came to Ottawa again to ask that the monopoly be broken and Sir John A. Macdonald was wise enough to yield. The government of Manitoba said they would pull out of confederation and make Manitoba a state of the United States if the federal government did not grant their request. In the face of that attitude the monopoly was broken, and railroads were allowed to be built north and south in Canada. As a result there was free competition, and the country was developed as it has been in the last several generations.

The history of the Peace river country suggests a monopoly which existed in Canada long ago when the fur trade and all other resources of Canada were vested in one corporation. Then the Northwest Company came into the picture as a competitor of the vested interest which had been established in 1670 by the courts of England. With the Northwest Company came Alexander Mackenzie looking for an opportunity for peaceful trade in the northwest section of Canada. Alexander Mackenzie discovered the Peace river, and also the Mackenzie river which bears his name. It was he who first found evidence of natural gas and oil in that country, and it is noted in his chronicles away back in 1793. He was a man who came there as a result of his desire to enter into free competition in a free land.

He established trading posts here and there. I believe Kamloops, which is so ably represented in the house, was one of them. Many of these posts would never have come into existence had the cold hand of monopoly remained in control of the northwest.

It is a great opportunity to be able to rise at this moment and support the bill now before the house, and to state my support of any other measure which will encourage free competition in Canada.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words as to this measure in order to clarify my own position. I listened carefully to the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray), and I have also listened to many other speeches that have been made in the house for and against the bill. I have yet to find that anyone has made the statement, in such a way that it carries any weight, that the granting of charters to these two companies would assure competition in the transportation of oil from Alberta to British Columbia or anywhere else. Not from personal knowledge but from listening to the experts, my understanding is that only one pipe line is to be constructed. If there is to be one only, then I assume it will be built by one company, or else it will be constructed by a combination of two or three companies, who will get together not to serve the people of Canada but to skin them as they have always done in the past. If I am wrong about that, we are wasting a lot of time and money investigating combines and monopolies. A few weeks ago a new commissioner of combines was appointed. If I should happen to be talking through my hat in saying that the purpose of companies is to skin the people of the country, then why do we have to have all these safeguards?

I am somewhat at a loss as to why I am here.

An hon. Member: So are we.

Mr. MacInnis: I am equally at a loss as to why some of my fellow members from the province of British Columbia sought election to the house. I put their statements made on the public platform and in their newspaper advertisements, when seeking election, against the statements they have made in connection with this measure, and they do not seem to jibe at all. The bill under discussion is one to incorporate the Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the proposed motion of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. MacDougall) that the question be now put. My understanding of the rules of the house is that there is only one reason for moving "that the question be now put", namely, to obviate any amendment being proposed to the measure. So far as debate is concerned, it does not limit debate at all. It really extends the debate because there can be a new debate on the previous question. So amendments were moved to this and the other bill in order to prevent the moving of an amendment such as we proposed to similar bills last year. I shall read the one I moved, which is at page 2103 of Hansard for November 22, 1949:

> That Bill No. 119 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house further consideration of this bill should be deferred until the house has been assured that the route of any pipe line built by the proposed company will be laid out so as to serve Canadian requirements before any such pipe line leaves Canadian soil.

That is my position today in regard to this pipe line, as it was my position last December when I moved the above amendment. When speaking in the debate on this bill on March 7 the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. MacDougall) said at page 540 of Hansard:

> The bill does not authorize the building of a pipe line. Even if a charter is granted to the company there is no assurance whatsoever that it will ever build a line.

If it will never build a line it can neither be a monopoly nor operate in opposition to a monopoly.

> It would be impractical for it to do so without first having a permit from the government of Alberta to remove gas from that province. It would also require the assurance of an export permit from the Department of Trade and Commerce before it could export any gas from Canada.

Let us be quite clear on what is proposed to be done by this bill, because we aim to do something; and what we do will carry some implications. We are creating an entity that will have the powers we give it to do certain things. If that is the case, surely we are not going to create an entity and let it run wild. We are creating a company, a corporate body, for the purpose of building a pipe line; and this parliament has a right to say where that pipe line should be built. Surely this parliament is supreme in this matter. If we cannot say where a pipe line must be built, who has authority to say so?

That brings me to another statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard in the same speech, he said:

> I think we are entitled to assume that before permits are granted by the authorities concerned the interests of the citizens of Alberta and of Canada as a whole will be protected.

The authorities concerned are the Department of Trade and Commerce, the authorities in the province of Alberta and the board of transport commissioners. What right has the hon. member to assume that the authorities in Alberta, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the board of transport commissioners will do what he has refused to do, that is, protect the interests of the people of British Columbia? That is not what he was elected for. He was elected from British Columbia to protect the interests of that province, and of course the interests of Canada as a whole; and if he does not fulfil that trust I do not think he has any right to assume that someone else will do it for him. As a matter of fact the people of British Columbia are beginning to realize that something is wrong. I rather regretted that in his excellent speech the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) took the position that everyone who did not think as he did on this matter was either hysterical or not seeing things straight. I am not suffering from hysterics or confusion of thought in this matter. If there is any reason for electing us as members of parliament, if there is any reason for paying us our indemnities, it is to look after the interests of Canada, and to do it without offence and without discrimination against any other people or any other country. It is not only a right, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) reminds me; it is a duty.

Then the hon. member for Skeena went on to say that the administration of the act rested with the transport board. I submit that the question of where the pipe line shall go is not a matter of administration at all. It is a matter of direction, which the board of transport commissioners, as a body created by the government of Canada and taking its authority from the parliament of Canada, should be expected to accept. Referring to the danger of creating a monopoly I see no danger at all. The sale of gas in the province of Alberta is under the authority of the Alberta natural gas board; and when the gas reaches British Columbia it will be under the authority of the public utilities commission, which has authority to set rates. As a matter of fact we learned long ago, though perhaps not as well as we should, that we can no longer leave matters of this kind to the unchecked action of owners.

The point was also made by the hon. member for Skeena that if we gave a permit for the export of gas to the United States and it was found that such export prejudiced or jeopardized the interests of the Canadian people, the permit could be cancelled. There is only one way to protect the people of Canada; that is to make sure the permit is not issued until after the needs of the Canadian people have been met. Let us see just what would happen if we permitted the construction of a pipe line which would serve United States cities first and then come into British Columbia to serve Vancouver. In what possible way could an export permit be cancelled? We know the charges that would be made both here and in the United States alleging discrimination if any such action were attempted.

I agree with the hon. member for Skeena that there has been a great deal of repetition in this debate. I think he also referred to vagueness. I agree that there has been an enormous amount of vagueness as well, particularly from the supporters of the bill. But I think the time has come when we should have a vote in this house so that hon. members will decide whether Canada shall have the first opportunity of using a valuable Canadian resource, and developing it in the interests of the Canadian people. We have paid out hundreds of millions of dollars to bring immigrants from all parts of the world to this country, only to find that, because of the greater opportunities in the United States, they left here, along with large numbers of our Canadian-born citizens. Are we going to overlook one of the best opportunities we have had in half a century to keep our own people here, as well as the people who came to our shores to start their lives anew? We should make sure before we grant this charter that we shall know where the pipe line is going to be built; and that it will be built to serve the interests of the Canadian people first.

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it was quite some time before I decided I should indulge in the privilege of joining in this debate. It was more or less a private fight until recently, but now it has become a public one. I feel that even those members who live in the eastern part of the country might join also in this debate. It is the duty of every hon. member who has to vote on this important measure not only to participate in the debate, but to give serious consideration to the whole matter.

I believe this is a continuation of a matter that was discussed during the greater part of the last session, and it would appear as though it might continue through the greater part of this session as well. Of course, that is a matter entirely within the province of the members of the house. I have been trying to ascertain what the trouble is in arriving at a decision on this subject. I have endeavoured to listen carefully to the pros and cons, in order to form my own conclusion. I do not think it likely, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to have a pipe line built to Newfoundland, but it could very well be because no route has been decided upon as yet.

An hon. Member: There is a lot of gas down there anyway.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Higgins: I agree with that. I take it as a compliment. We could export a lot of natural gas, but I do not think it could be used for power—although it might be illuminating gas for some people.

The measure, Mr. Speaker, seemed to be more or less a private matter between the sponsor and certain members from the west coast. Some time during the closing hours of the last session, however, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) took it upon himself to more or less threaten the members of this house, as I recall. Either they agreed to have this measure passed shortly, or else it was going to be put forward as a government measure. He charged that hon. members of the C.C.F. party were running a filibuster. According to my recollection the members of that party were entirely innocent at that time, since only one member of that party had spoken. Whoever was running the filibuster, it certainly was not that party. It is rather hard that, at that time, these people should be given the honour of running a filibuster which they really had not undertaken at all. I do not know where the filibuster came in. I believe it was only members seeking information which was not forthcoming, information which the minister told us bluntly we were not going to get. I think that is what started the trouble. I do not think we would have had one-quarter the number of speakers had that threat not been made.

An hon. Member: Dictatorship.

Mr. Higgins: Definitely. Certainly, I would never have thought of speaking except for that powerful threat. The people from that part of the country which is now almost the maritimes, but not quite, are extremely independent. I am sure that if any hon. member from Newfoundland were threatened by anybody, no matter how austere a personage he might be, that member would not cringe. He would endeavour to give back as good as he got, and that is all we are trying to do. Even that, Mr. Speaker, is hardly answering the question very well.

I suppose the real matter before the house is whether or not the members are going to agree to this measure. I feel that most members are in accord with the idea of a pipe line. They want the natural resources of the country developed to the highest possible extent. They realize, as do all thinking men, that unless the natural resources of the country are developed to the fullest possible extent the economy of the country cannot prosper or be on a safe and sound basis. What is it these members on this side of the house want? We have heard various expressions, Mr. Speaker, about people who are trying to stop this measure, but what do these members really want? They only want to be safeguarded. The members on this side of the house, indeed all hon. members who are brave enough to withstand the ire of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and be independent, only ask that the needs of the Canadian people be served first. They are not trying to stop the company being formed. They are not trying to stop any company being formed. As my leader so well said, they want Canada put first; no more than that. You can export all the gas you want, provided the needs of the Canadian people are served first.

I must confess that the other day when I heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce make his statement I felt quite reassured. I am referring to the statement found on page 791 of Hansard of March 16. It was a reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) on the orders of the day. It reads as follows:

I should like to direct the following questions to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any representations been made to him by the C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan with regard to protecting Saskatchewan so far as export of oil and gas from Alberta is concerned? What is the policy of the minister with regard to the granting of permits for pipe lines from Alberta to the United States?

When I first heard the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and when I read his answer in Hansard, in my rather simple way I was quite content that everything was, as we say colloquially, "hunky-dory", because this is what the minister said:

The answer to the first question—

That is the question with respect to representations from the C.C.F. government.

—is that I have no knowledge of any representations from the province of Saskatchewan in that connection.

And here is the particular statement that I refer to especially and that I say satisfied me in my own mind at that time. This is what the minister said:

In answer to the second question I would say that I spoke on this subject at the last session of parliament, and pointed out that the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act is designed to protect Canadian consumers. It is necessary under the act for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to give a certificate to the effect that the present and foreseeable future needs of Canada are protected before any exports of electricity or gas are permitted. It has been suggested frequently in the current debate that gas will be sent to the United States from the pipe line before the pipe line reaches Vancouver. I stated last session that that would not be permitted. I know from discussions with the sponsors of the pipe line that it is not proposed to undertake any such export.

Then the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) made an interjection. The quotation continues:

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I know from discussions—

Mr. Howe: Sit down; you have said enough on this subject.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): —that just the opposite has been said.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, in my simple way I believed that the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was quite satisfactory, that it answered any doubts that I might have in my little mind and should answer the doubts of other hon. members. But then on March 17, of all days—

Mr. Knowles: That is the day he could be different.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that day?

Mr. Higgins: It is an awful day for people not to be telling the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. But as reported at page 850 of Hansard, on March 17, we have a question directed to the minister by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). As I say, I am reading this deliberately, Mr. Speaker, in order to try to explain to you why my doubts have not been resolved by any statements made by the minister two days before. This is the question:

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I was not in the house yesterday when the orders of the day were called, but I note the minister is reported on page 792 of Hansard as having said:

"It has been suggested frequently in the current debate that gas will be sent to the United States from the pipe line before the pipe line reaches Vancouver. I stated last session that that would not be permitted. I know from discussions with the sponsors of the pipe line that it is not proposed to undertake any such export."

That is a citation from the citation I gave a short while ago. The question by the hon. member for Fraser Valley continues as follows:

Am I to understand from that statement that no export permit will be granted other than through an all-Canadian route?

That is a direct question, Mr. Speaker, and requires a direct answer. It is impossible to evade the question if the Minister of Trade and Commerce wanted to give the answer in a direct fashion. What did the minister say in answer to that direct and specific question? This is what he said:

Several members of the house have given information that they obtained from the principals behind the bill, and I have given information that I obtained from the principals behind the bill. I might say that I cannot understand the unnatural fear that certain hon. members have of letting these men come before a committee of the house where members of the house could find out what they intend to do.

Then the hon. member for Fraser Valley stated as follows:

I take it the minister is not going to answer my question. Is that correct?

And there is no further answer recorded. What, then, are we to understand by that position, Mr. Speaker? We have, as I say, what I in my way understood to be a direct statement by the minister to the effect that the rights of the Canadian people were going to be protected. That was a definite and clear statement. Yet when the question is put formally and forcibly to the minister, what does he do? Does he answer it? Does he make a statement and say yes or no? No, he does not answer it at all. In other words, it is a direct evasion by the minister. How can hon. members of this house vote on a measure such as this when we have this kind of attitude on the part of the minister responsible, when he tells us in one breath, "Yes, you may go ahead and vote safely on this and I will see that the people of Canada are protected", and then when one of his own party members asks him for a direct and deliberate statement, he refuses to give it. I therefore say to you in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that it is not fair to ask hon. members of this house to vote on such a measure, in which even the members of the party proposing it themselves have not faith. I may be reading that wrongly, but I think not.

It has been suggested that this measure is being interfered with and that there has been a filibuster for reasons of selfishness. When you think of the matter, Mr. Speaker, all you have to do is merely to look again at the people who are asking that they be protected. I refer now to the legislature of British Columbia. I believe the legislature of British Columbia is made up of three parties: representatives of the Liberal party, representatives of the C.C.F. party and representatives of our own party, the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. Knowles: You have been swallowed up in the coalition.

Mr. Higgins: Yes, I believe it is a coalition. I do not know who did the swallowing. It might have been Jonah or the whale. Who was it? Whoever swallowed whom, the whale has spoken in the matter, the whale being the legislature of British Columbia, and it specifically makes recommendations that I think this parliament should not do anything else but follow. I am referring again to those resolutions quoted at page 875; because, after all, the legislature of British Columbia is vitally interested in this matter. This particular resolution was quoted at page 875 by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton); and I do not think it will do any harm to any member of this house to hear it read again, particularly hon. members from British Columbia. It is as follows:

Whereas there are strong indications that a great potential of both petroleum and natural gas exists in the northeastern section of British Columbia:

And whereas exploration is presently taking place to ascertain the extent and value of these resources:

And whereas it would be a further incentive to greater and more intensive exploration if an outlet to market of these commodities was available:

And whereas proposals are now being considered for the construction of gas and petroleum pipe lines from available supplies in Alberta to Vancouver and the Pacific coast states of the United States:

And whereas, in the opinion of many members of the legislature the requirements of Canadians in this connection would be a matter of first consideration:

And whereas the industrial development of the interior of British Columbia as well as the Vancouver and Fraser valley areas would be greatly stimulated by the construction of oil and natural gas pipe lines from Alberta and northeastern British Columbia through the interior of British Columbia to the Pacific coast:

And whereas, if the proposed northern route is followed, many millions of dollars will be spent in British Columbia in the construction of the lines with consequent employment of thousands of our citizens:

Therefore be it resolved, that the legislative assembly of the province of British Columiba urge upon the federal and provincial authorities concerned the advisability in the interests not only of British Columbia but of Canada as well that such pipe lines be constructed through the Yellowhead pass and thence through the interior of British Columbia to Vancouver, with provision for the extension of the line to the Peace river block so that when sufficient supplies of petroleum and natural gas are available in that area there will be an available outlet to market without unnecessary delay.

This is a resolution of the province of British Columbia. I understand that municipalities in the interior of British Columbia have passed resolutions. In his speech the other day the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) mentioned that fact. These are responsible bodies, Mr. Speaker. No suggestion of selfishness can be levelled at them. These are Canadian people. These are people whose only interest is the serving of Canada and Canadian people first.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite). He spoke, as he always does, in a very acceptable manner. From the applause which he received from the other side of the house on the proposition he made it would appear that there was common agreement upon it. That was my understanding, and I took down his words. He said: "Every hon. member on this side of the house would be satisfied to support this motion for an all-Canadian route if it could be shown to be economically feasible and possible." I understood that that remark received the approbation of all hon. members on the opposite side of the house. If it could be shown to hon. members that it is economically possible to have an all-Canadian pipe line they would insist on an all-Canadian route being constructed.

I should like hon. members to follow me for a short time. I understand that the oil body from which the gas is to come is the same oil body and the same gas body that the Westcoast Transmission Company, which was incorporated last year, is working on. The Westcoast Transmission Company have made application for an all-Canadian route. I should like to quote from a brief entitled: "Natural Gas in Alberta and British Columbia and its Development for the benefit of Canada". At page 15, and referring to this particular proposed pipe line of the Westcoast Transmission Company from the same body of gas, they say:

> Westcoast Transmission Company Limited is the only company which has consistently sponsored an all-Canadian route to take gas to the Pacific coast. The route now chosen for the main transmission line from Edmonton through the Yellowhead pass to Vancouver is the shortest line from the approximate geographical centre of Alberta to Vancouver. The pass through the mountains is one of the lowest and most easily traversed. The only other mountainous terrain is through the coast range where the line will follow the new Hope-Princeton highway.
> The entire length of the line has been inspected most minutely by the firm of Ford, Bacon and Davis, Incorporated, of New York, one of the largest oil and gas pipe line engineering firms in the world. Their report, which will be filed with the conservation board, shows the route of the line to be completely practical and economical in all respects.

Then on page 16 we find the following:

> Plans for a pipe line to take oil to tidewater for the Pacific coast market from the Edmonton area, Normandville, Stettler and the large potential Peace river country of both Alberta and British Columbia, following the route of the gas pipe line are far advanced. Westcoast Transmission Company, whose charter provides for the transportation of oil as well as gas, has already had Ford, Bacon and Davis complete the preliminary engineering and design for the oil pipe line from Edmonton to Vancouver following exactly the same route as the gas line.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment I had proved to myself with complete satisfaction that an all-Canadian route for this pipe line was entirely feasible and practical, but I cannot say how many other hon. members I convinced. Having the presumption to make such a statement, I also quote as an authority the well-known and highly respected firm of Ford, Bacon and Davis Incorporated of New York, the largest pipe-line company in the world.

At the request of the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited this company made a survey of an all-Canadian route for a pipe line to transport gas from the same natural gas fields which the company now seeking incorporation would serve. They reported that the proposal was entirely feasible and sound in every respect.

That being so, there is an entirely different angle that I want to address myself to in the short time I have left. As I said earlier this afternoon, there was nothing selfish in the stand taken by the opposition, but there may be a selfish angle in another phase of this matter that I should like to stress.

Bell island is the main source of iron ore for the Dominion Iron and Steel Company at Sydney, and, of course, steel is manufactured from this iron ore. There are about 10,000 people in the town of Wabana and because of present world conditions more than half those people are affected by the reduction in the staff at the mine, which is the largest iron ore mine in the British empire. Men who have worked upwards of thirty years have been discharged and the only recourse they have is to accept the miserable pittance of unemployment insurance.

The selfish angle to this matter is this: It is estimated by the Westcoast Transmission Company that it will cost approximately $100 million to construct the proposed pipe line, and I would assume that a large part of that would be for the steel pipe. If a large order for steel were placed with Dosco, not only would it help out the constituency of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis); it would help out my own riding where Bell island is located. In addition to Dosco, there are two other large steel companies in Canada, the Steel Company of Canada and the Algoma Steel Company.

There is no reason that I can see why a provision could not be inserted in this bill that Canadian steel be used for the construction of this pipe line. It might be interesting to hon. members to know that the act empowering a company to operate the ore body in Labrador close to the Quebec border contains a provision that Newfoundland labour shall be employed if available. There is no reason at all why a similar provision should not be inserted in this bill. If that were done, imagine the employment that would be created. Imagine the value it would mean to all Canada.

As I said before, the practicability of a pipe line going through Canada to the United States has been proved satisfactorily to a lot of people. A great number of communities in Alberta and British Columbia would be served and it would not in any way affect the places at the end of the line or interfere with the object the sponsor of this bill has in mind, the sale of gas to the United States.

It may mean a longer pipe line, but that means more money to be expended in Canada and more Canadian labour to be used. Ultimately it will mean a greater number of United States dollars to be spent at the end of the line because I presume the gas would cost a little more.

Mr. Harkness: $14,500,000 a year.

Mr. Higgins: The hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) says $14,500,000 a year. To use what may be considered an impolite expression that could be borrowed from the United States, "That ain't hay." My leader enunciated very well this afternoon the principle of Canada first, and that perhaps covers the whole field. But in particular, employment would be given, Canadian steel would be used and there would be a greater return of United States dollars.

No hon. member wants to be named at some later period as having been a mere rubber stamp, as some of us unfortunately have been told already we are. Nobody wants to be called that. As no particular and useful purpose will be served, so far as I can see, by granting permission to the company now making application in this form, I am quite satisfied that no wrong will be done to it or to any other companies if the matter is delayed until we have the necessary undertaking. Remember, as I said earlier, all that hon. members on this side of the house want is an assurance from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that the pipe line will go through Canadian territory. I should also like to hear something about the use of Canadian steel. I should like to endorse that myself, but I will not make a point of it. If he will give us a guarantee that the pipe line will go through Canadian territory then, so far as I am concerned, I will not vote against the measure.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the discussions on these various pipe lines have now been continuing for some time. While I have listened to them with a great deal of interest on occasion, this is the first time I have risen to participate in any debate on the matter. I felt I should do so because of the fact that my colleagues and I are in complete agreement with regard to this question. When we look back over the history of Canada ever since and even before confederation, and read the parliamentary records and debates of other days, we are struck by the fact that at times parliament has not given sufficient care to the alienation and utilization of our great resources.

A short time ago reference was made to railways. I remember the manner in which many of the railway charters went through this house, apparently guaranteed by the men who were asking for them, but ultimately they proved to be to the advantage of small groups of people, and did not always inure to the welfare of the great masses of the people of the country or of the country itself. In recent years we have discovered in Canada, and particularly in the province of Alberta, one of the world's great resources, oil. It is just over forty years ago since I went to a district in Alberta not very far from where this great oil field has now been discovered. I stayed with a small rancher between Wetaskiwin and Camrose for sixteen months. I remember riding over the prairies with him, and particularly down into the Battle river valley. Having lived in California and Oklahoma, he would often say to me that one day a large field of oil would be discovered in that vicinity. I paid very little attention to his prophecy.

Some nine or ten years ago—and I remarked about it in the house afterwards—I heard the Arctic explorer, Stefansson, say at a luncheon, at which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) was also present, that probably the largest oil field in the world would be discovered somewhere in northern Alberta. Again most of us paid little attention to his prediction. A great field of oil has been discovered, and it seems to me that this House of Commons must consider how and where the oil and gas shall be utilized. If I may say so, I also remember that a few years ago, when gas was being burned wastefully in the Turner valley, we were told that there was a sufficient amount of gas being burned every day to heat every home in the province of Alberta. Now there is this very valuable oil and gas discovery in the province of Alberta in far greater quantity than anything that we dreamed of a few years ago.

It seems to me, when an application is made to the house for the piping of gas or oil from the field elsewhere, it is one of the duties of hon. members to see to it that the utilization of the gas and oil is considered from the point of view of the greatest good first of all to our own country. I do not believe that we should ever behave as narrowly nationalist, or that we should try to build a wall around the country in order to make Canada self-sufficient, but nevertheless

I believe we owe it not only to this generation, but also to generations to come after us, to see that the people of Canada derive the maximum benefit from the resources that Providence deposited in this land in ages gone by. Because of that, I am supporting those who are urging that, before we give assent to this application for a charter, before we pass the bill which gives this company very substantial rights, we should be informed before we cast our votes as to how the people of Canada are to be protected, and how this great resource is to be utilized in the public interest. In other words, I think we have a perfect right to have placed before us a definite statement that the pipe line will pass through Canadian territory, that Vancouver and the Canadian towns and cities between it and the field shall receive first consideration from this parliament rather than that Vancouver, that great Canadian city, should be served at the end of a pipe line after several places in the United States have been taken care of.

After all, this House of Commons represents the Canadian people, and if we as members are sent here to do any one thing it is to protect the interests of the people of Canada. It seems to me that we not only have a right, as was said this afternoon, but we also have a duty to perform in that respect. I do not think the House of Commons will be doing its duty if it fails to continue to ask, until we get it, for a definite statement as to the route that the line will take if we grant the charter. I do not think that hon. members should vote on the bill without making doubly sure that the interests of the people of western Canada are properly and adequately protected. When one looks at the measure and realizes how comprehensive a charter would be given under the legislation, one begins to understand the importance of the bill now before us. The company may do many things. It may build pipe lines for the transportation of oil and the movement of gas; it may construct, purchase, lease, or what you will, property within or outside Canada for its purposes. It may do almost any conceivable thing than can be done under legislation. Such a measure, conferring such tremendous power upon a company, should require the most careful consideration of every hon. member of this house.

I do not think we should do what was sometimes done in the past; that is, put through a bill of this description without knowing precisely what is involved. Last year, because we heard there was some urgency in the matter, we passed an oil pipeline bill. After it was all over and done with we found that the pipe line was not going to convey oil to a Canadian lake port but was going to transport it to Superior, Wisconsin. Of course there was a great deal of protest by Canadians not only in western Canada but in all parts of the country. As a matter of fact, when subsequently we came to see where that line was going we found that while it went from the oil field to Regina, it entirely cut out the largest of our prairie cities, Winnipeg, and crossed the border to the southeast of that city. So if it should become desirable to build a refinery of any sort there it would necessitate a feeder line from the main line to the city of Winnipeg.

We should have known before we approved that line what route it was going to follow, and where the terminus would be; but the house was urged to pass the legislation because we were told there was a certain amount of urgency in the matter, and I am quite free to confess that I thought there was considerable urgency. In yielding to that plea I do not think any of us gave that measure the consideration that should be expected of us in this House of Commons, both individually and collectively. I do not propose to agree to a similar error at this time, Mr. Speaker. I hope a large number of hon. members will not agree to its repetition, for error it was, and error it will be if we adopt this bill without knowing the route the line will follow.

Then, too, how do we know that when we grant this charter to the people who are named as applying for it, they are actually the people who are going to carry out the undertaking? I notice that in the bill introduced this year, instead of the two names there were in the bill introduced last session there are now several. Last year we had two legal gentlemen, I am told of very good repute, though I do not know either of them, applying for the charter. It was quite obvious that they were applying on behalf of clients; and even today, with the more impressive number of names in the bill under discussion, we cannot be sure that these are the directors or officers of the company who ultimately, if this charter is granted, will carry out its provisions. I believe that is another point we should consider and endeavour to find another way in which we should try to protect the people of the country. Again, if I may say so, in days gone by charters were obtained which were used as sources of great profit to those obtaining them. Those who received the charters did not carry out the work, but turned them over at some very considerable profit without doing anything except get the charter through the House of Commons or, in some instances, through a provincial legislature. A few days ago I was looking up the records in connection with the granting of railway charters some years ago. One finds millions of dollars made by persons who obtained the right to construct, and then turned over the undertaking to someone else. We should be assured that this is not going to happen in the case of these pipe lines, and particularly in the case of the bill now before us.

Consequently I repeat that before we grant this charter, before we pass this bill, we should know far more about this measure than we know at the present time. I know that men who have sat in this chamber over the years, men of different parties, on occasion have warned this house to be careful about this sort of thing. I have before me a quotation I copied some few years ago, and I thought of it this evening. It is from Hansard of May 18, 1932, when Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was prime minister. He was speaking in the house on another matter, but along somewhat similar lines, and at page 3036 he said:

> I believe that there is no government in Canada that does not regret today that it has parted with some of these natural resources for considerations wholly inadequate and on terms that do not reflect the principle under which the crown holds the natural resources in trust for all the people.

It seems to me that is apropos of this discussion. We are not alienating a resource under this legislation, but we are facilitating the disposal of a resource that we should be treating as a trust on behalf of all the people. So I say we should not pass this bill until we have answers to the questions that have been asked over and over again, not only by hon. members on this side of the house but also by hon. gentlemen sitting on the government side, as to what this proposal really is, where the line is going, and how oil or gas or whatever it may be will be disposed of when this line is built.

I said a few moments ago that this country has great resources. During the last parliament we granted a company the right to build a railway to give access to great deposits of iron ore in the province of Quebec and in Labrador. I do not think we should pursue a dog-in-the-manger attitude regarding the development of these resources. Only a few days ago I was talking to some people in the United States about these great resources. Apparently the hope is that much of this iron ore, to which we gave access by the granting of a railway charter, will be moved from our country down into the New England states, where smelters and a new iron and steel industry will be established. Yet we have in our own country, as the member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) pointed out a few moments ago, an iron and steel industry established on Cape Breton island. In that region at the moment there are a great many unemployed. Almost continuously during the 15 years I have been in this House of Commons, except for a brief period during the war, there has been unemployment in that area of Canada. I believe we have to consider how we can utilize these resources, primarily for the benefit of the people in the country in which those resources are located. The first thing is not to allow these resources to be used without regard for the benefit of our own country.

We should consider that we in Canada today are, in a great many respects, hewers of wood and drawers of water for our great neighbour to the south. Many of our resources, timber, pulp, ore of various types, and so on, move across the border for manufacture. To some extent, the finished product comes back to this country, and rather complicates our dollar situation with the United States. I think that is regrettable. I do not think we can stop it by legislation. I believe that if this parliament, and the provincial legislatures, considered these matters from the point of view of the public interest, ways and means could be devised by which native industries could use more of these raw materials in Canada. This would make us more independent economically, and assist us in building up a more prosperous country. It would afford opportunities for inviting more people here by way of immigration, and prevent the constant flow of young people from this country to the United States.

I was in one of the seaboard cities in the United States last Saturday, and I was surprised at the number of young Canadians I met on that visit. Some of them were from western Canada, some from Montreal, and others from various parts of this dominion. True, they were studying in the United States, but on chatting with them I found that several of them contemplated remaining in the United States, because they considered the opportunities greater in that country than in Canada. Every time we do the thing that is implicit in this bill, allow a company to take our natural resources and utilize them outside our border when they could be utilized inside, we are encouraging the flow of young Canadians out of this country. We are denying them the opportunities that should exist in the country in which they live. After all, we have to remember that we have an obligation to future generations to conserve these resources.

I suppose every member of the house knows that over the last 50 or 60 years the resources of the United States have been steadily depleted. One has only to drive through Minnesota and Wisconsin and see how the great open iron mines of these two states are running out to realize the truth of what I say. We have an obligation to conserve our resources to the extent that may be necessary for the welfare of our country. We do not know just exactly what is going to be done with a charter of this description. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have no right to pass this bill without making further inquiries, and demanding of the sponsors a more complete outline of what it is proposed to do than we have yet received from anyone, including the ministers who are supporting this bill.

So then we have to make the decision. I repeat that I believe the decision we should make is that we will not pass this bill until we have the information for which we have asked, and which has been sought during the last few weeks. The conservation of gas and oil is undertaken primarily by the provinces. If there is a great surplus which could be utilized elsewhere, then I submit that the province of Alberta, and the people interested in pipe lines, might look to the east of the province of Alberta if they will not look west. Some of this gas could be utilized for the heating of the homes in the neighbouring provinces. As I said earlier in my remarks this evening, I was told some years ago that the gas which was burned wastefully in the province of Alberta would heat every home in that province, so today it would be quite easy to utilize quantities of gas not needed in the province of Alberta to heat the homes in the neighbouring provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. With the intensely cold climate of those provinces, it would be a godsend to many of the people who live there.

A pipe line going south into the United States, to Spokane and Seattle, perhaps as suggested this afternoon even going down into the state of Oregon, would leave the Canadian communities in the interior of British Columbia, even the cities of Vancouver and New Westminster, either without gas or at the end of the line, and with a problematical instead of an assured service. Again I say that if we are going to allow a company to build a line of this description, we should see to it that it is built to the greatest possible advantage of the people of our own country.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) just now introduced the matter of unemployment in another form. He spoke of the miles of pipe line that would be necessary in a project of this description. I do not know where the pipes would be obtained, but I do know that a few years ago, when it was proposed to bring gas from another field into some of the prairie cities, the pipes were going to be brought in from some of the United States iron and steel centres.

Mr. Knight: These are coming from Wisconsin.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) says these are coming from Wisconsin. I have not that information; but I am sure that if we allow this pipe line to pass out of our country and through the United States, the labour required, both in making the cut and in manufacturing the pipe as well as in the laying of the pipe, would be undertaken in the United States and not in our own country. Again I say, as the hon. member for St. John's East said a few minutes ago, that there is unemployment in at least one part of Canada where there is a steel industry; and even if it were working at the full at the present time, there is no guarantee that in a short time there would not be unemployment and the need for that kind of work in that particular area. After all, with the dollar situation the way it is across the seas, the market for Nova Scotia steel in the United Kingdom is likely to be curtailed sharply for some time to come; and anything that can be done to provide work for the people of our own country and those engaged in Canadian steel mills should be done by this parliament. That is of course another reason why, before we vote on this bill, we should first know just exactly the route that this line is going to follow. I repeat what I have said several times in the course of my remarks, namely, that until we know the route that this line will follow we should not approve this particular bill nor indeed the other bill which is on the order paper with it and which will come before us after we have disposed of this one.

We in this house have a duty to perform. Those of us who are opposing the passage of this bill and are speaking against it are not engaged in a filibuster. I had not spoken on the matter until tonight, but my colleagues were accused of being engaged in some sort of filibuster. There is no filibuster about this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coldwell: I am going to repeat that statement. There is no filibuster about it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coldwell: But I will tell you what there is. On the part of a large number of members on this side of the house there is a determination that we are going to do everything we can to prevent this bill from going through until we know what the bill is all about; and that is all there is to it. That is not a filibuster. This, my friends, is an attempt on the part of an opposition—because apparently this has become a government bill—to fulfil the duty and the function of an opposition, which is to get the facts before the people of this country and to have all the facts before allowing the government to take the next step.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, I know that there may be laughter at that kind of thing. But let me say this. In a house of this description, with the overwhelming majority that is behind the government, the only method open to the opposition is to endeavour to force the issue and to get the facts in the best manner that we can get them.

The other day I was reading an interesting book, which I might just quote from memory, dealing with the British parliamentary institution. The writer said that responsible government required that a government should always live in the shadow of defeat, and that the most dangerous thing under our parliamentary system was for a government to remain in power so long that it got the idea that it had permanent power. If you apply that statement to the present situation in this House of Commons you begin to see the reason behind some of the things that have been done over the past number of weeks or months. If we can help it, we do not propose that this bill shall go through until this house is properly informed about it. Who are the people that want to build the line? How is it going to be financed? Is this project going to be really undertaken by the people who are asking for it or is the proposed charter going to be turned over to somebody else at a profit later on? Where is this line going to be built? What is its route? Is it going through Canada or is it going south through the United States? Is it going to serve Canadian communities first, including Vancouver, or will Vancouver and other Canadian communities in British Columbia be at the end of the line to take what is left after the cities on the other side of the boundary have been first served?

For the reasons I have given, Mr. Speaker, I therefore propose to cast my vote—and I hope the matter will come to a vote—against this bill, because I believe that I owe it as a duty to the people of this country to protect their interests and to see to it that this house does not approve an application for a charter until we know what that charter involves and, in this instance, how the line is going to convey this valuable resource from one place to another.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I rise to voice my opinion why this bill should not be passed. In the town of Collingwood in the county of Simcoe, where I reside, I have the great privilege of enjoying natural gas for heating water; and I must say that it is a terrific boon to anybody who has such an asset. I can remember how delighted I was when I purchased the property and was informed that there was a natural gas well that would heat the water for my home at no cost whatever. It was a pleasure to me to hear of the abundant supply of natural gas that had been discovered in the province of Alberta. I am not very conversant with oil or natural gas wells, but I do realize that this House of Commons has been asked to pass a bill granting a charter to a group of men in order that they may be able to sell a natural product of the Dominion of Canada.

I was a resident of Philadelphia some years ago, and I remember the amalgamation of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. It comprised several operating companies prior to the amalgamation and numerous charters that had been granted by the various governments in power over a period of fifty or sixty years. When these charters were granted by the state of Pennsylvania the representatives of the people at the time did not think, apparently, that it meant much. It was simply a piece of paper that some members of the legal profession were asking for on behalf of a client. These charters were obtained in the city of Philadelphia to run transportation lines up and down various streets. They did absolutely nothing with their charters. But when the people of Philadelphia wanted proper transportation facilities, and desired to run streetcar lines down certain streets in the city, they discovered to their consternation that charters had been granted for that purpose years before, and unless they paid fabulous sums for a charter they could not give the public the service to which they were entitled. These old charters were irrevocable. Before the people could obtain what they were entitled to, millions of dollars were paid for charters that had been granted by the governments of Pennsylvania without any more consideration than this government has given to the granting of this charter for the carriage of natural gas, an asset of the Dominion of Canada.

When we hear of people heating their homes with natural gas in this cold climate of ours for the paltry sum of $125 to $150 per year we should stop and think. We should ask ourselves, are we going to give away this asset to the United States of America?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That is $125 a year.

Mr. Ferguson: I remember my father saying to me forty years ago on Portage avenue in Winnipeg when they were digging the excavation for the Eaton store: "Son, when you are my age—" and I have reached that age now—"this country will have a population of 30 million." I have reached that age, and to my regret, and to the great regret of all Canadians, we have not a population of 30 million. We still pay $160 for washing machines because we have a small market in which to sell them as compared with the United States price of $80. We all know of railroad men travelling across this country and coming to the border and handing their train over to United States engineers who receive far better remuneration than our engineers do. That applies to freight or passenger trains. I know that in my own town of Collingwood there are capable seamen who travel across the great lakes in boats of tonnage identical with that of boats which sail from Duluth, and carry the same commodities; yet our sailors receive far less money than the United States sailors. How much longer must that go on? Our resources are as great as those of the United States. Our work is as hard and our burden as heavy to carry, but our remuneration is far less than is received for the same work in the United States. I as a Canadian, and as a member of the House of Commons, must protest against the continual giving away of Canada's resources.

This afternoon I heard the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) speak in a flippant manner regarding the assets of this country. He does not seem to realize what this resource means not only to Alberta but to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario and the remainder of our ten provinces. How delighted we were when Newfoundland became our tenth province. Do we want to have anything to give these people to work with? The desire seems to be to get the gas across the line as quickly as possible over the shortest possible route. I say to the members of the Liberal party from all over Canada, cease being rubber stamps and look into this situation. If we object to this, it is called a filibuster. When I as a Canadian born of three generations endeavour to save the resources of the Dominion of Canada it is called a filibuster. What are we sent here for? So far as this bill is concerned, 90 per cent of the men who fill the Liberal benches do not know what they are here for. Numbers of them have never voiced an opinion. Just a scant handful have said anything. Some person must have said to them, this is what you are going to do and nothing else. We have all heard the old saying that 50,000 Frenchmen can't be wrong, that there is a sucker born every minute, as Barnum said, and that the organ-grinder has more than one monkey on his string.

Do hon. members realize that natural gas is the greatest selling commodity now known to the industrial world? Do hon. members know that it is being transported 2,000 miles from its source in the United States? Do the Liberal members realize that this $100 million which is being spent on this pipe line is infinitesimal compared with the amounts being spent by pipe-line companies in the United States? Why, this is just a bagatelle. Do they realize that 13,500,000 people in the United States are now enjoying natural gas? And yet they want to put this pipe line down in the United States to feed the only part of that country which is not now enjoying natural gas. Why not put this pipe line into British Columbia? Why not let it serve Saskatchewan, that great and wonderful province? Why not let it serve Manitoba and Ontario? The distance from Fort William to the source of supply in Alberta is far less than from Houston, Texas, to New York.

We need it in Ontario not for selfish reasons but for the advancement of the people of this province so that Ontario can become more densely populated and its people will not have to go to the United States to receive better pay than they are now receiving. Let us build up this country of Canada in the way in which it can be built up. Let us stop giving away our resources as we have been doing. This is no filibuster. We are facing one of the most serious problems that has ever confronted the members of this House of Commons.

It is beyond belief when I hear a large industrialist from eastern Canada, who sits to the right in the House of Commons and who has made a few hundred thousand dollars out of industry, laugh loudly when the suggestion is made that our resources should be preserved for Canada. It is a pity that he could not see fit to get on his feet and urge this parliament to use a sane method in exercising its power to say, "No, we are responsible to the people for the protection of the resources and we will not grant this charter with the information we have before us."

What have we to vote on? We have lots not to vote on. We have simply an application whereby some barristers and solicitors of the Dominion of Canada ask for a charter to build a pipe line. Do we know what quantities of natural gas we will require in Canada? How thoroughly has the government studied the needs of this country, not five years from now but ten or twenty years from now? Have they considered it in the light of a proper program—something they have not thought of —of immigration to swell our population, a program that would permit people to come here and earn a living rather than to receive Marshall plan aid and the free gifts of Canada?

No, they will wait until we have lost our markets. They will wait until our farmers are back where they were in 1930 looking for some place to sell their products. They will do that rather than encourage immigration which would help to use up our resources. We hear that $100 million is going to be spent in the United States to manufacture this steel pipe line. Surely there is some person in the government with a vestige of vision, with enough soul to say, "I am a Canadian and I am going to build up this country. We are not going to keep on being subservient to the United States and saying, 'Please, Mister, you put up $100 million and we will lend you a few workmen, we will garner in a few shekels and we will give you our birthright.' " Is there no man in the party to the right of the Speaker who feels as I feel, that this is important to Canada irrespective of what province you come from?

Surely there must be some of you who will say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), "Wait a minute, I do not know enough about this. There must be something in what these fellows are saying." I venture to say that eighty per cent of the members of the Liberal party do not know what a natural gas well looks like, or what an oil well looks like. I will bet you that they have not spent five minutes in studying the great potentialities of the natural resources of Alberta.

The Progressive Conservative party, the C.C.F. and other members are questioning this charter. They want to know what the charter is going to give and what it is going to take away. They want to know what we are going to receive. They want to know what this will mean to the people of Alberta and Canada. When this pipe line is completed and gas is flowing down to the United States it will give those people an opportunity to operate their industries and produce at less than we can produce in Canada. What will be the loss to the government and the people of Alberta? It will be nothing compared with the gains of the people living in the United States who will be operating the industrial enterprises with the assistance of this gas. It will only strengthen their arm to continue to operate against Canada in producing at prices we cannot compete with. They will be paying their labour while our men will be walking the streets in a short time from now.

There are no signs on the part of the government of a slackening up in the granting of this charter. For some reason or other they want to push it through. No one here representing any group, apart from the chosen few of the Liberal party, has any right to read, study or worry on behalf of his constituents if they get up to voice their opinions. I am sure that there are members of the Liberal party who, if they were questioned about this situation and asked what they knew about it, would have to reply that they had made absolutely no study whatever. It is simply a case of, "Let us get it through because some person in our party has told us to rubber stamp it and that is what we are here for."

That is not what you are here for, gentlemen. You are here for the same purpose that I am here for. Irrespective of party you are here to watch the resources of your country. We are ten united provinces who should work as one. I want some information as to what is going to happen under this charter. This is the last rope by which I can hang on to our natural resources. This is the last rope by which you gentlemen can control this.

If this charter is granted, these people will go before a commission not made up of members of the House of Commons. When people vote for a candidate on election day they say, "I believe that man is honest; I believe that is the man I want at Ottawa. I do not think he will let them take any undiscovered or recently discovered natural resources away from the people of Canada. I think he will go down to Ottawa to look after our interests."

We have seen our pulpwood being sent to the United States to be manufactured into newsprint. For years newsprint produced in United States mills has been coming back to this country to be used in putting out our newspapers. We were printing our newspapers on United States paper manufactured by United States labour from the natural resources of Canada. Then thanks to a certain premier of Ontario this practice was stopped. He put his foot down and said, "That is as far as you can go; this pulp must be made into paper in the province of Ontario. If you want this paper, you Americans whom we love and respect, put up your paper plants in Ontario, employ Ontario labour and keep them off the breadline. We will give you all the pulp you want and you can sell the finished product back to your beloved United States."

The net result is that there are paper mills across northern Ontario and the rest of Canada that we are all exceedingly proud of. As we go through those mills we see pulp from our forests being churned up, manufactured into paper, rolled up and being tagged for the Chicago Tribune, the New York Herald and other newspapers. All this being made by Canadian labour.

This is a filibuster being put on by this side of the house, with few exceptions such as the hon. Liberal member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). He has every right to be proud of the fact that he got to his feet to speak. He is a veteran of the first war. He is a man who thinks of his people. Are there not some others who are men enough to get up and say, "I cannot vote by standing on my feet for the passage of a charter when I know absolutely nothing of the way in which this charter is going to be used?" Who is going to use it? What is Canada going to get out of it? Surely members of the Liberal party coming from Ontario, as I do, can understand the plea of the members of the legislature of the province of British Columbia. Surely they can understand their point of view when they ask to have the pipe line go through their province, and then if there is anything left over by all means sell it south of the border. Surely members of the House of Commons of Canada must hearken to the pleas of the provincial government of British Columbia, the unanimous vote of their legislature, and the municipalities of that province.

I do not live there. In fact I almost froze there last August. You are here as members of the House of Commons of Canada but surely some small part of your hearing must be able to catch the voice of British Columbia. Members of their government and legislature have made a more thorough study of the question than ninety per cent of the Liberal members here tonight, during the day or at any other time. Do not be so generous with the other fellow's money when you vote, because it is really your money to protect also. Let me say that if any Liberal member of the House of Commons owned these resources he would be a little more careful about how he was going to use them and where they were going to be sent. He would want to know more about the future. That is your duty, and that is what you are here for. Make no bones about it.

The speeches of some Liberal members who have taken part in this debate will make lovely reading at the next election. Let me assure you that I intend to take the speech of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) and simply comment on it, and I will certainly be re-elected because my people will not stand for anybody giving away the resources of Canada as he wants to. I will be back for sure. We are just ordinary everyday businessmen with various vocations in life. Surely it would be an easy matter for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to say that it is possible for him to produce further facts regarding this charter. Surely it would be easy for him in has capacity to enlighten even the Conservatives as to what additional cost would be involved if the pipe line went through the province of British Columbia rather than through the United States. At various times in the House of Commons he has referred so casually to millions of dollars as being a mere nothing. In fact he called them peanuts once. Surely he could say: Even if it does cost three or four million peanuts, let the boys in British Columbia have it their way. It is their natural resource, it is their province and it is their Canada.

If the founders of the Canadian Pacific Railway had listened in the early days to some of those who were advocating railroads in the west, you would never have had the Canadian Pacific Railway today running from coast to coast. There are members of the house who do not realize that. We stand back and point with pride to our two railroads paralleling one another from coast to coast, but when the idea of a transcontinental line was first conceived, there were members of parliament who said: Why not run the C.P.R. from the western provinces due south to the United States? Thus they would have isolated that section of Canada and impeded the growth which has certainly been fundamental in making the Canada we have today. The pioneers of the Canadian Pacific Railway have made it possible for us to say that as Canadians we are proud of the fact we are citizens of this great country and that we have inestimable natural resources.

At this time the people of the United States find that certain resources are becoming exhausted, and they are scratching their heads wondering where they will find the ore necessary to produce steel. They are willing to come to Canada, to Labrador, and to spend millions of dollars. It was announced in our papers recently that United States industrialists are going to spend millions of dollars on the development of Canadian resources. The development of Canada has only been made possible by men with vision, people who are now dead but who have given us the Canada that we have today. I make a solemn plea to the members of the Liberal party. They would do well to go to the minister and ask him to give them time to look into the situation. They need time because it will take a long while for some Liberals to get it through their heads what they are giving away. From their actions in the debate on this measure, undoubtedly they will have to go to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask his permission. There is no doubt about that.

No matter when the bill comes to a vote, let us hope that the slate is a little clearer and cleaner. Let us hope that the parliament of Canada will not grant such charters without any more thought than the bill received from many Liberal members who called for a vote before very many had had an opportunity to express their views on a matter which I believe is of the utmost importance and of the greatest value to the Dominion of Canada. I plead with them not to vote until they know that history will not prove that they have given away a resource to the United States which at the present time is one of the greatest industries in that country. It has proven to be one of the greatest investments for investors.

Life insurance companies are spending hundreds of millions of dollars of their policyholders' money on the purchase of stock in gas pipe-line enterprises. Surely we should give the people of Canada a better opportunity and more time to learn about what is going on in Alberta. The average citizen of Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland or Nova Scotia does not realize, any more than the Liberal members of the house, what a great new resource has been discovered in Alberta. Fortunately I was able to go out there last summer, and I had my eyes opened as to the tremendous potentialities of the new-found wealth of the Dominion of Canada. Each year we pay hundreds of millions of dollars for United States coal and oil.

What does it cost the people of Ontario to heat their homes with United States coal and oil? Do we know whether or not they can pipe oil and gas from Alberta and deliver it in Ontario at one-quarter the cost? We do not. It is the duty of this government, in looking after the welfare of the people of Canada, to ascertain those costs and find out what are the possibilities. If that cannot be done let them prove it to us, and show the people of Ontario that they must continue to spend millions of dollars for United States fuel and then watch it go up in smoke, while our people go on unemployment relief or go to the United States for jobs.

Let us stop somewhere. Let us populate the country. Let us build up this nation of ours. We are all very keen in saying we are a great nation. We were through the war. We made munitions, and did a great job. We promised our soldiers the world with a fence around it when they came back; and in some cases that has turned out to be the breadline. Here in this country, which is the last great undeveloped source of wealth, what great vision is the Liberal government showing in the development of Canada? They cannot take credit for the discovery of oil and gas in Alberta, though no doubt they will try, as they have tried to take credit for everything worth while in Canada. We must face the facts. United States capital owns the oil and gas developments in Alberta. The federal government simply toddled along behind; and when those developing these resources asked for a charter which would mean giving our heritage away our government said, "Bring it into parliament and we will sign it as quickly as possible. Do what you like with our resources."

There will be no doubt about my vote on this matter. Liberal members to the right and left of Mr. Speaker should think pretty seriously about how they will vote if they dare face their electors again.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot share the hope of the hon. member who has just spoken that he may somehow, by his eloquence, influence the backbenchers on the government side to oppose this bill. One of the criticisms I think that can be levelled with some justification against the party system of government is that backbenchers will condone a great deal they do not think is right or they do not think is justified on the part of their government rather than cause that government embarrassment. After all, as they look at it, while a certain piece of legislation proposed may be bad, the embarrassment, or more particularly the fall, of the government to which they owe allegiance would be to them the ultimate disaster.

We have heard a number of fine speeches in this debate. If it has served no other purpose it has at least produced some eloquence in the house this afternoon and evening. I envy the hon. member who just spoke his forcefulness, though I must disagree with him in regard to the speech of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), whom I envy for his facility in the use of the English language. I might agree with the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) that the hon. member for Skeena rather spoiled his remarks at one point by flippancy, but on the whole I thought it was a very good speech, and carried away by his eloquence I felt for a moment that almost I was persuaded; but it was only almost. I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member did not point out that under this legislation the company may build its pipe line within certain provinces, and then the wording is "and outside Canada."

It is that provision in this bill to which I have some objection, like many other hon. members. This objection is founded on several reasons. I do not expect to be able to say anything that has not been said already, but it is still my glorious privilege to say it; and in doing so I shall not delay the legislation very much. In my mind the question arises as to the extent to which one is justified in delaying legislation which is quite evidently popular with the majority of hon. members here. The argument against that, of course, was put forward by the hon. gentleman who just preceded me. To what extent is it the real opinion of the individual members of this house that this bill should be passed with such expedition as the government demands? I personally have said nothing previously in these debates. In spite of the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last year, up to that time only the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones) of those belonging to this party had spoken on the subject.

Mr. Howe: You have fixed that since then.

Mr. Knight: Right; and as far as we were concerned our opposition last session was not directed so much at the subject matter of those bills as to the challenge laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to us as private members and the fact that, no doubt justifiably in his own mind but unjustifiably in the minds of most of us, he interfered with the procedure of this house in order to give those bills a certain priority. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), no doubt inspired by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, did that very thing by moving a resolution which extended the time for consideration of private bills.

I was going to state the reasons for my opposition. I shall do so as concisely as possible and without taking up too much time, lest I too should be accused of holding up legislation. In the first place, in my opinion a pipe line is or should be a common carrier. It is part of a transportation system and as such, according to the political philosophy I hold, it should be under public ownership and control. As it is I am afraid it will go the way of so many other things. United States capital will build and own it, and the dividends will go across the line into the United States instead of being distributed as they should be among the rightful owners of the gas or oil, the people of Canada.

That is the first thing. We are simply carrying on to completion a process of economic absorption into the United States by the alienation of our great natural resources. Look at what has happened to our timber in British Columbia. When I was out there a short time ago they were burning sawdust as fuel. They had some bad weather, as hon. members from British Columbia know, and in a few days the mills shut down because it was not economically profitable to produce lumber under those conditions. Within three days Vancouver was out of sawdust, and I saw a woman wheeling a fifty-pound sack of coal in a baby carriage. Those are the conditions with respect to fuel that can exist today in the great cities of British Columbia; yet we are going to take our gas down to the United States and give it to the people of Seattle, letting the mothers in British Columbia push coal instead of babies in their baby carriages.

I am opposed to this bill because it proposes to take that gas down into the United States before taking it to the city of Vancouver. I do not know whether anyone has mentioned the matter of the employment the construction of a pipe line would afford, but in view of our unemployment situation it is an important consideration. Apparently Canadian industry is not geared to manufacture these pipes. I do not know why, but we have been told that there are 780,000 tons of this pipe being loaded on flat cars to supply the material for the construction of the pipe line under construction between Edmonton and Superior. I do not know whether the pipe for the construction of the line envisaged in this bill would come from the same source, but I am only speaking of what I do know.

The next thing I would draw to the attention of this house is that the granting of a franchise by the passage of this bill would be no guarantee that the line would be built. There is a story about that, which occurred in my own constituency. In the year 1940, it was the wish of the mayor and council of the city of Saskatoon to bring natural gas to that city for heating purposes. It was during the war, of course, but a contract was entered into with a firm called the Northern Natural Gas Company. I do not know anything about it, about its reliability, or whether it has any funds behind it which would enable it to carry out its commitments. The company obtained the franchise in 1940 but did nothing further about the matter. I suppose the minister will tell me that was due to the lack of material during the war years, and I grant him that. The point is, however, that nothing has been done since then. The company put up a deposit, and I presume that, because of the tortuous manipulations of the law, the council is somewhat reluctant to try to possess itself of the money which has been left in its hands. I do not know the law of the situation, but I do know we are interested in getting the gas. The other day representatives of that particular company met with the city council and had the audacity or pure cheek to apply for a further extension of the franchise for 20 years, while Saskatoon waits for that source of heat.

In short, those are the reasons why I am opposed to this bill. Again I say my opposition is chiefly because this pipe line is not going to be built by and for Canadians.

Canadians will not get the full benefit of the product which, in my opinion, belongs to them. If I wanted to be somewhat flippant, as the member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) sometimes is, I might suppose the government is anxious to put this pipe line down through United States territory to keep it out of the way of the bulldozers of the next military operation staged by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton). Let the sponsors of the bill declare the route they intend to use. Then let parliament make its decision, in the light of that information.

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to oppose this bill, as many other speakers have done. I am not prepared to make a lengthy speech on the legal aspects of this bill. Those legal arguments have been well presented to this house by other speakers, who are opposed to the bill as it is now worded. It is supposed to be a private bill, but when you look at it, and when you listen to the attitude expressed by some members of this house, one finds it is a private bill closely cuddled by the government of the day.

I was asked to speak on this bill by my constituents, who have written asking me to state my position on the bill because it is not in the interests of Canada first. I shall not make any lengthy reference to those things that have already been mentioned. I am only speaking in the interests of our sister province, because we in the maritime provinces of Canada know what it is to be discriminated against, and neglected by this government. What is this so-called private bill before us? It amounts to discrimination against our sister province of British Columbia. The members from that province are speaking in opposition to the bill to ensure their province cheap power from the wonderful oil and gas fields of Alberta.

We have no information as to where this bill came from and, as the sponsor of the bill has admitted, he does not know where it is going. I believe all members of this house, when it comes to a vote, should send this bill to limbo immediately. I should like to say a word about the opportunities that will exist under this measure, if properly handled, from the point of view of British Columbia. It will give that great province on the Pacific coast the opportunity of developing her industries with the cheap power for which she is longing. Why then should this pipe line, as the promoters of it have almost admitted, go down through the United States, instead of first serving that part of Canada which is the gateway to the whole of Canada, namely, British Columbia?

A short time ago we had an example of the principle contained in this bill. Canada's great railway line was short of fuel. Why was there a shortage? It was due to the fact we had not developed the coal fields of Alberta. Properly developed, those coal fields could have supplied the necessary fuel, and there would not have been any shortage. If the principle of "Canada first" had been adhered to, the Canadian National Railways would have had a supply of fuel. Owing to the fact that this principle was not adhered to, there was a shortage of coal in the midst of abundance. If the mines had been properly developed, the coal could have been brought from the west to the east.

I do not intend to develop any phase of the arguments which have already been advanced, about the work that will be provided if the pipe line is constructed in Canada. It will mean jobs for the jobless, and we all know that subject is uppermost in the minds of the representatives of the people today. Certain industries should be developed in order to take care of the jobless, who are increasing across this country from east to west.

All maritime members know this bill; and I say to them that on this occasion they should declare themselves with reference to the principle of it and that, first of all, they should have in their minds the idea that we, as a young nation, should look to Canada first. The other nations near us can take care of themselves. The natural resources of Canada served this country well during times of war, and in times of peace they should be so developed in the interests of Canada first that this young nation will be made prosperous and the unemployment that exists throughout our country today will be done away with. Oil will aid in bringing this about. Today the spotlight of the world, you might say—or at least of America—is directed to the province of Alberta owing to the great discoveries that have been made and the great development of the oil fields there. This bill is brought in by the promotors with one idea in mind, namely, that the country to the south of us—and it is a great country—must have the first preference with regard to all the power from the province of Alberta. But, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the members of this house, no matter where they reside or with what party they are affiliated, first of all —when they come to vote, if they vote on this bill—will vote in favour of Canada first and to let us develop our own homeland.

In closing let me say just one word more. From time to time we have spoken of our great development in this country. As I said a moment ago, we now have the opportunity to give to the sister province of British Columbia, the one that is really affected most by this pipe-line bill, that assistance that will enable her to have power to develop her own wonderful industries. That is my submission with reference to this bill; and I will certainly vote against it.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sinclair: Are you going to close the debate?

Mr. Cruickshank: No, although I know some of the parliamentary assistants would like to. I am not going to take much time tonight, but I want to make a few remarks.

An hon. Member: Where do you stand?

Mr. Cruickshank: I will tell you where I stand in a minute, if you will just be patient. I have not changed my stand.

An hon. Member: The fourth row back.

Mr. Cruickshank: I hear an interruption, "the fourth row back". May I say that if I have to go against my principles in order to get one row farther forward, I will go one row back. I think if some of my friends will wait a minute they may get a surprise around here, because I want to make it quite clear where I stand. I heard some question about my colleagues on this side of the house today. May I say that no pressure has been brought to bear on me by any member of the government, in any way, shape or form, to change my stand; and so far as I know, no pressure has been brought to bear by any member of the present government on any of my colleagues with regard to their stand. I want that to be perfectly clear.

I have not changed my stand at all. I want to make it clear that I am standing on my own say-so as the member for Fraser Valley. I was told tonight by some of my colleagues that possibly I was aspiring to the leadership of the Conservative party. I know they change their leaders often, and I know that my wife and I have not a house or an apartment; so on that ground alone I might have aspirations to take over the leadership of that party.

Mr. Sinclair: Why not?

Mr. Cruickshank: Just a minute. I do not know why I always get involved in controversial measures here in this House of Commons. The last time I was involved in one was during wartime. At that time I had two colleagues from my party who took a stand with me in connection with reinforcements. One of them—and rightly so—through his ability has obtained a high position within the government today; and I believe that on his ability he should go higher. The other member who sat with me was promoted to that other place, and I believe he deserves that recognition as a worthy old government supporter. I have not given up hope. I am apparently swimming the ocean alone at this time, but I have not given up hope. Who knows but that I may yet be appointed ambassador to Tibet or some other country such as that. You never can tell. There is always a hope.

Mr. Knowles: Viet Nam for you.

Mr. Cruickshank: I want to make my position clear. I have not changed at all. I want to say this. To those from my own province who oppose me, I give full credit for their sincerity in their stand. All I ask of them is that they give me credit for sincerity in my stand, even if I oppose them. I think that is reasonable enough. I know they have their ideas and beliefs, and I have mine. But of course, with regard to the province of British Columbia, I happen at this time to be standing on the right side. Three or four years from now it may be a little bit embarrassing for some of those who are not.

I am just going to read part of a report in one of the papers of British Columbia. Unlike one or two of the other members, I am not staging a filibuster. If I were, I would conduct myself differently. I have forty minutes yet to go, but I do not intend to take it all. If I were staging a filibuster, I would continue until my time expired. But may I say that a filibuster is the only weapon a private member has with which to enforce or to endeavour to enforce what he believes is in the best interests of his riding, of his province and of Canada as well. Although a small paper in Vancouver called the Sun adopted somewhat the same attitude, I will just read you from one of our weekly papers. I read one of the other local papers the other day.

Mr. Sinclair: Is it a weekly or annual?

Mr. Cruickshank: I am quite prepared to answer that question, because I paid what I thought was a deserved compliment to that colleague of mine. I am only going to say that I hope this paper, whether it be a weekly, a monthly or an annual, will suggest to the government that I be sent on a trip around the world at the expense of the people of Canada. The article to which I refer is headed "Grounds for Suspicion" and reads as follows:

Current attempt of George Cruickshank and Calgary's A. L. Smith to "talk out" bills proposing incorporation of companies for the exporting of natural gas from Alberta to British Columbia is an example of a tarnished weapon being put to use in a worthy fight. Normally a filibuster is a pointless procedure, but the battle spearheaded by Messrs. Smith and Cruickshank—

Alberta Natural Gas Company

They should not have put my hon. friend's name ahead of mine.

—is of serious concern for British Columbia, and for the lower mainland in particular.

I am not going to read the whole of the article at this time. It is from the Abbotsford, Sumas and Matsqui News, a paper that has a larger circulation than any paper in my colleague's entire riding.

As I said, I am going to be extremely brief tonight. I am just going to quote one wire I received from my riding, although I could go on quoting them all night. This is from the minister in the province of British Columbia and reads as follows:

Retel sixteenth resolution recommending all Canadian pipe line route was given unanimous support by our legislature at last night's sitting . . .

L. H. Eyres
Minister of Trade and Industry

This is the sort of thing that some of my colleagues cannot understand. Incidentally here is a letter from the provincial Liberal member for the city of Kamloops. I shall read just part of it:

We who are spearheading the pipe-line issue appreciate very much the work you have done, and we trust it will result in our mutual satisfaction.

I am watching the clock. I shall be brief. One of my colleagues rose in his place lately and talked for 52 minutes telling what a great man he was. I am going to tell what a great province British Columbia is in 15 minutes. One of the things I am most interested in, in this discussion, is what was mentioned by one of the previous speakers, namely, the building up of industries within our dominion, and more especially within the province of British Columbia. We have lost many of our overseas markets. We all know that. There may be different opinions as to the reasons for it, but we who come from farming districts know that we have lost many of those markets. We have to develop new markets overseas. We send great touring bodies over there. I do not know whether it would be just as cheap to pipe some of those delegations over there as it is to fly them over.

Mr. Sinclair: Be careful to whom you are directing your remarks. They all look the same in Hansard.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Let us all hear it.

Mr. Cruickshank: I hold in my hand a magazine which discusses where to build factories. I hope that every hon. member will get a copy of Canada's Weekly of February 17.

Mr. Sinclair: Where is it published?

Mr. Cruickshank: If my hon. friend wants me to go on for forty minutes he can only blame himself for it. Over the article entitled "Where to build your factory" there is a beautiful picture. That is the reason I should like you to see it. The subheading reads:

A number of localities which, it is thought, may recommend themselves to firms considering the establishment of branch factories in Canada, are being described in this series of articles.

Chilliwack, British Columbia
By a special correspondent

I shall read only a part of it, but I hope that you will all get a copy of it. Chilliwack happens to be the largest centre within the finest riding in the Dominion of Canada, namely, Fraser Valley.

This article differs from most of those which have preceded it in that it deals with one of Canada's smaller cities, situated in the locality which is mainly rural. Throughout Canada, there are many such. The sites they offer may not attract the industrialist with a multimillion corporation behind him. The factors governing his choice are manifold. He requires not only ready access to his raw materials, a ready market, transportation facilities and power, but has necessarily to consider a host of other problems, not the least of which is the labour situation. He will have to site his plant with due consideration for its suitability for the North American or, conceivably, a world market for his product.

I could read the whole article, but I do not intend to take up the time. I think I have made my point clear. I do not expect to speak on the pipe-line bills again. The people of my riding, and the people of the province of British Columbia, know exactly where I stand on the matter. They know that I believe sincerely in what I say on this question. As I said before, anybody in my province, or in any other province, who opposes me is sincere in his belief in the opposite direction, exactly as I am sincere in my belief in developing Canada first rather than the United States. I want to make a suggestion to the government. There is no rush in this matter. The sponsor of the bill that is before the house tonight said he had no idea where his company intended to build. He said he had no idea of the route over which his company intended to build a pipe line. I have no definite authority to speak on behalf of the company whose bill I had the privilege of sponsoring last year, the Westcoast Transmission Company, which has been mentioned tonight. It will be remembered that we gave them a charter without possibility of having the necessary details of an all-Canadian route written into it.

Mr. Sinclair: Whose fault was that?

Mr. Cruickshank: That was the fault of all of us, including myself. I have every reason to believe that the company would be willing to have those details written in. I agree with speakers who have said previously tonight that there is no reason to rush this matter.

I have every reason to believe that the Westcoast Transmission Company is willing to have its charter amended and an all-Canadian route written into it. I would not say that unless I had some idea of what I was talking about. I ask the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) not to interrupt me. I did not interrupt him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: I object to being interrupted every minute when I am trying to speak seriously. I believe it is in the best interests of this country—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: I am trying to speak seriously. If you want me to talk for forty minutes I shall do so. I say to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that he took sixty or seventy minutes to tell what a great man he was. I am making a serious suggestion. I would not make it unless I had some idea what I was talking about. I have every reason to believe that the company that got a charter last year, that we may have let slip through last year, without having an all-Canadian route written into it, has made a formal application which is now under consideration by the Alberta petroleum board and the government of that province, and that this application is on a straight all-Canadian route.

Mr. Robinson: Have they withdrawn their United States application to the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. Cruickshank: Not so far as I know. I will answer that. I am trying to give the information, Mr. Speaker, but they will not let me do so.

Mr. Robinson: We like to hear you.

Mr. Cruickshank: I want to repeat what I said. I have every reason to believe that I think this company is agreeable to having an all-Canadian route written into its charter with the proviso that the same thing be done by other companies going to the west coast. This company already has a charter. Could there be anything fairer than that? So far as I know, they have not withdrawn their application.

When some of our west coast athletes were young they were taught to play ping pong and other pussyfoot games. I was brought up in the city of New Westminster. We were taught to play lacrosse. You had to be able to take it. When you play lacrosse you have to be able to box a bit. I was also taught that in boxing or in any other game the first rudiment of self-defence is to protect yourself in the clinches. I do not play these schoolboy games of ping pong. I played lacrosse, and in that game you have to protect yourself in the clinches. What did this company do? They made their application. They made the statement to their sponsor, and they made a statement in the railway committee room, that they were going to build an all-Canadian route. Then they discovered that their opposition was applying for the cheaper route down through the United States. What did they do? They protected themselves in the clinches. They also applied for a charter for a route down through the United States. That is only common sense and good business. I am not a businessman, and I am certainly not a lawyer, and above all I am not a mining engineer. That will sink in deep.

An hon. Member: Or a world traveller.

Mr. Robinson: You are not a Rhodes scholar?

Mr. Cruickshank: I would not insult anybody by accusing him of being a Rhodes scholar. I would not go that far. This company naturally applied for a route to protect themselves. But I want to repeat this fact. There is an application before the Alberta petroleum commission—I think that is the correct name—and before the Alberta government. The decision will eventually be made by a vote of the Alberta legislature, or by the judgment of the government of the province of Alberta, as to whether a permit will be given to export gas from that province. With that I entirely agree. This company has an application before these two bodies for an all-Canadian route.

As I said, I have every reason to believe that Westcoast Transmission will agree to have it inserted in its charter, provided it is inserted in the charters of all other companies. I have spoken for about fifteen minutes, Mr. Speaker. I have done so because I should like to give some of my colleagues on all sides of the house the privilege of speaking. I am glad that one hon. member from the maritimes has spoken. In this morning's paper there is a speech by an hon. member from the other place, that delightful spot that I hope some day to reach. He asked that some of the injustices that have been perpetrated against the maritimes should be rectified. Many of us from British Columbia have agreed with hon. members in the past and we expect to agree with them in the future, that they may always get a fair deal.

We fought for the prairie provinces when they were suffering during the depression. We fought for justice for the wheat growers and tried to get them a cheaper route. I remember that the people of my riding, and the people of British Columbia as far as that goes, paid a fair share to build an imaginary railroad up to Churchill when you could pack more grain in the back of my Chevrolet than you will ever get to go over that route. We did not object to that so why should not some of those hon. members get behind us and, as the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure) has just said, support the province of British Columbia?

Every hon. member is entitled to his own opinion. I respect the opinion of hon. members and I expect them to respect mine and the opinions of the people I represent. I ask them to respect the opinions of the majority of the people of British Columbia. I have not changed my opinion one bit. Before I conclude my remarks I wish to congratulate you upon the exalted position you are occupying for the first time this evening.

We believe we have a just cause and we are asking for the support of hon. members. I hope that this matter is decided by a recorded vote because I want the privilege of standing up and having my voice recorded, because I believe I am right.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can avoid repeating any of the arguments that have been presented already in this debate. In fact, it is my purpose to go into a slightly different phase of it than has been discussed, at least so far today. I take my cue for what I want to say from the fact that reference has been made a number of times to what happened last year, and by that I mean last April or, in other words, at the end of the last session of the twentieth parliament.

It has been asked, and quite properly, why those who are opposed to this bill treat it differently than we treated five other bills in the last parliament. It has also been asked why we do not recognize the fact that basic legislation is on the statute books, namely, an act respecting oil or gas pipe lines, and that any company which meets the requirements of that act should be permitted as a matter of routine to get an incorporating charter from this parliament.

For the benefit of those who have been referring to what happened in April, 1949, but who were not here at that time, I should like to indicate what happened and let them realize the hectic time we had. Those of us who were here at that time will remember that it was a bit of a nightmare. A great deal of legislation was put through in a short period of time. We were given a number of assurances which we thought carried certain implications but we later found out that such was not the case.

We permitted considerably more speed in the disposition of legislation at that time than parliament should permit. As a result of that I think it is fair to say that most of us who were members at that time do not feel happy about the Pipe Lines Act that is on the statute books and under which this application for a charter has been made. I have on my desk a considerable number of documents, including a couple of order papers of that last week in April, 1949, copies of the bills in the form in which they were brought in, together with Hansard and the Journals and the statutes themselves, and a copy of Beauchesne to boot. So I know whereof I speak, and have the evidence under my hand.

What happened was that on April 4, 1949—please remember that that date was close to the end of that session and to the end of that parliament—there was received in this house from the other place a bill known as an act respecting oil or gas pipe lines. The next day, Tuesday, April 5, that bill was on our order paper and was given first reading. First reading, of course, is without debate. It stayed on the order paper ordered for second reading until Friday of that week, April 8, 1949, the last day before we went home for Easter.

To our amazement we were asked to give second reading to that very important bill on that last day before the Easter recess. Two ministers asked us to do that and you will find their remarks reported in Hansard of April 8, 1949, at pages 2512 and 2515. On page 2512 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) in moving the second reading of the bill said:

> I recommend this bill to the house. In doing so, I trust that hon. members will bear in mind that there is great urgency for the passing of this act because of the fact that these private bills are awaiting the passage of this enabling legislation. While there is some urgency because of the importance of these projects, at the same time parliament is breaking new ground in the matter of general pipe line legislation, and the bill deserves the most careful consideration of the house.

Note the circumstances. We were being asked to give speedy second reading to the Pipe Lines Act, the basic legislation, because it was urgent and so that something could be done to deal with private bills which as yet had no right to come before parliament because the enabling legislation had not been passed.

Later that same evening, after a few speeches, one by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), one by the former member for Kindersley, Mr. Jaenicke, and a few remarks later by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) had a few words to say, which are to be found at page 2515 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak only briefly. There is an urgency about this bill because I am told the capacity of the railroads to transport petroleum products from the Alberta field is approaching its limit. A real effort is being made to get this pipe line under way. The steel controller has arranged for the fabrication of steel for the principal pipe line being planned,—

Mr. Howe: It is being fabricated at Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. Knowles: We now have word we should have had then.

—which will be undertaken as soon as the bill incorporating the company can be put through.

The minister then went on to say that he had the authority of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) to say that if the bill was given second reading it would be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and then he said:

But it would facilitate matters in several directions if the bill were moved forward tonight. It would allow a private bill to be considered in another place if the principle of this bill were approved here and it would also permit prompt consideration of the bill when the house reassembles. I hope that this suggestion meets with approval.

These few pages constitute the totality of the debate which took place on second reading of this very important piece of legislation. I think members who were here at that time will confirm that we were uneasy about the whole matter, but two ministers were pressing upon us the urgency of it, and so the house consented.

The last thing that took place before we went home for the Easter recess in 1949 was the second reading of that bill. We had a two-week recess on that occasion and came back on Monday, the 25th of April. I remind hon. members that we returned to an atmosphere of considerable expectancy. There were rumours that an election might be called soon. Members who were here then will recall that late that Monday evening the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made a statement to the effect that parliament was only going to last for that week, and then there would be dissolution and the holding of a general election.

In the course of his statement that Monday night as to the dissolution of parliament, it became necessary for the Prime Minister to indicate what business was important enough to be dealt with during the few days that remained. During his remarks the Prime Minister said at page 2570 of Hansard for April 25, 1949:

As to the matters with which it would be desirable to deal at this time, if possible, there is this pipe lines legislation . . .

A little later I interrupted the Prime Minister in the course of his remarks to ask a question related to a subject about which I often have something to say. It was:

Will the Prime Minister permit a question at this point? Would he make clear what he said about the resolution respecting old age pensions? Is it intended to give it priority this week?

Then the Prime Minister said:

It is intended to proceed with this pipe lines legislation, then to deal with the budget until it is disposed of . . .

And so on. I read these quotations to indicate the pressure that was put on us with respect to this pipe lines legislation, and so far I am just talking about the basic act under which the company, in the bill before us tonight, asks for a charter. That was on Monday the 25th of April. On Wednesday of that week, April 27—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lesage): May I ask the hon. member to make his point clear? I do not see very well how he is discussing the principle of the bill in what he is saying now.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Why not?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I submit I am a lot closer to the point than a good many of the speeches that have been made today. I note that Your Honour agrees with that, but you may still want me to answer your question. The point I wish to make—and I am leading up to it, if you will permit me, sir—is that we had discussions during the course of that week which related to the point involved in this bill that is now before us. I shall be showing you in a few moments that during that debate there arose a discussion in the house as to what attitude we would accord to the bill for the incorporation of the Alberta Natural Gas Company which was introduced at that time. It was the same bill that is before us now with the exception of the names of the sponsors. If you will let me pursue the matter for a few moments, I submit that you will see that I am definitely speaking with regard to the matter that one should discuss on second reading, namely, whether or not we should support the principle of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lesage): I believe the question that should be discussed now is the principle of the bill itself, and not the principle of a bill that was before the house in the spring session of 1949. The hon. member should relate his remarks to the principle of the bill now before the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the principle is the incorporating of a company wishing to build an oil or gas pipe line, and that it is necessary to relate their request to the legislation that makes such action possible. If we did not have the main Pipe Lines Act on the statute books this company could not request a charter at all. The point I am trying to make is that the legislation that made it possible for measures of this kind to be introduced was pushed through at a time in the spring session of 1949 when there was great pressure on members of the house, and we were being told that it was urgent to get these matters through. Since you do not wish me to proceed with that phase of the matter much further, Mr. Speaker, I will eliminate a part of what I intended to say. I will only point out, if I may summarize it briefly, that second reading of the main pipe lines bill was the last thing before we went home for Easter. We came back on Monday, the 25th of April, and were told that this measure was one of the most important to be put through. On Wednesday of that week the bill was put through committee stage, and on Friday just before six o'clock, as is reported at page 2770 of Hansard, third reading was given to it.

One of the things that some of us feel should have been in that measure relates to the whole problem we are talking about, namely, whether or not parliament should agree to a bill when we are led to believe that the route of the line is going to be outside Canada. During that same last week, and overlapping the consideration that was being given to the basic pipe lines bill, there was the matter of some six other bills that were brought before the house, one of which was Bill No. 239, an act to incorporate the Alberta Natural Gas Company, the same measure that is now before us. The petitions for five of these six companies were received in the house on Tuesday, the 26th of April. Under ordinary parliamentary procedure there was not time for that legislation to be passed before Saturday, the announced day for the dissolution of parliament. That created a rather odd situation. It was known that some of these companies would receive the support of most members, but there was at least one company against which there was considerable opposition. That was the Alberta Natural Gas Company, the same one that is before us at the present time.

I can say that so far as our group was concerned we did not like any of the proposed companies. We felt that public ownership should come into the picture, and at the appropriate occasion during that week one of our members moved an amendment stating that principle, which was defeated on the floor of the house. As I say, we felt that none of these private companies should be incorporated, but we were in a difficult position. We were just a small group in the house at that time, and the suggestion was being made to us that as a minority group we had no right to hold up a project of this kind. Therefore we made what may as well be called a compromise so far as our group was concerned. We looked them over; we inquired about the various companies that it was proposed to incorporate, and we learned that one of them proposed to build a pipe line outside Canada. We were told that the other five were not going to go outside Canada. Therefore we took a firm stand with respect to the one company. We said: We will not give on our behalf the unanimous consent that is necessary to waive the various rules with respect to that one company which proposes to go outside Canada. That is the same company we are opposing at the present time. On the other hand we did agree to let the other five bills go through. We gave that consent in the same way that we had agreed earlier to let the oil or gas pipe lines act itself go through, under protest, and because of the pressure of time and the sense of urgency that was being impressed upon us, especially by the two ministers to whom I have referred.

I could go through the Hansard of that last week and show hon. members who have asserted that we are acting differently this time than we did then that we watched this one company, which we were told was going to go outside Canada, like a hawk. Every procedural move that was made, including a motion by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Winkler) to send Senate bills when they came to this house direct to the committee, without first and second readings, was carefully watched. We required the observance of all the rules of the house at every point with respect to that one bill. There was no question about it, nor was there any doubt as to the reason we drew a line between that company and the other five. We had been told by the sponsors of the bills, we had been told around the halls, we had been assured that the other five would build their pipe lines in Canada, whether for oil or gas. This one, however—and the principal name connected with at that time was the present hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Campney)—proposed to go outside Canada; so we said "No" to any request for unanimous consent with respect to that bill.

I ask hon. members to go through Hansard of that last week. They will find that we did not get the petitions for those bills, including this Alberta Natural Gas bill, until Tuesday, April 26; and even then that petition, together with the others, had to be referred to the committee on standing orders because the promoters had not met all the requirements laid down with regard to public notice across Canada, and so on. The committee on standing orders was asked to waive some of the rules respecting private bills. I was a member of that committee and objected strenuously to waiving those rules, but we were overruled by the majority and the report of the committee was brought back. On Wednesday the hon. member for Lisgar made his motion to waive certain rules, but we refused to give the unanimous consent that was required. Thursday he made the same motion, to send Senate bills straight to the appropriate committee without bothering with first and second readings, and we let that go only after we got the assurance that it did not cover these pipe-line bills but simply divorce bills and certain miscellaneous items. It was only on Friday, I think after the evening recess, that we came to the second reading of these six bills. If hon. members will go through Hansard they will find the discussion back and forth between some of us in this group and the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), in which it was made crystal clear that we were prepared to extend such unanimous consent as was necessary to waive the rules in order to get the other five through, but that with respect to this one which we knew was going outside Canada we said "No"—I said it myself, several times—and it did not go through.

I have spelled out that opposition in detail so hon. members will see that there has been no change in our position as far as this one company is concerned. We were told then it was going outside Canada, and we opposed that. Today we are led to believe that is still the position, at least we have not been given any assurance to the contrary, and that is why we are taking the stand we do. On the other hand some of us were amazed after the session was over to get word that one of the companies which had been granted a charter during that last short week proposed to build its line down to Superior, Wisconsin. I know the first time it was mentioned to me in Winnipeg that this was going to be done I said there must be something wrong, that this could not be done because we had stopped the one company that was going to build its line outside Canada. But I had to look into the question further, because this matter kept coming up; and I soon discovered that we were mistaken.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Was anything contained in the bills that were passed which would prevent the companies from building their lines outside Canada?

Mr. Knowles: That is exactly the point I am coming to. There was not. We accepted the assurances we were given that everything was all right. We acceded to the urgency that was impressed upon us, and agreed to let those five bills go through. The hon. member for Yorkton has driven home the point I have in mind right now, that too often we have accepted these assurances; too often we have given unanimous consent; too often we have let things go through even under protest. I believe this whole story is an excellent example of the validity of parliamentary rules which call for time to be taken with important legislation. I object most strenuously to the times without number when the government comes along and asks us to rush these things through. Hon. members say no rush about these pipe-line bills is being permitted because of the time that has been taken; but if we add up the hours that have been spent on these bills it really does not amount to much, considering the importance of the whole question.

I had all the pages down here giving the various times this matter came up during that last week, but hon. members who were here will agree that I am correct in saying that we stopped the one because we were told it was going to be built outside Canada, so I need not say all I had intended saying. We let the other five go through because we were told that was not the case with them. Later we discovered that one of them was being built outside Canada, and there was nothing we could do to stop it. As I looked into it further I discovered that not only had there been a mistake made in the charters of these companies permitting them to go outside Canada, but behind that was the fact that the basic oil or gas pipe lines act did not require a company applying for a charter to state in its application where it intended to build the line. This afternoon the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) pointed out that the act does require a company, once it has its charter and appears before the board of transport commissioners, to file a map showing its route; but the die is cast by the time you get over to that judicial body.

I remind hon. members that we are not only acting in a judicial capacity when we deal with private legislation; we are acting in a legislative capacity as well. Beauchesne makes that quite clear in citation 759:

> The proceedings of parliament in passing private bills partake of both a judicial and legislative character.

My contention—and I want to get to this point because I think that parliament is in a jam over this whole business and that it is the responsibility of the government to straighten it out—is that it is no use merely requiring a company to present to the board of transport commissioners a map showing where its pipe line is to be constructed. What should be required is the presentation of that map or chart together with the application to parliament itself, so parliament could insist on a change in the route, or refuse to pass the bill until the route indicated was satisfactory. Someone should interrupt at this point and say that the other companies have not been required to do this. The answer would be that that is perfectly true, they have not; but that is the mistake that comes from legislation having been put through too hastily, as was the case during the last week of the last session of the last parliament.

It seems to me the answer to all this is for the government to ask the sponsors of these two bills to agree to have them remain on the order paper for a little while, not proceeding with them every time they are called, so that in the meantime the government can bring in an amendment to the Pipe Lines Act itself.

Now, someone is going to say that you cannot deal with both of those types of legislation at the same time. Do not tell that to those of us who were here in the last parliament, because that is exactly what happened. We had these six private pipe line bills, which were passed in the Senate, and were sent over here and given first reading, before the basic legislation had passed. After that, the basic legislation had to go to the other place and then get royal assent. In other words, consideration was given in that last parliament to private bills which were contingent upon a basic piece of legislation, and they were being considered before that basic piece of legislation had been passed.

I thought that was rather sloppy. As a matter of fact, I questioned the propriety of what we were doing on several occasions. If I had taken the time to give the page numbers in Hansard of all these citations, hon. members would know the number of times during that last week that I objected strenuously to the procedure being followed. The member for Peace River (Mr. Low) may remember one interchange between the two of us when he said that we were talking out certain of these bills. My retort to him was very definite, and will be found on page 2776 of Hansard, namely, that we were not talking the bills out but we were exercising our right to insist upon the observance of all the rules with respect to one of the bills, Bill No. 239 of that year. I do not recall that interchange to stir up the argument, but rather to stress the point that some of us were considering the impropriety of the whole business, and the manner in which this important subject was handled in that last week.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I believe the government should recognize that the matter has not been dealt with properly, and should now call a recess in this business. It should ask the sponsors of these two bills to let them rest until the government has asked parliament to amend the Pipe Lines Act itself. The amendment to be made is quite simple, namely, that no company should have a right to apply for a charter until it presents to parliament a map showing where it plans to build the pipe line. Let parliament have some say as to whether or not we are going to grant these charters, on the basis of where the lines are to be built, and whether or not we feel they serve the best interests of the country. I remind members of the statement of Beauchesne with respect to what we are doing when we are dealing with private bills. We are not acting merely in a judicial capacity, and Beauchesne makes that very clear. We are not here to say yes to every company that comes along that has met the conditions laid down in some previous piece of legislation. We are also here in a legislative capacity. We have to decide whether each and every bill, on its own merits, is good legislation for Canada. I strongly urge that the government take stock of this situation, and try to give the lead to get parliament out of the jam in which the government has put this house.

I do not wonder that members are bewildered about what is going on. I recognize the arguments on both sides. I recognize the argument of my friends of the Social Credit group, that the basic legislation is there and this company has met the requirements of that legislation, so why do we say no to it when we said yes to the others? The fault lies in the basic legislation. We have a situation now in which one company does seem prepared to build its line from Alberta to British Columbia over Canadian soil. The other company is not so prepared; so it seems to us who think the line should be built on Canadian soil that the only thing we can do is to hold this bill up until this company will voluntarily take the position the other company appears to have taken. But it is really not satisfactory to have it on that basis. It seems to me a better basis would be to have it laid down in the Pipe Lines Act. I urge the government to consider, even at this time, the desirability of amending that basic act.

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have heard so many speeches today in which members tried to give the impression they were the sole defenders of the people's interest, that I feel obliged to state my position before we are all asphyxiated. The member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) implied that the members on this side of the house did not have adequate information concerning this bill. After listening to his stirring address, I am led to believe we have more information than hon. members opposite.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) spent some time talking about conservation this afternoon. I was not too clear about the meaning of this term, and so I asked for an explanation. I had it explained to me this way: By postponing the construction of a large power plant on the Ottawa river, the Ontario government conserved electricity.

Mr. Drew: If the hon. member wants to be educated, he should go out and see it now.

Mr. Hellyer: Better late than never, but better never late. The leader of the opposition then said that both gas and oil are wasting assets. It is interesting to note that during the weeks we have been gassing in this house, the assets of Alberta have continued wasting. I am led to believe, Mr. Speaker, so much natural gas has already been discovered in Alberta that even after the one pipe line is built ample reserves will exist to take care of new cities, industries and other requirements which may occur within the foreseeable future.

An hon. Member: Why not serve Canada first, then?

Mr. Hellyer: In addition, the lack of substantial markets for this gas is holding up the production of oil in Alberta. It may be advisable to try to sell considerable quantities of the gas, looking forward to the possibility that at some future date it may be superseded as a source of energy. Someone opposite mentioned something about serving Canada first. It seems to me an irreconcilable fact that the Socialists and Conservatives as a combination, of all people, should try to force a company to accept what might prove to be the least economical route.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) is not in his seat—

An hon. Member: Yes, he is.

Mr. Hellyer: I should say that he is not in his own seat. He has said that the interests of the Canadian people must be properly and adequately protected. With that statement, Mr. Speaker, I am in complete accord. In order to protect them, however, those interests must first be recognized. The member for Rosetown-Biggar also suggested that gas might be piped east to Saskatchewan. I understand that as soon as there is a change in the government of that province sufficient discoveries will be made to take care of that area from local sources.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member means the Liberals have a lot of it?

Mr. Hellyer: Then, the same member seemed worried about the possibility that someone might make a substantial capital gain on the sale of one of these charters. On reflection, I believe he would be forced to agree that the more charters there are the lower the resale value of any one of them would be. Certainly, it would be lower than at the present time, when there is only one unrestricted charter in existence. I have always thought that in any race it was desirable to have a common starting line. Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is because of my belief in fair play, my belief that all participants should have the same handicap, that I intend to support this bill.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron North): I do not think anyone can accuse me of taking part in a filibuster, Mr. Speaker. This is the first time this session that I have risen in my place in the house to take part in a debate, and I seldom speak. I do so tonight because of the fact that this afternoon two Liberal members took up an hour of the time of this house; and if there has been a filibuster, they are also implicated in it. I think perhaps they added to that filibuster, if it is one, by trying to support the bill on the one hand and, on the other hand, by trying to talk it out. I conscientiously believe they hoped that it would be talked out.

I am one of those who believe in Canada for Canadians. I am one of those who believe that in our minds we should always have Canada first. If we are going to have a strong nation, we must build a strong Canada on a strong foundation. There is no one who does not appreciate the wonderful country south of the border. That the United States is so wonderful is explained by the fact that never at any time have United States statesmen failed to stick up for United States interests. That is why they have become so great. Because we are trying to stick up for Canada is no reason why the United States should think any the less of us.

One reason why we had so much assistance from the United States in years gone by was the fact that we did not have sufficient capital with which to develop our resources. I think the time is long past when we need to have assistance from the United States to develop our resources.

Here in Canada we are privileged in having many resources such as gas, coal and oil. As hon. members know, when gas is in the pipe line, it is ready for distribution and use. Oil must go through the refinery, but gas is ready for use. I think we should realize that British Columbia should have the first chance to consume this gas. British Columbia has been suffering from more unemployment than any other part of Canada. As a result of the wonderful climate there in the summertime, many people migrate to British Columbia; and when autumn comes, they find themselves out of work. They then stay in British Columbia for the winter because it is so mild. That is one reason why British Columbia has so many unemployed. I happen to have a boy in British Columbia. He has never been unemployed, but there are many there who are. He tells me that the streets are lined with unemployed in the city in which he is located. If British Columbia had the opportunity of getting this gas at first cost, there is no doubt in my mind that there could be developed there industries that would provide much employment and would help a great deal to relieve unemployment in that part of the country.

I started as a farmer at the head of a family. I was the breadwinner. I had to look after my family first. All hon. members no doubt started in the same way. You did not worry so much about others as you did about your own. That was your responsibility. You had to look after your own family. After you had done that, you could look around and see what you could do for others. The same thing applied in municipal life. I started in municipal life as a councillor. When I was a councillor, I tried to look after my own ward. That was my responsibility. After serving in that capacity for several years, I was elected to the reeveship. While reeve, I had to attend county council and my mind naturally developed. As a member of the county council, it was my responsibility to look after my municipality. I had broadened to that extent. I had to see to it that the roads in my municipality received their fair share of the moneys that were spent. That was my responsibility. No one could criticize me for doing that.

Then when I came into the House of Commons, I again had to broaden my outlook and to develop my mind to look after the Dominion of Canada. That is what I am trying to do tonight. In rising in my place here in the house I am trying to look after the Dominion of Canada. I am not interested in what is south of the border. We get gas and oil from the United States; and I appreciate the fact that we can get it there. But now that we have so much of our own, why is it not possible for us to develop that gas and oil in our own country first? If we have any to export after that, then it is time enough for us to start worrying about what is south of the border.

This afternoon we heard many good speeches. I am going to refer to only one, namely, that delivered by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). It was the speech of a statesman, not of a politician.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardiff: All right; you can laugh at that if you like. May I say that I have a habit of reading minds; I looked over the members of the house at that particular time and I did not see anybody in any quarter of this house who was not digesting that speech to the full. I might also say that there were not any comments directed to the leader of the opposition when he was making that speech. It was the speech of a statesman, it was well delivered, and it will be remembered for a long time.

I put down a few notes here, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think they are of much use to me. In the first place, I do not know anything about gas lines nor pipe lines, but I do know this. If the gas line or the pipe line is constructed in Canada it will create employment for a great many Canadians; but if it goes through the United States there is no question in anyone's mind that it will give work to a great many people on the other side of the boundary. Suppose the pipe line did cost more to build on Canadian soil, would it not be worth the difference to have a pipe line through our own country first and to have our own people served before it is taken out of the country? In British Columbia and through the west there are many industries that would receive cheap gas. By receiving cheap gas they could manufacture things at a much lower cost than would otherwise be possible; they then would be able to compete in the markets of the world. I believe in Canada for Canadians first. After that, if you have anything to spare, sell all you can sell to those outside your own border.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): In this bill, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with one of Canada's great natural resources; and I think it is rather unfortunate that the debate on this important natural resource should have taken on the purely party-political character that it has taken on in this house. It has become quite evident that the bill before us is sponsored by the government although it is known literally as a private member's bill. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has indicated quite clearly to the house his point of view, and quite evidently has given a lead to all the government followers in the house.

Here we have what the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) rightfully described as a wasting asset, a wasting asset in the sense that it is not something that can be replaced once it has been disposed of. This particular resource is one that nature has created over the past ages, which has lain hidden in the ground, according to geologists, for possibly millions of years. We now become the discoverers of that great natural resource, and the question is, what to do with it. Quite evidently our present government has just one policy on that matter, which is to get this natural resource to a market by the shortest and cheapest possible route that will bring greatest profit to those who have invested in that industry, and to those who are concerned with its disposal. That is one way of dealing with it.

Here is a natural resource. We assume it belongs to the province of Alberta. I am quite sure that hon. members from Alberta and the government of Alberta will be among the first to recognize that this is a heritage of the whole Canadian people. The government's policy appears to be: Take this great natural resource. Let us dispose of it through any ready channel that will bring immediate profits, either profits to a government or profits to private investors; and if it is going to cost a few hundred thousand dollars more to build a route that will serve Canadian people, then we cannot take that route. The fact that they are getting this market cheaply, and immediately realizing profit on the disposal of this natural resource, appears to be the chief concern of the government today, and appears to be their chief concern in the matter of this bill.

There is another way in which that natural resource could be disposed of. There is another policy that could be followed. I can well imagine that we have had governments in this country in the past that would have been prepared, in the interests of the Canadian people, to have taken a much more statesmanlike view of that policy than the present government is taking in connection with this matter. We have had governments in this country in the past that would have looked upon this natural resource as a heritage of the Canadian people to be safeguarded for future generations, and not to be exploited as quickly as possible by the shortest and cheapest route possible and for the highest immediate profits possible, which appears to be the present policy.

This afternoon the leader of the opposition gave us a vision of what this particular natural resource could mean in the building of this country, a breadth of view that we have not heard come from a single member or minister of this government in connection with the development of this resource. Every word we have had from the Liberal side of the house has been concerned with one policy, and one policy only, namely, to get this natural gas market, get it there by the most economical route, get it there to serve the large centres of population in the United States, so that somebody may be able to reap a profit therefrom.

We sometimes talk of the future possibilities of Canada. We sometimes talk of our need of immigration. We sometimes talk of this country as a country that could support many times our present population. But here we have a natural resource that will provide cheap power for the building of industrial centres in our western provinces and, as far as we know, a product that could be economically brought east to build industrial centres east of the great lakes as well. Instead of that our first concern must be, which is the most economical way of building a pipe line. Never mind what happens to Canada; never mind what happens to the cities and towns of British Columbia; let us get the pipe line; get the gas disposed of; get our profits.

On motion of Mr. Noseworthy the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow being government day we shall move to go into supply, and if that motion carries we shall call four departments: finance, transport, veterans affairs and trade and commerce. In committee of supply we shall consider the further supplementary estimates for the year now closing, with the supply bill. Then the Minister of Finance will also ask for interim supply. I understand he has spoken to the leaders of the opposition parties on these matters.

Then we should very much like to conclude the debate on the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) to set up a committee on old age security. If we were fortunate enough to complete that business we would take up the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) to refer his estimates to the external affairs committee.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 21, 1950

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER ADJOURNMENT—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I wish to refer to a report in the press of what I said yesterday in the house concerning the Easter recess. A Canadian Press dispatch, referring to the request I made yesterday for information as to the date on which the house will rise, states:

> Opposition parties indicated in the Commons today they would prefer a longer Easter recess than that suggested by the government.

The report then goes on to refer to my comments on the subject. I should like to point out that I did not ask for a longer recess. The exact words I used were:

> No matter what the length of the recess may be, I suggest to the government that this is a fairly obvious consideration . . .

I was referring to the fact that members would wish to be home in the week before Easter. I wish to make it quite clear that the remarks I made did not involve any suggestion of a longer recess, but were directed to the fact that members living some distance away should know what period the recess will include. I also urged that the week before Easter should be made available to enable members to get home in time to make any necessary arrangements before Easter.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make a statement on the orders of the day, but as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) has raised the question at this time, I think perhaps I should make it now.

I understand that the desire was expressed to have a definite announcement as to what it is intended to propose for the Easter holiday. Since my return this morning I have received a report from our whip of his conversations with the whips of the other groups in the house. I find that among the other groups there is a decided preference for an adjournment that would start on Wednesday afternoon, the 5th of April, at six o'clock, and extend to the Monday after Easter week. In other words, the adjournment would be from Wednesday, the 5th of April, at six o'clock, until Monday, the 17th of April, at three o'clock. This takes away one full day, but I understand that it would be much more convenient for quite a large number who wish to get home for Good Friday. I think it is fair to assume that it will be the desire of the house to have that done, and to proceed in the meantime in such a way so that we shall feel we have done those things which have to be done before rising for Easter. There are, for instance, four bills for which resolutions now appear on the order paper having to do with acts which expire on the 31st of March. One to which great importance is attached is that having to do with rent control. This is a very simple matter; it will provide for the extension of the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, but it will apply only to rent control. Then there is a bill to extend the time during which prices support may be provided for agricultural products, and another for the same purpose for fisheries products. There is also a bill to extend the period during which the Agricultural Products Act shall remain in force. These are matters as to which there would be serious embarrassment, chaotic embarrassment, if a final decision were not made about them before March 31.

There are three motions to set up committees which I understand most hon. members would like to see set up and organized so that, if not much can be done before Easter with respect to their work, they will be able to function as soon as we come back after Easter. They are the committees on old age security, radio broadcasting, and railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government. I would hope that we could have these matters disposed of so that the respective committees may be organized and be in a position when we return to carry out expeditiously their terms of reference.

I do not think I need make my declaration conditional, however. At this time, trusting to the good will of hon. members, I will undertake to place on the order paper a notice of motion that when the house adjourns on the afternoon of April 5 it shall stand adjourned until three o'clock on Monday, April 17.

Proposed Legislation

DEFENCE SERVICES PENSIONS

METHOD OF COMPUTATION—CREATION OF SERVICE PENSION BOARD

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to amend the Militia Pension Act for the purpose of changing the title to "The Defence Services Pension Act"; removing anomalies and improving administration; changing the method of computing pensions and gratuities and establishing a service pension board to pass on requisitions for payment of pensions and gratuities.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA PRIZE ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE MONEY

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide for the payment and distribution of prize money out of prize money presently and prospectively in the consolidated revenue fund.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT AND COARSE GRAINS

STATEMENT AS TO FINAL PAYMENTS FROM FIVE-YEAR POOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what payments will be made by the government to the farmers on barley and oats, and when?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that at this time a statement on the whole position of payments from the grain pools should be made, and I shall make that statement now.

Last week I stated in reply to a question on the orders of the day that it had been decided not to make a further interim payment on the five-year wheat pool, but that a final payment would be made as promptly as possible after the end of the crop year. An additional payment now would have to be distributed over some 1,400 million bushels of wheat, involving some 1,350,000 separate cheques. The cost of making such a payment is estimated at roughly $500,000. Opposition members have charged the government with having made too large interim payments in previous years, and everything considered, it seems desirable to make one further payment when the final out-turn of the five-year pool is known.

It has also been decided to make only one further payment, that is, a final payment on the oats and barley pools. This payment will be made after the end of the crop year, as soon as sales have been completed of all the oats and barley delivered to the pools.

At this time, however, I believe that I should give some indication of what might be expected by way of a final payment from these pools. Any such forecast is dependent, of course, upon a number of factors, principally the course of market prices until the balance of the 1949 crop deliveries can be sold. There are still oats and barley on farms remaining to be delivered to this year's pools, and the sooner producers can get the grain they intend to sell delivered to country elevators, the greater the possibility of the board's taking advantage of the existing market in making sales and the sooner the transactions may be closed out at the end of the crop year in order to permit a final payment. Depending upon all these circumstances, and without in any sense making a commitment that payments will be made at these levels, I think it desirable that producers should know that, based on present prospects, I now estimate final payments at 10 cents per bushel on oats, 40 cents per bushel on the feed grades of barley and 50 cents per bushel on the malting grades.

These payments may appear low compared with present market levels, but it must be recognized that sales prices were much lower earlier in the season and any merchandising organization like the Canadian wheat board must sell steadily throughout the year. Any other sales policy would not be acceptable. If current prices hold and it is possible for the board to sell the balance of the pool stocks at current levels, then the final prices realized will be higher than present estimates.

Had it been decided to make interim payments now, the amounts would have had to be set at lower levels as a matter of ordinary precaution. Rather than make smaller payments at the present time, the available surpluses will be used by the board as working capital in reducing the amounts borrowed from the banks. As I mentioned earlier, opposition members have expressed a preference for using the surpluses accumulating in the pools in this way.

In stating the prospective final payments from these pools, I have done so with the purpose of giving all producers participating in these pools an idea of where they stand with respect to their further income. I also have in mind that this information should help those producers who require credit in connection with seeding to make any necessary arrangements with their banks.

Once again I should like to emphasize the need for early deliveries from farms, and I would urge producers who have wheat, oats or barley still to be delivered to get this grain into the elevators at the earliest opportunity. There is a good demand for early shipment of all these grains; some sales will be lost if the grain is held back and some have been lost through lack of grain in position. Moreover, as I have already mentioned, early delivery of these grains will facilitate the closing out of the pools and expedite the final payments in that connection.

Mr. Ross (Souris): One point I should like to make clear is that no member of this party ever complained about the payments made last year. I should like to have that clearly understood.

Mr. Chevrier: Ask your question.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The question is this: Could the minister include the wheat payments in his estimate along with those coarse grains? Many more farmers are interested in the wheat payment than in the coarse grains payment.

I have another question based on a press report, with regard to the wheat council, which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of March 17. It reads as follows:

Wheat council O.K.'s Germany; defers Japan. U.S. to supply. Attlee also states that Canada and U.S.A. took the lead in these proposals.

Will the minister now give us some further information on this arrangement, and indicate what if any benefits will accrue to Canada with respect to markets for wheat? In view of the foregoing, will he give us an estimate of future wheat payments, since that will affect many more farmers than will the coarse grains payments?

Mr. Howe: In reply to the first question, I am not in a position to estimate the final payment on wheat. There are factors involved that are not known at this time.

With regard to the international wheat agreement, perhaps I could read a dispatch from our representatives at the council meeting. It reads as follows:

The international wheat council held the final meeting of its second session in London on March 15, when it considered the applications of both Germany and Japan to accede to the international wheat agreement.

Wheat and Coarse Grains

The request made by Germany, involving a guaranteed quantity of 1,800,000 metric tons per year commencing with the current crop year, was approved subject to instruments of accession being deposited by April 30, 1950, and to conditions normally required of countries acceding to the agreement.

In the case of Japan, it was found that further time was necessary for the consideration of the issues involved. It was decided, therefore, to defer further consideration of this application until a later session of the council, which it is anticipated will probably take place before the end of the current crop year which ends July 31, 1950.

The following are the agreed shares of the German quantity:

	1949/50	1950/51	1951/52	1952/53
United States	66,138,678	54,328,345	46,328,345	44,328,345
Canada ...	Nil	8,000,000	16,000,000	18,000,000
Australia ..	Nil	3,333,333	3,333,333	3,333,333
France	Nil	477,000	477,000	477,000

I may say that when Japan accedes, the Canadian allotment will go up to 27 million bushels, which brings us back to the 230 million bushels which in earlier discussions was considered to be Canada's fair share of world wheat markets.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow one further question in connection with this matter? I am thinking particularly of the drought areas in Saskatchewan and the difficulty the farmers there would have in securing credit, even on the basis outlined by the minister. Will he consider having an interim payment made in those areas affected by the drought? The identification is clear, and all that would be necessary would be for the farmers to send in their tickets. I am afraid this announcement will be disappointing to those who need the money for spring work and are unable to secure credit. I offer this suggestion and ask the minister if he will give consideration to it.

Mr. Howe: Very careful consideration has been given to that problem. We are aware of the problem. Unfortunately coarse grains payments do not to any considerable extent affect the drought areas. So far as the wheat payment is concerned, the winding up of the five-year pool involves problems which make it impossible for us to establish final payments at this time.

Mr. Fair: I should like to thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce for his answer to my question about interim payments, of which I gave him notice yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Argue: Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce also tell us what the initial price for oats and barley will be? The farmers of western Canada would like to know the various grain prices before they commence seeding operations. Will the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act be brought in at an early day, preferably before the Easter recess?

Mr. Howe: In reply to the first question, consideration is being given now to initial prices. Initial prices for 1950 crops will be announced well before seeding will commence. So far as the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act are concerned, they are ready for introduction into the house. Perhaps after we settle the pipe lines bill we shall be able to introduce the amendments.

Mr. Drew: There is one point I think should be cleared up. The member for Souris (Mr. Ross) has referred to the statement, repeated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that what was being done was in accordance with the wishes expressed by the opposition. The member for Souris has pointed out that the reference was not to the whole opposition. In view of the fact that a prepared text has been issued, I think that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should make the correction for the record.

Mr. Howe: I am quite willing to accept the word of the hon. member for Souris. It happens I was absent from the house when the criticism arose. I saw in my notes an indication that criticisms had been offered, and the nature of the criticisms. I do not wish to imply that the official opposition offered the criticism.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUESTION AS TO PURCHASES OF EQUIPMENT IN THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he noticed in yesterday's papers dispatches from Washington and New York reporting that Canada is to buy from the United States certain arms and equipment still on the secret list, including jet engines, radio and radar apparatus, armaments, and certain special equipment for F-86 fighters. In view of the importance of this subject, and the controversy surrounding the purchase of F-86 fighters, will the minister make a statement on this matter now, or at an early day?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Arrangements have been made, as reported in the press some weeks ago, to complete the purchase of components for the F-86A aircraft, which are not being manufactured in Canada; that includes possibly engines and other equipment.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Fulton: I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he indicate the dollar value of these purchases from the United States?

Mr. Claxton: About $10 million.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The minister spoke about equipment which is being purchased in the United States by the armed services. Are the armed services being charged duty on this equipment?

Mr. Claxton: Yes; that is correct.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The situation is that the armed services are not spending the entire amounts indicated in estimates, for example; part of it, in the form of duties, is returned to the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. Claxton: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: That is the general policy. It applies to everything.

Mr. Claxton: It applies to all government purchases for the government account.

STEEL

QUESTION AS TO PURCHASES IN THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to purchases made in the United States. Is the press dispatch right in stating that $900,000 worth of steel is to be purchased in Germany in order to build ships in Canada for the government?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have no personal knowledge of any such purchase.

Mr. Fraser: That is the report in the press.

Mr. Howe: Would my hon. friend object to that? Canadian firms buy steel wherever they can. It might have happened. German steel is just as good as any other steel.

Mr. Fraser: If you are buying it from Germany, I wonder why you did not buy it from Britain as you used to.

FREIGHT RATES

NEWFOUNDLAND—DECISION OF BOARD OF TRANSPORT COMMISSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Will the Minister of Transport say what is the present position of the Newfoundland freight rate issue?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): My recollection is, Mr. Speaker, that the matter came up before the board of transport commissioners, and the board decided that it was clear that what both counsel for the applicants and counsel for the respondents requested was an interpretation of a legal problem under subsections 2 and 3 of section 32 of the terms of union. In other words, what the board was asked to do in the judgment was to give a legal opinion on the meaning of those sections.

Perhaps I could put it better this way: The point the board decided was whether or not any different rule was to be applied in the province of Newfoundland from that which was applied to the other provinces of Canada. The reply made by the board was no. The board did not decide the question whether or not Canadian National Railways was justified in making an additional charge because of the narrow gauge railway, nor was it decided whether or not the rate in question from Saint John, New Brunswick, to Halifax, as compared with the rate from Saint John, New Brunswick, to St. John's, Newfoundland, was justified. The board said that matter would be decided at a later date if any of the parties aggrieved felt like proceeding with the issue. As I understand the present position, if the applicants in the case desire to proceed further, the board will hear the case.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask if a further application has been made to the board?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not aware of any.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

CHARLOTTETOWN—QUESTION AS TO PROPERTIES PURCHASED AND COMMENCEMENT OF WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I gave notice to the Minister of Public Works yesterday that this house, and particularly the members from Prince Edward Island, would like to have information with regard to the dominion public building for Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. My question is this. Is the Minister of Public Works prepared to make a definite statement with regard to the properties purchased and paid for, and as to when work will proceed?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of this question. I have before me a lengthy report concerning this building, but I think I should summarize it and not clutter up Hansard with the three pages of details I have here.

Two years ago we had an estimate on the construction of this building. We gave notice of expropriation on the twenty-three properties forming the site of the proposed building. Out of the twenty-three, two have been settled, and two will be settled in the near future. On the remainder we are negotiating for settlement. Our difficulty is that our valuators' valuations—we had two outside firms make valuations—do not agree with the amounts asked by the owners. I can give one instance without mentioning the name, so that no harm will be done to the negotiations. In one case, according to the detail I have here, we have a valuation of $10,000 for a property, but the owners are asking $60,000. It is quite difficult to come to an agreement in such a case. I am afraid we shall have to proceed through the courts.

As to the plans of the building, the sketches have been completed. They are being submitted to the two departments that will occupy the greater part of the building, that is, post office and customs; but from the list I have here I note that nearly every department of government will occupy space in the building. The moment we get the site—and we have given notice to the owners that we shall need the site from April 1 this year—we will proceed to the completion of plans and specifications, and will ask for tenders.

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL SAFEGUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the government to introduce at this session any amendments to the Official Secrets Act in order to provide additional safeguards as recommended by the royal commission four years ago?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): The matter is under consideration.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for committee of supply.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

FREIGHT RATES

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, we planned to raise the question of increased freight rates—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member begins his remarks, might I draw to the attention of the house the fact that almost every day, when we start on the order of business under orders of the day, there is a great deal of confusion in the house. It is exceedingly difficult under such conditions for the Speaker to hear what is taking place, and it is therefore more difficult for him to maintain order. If hon. members have business which requires them to leave the chamber, may I request that they do so as quietly as possible; or if they feel they must converse with other members, may I ask that they do that also as quietly as possible, and preferably outside the chamber.

Mr. Coldwell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some time ago we thought it advisable to raise the question of freight rates. Since that time appeals have been lodged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and by two of the provinces, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. At noon today, listening to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's midday news, I learned that seven of the ten provinces were joining together in making an appeal, I believe to the governor in council. Consequently that fact to some extent limits the discussion one can initiate or carry on this afternoon. I am going to try to keep within the bounds of the rules of procedure and to discuss this matter apart from the actual increases that have been granted by the board of transport commissioners lately. I remember—

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to raise a point of order, if I may, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to interrupt the thought of my hon. friend, and I am almost prompted to apologize to him for interfering with his remarks; but I think I should bring to the attention of the Speaker a matter which has been brought to my own attention only quite recently. I think the house will want to have this information before the discussion proceeds any further.

Mr. Coldwell: That is all right.

Mr. Chevrier: I would like the house to understand that I am not objecting to any discussion on the subject of freight rates, nor do I want to prevent the discussion in any way; on the contrary, I am prepared to deal with it. But my understanding is that the application to which my hon. friend heard a reference over the radio is not in fact an appeal from the judgment but is nothing more or less than an application to review, amend and vary, under section 51 of the Railway Act, the decision on the 20 per cent application. In order that there might be no difficulty about this matter I thought I should, in fairness to the house, obtain from the chairman of the board of transport commissioners a statement as to what the position is. I should like to put the statement on the record and let you, Mr. Speaker, decide; and I think the hon. member will see for himself what the present status is. After this letter is put on Hansard, if Mr. Speaker decides that we should go on with the discussion, I am quite satisfied; but before the discussion proceeds, I think we should have this statement before us. I asked the chairman yesterday to send me a statement, and I received it this morning.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member to make it clear to me and to the house to what body the application is being made? I understood the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) referred to an application to the governor in council. Is the application to that body or to some other body?

Mr. Chevrier: The application to which my hon. friend refers is the application which was made to the board of transport commissioners, and the decision which was handed down granting an increase of 16 per cent, plus also an application recently made by the Railway Association of Canada to increase the rates by 3·4 per cent.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: I heard a very short report at one o'clock. It stated that seven of the ten provinces excluding Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland had now joined to make a protest to the governor in council. My impression was that it was an appeal to the governor in council. Already two provinces, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, have appealed to the board of transport commissioners. As I understand it, this is something new.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not in a position to answer that. I am not aware that there has been an appeal, save that I have seen in the press that there is to be one. If there is one, unquestionably this becomes a matter of which Mr. Speaker should take cognizance, as to whether or not it is debatable at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The point I should like to have cleared up definitely is whether the present application is to the governor in council or to the board of transport commissioners. If it is before the governor general in council I would say offhand that probably there would be freedom of discussion in the house. If the application is before the board of transport commissioners, the matter would then be sub judice, since the board is a court of record and debate thereon would not be permitted in the house.

Mr. Chevrier: It is clear that at the present time there is an application pending before the board of transport commissioners for an increase of 3·4 per cent, which takes the form of an application to vary, rescind and amend the judgment of 16 per cent. I should like to place this document on the record; it will give a clearer explanation from the chairman of the board himself as to where the matter stands.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not want to interrupt the minister, Mr. Speaker, but I am not going to deal with the 3·4 per cent increase. What I am going to deal with, if he will let me proceed, is something concerning the railway situation generally, and not specifically the question which the minister has raised. Let me point out that on March 5, 1947, a somewhat similar matter, which had arisen previously, was dealt with. On that date you yourself, sir, as Deputy Speaker, read a memorandum to the house which had been prepared by the then Speaker. It was a fairly long memorandum, and it dealt with the right of the house to discuss a matter that was then before the board of transport commissioners. The last paragraph of the memorandum reads as follows, as recorded at page 1051 of Hansard:

In making this statement, I have not overlooked the fact that the only discussion excluded by the rule is the matter actually before the board of railway commissioners, namely, an application by the railways for an increase in freight rates. I ask, therefore, that the members keep in mind the rule to which I have referred in speaking in this debate and in any debates which may follow while the matter is sub judice.

Mr. Speaker: In view of what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has read, perhaps the house would like to know just what application is before the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Chevrier: Then, Mr. Speaker, if I may I shall proceed to explain to the house what is the present position. I hold in my hand a letter from the acting chairman of the board of transport commissioners, Mr. Wardrope. It reads as follows:

March 20, 1950

Dear Mr. Chevrier:

In response to your verbal request as to the present situation with regard to the application of the Railway Association of Canada for a 20 per cent increase in freight rates, I beg to state as follows:

The board by its judgment of March 1 last and for the reasons given authorized a general increase, subject to exceptions, as set out in its order No. 74034, dated March 1, 1950, of 16 per cent.

Subsequently, by application dated 10th March, 1950, the Railway Association of Canada, on behalf of its member companies as mentioned in schedule A attached to its application, has applied to the board for an order under section 51 of the Railway Act changing, altering or varying the above order in the manner set forth in the application and upon the following, among other grounds:

1. That in its said judgment dated February 28, 1950, the board erred in not authorizing such a percentage of increase in the said tolls and rates as was required to make good the total revenue deficiency of $29,971,700 determined by the board in its said judgment and based upon the adjusted results of railway operations of Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the year 1949 which the board used as a measure of the needs of all railway companies parties to the said application.

3. That the formula adopted by the board in its judgment dated September 20, 1949, upon review of its said judgment dated March 30, 1948, was, according to the judgment dated February 28, 1950, given full effect to in arriving at the said deficiency of $29,971,700, but the board nevertheless made the error of further adjusting said deficiency in the manner indicated by the following paragraph of the said judgment dated February 28, 1950:

"As the majority judgment of September 20, 1949, reviewed the decision in the 21 per cent case and determined that the latter should have been 15 per cent, and also incorporated such modification in the 8 per cent interim award, it is necessary to modify the above stated deficiency accordingly."

4. That the errors above set forth constituted errors in law in that the board by its said order No. 74034, having established a total revenue deficiency for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of $29,971,700, failed to authorize such an increase in the said tolls and rates as would make good such deficiency and thereby failed to perform its duty under the Railway Act to fix and determine just and reasonable rates and to change and alter rates as changing conditions or cost of transportation required.

Applicants further request that the board extend the time within which applicants may apply to the board for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada under subsection 3 of section 52 of the Railway Act from the said judgment dated February 28, 1950, and the said order No. 74034, until one month after the disposition by the board of the application herein made for an order changing, altering or varying the said order No. 74034.

The acting chairman goes on to say:

On notice of motion served by the applicant upon the respondents and returnable today, there appeared before the board this morning counsel for the applicant and counsel for respondent provinces for the purpose of fixing a date for the hearing of the said application.

Owing to its present commitments and commitments of some of the interested parties, the board was unable, at this time, to fix a date and has taken the matter under consideration.

Yours very sincerely,

Hugh Wardrope

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Has the minister a copy of the submission on freight rates which was made to the royal commission on transportation?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I wonder whether he would give it to the house.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Yorkton wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): May we have the submission to the royal commission on freight rates? I wish to raise an objection, on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: I have that, but could we not stick first of all to the matter which is now before the board of transport commissioners? I take it my hon. friend has in mind the matter which is before the royal commission on transportation.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: No point of order has been raised. We have been endeavouring to clarify the position of the application before the board of transport commissioners, and that has been clarified. We have had a statement of the position. I now call upon the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. Coldwell: Under the circumstances, and knowing what the circumstances were, I had no intention this afternoon of discussing questions raised in the memorandum of the acting chairman of the board of transport commissioners. I realize that it does alter what I would have said, had those appeals not been made.

I wish to discuss the railway problem as it very largely affects all the people of Canada, and I shall avoid dealing with matters in the memorandum the minister has read into the record.

Let me say first, Mr. Speaker, that I think all hon. members will agree that transportation in Canada is of fundamental importance to all the people of this country, wherever they may live. It does not matter whether they live in the central provinces, the maritimes, the prairie provinces or British Columbia. We are all vitally interested in this problem. It does not matter whether we consider it as a problem of transportation of Canadian goods from one part of Canada to another, or whether we think of it as a matter of vital interest in the defence of this country; the transportation system is a matter of great concern. Indeed, the fathers of confederation recognized this in 1867 when one of the considerations upon which confederation was achieved was the building of a railway line across the country to link British Columbia with the rest of Canada. When that was done the people of this country gave much encouragement to the transportation company which obtained the charter. I think it would be well if, in thinking of this whole transportation problem and the question of freight rates, hon. members would look over the debates following confederation, between the years 1874 and 1884. They would do well to read the debates of those ten years and refresh themselves on the matters which came to the attention of parliament in those days. If they do so they will agree that there is every reason in the world why the people of Canada should view with alarm the trend which has occurred in recent years in connection with our railways and their services.

Indeed at that time, in 1880 as in 1874, it was actually the opinion of the house that the best way to deal with railway construction in Canada was to construct railways under a publicly-owned plan. But, as those who are familiar with our Canadian history will remember, that idea was abandoned, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was granted a charter. We see what amounted to a gift, if we put it in cold cash, of some $62 million, in two forms. First of all the company was granted $25 million in cash. The other $37 million was made up by the transfer of 700 miles of railway already completed by the Mackenzie government and valued at something over $37 million. In addition to that, as hon. members know, there was a grant of 25 million acres of our western lands. Again I am sure that most hon. members know that while the making of large grants had been the practice in the United States, there was one variation in that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had this advantage: that if land adjacent to the railway in one township was not satisfactory, they could substitute for it land elsewhere. In the 700 miles of railway owned by the people of Canada, I should have added, was the very valuable Pembina branch of the St. Paul and Pacific railway, which at that time was regarded as one of the most important routes in this country and indeed it is still.

I wish to get this on the record: that in addition to these grants in cash and in acres of land, they also received exemption from taxation on their railway property and on their capital stock, and exemption from customs duties on supplies they required to import.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to a point of order, not for the purpose of limiting my hon. friend's speech, but because I too wish to speak on this subject. I should like to have a ruling on it.

Mr. Coldwell: Just a moment; instead of interrupting me, would not the hon. member be better to raise the point of order if he desires to speak subsequently?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): No.

Mr. Coldwell: I have already been interrupted several times.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has been interrupted several times. Perhaps I should point out to the hon. member for Yorkton that it is not usual for Mr. Speaker to give a ruling in anticipation or to express an opinion on a hypothetical point of order.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Well, I am calling for it.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The point of order would have to relate to the remarks already made.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I understand that. In order that a limitation on the debate may either be made or not made, and as I intend to follow my hon. friend, and do not wish my speech limited any more than his—

Mr. Speaker: Yes; just state the point of order.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The point of order is that under citations 251 and 252 this subject is sub judice, in that this matter is before the board of transport commissioners, which is a court of record. Then there is this further point: that a royal commission has been appointed to go into the whole matter of freight rates and to consider the very matters to which my hon. friend has already referred, including the history of the C.P.R., gifts of land to the company, and other factors.

Citation 490 states that on March 30, 1933, when the committee of supply was considering the estimates of the Department of Justice, a member endeavoured to discuss the finding of a royal commission appointed to investigate charges against a county court judge. The citation points out that the chairman ruled that the report not having been brought down, the matter was still sub judice, and the discussion could not take place. On an appeal to the house the chairman's ruling was confirmed, without a dissenting voice.

In this instance there is a royal commission going into the whole matter of freight rates. Personally I would like a discussion in the house; but if the rule is there, I submit I am bound by it, and so is my hon. friend. The royal commission has not yet reported.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Yorkton is, as I understand it, that at the present time a debate should not be permitted on any matter affecting transportation because a royal commission has been set up to inquire into that matter. I take it that that is the point of order raised.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has quoted as his authority citation 490 in Beauchesne's third edition, which refers to a royal commission set up to deal with certain charges against a county court judge. I should like to quote from the citation:

> A member endeavoured to discuss the findings of a royal commission . . . The chairman ruled that the report not having been brought down, the matter was still sub judice and the discussion could not take place.

I think the reason for that ruling was that it was a judicial matter, a charge against a judge, and that members were endeavouring to debate the findings in a report not yet brought down by the royal commission. I have never thought that because a matter has been referred to a royal commission it cannot be discussed generally in the house at the same time. I have no precedent to this effect, but there is a precedent to the effect that when a matter is referred to a committee of the house it can be discussed in the house, but the house cannot refer to the procedure and evidence in the committee before it has reported.

It seems to me that a similar principle might well govern the reference of a matter to a royal commission and that citation 490 of Beauchesne's third edition lends support to this view.

I would accordingly rule that it is not out of order to discuss transportation problems generally when such matters have been referred to a royal commission. On the other hand, I would also rule that reference should not be made to the proceedings, or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

Mr. Coldwell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) for bringing the matter to my attention. It was a new question for me, and I hope my ruling meets with the general approval of the house.

Mr. Coldwell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the interruptions will not be counted in my forty minutes, because if they are I believe I would only have about five minutes left. Therefore I am going to ask your indulgence in that respect.

With reference to your ruling, sir, may I also say that I think it is one that we would expect. Last year I remember that when the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) wished to discuss the subject of radio broadcasting, which was then before a royal commission, he was permitted to do so. It was believed to be quite in conformity with the rules of the house, and the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said so at that time.

When I was interrupted I believe I had just remarked that, in addition to the other concessions which were granted, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had exemption from certain customs duties on the materials required for the construction of the railway. There was the deletion of course of the provision that was in the act of 1874 to the effect that under certain circumstances the government might step in and take over the railway. Out of this gift a great railway system was established. Later, by further guarantees and by grants of land from the provinces, particularly the province of British Columbia, the financing of the railway was made possible, and indeed largely undertaken one way or another by the people of Canada.

In "The Life of Gladstone", by John Morley, there is a most interesting paragraph. In 1844 Mr. Gladstone was president of the board of trade of Great Britain, and at that time the many lines of railway were just being built in that country. Morley's "Life of Gladstone" records that:

> Mr. Gladstone proposed a select committee on the subject, guided its deliberations, drew its reports, and framed the bill that was founded upon them. He dwelt upon the favour now beginning to be shown to the new roads by the owners of land through which they were to pass, so different from the stubborn resistance that had for long been offered; upon the cheapened cost of construction; upon the growing disposition to employ redundant capital in making railways, instead of running the risks that had made foreign investment so disastrous. It was not long, indeed, before this very disposition led to a mania that was even more widely disastrous than any foreign investment had been since the days of the South Sea bubble. Meanwhile, Mr. Gladstone's Railway Act of 1844, besides a number of working regulations for the day, laid down two principles of the widest range, reserving to the state the full right of intervention in the concerns of the railway companies, and giving to the state the option to purchase a line at the end of a certain term at twenty-five years' purchase of the divisible profits.

If you will read that carefully you will find much of what Mr. Gladstone tried to prevent in Great Britain occurred some forty years later in our own country.

Yesterday, I believe it was—and I think this is material to any discussion of railway problems in the house—I read a report in the press of a statement made on behalf of the Canadian National Railways by the new president, Mr. Donald Gordon. When you look back over the story of the consolidation of various lines of railway into the Canadian National Railway system you can see many reasons why it is we find ourselves faced with the difficulties that confront us today, particularly when you consider the building of redundant lines and the taking over of other facilities that were not at all remunerative. I recommend to hon. members that they procure from the library—there is at least one copy there—the decision of a former president of the United States, who at the time was Mr. Justice Taft, in connection with the board of arbitration of the affairs of the Grand Trunk Pacific in 1921, I believe it was. Operating in this country, the Grand Trunk Pacific was found by Mr. Justice Taft to have engaged in all kinds of methods in order to deceive both the people and the government of Canada.

I am not going to go into this matter at any length, although I have before me a part of Mr. Justice Taft's reasons for dissenting from the award made in the case of the Grand Trunk arbitration. It shows how profits were concealed; it shows that when the time came for the government to take it over, values were inflated, and it indicates the manner in which this was done secretly by the board of directors in London at that particular time. Unfortunately what may be said of the Grand Trunk Railway, and its concealment of various factors of material interest to the people of Canada at the time we took over the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific, is true in large part of the early history of all railways, not only in Canada but indeed in the whole of North America.

Therefore I say that from time to time these railways have been built up out of great concessions made to them by the people of Canada. For example, the Canadian Pacific, in addition to the concessions I have enumerated, have from time to time actually been relieved of obligations that they undertook in regard to some of their railway operations.

Look at the Crowsnest pass agreement, for example, under which the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia made large grants to the railway. In return western Canada was to receive certain concessions with respect to the rates on various types of commodities. If I may give a few examples, the rates on green and fresh fruits were reduced by 33⅓ per cent; on coal oil by 20 per cent; on cordage and binder twine by 10 per cent; on agricultural implements of all kinds, set up or in parts, 10 per cent; iron, including bar, band, Canada plates, galvanized, sheet, pipe, pipe fitting, nails, spikes and horse shoes by 10 per cent; roofing, felt, boxes and packing by 10 per cent; all paint and oils by 10 per cent; livestock by 10 per cent; woodenware by 10 per cent and household furniture by 10 per cent.

Those of us who know the history of Canadian railways recall that in 1919, under the stress of war and post-war conditions, that agreement was temporarily set aside and the reductions in those classifications, together with the rates on grain then established, no longer applied. In 1922 this parliament—I remember it very well; though I was not here I followed it very closely—restored the rates on grain but did not restore the rates on these other commodities. In 1925 they were actually abolished by an act of this parliament, thereby imposing a greater burden on western Canada in the interests of the railway than it had theretofore borne. For a number of years there has been continuous propaganda on the part of the railways to get rid entirely of all that remains of that rate which was adopted as part of a definite agreement in return for grants and concessions made in 1896 or 1897.

So bit by bit we have seen our railways become more and more burdensome on the people, at least in two parts of Canada. Those two parts are the prairie and British Columbia region and the maritime regions, though to some extent the maritimes have been relieved by certain subsidies and subventions. Not only did the government of Canada make substantial money grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I have said; British Columbia did the same thing. At that time these concessions were regarded as of vital importance to the very small number of people then living in the prairie region, and the not much larger number of people living in British Columbia. These rates went into effect in 1898, though the agreement was made a year or two earlier. Since that time the population of the prairie region has increased by leaps and bounds, and one would think that because of the increased volume of business the reverse would have happened and instead of the burden becoming heavier it might have become lighter.

Then, of course, these burdens have not all been spread evenly over the country. Where you have a high basic rate and an increase is given on that rate it imposes a further burden, and makes the rate still more discriminatory than it was before. That is one reason I hope that when these matters are thoroughly considered by this house special attention will be given the matter of discrimination in our rate structure. The across-the-board, horizontal increases that have been made over the years—I am not discussing necessarily the recent increases—have imposed a burden upon some parts of the country greater than that imposed upon others. We must remember that there have been times when the cost of moving commodities from one part of Canada to another has almost equalled the value of the commodities themselves. If we look at the record of the thirties we can see how that worked out. I do not need to quote any freight rate to bring this home to hon. gentlemen. I do not need to discuss the possibility of rates being increased through the abolition of the concessions made under the Crowsnest pass agreement. If we look at 1925, when our own parliament passed a statute settling the controversy that then existed in the country and which so many of us remember so well, the average farm price of wheat in Saskatchewan was $1.23 a bushel. In 1927 it dropped to $1; in 1928 to 80 cents; in 1929 it went up to $1.05. In 1930 it actually fell to 49 cents and in 1931 to 38 cents; someone else was in power then. In 1932 it dropped to 35 cents; in 1933 it went up to 49 cents and in 1934 to 61 cents. By 1939 it was back to 54 cents and in 1941, the second year of the war, it had only risen to 61 cents. By 1942 it was still only 77 cents. In 1947, which incidentally is the last year for which I have been able to get the average farm price from the bureau of statistics, as a result of the wheat agreements and world conditions it was up to $1.54 a bushel.

So we can see how railway transportation and the rates charged for moving commodities from one part of this country to another have a great effect on our economy. If there should be any further imposition, and particularly if we should go into a period of decline in farm prices, it might be conceivable that the cost of moving farm commodities and particularly wheat, the great commodity in which many of us are interested, from where it is grown to the seaboard might equal or even exceed the value of that commodity on the farm. That indicates how disastrous the situation would be not only for the farmers on the land but for the whole economy of the country; because I say—and I am quite sure many hon. members will agree with me—that the prosperity of this country depends in no small measure upon our agricultural production and particularly the wheat economy of Canada. I remember hearing a statement made some years ago—speaking from memory I believe it was made by a former prime minister of this country, a former leader of the Progressive Conservative party, Viscount Bennett, but at least someone said—that no comparable group of people in the history of the world had produced as much new wealth in as short a space of time as the men and women engaged in the production of grain in the prairie provinces. Whoever made it, I believe that is a correct statement of fact. The millions and indeed billions of bushels of wheat that have been produced over the years have brought to this country new wealth exceeding that produced by any other industry or group of people in Canada. Consequently, those of us who come from western Canada are tremendously interested in this railway problem; whether it be the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific; whether it be service or whether it be rates. The prosperity of the region we represent in this house depends to a considerable extent upon the relationship of the railways to the economy of this country. We must remember that, so far as we are concerned in the prairie provinces, we have not any competitive transportation system to influence the cost of moving the commodities produced there. We have not the water; we have not the canals; we have not any of those facilities which tend to keep costs down. There is only one means of transporting what there is to sell.

The other day I saw in one of the newspapers a concrete outline of how this works. For example, the cost of taking 100 pounds of petroleum products 50 miles, say to Indian Head from Regina, was 26 cents; while from one point to another covering the same distance and the same weight, in Quebec it was 10 cents and in the province of Ontario it was 9½ cents. I believe that indicates what I mean by the need for some equalization, the need for removal of discrimination from rates.

Then, of course, when you look at the railway properties, you realize that perhaps the railroad as such is compelled to bear the whole burden of rates when, originating as many of these properties have in railway operations, things like telegraphs and profit from hotels, when there are profits, and other subsidiaries, should be included in the earnings of the railway. I noticed in dealing with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the opinion that was given in the minority report by the late Mr. Justice Taft, as he was then, he refers to the costs, not of operation but of maintenance. He refers to how the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk railways, in the negotiations with the government of Canada, and in the evidence that was given before the tribunal in 1921, by manipulation of maintenance costs, had been able to give a picture that was not accurate. Indeed, from time to time, I believe all railways have done that sort of thing. It is that sort of thing that needs to be investigated thoroughly by any royal commission, or any board of transport commissioners.

I am not going to refer to the evidence that has been given in this matter quite recently because, as I say, I am not going outside the rules of this debate, when I have the opportunity of dealing with it now in the manner in which I am trying to deal with it. I merely point out that all those factors should be taken into consideration. I think perhaps I must conclude—I see Mr. Speaker getting uneasy. But before I do so there is one matter that is outside this discussion which I want to bring to the attention of the house. This does not deal either with anything before the board of transport commissioners, but concerns the unfairness of the law or regulations covering the collection of freight charges. Incidentally, I have here a file given me by a grain merchant in eastern Canada. It indicates that time and again, after he had collected the price for a carload or half carload of grain based on the rate he secured from the railway company, weeks and sometimes months afterwards, he was told the proper rate had not been charged, so he owed the railway a further sum of money.

Mr. Fulton: I hope he did not pay it.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, he paid it. I believe that is something the Minister of Transport should have investigated. Perhaps in a debate of this sort it may be a minor point, but it is something which should be looked into. It should not be possible for merchants to be faced with demands for large sums of money sometimes months after deals have been completed, on the basis of the freight rates quoted by the railway.

I am not going to trespass further on the time of the house, Mr. Speaker, but I did want to raise this problem, because I believe that members in all parts of the house should have an opportunity of saying something about reorganizing our transportation system to remove the discrimination that now exists, and affording better opportunities for our people to move commodities from one side of this country to the other.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I rise, not for the purpose of intervening in this discussion of the important matter of transportation in Canada, but to explain my position as Minister of Finance, with respect to the final supplementary estimates, and the interim supply which I hope we shall be able to vote today. I discussed this matter with the leaders of the various parties a day or two ago, and explained that, in connection with the final supplementaries in particular, there were one or two items which it was important should be voted within the next day or two. Those two items are the further appropriation required under the Veterans Land Act of about $700,000, and the item for unemployment assistance in Newfoundland where the existing votes have run out. If things are to be continued, we must get the appropriation voted within the next day or two.

I hope that, before we conclude tonight, it will be possible to pass the supplementary estimates, and the relevant supply bill founded on them, as well as the interim supply for April and May of the new fiscal year, which commences on April 1. I do not know how much time the house may wish to take in considering the supplementaries. As the house knows, the final supplementaries are to pay bills. There is no change of policy involved. Probably if we could conclude the discussion of this matter by six o'clock, it would be possible to get this through in two hours this evening. I am simply making this appeal to members who feel they have to speak on this important matter, to restrict their remarks as much as possible. There will be other occasions on which it can be discussed, and I hope it will not be necessary to provoke a general debate on transportation problems today because, as I have said, it is essential to get this other business through if it is at all possible.

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): In view of what the minister has said, I shall shorten the remarks I intended to make on the matter of the Crowsnest particularly, and freight rates generally. The matter is of great interest to the people of western Canada, and to the members from that area.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has referred to the Crowsnest pass rates. It is not my understanding that that question is before the board of transport commissioners. If my understanding is correct, I would have no objection to the discussion of that matter, but I think the question of freight rates generally would be out of order at this time, in view of the application which is now before the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): It was for that reason I raised the point I did a short time ago. The hon. member who just preceded me did raise the question of the Crowsnest rates.

Mr. Coldwell: On a point of privilege, I did not discuss the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): You referred to them.

Mr. Coldwell: I referred to the Crowsnest pass agreement as one consideration in the building of a railway.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): What I have to say refers to the Crowsnest agreement which covers the rates.

Mr. Speaker: If the question of the Crowsnest pass rates is now before the board of transport commissioners, it would be sub judice and could not be debated in the house at the present time. I think that is clear.

Mr. Chevrier: In order to clarify the matter, I would say that the matter of the Crowsnest rates is not before the board of transport commissioners but the subject matter has been referred to the royal commission on transportation. I also obtained from the secretary of the royal commission on transportation a statement concerning the matter. It is quite lengthy and I do not want to burden the house with it; I summarized it in what I said.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): As a matter of fact, there is a decision of the supreme court on the matter of the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners in connection with the Crowsnest rates, and that decision is that they have no jurisdiction over them or over the agreement. So the matter is not properly before the board, if it was before them. In any event, it has nothing to do with this last submission which is before the board, namely, an increase of three and a half per cent in the general rate on the basis of a mistake which was made in the former judgment. That is the only submission that is before the board of transport commissioners now, as I understand it.

In the first place, I want to point out, as has been pointed out in the report, that what was before the board of transport commissioners was the original application for a twenty-one per cent increase. Finally sixteen per cent was granted.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think I shall allow discussion on that question. The minister has stated the situation. In fact, he has read the application which is before the board, and that application does refer to the very matters which the hon. member for Yorkton is now mentioning. I would ask him not to discuss that question nor to bring it to the attention of the house.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I am not going to discuss it. I am just delimiting what is before the board. I am not going to discuss what is happening before the board.

In connection with the Crowsnest agreement, I want to say that thirty-two of the western Liberals who are now sitting in this House of Commons met as soon as some announcement was made that the Crowsnest agreement was the subject of attack by the C.P.R. Those western Liberals sitting in this parliament on November 16, 1949, signed a document which reads as follows:

> Thirty-two western Liberal members of the Commons said Tuesday they would fight any recommendation to remove western Canada's low freight rates on grain and grain products, which has been proposed before the royal commission on transportation. The proposal has been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which contends that the statutory "Crowsnest pass" rates are not paying their way. Leslie Mutch, veterans affairs parliamentary assistant, Tuesday issued a statement signed by the 32 members declaring a recommendation for any change in the rates would be met head-on by them in a "no quarter" fight.
> The statement said the western members have discussed the C.P.R. "threat" at length and "desire to protest any action which would seek to implement the C.P.R. brief in this regard."
> They added the Crowsnest rates are "essential to the welfare of western Canada" and were "bought and paid for" by the west.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to limit the debate; but in view of the request that was made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) I thought it should be understood whether or not this is to extend into a debate on freight rates, because the remarks which have just been made and which are being put into the record by the hon. member have no meaning whatever unless they relate to his views as to what should or should not be permitted with regard to rates.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood that the hon. member for Yorkton was referring to the Crowsnest pass agreement which sets forth certain rates. I also understood the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) to say a moment ago that that question was not now before the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Drew: Oh, it is, very definitely.

Mr. Fraser: It is before the royal commission.

Mr. Speaker: If I understood the Minister of Transport correctly, he stated that the present application before the board of transport commissioners does not affect the rates charged under the Crowsnest pass agreement. If that is so, that question is not sub judice.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That matter was argued the other day in the courts.

Mr. Chevrier: That is so.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask one question with respect to the point of order? I am asking my question of the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). In the statement that he is in the midst of reading he indicated that the Canadian Pacific Railway made certain critical comments—

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute. As I say, he has indicated that the Canadian Pacific Railway made a protest against the Crowsnest rates. May I ask where the Canadian Pacific Railway made that protest?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I rise on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I desire to make some remarks on this matter in this debate today. Now that the point of order is raised, may I say that this very matter of freight rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement was argued within the past few days right over in the law courts, before the royal commission on transportation, because I have some of the evidence before me. If one member in one corner of the house can argue this matter I think we should all be entitled to do so. I am greatly concerned about the matter, and I want to advance arguments along the same lines as those that have been put forward. The matter has been argued before the royal commission on transportation in the last few days.

Mr. Speaker: First of all, may I say to the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) that if one member is allowed to discuss the matter, every member will be allowed to discuss it if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I grant you that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to refer back to the question which was asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The hon. member for Yorkton referred to an application. If that application is now before the court or the board of transport commissioners, it would be sub judice and not debatable in this chamber.

Mr. Coldwell: May I just say one word on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have sent my notes up to Hansard, but I had in my hand a copy of the evidence given before the board of transport commissioners in connection with the Crowsnest rates.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Certainly.

Mr. Coldwell: That is why I did not deal with them.

Mr. Speaker: In view of what has been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), I wonder if it would meet with the wishes of all hon. members of the house if the question of the Crowsnest rates were not debated at this time? If hon. members agree I will not make a ruling.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance wants to go on, I would agree; but I want to put on record that I am greatly surprised that western members are impeding any discussion of the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I want that point made quite clear, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to have the discussion broadened in order that I could debate that very issue. I do not want to have words put into my mouth.

Mr. Coldwell: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. I have just spoken, and in doing so I carefully avoided discussing the Crowsnest pass rates as such and the applications, because I thought that by doing otherwise I would not be acting in conformity with the rules of the house. Had that not been the case, I would have expressed the opinion that I have expressed over and over again over the years, namely that these Crowsnest rates must remain inviolable.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): On a question of privilege, may I say that I did not intend to go into the matter of the rates at all. What I was going into was the matter of retaining the agreement.

Mr. Fraser: You wanted to read a political speech.

Mr. Speaker: In view of what has been said, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Marketing service—

569. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $9,448.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the parliamentary assistant give the figures in connection with these cold storage warehouses and the subsidies paid to them by provinces, and in particular the payments being made to the cold storage warehouses in Saskatchewan under this act?

Mr. McCubbin: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I have not these figures with me. I can get them for the hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the parliamentary assistant in a position to give us the particulars of this item? What does it cover? Perhaps he will place on Hansard an answer to the question I have asked in regard to the subsidies that have been paid out during the last year to the various cold storage establishments generally across the dominion and in particular in Saskatchewan.

Mr. McCubbin: We are now dealing with the supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman. This is an additional amount needed to cover the four or five cold storages. The amount paid out in Saskatchewan is $6,454. The amount for all Canada is $1,429,789.

Mr. Bryce: Can the parliamentary assistant tell us how many co-operative organizations have been participating in these subsidies?

Mr. McCubbin: Forty-six co-operatives.

Mr. Fraser: Can we have some information from the parliamentary assistant covering these different items?

Mr. Abbott: That will be given before we get to the other departments.

Mr. Fraser: We shall have that information?

Mr. Abbott: Yes; if not, I shall try to give it. I have been through all this in the treasury board.

Item agreed to.

Special—

570. Agricultural Products Act—to provide for losses incurred in respect of the purchase, sale and export of agricultural products under the Agricultural Products Act, including authority for the Minister of Finance, at the request of the Minister of Agriculture, from time to time, to pay amounts in the aggregate not exceeding $40 million out of any unappropriated money in the consolidated revenue fund as recoverable advances—further amount required, $350,000.

Mr. Wright: Can the minister give us the products for which this $350,000 was used? Is it the total amount used out of the $40 million that is available for the support of these products, or the payment of subsidies on the products going to Great Britain? I take it this is the item which covers the export of cheese, bacon and dairy products to Great Britain.

Mr. McCubbin: This item of $350,000 is for bacon alone. Nothing in respect of cheese is in this item. The total amount was $450,000. The estimate was $100,000. Therefore $350,000 extra had to be put in from January 1 to March 31.

Mr. Fraser: Of this year?

Mr. McCubbin: Of this year, and of the amount that we have to send to Great Britain in this year. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Wright: That answers part of it. Out of the $40 million how much was used altogether in addition to $350,000?

Mr. Abbott: These figures would not be available yet, Mr. Chairman, but I expect my hon. friend can get them. Perhaps I can get them before the committee rises.

Mr. McCubbin: I would be glad to get them for the hon. member if he wishes them.

Mr. Fulton: Is this the heading under which a payment will be made to the apple growers of British Columbia with respect to their shipment of apples to England this year? The apples came out of this year's crop. Since this amount covers the payments up to March 31, and if no provision is made here for what we hope is eventually to be approved to be paid to these apple producers, we might have to wait some considerable time before further appropriation is made. Will the parliamentary assistant say whether this item of $350,000 is sufficient to take care of the payment on the million boxes?

Mr. McCubbin: No, it would not. This is for bacon only. What the hon. member has just mentioned is under consideration, and would have to be dealt with in the next fiscal year.

Mr. Fulton: One other question. As I understand it, this item refers to the Agricultural Products Act which is the act that was passed in March of last year. That act authorizes the minister to give power to provincial boards and to enable them to exercise powers otherwise held by the federal Minister of Agriculture. Is this payment of $350,000 incurred under the act as we passed it last year—in other words, incurred on behalf of the provincial boards—or is this to cover activities which were entered into before the act of last year came into effect?

Mr. McCubbin: No, this is just for the contract price. It would have nothing whatsoever to do with the act. This amount of $40 million is the amount that was set aside to assist in the contracts.

Mr. Bryce: Canada last year made an agreement to supply 195 million pounds of bacon. We supplied only 100 million pounds. Did we send any of the quantity this year, and was it paid for at $36 at the seaboard, or at $29 at the seaboard? I hope I am making myself clear. We fell down on our contract last year. Did we send any this year to fulfil our obligation of last year?

Mr. McCubbin: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Some was sent this year to fulfil our obligation of last year. There was a certain amount of bacon, Wiltshire sides, in storage at the latter part of the year. They were not sent until the beginning of this year, and they were sent at last year's price.

Mr. Bryce: Sent at the $36 price?

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. McCubbin: Yes.

Mr. Bryce: And the farmer got paid the new price?

Mr. McCubbin: No.

Mr. Bryce: Oh, yes.

Mr. McCubbin: Oh, no.

Mr. Bryce: Oh, yes. The packer got $36 f.o.b. seaboard, and the farmer back in the country was getting $24 at Winnipeg. That is not fair, far from it.

Mr. McCubbin: Mr. Chairman, the farmer who was selling hogs on the 1st of December and the latter part of November last year was receiving more than $24, and that was the bacon that was being sent to Britain the first of this year.

Mr. Bryce: I am not going to take up the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to debate that with my hon. friend. I was in Winnipeg. The price was $24 a hundredweight, and increased to $26. But here the packer was still getting the old price of $36—right to this year.

Mr. Cardiff: I understood the parliamentary assistant to say that $350,000 was paid out for bacon alone. What about the subsidy on butter?

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I might give a word of explanation on that, because it comes under the Agricultural Products Act. My understanding is that this bacon is purchased by the meat board at a contract price. This $350,000, with a token item of $100,000 in the main estimates, will be sufficient to make up the difference between the price paid to the hog producer for his Wiltshire sides, and the British contract price. As I recall, there is a spread of $2.50 between the price the British will pay and the equivalent price here in Canada. This amount, together with whatever may be left of the $100,000, will be available to take care of the obligation up to March 31. There is an item in the main estimates for the year ahead to cover similar payments throughout the year.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian Affairs branch—

571. Welfare—Welfare of Indians, further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two references I should like to make to this item which deals with the welfare of Indians. According to the speech from the throne some amendments are to be made to the Indian Act at this session. No doubt a further committee will be set up with a view to discussing amendments to the act.

I should like at this time to bring to the attention of the new minister one or two matters which have been called to my notice by various Indian bands. Before doing so however—and it is not a perfunctory duty I perform—I wish to congratulate the new minister upon his appointment to this department, particularly so as he comes from the constituency in which I was born, and also because of the fact that I know he has in this department an opportunity for service whereby he can contribute much to the improvement of conditions among Indians on the reserves.

Various representations have been made to me by Indians, who represent a very considerable portion of our population. Particularly is this true in Saskatchewan. Within the confines of my own constituency there are several Indian reserves. I have been consulted by Indian organizations representative of Indians in two or three provinces who have told me that they have certain matters they wish to have brought to the minister's attention, to the end that in any amendment of the Indian Act their rights under the several treaties made between Queen Victoria and their ancestors, and made as well in other parts of Canada between the Indians and sovereigns earlier than Queen Victoria, shall be preserved.

Generally their request is that before any amendments are brought in an opportunity be given to representatives from each province, and in particular to the representatives chosen by the chiefs of the various tribes within each province so that, at the expense of the country, they may be brought here to Ottawa and given an opportunity to make representations as to the things they wish to have done for the Indians in their respective provinces.

That seems only fair. For two years a committee—and a very good one—sat to consider Indian affairs. The Indians feel, as indicated by their chiefs and councils, that they have not had an opportunity properly to advance their claims and rights. On their behalf I ask the minister with his departmental officials to convene a meeting of one or two representatives from each province, to be chosen by the Indians in those provinces, so that they may be brought here to Ottawa and permitted to make their representations. They believe that they occupy a position of secondary citizenship, and that they should be entitled to equality of citizenship with all citizens. About that there can be no dispute. There is no reason whatever why they should have an inferior citizenship.

In asking for equal citizenship they also ask that there shall be no interference with, or abrogation or reduction of, their treaty rights under the several treaties made between successive sovereigns and their ancestors. The fear I hear expressed among various Indian tribes is that if they are granted citizenship the advantages such citizenship would give by way of franchise, and in other direct ways, might be offset by their losing their treaty rights, their freedom from responsibility for taxation and freedom from responsibility in connection with the administration of the game laws, and the like, in various provinces.

The minister will know that there have been a number of cases before the court interpreting the right of Indians to hunt, a right guaranteed to them under their treaty rights. I was counsel in one case, which came before the court of appeal in Saskatchewan, wherein the Indians asked the right to hunt on all unoccupied land, in pursuance of treaty rights granted to them in 1873 when that portion of western Canada between Hudson bay and the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains was ceded to the crown. The court of appeal held that the treaty rights should be upheld, but that in so far as hunting and fishing were concerned those rights could be maintained only on unoccupied land.

The Indians want—and I believe they have a right to ask it—to have their rights inviolable, so that the treaty responsibilities entered into between several Britannic majesties and the ancestors of these Indians shall not in any way be abrogated or reduced by parliament. It is because they want the assurance that those treaty rights will be upheld and maintained in any amendments to the Indian Act that they ask to be given the opportunity to send representatives to Ottawa now, before the legislation is placed before parliament, to the end that their representations may be made, as they see it, to the foot of the throne, namely to the personal knowledge of the minister and his department.

I make this appeal to the minister today. I find among the Indian tribes a feeling of fear that their rights are going to be interfered with, and that those great rights which they cherish with such pride, and which were granted to them particularly by Queen Victoria, shall not be diminished by the action of a parliament in which—and I say this advisedly—because of the fact they have no vote, they have no representation. They ask that no amendments be made without first securing their consideration and approval of them. It is all very well to say that Indian agents and representatives of the Indian department will be able to present to the minister and parliament the wishes and aspirations of these people, but that is not what they want. They want the opportunity to send representatives here. Ten representatives would cover all the provinces of the dominion. They want to be allowed to come here for a few days to discuss the matter with the minister to the end that any amendments introduced will meet with their acceptance instead of being the result of the interpretation of their views to the minister by departmental officials, however efficient they may be.

Second, they believe—and I think rightly so—that the time has come when they should be allowed to take proceedings against His Majesty the King in the right of the Indian affairs department without the necessity of the issuing of a fiat which is granted by another department of the government, namely, that of the attorney general. Today the situation is that among various Indian tribes—and I am speaking particularly now of western Canada—claims are repeatedly made that there has not been that care in the administration of wards of the Canadian people that there should be on the part of certain officials of the Indian department, and that moneys in the trust funds, which should be used for the purposes of the Indians, are not used in accordance with treaty arrangements. Nevertheless, if a band of Indians find themselves in that position, where do they get when they complain? Their complaint is investigated, but they cannot take proceedings unless they have the fiat of the attorney general, and that has been refused on more than one occasion.

In my own province of Saskatchewan during the years of 1930 to 1933 one or two Indian tribes took proceedings against the crown for misfeasance and malfeasance, and one of them succeeded. From then on other tribes have been denied the right of action. They ask that they be granted the right to take proceedings for the protection of their treaty rights, and for the administration of the funds of the several reserves when and if there is anything in the nature of negligence, wrongdoing or misfeasance on the part of any of the officials of the Indian department. I do not think these are unreasonable requests. Indians are not subject to conscription or to military service in any way, but when we were at war members of the reserves in every part of Canada enlisted in numbers unexcelled by any other group in the dominion.

They ask for simple justice, and it is that appeal I make to the minister today. I say to him: Do not endeavour to have amendments to the Indian Act brought in that represent nothing more than the findings of the committee to date. In order to secure the co-operation of the Indians, above all not only must good faith be maintained with them but they themselves must believe that good faith is in fact being maintained.

It is in that spirit that I appeal to the minister not only for the welfare of the Indians but also for a recognition of what their contribution has meant to this country. I urge that when amendments are introduced they should not be piecemeal, that in fact they should represent the wishes, ideals and desires of the Indian tribes everywhere in Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: Before too much time elapses after the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre, I wish to associate myself with what he has so ably said today. We have neglected our Indian population in a way which, in my judgment, constitutes a scandal against the Canadian people, and it appears that we have no intention of remedying the abuses of our ways of dealing with them at an early date. I think the time has come for parliament and the people of Canada to repent of our evil ways and bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

In addition to what the hon. member has just said, there are one or two more things I should like to mention. I see no reason why Indians should not be granted the old age pension. I believe that this neglect on the part of the dominion government is utterly indefensible. The Indians should have been the first to receive old age pensions. I believe that we should have a claims commission established to consider the various complaints which the Indians have against the administration to which they have been subjected through the years. There are violations of sacred treaties made between the sovereign and Indian tribes of Canada over 150 years ago which are simply flagrantly and callously disregarded. To call them scraps of paper, as the Kaiser called one of his treaties, does not begin to express the attitude which is maintained by Canadian government officials as to these treaties.

Something has to be done. The Indians with whom I have come in contact throughout Alberta are rapidly becoming more and more despondent, more and more disillusioned, more and more bitter. I maintain this condition must not be permitted to continue.

Mr. Bryce: I want to endorse what the hon. member for Lake Centre and the hon. member for Lethbridge have said. I was one of the members of the Indian affairs committee, and it has been a great disappointment to me that nothing has been done before now after the tremendous amount of work performed by that committee. I know the committee sat each session for three years, and we had about seventy meetings at each session. It takes considerable time to go into the matter, and I do not want to do that now. I do not think a week goes by that I do not receive complaints from the Indians. It is a great problem. We set out to write a new Magna Carta for them.

The Indian problem was something that it was believed would solve itself at one time when the Indians were dying at the rate of one thousand a year. Today, with new health facilities, better hospitals and care, their numbers are on the increase at the rate of 1,500 a year. There are 135,000 Indians in the Dominion of Canada. Something must be done because a growing population like that cannot remain wards of the government. They have to take their rightful place in the economy of the country. I will speak further on this matter when the main estimates of the department come before us at a later date.

Mr. Harkness: I also should like to endorse what has been said by the three previous speakers as to our Indians, and I should like to ask the minister two questions.

First, the speech from the throne indicated that the long overdue bill designed to overhaul the entire Indian Act and bring it into line with present ideas, humanitarian and otherwise, was to be introduced this session. It is not on the order paper yet, and I should like to ask the minister when we may expect that bill to be brought forward. I am sure this will represent an extensive revision of the act, and if it is to receive proper consideration a good deal of time will have to be devoted to it and I should think it might have to be referred to a committee. So the sooner the bill is introduced the better, and I think we should have some indication as to when that may be.

Then I notice that this vote is for Indian welfare, particularly supplies and material. I am glad this additional money is being provided, and that more supplies and materials are being given the Indians for welfare purposes. My second question is in connection with the welfare payments now being made to old or indigent Indians, which I believe now amounts to $8.50 per month. That is pitifully and totally inadequate, and I should like to know if any increase in that payment is anticipated or under consideration at the present time. The Indians of Alberta have asked that this amount be increased to at least $15 a month, a very modest request, and it seems to me that at this session we should make provision in the estimates for an increase to at least that amount. Even that payment would appear very small.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to add my voice to those who have spoken already in favour of a better deal for our Indian population. In doing so I should like to congratulate the new minister on being appointed to this very responsible office. If he does not make a good job of it I shall be disappointed indeed, because I have high hopes for him.

I think the time has come when we will have to take rather forward steps in dealing with our Indian population. In my own province of British Columbia, where we have a tendency to be a little in advance of other parts of Canada—and we always tell the rest of Canada about it—we have enfranchised the Indian population. They are now on the same basis, with respect to the franchise, as the other residents of that province. I do not think it can be very long maintained that the Indian is a citizen when he is considered as a British Columbian but a ward of the state when he comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government. While I do not believe this is the proper time to debate this issue, because the matter will come before us on the main estimates for the coming fiscal year and I also understand a bill is to be introduced, still I should like the minister to give careful thought to the matter I have just mentioned, as to whether our Indian population can be both citizens and wards of the state.

Mr. Higgins: Last session I asked a question with respect to the Indians and Eskimos in Newfoundland and Labrador, as to their status and what was being done for them; I believe that was around December 1. The Prime Minister replied that the matter was then being discussed and that it was hoped to reach an agreement with the province at some later date. Perhaps the minister can tell me the present position, and whether any decision has been arrived at.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): To deal with the last question first, I am afraid I cannot add anything to what the Prime Minister said last fall, but I shall make inquiries and see what I can get by way of an answer.

With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre, from his own words the committee will see how difficult this problem is with respect to the relative position of the Indian as a ward claiming treaty rights, and as a citizen; and we are studying that matter, of course, in preparing the bill. That legislation will not come before the house for some time yet. I would not want to be at all definite, but I should say it would be at least a month before the bill will be available. At that time I hope we may be able to adopt such procedure as will meet with the approval of the whole house, and more particularly those hon. members who served on the committee three or four years ago and who were responsible in large part for the bill that will be brought forward.

As to the other question concerning the relief given the Indians, as the hon. member for Vancouver East has suggested this perhaps is not the time to debate that matter, and I would appreciate it if that part of the discussion could be left over until the main estimates are discussed. In the meantime I can assure hon. members that this question which was also brought up last session is still receiving consideration, and we may have something to say about it later on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I notice the minister has not dealt with the one request I made, that coming from the Saskatchewan association of Indians, which I believe is under the chairmanship or presidency of Chief Tootoosis, an able and intelligent chieftain. He and other chiefs with whom I have consulted, not directly but by means of correspondence, have requested that representative chiefs from each province be given the opportunity to discuss the matter with the minister, and I should like to ascertain the minister's reaction to that suggestion. These Indian chiefs are very proud of their prerogatives and of their position, and are very jealous of the welfare of the people whom they represent. They feel they should be given the opportunity—not the privilege but the opportunity—of being personally represented here in Ottawa for a period of a few days in order to place their desires before the minister. They feel that too often when this is done through the regular channels the information which they wish to impart to the minister does not find its way to him; so I ask the minister if he will give serious consideration to that suggestion. Surely, in a day when we have representatives of various departments travelling over the world, whose expenses are not regarded as anything but proper expenses necessary for Canada to take her place in the world order, there can be no objection to the small expense connected with bringing these chieftains, many of whom have noble names and noble ancestors, to Ottawa to place their views before the minister, so that he in turn may be able to recommend the necessary amendments to the act. I ask him to consider this submission.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The Indians have made representations along the lines suggested. It has also been suggested by many Indian bands and chiefs that we should introduce the bill and then delay action on it for some time. These Indians could then come to Ottawa and make their representations. Which of these two courses we might adopt, we are not prepared to say. I think you can take it that the minister would like to have the opinions of the chiefs, and will do his best to get them, so we will have nothing in the act that will not meet with general approval.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The Canadian government's assessment for membership in the following international or commonwealth organizations—

572. World health organization—further amount required, $48,695.

Mr. Fleming: There are a couple of matters in connection with this item that I should like to raise. I believe the minister should make a short explanation about the amount required for the world health organization. I am particularly interested to know if it arises in consequence of the withdrawal from membership in the world health organization by Russia, the Ukraine and Byelorussia a year ago, thereby increasing the quotas of the remaining members of that organization.

The second matter, Mr. Chairman, is not directly related to world health organization, but I think it will expedite consideration of the item in committee if I mention it now. It has to do with the abduction of thousands of Greek children by the communist guerrillas. When the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) and I were in Greece about 15 or 16 months ago, the number of Greek children abducted by those communists, and carried across the northern borders into the communist countries to the north, was estimated in varying numbers. One figure I heard mentioned at that time was 13,000. Today I received a paper from Greece—perhaps other members of the house have received it as well—indicating the official estimate now, according to the best figures available to the government of Greece, is 28,000. They are distributed among those communist countries behind the iron curtain as follows: Yugoslavia, 11,000; Roumania, 3,800; Hungary, 3,000; Bulgaria, 2,600; Czechoslovakia, 2,200; Albania, 2,000. Those figures purport to come from the minister of social welfare for Greece.

This matter was before the United Nations at the end of November, 1948. The assembly of the United Nations condemned this abduction of children and their detention by the communist countries north of Greece. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) if any active steps are in contemplation by the Canadian government with a view to forcing this issue, so far as it is possible to force it upon those countries behind the iron curtain. Up to the moment apparently those countries have simply ignored everything that has been done through the recognized organs of the United Nations, in demanding the return of these children to their parents.

Of all the despicable tactics adopted by these communist guerrillas in Greece in pursuing their evil designs, even exceeding what they did in destroying villages and burning homes, the worst of all has been the abduction of children. They have been torn from their homes and carried across the border into these northern countries so that they could be reared as communists, taught in communist schools in an atmosphere of hatred, so that when they are old enough they might come back bearing arms against their fatherland. Nothing is more despicable, it seems to me, than this exhibition of savagery and brutality on the part of the communist guerrillas, who were deriving help from the communist countries to the north, and were, of course, under the inspiration and direct assistance of the Kremlin.

I know the problem is not a new one to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I bring it up now so that no one will lose sight of the matter. It is one, Mr. Chairman, that offends the elementary sense of decency of every civilized nation. I do hope, even in the face of the disregard for the expressions and demands of the organs of the United Nations by these communist countries, that something may yet be done to restore these children to their parents.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to go on record as supporting the statement made by the member for Eglinton. As he has stated, about 18 months ago we were in Greece and we saw conditions exactly as he has outlined. While there, I talked with parents who had lost one, two, three or four children. At that time, I remember I thought of the abduction of the Lindbergh child in the United States several years ago, and the great amount of anxiety which that caused all over the North American continent. But that was one child. I believe that the figure covering the Greek children has grown to nearly 30,000.

I have a copy of the statement mentioned by the member for Eglinton. I realize in some small way just what these people have had to contend with during the last 7 or 8 years. At the same time, I realize the enormous problem confronting the minister of external affairs. I do believe every bit of pressure it is possible to bring to bear should, in this particular case, be exerted. I believe these people should have the privilege of living in a different manner from the one in which they are forced to live today. I do want to support everything said by the hon. member, and urge upon the minister that if there is any way this terrible condition can be rectified, it would be appreciated by those people who have suffered so cruelly over the years.

Mr. Pearson: I agree with the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, that among all the evil and vicious actions of the communist guerrillas in Greece and southeast Europe the abduction of the children from Greece into the communist countries has been possibly the most evil and the most vicious. As the hon. member for Eglinton has just pointed out, the situation has been discussed by the United Nations assembly on two occasions. At the last assembly we succeeded in getting through a resolution which even the communist states could not oppose. That resolution, if I remember it correctly, would have made it easier for the international Red Cross to go into those countries where these children are kept and investigate, report and help repatriate them. We hope that, as a result of that resolution, some progress has been made. What it is, I am not in a position to state at this time, although I understand the situation in Yugoslavia has been greatly improved.

I believe that the director of the international Red Cross will be in Ottawa before long. I shall then have an opportunity of talking about this matter with him, and I shall be glad to follow it up to see if there is anything more we can do. If there is, we should be happy to do it.

On the other point, the increased estimate for the world health organization has nothing to do, as I understand it, with the withdrawal of the U.S.S.R. and satellite states from that organization. It arises out of the decision at the last assembly of the world health organization in June, 1949, to increase the working capital fund of the organization. The working capital fund was devised so that the organization would have funds at its disposal during the period of the year when member states had not paid their annual assessments; and to cover that period and for the future, the assembly of the organization agreed that the capital fund should be increased from $2,553,960 to $4 million. The Canadian proportion of that, on the basis of our three per cent contribution to the organization, would be about $48,000 Canadian; and that is the purpose of this sum in the supplementary estimates.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

574. To provide for the Canadian government's contribution to the international refugee organization—further amount required, $402,000.

Mr. Wright: This is a further grant to the international refugee organization. I suppose the purpose of that grant is to assist in bringing people from the d.p. camps in Europe to Canada. I have run into a rather peculiar situation that seems to exist with regard to some d.p.'s coming to Canada. In some cases their passage is paid out of IRO funds, I understand, whereas in a number of other cases the relatives of the d.p.'s pay their passage. Several cases have come to my attention. The result has been that certain people coming from the d.p. camps and settling in western Canada, and whose passage has been paid by their relatives, have found themselves in debt to the extent of from two or three hundred dollars to $1,000 in the case of some families, when they reached Canada. That is a rather embarrassing and unfortunate position for them to find themselves in when there is apparently a fund for the payment of these passages. I should like the minister to tell me if he can—or if he cannot do so now, to find out—how many refugees from d.p. camps in Europe have had their passage paid by IRO funds and how many have had to pay their own passage or have it paid by relatives in Canada. I should also like to know if refunds can be made from IRO funds to these d.p.'s who have already paid their passage to Canada, or have had it paid by relatives.

Mr. Pearson: All d.p.'s who have come to Canada under the auspices of the IRO have been treated alike, and their expenses to Canada have been paid by the organization. That is one of the reasons we contribute to the organization. But there have been other d.p.'s who have come to Canada but who have not come under the auspices of that organization, but as a result of other arrangements, sometimes private arrangements and sometimes by other organizations. It would be quite impossible I think for us to ask the international refugee organization to pay the expenses of d.p.'s who do not come under the arrangements made by that organization; and I therefore doubt very much whether we could get any refund for the type of d.p. referred to by my hon. friend.

The amount of money in this estimate for the IRO is to provide for the increased contribution which is due from Canada because of the devaluation of the Canadian dollar last September. Our contribution to the IRO was paid in United States funds. As a result, this takes care of the increased amount required by IRO. It does not represent any additional contribution. An additional contribution may be made next year but that has been tabled I think in the main estimates.

It may be of interest to the committee to know that because of the work of the IRO 690,000 refugees have now been moved out of Europe or from refugee camps to other countries. It is anticipated that there will be only a small number left by the end of June of this year. Of that number of 690,000, Canada has received some 77,000; Australia, 105,000; France, 36,000; Israel, 116,000; the United Kingdom, 83,000; and the United States of America, 150,000.

Mr. Wright: Has the minister the figure as to those who have come from d.p. camps under other auspices than those of the IRO?

Mr. Pearson: No, I have not; but I will try to get that figure for my hon. friend.

Mr. Pouliot: With due respect to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I submit that this item should be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. There should be unity of jurisdiction concerning similar matters. I noticed that during the debate on national defence some hon. members were discussing external affairs and that in the debate on external affairs they were discussing national defence. We have a new Minister of Citizenship and Immigration; and I had a word of praise to say about him not long ago. He should be treated as one who has the direction of all matters pertaining to immigration, whether it is the immigration of people who are d.p.'s or not.

With regard to the foreigners who were in concentration camps in the United Kingdom after the fall of France, I remember that there was a considerable exodus of those people to Canada. The British government asked the Canadian government to take care of all those prisoners. One of them was Fuchs. At the time I asked a question of the then minister of national defence, the late Colonel Ralston, who was in charge of the Canadian prisoners camps, and he told me that he knew nothing about it. He even looked surprised when I mentioned the matter. Some of those prisoners were good people and others were not. They were anti-nazis but many of them were communists. At one camp in particular, the one at Sherbrooke, when beer was rationed two big truckloads of beer were brought to the camp for the thirsty prisoners; that was at a time when the soldiers had a small bottle for two every fortnight. That was not fair.

I have only one or two questions to ask the minister, and he may not be in a position to answer them now. I should like to know the number of foreign diplomats; and when I use the word "diplomats" I use it in the most general meaning, including not only ambassadors but consuls, consuls general, chargés d'affaires, clerks, translators, et cetera, of foreign governments, who have come to Canada, have represented their country for a time, then have resigned their posts or have been forced to quit, and who have been accepted into Canada afterwards and have even been given positions in the service of the government of Canada. There are many of them who are here against the will of their own countries. I would like to know the number of them, their names if possible, and their present occupation. It is not that I am very much concerned about them, but it is interesting to know who are those who have come from outside. Perhaps they have very good reason for resigning their present positions, but it is quite important to have some information about them.

Speaking of everybody with Christian charity, we have a feeling for the people who have suffered in concentration camps in Germany, in Russia or anywhere else. Some of them deserve our sympathy; others do not. I presume that within a few days—and I ask my questions of both the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Secretary of State for External Affairs—I shall be given the information asked for.

Mr. Thatcher: I have one question to ask. I am not clear whether or not German nationals come under the IRO. I should like to know whether they do or do not.

Mr. Pearson: I understand that at the present time German nationals do not come under the IRO arrangement.

Mr. Thatcher: I should like to know why they do not. I should also like to know why the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is so slow in clearing up this matter of whether or not relatives in Canada can bring Germans over. Germans make pretty good citizens. Many of my constituents cannot understand the government's slowness in allowing German immigrants to come to this country. I have read newspaper reports which say that something is to be done about it, but the minister does not seem to get around to it. Britain did something about it one year after the war was over, and has taken many German immigrants. I wish the minister would clear this matter up. I thought that when we had a young, vigorous, healthy minister, something would be done on this question. I should like to see some action.

Mr. Pouliot: I should like to support what has been said by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I find it absurd to condemn anyone because he belongs to a certain race. It is pure nonsense, and that applies to Jews and Gentiles alike. What should be done would be to examine the record of each man, to know his past, and to know whether he will be a desirable citizen of Canada.

Mr. Thatcher: They should be screened, yes.

Mr. Fraser: If I remember rightly, it was mentioned the other day that certain German nationals were allowed to come into Canada. Were they allowed to come in under special order in council?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Fraser: Each one was allowed in under a special order in council. Who made the representation in each case, the director of immigration?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The classes which would be treated under a special order in council were set out by the minister in a statement to the house in September. Anyone who had a near relative in the group might apply, and on his representation an order in council was granted.

Mr. Thatcher: Will the minister say why we are keeping German nationals out of this country? I suppose there is some reason for it, but I should like to know why.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Perhaps I can answer the first question asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, namely, why German nationals do not come under the IRO. The IRO was set up to assist those refugees who had suffered as a result of the war, and German nationals were not included in the benefits of the IRO which operates under the United Nations.

As to the second question, why German nationals are not admitted, I think I can only give the same answer I gave the other day, namely, that it is a very large question and a matter of government policy, and we shall announce any change in due course.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I should like to ask a further question along the same line. In regard to those special cases to which the minister referred, must they be blood relations? Suppose a family had adopted a child. Would he be brought in under those regulations?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I hope this does not develop into a debate on immigration. This is an external affairs item of the IRO. Any German national within the group set out in the house by the former minister in September—I think it was the 22nd—has been allowed in, assuming that he is healthy, and can meet the character requirements, provided a close relative in Canada applies for him.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I have one question that has merely to do with the mechanics of the situation. I have in mind a displaced person who came to Canada, and who bought his release from some governmental agency. Of course he had to agree to spend one year in the occupation to which he was committed. He was an excellent fellow and a good worker. To use his expression, he bought himself out. I think that was done at the office of the department of labour in the city from which I come. Would the moneys that brought him out be IRO moneys or not? The mounted police used to speak of buying themselves out. Would that be money to the dominion, or is there some method of repayment to the IRO?

Mr. Pearson: The arrangement regarding the terms of settlement of displaced persons in Canada comes under the Department of Labour. Under this item I do not know of any way by which the IRO would be concerned with this question; nor do I know of any way by which the displaced person can buy himself out of a contract. Perhaps the Department of Labour might know more about it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It comes under the Department of Labour. Then we will not bother with it.

Mr. Mitchell: I will answer it now and get rid of it. We have had the odd case where a person has not complied with the understanding—it is not a contract. What they have done is this. They have paid the price of their transportation in Canada; whether that is transferred to the IRO or not I do not know; but I will find out for my hon. friend.

Mr. Adamson: I have a similar case. A displaced person brought his brother out from a camp in Germany, and the IRO wrote asking two things: one, for the Atlantic passage, a matter of some $300 or $400 for three people; and two, the railway fare from the port of disembarkation, namely, Halifax, to Toronto. I was very pleased to send the railway fare. Is this vote for such an item as the trans-Atlantic passage? The IRO wrote and said they were very hard up and would like some payment on the trans-Atlantic passage. Unfortunately the displaced person, having been in Canada for less than a year, was unable to forward any money for the trans-Atlantic passage. Does this vote cover that expense?

Mr. Pearson: It is my understanding that this vote would cover the expenses of IRO refugees to Canada to the port of landing, and that from the port of landing other arrangements have to be made. If my hon. friend has any particular case in mind on which he would like clarification we would be glad to take it up with the director of the IRO office in Ottawa, who might be able to clear the matter up.

Mr. Adamson: That is what happened. We paid his fare from Halifax to Toronto, but not the trans-Atlantic fare.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Superannuation and retirement benefits—

575. Government's contribution to the superannuation fund, further amount required, $63,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to have a word with the minister about this item, relating as it does to superannuation and retirement benefits of federal civil servants.

I do not believe this is the day for an extended debate on this question if, indeed, an extended debate is necessary; at the same time I think I should warn the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), if we have not yet persuaded him of the necessity for reviewing, and reviewing favourably, the whole question of superannuated civil servants, particularly those in the lower brackets, that we shall keep on trying until we succeed.

It seems this is one of those items which, in common with the minister's estimates in general, come up at an awkward time. During the last session, from September to December of last year, they came up right at the very end.

Mr. Abbott: I introduced my department today. As the hon. member will recall, I had promised to bring it on earlier.

Mr. Knowles: I was going to say that the minister did listen to the protests last December against our having to discuss these important items late in the session, and did promise that the discussion would come up earlier this session. I am glad to know that his department is now open, and that we will get at it before long. But I stress the fact that it is not enough just to have an opportunity to discuss this matter. Rather, I feel strongly that it is time for our representations to receive better consideration than has been given them by the minister thus far.

He will realize that a few days ago, in answer to a question of mine, one which I have asked every session for a number of years, information was placed on Hansard showing what our retired federal civil servants and their widows are receiving by way of pensions. The figures are to be found at page 834 of Hansard for March 16, and they show that out of 9,185 retired civil servants, 4,684, or 51 per cent of the total, are receiving pensions of less than $80 a month. I call attention to that figure because $80 a month is the amount of the old age pension as provided in the federal act.

Yet here we have 4,684 retired civil servants, many of whom have made contributions to their pension funds, retiring on pensions of less than that $80. One realizes of course a few of these retired civil servants will be widowers, or single persons without spouses. In most instances, however, it will be found that two people have to get along on that amount.

I realize that these figures in their totality are on Hansard, but I think I should point out that these 4,684 include 253 retired federal civil servants receiving pension of less than $20 a month—

Mr. Abbott: They may have served only a short time.

Mr. Knowles: That may be so, but it is still a small amount to live on.

Mr. Abbott: Presumably they have other resources, then.

Mr. Knowles: Not the ones I hear from. There are 498 who are receiving pensions of $20 to $29.99; there are 677 who are receiving $30 to $39.99; 799 who are drawing pensions of $40 to $49.99; 781 who are in the bracket $50 to $59.99; 797 from $60 to $69.99; 779 drawing pensions from $70 to $79.99; and so on. The other figures are here showing the break-down as far as $100 a month, and over.

It seems to me that it is these people in the lower brackets for whom we should be most concerned. As the minister and most hon. members know, this is a subject we have raised repeatedly over a number of years. I cannot recite the exact year in which it happened, but a point was reached in our efforts in this matter where the minister agreed to take the whole matter under consideration. He did so; but the result of that consideration was a formal statement made in January, two or three years ago, to the effect that the government felt it could not do anything to supplement these pensions, even the lower ones, with a cost of living bonus, or some other additional provision.

All questions to the minister, to the Prime Minister or other members of the cabinet since that time, have produced a reference back to that statement made a few years ago. We have been told the government felt that no further consideration of the matter was indicated. Despite that stand taken by the government, hon. members have expressed their views at times in the house quite strongly. I remember one debate a couple of years ago when ten or twelve members from various parts of the country took part, all speaking in such a way that it was made clear that this is a matter about which members feel keenly.

I have some further observations to make; but even after making them I do wish the minister to make some comment, so perhaps we had better call it six o'clock.

Mr. Abbott: You will have two or three more chances later this session.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry to hear that. I had hoped that one of these times we would click, and that the minister would agree to consider the matter and do something for these people, thus making it unnecessary for us to speak about it three or four times this session. But if it is necessary, we will do so.

Item stands.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS COMPANY

The house resumed, from Monday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Maybank for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting Alberta Natural Gas Company, and the motion of Mr. MacDougall: "That this question be now put."

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, last night I attempted to emphasize that in the bills before us we have legislation concerned with the marketing of one of our greatest natural resources yet to be discovered. I called attention to the fact that our natural resources of gas and oil in Alberta are a national heritage, and that in so far as this government and the government of Alberta participate in the disposal of them they are trustees of the nation to safeguard their use for the benefit of this and future generations of Canadians. It has also been pointed out that these resources provide us with a great potential of cheap power which, if properly safeguarded and used in the interests of Canada, can contribute to the building of the nation.

As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) pointed out, natural gas, oil, coal and the chemical industries that are dependent upon these things can make western Canada the greatest and most prosperous part of this continent. If we combine with these great natural resources and the industries that can be built around them our agricultural resources in western Canada one does not need much imagination to realize what a great future lies ahead of that part of the country.

I want to call attention once more to just what we are proposing to do with these resources in the bills now before us. We are proposing to hand over to a company, or any number of companies that can secure charters, the right to build pipe lines for the conveyance of these resources to anywhere they choose to take them. We are giving authority to these companies to dispose of Canadian assets in whatever market will bring the greatest profit at the present time without regard to the future of Canada or future generations of Canadians who may be dependent upon their proper use. I pointed out last night that in my opinion the policy we are following is wrong. Instead of considering which route is the most economical to build, instead of considering which market will provide the greatest returns at the present tme, we should be thinking of the disposal of these resources with an eye to the future of Canada, with an eye to using them to build a greater nation. I submit that in availing ourselves of the first opportunity to market them for the greatest profit we can secure at the present time we are jeopardizing the future of Canada and the fortunes of future Canadians. In my opinion it would be nothing short of criminal if we should fail to provide for the future of Canada in order to secure immediate returns from the export of such resources. We would be failing to provide for the time when the population of the country will have increased to many times what it is now, when these resources will be the key to building great industries which will make the country a great industrial nation. I submit, as I did last night, that should be our first consideration.

I am alarmed to hear so many of those who support the measure argue from the standpoint of economy. I am appalled to find so many having as their first objective the choice of a route that can be built at the lowest cost, and the finding of a market that will give us the greatest return for these resources at the present time. Some hon. members have spoken of the necessity of maintaining good relations with our neighbour to the south. I wonder what would happen to that relationship if by following a shortsighted policy today we export these resources to United States cities and thereby contribute to the building of great industries there which become dependent upon them for their existence. Looking ahead a few years when developments in industry within our own country require the use of these resources, we will be forced to choose between cutting off supplies to industries in a neighbouring country which have become dependent upon them for their very existence or providing for our own people. I believe that would be undermining our good relationships with the United States much more than the routing of the pipe line through Canadian territory in order to serve Canadian interests first would jeopardize that relationship at the present time.

Then the argument was placed before us that if we did not grant charters to this and other companies we would be setting up a monopoly. Some hon. members have been inclined to jeer at the position the C.C.F. party has taken, apparently in support of a monopoly. That argument has little weight as far as I am concerned. It has been pointed out already by more than one speaker that the oil and natural gas industry is a monopoly today and is liable to remain so. It has been pointed out that whether we grant charters to one or fifty companies we shall get only one pipe line. These companies, anxious to secure charters, will use those charters to milk the public instead of building pipe lines. They will use those charters to sell stock to the public, and to drive good bargains for themselves or their shareholders with whatever company eventually decides to build the pipe line. There is no question about it; the oil business today is one of the greatest monopolies on this continent; and no matter how many charters we grant we will continue to have a monopoly with respect to the construction of a pipe line through to the coast.

It has been said that if this bill should not pass this house a monopoly would be created. Well, Mr. Speaker, the sponsors of this bill have it within their power to bring in an amendment undertaking in express terms that the pipe line will follow an all-Canadian route, and if that were done there would be no further opposition in this house. Practically every hon. member who has spoken has indicated that if the sponsors will state in the bill itself that the pipe line will follow an all-Canadian route there will be no further opposition. So the sponsors have it within their power to secure passage of this legislation and thereby obtain their charter any time they are ready to comply with the opinion of the majority of the people in British Columbia as expressed through the legislature of that province, or any time they are ready to comply with what I believe is the opinion of a majority in this country, and indicate their readiness to follow an all-Canadian route. If

The argument also has been advanced that we should let this bill go to a committee before which the principals might appear; and it has been intimated that we might secure from them an undertaking that they will build an all-Canadian pipe line. It was urged that we could get much more information in a committee of that kind. I am not too hopeful as to what we would be likely to get out of such a committee. Judging by the attitude government supporters have taken toward this bill, and having in mind the fact that such a committee would have a majority of government supporters, I do not see much hope of getting any radical amendment of this bill in committee. I believe we would get out of such a committee just what we are getting out of this house. Under the direction and leadership of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), who has indicated his support of this bill, Liberal members of that committee would give this bill the same support there that they are giving it in this house at the present time. As far as I can see we would have no reason to hope for any different treatment in the committee than the treatment we are receiving here in the house. In any case, what ground is there for believing that we would get any more from a committee on this bill than we got from the committee which considered the bills passed last year? The bill under which the pipe line is being built to Superior, Wisconsin, at the present time was considered by a committee last year. Hon. members who were on that committee have stated in the house that they were given to understand this was to be an all-Canadian pipe line, and some of them were quite surprised to discover last fall that it was to by-pass such Canadian cities as Winnipeg, Port Arthur and Fort William and go to Superior, Wisconsin. What reason would we have to believe that this bill might get any different treatment?

While I am on that subject, even though the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in the house, I want to say this. Speaking of those who insisted that that pipe line should go to the head of the lakes the minister referred to us as "little Canadians"; and I have no doubt that in his mind he considers all those who are opposing this particular bill also as little Canadians. I can tell the minister that many thousands of those little Canadians are very critical of the action of the government in permitting that pipe line to be routed to Superior, Wisconsin, instead of the head of the lakes; and many thousands of those little Canadians are living in the minister's own riding. They do not think too highly of his attitude in considering them and others as little Canadians because they prefer to see our natural resources used for the development of Canadian industry, to bring comfort to the Canadian people and to serve Canadian needs first.

In these bills we are continuing to do what we have been doing with all our natural resources. We have been exporting them anywhere and everywhere to build industry in other countries, to make those countries rich to the impoverishment of Canada itself. We have been disposing of our timber, our minerals and our other natural resources in order to reap an immediate benefit from the present, without any regard for the future of Canada and the future generations of this country. We are doing just that in this particular bill.

Another argument that has been raised concerns the route of this pipe line. It is said that will be the responsibility of the government of Alberta. Some of our friends sitting to our left have indicated that the government of Alberta would welcome the incorporation of a large number of companies, so that they could have some choice, or a little competition, in deciding which company should eventually build the pipe line. I want to say here that, in my opinion, the government of Alberta is in a position to grant a charter to whatever company it pleases, and under whatever terms it pleases, whether there is one company with a charter or whether there are fifty. The government of Alberta is in the saddle, and can demand its own terms. I fail to see where any great advantage could accrue to that province by reason of the incorporation of a large number of companies.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like again to appeal to the members of this house to view this particular bill in the light of the needs of Canada and the Canadian people, not just those of us who are living today, but in the light of the future needs and possibilities of this country. This question is of far too great importance to this country to be viewed or to be determined on a narrow party basis. This question, I submit, Mr. Speaker, should cut across political parties. It should be viewed in the light of our responsibility to Canada and to future Canadians.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the course of this debate on the bill to incorporate a company which proposes to export Canadian natural gas first to the United States, there took place a development which was of great significance and caused a great deal of gratification to those of us from British Columbia, or perhaps I should say to most of the members from that province. I refer to the fact that as the debate developed, this issue of exporting natural gas to the United States first or of keeping it to serve Canada first and then exporting our surplus, was placed squarely on a national plane by the participation in the debate of members from other parts of Canada than British Columbia and Alberta.

The main contribution to that development resulted from the fact that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), and the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell), took part in the discussion and placed on the record their views about the issue. Their view is that this must be treated as a national issue, and that it is time this House of Commons realized that a national issue is before the country, not merely a matter of local interest to the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. There is at stake a great principle, a matter of great moment, the question of whether or not we are going to adopt now the policy of developing Canada, of building Canada first.

The matter was also placed on a national basis by the statement made by the leader of the opposition in the course of his remarks. It is significant to note that the statement has not been denied since it was made. He said that this is not a private bill, but is in fact a government measure. I refer to what the leader of the opposition said, as reported at page 903 of Hansard:

> I am entering this debate at this time because no one with the slightest appreciation of what has taken place can longer regard these bills, and particularly this one, as private bills. It is obvious that they have the support of the government, not simply the concurrence of individual members of the government.

He went on to point out that the bill now before the house was in fact sponsored by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Maybank).

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, some of the remarks—as to local interest and self-interest—which have been made in this debate by those who support the passage of this bill, when they criticized those of us on this side who opposed the bill, take on fresh significance. I refer here particularly to the remarks of the member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) made in the course of this debate, where he referred to local hysteria. His remarks are reported at page 898 of Hansard. He was referring to the arguments advanced by those of us who are opposed to the bill, and he used these words:

> There is evidence now that this hysterical, illogical and incorrect thinking is spreading beyond this chamber to other parts of the country. I refer particularly to parts of British Columbia.

Those are the words of the hon. member for Skeena. I should like to ask him, and perhaps he will answer this question later if he takes part in the debate again, in what parts of British Columbia this hysteria is taking place. Was he referring perhaps to the legislature in that province, which on Friday last unanimously adopted a resolution in favour of a Canadian route for this pipe line? The resolution was introduced by the member for Peace River, and seconded by the member for Prince Rupert, which is in the hon. member's own constituency, and who I believe, although a member of the coalition government, is a coalitionist of Liberal stripe.

Perhaps the hon. gentleman was referring to certain developments which took place recently in the city of Vancouver, when one of the Liberal associations in that city went on record with its views of this discussion down here. It must be admitted, Mr. Speaker, that some of us in the house do think Liberals occasionally become hysterical, particularly when they are talking about their own party, but I did not know the Liberals themselves were yet referring to Liberals as hysterical. I refer to a report in the Vancouver Sun of Saturday, March 18, page 21. It is headed, "Four Liberal MP's attacked for stand". The article reads as follows:

> Four Liberal M.P.'s from this area have drawn the censure of division four, Vancouver East Liberal association, "for working against the best interests of B.C." The division directed its criticism against R. O. Campney, Vancouver Centre, Tom Goode, Burnaby-Richmond, William Mott, New Westminster, and J. L. MacDougall, Vancouver-Burrard for "talking in favour of the natural gas pipe line going through the U.S. before going into Vancouver."

That is the end of the article. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why certain others of the Liberal members from British Columbia were not mentioned. I wonder, for instance, why the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing) was not mentioned in that report. I think the reason probably is that when he spoke in this debate some two weeks ago it was impossible to say on which side of the issue he stood. I hope that the hon. member will take part in this debate and let us know just where he stands—

An hon. Member: What about the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair)?

Mr. Knowles: He is trying to figure it out right now.

Mr. Fulton: —in order that those areas in British Columbia in which he professes to have an interest, both as a British Columbian and on behalf of his party, will be able to know where he stands. I wonder also why the hon. member for Coast-Capilano is not mentioned. I think probably the reason is that, since the hon. member was very properly engaged on government business for his country, he was not here in the opening days of the session; and it may well be that he has not yet had the opportunity to speak in this debate.

Mr. Sinclair: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has challenged me, I will tell him that on the long filibuster on both these lines last year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: Is the hon. member speaking on a question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he should state it.

Mr. Sinclair: As the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) did some years ago, he has challenged me—

Mr. Rowe: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Green: No; there is no privilege about that.

Mr. Rowe: Make your own speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to make his position clear, he should be given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question of privilege, I will hear it.

Mr. Sinclair: My one question of privilege is this. If the hon. member for Kamloops wants to involve me in the debate and wants to challenge me, he should at least give me an opportunity of replying immediately.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member will have that opportunity, Mr. Speaker; and I hope he will avail himself of the opportunity which we on this side of the house are trying to give him.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Rowe: After the hon. member for Kamloops is through; not when he is speaking.

Mr. Sinclair: My point of order is this. Having already clearly stated last year where I stand, and having had the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) repeat my remarks this year, all I can say is that the hon. member for Kamloops—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: I want to speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must make a ruling. My ruling is that there is no point of order before the house, and I would ask the hon. member for Kamloops to proceed.

Mr. Fulton: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that all those members on the other side of the house who wish to do so will avail themselves of the opportunity which we on this side are trying to give them by keeping this debate open—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Fulton: —while their own members are moving a form of closure. I hope they will avail themselves of the opportunity of telling us where they stand at a time when they can be heard clearly in this house.

We know of course where the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) stand. They spoke yesterday in the course of this debate, and I should like to deal in passing with one or two of the comments they made. They spoke in favour of the bill and thus, I submit, against the proposition which we advance, namely that the route must be built through Canada first.

I should like to point out to the hon. member for Skeena that the Westcoast Transmission Company, contrary to what he says, has clearly shown through the survey which it had made that the Yellowhead route for this pipe line is both feasible and economical. Indeed, he will know, or should know from his knowledge of the geography of that west coast region, that the United States passes over the mountains on the way to the coast via the states of Washington and Idaho are as high as, if not higher than, the route proposed by the Westcoast Transmission Company.

Then the hon. member says that we have no guarantee that the Westcoast Transmission Company will in fact build its route via the Yellowhead but that they may go back and build it via some other route. The fact is that the Westcoast Transmission Company now has before the Alberta board an application in which they have asked for a permit to export via the Yellowhead route. That route is blueprinted, and if they get their permit to export, it will be only over that route. It therefore seems to me that the company is in earnest in stating that it proposes to build that way, and that it is in earnest in spending the money to have the survey made. If that is not sufficient assurance, then we say once more that if that is the point which really bothers hon. gentlemen opposite, all they have to do is give us an assurance, through the sponsors of the bills, that their companies propose to build it via the Yellowhead, and we will withdraw all objections to those bills.

The hon. member for Cariboo whose constituency would stand to gain immensely if the route is built via the Yellowhead—because his constituency is immediately contributory to the route that the pipe line would then follow—spoke yesterday.

Mr. Cruickshank: He told us about Christopher Columbus.

Mr. Fulton: He referred to the fact that in the past the dominion government had ignored certain requests made by the provinces, particularly Manitoba, with respect to railway charters. I would ask the hon. gentleman, who seems to feel that it was not proper conduct on the part of the dominion house to ignore those requests, if he thinks it would be proper conduct on the part of the dominion government to ignore the clear, specific and unanimous request from the legislature of British Columbia that steps be taken to ensure that a gas pipe line be built via a Canadian route; because that is the issue.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mott: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Fulton: I believe there is a question of privilege before the house. Do I understand that the hon. member for Cariboo rises on a question of privilege?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I would ask the hon. gentleman if the resolution at Victoria directs anybody to oppose these companies that are now coming before us.

Mr. Cruickshank: Certainly it does.

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. gentleman has had his answer to that question. The resolution has been read on a number of occasions in this house, and I am not going to read it again now. But by necessary implication—

Mr. Sinclair: It would take up time.

Mr. Fulton: I thought the hon. member was interested in getting information.

Mr. Cruickshank: Tell him about Alexander Mackenzie and Jacques Cartier.

Mr. Fulton: The resolution asks for the Yellowhead route. It asks that the line be built via a Canadian route. One of the companies which has its bill now before the house has said in the other place that they intend to build it via the United States route. The other company in its publicity has indicated that it intends to build it via the United States route. We have not yet received an assurance in this house or anywhere else that they will not build it via the United States route. The implication necessarily is that they will build it by the United States route if they get their charter.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): The resolution makes no reference to the bill before the house.

Mr. Fulton: The only way in which we can be sure that the route is built through Canada is by exercising what I submit is our responsibility as members of the Canadian parliament, and refusing to incorporate any company which does not give us the assurance that it will build its pipe-line route through Canada first.

Mr. Mott: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: My time is passing very rapidly.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fulton: I should now like to refer to a matter which was raised the other day by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing).

Mr. Knowles: Which side was he on?

Mr. Fulton: I happened to be speaking at the time. He asked me if I had any figures as to the minimum population necessary before the retail distribution of gas could be economically undertaken. Let me answer that question by asking him another one. The implication in the hon. member's question was that he—

Mr. Mott: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: The implication in the question was that, if the route did go through Kamloops, Kamloops would not get gas. Let me ask him this. If the gas line does not go through Kamloops, will Kamloops ever get gas?

Speaking in this debate yesterday the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) said, as reported at page 902 of Hansard:

> Incidentally I wonder if it is fair to mention little places like Keremeos in a debate of this kind. Nothing could be crueler than to dangle before small communities the hope of cheap gas and cheap fuel and then find out that the population is not sufficiently large to justify the expense of the construction of the distribution works involved.

I say to the hon. member for Skeena that under the limitations as to the number of lines and the size of the markets, it certainly can be taken for granted that if the pipe line does not go through these areas they never will get gas; whereas if it does go through those areas there is a chance; and, incidentally, I might point out that no one in this debate, so far as I know, has stated that Keremeos would get gas. What we have said is that if the Yellowhead route proposed by the Westcoast company is adopted a line will be built through the Merritt, Penticton, Keremeos area, and the workmen in these areas, our businessmen and retailers will get the benefit of the construction.

Mr. Mott: Oh, 200 people.

Mr. Fulton: Does the hon. member think that these 200 people are not important? That is the implication in his question.

Mr. Cruickshank: Why does the hon. member not make a speech?

Mr. Fulton: I will admit that these communities of 200 people are not as large as the cities of Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, but they are of more importance to Canada and to British Columbia than any of these United States cities.

I should like to refer to the argument put forward by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) when he spoke last week. He criticized us for saying that we have the assurance that the Westcoast company intends to build via the Yellowhead route. He asked: Of what value is any assurance given to a committee of this house? Mr. Speaker, that is a very strange position for the hon. member to take. We have seen other hon. members take a different position in this debate, because they keep urging us to let this bill go before a committee so that we can get the people behind it there and then they will have an opportunity to give us that assurance. Yet, on the other hand, we find hon. members saying that such assurances are of no value. They may be right; but let me point out that the company which gave that assurance has now taken the next logical step, and, as an earnest of its intentions, has applied to the Alberta board for a permit to export gas via the Yellowhead route.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): What about Prince George?

Mr. Fulton: I will go along with hon. members this far. This is the place where we should have the assurance—we perhaps should have it from the Westcoast company. But now that we know what the facts are, this is the place where we should get the assurance. For my part I know there are many people throughout Canada, many people in my own province, who agree that we should not let these bills pass until we receive that assurance.

In spite of the obvious heat which is aroused when one considers the purely local interests in the matter, it seems to me that it is also a matter which should be dealt with on the other level, namely, from the standpoint of national interest. This gas pipe line means a potential $100 million expenditure in the Dominion of Canada. It could mean that if it were built in Canada. On the other hand, it could mean the expenditure of some $100 million to the benefit mainly of the United States of America. I do not think that we are being little Canadians, or that we are doing anything other than what we should do in doing our duty as members of parliament in saying that so far as we can do it we shall see that that $100 million is spent here at home.

I should like to refer to the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) in that connection, which were made yesterday, because I think he put the position clearly before the house. At page 904 of Hansard the leader of the opposition said this:

> There are vast possibilities. In every case of this kind let us realize that cheap fuel means cheap production, and cheap production means not only the possibility of the development of new production within our own country, but also the possibility of export to other parts of the world in highly competitive lines.

And, as the leader of the opposition pointed out, that type of increased new production would go a long way towards solving the vexed question of high freight rates that now so much bedevil our industrial and transportation system in this country. Then on page 910 he summed up as follows—I ask hon. members from all parts of the house, as well as from our own province, to give these words their full value. The leader of the opposition said:

> With their enormous resources, let us not measure the demands of British Columbia in terms of the gas they can use today or tomorrow, but measure it in terms of what could happen there with their raw materials being fabricated in great industries that would use these cheap forms of fuel for the employment of hundreds of thousands, yes, possibly millions of people in that one province alone.

As he concluded he said:

> Yes, we should be prepared to export our surplus, but quite frankly our policy should be Canada first in the use of the resources which we possess.

I do not see how any hon. member could fail to be, firstly, inspired by that vision for Canada; and, secondly, I do not see how any hon. member could in fact fail to subscribe to that policy. One only has to consider the enormous potentialities for Canada if this pipe line is built through Canada, and the loss that will be ours if it is built anywhere else, in order to feel himself justified in opposing to the very limit any project of which there is even the risk that the line be built in the United States, and that we may not get the benefit of it. Consider the method of construction. I understand that in connection with these lines it is not a matter of pipe being sent in there already made into pipe, but rather one of sheet steel being transported to the area where the pipe line construction is taking place. Then they must have there the plant which bends the steel into pipe. It is welded on the spot. That means that there is an immediate prospect of Canadian steel companies being able to supply that sheet steel. I would be prepared to say that—

Mr. Howe: Does my hon. friend speak as an engineer, when he refers to building pipe on the spot?

Mr. Fulton: The minister knows very well that I am not an engineer.

Mr. Howe: What gave you that idea?

Mr. Fulton: I am speaking only as the result of the study and investigation I have been able to give to the matter.

Mr. Howe: You had better take another look.

Mr. Fulton: Then perhaps the minister would tell us how the thing is built when he speaks again in debate. I am by no means an expert.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps the hon. member's information is no worse than the other information he has been giving.

Mr. Fulton: Well, perhaps the minister, who knows so many things—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Abbott: And the man who is speaking knows so few.

Mr. Fulton: —who knows so many things, but does not always seem willing to share his knowledge with the house as I know we would like to have him share it—perhaps he will make a speech and tell me how wrong I am.

Mr. Abbott: That is not necessary.

Mr. Howe: We all know how wrong you are. You are wet behind the ears.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): How big a pipe can be rolled in Canada, smart man? The only people who roll pipe in Canada—how big can they roll them?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Kamloops would give way to the other hon. members.

Mr. Fulton: I have one other comment I would like to make.

Mr. Abbott: Let us not miss them, then.

Mr. Fulton: I can say this, that I have looked into the matter, and—

Mr. Howe: Into the end of the pipe?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: —I have spoken to an official of one of the steel companies in Canada, and I am told that the steel companies of Canada would be glad to be invited to tender for the supply of steel for the construction of this line. I can say that of my own knowledge.

I would say that if the line is built in Canada, there is a chance that our steel companies may be invited to tender.

Mr. Abbott: Not at this rate.

Mr. Fulton: But if it is built in the United States there is very little chance that our steel companies would be asked to bid. I would go so far as to say that in these projects there should be a requirement, when a Canadian resource is being transported, that Canadian steel companies must be asked to tender on the project. After all, almost a hundred million dollars is involved; there will be many millions of dollars' worth of steel in it. I understood the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) are interested in conserving American dollars although it hardly seems so from their attitude tonight. I would go this far, that there should be a requirement that if Canadian bids are at all competitive with American bids, the Canadian bids should be accepted.

Here we have a chance to support a policy of developing Canada, but it calls for a positive effort. If we do not make that effort we will continue to be in an inferior position in comparison with American industry. But if we make the positive effort to conserve our resources and to enable them to be used for Canadian industry, and to make Canadian production less expensive, then gradually our industry and our markets will reach a position of equality in competition with those of the United States. But until we do that, until we take those positive steps, we cannot expect to see our industry and our markets on a basis of equality in competition with those of the United States of America.

When one considers the prospects opened up by the possibility of having this cheap fuel available for power in the area from which I come, power for the city of Vancouver, power to run our industries, power for irrigation and agriculture, power to run the pulp mills and power generally to help us develop our resources, then I say that that prospect alone would justify us in insisting, here and now, while parliament has the opportunity, that it should take the first step by refusing to allow these bills to pass until we have the assurance that this route will serve Canada first and, having served Canada first, that our surplus should be exported to the United States. But until that is done, until we have that assurance, until we can see the possibility of the work of building Canada, which was started by the fathers of confederation, being brought to a successful conclusion by vastly developing our resources and our markets, and building this pipe line within Canada, then I say that we should not cease our efforts, and should not cease our opposition to these bills.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: It being nine o'clock, the house will resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Superannuation and retirement benefits—

575. Government's contribution to the superannuation fund, further amount required, $63,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we are back now to the item we were considering before six o'clock, having to do with superannuated civil servants.

Just before the evening recess I had reminded the committee of the figures placed on Hansard on March 16 showing the large number of retired federal civil servants whose pensions are in the lower brackets. For the purpose of drawing my remarks together I shall repeat only one figure I mentioned earlier; the others can be found by referring to what I said this afternoon. I would point out that there are 4,584 retired civil servants whose pensions are less than $80 a month. This includes in the lowest bracket of all 253 whose pensions are less than $20 a month.

Then, I would add this further item, that out of 4,338 widows of retired civil servants who are on pension, 2,516, or more than 58 per cent, are on pensions of less than $40 a month. I use this figure again, because it is the old age pension figure. It does seem to me that the committee should hang its head in shame when it is pointed out that we pay to servants of the federal government, who have been contributing into pension funds, retirement allowances less than could be obtained on old age pensions.

When the Minister of Finance has dealt with our arguments before, he has taken the position that it would be favouritism on the part of the government to supplement the pensions of these people. The minister indicated that it would not be fair to do it for them without doing it for other people on fixed retirement allowances. I hope that all of us in the house are concerned about the security of all our old people. My position in such matters is well known, so I need not go into that at any length, but surely we have a particular responsibility as a parliament and as a government for the people who have been our employees. Surely we should be giving a lead to other people in the country who feel some responsibility for the pensions of those who work for them.

Another argument that the minister has used has been to the effect that these pensions were being paid on the basis of a contract that these persons had entered into. In other words, they had made certain payments into pension funds, and on the basis of the terms of those funds these were the amounts that they could draw out, and it would not be proper to upset that contractual relation. I want to say it is not very hopeful for the ideals which I trust the Minister of National Health and Welfare has in mind for proper old age security if that idea is prevailing in the very important part of the government that is in the mind of the Minister of Finance. What we have to consider in the whole business of dealing fairly with old people of any group, and particularly our own employees, is that having served their day and generation, having done what was their responsibility, having paid in whatever they were required to pay, when the time for retirement comes consideration should be given to their need of a decent standard of living.

It is simply impossible to justify our paying pensions of these small amounts to any number of our employees, and the tragedy is all the worse when you realize the numbers there are. I want to point out that these people are scattered across the country. They are not concentrated in any one area, which means that they are not a political force in the sense that that phrase is sometimes used. Hon. members are aware that I have risen a good many times on this matter in the house. I want to remind the house that in the whole of Manitoba there are only 386 retired civil servants and only 186 widows of retired civil servants now on pension from the federal government.

An hon. Member: How many in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Knowles: There are 186 retired civil servants and 74 widows of civil servants on federal pension in Saskatchewan. The figures for all the provinces are to be found at page 834 of Hansard of this session, and also for the United States, the British West Indies, overseas, and so on. I want to make the point—and it is true not only for myself but also for others who have taken part in the debates on this matter on other occasions—that the number of people in our own constituencies who are affected is relatively small. Therefore we are conscious of the fact that they do not carry great political weight; that seems to be their principal handicap, but their case is just as deserving as if their numbers were much greater. When we argue on their behalf we are arguing a cause because we believe it to be just and right. The thing that has pleased me in some of the former debates on this question has been the number of members who have risen in support of this cause. I have had pretty heavy correspondence with superannuated civil servants and their associations in various parts of the country, for example, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Victoria, and I know from this correspondence that they have been in touch with their members in this house, and were in touch with them in particular just before the election of last June. They had assurances at that time from practically all of their members that they would support their case when it was raised on the floor of the House of Commons. I hope that members of the house, and particularly those on the government side who gave categorical assurances to these people that they would support their cause and their claim for a cost of living bonus or other supplement, will implement that promise now and call upon the minister to reconsider his position.

I have pointed out before, and I will do so again in passing, that I know of at least three governments that have tried to do something. The province of Saskatchewan and the province of Newfoundland have both made provision for a supplement or cost of living bonus to their retired civil servants in the lower brackets. The amounts are not large in either case, but they mean a great deal to those people. Surely if these two provinces can do something like this the central government at Ottawa ought to be able to do it. The third government which I know has been trying for years to improve the position of its retired civil servants is the government of the United Kingdom. The act at Westminster which took into consideration the fact that retired civil servants needed some improvement in their position goes back to the period of the wartime government, but it was amended a few years ago to improve the position of these people. From time to time I have asked about every question I can think of in connection with this matter.

Mr. Sinclair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad to know that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano is aware of the fact I have been asking these questions.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I suppose it has been one of his jobs, as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, to try to find the answers.

Mr. Sinclair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I hope he will realize that not only has he some responsibility to the minister to whom he is parliamentary assistant, but that he also has some responsibility to the people back in Coast-Capilano.

Mr. Sinclair: Quite right.

Mr. Knowles: No doubt he promised he would do everything he could for them as to this matter. I see he is shaking his head the wrong way, indicating that he did not make any such promise. There were a lot out there who did, and I would suggest that if the hon. member for Coast-Capilano did not do that, the other members out there who promised to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and to do everything they could might do well to get the hon. member for Coast-Capilano on their side.

One of the questions I asked on one occasion was as to whether or not this matter had been referred to any body for advice. I was given the information that it had been referred to an advisory committee that deals with these matters. I was hopeful that would result in something, but I was never able to get any information as to whether that committee gave advice or what it was. I was told, for example, that this simply had to be a matter of government policy. I urge the minister to reconsider the whole position.

When I rose to speak on the question at ten minutes to six this afternoon, it was not my intention to speak for more than a few minutes.

Mr. Abbott: You have spoken for twenty minutes now.

Mr. Knowles: I felt at that time perhaps this was not the day to do this job and get the consideration it deserves. This is one of those days that we run into time and time again when time is of the essence and we are pressed to shorten our remarks, but we cannot always be expected to do that with these important measures. I felt then it might be that some of us could find a day a little later on in the session when it might be possible to go into the matter more fully. The way in which the minister dealt with the matter just before six o'clock, however, when he told me I would have two or three or four more occasions during this session to deal with it, indicating that he did not feel it needed to be taken very seriously, made me feel then that I should say a few more words, and that perhaps I might prompt others to join me in this presentation in the hope that we can yet persuade the minister that it is too serious a matter for parliament to be paying 253 of our retired civil servants pensions of less than $20 a month, and the other figures I have given. I insist that it is time for some adjustment to be made on behalf of these people.

Mr. Green: May I point out to the minister that it seems to me we have an injustice here, or at least an inequity. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I gained the impression from the minister's remarks this afternoon that he was brushing aside this whole question. I realize the minister is rather apt to speak "off the cuff" like that, and does not always mean to be as tough as he sounds. Here, I think, is a case that should be reconsidered by the government.

I intend to take only a minute or two, but let me put two or three reasons before the committee. One is the difference in the value of our dollar today as compared with the value at the time most of these people made their contributions. At that time they believed their superannuation would be sufficient to enable them to live decently. Now, with the change in the value of the dollar, they find themselves getting perhaps forty or fifty per cent, in purchasing power, of what they had expected to obtain; and they have no way of improving their position unless they can persuade the government to take some steps to help them out. It is put very well, I think, in a letter I had from one of them in my own city of Vancouver, who said:

> . . . our payments to the fund during our years of service are now being liquidated at 40 cents on the dollar due to the difference in purchasing power as compared to 1939. It is not by any means what we paid for.

There is this further point in their favour, that during the war years bonuses were added to civil service salaries, but apparently for purposes of superannuation those bonuses were not taken into account. As a result the civil servants who retired at that time and under those conditions have lost out as compared with others. Finally there is the fact that some of the other nations have met this situation. The United Kingdom passed legislation called the Increased Pensions Act which made some provision for retired civil servants in a position similar to that of our own civil servants who are asking that something be done at this time.

There are various other reasons, of course. There is the fact that in most cases these people cannot qualify for old age pension, and many of them are widows. But quite apart from these sentimental reasons I do think they have at least a case for reconsideration by the government, and I hope that before the end of this session this whole question will be reconsidered by the cabinet and something done to ease the lot of these former employees of the nation.

Mr. Abbott: In the interjection I made this afternoon I had no intention, of course, of brushing off this question. I had hoped that in the consideration of these final supplementary estimates we might follow the usual practice and direct our attention not primarily to matters of policy but to the actual additional expenditures and their explanation. I would be very happy to discuss this or any other question at length when my own estimates are called, which I think would be the more usual time to do it. We have done it in the past and I shall be happy to do it again, but I think that is really the time, not when we are asking for approval of an item of $63,000 to provide for a too-conservative estimate of the government's contribution to the superannuation fund. I realize that under the rules of the house it is open to any hon. member to raise any question relating to the superannuation of civil servants, but again I would appeal for the co-operation of hon. members in restricting observations to the actual final supplementary votes asked for here. If we attempt to cover the whole range of items I despair of being able to get these estimates through within the time I should think the committee would consider reasonable.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I want to ask a question which can be answered by a straight yes or no. Is the government paying a cost of living bonus to these civil servants?

Mr. Abbott: No.

Mr. McLure: If we should allow these items to pass tonight without discussing them as we should, what assurance can the minister give that we will have an opportunity to discuss them later? I remember that last session I agreed to such a request for some reason or other, thinking I could bring up the matter at another time, but I never did have another opportunity. We should have some assurance right now that if these items go through tonight we shall have every chance to discuss these matters later.

Mr. Abbott: I can only give this assurance, that for the past two or three weeks my colleagues and I have been trying to get down to a discussion of the main estimates for the coming year. The house, within its rights, has preferred to make speeches on general questions rather than consider the details of the expenditures. My own department is now before the committee. I shall be happy at as early a date as possible to get down to a discussion of the details of the department, which happens to deal with this matter of superannuation. There is a very large item in my estimates covering the contribution by the government to the superannuation fund. That goes for the other departments as well; but it simply cannot be done if the house is not willing to co-operate. Without desiring to offend anyone, I suggest that that really depends upon the desire of private members to get down to a consideration of the details of the estimates and not take too much time discussing general principles on individual items.

I reiterate, however, that tonight we are considering the final estimates of the year, the estimates which traditionally make provision for cleaning up liabilities already incurred under existing votes in which, for one reason or another, there was an underestimation. There will be, first, the opportunity on the main estimates; second, an opportunity on the main supplementary estimates which are usually brought in two or three weeks before the end of the session; and finally an opportunity to discuss special matters on the final supplementaries at the end of the fiscal year. So there are at least three opportunities; but I repeat that it is in the hands of the house. Nothing would please the government better than to get down to a consideration of the expenditures item by item; but what happens? We have an item here of $63,000 which is really a vote to cover a too-conservative estimate of the contribution of the government to the superannuation fund because there were more promotions, or more people retired, or for some other reasons. Instead of considering whether the Minister of Finance was right or wrong in his estimate, however, we enter upon a debate upon the desirability of superannuated civil servants receiving some addition to their superannuation. It is within the rules, of course, but it is not taking into consideration the particular item of expenditure now before us. That is all I can say.

Mr. Knowles: Just a word—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fraser: That is exactly what happens when we are on the estimates; we are told to sit down.

Mr. Knowles: That doesn't bother me.

The minister will recall that when I rose before six o'clock the words I used and my whole tone of voice implied that I was giving him fair warning that we were going to deal with this at the proper time. It was only because of what I thought was the offhand attitude the minister took toward the matter that I felt that warning needed to be driven home, and I trust we have done that effectively.

Mr. Abbott: All I can say is that I very seldom hold up my own estimates, but I must have done that by my interjection before six o'clock.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am not trying to hold up the estimates, but in spite of the teacher's lecture I want to ask this very simple question. Are the mounted police concerned under this item, when the main estimates are being considered? I want to talk about them at the proper time, which I think is not now.

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry, but there was someone speaking behind me, and I did not hear my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I was wondering if the superannuated mounted policemen come under this general item when we come to it? I am not going to speak on it now, but I am then.

Mr. Abbott: Subject to correction, I think the mounted police superannuation fund is a special fund under justice.

Item agreed to.

576. Servicing of public debt—commission for payment of interest on public debt, services of fiscal agents, London, registrars' fees, etc.—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. Fleming: Does the government contemplate any financing in the market this year?

Mr. Abbott: That is a question I cannot answer at the moment. I shall have to make the usual answer: it is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course. There are a number of maturities this year, as my hon. friend knows.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Unemployment Insurance Act—

583. Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund—further amount required, $2,500,000.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): This is $2,500,000, and is not peanuts, such as we were talking about a few moments ago. It is listed as the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund, a further amount required. I hate to appear to be captious about it, but it is a sum of two and a half million dollars. What I want to know is, why is it that in these estimates we need a sum of that size? I assume it is for liabilities incurred, but it does seem to be a tremendous amount of money.

Mr. Mitchell: It is the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund in conformity with the statute.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Why does it appear in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Abbott: I might answer my hon. friend. It is an underestimate. The first estimate was made about 14 months in advance as to what the contribution would be, and it was dependent upon the level of employment. The government's contribution up to the end of February was $18,159,832. The main estimates contained an estimated expenditure of $18,750,000, and there was $250,000 supplementary for Newfoundland, which was really part of the main estimates. It would appear now that for March and April, in order to cover the contribution of the government, there will be an additional two and a half million dollars required.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): For March, but not April.

Mr. Abbott: March, yes, that is right.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): This amount of $2,500,000 has a direct relationship to unemployment in Canada at this time.

Mr. Abbott: No relationship at all.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): None whatever?

Mr. Abbott: It would indicate perhaps a higher level of employment than we had anticipated.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): This is by way of contribution, and has nothing to do with the payment of benefits?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct, in order to maintain the government's contribution to the fund.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Maintain your proportion of the main fund?

Mr. Abbott: In accordance with the requirements of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It has nothing to do with the payment of benefits or anything of that kind?

Mr. Abbott: Correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was interested in the latter part of the minister's remark. He has said he was not used to holding up his own estimates, and he states that this is an underestimate made 14 months ahead. Apparently at that time those in charge estimated that unemployment would be greater than it now is.

Mr. Abbott: No; this is the government's share under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I think the government pays one-fifth of the contribution, and four-fifths are paid by the employer and employee. This is the government's one-fifth, or whatever it is. If it means anything, it means there were more people employed and making contribution to the unemployment insurance fund than we estimated last year.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I do not know what the minister means when he says "if it means anything," it means so and so. What does he mean by that?

Mr. Abbott: Well, strike out the words "if it means anything."

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Will you categorically make this statement, that this sum is necessary because of increased employment in Canada? Does the minister want to do that?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, or increased wages; one or the other was higher than was estimated.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Has it anything to do with the increase in the level of charges, that is, those persons who are getting this insurance?

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend knows better than I do that the unemployment insurance fund is made up of an equal contribution from employer and employee, and a contribution by the government. The government's amount of this contribution depends upon the wages earned in insured industry, and the government's contribution of course is dependent upon that factor. In January of 1949, when these estimates were completed, it was estimated that the government's contribution to this fund would be something of the order of eighteen and three-quarter million dollars. To comply with this statutory obligation, we will need something of the order of two and a half million on top of that, owing to either a greater number of people employed or to people being employed at higher rates of pay. That is as far as I can go in explaining it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Has it anything to do with lifting the level up, and therefore bringing in a greater number of people, which we did just a week ago? Has that any bearing on it?

Mr. Abbott: I am not sure I am clear on what my hon. friend's point is.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It will be remembered that some time ago we made a change, and said a person could have unemployment insurance if he did not earn more that a certain amount. Then a short time ago we raised that ceiling.

Mr. Abbott: That is under item 585, and there is $1,500,000 to cover that.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That has no bearing on this item?

Mr. Abbott: No bearing on this item.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Well, the minister gave me a straight answer on the other question.

Item agreed to.

584. To authorize and provide for payment of unemployment assistance to residents of Newfoundland within the terms set forth under vote 681 in the supplementary estimates (Newfoundland) 1949-50, as authorized by the Appropriation Act. No. 7, 1949—further amount required, $700,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the Minister of Labour in a position to state whether labour conditions in Newfoundland have improved recently?

Mr. Mitchell: I think my hon. friend, who represents a riding in Newfoundland, probably has as deep an appreciation of the situation there as I have. If I might say this to him, arising out of the act of confederation, the people without employment in Newfoundland have probably been treated better than at any time in the history of Newfoundland. I think some of the conditions that exist there should be pointed out. My hon. friend knows that the Wabana iron ore mines in Newfoundland have lost the market in Great Britain to a great extent.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Have lost it.

Mr. Mitchell: I always like to give myself a little out. You should not bang the door in your own face. Then, the lumber situation is somewhat similar. The market for lumber in Great Britain has been lost. Newfoundland has also, temporarily I hope, lost the market for salt fish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Page the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Mitchell: I know my hon. friend sits there with a satanic laugh on his face.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Mitchell: Do not be too self-conscious.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not ordinarily rise to object to anything. I know that my hon. friend is the greatest authority in the house on things satanic. I am not going to ask for withdrawal.

Mr. Mitchell: I just said that in a kindly way to my hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister meant "sardonic", I presume.

Mr. Mitchell: No, I meant "satanic". I am frank to admit that my hon. friend could take the first word I used or the last two words; I could not. But to get back to important things, as my hon. friend knows already there has been, for some reason unknown even to the experts, a smaller catch of fish on the Atlantic coast. I do not know of any parliamentary institution that can pass a law to stop the fish from going from North America to Norway. I take the view of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that we are passing through a period which is going to be a difficult one, largely brought about by international monetary complications, but I am convinced in my own mind that by taking a positive approach we shall overcome all the difficulties confronting this nation.

I think the easiest way to get a depression is to preach about one. I have a vivid recollection, at the conclusion of the war, of some of our experts, in North America particularly, predicting eight million out of employment in the United States, and of some of my own experts predicting 600,000 unemployed in the Dominion of Canada. We all know that situation did not come to pass largely because of the positive approach made by this government in the reconversion period at that time. I am convinced in my own mind that given a liberal approach, you understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister understand?

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend does not understand anything.

An hon. Member: He has company.

Mr. Mitchell: He is an expert on nothing and he talks about everything. When I said "a liberal approach" I meant a liberal mental approach to the problems concerning this nation. I am frank to admit that at this very moment approximately twenty per cent of the employable people of Newfoundland are unemployed. I think the hon. member from that province will admit, as will most of the good people in Newfoundland, that the conditions there at the moment are somewhat improved and that they are better than they were, we will say, in 1935 to 1940.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Thirty-five or forty years ago?

Mr. Mitchell: No; I am not as old as that. From 1935 to 1940.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Now have I answered your question?

An hon. Member: That is not saying much.

Mr. Mitchell: I look forward to the time when we shall recover those markets that were enjoyed by Newfoundland in the last ten years.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I appreciate the minister's attempt to answer the question, but I am afraid that he is not familiar with the situation. When the matter comes up again I hope that he will be much better informed than he is at the present time. As a matter of correction for the record, I should point out to him that there would not be 20 per cent of the total number of unemployed in Canada resident in Newfoundland; because if the total number is nearly 400,000, that would mean nearly 80,000 people unemployed in Newfoundland. I believe that the number is nearer 12,000 than 80,000, although I understand that is an increase over what it was a few weeks ago.

Mr. Mitchell: I am afraid my hon. friend is not so well informed either. At the moment there are 19,000 unemployed in Newfoundland.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister is in a position to know. I expected that answer in the first place.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

589. Estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms—further amount required, $8,000.

Mr. Fraser: Do all of the staff in the House of Commons come under the workmen's compensation board? Are they all covered, including the sessional stenographers?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I could not answer that question. These are the Sergeant-at-Arms' estimates. I would have to inform myself. I shall be glad to get that information and give it to my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

General services—

590. Miscellaneous maintenance and adjustments (war of 1914-18)—further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. Fraser: Just what is this for?

Mr. Abbott: This item covers the maintenance of war graves and the erection of memorials to world war I casualties.

Mr. Drew: Before we go on with these defence estimates, it may be helpful to know when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are going to be considered again.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I could not tell that this evening, because the minister himself is, I understand, leaving on Saturday for overseas in order to attend a conference. How long he will be there, I do not know. Then we shall be having Easter vacation. I am afraid we shall not work up to the defence estimates before we come back after the Easter recess.

Mr. Drew: Why can they not be taken up on Friday?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Up to now we have given two days on external affairs and two days on defence.

Mr. Drew: No, only one day on defence.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Requests have been made to have the estimates of other departments considered. I thought it was understood at the beginning of the session that we would try to have a few days on each department for a general discussion. If we stay on national defence too long, I cannot see how other important departments, such as the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Veterans Affairs, would have much time. I will, however, consult my colleagues about this matter.

Mr. Drew: In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance took some time to speak about the desire to get ahead with these estimates and left some impression that the effort to do this was not being facilitated, I would point out that it is this uncertainty about things being dealt with that is causing a great deal of confusion and is lengthening the debate. In this particular case the Minister of National Defence is going overseas. His estimates are before the committee. Surely the wise thing to do would be to say to us that the estimates of the Department of National Defence will be dealt with on Friday. We would then know that; and if that were so, there would then be no occasion to discuss these estimates now. But if consideration of these estimates is going to be put off and then just rushed in at the last moment, as has been done year after year, hon. members are in duty bound to discuss national defence when they have the opportunity presented to them at this time.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am asking myself if the leader of the opposition is quite fair. I have tried to accommodate hon. members by bringing forward the departments that were requested by them. External affairs was the first one; the second one was national defence. For three weeks I have tried to get other departments into supply and have not succeeded. We have had long discussions on everything that was brought up before the house. I am not reproaching anybody with regard to that. This is a free parliament composed of free members. But it is necessary for us to attend to certain items of business that must go through in the next few days. On the order paper there are four bills that are to be studied and considered, and an effort must be made to pass them before March 31 if we do not wish to have them lapse. There are two in the name of the Minister of Agriculture, one concerning the Agricultural Products Act and the other the Agricultural Prices Support Act. If they are not considered before March 31, they lapse. There is one in the name of the Minister of Finance, concerning rental controls. Really, I am not going to try to give a lesson to anybody, but I thought when we got into supply it was to consider the items that were called by the chairman. My experience is that very few hon. members get down to details on these estimates. They make many long speeches. If that is their way of looking at it I have no objection, but I cannot keep the same department on ad nauseam to listen to speeches, especially when we are on specific items.

Mr. Drew: I think it would be just as well to deal very clearly with this subject, right now, Mr. Chairman. The minister who has just spoken is evading the issue by suggesting that there are bills that—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Why should I evade the issue?

Mr. Drew: —require to be dealt with. I think hon. members recognize that they require to be dealt with. That has nothing to do with the point that has been raised. The minister has just said that he is going to call other estimates on Friday.

Mr. Abbott: No; he is going to call these bills on Friday.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sorry if I did not make myself clear. This is not final. On Thursday we will take up the resolutions that are on the order paper to advance them one stage and to give the bills first reading. Then on Friday we might take up second readings. If we cannot do it on Friday we shall proceed next Tuesday because Monday will be private members' day.

Mr. Green: Why don't you take Monday?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra suggests that we take away a whole day from private members in order to make speeches. I do not feel that I could do that, and deprive those hon. members of the opportunity of making speeches. But coming back to the estimates—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The Minister of Agriculture is taking the whole week in High River making speeches.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Why don't you wait until the Minister of Agriculture comes back?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You told us a moment ago that these things have to go through by March 31. The Minister of Agriculture is in Canada. He is not even here to put them through.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My hon. friend did not follow—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): He is making political speeches in High River.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My hon. friend did not follow what I was saying. The difficulty is that the opposition wants national defence estimates to be brought on. Up until now I have done my best to hand over the Minister of National Defence to discuss them, but nobody has discussed the estimates. I stayed here on Friday night. What was discussed? What was discussed was the method by which the estimates should be considered, and everybody admitted that it should not be a committee of supply, it should be a special committee. And that took nearly all evening on Friday, until there was a vote on it.

I shall do my best to try to have national defence estimates come up again, but I cannot give any assurance at this stage.

Mr. Drew: I am not going to let this matter pass in this way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: I am not going to let the matter pass in this way. The estimates of the Department of National Defence have been brought forward. They call for an expenditure of $628 million, not $425 million.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are speaking of commitments.

Mr. Drew: They call for the expenditure of $628 million, of which $425 million is estimated as required for the current year. But this house is called upon to deal with a commitment of $628 million. The estimates were brought forward for discussion only on one day, and there is no hon. member here who in any way needs to feel any sense of apology or the need of explanation for devoting not one day, but many days to a sum of that kind, which is not represented alone by the money involved, but is represented by the nature of the requirement itself.

If this passes without any assurance at this time as to when these estimates shall come before us again we have no way of knowing that this particular subject will not be brought before us in the last few days before the session is expected to close. That is what has happened over and over again.

In so far as the estimates are concerned, the minister has said that apparently we do not want details. I assure the minister that we do want details, and we are going to get details, and we are going to get exact details, and they are going to be asked for in a way that they were not asked for before.

The way to find out what the details are that are required is to assure us that these estimates will be called, and then during the time that the minister is away the figures and the statements which will be required to deal with these estimates in the house can be prepared. That would actually indicate some willingness on the part of the government to submit these very large sums to an examination in the house. But unless an assurance can be given as to when we are going to examine national defence estimates again hon. members have not only a right but are in duty bound to avail themselves of every opportunity to discuss this subject.

Mr. Abbott: May I appeal again for an orderly discussion of the business which is before the house? There are three items under the heading of national defence to clean up details. One is to provide an extra amount for the purchase and erection of headstones for world war I graves. We can criticize that item if we wish. The second one is to pay a pension to Mrs. Alice Smuck. The third is to provide $4 million to purchase certain admiralty property in St. John's, Newfoundland. The Minister of National Defence is not here. I am prepared to give a fairly full explanation of these three items. These are the items we are asking to have voted tonight. It is important to public business to get these supplementary items voted. There are two items in particular, one of which is the item for unemployment relief in Newfoundland, which it is essential, if these commitments are to be met, should be passed by this house and by the other place and receive royal assent within the next day or two. I would appeal to the house. The Minister of National Defence expects to be away for about a week on this matter of the meeting of the defence ministers on the Atlantic pact. I feel sure that an early opportunity will be afforded to resume the discussion of the general defence estimates for the coming year. All I am asking tonight on national defence is the three items that I have outlined.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, after all there is a very simple way of dealing with this, as indicated when I rose the first time. A discussion of this in detail, or a general discussion, could be brought up on these items.

Mr. Abbott: It could not be on these items.

Mr. Drew: A discussion in detail or a general discussion which could be brought up on these items would not be called for if there was some assurance as to when we shall be dealing with the general items of national defence for the coming year. Will the minister give us at least this assurance, that the estimates of the Department of National Defence now before the house will be brought before the house again definitely before the end of April?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, when the house convenes on the 17th I think we will have—I cannot give a definite assurance because that is—

Mr. Drew: Oh, well—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Will the hon. member please refer to standing order 17 which reads:

> Whenever government business has precedence, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit.

I had forgotten that rule completely, and that order since I have been leading the house. I have tried to be pleasant to all hon. members, but to ask me a month ahead to give an assurance that on such and such a day we shall have these estimates before the house is asking something that I cannot give.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, this again is simply trying to becloud the issue. The point that we have before us is perfectly simple. The estimates of the Department of National Defence calling for a commitment of $628 million are before us.

Mr. Abbott: Not tonight.

Mr. Drew: They are before the house.

Mr. Abbott: Not tonight.

Mr. Drew: In so far as this house is concerned it is in a position tonight to discuss national defence. The question before the house is whether we are going to have the general estimates before us. I have asked a perfectly simple question: Will those general estimates be brought forward by the end of April? It is not an answer to say that the government can call government business at any time. If the government continues to do it that way, then there certainly will be the kind of confusion we have had ever since this session began.

In this particular case, if there is a bona fide intention really to deal with national defence estimates, then the assurance can be given that they will be brought forward by the end of April. Because, assuming that the house may expect to terminate its business before the first of July, that does not give too long to deal with estimates which will require that we wish to proceed with these etsimates on arms, equipment and other details which will be examined on this occasion.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): All I can say is that the leader of the opposition may be assured that we wish to proceed with these estimates in good faith; and the minister himself would wish to proceed. He is the one who asked to come on early in the session to discuss his estimates. We will do our best to bring them up as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Drew: No; can we not let this be an example of how things can be done in a businesslike way? It is not businesslike for the House of Commons to use this device to prevent an inquiry into items totalling $625 million. And do not let anyone suggest that these devices have not been used. I went back over the dates the minister put forward the other day, as to when the details of estimates had been brought forward, and in every case it was just before the end of the session.

In this particular case we want to be sure that there is going to be time to get into the real details of expenditures of the Department of National Defence. The minister will be away a week. He will be back by the first of April, according to that statement. That being so, there will be four weeks. All I have asked is that we have the assurance that the estimates for the Department of National Defence will be called within the following four weeks, by the end of April. Surely that can be given. If that is so then, so far as I am concerned, these present estimates can be passed without question.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will do my very best.

Mr. Drew: That simply amounts to a statement that we are not going to have any assurance upon which we can carry on orderly business in this House of Commons.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, the leader of the opposition as usual is certainly not serious in that. He has just been complaining that in past years the estimates were brought down at the end of the session. This year the government has done its best, all that is possible, to enter as many departments as possible at the beginning of the session, so that the estimates can be studied right at the start. He was the one, with others, to delay getting into supply.

Some hon. Members: No.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

592. To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, total additional commitments for this purpose for the current year of $7,000,000 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1949-50 will not exceed a further amount of $4,000,000.

Mr. Adamson: Is this real estate?

Mr. Abbott: It is admiralty property.

Mr. Wright: Would the minister complete the statement he began a few moments ago in connection with this item. What about the extra $3 million? We see that $4 million is to be spent somewhere.

Mr. Abbott: The total purchase price of these properties is about $7 million. It is expected that $3 million of that can be provided out of the existing vote for the Department of National Defence, and a supplementary of $4 million will be required.

Mr. Drew: What properties are under consideration in this case?

Mr. Abbott: Buckmaster's field, naval barracks and garage; naval dockyard, magazine and ordnance depots, oil field depot and tank farm—

Mr. Drew: Let us have the details of the amounts in each case.

Mr. Abbott: It is $7 million in total.

Mr. Drew: Yes, but after all, there is a very clearly established practice in regard to entries of this kind. Let us have the details in each case.

Mr. Abbott: I have here a long table which, perhaps, I could place on Hansard. But, no, I shall read it in:

Description	Original Building Cost	Land Cost	Original cost of remaining Buildings	Total cost of remaining assets
Buckmaster's field, naval barracks and garage	$3,040,000	....	$2,980,000	$2,980,000
Naval Dockyard	2,483,000	$648,350	2,483,000	3,131,350
Magazine and ordnance depots	1,070,000	94,935	1,015,000	1,109,935

Then perhaps I might give the column showing the original building costs:

Description	Original Building Cost
Oil field depot and tank farm	$1,354,000
Wharves	806,000
N/A teacher and offices	474,000
Floating dock site	355,000
Hospital	730,000
Administrations and quarters	515,000
Stores and harbour craft buildings	807,800
South side machine shops	437,000
Dockyard cafeteria	122,000
W/T Stations—Bay Bulls Road	111,500
Cape Spear P.W.S.S. & D.E.M.S.	25,000
A/S Training centre	28,000
Fort Amherst, P.W.S.S. & C.M. Station	38,850
South Side Barracks	740,000

Then, the total cost of the remaining assets is $12,681,646 for which we have undertaken to pay $7 million.

Mr. Pouliot: Was all this property purchased from the British government, and, if so, was it paid for in Canadian or American dollars?

Mr. Abbott: It is to be purchased from the British government, and it will be paid for in Canadian dollars; and the Canadian dollars, of course, will be expended in Canada.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Where is the hospital located?

Mr. Abbott: I have not that information. I am not familiar with the location.

Item agreed to.

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

593. General administration, further amount required, $6,500.

Mr. Pouliot: Before this is carried, I have a duty to fulfil. May I pay tribute to the Prime Minister for one of his gracious accomplishments in appointing the Hon. George Black, K.C., and the Hon. J. L. Bowman, K.C., two former Speakers, as members of the privy council of Canada.

The late Mr. Bennett was reluctant to do that. When the former prime minister was approached he said to leave it in his hands, but nothing was done. I remember that those two gentlemen, with the present incumbent of that high position, have constituted the three most distinguished, fearless, fair and just Speakers whom I have seen occupy the chair since I have been a member of the House of Commons.

It is precisely because the Hon. Mr. Black and the Hon. Mr. Bowman were fearless that the late Mr. Bennett refused to appoint them to the privy council, as all other Speakers had been. Therefore I compliment the Prime Minister for having been gracious enough to appoint to the privy council those two barristers of high standing who so well fulfilled their duties as Speakers of the House of Commons. May I add that while the previous leader of the opposition, who was approached in the matter, apparently did nothing, the present one was favourable to the suggestion, and I give him credit for it. Better late than never.

Item agreed to.

594. To provide for expenses of the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences—further amount required, $26,041.

Mr. Fleming: Item 594 provides for expenses of the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences. I should like to ask in the first place when it may be expected that the commission may complete its sittings and render its report, if the government has had any intimation in that respect. In the second place, I should like to ask for some details of this item. Details are not given for the $26,041.

Mr. Abbott: I will have to answer the second question first. I have no information to give my hon. friend as to the first question. I would have to communicate his question to the Prime Minister. The $26,041 which is requested in this supplementary estimate is required to reimburse another vote, 100, in the Department of Finance which approved the payment of $26,041. That is the contingencies vote. The total expenditures that are estimated in this fiscal year will be first the vote of $93,525 together with the additional amount of $26,041, making a total of $119,566 up to the end of the current fiscal year. My hon. friend will recall that there is an additional amount in the estimates which I tabled a month ago for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Fleming: May we take it from the minister's statement that the $119,000 liquidates all commitments in respect of the royal commission to March 31?

Mr. Abbott: That is my understanding. Yes, that is correct; that is what it is intended to do.

Mr. Fleming: When can we get an answer from the Prime Minister as to the other part of the question?

Mr. Abbott: I will bring my hon. friend's question to his attention, although I do not know whether he will be in a position to answer it either.

Mr. Knight: Is the work of the commission finished? Is it still holding hearings?

Mr. Abbott: I understand it is still holding sittings. I am afraid I am not personally up to date with exactly what it is doing. It comes under the privy council office, and I have no doubt that the question can be asked when the main estimates are being considered.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

596. Ottawa—Prime Minister's residence—repairs, alterations and improvements, $35,000.

Mr. Adamson: Obviously this is not all it will cost to put the Edwards house into suitable condition for the Prime Minister's residence. Can the Minister of Public Works say how much the total estimate is for this work? I am not complaining. I think it should be done, but I have heard that it would have been better to have pulled the house down and built a new house facing the other way so that the Prime Minister would have had the view of the Ottawa river instead of having the kitchens facing that way. Can the Minister of Public Works give us any information?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): From the notes I have here I can hardly give a definite estimate, but I am told that the alterations and improvements to the main building will cost $135,000, and that is only an estimate. Then there are improvements to the other buildings on the grounds, and improvements to the grounds in the amount of some $30,000. I have a note here that nobody can give a definite estimate of the cost of trying to make a new house out of this old one. The $35,000 for which I am asking here is an amount that was allotted from my general vote in public works by the treasury board so that it could be expended during this fiscal year.

Mr. Green: What would a new house have cost?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It all depends on the kind of house.

Mr. Green: A suitable house.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I could not give any estimate.

Mr. Hodgson: Can the minister tell us what the property cost in the first place?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Speaking from memory, it cost somewhere between $130,000 and $140,000. The property was expropriated, and there is a judgment in the exchequer court.

Mr. Adamson: That does not include the furnishings?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have no estimate at all on that.

Mr. Fraser: As the Prime Minister's indemnity will not be sufficient to allow him to maintain this establishment I would judge that the government will look after the upkeep of it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It will be dealt with properly, and will be maintained by the Department of Public Works and kept in a good state of repair.

Mr. Fraser: I hope that when the minister is considering the upkeep of the Prime Minister's home he will also consider the home of the leader of the official opposition, because I think they should both be looked after by the government.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister to raise his voice a little? We could not hear his recent answers over here. Did I understand him to say the price paid by the government for this property when they acquired it about four years ago was $135,000? A question was asked about the original cost. I take it the answer did not relate to the original cost of the construction of the house, but to the original cost to the government when it acquired the property. Is that correct?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The government proceeded by way of expropriation in this case, and evidence was heard before the exchequer court. I cannot recall the exact amount, but speaking from memory it would be somewhere between $130,000 and $140,000.

Mr. Fleming: Then trying to see the picture whole, to the $130,000 we add something like another $130,000 to date, so that the cost to date runs in the neighbourhood of $275,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. This is an estimate for $35,000 which is the amount that we expect to spend before the 31st of March of this year. We have retained as architects the firm of Allward and Gouinlock of Toronto. As to the estimate of the total cost, nobody before starting work on the building could give a final estimate of what the cost would be.

Mr. Fleming: I think the minister mentioned another item of expenditure earlier as well.

Mr. Abbott: That was a year or two ago. It was expropriated four or five years ago.

Mr. Fleming: We have the $130,000 to $140,000 to which the minister has referred and then this item of $35,000, but if I heard the minister correctly he said that there was another item as well of $100,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I was asked the question whether I could give an estimate of what the work will cost on this residence. I said that I am told—and this would not be final—that it will amount to some $135,000.

Mr. Fleming: Then the total cost to the government by the time the property has been completely renovated will be about $275,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not give any definite figure. Personally I do not know because I have not found anybody yet who can give a final estimate of the cost.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, no one in this house criticized the idea of acquiring a home for the Prime Minister. When the announcement was made in the house by the then acting prime minister a reservation was made by some as to the selection of this particular property for the purpose. The question will be present in the minds of many members as to whether this was the best residence available at the cost. I am bound to say that it amazes me as a member of the house that the government has embarked upon this project without having some idea of the cost of renovation before they started.

Mr. Abbott: The minister has given it to you.

Mr. Fleming: The Minister of Public Works, a very experienced minister, has just told us that he did not even at this stage—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will admit that we are now discussing an item of $35,000 for repairs, alterations and improvements to the Prime Minister's residence. I do not think the hon. member should go back and question the decision as to whether this or another house should have been bought.

Mr. Fleming: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I am entirely in order in trying to get to the bottom of this project. Here we are asked to vote another $35,000—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I appreciate that the decisions of the chairman are not always satisfactory to hon. members, especially when they want to advance a certain point of view; but in my understanding of this discussion the hon. member is out of order when he raises the question on this item of whether the government should have bought this property or another.

Mr. Green: I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Eglinton was not discussing whether the house should have been bought. He is trying to get at the total amount it is going to cost, and I submit that is quite in order.

The Deputy Chairman: I am quite prepared to give as much latitude on this item as may be permissible, and so far I believe I have done so. I am simply warning the hon. member for Eglinton, when he says the minister should not have gone into this project without having any idea of the cost, and makes statements of that kind, that we are now discussing an item of $35,000 for repairs, alterations and improvements. That is all I am doing at the moment.

Mr. Fleming: Before you make any ruling, Mr. Chairman, I want to make it quite clear that what I am talking about now is this item of $35,000. The considerations I am putting forward are strictly relevant to the question whether this house should provide $35,000 when, even at this stage, the minister is not able to give us an estimate of the final cost. Apparently the government has just gone ahead without doing what any sensible member of this chamber would have done, that is, finding out what it was going to cost before commencing the project. It amazes me that at this stage, in March, 1950, nearly a year after the decision was made to take this property and renovate it for use as a residence for the Prime Minister, the government cannot give us an estimate of the total cost of the entire undertaking. I have tried as best I could to get the figures and put them together. When we do add up the figures the minister has given us, he will not commit himself in any degree to the total we arrive at.

I am in complete accord with the idea that a suitable home should be provided for the Prime Minister of this country; let there be no mistake about that. At the same time, as a matter of common sense and ordinary sensible business practice I believe the government should know the cost of a project before it undertakes it. Obviously that was not done in this case, and I think it is a ridiculous way of doing business.

I am going to ask this further question—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Before you use that word "ridiculous"—

Mr. Fleming: I ask the minister to give us—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Eglinton has the floor.

Mr. Fleming: I am trying to facilitate the minister's reply by saying there is one other question I wish to ask.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You will not facilitate anything by calling this ridiculous.

Mr. Fleming: I certainly will call any practice ridiculous under which a government blithely goes ahead with a project of this size without having any idea in advance of what the cost is going to be. If I understood the minister's statement correctly, that is precisely the situation that confronts the government and the rest of us at this moment.

The other question I want to ask the minister, if he will be good enough to try to shed some light on it, is this. Are the figures which have been given to us the cost of the renovation of the property, or do the figures he has given include the cost of suitably furnishing the residence?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The best answer I can give is in a report I have here. Believe it or not, I took this as good advice from my officials:

Due to the nature of the work involved, the age of the building and the impossibility of determining the structural condition of the building until the work was under way, it was not possible to arrive at an accurate estimate of the total cost. The department therefore considered that a contract on a basis of cost plus a fixed fee would be the most practicable. Negotiations were entered into with Alex I. Garvock Limited, who offered to perform the work on a basis of cost plus a fixed fee of $10,000—

That amount I am sure of; we know that.

—such fee to include the provision of all supervision of the workmen, the engaging of a superintendent satisfactory to the department, and the provision of workmen's tools and equipment required on the work which are ordinarily supplied by the general contractor.

I know what it is costing for this contractor; we will have to pay $10,000, and he undertakes to do this work. Being no expert myself, I find that even these people cannot give me a final or definite estimate; but I am told that it will amount to something in the neighbourhood of $135,000.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps it will help my hon. friend if I add that an additional $80,000 is provided in the main estimates for 1950-51, which were tabled some time ago.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not dealt with my final question, as to whether any provision is made here for the furnishings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In which figure?

Mr. Fleming: In either figure.

Mr. Abbott: No.

Mr. Fleming: In other words the figures the minister has given simply represent the cost of the structure as renovated?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Then I come back to my other point. Were not the considerations set out in the report the minister has just read available to the government before they selected this particular property for the Prime Minister's residence? I should have thought that, faced with such a situation, that is to say, complete uncertainty as to the eventual cost of renovating this large property, the government would have asked themselves whether they could not do better with their money by buying another property, or by building a new home on this site instead of renovating a house that I am told is many years old. Will the minister give us some further information on that point?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The government gave a great deal of thought to this project, and came to the conclusion that this was the best way to acquire and have a home for the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Adamson: The reason I brought this up in the first place was that I have heard it said by architects and others interested that it would have been better, and would have provided a better building at approximately the same or at least a known cost, if the house were torn down and a new house built. I wondered if the department had considered building a modern house instead of trying to renovate the old house on this site. As everyone knows, this is an admirable site for a home for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It was discussed for I do not know how long. Every angle was gone into, but we came to the conclusion that having that site and the shell of this building we owned, it would be a proper way to proceed to provide this residence.

Item agreed to.

597. Prince Albert public building—addition and alterations—further amount required, $165,000.

Mr. Knight: Could we have the particulars concerning this expenditure?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): A contract was given last year for the alteration and enlargement of this building in Prince Albert. We estimated that during the year we would spend a total of $220,000. The contractor has proceeded more rapidly than we estimated, and we owe him a progress payment on the contract in this amount of $160,000.

Mr. Knight: What is the building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is the post office and federal building in Prince Albert.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

600. Departmental administration—further amount required, $2,500.

Mr. Blackmore: I notice that this item is called "resources and development". I should like to say a word or two about the development of resources. I think everyone recognizes now that in the province of Alberta we have probably the finest resources of any province in Canada. Those resources have been there for hundreds of years; they have been there ever since people went to Alberta. We have not been able to develop them until recently. Now, there are several reasons why that is so, and one of the largest considerations entering into the development of our resources today is the cost of doing business.

In this connection I desire to register an emphatic protest against the freight rate structure in Canada, particularly as it applies to western Canada. The freight rate structure is particularly important, because of the prevalence of the non-discrimination-in-trade philosophy in government thinking, which is leading the government to think that every industry ought to stand on its own feet. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance was correctly reported, or whether I remember exactly what I read, but it seems to me he used one of those breezy, dramatic expressions of his not long ago, that our industry in Canada has got to brace itself for competition abroad. Whether he said that or whether he meant it, I do not know but I fancy he meant it. The point is that, not very long after he made that remark, his government was party to permitting a thing to happen in Canada that increased the difficulty of every industry in Canada in bracing itself against competition from abroad. Now if you put enough difficulties or enough burdens on a man's back, he cannot brace himself against anything. He falls of his own weight.

In this connection, the freight rate structure is exceedingly important in this country. It increases production costs at the very time when we should keep production costs down. Then there is an excessively high cost of living today. It is a burden that is pushing the people of Canada right to the ground. I believe from coast to coast the Canadian people are literally groaning in misery. Not very long ago there was an increase in the price of coal in Ottawa, and the people just groaned. What was partly responsible for that increase? Things like the increase in freight rates—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but may I point out—

Mr. Blackmore: If the chairman would speak a little louder, I could hear him.

The Deputy Chairman: I said I was sorry to interrupt the hon. member, and I am sorry if I did not speak loudly enough for him to hear me. The item I have before me is item 600, "resources and development, departmental administration, further amount required, $2,500." I fail to see how the hon. member can discuss freight rates under this item, but perhaps that is not what he was talking about. Perhaps I did not hear him too well up here.

Mr. Blackmore: I thought I made it quite clear to the chairman when I began, that I was laying emphasis on the second part of the title, which is development of resources.

Mr. Abbott: I wonder if I could appeal to my hon. friend? This item actually covers an additional amount for printing and stationery of $1,000, and an additional item of $1,500 for travelling expenses. Tomorrow is private members' day and Thursday, for reasons with which the hon. member is familiar, I am unable to be in the house. As I indicated earlier, it is urgent that these estimates should, if possible, be passed tonight. I would appeal to him, if it were possible, to defer his remarks on the general subject of resources and development until a little later in the week, or perhaps some time next week.

Mr. Blackmore: I believe every member in the house, and the minister himself, will agree that the development of the resources of Canada is going to depend a great deal on the sort of freight rates that prevail in Canada. I fancy, therefore, I am quite in order in that respect. I realize the difficulties under which the minister is labouring, and I deeply sympathize with him; every member in the house does. We sympathize with him, not only because of the difficulties he is in with respect to having these estimates passed, but because of certain other difficulties. At the same time, I feel the discussion of freight rates has been deferred too long. I think it is time that the members who represent the provinces that are being victimized spoke out, every one of them.

Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: I am glad to see that one hon. member is catching the spirit. It is not my desire, Mr. Chairman, to hold up the house unduly. I believe I have nearly said enough to express my point of view, but I should like to add a few words in a general way before I sit down.

I should like to excuse myself on another score. This amount of money we are discussing falls under item 600, which is departmental administration. From time immemorial it has been customary in British houses of commons for the widest latitude to be allowed in discussing the item of departmental administration. I do not have to have much latitude to get a freight rate discussion out of the development of our natural resources.

Before the chairman felt compelled to interrupt in that genial way of his which we all admire so much, I was going to point out that Canada needs a tremendous amount of population today. We are never going to get population into this country, and have it remain here, unless we make it possible for the people in Canada to live. What we have been doing up to the present moment, and what we have been doing ever since I can remember—that is about 40 years in Canada—is having children; raising them and educating them; and then sending them to the United States. I taught school for 21 years in one of the finest districts in Canada. Every time I look back over the student bodies I had the privilege of teaching for 21 years, and think of the number of them who are now doing magnificent work in the United States, it makes me furious. I am urging this from the standpoint of getting population into this country, and keeping it here to build the powerful nation we ought to have.

We must give a lot more attention to our freight rate structure than we do at the present time. Having said that, I am going to defer the real development of my speech until a later time.

Item agreed to.

601. Dominion forest service—forest research and investigations—further amount required, $250,000.

Mr. Fraser: Is the minister taking over some of the work the Department of Agriculture is doing at the present time?

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman; there is nothing envisaged under this item, covering work the Department of Agriculture does. This covers an arrangement with the province of New Brunswick under the Canada Forestry Act.

Mr. Fraser: It is just for one province?

Mr. Winters: Just for one province.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

609. Subject to the approval of the governor in council, notwithstanding vote 907, to authorize payments out of the funds of the Fraser Valley diking board in accordance with the agreement of March, 1950, between the government of Canada, the government of the province of British Columbia and the said board; and to authorize such payments by the government of Canada to the said board out of vote 907 as are necessary to provide for Canada's share of the amount required by the the board to carry out the terms of the said agreement, $1.

Mr. Cruickshank: May I have a break-down of this item 609?

Mr. Abbott: It is a little bit difficult to give a break-down. This item is the usual dollar item to give statutory authority to close out the operations of the Fraser valley diking board. Both the province of British Columbia and ourselves are anxious to complete these works and to complete the settlement by the dominion government. It may be that to make the final adjustment and to determine the final figures will run us beyond March 31. The dollar item will give statutory authority to make this payment out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Cruickshank: I thank the minister. I just wanted to know how it was broken down.

Item agreed to.

610. To reimburse the Canadian wheat board for expenses incurred from August 1, 1948, to July 31, 1949, in the administration of delivery quotas and permit regulations, etc., $96,455.

Mr. Argue: I had hoped that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might be in his seat now, but I see that he is not there at the present time.

Mr. Green: He was here a minute or so ago.

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Finance is here, in any event, as is also the Minister of Agriculture. Under this Canadian wheat board item, I want to refer to the statement made earlier today by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that ten cents a bushel will be paid out on oats this year and forty cents a bushel on barley. The minister went on to say that one of the reasons no payment would be considered on wheat was the attitude taken by the opposition. I hope he was not referring to my attitude. I at no time objected to the twenty cents having been paid last year. My objection was rather to the fact that when this amount was paid the farmers were not told the actual financial position of the wheat board at that time; and from statements of the Minister of Agriculture and others they assumed there would be a substantial payment this year.

My question is this. I should like the Minister of Agriculture, if he can, or the Minister of Finance—who I am sure know the financial position of the wheat board with respect to wheat just as they do with respect to oats and barley—to tell this committee and the farmers of western Canada approximately how much the payment on wheat is likely to be after the conclusion of this crop year. As the Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out this afternoon, the farmers must undertake certain credit; and in doing that they would like to know the payment they will receive for oats and barley. I am not asking the minister to go out on a limb, but surely he can estimate reasonably closely the amount the payment will finally be.

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here. He had expected that we would reach his estimates earlier this evening and he had to leave. I believe he will be here tomorrow. I will bring my hon. friend's question to his attention. I am not in a position to make an estimate; and for the reasons which the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave this afternoon, I do not believe any other minister is. All I can do is to bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of the minister, and he will try to deal with it tomorrow.

Mr. Argue: Would the Minister of Agriculture not care to make a guess?

Mr. Gardiner: This is not a matter which is under my department at all. It is a matter which is under the Department of Trade and Commerce and always has been. The statement has been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Green: Here is the Minister of Trade and Commerce coming into the chamber now.

Mr. Howe: In reply to the hon. member's question, the substance of which has been conveyed to me by my colleague, may I say that I have no idea.

Mr. Argue: I cannot accept that statement. In the past the Minister of Trade and Commerce has never been bashful about making forecasts. The wheat board is under his department, and I am sure he knows its financial position today and can make a reasonably good estimate of what the final payment will be. I am sure the farmers would like to know. For example, if a farmer over a five-year period had marketed 20,000 bushels of wheat—which is a quantity of wheat that many farmers would have marketed—and if the payment is twenty cents a bushel, the farmer will get another $4,000; if it is ten cents a bushel, he will get $2,000. All I am asking is that the minister make an estimate so that the farmers can plan their business this year in the light of the payment they can anticipate.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I should like to follow up this question for just a moment or two, and I will not be long. The other day I had on the order paper a question which had to do with the marketing of the 1949 crop up to date, and I was told that it was not in the public interest to give the trading position along certain lines on which I was asking the question. If that question had been answered as I asked it, we would have been in a position to know fairly closely what the next payment should be, at least; not what it would be, but what it should be. But I was not able to get that information. I think the attitude of the minister at this time is most unfair. I want to ask another question that deals with the item of approximately $96,000 for administration of delivery quotas and permit regulations. Has that to do with field inspectors? If it has, I should like to know how many of those there are.

Mr. Howe: No. That is the cost of administering the quota system at the elevators and certain services that the wheat board performs for the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is in the estimates each year a similar item covering expenditures incurred by the board in carrying out the instructions of the department.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I want to ask the minister again if he would not even give me the information?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The other information that was refused?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It cannot be done?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Quelch: Whilst I appreciate the fact that the minister may not be in a position to state how much money there may be available to pay out in the five-year pool from the wheat board, on the other hand can the minister say whether or not any agreement has been reached with Britain with regard to a final payment on account of the "having regard" clause?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Quelch: If there is no assurance on that point, can the minister say whether or not any decision has been arrived at by the cabinet as to whether or not any payment will be made in compensation for the amount of money lost by the farmers as the result of subsidizing the Canadian consumer and the British consumer during the five-year period?

Mr. Howe: No.

612. To reimburse the Canadian wheat board for the deficit incurred from the operations of the wheat board on the 1948 crop account, flax division, for the period August 1, 1948, to July 31, 1949, pursuant to order in council P.C. 3376 of July 28, 1948, $3,884,182.

Mr. Ross (Souris): This item has to do with an amount of almost $4 million on flax account and I think the minister should explain why that is. That also raises another point I want to mention. I had on the order paper a question which was answered at page 833. It had to do with the federal grain elevator at Saskatoon. I have now on the order paper another question asking for much more detailed information; but on the information I received, it cost the government over $78,000 to operate that elevator last year.

On the average by month, there was only a shade under 12,000 bushels of all types of grain stored there. That is a gigantic cost to somebody. The point I want to make about this flax is this, and I raised this issue with the minister throughout the war years, when the government was spending a great deal of money on crown companies and so on, and in assisting other companies. Whole processing plants were built in eastern Canada where your flax had to be taken east and processed and much of the processed article was taken west again, especially in the matter of feeds for livestock. Since then the farmers themselves have set up an organization and developed a processing plant at Saskatoon. I have been credibly informed that that plant had to close down last summer because there was not sufficient flaxseed and such like materials available in the west, because that flax and processing cereals had been moved east at that time. Naturally the cost would be too much to transport it back west.

Surely, with the grain and with an elevator such as that in Saskatoon, there was a great lack of co-operation somewhere between federal government departments, and certainly a vast waste of money. The building in Saskatoon cost over $1,500,000 to construct to begin with, and they are spending around $78,000 a year for administration, and have been for the last five years. They refuse to spend money to develop an industry that should have been developed where practically all of the flax is grown. Some of this processed material had to be shipped back west. I hope the minister can give an explanation of this huge expenditure to take care of the flax for that year. I pointed out what happened to the elevator in Saskatoon, and the lack of material being stored there last year.

Mr. Howe: The explanation of this item is that for the crop year 1948 the government guaranteed a price of $4 per bushel for flax marketed in that year. A very large crop of flax was grown, and while it looked like a safe price at the time it was set—it was a dollar below the guaranteed price of the previous year—suddenly instead of there being an active demand for flax there was no demand at all except for domestic sales, with a very little for export. The result is that the wheat board was not able to market in the year 1948 any more than a small part of their flax crop. Owing to a small crop last year the board is gradually disposing of the surplus. This amount is required to pay the carrying charges on the flax that was taken in, and to write the crop down to its current price of $3.80.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

As for storing flax in Saskatoon, the purpose of the wheat board is to market grain, not to store it. Storing is only incidental to marketing. Saskatoon is not a marketing point for flax, and it was moved to the market. It was the duty of anyone who had a crushing plant in the west to make arrangements with the board to store flax in Saskatoon, or to move it anywhere else, and arrangements could easily have been made. That was done to the extent that the arrangements were made, but nevertheless the board cannot run the business of the crushers. It can only market the farmers' grain to the best advantage, which is the work delegated to the wheat board.

Mr. Knight: Is it not true that at the time the crushing plant at Saskatoon was short of flax the wheat board was paying storage for that same flax in some of the large elevators in the east?

Mr. Howe: It may be.

Mr. Knight: I think the answer is not "may be" but "yes".

Mr. Ross (Souris): I would think the same situation is true of wheat. I understand that that elevator has a storage capacity of considerably over 5 million bushels. I say to those people who are very much interested in the Hudson bay route that this would be the place to store wheat as well as flax. There will have to be much more explanation of the matter than that given by the minister. I understand that there were less than 12,000 bushels on the average stored during all of last year in a building owned by the government with a storage capacity of over 5 million bushels. I understand that the wheat board will have quite an item for storage at the head of the lakes. At the same time their own building is standing out there idle throughout the year. There should be some explanation of that situation.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, we are losing export sales on wheat today because we cannot get enough wheat in marketing position. My hon. friend knows enough about wheat to know that marketing positions are Vancouver, or the head of the lakes or an eastern shipping point. Saskatoon is not a marketing point. Any grain stored there would be out of position and would cause that much further loss of export sales.

Item agreed to.

Atomic energy control board—

614. Chalk River project—capital and operating expenses—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this item is a vote for the Chalk River project. I am heartily in favour of it, but I would like to take this opportunity of urging upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce that a special committee of the house be set up at this session to consider the working of the atomic energy control board or the work of the research council. The minister will remember that a recommendation of last year's committee was to this effect:

> Your committee has been in existence for only six weeks and in that time has been unable to complete its examination into the field of atomic energy development. Furthermore, this field is a new one, is widening rapidly, and may well be of tremendous importance to Canada. For these reasons your committee recommends that a special committee be reconstituted next session.

On the last day of the session I raised this question, and the minister's reply will be found at page 3108 of Hansard. He said:

> I presume the next session will come early in the new year. I fully agree with my hon. friend that the work of the committee was splendid. I believe it had a good deal to do with raising the spirits of the staff at Chalk River. It occurs to me that a similar committee might be set up to look into all the work of the national research council, including atomic energy. I am not promising that, but such a proposal could be considered next year.

Atomic energy developments, of course, are going on all the time, and the work of the research council is progressing, too. Great strides are being made by that council. It is of the utmost importance that the house should be kept in touch with these developments. I am quite sure that other hon. members who served on the atomic energy committee last year will agree with me when I say that the co-operation in that committee was excellent. Everyone who belonged to it was very proud to be a member, and felt that there was a great deal more work to be done. It would be a pity if that work were not to be continued during the present session. I urge upon the minister that he agree to the setting up of a committee at this session to consider either the work of the atomic energy control board, or, in line with his own suggestion, to deal with the work of the national research council.

Mr. Howe: The matter will be given consideration.

Mr. Adamson: This is an item of $200,000. Most of the work is not public. What is the total cost of the Chalk River plant? Does it sell radioactive isotopes to industry? If so, what is the revenue from those sales?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, this item simply covers certain supplies. I do not know what the total cost is. I suppose it is getting up toward $27 million or $28 million.

Mr. Adamson: That is the total capital cost.

Mr. Howe: Yes. The revenue is small, but it is beginning to build up. I think in the year 1950-51 there will be substantial revenue, perhaps running to $250,000 or $300,000.

Mr. Drew: Will the minister make a definite statement as to whether there will be a committee?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Drew: So we are just left to guess as to whether there may or may not be a committee?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Drew: This is a perfect example of the way the government keeps demanding that there be some co-operation, but offers none.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sinclair: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Fraser: Well, well.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on this particular item. As a rule the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is very much to the point in his remarks. In this particular instance I do not think he is. I think that instead of asking for the setting up of a committee on atomic energy, specifically, the main attempt of this committee should be to set up a committee on defence matters, generally, because I feel that this matter of atomic energy is one that is tied in directly with matters of defence.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand the hon. member wishes to speak to item 614?

Mr. Gillis: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: That refers to the Chalk River project, capital and operating expenses, $200,000.

Mr. Gillis: Yes, and that is exactly the item I am talking about. So far as I am concerned, the amount required in this vote, for the purposes for which it is intended, receives my hearty approval. I am completely in accord with it. At the same time I do not think these two matters can be separated to any great extent.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was permitted to make a suggestion that a committee should be set up to supervise, scrutinize and report to the house concerning matters which may come within the scope of this vote. It is concerning the remarks of the hon. member that I wish to speak. I say that a committee of that kind at this time is not one which would meet with my approval. In my view the time has come when we should get down to considering a main committee on defence.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the chairman rises it is one of the rules that hon. members must resume their seats. I see now that the hon. member has done so, and I thank him for it. I believe I heard him say that he is in complete accord with item 614. Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Then I would ask the hon. member to relate his remarks to the item under discussion, and not speak about national defence.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not wish to be bothersome, or to delay the Minister of National Defence in having this item passed. I will repeat what I said earlier, that I agree with the principle behind this item. However, if we wish to discuss it in detail, in all its ramifications, it will take a long time. I have no intention of doing that either—and I am not going to talk this out, until eleven o'clock.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps the hon. member would allow an interruption. As I indicated earlier, there is some importance in passing a supply bill, including two of these items, today, if possible. It is impossible for me to be here until Friday. Tomorrow is private members' day. If I could have unanimous consent to a motion to sit a few minutes after eleven o'clock, I would hope that we might be able to conclude by that time. However, I appreciate the fact that to do so I would require unanimous consent. I would appreciate it personally if such consent could be given, because hon. members will understand that I have heavy commitments between now and next Tuesday when the budget is to be brought in. It would be a great accommodation if this procedure could be followed.

Mr. Gillis: I can complete my remarks.

Mr. Abbott: Then if I might put the motion now to sit after eleven o'clock—

Mr. Gillis: All I want to do is to ask a question.

Mr. Abbott: I would need a motion, anyway.

Mr. Gillis: If you want to; I will do anything to accommodate you.

Mr. Abbott: I would make the motion to sit after eleven o'clock, if I could have unanimous consent—in the hope that it would take only a few minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. Knowles: Only for a limited time. So often we grant a few minutes, and we are here for an hour.

Mr. Abbott: I should hope we might do it by 11.15. We have a few more items to pass, all of the usual year-end variety, to pay bills. Then we have to put through two bills founded on the interim supply. I should hope to conclude that.

Mr. Drew: I am quite prepared to sit as long as required, and I wish to have that understood. But I also wish it definitely understood that these are not just a few items to be dealt with. There are two very important items here which have not been discussed previously. One of these amounts to $42 million and the other to $4,317,000. I certainly intend to direct a number of remarks to the latter item, because it is the first time it has been before the house.

Mr. Abbott: I should hope we might sit a sufficient length of time to dispose of these, and would ask if the house would be prepared to do that. Of course, I am not in a position to insist. However, it would greatly facilitate the job I have to do if that consent were given. We have had close to five hours of discussion now.

Mr. Fleming: It will be just as easy, with unanimous consent, to take it tomorrow.

Mr. MacInnis: I have no objection to sitting fifteen or twenty minutes, but I am not going to sit here, if there is going to be a discussion, until twelve o'clock.

Mr. Abbott: Then may I suggest this: tomorrow is private members' day, on resolutions, I understand. If I could have unanimous consent to complete this job at three o'clock, perhaps it would suit the house better. I would appreciate it very much if that could be done.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow being private members' day, after the Minister of Finance has concluded the business he announced a moment ago we will take up resolutions standing in members' names, following the order under standing order No. 15.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration service—

565. Publicity and extension division—further amount required, $12,000.

Experimental farms service—

566. Branch farms and stations and illustration stations—further amount required, $38,000.

Production service—

Health of Animals—

567. Administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and Meat and Canned Foods Act—further amount required, $63,000.

568. Compensation for animals slaughtered—further amount required, $1,225,000.

Marketing service—

569. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $9,448.

Special—

570. UNEMPLOYMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY ON MARCH 21

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell (Minister of Labour): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct a statement made yesterday in reply to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne) appearing at page 978 of Hansard. I spoke with the hon. member after the sitting concluded. I said that twenty per cent of the people unemployed in Canada reside in the province of Newfoundland. I intended to say that approximately twenty per cent of the employable people of Newfoundland are unemployed. The employable population of Newfoundland is approximately 112,000. The total number of those registered for employment with our national employment service offices at March 2 was 18,600, so the actual percentage is 17. I was using the approximate percentage. I might add that 13,700 of these persons seeking work are either in receipt of unemployment assistance or insurance benefits, or are waiting for their claims to be processed. The total expenditure on this account for the month of March will be almost $1 million.

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE

PROGRESS TOWARD CONSTRUCTION—CHANGE IN WIDTH OF ROADWAY

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the strait of Canso bridge.

In March, 1949, the board of engineers which was appointed to review plans for the betterment of transportation facilities across the strait of Canso submitted their final report, in which it was recommended that a low level bridge for both highway and railway traffic should be constructed at an estimated total cost of $13,503,128. In May of the same year the Department of Transport entered into a contract with P. L. Pratley, consulting engineer of Montreal, Quebec, for the design and supervision of construction of the bridge on a fixed fee basis.

Dr. Pratley immediately established his necessary staff in order to carry out field and office investigations leading to the award of a contract for the construction of the bridge. A contract was awarded to Foundation Maritime Limited for eight borings on the bridge site in order to establish definite foundation conditions. These borings were completed in the first week of September of last year. Negotiations were carried out by Dr. Pratley with both the province of Nova Scotia and the Canadian National Railways in order to establish the final location of the bridge and other factors.

The report of the board of engineers adopted a clear roadway width of 22 feet between curbs for the highway portion of the bridge. Contract plans and specifications were undertaken by Dr. Pratley on this basis.

The dominion-provincial conference on trans-Canada highways, at their meetings in Ottawa on December 15 and 16 last, adopted a minimum roadway width between curbs of 24 feet for all bridges in excess of 30 feet in length which were to be constructed as part of the highway system. As a result of the adoption of this standard, further negotiations were undertaken with the province in order to determine their wishes in respect of the roadway width of the Canso bridge in the light of the standard as adopted by the conference. Their attention was drawn to the fact that an increase in width from 22 to 24 feet would result in an increase in cost of approximately two per cent of the original total estimate and would also delay the calling for tenders for the work by three or four months due to the necessity of a complete redesign of the steel superstructure and foundations.

Under date of February 24, 1950, I received a letter from the Hon. Angus L. Macdonald, premier of Nova Scotia, in which he informed me that, while he agreed that the insistence of 24 feet would delay the undertaking, he considered that the bridge should be designed for a roadway width of 24 feet between curbs to allow for a reasonable safety factor in highway travel on the structure. On receipt of this letter, Dr. Pratley was informed by my office to immediately change his plans and specifications to conform to this standard.

Previous to this change, it was anticipated that final plans and specifications would have been ready to call for tenders on construction in March of this year with actual construction beginning by August or September. As matters now stand, it will not be possible to call for tenders until July, with actual construction work on the main piers deferred until early next spring. It is expected, however, that during this year the province will undertake work on the highway approaches on the Cape Breton side of the bridge, and likewise the Canadian National Railways will undertake the necessary revisions to railway lines on the island leading to the proposed structure.

Mr. Cruickshank: May I ask the minister a question in connection with this statement? How many people will this bridge serve?

Mr. Chevrier: It is not a question of serving people; it is a question of connecting the mainland of Nova Scotia with Cape Breton island, by means of a provincial highway. The Canadian National railways will also operate over this bridge.

Mr. Cruickshank: Will the pipe line also?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STAFF OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS—ONTARIO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. James Sinclair (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Last evening the member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) asked the Minister of Finance whether the staff of the Sergeant-at-Arms was covered by the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Act. The answer is yes.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SLIDE DETECTOR FENCES

Mr. Fulton:

1. At what points have electric slide detector fences been installed on the Canadian National Railways line in British Columbia?
2. What other safety warning devices against rocks and slides have been installed?
3. Have any reports been received on the operation of these installations?
4. Do the reports indicate that these types of installations are satisfactory for the purpose of giving warning of rocks and slides?
5. If not, in what way are they unsatisfactory?
6. What further or other installations for this purpose are contemplated, and when is it expected the work on them may begin?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. A test installation of 1,720 feet of slide detector fences has been made on the Ashcroft subdivision between mileages 93·7 and 94·0.

2. In selected areas there is provided a twenty-four-hour inspection service by watchmen and patrolmen. Automatic signals have also been installed in certain sections to better facilitate train operations.

3. Yes.

4. Not in so far as slide detector fences are concerned.

5. Difficulty is experienced in keeping slide detector fences in service at periods of heavy snowfall and of interference from snow slides.

6. Additional installations of slide detector fences will be considered after reviewing results achieved from experimental installations.

NEWFOUNDLAND—AMOUNTS COLLECTED IN DUTIES AND TAXES

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

What amount has been collected in Newfoundland during the eleven-month period ending February 28, for (a) excise duties; (b) custom duties; (c) income taxes; (d) succession duties?

Mr. McCann:

(a) Excise taxes, $2,646,306.08; excise duties, $1,222,467.02; total, $3,868,773.10; (b) customs import duties, $3,011,714.12; (c) $3,446,248; (d) $30,990.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL PURCHASES IN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Isnor:

1. What quantity of coal (a) Canadian; (b) United States, was purchased by the Canadian National Railways in the years 1947, 1948, 1949?
2. Of orders placed, what quantities of (a) Canadian; (b) United States, coal were delivered in each of these years?
3. What are the names of coal suppliers (a) Canadian; (b) American?
4. Have coal orders for years 1950 and 1951 been placed as yet?
5. If so, for what quantity in (a) Canada; (b) United States?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Orders were placed as follows:

	Canadian N.T.	United States N.T.
1947	2,349,400	8,692,900
1948	2,822,700	6,936,200
1949	2,515,200	4,223,100

2.

	Canadian N.T.	United States N.T.
1947	1,733,300	6,192,200
1948	2,123,600	5,376,500
1949	2,237,800	3,022,300

3. For competitive reasons it is not in the general interest to provide the names of individual suppliers.

4. Contracts involving prospective deliveries in 1950 are still under negotiation. No orders have been placed for 1951.

5. See answer to No. 4.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PENSIONS

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of only the basic pension of $25 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of non-contributory service pensions (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month; (b) $30 to $39.99 per month; (c) $40 to $49.99 per month; (d) $50 to $59.99 per month; (e) $60 to $69.99 per month; (f) $70 to 79.99 per month; (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month; (h) $90 to $99.99 per month; (i) $100 or over per month?

4. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions in part basic and in part contributory (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month; (b) $30 to $39.99 per month; (c) $40 to $49.99 per month; (d) $50 to $59.99 per month; (e) $60 to $69.99 per month; (f) $70 to $79.99 per month; (g) $80 to $89.99 per month; (h) $90 to $99.99 per month; (i) $100 or over per month?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Thirty-one under C.N.R. prior plan.

2. 2,952.

4. (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month, 450; (b) $30 to $39.99 per month, 2,064; (c) $40 to $49.99 per month, 1,588; (d) $50 to $59.99 per month, 1,135; (e) $60 to $69.99 per month, 896; (f) $70 to $79.99 per month, 751; (g) $80 to $89.99 per month, 652; (h) $90 to $99.99 per month, 513; (i) $100 or over per month, 1,806—Total, 9,855.

Mr. Knowles:

1. What is the total number of persons employed by the Canadian National Railways?

2. Of these, how many are eligible to contribute toward a supplemental pension in addition to the basic pension of $25 per month to which they will be entitled on retirement at age 65?

3. How many are now contributing toward such a supplemental pension?

4. How many Canadian National Railways employees, upon retirement, will qualify, according to their present status for non-contributory service pensions?

5. How many employees now working for the Canadian National Railways will be entitled on retirement, according to their present status, to only the basic pension of $25 per month?

6. Is the basic pension of $25 per month available to all employees, and, if so, on what conditions?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. On Canadian lines at December 31, 1949, 103,939.

2. All except temporary employees and those who commenced after age fifty-five and those who are now contributing to other railway pension funds, viz.: 5,091 contributors to Intercolonial provident fund and 18 contributors to Grand Trunk Railway superannuation fund.

3. Contributors to C.N.R. pension plan, 37,702; contributors to I.C.R. and P.E.I. provident fund, 5,091; contributors to G.T.R. superannuation and provident fund association, 18.

4. Service pensions are payable to employees who entered the service before attaining age fifty who at December 31, 1934, had at least ten years' allowable service and at age sixty-five have at least fifteen years' allowable service. It is not possible to say how many employees will meet these requirements.

5. There is no record of the number of employees who on retirement will be entitled to only the basic pension of $25 per month. Approximately only 35 per cent of eligible employees are contributing to a supplementary pension.

6. Basic pensions are payable to: (a) employees who entered the service before December 31, 1934, who had less than ten years' allowable service at that date and who have at least fifteen years' allowable service at age sixty-five; (b) employees who entered the service after December 31, 1934, at not over age forty-five and who at age sixty-five have at least twenty years' allowable service.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—ASSAULTS ON OFFICIALS

Mr. Fulton:

1. Was a D.V.A. official shot and wounded by a veteran of the first world war at Port Arthur recently?

2. If so, what are the names of the official and the veteran concerned?

3. Is the veteran in receipt of a disability pension? If so, for what disabilities and what degree of disability in each case?

4. What was the subject of discussion, or the ostensible purpose of the visit, between the veteran and the D.V.A. official on this occasion?

5. Has the minister or the department any information as to the grievance which caused the veteran to act as he did? If so, what are the facts in this connection?

6. How many assaults with or without shooting have been made on D.V.A. or Canadian pension commission officials by veterans since the end of the war in 1945, and where did these take place?

Mr. Mutch:

1. Yes.

2. C. H. H. Moss; A. J. N. Gagnon.

3. No.

4. Discussion with respect to the reinstatement of war veterans allowance.

5. Yes. War veterans allowance was approved at the maximum permissive single rate of $40.41 per month, effective July 16,

1948, the date the application form was received at the district office of the department in Winnipeg. On October 7, 1948, the veteran commenced employment as barn boss with the Long Lac Pulp and Paper Company, Long Lac, at a gross wage of $7.35 per day.

As he was thus employed and self-supporting, war veterans allowance was not indicated and was suspended as from the date of commencement of his employment.

War veterans allowance had been paid up to November 30, 1948, thereby creating an overpayment of $73, which Mr. Gagnon refunded.

His employment with the Long Lac Pulp and Paper Company terminated on February 8, 1949, and he immediately applied for reinstatement to war veterans allowance.

It was computed that his gross earnings during the above period of employment totalled approximately $900. After paying for his room and board, laundry, etc., during his employment, he had $600 cash remaining according to his declaration dated February 11, 1949, and this was the amount which the board took into account, as his earnings rather than the gross amount of $900, when considering his application for reinstatement to war veterans allowance.

Furthermore, from these earnings of $600 an additional exemption of $125 was allowed for various incidental expenses, such as transportation, extra essential clothing, etc., and the amount finally taken into account as net earnings was $475.

On the basis of a veterans allowance year commencing October 7, 1948, the date of commencement of the veteran's employment with the Long Lac Company, his income position was as follows:

Net earnings October 7, 1948 to February 8, 1949, $475; balance available for W.V.A. $135; total, $610; and war veterans allowance was reinstated at the rate of $18.76 per month, effective March 1, 1949, which, with his earnings, would have provided Mr. Gagnon with the maximum income permissive under the War Veterans Allowance Act during the veterans allowance year commencing October 7, 1948.

Then, under date of June 19, 1949, Mr. Gagnon advised that he had been working since June 1, 1949, but did not know how he would be able to keep it up. He stated that he could not maintain himself on $18.76 a month and so was obliged to work.

The letter was addressed from a depot of the Marathon Paper Mills, signifying that this company must be his employers.

[Mr. Mutch.]

As he was again employed and self-supporting, payment of war veterans allowance was cancelled effective June 1, 1949, and, in the communication to Mr. Gagnon informing him of the cancellation, he was also informed that if and when his present work ceased he was at liberty to apply through the district office of the Department of Veterans Affairs in Winnipeg for reconsideration.

This letter, which was dated July 18, 1949, was addressed to Mr. Gagnon care of Marathon Paper Mills, Caramat depot, Ontario, but, as he had left the employ of that company in the meantime, it was unclaimed and returned to the war veterans allowance board, and in August, 1949, was forwarded to the district office in Winnipeg with the request that it be forwarded on to Mr. Gagnon at his right address.

Under date of September 8, 1949, the district office in Winnipeg advised that the veteran's correct address was then care of Mrs. Ernest Gagnon, Ste. Amelie, Manitoba, and that the board's letter dated July 18, 1949, had been forwarded to that address.

On December 12, 1949, Mr. Gagnon called at the department's office in Port Arthur requesting immediate payment of war veterans allowance. He was again advised that it would be necessary to reapply, but he wanted to know what he was supposed to do in the meantime, remarked that the government could keep the allowance, and walked out. The war veterans allowance board heard nothing of the case between the time of reforwarding the letter of July 18, 1949, and Mr. Gagnon's visit to the Port Arthur office on February 10, 1950.

6. There have been two cases of assault with shooting. Other minor incidents, due to over-indulgence in alcohol or other causes, have occurred, but no statistical record has been maintained by the department.

CRIMINAL CODE—APPLICATION TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Higgins:

What steps are being taken to make the provisions of the Criminal Code applicable to Newfoundland?

Mr. Garson: The Department of Justice and the Department of the Attorney General of Newfoundland are studying the matter in order to decide whether the Criminal Code should be brought into force in Newfoundland by act of parliament or by proclamation, and to decide what statutes of Newfoundland should at the same time be repealed. It is expected to bring it into force in the near future, and before the end of the present session of parliament.

IRRIGATION—SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER

Mr. Diefenbaker:

What have been the expenditures month by month since the first day of July, 1949, to date, on the South Saskatchewan river irrigation and development plan?

Mr. McCubbin:

July	$ 136,637.76
August	94,877.96
September	74,700.99
October	100,891.61
November	91,527.62
December	79,964.10
January	50,052.72
February	53,363.35
	$ 682,016.11
Expenditure prior to July, 1949	567,802.30
Expenditure to date	$1,249,818.41

FISHERIES—COASTAL PROTECTION SERVICE

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

1. Have steps been taken towards setting up a joint committee representing the departments of fisheries, transport, and national defence, for the purpose of unifying and improving the coastal protection service?

2. If so, has such a committee been set up?

3. Has the committee been instructed to investigate improvements in the protective service for fishermen?

4. If so, will consideration be given to the provision of a radio-equipped and all-weather sea rescue and emergency towing service for small fishing craft?

5. When will the recommendations of this committee be made known, and when will action be taken to implement such recommendations?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.

2. An interdepartmental committee has been set up to review the present arrangements for search and rescue and to make recommendations for improved and more efficient service.

3. The search and rescue is intended to cover all seafarers operating off the Canadian coasts.

4. The terms of reference of this committee quoted in answer 2 above are sufficiently embracing to cover this consideration.

5. The recommendations of this committee will shortly be available when the action required to implement them will be considered.

FREIGHT TONNAGE THROUGH NORTH SYDNEY VIA PORT AUX BASQUES, NFLD.

Mr. Higgins:

What was the total tonnage of freight routed through North Sydney via Port aux Basques in 1949?

Mr. Chevrier: The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

Total tonnage (all traffic) handled at North Sydney in 1949 amounted to 64,129 tons. Considerable time and labour would be involved in order to ascertain tonnage handled between North Sydney and Port aux Basques as this would require the examination of waybills of every inward and outward shipment between the mainland and Newfoundland.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—RENFREW HEIGHTS, VANCOUVER

Mr. Green:

1. What was the cost of building the houses constructed for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in what is known as Renfrew heights in the city of Vancouver?

2. What was the cost of servicing this development by installing services, sewers, water, paved roads and other services?

3. Do either of these costs include any allowance for overhead or operating cost of the corporation?

4. If so, what amount?

Mr. Prudham:

1. Building cost, $3,512,578.35; unit cost, $5,994.16.

2.

Sewer, water and gas	658,610.69
Street lighting	2,251.48
Sidewalks, curbs and gutters	144,894.41
Street paving	109,041.09
		914,797.67
Land and land improvements (including an amount of $10,000 representing the unexpended portion of the contract to landscape the project)		538,562.02
		1,453,359.69

3. Yes. Construction overhead cost is included in building cost.

4. $64,460.

RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIANS WITH DIPLOMATIC STATUS IN U.S.S.R.

Mr. Adamson:

1. How many Canadians are at the present time employed with diplomatic status in the U.S.S.R.?

2. What restrictions are placed on our diplomats in the U.S.S,R.?

3. How are their movements restricted?

Mr. Pearson:

1. Four.

2 and 3. The principal restriction on Canadian diplomats in the U.S.S.R. is an order of the Soviet foreign ministry of September 30, 1948, prohibiting foreign diplomats in Moscow from travelling to a very large number of places beyond a radius of 50 kilometres from Moscow, and most localities within that area. The list of places includes the Soviet Socialist republics of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldavia, Finno-Karelia, Azerbaijan, Armenia, Turkmenia, Uzbekia, Kirghizia, Tajikistan, Kazakstan, and most of the Ukraine and Byelorussia, including Kiev and Minsk, the capitals of the two latter republics, which are, it will be recalled, members of the United Nations.

Some areas still remain accessible to foreign diplomats on condition that advance information about the proposed journey is given to the Soviet foreign ministry. Since the Soviet order was issued some members of the staff of the Canadian embassy in Moscow have been permitted to travel to Yaroslavl and Rybinsk, Kuibishev and Stalingrad.

This seems to be the only formal restriction placed by the Soviet authorities on our diplomats in Moscow but many Soviet administrative requirements, which are unobjectionable in principle, are applied in a restrictive and hampering fashion.

There are also restrictions placed on Soviet citizens in their dealings with all foreigners, including diplomats, such as the decree of December 18, 1947, regulating the relations between Soviet officials and foreigners.

Finally the hostile attitude of the Soviet government and the Soviet press has had the effect of convincing the citizens of the U.S.S.R., with few exceptions, that association with foreigners is dangerous, and hence the usual contacts of diplomats with ordinary people, and even Soviet officials, are greatly restricted.

RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIANS WITH DIPLOMATIC STATUS IN CERTAIN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Adamson:

1. How many Canadians are at the present time employed with diplomatic status in each of the following countries: (a) Hungary; (b) Bulgaria; (c) Albania; (d) Roumania; (e) Czechoslovakia; (f) Poland: (g) Yugoslavia?
2. What restrictions are placed on them?

Mr. Pearson:

1. (a) Nil; (b) nil; (c) nil; (d) nil; (e) three; (f) three (g) three.

2. No formal restrictions are placed on our diplomats in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia. But the same considerations mentioned with regard to the U.S.S.R. also apply in varying degrees to Czechoslovakia and Poland. It is not so much a question of carefully spelled out restrictions on our diplomats, as a general campaign by the governments of Poland and Czechoslovakia among their peoples to make it unhealthy for them to associate with foreigners. For example, the expulsion by the Czechoslovak government of two non-diplomatic members of the air attaché's staff in Prague was apparently motivated by a desire to get rid of two foreigners who had built up over two years a small circle of Czech friends.

So far our diplomats have escaped the more drastic treatment which has been recently meted out to some other representatives of the western powers in the satellite countries, but there has been pressure on our locally-employed staff in Czechoslovakia. One Czech clerk at the Canadian legation in Prague failed to report for work one day. All that has been learned of him since then was that he had been "detained by the police" and that he was in the local prison where political offenders are usually held. Another Czech clerk was refused a permit to continue working at the legation.

The cumulative effect is, of course, to isolate the western diplomatic missions from contact with the peoples of the countries where they are stationed, and to restrict very considerably the normal functioning of a diplomatic mission.

CANADIAN TRADE OR CULTURAL AGENCIES IN CERTAIN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Adamson:

Are there any Canadian trade or cultural organizations operating in any of the following countries: (a) U.S.S.R.; (b) Hungary; (c) Bulgaria; (d) Albania; (e) Czechoslovakia; (f) Poland; (g) Yugoslavia?

Mr. Pearson: Canada maintains diplomatic missions in the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia. These missions have, among their other duties, the task of trying to develop trade and cultural relations in so far as this is possible in existing conditions with the countries where they are located. Canada does not maintain any missions in Hungary, Bulgaria and Albania.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION—SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA—FLOOD PREVENTION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. Wright:

1. Have any surveys been made by P.F.R.A. along the Saskatchewan or Carrot rivers in northeastern Saskatchewan or northwestern Manitoba, with a view to preventing flooding or reclaiming flooded land in these areas?
2. If so, what reports or recommendations to the government were made, as a result of these surveys?
3. If not, will the government give consideration to having this work done?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes, with a view to determining whether land can be reclaimed or flooding prevented.
2. Surveys not yet completed.
3. See answers to Nos. 1 and 2.

MERCHANT MARINE—SUBSIDIES—EMPLOYMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA CREW

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

1. What are the qualifications for the granting of a subsidy for Canadian merchant marine vessels whose owners desire to continue to operate under the Canadian flag?

2. In view of the employment situation in Nova Scotia, will every consideration be given to Nova Scotia ships operating in the foreign trade with Nova Scotia crew members?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. The financial relief which it is proposed to grant the shipping industry is temporary and for one year only.

To qualify, ship owners must agree (a) to operate vessels for a period of one year; (b) to employ Canadian domiciled crews.

It is anticipated that some forty vessels will be assisted, and these will be selected on the basis of their usefulness to Canada in the event of an emergency. The employment of Canadian domiciled crews will ensure the maintenance in Canada of a nucleus of trained merchant seamen to man these and other ships which Canada may have at her disposal should a state of emergency arise.

2. Yes, every consideration. It must be borne in mind that the employment of seamen from any particular area will to a large extent depend upon the owners' and operators' desire to avail themselves of the assistance afforded by the government.

*INCREASES IN BASIC STEEL PRICES

Mr. MacInnis:

What increases were allowed in the price of basic steel from the establishment of price controls to date?

Mr. McIlraith: It is not possible to answer this question as asked. I understand the hon. member has been given the information he was really seeking, and is agreeable to dropping the question.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Question dropped.

EMIGRATION FROM NEWFOUNDLAND TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Higgins:

How many Newfoundland residents have entered the United States to take up permanent residence since April 1, 1949?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Information is not available, as statistics are not maintained of emigration from Canada.

CORN—IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Coldwell:

1. How many bushels of American corn have been imported by Canada since January 1, 1949?

2. Has any of this corn been stored in elevator space allotted for the purpose by the Canadian wheat board?

3. Who owns this corn?

4. At what prices was this corn bought from the United States?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Imports of corn from the United States entered for consumption into Canada, calendar year, 1949, 8,436,319 bushels.

2. Yes. Imports of American corn for consumption in Canada are unrestricted. However, the Canadian wheat board maintains a liaison with the terminals to ensure that American grain, including corn received into Canadian terminals for storage and furtherance for export, does not unduly interfere with the movement of Canadian grain. The use of Canadian facilities for the handling of American grain including corn is encouraged, provided that the movement of Canadian grain is not prejudiced.

3. Owned by private companies and individuals.

4. Not known, but the total declared value of the imports listed in answer No. 1 is $12,282,307.

YUKON COAL PRODUCTION—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Green:

1. What amount was provided by the government, and by what department of government, for the development of coal in Yukon during the past five years?

2. To what corporation or person was such amount paid?

3. On what terms was such amount provided?

4. What amount of said advance has been returned to the government?

5. What tonnage of coal has been produced from the operation so assisted?

6. What tonnage of coal is still available to be mined at said mine?

Mr. McCann:

1. (a) $294,124.60; (b) Department of Mines and Resources (Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in 1950).

2. Yukon Coal Company Limited.

3. Under terms of an agreement dated July 10, 1947, between His Majesty and Yukon Coal Company Limited, which provides for loan advances up to a maximum of $300,000 repayable with interest at 3½ per cent per annum at the rate of $2 per ton on all coal sold. Loan funds to be used for development and operation of the Tantalus Butte coal mine, near Carmacks, Yukon.

4. $15,788.24.

5. 4,303 tons sold.

6. Recoverable reserves of coal have been estimated by government geologists at approximately 7,500,000 tons. Developed tonnage not estimated.

Questions

WHEAT BOARD—INSPECTORS IN ALBERTA, SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA—R. MAHONEY

Mr. Quelch:

1. How many inspectors are employed by the Canadian wheat board in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba?
2. Is a Mr. R. Mahoney, formerly manager of the Manitoba wheat pool, still employed by the wheat board? If so, in what capacity?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. 11.

2. No.

YACHT "SANS PEUR"—POST-WAR DISPOSITION OF FURNISHINGS

Mr. Herridge:

1. Was the Duke of Sutherland's yacht Sans Peur requisitioned by the Canadian government for service in world war II?
2. If so, was this yacht delivered to Canadian government completely furnished with silverware, crockery, linen, rugs, and furniture?
3. Were these furnishings returned to the owner when the vessel was returned?
4. If not, what disposition was made of these furnishings?
5. Was compensation paid to the owner for loss or damage, if any, of these furnishings?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. No. The Sans Peur was chartered from the British ministry of war transport, from whom the ship was subsequently purchased by this department.

2. No. Only crockery and furniture used by the ship's officers and crew were taken over with the ship.

3. No. See answers to Nos. 1 and 2.

4. Crockery and furniture taken over with the ship were used in the ship or elsewhere in the naval service.

5. Answered by No. 1.

U.S.S.R. EMBASSY IN CANADA—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

Mr. Adamson:

1. How many persons enjoying diplomatic privileges are accredited to the embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Canada?
2. What privileges and immunities do they enjoy?
3. What restrictions, if any, are placed on their movements in Canada?
4. What are their names?

Mr. Pearson:

1. Eight.

2. The immunities and privileges prescribed by international law, namely: immunity of domicile and from criminal and civil jurisdiction; general exemption from direct and personal taxation, where such exemption is administratively feasible.

3. They are not, of course, permitted to visit classified establishments and areas such as Chalk River. Moreover, since our service attachés in the Soviet union are not invited to certain soviet military functions, we have reciprocated by placing similar restrictions on soviet service attachés in Canada.

4. Mr. Mikhail V. Degtiar, counsellor and chargé d'affaires ad interim; Mr. Alexei Sokolov, first secretary; Lt.-Col. Grigori Volochko, assistant military attaché; Mr. V. P. Bourdine, second secretary; Mr. Dmitri Moussine, second secretary; Capt. Ivan V. Poupychev, assistant military attaché; Mr. Pavel Komine, attaché; Mr. Valentin Vorobiev, attaché.

FOREIGN LEGATIONS IN CANADA—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

Mr. Adamson:

1. How many persons enjoying diplomatic privileges are accredited to the legations of each of the following countries (a) Hungary; (b) Bulgaria; (c) Roumania; (d) Albania; (e) Czechoslovakia; (f) Poland; (g) Yugoslavia?
2. What immunities and privileges do they enjoy?
3. What restrictions, if any, are placed on their movements in Canada?

Mr. Pearson:

1. (a) Hungary, nil; (b) Bulgaria, nil; (c) Roumania, nil; (d) Albania, nil; (e) Czechoslovakia, 2; (f) Poland, 4; (g) Yugoslavia, 5.

2. The immunities and privileges prescribed by international law, namely: immunity of domicile and from criminal and civil jurisdiction; general exemption from direct and personal taxation, where such exemption is administratively feasible.

3. Entrance to classified establishments and areas is by invitation only and the Canadian authorities naturally exercise discretion in issuing such invitations.

TRADE OR CULTURAL AGENCIES OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES IN CANADA

Mr. Adamson:

1. What known trade, cultural or any other agencies of the following countries are currently operating in Canada (a) U.S.S.R.; (b) Hungary; (c) Bulgaria; (d) Albania; (e) Roumania; (f) Czechoslovakia; (g) Poland; (h) Yugoslavia?
2. What is the stated function of each agency, and to what country is it accredited?
3. How many personnel does each employ?

Mr. Pearson:

1. The U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia maintain diplomatic missions in Canada. The normal activities of such missions include the development of trade and cultural relations with the country to which they are accredited. Hungary, Bulgaria, Albania and Roumania do not maintain official establishments of any kind in Canada. Poland maintains consulates in Montreal and Winnipeg. Czechoslovakia has a consulate general in Montreal. Their activities include trade questions and normal consular affairs. In addition, the official Soviet government press agency, Tass, maintains a representative in Ottawa.

2. The function of the diplomatic missions is that of facilitating the conduct of relations between their countries and Canada. The consulates are responsible for the carrying out of normal consular duties, which include trade questions and looking after the legitimate interests of the nationals of these countries in Canada.

3. The diplomatic staff of the U.S.S.R. embassy numbers 8, and the non-diplomatic staff 15. The diplomatic staff of the Polish legation numbers 3 and the non-diplomatic staff 4. The consular staff of Poland numbers 2, and the clerical staff employed in the Polish consulates at Montreal and Winnipeg numbers 3. The diplomatic staff of the Czechoslovak legation numbers 2, and the non-diplomatic staff 3. The consular staff of Czechoslovakia is 1. The diplomatic staff of the Yugoslav legation numbers 5, and the non-diplomatic staff, 5.

FOREIGN CONSULAR OFFICIALS IN CANADA—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

Mr. Adamson:

1. How many consular officials are accredited to each of the following countries (a) U.S.S.R.; (b) Hungary; (c) Bulgaria; (d) Albania; (e) Roumania; (f) Czechoslovakia; (g) Poland; (h) Yugoslavia?
2. What privileges and immunities do they enjoy?
3. What restrictions, if any, are placed on their movements in Canada?

Mr. Pearson:

1. In Canada: (a) U.S.S.R., none; (b) Hungary, none; (c) Bulgaria, none; (d) Albania, none; (e) Roumania, none; (f) Czechoslovakia, 1; (g) Poland, 2; (h) Yugoslavia, none.

2. The privileges and immunities granted in Canada to consular officers of career in accordance with international practice, namely: inviolability of official premises, archives and communications; immunity in the performance of their official duties; exemption from customs duty; exemption from certain taxes such as income tax and succession duties; for consuls general limited excise exemptions.

3. None.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—FLOUR MILLING INDUSTRY

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Was a submission made to counsel following delivery to the Minister of Justice on the McGregor report on the milling industry for an opinion to ascertain whether the recommendations were such that proceedings either under the combines act or the Criminal Code should be taken?
2. If so, to whom was the submission made and on what date? If not, why was such a course not followed?
3. Was a legal opinion secured from the law officers of the crown or other counsel on the question as to whether the limitation of actions provided for in section 1141 of the Criminal Code applied to prosecutions under the Combines Act?

Mr. Garson:

1. Yes.

2. On July 11, 1949, to J. J. Kelly, K.C., Winnipeg, subsequently appointed to the Manitoba Court of King's Bench. On September 20, 1949, to T. N. Phelan, K.C., Toronto.

3. Yes.

SURVEY OF INVESTMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Knowles:

1. By whom was the survey of investment intentions for 1950, referred to by the Prime Minister on February 20, 1950, made?
2. When was this survey made, on what date were the results thereof reported, and to whom?
3. Are the detailed results of this survey available to members of parliament? If so, how may they be obtained?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Economic research and development branch, Department of Trade and Commerce, in conjunction with the dominion bureau of statistics.

2. During the months November and December, 1949, and January and February, 1950. Preliminary results were reported to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, and were made available in the supplement to the February issue of the Canadian Statistical Review on February 20, 1950.

3. See answer to No. 2. Final and detailed results will be included in "Private and Public Investment, Outlook 1950", to be tabled in parliament as soon as the document is available.

MOTOR VESSEL "ESKIMO"—QUESTION AS TO SUBSIDY

Mr. Higgins:

Has a subsidy been promised to either the provincial government of Prince Edward Island or a provincial government company of Prince Edward Island for the operation of the motor vessel Eskimo, in trade between Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—PAYMENTS TO HUSBAND AND WIFE

Mr. Argue:

1. Can a husband and wife receive separate payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for land operated by each?
2. If so, what are the regulations governing such payments, and what other factors, if any, are considered before payment is made?

Questions

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes.

2. A wife is eligible for separate payment when evidence is supplied that she owns and actually operates herself a farm apart and separate from her husband; for example, a farm inherited from a relative, a former husband, or purchased with her own funds. Separate payment is not made to a wife on land rented by her when living with her husband who owns and/or rents a large acreage, and who does all the farm work.

BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. Catherwood:

1. What was the total consumption of butter in Canada during each of the years 1948 and 1949?
2. What was the total consumption of margarine in Canada during the year 1949?
3. What percentage of the oils and other ingredients contained in margarine is imported?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. 370,153,000 pounds in 1948, and 315,338,000 pounds in 1949.

2. 71,992,000 pounds.

3. Total utilization of oils and fats in margarine production during 1949 was 60,074,339 pounds of which 44,814,521 pounds, or about 75 per cent, consisted of cottonseed, peanut, coconut and palm kernel oils. These would be imported either as raw product, crude or refined oils. It is not known what part of the remainder, consisting of soybean oil, sunflower oil, marine oils, oleo oils and other fats, was imported materials.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUMMER TRAINING CAMPS

Mr. Aylesworth:

*PATRONAGE

Mr. Knowles:

Who administers, handles, or has charge of, the patronage, on behalf of the federal government, in or for each of the following areas: Montreal and district, Toronto and district, Winnipeg and district, Vancouver and district?

Mr. St. Laurent: This question is similar to questions asked by the same hon. member on March 1 and March 16. The only answer must be one similar to the answers given to those questions, which will be found on pages 352 and 842 of Hansard.

Mr. Knowles: May I point out to the Prime Minister —

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: That does not save time, does it, Mr. Speaker? May I point out to the Prime Minister that notice of this question was given, and can be found in Votes and Proceedings, prior to the time the last question was answered.

Mr. St. Laurent: That is correct.

FUR PELTS

Mr. Lennard:

1. Of the fur pelts imported into Canada from the United States during the year 1949, was Russia the country of origin of any of these pelts?
2. If so, in what varieties, and what quantities of each variety?

Mr. McIlraith: Information not available.

INCOME TAX—FARMERS—REQUESTS TO FILE RETURNS

Mr. Thatcher:

How many farmers were specifically requested to file income tax returns by the Department of National Revenue in (a) Saskatchewan; (b) Manitoba; (c) Alberta; (d) Quebec, during each of the years 1946 and 1947?

Mr. McCann: The tax rolls in district income tax offices are not maintained in segments as to occupations or classes of business. Accordingly, no statistics are available to show the occupation of persons on tax rolls who appear to be delinquents and are requested to file income tax returns.

Mr. McCubbin: Return tabled.

ITALIAN BONDS HELD BY CANADIANS

Mr. Hansell:

1. What responsibility does the government assume in respect to Italian bonds bought and held by Canadians previous to hostilities?
2. What is the present situation in respect to Italian bonds held by Canadians?
3. Does the custodian of enemy property seek to obtain settlement of these bonds which have already become due?

Mr. Bradley: Return tabled.

BRIDGES BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Benidickson:

1. Has the Canadian government made any financial contributions towards the construction costs of bridges between Canada and the United States of America?
2. If so (a) where are these bridges located; (b) when were they constructed; (c) what amounts of money were contributed to each by the Canadian government?

GOLD—RESERVE AND EXPORTS

Mr. Boisvert:

1. What was the gold reserve of the Bank of Canada as at December 31, 1949?
2. What amount of gold was exported during 1949, and what countries received gold from Canada?
3. What amount of gold was received by each country?
4. What amount of gold has been sold to private persons during 1948 under section 25 of chapter 43 of the statutes of 1934?

BOARD OF TRANSPORT COMMISSIONERS—FREIGHT RATE EXPERTS

Mr. Hatfield:

1. What are the names and ages of each of the transport commissioners?
2. When was each appointed?
3. What was their business or profession before appointment to the board of transport commissioners?
4. How many freight rate experts are employed by the board of transport commissioners?
5. What are their names and what was their former employment?

Mr. Chevrier: Return tabled.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

PROPRIETARY OR PATENT MEDICINE ACT AND FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. MacNaught:

What is the per capita cost in Canada of the protection given by the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act and the Food and Drugs Act?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Return tabled.

1. What quantity of crude oil was imported into Canada, and from which countries, during the years 1947, 1948 and 1949?
2. At what places of entry into Canada was same imported?
3. Is there any charge or tax imposed on the importation of such oil and if so, how much?
4. Did Canada export any oil during the years 1947, 1948 and 1949, and if so, to what countries?
5. Is there any duty, tax or other charge on crude oil exported to the U.S.A.? If so, how much, and when was same imposed?

TRACADIE, N.B., MILITARY CAMP

Mr. Brooks:

1. What was the cost of operation of the military camp at Tracadie, New Brunswick, during the past winter, for (a) army pay; (b) supplies?
2. Were tenders called for providing supplies? If so (a) what was the amount of each tender; (b) who received the contract?
3. If not, how are the supplies purchased, and from whom?

LABORATORY OF HYGIENE

Mr. Breithaupt:

What are the functions of the laboratory of hygiene?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Return tabled.

HOG GRADERS

Mr. Bryce:

1. How many hog graders are employed by the Department of Agriculture?
2. What are the different positions in this service?
3. At what places are they employed?
4. How often are they changed to different plants?
5. How many have served in one plant (a) one year; (b) two years; (c) three years; (d) over three years?

PAYMENTS FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS, FAMILY ALLOWANCES, ETC.

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. What is the amount paid out by the federal government for old age pensions during each of the months January to June inclusive, 1949?
2. What is the amount paid out by the federal government for old age pensions during each of the six months January to June inclusive, in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?
3. What is the amount paid out by the federal government for old age pensions in each of the six months July to December inclusive, in each year, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?
4. What is the amount paid out in pensions to the blind during each of the six months January to June inclusive, 1949?

5. What is the amount paid out in pensions to the blind for each of the six months January to June inclusive, in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

6. What is the amount paid out in pensions to the blind for each of the six months July to December in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

7. What is the amount paid out for family allowances in each of the months January to June, inclusive, 1949?

8. What is the amount paid out for family allowances during each of the months January to June inclusive, for the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

9. What is the amount paid out for family allowances in each of the months July to December in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949?

10. What is the amount of any other direct payments made to Canadian citizens by the Department of National Health and Welfare during each of the months January to June inclusive, 1949, for reasons other than family allowances, old age pensions and pensions for the blind?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Wright:

1. What sections were ruled ineligible for payment under P.F.A.A. in 1949 in township 36, range 7, west of the 3rd meridian?

2. What was the average yield of these sections?

3. How many sections, if any, had less than ten bushels per acre?

4. Under what section of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act were these sections declared ineligible?

5. Under what section of the act was the remainder of the township declared eligible?

6. What townships or parts of townships adjoining township 36, range 7, west of the 3rd meridian, were eligible for P.F.A.A. payments?

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION—SASKATCHEWAN

3. How many persons were employed (a) part time; (b) full time in 1949?

4. What was the total sum paid to all (a) part time employees; (b) full time employees?

5. At what rate are (a) salaries or wages; (b) sustenance; (c) mileage; (d) other allowances, paid to common labour, foremen, all other employees under this act?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INSTRUCTIONS TO OFFICES

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all directives and instructions issued to unemployment insurance offices since January 1, 1949, having to do with the handling of unemployment, including ways and means of dealing with applications for unemployment insurance benefits; advice as to the meaning of the words "suitable employment"; any special directives or instructions with reference to displaced persons, and any other related matters.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Before the question is put, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the house that this motion, in principle, would be objectionable as being against the rules of the house, since it refers to the production of departmental papers. But upon reading it, hon. members will realize that it refers to instructions and directives from the unemployment insurance commission to the field staff of the commission, which instructions would fall in the category of public papers. I therefore wish to waive any objection and to allow the motion to pass, now that this explanation has been made.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REPORTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all reports made to the unemployment insurance commission and/or to the Minister or deputy minister of Labour, dated since September 1, 1949, having to do with the unemployment situation.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): I should have liked to adopt the same attitude with regard to this motion, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately it is impossible to waive any objection here. These are departmental papers of a strictly privileged character, and should be treated as such. On that ground I respectfully submit that this motion is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the parliamentary assistant a question? Would the motion be acceptable to the government if the words "and/or to the Minister or deputy minister of Labour" were deleted? That would leave the motion asking simply for reports made to the unemployment insurance commission itself.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to request the privilege of giving an analysis of what is involved in this request for an order of the house for the production of these papers.

Reports having to do with the unemployment situation coming to the Minister or deputy minister of Labour which are prepared and made from time to time fall into the following categories:

1. Reports by officers or committees of the Department of Labour for the purpose of advising the minister on these matters: They are in the same category as other memoranda prepared within the department for the use of the minister, and are therefore privileged.

2. Statistical data on local employment office operations relating to unplaced applicants, benefit claims filed, referrals to employment, etc.: They are forwarded at regular intervals from the employment service offices in the field for use by the economics and research branch of the Department of Labour and the bureau of statistics in the compilation of statistical returns for the information and advice of the Minister of Labour and other departments of the government. Reports based on these returns are issued from time to time by the minister, and are available for the period of time mentioned in the question and will be tabled if desired; but the local office returns upon which these reports are based are, it is considered, privileged in the same manner and for the same reasons as those referred to in category 1.

3. Employer reports on payroll turnover and employment forecasts sent in by employers for use of the economics and research branch and the bureau of statistics: These are used in the preparation of employment statistics and forecasts and are sent in by employers for confidential use for this purpose. In view of the basis upon which they are forwarded for use, the individual reports must be regarded as privileged documents and not subject to production.

4. Reports other than statistical reports made by officers of the employment service to the unemployment insurance commission which may come forward from time to time in the operations of the commission for the information of the commission and for use in reports by the commission to the Minister of Labour: While the unemployment insurance commission is a corporate entity, it will be noted that section 88 (1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act provides as follows:

> The commission shall organize and maintain an employment service for Canada and in respect of that service shall be responsible to the minister.

That is, to the Minister of Labour. Consequently it is clear that the commission in carrying on its employment service operations is doing so as a department of government directly responsible to the Minister of Labour. The reports coming in from employment offices on employment conditions to the commission are designed for, and are utilized in, the preparation of information for the use of the Minister of Labour, and are in the same category as other memoranda prepared in the Department of Labour for the minister's use and information.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the motion is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Without prejudice to my right to put the motion on the order paper again in different form, I am prepared to withdraw it at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

[Mr. Cote (Verdun-LaSalle).]

CROWN PROPERTIES—PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all correspondence, including briefs, and replies thereto, in the possession of the Minister of Finance, dated since January 1, 1949, with reference to the matter of payments to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal crown properties.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all orders in council, or a consolidation thereof, dealing with the inclusion of fair wage provisions and any other requirements respecting labour conditions in contracts let by the federal government or any department or branch thereof.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Return tabled.

GANDER, NFLD., AIRPORT

Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and other papers relating to the agreement recently made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States, or any aviation companies of the United States, for the use of Gander airport.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there are certain difficulties in the way of the production of correspondence between two governments arising out of negotiations for a treaty or agreement. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this motion be allowed to stand so that I can discuss it with the hon. member for St. John's West.

Motion stands.

ELBOURNE, SASK., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of all correspondence, directives and instructions, from October 1, 1948, to date, in connection with the removal or change of postmaster at Elbourne, Saskatchewan.

VETERANS—SETTLEMENT WITH ALBERTA IN SPECIAL AREAS

Mr. Quelch:

For a copy of the agreement signed between the dominion and the province of Alberta, dealing specifically with the settlement of veterans in the special areas.

Mr. Gregg: I am willing that this motion be passed, subject to two reservations: first, as soon as we are sure that all steps have been taken by both parties for the approval of the agreement, and, second, as soon as we are sure that the province of Alberta has no objection to the publication.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSENT FOR PROCEEDING WITH SUPPLY PRIOR TO PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

On the order for motions:

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Yesterday evening when we were considering the supplementary estimates in committee of supply I explained that there was some urgency in having passed at a fairly early day the supply bill based on these estimates. I also explained that it was not possible for me to be in the house tomorrow. The committee indicated at that time that it would probably be prepared to give unanimous consent to proceeding with that business today, before private members' notices of motions were taken up. I would appreciate it if the house would give that consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drew: I certainly support the suggestion that has been made that these estimates be dealt with, but since it is a matter of procedure by consent I suggest that permission be granted for the asking of questions from the floor of the house as we do when the orders of the day are called.

Mr. Abbott: That is quite all right.

Mr. Speaker: Would it be agreeable to the house if I called orders of the day, and afterwards put the motion to go into committee of supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ORGANIZATION OF WORK OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to take this opportunity to ask the Prime Minister to take such steps as may be necessary to the end that the committees which have been set up be called together for organization purposes well in advance of the house rising for the Easter recess, so that the necessary preliminary steps can be taken to plan the work of the committees before hon. members leave for home. While I recognize it is not directly the responsibility of the Prime Minister, I feel sure that a suggestion from him in that regard will be followed by those who are directly responsible.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I shall be very glad to have the co-operation of the leader of the official opposition and also that of the leaders of the other groups. All the standing committees have been organized. It is not a matter of organizing the special committees, but of getting the house to establish them. We shall try to bring that about just as soon as an opportunity can be found to do so. As soon as they are set up I will undertake to see that measures are taken to have them organized at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Drew: I wish to explain, Mr. Speaker, that when I used the term "organized" I meant actually organized for the carrying on of their work. I know that so far as the formal steps are concerned, these have been taken. It is now a matter of proceeding to the actual organization of the work. I am particularly concerned with the setting up of the public accounts committee at the earliest possible moment.

ELECTRIC POWER

QUESTION AS TO ST. MARY'S TIDAL PROJECT, BAY OF FUNDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. W. George (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Resources and Development. Has the minister given any consideration to implementing the study of the St. Mary's tidal project at the head of the bay of Fundy, as suggested by me on March 13 in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I read his speech with keen interest, and I am aware of the Acres and Melanson reports. I have requested the engineers of the department to conduct an investigation with a view to conducting an on-site survey, if this appears desirable.

Mr. Cruickshank: And the pipe line too?

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to direct to the Prime Minister the question that I put in the committee of supply last evening when the Prime Minister was not present. It had to do with item 594 of the further supplementary estimates. I asked if the government had any intimation as to when the royal commission on the arts, letters and sciences expects to complete its sittings and present its report.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have no precise information. My understanding is that the sittings are to be completed at a relatively early day. I was told that substantial progress has been made in draft form on a large part of the report, and that it is hoped that the report will be filed with the government in time to have it printed before there is another session of parliament.

Mr. Fleming: I take it that it is not likely that a report will be available before the close of the present session?

Mr. St. Laurent: No; it is not likely that the commissioners will have completed their consideration of the draft before this session ends—at least it is my hope that this session will end before the autumn, and my intimation was that the commission hoped to have a report ready for us early in the autumn so that it could be printed before the opening of another session of parliament.

NEWFOUNDLAND

BOOKLET PREPARED BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT IN COLLABORATION WITH BUREAU OF STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the opportunity to say a few words about a booklet that has been placed in the hands of hon. members within the past few days, giving a description of the new province of Newfoundland. I express my warmest congratulations on the workmanship and the content of this booklet, which has been produced both for general circulation to the public and for the information of hon. members. May I at the same time say that this is the type of publication that helps greatly to create a wider understanding of our own country. May I offer the suggestion that it would be helpful if a similar booklet were issued, for general circulation in the same way, describing the activities of each of the other provinces as well.

Mr. Lesage: What about provincial autonomy?

An hon. Member: Smart aleck!

Mr. Rowe: You could learn something from that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Without wishing to take anything away from the compliments which have been offered to those responsible for the preparation of this pleasant and interesting booklet, I should like to point out that it contains some serious errors. When the next edition comes out I hope that they will be corrected. I have already drawn the attention of officials of the Department of External Affairs to one in particular, which has to do with the decision in regard to the Labrador boundary between Quebec and Newfoundland at the time that Newfoundland was a dominion. It states that the result of the decision was that Newfoundland gained Labrador, an area of 110 square miles. It should be 110,000 square miles.

SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Atomic energy control board—

614. Chalk river project—capital and operating expenses—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. Coldwell: Last evening the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked if the committee on atomic energy could be reconstituted this year, and his answer was a categorical no. I was interested in hearing at the last meeting of that committee last session the suggestion that this year we might have a committee on the work of the national research council, a body which has done an excellent job, and whose activities are not well known either to the house or to the country. I believe it would be worth while, for the education of both this house and the public, to set up a committee this year on the national research council. I hope that the minister will consider this suggestion.

Mr. Howe: I think my hon. friend is not correct in saying that I gave a categorical no last night. I said I would give consideration to the proposal. I was then asked if I would promise a committee on atomic energy, and I said no. There are objections to having a committee on atomic energy this year. I need not go into them.

Personally I should be glad to see a committee review the work of the national research council. I think hon. members would find its work exceedingly interesting. Since it is only three or four months since a committee examined the atomic energy project, I suggest that a committee this year could consistently examine the work of the national research council. It would give the committee a more comprehensive view of Canada's activities in the field of research. I shall be glad to consult my colleagues and, if they have no objection, to arrange for the formation of a committee to examine into the national research council.

Mr. Low: I should like to say a word on this. I was a member of the committee which was established last year, and I believe it did excellent work. Naturally, a corollary to the work of the atomic energy committee would be a committee to examine into the national research council. I appreciate very much the minister's willingness to make that recommendation.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Item 615.

Mr. Green: Before we go on to item 615, I wonder if I might ask a question in connection with item 609. The minister was not in the chamber when the item was before the committee last night. I understand this is the final vote for the Fraser valley diking board. It will not appear in the estimates again.

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Green: My information is that the board have done fine work. I believe they have completed it at less than the estimated cost, and in a shorter time than expected.

I would ask the minister, however, what has happened to the dominion-provincial Fraser river basin board. That is a board which was set up to investigate the whole question of flood control in the Fraser river basin, and also the matter of power development. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made with the work of that particular board?

Mr. Howe: The Fraser river diking board reports to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but the board mentioned by the hon. member reports to the Minister of Public Works. I am afraid I cannot give any information on the work of that board.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I recall having received a preliminary report from this board, but I did not expect to be questioned with respect to it. However, if the hon. member wishes, I shall try to have a copy of the report sent to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Green: Would there be any objection to tabling it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would like to study the report myself before I can give that assurance.

Mr. Fulton: I think the minister tabled the first report at my request.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I believe last year a report was tabled, yes. I shall consult my colleagues, and if there is no objection I can have it tabled, or have a copy sent to the hon. member.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

615. Departmental administration, further amount required, $16,700.

Mr. Higgins: There are one or two matters I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport, who has been most co-operative on all occasions I have discussed matters with him. I am sure there will be no difficulty in the present instance.

Again I make reference to the newest province, and refer particularly to conditions at the port of Louisburg. That is the winter port of the Newfoundland railway, when ice conditions at North Sydney force the ferry to go to Louisburg. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will recall what was agreed at the time the terms of union were drafted. His words are quoted in the Daily News of September 29, 1949. The article reads as follows:

> Premier Smallwood stated that he remembered clearly when this matter had been brought up during the drafting of the terms of union that Mr. Howe had stated that adequate facilities for the handling of traffic at these alternate ports would definitely be made available if they were not there already.

The reference to alternate ports is a reference to Sydney and Louisburg. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce will remember that statement. I was not present with the last delegation, but it was understood that in the event of ice conditions at North Sydney which would prevent the use of that port proper facilities would be provided at the port of Louisburg. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay and, I believe, all other members from Newfoundland, with the exception of the hon. member for St. John's West, came through Louisburg on their way to Ottawa to attend this session. From the port one has to use a railway which is not part of the Canadian National Railways. I believe it is known as the Sydney-Louisburg Railway.

The Sydney-Louisburg Railway is very fine for people who have money and who do not have to travel over it. The hon. member and I, who were in a hurry, could hire a taxi. But the people who do have to use the railway have some very trying conditions with which to contend.

Since arriving in Ottawa I have received communications from a number of people who have had to use the railway at night, and I am told that travelling conditions are not very pleasant. My information is that the train is not heated, except by a stove in the middle of the coach. There is no lighting except for an oil lamp. No provision is made for passengers coming off the boat, except a narrow gangplank. People have arrived at a quarter to nine in the morning and have waited until after two in the afternoon before any accommodation was offered them.

This is a most unfortunate situation. I am bringing the matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport because I have always found him co-operative, helpful and courteous. These people say that this is proof that, so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, Newfoundlanders just do not count.

I do not believe that. I asked the agent at Louisburg on the day we arrived why it was one of the regular Canadian National coaches could not be put on at that point, and I was told that a proper car could not be used because the cars were too long for the curves.

I do not know what the facts are, but that is what I was told. In other words, they could not just put another car on that road. I am sure the minister will understand that I am speaking in good faith, and I hope he will take the matter into consideration.

As I said before, the Minister of Trade and Commerce did undertake, as Premier Smallwood stated—and he always says what is completely true—that proper accommodation would be provided. This is another little incident which is of interest in Newfoundland, and which is set out in a newspaper published in that province. This newspaper The Sunday Herald has a circulation of 19,749. Without delaying the house longer I shall read this article, because I believe it will appeal to the minister. The headline says: "Passengers spend hours in darkness, with madman aboard train". Then the subheading is in these words: "Harrowing trip." The article goes on to say:

> Passengers on a recent C.N.R. St. John's bound express were treated to a rare experience when those in the first class coaches were forced to sit for hours in the darkness, listening to the ravings of an insane person being brought to St. John's in a strait-jacket. In addition, those going to the diner had to eat their meals by flashlight thoughtfully provided by the steward.

This article is under dateline of March 18. It continues:

> The incident occurred about a fortnight ago on an eastbound train. At Clarenville, shortly before dark, a policeman boarded the train escorting a mental patient in a strait-jacket.

This is in the district represented by the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley).

> The two sat in a first-class car, amongst the other passengers, two of whom were expectant mothers. Soon after the train got under way it was discovered that at least a portion of the lighting system had broken down and there was no light in the first-class car.
> For several hours the passengers were forced to sit in complete darkness until a makeshift battery system was set up which provided a small amount of light on one side of the car only. In the meantime the mental patient had not been exactly quiet, and many passengers, especially the expectant mothers, were greatly frightened that he might get loose in the darkness. Other passengers complained to the conductor, but of course there was little he could do about the matter.
> In the diner, a part of the special Bonavista branch car, the steward had to place a flashlight in a drinking glass to enable passengers to see what they were eating, but even then, as one passenger put it, "You couldn't tell the pork chops from the sausages."
>
> When the train arrived at St. John's, passengers had to use matches to find their luggage, and all are hoping that they will never again have such an experience.

I am quite certain the Minister of Transport will take care of these matters.

Mr. Isnor: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the answer given today to a question standing in my name. It has to do with purchases of coal by Canadian National Railways. The first two parts of the question were as follows:

> 1. What quantity of coal (a) Canadian; (b) United States, was purchased by the Canadian National Railways in the years 1947, 1948, 1949?
> 2. Of orders placed, what quantities of (a) Canadian; (b) United States coal were delivered in each of these years?

Those parts were answered in full, but then followed what I considered the important part of the question which read:

> 3. What are the names of coal suppliers (a) Canadian; (b) American?

The answer given by the minister was as follows:

> For competitive reasons it is not in the general interest to provide the names of individual suppliers.

I feel that a more complete answer should be given, because it is in the interests of the small operators, particularly those in Nova Scotia, that this information should be available. I did not ask for the prices paid; I simply asked for the names of those supplying the coal. I think the minister should look into this further, and, if possible, furnish the names of the Canadian suppliers at least. I am not so much concerned with the names of the United States suppliers.

Mr. Chevrier: The answer given was the answer the officials of the Canadian National Railways indicated to me should be given. The attitude taken by the officials is as stated in the answer, that for competitive reasons they should not be asked to give this information. The committee on railways and shipping is master of its own destiny, and if the committee decides that that information should be given, the officials will have to give it. But I do not think the committee will insist upon its being given if the officials can give a good explanation of the competitive reasons. It may be that because of competition with other railroads it is not in the interests of the government-owned railroad to give this information. My hon. friend is perhaps a member of the committee, and he may wish to raise this question in the committee.

Mr. Isnor: I am not a member of the committee, and that is why I refer to this matter here. In the past I have placed questions indirectly before the committee without getting a satisfactory answer. I know the minister well enough to know that he would not accept an answer like that if he were making inquiry about a subject in which he was interested. I sincerely trust that he will point out to the officials of the C.N.R. what I have said today. I feel that they should be asked to give full information as to the names of the suppliers of coal, particularly those in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hatfield: What is being done about the shortage of refrigerator cars in the maritime provinces? I understand that the railroads sent a number of these cars to British Columbia because of the cold weather, and have not received a sufficient number back to meet the needs of the maritimes for the loading of potatoes. There is a great shortage of refrigerator cars in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Chevrier: I think perhaps we had better settle this question right away. My information is that there is not the shortage of cars to which my hon. friend refers. I stated the position in the house the other day, and I am prepared to state it again. I wish hon. members would agree on what the position is, because it is impossible to get agreement. Some say to me that the position is excellent, and then the hon. member for Queens and now my hon. friend states that it is not. I have a letter here from someone who should—

Mr. Hatfield: The minister mentioned Prince Edward Island the other day, not New Brunswick.

Mr. Chevrier: I am dealing now with Prince Edward Island, and I am also dealing—

Mr. Hatfield: I am dealing with New Brunswick.

Mr. Chevrier: —with the mainland. I have here a letter dated March 10, 1950, from the director of transportation of the Department of Industry and Natural Resources, Prince Edward Island, addressed to the deputy minister of transport. It reads:

> The real facts are that during the past several months we have had the best refrigerator car situation here for some years and I, for one, have no hesitation in going on record as stating that the Canadian National Railways have done everything in their power to aid us in this refrigerator car situation. I feel very strongly that they should be given full credit for this, and to my personal knowledge the Canadian National Railways officials at Charlottetown, at Moncton, and at Montreal, have given every attention to this matter and I feel very confident they will use all means within their power to aid our shippers in the months of March and April.

He goes on to refer to the additional service rendered by the Abegweit.

My hon. friend has referred to New Brunswick. The information I have from the Canadian National Railways is that there is no shortage, but in view of what my hon. friend has said, I shall make further inquiry. The director of transportation in Prince Edward Island should know what he is talking about, and from statements which I have made from time to time in the house—

Mr. McLure: To whom is that letter directed?

Mr. Chevrier: To the deputy minister of transport.

Mr. Hatfield: To my knowledge there is a great shortage in New Brunswick on the transcontinental and on the Saint John valley line. We have been trying to secure cars for weeks, and I am receiving telegrams every day.

Mr. Argue: On April 7, 1948, by order in council P.C. 1487, the board of transport commissioners was directed to conduct a general inquiry into the freight rate structure. As was recognized in that order in council, prevailing freight rates are discriminatory against certain parts of Canada; and as the minister well knows, any subsequent increase means an increase in that discrimination. My question is, how soon does the minister expect that a report will be made by the board on the general freight rate inquiry, and how much work has been done on that inquiry to date?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the first part of the question is, unfortunately, that it will not be very soon. Perhaps I should amplify that by saying that after the government instructed the board of transport commissioners to make an equalization of the freight rate structure in Canada, a royal commission was established to dispose of a number of matters concerning transportation. Meanwhile the board proceeded, under P.C. 1487, to ask the various provinces to make submissions, but the provinces took the position that the submissions they had to make at the time to the royal commission were of such importance that they would have to defer, for some time at least, their submissions on the general question of equalization.

In the meantime the board have not lost their time. They have instituted a waybill study. That is a study which will take some considerable time; also the recommendations or representations the provinces may care to make to the board will have to await the conclusion of the hearings of the royal commission on transportation. So in short the answer to my hon. friend's question is that the investigation under P.C. 1487 is proceeding; that the board is not losing its time, since it is conducting a waybill study which will have to go into literally hundreds of thousands of various freight rate tariffs. Just as soon as it is possible to hand down a decision, which I am afraid will not be before some months, the board will proceed to dispose of that matter.

Mr. Argue: I might remind the minister that the board already has had two years in which to make the general inquiry. I hope it will not be another two years before anything is done about these discriminatory freight rates. I just wonder if the board is short of personnel, if this job is not too big for them, when they also have to consider applications from the railways from time to time. Could not this inquiry be expedited if the personnel of the board were increased, or if they were given additional technical assistance?

Mr. Chevrier: I should think it would be the other way around. I do not want to cast any reflections upon anyone, but it is easy to appreciate why the provinces could not submit representations to two bodies. They had to choose between making representations to the board of transport commissioners on the matter of equalization and making representations to the royal commission; and I presume they came to the conclusion, for various reasons, that priority should be given to the royal commission. The provinces have expert counsel, and while I do not know this for a fact it is my feeling that until their representations to the royal commission are terminated they will not want to make representations to the board of transport commissioners under P.C. 1487.

When my hon. friend says he hopes it will not take another two years, it is simply a matter of the time not being available to make representations to two bodies. As I understand it, there is no question of whether it will take two or three years. Neither do I think it is a question of personnel, because I am firmly of the opinion that if the provinces desired to make representations to the board right now under P.C. 1487 there is ample personnel, on both the technical side and the rate expert side, to deal with the situation.

Mr. Argue: Could they not do it concurrently with the application for increases that is now before the board?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, no; this is a different thing altogether. That was decided by the board away back in 1946, I believe, when the first application for the 30 per cent increase came before them. It was decided that the two things were separate and distinct. One was a revenue case for a 30 per cent increase in rates; the other was an inquiry to equalize and dispose of unjust and unfair discrimination, and it was felt that both could not be heard concurrently.

Mr. Low: I should like to ask the minister why he and his colleagues did not make use of the powers given in section 52 of the Railway Act to stay the application of any new awards by the board of transport commissioners, in the light of the very serious situation which has developed, particularly among farmers and others in western Canada. I know that on two or three occasions the minister said it never had been done, as if that were a reason. That is not a reason. The fact of the matter is that powers were placed in section 52 of the Railway Act giving the government authority to deal with just such a situation as has arisen. Why in the world the government would not feel that delay of a few weeks or even two or three months would be in the best interests of Canada, particularly since we are expecting reports not only from the royal commission but on the hearings before the board, is something I cannot quite understand. I should like a little better reason than has been given so far.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not agree with my hon. friend that the powers in section 52 to which he refers are as he says they are. I placed on record a complete definition of those powers in 1946. I do not remember everything I said at that time, but my recollection is that as far back as 1903 parliament decided that the way to dispose of freight rate matters was by a board of transport commissioners, and they were a technical body set up and established to deal with those problems. They took it away from the government. Before 1903 a committee of the privy council handled these matters, but parliament decided they should not be dealt with in that way but should be handled by a technical body, which was set up.

I could go on at some length and give additional reasons, but that was the main reason, because the powers of the governor in council are judicial in nature. The government did not interfere because it did not think it was proper to do so, since it is not the practice to interfere with the ordinary processes of courts of record. My hon. friend says the fact that it has never been done is not a reason. Well, other governments have been faced with the same problem since parliament set up the board, and as a general rule they have taken the position that it is up to the board to decide these questions, not up to the governor in council.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I should like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River, but in view of the statement just made by the minister I would like him to tell us who are the members of the transport board, that is the names of the various members, and what were their qualifications and experience for appointment to the board. What experience did they have in dealing with transportation problems, that is in railroading or otherwise, before their appointment?

Mr. Chevrier: I gave that information too, at some length, in the general freight rates debate that took place in this house in 1946 or 1947.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Are they the same members today?

Mr. Chevrier: I believe it was the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton who asked that question today; and the question was answered. If my hon. friend looks at that return, he will find it contains the names and occupations of those commissioners. I might be mistaken, and perhaps it was another hon. member who asked the question, but I think you will find the return was tabled today.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Does that return contain their past experience, as well as any previous experience they may have had in transportation matters before their appointment?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Then, if it is a matter of a return, why not put it on Hansard?

Mr. Chevrier: It was put on Hansard today.

Mr. Ross (Souris): If it is a return, it does not appear on Hansard, but appears in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection. I am not trying to hide anything, and I hope my hon. friend is not attempting to indicate that I am. There is no secrecy about any of this information. I could give the names of the transport commissioners to my hon. friend now, but for the sake of saving time, I think he can find them in the return.

Mr. Knowles: It was an order for return.

Mr. Chevrier: What member was it?

Mr. Knowles: The member for Victoria-Carleton, and it was question No. 48.

Mr. Green: If the minister will recall, there was quite a lot of discussion about this question in 1948 and the year after. The board of transport commissioners handed down its first judgment and then on April 7, 1948 the minister, who had been under considerable pressure on this question, made a statement of government policy, and I have that statement here. In it, he announced that there was to be this general investigation of freight rates conducted by the board of transport commissioners. The words used by the minister on that date were very significant. He said:

> The government has taken into consideration the fact that no general investigation of freight rates has been made in Canada since that conducted in 1925 by the board of railway commissioners. In the circumstances, the government has decided it would be in the public interest to have the board of transport commissioners make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view—

This is the crux of the whole plan.

> —with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit the freest possible exchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agriculture and other basic industries. This investigation will be subject, of course, to the statutory provisions affecting freight rates known as the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Then, the minister tabled order in council P.C. 1487, to which he referred today, and which authorized the board of transport commissioners to make this general investigation of freight rates. The minister said that the government would not agree to a royal commission on transportation. Later in that year, as a matter of fact, after the Liberal convention, that policy was changed and a royal commission on transportation was set up.

In the session which followed, some of us pointed out to the minister that there was bound to be confusion between the functions of the board of transport commissioners conducting a general investigation into the whole freight structure, and the business of the royal commission on transportation. He ridiculed our remarks, but today he said the same thing himself in answer to the member for Assiniboia, that as the provinces could not deal with two investigations at the same time, they decided to make their representations before the royal commission. That is all water over the dam, of course, but I do think the minister should make it clear to the committee whether or not the board of transport commissioners is still to conduct a general investigation into the whole freight rate structure on the basis outlined in his remarks of April 7, 1948. The facts would seem to indicate that no such investigation is under way yet. Practically two years have elapsed, and it looks to me as though there is not the slightest possibility of the board of transport commissioners carrying out an investigation on that particular scale.

Today the minister says they are busy investigating the forms of waybills. He says that is going to take them months and months. That is a far cry from a general investigation of our freight rate structure in Canada. I do ask the minister to tell us frankly today whether it is expected the board of transport commissioners will carry out such a broad inquiry. If they are going to do it, all right, but they should be busy at it now. It appears to me as though the government is waiting for the report of the royal commission on transportation, and that this whole plan of having the board of transport commissioners make a general inquiry has been sidetracked, if not completely abandoned. If that is the case, the house should know. Let there be no misunderstanding or confusion about the situation today.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is the slightest misunderstanding, neither is there any confusion. I wish my hon. friend would decide what it is he has in his mind. By that I mean, when it was suggested that the board of transport commissioners undertake a freight rate investigation in Canada under P.C. 1487, my hon. friend said, "No, we should not do that."

Mr. Green: No.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment, let me finish.

Mr. Green: On a question of privilege, the minister must not put words into my mouth. This happened two years ago, but I think if he will look at Hansard he will find I made no such statement at that time. I do not think the minister should base his argument on something I did not say.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not going to argue with my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, as to his exact words. Perhaps he did not say no, and I accept his statement. I know his whole attitude was that of one opposed to the order in council 1487, and Hansard will bear me out. What he did want and what his colleagues wanted was a royal commission on transportation. The hon. member is quite right when he says I opposed it, because at that time I did not feel it was the thing—

Mr. Green: The minister is making a statement—

Mr. Chevrier: I did not interrupt my hon. friend.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Green: I did not make a misstatement. At the time this debate took place, I do not believe I was in Ottawa at all. I spoke on freight rates either in the fall of 1948—I believe I did speak later in that session of 1948. When I dealt with this royal commission and the general investigation by the board of transport commissioners, it was a year later, in 1949. At that time, the minister was asked how he was going to sort out these two inquiries. There were others who, in 1948, took the attitude the minister is now mentioning, but I did not take it.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to get into an argument with my hon. friend. On the other hand, I do not like him to make the statement that I have been ridiculing the attitude taken by him and by his colleagues. It is not my habit to do that. The point I am making is this. When we brought forward order in council 1487 for a general investigation of freight rates, that was objected to generally because it was said we had not gone far enough. Then, when the government decided to establish a royal commission and, at the request of the provinces put into the terms of reference almost everything the provinces requested, the answer then was, "That is not sufficient; why do you not carry on your investigation under P.C. 1487?" I have been trying to explain to the hon. member who first asked this question and I am trying to explain to the house now, that it is not possible, as I understand it, for the provinces to be in two places at the same time. Is this clear?

It is the intention of the board of transport commissioners and of the government to see to it that the general investigation of the freight rates structure in Canada be continued under P.C. 1487. My hon. friend asked for a clear and frank statement. I made the statement last year—I think I made it in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue)—and I make it now, that the only reason why the board cannot proceed more quickly and with more dispatch is that it must, of necessity, hear the representations of the provinces; and until it hears the representations of the provinces, how is it going to consider the equalizing of the freight rates structure?

After the royal commission on transportation has made its report, it may be that the board of transport commissioners may have enough information to warrant a decision. I do not know. But my understanding is that they will want to hear representations and submissions from the provinces. They cannot do so at the moment because the provinces are engaged before the royal commission. Meanwhile they are conducting an investigation or a study into the waybill structure. That is a considerable study. It is a matter that is going to take some time because it has never been done in Canada. My information is that it has never been done in the United Kingdom or in the United States, and it is a big job. The board of transport commissioners inform me that until they have that study completed it is impossible to deal with equalization of the freight rates structure across Canada. I do not think I can go any further than to tell my hon. friend that it is the intention to proceed with the investigation. There has not been one since 1926; and the board and the government feel that there should be one now.

Mr. Green: Then the situation is that, after the royal commission on transportation has reported, the board of transport commissioners will proceed with the general inquiry into the whole freight rates structure. Am I to understand from the minister that that is the plan?

Mr. Chevrier: It is; and more than that, they are proceeding now.

Mr. Green: Oh, well—

Mr. Chevrier: They are proceeding now with the waybill study which is a matter that is taking some time.

Mr. Green: Have the provinces taken the position that they will make representations to the board of transport commissioners on this general inquiry?

Mr. Chevrier: I cannot answer that; but I would think they would want to make representations.

Mr. Green: Is the minister satisfied that the board of transport commissioners is strong enough to conduct a thorough and worth-while inquiry? And has the board a strong enough staff to enable it to carry out a proper inquiry? As we all know, in 1948 the commissioners made a decision which was reversed by the cabinet, and last year they made a decision which was reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada. They are now in difficulty again over their recent decision. I am asking the minister whether he believes that the board of transport commissioners as set up at the present time and the staff are strong enough adequately to deal with this freight rate question by way of a general investigation.

Mr. Chevrier: I am firmly of that view. I think it is borne out by the fact that the board of transport commissioners in 1926 conducted a fairly good examination into the freight rates structure of Canada at that time. I think it was called an equalization of freight rates then. From the point of view of staff, freight rate experts, statistical experts and the like, I would say that the board is in a stronger position today than it was then. It is not for me to compare the personnel of the board today with the personnel of the board in those earlier days. I would not attempt to do so. But since my hon. friend asked me for my opinion, I say that I am of the view that they can conduct a fair and thorough investigation at this time.

Mr. Coldwell: In view of all that has been said with regard to freight rates and transportation generally, both here and across the country, it seems to me that the time has come when the government and the House of Commons should consider what can be done for the whole transportation system of this country. What I mean is this. We are discussing this matter piecemeal. We are not facing the difficulties. I do not want to say anything that I should not say at the moment because of the inquiries that are now going on. But having regard to the proposals made by the president of the Canadian National Railways a few days ago, with the uneasiness all across the country and particularly on the prairies and British Columbia with regard to the increases in the freight rates, with the decline in railway traffic and the competition that has come to the railways by way of trucks picking up the most profitable business, and the dependence that we have in some parts of the country for the removing of our heavy commodities like wheat, coal and so on, it seems to me that the time has come when the House of Commons and the government of the country should face up to this whole transportation problem and try to straighten out the discriminations that exist, and which are oppressive, and try to have a real transportation policy for this country that would give us a chance of having freight rates and so on that would be within the reach of the people. I think the time has come when we must consider transportation not as a matter of railway rates but as a matter of integration of all our various transportation facilities, with a view to finding a solution for this grave problem; for grave it is when you see the manner in which deficits have piled up over the years when times have not been as prosperous as they were during the war years.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think there is much fault I could find with what the leader of the C.C.F. party has said. I would point out to him, however, that the difficulty lies in the fact that if you have a general over-all policy on general transportation matters you then enter the provincial field. You must of necessity do that.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, of course.

Mr. Chevrier: For instance, the question of highway transport is one which is under the jurisdiction of the provinces; and the question of international and interprovincial highways is one for agreement between the provinces. Then again it is a question which has been referred to two royal commissions already, namely the Duff commission and the Rowell-Sirois commission. Both of them pointed to the difficulty and indicated some of the solutions; but because it has been impossible to reach agreement with the provinces, the problem still remains. I do not know whether the provinces would be willing to reach agreement on that matter.

To deal with the matter more particularly, I say that the royal commission on transportation as now established has as its reference the general transportation problem in Canada. It may be that we can hope for some recommendation from them on that point.

Mr. Coldwell: In view of the situation that has developed, perhaps further discussions with the provinces might bring about some better understanding.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to see that.

Mr. Coldwell: I have no doubt the government has it in mind. When the commission reports, no doubt some discussions will be held with the provinces with regard to the recommendations. I hope that something will come out of it. That is what I mean.

Mr. Johnston: I did not intend to discuss this question under this item; but as the question has arisen now, probably I shall be quite in order in what I am about to say. I agree that there should be some general over-all policy with regard to transportation in this country. It has been pointed out that the great discrimination in rates has affected different parts of the country. We out in the west particularly bear the brunt of that unfair competition; and it is my judgment that the time has come when there should be a thorough going-over of the transportation system of this country, particularly as it applies to the west.

My mind goes back immediately to a statement that was made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), and which was carried in an article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of February 23, in which he outlined his view in regard to competition with the railways brought about by trucking. I am fearful lest the minister adopt the policy that was attributed to him in the quotation from the Citizen that I referred to when I spoke the other day. In that quotation he said he feared that competition from trucking would be a serious handicap to the railways. On that occasion he went so far as to say that the trucking business was operating beyond its economic radius. Out west we have only one source of competition with the railways. It is entirely different in eastern Canada, and it is also different in British Columbia. In eastern Canada there are the great lakes and the canal systems along the St. Lawrence river which offer fair competition in freight rates. In British Columbia they have the advantage of water transportation from Halifax and through the Panama canal up to British Columbia. That is a source of competition with the railways. In western Canada, and particularly in the western provinces, we have to depend on the competition of trucks to get us anywhere near a reasonable transportation rate.

Mr. Bryce: The trucks are bound by the policy of the public and utility boards to charge railway rates.

Mr. Johnston: Exactly. If the minister's ideas were correctly expressed in the Ottawa Citizen on February 23, then we can see a grave danger ahead for us, particularly in view of the increases already given to the railway companies, which affect us very materially in the west. I am wholeheartedly in favour of having a complete discussion of the freight rate structure carried on in the house. I should like to see a policy outlined which would benefit all of Canada, and not particularly one or two sections.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to enter into a discussion with my hon. friend on this subject at this time, because I know it could lead to some time being taken up in the house. I would like to suggest to him respectfully that he read the speech which I made. All he did was to read an article which was given to the press. If my hon. friend has not a copy of my remarks perhaps I can get him one.

Mr. Johnston: I have not a copy of the speech. I have to take what I saw in the press.

Mr. Knowles: I asked the minister to table it.

Mr. Chevrier: I think he should read the speech, and when the main estimates are up, or on some other occasion, I should be quite willing to enter into discussion with my hon. friend on the subject. At this juncture, if I may, I should like to say this, Mr. Chairman. If we go into a general discussion on transportation matters I am afraid the Minister of Finance will never get his estimates through. I do not think it was the intention that we should do that. These are specific items. I am prepared to deal with general items, if that is the wish of the house. I do not think it is the wish of the house. I think the wish of the house is to deal with these particular items in detail. With the co-operation of hon. members I would hope that it would be possible to get on with this.

Mr. Johnston: I would not like the impression to go abroad that the statement which was carried by the Citizen was wrong, because I now have a copy of the minister's speech. As I look over it I find that the statement which was carried by the Ottawa Citizen on February 23 is quite correct. Possibly the minister will say that it is a part taken from the whole. He could have some argument there. But the quotation carried in the Citizen is exactly the same as the text.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not saying that the Citizen's report is incorrect. I have not seen it. I think that it would be correct. All I am saying to my hon. friend is that the speech was fairly long, and in a report in the Citizen he would not get what is contained in the speech. I suggest to him that he read the speech. We can defer this discussion to a future date.

Mr. Abbott: May I add my appeal to that of the Minister of Transport, Mr. Chairman? We are asked to vote $16,700 to cover additional amounts for telephones, telegrams and sundries, to clean up items for which commitments already have been made. I think a strict interpretation of the rules of these supplementary estimates is that hon. members' remarks should be directed to the item under discussion. Under the general item of departmental administration in the main estimates, by practice or convention, we discuss all the administration of the department. But if we are to finish today I would appeal to hon. members to restrict their remarks. There are a number of very important estimates to come before us, including the deficit of the Canadian National Railways. If we discuss transportation matters generally we shall be here forever.

Mr. Fleming: I rise not to discuss this matter but to ask this question. Does the government look to the royal commission to make some finding or recommendation on this question of the relationship of federal and provincial jurisdiction with reference to the whole transportation problem, particularly with regard to, let us say, interprovincial and international traffic?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot give a definite answer to that, other than to say that the terms of reference of the royal commission are pretty broad. They include quite a number of matters; they also include a general reference to transportation policy as a whole. What the royal commission will recommend I am not in a position to say, although I believe they have powers to recommend a general transportation policy for Canada.

Mr. Green: When is the report expected?

Mr. Fleming: The point I want to make is that it is within the scope of the reference.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hatfield: Further in regard to the severe shortage of refrigerator cars in New Brunswick, I should like to read the following telegram which I received from the Canadian Pacific Railway. It reads as follows:

> Montreal, March 16, 1950—Your message yesterday to general freight manager Canadian Pacific Railway shortage refrigerators New Brunswick due to unusual demand this class car for movement apples from British Columbia to Vancouver account donation British Columbia to England also as result slow return our equipment to us due shortage coal United States railways we expect gradual improvement.

Mr. Fraser: I do not want to hold up this estimate, but on this item I want to ask one question. There was a million dollar fire in the transportation building in Quebec city last Friday night. The minister has not said anything to the house about it. According to the report the transportation building on the Quebec waterfront belonged to the Department of Transport. I wondered what that building was for and who did own it?

Mr. Chevrier: It is the building of the marine agency of the Department of Transport in the city of Quebec. It is the building which is connected with the agency which looks after administration of marine services for the lower St. Lawrence area. I have not had a complete report from our officers. There is someone down there now dealing with it. Until I have a report I am not in a position to say anything more.

Mr. Fraser: According to the report, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are probing the fire. The reason I bring it up is this. We had another fire in an airplane hangar up near London, Ontario, which ran into a million dollars; we had one in the ordnance depot in Ottawa, which ran to three-quarters of a million dollars or more, and I wondered whether there was not something wrong with the set-up. There is no proper fire protection or sprinkler system in those buildings or that would not happen. The minister might try some of the fire-resistant paint that I mentioned some time ago. It might help.

Mr. Green: When is it expected that the royal commission on transportation will report?

Mr. Chevrier: The last discussion I had with the chairman was to the effect that he expected the completion of the arguments by the provinces to be effected fairly soon, and that after that the commission would have to give consideration to the tremendous volume of evidence. I am hopeful that it will be possible to have a report in 1950. I would not want to be committed to that. I would think that it would be sometime in 1951. I am speaking from the impression I received. I do not want my hon. friend to come later and say that the minister quoted such and such a date. My impression is that it is not likely to be much before 1951.

Mr. Green: It is perfectly clear, in any event, the report will not be in early enough for there to be any legislation introduced at this session.

Mr. Chevrier: I would say not.

Mr. McLure: May I clear up a slight misunderstanding. At no time was I complaining about the Minister of Transport, so far as the supply of reefer cars was concerned. At all times I was endeavouring to give him information, and I accepted what he said as his understanding of what was correct, having in mind the source from which he was getting his information. I do say however that I knew it was not correct because the source from which I gained my information indicated clearly that there was a shortage of reefer cars.

Never at any time however did I complain, nor do I now, about the Minister of Transport. It was not his fault that the shortage existed. I shall not take further time to discuss the matter although, if time permitted, I would place on record some telegrams I received today.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for his remarks.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

616. Administration of pilotage, including authority for temporary recoverable advances; contributions and the operation and maintenance, as required, of necessary pilot vessels in certain pilotage districts—further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. Isnor: When will the minister be in a position to make a report concerning the collision off Halifax harbour? I use the word "off" instead of "in", because it would be difficult for anyone to understand how a collision of that type could take place in Halifax harbour. The minister will recall that in that collision eleven fishermen lost their lives. He has already ordered an investigation and, if not today, I trust that in the near future he may be able to make a report.

[Mr. Green.]

Would he be good enough to have his marine officials look into the matter of setting up proper paths for incoming and outgoing shipping, such paths to be properly marked by buoys. I do not know whether this suggestion is feasible, but it has been placed before me in a letter.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to ask my officers to look into that suggestion. Also, when I have the report following the investigation—and I do not have it today—I shall be glad to give it to him.

Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

617. Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping—further amount required, $16,914.

Mr. Green: The minister will recall that late in the last session there was considerable discussion concerning the need of amending the shipping law and shipping regulations which became apparent from the Noronic disaster. I understand the department has drawn up new regulations which have been submitted to different parties across the country for their suggestions. Is it the intention of the minister to give the House of Commons, or any committee of the house, an opportunity to look over those regulations before they become law?

I understand there have been some substantial changes, and I suggest the regulations should be placed before a committee of the house, perhaps the committee on marine and fisheries. What is the plan in this connection?

On November 25, 1948, I asked him about the wreck of the steamship Chelohsin, off Stanley park, in Vancouver. At that time he said he was having an investigation made, and promised he would advise me of the results of that investigation. Has the report been made available? If so, would the minister table it?

Mr. Chevrier: I shall have to ask my officers where the matter stands. My recollection is that a report did come to my attention. I shall be glad to see that the hon. member gets it.

Then, as to the regulations arising out of the Noronic disaster: May I say there will be full opportunity for discussion of those regulations. When that will be I do not know. First of all, I made the statement, as the hon. member will recall, that the recommendations of the Kellock commission would be carried out.

Mr. Green: The new regulations?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. The regulations were made, but not put into effect. They were sent to all the bodies who would be interested, including ship owners and operators on both coasts. Representations were thereafter made to departmental officials and to me with respect to those regulations. I am not in a position yet to say that there has been any finality; but there will be full opportunity for discussion.

Mr. Green: Would there be any objection to furnishing members with a copy of the proposed regulations?

Mr. Chevrier: I would have to look into it, but I would not think there would be.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, may I refer to examinations of young men and old men who are applying for certificates to carry on their vocations on the water. I know of several cases where they have had difficulty because of the eye test given by officials of the Department of Transport.

I learned recently about a young man, forty-one years of age. I know this man well, and I know that he has been engaged on the water for twenty years. This man wished to obtain a certificate to engage in day work which would have involved his travelling four or five miles in each direction. On his eye test he was turned down.

That young man, his father or, if he were living, his grandfather, could go to the provincial government and obtain a permit to drive a car in traffic moving at 50, 60 or 70 miles an hour. Yet, when he wishes to travel on water at only eight or ten knots he is refused a certificate because of the failure of his eyesight. Perhaps many of the regulations might be enforced to a greater degree, but I believe the enforcement of this one should be given careful consideration. Young men who have spent their lives on the water, and who must have a certificate, should be given every consideration.

Marine service—

619. River St. Lawrence ship channel—contract dredging in the St. Lawrence river and Montreal harbour, including cost of administration—capital—further amount required, $435,295.

Mr. Fraser: I should like to have further details on this item, because none are given. Does Montreal pay anything toward harbour costs?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Fraser: It is not like Toronto in that respect.

Mr. Chevrier: In Toronto the board of harbour commissioners is a corporate body, whereas in Montreal it is part of the national harbours. We vote money for the development of the harbour at Montreal, under the act.

Mr. Fraser: Does this amount of $435,295 represent the complete contract price?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Fraser: What was the full contract price?

Mr. Chevrier: The full contract price for last year was $2,939,500.

Mr. Fraser: What is the name of the concontracting firm?

Mr. Chevrier: Marine Industries Limited.

Mr. Fraser: Is that in rock or mud?

Mr. Chevrier: Both.

Mr. Fraser: In there it would be limestone.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hatfield: Does this represent all the dredging contracts on the St. Lawrence in the year 1949-50?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not competent to answer that, because it is a matter which would come within the control of the Minister of Public Works. So far as the Department of Transport is concerned, this is the only division of my department that deals with dredging.

620. To provide towards the acquisition and reconditioning of two vessels for Pacific ocean weather station "P" (estimated cost $750,000)—capital, $165,000.

Mr. MacInnis: This appears to be a new item, because there is no indication that it is a further amount required. Would the minister tell the committee from whom these vessels are to be acquired, where they will be stationed on the Pacific coast, and when the work will be completed? This is only a small part of the reconditioning expenses.

Mr. Chevrier: These vessels are being acquired from Marine Industries Limited at a cost of $57,500 each. Speaking from memory only, their position will be approximately 500 miles north and west of Victoria.

Mr. MacInnis: How long before the ships will be ready for service?

Mr. Chevrier: It is expected they will be ready some time this year.

Mr. Higgins: Is there only the one ship in the Atlantic in connection with the joint operations with the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: What company is building these ships?

Mr. Chevrier: They are being purchased from Marine Industries Limited and will be converted as weather ships.

Railway service—Hudson Bay railway—

621. Construction and improvements—capital—further amount required, $8,300.

Mr. Knight: I have the greatest respect for at least one reason which motivates the Minister of Finance in trying to get these estimates through the committee, but this item represents such an important matter to northern Saskatchewan that I cannot let it pass without a word. We consider the development of the Hudson Bay railway as being vital to northern Saskatchewan. Reference was made last night, particularly by the hon. member for Souris, to the grain elevator at Saskatoon and the fact that it is not put to proper use.

It is our hope that in the days to come when the present wheat agreements will have run out there will be more occasion to store grain in northern Saskatchewan, particularly in Saskatoon. Our hope is that the elevator there will be used to a greater extent than it has been used during the past few years. With the wheat contracts there was a need for speedy delivery but that condition will be changed from now on and it is to be hoped that this grain elevator will be used for the purpose for which it was built.

I could make a speech on the notes I have here, but I shall reverse the method and instead of making a speech I shall simply use the notes. I have put down one or two things which I think are important and I shall state them in the shortest possible time. All things being equal, there is no doubt that it would be advantageous for the importers in the province to use that route. With a lengthening of the insurance period and a consequent lengthening of the navigation season the farmers could save money by shipping their wheat over this railroad, I believe to the extent of eleven or twelve cents per bushel. Because of the contracts with Great Britain our farmers have not been able to take advantage during the past few years of the saving that was possible.

A bill has been introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Melville, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to place Churchill on the same footing as Vancouver, Port Arthur and Fort William as shipping points for wheat. Such an amendment would be of great help. The principal association promoting the use of this port, the Hudson bay route association, are sending a delegation to Ottawa to ask for a greater use of this route. I plead with the government to give favourable consideration to their representations.

Because of the limited time in which insurance is applicable, only a partial use has been made of the time during which the port facilities could have been used. Insurance is applicable for 65 days from August 8 to October 10, and during that period the port facilities for the shipment of wheat were used for only 18 days last season. I am thankful that five and a half million bushels of wheat were shipped last year which was some small advance over the year before, but, as the Minister of Transport knows, that is only a token shipment from that port. With the full use of the facilities there is no reason why 20,000,000 bushels of wheat could not be shipped out during that time. If the period during which insurance is applicable were lengthened the amount that could be handled would be correspondingly greater.

We will be having certain gentlemen in eastern Canada, and perhaps in this house, saying that this railroad is a white elephant, that it is costing the taxpayers money, but I want to say to them that it has been demonstrated that if 15 million bushels were shipped through the port in one year it would eliminate that contention. If I am to keep my promise I shall have to stop, but there are three or four points I should like to stress.

First, we need the co-operation of the interested parties, the wheat board, the railways, the harbours board, the provincial governments and above all the federal government in order to encourage the use of this route.

Second, we should have the greatest possible quantity of imports and exports moved over this route.

Third, there should be a lengthening of the insurance period at both ends of the present period. It is rather ridiculous that a ship should be in that port a day or two before the insurance period commences and remain there for a couple of days in quiet waters waiting for that period to commence. As I have said on other occasions, this period should not be inflexible. After all, the weather varies from year to year and with the navigation services we have in those northern seas I do not see why the insurable season could not be made flexible. Captains of ships operating this route have brought that to my attention.

Lastly, I see no reason, from the surveys and reports we have received, why the insurance rates should not be the same as those applying on shipments from other ports in Canada. The captains who sail these seas back me up in that contention.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

627. War veterans allowances—further amount required, $60,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could items 627 and 628 stand? The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has been here all afternoon but has been called away and will return momentarily.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Government-owned enterprises—deficits—

630. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $1,159,000 already appropriated, to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1949-50 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1949—further amount required, $62,230.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I suppose that under any one of these items reference may be made to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Abbott: I would think that item 632 would be the most appropriate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall restrict my remarks to just one phase of the operations of the Canadian National Railways. It has to do with a matter I brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport on one or two other occasions, as far back as July 2, 1947. I am not one of those who follow a course in the house of asking for expenditures to be made by the government and then, the expenditures having been made, rising subsequently to object because taxation is high. Any suggestions I have made concerning expenditures have been with respect to developments of a national character that will pay dividends.

I now want to bring to the attention of the minister a matter that is of transcendent importance to the employees of the Canadian National Railways, having to do with the improvement of the situation regarding their pensions, as provided for under the Canadian National pension fund. I speak particularly for the employees in the lower brackets, and I ask the support of hon. members in all parts of the house in behalf of those employees. On November 12 last a question was asked as to the number of retired employees of the Canadian National Railways in receipt of pensions of less than $25 a month. That question was asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and similar questions have been asked on one or two occasions by myself as well. According to the figures brought down then there are in this country 55 retired employees of the Canadian National receiving less than $25 a month, and some 2,743 receiving only the basic pension of $25. Those receiving between $25 and $30 a month number 841. Between $30 and $39.99 per month the number is 664, and some 354 receive between $40 and $50.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if the hon. member would permit an interruption at that point. Similar questions were answered today, showing that in the lower brackets the situation is a little worse. It so happens that the 55 who were getting less than $25 a month are now down to 31, no doubt owing to deaths, but the group getting only $25 has gone up in number to 2,952.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman received replies to certain questions today that are generally similar to the statistics I gave as of November last, except that the situation has been intensified in respect to the number in receipt of the basic pension only.

When I brought this matter to the attention of the minister almost three years ago he stated that the attention of the board which looks after the administration of the pension scheme for the Canadian National would be directed to the representations made. I have no doubt the minister carried out that pledge, but it is apparent that nothing has been done to remedy the situation. It is a serious matter for the employees of the railway who, receiving the lower salaries, are unable to make provision for their own security. Indeed, those receiving this basic pension of $25 a month find that when they reach the age of seventy they are definitely prejudiced as compared with those who receive old age pensions at that age. After the basic pension is allowed for and a valuation of the property owned by the pensioner has been arrived at, in many cases the individual railwayman is denied a portion of, if not the entire, old age pension.

The basic pension paid by the Canadian National Railways is both picayune and inadequate. I am sure no one in this country, neither the government nor the people who own this railway, would have any objection to the payment of a fair and reasonable basic pension in place of that which prevails. In these days when private industry is prepared to pay a basic pension of $60 or $65 a month, with some contribution on the part of the employees, I believe the government as an employer should show the way in assuring a reasonable degree of security for its own employees.

Then I want to bring to the attention of the minister a complaint in connection with the administration of the pension fund. Altogether too much red tape is insisted upon in connection with proof of age and continuity of service. Numbers of Canadian National employees object most strenuously to the fact that, their continuity of service having been interrupted by being placed on the spare or slow board, they are denied the pension for the entire period of their service. While they were unemployed they could not seek employment elsewhere; but, having a break in their service, are denied a pension proportionate to the period of time they have been with the company. I believe something should be done in this regard. Then, there is no reason why proof of age should be insisted upon to the extent of a birth certificate or its equivalent. Surely the census information given by the parents of these employees seeking pension should be accepted as the best evidence of age in the absence of official documentation. Persons now approaching the age of sixty-five may have been born in an area where birth registration certificates were not as generally available as they are now.

The third suggestion I make is in connection with those who are out of work by reason of illness and are denied unemployment insurance. These employees contribute regularly to the unemployment insurance fund; it is compulsory. The only time they are able to collect any return under that insurance is when suitable work is not available. As far as railway and other similar employees are concerned, I believe provision should be made to ensure them protection under the Unemployment Insurance Act in the event that they become unemployed by reason of illness.

I am not going into further detail in connection with the pension system, except to say this. I think the time has come when we should enact legislation similar to the United States Retirement Act. It protects men in service on the railways, no matter where performed. Some Canadian National employees began their service on other lines and yet their service on those other lines cannot be counted in the computation of their pension.

I wish to ask the minister what was the result of the negotiations last fall between the unions and the Canadian National Railways in connection with the demand for a five-day week and a seven-cent per hour increase in wages. I have been asked that question by a number of employees. What are the possibilities of acceptance of those terms, or at least a compromise?

Finally, sir, there is one other matter affecting the province of Saskatchewan, and northern Saskatchewan in particular. I know that the minister and nearly every other member of the house from Saskatchewan has received letters from Mrs. Gibbs, who lives in northwestern Saskatchewan, and who for some time has been conducting a one-woman campaign for the completion of the gap between Heinsburg and Frenchman's Butte in northwestern Saskatchewan. Persistently, in season and out of season, Mrs. Gibbs, representing the view of the people of northwestern Saskatchewan, has demanded the completion of this gap. The settlers who went in there twenty-five or thirty years ago find themselves in a forty-mile gap between the ends of a railway which begins nowhere and ends nowhere. To make it a useful, worth-while and paying railway branch line, I submit it should be completed. The gap between Bonnyville and St. Walburg should also be completed.

Anyone who goes into that area cannot but be impressed by the disadvantage suffered by the people who are served by railway lines in which a gap remains to be completed. Those settlers went in there believing that those lines would be completed. I ask the minister, when he replies, to give those people some hope that this work will soon be undertaken.

Again I ask the minister to bring to the attention of Canadian National Railways the fact that they have several thousand employees whose basic pension, after many years of service, is out of line, having regard to any other pension system in effect today; that it is unjust as to its amount, and that it denies to employees the security they rightfully should have, having regard to years of service rendered at comparatively low rates of pay.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I shall take only two or three minutes, for the obvious reason that my views about this matter are on record a great many times. But I want to support the representations put so well by the member for Lake Centre. I feel it should be indicated that there is wide support for the request that is being made for the reconsideration of the position of Canadian National employees, so far as pensions are concerned.

I want to thank the minister for his readiness to secure information and put it on Hansard every time I have asked a question about the pensions of employees of the Canadian National. I think it is regrettable that the Canadian Pacific has refused to give the minister the same information, which he has tried to get, at my request. I believe we should have the figures for both railroads. My conversations with employees of both lines lead me to believe that the situation on the Canadian Pacific is probably even worse than it is on the Canadian National.

Since in the midst of what the member for Lake Centre was saying, I indicated that I had been given answers that were a little more up to date than what he was quoting from, may I summarize, in so far as I may be able to do it in a few moments, the information that was put on Hansard today? I point out that there are 15,413 Canadian National employees on pensions of various kinds. Of that figure, 6,997, or 45 per cent, are drawing pensions of less than $40 per month. One other figure I should like to give; of that total of 15,413, 12,210, or almost 80 per cent, are drawing pensions of less than $80 per month. I use those figures of $40 and $80 for the same reason I used the same figures last evening in connection with another item. Those are the amounts by way of old age pensions that a single or married person could draw if he had been unable to save anything else.

Some of these employees are receiving a basic non-contributory pension, it is true, but many of them have been contributing towards these pensions, and they have all been working for the railroad for many years, yet they draw a pension which, in some cases, is less than they could obtain under the Old Age Pensions Act. There seems to be an opinion abroad that railroad workers are in a preferred class; that they receive high wages and generous pensions. Well, here are the figures, and they show that that impression is wrong. The details supporting what I have said in these few remarks will be found, by those who are interested, in that portion of today's Hansard which gives the answers to the questions that were on the order paper.

Now, I need not go further today, Mr. Chairman, because of the pressure of time under which we are working, and because I have argued this matter so frequently. I do press upon the minister, however, the need for considering the position of Canadian National pensioners. I press upon the Canadian Pacific Railway as well the necessity for reconsidering the position of its pensioners, including its retired employees who get no pension at all. I hope it will not be long before something is done.

Mr. Fulton: Just before the item carries, I understand the minister is going to make some reply, so I want to say in brief form that I support the representations which have been made by the two hon. members. I do hope the minister can consider the matter, not only with regard to the retirement pensions themselves, but also with respect to the position of those railway employees who have become sick, and particularly those who are forced to retire before the normal retirement age owing to ill health, and that he will impress upon his colleague, the Minister of Labour, the desirability of making some provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act so that these people who, in effect, are out of work because they are sick—that is not the technical position, I know, but that is what the position is in effect—will not be denied the benefits from the fund into which they have been paying over many years of employment.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has the minister to say generally? I think the railway employees have the right to a declaration.

Mr. Chevrier: I consider these matters to be of such importance that I do not think I can in a minute or two reply to the questions that my hon. friend has raised. My hon. friend has taken about fifteen minutes—I know he has covered it quickly—to deal with several fairly important matters. My suggestion to him and to the committee is that perhaps I might be allowed to make a statement when my main estimates are up for consideration.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not raise any objection to that procedure, but would the minister not be in a position to state the present position of negotiations with the union with regard to the five-day week?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I am not. That is a matter which concerns the Minister of Labour. I have some knowledge of it; but as it is a matter which comes under his jurisdiction, I think I should not attempt to deal with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is under whose jurisdiction?

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Labour's.

Item agreed to.

632. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1949-50 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company, to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year 1949, this amount to be applied in the repayment of accountable advances made to the national company from the consolidated revenue fund—Canadian National Railways, exclusive of eastern lines, $25,709,703; eastern lines, $16,333,325; total, $42,043,028.

Mr. Drew: It is not my intention to discuss the details or the background of this item, large though it is. There is one reason particularly why I do not intend to do so at this time, in addition to the fact that these are supplementary estimates closing the accounts of the past fiscal year. The royal commission which is now considering all aspects of this problem has already had certain representations made to it, and will have others, which have a bearing on this large item that we are now called upon to deal with. There is, however, one subject that I think should be mentioned at this time.

Recently the services of the Canadian National were greatly reduced because of the statement that there was a shortage of coal. That matter can be discussed at a later time. However, in regard to this whole subject, the responsibility for what took place rests ultimately upon the government. The explanation that the reduction in services was due to a shortage of coal is one that I do not think can be accepted as covering the whole period during which that reduction of services was in effect. After all, this is not merely a question of cutting down services. What was extremely important, in addition to the inconvenience to the public, was the result to those who were working on the railways, and particularly those in the lowest income bracket. No matter what steps may be taken to economize on this road between now and the time that the royal commission will report, I believe that great care should be exercised so that in the future those steps of economy shall not cause the uncertainty and concern and the real difficulties which resulted from the curtailment in the past few months. The morale of those working on the Canadian National will be greatly affected by the course that is followed. I can only repeat that the explanation to the effect that this curtailment of services was due to a shortage of coal is hard to accept for a period of that kind when in this country we have such enormous supplies of coal both in Nova Scotia and in Alberta. Certainly some way could have been found if that was, in fact, at any time the real explanation. The workers on this railway during the years of war and under heavy pressure have given loyal and faithful service. I can only repeat that in whatever steps are taken in the future to meet the situation, in any steps of economy that may be taken, we should make sure in every possible way that it is not done in a manner which will affect the workers on the railway.

Item agreed to.

633. To hereby authorize and provide for payment during the fiscal year 1949-50 to Trans-Canada Air Lines to be applied by Trans-Canada Air Lines in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of Trans-Canada Air Lines) resulting from the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines and its subsidiary, Trans-Canada (Atlantic) Limited, during the calendar year 1949, this amount to be applied in the repayment of accountable advances made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund—Trans-Canada Air Lines, $1,419,444; Trans-Canada (Atlantic) Limited, $2,898,150; total $4,317,594.

Mr. Drew: This item is one which calls for a somewhat different approach from that taken to the other items that have been before us. The other items that we have been discussing are items which are closing out the accounts in regard to the various activities under the direction of the government; but this is the first time in the whole fiscal year that anything relating to this item has been before the house. There are reasons why an explanation should be given at this time for the figures that are now before us. The figure that we are called upon to deal with is a payment of $4,317,594 as a deficit in the operation of Trans-Canada Air Lines over the operating year of 1949. This item should certainly not be passed without an explanation to the committee as to why there has been this large increase in the deficit. At this point I think it would be well briefly to put on the record the trend that should be in the mind of every hon. member in being called upon to deal with this item.

In 1943 there was a surplus for the year of $147,888. I will simply use the even dollars. In 1944 there was a surplus for the year of $7,409. In the year 1945 there was a surplus for the year of $32,722. In 1946 there was a deficit for the year of $1,269,624. In 1947 there was a deficit for the year of $1,624,739. In 1948 there was a deficit for the year of $2,933,240. Now we are asked to provide for a deficit of $4,317,594 for the year 1949. That figure is broken into two amounts, according to this item in the estimates. On the domestic services of Trans-Canada Air Lines for last year there is a deficit of $1,419,444; and on the trans-atlantic operation there is a deficit of $2,898,150. The latter figure is of importance in view of the statements that were made before the committee that dealt with the previous report. That represents an increased deficit of $236,422 on the domesti services or the North American services, as they are described; and it represents an increased deficit of $1,147,932 on the overseas service. That large increase in the deficit on the overseas service follows an assurance last year by the general manager of the Trans-Canada Air Lines that there was every reason to believe the situation in regard to the overseas services would improve. It would be well now to go back to the time that this bill was put before the house and the anticipated situation at that time. On page 2043 of Hansard of March 22, 1937, there is a statement by the minister who was then introducing the bill, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I quote these words:

> It is thought that from the start the mail contract and such passenger and express business as is immediately available should cover the cost of the service. We have made provision, however, for a subsidy to protect the service in that period. After 1940, as I have said, the subsidy provision expires, and the mail contract will be on the basis of cost of the service. I think that outlines fairly well the intention of the bill. The whole matter can be more fully considered when the bill is brought down.

In other words, at that time it was expected that the extension of the service was going to make the Trans-Canada Air Lines self-supporting. Today we find ourselves in the position where the surpluses of the years during the war are now giving way to greatly increasing deficits. I might point out that in 1940 there was a surplus of something in the neighbourhood of $500,000. In a speech on March 20, 1941, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce estimated that the surplus for that year would be $60,523. In view of those surpluses, in view of the increasing deficits, it seems that before we are called upon to pass on this there should be a detailed explanation of the reason that the expectation of the general manager of the Trans-Canada Air Lines last year was not fulfilled, and why we have this large increase in the deficit on the overseas services, in addition to a smaller increase in the deficit on the domestic operations.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, the annual report of the Trans-Canada Air Lines has just reached my desk. It will be tabled in the house on Friday. We hope the committee on government-owned enterprises will sit next week and will examine the results of the operations for the fiscal year 1949-50 and the forecast of this year's operations. I think my hon. friend will agree that to try to duplicate that work, or to anticipate it, in committee of the whole, would be defeating the purpose of having estimates referred to committees of the house.

Mr. Fulton: Estimates are not referred.

Mr. Howe: This particular estimate will not be, but the estimates of the railways will be.

Mr. Fulton: As I recall it, it is not the practice to refer the estimates to the committee, but merely the reports.

Mr. Howe: I can assure the hon. member that the estimates will be referred to the committee.

Mr. Fraser: Only the estimates of External Affairs are ever sent to a committee.

Mr. Howe: I have been associated with this for many years. I can assure my hon. friend that certain items in the estimates are referred to that committee and are reported back to the house.

Mr. Fulton: If the minister will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand the report of the committee of last year. Subject to correction, my reading of the third report does not indicate that the estimates were before the committee. I was a member of the committee. I do not remember that we considered the estimates, certainly not any estimate—

Mr. Howe: I assure my hon. friend that tomorrow the Minister of Transport will move that certain items in the estimates be referred to the committee on government-owned railways and shipping.

Mr. Fulton: This one will not be referred.

Mr. Howe: No, that is correct. Trans-Canada Air Lines had a very bad year last year, much worse than anticipated. Several factors contributed to that. The fundamental factor is growing pains. In July, 1948, the number of seat miles flown by Trans-Canada was more than doubled by the introduction of bigger equipment. As far as the trans-atlantic service was concerned, it was realized that there would be a movement from summer peaks to empty seats in the wintertime. To offset that, services were developed to the Caribbean, which are showing much better results this year than were shown last year when the routes were being initiated. Put simply, the load factor was below the break-even point of the system. Of course the system has also been faced with increasing operating costs, just as every other transportation system has been faced with higher operating costs. That is a summary. I could go into some of the circumstances that were responsible for the loss of a good deal of traffic last year; for instance, crashes all over the world were responsible. I may say that a crash in India has a repercussion on domestic and particularly on overseas lines of Trans-Canada Air Lines—or a crash anywhere in the world, for that matter.

Somehow or other the rumour started last April and May that the North Star planes were unsafe, and there was a very marked drop in traffic during the months of May and June, arising out of that rumour, which I think we now know was wholly unfounded. That is a broad sweeping outline of the reasons why we had a bad statement last year. This year we predict an operating result which will show a substantial profit for the domestic lines, and a substantial loss for the overseas lines. I am happy to say that in the two months to date a very substantial improvement has been made on the operating results that were predicted by the management at the turn of the year.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give us those figures?

Mr. Howe: I have not got them now. They will be available to the railway committee of which I believe my hon. friend is a member. The beauty of the committee is that the management is there with every possible figure that anyone may require. As I say, this annual report just reached me today. I have not the figures available to go into any extensive analysis.

Mr. Drew: Did I understand the minister to say that this committee will be sitting this week?

Mr. Howe: We hope so, yes.

Mr. Drew: If that is so, it may of course be possible to deal that much more quickly with these items.

I want to refer to one statement that the minister has made. There were no rumours last year about the North Star. There were statements that were related to instructions that were given by the officials of the Trans-Canada Air Lines, which referred to the difficulty that they were having in regard to the engines in those planes. If there was any public impression related to those statements it was a public impression that was related to instructions that were given primarily by Mr. Slemon, who was directing flying operations of the Trans-Canada Air Lines. However, that can be dealt with in the committee, and will be dealt with then.

At the moment I was referring particularly to the break-down of these losses, because it would help hon. members to have some understanding of where these various increased deficits have arisen. If the statement is to be available to us on Friday, and this can be considered in the committee next week, I do agree that this subject could very well be discussed at that time. Of course we are called upon to pass on an item of $4,317,594.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. Howe: Unfortunately that money is spent.

Mr. Drew: I recognize the fact that the money is spent and nothing we can do will unspend it. I do agree, therefore, that it will be best to dispose of this item now, and then to go into the component features of it before the committee so that we shall have the information available to us in dealing with the estimates for next year.

Mr. Fulton: Before the item carries it should be pointed out that the remarks made by the minister this year, as to the forecasting of greatly improved conditions, particularly in the Atlantic service, bear a striking similarity to the forecast made last year, when an improvement was forecast. Despite that we are now asked to authorize the payment of a deficit of over a million dollars greater than the one before.

In this connection I would refer to the observations made by the general manager of the air lines, as reported at page 313 of the proceedings of the committee on railways and shipping for 1949. On that occasion I was asking him why the emphasis was being placed on this transatlantic service when the trend seemed to be toward deficits. The manager stated at that time, and was supported by the minister who was also before the committee, that he felt confident this position of deficits would not long continue, and that substantial improvement would be shown in the year's operations. Those are the operations for the year now reflected in this deficit of $2,898,150.

This is what took place on that occasion, when I had said that the report showed an increasing trend toward deficits in the overseas service:

> Mr. Fulton, again, as yesterday, I disagree, both as to the interpretation of the wording and what I believe to be the trend. It says, "at the present time,"—referring to the 1948 conditions, and the 1948 report,—and this certainly was the case, but I can very definitely assure you that our financial returns on our overseas operations for 1949 show improvement, and that the months that have already gone by would indicate that these estimates are very close to accurate.

That was on April 6, 1949. Three months of that year had already gone by, and the manager, supported by the minister, said that the conditions showed that there would be a further improvement for that year.

Then, earlier in the same sitting, as reported at page 275, he is reported to have said:

> The trend in the Atlantic operation, as forecast for the year 1949, is also a reduced deficit.

I point out the striking similarity between what was said last year, in forecasting a reduced deficit, and what the minister has just said this afternoon. The fact is that we are dealing with a deficit which is over a million dollars greater than that in the preceding year. I cannot see where the minister has given us any concrete reasons for believing that we will not be called upon next year to vote an even greater deficit than that for which we are asked this year.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Loans and investments—

634. To provide for purchase of land and permanent improvements; cost of permanent improvements to be effected; removal of encumbrances; stock and equipment; refund of surplus to veterans (section 19); and for protection of security under the Veterans Land Act—further amount required, $1,425,000.

Mr. Wright: May I call to the attention of the minister the matter of making loans as well as grants available for the purchase of farms in western Canada. Out there, there are numbers of large farms on the market, which have been operated as units. Some returned men are desirous of going on the land but, as individuals, they find it impossible to secure these farms, because they are too large. However, if they operated co-operatively, and if loans as well as grants were made available, they could purchase these farms for operation co-operatively. We have had considerable experience in Saskatchewan in the operation of such farms, and such operation has worked out successfully. I suggest it would be advisable for the minister at this time to give consideration to a request which has been made by, I believe, the Saskatchewan government, that these loans be made available to returned men who wish to take part in co-operative farming. Co-operative farming has been done successfully where grants have been made available, and this has been of great assistance to the returned men.

However, they would ask the minister to go a little further, and make loans as well as grants available.

Mr. Gregg: I shall study the situation.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Only items 627 and 628 are left for consideration. We will proceed with the first of these:

627. War veterans allowances—further amount required, $60,000.

Mr. Green: The committee will notice that one of these items asks a further amount for war veterans allowances, while the second is for a further amount in the special assistance fund, from which extra payments can be made to recipients of war veterans allowance. It is obvious that the Department of Veterans Affairs underestimated the amount that would be required. That means that they underestimated the hardships and sufferings of the veterans entitled to war veterans allowance.

That is the first point I wish to make. My second point is that in the break-down of the item, as set out at page 14, we find that a third of the amount required for war veterans allowances is for veterans of the second world war. I do not know what proportion of the special assistance fund is to be applied to help those veterans. It is now perfectly obvious however that the war veterans allowance is becoming of great importance not only to the veterans who served in the first world war, but also to those who served in the second.

I suggest the time has now come to increase these war veterans allowances to the amount received by old age pensioners. The veteran of both world wars is the charge of the dominion government. As such he should receive just as much as is paid to a civilian who is primarily the charge of his or her province. The time has come to give consideration to an increase in war veterans allowances.

Furthermore, I would urge again upon the minister the necessity of setting up at this session a special committee to deal with veterans affairs. He is proposing changes in the War Veterans' Allowance Act. He proposes to bring in men who served in the allied forces, and is also proposing to decentralize the administration so far as the making of awards is concerned.

These are important changes in the act—sufficiently important, I suggest, to call for the setting up of a special committee. This is not the opportune moment to discuss the matter at length, but I would ask the minister whether or not under the circumstances he would reconsider the stand taken by the government, to the effect that there will be no increase in the war veterans allowance, and that there will be no special committee at this session. Is the minister not willing to reconsider those decisions?

Mr. Wright: May I support the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra in what he has said with respect to setting up a committee to study war veterans allowances and other matters affecting veterans. Today the war veterans allowance is $40.41, I believe, and in at least three of the provinces the old age pension exceeds that amount. In addition, in at least three of the provinces, old age pensioners get complete medical services whereas our war veterans get only partial medical services.

Mr. Green: The wife gets more as well.

Mr. Wright: That does not seem fair. I submit that the department should provide an additional grant of at least $85 to take care of emergency cases.

Mr. Abbott: This is in addition to half a million provided before.

Mr. Wright: In addition to that.

Mr. Abbott: There is $60,000 of an underestimate in connection with an item of $20 million.

Mr. Wright: That simply proves my point. The emergency exists and it must be met by these additional votes. If the war veterans allowance was sufficient and if complete medical services were provided these emergency grants would not be necessary. I am quite sure the minister will agree that about 75 per cent of these cases are due to sickness, either of a veteran or of members of his family. I think it is time that we gave complete medical services to those who are receiving war veterans allowances. The only way this matter can be dealt with effectively is by setting up a committee where these things can be discussed and given fair consideration.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I would have liked to speak at some length on this item but in view of the fact it is only a few minutes to six o'clock I rise simply to support what has been said by the two previous speakers. I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs should explain why the government has refused to set up a committee on war veterans affairs. In the past it has been customary to set up such a committee at the start of each new parliament. I presume the government must have some special reason for refusing to set up a committee, but the fact is that hon. members are receiving resolutions from the Legion and other organizations asking for amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act and these matters can be discussed effectively only in a committee.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am going to take only a minute or two to indicate my support of the opinions expressed by the previous speakers. The proposal by the Canadian Legion that a parliamentary committee on veterans affairs be appointed should receive further consideration by the minister. I am sure the minister and all hon. members will admit that throughout the years the Canadian Legion has made constructive and sound proposals to the government and to hon. members of this house, as a result of which we have the present War Veterans' Allowance Act, the amendments to the Pension Act, to the Veterans' Land Act and to the rehabilitation act.

I think the request of the Canadian Legion that the rate for single men should be increased to $50 and for married men to $85 is modest. While the special assistance has been of great help to a large number of veterans, I think hon. members will agree that a satisfactory solution will not be reached until the basic rate is increased. I could go on at some length and I shall have more to say on veterans affairs when the main estimates are under consideration, but in conclusion I urge the minister to reconsider the proposals of the Canadian Legion, particularly those affecting war veterans allowances.

Mr. Abbott: May I just interject to say that perhaps Your Honour will not watch the clock too closely, particularly as there is another item of $1,425,000 in connection with the Veterans' Land Act. This is one of the most urgent items in the bill as we have had to stop making these payments. I have two bills to put through and I would hope that perhaps you would not watch the clock too closely.

Mr. Gregg: I am sure that none of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken expect me to deal with these questions in full this afternoon. I shall be prepared to do so on my main estimates. However, to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, first as to the setting up of a committee and second, as to increasing the basic rate, I would say that I have considered the matter fully and up to the present time I am not prepared to recommend an increase in the basic rate or the setting up of a committee at this session.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I should formally move:

That the house be not adjourned at six o'clock p.m. this day.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1950, the following sums be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely, the sum of $65,986,459, being the amount of each of the items as set forth in the further supplementary estimates (3) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1950.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 14, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1950.

SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $233,837,011.33, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto, a sum not exceeding $1,125,000, being three-quarters of the amount of item 170, a sum not exceeding $1,900,666.66, being one-third of the amount of items 30, 430, 497, a sum not exceeding $324,283.16, being one-sixth of the amount of items 70, 172, 175, 176, and a sum not exceeding $2,614,658.75, being one-twelfth of the amount of items 66, 94, 189, 191, 192, 361, 362, 366, 374, 375, 377, 380, 384, 385, 386, 425, 432, 434, 559, of the said estimates be granted to His Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951.

He said: Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution asking for interim supply. The general proportion of one-sixth, that is two months, for all services is intended to provide for all the necessary ordinary requirements; and in addition, as usual I am asking for one-third of certain special items. The item in agriculture covers the freight assistance on western feed grains. The item in trade and commerce covers the Canadian international trade fair. The item in transport covers the royal commission on national transportation. An additional one-sixth is being asked of certain items. The item in external affairs has to do with Canadian representation at international conferences, to meet the expenses of certain conferences which will be held in the early months of the year. The items under the Senate and House of Commons, general administration, are necessary because our heaviest expenditures come in the early months of the year. An additional one-twelfth, that is one month, is being asked on the vote under finance covering the wartime prices and trade board administration, while the additional one-twelfth under mines and technical surveys is required to enable the department to provide for the early equipping of survey parties and their dispatch to the field as soon as possible.

There is one item which is unusual, and to which I direct the attention of the committee. I am asking for an additional three-quarters of one item, that is the vote in the main estimates covering unemployment assistance to certain residents of Newfoundland, to give effect to the terms of union with Canada. In this case it is found that the expenditures are running greatly in excess of what was estimated by the Department of Labour, when the estimates were prepared in January; and I should say here that it will be necessary to ask for a supplementary estimate at a fairly early date.

The form of the bill is exactly the same as the one which was passed at this time last year, and as the bills that have been passed in previous years. Of course I give the usual undertaking that the passing of the bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any items in the estimates which may come up for consideration from time to time during the rest of the session. The undertaking is given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this interim supply bill.

Mr. Drew: It is not our intention to discuss the details of these matters, because this is just the formal procedure to meet the requirements until the general estimates can be discussed. We accept the assurance of the Minister of Finance that this is done without prejudice to the further discussion of these items.

Mr. Abbott: May I add that I greatly appreciate the co-operation which has been shown in the committee yesterday and today.

Mr. Knowles: In the special case the minister referred to, did I understand he is asking for three-quarters in addition to one-sixth, making a total of eleven months?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Knowles: But one month is still left so we may discuss the item?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Higgins: I believe the minister referred to expenditures on the Newfoundland services being in excess of what was estimated.

Mr. Abbott: Unemployment assistance.

Mr. Higgins: I believe receipts are equally in excess of what was anticipated.

Mr. Abbott: This is not the insurance item; this is for unemployment assistance.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951, the following sums be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely:

1. The sum of $233,837,011.33, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951;
2. The sum of $1,125,000, being three-quarters of the amount of item 170 of the said estimates;
3. The sum of $1,900,666.66, being one-third of the amount of items 30, 430, 497 of the said estimates;
4. The sum of $324,283.16, being one-sixth of the amount of items 70, 172, 175, 176 of the said estimates; and
5. The sum of $2,614,658.75, being one-twelfth of the amount of items 66, 94, 189, 191, 192, 361, 362, 366, 374, 375, 377, 380, 384, 385, 386, 425, 432, 434, 559, of the said estimates, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 15, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1951.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull) moved the adjournment of the house.

[Mr. Abbott.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is government day, so we shall proceed with the following items: Resolution No. 16 on today's order paper, concerning a bill to amend the Agricultural Products Act; resolution No. 18 on today's order paper, concerning the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944. Those resolutions are in the name of the Minister of Agriculture.

Then we shall proceed with resolution No. 19 on today's order paper, concerning the Fisheries Prices Support Act, 1944. There are three resolutions in the name of the Minister of National Defence, Nos. 21, 22 and 11 on today's order paper. If those resolutions are carried, and we have time left, we will proceed with the resolutions in the names of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, Nos. 12 and 20 on today's order paper. We still hope to have time left to pass the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to refer his estimates to the committee.

Mr. Green: After that?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, if we have time. We really hope to make progress, because those are only the resolutions, and we would like to have the bills before the house for early consideration.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, will the resolutions be taken in the order in which they were named by the minister?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As for the first three, we will proceed in that order. As to the three resolutions in the name of the Minister of National Defence, I have not consulted him about the order but I would advise him to start with the small resolution, I suppose.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 6.15 p.m.

END OF VOLUME I
